"Yes; her mother was Sir Arthur's sister. She married, I believe, beneath her."

"Then why is she called Hatton?" asked her grace.

"Because Sir Arthur has adopted her. It is perfectly natural that she should take his name." And the duchess never gave the subject a second thought.

Sir Arthur had been equally pleased. He had watched the duchess' face when she first saw Leah, and noted the flash of delighted admiration.

"Your niece is most charming," she had said to him in her gracious way. "Bring her over to Crags, to-morrow."

He congratulated Leah; and she smiled with wondering eyes. "It must be a fairy-tale, uncle," she said. "A few weeks since, He—"

She stopped abruptly, for she was on the point of pronouncing the name she had promised never to mention. The very effort to check herself, blanched her face and lips.

The general appeared not to notice it. "But a few weeks since," she said, "I had but one pair of gloves—and they were so mended and darned that I was ashamed to wear them—and not five shillings of my own in the wide world. Now I am mistress of Brentwood, your adopted child and heiress; I have a fortune in the treasures you have given me; a duchess takes me by the hand and asks me to be her friend; I am promised all that this world can give me—the loveliest, brightest, happiest life. Now, is it not like a fairy-tale?"

"Yes," he replied, looking at her face.

He wondered if, in the dawn of that rich, passionate loveliness, there was the beginning of sorrow or of joy.

In the course of a few weeks, Leah was quite at home amidst the luxury and magnificence of Brentwood. As time passed on, the memories of the old painful life grew weak; the love of her fair young sister was the strongest passion that remained. She thought of her father with a dread that was strangely mingled with regret and love; but she thought of him as little as possible; her heart and her reason were at war with each other over him. She was grateful of her escape from what she termed "a furnace of fire."

She was warmly welcomed at Crags; the duchess even grew attached to her; and when, after a gay autumn and innumerable shooting-parties, the time for the projected tour to Rome came, she invited Leah to accompany her.

At first the general was inclined to refuse. He had just learned, he said, that he could not live without her, and it was cruel to wish to take her away.

But when the duchess showed him all the advantages to be gained, he yielded at once.

"You have asked me to complete your niece's education," she said; "in no way can it be done better than by taking her abroad. A few weeks with me in Paris and in Rome will change her altogether; she will be a different girl."

He fixed his eyes lovingly on Leah. "Do you think it well to change her?" he asked, slowly. "She seems to me perfect."

"If you intend to make her a woman of the world, she must change in some respects," said the duchess, a little impatiently. "Leave her to me, Sir Arthur; I will promise that you shall be satisfied with the result."

And after that Sir Arthur offered no further opposition.

CHAPTER XII.

The Duchess of Rosedene was detained for a considerable time on the Continent by a severe illness of her husband, and in reply to her anxious entreaties the general allowed his beautiful niece to remain with her. Although his heart yearned for her, and his eyes longed once more to behold her, he knew that the care and training which the duchess could bestow were invaluable, and were such as he could not have found elsewhere. He was content to wait.

During Leah's absence he purchased a magnificent mansion in Belgravia, to which, in loving memory of his native town, he gave the name of Harbury House. The decorations were so magnificent, the furniture was so elegant and costly, that public attention was drawn to the house, and it soon became known that Sir Arthur had made this purchase for his adopted niece and heiress, who was now in Italy with the Duchess of Rosedene, and who was so rumor said—as beautiful as a vision.

People looked forward with interest to the time when the brilliant young beauty should be presented and take her place among them. It was a pity, certain spinsters and widows declared, that with such vast wealth and so many places to keep up, Sir Arthur did not marry himself; his beautiful young niece would have some one to look after then. But the keen blue eyes of General Sir Arthur Hatton were never to look on any woman with love.

The duke's health having been quite restored, the duchess had arranged that the travelling party should return to London at once. It was then the very end of April, and the season had begun. A drawing-room had been held, at which some fair young faces had been seen; but she knew that none could have equalled that of Leah Hatton.

The duke had a grand old mansion named Park View close to Hyde Park, while the duchess had a villa which she preferred to any other resort; it was called the coach, it was situated on the Thames, not far from Kew, and nothing delighted her more than to escape from the crowd and spend a few days on the banks of the river.

The duke and duchess went direct to Park View. Sir Arthur was invited to meet them, and from their house he was to take Leah home. He was impatient to see her. The duchess had told him that she had changed so completely he would hardly recognize her. He longed to see what change had been effected; to his way of thinking, she could not have grown more beautiful.

He stood in the drawing-room at Park View. At first he saw only the pictures, the gleam of white statues, the harmonious tints of thick, soft carpets, the brightness of innumerable flowers, the groups of sweet violets which perfumed the air; then, standing before him, the handsome, stately duchess, with white, jewelled hands held out in greeting to him; then, further away, near a slender, shapely palm, he discerned a figure and face so perfectly beautiful that he looked in amazement. It was his niece Leah.

The long absence had wonderfully improved her. He grew pale as he went up to her and kissed her in silence, for his emotion was too great for words.

The duchess had been right after all. Nothing but constant association with an accomplished and refined woman of the world could have given such high-bred ease and grace to her. "My daughter and niece," he said, "you have been away little more than a year, yet there is a difference of many years in you."

"Are you satisfied?" asked the duchess, softly, some time afterward, when they found themselves alone.

"I should be most ungrateful were I anything else," he replied. "I can never thank you enough. I must confess myself overwhelmed with surprise."

"I do not feel much inclined to let my treasure pass out of my hands," said the duchess, with a smile. "If I intrust her to you, you must promise me that she shall not be seen until the day of the drawing-room. I want her to take the gay world by surprise. She will make a sensation such as we have not had for some time past. Do you not agree with me?"

"With every word," replied the general. "I feel myself almost in awe in the presence of such perfect and peerless loveliness."

"Mind," said the duchess, laughing. "Leah must make the best match of the season. I shall not consider any one under an earl or duke presentable. She might have been a princess while we were in Rome, but she would not."

"I am glad of it," he declared. "There are no men like Englishmen. I hope she will marry—if she marries at all—some one who will be kind to her and make her happy."

It did not occur to him to add, "some one whom she loves." Love had never been a necessity of life with the old soldier.

Sir Arthur took his beautiful niece home that evening to Harbury House.

"Do you know why I gave this house the name of Harbury?" he said to her; and then he told her that it was in affectionate remembrance of the pretty town where his father had lived and died.

Magnificent as the house was, it was but a fitting shrine for the young beauty who had come to be mistress of it. When they stood in the drawing-room, Sir Arthur regarded his niece still more attentively.

"I should hardly have known you, Leah," he said, gently. "Among all the Hattons I do not think we have had one like you."

Headache

Recurring headaches usually come from an exhaustion of the nervous system, and they do not disappear until the vigor of the nerve cells is restored by such up-building treatment as Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

A temporary relief by use of powders is often obtained at an enormous expense to the nervous system and the general health.

Get the nerves right and the headaches will not return.

Mrs. W. J. Pearce, Nunn St., Cobourg, Ont., writes:

"My system became run-down and I suffered greatly with pain in my head. This was so severe that I would have to bind a cloth tightly about my head so that I could get my work done. A friend advised the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and after taking the first box I found quite an improvement in my condition. I continued using them until I had taken about seven boxes, and my headaches and built up my system splendidly, completely relieving the pain in my head."

Jackie Coogan Puts One Over.

Jackie Coogan added fresh laurels in the repeated showing of "Peck's Bad Boy" at the Nickel Theatre last night. Many who attended last evening's performance were anxious to see the adorable little rascal again. The various scenes, which were so cleverly worked out by young Coogan, displayed marvelous talent, and did not fail to cause convulsions of laughter.

This picture was put on in addition to the regular programme to oblige the large numbers who asked to have it repeated. The regular, however, consisted of a beautiful comedy-drama, entitled "Turning the Tables," featuring Dorothy Gish of the famous Gish Sisters. In the story Dorothy is the heiress to a large fortune, but her fortune is envied by a designing aunt, who manages to get her into an Insane Asylum, in order to get hold of her money. The picture is humorous from start to finish. The current chapter of "The Diamond Queen" was also shown.

Of course it is possible that the two might coincide and that embarrassments might arise.

But the ordinary person would never think of that contingency until it presented itself and would thereby avoid that much apprehension.

If my friend's fears translated themselves into action to avert the thing she fears that would be another thing. But they seldom do; by the nature of things that is often impossible. If anything, they make her less capable of Lavish Expenditure.

The definition of the word Economy is obviously unknown to the present Government of Newfoundland. Its application also is foreign to the members thereof, for even when they have made attempts to practice a doctrine unknown to them...

Their shallow protestations show the quality of their character, for to quote words referring to a long while dead monarch if they never said a foolish thing, they never did a wise one. All their acts and actions have been like themselves—superficial.

service. Are they? Last year in presenting his budget the Prime Minister promised an all round reduction in Civil Service salaries and a Bill to that effect was introduced and passed. The sum of two hundred and thirty thousand dollars, the Premier estimated, would be saved by this measure. But has it been effected? The Estimates for 1922-23 do not show it, but they do show an increase in current expenditure of approximately one million dollars.

McMurdo's Store News.

SATURDAY, APRIL 1. American Cabbage Seeds have always been esteemed in this country as sowing our soil and climate in a peculiar way, and there is no doubt that discriminating farmers and market gardeners prefer these seeds as mere produce and producing cabbages of better flavor than other seed.

OVER ONE THOUSAND PAGES. Only one thousand, one hundred and ninety one closely printed pages are compiled in reporting the Lower House proceedings in last year's Hansard, better known as the "Gas Works Bulletin" and this despite the fact that many members neglected to hand in their speeches for insertion in this valuable tome.

March 31st.—A very furious blowing day. All the day I to the office and soon to the Board of Trade where I fell into discourse with Mr. J. Moore, Sir P. T. McGeath and others, about the situation of the country. Nor does it seem as if we are like to recover with the present cabal. Time is speeding and no money to set anything in hand with Mr. Gosling tells of the delinquent income tax which the cabal will pass in the House, and it will take ten per centum of all incomes over $2000. Whence, I greatly wish seeing how it do be hard enough to live now, and this new tax will mean a grievous loss to me. This day the great debate was, in Parliament the manner of the extravagances of the Cabal. The Opposition in a great host, but the Government members, the stuffed animals, say a simple word out of any of them. Comes Mr. Power and tells me how the voters on divers ships do cause trouble and get "manus" (whatever that be) their captains which is a sad thing, and these men deserve to be punished. My wife much frightened with the discourses of troubles and disorders like to be, and makes mighty moan of the bad times. This is now the general apprehension of all people and my own fears are also great. This month ends with my mind full of business and concerned how this country will speed, since conditions begin to get mighty severe.

BEAVER BOARD. The back of every genuine Beaver Board is branded. About $9.00 worth of Beaver Board will ceil your room. If you use imitation Beaver Board you may appear to save $1.00 or $1.50; but by using Beaver Board you save the expense of sizing or priming; this saving may easily amount to $5.00. Again, Beaver Board will last as long as your house; an imitation of Beaver Board may look like Beaver Board, it may even appear better, but what will it look like after 2 or 3 years? As a genuine Diamond costs more than an imitation, so does Beaver Board cost more than any imitation or substitute, but in the long run Beaver Board will prove its worth, it will last as long as your house. Provincial Grand Orange Lodge.

OFFICERS ELECTED AND SESSION CLOSED.

The final proceedings of the Right Worshipful Provincial Grand Orange Lodge of Newfoundland were terminated at an early hour this morning, the social sessions during its labors, disposing of much business and developing plans for the greater extension of the Association in this Colony. Yesterday morning a general discussion on notices of Motion left over from the previous session took place, and some unfinished business was disposed of.

At 11 o'clock a delegation from the Lord's Day Alliance composed of Rev. Canon Bolt and Dr. Curtis was received. Both visitors spoke on behalf of Sunday observance, and a resolution was later adopted recommending the passing of an act similar to that which is in force in Canada.

The afternoon sitting was chiefly devoted to a discussion on matters concerning Education, arising out of the report of the Committee on correspondence. This report having been adopted business was practically completed, and following reports from various Lodge delegates who had not an opportunity to address Grand Lodge previously, the R. W. Grand Master vacated the Chair, and other Grand Officers their places. Past Provincial Grand Master John Snow assumed the chair of affairs and conducted the election of officers.

THE ELECTION OF OFFICERS

At the night session after the election of officers concluded, C.E. Russell Bay Roberts was elected delegate to the Sovereign Grand Lodge of British America which will be held at Kingston, Ontario. The next place of meeting of Grand Lodge will be Grand Falls. The installation of officers then took place, the ceremony being conducted by P.P.G.M. Snow, assisted by P.G.M. Cave, with Bro. G. T. Phillips, W.M. of Leaming Lodge as Director of Ceremonies. After passing votes of thanks to all in the city who so ably contributed to the success and expedition of the present Grand Lodge sessions, and to the press for publishing the daily transactions, the Lodge was closed to the Scarlet Degree and after singing considerable business and hearing reports of Chapter delegates, God save the King was sung and Grand Lodge declared closed in due and ancient form. An appropriation recommended by the Finance Committee of $10 for the Methodist Orphanage was omitted from the list of donations published yesterday. Many of the visiting delegates returned home by train this morning. Others will go this evening, though not a few have decided to remain over for Sunday.

Emblem of Satisfaction

For the fourth consecutive year Buick has been awarded first choice of space at the National Automobile Shows. This honor is conferred each year by the automobile manufacturers who are members of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, upon the member having done the greatest volume of business during the previous year.

The figures on which the 1922 award was made proved Buick to be the largest builder of six-cylinder cars in the world.

We invite you to ask for a catalog of the new BUICK models, including the wonderful FOUR Cylinder Buick.

Grand Jury's Presentment.

YOUR LORDSHIPS:
We, the members of the Grand Jury, acting on your suggestions, have visited and inspected the following public institutions and now beg to present our report on same.

PENITENTIARY.

On arriving at the Penitentiary we were met by the Superintendent who gave us every facility for our inspection. We visited the cells and found them very clean and well kept and that all the surroundings were conducive to the health and well being of the prisoners. We then inspected the broom factory and were very pleased with the arrangements of the place and with the work produced. We would strongly advise that similar industries be introduced to occupy the time of the other prisoners who are now compelled to be idle; this would be of great benefit to them and would also help the finances of the Institution. Generally speaking, we are of the opinion that the state of affairs is most satisfactory and redounds to the credit of the staff. There are now 62 male and 7 female prisoners there.

POOR ASYLUM.

We next visited the Poor Asylum and were shown through by the Superintendent, and found everything as satisfactory as could be expected under the circumstances. We concur in former reports as to the necessity of a new and up-to-date building but in the meantime think some improvement should be made. The sanitary and toilet arrangements are most unsatisfactory and quite inadequate to the needs of the inmates. There are 70 on the male side and in the female and for the use of the former there is only one bath and three toilets and for the latter only one bath and two toilets. We are of the opinion that this matter should receive immediate attention; in fact, we would suggest that the attention of the Board of Health be directed to this matter. The Superintendent wishes to call attention to the necessity of a general clean-up of the whole place, both inside and out, painting, repairing, etc., and would suggest that as far as possible this work and in the general upkeep of the place those inmates capable of working should be employed, which would make them healthier and happier than remaining idle. As there are a number of sick inmates we think a doctor should visit weekly as well as on special occasions. We think the officials are doing their best for the comfort of the inmates as far as facilities will permit.

INSANE ASYLUM.

A Committee of the jury visited the Asylum and were met by the Doctor in charge who explained the arrangements and work of the Institution, and we found everything satisfactory and up to date, with the addition of the new building everything seems to have been provided for the welfare of the inmates. The roomy corridors, neat and well ventilated rooms, ample provision of light and heat combined with the beautiful surroundings of the building provide ideal conditions which should effect the objects aimed at, and we believe the Medical Superintendent and Nurses are keenly interested in their work and do their best for the welfare of those committed to their charge. We understand that the portion of the building set apart for acute cases is badly heated and poorly ventilated. We understand that this is the class of cases which requires most treatment and the least possible disturbance from noise, and it is absolutely impossible to get this in these wards. They are part of the original building and are very badly heated and the wonder is that some of the patients have not suffered severely from cold. Regarding the protection, there is, other than the stairs, only one fire escape on each side of the building, and these are so constructed that it would be practically impossible for even a sane person to escape. We understand the cost would be very small to place an adequate fire escape on this building. Respectfully submitted on behalf of the Grand Jury.

Whitbourne Notes

It may be of interest to some readers of the Telegram to hear that the meteor, seen on the 12th March at St. John's and Harbour Grace, was also visible here (or probably its reflection). People coming out of church on that Sunday evening saw a vivid flash of light, which they attributed to a flash of lightning, until hearing the explosion of the meteor.

The weather has been very mild the last week, with a good deal of rain and fog, and our snow is rapidly shrinking; although the ice in the lakes looks solid still and wood-fuel is being rushed out daily, while the ice-bridge remains firm and safe.

There are quite a few small and hungry birds about, Chickadees, Jays and Sparrows; but no robin has been seen or heard in this vicinity as yet. We don't think! Last year on the 31st the robin was with us.

Mrs. Jordan Simmons, who was undergoing treatment at the General Hospital, St. John's, last month, returned home over three weeks ago, and is now greatly improved in health.

The funeral of the late Mrs. Ellis, of St. John's, was taken by Rev. Mr. Russell on the 14th inst. here, when the deceased lady was laid to rest in the Methodist Cemetery, where her husband is buried.

Mr. James H. Mercer, father of Mrs. Levi Sharpe, passed away at Blaketown on Sunday, 19th inst., at the age of 82, and was buried on Tuesday morning, 21st. Mr. and Mrs. L. Sharpe drove to Blaketown to attend the funeral, which was conducted by the Incumbent, Rev. C. Jeffrey, who was at that place for the Sunday services and remained to perform the sad ceremony. Condolences to the bereaved relatives.

Mr. Geo. Simmons lost one of his horses on the 15th inst. The poor animal in endeavouring to get free, in the stable, managed to get entangled in the halter, and owing to injuries sustained had to be destroyed.

Mrs. Lerner, of Placentia, is now here on a visit to Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Lerner (March 14th).

Mr. Richard Gosse, who has been very ill for the past week, is now convalescent.

Mr. A. J. Sharpe, C.E. Teacher of Blaketown, visited Whitbourne on Saturday, coming and returning by rail. We are sorry to hear his youngest son Bert, is very poorly, suffering with an attack of influenza. A number of people are laid by with colds and grippe. Mr. A. Brown was also ill and in the doctor's hands.

New Church seats for the C. E. School-Chapel at Blaketown, have lately come by rail from the Horwood Lumber Co., St. John's, and are a handsome addition to their place of worship. An altar-rail is now being ordered from the same firm.

The Rev. E. Hunt, Incumbent of New Harbour mission, arrived here by the morning's train to-day (30th), putting up at "Loch Leven House," while waiting for the west bound express to take him to Chance Cove, via Rantem, where he will spend Sunday next. The walk from Rantem to Chance Cove is a rough and mountainous one a distance of some 7 miles. In summer this rather inaccessible settlement can be reached by motor road, which makes it a comparatively easy journey. Mr. Hunt looks to be very fit after his winter of hard travels and strenuous work in the somewhat unwieldy New Harbour mission.

Mrs. W. J. Lerner went to St. John's this morning, and expects to be returning by Sunday's express.

Mrs. A. Peddie, who was very ill since Christmas, has made a remarkable recovery, and got out for the first time since her illness on Sunday last, to "return thanks for late mercies."

A bitter north wind sweeps our village to-day, 30th. The "boreas blast," is hard to endure after the mild spell of weather, as it penetrates through every seam and crevice in doors and is vastly uncomfortable out of doors! We hope April may be more springlike.

March 30th, 1922.

HUGE FORCES.
MOSCOW, April 1.

It may be possible to further curtail the Red army, War Minister Trotsky told the Communist Congress yesterday, but it all depends on the international situation and events in the spring. The army is at present 1,640,000 men, and the navy 25,000.

DE VALERA'S DESIRE.
LONDON, April 1.

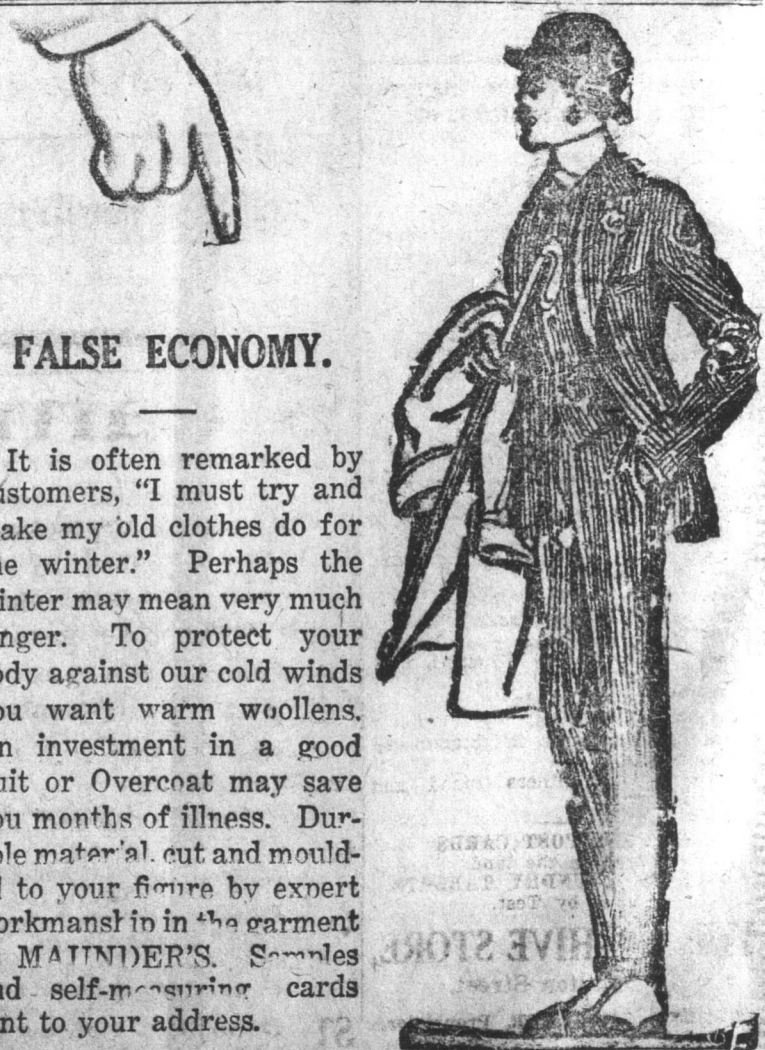

Hope, tempered with doubt and fear, is the keynote of morning newspapers editorial comment on the outlook in Ireland. The Daily Mail sees indications that Mr. De Valera is meditating a coup d'etat, and calls upon Arthur Griffith and Michael Collins to show their strength, declaring if they fall to govern, De Valera will make short work of them. The Daily Chronicle sees Mr. DeValera working towards a military dictatorship. One feature of press comment is a universal tribute to the statesmanship of Mr. Churchill, who earns the highest praise, even from political opponents.

LONDON, April 1.
The Dublin brigade of the Irish Republican Army, has been mobilized for parade Sunday morning to take a new oath of allegiance or an oath with new implications, says a statement issued from army headquarters, Beggars Bush barracks, telegraphed in the Daily Mail's correspondence.

THE BURIN STORY—(Continued and Concluded) from last week.

—And yet that man was Ambrose B— who had left Burin twenty-six years before, and who was supposed to be dead. No one recognized him as he passed down the road to Port au Bras, and one of his daughters, as he passed her house, remarked "another pack-man has come to town." He went on his way to where his brother lived, but when he got to the bottom of the Cove on the opposite side, standing in the doorway of a house that stood out from the other houses, was a woman, and being thirsty he asked her for a drink of water. His voice startled her; she looked at him, and instead of going for the water, she fainted and fell to the floor. That woman was his wife and she knew him. In the meantime Captain B— went on around the Cove to his brother's house. His brother was seventy-five years old. After a day or two it was known all through the settlement that Ambrose B— was alive and home again.

At the time his two sons, Samuel and George were on the Grand Banks in their fishing vessel. By another banker captain who left Burin a few days after the report became generally known, a message was taken to Captain Sam, that his father was alive, and home to Port au Bras. Samuel was old enough to remember his father when he went away, but George was too young at the time to have any definite recollection of him. As soon, however, as they heard the news, they decided to return home. Neither George nor any of his sisters showed any great interest in their father. When it was time to return to the Banks, Samuel decided to remain at home, and George went in charge of the schooner. Captain Ambrose B— did not get a very warm reception from his former friends and he did not stay long at his old home. During his stay, however, his son Samuel never left him, and when the captain decided to leave, Samuel accompanied his father to Port aux Basques, by the s.s. Glenace, and gave evidence of much filial love for him.

While the captain was at home, he called on his wife—Mrs. F— and told her not to worry. "You," he said, "have a husband and I have a wife." It is not known how he got away from Brig Bay; but it is generally supposed that he left there in a banker during the fall after he had left his schooner. He probably landed at Gloucester, and from there he came to the State of Maine, married, and settled down in one of the seaports. At the time he visited Newfoundland he said he was the owner of a large lobster factory and employed a large number of lobster fishermen.

Some one asked Ambrose's brother John why Ambrose did not return in the schooner so many years ago. John replied that he had given him no satisfactory explanation of it; but, he said—"before Ambrose went away to the Straits twenty-six years ago, I noticed something wrong about him, and though I never mentioned this before, I asked him what was wrong, but all he said was—"John, I know my own know," and that's all the satisfaction he ever gave me."

Some people doubted that what Ambrose B— had said about his wealth, and wife and children in Maine was true. It was, however, proven to be all true by a man and his wife whom he took away with him and who returned. Ambrose persuaded this man to go with him to the State of Maine, and promised him steady and profitable employment all the year round. The man left Burin with his wife and child, and when he got to where Ambrose B— lived, he found that everything Ambrose had told him and others were quite true, and he settled down to the work assigned to him. He remained there about two years and then he returned to Burin, giving as his main reason for doing so, that he had to work on Sundays there. He spoke very highly of Ambrose B— in every other way, and to the everlasting disgrace of the Ambroses—had a fine home in — with lots of land, cattle and horses, and plenty of money. The coming back of Ambrose B— to Burin after his absence of twenty-six years, when he was supposed to be dead, was just a nine days' wonder, and within a month after he had left again his name had ceased to be mentioned.

This ends the first story that I have written under the heading of Trinity, without there being any reference to, or association—directly or indirectly—with Trinity. I thank the person who so kindly sent me the skeleton of the story, and I hope that I have clothed it in such a natural sequence of possibilities, as will command to those to whom the details are more fully known than they are to me. As I mentioned in my last week's Notes, there must be an abundance of material for story writing on and around the West Coast; and I sincerely hope that the Burin correspondent to the Evening Telegram of a few days ago, will give us all, the pleasure of reading his pres-

Mr. J. J. Penney, wife and child of English Harbor, registered at Garland Hotel last week, and were passengers by s.s. Watchful to St. John's, where they intend to make their home in future.

On Sunday morning Rev. F. P. Daw, Trinity East, installed the newly elected Wardens and Vestrymen in the presence of the congregation, using the service authorized by the Bishop.

A petition to the House of Assembly is being circulated for signatures asking that the Bar at the South West side of the South West Arm, leading to Dunfield, be dredged sufficiently deep to admit of boats being able to pass over it. This, I understand, was promised by our local representatives a few years ago, but it came to nothing. It would be a boon to the fishermen of Dunfield, and it would also enable the motor-ferry to make Dunfield a port of call, and this would be a deserving convenience to the travelling public.

We fully appreciate the kindness of the Postmaster General in arranging for our mail to come to us by aeroplane. We were all glad to get the mail, but doubly so to have the pleasure of seeing the aeroplanes in motion and in repose. No doubt, fifty years hence people will laugh at our actions when we saw a plane for the first time, but "the laughs best who laughs last."

Leutenant Batson, wife and child, have taken up their residence in Mr. Ralph Pittman's house. Mr. Batson has taken a position in connection with the firm of Joseph Morris, and we wish him every good success.

The winter of 1922 will be remembered as the winter when the whole gamut of methods of mail delivery was run up. First it came to us by train, then by dog-team, then by steamer, and then by aeroplane. It took us back in quiet thought to the comparatively recent past, when Peter Coleman brought it to us once a week from New Perlican, and took it up to the Post Office in his red bandana pocket handkerchief; and in later years when Thomas White carried it (sometimes eighty pounds weight) on his back all the winter long, to Catalina, Bonavista, and sometimes to Bird Island Cove. "There were giants in those days"—at least there was one, in bodily strength and endurance, in the person of Thomas White, and to the everlasting disgrace of the Government of his day—when, though every effort was made to secure for him retirement, and a pension, after long years of such faithful work, and painful endurance, it was refused.

Some Interesting Incidents in Our Newfoundland History.

In one Nathaniel Phillips' time (1790), clerks had a very hard life, they were treated almost like menial servants. One day Phillips' faithful old Irish servant told his master the appalling news that the young gentlemen (his clerks) wanted a change in their dinner—all three had declared they would eat pork no longer. "Not eat pork," said the old man in a furious rage, "I'll make 'em eat port until the bristles grow on 'em." The three clerks referred to were Henry Shea (father of Sir Ambrose Shea), George Lilly (afterwards Judge Lilly) and William Lilly, of Harbor Grace. (Vide Provese page 348).

During the year 1625, Newfoundland was in great peril from Turkish pirates; and such names as "Turk's Gut" and "Turk's Cove" in Newfoundland to-day, record the memory of these terrible corsairs. (Vide Provese p. 146).

In and about 1700, besides the fishing-admirals there were other functionaries with still more high-sounding titles. We read in the records of those times of the violent acts of one Ford, the "Governor of Petty Harbor," and also of the truculent humors of the "King of Quidday Vitty." The oldest ship-skipper in each harbor was called the "King."

In 1762 St. John's, Carbonar (query—Editor) and Trinity were captured by the French.

Some fifty years ago my old friend John Murphy said to my father: "Large, are you going to the shooting match to-morrow?" "What shooting match?" my father asked. "Why," John said, "sure it's St. Patrick's Day and John Doherty is going to put up a watch of be shot at." Well, since I can remember, with every St. Patrick's Day, when fine, there has been associated either a bowling, or a shooting not at, but for a prize. This year the day was fine, and some of our local sports equipped a shooting gallery on the S.W. Arm. The prize was a 22 rifle, the distance 50 yards, and the charge 10 cents a shot. Some 200 shots were fired, and the target had several narrow escapes. The two best shots were those of Mr. Harry Hayter and Mr. Harry Rowe, who made two bullseyes and an outer, and one bullseye and two outers, respectively. The gun, valued at $20, was won by Mr. Harry Hayter.

March 19th, fifty years ago to-day, the East Coast of Newfoundland was swept by one of the worst N.E. snow storms that the oldest inhabitant can remember. Five sailing vessels that had left Bay Roberts for the ice some days before, and had got north of Cape Bonavista, were driven back by the beginning of the storm, and had taken refuge in Trinity. It was a beautiful morning, and the Captains Dawe (4) and Wilcox together with dozens of other men and boys (myself included) belonging to Trinity, spent the afternoon at bowling in the loft of the stores at the upper "room." Some children perished on the ice in Catalina Harbor, and an old woman was blown into the sea whilst crossing on the ice at Salmon Cove. I shall never forget what fine looking men those captains were, and how thoroughly they enjoyed the bowling on that day. They left Trinity some time the next week and Capt. Robert Dawe and some twenty-four of his crew were lost in the farther north a few weeks after—May God be good to them.

TO LIVE.
Life is not gathering gold nor jeweled plate
Nor building monuments of steel and stone,
He cheats the years who lives for these alone.
He sacrifices much who would be great,
And off the path to glory lies too straight,
Along the by-paths are the mercies given,
There dwell the kindly friends who smile and wait
To share the joys with which the hours are sown,
To spend some strength to win another's smile,
To play with children and to know the trees,
To sing glad hours upon the summer seas,
Seeking no fortune nor reward the while,
To share in all the seasons have to give
Of happiness and sadness, is to live.

The Mystery of Middle Bight.

And the Hero of Bird Rock—Mr. Haines' Awesome Recital.

The story of those "mysterious fires" near Antigonish, N.S., published by one of the city papers a day or two since, reminds me of another somewhat similar tale—"The Mystery of Middle Bight"—that Mr. John Haines, of the latter place used to tell, more than a quarter of a century ago. When visiting his place, I often listened with peculiar interest while he solemnly dilated upon the awesome incidents connected with certain "supernatural lights and shadows" occasionally seen there. He also wrote me about the matter, and I have at this moment on my desk a letter of his, dated August 14th 1891, in which he says: "I have heard many ghost stories talked over by the people of this and adjacent villages, and I have also read some thrilling accounts of those supernatural beings and strange lights and signs and tokens perceptible only at night. Perhaps some of our city visitors are aware that, about a furlong's space from Kelligrew's Station, a beautiful, verdant point of land stretches for a considerable distance into our noble bay. This point, known as Kelligrew's Head, contains not less than three acres of meadow land. On the eastern side is a dilapidated wharf, and a store, still used by the present owner. Close to the margin of the water is built the railroad, which severs the connection of the piece of land with the point.

AN OLD UNTENANTED HOUSE.
On the southside of the railway track stands an old house, untenanted for a number of years. Near this house are several graves; but the interior of the bodies must have taken place a very long time ago, as the oldest men here know nothing of it. Some years ago a small cannon was found on the headland, which, perhaps, some other race than ours used to defend themselves against the attacks of their enemies. As far back in the past as the adults of this place can trace, an old man, by the name of Gillingham, claimed possession of this strange property, then, after his death, Hodge became owner, and put it in a state of cultivation; after which it was handed down to Parmiter, who was related to Hodge by marriage. Parmiter added many acres to it, and put it in ample order.

STRANGE LIGHTS SEEN.
But strange lights, and so on, were seen and heard; so Parmiter sold it to its present owner, Michael Cronan (a native of Wexford, Ireland), for the sum of $800, and started out west to earn a better livelihood and to say "farewell to the ghosts." Since Parmiter's accession to the property up to the present day many are occasionally seeing those mysterious lights. One night I, with several others, went on the "gallery" which overlooks Kelligrew's Station; we included the stationmaster and two ladies from town. The train had left just twenty minutes when one of the number directed our attention to a light in the old house before mentioned.

GREEN LIGHT THROUGH THE SASSLESS WINDOW.
To our great surprise we saw a large light shining through the sassless window down stairs. It illuminated the house, so that we were able to count plainly the clapboards even at such a distance. It then went up stairs and shone for a minute only; next it came out, crossed the track and disappeared about seventy yards away. Five green lights shone out like this at intervals of about three minutes; then came a bright red light, and a noise was heard in the house. The light did not remain in the house longer than half a minute, but spread out and went rapidly over the ground. Two shadows of what seemed to be supernatural beings were in the light. Five of us walked quickly from the station towards the house till we got not more than twenty feet distant. We waited patiently for an hour. Then, seeing nothing, we began to retrace our steps, when suddenly we saw three lights more in succession. Then all was over!

The Story About Bird Rock.

"A SPECK ON THE MAP."

In a recent number of the New York Outlook I find a most interesting story from the pen of Pullerton L. Waldo, entitled, "An Island Hero." The whole tale is told in a pleasing manner, and relates to "a speck on the map" which many of our "lovers of the sea" are familiar, including, of course, Capt. Will Bartlett and the sturdy crew of the S.S. Viking, who know all about "the Rock" from personal experience, having prosecuted the seal-fishery in that direction for the past twenty years, more or less.

THE BIRD NURSERY OF THE ATLANTIC.
Northeast of the Magdalen Islands, in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, says the writer mentioned, is an islet upreared to a height of nearly two hundred feet above the mean of the tides. It is called Bird Rock, and it is the finest bird nursery of the North Atlantic region. 'A brow is forever beclouded with a flapping and crying myriad of gulls, auka, kittiwakes, murre, gannets and other fowl, and round its base the waves break like wild creatures in a white and roaring fury that never wears itself out, though it has bitten and torn the living rock away. A moving-picture operator visited the island, and was dangled over the brink of the cliffs at the end of a rope to secure his pictures. He was warned not to look down as he mounted the rickety ladders, lashed end to end, through the crevices to the top of the rock. The leaping sea at the foot of the ladders and the deafening birds flying about him, affrighted for their eggs and their eyes, made the ascent as perilous a venture as the taking of the photographs. Peter Bourgo, was lord of this tiny insular domain. Peter had been there for twenty-eight years.

THE HORRIBLE LONELINESS.
His story was this: Before his coming two keepers of the island light had lost their reason, owing to the horrible loneliness. The second had to be taken to the mainland in a strait-jacket. The Canadian Government was greatly concerned to obtain a successor in his place. For a long time no man offered himself. Then Peter Bourgo came forward. "I will accept the place," he said, "if you let me take my wife and son with me." The authorities gladly consented. When Peter came to the island, he resolved at once to do everything possible to keep the family life on a sane and normal plane, in order to avoid the fate that overtook his predecessors. He had at first only his wife and a son to consider; later a daughter was born, and a welcome flower she was, abloom among those gaunt and barren crags.

BEWILDERED BY RIVAL SOUNDS.
The lighthouse steamer came out once a year, bringing letters and newspapers. Peter made a box with a compartment for each day. Then he took this annual mail and divided it among the pigeon-holes; and every morning at breakfast they could pretend they were getting the post for that particular day—though it was a year old. The evenings in rotation were given to study—the French language, the poetry of Robbie Burns, the lore of the rocks and the birds about them. Each of the four studied music—cabinet organ, violin, cornet, voice; and the birds that fluttered and cried round the faithful light must have heard in bewilderment the rival sounds. As for the light itself—when there was fog (and that might be for weeks and months at a time) it was necessary not only to keep the fog-horn going but to fire guncockton bombs at twenty-minute intervals. Father and son reviewed each other at this task; and if the boy for any reason failed, the father was awake immediately to know why. He could not sleep unless the noise stilled the silence on the very instant.

A BRAVE AND RESOLUTE MAN.
It is stated that they even made a croquet court, which took up all the space not filled by the lighthouse and the tower; but the storms soon swept away the earth that had been transplanted with such labor from the mainland. At the end of twenty-eight years Peter took his family ashore. He said he thought he owed them a taste of life among people in the world. Before he could get away he had packed his belongings three times to leave by the annual lighthouse steamer, but twice they had to tell him that he must stay another year, since they could find none to fill his place. Few men have had so lonely an occupation. Few have been faithful to a trust so hard and so forbidding. Peter Bourgo did his work well, and has earned his reward. He showed again that a brave and resolute man is master of his fate in circumstances that would crush the weakling—A. A. P.

Without organic iron, both food and Vitamins are absolutely useless as your body cannot change inert, lifeless food into living cells and tissue unless you have plenty of organic iron in your blood. Organic iron takes up oxygen from your lungs, this oxygenated organic iron unites with your digested food as it is absorbed into your blood just as the units with coal or wood, and by so doing it creates tremendous power and energy. Without organic iron in your blood your food merely passes thru your body without doing you any good. SUNDAY THOUGHTS ON RETREATION.

(Contributed.) The Rev. Adam Wadderton, Minister in Bathgate, near Glasgow, Scotland, was an excellent man and an excellent a curier, who died in 1780. Late one Saturday night one of his elders received a challenge from the people of Shotts, a small town, and quite near to the curiers of Bathgate to meet them early on Monday morning, and after tossing about half the night at a loss how to convey the pleasing news to the Minister, he determined to tell him before he entered the pulpit. When Mr. Wadderton entered the session-house, the elder said to him in a loud tone, "Sir, I've something to tell ye! there's to be a parish play with the Shotts folk the morn' at—"

"Whist, man whist!" was the rejoinder. "Oh, be shams, John. Be shams, Nae speaking to-day about worldly recreations." But the ruling passion prevailed too strong for the worthy clergyman's scruples of conscience, for just as he was about to enter the inner door of the church, he suddenly wheeled round and returned to the elder who was now standing at the place in the lobby, and whispered in his ear, "But when the hour John!" "I'll be sure and be there."

Let us sing together to the tune, Balerna—"That music dear to a curier's ear, And enjoyed by him alone; The merry chink of the Curling rink, And the boom of the roarin' stone." Quaint old Edinburgh Minister, Biddy Weston, an old Scotch Divine who began one of his Sunday morning services in this manner: "My brethren, I'll divide my discourse the day this mornin'. First, I'll tell ye something that I ken an' ye dinna ken; Second, I'll tell ye something that ye ken, an' I dinna ken; Thirdly, I'll tell ye something that neither ye nor me ken. Firstly, coming over the stile this mornin', my breeks got an unc' screed. That is something that I ken, an' ye dinna ken. Secondly, what ye're gae to gie Charlie Waddie, the tailor for mendin' my breeks, is what ye ken, an' I dinna ken. Thirdly, what Charlie Waddie's to tak' for mendin' my breeks, is what neither ye nor me ken. Finally and lastly, hand round the ladie."

And there was the Rev. Dr. Dabster, that could put a bottle or two under his belt, an' was neither up nor down. But an unc' bitter body was he when there was a sma' collection. Before the service began, the bench generally handed him a slip of paper stating the amount collected. As day at the altar gathered was only wa' stillin' an' 'ninence, an' he could never get this out of his head through the whole of the sermon. He was aye spunkin got noo an' than. "Is the land of Canaan ye're thrang strivin' after," says he. "The land of Canaan, oh! twa an' ninence. Yes, ye're sure to gang there. I think I see ye. Nae doot ye'er think yerself on the richt road for't. Ask yer consciences, an' see what they'll say. Ask them, an' what will they say? I'll tell ye! Tw' miserable shillin's an' ninence is pur passage-money for sic a lang journey—"

Another old Scotch Divine of Glasgow remarkably for the simplicity and force of his style, was discoursing from the text, "Except ye repent ye shall all likewise perish," and in order to impress upon his hearers the importance of attending to the solemn truth conveyed in the passage, "Ye, my freens," he emphatically exclaimed, "unless ye repent ye shall all perish, just as surely as I'm gae to die, that muckle blue fy that's light on my Bible." Before the blow was struck the fy got away, upon which he struck the book with all his might and exclaimed at the top of his voice, "My freens, there's a chance for ye yet!"

Much of the old clerical humour of Scotland came direct from the pulpit, and was part and parcel of the pastoral matter and method of the time. The preaching of to-day gives but the faintest idea of the preaching of a hundred years ago. The sermons of the old divines was very much in the style of an easy conversation, interspersed with occasional parenthesis applicable to individual characters or to the circumstances which arose before his eyes in church. Dean Ramsay, in his faithful reminiscences, tells of a clergyman who, observing one of his flock asleep during the sermon, paused, and called him to order, thus—"Jeems Robson, ye are sleepin. I insist on your wakin' when God's word is preached to ye." "Look at your ain seat and ye'll see a sleeper forby me," answered Jeems pointing to the clergyman's lady in the Minister's pew. "Then, Jeems," said the Minister, "when ye see my wife asleep again hand up your hand. By and by the arm was stretched out, and sure enough the fair lady was caught in the act. Her husband solemnly called upon her to stand up and receive the censure due to her offence, and then addressed her: "Mrs. B., she's here that when I got ye for my wife I got nae beauty. Yer freens ken I got nae stiller; and, if I didna get God's grace, I hae gotten a pair bargain indeed."

The Rev. Mr. McDougall, distinguished preacher and orator, was one of those preachers who kept his hearers awake by sheer strength of lung. Preaching one day in a strange church, he espied an old woman applying her handkerchief very frequently to her eyes. Attributing her distress to a change for the better, he kept his eyes on her, and at the close of the service found an opportunity to speak to her, and said—"I hae gotten a pair bargain indeed, my good woman, while I was preaching to-day."

"AY, sir, I was rale muckle affected," she replied. "I am truly glad of that," quoth the Minister, "and I hope the impression may be a lasting one."

"I doot, sir," said she, "Ye're taking me up wrong. I was only thinkin' on Shoochie!" "Shoochie!" exclaimed the astonished divine. "What do you mean by Shoochie?"

"Oh, ye keen, sir," replied the matron. "That was a cuddle (Dunkey) we had. She deet twa or three weeks sene, and she was a kindly beast, and I just thoct, whiles when I heard ye in yer rapier's the dar-ill, was her roarin'—an' I fairly broke doon w'th."

This was one of the lowest matches ever contracted by a Royal Princess of England. Clipped James IV.'s Beard! Henry's daughter, Margaret, found a husband in James IV. of Scotland. The marriage did not take place in England, but the betrothal was celebrated at Richmond in 1609. Among the festivities on this occasion was a dramatic masque, and poetry and songs, shared with monebanks, as noble fencers vied with less noble tumblers, in doing honour to the celebrations.

A weary journey took the youthful Princess to Holywell, where she was formally wedded to her manly husband. It was then the custom for a Scottish king to make a morning gift to his bride, and James did this nobly, for on the morning after the wedding he presented to his wife the title-deeds of the lands of Kilmarnock. The bride was as merry as the groom was liberal, and the familiarity established is witnessed by the fact that she, and even her ladies, began clipping the King's beard—an amusement which was considered an excellent joke by the whole party. This royal marriage, by the way, was celebrated between eight and nine in the morning—and this has been con-

ROYAL PRINCESSES AND THEIR WEDDINGS.

SOME OLD-TIME CEREMONIES.

(Glasgow Weekly Herald.) Of the marriages of most of the early Saxon Princesses little is known except the record of the fact, there was the "wedding" and the subsequent marriage. In the latter ceremony there were some solemn prayers, but there was no actual contract. It was not until the reign of Henry I. that the groom was taught by the priest to say—"I take thee, M., to be my wedded wife," and the bride, in like sense, "I take thee, N., to be my wedded husband." Royal, noble, gentle, and simple were constrained to follow the same form of words.

Matilda, daughter of Henry I., is really the first English Princess whose marriage is recorded in history. She was born in England, and was descended on her mother's side from the Saxon line of kings, and she was only seven years old when an army of German nobles came to England to ask her hand for the Emperor Henry V. Her father was hard put to it to find a dowry for her, but the happy and natural thought struck him that it would be most seemly, and certainly most convenient, to compel the public to furnish the "tocher." Accordingly the enormous tax of three shillings was levied on every hide of land throughout the kingdom—a precedent which was followed in later times.

Anglo-Scots Alliances. The first really lawful marriage, however, of a Princess-Royal was that of Joanna, the daughter of King John, who married Alexander II. of Scotland. The ceremony took place at York, whether the royal bridegroom was too poor to proceed at his own expense, and his journey to York and back was paid for out of the English treasury. Another royal marriage took place at York, when Margaret, daughter of Henry III. was married to the Scottish Alexander III. There were some curious incidents connected with this political union. The English and the Scottish nobles who attended either as officials or guests were quartered in two different parts of the city, in order to prevent conflicts between them. This arrangement was only partially successful; for when these nobles or their servants met in the streets very sanguinary quarrels arose, in which sticks, stones, and swords were more active than argument. The antagonism between the two parties rose to so dangerous a height that the wedding of Margaret and Alexander was cleverly celebrated in a sun-gate way so early in the morning that the ceremony was concluded before half of the riotous nobles were out of their beds. Alexander was dubbed a knight by the King of England, but no persuasion or remonstrance could induce him to pay any homage to Henry that might sacrifice his independence of that of his country. All the marriage treatment meted out to him by Henry failed to move him in the slightest, and if the English king thought that he would gain Scotland by the marriage he was disappointed. Alexander may have loved the lady, but it is clear that he loved his country more, and refused to sacrifice it in any way.

The married daughters of Edward IV., experienced very different destinies. The marriage of the eldest, Elizabeth, with the Earl of Richmond, united the "Two Roses." The anxiety of both parties for this union was very great. The Earl (afterwards Henry VII.) had been grievously alarmed by a hostile report that the Princess (heiress to the Crown) was already married; and when the Parliament, on the Speaker commending this match bowed to him, an indication that such was their wish also, he replied that he was quite willing to do. The marriage was solemnized at Westminster in January, 1484, and the festive amusements consisted of tournaments, masses, dances, bonfires, and tremendous rejoicings in London. Elizabeth's sister, the Princess Cecily, on the other hand, united herself to the Viscount Wells, who, when received at Court, occupied a place at table inferior to dignity to that of his wife. On his death in 1488 Cecily, a few months later, married one Thomas Kyne, who was utterly unknown to the Court, where he was never acknowledged.

The Vindication of the Law.

An Incident in the Life of the Mounted Police When the Canadian West was Young.

By Captain R. G. Mathews, Who Was "The Kid" in the Tale Set Forth.

(Saturday Night Toronto.)

To any one not familiar with the lay of the land in Southern Alberta, the name of "Standoff" will not convey much information or meaning. If a person, however, will examine a map of the Canadian West he will find that there is such a location on the north bank of the Belly River just above where the Belly and the Kootenai, or Waterton rivers come together, about 40 miles north of the Montana Boundary. What, however, the map will not inform him is the fact that this rather peculiar name came into being owing to the fact that it was in this vicinity that "Liver-Eating Johnson" stood-off a posse of the North West Mounted Police in the days when the West was an infant in swaddling clothes. Poses of Mounted Police did not take kindly to such a process, neither was it one which was permitted to occur more than once in a blue moon. Indeed it is doubtful if the entire annals of the Police Force include a single other similar instance, which perhaps explains why those who were concerned in it considered the incident of sufficient importance as to warrant its being perpetuated for ever and ever, or at any rate as long as Southern Alberta has its being.

This being satisfactorily explained, it is proper to state that what follows is not a realistic description of how "Liver-Eating Johnson" stood the "Posse off", or why, but is merely an introduction to the fact that on a certain morning in the Spring of '88, there was a posse which possessed the N. W. M. P. Detachment at Standoff and which stood on the North bank of the Belly River just above its junction with the Kootenai, were at their wits' end to accommodate all comers, for in addition to the one Sergeant, one Corporal and fourteen Constables who composed the regular strength of the detachment on that date, it had also as temporary guests a four-hand teamster with his off-man who had arrived with a load of rations the previous day from the post at Fort Macleod, in addition to a flying patrol of three men and a non-commissioned officer who for the last month or so had been keeping their eagle eyes on the doings of a predatory band of Stoney Indians which had just "blown in" to get washed-up and rested. As the shack consisted merely of four log walls with a mud roof and a board floor, two windows and a door, and as most of the available space was taken up with just enough two-decker bunks to accommodate the permanent residents, the transient visitors piled themselves around in the few odd vacant spots which presented themselves. There were no unnecessary frills inside, no partitions or cupboards or anything of that sort; merely the one room which while remaining outwardly the same, really transformed itself, automatically, into bed-room, dining-room, kitchen, smoking-room, etc., etc., without causing its occupants the inconvenience of having to walk from one to another. A stable with accommodation for 20 horses completed the establishment of the detachment. On the other side of the river stretched the Blood Indian Reservation, a wide expanse of some 400,000 acres inhabited at that time by between four and five thousand Blood Indians. With the exception of a couple of trading posts and three or four scattered ranches along the river, and the officials of the Indian Agency some distance below, there was no undue crowding on the prairie.

On the morning in question two Mounted Policemen were making their way at a jog trot along a trail which skirted the north bank of the Belly River. They were travelling due west towards the blue peaks of the Rockies, some thirty miles away, and as the trail followed the bench-land, the winding river and the wooded bottoms were unfolded from time to time below them, and the acrid smoke of drift-wood fires arising from Indian villages and the incessant barking of Indian dogs were evidence of life otherwise not discernible. Both policemen wore the brown canvas stable-jacket and peaked fore-and-aft caps, the blue-black breeches with the wide yellow stripe and the black riding boots which was the usual prairie uniform in those days; both had their respective Winchester carbines slung across the horns of the saddles and around the waist of each was strapped a service revolver of the British bulldog pattern. The similarity of the costumes did no text to the wearers for Rory O'Moore was an old hand with a record of twelve years' service in the Force, and would never see forty again, while his companion, "The Kid," was a mere boy who had yet to complete a year's service and who less than a year before had been an insignificant city clerk in old London and who had never heard of the N. W. M. P. Fate has an autocratic habit of moving human pawns around so that it almost seems hap-hazard, and fate must have been working overtime this morning when it selected these two Policemen to carry out the little job it had in view. Word had filtered thro' to the Detachment that a certain young Indian had ventured back from across the International Line whither he had executed a strategic retreat a few months previously after having pulled off a successful horse-stealing stunt the details of which had later on been painstakingly gathered up by one of the detachment. The details of the crime together with a description of its perpetrator were subsequently tucked away in a pigeon-hole of a certain cabinet which was to be found in the orderly room at the headquarters of the division, and a police circle setting forth the necessary details was sent to all the outlying Posts, while the force calmly proceeded with its daily round and waited in confidence for what was sure to occur sooner or later, viz: the return of a certain young Indian. They always came back, so had this one; it was a lead-pipe clinch.

What rather took the gift off the gingerbread in this particular instance, however, was the fact that the young Indian happened to belong to the band of Crop-Eared-Wolf, and it was this circumstance that seemed to indicate that fate had deliberately gone out of its way to test the calibre of the two men jogging westward that spring morning. Crop-Eared-Wolf was a minor chief who in accordance with the tribal system prevailing in the Blackfoot Nation (of which the Bloods formed an important part) was the head man in the village or camp which bore his name and was in a large measure responsible for its conduct. These camps occurred every mile or two along the river for a matter of 40 miles or more; Crop Eagle's Camp, Running Wolf's, Bull Black Fat's and so on, and some distance up the river was Crop-Eared-Wolf's, in the shelter of which the young man wanted was, it had been reported, to be found. The minor chief bore the reputation of a bad Indian, notwithstanding his prominent position, and the members of his band were constantly getting into trouble, knowing well that Crop-Eared-Wolf could always be relied upon to place every possible obstacle in the path of those whose duty it was to carry out the law. Varying their progress with an occasional center, the two policemen followed the gradually rising land towards the foothills; discussing as they rode along the probable difficulties which lay ahead of them.

Crop-Eared-Wolf's camp was much as usual that morning. Seen from a distance it was beautiful, with its background of green cottonwoods and grey buck brush, the river winding and sparkling in the sunshine, and the mountains towering behind. Blue wisps of smoke curled upward from the open tops of the tipis scattered about in picturesque disorder, while a few old squaws poked around attending to the chores of the camp—gathering fire-wood, fetching water from the river, etc. The beauty of the distance ceased abruptly as actual contact with the camp was made, for rags and decaying bones and refuse of every description littered the ground in all directions and poisoned the atmosphere. The return of "The man-who-never-ties-his-moccasins" from across the Line, where he had been visiting some relatives on the Blackfoot Reservation waiting the time when the details of a certain horse-stealing escapade might reasonably be expected to have become dulled in the recollections of those concerned, had been looked forward to by his relatives and friends and he had received a warm welcome on his arrival. He had been quite an ordinary meslin-bred youth previous to his hasty Southern trip, but he had come to be regarded since as more or less of a hero who was entitled to take his place amongst the warriors of the tribe. The fact that he had flouted the Police and stolen a bunch of horses being looked upon in much the same light as though he had successfully passed through the ordeal of the sun dance. There were, of course, these same police to be reckoned with, but the exercise of a reasonable amount of caution and the assistance of his admiring friends, should trouble arise, would doubtless smooth over any unpleasantness along that line, and anyway they had probably forgotten the whole affair. So the returned hero smoked his Kin-i-kin-ic and preened himself before the young maidens and swaggered around amongst the young bucks and Crop-Eared-Wolf gathered around him some of his cronies and spat and smoked over his lodge fire and talked of many things. Forging the river half a mile below came riding along the two men from the Standoff Detachment.

A medium sized man with a bristling black moustache and heavy beetling eyebrows, Constable Rory O'Moore was far too experienced in Indian wiles and ways to underestimate the danger of the job on hand. Approaching the camp at a hand gallop, the two policemen rapidly threaded their way to the Chief's tent, scattering the yapping dogs right and left in their progress. "Don't get off your horse, and don't for the love o' Mike pull your gun, no matter what happens," were Rory's last instructions to "The Kid," "Just sit tight and hold my horse, and keep your eyes skinned, while I handle this crop-eared devil," and he was down and pushing his way through the hanging curtain formed the tent door, almost before the horse had come to a stop. The conversation inside commenced in an every day tone of voice, but soon gave signs of animation until the Chief's loud guttural tones could be heard all over the camp and Indians of all ages and both sexes soon came pouring out of the other tipis and gathered round the Chief's. When Constable O'Moore emerged from the tent he was followed up closely by Crop-Eared-Wolf loudly denying that the wanted man was in the camp or that he ever had been and it was just at this moment that "The Kid" observed a man creep out from a teepee in the rear and bound away into the adjoining brush, word of which was duly passed along to his companion. Very deliberately O'Moore unclasped a pair of hand-cuffs from his belt and dangling them before the Chief, he bluntly told him that he was a liar, and that if the man wanted was not forthcoming within five minutes then Crop-Eared-Wolf himself should go in his place and answer to the charge of interfering with the police while in the performance of their duty. Paying scant attention to the angry mob which crowded around him, he pulled out his watch and calmly waited results. The Chief, black with wrath, harangued and gesticulated amongst a number of the older men while the rest buzzed like a swarm of angry bees. Discretion finally won out and the fear of the consequences overcoming the desire to help the culprit, some of the young men were despatched into the brush, soon returning with the cause of all the trouble.

The snap of the steel bracelets round the young man's wrists let loose a torrent of shrill abuse from the squaws and sullen mutterings from the men and the slightest false move by either of the policemen would have fanned the smouldering wrath of the band into a conflagration which might have had disastrous results. But there was no false move; and any hope that the man-who-never-ties-his-moccasins may have been hanging to himself that the Chief and his friends would never let him be taken, must have been finally even up when he found himself astride of a cayouse with his ankles securely coupled together beneath the pony's belly, and a rope around the cayouse's neck with an end stretched from either side and made fast to the horns of his escorts' saddles. As they moved quietly off the young Indian took his last look at the beautiful river and the mountains beyond and at the faces of his friends, for he never came back, dying some two years later in the Penitentiary before the completion of his subsequent sentence.

So the law was vindicated and the reputation of the N. W. M. P. for handling fearlessly and tactfully whatever situation might arise was once more upheld and that without the assistance of the Winchester carbines, which never left their slings, or of the revolvers, which remained snugly in their holsters. Nor was there even the glamour of a red coat cast over the scene, for red coats in those days were worn for show and not for force. Just two isolated members of the force extricated themselves from a position of extreme delicacy while successfully accomplishing what they had been sent out to perform.

It's Flavor that Makes the Meal!

And the sauces that the Libby chefs have adapted for you give flavor to the simplest dishes.

It may be eggs, or macaroni, or a cheap cut of meat—an unusual and delicious sauce will make it something you eat with delight and remember with pleasure—because of its flavor.

LIBBY'S CATCHUP and CHILI SAUCE are made from red, ripe tomatoes, grown in the fertile soil of Kent County, Ontario, picked when they are mellowed by the sunshine of long summer days, then rushed to the nearby Libby kitchen.

Here in sunny rooms the tomatoes are cooked with fragrant spices, onions, sugar and the best vinegar—cooked for hours until all the flavors are blended through and through.

Now the sauce is ready to give an appetizing relish to your steaks and chops, or a new piquancy to the meat gravy you serve with your roasts.

Your grocer has, or can get you, Libby's Catchup or Chili Sauce. Use it with your cold meat teas and note how quickly the second helping is necessary.

The delightful flavor of Libby's Beans is due largely to the wonderful Sauce prepared by the skilled chefs. Have you tried them?

HEATED DEBATE ON LOAN RESOLUTIONS—OPPOSITION LEADER MAKES FOUR HOUR SPEECH—DEBATE ADJOURNED—MR. JENNINGS AS A CYNIC.

The Loan Resolutions were debated the whole of yesterday's session, the Leader of the Opposition making a 4-hour speech in which he severely criticized Government waste. Some bitter cross firing took place between Sir Michael and the Prime Minister during the last part of the night sitting. The Loan Resolutions are not yet passed, but it is evident that the Opposition has had its say and will refrain from further comment, so the Resolutions are bound to go through on Monday.

RECKLESS EXPENDITURE.

Mr. Walsh opened the debate on the Resolutions. Early in his speech he quoted a statement made in the House on a similar occasion by Sir Robert Bond. It was that "the reckless expenditure of borrowed millions is causing a temporary shelter which must necessarily bring disaster before long and then we shall feel the full blast of the storm." This was said by the great Liberal leader when he was Leader of the Opposition at the time that the branch railways were being built. Mr. Walsh said that apparently the people did not realize the true state of affairs as only that very day, a petition had been presented from Bonne Bay for a branch railway. The trouble was that so many millions had been squandered within the past few years that the people thought the Government had an inexhaustible supply of money. The Loan Resolutions, said Mr. Walsh, were nothing more or less than an act of indemnification to enable the Government to borrow money to pay the debts incurred by them.

CONDEMNNS SUPPLYING.

Mr. Walsh roundly condemned Government supplying for the fishery. He would not hesitate to take his full share of the blame for what happened last year, but the Government had to admit that he and his colleagues had sounded a warning to which they had paid no heed. Speaking of the need for economy, Mr. Walsh declared that it was a sorry day for the colony when it lost its ablest financier, Sir Michael Cashin, for it was very evident that the present Finance Minister was not capable of carrying out the duties which that office entails. Only wise and sane administration could carry the country through its present crisis. Our revenue is derived from our earning power. How then could the Government seriously consider passing estimates for eleven millions of dollars when our earning power was not nine millions and this came from the fishery alone, for Bell Island, Grand Falls and other sources of revenue had failed us. Was it intended next year to add ten millions to the Public Debt?

TOO MUCH COAKER.

Mr. Walsh then traced the history of the F.P.U. which had exercised a baleful influence during the past few years. Mr. Coaker had been responsible for all the big Government extravaganzas, said Mr. Walsh. There had been talk of a coalition but he for one would never join a party of which W. F. Coaker was a member. Mr. Walsh concluded a lengthy speech with some suggestions for economy. His final statement was to the effect that a general exodus of the young men of the country would take place if conditions did not improve.

NO PUBLIC OPINION.

Mr. Moore deplored the fact that there was no public opinion in the country. He condemned Government squandering and declared that the sole existing source of revenue was "the rum shop on Duckworth Street." Business men all over the country were retrenching but Government extravaganzas continued. Yet, while hands are being paid off daily, while depression was in our midst, Dr. Campbell was given full control of the expenditure of $800,000. He was going to support the resolutions only because he realized the money was needed.

THE CYNICAL MR. JENNINGS.

Mr. Vinicombe was the next to speak to the Resolutions. Early in the course of his speech he criticized the manner in which the Public Works Department had looked after the supplying of the Sanitarium. Mr. Vinicombe charged that the butter supplied to the patients was unfit to eat. Mr. Jennings seemed surprised. He was under the impression that the best, locally manufactured butter was supplied.

Mr. Vinicombe—"Did you buy it direct from the factory?"

Mr. Jennings—"No, it is obtained from Water Street firms."

Mr. Vinicombe then inquired if it were not possible that cheap Canadian butter was provided without the Minister knowing it. Dr. Rendell had told him that the butter supplied to the Sanitarium was abominable and not much better than axle grease. The blame Mr. Jennings was not worried by this. "Oh," he replied, "it is good enough considering that it is free." This remark was ample evidence that the Minister who had always the interests of the under-dogs at heart, did not have to eat axle grease with his bread each day. Previously during the session, it was the practice to condole with Mr. Jennings rather than to treat him harshly. Now, he will get all he deserves, and if he is to be judged by

Memorial Billiards.

SOME EXCITING CONTESTS.

The Memorial Billiard Tournament is fast approaching its end, and as it does so, the interest in the games is increasing. Seven games were played yesterday, and all were exciting. Some very nice breaks were made, the highest, 52 being obtained by Strang. McLoughlin (City) won his first game, in the course of which he made a well-played break of 42. The game between Rabbitts (Masonic) and Edwards (C.E.I.) was slow but interesting. Until near the 150 mark both players kept well together, but Rabbitts then forged ahead with a break of 44 and won by 35 points. Power (K. of C.) easily beat Spratt (T.A.) in the first of the afternoon games. Pearce (C.E.I.) also had an easy victory over Strang (Saints); Pearce played an excellent game. McLoughlin (City) won his first game, defeating Spratt (T.A.) by 27 points. In the evening games, Hickey (K. of C.) defeated Myler (T.A.) by the narrow margin of 8 points. In the second game French (B.I.S.) beat Ryan (Star) in a well played game by 47 points. The next game was the Rabbitts-Edwards match described above. In the final game for the night Strang (Saints) defeated Merner (B.I.S.) by 19 points. This was a surprise game, as at one time Strang was 50 behind. The standing of the clubs is now as follows:

that very cynical remark of his, his deserts would be severe enough, in all consequence. If the punishment could be made to fit the crime, axle grease ought to be provided for him at every meal, and before long he might again become the meek and mild Mr. Jennings of long, long ago.

Mr. Vinicombe concluded his speech with some trite remarks on the manner in which the Government had been squandering public funds.

UNFAVOURABLE TERMS.

Sir Michael Cashin followed Mr. Vinicombe, and spoke until 6.30 p.m. when recess was taken until 8 o'clock. He first referred to last year's loan which had been raised on such unfavourable terms. He said that in his time, loans were always raised by public tender. There must be a reason for the unfavourable terms of last year, and the excellent terms of the new loan, and he was sure the country would like to hear the reason. Sir Michael emphatically condemned the wasteful extravagance of the Government. The supplies given to the fishermen last year had demoralized them. It was a policy that should never have been tried. Government extravagance had been so great that last year, temporary loans had to be obtained from the Bank of Montreal to tide them over until the new loan could be raised.

NO LEGISLATIVE AUTHORITY.

The greatest part of the new loan had been spent without legislative authority. Dr. Campbell was now in charge of relief work and playing the game of politics as well as he knew how Sir Michael prophesied that at the end of June next there would not be a single cent left in the Treasury. Every action of the Government since its inception was one of deceit. Estimates of eleven millions could not honestly be voted this year. Exports this year would amount to almost sixteen millions, said Sir Michael. This meant a revenue of almost six million. Next year exports would be back to normal, that is, almost thirteen millions. It was madness to expect people to pay taxes amounting to eleven millions when our total exports were but three millions more. The unfortunate mounted police came in for severe criticism from Sir Michael. Returning to the loan, he said, that this would not have been obtained were it not for the fact that the brokers thought the British Government would see they did not lose. Flagrant instances of squandermania were given by Sir Michael before he concluded. Messrs. Jennings and MacDonnell spoke briefly after which adjournment was taken until Monday.

INVESTIGATION DEMANDED.

Earlier in the session, Mr. J. R. Bennett read the following anonymous letter received by him to the House.

March 25th, 1922.
"Dear Sir:—A report is going around the City to-day that when Nurse Miffin was very ill on Saturday night, that Dr. Campbell could not be found to attend her at the Fever Hospital and that most of the patients are treated by him over the telephone. I also learn that he may only one visit a week to the Hospital. This is a disgraceful condition of affairs in a civilized country, a dying nurse at a Government Hospital and no Doctor to attend her. The writer will be glad if you would have this matter investigated and let the public know what is wrong with this institution."

Yours very truly,
NURSING SISTER.

An investigation was promised.

Eczema Tortured Her on Face and Hands

HERE IS A VERY RECENT CURE IN NEWFOUNDLAND.

From September, 1920, I was a sufferer from eczema of the worst kind and I tried one doctor and the remedy he gave me would take the fire out of it but that's all.

I could not even wash my face and hands, and to tell the truth I was tortured. After trying a good many remedies I said I would send to my druggist and get a bottle of D.D.D. on hearing so much about it, and I used it, one bottle two weeks and now I can use water to my face and every sign of it has disappeared from my hands.

You can certainly publish this letter as my friends know it to be a real fact.

Yours truly,
MRS. JAMES RYAN, Princeton, B.E., Newfoundland.

Ask your druggist and he will tell you what D.D.D. Prescription has accomplished in your own neighborhood. Your money back unless the first bottle relieves you.

A Dainty Gown for Home Wear.

3897. There is much satisfaction in looking one's best at all times. For comfort and ease this style has much to commend it. The surplice sections form a giraffe that holds the fullness over sides and back. A slender or mature figure may wear this gown with equal grace. Challie in white with blue figures and white organza is here combined. One could use crepe, crepe de chine, lawn, or voile for this model.

The Pattern is cut in 4 Sizes: Small, 34-36; Medium, 38-40; Large, 42-44; Extra Large, 46-48 inches bust measure. A medium size requires 5 1/2 yards of 36 inch material.

Pattern mailed to any address on receipt of 15c. in silver or stamps.

A PRETTY STYLE FOR A PARTY FROCK.

3876. For the girl who wants something different, this graceful model will be "just right." The platts give length and add fullness. The "peasant" sleeve is a new feature. If desired the sleeve may be finished in cap style without the puff. Yokes with insertion of fllet bands, or batiste with embroidery could be used for this. It is also attractive for crepe de chine with "picot edge."

The Pattern is cut in 4 Sizes: 6, 8, 10 and 12 years. A 10 year size requires 3 yards of 38 inch material.

Pattern mailed to any address on receipt of 15c. in silver or stamps.
