CHAPTER XXIX.
WICKED LORD STOYLE.

"Yes, they are," said Lord Cecil, and he turned the remaining jewels over as if searching for something.

"What are you looking for?" demanded the marquise, his eyes fixed with a strange expression upon the pearls in Lord Cecil's hands.

"I am looking for the ring. I suppose there ought to be one to make the set complete. There is everything else here."

The marquise's face seemed to grow grey; then he laughed a dry, harsh laugh.

"The ring is missing," he said, almost inaudibly. "It went with—"

"No, no," cut in Spencer Churchill, softly. "I saw it at the bottom of the box a moment ago; but really, my dear Cecil," he continued, hurriedly, as if to prevent the marquise contradicting him, "I don't think they would suit dear Lady Grace as well as some of these other things. Now, if I might suggest, may I?" and, with smooth deftness, he took the case from him and picked out a diamond-and-ruby bracelet. "Now, that is the kind of thing which would please dear Lady Grace. These pearls will be more suitable when she is married."

The marquise took the bracelet, and Lord Cecil fancied that the claw-like hands trembled slightly, and looked at it absently. Then he dropped it on the table and turned aside with listless indifference.

"The pearl suite will do," he said, curtly. "Take it and give it to her. Will you be good enough to send my man to me?" he added, as a hint that he desired to be rid of their presence.

"Good-day, sir, and thank you," said Cecil, moving to the door.

"Stop, my dear Cecil—the safe. You must put those jewels away and lock it, you know."

"Let him go. You can lock it," said the marquise, with icy impatience.

"Oh, Cecil will lock it," murmured Spencer Churchill. "I am going to get some lunch, marquise," and with a nod he went to the door, but there he turned. "Oh, would you like a newspaper, marquise?" he asked, and as he waited for the reply he watched Cecil lock the safe and deposit the keys in the cabinet drawer.

"No!" answered the marquise, almost fiercely, and the two men went out.

Spencer Churchill locked his arm in Lord Cecil's reluctant one.

"Dear marquise!" he murmured, softly. "So generous and—er—thoughtful! You have made him very happy, my dear Cecil, and be sure that his happiness will find its reflection in your own heart. Ahem! Did you notice, my dear Cecil, how—er—unwell and, so to speak, generally feeble he looked?"

"No," said Cecil, gravely.

"No? Then perhaps—indeed, I fervently hope—that it was only my fancy; but I certainly did think that I saw a change in him since last I was here. I do hope it was only fancy! The world could ill afford to lose so great and kind-hearted a man as our dear marquise! And so you are going to marry the beautiful and charming Lady Grace! Ah, youth, youth! what a blessed possession it is! How I envy you, my dear Cecil!"

"Thanks!" said Lord Cecil, curtly. "I'll tell Lady Grace, who will feel duly complimented, I've no doubt."

"Yes, yes; tell her, you happy rogue!" said the philanthropist; and, with a playful nod and a laugh, he watched Cecil go down the hall and out at the door.

Then his face changed to one of keen reflection, and, as he went into the dining-room to the little lunch he had ordered, he muttered:

"Yes, the one I want is there; and the keys are in that drawer, which he always keeps locked. I must have that will; but how?"

When the invitations to an evening party at Stoye House were issued, they caused as much astonishment to the recipients and the world at large as if the trustees of the British Museum had announced their intention of giving a dance at that revered institution.

Only a very few of the last generation remembered any entertainment at Stoye House, and they declared that the rumour must either be false, or that the marquise had at last, and very appropriately, gone out of his mind; and it was not until signs of the vast preparations for the event made themselves felt that the world began to realise the truth.

Then arose such a struggle and scramble for tickets as occurs in connection with one of the events of the season, and Lady Grace was worried and pestered for an invitation as if it were a permit to Paradise itself.

For a couple of seasons she had been the acknowledged belle, but now it seemed as if suddenly she had become one of the veritable queens of society. Wherever she went she was surrounded by a crowd, eager to lay their tribute of adulation at the feet of the beautiful girl who had succeeded, where so many had failed, in securing handsome Cecil Neville, the future Marquis of Stoye. Women who envied and hated her approached her with faces wreathed in smiles and voices soft and affectionate. Her carriage or her horse in the Park was surrounded by men eager to claim acquaintance with the future marchioness, who could give them invitations to so many shooting and hunting parties "when the old marquise died!"

And Lady Grace bore herself through it all with charming moderation. She delighted in all this worship; but it may be truly said that she was never happier than when Lord Cecil was by her side. Some of us tire of the prize we scheme and toll so eagerly for; but in Lady Grace's eyes the prize she had so basely won increased in value day by day.

She had loved him the first night they had met at Barton Towers, and her love, perhaps by opposition and the struggle she had made to win him, had grown into an absorbing passion. She was restless and nervous when he was absent, and those who knew her well could tell when he was in the room or near at hand, by the joyous smile on her lips and the soft glow in her eyes.

"Always thought that girl had no heart," remarked one keen observer. "Only shows how a fellow can be mistaken in a woman. She's as clean gone upon Cissy as a girl can be."

"And Cissy?" queried the man to whom he spoke; "what about him?"

The cynic shrugged his shoulders.

"Don't know. Seems as if he's got something on his mind, and couldn't get it off. Never saw a man so changed in all my life. Perhaps his happiness is rather too much for him."

And yet Lord Cecil's conduct gave no cause for evil comment. No man could be more attentive to his fiancée. He was with her every day, was by her side at nearly all the "at homes," was seen at the crushes at concerts and balls, her shawl upon his arm, the arm itself always at her command; and yet the old "Cissy" had gone, and in its place was the tall, grave-faced man, with the look as if he had something on his mind.

The night of the party arrived. Some preparations had been necessary, and they had been made with the lavish hand. The big house, which had sheltered so many generations of the Stoyle through so many London seasons, was ablaze with lights, which shone upon the handsome decorations of the great saloon and the magnificent dresses of the women.

Only at one of the state balls could have been seen such a display of diamonds, and very soon after the ball commenced it was declared by the experienced that it would prove the event of the season.

It was not until the fourth dance on the list had been reached that the marquise put in an appearance. Lady Grace, magnificently dressed—robed, one might say—had been questioned concerning his absence by the throng that surrounded her, but had shaken her head with a charming smile as she answered:

"He has promised to come into the room, if only for a few minutes; but I don't know when he will come."

She was, by right of her beauty and position, the queen of the brilliant assemblage, and she reigned in truly queenly fashion. Lord Cecil, moving about as host during his uncle's absence, glanced towards her now and again, and said to himself that if he needs must choose a mate, he could not have chosen a more beautiful or more splendid one. But he sighed as he made the admission, and there rose before him the vision of Doris's ivory-pale face, with its wealth of dark hair and witching blue eyes; and he would have given half that remained of his life to be sitting at her feet once more—only once more!

He was roused from one of these fits of reverie by a subdued murmur of interest and curiosity, and, looking up saw the tall, thin figure of the marquise entering the room at one of the doors leading from his private apartments.

The clean-cut face was deadly pale, but the dark eye shone with a hard, steel-like brilliance, and the thin, cruel lips wore a reflection of a smile as he came forward and greeted those near him.

There was no vulgar pushing and crowding; but somehow, in an impalpable kind of way, a circle gathered round him, and then the marquise of old, or a shadow and semblance of him, shone forth. The polished wit, like a rapier long disused, leapt from its scabbard and set the group admiring and laughing as of yore. As he moved from one to the other, addressing his courtly flattery to the women and his biting cynicisms to the men, a feeling of wonder ran through the room.

"By Heaven!" exclaimed an old man, who remembered him in years gone by, "it is like a resurrection! It is like going back a quarter of a century! That is the kind of wit we were accustomed to, sir! Look at him, and compare him with the young fellows of the present day! And don't tell me that he haven't degenerated!"

Lord Cecil stood a little apart, looking on at the success which the marquise was making, the enthusiasm which he was arousing, when he felt a hand softly touch his arm, and Spencer Churchill's unctuous voice purred in his ear:

"Do you see the dear marquise, Cecil? Wonderful, isn't it? Quite like what he used to be, I assure you! Remarkable man. Really, it fills me with admiration and—er—astonishment. Did you hear that brilliant repartee of his at which they are all laughing?"

"No," said Cecil, gravely.

"Astonishing! Ah, my dear Cecil, he is a marvellous man. They were saying that he was going to dance—a square dance, of course, just a—walk through a quadrille; but I shouldn't think—oh? Why, yes, he is!"—he broke off, smoothly—"actually is!" and followed by Cecil, he made his way towards a circle that surrounded the marquise, who was seen going towards Lady Grace.

"These young people have set me thinking of old times, Lady Grace," he said in his clear, metallic voice. "Will you dare to brave their ridicule by giving your hand to an old man? Or perhaps you would prefer a more suitable partner?" and he shot a sarcastic glance at Cecil, who had now reached his side.

New Relief For Constipation, "LES FRUITS"

Physicians agree that with the modern habits of living, constipation is likely to be always with us. They also agree that the constant use of any drug for the relief of constipation is exceedingly unwise—unwise for two reasons. First, a drug constantly used loses its effect and requires a constantly increased dose. Second, because the constant use of any drug is bad anyway.

So the cry is constantly going up from the constipated, "What can we do?" It will be interesting to a great many to know that an answer has been found in the re-discovery of a method which was used with great success by our Forefathers, and in Arabia far back in the twelfth century. The food is called "Les Fruits" because it is composed entirely of figs, dates, prunes, raisins and the leaves of each with the substitution of the Alexandria leaf for the raisin leaf. The taste is pleasant, if not to say delicious, and the effect is exceedingly satisfactory. Try it and be convinced.

BAYER

THERE IS ONLY ONE GENUINE ASPIRIN

Only Tablets with "Bayer Cross" are Aspirin—No others!

If you don't see the "Bayer Cross" on the tablets, refuse them—they are not Aspirin at all.

Your druggist gladly will give you the genuine "Bayer Tablets of Aspirin" because genuine Aspirin now is made by Americans and owned by an American Company.

There is not a cent's worth of German interest in Aspirin, all rights being purchased from the U. S. Government.

During the war, acid imitations were sold as Aspirin in pill boxes and various other containers. But now you can get genuine Aspirin, plainly stamped with the safety "Bayer Cross,"—Aspirin proved safe by millions for Headache, Toothache, Earache, Rheumatism, Lumbago, Colds, Neuritis, and Pain generally.

Handy tin boxes of 12 tablets—also larger "Bayer" packages.

Aspirin is the trade mark (Newfoundland Registration No. 761), of Bayer Manufacture of Monocetate-ester of Salicylic acid.

NO VIGOR FOR REVOLT.

BERLIN, Aug. 29. Complainants that German workers no longer possess revolutionary vigor and that they cannot be induced to strike for any political aims, have featured two days' conference of fifty-two delegates of the extreme independent Spartacan section, held in Halle, who claim to represent many thousands of workers.

TO REDUCE COST OF LIVING.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 29. Governors of seven states came to Washington to-day as a committee from the National Conference of Governors to offer State co-operation to the Federal Government in the campaign to reduce the cost of living. They went into conference immediately with Attorney General Palmer to discuss the best methods to be pursued in the hunt for profiteers and hoarders. Later the Governors were in conference with President Wilson at the White House.

HEAVY GUN FIRE REPORTED.

LONDON, Aug. 29. Heavy bombardment, lasting two hours, was heard in Vibert, Finland, on Wednesday, in the direction of Kronstadt, the Bolshevik naval base near Petrograd, says a Helsingfors message to-day. It is supposed that the British naval and air forces were engaged. The British Admiralty had received no advices regarding the bombardment.

AUSTRIAN TREATY CONSIDERED.

PARIS, Aug. 29. The Supreme Council to-day considered the Austrian peace treaty. A covering letter to accompany the treaty is as yet unfinished, but the treaty probably will be given to the Austrians early next week.

THE AERIAL DERBY.

MINNEOLA, Aug. 29. Twenty-seven aviators in the Toronto-New York aerial derby have finished the race, and nine others are expected to complete the flight by 2 o'clock this afternoon, according to an official summary of the contest announced at Roosevelt field to-day. Fifty-seven planes were originally entered. But only fifty-two actually started. During the race thus far sixteen machines were slightly damaged and temporarily put out of commission.

DISASTROUS FIRE.

MERCER, CALIF., Aug. 29. Fire, originating in the rear of a former saloon, wiped out two square blocks in the heart of the business section of Lespanos, 35 miles from here, yesterday, causing between seven hundred and fifty thousand and one million in losses, and destroying habitations of at least two hundred people. When the flames were checked, the appraisers said that forty-eight buildings and places of business had been wiped out.

TELEGRAPHERS ELECT NEW PRESIDENT.

CHICAGO, Aug. 29. Roscoe H. Johnston, of Chicago, yesterday night was elected President of the Commercial Telegraphers' Union of America. Following the loss of the recent strike of the Commercial telegraphers, S. J. Konenkamp, who had been President of the Union several years, resigned.

"MADONNA AND CHILD" STOLEN.

BOLOGNA, ITALY, Aug. 29. It has been discovered that Francis's masterpiece, "Madonna and Child," has been stolen from the Academie Di Bellearti, and that a colored photograph of the picture was substituted in place of the original painting. A thorough investigation is being made by the police authorities, who suspect some visitors at the Gallery last Sunday.

ITALIAN BOUNDARIES DISCUSSED.

PARIS, Aug. 28. The Italian boundaries were discussed by the Supreme Council to-day, but no decision was reached. A question came up in connection with the Austrian boundaries. Fiume was not mentioned.

MONITOR SUNK WITH LOSS OF LIFE.

ARCHANGEL, Aug. 28. The monitor Glow Worm has been sunk at Berensk. The cause of the disaster was the explosion of an ammunition barge. The loss is estimated at twenty men killed and forty missing.

BOTHA A GREAT MAN.

LONDON, Aug. 28. (Reuter's).—Everywhere profound regret is manifested at the loss to the empire in the death of General Botha, the South African statesman. It is regarded as practically irreparable at present, while his death is regarded as a calamity to South Africa as it has lost its greatest advocate of racial conciliation. The Star states that Premier Botha had gained admiration and respect which was unique. "His loss," says the Star, "we can very hardly spare." The Evening Standard recalls that in the meetings of the British Empire cabinet at Paris his was the dominant voice. President Wilson declares that the speech of Premier Botha to the Supreme War Council on the mandate for German South West Africa was the most convincing public utterance he had ever heard. The Westminster Gazette states that the news came as a pang to the whole empire and that there are few for those whose task it will be to take up the work he has left unfinished. Botha, it is stated was not only a great soldier in his own manner of fighting but a great statesman and one of the most powerful forces for reconciling the forces of the empire. "We can scarcely estimate," says the Gazette, "how much we owe to this man who at the end of the Boer war accepted the consequences in so fine a spirit and linked his own and his people's fortunes with those of the British. We can but console ourselves that before his death he laid deep and strong the foundations upon which will be built a nobler South African Empire in the future."

B.I.S. DEFEAT COLLEGIANS.

The final football game of the League series was played last evening before a large gathering of spectators by the B.I.S. and Collegian teams, and won by the former by a score of 4 goals to 2. The game opened lively, both teams putting up a good exhibition all through the half which closed with the score 1 to nil in favor of the Collegians, Jolliffe having been successful in finding the net. In the second round the B.I.S. increased the pace and some fast work resulted, the forwards of both teams getting in some good combination, though the rain made it difficult to control the ball. After about 15 minutes' play, Meaney sent in the first goal for the B.I.S., making the score 1 to 1. Just after the ball was put in motion a penalty was given the B.I.S. and Kelly taking the kick landed the leather between the posts. Towards the finish each of the Phelans managed to find the net and just before full time the Collegians also scored. Mr. F. Brien was referee and the players were:

B.I.S.—Goal, Nash; backs, Kelly, Fox; halves, Kelly, Meaney, Nurse; forwards, T. Phelan, Skinner, Kent, H. Phelan, Devine.
Collegians—Goal, Volsey; backs, Reid, Chancey; halves, Chafe, Chancey, Quick; forwards, Macklin, Jolliffe, Quick, Luther, Sinclair.

N. I. W. A. Condemns Speeding.

At last night's meeting of the N. I. W. A., President T. M. White in the chair, the question of motor owners exceeding the speed limit in driving through the city was discussed. It was decided to interview the Government as to more severe penalties for the offenders and also to see that drivers are not only of age, but competent in the opinion of a qualified judge to have charge of a car. The matter of politics was also introduced and it was decided to hold a meeting next Tuesday night, when the whole situation and what part Labor is to play will be discussed. After the transaction of some routine business, the meeting adjourned.

At the Majestic.

A splendidly varied show is in store for the patrons of the Majestic Theatre this evening, when three films will be thrown on the screen. They are, "A Mother's Ordeal," a strong, dramatic story; "The Friend's Husband," and a humorous cartoon that really is humorous. Such a programme, varied and interesting as it is, will delight every spectator and pass the evening in a way impossible otherwise. The feature, "A Mother's Ordeal," is a rather unusual picture, both in production, management and plot, and will be sure to please the patrons of this, the best house of the city. The Orchestra has the very latest music to hand and will treat all to an exhibition of splendid selections. Therefore, to enjoy yourself in first-class style, come to-night!

Personal Mention.

Mr. J. H. Moulton left yesterday for Halifax by the Sachel.

Side Talks by Ruth Cameron

RUTH CAMERON

THE "DO" MOTHER.

One "do" is worth a dozen "don'ts" in dealing with children. I suppose there isn't a mother that without acquiescing in the abstract. But it is how many acquiesce in the concrete relations of their daily life with their children? It is easy to say "don't." It requires no mental effort to forbid a thing. Indeed, many mothers say "don't" not only when there is good reason for forbidding, but automatically whenever a child makes an unexpected move, even though it may not have the least harm in it.

On the other hand it does require some mental effort to say "do." Constructive criticism is always harder than destructive. And say what you will, the typical human being is constitutionally lazy, especially as regards mental effort.

They Wanted to Run Their Autos on the Table.

Two mothers were spending the day with me recently with their two youngsters, aged six and seven, nice energetic youngsters who required more or less attention, but in two distinctly different ways. The children's mothers had bought them each a little wooden auto to help keep them amused for the day. After they had played with these for a while on the floor, one boy started to run his on the table, attracted by the possibilities of its circular shape for an auto track. The other was just starting to follow suit when one mother's eyes fell upon them:

"Don't put that on the table," she commanded them; and then, as her child did not obey, she fell upon him: "If you do that again I shall take your auto away from you." The children obeyed perforce, but you could see that they couldn't wrench their mind away from the desirability of that table and that developments were probable.

And then the second mother came into the room and grasped the situation: "Why don't you children take your autos outdoors and make some little dirt tracks around the flag pole and have races," she said.

You should have seen those children's eyes light up. An hour of content for everyone followed. All because a mother had learned to say "do" instead of "don't."

The "Do" Mother Offers Counter Attractions.

And it was the same all day long. When the game of train in the Gloucester hammock began to flag, the "do" mother made it last a half hour longer by giving them the backs of old envelopes to make them tickle. When they rebelled because they weren't allowed to go out alone in the row boat, the "do" mother offered as a counter attraction the game of spicing a paper box in the water and throwing stones at it. And so on.

Of course, one can go too far in saying "do." One can lead the child to expect that all his amusements shall be thought up for him; that he will be bribed with one amusement whenever he is forbidden another.

But because a good thing can be carried too far, never proves that it is not good.

Household Notes.

When stitching a long seam on the machine, use wire paper clips to hold the edges together.

Many planked dishes can be prepared with the vegetables on the plank, thus saving dishes.

Scraped and worn pearl buttons can be renovated with the help of buffer and manicure powder.

Cantaloupe salad is made of balls of ripe cantaloupe, served on lettuce leaves with French dressing.

When poaching eggs, set the water in motion before dropping eggs. They will be round in shape.

It is a good idea to have a picnic meal every now and then—just to get rid of the weariness of dishes.

Instead of buying evergreen to set out in the garden, see if you cannot dig up wild native varieties.

Save oil nail brushes to clean white shoes with. They are much more satisfactory than larger brushes.

If candles are too large for holders, immerse a moment in hot water till softened and fit firmly in holders.

When using oven gas to warm summer breakfast foods, do an extra panful and keep crisp in a covered jar.

THE PUTTERERS-ROUND.

Jus' putterin' round—the rosebud there Requirin' jus' a little care; The climbers that we love so much Needin' the little extra touch That keeps 'em orderly an' straight; Perhaps the hinge upon the gate Has broken down, or mother asks Assistance for her heavier tasks Or needs another pantry shelf, Which she could never build herself. No glory or renown is found But one who merely putters round An' yet how much the old home needs The door of these simple deeds.

Jus' putterin' round, from day to day Smoothin' somebody's troubled way; Liftin' the burdens of the week; Stoppin' a cherry word to speak; A friendly hand stretched here an' there, Thinkin' of people tired with care An' wonderin' what you can do To start 'em out with hope anew; Goin' on errands to the store For things the folks are waitin' for, No sum of wealth or touch of fame The helpful putterers round may claim.

An' yet wherever they appear They carry gentleness an' cheer.

Supposin' all men sought success An' could not be content with less! Imagine this world, if you can, Where never lived a kind old man Who loved his neighbors an' his flowers.

Genlemen.—Ever since coming home from the Boer war I have been bothered with running fever sores on my legs. I tried many salves and liniments; also doctored continuously for the blood, but got no permanent relief, till last winter when my mother got me to try MINARD'S LINIMENT. The effect of which was almost magical. Two bottles completely cured me and I have worked every working day since.

Yours gratefully, JOHN WALSH.

Where a Loin of Beef Was Knighted.

It was at Houghton Towers, the old-est mansion in England, that James I., at the end of August, 1617, touched a loin of beef and bestowed upon it a knighthood. From that day onwards that part of the animal has been known as Sir Loin." Houghton Towers, in the old days, was the scene of great feasting, and the most notable incident in its history was the visit paid to it by James I., the Stuart kink. For three days the mansion was the scene of great feasting and entertaining, Sir Richard Hoghton, who was then the owner, playing the role of host in a lavish way. The kink, on his way to the South from Scotland, was making royal progress through Lancashire, and everywhere he was most royally entertained, but nowhere so splendidly as at Houghton Towers. It was a lumbering State coach in which King James had made a weary journey, and on arriving at the bottom of Houghton Hill, the ascent was found too steep for the carriage, so the King and his courtiers descended and mounted on horseback. As Sir Richard Hoghton had accompanied the King from Preston, his son Gilbert received the monarch at the bottom of the great avenue, kneeling and kissing his hand. The whole length of the avenue was covered with purple velvet, and over this the King rode to the Tower, escorted by Sir Richard and his son, and followed by his retinue of earls, the Bishop of Chester, many baronets and knights, and over a hundred Lancashire gentlemen. In front of the Tower the tenantry of the Hoghtons and those of neighbouring families were assembled, and enthusiastic cheers greeted the appearance of the Sovereign, riding at the head of an imposing cavalcade. On the third day of the Royal visit, being Sunday, the King and Court with all the large company, assembled in the hall to hear a sermon from the Bishop of Chester, and in the afternoon the Lancashire custom of rush-bearing was represented to the King in the middle of the courtyard. The following day at noon, His Majesty entered the gilded coach and started for Latham.

The Troops in Russia.

Just how many we are ignorant of—but we do know that there are many British soldiers now in Northern Russia fighting the Bolsheviks.

The soldiers who are not there do not want to go—as proven by the soldiers' revolt in England a few days ago.

Withdraw the troops from frozen Russia and let them come home to a well-earned rest, and leave the Bolsheviks to either make or mar the country.

The World Trade.

The world's market can and will be supplied by one of three nations—England, America and Germany.

In England there is a new strike every day and general labor unrest is prevalent. Production has slackened. The whole country is resting on its oars.

In America there are a few strikes and not many of them are of a very serious nature. America has accomplished the from-war-to-peace change in record time.

In Germany there are no strikes. Production is booming. People are bending their backs and workmen and managers are working in co-operation. The industries are going in full blast.

Workmen Discuss Speeding.

We are pleased to see that our agitation on the matter of speeding has resulted in stirring up the members of the N.L.W.A.

will of the people must prevail. If every union, association, club and organization now took the matter up, passed resolutions in condemnation of speeding, and forwarded copies to the Government and to the Press, speeding would soon be put down.

That is the way to do such things!

The Next War.

From time immemorial there have been prophets who have foretold coming wonders and even to-day there are countless men who can "see" what is coming.

We do not lay claim to the gift; but, nevertheless, we now essay a prophecy.

The next war will be fought between Germany, Austria, Turkey, Bulgaria, Italy, Russia, Norway, Sweden, and a few more, on the one side, and England, France, America and, perhaps, a few others, on the other.

Of course, this is only a prophecy and prophecies never come true. Nevertheless, we just wonder.

Band Dance.

The C. C. C. band will hold another of its enjoyable dances on next Wednesday night Sept. 3rd in their hall, to augment the band funds.

Conductor Takes Holiday.

Conductor P. Lee, the popular train official of the shore line, takes a holiday on Monday next and will visit New York with his wife and son.

Car 84.

Yesterday afternoon automobile No. 84 struck a pedestrian on Military Road. The man in question was Mr. Norman Avery, who was then among the mourners of a funeral and was near the office waiting to be paid when he suddenly lost his reason and tried to force his way into the cashier's department.

Trust the Ladies!

A woman is a born cook—a man is a self-made one if he is a cook at all. That is the secret of the success of Sunkist Marmalades made from the recipe of a Scotch lady by lady cooks in California in small quantities with the same care as any dish might be made in your own home.

That the popularity of Sunkist Marmalade is growing every day is testified by the statement of a returned War Veteran who stated the other day that he had never cared for Marmalade—even in France where luxuries were scarce—until he tried a glass of Sunkist the other day which his family had purchased from C. P. Egan.

Sunkist Marmalades are now stocked by practically every Grocery store of importance in St. John's. In the windows of Ellis & Co., Ltd., and the Every Grocery store on Water Street now stocks the Sunkist line while the enterprising grocers of the Middle St. and the Higher levels also sell Sunkist. That Sunkist Marmalade has come to stay is testified by the daily increasing sales—it is practically impossible to keep it in stock.

Sunkist comes in three varieties: Orange Marmalade, Grapefruit Marmalade for those who prefer a Marmalade with a "tang" to it and Orange Jelly which is delicious for filling cakes and pies or as a jam spread for the kiddies.

Market Prices.

(From The Trade Review.)

CODFISH—We have reliable information that very strong efforts are being made to get our Exporters to refuse to make shipments to foreign markets on consignment and insist on Contract sales for delivery before the fish leaves here.

Letters that we have seen show that the "Consorzio" or Combine of Merchants in Italy have agreed to make purchases of their requirements and the only question remaining is the terms to safe guard buyers against any inferior quality that may be shipped.

This should be easily arranged as the Board of Trade have reliable inspectors who can issue certificates regarding satisfactory way.

Important buyers on the Greek market have made contract purchases for the past seven years and will no doubt continue this method of doing business which is the only satisfactory way.

In former years Contract sales for cargoes to Spain, were often arranged, but the Nfd. Agents in London now state that this is impossible owing to Nfd. shippers sending too much fish on consignment to that market. It is reported that Mr. Geo. Hawes our Trade Commissioner in Spain is a passenger on S.S. Digby due shortly from England. All hope he will arrange in future for Contract Sales and do away with this consignment and retail business which is a relic of past ages.

Iceland shippers make their contracts for sale of fish to Mediterranean Markets, three or four months in advance of shipment and they are paid by Bank Credit against B. of L. with certificate of weight. This Iceland fish is washed clean and has a white appearance but it is even damper and softer cure than our Labrador. Shipments have often shown seven per cent. loss of weight on passage when arriving in Italy, but the buyer has to stand this loss of weight as the fish is bought f.o.b. Iceland.

It is about time that our Merchants took a lesson from the Iceland fisherman and insisted on sales in advance. Then Newfoundlanders will obtain their own terms and not be swindled as they have so often been in the past.

COD OIL—There have been many enquiries received here from the American markets but very little business doing. The shipments arriving on local markets have been limited and fishermen are hoping to get $250 per ton. This is practically about $1.00 per gallon and a very good price for the ordinary product that has not been tanked. It is hard to say whether any large quantity can be sold at this figure as conditions on American market are far from good. There has been a steady decline in the United States for animal oils such as tallows and greases which takes the place to a great extent for our Cod Oil in the manufacture of leather.

There are no Government contracts to sustain the market such as we had last year and we believe the limit has been reached. The very latest advices from New York state the market condition is far from good, with little or no business doing.

COD LIVER OIL—There is no change in the market. Considerable shipments have arrived on the local market. We hear of some refiners who have done very poorly as compared with last year, but then again there are some localities that never did so well before. The price $2.00 per gallon has been sustained so far, and although we hear of some parties who say they can get a few cents more we are certain that the principal buyers are not paying higher.

The United States market is buying from hand to mouth believing they will get it cheaper shortly. The English market is the only one with any life but the Bank charges for Sterling Exchange is equivalent to over fifty cents per gallon, which is a thing unheard of and makes business with Europe almost prohibitive.

LOBSTERS—The price in St. John's is to-day $33 per case of 48 one-pound tins. On the West Coast more has been given in the keen competition at Bonne Bay and St.

George's. As high as $36.50 and in a few instances $37 per case was paid by Halifax buyers. The foreign market on the other side of the Atlantic at present does not warrant this figure.

MOLASSES—Prices are unchanged except that further shading off in cash sales where large lots are involved discounts in some cases bring the prices down to 92c. per gallon. The regular rates are 94 to 95c. per gallon for puncheon lots 95 to 97c. for terces and 98c. to $1.00 in barrels. Two cargoes arrived this week from Barbados. The total is now 8,844 puncheons.

SUGAR—We have word that the authorities in Barbados have placed an embargo preventing shipments of sugar from there.

FLOUR—The Canadian Government have arrived at a satisfactory agreement with their farmers and we will no doubt have offers of more flour from Canada shortly. Manitoba high Patents are selling for $14.25 to $14.50 according to brand and quality.

It is reported that some of the so called pre-war white flour is not any better than recent war grade. The real white flour will be arriving very soon in large quantities but Mills are asking extra prices for it. S.S. Yarmouth arriving Thursday is reported with 5000 barrels of Windsor Patent. The American spring wheat crop is reported as a complete failure not one third of average quantity. Standard is now $13.80 to $14.00 and White $14.50 to $15.

PORK—The market took a serious drop of about $2.75 per barrel in Chicago caused principally by President Wilson and various congressmen together with the municipalities throughout the Country in energetic endeavours and a Nation-wide movement to reduce the high cost of living forcing the big packers to liquidate their stocks.

Since there is strong feeling has set in and market has regained its loss showing how strong the market really is. Ham Butt has sold here for $62.00 per barrel whereas it would cost over $64.00 to import it to-day.

BEEF—The price of Beef is unchanged in the higher grades but weaker in the lower. Boneless this week is going at $38 to $40 per barrel, wholesale. The higher grades run from $47 to $49 per barrel. There is very little doing in Beef just now. The imports to date are 12,132 brls. against 17,460 brls. at a corresponding date last year.

HAY, OATS, POTATOES—Oats firm at $5.20 to $5.30 per sack. Imported potatoes (new) the only kind in the market, have dropped to $7.50 per barrel. No local yet. Hay down to $50 per ton, wholesale.

Air Knight Wedding.

MARRIAGE OF SIR ARTHUR WHITTEN BROWN.

The successful crossing of the Atlantic by aeroplane was recalled on Tuesday by the marriage of Lieutenant Sir Arthur Whitten Brown, of Manchester, the navigator of the Atlantic machine, to Miss Marguerite Kennedy, of Ealing. The ceremony took place at the Chapel Royal, Savoy, and in addition to the fortunate guests who found a place in church large numbers of people crowded Savoy-street in the hope of getting a glimpse of the Atlantic airman and his bride.

There were rousing cheers when Captain Sir John Alcock, who was Sir A. W. Brown's companion in the successful flight, approached the church, but the bridegroom slipped in unnoted by the waiting crowds. Miss Kennedy was given away by her father, Major Kennedy, who is also an officer in the Royal Air Force. Her gown was of ivory tulle with a hand of ribbon in the colours of the R. A. F. The bridesmaids, Miss Eileen Kennedy, the sister of the bride, and her little cousin, Miss Biddy Tucker, also carried bouquets bound with the R. A. F. colours.

The decoration of the chapel was carried out in white marguerites, and the R. A. F. wings, done in white flowers, were placed over the altar. When Sir Arthur Whitten Brown—Lieut. Brown of Atlantic flight fame—was married to Miss Marguerite Kennedy at the Chapel Royal, Savoy, on Tuesday, he was faced with an ordeal probably more trying than that of his Atlantic flight, for not only did crowds hang on the railings to catch a glimpse of the procession, but, after the ceremony, about forty press photographers and cinema men were in waiting to get a picture of the couple leaving the church.

Captain Sir John Alcock, of Atlantic flying fame, is to visit Amsterdam to-morrow. The Amsterdam papers state that he will be welcomed with great festivities, and that a tour of decorated motor cars through the town has been planned.

Bereft Parent Writes.

THE G. P. CEMETERY DISGRACE.

Dear Sir, I was gratified to read the letter of "Decency" in your paper last week, backing up what I had previously written on the subject of the disgraceful condition of the West End Cemetery. It gave me both pleasure and encouragement to find that there is one citizen, at least, who sees eye to eye with me on this question and that there is one who has the courage to help me to expose the disgraceful neglect of the Cemetery Committee. Their apathy and inactivity is provocative of the same indignation in him as in myself and with his help I trust that we shall succeed in waking them up to a sense of their duty in this matter. It is the tendency of human nature to remain passive till some strong impelling action is made to arouse it and this, with the help of "Decency," I hope to accomplish. If it were some great financial scheme for profiteering that was launched that awaited their activity I wonder would they be so slow to move? I trust not. They would be working overtime night and day to accomplish their undertaking. This is a sad commentary on human nature in general and their own intelligence in particular. They, as a committee, seem, by their neglect, to be sadly lacking in their appreciation of the sense of esteem to which their efforts, if made, would entitle them, amongst their congregations, which cannot be measured by mere money. If they want a suggestion, the working out of which would not cost them any money and little loss of time, I would say to them—Get the clergymen of the various denominations concerned to appeal from their pulpits to their congregations and to name a Sunday for a collection. Once the gravity of the situation was made known to the people through their pastors they would I have no doubt see that the Committee do the work for which they are appointed or else make them resign and have their places filled by better men.

Yours truly,
BEREFT PARENT.

Had to Call In the Neighbors for Assistance

Mrs. Rock Was So Run-Down Couldn't Do Housework—Restored by Tanlac.

"This is the only medicine I've ever taken that does just what they say it will do," said Mrs. J. L. Rock, R.F.D., No. 4, Flat, Ill., in telling her experience with Tanlac. "For eleven years," continued Mrs. Rock, "I suffered with stomach trouble and was in a general run-down condition, but it's all different with me now, for three bottles of Tanlac almost made a new woman of me. I lost my appetite and so that actually I would get sick at the smell of food cooking. What little I did manage to force down would cause gas to form, and press up around my heart so bad at times I could hardly get a good breath. I would have cramping pains in the pit of my stomach which would last for many hours, then to make matters worse my kidneys became affected and I had terrible pains in my back and sides and at times could hardly turn over in bed. I finally got so weak and run-down I couldn't do my housework and had to call in the neighbors to help me. I was so nervous the least little noise would upset me, and I could sleep but very little at night. "I was in this very condition when I heard about Tanlac and asked my husband to get me a bottle, and to my surprise and delight I started to improve right from the start. I have taken three bottles now and I'll tell you it's wonderful the way this medicine helped me. The pains in my back and sides have all left me. My nerves are quiet and I sleep fine now, all night long and when I get up in the mornings I am rested and refreshed. I never knew what it is to have a headache now, I have a splendid appetite and feel perfectly well in every way and I want everybody to know what a great medicine Tanlac is."

Tanlac is sold in St. John's by M. Connors, under the personal direction of a special Tanlac Representative.

The Bottle.

What robs the human form and face of every beauty every grace. 'Till naught is left but what is base? The bottle.

What sears the conscience, turns the brain, What fills the mind with thought that's vain And makes the wisest man insane? The bottle.

What takes the hungry children's bread, And gives them filth and rags instead 'Till every joy of life has fled? The bottle.

What makes of honest people knaves The pure defiles, the free enslaves; What fills the land with drunkard's graves? The bottle.

What tempts the young from wisdom's way To list to what the tempter says For which with life he often pays? The bottle.

What blights the home, the church, the state, What bids the golden age to wait? What is it that all men should hate? The bottle.

Mutt and Jeff.

To-morrow the Express will introduce to England a humorist whose work is the delight of millions of his fellow-countrymen in America. He learned, the busy, the young, the old, even the illiterate, delight in Mutt and Jeff, for the pictures of these two inseparables make an irresistible appeal, even apart from the accompanying stories. What is it in Captain "Bud" Fisher's art that gives it so wide a hold? The answer is not far to seek. He has the human touch. The things that happen in Mutt and Jeff and the things that they say to one another might happen to or be said by us all. The artist gives these common human experiences just that touch which makes a humorous story out of an ordinary incident. That is why "Bud" Fisher's success is so wide and so deserved. His art is clean and it is human. What does a man not deserve who can make a continent laugh and not be ashamed.

LONDON GOSSIP.

LONDON, August 11th, 1919.
THE PRINCE'S TOUR.

There is much personal interest in the Prince of Wales' tour to the New World. He has developed a good deal since the armistice and has thrown himself into public affairs. He gave up dancing about six weeks ago when he found that public matters required so much of his energy. One point which our American friends will doubtless note is that, compared with King Edward when he made his great tour as Prince of Wales—or rather as Baron Renfrew—the Prince, like most modern young men, lacks staying power. King Edward could dance up to five in the morning and be at a review at eight, and keep up that sort of thing for three or four days. Canadian and American society, however, will not make the onerous calls on the Prince that they made on his grandfather. The Prince of Wales promises to develop into a very ready and agreeable public speaker. There was a long gap in such among our Princes from the time of Charles I., whose elegant flow of appropriate words on fitting occasions was in agreeable contrast with the pedantic, pompous, and utterly prosy harangues of his father, James I. The next good Royal speaker was the Prince Consort, Queen Victoria's husband, who was also a scholar, though laborer, as was his fourth son, Prince Leopold, Duke of Albany. His eldest, the late King Edward, was somewhat husky, but agreeable to listen to, while his third, the Duke of Connaught, is straightforward and therefore appealing. King George always gives the impression of having deeply thought out his words before speaking, and of not being quite sure how they will be received; but the Heir-Apparent goes another way to work. His full-dress speeches are carefully prepared, and he then sets himself to the task of turning them into the semi-colloquial style beloved of a young man of five-and-twenty. It is only when he is thoroughly satisfied that the sentences sound like himself that he attempts to memorize them.

THE NEW FIELD-MARSHALS.

With the award of batons to General Plumer and Allenby there are now a round dozen of British Field-Marshal, of whom seven—Haig, Egerton, the Emperor of Japan, Wilson, Foch, Plumer and Allenby—have been made during the war. Lord French of course received his baton the year before the war broke out. The senior Field-Marshal is the Duke of Connaught, promoted in 1902, and the Emperor of Japan and Marshal Foch are the only foreigners on the roll. It is believed that the King of the Belgians will shortly be added to the list. The King of Spain may also in due course receive the honor. At present he is the senior General of the British Army. The above appointments will no doubt be received with general approval. General Plumer the veteran of the Generals, commands the affection and admiration of the whole Army, and General Allenby's wonderful work in the East merits every recognition it can receive.

SIX DECISIVE BATTLES.

"One of the six decisive battles of the war," said Lloyd George, referring to the victory won by Lord French and his handful of Continentals and Territorials when the way to the Channel ports was barred at the first battle of Ypres. What are the other combats on the Premier's list? He gave no hint, but we shall all agree on most of the battles. The first battle of the Marne, the first battle of Ypres, the battle of Jutland, the second battle of the Marne, and the second battle of Cambrai with the accompanying struggle for the Canal du Nord—those are five great stages in the checking and defeat of Germany. But what is the sixth? Nancy, where De Castelnau held Lorraine and made it possible for Joffre to stand on Marne? Tannenberg, which made the war a long one and gave the Germans a superiority in the East, never afterwards lost? Esdræon, where Allenby's cavalry and aeroplanes ended the Turkish Empire? The Austro-German check at the Piave after Caporetto, when the Italians and their allies rallied and kept Italy in the war? I fancy Lloyd George himself would put all these aside in favor of Verdun, greatly though he values Allenby's work.

THE WAR OFFICE RIFLE RANGE.

It seems that the War Office has determined not to be caught napping when the next war comes. In the basement of the War Office has been arranged a rifle range for the female staff. The attendance at present is crowded, and one markswoman lamented that, as it was quite impossible to get any practice at six o'clock in the evening, she had promised to try and be there at half-past nine in the morning to meet friends who also might be courageous enough to get to the War Office at such an unearthly hour. Perhaps the War Office is more subtle than might be believed. While it is producing Amazons it is also including early hours.

M. CLEMENCEAU'S LATEST "MOT."

Another piece of M. Clemenceau's wit is delighting the town. At a meeting of the Inter-Allied Committee last week there was a question what time they would resume in the afternoon. Signor Tittoni did not want it too early, because he liked to have his siesta early in the afternoon. Mr. Lansing did not want it too late, for he wanted to have his drive in the Bois and then his siesta before dinner. M. Clemenceau then summed up. "The meeting will be at three," he said. "Signor Tittoni can sleep before it, Mr. Lansing can sleep after it, and Mr. Balfour and I can sleep during it."

"GLOBE" CHANGES HANDS.

"The Globe," London's oldest evening paper, has changed hands several times in the last fifteen years. Now Robert Donald, a wealthy Liberal journalist, has bought it from Mr. Maxse, the well-known Imperialist and tariff reformer. Previous changes of proprietorship have always left the paper unaltered in two things—its politics have been high Tory, and its color pink. Donald was until towards the end of last year the editor of the London "Daily Chronicle," but resigned and sold out when a particularly strong Lloyd George group bought up the newspaper for political propaganda purposes.

THE SEASON.

A social observer of many seasons sends the following note on the season that has just closed. It is, of course, stretching the word to talk of a "season" at all nowadays. In the old days a "season" meant the time when a restricted number of people came to town with their families to live a certain round of town enjoyment and to see a good deal of one another. Nowadays if the season has any meaning it means the time of the year when everyone who has money to spare comes to town to enjoy themselves as they may. But dealing with the class who used to keep the old season one would say that the present season began by being rather violent and ended in something like a return to old conventions. There was never so little entertaining and yet there was so much, which is to say that there was very little entertaining on the grand scale and a vast lot of entertaining in a small way. Apart from the St. House ball and one or two others there were no great balls, but everyone was giving "little dances" with hardly any preparation. Many girls had not worn a ball dress for four years, and there was a generous reaction after hard work, with the result that a good many of the remaining conventions gave way. One result of these small dances with no arrangements for sitting out and rather small space because of part of the house being shut up was the custom of walking in the street between dances. Many of the West End squares were rather peculiar sights in the summer evenings. The custom went further. Young men often took their partners for drives in taxis between dances. Things got rather extreme. Towards the end of the season, however, a perceptible reaction set in. Women began to insist on their partners wearing gloves, and going into the street between the dances became not quite the thing. The dances, too, began to change, and the old-fashioned waltz came in a good deal at the end. As to the older people, there were plenty of dinners and bridge parties, but all on short notice. About the middle of the season the servant difficulty began to press, and now one hears comparatively few complaints. Most people have not resumed their footmen, and maidservants are being retained in all the clubs and in most houses. There has been an unusual amount of race-going and a great deal of betting.

CLOSE TO EARTH.

I never yet have ridden in air-planes or balloons, although I've often been bidden to do so. I'd like to go, but I'm not keen to fly; until the earth is padded, with velvet cushions added, I will not soar on high. I note the plane and scan it, but if I fell from that, the jolt would shock the planet, and all the folks who man it, and leave the buildings flat. I hold it right and proper for youths to tour the air; for they're as tough as copper, and if they come a cropper they do not need to care. But my old blood is chilly, I limp in many styles; and I'd look rather silly if I fell, willy-nilly, about a dozen miles. My years are three score seven, and I'd lose dignity, if I came down from heaven, some fourteen leagues or "seven, and landed in a tree. I hear the air fans calling, "Come with us if you please!" The sport is too appalling for one whose beard is falling, all snowy, to his knees. Let reckless youth unravel the cloudland's mystery; the soil on which I travel, the unpolished gravel, is good enough for me.

Household Notes.

A length of white oilcloth spread on the bed can be used instead of a cutting table.
Never sew at a sewing machine with the light facing you. Let it come from the left.
An excellent, hearty salad is made with cottage cheese, tomatoes, eggs, olives and lettuce.
A large cork, first rubbed on the scouring cake and then the knives, cleans them well.
Prunes stuffed with cream cheese and served on lettuce leaves are another good salad.
Put hard, dry lemons in a pan of hot water for two hours. Keep at an even temperature.

Hindoo Widows Burned

AT HUSBANDS' FUNERALS.
On Monday, Aug. 30, 1838, at Udaipur, in north-west India, the Maharajah, or "great king," Junah Singh, died, and when his body was consumed on the pyre, two of his queens and six of his concubines were burned to death at the same time. Such self-sacrifice is called "suttee," or properly "sati," meaning "good woman" or "true wife," because it was expected as a proof that she was faithful to her deceased husband. It was regarded as showing the affection that she had felt for him during his life, and she desired to attend him, if he needed any such partner, in the future one. It had been thought, however, that women were taught their duty as a means of a successor getting rid of the burden of supporting them, especially as they might not marry a second husband. Lord William Cavendish Bentinck, when Governor-General of India from 1828 till 1835, had formally abolished these "suttees" on December 7, 1829, but they continued occasionally to take place as on this occasion. On March 1, 1877, several wives of Sir Jung Bahadoor, Prime Minister of Nepal, a State on the south-west slopes of the Himalaya Hills, thus perished. The Greeks had this custom in India when they reached it, under Alexander the Great, in B.C. 327, but the original ancient laws of India required of a widow only to lead a chaste life. Akbar, the greatest sovereign of Hindustan, from 1556 till 1605, made the earliest attempt to stop it. But as late as 1905 a "suttee" was held in Behar, a district of Bengal, and the British rulers were obliged to sentence to penal servitude those who assisted on that occasion.

Imprisonment in a Good Cause.

Edward T. Leech, editor of the Memphis Press, sentenced to imprisonment for ten days for contempt of court, was escorted to jail by a procession of automobiles, while the crowds in the street cheered Mr. Leech as he passed, says an American paper.

It is not contended that the editorial which caused Mr. Leech's imprisonment attacked anybody by name. It merely undertook to describe certain political conditions in Memphis, and the description was so impressive that Mr. Leech was sent to jail for contempt of court.

What constitute contempt of court in cases arising outside of a courtroom is always a debatable question, but as long as there are Judges who use their power and office for political purposes, there will be citizens who

Yes, There Were Some Family Rows Among the Allied Commanders.

We heard about them a lot, those disagreements between the Allies, with each arguing for this, Haig for that, and Pershing breaking in to announce that he was going to have matters his own way or know the reason why. There was even a report, at one time, that somebody very high up in one army had challenged somebody very high up in another to a duel. Well, it appears that where there was so much smoke there was a certain amount of fire. At least, on the authority of Edwin B. Wilson, a correspondent of the Brooklyn Eagle, there was sufficient heat developed on several occasions to suggest a good lively fire somewhere. "As long as the censorship was strict," he observes, "little light was shed on this phase of the war—the relations of the active field-commanders. In fact, positive denials have been made of the existence of any friction whatever. It had all been a glorified love-feast, said American officials." However, a few weeks ago, at American General Headquarters at Chaumont, "the corner of the curtain was drawn aside a little." According to the writer:

It was the first time such matters had been discussed with any degree of freedom outside of the immediate circles concerned. General Pershing himself was not present, but his closest and most trusted advisers were—the deputy chief of the General Staff and the generals in charge of the five sections of the staff. Most of the newspaper men present are still in khaki in France.

Of course, there had been friction. That was made plain. Indeed, it seemed that the very necessity of continually dealing with Allies was more or less obnoxious to some of our officers. All the trained officers were equally desirous of bringing about the same results, but they simply couldn't see things in the same way. There had been disagreements on vital matters and quite evidently warm feeling. The curtain was not drawn back the whole way, however, and much was still left to the imagination, but it was evidently a good cross-section view of the whole situation.

Gen. Fox Connor, chief of the division of operations, seemed to sum up the feeling when he earnestly expressed the hope that "in the near future America will not have to deal with any Allies."

The first big split between General Pershing and the chiefs of the French and British armies came early. It was over the question of how American soldiers were to be trained. Gen. L. J. McNair, chief of the training section of the staff, told the story: "As soon as we began making our plans," said the General, "representatives of the British and French came to us, each urging us to adopt his nation's system of training. Their methods were investigated by General Pershing, and finally he decided to adopt neither. He decided on a strictly American method of training troops. Naturally, there was a great deal of national pride back of the attitude of both our great Allies, and our position was felt keenly by them.

"General Pershing differed from the other Allied chiefs on vital principles. From the first he believed that the German's Western Front could be broken, but our Allies then assured us that the war would end on the other front—in fact, that it was impossible to break through. They believed that the war would be stabilized to the end. Therefore, they wanted the Americans to be trained chiefly for trench warfare.

"But General Pershing didn't want to train our men solely to be trench-fighters. There was never any question in his mind that the German lines could be broken by American troops. With the idea of the offensive as the only possible role to fit the American characteristics and mission in the war went also the idea of an aggressive self-reliant infantry as the basis of all organization. 'Train for the open warfare' was Pershing's great principle, and he clung to it in spite of the earnest advice of both British and French. The rifle was coming to be looked upon in some way as an almost obsolete weapon. But Pershing insisted on its great value.

"The American idea was justified." Altho at G. H. Q. there was the typical soldierly desire not to sing the praises of any individual men, says the writer, the distinct impression was created among the visitors that had not General Pershing not broken with his Allies on this point the war would not have been won anywhere near as early as it was. Although Pershing's decision does not now seem remarkable, it was at that time considered almost revolutionary—certainly an experiment. It was doubtful if many of his acts required more courage than did this discarding the advice of his experienced Allies—when he was still a newcomer on the scene.

General Connor was quite frank in referring to this phase of the situation, as the writer reports: "One of the greatest difficulties we had," said he, "was in dealing with our Allies. This held true with the British as well as with the French. They naturally had different points of view. Their minds simply don't work like ours. I believe that all of the trouble was due simply to an incompatibility of temperament." American soldiers in France never have made any bones about taking the full credit for winning the war. In fact, this tendency went so far that there was propaganda started by the powers that be in the army urging the dough-boys to be more considerate in their attitude toward our Allies. To what extent this tendency—typically American and inspired by the highest patriotism—has been affected by the "toning down" propaganda remains to be seen. But there is small reason to wonder that it exists when one meets the same feeling, just as confidently expressed, among the higher-ups at G.H.Q. General Nolan was a good example of this.

He dwelt particularly upon the way in which the French, several times, called upon Pershing for American troops to lead the way in attacks on particularly difficult positions along the French part of the front.

"So insistent were the requests for American troops," said General Connor, "that it seemed that the commanders of the Allies felt that the very presence of American divisions assured victory. It is to the eternal glory of the American soldier that wherever he went he found victory."

General Connor expressed the opinion that the "United States soldier was worth two of any other country." General Moiseley, of staff section four—called the distributor—and Col. Lincoln of section one—the wholesaler—referred to the shortages of forage and horses in the Army and consequent need of falling back on the French for help. It was revealed that there was considerable feeling over the situations that ensued. It seems that the French promised a certain number of horses, were unable to make good, and frequently had to charge more for them than had been originally understood. Colonel Lincoln dwelt upon the difficulties which the horse-shortage continually caused various branches of the American Army. The boost in price was evidently forced by certain groups of French business men, but through pressure from French officials at Paris this situation was finally relieved somewhat.

The Allies were not the only people with whom the bosses of the A.E. F. sometimes found great difficulty in getting along. All-American rows sometimes occurred. According to the writer:

It was found at times that the ideas of the officers actually in the field differed from those of the Army chieftains at Washington. Every once in a while there have come echoes of some such dispute. One difficulty that was encountered in France was frankly put up to the Army authorities in the States by General Connor. That was the lack of anything even approaching an adequate number of replacements units. As one mingled with American soldiers in various parts of France there was encountered protest after protest about the disbandment of this or that division. There had been great divisional pride, and the officers and men who had come from the same part of the country and had their training together naturally felt it keenly when their organization was split and sent up to the front. The result was continuous and spirited protest against the authorities at G. H. Q. There was a tendency to hold Pershing personally responsible for such a condition of affairs.

It was on account of this criticism against the Army chiefs that the question was raised at this conference with the service newspaper men. General Connor washed his hands off all responsibility for it.

"General Pershing and General Staff over here," he said, had early recommended that a certain proportion of replacements be sent over and be kept coming coincidentally with the full divisions. But those in charge in the States did not comply with our recommendation. It was a mistake at home from the very beginning. The natural result was that we over here had to break up six divisions to get enough replacements for our pressing needs during the severe fighting in the last two months of the war."

Altho none of the staff officers speaking made any further attempt to explain the reasons for this situation, it was the general belief among the best informed of the newspaper men present that political pressure at Washington from sections desiring to get their "home division" across the ocean in a hurry was the fundamental cause of the whole difficulty. There were ships enough to carry only a certain number of troops, so that it was apparent when several divisions were sent over, in addition to those normally going under the original plans, that some of those originally scheduled to go had to be dropped. Apparently the replacements were those put on one side.

This situation is more interesting at this time, the writer points out, in view of reports from Washington of friction during the early period of the war between General March and General Pershing on numerous matters, all revolving around the question as to which had the greater authority. Finally, it was announced that "matters pertaining to the American Expeditionary Force would be handled at the entire discretion of General Pershing." In view of this clash, we read—

It is natural to speculate on what will happen when Pershing and his staff comes home. Especially because these officers who have been directing affairs on the other side have built up an entirely new method of doing army business. It is questionable if the Army organization at Washington will be permitted to slide back into the old bureaucratic system of antebellum days without a fight.

Gen. Leroy Eltinge, deputy chief of staff to Pershing, told the service newspaper men how the staff was organized, somewhat after the fashion of European staffs, into five sections, G-1, G-2, etc.

"Bureaucrats would not have worked here," he said, "under actual war conditions with vast numbers of men to handle. The trouble with the bureau system is that it breeds red tape. But the General Staff can be changed at will. There are no permanent fixtures and its personnel does not become scared at new ideas."

Friction there has been—and serious friction—both with the High Command of France and England and between the American Army leaders abroad and at home. In such a huge undertaking it is natural to expect. That the difficulties were always smoothed over and that any rows that raged never once brought disastrous results to the great common cause is the really remarkable fact about it all.—Literary Digest.

The Little Slaver.

Henry Ford has written a book against the cigarette entitled, "The Case Against The Little Slaver." Thomas A. Edison, after reading it, wrote the following letter: The injurious agent comes principally from the burning paper. The substance thereby formed is called acrolein. It has a violent action on the nerve centres, producing degeneration of the cells of the brain, which is quite rapid among boys. Unlike most narcotics, this degeneration is permanent and uncontrollable. I employ no person who smokes a cigarette." Ex.

Wizard of the Wicket.

Stories of the World's Greatest Cricketer.

That the "Grand Old Man" of cricket, who, it is computed made 80,000 runs and took 7,000 wickets, mostly in first-class matches, should have been first taught to play by his mother is not the least interesting fact that the life story of Dr. W. G. Grace.

"Willie, Willie, haven't I told you over and over again how to play ball?" His mother is reported to have said when "W. G." after making a few runs for the Gentlemen of England against Oxford, was caught from a bad stroke and returned to the private tent on the ground.

At that time the Doctor was only seventeen years of age, but for twelve months he had been making big scores in representative and country matches. And no one was more proud of his achievements and those of his brother, E. M., than their mother, who whenever possible, attended the games in which her sons were playing.

"I taught my sons to play. I used to bowl to them," she once confessed, and among the treasures which W. G. most prized were the scrap-books in which his mother pasted newspaper reports about himself.

This interesting glimpse of the youth of the world's greatest cricketer is provided by "The Memorial Biography of Dr. W. G. Grace," issued under the auspices of the M. C. C., and published by Constable. The editors of the book, Lord Hawke, Lord Harris, and Sir Home Gordon, Bart., have had as collaborators all the great cricketers who have played with Grace.

The stories in the volume are legion, but one of the most humorous suggestions in regard to the prowess of "W. G." was published in a comic paper, when the Doctor was only twenty-five years of age. It read:—"The society for the improvement of Things in General and the Diffusion of Perfect Equality, at a meeting to be held shortly, will submit the following propositions:—

Grace Before and After Meat.

"That W. G. Grace shall owe a couple of hundred or so before batting—these to be reckoned against his side should he not wipe them off.

"That his shoe spikes should be turned inwards.

"That he shall be declared out whenever the umpire likes.

"That he shall always be the eleventh player.

"That he shall not be allowed to play at all."

Veterans agreed that "W. G." had a stubby beard at seventeen, although later prints show him clean shaven.

"So it would appear that about 1870 or 1871 he shaved for a while, and then allowed his salient characteristic to acquire the flowing nature so well remembered later on."

Yorkshire folk will appreciate a story told by Canon E. S. Carter. "After leaving Oxford," he says, "I took Holy Orders. I had my first curacy in Ealing, and used to go to Lord's whenever I could if Yorkshire were playing. One day I said to Tom Emmett: 'Tom, what do you think of this young W. G. Grace, who is making such scores?' (He was then twenty years old.) Tom replied: 'It's all very well against this South Country bowling; let him come up to Sheffield against me and George (Freeman). A few days afterwards when Grace went to Sheffield to play for the South v. North, and in the first innings he scored 122 out of 173, with Emmett and Freeman bowling. When Tom came to Lord's shortly afterwards I said to him: 'Well, Tom, you've had Grace at Sheffield; what do you think of him now?' Tom answered, quite seriously, 'Mr. Carter, I call him a non-such; he ought to be made play with a little bat.'"

It was Emmett who, when Grace made his 318 in eight hours against Yorkshire at Cheltenham, pathetically remarked at the conclusion of the first day's play: "Dang it all, it's Grace before meat, Grace afterwards, and Grace all day, and I expect we shall have more Grace to-morrow."

Another ecclesiastical admirer, Canon Bells, relates how Grace brought an eleven from Gloucestershire to play the Marlborough boys. In the train he made a bet that he would get a hundred runs and also hit a ball into Sun Lane, a feat that had only once previously been accomplished.

"I was in with him," says the Canon, "and a boy called Kempe bowled him clean with as fine a ball as I ever saw, I think for only three runs, and therefore neither the century nor the big hit came off. He came to the chapel in the evening, and the lines were sung:—

The scanty triumphs Grace had won, The broken vow—

I believe it was generally thought as a tonic, or stimulant or for food has no scientific value; therefore,

"Be it resolved, that the American Medical Association is opposed to the use of alcohol as a beverage"; and, "Be it further resolved, that the use of alcohol as a therapeutic agent should be further discouraged."

Dr. Howard Kelly, head of Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore, in an address at Washington in 1909, said: "I began my practice in private life, by prescribing alcohol in its various forms as an easily diffusible stimulant in cases of periodic weakness, in low fevers, and exhaustion, in accordance with the common custom of a generation ago. My experience has told me that the effect is temporary, evanescent, that the drug (for so it is) does no real good, and that a dangerous habit is thus easily engendered which may be most difficult to eradicate, a habit that may utterly ruin the patient's body, soul and spirit."

And after ten years' further experience Dr. Kelly in again addressing a large audience at Washington this summer said:

"Whether liquor has any real claim medicinally is purely an academic question. For myself I consider it worse than useless, and the medical profession of America stands unquestionably against liquor either as a drug or beverage."

Dr. A. H. Desloges, general superintendent of asylums for province of Quebec, in an address before the medical convention in June, said:

"Alcohol is one of the universal founders of lunatic asylums, and temperance might be styled one of the most active agents to keep the doctors idle."

Dr. W. H. Waugh, editor of the Clinical Magazine, Chicago, said: "Personally I stand ready to use alcohol at any time when I believe it to be to the best interests of my patients, but I do not know of a solitary case of a solitary case occurring in the widest range of medical practice in which alcohol is the best remedy that can be applied."

"I think the tendency of the medical profession throughout the country is to give up alcohol in the treatment of man observed: "The next thing that man will do will be to wicket-keep to his own bowling."

"W. G." was a favourite on the Notts ground at Trent Bridge, and among his greatest admirers was old Walker, the groundman.

"Walker was always very strict on the point of cricketers not having their preliminary practice near the pavilion, for fear they should 'smash the winders.'" On one occasion "W. G." came out and set his practice pitch in the forbidden area. The local 'pros' awaited the events. Old Walker, however, said nothing. So it was suggested he should 'go shift.' "W. G." Walker shook his head. 'No,' he said, 'you see, 'e knows where 'e's 'ittin' 'em, and you can't say that of the others.' So "W. G." was allowed to practice in peace."

Grace and his brother, E. M., could quarrel on occasions. "I was once batting for Surrey v. Gloucestershire," says C. W. Buris, the old Surrey amateur. "W. G. was bowling and 'E. M.' fielding at point, came creeping in until he looked as if he could make a grab at my bat. Well, I just turned a ball and he was there—'Obstruction! he bellowed.' 'Obstruction! he bellowed.' 'W. G.; 'why did you not catch the ball instead of trying to bamboozle the umpire.'"

The Doctor never played for his average, but there was an occasion in his later days when, playing for London County, he thought of it. It was the last match of the season, and someone mentioned that Murdoch averaged 70 and Poidevin 99. "And what do I average?" asked Grace. "If you made 86 not out today, you would average 100," was the reply. "Very good," ejaculated "W. G." He proceeded to bat admirably, and when his own score was 86, declared the innings closed. "Must beat those boys once more," was his chuckling comment.

In spotting promising young players he had scarcely an equal, and anyone mentioned in despatches of "W. G." was sure of achieving honours. He knew by instinct and was quick to place the true value on the cricketer, though to others it was not evident.

On a certain London County match, a club cricketer was playing for the first time. When "W. G." asked him where he would like to go in, he answered: "Well, Doctor, I don't mind, but I've never made a 'duck' in my life."

"W. G." looked at him as only he could look, and said: "What, never made a blob in your life? Then last is your place; you haven't played long enough!"

Alcohol as Medicine.

Looked at from a purely scientific standpoint, the question of the baneful effects of alcohol on the human body cannot be doubted, in view of the overwhelming testimonies against it by prominent physicians of world-wide fame.

The American Medical Association, representing 71,000 reputable physicians, passed the following resolution at its annual meeting in June, 1917:

"Whereas we believe that the use of alcohol is detrimental to the human economy, and its use in therapeutics as a tonic, or stimulant or for food has no scientific value; therefore,

"Be it resolved, that the American Medical Association is opposed to the use of alcohol as a beverage"; and,

"Be it further resolved, that the use of alcohol as a therapeutic agent should be further discouraged."

Dr. Howard Kelly, head of Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore, in an address at Washington in 1909, said: "I began my practice in private life, by prescribing alcohol in its various forms as an easily diffusible stimulant in cases of periodic weakness, in low fevers, and exhaustion, in accordance with the common custom of a generation ago. My experience has told me that the effect is temporary, evanescent, that the drug (for so it is) does no real good, and that a dangerous habit is thus easily engendered which may be most difficult to eradicate, a habit that may utterly ruin the patient's body, soul and spirit."

And after ten years' further experience Dr. Kelly in again addressing a large audience at Washington this summer said:

"Whether liquor has any real claim medicinally is purely an academic question. For myself I consider it worse than useless, and the medical profession of America stands unquestionably against liquor either as a drug or beverage."

Dr. A. H. Desloges, general superintendent of asylums for province of Quebec, in an address before the medical convention in June, said:

"Alcohol is one of the universal founders of lunatic asylums, and temperance might be styled one of the most active agents to keep the doctors idle."

"I think the tendency of the medical profession throughout the country is to give up alcohol in the treatment of diseases," writes Dr. Matthew D. Mann, Dean of the Medical College of Buffalo.

"My belief is, there is very little need for the use of alcohol. I almost never use it in my practice," Dr. E. G. Cutler, of Harvard Medical School.

"I think the effects of alcohol are positively harmful in the vast majority of medical cases," writes Dr. Allen A. Jones of the University of Buffalo, New York.

"There is no scientific justification for the employment of alcohol in medicine."—Dr. Alfred Carpenter.

Secretary H. Benton, M.D., of the American Society for the study of alcohol and other narcotics writes:

"In my personal practice I never have prescribed alcohol internally in any form nor for any cause except in cases of chronic alcoholism, and then only temporary during the process of sobering the patient up."

Dr. H. Kress, M.D., medical superintendent Washington Sanitarium, Washington, D.C., says:

"I never prescribe alcohol for my patients. It covers up, conceals or changes symptoms, which every physician needs as a guide in making out a diagnosis and prescription. Alcohol deceives not merely the patients but the physicians as well."

"The alcoholic treatment of disease received a fair trial and has been found wanting."—Sir Victor Horsley.

"Alcohol might be wholly dispensed with without injury to the sick, every intelligent physician being able to supply its place with other remedies of equal, if not greater, value in the limited number of cases in which it is applicable."—Dr. N. S. Davies.

Concerning the use of alcohol in pneumonia, Dr. A. A. Hill writes in the British Medical Journal:

"I rely on digitalis, strychnine, careful feeding, and absolute rest, but always refuse at the critical period when the overburdened and dilated right heart has almost reached the breaking point, to help my patient over the precipice by prescribing the so-called stimulant that must often, by its paralyzing effect on the cardiac nerves, take away his last chance for recovering. Lobar pneumonia, cardiac failure—so runs the usual certificate and the cause of the cardiac failure in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred is alcohol."

J. H. Kellogg, M.D., founder of the Battle Creek Sanitarium, Battle Creek, Michigan, says:

"I have been practising medicine for the past thirty-five years and have never used alcohol as a remedy. During thirty-three years of this time I have been medical superintendent of the Battle Creek Sanitarium and have had under my supervision from two to six thousand cases annually. I have thirty assistant physicians working with me. None of us make use of alcohol in any form as a tonic or stimulant remedy. We find no necessity for its use and believe it could be easily eliminated from the materia medica, not only without any loss, but with a great gain to human welfare."

—Laura Hetherington, Prov. Pres. Women's Christian Temperance Union, in St. John Telegraph.

Ethie's Report.

(Western Star.) The s.s. Ethie, Capt. Edward English, reached Curling at 10 o'clock on Sunday night, having made the run from Flower's Cove in 23 hours. The ship, however, encountered much fog in the Strait of Belle Isle and was delayed considerably thereby, and also had to lay up at Bonne Bay the whole of Sunday 17th, when going north.

There was a sign of herring on Labrador on the 21st inst. There is practically no codfishing at present north of Bonne Esperance.

Capt. English furnishes us with the following fishery report:

August 20—West St. Modeste, nothing in trap since 16th, and none to hook; Red Bay, no trapping, and very little bait; Chateau, nothing since 16th, when ice came in on the coast; Chimney Tickle, no cod in traps, about 1 barrel to hook; Forteau and Lance au Loop, 8 to 10 qts. per boat; Battle Hr., nothing with twine; boats from half to one quintal.

August 21—Cape Charles, no cod at all, sign of herring; Pleasure Harbor, no trapping, first sign of bait to-day, boats jig about one quintal; West St. Modeste, fair fishing; Forteau and Lance au Loop, good fishing past ten days; Bonne Esperance, plenty of cod at Old Fort, boats loading every day. Whiteley's crews had some good trapping this week; Grant, at Blanc Sablon reports 11,000 qts., with fishery about finished, no bait.

The codfishery is about over on Newfoundland side of Straits; 75 passengers came along by the Ethie, including 40 first class, among whom were Prof. Bennett, of Cornell University, who had been salmon fishing on the rivers of Hawk's Bay, and Dr. Chas. Parsons who was in charge of the hospital at Battle Hr. the past season.

Our Baseball Column.

PLAIGARISED AND OTHERWISE.

With "Red McVane" coaching at 1st base, those who are lucky enough to have their numbered reserved seats in the grandstand are assured of an evening's entertainment on Monday. Opposing him will be our local artist—Harvey Thomas—and helping him will be the genial Billy Duggan.

The visitors will arrive by to-morrow's express, and the first game will be played on Monday evening. The game will start at 6.15, and for ten cents you will have two hours of good clean fun.

Numbered reserved seats for the grandstand may be had at F. V. Cheasman's at 25 cents each.

ART HILTZ.

Captain of the Home Team.
He may not be the Hiltz of old.—
He may be drifting back;
He may not have the same old flash—
The same old timely whack;
But if his prime has faded out
Where youth and speed have gone—
If Time has beckoned him at last
Along the backward trail he's passed
Nobody coming on.

Choking your bat won't necessarily make it cough up a hit.

The seven deadly sins of baseball are as follows:—

Pride:—Putting your monogram on the ball after catching a sacrifice fly and before throwing it to the home plate.

Lust:—Batting round all night at Harry's instead of around 300.

Sloth:—Failure to touch all the bases.

Gluttony:—Trying to hog all the batted flies irrespective of your fielding positions.

Wrath:—Accusing Ches's ancestors of having been moles after striking out.

Avarice:—Getting a place on the team; and then wearing out a pair of baseball pants and a good bench, and nothing else.

Envy:—Speaking unfavourably of Walter Callahan.

Some would be good ball-players only that they are in a trance from the Adam's apple up.

They arrived hurriedly at the fifth inning.

"What's the score, Jim?" she asked a fan.
"Nothing to nothing" was the reply.
"Oh goody!" she exclaimed, "then we haven't missed a thing."

Lives of baseball stars remind us. We may tell with brain and mitt, And, departing, feel behind us Footprints where we used to sit.

Never tell older outfielders where to play for certain or uncertain batters. Old outfielders are quite notional and emotional.

Do not carry your glove to and from the field between innings. Visiting outfielders are not permitted to steal gloves.

When the ball gets between your vision and the sun, do not try to stare the sun out of countenance. Take out your smoked glasses and put them on while the ball is coming toward you. If this interferes with your running, sit down.

Do not throw high when returning a ball to the home plate.

Aim your throw at the umpire's head or the pitcher's spikes, or some other solid object.

Do not worry about your hitting while running after a long fly. Get the fly first and let the batter worry about his hitting.

Don't steal except to pilfer your opponent's signals.

Don't have too many signs and don't overwork the arm by unnecessary throwing.

Don't nag the their majesties the Umps. It does not get you anywhere or anything except trouble.

Don't worry about plays that are past and gone.

If the umpire's work displeases you, Don't shout: "You're as blind as a bat!"

Remember that he may have feelings—
Though his looks rarely indicate that.

Do not stare at the sky while the batter is walking from the bench to the plate, and do not try to disconcert the batter by glaring at him from the outfield.

And do not forget to ensure your seat for Monday night. The grandstand is reserved, and the seats are numbered. They cost you only a quarter at Chesman's, and there are some choice ones left.

It is considered bad form to sit down in the outfield during the game. You will find time enough to sit down in your later years. On the other hand, do not pace feverishly up and down your part of the pasture while waiting for a fly ball to come out your way. After missing it you can become feverish.

Whenever an infielder starts after a high fly, let him have it. It's the ball he's after—not your job.

Samson or some other champion once won a decision with the jaw-bone of an ass. Such decisions don't go in baseball.

Incidentally, the Grand Falls team is weak—like Samson.

We know that Claudie's fadeaway comes drifting by like Fate; We know how Callahan's curve revolves across the plate; But what has Sebat Foran got? No living player knows. For no one ever sees the ball that the Grand Falls' pitcher throws.—
He's so speedy.

BILLY MCHENRY.

The Grand Falls' Catcher.
"I want the dope on Billy," I told a baseball bug. "I want the feed-box chatter. Can Bill McHenry slug? Does he pull circus catches, or is he apt to miff? Do tell me ALL," I pleaded. "Slip me the inside stuff. When Bill starts stealing bases, oh, how is his technique? Does he make second standing, or come in on his beak? At bat is he a waiter or does he slam away? Please give me all the info on Bill McHenry, pray?"

Quoth he, "Of William's stealing there isn't much I hear. He may take second sitting, or slide in on his ear. I guess he's there at catching and gets 'em in his mitt; but, Bo, there's one thing certain, this Billy Mac can hit. I don't know Billy's habits. He may be prompt or late. His whip's a pretty good one, and he cops 'em at the plate. About his daily routine I do not know a bit; but say, this William baby is one guy who can hit."

And when the bug had ended, I pondered what he said. It seems he wasn't certain what time Bill went to bed. Or if he liked the opera or sassed the ump, but it was plain he knew for certain that McHenry could HIT.

And don't forget to secure your tickets at Chesman's for the reserved seats before they are all gone.

The Freedom of the Press

The acting premier of Australia, Mr. Watt, has taken the Australian newspapers to task for "irresponsible criticism." A writer in the Melbourne Argus replies as follows:

Oh, you naughty little daily papers! For shame, you rascals on the Inky Way! Consider how your diabolical capers Have filled your Auntie Will with sore dismay.

Because, my pets, I love you very dearly It hurts and pains me more than it hurts you To use my slipper, yet I see most clearly For your own good there's nothing else to do.

Now dry your eyes and learn from Auntie Willie; Say after me, "I think it's very rude To criticize my elders, and it's silly To adopt a captious, carping attitude."

Your influence sets a standard of behaviour Unrivalled, I am sure, by all your peers; So, children, don't you think it's time you gave your Thoughts to something else than scoffs and sneers?

I couldn't ever hurt another's feelings. However much provoked to righteous wrath; There is no music for me in the squealings Of a fellow-creature squirming in the broth.

So just behave like journals brought up nicely; I know you'll all remember what I say From having heard me speaking so precisely. Now kiss your Auntie Will and run and play.

DISEASED GUMS AND TEETH.

Of all the poison taken into the blood, the germs and pus contributed by the diseased gums and teeth are the most destructive to the human system. If every red blood cell is forced to fight against numbers of germs to "die" the blood cannot attend to the building up of the body, and if allowed to continue the system is bound to break down and eventually you are an invalid. Kidney, stomach, heart trouble, rheumatism and many other diseases are brought on by diseased gums and teeth.
