SOCIAL SECURITY

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a very important motion.

As during the past two years, six federal-provincial conferences were held on social welfare especially the guaranteed minimum income, as those conferences up to now have cost several thousand dollars to the Canadian taxpayers and as under the circumstances, it deals with a prime issue, I move seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That this House consider in the shortest possible time the Social Credit proposals aimed at establishing a guaranteed annual income paid universally to all Canadian people to enable them to enjoy some financial and material security.

Mr. Speaker: Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such a consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Since there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR CONFIRMATION OF APPOINTMENT OF MINISTER OF COMMUNICATIONS AS AMBASSADOR TO PARIS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion which is self-explanatory. I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

With reference to the appointment of ambassadors on the basis of politics and cabinet service instead of the promotion of Department of External Affairs personnel on the basis of experience, and in view of the necessity that this practice should cease, the House requests the Secretary of State for External Affairs to confirm or otherwise whether the Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier) has been appointed ambassador to Paris, the announcement presently scheduled to be made later this week by the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The motion being proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43, the unanimous consent of the House is required. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

An hon. Member: We shall miss you, Gérard!

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

VAILLANCOURT CASE—POSSIBILITY OF SOLICITOR GENERAL DISSOCIATING HIMSELF FROM CABINET REVIEW OF CASE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to direct to the Acting Prime Minister. The Solicitor General having said quite frankly in the House on Friday, I think it was, that he could not be associated in any way with an execution—with capital punishment—may I ask, without in any way criticizing the hon. gentleman for holding the views he does, whether, in order to protect the integrity of the exercise of the Royal prerogative on the basis of mercy and not on the ground of the repugnancy of the law, the Solicitor General has dissociated himself from any pending cabinet decision regarding the Vaillancourt or any similar case?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): The Vaillancourt case or any other such case has not yet come before cabinet, so the question is inapplicable.

SUGGESTION SOLICITOR GENERAL SHOULD NOT CONTINUE IN THAT PORTFOLIO IN VIEW OF HIS STATEMENT ON CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): A further question to the Acting Prime Minister. The Solicitor General having presented to parliament the legislation which governs the situation at the present time, and having voted for the measure after an unsuccessful attempt to have it amended, is it the position of the government that it is proper for the Solicitor General to continue in his portfolio in view of this frank statement that he cannot go along with the law as it now stands—the law which it is his responsibility to administer?

● (1410)

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on questions like this it is the Cabinet and not any single minister that makes the decision. I know I speak for all my colleagues when I say that when the Vaillancourt case does come before the Cabinet it will be discussed on its merits, and I am sure every member of the Cabinet will take his or her responsibility.

POSSIBLE INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION ABOLISHING DEATH PENALTY

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, in light of other comments made I would ask the Acting Prime Minister if it is the intention of the government within the next year to introduce amendments to the Criminal Code which will involve the complete abolition of the death penalty?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman knows, parliament must take action before the end of 1977. The government has not yet taken any decision as to when to introduce legislation or the form of that legislation.

INDUSTRY

MICROSYSTEMS—REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF REPORT OF AUDIT OF CAPITAL EQUIPMENT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, considering the fact that it has been learned the government has now ordered an audit of the capital equipment owned by the federal government at Microsystems International, will the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce assure the House that the report of this audit will be made available to members of the House as soon as it is completed?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will give that representation very careful consideration.

MICROSYSTEMS—SUGGESTION SOME CAPITAL EQUIPMENT MISSING—POSSIBILITY PRODUCT HAD A GOOD MARKET—NEED FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, would the minister inform the House whether he has received any preliminary reports on this audit that is taking place and, more specifically, has he been informed that a substantial amount of the capital equipment, originally financed by the federal government to a substantial extent, is in fact missing? Has he received any information to this effect and, if so, will he inform the House what further investigations the government is making into this matter?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have received no information that machinery is missing.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the minister smiles. I should like to suggest that this is not a laughing matter when millions of dollars of public investment is at stake. I hope the minister will have a serious look at the situation in light of these reports that a substantial amount of equipment is missing. Secondly, I would refer to market reports of professional trade journals and reports of other companies in the industry to the effect that the semiconductors produced by Microsystems do have a good potential market, contrary to what spokesmen for Bell Northern have said. This is distinctly the opposite side of the coin to that provided the government by spokesmen for Bell Northern as the reason for shutting down operations. In light of these reports, and the reports regarding the missing capital equipment from those facilities, will the minister take steps to bring about an inquiry into this situation under the Inquiries Act?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I do not think an inquiry under the Inquiries Act is merited. I have indicated that we are discussing with Bell Northern the settlement of an outstanding loan with us, and I can assure the hon. member that we will be pursuing those negotiations.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

STRIKE OF LONGSHOREMEN IN QUEBEC—ACCESSIBILITY OF FEED GRAIN SUPPLIES

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour.

Considering that the special legislation which the Canadian Parliament adopted a while ago to force longshoremen at certain ports on the St. Lawrence River back to work has apparently not been complied with, can the minister advise the House of the steps he will take to protect those who have stored grain in terminals at these ports, so that they may obtain delivery without fear of pitting one group of workers against another, which would be highly detrimental to Canada?

[English]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would advise the hon. member that since the passage of the legislation in question no impediments have been placed in the way of the movement of grain, which has considerably alleviated the situation. So far as adherence to the legislation is concerned, we are still urging adherence and are taking appropriate legal action which is open to us under the law. As I understand the terms of the injunction hearing, the hearing will be held perhaps on Thursday.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Since Canadian workers are apparently complying with orders originating outside Canada, would not the minister propose an alternate formula which would permit Canadian workers from now on to receive orders from within Canada?

[English]

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Well, Mr. Speaker, that always has been a sensitive point so far as I am concerned. In this particular case longshoremen in other parts of the country are respecting the law and unloading the ships, so that in terms of this particular dispute, outside of the ports in question, the law is being respected.

PUBLIC WORKS

DREDGING—EXTENT OF COVERAGE OF GUIDELINES FOR NEW CONTRACTS—CONSULTATION WITH MUNICIPALITIES TO REMEDY DEFICIENCIES IN GUIDELINES

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works further to his statement of May 2 on dredging guidelines and their adequacy. Can the hon. gentleman assure the House that all dredging performed in Canadian harbours is covered by the guidelines on dredging he announced on Friday.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Generally speaking, Mr. Speaker, the guidelines cover all dredging done by federal agencies.

Mr. MacKay: I have a brief supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Since at least two of the indictments levelled against dredging companies involve dredging performed in harbours not under the National Harbours Board Act, can the minister inform the House what steps the government is taking to include such work in these guidelines and could he advise whether he has been consulting with the commissions and municipalities who have representatives on such commissions so that the apparent deficiencies in the guidelines can be remedied.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure what is meant by apparent deficiencies in the guidelines, but we will be offering the same kind of services to other public bodies by way of advice and counsel that we are ourselves following.

DREDGING—APPLICABILITY OF GUIDELINES TO HARBOURS OPERATED BY COMMISSIONS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): I have a further supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Would the hon. gentleman simply tell us whether he has been in effect addressing himself to the problems implicit in the fact that so many of the major harbours in this country are operated by commissions, like the Hamilton Harbour for example, and what has he done to make sure that these guidelines are applied under these circumstances?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I think the House will be well aware that jurisdiction over the Hamilton Harbour does not fall under the Parliament of Canada nor under the control of the federal government.

An hon. Member: That is the point.

Mr. Drury: What the Hamilton Harbour commissioners decide is in their best interests is for them to decide and is not something to be dictated by the federal government.

DREDGING—POSSIBILITY TENDERS WERE CALLED FROM COMPANIES UNDER INDICTMENT PRIOR TO ANNOUNCEMENT OF GUIDELINES

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Can the minister advise the House whether the government called for tenders from those dredging companies presently being charged prior to the minister's announcement to this House on Friday of the safeguards he will be applying in respect of this matter?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, there is quite a chronological range of arrangements with some of the companies currently under charge. The Department of Public Works has contracts running from last year which were entered into a year ago and subsequently, fairly early in the year, there were calls for tender made and there will be some more. So, it runs all the way from existing contracts to future calls for tender.

Mr. Lawrence: Will the safeguards, if they are to mean anything at all, apply to the contracts already let this year?

Mr. Drury: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF MEANINGFUL PUBLIC DISCUSSION IN VIEW OF ALLEGATION GOVERNMENT HAS DECIDED ON POLICY

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration I should like to direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. This matter raises questions as to the integrity of government pronouncements, something which is of great seriousness to the joint committee studying the green paper on immigration. In light of reports that a basic immigration policy has already been tentatively approved by the cabinet, reports based on interviews with senior immigration officials, can the Acting Prime Minister assure the House that the public discussions will be more than simply public relations exercises on something the federal government finds distasteful to enact?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can give a positive answer to that question. The cabinet has not discussed future immigration policy. We are awaiting the report of the Joint Committee on Immigration Policy.

Mr. Baldwin: You left out two commas.

Mr. Epp: Can the Acting Prime Minister then state, in light of the answer he has just given to the House, in what light are the Prime Minister's statements at the Commonwealth conference regarding immigration viewed, since the Acting Prime Minister states that no decisions have been made and no discussions have taken place in respect of the immigration policy that will be needed?

Mr. Sharp: One of the principles that underlies our legislation now, and that we have no intention of changing, is the principle of non-discrimination. I hope it has universal approval in this House.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is complete discrimination, that's what it is.

AIR TRANSPORT

CANADA-CUBA SERVICE—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON NEGOTIATIONS TO ESTABLISH ROUTE

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport, a question which I have often asked him and which now is more timely than ever. A few days ago he indicated that he would investigate the state of negotiations between Cuba and Canada regarding a regular direct scheduled air service. Is he now in a position to indicate progress on this very important and widely favoured transportation link?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have communicated with the government of Cuba and they have agreed to meet the Canadian delegation. I think the date on which the negotiations will start is May 26, and I hope they will end with a good agreement.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO DATE OF BUDGET

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance, but he is not in his seat at the moment.

An hon. Member: He is now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: I know the minister will be sorry to hear that in his absence we have come no closer to reaching a consensus with respect to voluntary guidelines. In fact, the prognosis indicates that inflation will be worse and so will unemployment, and that there will be no growth, something that is on everybody's mind—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Alexander: This is where I come to my question. Can the minister advise us of the date of the budget for the edification of the people of Canada?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I want to thank the hon. member for so warmly welcoming me back to the House and tell him that the answer is no.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT AND CONFIRMATION OF EXISTENCE OF CERTAIN DOCUMENTS RELATING TO PROGRAM OF CONSENSUS ON RESTRAINT

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Perhaps I can say that I am glad to see the minister back in Canada so he can get on with the job which he was elected to do. I wonder if the minister could confirm whether in fact there are two documents in existence, one, I believe, entitled "Proposals for the First Year of Consensus" and the other "Machinery for Administering a Voluntary Restraint Program" and whether these documents have been submitted to both labour and management. In this regard, would the minister now undertake to make a statement to the House in order that the country will know just what is going on and what the minister has in mind?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, all documents in circulation are still working papers only. The various details have not been decided upon either by the government or in discussion with any sector of the economy. They are still open for discussion. So I think it would still be pre-mature for me to comment on the details.

As for the general principles underlying the process, my parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Sarnia, tabled those in the House of Commons simultaneously with my delivering those remarks to the first minister at the recent federal-provincial conference.

INFLATION—POSSIBILITY OF GUIDELINES ON INCOME BEING PRESENTED TO LABOUR

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the support of labour of voluntary restraint will depend on an assurance of comprehensive restraint, has the government prepared precise guidelines on all forms of income, including fees and dividends, and all prices, including metals and shelter? Will these guidelines be given before the meeting on Wednesday?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I said to the hon. gentleman's quasi seatmate, it would still be premature for me to speak about those details.

INFLATION—RESPONSES TO QUESTIONS FROM CANADIAN LABOUR CONGRESS CONCERNING LOW INCOME WORKERS

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): On April 24 the Acting Minister of Finance said that the government was working on responses to a number of specific questions from the Canadian Labour Congress regarding low income workers and other important matters, such as employment growth and job security. Have those questions yet been answered, and if not, will the CLC receive some answers before the Wednesday meeting?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): There have been very thorough discussions with the CLC on a technical level, and if, as and when the consensus is arrived at, details will be given fully in the House.

Mr. Fraser: Is the minister advising us that those questions have not yet been answered or communicated to the CLC?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): It is not a matter of question and response. It is a matter of discussion. Those matters are among the subjects which have been discussed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EXPULSION OF PRESS ATTACHÉ OF PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. It arises because of further press reporting about the removal of the press secretary of the Chinese embassy. Over the weekend it has been stated that he was an espionage courier. I am referring to a UPI dispatch copied in the Toronto Star in which it states that he took weekend trips to Washington to pick up secrets and military information, then returned to Ottawa and transmitted them to mainland China. In view of these further statements, is the Acting Prime Minister prepared to elucidate the reasons for this envoy ejected from Canada?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs said, the reason was that he was carrying on activities incompatible with his position as a diplomat. That is what he has said, and I have nothing further to add.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In view of the pall of silence placed over this incident because we might annoy communist China if details were to be publicly revealed, will the information regarding this matter be made available to opposition members who are of the Privy Council, so that, while unrevealable by them, it will nonetheless give an assurance which up to the present time certainly has not been given? There is something in connection with this matter which reminds me of Shakespeare when he said that "something is rotten in the state of Denmark" which is being covered up.

Mr. Sharp: There are occasions when it might be useful to follow this procedure. I can assure the right hon. gentleman that we have nothing to hide which would in any way reflect upon the integrity of the Government of Canada. I will convey the suggestion he has made to my colleague when he returns.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REDUCTION OF FUNDING OF NATIVE ORGANIZATIONS PARTICIPATING IN BERGER COMMISSION HEARINGS—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question and put one or two supplementaries to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development arising out of answers the minister gave on April 24 to my questions concerning the cutback in funding to native organizations taking part in the Berger Commission inquiry. In view of the undertaking of the minister to look again at the level of financial support, and in view of the representations which have been made, is the minister now in a position to assure the House that the funds provided to native groups in the Northwest Territories will be increased to a level which will permit their effective participation in the upcoming community hearings?

● (1430)

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the hon. member, I have looked again at the situation and have had discussions with Mr. Justice Berger. The commission counsel will be here in the next two or three days to look at the situation. We want to see if we can earmark some of the funds going into his budget to assist some of the native people in having the environmentalists appear as their witnesses.

Mr. Firth: Mr. Speaker, will the minister elaborate on his reference last week to the possibility of funding being provided through the Berger commission budget? Also, is the minister now in a position to inform the House whether funds will be made available to the northern assessment group?

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, I really cannot elaborate very much until we have this meeting with the counsel to Mr. Justice Berger's commission. The thought was that the funds would flow though this body to provide the native people with funds so that if they wished to have representatives of the northern assessment group appear as witnesses before the commission, they could do so.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

TRANSPORTATION OF ALASKAN OIL—STATUS OF UNITED STATES LEGISLATION AND ALTERNATIVE PORT

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of the Environment.

In reply to questions recently put to her, the minister stated she was extremely pleased with the fact that a bill is now being studied by American authorities with a view to financing the construction of a pipeline providing an alternate site for the delivery of crude from Alaska. Can the minister now tell us what progress has been made on that bill and whether the Canadian government was consulted on the choice of alternate sites?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the hon. member any information on the fate of that bill now before the state legislature of Washington. I know it was introduced, but am not aware of what the legislators of that state will do with it. As for consultations that may have been held between the Canadian government and the authorities who introduced the bill, they were not formal; however the American authorities are well aware of the Canadian point of view on the possibility of increasing supertanker traffic in the Juan de Fuca Strait, and that we have insisted for a long time that another port should be chosen for oil delivery.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a supplementary question.

Since the Washington State Oceanographic Commission has considered some locations for the delivery of crude oil from Alaska, but only those in the Juan de Fuca Strait, and has until now made no recommendation in that regard, how can the minister believe that the study of alternative locations may prevent environmental damage in the Juan de Fuca Strait and on the coast of British Columbia?

Mrs. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, the oceanographic institute, as the hon. member said, studied several possible locations for oil delivery ports in western Canada. The studies were not limited to the ports which are located in the Juan de Fuca Strait. I know for certain that other places on the coast have been considered, but due to the topography and especially to the streams that are found on that coastline, the establishment of superports for oil tankers in that area would present huge problems. The proposed location of Port Angeles has the advantage of being closer to the entrance to the Juan de Fuca Strait.

FINANCE

REASON INTEREST RATES PERMITTED TO RISE—POSSIBLE STABILIZING EFFECT ON CANADIAN DOLLAR

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. While the minister was away, his colleague, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, expressed concern over the recent rapid increase in mortgage rates and resolved to speak to the minister about it upon his return. Can the minister tell the House whether this important conversation has taken place, and can he clarify for the House the government interpretation as to why short term interest rates in general, and mortgage rates in particular, are being allowed to rise at a time when the minister is attempting to stimulate the economy?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet had an opportunity to talk with my esteemed colleague, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. I hope to shortly. With regard to mortgage rates, hopefully that might reflect some upturn in the market and pressure on it.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Does the minister endorse the Bank of Canada's policy of raising interest rates in order to stabilize the decline of the Canadian dollar?

[Mrs. Sauvé.]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with the assumption on which the question is based. Therefore, I am not going to comment on it.

PUBLIC WORKS

DREDGING—SUGGESTED FORMATION OF CROWN CORPORATION

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. In view of the fact the government owns 20 or more dredging rigs, will it consider the formation of a crown corporation to compete with the private sector of the dredging industry to give the government a monitoring position and, in effect, establish a reserve bid system?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, possession and operation of dredging equipment by the Department of Public Works does not, in effect, establish the kind of experienced performance that the hon. member is seeking. I do not think that converting this to a Crown corporation would improve the situation at the present time.

Mr. Baldwin: Bring back Hal Banks to run it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CRIMINAL CODE

SUGGESTED REFERENDUM ON CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Acting Prime Minister. It has to do with the lead off question on capital punishment. Will the government consider a national referendum on the abolition or retention of capital punishment prior to 1977 or prior to the next federal election?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. The government has no such intention.

Mr. Paproski: Surely the people of Canada should be allowed a little bit of input on this very important question before the next federal election.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, at every general election, the people of this country have some input. The last time they elected a majority of Liberals.

SOCIAL SECURITY

SUGGESTED USE OF BANK OF CANADA TO FINANCE GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare a question.

Considering the objections from Quebec on the basic proposal of the minister for the establishment of a guaranteed income supplement plan for all Canadians, has the minister thought of asking or suggesting to his provincial colleagues that the ideal way of settling this financial problem would be to use the resources of the Bank of Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—SUSPENSION OF BILATERAL AID PROGRAMS—POSSIBLE RECOGNITION OF NEW REGIME

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the changes that have taken place in the situation in South Viet Nam, has the government suspended bilateral aid to the area and is it continuing to make available emergency assistance and food aid, using the International Red Cross, UNICEF and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees as channels?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The Canadian government has suspended bilateral aid programs to Viet Nam and Cambodia, but is continuing with its humanitarian assistance programs to the region through multilateral agencies.

● (1440)

Mr. Brewin: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. In view of the further fact it now appears that the authorities representing the PRG are in effective control of the area formally known as South Viet Nam, in order to facilitate direct and urgent discussions with that government in respect of compassionate and humanitarian assistance, will the government give consideration to the question of recognition of the regime?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, according to reliable reports, the new authorities would have made contradictory statements about their intentions of recognizing other governments, and until such a situation has been cleared up it would seem premature on the part of the government to make a decision on its own as to the recognition of the new authorities.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—KNOWLEDGE OF MINISTER OF QUESTIONS BY AND RESPONSES TO LABOUR CONCERNING PROGRAM FOR CONSENSUS ON RESTRAINT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Finance. I should like to ask the minister whether he has been fully briefed since his return on what took place in connection with the consensus program while he was away. Can he assure the House that he has been fully informed of any questions that organized labour may have about this program? Also, can he tell the House that the government has answered all the questions raised by the CLC? I put these questions in view of the important meeting which I understand is to be held next Wednesday at which CLC and organized labour will make fairly fundamental decisions with regard to this program.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman knows, the ministers themselves met with the executive of the CLC on two or three occasions. Following the tabling of a statement in the House by my parliamentary secretary, we set in force technical groups, one meeting with the Canadian Labour Congress and organized labour, one meeting with various segments of the business community as I described to the House before and the third, the technical group, meeting with the representatives of the provinces. Through those technical discussions with labour, I understand that various avenues were explored on a number of subjects. There is nothing definitive at this stage, however, and I await the reaction of the labour movement to the discussions as they have proceeded so far before deciding whether to move into the final stage of the discussions.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the importance that the minister attaches to this program and in view of the importance of the government mounting some framework within which to fight inflation and permit expansion of the economy, could the minister not answer my question very simply by giving an assurance that he has been fully briefed and that the leaders of organized labour have to his knowledge been given all the answers, all the information, and all the assurances they require before they consider this question on Wednesday evening?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. gentleman that I have been fully briefed since my return from the Middle East. To the best of my knowledge, all the subjects which the leaders of organized labour have wished to canvass in terms of government latitude have been given consideration. There is nothing firm at this time, however. I understand that the Canadian Labour Congress executive will canvass the subject in more detail with leaders of their constituent unions on Wednesday. It is because of the importance that I attach to this exercise that I feel this is as far as I can go with the hon. gentleman today.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I am not asking the minister for specific information or details. My final supplementary to the minister is whether, in view of the importance of the program, he has sought an invitation from leaders of organized labour in Canada to appear personally at their meetings in order to use his good offices and great eloquence to help persuade them to adopt this program and also to answer any questions they may put. Is the minister prepared to involve himself personally in this enterprise?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that at this stage representatives of labour wish to have discussion among themselves. At a later stage if they were to issue an invitation I would be available and do my best to sell the program.

SPORTS

SUGGESTED USE OF OLYMPIC FUNDS TO AID ATHLETES

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Because a number of Canada's athletes who are training for the 1976 Olympics are on welfare, unemployment insurance and almost all have gone into debt as a result of their training—in fact there are cases of malnutrition, some lack heating due to unpaid bills, some teams have disbanded, others are in cramped quarters and so on—I wonder if the minister could advise the House whether he is prepared to take the necessary steps to have funds raised under government and commercial Olympic programs directed immediately toward direct grant aids for our athletes. I emphasize the word "direct", Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, first, if the hon. member is aware of athletes who have serious nutrition problems and are on social welfare, I would be happy to have a list of them and examine their cases specifically.

Second, action has been taken in that field, jointly with the Plan of 1976 Games, in order to increase assistance to athletes.

Third, my colleague, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, has given instructions that manpower centres be made available particularly to athletes to help them find a job in particular situations.

Finally, this afternoon, I will meet the athletes' representatives to discuss the whole matter.

[English]

SUGGESTION RADIO AND TELEVISION COMMERCIALS CAUSING PUBLIC TO BELIEVE ALL OLYMPIC FUNDS TO GO TO ATHLETES—REQUEST FOR ALTERATION

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to see that the minister is finally willing to accept the invitation of myself and my colleague the hon. member for Fraser Valley West to meet with athletes. It has taken him about three weeks to agree to that.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

My supplementary question is for the Acting Prime Minister. Because of the fact that athletes who qualify for federal grants receive a mere $50 a month maximum and there are statements of anger and militancy and that dropping out is becoming widespread and in view of the fact that existing radio and TV commercials are misleading in that Canadians are led to believe—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a supplementary question, will he please put it directly?

Mr. Jelinek: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Because of the fact that radio and television commercials are misleading and lead us to believe that all funds raised go to the aid of athletes, could the minister assure this House that these commercials, particularly commercials under the federal jurisdiction, will be altered so that they do not mislead the Canadian public further?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as to the first part of the hon. member's assertion, I want to stress the fact that I indicated very clearly I was prepared to meet the athletes any time and as soon as they are available. The suitable time for the athletes was today and I arranged to be available to meet them. As to the second part of the hon. member's question, I think he knows the answer.

GOVERNMENT VIEW OF FACTORS CAUSING INFLATION

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, mine is a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the government's earlier position that inflation was largely caused by international factors, could the minister indicate whether that it is still the government's position and, if so, what steps is he taking to deal with those international factors?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it was the position of the government in 1973 and 1974 that the primary forces of inflation were imbalance of supply, and demand both worldwide in Canada.

Mr. Stanfield: And the weather.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): This provoked a sharp rise in commodity prices and was compounded, as the hon. Leader of the Opposition has reminded me, by the weather which produced disastrous harvests in some parts of the world and tripled the price of grain from $2 to $6 a bushel. Conditions were compounded as well by the quadrupling of oil prices in 1973-74. As I have said to the House on several occasions, in the November budget and in response to the motion from the NDP commenting on economic policy, the primary forces at the moment are cost-push thrusts in the economy.

Mr. Yewchuk: A supplementary question. Am I to take it from the minister's long and tortuous answer that the government has changed its position and now feels that the factors contributing to inflation are primarily ones which arise domestically?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is stating it a little too starkly, but I wanted to take the time of the House to assure myself that he understood the government's position in 1973-74.

ALLEGED UNJUST SENTENCES BY COURTS MARTIAL IN ATLANTIC COMMAND—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Joe Flynn (Kitchener): I have a question for the Minister of National Defence, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister report to the House on the unjust penal sentences apparently issued at recent courts martial in the Atlantic Command to members of our naval forces for petty offences such as removing two cartons of cigarettes from a naval dockyard? Mr. Speaker, I said "removing" not "stealing". These sentences have amounted to as long as one year in penitentiary.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): I think the sentences are in order having regard to the crimes committed, but they are, of course, subject to appeal.

ALLEGED STATEMENT BY MINISTER ADVOCATING GREATER CANADIAN CONTENT IN FOREIGN MAGAZINES—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. About a week ago the hon. gentleman made a speech to United States publishers advocating that there be a higher degree of Canadian content in foreign magazines if they were to be welcome in Canada. Would the minister clarify that statement? Is he suggesting a policy which would inhibit the free flow of foreign magazines into this country.

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): No, Mr. Speaker; I made a specific point of that in my speech in West Virginia. If the hon. member wishes further clarification I shall be at the Standing Committee on Broadcasting on Friday morning.

ELECTION EXPENSES

POSSIBILITY OF INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Acting Prime Minister in his capacity as President of the Privy Council. Does the government intend to introduce this session any further amendments to legislation concerning election expenses?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): I think it would be desirable if legislation of this sort could be introduced during the present session. I have had the advantage of recommendations from an all-party committee which has been considering the Election Expenses Act; proposals have been put before me which are now being translated into the form of amendments to the act. I would hope that if any members of the House of Commons, or any of the associations or other bodies in the country which are interested have suggestions to make, those suggestions would be forwarded now in order that they may be incorporated into the draft which I look forward to placing before the House before the end of the session.

FINANCE

BALANCE OF PAYMENTS POSITION OF UNDERDEVELOPED NATIONS—POSITION OF IMF SPECIAL FUND

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In welcoming him back, may I ask him to make a full statement to the House shortly on his findings as to the situation in the Middle East. As the International Monetary Fund has reported that the world's industrialized nations have regained most of the monetary reserves they had lost since the fourfold increase in the price of oil, has there been any recent improvement in the balance of payments position of the less well developed nations, excluding the major oil exporters, and what has happened to the IMF special fund?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): There has been some success among the industrialized nations in cushioning themselves against their deficit position in their balance of payments. The IMF facility is in place. The so-called solidarity fund stands at $25 billion. Because the oil exporting countries, particularly Iran and Saudi Arabia, are finding that they are able to absorb more of this money by way of imports and the industrialization of their own economies, they are accumulating surplus at a less rapid rate. The problem on the third world, however, remains just as great as it was.

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON MEASURES TO CLOSE GAP BETWEEN RICH AND POOR NATIONS

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Is it the intention of the government to link up the work the minister has just completed in the Middle East in the recycling of petro-dollars, to link up the proposal made this week by the Secretary of State for External Affairs for revenue-sharing at the Law of the Sea Conference, to link up the statements of the Prime Minister on the new international economic order which he made at the Commonwealth conference, to link all these into a new, comprehensive policy on international development which will put Canada in the forefront of the developed nations, recognizing that it is international structural changes, not just foreign aid, which will close the widening gap between rich and poor in the world?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): The Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs have both been directing their attention to commodity pricing and the realignment of world trade. Within the International Monetary Fund itself, and the World Bank, its sister institution, we have been concerning ourselves with subsidy accounts at low interest rates to the third world, with third window financing through the World Bank, and so on. Whether these endeavours should be linked in one comprehensive policy is another matter. But we are moving in the same direction.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPLACEMENT FOR ARGUS—CONSIDERATION OF BOEING AND LOCKHEED PROPOSALS—PAYMENT FOR CONTRACT DEFINITION

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of National Defence? On April 15, some three weeks ago, the minister issued a statement indicating that the program for replacement of the Argus was proceeding according to plan; the contract definition stage had been completed and recommendations were to be made to cabinet. On May 1, the minister completely reversed his position and stated: "We may still find the answer in either the Boeing or the Lockheed proposal; we may, but we want to make certain that we widen the search." It appears the minister has turned an orderly replacement program into an utter shambles. Can he tell the House whether he still intends to have the acquisition contract for the Argus replacement signed before August 2?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): We are continuing to examine the bids and proposals put forward by Boeing and by Lockheed, but as I indicated to the standing committee we intend to consider other proposals as well.

Mr. McKinnon: The decision to pay between $10 and $11 million to two United States firms for contract definition purposes can only be rationalized if the government has in fact firmly decided to buy one or the other of the two planes. If a decision has still to be made, does the minister not agree that the $10 or $11 million may have been totally wasted?

Mr. Richardson: No, Mr. Speaker. I would say that when we are spending several hundreds of millions of dollars, that kind of expenditure which could help us to do the right thing, constitutes money well spent.

[Mr. Roche.]

INFLATION—EFFECT OF DEVALUATION OF DOLLAR

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): My question is for the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. Since the minister has told us he has had an opportunity to become well-briefed on the Canadian economy since his return, may I ask him to tell us how much impact on domestic inflation the precipitous devaluation of the Canadian dollar is having at the present time?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I could not pinpoint it exactly.

Mr. Gillies: Could one consider that since it has failed to control domestic inflation the policy of the Canadian government at present is to compensate by letting the dollar float down, regardless of what level it might reach and regardless of the effect on other countries of the world?

May I ask whether the government endorses this policy and has it laid down guidelines which the CRTC might use when defining "reasonable contribution"?

Hon. ENERGY

STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT'S DECISION REGARDING PRICING OF NATURAL GAS EXPORTS

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the House of the government's decision regarding the pricing of natural gas exports. Acting on the advice of the National Energy Board, and in keeping with our policy of phasing natural gas prices to their commodity value in relation to competing fuels, the border price of export gas, with a few exceptions, will be set at $1.60 per thousand cubic feet on November I of this year. We will phase towards that level by establishing a price of $1.40 per thousand cubic feet on August 1. The exceptions I mentioned refer to one licence where the commodity value in that market area, in the board's opinion, will be reached at $1.30 per thousand cubic feet; for a short-term shipment under special prices from Pan-Alberta; and for small quantities of winter peaking gas which are traditionally sold at higher prices.

The National Energy Board had recommended a border price of $1.60. The government has decided on a phasing period to this level to help ease the impact in the export markets, especially those which are totally dependent on Canadian gas.

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House of course, welcome the statement of the minister to clarify some of the uncertainties that have been prevalent in this field for some time. I know the minister is aware of the fact that under the act establishing the National Energy Board in 1959, it was the policy of the Government of Canada at that time—a policy that has never really been specifically changed—that all our exports of natural materials and resources should be sold at a price on foreign markets certainly equivalent to the price on the domestic market, and that under the 105 per cent rule the products would be sold for 5 per cent higher than related commodities in the market to which they were going. We generally support that proposition which was brought in by the Conservative government at that time.

Since 1959, the National Energy Board has intervened in the pricing of exports in a way that has been favourable to many of the people who are buying our natural resources. Indeed, the announcement by the minister today merely means that we are extending once again to our neighbour—we do not, of course, oppose this—the opportunity to acquire our resources at attractive prices.

We support the proposition of staging. We think this is the proper approach and we appreciate the fact that the minister realizes, in this age of inflation and unemployment, that staging is a very important consideration. But we believe it is time the commodity value approach was followed in the pricing of many of our resources. The really critical question facing all Canadians and facing this government in the sale and the pricing of our resources is the fundamental question of assurance of supply, of being certain that we will have sufficient supply to meet our own needs and indeed to meet the needs of other countries to the extent that our own production is surplus to our own needs.

The question that the minister does not direct himself to in this statement, nor very directly in the press release that accompanied the statement, is how are the producers of natural gas going to be rewarded by these price changes? We have argued before, and we still contend, that the fundamental problem as far as resources in this country are concerned develops from the budgetary position taken by the government in the last budget some time ago. We hope that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) will use all his strength and effort in the debate that goes forth on a new budget to make certain that adjustments are made in the tax system so that we have a policy that will encourage an increase in supply, which is the fundamental matter of concern to all Canadians as far as pricing and exports are concerned.

We also believe that the government must constantly bear in mind the fact that the producing provinces are making available a resource that is not renewable. We do not know what the reserves really are, but we hope that at some future time, certainly in the not too distant future, the government will move ahead and provide a quid pro quo to the producing provinces for making these resources available around the world at less than the world price.

On balance, Mr. Speaker, we welcome this statement. We believe that the introduction of certainty into this area is very important. We think that phasing is important, but we want to re-emphasize that until something is done in a budgetary way to make sure that supply will be increased, that the tax situation is altered so that producers can effectively operate, we will never come to a realistic solution of the problem of the production and sale of natural resources in this country.

Natural Gas Pricing

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, for the past ten years Canada has been exporting more than half of its oil and gas supplies despite the fact that our new discoveries were not sufficient to replace these rapidly depleting resources. Even more serious is the fact that we have been selling these commodities at a price which was ridiculously low. The government took steps last year to deal with the oil situation by setting an export price, and it is now in the process of phasing out our exports of oil.

With respect to natural gas, we have been moving at a very slow pace indeed. On January 1, the minister announced the price of $1 per thousand cubic feet. Now the National Energy Board has recommended a figure of $1.60 per thousand cubic feet. The minister has apparently acceded to the request of the American delegation which visited this city a week or two ago and has decided to phase in this price by moving to $1.40 on August 1 and then to $1.60 on November 1.

Personally, Mr. Speaker, I agree with the National Energy Board. I see no reason for phasing in the increase, but if the minister feels he can establish better relations by doing so, then I will not raise any strenuous objection. I think, however, it should be pointed out to those who feel that we Canadians are seeking to exploit our American neighbours with regard to this very crucial energy supply by raising the price at this time, that they should keep in mind two things. First, that even $1.60 per thousand cubic feet is less than the price at which some United States gas is being sold in the United States. I am informed that some of the Texas gas is being sold at a price as high as $2 per thousand cubic feet. It should also be remembered that our gas reserves are running out very rapidly and that the replacement of those reserves will mean frontier supplies will be needed, which will cost a great deal more than the price we are securing for this gas we are now exporting.

I am glad the government has finally acted on this matter. I have felt for a long time that both the government and the National Energy Board have not acted expeditiously both with respect to the price at which we were selling natural gas and the amount that we were exporting. For years we have sold Canadian gas to the United States at a price lower in some instances than we were charging Canadian consumers. I hope the next thing the government will do will be to consider whether we can continue to send large quantities of gas to the United States in view our domestic situation. I recognize the difficulty of cutting down exports of gas, but under the National Energy Board Act the board has power to amend, alter or rescind any of the gas contracts. I think this is a situation to which the government ought to be giving some consideration.

However, I am glad the minister has acted and that we are now going to have a price that is certainly more relative to the cost of other fuels in the United States. It will also mean that the price at which we are selling gas to the United States will at least bear a fair relationship to the price we are charging Canadian consumers.

[Mr. Gillies.]

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have just been through the very important statement to the House by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources dealing with the price of natural gas.

I think the new policy as stated by the minister is in keeping with the National Energy Board's report, which mainly aims at bringing prices level with the price of crude oil on major Canadian market as well as increasing export prices.

It is perfectly normal, when we export a commodity to the United States or elsewhere, that prices should be at least the same as prices to Canadian consumers. And I think the minister's statement is a step in that direction.

At first sight, an increase in the prices looks acceptable. However, we shall have to be careful that it does not entail an excessive increase in the cost of some Canadian commodities, which manufacturers need in their production processes. We shall have to be very careful in that respect too.

Constitutionally, natural resources come under the jurisdiction of provinces. Revenues should therefore benefit provinces. In a confederated land like ours, when the central government assumes its responsibilities, especially with respect to exports, which fall under its jurisdiction, if we can take advantage of our natural gas exports to the United States, I hope Canada as a whole will benefit from those exports, because we shall obviously derive some benefit. Provinces which are not as richly endowed in that respect will have to be granted some sort of compensation through the equalization payment system.

I feel we have an obligation to make sure producers benefit from that, as the minister stated, so that there be an incentive to increase production and research efforts, first to cover our needs and also to meet our export commitments. The minister on the other hand will have to make sure there is no company profiteering at the expense of Canadian consumers.

The minister anticipates this new price policy will bring extra revenues in the order of $583 million. That is a significant amount. I hope these expected extra revenues will help the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner). It appears he is experiencing great difficulty in the final preparation of his budget to be tabled this month.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The statement of the minister was extremely brief and it would perhaps have taken extreme discipline to limit opposition spokesmen to anything like the same length of time. However, opposition statements were a good deal longer than the minister's statement, understandably so in the circumstances. That fact, coupled with the fact that quite frankly there is no substantial disagreement with the basic principle of the statement, leads me to the opinion that I ought to put a rather strong limitation on the questioning. I would, therefore, propose to recognize two members of the Official Opposition, one member of the New Democratic Party and one member of the Créditiste Party for questions.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question deals with a statement on page 6 of the minister's press release. I will quote it so the House will hear it. It reads:

> In the case of Alberta, the government has decided that the proceeds resulting from higher prices should be distributed to producers in Alberta on a basis which is mutually acceptable to the Alberta and federal governments.

Is this mutual agreement in harmony with the existing federal budget?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I have a little difficulty relating that question to what is proposed here. I should explain to the hon. gentleman that as a result of this price increase, some producers in Alberta will receive a very large increment because they have sold their gas for export, while those who have sold their gas into the domestic market will not receive as large an increment, at least at this time.

On that basis, we have discussed with the province of Alberta at least a system of prorationing or equalization among Alberta producers so the same percentage benefit would go back to all producers of gas within that province as though they had all sold their gas on a prorated basis into export markets. That is what is contemplated and that is what was discussed with provincial officials about a week and a half ago. I will be meeting with the Alberta minister again this week to further discuss the matter.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I asked whether this deal with the Alberta government concerning these proceeds going back to the producers, even on a quota system, was in conformity with the federal budget of last November. I did not get an answer to that question, so I will ask a second question in relation to the same thing but based on a quotation from page 5 of this press release as follows:

> An exception in the flow-back of proceeds to producers will again be made in the case of British Columbia where additional revenues will go in the first instance to the British Columbia Petroleum Corporation with the expectation that the BCPC will take the necessary steps needed to stimulate the production of gas in that province.

My question, once again, is the same. Is this expectation based on ignoring the budget, at the federal level, of last November?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I find that question obscure. Of course, the hon. member knows that the tax law stands as it is right now, and in no sense does the redistribution of the increase going back to these particular provinces in any way conflict with the budget. It goes back to the producers in Alberta and into their general revenues, and is subject to the provisions of the tax law and may be subject to taxation. In the case of the British Columbia Petroleum Corporation, in essence the arrangement worked out with the province on the deemed value of the gas as of January, 1975, will apply there as well.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, while we always accept your judgment on matters of questions, I should point out that the minister's statement was only half a page in length, but his press release is six pages long and gives a great deal of information which really ought to be dealt with, or at least we ought to be able to get some further information on it.

In the minister's press release he points out that the increase in the export price of natural gas will result in additional revenue of roughly $583 million per year, and the minister expresses the hope in the release that this will encourage the development of additional sources of supply and stimulate production. I recognize that higher prices will bring in some shallow pools that normally would not be economically viable, but is the minister planning any type of monitoring to ensure that the higher revenue which is derived from this new price will be used for exploration by the companies concerned?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, we are in a position to monitor that now, though not on a day to day or week to week basis. Over any period of time it can be readily determined from the exploration effort going forward, in the province of Alberta and in the foothills particularly, whether the anticipated amount of work is being carried out. As to whether this increase is finding its way back into exploration, or if individual companies are diverting the cash to other purposes, the ability to monitor does exist now, although in somewhat longer time-frames than on a day to day or week to week basis.

As I indicated at the federal-provincial conference, if we find that, despite all their protestations to the contrary, the private sector is diverting these funds out of Canada or not applying them to bring on further supplies, then an appropriate conclusion will have to be brought forward in terms of the budget.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I welcome that statement by the minister, Mr. Speaker. May I ask one additional, short question? Having now made the announcement with reference to the export price of natural gas, how soon does the minister expect to conclude his discussions with the producing provinces in order to be able to make an announcement in respect of the domestic price of natural gas?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I cannot be sure of that, Mr. Speaker. I will be seeing my Alberta counterpart and the minister of federal and intergovernmental affairs here in Ottawa later this week, and we may have some better indication then as to their viewpoint. After that it will be important, on the question of natural gas, to discuss this question with the governments of the consuming provinces, in this case Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec. Those discussions would have to be pursued, and I think only after time has elapsed would it be possible to have contact with some of them. I have already met with Saskatchewan. On that basis, I believe we could arrive at what would seem to be a fair price. I would hope we might have agreement at that time.

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the minister whether he is now aware of the national gas potential in the province of Quebec, and if so, whether he expects a possible self-sufficiency in this area?

Natural Gas Pricing

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I must say I do not believe there is at this point any real possibility of natural gas self-sufficiency in Quebec. There is no doubt a potential. Geological areas point to a potential for natural gas production in Quebec. Drillings are now being performed by a few companies, including Soquip, but I believe I am right in saying there is no self-sufficiency prospects at this time in Quebec. Of course we are hopeful that drillings especially on the continental shelf, will bring such a possibility. But this involves almost ten years of work.

Mr. Allard: Can the minister tell the House, since there was recently a natural gas price increase in Alberta, whether this will have any implications for the consumers using natural gas for heating, cooking and what not, and whether also this will have any impact on fuel oil?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, in my statement today I referred only to the price of national gas exported to the United States. There has been no decision yet about the price of domestic gas. I can however emphasize there will be talks with Alberta and other governments, including that of Quebec, on a possible increase in the domestic price. But there has been no decision yet.

[English]

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased with the statement of the minister, which indicates that the price of exported gas will be brought into line with prices within the United States. I think there are areas in the United States where gas is supplied at prices which are still higher than our prices. I accept, also—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I ought to remind the hon. member at the outset that it was never the intention that this period would be used for commenting on a minister's statement. It is a period for questioning, and if the hon. member has a question he should put it to the minister.

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this action is related to increasing supplies, is the minister giving serious consideration to reducing demand and eliminating the kind of advertising, and so on, that is being conducted by the gas companies, certainly in my area, which would have the effect of increasing the use of gas when there is a shortage of supply?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): We do not, at the federal level, have direct jurisdiction over the retail marketing of natural gas. Our discussions with the provincial governments under the conservation program have dealt with the question of persuading provincial utilities to reduce, if possible, the demand for natural gas, including a change in the advertising message.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, in arriving at the established prices the government did not accept in full the recommendation of the National Energy Board. Can we infer from that, that in the discussions on prices there was consultation with the producing provinces concerning what should be the domestic price in Canada?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Not directly, Mr. Speaker. The decision with regard to our phasing in of the export price was, of course, related to our concern that the impact be cushioned, so far as we felt was reasonably possible, on the export customer. There really is no conclusion that can be drawn at this point about the prospective level of domestic price increases. One thing can be said, however. In terms of revenue generated in the industry and in the provinces, we feel there is an element of compensation here which might provide them with a basis for expecting less than the export price increase from the domestic consumer.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is on that point. Of the $583 million increased revenue per year to be generated by these sales, will the minister tell us what proportion will go to the federal government, what proportion will go to the provincial government, and what proportion will be left for the suppliers?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I must confess I have not done that detailed calculation, but I think the National Energy Board will be before the committee tomorrow. The hon. gentleman might like to put that question to the board, and perhaps he will get a more definitive estimate of the relative share.

CHARLOTTETOWN AIRPORT

Question No. 2,208—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. Is it the intention of the government to enlarge the passenger terminal of the Charlottetown Airport and, if so (a) on what date (b) what are the dimensions of any such proposed enlargement and for how many passengers will such enlargement provide space?

2. In the past ten years how many temporary additions have been made to the Airport and at what cost and passenger capacity?

3. On what date is it intended to commence construction of a new terminal and new runways?

4. What steps have been taken to acquire property essential to an enlargement of the present Airport?

5. What is the difference in the aggregate of terminal space and passenger accommodation between the present date and the latest date antecedent to the introduction of jet aircraft service by Eastern Provincial Airways?

6. Does the Department of Transport envisage greater passenger terminal use consequent upon Air Canada's Charlottetown-Ottawa-Toronto service and, if so, how much and what steps are being taken to meet such anticipated demand?

7. What is the largest passenger aircraft which can now land safely at Charlottetown Airport?

8. Apart from improved passenger facilities in the terminal, what proposed improved navigational aids are contemplated for the Charlottetown Airport and on what date are such developments expected?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. It is the intention of the Ministry of Transport to provide interim renovations, within the next few months, to the existing terminal building in Charlottetown to facilitate Air Canada and EPA operations and provide additional public space equating to 75 more people. This relates to 528 square feet for baggage space, 1,024 square feet in public area and 465 square feet in washrooms.

2. In the past ten years there have been three extensions to the terminal building, in 1969, 1970, and 1973. The cost involved was approximately $224,000. About 6,000 square feet of additional space was provided.

3. It is hoped to commence design of a new terminal building and associated facilities in the summer of 1975; this being contingent on funds availability which have not yet been identified pending completion of detailed plans which are due shortly. The main runway will be recapped in 1976-77 and a new cross-wind runway is to be constructed in 1978-79.

4. A meeting has taken place April 15 between Regional Construction Branch and the Department of Public Works to initiate land acquisition proceedings for future development in Charlottetown.

5. The three extensions referred to in answer No. 2 were constructed to meet a greater demand for service in 1969. As a result of this demand terminal increased in size from approximately 2,200 square feet to approximately 8,200 square feet.

6. The initiation of Air Canada's Charlottetown-Ottawa-Toronto service will result in an increase in annual passengers. The redistribution of passengers throughout the day due to a revision in flight scheduling should actually reduce congestion at peak times.

7. DC-9 and B737 type aircraft can operate at Charlottetown with no constraints. B727 and DC-8 type aircraft can operate on the basis of relatively severe weight restrictions.

8. The existing navigational aids at Charlottetown meet all requirements for the design period. Associated with the airside development is a new air traffic control tower to be constructed in 1978-79.

PROCUREMENT OF ITEMS USED BY DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

Question No. 2,011—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Are there any offices outside Canada that have the responsibility of procuring items to be used exclusively by the Department of National Defence?

2. What is their working relationship with the Department of Supply and Services?

3. What responsibilities do they have?

4. Where are such offices located?

Return tabled.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, again I must bring to the attention of the House that my questions on CIDA, which have been on the order paper since February, were to be answered one or two at a time. What has the government to hide? Surely the government has a complete file on this matter. I should like to know what the criteria are in respect of some of these questions. There must be a reason for the government's not answering at least one or two questions a week.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING THE STABILIZATION OF NET PROCEEDS FROM THE PRODUCTION AND SALE OF WESTERN GRAIN

The House resumed, from Friday, May 2, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lang that Bill C-41, respecting the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain and to amend certain statutes in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, when the debate was adjourned last Friday I had indicated that I felt this particular bill, though styled a bill respecting western grain stabilization, is of a nature that is pertinent not only to the interests of western farmers but, indeed, to the country as a whole.

In the course of the speech which I started then and which I am now continuing, I indicated that the agricultural industry in this country is basic to the prosperity of the country, and that the good fortune or bad fortune, as the case may be, which affects one part of Canada—in this case we are discussing western Canada—has a direct bearing on the rest of the country.

I suggest that the prosperity of this industry has an effect not only in the internal sense but also on our position as a producer of food in the world. I do not think any Canadian, regardless of the part of the country she or he may come from, does not feel it is important to Canada that there be a strong, aggressive grain growing industry in which the participants have a reasonable expectation of reasonable return to them; and that those who enjoy the fruits of the labour of the grain farmer, whether they be consumers in the usual sense of the word or in the agricultural sense—namely, those who use the produce in other parts of the country—can be assured of a constant supply at a reasonable price.

But, more important than that, over the long term and as we look ahead to the place of our country globally, we have to consider that we have certain obligations with respect to the production of grain. These obligations in some cases are legal in nature in that they involve agreements and contractual arrangements with other nations, but as well we have a moral obligation to the world, as a producer of food, not only to maintain the productive machinery of farmers in this case in western Canada but generally across the whole of Canada.

We have a duty, as well, to maintain a viable operation and a functional and meaningful transportation system to enable those products to get to market and, as I have said, we have a duty to fulfil those moral obligations. I have mentioned, also—and I think it is worth mentioning again—that I am somewhat concerned that we tend to look at problems of this nature on a regional basis and to think that the only persons who should rise in this place and in other places to speak on, let us say, western grain stabilization should be western farmers or representatives of western farmers. I think the issue is much broader than that, and the House of Commons should not give impetus to any argument that deals with regionalization in Canada.

I think this bill is important to every one of us, whether we live in Ontario, in Quebec, in western Canada or in the Atlantic provinces. There are three basic questions that the western producer and the eastern consumer of the produce of the western farmer will ask about this bill. They will ask, first of all, what this bill means to each of them depending on their interests; how it will operate, and what will be its benefits to our country and particularly to the western producer. They will ask what its benefits will be to the eastern producer in terms of supply of grain at a reasonable cost, and what it will mean in terms of the ability of the western producer to meet the new limits that have been established under the farm credit legislation, which can put a tremendous burden of debt on the western farmer because those new limits on a per unit basis run to some $150,000.

These are important matters to be raised not just here in the House of Commons but across the country, and not just to be discussed with large farm organizations, important as they may be, but most of all to be discussed directly with and to be understood by the individual farmer, in this case the grain farmer, who will be the primary beneficiary of this legislation; also, indirectly others who use his produce and rely on it to produce on their own. I say this because the individual farmer, not necessarily the farm organization, is the person in the firing-line of agriculture in Canada today: it is to him that this bill should be directed, and it is toward him that any missionary work that is to be done with respect to the bill should be undertaken.

I do not know what has happened to agriculture in this country. It is now split, in terms of its jurisdiction. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) is responsible for one aspect of agriculture, and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is responsible for another aspect. If there is anything that indicates the difficulties that face Canadian farmers, it is this split jurisdiction. Another such indication of difficulty is the history of this bill as well as the debates and discussions that took place with respect to Bill C-50 and Bill C-19 before the committee of this House. I do not think the eastern grain producer has benefited much from the legislation that this House dealt with a little while ago, and unless there is a real explanation given to him with respect to this bill, its complexity and how it is to function—and it is a very complex bill—I am afraid that the same kind of thing will happen with respect to the western farmer.

So there is a very strong duty and a heavy onus on the Minister of Justice, who is responsible for the Wheat Board, not only to rise in the House or appear before the committee to explain the principles of this bill and its very complex formulas but also to do the missionary work that is necessary to explain the principles of the bill.

As I review the bill, I find that it reminds me very much of the Income Tax Act with which we dealt some time ago. Its very complex and difficult sections are drafted in language that even a lawyer would have some difficulty in understanding. Let me refer you, Madam Speaker, to clause 6 of the bill. It deals with new procedures under the formula proposed. I would like you to listen, Madam Speaker, and ask yourself how anybody in the business of producing grain who is not at the same time a lawyer, an accountant or an economist, could possibly understand the bill as it is presently worded. Clause 6 reads as follows:

(1) Subject to subsections 5(6) and (7), every person who

(a) is eligible to participate under this Act,

(b) has not elected under subsection 5

(1) to cease to participate and is not deemed, pursuant to subsection 8(4), to have made an election under subsection 5(2), and

(c) becomes an actual producer after this Act comes into force, either for the first time or subsequent to a period in which he is not an actual producer, becomes a full participant for the year in which he becomes an actual producer and continues to be a full participant until the end of the year in which he ceases to be an actual producer or ceases to be eligible.

● (1540)

There is nothing wrong with the Queen's English; it is a relatively intelligible language. Surely in the course of drafting this bill there could have been found a formula to make persons who would find themselves new, actual producers look at the statute and suddenly realize that they were new, actual producers. It is a complicated statute, and I have given one example. There is another example, if we turn to page 6 and look at clause 7, which deals with persons deemed to be participants—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. At this time hon. members are supposed to discuss the general principle of the bill and not particular clauses.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Thank you very much, Madam Speaker; Your Honour just anticipated the end of the discussion. Surely one of the fundamental principles of every piece of legislation—the western grain stabilization bill being included—is that it must be understood and comprehended by those involved. With the greatest respect to the minister, this bill is so difficult that its principle will be difficult for a grain farmer to understand, even one equipped as I have mentioned.

Mr. Goodale: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I see the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) sitting back there: if he wants to make a speech in the course of this debate, he can do so.

Mr. Goodale: I already have.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): The hon. member will have another opportunity to make a speech very shortly and I look forward to hearing him. I only hope he will stand up so that we can see him.

This bill seems to reward good fortune on the one hand, and on the other hand it seems to penalize misfortune or bad luck which may occur because of conditions in the agricultural industry over which the farmer has no control. It does not seem to me that the proper way to approach the question of stabilization is to propound in a statute a formula or succession of formulas which reward good fortune. I hope that when this matter goes to committee there will be detailed examination of those principles set forth in the formula so that this kind of thing can be rooted out of the bill.

Another problem with respect to this bill is the matter of understanding and comprehension. It is vital when discussing a bill of such importance that we not merely discuss it here or merely discuss it in the usual way in the Standing Committee on Agriculture, but that the minister undertakes the missionary work which ought to be done, that the bill be taken out of this House and sent to committee, and that the committee hears witnesses, not just those who are able to come to Ottawa to be heard but that the committee takes this case to the people involved. I mentioned earlier that not just farm organizations should be heard, as important as they are, but the committee should go into areas where individual farmers at public meetings can engage in public discussion with respect to this bill.

The government ought to be given the opportunity to do this, and I think every member of the House would agree that the committee ought to travel, when it is established, and that the message ought to be explained. It may take some time, more than it usually takes to consider a bill of this nature, but public hearings and meetings where we meet individual producers in the marketplace are important. As I said at the outset, there are three questions which must be answered before this bill is approved in principle. There are three matters which must be discussed completely so that the government has the benefit of the input which can be had from people in the marketplace, so that those who are dependent upon the produce of the western grain farmer will be heard, including the eastern farmer who produces another kind of produce, to name only one group.

These questions are pretty clear. What does the bill mean to both groups in Canada? What does it mean to consumers? What does it mean in terms of our production as part of the bread basket of the world? How will this bill operate? How will the advisory committees be established? What are their functions? How will they reach the individual farmer? What machinery will be established and how will it be funded? What is the operational nature of the bill to be? Most important in the consideration of this bill, what will be the benefit to western Canadian agriculture? At what price will that benefit be sought? What benefit will the rest of Canada receive? What effect will the bill have on our position as a world producer of food? These are questions which must be answered, and I assume there is no member in this House, regardless of where he or she comes from, who does not want this matter examined fully.

On the foregoing basis, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Huron-Middlesex (Mr. McKinley):

That Bill C-41 be not now read a second time, but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Madam Speaker, my remarks will be addressed to the amendment and not to the bill itself. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) has put forward an amendment that deserves the serious consideration of all members of the House because of the peculiar nature of the matter discussed in this bill.

This bill bears on the age-old dream of all farmers who know that they are in an occupation subject to many ups and downs. Some of those ups and downs are due to weather. Governments have tried to help farmers meet that type of up and down with crop insurance legislation. In the three provinces mainly affected by this bill, that is, the prairie provinces, I would assume that two-thirds of the farmers pay into the crop insurance program in order to try to protect themselves against the vagaries of weather. The farmer, therefore, has a good attitude toward paying for his own protection against variables in his income.

The minister responsible for the Wheat Board introduced Bill C-41 in order to try to carry this insurance principle a little further. This time it is insurance against the ups and downs of income. As he said in introducing the bill, sometimes farmer cannot meet the obligations contracted in the previous expenditure year because of lack of sales volume or a general lowering of world prices.

To return to the amendment, Madam Speaker, it asks this House not to decide now on the principles in this bill but to refer the subject matter to the Standing Committee on Agriculture. I think members of that committee, both from the government and the opposition, who have already spoken are in agreement that before we make up our minds on those principles as well as the subject of the matter of the bill, we want to hear from the farmers. It could rightfully be said, as the minister has already said, that the bill has been delayed month after month so he could consult the farmers. I will take his word for it—that he has consulted the farm organizations. I have seen the farm organizations' briefs and it is clear that they are just as dubious about this legislation as I am and as are many members who have spoken on the bill. There is, therefore, a good argument that on the basis of understanding the gobbledygook in this legislation it would be well to go back to the farmers to see if they understand it and want it.

Like many hon. members from the west, I have been discussing this legislation with farmers. They know that for many years I have advocated that in addition to insurance against crop damage from weather we should have some form of income stabilization. In Bill C-41, the minister has repeated the same colossal error that he committed in the infamous LIFT program—Lower Inventory For Tomorrow. He consulted every farm organization on that bill, and every farm organization of substance on the prairies—farm unions, wheat pools, the Federation of Agriculture—recommended to him in writing that he should go forward with it. Evidence of this can be found in Hansard of that time. The member who represented Swift Current-Maple Creek from 1968 to 1972 asked the minister, in the House, who recommended the program and at that time the minister put on record the names of all who had written.

These farm organizations recommended, in effect that the farmer be paid money out of the national treasury for re-summerfallowing and not producing wheat or going in for grass. The minister announced the policy on February 14, 1970, and embarked upon a series of meetings throughout western Canada. He told farmers that the government wanted them to get out of wheat production because there was no market for it.

I followed the minister around in those days. I was not a member of parliament at the time. I told farmers not to listen to that nitwit: that is a kindly word used in western Canada to describe a person who knows a great deal but who really knows nothing about this subject, Madam Speaker. I told them that there was no surplus, had not been a surplus and would not be a surplus. At farm meetings, with 500 or 600 people present, I asked how many wanted the LIFT program, and at every meeting over 90 per cent indicated that they did not want it.

Farmers either had to accept the LIFT program or lose their right to sell grain so I asked how many were going into it because they had to. Eighty-five per cent of the people I surveyed indicated that they had to do what the government told them in order to get their $6 an acre to re-summer fallow. This LIFT program turned out to be the most colossal mistake ever made by a government in the history of agriculture in Canada.

Those of us who knew the world situation, who knew the increasing demands for food around the world, who knew the complete error of the statistics provided by Statistics Canada and the statistics supplied to the United States government, knew that the Statistics were wrong. But the minister of the day, the same man who holds the portfolio at present, and the government of the day, the same government that sits there now, accepted the erroneous figures because they came from a computer using a formula. Farmers were taken out of production by force even though news was coming in from all over the world that people needed our grain. The LIFT program was an immoral act, Madam Speaker, and I warn the government not to repeat that mistake.

When you consult farmers, you talk to them and not to farm organizations. They can funnel the advice up from the farmers, of course, but the only way that members of parliament can be absolutely sure of the facts is to come face to face with the grain farmers of Weyburn, the grain farmers of Alberta, the grain farmers of Brandon and ask whether they like the program. I should like to see the Standing Committee on Agriculture go into the cattle feeding areas, into my constituency, northwestern Saskatchewan, to talk to the men who feed the grain to cattle, to see what they think about being cut out of this bill. I do not want to see repeated the infamous error that was made in the 1970 LIFT program.

I do not know what it will take to convince the government that we are trying to arrive at a conclusion to benefit farmers in all parts of the country. The LIFT program is a classic example of how ignorant of farm matters the government has been in the last 25 years. This government must know that. Now, that does not mean that this was the only time that parliament was ignorant. In this House, in 1932, when the crop was failing and the price was low, this parliament was moved to compassion. The prime minister of the day, Mr. Bennett, was so impressed with the tales of the wind and the drought that he asked parliament in all conscience to vote five cents a bushel subsidy to all the wheat producers in western Canada. Members of all parties supported that because they thought it was the Christian thing to do.

The price of wheat was about 34 cents on world markets and about 20 cents on the farm. This was to be a 20 per cent subsidy to the grain farmers of the west. Well, any farmer could tell you that if there was a drought and he got nothing, five cents times nothing is still nothing. The then prime minister had to stand in his place and say to the House, "I'm sorry; I made a terrible blunder." I guess it is a case of the truth of the Old Testament again: To him that hath shall be given, and to him that hath not shall be taken away. To make this truth evident, there were a few farmers in the northern area where the rains had come; they got a good deal.

On the basis of past mistakes in this House where, with the very best intentions, governments have boobed and boobed colossally, as was the case with the LIFT program in spite of all the warnings, I hope we will not again make that mistake. I hope we can achieve what everyone wants by putting this subject matter before the committee and letting those of us on the committee hear first-hand from as many areas in the west that the committee can handle. We want to hear directly from the producers what they think of the principles of this bill.

When we go back to the main motion I shall be prepared to make a speech on principles. I have had this subject in mind for 35 years. I have tried at various times to figure out ways of doing it, and I am prepared to put those views forward. However, I want to continue the discussion on the amendment. I think the first point is clear: let us consult the farmers on the principle and not make the mistake of the LIFT program or the Bennett mistake of 1932.

The second point is, I want to hear from the farmers on the question of the principle that is in this stabilization bill and was in the stabilization bill of 1970. What horrified me about the minister's first effort to bring stabilization of income was that under his 1970 bill the farmers put in their money. There was a form of getting it out by formula. However, the minister made it brutally clear that you could only get your money out if you did what you were told to do. In essence, under a separate bill it said that under his supply management theories, the civil servants here in Ottawa would take over the guidance of the agricultural industry in all parts of Canada, whether the farmers were growing flowers or wheat, raising cattle or chickens—

Mr. Lang: That's nonsense.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): —and put them into a bill which would give power to direct. In a separate or connected bill, the stabilization bill of 1970, the minister who sits in his place now made it very clear that the money would be paid to those farmers who made the right decision.

Mr. Lang: That is nonsense, and you know it.

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain).]

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Those were the words of the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. He was prepared to back up with muscle the doctrine that a group of civil servants in Ottawa knew better than the farmers what to breed and how much to grow. He was prepared to back that direction and power in the Agricultural Products Marketing Act with a stabilization act which said: You do not get your own money back unless you do what you are told under the national marketing act.

Mr. Lang: That's nonsense.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I hear the minister mumbling, "That's nonsense". I am putting on the record what the minister put on the record when that bill was before us in 1970—and the farmers know it.

Mr. Lang: Give me the reference.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): You will get the reference. I can quote the minister's statements. I am simply saying that if I am on the committee, I want to ask the farmers where they stand on this question of being directed and on this bill that is supposed to stabilize their incomes if it is used as a force to direct their farming activities. That is the type of question on principle that I want to ask. The next point I want to raise—

Mr. Lang: Madam Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Madam Speaker, I am prepared to accept a question.

Mr. Lang: Madam Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member, who has been worrying about this subject for 35 years but did not do anything about it when he had the chance, can point to anywhere in this bill or the predecessor bill which says that farmers have to plant anything other than what they want to plant. I ask him to point to any clause in either of these bills.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Madam Speaker, I am prepared to provide the minister with his own statement in which he stated that under the stabilization bill of 1970, the farmers would get if they made the right decision—

Mr. Lang: The right marketing decision.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): All right; I am prepared to accept that. I am simply saying, on this question of the stabilization bill, that I want to ask the farmers whether they will accept this concept of government direction. If this discretion is given to this minister, are they willing to accept it? I want to hear the farmers tell me face to face whether they will accept the minister's judgment and discretion, in view of his past record.

The next point I want to raise in support of the amendment is one that was raised by several members on the bill itself. I refer to the question of bureaucracy. We have had a long, harrowing experience in western Canada through the actions of several agencies of the government, one of which we have recently debated in the House, the PFAA, where a government bureaucracy was set up and utilized as an arm of the political party that governed this country. We tried to clean that up in the years 1957 to 1963. I have said in this House that I think it stayed cleaned up until recently. Last year we got evidence of monkey-shining going on in connection with the grass and summer fallow program under LIFT where they utilized the machinery of PFAA. That evidence was turned over the Auditor General's department and was eventually sent over to the fraud squad of the RCMP. It is now under investigation.

This bill proposes another bureaucratic group collecting all the information from the Canadian Wheat Board about the farmer's production and inventory. This means inspecting the farm. I wonder what the farmer's reaction will be to this? Accepting the fact that all parties want some stabilization of incomes, when it comes down to the nitty-gritty it means keeping records of grain produced and in storage for inspection by a new bureaucracy. The farmer recognizes that because he is buying insurance, his inventory is subject to inspection. But surely once is enough. I should like to hear farmers tell me face to face what they think about having their granaries inspected first by officials of the provincial government and then again by officials of the federal government.

Mr. Lang: There won't be any.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): The minister is now aware of the type of question farmers will be asking him and his people in the committee.

Mr. Lang: The farmers will presumably understand the bill better than you do.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I hope they do, because I certainly do not understand it. Only a lawyer could understand that claptrap.

Mr. Lang: I will send a summarized version across to you.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): If that is the argument the minister proposes to use, quick action will have to be taken by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I know I have touched a tender spot with these pertinent points. I turn, now, to the heart of the matter. I remind the minister that the farmers are called upon to put their own money into this scheme for the maintenance of farm income; and this being so, they are entitled to feel confident that the arrangements will be handled in accordance with a formula, and not by politicians.

It took years for farmers to accept the sound principle of crop insurance, but eventually they did so because they knew it was administered in accordance with a formula. I doubt, today, whether the farmers of western Canada have the required confidence in the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. They remember the LIFT program; they remember that he used the full power of his many words and his convoluted way of explaining things to tell the farmers they had to go out of production. A large percentage of them did so; they lost their shirts and their incomes because of the advice he gave them.

They remember that before the election of 1974 he told them he was considering a whole series of proposals in connection with the handling of feed grain, one of which involved putting grain under the Grain Exchange. The farm people of western Canada said, "The minister in charge of the Wheat Board says he is going to put grain under the Grain Exchange." The minister said, "Oh, no; we are just looking at the matter and considering the alternatives which are open." Then a month after election day on July 8, we got it. If you put this proposal to a referendum across the prairies, you would get the support of more than 80 per cent of the farmers against the minister's action on that occasion.

An hon. Member: That's not bad.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): However, not content with getting the farm economy into this—

An hon. Member: Did you say 80 per cent?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I meant 80 per cent of the farmers would not agree to the program of putting grain under the Grain Exchange. At the present time, it is under the Wheat Board.

An hon. Member: Still not bad.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I do not believe the farmers have confidence in the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. They remember the LIFT program; they recall the business of feed grain. Then, out of the blue, a year ago the minister began talking out loud and saying the Crowsnest pass rates should be reconsidered and that something should be given to the farmers in lieu of those low rates. This was spread all over the prairies. Suddenly the prairie fires started to burn, and two weeks ago the Prime Minister had to repudiate the minister in charge of the Wheat Board; he sent a long telegram to the Premier of Saskatchewan saying the hon. gentleman did not speak for the government when he suggested the Crowsnest pass rates should be re-examined; he was only expressing a personal view. If the minister wants me to substantiate that statement, I can do so. So approximately two weeks ago the Prime Minister of Canada said the minister in charge of the Wheat Board did not speak for the government; that he was expressing just his personal murmurings.

Mr. Lang: He quoted me as saying that.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): He repudiated the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. The minister is very good at going around and around the mulberry bush, but it proves my point: the people of the west have no confidence in his honesty.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): On a point of order, Madam Speaker, it seems to me the hon. member's remarks are more concerned with the bill than with the amendment. I wonder if he will explain how his remarks refer to the amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The hon. member did mention when he was speaking on the bill and when he was speaking on the amendment.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I believe I have made my point. The subject matter of the bill should be referred to the committee, where a timetable can be set out enabling us to meet the farmers and have lots of opportunity to ask them what they think of these various matters—both the principle of the bill and the terms of the bill itself. The minister appears to have no doubt he can convince them that these provisions are clear and understandable. For my part, I do not think the minister is the right person to carry this bill to the farmers.

Those of us who would like to see the principle of stabilization of income put into effect realize that the confidence of farmers is needed before they are willing to put their money into any fund. We all know that the farmer is to put in 2 per cent, and that the government is to put in 4 per cent up to a certain maximum sum. But anyone who understands monetary and fiscal events of this country also knows that the government gets its money back, due to the multiplier effect.

So here is the farmer putting his money in. He does not wish to be overridden by a vast bureaucracy. If we read the speeches made during the course of this debate by members representing farm areas, one theme comes through clearly: they wonder why the bill was not brought in by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). After all, the Minister of Agriculture has been saying in a series of speeches over the past year or so that agriculture cannot be broken down; that it must be looked upon as a package. Here in the House is a minister whose primary portfolio has nothing to do with agriculture: he only holds the appointment as minister in charge of the Wheat Board because he comes from the west; westerners would be concerned if the board went out of the hands of a western minister. Here is a minister who is not content with reporting what the Wheat Board has done or omitted to do: he monkeys around with transportation due to the vacuum in the Department of Transportation at the present time; he monkeys around with all things concerning agriculture, such as the incomes of farmers, which are properly a matter for the Department of Agriculture. I would think he should support the suggestion coming from this side of the House that the bill be transferred to the Minister of Agriculture and his department, where it should have been in the first place.

Secondly, by transferring it to the Department of Agriculture we will take away that nagging suspicion that old-time farmers in the west have that the Liberal Party is going back to its old habit of attacking the Canadian Wheat Board. Those of us who know the long history of the Canadian Wheat Board remember the Wheat Board was set up in 1934 and 1935 and was attacked on a broad front between then and 1939. During that time four bills were introduced into this House designed to get rid of the Canadian Wheat Board. What saved the west from the governments' getting rid of the Wheat Board was the war. The government realized it was a device to control prices.

[Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi).]

Since the war we have had this whole varied record of the minister interfering with the Wheat Board. Mention has been made of the barley case, the LIFT program, and selling wheat below the cost of production, something that has been mentioned on several occasions previously in the House. Thus, there is this old suspicion in western Canada that you cannot trust the Liberals when it comes to the Canadian Wheat Board. If we could get the Wheat Board to look after the job it is supposed to do, which is to sell grain, instead of trying to run farming operations, as it tried to do partially under the LIFT program and as it is trying to do partially under this program, then the farmers would be a lot happier.

The final reason I would advance for arguing that this bill should go to committee before we decide on the principle is this. One of the major principles in the bill is that it is dealing with an industry. If the incomes of those in this industry in western Canada—the three prairies provinces, parts of B.C. and Ontario—drop, then under the formula those who participate in this plan will receive payment. We have had nearly 35 years experience of large-scale programs. The one example that is most strongly in our minds is PFAA. Under that program there had to be a crop failure in a big area before any farmer was compensated. In an area where some people had good crops but others had crop failures, the latter did not get any money because they were not in an area big enough to get paid. So every so often we had to reform these PFAA areas, or blocks as they called them, and set up smaller blocks. This gave great political power to those who made the decisions to do this. Thus, the farmers are very leery of any kind of government program which, firstly, tries to help improve their income and, secondly, tries to fiddle around by placing them within regional blocks.

Therefore, I ask the farmers these fundamental questions. Would they prefer to have this wide Canadian Wheat Board area as a basis for income adjustment? Would they prefer to have regions or blocks? Or thirdly, would they prefer some basis of individualims whereby they simply pay for individual protection and, based on their own success or failure, they receive payment if their income goes down? This is similar to insuring against loss due to weather, for example, under the crop insurance scheme. You could buy insurance to insure yourself against a drop in income. I suggest that these questions should not be decided by the House but should preferably be decided by the farmers who have to put up the money.

For the reasons I have given, I think the farmers should be asked these questions directly. At this stage I cannot accept the view of the minister. Neither can I accept the briefs of farm groups. I can sense their uncertainty and I am uncertain myself. Before we decide on questions like compulsion or voluntary entry, whole blocks or the individual approach, the question of the bureaucracy involved and the confidence that the farmers have in this minister and Minister of Agriculture, we should let the farmers decide.

I should like to see the bill sent to committee, not only on the question of its principle but on the question of its subject matter. Then we will be able to find out from the farmers who will be putting up money to make the scheme work. We should not ask this House to decide something that affects somebody else's business if we have the machinery, as we have, to determine their point of view.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Madam Speaker, I am very happy to participate in the debate on Bill C-41 and the amendment thereto. As the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) and others have said, this is a very important bill. It is an attempt to find out in which way the industry should go. This is an industry that is very heavily controlled by government, almost from the seeding stage of the crop until the final product is on the high seas, and this is one further government control that is going to be exercised by government which often has different views from the producers. Therefore, I think the bill should be studied very carefully so that its effect can be determined.

In recent years, as a result of technological advances we have been able to change our lifestyle, but this rather mundane problem of growing grain to feed the world's population has not been put into its proper perspective. Recent events have shown that a substantial proportion of the world's population was fairly close to starvation. While the immediacy of this situation has passed, it is almost certain that widespread famine in the world will occur.

Growing wheat or producing food is not an occupation that one might call job-satisfying or "doing your own thing". There seems to be a steady drift off the land, with manpower being replaced by large tractors, at least in the grain industry. At a time of very high unemployment in many parts of the economy, it is virtually impossible to hire competent agricultural workers in anything like adequate numbers. Although there has been an increase in the price of food products at the farm level, this is still not enough to maintain the present base of agricultural workers. Furthermore, there has been a steady feeling arising in the world that Canada, because of our large export possibilities in terms of grain, should somehow become a sort of international food factory that will dole out food to all of the world's needy, keeping them from starvation. Even the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is quoted as saying the following:

> Grain producers have the whole world in their hands. It is the moral responsibility of every country in the world to grow more grain. Not very many countries are as able as Canada to accept this challenge. So I want to see our producers plant more acres of each grain crop. This is urgent.

If that is what the Minister of Agriculture has in mind, the government has not really pointed the way. It may well be that this bill should be in the hands of the Minister of Agriculture rather than those of the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. There have been repeated demands that Canadian external food programs be increased substantially. It is interesting to note that most of the people who talk so grandly about feeding the world's hungry are themselves not connected with the agricultural industry. They assume that by merely turning a screw or two, western Canada will suddenly be able to produce large amounts of grain to feed the world. They are not being very realistic, because our capacity to produce greater quantities of grain seems to be strictly limited.

We in this country take great pains to complain about the export and using up of our non-renewable resources, and grandly assume that agricultural products represent a perennial renewable resource, always available when required. We have heard in western Canada and in other agricultural areas of the country the suggestion that we are exporting much of our agricultural fertility, particularly in the form of nitrogen. This nitrogen is being exported in the form of fertilizer to produce food. The natural alternative to fertilizer is in effect crop rotation, but this will also reduce the ability to produce grain for export.

This bill is presumably designed to fill out the hills and the valleys in respect of the quantity and the price of grain for export. Much has been written about Canadian agriculture, but in fact the grain industry is the only part of our agricultura industry that has significant export earnings. This industry is carried on far inland and is subject to the actions of many small groups who are involved in the transportation and handling of the grain from the farm to its destination across the ocean. Without grain, Canada would not have been much of a nation for the first part of this century, and it seems significant that grain provides the largest earnings of any industry in our export markets beyond the North American continent. This bill is significant if it will help to increase these exports.

Increasingly it seems to me that the western grain industry and the prairies are a part of the continental area of North America, and what happens in the United States is of much more concern to us than most Canadian nationalists would like us to believe. In fact, United States agriculturalists, along with Mr. Butz' programs, are advocating the removal of government restrictions that would prevent the free movement of agricultural products. In this bill we are erecting an additional form of government intervention in respect of the agricultural industry.

Then there are those who suggest that food can be used like oil as a means of bringing law and order into the world. I suggest that this is not possible. We are seeing the effects of this. When the price of oil rises too high, the world economy merely contracts. Similarly, in respect of food there will always be fluctuations in respect of production in the world. I think it is a truism to suggest that the world can only feed the population it has in its worst crop year. As the fluctuations in food production are substantial, this will act eventually as a brake on world population. It seems to me that for most of the time now and in the future, food production will be generally in a surplus position. This bill will presumably act as some sort of stabilizing force.

The grain industry in western Canada must guard against being used as a means of give-aways to support some sort of Canadian nationalism. The appointment of the new Deputy Minister of Agriculture with a strong connection to CIDA would seem to imply that Canadian grain may be used as a means of furthering our aims. Should we move in that direction to any great degree, it will almost certainly be detrimental to the farmers of western Canada who will grow most of the food that will be used for food aid programs. There will be a tendency to give food at the least possible cost to the national treasury should various groups feel that we should be altruistic, giving away large quantities of food. At the same time, the taxpayer will try to prevent that tremendous give-away of the taxpayers' money.

With the Canadian Wheat Board able to handle wheat and barley and exercise control in respect of flax and rapeseed, it is unfortunate, but true, that government agencies will be able to conceal how much grain is sold by government agencies and at what price. Indeed, the Wheat Board has to a large extent lost the ability of knowing to whom, and at what price, the product is being sold around the world. Perhaps the circumstances surrounding the recent plebiscite respecting the advisory group to the Wheat Board will have some benefit is this area.

This bill in itself does nothing to solve the main problems facing the grain industry today. It will not in any way help the grain transportation system or the grain handling system. We have witnessed in our transportation system, since the last election, the great vulnerability in respect of the grain industry to work stoppages by a relatively few people involved in small unions and key transportation positions in the movement of grain. It would be nice to think that the movement of grain will continue without interruption after the rash of strikes we have experienced.

Parliament has put the grain handlers in Vancouver back to work and has legislated in respect of the longshoremen's strike. The problems in Vancouver could have been foreseen and handled in a better and easier way. Even at the present time the longshoremen in Montreal are not returning to work, and the export movement of western grain, while not being stopped completely is being slowed down substantially. At the moment there are only three or four berths available for ships at the St. Lawrence ports which are working, while eight or ten berths in Montreal are standing vacant, resulting in ten or twelve ships waiting in the Gulf. Almost certainly, the port of Montreal will gradually lose its ability to export grain and in time other avenues must be opened for that export segment of our Canadian grain industry. This bill in itself will not help the situation and in fact will probably hinder it. The obvious answer is to open other channels for export, perhaps through Portland, Oregon, or perhaps by expansion of the facilities at Churchill. Only by extending the avenues of export as widely as possible can the western producer of grain be assured of alternative export channels.

Turning again to transportation problems, this bill does nothing about branch line abandonment, and there is a great debate taking place in this regard. I might say that the minister in charge of the Wheat Board has the whole rural country upset because of an assumption that half the railway lines are to be phased out next year. I think this has caused unnecessary consternation on the part of many people in the prairies. There is a possibility that many branch lines on the prairies will be phased out. This will result in the necessity of trucking more grain over longer distances. Experience on the great plains of the United States would seem to indicate that the economical trucking of grain for much longer distances than we have been used to is both practical and feasible.

[Mr. Ritchie.]

This bill will be administered to a large extent by the Wheat Board. The Wheat Board has the records of the individual farmers, and it is on this basis that presumably payment will be made. By and large, the Wheat Board has been a faithful servant of the producers, even though at times it has been heavily influenced by political decisions of the government. In my opinion, the Wheat Board has been giving false clues as to the grain outlook for the coming year. While the price of wheat at Chicago hovered around the $3.50 mark, the Wheat Board consistently held the price at $5 from January to April. Presumably, the Chicago price reflects the thinking of traders as to what the price should be, and while this may not be necessarily right it seems to be a good barometer.

While the Wheat Board held the price at $5 there was protest that as grain stocks around the world were low, the price of wheat should be higher. Only the other day was the price dropped by 54 cents to $4.46 by the Wheat Board so that we might compete with the United States in respect of the sale of wheat to Japan. The price of wheat quoted by the Wheat Board has great influence on the plans of farmers for the coming year. No doubt the Wheat Board was not able to offer much grain between January and April, so they left the rate high in order to discourage anyone from asking for a quotation. I believe such actions of the Wheat Board are a disservice to the farmer who attempts to plan his production for the coming year.

Turning to the bill and the manner in which it will help the grain industry, there are many unanswered questions. It seems desirable that there should be some form of support for the grain industry, but the manner in which this should be applied brings out the great complexity of such a program. This bill is no exception. The complexity, essentially, is caused by the nature and structure of the industry. There are approximately 175,000 permit holders and we would hope that number would remain the same or increase. An enormous number of individuals are involved. Some of these are large operators who have up to thousands or acres, while many others are much smaller.

Again, the situation is complicated by the fact that the five principal grains involved are grown in different quantities in different regions of the prairies. For instance, in my riding of Dauphin, flax and rapeseed would make up a substantial portion of the individual sales of farmers, much more relatively than would be the case in southern Saskatchewan. The mechanism that would trigger off the payment to producers is to be almost wholly dependent on production and sale of wheat. If the wheat crop should be poor or the sales low, then a pay-out would be made. I believe to a large extent the bill will be most beneficial to the wheat farmers of the prairies, the largest proportion of whom are in Saskatchewan.

The failure of the bill to provide for a regional pay-out seems to be a very great weakness. Without having a regional feature, the bill will not very effectively serve the needs of the province of Manitoba. An analysis of the amounts of money involved would show that the bill will not be very expensive so far as the federal treasury is concerned. Inflation will almost certainly continue, so the pay-out will always remain less onerous than it would be had the calculations been made in constant dollars.

In most years there will be no pay-out, so the 2 per cent collected from the producers will go to the bank to be used by the government in financing its spending. The federal government will not have to put any money in the bank; it will merely deposit IOUs. Even in the years of pay-out, the government will still be collecting its 2 per cent. I doubt, unless there should be a very severe depression in the industry even worse than in 1968-69, that there will be any call on the federal treasury. Indeed, I am quite sure the federal government will not have to put any money at all into the fund. Again, when pay-outs are made they will be made on a blanket basis. If a crop failure should trigger the pay-out at a time when farmers who sell, for instance, rapeseed or flax are able to sell at good prices when wheat prices are reduced, the government will recover much of the pay-out in income tax and in fact the pay-out will largely be a bookkeeping item.

It seems to me that the legislation makes no allowance for regional pay-outs, and because of the variables in respect of production and sale of the five main grains and oilseeds involved there will be limited ability to help the whole industry. The whole grain industry is now being sheltered so much by governments and government bodies that it is in danger of losing its perspective. I think it is significant that the attempt to place rapeseed and flax under the Wheat Board was defeated by the growers. Individual farmers are largely being placed in a position where the only decision open to them is the number of acres of various crops they will seed. The sales the Wheat Board makes and the prices it sets, when they are made public, are so general that the producer is not able to gain any perspective in respect of the market situation.

The necessity to have quotas is also a deterrent to efficient maximization with regard to the production of grain. There does not seem to be any way around the quota situation. I do not see how the bill is helpful along these lines. One provision in the bill I would strongly support is that which provides that the individual producer should have a voluntary choice. I think a substantial number of producers will find that they wish to operate outside this support program. If some producers should choose to operate outside this support program, they certainly should have that opportunity. I also believe that some farmers who are new entrants to the industry will perhaps not wish to participate.

It is obvious that no support program is superior to good management. This bill is so complex that highly competent people in some cases have difficulty understanding the effect the bill might have. It seems likely that no one can reasonably forecast how the bill will function, when put into operation, with regard to many of its aspects. Having this in mind, I believe the bill deserves very careful study in committee both in respect of its possible ramifications and in order to ascertain whether or not it can be improved.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, I should like to recite some of the reasons I feel that prior to proceeding with this bill in the normal fashion, the grain farmers of western Canada who are specifically involved in the bill should be provided with an opportunity to receive answers to obvious questions. I have a list of at least 21 questions I should like to raise in the course of my remarks, to—I hope—illustrate the need for the committee to travel, and to illustrate that until now many questions have not been answered by the minister, regardless of the time that has elapsed, and to illustrate that even though the bill has been reintroduced in a revised form there perhaps is still room for improvement.

I think that when the minister reflects upon what happened with regard to the previous bill he will realize that the farmers are not gullible. When he offered them $100 million in exchange for a release from obligations under the provisions of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. They turned that offer down. Farmers cannot be bought with a bribe of that sort, and they are capable of understanding and of providing suggestions for improvement that even the minister will agree are beneficial. The first and foremost reason the committee must travel is that farmers in western Canada do not trust the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang). They know of his involvement in other areas that affect their lives, and they are always leery, no matter how good an idea might be, that at the back of it there might be something about which they have not been told.

The Minister of Justice, as everyone would agree, works hard and is involved in every aspect of agriculture that might affect the western farmer. Yet one wonders why he has that reputation. It is not because of the type of speech that I or other hon. members usually make, nor is it because of the comments that radio commentators usually make; but it is said that after the minister is through with western farmers, they stand to lose at every turn. When the original western stabilization bill was first proposed, the offer of $100 million, which at that moment seemed to be an exciting offer, was turned down. Since then we have managed to save $130 million for the western farmer through the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act.

Let us look at the controversy over the Crowsnest pass agreement and at the comment the minister made on his travels across the country. He made his statement, having formulated a plan, and then told the farmers that he was just testing the waters, that it was his own personal idea. Then there was an exchange between the Premier of Saskatchewan and the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau). Western Canadian farmers want to know why the possibility of doing away with the agreement is even being discussed, and why the minister has taken upon himself the mission of informing western Canadians that this might come about. They are leery because they know how involved and how obstinate this minister can be when it comes to bending from a fixed position.

Even though the Prime Minister has sent a telegram to the Premier of Saskatchewan stating that provided that is what western farmers want, there will be no tampering with the Crowsnest pass agreement. Western farmers feel that there is equivocation there and there is no real assurance that the agreement will not be tampered with. When the minister is involved, these people are deadly afraid of the results. When the minister goes out and tells them that the government will not remove the rail lines, while in actual fact all the plans are in place—according to a speech he made four or five years ago—to have the terminals set up in certain locations and all systems are "go" except for the formal ratification and approval of parliament, it is small wonder that these people are leery and suspicious of the minister.

They wonder why the minister is involved in this program. The question comes to their mind: why is this minister responsible for introducing a western grain stabilization program; why are grain commodities not under the Minister of Agriculture? Perhaps it is too complicated a matter and perhaps the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) does not understand agriculture, so the Minister of Justice, an intellectual and professor of law who understands agriculture better, will deal with that aspect of the industry. Be that as it may, it was the decision of the Prime Minister to put him in charge of that aspect of agriculture.

But having put him in charge of the Wheat Board, one wonders what other responsibilities the minister has for farmers' incomes. This could easily be handled by the Minister of Agriculture. All that has to be done is that the Minister of Justice step down. But no, this man is ambitious, and such men are dangerous. To quote Shakespeare: "Yon Cassius has a lean and hungry look". When one realizes he is a minister of transport, Minister of Justice and the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, as well as a roving ambassador, people wonder why. They would not be so leery if everything were in their favour. But in the end it always amounts to one thing, that the western farmer finally gets it in the end.

An hon. Member: Which end?

Mr. Korchinski: This is what they are concerned about. What I have tried to indicate is that western farmers do not trust the minister. I should like to quote from an article which appeared in the Western Producer, entitled, "Not fully sold on income plan". It reads:

The federal government has not completely "sold" farmer organizations on its income stabilization plan.

One realizes that despite several years of participation, involvement and discussions that have been going on, these farm organizations are leery, never mind the individual farmer. Farm organizations have collectively decided to be careful of the consequences whenever the Minister of Justice makes a move because there is bound to be something of which they should be suspicious. I think that what I have said will illustrate to the House and to the minister why we should not even proceed with the principle of the bill at this time. First, these questions must be answered. I understand that we must break now for private members' hour, but when I resume my comments tonight I will list the 20 questions that I have prepared for this occasion.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche)—External Affairs—Government action to restructure relations with developing countries; the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon)—Manpower—Opportunities for Youth Program—Proposed control of grants on a constituency basis; the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke)—Post Office—Alleged lack of authority for sale of non-postal items—Government position.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

Mr. Herbert: Madam Speaker, I regret the necessity of having to rise again today on the same point that I have raised before. I thought the matter was well covered last Friday. However, reference to page 43 of the order paper will indicate an error in that it shows that the first five items were passed by unanimous consent, whereas on page 5438 of Hansard it is clearly indicated that these motions were allowed to stand at the request of the government.

● (1700)

I do not wish to see the procedure followed every time whereby all these motions have to be listed, and if the government is again going to request that the motions preceding the one which is to be debated today are to remain on the order paper, I do not want to have them read out. I had to rise today because the reprint of the order paper does not come about until Friday, and unless I rose today they could again be printed as if there had been unanimous consent, and certainly on my part there is no unanimity to let these items remain on the order paper if hon. members do not wish to proceed with them.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): As the hon. member has stated, there are several errors on today's order paper. At page 43 under notices of motions Nos. 2, 15, 19 and 20 it is indicated that these items were allowed to stand "by unanimous consent." The notation in each case should have read "at the request of the government." The changes will be made at the first opportunity.

Mr. Reid: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, there has been discussion through the usual channels and I believe there will be consent to take the motion standing in the name of the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz), notice of motion No. 28.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is it agreed that, at the request of the government, items Nos. 2, 15, 19 and 20 be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

INCOME TAX

SUGGESTION RESIDENTIAL TAXES AND RENTAL PAYMENTS BE DEDUCTIBLE UP TO MAXIMUM OF $300 PER YEAR

Hon. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should give consideration to the feasibility of allowing residential taxes on owner-occupied homes and rental payments of accommodation by tenants to be deductible from federal personal income tax up to a maximum allowable of $300 each year.

He said: Madam Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Haidasz: I am glad that there is so much support—

An hon. Member: On this side, not on that side.

Mr. Haidasz: —at least in certain parts of this House, for the motion I wish to present this afternoon. I am reintroducing this motion in this session and in this way I hope once again to bring to the attention of the federal government and to impress upon the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) the urgent need to alleviate the heavy and intolerable burden on the Canadian taxpayer, who is not only heavily taxed but in many cases is a victim of double taxation. The motion today, calling for at least the amount of $300 as a deductible expense from federal personal taxable income for municipal taxpayers of owner-occupied homes, and for tenants renting accommodation in rooming houses and apartment buildings, as some hon. members have said is not asking for much; it is a very reasonable request.

We all know how fundamental the provision of shelter is for basic existence, and we are also aware of the difficulty today of supplying adequate housing and providing the many services expected and demanded by people in our affluent society, especially in urban and industrialized regions. No level of government acting alone can hope to be successful in meeting all these needs and demands. That is why all levels of government must be involved in this venture and co-operate more than they have to this date. As the federal government's involvement in municipal affairs is very limited by the provisions of the BNA Act, provincial governments are mostly responsible for education, municipal land use, local economic planning and other services.

Unfortunately, not all provincial governments have as yet developed satisfactory policies and programs to ease the financial burden of municipalities. As a result, municipal governments have to tax property owners to raise money for the provision of more and more services which are becoming costlier by the year. What is unjust about this property tax is that many services provided by municipalities—education, for example—bear little relationship to the value of one's property holdings. Furthermore, a property tax in isolation cannot meet the principle of ability to pay and there is no precise relationship between property ownership and the ability to pay. An elderly couple, for example, has no great capacity to pay taxes by virtue of owning property. Therefore, property taxes are considered regressive, inflexible, inequitable and bear heavily upon those who can least afford them.

Furthermore, the person paying municipal property taxes is a victim of double taxation. Several countries, including the United States, prevent this kind of injustice by allowing property taxes, mortgage interest payments and other expenses as items deductible from personal income tax. On the other hand, Canadian taxation laws allow businessmen to deduct real estate taxes and operating expenses from income tax. In our present economic crisis, I believe it is urgent that the federal government, and especially the Minister of Finance, bring in policies to reduce unemployment, control cost of living expenses and cut taxes.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I hope they listen to you.

Mr. Haidasz: Thank you. Any measures encouraging the construction and purchases of homes and apartments will increase jobs and provide a healthy stimulus to the economy. Almost daily we read in the newspapers announcements and predictions that mill rates, hydroelectric rates, water rates and heating costs will be rising this year almost to intolerable levels. These developments are tragic, especially to people on low incomes as well as to senior citizens on fixed retirement incomes. Renters of accommodation in rooming houses and apartment buildings will also face higher rents because of increased taxes and operating costs. These problems have frequently been brought to the attention of various levels of government and recently by the Federation of Mayors and Municipalities. Members of this federation expressed great dissatisfaction with the senior levels of government for not giving municipalities sufficient assistance.

The rumblings of discontent are growing louder each day in all sectors of Canadian society faced with the rising costs of keeping a home, and heavy taxation. That is why it is imperative that the Minister of Finance give this matter serious attention in his next budget. The federal government has already recognized basic tax relief for marital status, dependants, donations to charity, moving expenses and job related expenses, and it is high time that it recognized the need to grant Canadians a basic tax deduction for shelter.

I believe that the support and acceptance of my motion this afternoon will help ease the heavy load of taxation which is now a crushing burden on many Canadians. I make this motion as a matter of urgent importance, in a spirit of co-operation and with the serious intention of trying to help solve the problem of property taxes, which is an inequitable, inflexible and regressive form of taxation burdening municipal taxpayers.

Residential Taxes

● (1710)

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise to support this private member's motion to allow residential taxes and rental payments to be deductible from income taxes, put forward by my colleague the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz). This measure is long overdue and it is one that I have personally advocated for some time. I strongly support the principle that a proportion of municipal property taxes should be deductible from federal income taxes and that comparable tax relief should be extended to tenants.

The Canadian family's dream of owning a single family dwelling is fading faster than ever. Housing costs have soared in the past few years at rates that were thought inconceivable a few years earlier. The cost of borrowing money is prohibitive. Whether the housing crisis is one of shortage or price is of little consequence to the average Canadian taxpayer who must be making at least $17,000 annually to even obtain a mortgage before he is able to consider purchasing a home; otherwise, he is forced to live in an apartment or row housing.

Approximately 70 per cent of Canadians want to own a single family dwelling on a decent sized lot. Today, in Canadian cities, less than 5 per cent of the population can afford to buy a home and many of these must pay up to half their income in mortgage payments. When one knows of such situations it is very easy to understand why this motion should be accepted. Another reason apart from helping prospective and recent home buyers is the astronomical municipal tax rate in many cities. The people in Winnipeg are a classic example of this. Since unicity was forced on them, the municipal rates have risen in unprecedented jumps. These people are in urgent need of some tax relief.

There are more reasons for this motion being accepted. Every Canadian should, as a right, be able to obtain and live in suitable, reasonable-cost housing with the amenities of landscape. Within the natural constraints of geography and necessary economic and social limitations, the aim of government policy should be to generate sufficient housing stock of various forms so that all Canadians may exercise their freedom of choice as to the style and tenure of housing in which they live.

Canada's extremely high inflation rate of the last half decade has been a main instigator of the present price crisis. The government continues to blame inflation on other countries, but in the housing sector that just will not wash because in most houses presently being built there is nothing imported other than the thermostat control. This excuse is even less plausible than in the other sectors of the economy. The government owes some relief to the people hard hit by these price rises.

The motion before us would not only help alleviate the plight of new home buyers but present home owners as well, people who are being taxed to death by all levels of government. I cannot express too strongly, Madam Speaker, the necessity for this motion to be accepted by the House so that the government is steered into taking some definitive action toward clearing up this very serious situation.

[Mr. Haidasz.]

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Madam Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to the arguments advanced by my colleague the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz) who introduced this motion, and also the hon. member opposite who just spoke. The motion is something of an old chesnut. It usually takes the form of allowing deductions for interest payments on mortgages—that is not included in this motion—or tax payments to municipalities, usually with the aim of encouraging home ownership. There are two objections that have traditionally been raised against this kind of motion. One, that it discriminates in favour of the higher income groups, so my colleague has put a ceiling of $300 on the claim. The second objection is that it does not do much for those who rent, so he has allowed an equivalent, offsetting deduction for tenants.

I have the greatest respect for my hon. colleague, Madam Speaker, but it is my contention that by introducing these qualifications he has failed to ask himself the basic question. What is he trying to do by the motion? In my opinion, the motion fails to achieve the basic purpose that he has in mind. Two basic principles were put forward by the two previous speakers. One was that it will encourage home ownership—I want to come back to that—by making the deduction available to every taxpayer who qualifies, regardless whether they rent or own a home. I fail to see that it gives any incentive whatsoever to home ownership. It considers tenants and owners on the same basis for tax deduction purposes.

When we talk about tax relief, let us look at the principle behind it and ask if this is the best means of giving such relief. It is my contention that there are more fair and more equitable means of doing so and I think they should be considered in priority to the motion before us.

Let us return to the first proposition, that it will encourage home ownership. The Department of Finance has indicated that something like $1,800 million would be lost to the treasury if such motions were implemented for the current tax year. If such a sum of money were to be lost to the government in revenues, there would inevitably have to be adjustments in taxes in other sectors.

Let us ask ourselves the basic question: what do we hope to achieve by the measure? The argument is that it will encourage home ownership. Let us consider that in relation to the present tax laws, taking taxpayer A and taxpayer B for comparison. Taxpayer A puts $40,000 into stocks and bonds and trust income; taxpayer B puts $40,000 into a home and leaves it there. Taxpayer A has to report the income on his investments of, say, 10 per cent per year and so has to include $4,000 per year in his taxable income. The owner of the home, taxpayer B, does not have to compute the economic rent of living in the home in his income. Our tax laws do not call for that, although the tax laws of some other countries such as the United Kingdom, do.

The second advantage that the owner of a house has under our present tax laws is freedom from capital gains tax on disposal of his principal place of residence, and that is a substantial advantage. The owner of investments does not have such an advantage when disposing of them, but is subject to the full capital gains tax. It is my contention that if the federal government wanted to go into the business of encouraging home ownership, the most productive, the most forthright, the most satisfactory means of doing so are those positive measures considered in recent budgets. I am thinking, for example, of the CMHC budget going up over $1 billion in the current year, the Assisted Home Ownership Program which is now restricted to new construction, thus encouraging construction of new homes, and the $500 grant toward the purchase of a new house.

Mr. Alexander: That is a great deal!

Mr. Francis: Hon. members opposite can make derogatory remarks about those measures, but it is up to them to propose alternatives. I am thinking, also, of the measures the Minister of Finance introduced to encourage savings through the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan. This is a positive feature, putting savings, in the form of a tax deduction, in the hands of those who need to buy a home. Hon. members opposite can be skeptical. I am not prepared to say that this is the best of all worlds, but these measures will do more to encourage home ownership than the resolution before us, in my opinion.

The budget for 1973 introduced a principle which I think will achieve a great deal. In that budget, new grants on account of municipal taxes imposed for local school purposes were subject to an equalization system. The measures cost about $190 million in the current fiscal year. When I hear hon. members talk about the burden of property taxes, I can agree with them, but they must admit that those taxes vary from one province to another. In the province of Alberta the problem is not as serious as in Manitoba or Ontario. The measure before us would make all provinces alike; it is not selective.

You cannot just talk about those provinces where the incidence of property tax is higher, argue for a general measure across the board and hope to achieve the same results. I heard hon. members on the other side talk about how regressive property taxes were for people with lower incomes, and older people.

Mr. Alexander: That was on your side.

Mr. Paproski: The hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz) said it.

Mr. Francis: All right; I am glad I have persuaded hon. members. You have to look at what is happening under the present budget. Under the budget proposals at the end of last year, a married wage earner with two children under 16 would pay no federal income tax in 1975 on income up to $5,871. He would need to have an income in excess of $7,414 to get the maximum benefit of $300. There are a lot of people in this country who, unfortunately, are not going to qualify for that benefit.

Let us look at the position with regard to a senior citizen. Let us look at the various exemptions available to an older couple, both over 65 and retired. There is the interest and dividend deduction, the pension deduction and the tax cut. It has been calculated they could receive up to $8,258 in income in 1975 before becoming liable for federal tax. The hon. member's motion would not give one penny of relief to an older couple with income under $8,258 in such circumstances. You can talk about regressive taxes all you want, but I suggest this motion would be most regressive for senior citizens living on retirement incomes. Only a very small proportion of people who are retired have incomes in such brackets that they would qualify for any relief whatsoever under the hon. member's motion.

Mr. Alexander: Thanks to this government.

Mr. Francis: I am proud the government has introduced that degree of exemption under our income tax law. The motion fails to give the best priority in terms of tax reduction. If the objective is tax reduction, increase the basic exemption. Let us give across the board deductions, because they help people in lower brackets even more than an increased exemption. Let us consider the priorities that are available. Let us put more money into subsidized housing. Let us give the provinces more money for land assembly. Let us put our money into positive measures to encourage home construction and a reduction in home costs.

The hon. member did not refer to the impact of his resolution on those living under subsidized programs such as rent to income. I predict that the provincial authorities would quickly adjust charges to compensate for any possible gain which would accrue to these people as a result of such a resolution being adopted. For those living under plans in the province of Ontario such as Home Ownership Made Easy, I raise the question whether it is really a fair and equitable proposal to add the tax deduction on top of the other subsidies made available to those fortunate enough to qualify under such programs.

It is my belief that this measure would not do anything to encourage new construction of houses. It would not do anything compared to other measures that could be considered by way of the fairest, most equitable and appropriate forms of tax relief.

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, the remarks of the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) indicate once again the lack of comprehension increasingly apparent on that side of the House concerning the magnitude of the housing crisis confronting this country. I have been most interested in the proposal put forward by the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz). I hope that the members of his own party have been equally attentive, particularly the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner).

Obviously, the hon. member for Parkdale is concerned with the high cost of shelter in this country, and well he might be. The cost of new housing is well beyond the capability of all but a very minute per cent of the Canadian public. The cost of existing housing for the majority of Canadians is eating up far more than the 25 per cent of total income considered appropriate by the Canadian Council on Social Development and by CMHC in their guidelines for AHOP eligibility. It cannot be reiterated too often that the residential construction industry is in a critical situation. Housing starts have fallen by 50 per cent from a year ago, down to some 160,000 projected annually. Mortgage rates are zooming toward new highs, currently at 11 per cent and estimated to continue rising. Mortgage funds, particularly with the trust companies, have all but dried up.

Lenders have stopped lending. Builders have stopped building. Buyers have stopped buying. Meanwhile, the formation of new household units continues at an annual rate of 230,000. Therefore, we have looming before us a desperate situation in the housing field. Family units are increasing, housing starts are dropping. The shortage of accommodation becomes ever more critical. What social problems and unrest that presages! The proposal we have before us, while laudable, will do little to alleviate this situation. The deduction of property taxes or rental payments to a maximum of $300 for income tax purposes will do little to stimulate the badly sagging residential construction industry. Such measures will have little effect on the desperate housing shortage. They will, of course, have no bearing at all on the high cost of land or the high cost of money, two of the principal factors in the present crisis.

The government seems intent on allowing interest rates in general and mortgage rates in particular to rise, and this at a time when its stated intention is to stimulate the economy. The Bank of Canada is following this very formula at the present time. Obviously, rising interest rates will have the effect of dampening, not stimulating, the economy. These contradictory objectives are typical of the confused fiscal policies now being put forward by this government, and nowhere is this more apparent than in the field of housing. Will the government not see its way clear to giving the taxpayer some relief by allowing at least a proportion of the current high interest mortgage costs as a deduction for income tax purposes? That at least would serve to bring interests rates down.

During the election campaign last year, my leader put forward a proposal to bring down interest rates by controlling inflation, but persons who have taken on mortgages at these excessive rates will continue to suffer for some years to come. In order to alleviate at least in part the harsh impact of these high interest rates on home owners, we propose to permit taxpayers to deduct interest in excess of 8 per cent on a first mortgage on their principal residence. This was the approximate rate in effect when Mr. Trudeau first began to mismanage the economy.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Order!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The hon. member is not allowed to refer to any member by name; she must refer to the constituency or to the office.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): I am sure hon. members will know to whom I refer.

An hon. Member: That is not the point. It is against the rules.

Mrs. Appolloni: He has a name. He is the Prime Minister.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Will the government not see its way clear to set up—

Some hon. Members: Order.

[Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands).]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): If hon. members wish to participate in the debate on this motion they will be allowed to do so.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: Notice in what direction the Speaker is looking.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Will the government not see its way clear to setting up the Federal Mortgage Exchange Corporation which was designed to provide a secondary mortgage market, one which would undoubtedly help attract mortgage investment into residential mortgages, particularly when the existence of such a market is obviously of such importance to the AHOP program? I find it incomprehensible that this corporation should have languished on the statute books for over a year and a half, particularly when the minister's predecessor gave the House to understand that its enactment would cure all the ills of the mortgage market. Will the government not see its way clear to lessen its recent heavy demands on the less-than-healthy Canadian capital markets, and moderate federal government borrowing so that more money may be freed for mortgage investment?

These are several steps which the government could implement immediately to alleviate the mounting housing crisis, a crisis which is reverberating through every sector of the economy. The government must recognize the magnitude and the extent of the housing emergency which now confronts us. The proposal before us, while a modest step in the right direction, is not the answer to the great burden which hundreds of thousands of Canadians are struggling to shoulder in the housing sector.

Mr. A. C. Abbott (Mississauga): Madam Speaker, it might be appropriate for us to return to the motion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Abbott: I recognize that the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) has a number of things she would like to tell the House and the country at large.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Housing is a crucial one.

Mr. Abbott: Housing, as the hon. lady points out, is indeed a crucial subject. She appeared to begin her remarks by applauding the suggestion of the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz). In the end she submerged it beneath a great deal of verbiage about her own views on the housing industry. She scarcely referred at all to the hon. member's submission. I suppose it would be open to any of us who wished to proceed upon similar lines to do so. I suppose I could even read a magazine article from Weekend.

Mr. Alexander: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, I have been sitting here, waiting patiently for the hon. member to say something about the motion of the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz). I hope that sooner or later—preferably sooner—he will address himself to the motion so that we may have some idea of what he thinks about it.

Mr. Abbott: Madam Speaker, I have barely cleared my throat.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Abbott: The hon. member is suggesting to the House that I have been belabouring a variety of issues. Wait until I get to the motion. I was simply beginning my speech by admonishing the previous speaker for taking up so much time with her own pet theories on the housing industry and spending so little time on the principle raised by the hon. member for Parkdale. Of course, the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) raises—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Don't spoil our Weekend Magazine.

Mr. Abbott: I can assure hon. members that, notwithstanding earlier comments, I shall not read anything from Weekend Magazine, whether a certain hon. member is now gripping the country or not. I know the hon. member opposite feels very strongly about housing. I know she has many ideas she would like to express on the subject. But I believe it is important to deal with the question raised by the hon. member for Parkdale.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Abbott: Essentially, this is a taxation matter, not essentially one to stimulate the housing market. It is on this ground that the suggestion lacks merit. The hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) has set out in perceptive detail the difficulties which would flow from the suggestion put forward by the hon. member for Parkdale. The broad nature of the taxing proposal is such that it would bring no benefit whatever to those in the lower income brackets, while benefitting to an appreciable extent those in the higher income brackets about whom the hon. lady is probably less concerned.

The fact is that a tax-free investment such as a home can represent, in the hands of a person in the higher income tax brackets enjoying a maximum of a $300 deduction from his or her income tax, would be an appreciable advantage as compared to, say, a pensioner living in a home he owns and having no taxable income and not enjoying a similar benefit.

The cost of the program is estimated as being in the area of $1.8 billion a year. We would either have to find this money elsewhere out of the taxpayers' pockets or reduce programs in other directions, possibly in directions which are already stimulating the housing market. So, on the taxation principle that we do not provide a taxpayer with a deduction in respect of personal expenses, the measure would fall on this point alone.

As to a person living in rental accommodation, there are a variety of provincial schemes which endeavour to provide low rental accommodation for people with moderate incomes. These programs would be distorted if a further reduction for rental were permitted on whatever tax these people might have to pay. So the various objectives do not, in my judgment, go to the question of attempting to resolve the problem created by the heavy burden of taxation being felt by everyone due to the large amount of governing being done in this country.

With regard to the fact that there is no provision for integrating taxation to the level I should like to see, I suggest it would be far better to have a system under the Income Tax Act to take better note of mortgage interest and municipal taxes, embodying them at the income tax level so that people could have their taxes reduced by having their exemption raised. By this method the government could raise personal exemptions to benefit those who were not in the high income tax brackets.

I think it is really with respect to the nature of the solution offered by the hon. member for Parkdale that the only criticism lies, not in his objective. It is directed to the inequity of the benefit, to the fact that only those in the higher income tax brackets would benefit. I know there are a variety of stimulative measures that the government has already taken in previous budgets in an endeavour to keep the housing industry at a high level of activity, and particularly in these days to increase housing starts. But I suggest more needs to be done.

I hope that in his forthcoming budget the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) will take note of these needs, and will endeavour to provide stimulative measures to revive the housing industry, an industry that is so important to the economy and which benefits all levels of income earners in Canada. In conclusion, may I simply say it is not the objectives of the hon. member's suggestion with which I quarrel; rather it is with his method.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Madam Speaker, in the twenty-ninth parliament a member of the Social Credit party moved a motion on a Friday afternoon in private members' hour that had an objective similar to the motion moved today by the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz). At that time the hon. member who moved the motion was the only member of his party present in the House, and I rose to second it in order that the very important subject matter could be brought before the House at least for discussion.

The hon. member for Parkdale, a member of the Liberal party, has moved a motion today which we are now debating. I think he is a man of some considerable compassion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): He is a member whose motion ought to be accepted by this House. Normally I do not take issue with the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis). He and I are neighbours. In terms of these questions I think our differences are very small. I do not take issue with him now except to say that I believe his views on this motion are somewhat restrictive, having regard to the terms of the motion.

The hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Abbott) talked about the possible discriminatory effects that there might be if this motion were to be adopted in that only those in the higher brackets would benefit. He then said this would cost approximately $1,800 million a year. That may well be a conservative figure in view of the inflation which is running rampant today and which the government, supported by the hon. member's party, has done nothing to control. I suggest that if the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) can say, as he did, that he is only wasting $10 million a year on investigating an aircraft program, then surely to goodness we can consider a program of this nature.

As for the contention of the hon. member for Mississauga that his suggestion would distort rental programs, I think this is a very real concern. But I do not think that the ingenuity of the government has been taxed regarding an examination of this distortion. When such things are proposed I am amazed at the absorptive capacity of the government.

A few years ago the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) suggested the indexing of personal income tax. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), in that famous speech which he made at Truro, said it could not be done. Then followed a retreat from Truro that is rivalled only by Napoleon's retreat from Moscow. All of a sudden this proposal was adopted.

Mr. Francis: Would the hon. member permit a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Would the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton allow a question?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Madam Speaker, if I may, I will give him time at the end of my remarks.

Then during the last federal election an incomes policy was perhaps the worst possible thing that could happen to Canada, according to the Minister of Finance, who is also my neighbour, and according to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). But what did we see in the Toronto Star today, and what is going to be in the Ottawa Journal tomorrow? The beginnings of an incomes policy. It is another retreat, perhaps a retreat that is too late.

It is the easiest thing in the world to put stumbling blocks in the way of the motion proposed by the hon. member for Parkdale. There are administrative difficulties, indeed all kinds of difficulties. But the important thing in this private members' hour is for the House to recognize that the hon. member for Parkdale has not asked that we enact a piece of legislation. All he asks the government—and compassion is supposed to be in the breasts of all members in this House—is to give consideration to the feasibility of his suggestion.

Surely to heaven we have not yet reached the day when members of the government should turn back the terms of a motion of this sort. I am satisfied that if this proposal is not contained in the minister's next budget, this proposal, with others that have been advanced by members on all sides of the House, will eventually become government policy in some form or another.

I think it is wise, Madam Speaker, that we recognize two things. Of course it is difficult to buy a home. But that is not the issue here, and I do not think the hon. member for Parkdale meant it to be the issue. It is becoming increasingly difficult for many people to keep up a home. Although many old age pensioners do not own a home, we all know the problems of those who do. Tenants are facing rising rentals each time renewal of their leases becomes due. There are escalator clauses in leases the likes of which we never saw before—lawyers' dreams! This is what the hon. member for Parkdale had in mind in moving his motion.

There are a lot of things that perhaps the government can learn from the private members of this House. The hon. member for Parkdale has become a private member, and he is a very proud private member, and a very good private member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I think it behooves his colleagues who are private members, some of them good private members, to ask the government to give this motion consideration. Let us examine its feasibility in the open manner which approval of the resolution would mean. I think it is important that we not lose sight of the difficulties some of our people are facing, especially since we have had certain difficulties of our own looked after recently.

● (1750)

I think we ought to give a sober second thought to the possibility of rejecting this motion, for there seems to be some feeling that it is going to be rejected or talked out. I hope that will not happen because I think this motion was brought forward in the best of faith by the hon. member for Parkdale. I want to commend him for it, and I support him. I know he has the support of members on this side of the House in respect of the principle he is trying to advance.

Mr. Francis: Madam Speaker, when I was speaking earlier I attributed views to hon. members on the other side in support of the motion. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) interjected, and I gathered he felt I was imputing something unfair. I would ask that hon. member now whether he spoke in favour of the motion or against it?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I did not think my speech would put the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) to sleep. I want to assure him that I was speaking in favour of the motion.

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Madam Speaker, in the time remaining I want to be identified as supporting the worthwhile suggestion contained in the motion of the member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz). This involves a very worthy exemption that should have been granted years ago in this country. I commend the hon. member for this worthwhile suggestion. Why should we not have an exemption and deductibility in respect of expenses which are basic to our living expenses?

This motion would also help the municipal tax system because it gives us an incentive to pay our taxes promptly in order to obtain the exemption, because unpaid taxes or taxes in arrears would not earn the federal exemption.

If the government will not allow this motion to pass today I predict that it will bring in a similar motion in the near future. Perhaps this principle will be brought in as part of the next budget, and I hope that it is included.

There are some strange parallels in this House. Today we have the Liberal backbench section talking out the worthy motion put forward by the hon. member for Parkdale. The point I want to make is that only last week during a private members' hour the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) put forward another very worthy bill in respect of gasoline marketing that would have assisted millions of Canadian consumers, just as would the motion today moved by the hon. member for Parkdale. That motion was also talked out by members of the Liberal party. This is a strange government with no purpose and no leadership. This government does not recognize worthy suggestions like that of the hon. member for Parkdale. No wonder this motion is being talked out by the—

Mr. Parent: Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I happened to be here during the debate last week, and I was under the impression that it was not only members on the Liberal side who were speaking but also members of the opposition. So to suggest that we talked the bill out is not right, and I would like to correct the hon. member.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Madam Speaker, I hope the time for that interjection will not be taken out of our allotted time. The backbenchers on the government side do not know how the front line thinks or acts. There is not one member of the Cabinet here at the present time. They are not interested in this measure. They are not interested in any tax incentives, or even in the taxpayers today.

Let me throw out another suggestion along the same line of reasoning embodied in this worthy motion of the hon. member for Parkdale, and that is, that mortgage payments and interest on owner-occupied homes should also be included as tax deductions. Of course under the autocratic philosophies of the present regime we cannot expect this, but I predict that further basic cost of living expenses of this kind will have to be recognized by the government, and soon. I am sorry that because of the present policy of the Liberal Party we will not be able to pass this motion today.

Mr. Jack Cullen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): First of all, Madam Speaker, I should like to compliment the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz). It is nice for a change during private members' hour to have a positive suggestion come from a private member.

In the ordinary course of events we have ideas promoted from the other side, and we sometimes wonder whether they have really done any research or work on the matters put forward. It is obvious that the hon. member for Parkdale has done some research and has, in fact, seen one of the problems in respect of this particular form of tax relief he is referring to, namely, how to help those who are tenants of rental property.

That hon. member, having done his research, as he does so well in respect of all his work here, has tried to overcome that particular problem by equalizing the tax advantage so that the homeowner and the tenant are not placed in unfair positions. I do think the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) recognized a similar problem, and endeavoured to provide the same kind of relief that the hon. member for Parkdale is endeavouring to provide with this particular motion.

Unfortunately the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) has left. Perhaps she had to go out for another Weekend Magazine interview. I do not think she was totally off base in her comments, but I think she misread the motion as another measure to help the housing industry rather than as what the hon. member intended, and that is to help people who are buying homes and those who are renting.

We heard some scoffing at the $500 grant. It should be pointed out to the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands that the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson), when speaking in Toronto on May 1, pointed out that there has been an enthusiastic response to our offer of a $500 grant to all first time purchasers of new, modestly priced houses. He pointed out that we have now paid out some $7 million in home-owner grants to about 14,000 families. These are families who would not have been helped had it not been for this particular piece of legislation.

Hon. members scoffed at the Assisted Home Ownership Plan. I would point out in that respect, as the minister did in his speech, that it is probably the most popular housing program ever introduced in Canada. It should be pointed out that more than $124 million has been allocated in AHOP loans to Canadian families. If this continues at the same rate we will have allocated more than $340 million by the end of this year. These are facts. It is easy to get up and say things are not being done, but this $124 million will blossom into $340 million through this single piece of legislation.

Mr. Alexander: As a lawyer I am ashamed to hear you say that.

Mr. Cullen: I think the hon. member is speaking as a lawyer who used to make money out of real estate, and he is sorry that all these people on low incomes are able to buy houses.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lang that Bill C-41, respecting the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain and to amend certain statutes in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton) (p.).

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, at five o'clock I was appealing to the House to have this particular bill set back so that the standing committee could have an opportunity to go to western Canada and hear representations from the farm producers. It is not sufficient to have a few briefs submitted by the executives of a few farm organizations because this bill, in its original form, did not meet with favour.

I pointed out that in western Canada there is a great distrust of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang), which he brought upon himself simply because of the way he handled other legislation and other problems. He has injected himself, whether voluntarily or on the insistence of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), into areas which are not considered to be within his domain as a minister. I pointed out the area of transportation about which we are very concerned.

It is interesting that after several years' delay the minister should suddenly slip in this bill just at about the time farmers are preparing to go on the land. That in itself is an indication that there is something about which the farmers should be aware. Every member of this House must be aware that when the farmers are on the land they are busy and do not have any time to be concerned about policy making or carrying on discussions. After all that time the minister suddenly decides to bring into the House a bill which he states is part of the government's over-all policy. No farmer will take the time while he is on the land to make representations, and yet there has been no effort until now to introduce this bill.

I am sure the farmers can live without this bill for another few months, or forever if it is not improved. Some of the problems in the original bill have not been corrected. The bill contains much window dressing. There are many problems. I have already mentioned the $100 million prize offered, but since then we know that $130 million has been collected. The question of regional consideration is not taken into account. The minister, in dealing briefly with this, said they looked at it but were not satisfied and required further information. What guarantee is there that a number of years from now they will still not have a solution?

In my proposal in respect of the original bill I said we should take into account the block system. We know that the Canadian Wheat Board manipulates grain movements through the block system. It is possible to have one area deliver more than another area simply because of the manipulations of the Canadian Wheat Board. The minister says that we do not know the cost of production for individual areas. We ask why we cannot have a bill which takes into account the overall cost of production, but with regional pay-outs? We could give the government three, four, or five years to figure out a plan, and in the meantime work on the basis of the block system.

Since the minister has not even looked at that problem and has merely commented on it, I shall go one step further in view of the great problem in western Canada today. The smaller communities, as the minister is aware, are struggling for existence. One solution to their problem might be through the use of this legislation. We know the Canadian Wheat Board has a computer system by which every delivery point is known. We know exactly what the income is in every area where there is an elevator, and therefore the calculation can be made on the basis of every community. If the minister really wants to help these communities, this in his golden opportunity. I am sure all the people in the smaller communities would make this appeal. I say they should be given the opportunity.

Frost affects many areas locally. Frost may affect at one time only a few communities in a block. These are the communities that will be adversely affected, and they should receive the benefits of any stabilization. They should not have to wait for an area which has had bumper crops for a long period to have a failure, before they can obtain assistance. This is the type of question I should like the minister to answer. Having waited all these years, if we are to have a stabilization bill which will be effective on behalf of all these communities, why could we not wait a few more months, or even a few years, to accomplish this?

That is one of the big arguments at this particular time. Why would the minister overlook this? Why must the depressed areas subsidize the areas that have always had it good when it comes to delivery? They may have had good crops on a continual basis, but suddenly when the entire region suffers from a crop failure the better areas qualify for a payment. My area is one of those that suffer from snow, frost, flooding, grasshoppers, beetles. You name it, we have it. We are a frontier area. When it comes to disasters, we have all kinds of them. Often we have late crops, and in many cases we have poor quality crops. You can break sales down very simply. There are statistics available in the Wheat Board office in Winnipeg right now.

I did say that I had some 20 questions to put to the minister, but I do not know how many of them I will be able to put in the time available. Another question is: do we need this particular kind of plan? I am suggesting that this plan does not meet our requirements.

Then there is the question as to whether the plan should be mandatory. The minister made it possible for farmers to opt out after three years, but his department will not have the statistics until the three years are up. The minute you have the statistics, you are either in or out, and that is final. The minister should give the farmers an opportunity to consider the plan for a longer time. We will not gain sufficient experience in three years. The clause as it stands now does not cover the situation adequately.

The next question is: why do we not take into account the entire cost of production? Even the income tax people recognize certain costs of producing grain as a legitimate deduction. The income tax people can be tough enough, but they recognize many of these costs as legitimate deductions, and yet the Minister of Justice himself tells us that he will not include those expenses that are included for income tax purposes. I say that the minister should take that into account.

Then, when it comes to considering averages, why must we take a backward look? Farmers are asking these questions. Why are we taking into account the average income over the past years? Nobody who works for a salary wants to sign a contract on the basis of his average income in the past five years. Surely to goodness the government should be forward looking these days. We know that inflation is with us, but the government has done nothing about it. If we make calculations, why should we not make them taking into account inflation? Even if you have to base the formula on the previous five years, you should add the rate of inflation that was experienced in the last five years.

If you take the cost of production into account, you must remember that today the dollar is not worth what it was two years ago. If you give the producer $100 today, you know as well as I do that he cannot purchase the same amount that he could two years ago. The cost of fertilizer went up three times. Why must we constantly look backward in agricultural matters? Why does agriculture not take its rightful place alongside other industries? Why must farmers be considered second or third rate citizens?

I have already mentioned the matter of payment on a regional basis. We take acts of God into account, but we must also consider acts of the minister with regard to regional economies. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) covered that question fully when he mentioned LIFT. The producers' income could be manipulated by the minister. What is the Wheat Board going to do once it collects the information? These are questions that have not been answered. Will they make decisions regarding grain deliveries and shipments out of those areas on the basis of the information they collect? Will they report incomes to the revenue department?

Why is it that the social insurance number has to be recorded in all transactions? Must the farmer have a third copy to submit to the Wheat Board, or whoever is administering the program, in all transactions, such as transactions regarding seed grain being purchased by one farmer from another farmer? Is Big Brother to look into all transactions? Why is the social insurance number mentioned in the bill before us, and why are farmers suspect? What will the minister do with that type of information?

Why must a farmer who happens to be in the elevator when the commissioner comes have to remain there until the commissioner is through with him? He may be dropping in for a social call, but the farmer has to remain there until the commissioner is satisfied that he has all the information. If he decides to keep the farmer there for the rest of the day, the farmer must stay. These are some of the questions the bill raises. What is the need for that type of control and authority? What kind of police state are we creating?

Mr. Béchard: Don't get mad.

An hon. Member: Hold your hat.

Mr. Korchinski: Why do we have to set the limit for delivery at $25,000? We all know that $25,000 might have been a fair amount of money at one time, but now it is not enough to meet expenses. Why was that limitation put on? What is so sacred about $25,000? Perhaps that figure appealed to the minister at a time when the cost of wheat was $1.50, but it is no longer that.

Another question is with regard to the exclusion of certain farmers. Why can we not include all farmers? How does the farmer receive his overpayment? If, for example, he had an income of almost $25,000, and then, after a crop failure everywhere, how does he recover his overpayment.

Consider the bureaucracy. The minister said we will not have inspectors. If that is so, then how will he know how much grain is produced, and how will he know about transactions between farmers? How will he know whether or not I fed my grain to my cattle?

Mr. Lang: That is not relevant.

Mr. Korchinski: But the entire production can go into feeding cattle. How will the minister know I actually produced that amount, and yet I am entitled to the payment under the bill? How will he know that without having inspectors?

Some hon. Members: Hold it.

An hon. Member: You will get a heart attack.

Mr. Korchinski: What plans are there to review the program after a few years? Why is it that we are making the same mistake we made with PFAA? Originally PFAA was set up on the basis of townships. Why must we go into large regions, and then find out several years later that farmers must come to government to beg them to amend the legislation, when we know that that is what they asked for a few years ago? Why must we make the same mistakes again in the hope that the farmers will come begging to the government to introduce amendments to the act? The government will then say to them, "Look what wonderful things we are doing for you."

Fortunately for the farmers the government changed the provisions under PFAA. The Conservative administration was in office at that time. Why is it we are starting on the wrong foot right from the beginning when we have waited for this legislation for a few years?

If the government is paying 4 per cent of the levy, why can we not put the 4 per cent into a crop insurance plan, for example, thus improving the plan so that it would benefit the farmers and so that everybody could operate his own scheme? There would be no need for policing other than we have now. Under the crop insurance scheme provincial governments have set up a system of inspection and they know how it operates. We could improve on that. We do not need another army checking into the operation.

I am afraid that this will bring about an army of inspectors, and that it will bring about an army of political inspectors. If the minister is setting up another Gardiner machine, I want to know why we need one. The farmers do not need one. Perhaps the minister does, but if we must levy 2 per cent to set up his political machine, we do not want it. These are the kinds of things about which farmers are asking.

I ask the minister what the total contribution from the federal treasury will be? In his speech he was only able to skim over a few figures. When farmers' levies for all the years are taken into account, when the years when farmers do not receive payment under this plan are taken into account, when it is considered that there will be years when payments will be lucrative for one area even though that area experiences a bumper crop, when income tax is deducted from these areas, much of that money will be coming back to the treasury.

We would like to know what the total federal involvement will be. What is the government pushing here? Is it coming through with a plan which will provide a larger income to the farmer, or is it suggesting that the total distribution of available funds will be really adequate? It may just be an imaginary figure the minister has dreamed up in the course of trying to sell this idea of stabilization. Are we going to be stabilized above poverty level? It appears that this will happen because we are not escalating incomes in accordance with the rate of inflation.

We ask whether this bill can be written in a less complex way. Lawyers have stood in this House, and one quoted certain sections of the bill. Anyone reading this bill would wonder what kind of formula is being drafted. If the Minister of Justice, with all the expertise he has in his department, cannot draft anything simpler than this, I wonder what chance any farmer will have to determine whether he is actually being overpaid. There is a clause in the bill which says that if a farmer is over paid, he should refund this money. How in the world is he supposed to figure out whether he is over paid? On the basis of this formula it would be pretty tough going. I am sure that if the minister's department cannot draft something simpler, we will have farmers involved in litigation. Lawyers in the courts will have a real field day trying to defend someone, but that is about the only benefit this bill might have.

The minister might also explain how this bill will affect, for example, the port of Churchill. If the government can manipulate grain according to the statistics it has, how will that area be affected? If we find certain economies, will we be trying to push for those developments in western Canada? Do we have to wait for the southern area, such as Assiniboia, Rosetown, Biggar, and other heavy growing areas for benefits? Perhaps we will have to wait for them to have a crop failure before we receive benefits. What is the advantage? What is the net result of this type of readjustment in the thinking of farmers as far as western development is concerned? How is the small community going to benefit where it has been manipulated in the past?

I already indicated, for example, where grain was shipped from Assiniboia to the port of Churchill, and not grain coming from my area which is right next to the port of Churchill. Would that kind of manipulation stop? Why should we allow it to continue with this kind of bill? Can we not check some of these inadequacies in connection with transportation? How will it affect, for example, the plea to retain certain railways? If the minister cannot figure out what the cost of production is to determine the total cash flow, how are we going to present a case for retaining railways?

The minister admits that at the present time he is having a tough struggle. Some of these inquiries are being conducted by the Canadian Transport Commission. Will the CTC be able to give us some of these answers which up until now we have not received? What effect will a trucking system have on the total cost of production? There have been studies. There have been grain deliveries into Saskatoon for a unit train set up. If the minister does not have that information and he tells us that he needs another year or so to obtain it, we might be patient and wait for the answer before we proceed.

There are many questions in the minds of farmers, but they hear few explanations. They fear that the minister is imposing something on them and in such a way that it will not help small communities which are struggling and fast being written off. The minister could help if he so wanted. We should have these answers before we proceed. If there is a possibility of an answer, we should know that before we consider tampering with adjustments or amendments to clauses. I suggest that we need more information. If the minister has not obtained the information, the committee is prepared to travel to obtain some of the answers. After receiving those answers, or at least making an attempt, we will then be prepared to consider the bill clause by clause to see what advantages, if any, there are for western Canada.

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the grain industry has been debated on more than one occasion in this session. The Standing Committee on Agriculture has also spent a good deal of time discussing grain and grain related questions, but the bill before us is by far the most important and significant single piece of legislation dealing with grain farmers and the western grain industry which has been put forward in a long time.

There is a considerable body of legislation dealing with various aspects of the grain industry. I can mention the two price wheat system which we dealt with earlier. There was a good deal of time spent in committee, and I think it is still before the House at some stage. The cash advance legislation and deferral of cash delivery tickets are examples of grain legislation. We have seen a number of other policy developments in the last several years, not all of which have required legislation. I am thinking of the implementation of the block shipping system and the extension of credit facilities to the Canadian Wheat Board in order to assist it in obtaining greater foreign sales around the world, which it has done.

I think of the government purchase of hopper cars, the establishment of the Canada Grains Council, the establishment of the grains administration group, and perhaps the most recent move in this direction, the election of the producer board of the advisory committee of the Canadian Wheat Board. These have been good moves. They have been helpful and necessary, and the list is by no means complete. I could mention other situations that have been corrected and other policies that have been introduced.

The hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski), who just took his seat, was speaking about what is going to happen to the municipal roads if any of the branch lines are abandoned. I should like to ask my hon. friend if he remembers how things were a few years ago when grain was bootlegged in the real producing areas of Saskatchewan—Yorkton, Kindersley, up into his area and into Meadow Lake in northern Saskatchewan. More grain was unnecessarily moved by trucks because of an outdated quota system inherited from Conservative times, than was moved by rail.

When the hon. member talks about the possible damage to roads because of some possible rail line abandonment, I ask him to remember the bootlegging situation. I am sure he is well aware of it because it is one glaring example of the policies we inherited from his party when they were in government. Improvements such as the block shipping system and other innovative policies have come about under the present minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board.

Hon. members opposite have been very critical of the minister in this debate. He has the job of tackling the problems and policies of the grain industry, and they seem to wonder why a Saskatchewan minister, and member of parliament from that province, should be given this responsibility which is vital to western Canada. Is that wrong? One would think so, listening to the critics in the official opposition and, to a lesser extent, in the New Democratic Party. I am not sure, and I am sure nobody else is, just what disturbs my hon. friends in the opposition, because there has not been any basic criticism of the minister's performance. We have not heard any factual criticism of his many achievements in regard to the problems of the grain industry. They often refer to the LIFT program, and there were some good and bad things about that program, but they do not mention the record movements of grain, record sales to China and other markets, and the record exports of barley.

They forget that in 1969 the total barley exports, including malting barley, were 22 million bushels, but three years later under this minister were over 200 million bushels. They forget these things when speaking of the minister's performance.

It may be that what opposition members are really critical of is the determination and capable manner in which this minister has gone about analysing and tackling the problems of the grain industry. His approach is new, and different to members opposite. They always have simplistic answers—the NDP says "set the guaranteed price" regardless of production or any other problems. As far as the Official Opposition is concerned, their approach is more flamboyant—give a $200 payment to everybody.

While I commend the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), a former minister of agriculture, for what he has done for the western grain industry, we must remember that his one big effort was a large sale to China some years ago, which has been surpassed more than once by the present minister in charge of the Wheat Board. Western Canadians in general, and farmers in particular, have been impressed with the minister's (Mr. Lang) dedication, determination, and performance, and with the analytical manner in which he has sought solutions to the problems of the grain industry.

Western grain farmers, and I am sure this is true also of farmers in other branches of agriculture, are much better informed of the problems in their own industry than heretofore. This has been brought about by a concerted and positive effort by this government and this minister. I strongly believe that if government, or government agencies, can provide farmers with facts and figures, collectively and individually they will make their own decisions and do much better than governments or any other kind of advice of experts passed on to them. The program of getting information out to producers is part of a policy begun by the present minister.

The history of Bill C-41 was discussed earlier in this debate by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) and others, Mr. Speaker. Both the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), and the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton), pointed out that there are other issues and concerns that directly involve the grain farmer, such as transportation, labour unrest—even the weather when moving grain through the mountains of western Canada. That is true, of course, but the aim of this bill is much deeper and is not concerned with the problem of boxcar shortage, rail line upgrading, labour disputes and so on. That is the income question, the good years and the bad years, the cycles which directly affect not only the grain growers but almost every other sector and every other group of people in western Canada.

The importance of these cycles and their tremendous effect on the western economy is a difficult thing for Canadians in other parts of the country to understand, I am sure. Not everybody appreciates the tremendous importance of the health and welfare of the grain industry, and the dependence of all other sectors of the economy on that industry.

Western provincial governments of all political stripes—and in the last 30 years in Saskatchewan there have only been two—have wrestled for years with the problems of rural depopulation. Parties of all political stripes have fought to stabilize growth of development, and many good and helpful programs have been developed to improve the living standards of people in smaller urban communities in Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba. There have been programs such as natural gas service to small communities across the prairies, water, sewer, and other services, but despite that we have seen the trend away from farms and small communities.

The people who remain have been helped, but the trend of grain producers forced off the farm by the ups and downs of their lives, has not been reversed. These policies have been joined by a federal program of aid to agricultural service centres which is putting $10 million into Saskatchewan alone, and a similar amount into the other two prairie provinces, but still this has not prevented the flow of population from prairie towns to larger centres either westward or eastward. It is not because these people want to leave, but because they need a stable job on a year round basis. They have not been able to find that in large areas of western Canada. They are dependent on a steady, stable cash income from the grain grower. This bill is aimed at that basic problem, whether it be lack of world markets, lack of ability to penetrate those markets as it has been before, reduced market prices, or increased costs of operating the farms.

I agree with the hon. member for Mackenzie that Bill C-41 is complex and complicated. In this regard it differs in a major way from Bill C-50 which we discussed in this House not so very long ago. However, I suggest to hon. members that you cannot have it both ways. Members opposite criticized Bill C-50 because it was not specific enough. It did not spell out cost indexing, and so on and so forth. In this bill the minister is trying to enshrine all these various aspects of the policy into legislation and have them written into law, leaving very little to regulation. You cannot have it both ways.

I do not pretend to understand all of the formulae spelled out in the bill. It will require some good, solid committee work on behalf of members of all parties to go into the mechanism of the bill. In this debate, however, we are dealing with the principle of the bill. The principle is one of providing a form of income stability for grain producers and, as a result, for the other tradesmen, the other people in the prairie basin.

Net income stability is one of the features of this bill. It was not one of the features of a similar bill put forward a few years ago. That was a valid criticism at that time. The minister corrected that in consultation with dozens of farm organizations and farmer groups which met and had some input into this bill.

This is not a floor-price policy. It is not a 90 per cent of the best five years' index as was Bill C-50. It is a different principle. The bill establishes a fund for income stability. As I indicated earlier, income stability for the grain farmer is the first step in creating greater stability for the prairies.

What does the bill do? Very simply, it is a plan whereby a fund is established. The fund gets money from two sources. From the farmer it gets 2 per cent of gross sales up to $25,000. As far as the contribution from the farmer is concerned, this represents a maximum of $500. It will be matched by the government of Canada, the taxpayer and the treasury putting 4 per cent into the fund. The hon. member for Mackenzie said the $25,000 figure is too low. I do not know. At the moment I do not think it is. However, that is not the principle we are debating in this bill.

For every $3 put into the fund, $1 is put in by the farmers and $2 by the taxpayers and treasury of Canada. Who is going to get that $3, and how? It will be the farmer, and only the farmer, who will get any money out of that fund. That should be easily understood.

I cannot understand why any member opposite would want to defer for further study a bill containing this kind of deal for the western farmer. It cannot help but be a good plan in principle. The farmer receives a cheque from the fund if the total net income from grain drops below a five year average.

Farmers and farm groups have been consulted. They have been discussing this bill and the principle of it for the past four of five years. To defer it for another six months is sheer nonsense. It clearly demonstrates the lack of any kind of policy on the part of members opposite.

Members opposite do not say what should be done about this bill, only to put it off for six months. They have had five years to think about it. They went through the last election campaign in western Canada without any great plans or policies, other than fixing prices and wages, and that did not work. They have had a little time since then. They now ask for another six months so that some of the experts and the farm members from western Canada can think up a better policy. Having already had five years, I do not think another six months will do them any good.

Members opposite are very concerned about getting this bill into committee and then hitting the road for, I presume, public hearings all over the west. Anyone who looks at this bill can see that that would be a very premature kind of move. The first job of the committee is to spend some time with the officials in order to study the details of the bill. The committee can then consider where and when it should travel. The committee should meet with producer groups, as has been done with regard to other somewhat similar pieces of legislation. We do not need to travel around the prairies for weeks or months to do that. The committee has an obligation to ensure that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, Palliser Grain growers, the wheat pools and other groups are brought here and informed of this legislation so that they in turn can explain it to their members.

The principle of this bill is designed to meet one of the great concerns of western farmers since homestead days. I do not pretend that it will solve all of the income problems in the grain industry. No fund or policy could do that. Crop insurance will still be essential. But it is going to be an integral part of the scheme. I am sure the bill will need to be improved.

I agree with one of the main criticisms of members opposite that we have to look a little harder and a little further for a better approach to varying regions in order to reflect the actual situation over the broad geographic area in a better way than that provided in the bill.

The official opposition want to stall this bill. That is the only suggestion they have made. I suggest the amendment is sheer nonsense. It is petty politics. It is sheer personal antagonism against the minister for the sake of small-time political gamesmanship. They want to stall instead of getting this legislation in place.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McIsaac: The hon. member for Mackenzie said it will take a year or two to get some facts, figures and experience. How in the world are we going to get experience if we do not pass this legislation, get the program, and get the fund started? What will be gained by postponing it for six months? Absolutely nothing.

Improvements can be made to the legislation in committee. This can be done by having discussions with those groups directly affected. We can certainly improve the legislation by experience in the utilization of it. The first thing to do is to get the bill through second reading, adopt it in principle, and get on with the study. Bill C-41 is a welcome, significant and historic piece of legislation not only for Western Canada but for the whole of Canada.

● (2050)

Mr. Korchinski: Would the hon. member permit a question? Does he realize we are not asking for a six months hoist; we are simply asking for a little time in which to get some information from the farmers themselves?

Mr. McIsaac: Does the hon. member not realize that he can get all that information as we study the bill in committee? We can hear all the experts we like there.

Mr. Korchinski: Get the farmers involved!

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-41 seems to me to be a very complex way of getting at a simple problem, its goal being to protect the western grain farmers' income. What we are really after is price and market insurance.

Although I have a great deal of respect for the intelligence of the minister responsible for the Wheat Board, I sometimes wonder about his common sense. I feel the bill before us is lacking in what could be called an approach of common sense. That is why we in the Conservative Party feel its subject-matter should be referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture before we proceed with second reading. In that way we would be able to hear those who wish to make representations before the bill passes second reading.

The purpose of Bill C-41, the grain stabilization bill, is to provide for stabilization of the net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain and to protect the producer from the ups and downs of the prices, and the quantities that move into the international market. This is as opposed to a crop insurance plan, which looks after the vagaries of Mother Nature.

It is generally conceded that by confining ourselves to practical farming methods already used by good farmers in different parts of the world, we could feed something like ten times our present population, and on a Canadian style of diet. This can be done only if the profit incentive is there for farmers to take the risk inherent in agriculture and to increase their output and productivity. But this must not be limited by the actions of the government.

The first question on this bill, of course, is: do we really need this new scheme for grain at this time, or is there some alternative course that we should take? The concept may be valid, and it may be needed for products such as eggs and fruit. But the question is: will it be administrable for grain without creating a bureaucratic structure that could overwhelm us? It is not the concept of the grain stabilization plan that is complex and unattractive; it is the operational and administrative features that require understanding.

It would seem, on looking through the notes on the western grain stabilization working paper put out by the government, that the main selection of criteria used was the cheapest plan for a given level of stability, and a plan that is actuarially sound. This, of course, in no way argues that it is an optimum plan for either government or producers.

The key question becomes: what stability is really provided to commercial western grain producers, and at what cost? That is, what are the costs and benefits from such a program compared to alternatives?

From the latest figures I have looked at, we can expect that about one-half of the commercial grain sales in western Canada would be covered by the $25,000 gross sales limitation, and there is no evidence that farmers with sales of $25,000 or less are in greater need of grain stabilization as opposed to larger grain farmers. Again, if the plan is actuarially sound, why use the $25,000 limit?

The bill appears to take the narrow view that the government is giving out money benevolently to provide some stabilization, and the level of the gift is the key focus. There are, however, direct and indirect benefits that the government receives as well as the farmers. For example, if a stabilizing net cash flow payment occurs, there is likely to be a four to five times multiplier effect on the prairie economy, and assuming standard tax levels it would seem the federal government would get back anywhere from $1.25 to $1.75 for every dollar it pays out. There is also the question of whether federal financial authorities might attempt or be able to deduct such payments from federal transfer payments to the provinces.

The point is that the program is unlikely to have a net cost to government at all, and therefore, as I said before, why have the $25,000 gross sales limit? Larger farm spending could be expected to have similar multiplier effects, so the question is: is the middle-size farmer the appropriate structural objective for western grain stabilization?

There can be lots of questions raised about entry, reentry, and getting out later, who administers the program, who pays for the administrative cost. One might also ask about the three-year system of calculating individual payout, which seems to penalize those producers who are expanding compared with those who are stable or are reducing.

So we go back to the first question: do we need this scheme? Certainly it was needed 20 years ago. However, when we look to the future, there are some questions. What we need now is a list of priorities. I suggest that labour disputes, transportation, high taxation, high interest rates, must be right at the top.

I personally think the alternative to this plan would be a crop insurance program administered by each of the western provinces, and we have a good basis for that now. We need a plan to take into account regional differences in the Canadian Wheat Board area, such as climate and soil type. This bill deals with the prairie economy as a whole.

Another danger to a plan such as Bill C-41 is that it tends to shelter the farmer from the marketplace. It is another block between the producer and the realities of the marketplace. There should be some provision for reassessing this program after three or five years. We can ask if farm-to-farm sales are to be excluded. Certainly, eastern grain producers will wonder about this plan. Are they interested in this scheme? What about grain fed on the farm? Does this qualify? There is no question that the economists who dreamed up this scheme have been looking back, and that it is based on the past 25 years. Surely we can reasonably expect the next 25 years to be better for agriculture, so I very much question the actuarial basis, especially when the two key areas are Mother Nature and people.

One thing this bill will do: it will be a real red herring to cool the whole transportation and grain situation for the government. It will keep the farmers busy all summer trying to figure it out.

I am not aware of any producer pressure for this scheme. As I said before, we seem to be overwhelmed with pressing problems in the grain industry. I would like to see some of these solved before we move into these unknown waters. They include grain transportation, rail line abandonment, improved facilities on the Pacific seaboard and at Churchill, protein payment, development of a soft white wheat, a Chief Commissioner for the Canadian Wheat Board, a farm storage program, a government grain storage program, some tax relief, a registered retirement savings plan for farmers or ranchers, solutions to labour strife and industrial disputes, some effective chemical control for insects and wild oats, and general measures to prevent rural depopulation. When we consider the magnitude of past errors of judgment in the western grain industry there is room for lots of searching research here.

In closing I strongly recommend that the House support the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), so that the committee may be able to travel and in order that western farmers themselves can supply input to this legislation.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity of speaking a second time on this bill as a consequence of the amendment. I hope the House will support the amendment; I appeal to members on the opposite side to do so.

I think most of us will agree that there is throughout the farm organizations, and certainly among farmers all across Canada, a desire to establish for themselves an income stabilization policy. Such a policy can be established in two or three ways.

One of the reasons why I am so interested in having the subject matter of the bill referred to committee is that I have little hope in the minister's response to suggestions to improve legislation of his in committee, regardless of what the evidence proves. There is little chance of acceptance of change by the minister.

I was interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. McIsaac) who has just taken his seat. I was pleased to note there was no rancor on his part regarding the minister and stabilization. I think the last time there was any agricultural stabilization he and his party members in western Canada felt the effects. If you remember, Mr. Speaker, at that time we were faced with a much more comprehensive bill than the one we have now; it was a $100 million carrot held out in Saskatchewan for election purposes.

The situation then was not much different from what it is now since an election will probably take place there this year. It was nice to have a bill just before the last election there so that the election could be fought on better ground. I agree that this bill is a better bill by a considerable margin than the previous bill, but I would suggest to the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley that stabilization and the huge carrot held out last time were not to the advantage of his own party.

I was also surprised to hear the hon. member mention a matter that has not been referred to in the House for some time, and that is the bootlegging of grain. I was particularly surprised to hear him bring that subject up, knowing that he had been a cabinet minister in the Thatcher government at a time when most members of parliament here in Ottawa were of the opinion that the biggest bootlegger in Saskatchewan was Mr. Thatcher, the premier, who traded wheat for furniture and built up quite a bootlegging business. Not that there is anything wrong with bootlegging, Mr. Speaker, but it is a page in our history that we look back to and hope that it will remain in the past. As I say, I was surprised to hear the hon. member raise the subject, particularly in view of the connection it must have had with some of the people with whom he was fairly close.

The last time the stabilization bill came before the House no consultation was held with farm organizations and farmers. A number of economists and officials in the various departments concerned with the marketing of grain drafted a program in which a number of programs already in effect were eliminated. Most of them had been unsuccessful, with the possible exception of PFAA, which still has a fund of $9 million which is to be put to use under the terms of this bill. But with that one exception, none of these other carrots ever produced any advantage for the farmers.

It should also be pointed out that not only was an election fought and the stabilization act lost, but some court cases followed in which it was charged that in order to make his point the minister was doing things which were dishonest and illegal. It was amusing to see the minister recommending an illegality to accomplish a political end, yet this was the decision of the court, and at that time stabilization was dead.

At that time other matters were mentioned, one of which was cost of production indexing. The minister gave no consideration to that at all because it did not fit in with the nice, neat little bill that he had drafted. It might have interfered in some way with the structure that had been established. If the subject of this bill is referred to committee, it would be my expectation and hope that we would hear from farm organizations, those connected with the trade, and others. The subject matter of the bill does not only concern the farmers: as someone has mentioned, it also concerns the grain exchange, those brokers who travel across the world to sell our cereal products, those who are concerned with the tariff structure and the relationship between our exports and imports, as well as a very large segment of the Canadian economy, since wheat and cereal grains play such an important role in the export capacity of this nation. The effects of the bill spread far beyond those who just produce the grain.

If the subject matter of the bill is referred to committee we would be able to listen to the input of those who come before us. This would be before the bill was finally drafted, and before the minister's position had become so inflexible that he could not possibly change anything in the bill without losing face. If there is one thing this minister does not like, it is to lose face by changing something.

The backbenchers in the Liberal party who are from farming districts know that this bill can be improved. It is not the only answer to stabilization. They know there are other factors that the farmers will put before the committee for consideration, and which have not yet been discussed. As the Canadian Federation of Agriculture has already done, farm organizations will probably give an indication that there are two forms of assistance that can be provided to give income stability, only one of which is outlined in the present bill.

I suggest that the whole country is going to be affected by this piece of legislation, not only this year but for many years to come. Unless we are to believe that the cabinet has all of the knowledge, that the farmers have none, that the farm organizations have none, and yes that, even individual members of parliament have none, then I would strongly urge the Liberal party, and its members particularly from western Canada, to vote against sending the subject matter of the bill to committee—in other words, to vote against the amendment. In the standing committee they will obviously be able to use their majority and will eventually get their way; it only becomes a matter of time. If that is what they wish, then obviously they should be opposed to sending the subject matter to a committee.

If they believe that such things as the stabilization of income for cereal producers in Canada, and its relationship to export and domestic sales of wheat and other cereals, with the effect this will have on production of livestock in western Canada and on any attempt to diversify production away from cereal grains in given areas of western Canada, are not important, then obviously they will vote against the amendment and will not send the subject matter of the bill to committee. However, if they feel this is a long-term proposition that is worth looking into, then I would strongly urge them to send the subject matter to committee.

I suggest that we are discussing a bill that is highly technical. We must first decide what type of stabilization we want. The hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. McIsaac) said that no one else had set out an alternative. That is true. It would take considerable effort to do so. I give the minister full credit for having made that effort. Certainly the effort that has gone into the development of this piece of legislation has been considerable. This is probably a technically correct bill. The question I raise is whether it is correct as far as the agricultural community in western Canada is concerned, and that is what we would be discussing if we discussed the subject matter instead of the bill.

The Federation of Agriculture put out a paper on farm income protection. Its convention passed a fairly simple resolution which states in part:

Whereas provincial farm income protection plans are emerging as an approach to farm income stabilization and protection

Western Grain Stabilization

Be it resolved that the C.F.A. endorses the concept, and establishes the principle that the farmers of Canada must occupy a position in Canadian society that generally provides to farmers, net income and conditions of work at least equal to those conditions and incomes in society as a whole in terms of return to investment, managerial ability, hours of work and conditions of employment; and

Be it further resolved that the C.F.A. work to achieve national commodity income protection plans with a minimum of adjustment being required; and

Be it further resolved that any plan or plans meet at least the following policy.

To provide a price guarantee for farmers during periods of unfavourable market conditions based on cost of production.

The federation went on to set forth a number of methods. Having seen the legislation which is put forth, the federation outlined a number of alternatives to what is presented in this bill. What is being presented in this bill is really subsidization with the co-operation of the farmers and the government. When the prices fall and remain down over a period of time, the government makes a contribution.

Of course there are other types of protection. Most of the provinces, including British Columbia and Quebec, are looking very closely at another type which involves the cost of production, a reasonable wage for the entrepreneur and labour costs, all of which things would be reflected in the price in the marketplace.

British Columbia is operating this type of a program on the basis of allowing the British Columbia Federation of Agriculture to establish prices for commodities, which involves a detailed look at what they call model farm units. This is done through a negotiating agreement committee which makes a study in depth when establishing the cost of production. That is the way the province of British Columbia is handling income stabilization. This allows a great deal of flexibility and an orderly increase in the production of specific commodities as the ability to sell the commodity increases.

That federation is not in favour of establishing production quotas or controls which will regulate the degree of participation by individual farmers, or will place limitations on production. Personally I would like to go a step further in deciding how much of a product can be sold, and at what price. We should also calculate the cost of production.

When I hear people talk about stabilization and the danger of over-production I am reminded of what happens when you get a very good or a very low price for a commodity. I am reminded of earlier days working in a mine when we had a change from a 10-hour day to an 8-hour day. Many of the employees were asked, and agreed to work an extra two hours a day in order to get the extra money they needed. They felt the way to get this extra money was to work an extra couple of hours. They had done it before, so they wondered why they should not go back to the 10-hour day.

We did not let them work the 10 hours a day. We had established that an 8-hour day was sufficient. We decided that just because they could not earn the money they needed by working an 8-hour day there was no point in working the extra two hours. We felt it was much better to bring the pay up so the 8-hour day would produce a decent income for those people. I think labour in general has taken that attitude.

We have been using a number of federal programs to stabilize agricultural products. I think anyone who is remotely connected with agriculture will agree that one of the bright spots in the history of agriculture was the stabilization of dairy products. This was not accomplished without difficulty. Some small dairy farmers have gone out of business. Cream production is non-existent in many parts of the country. In the main, dairy production has been stabilized and the prices have kept relatively level.

I suggest that if this industry had not been regulated and there had not been a willingness to put the right amount of money into the program at the right time, we might have been faced with one of two things. We would either have over-produced and had lower prices, or over-produced and had to buy the excess commodity with government funds, as we have always done in the past. This was not necessary because we were judicial in deciding on what the optimum prices should be. The government must be given full credit for having done this. This was done on a national basis, but it has not been an easy proposition. I think all those connected with the dairy industry will agree that it was only successful because all the farmers agreed to participate in the program.

You will find in Ontario, I am sure, that the majority of farmers will agree that industrial milk prices have been advantageously raised to a level that has not destroyed the fluid milk industry. In fact it has supplemented the fluid milk industry by making it possible for that industry to obtain a large source of supply. At the same time it has enabled the industry to provide good products to the consumers at reasonable prices.

If this stabilization bill is to be successful we will require the participation of all producers of the commodities involved. Unless we have that input to a program that is acceptable, it will not work. I am surprised to hear members in this House, particularly those on the government side, suggest that this program is not too good, that it is flexible and allows room for change, and that it will be changed shortly. I suggest that we should start off with an optimum amount of input from the farmers.

We should not look only to the bright little boys in government departments who may have a very good plan, but one which is totally unrealistic to the farmers who do the producing. While it sounds complicated to me I am sure those people who use a slide rule or calculator do not find the calculations difficult. However, the fact is that the farmer must know how it is done so that he will know whether or not he is satisfied. Any information I have is that the farmers have not been consulted at all. The last occasion was in 1971 and at that time they were very strongly opposed to it, even with the carrot of $100 million. Facsimiles of the cheques were sent out telling them how much they would receive. They still turned it down.

I think it is wrong for us to talk about the concept of agricultural stabilization in the cereal field at this time without having the full input of the farming community. We have not had a major farm conference for some time. I think we had one about ten years ago. At that time the farmers came down here and set forth a number of proposals which the government has been attempting to implement ever since, even though many of them are out of date.

It seems to me that if we do not have this kind of input from the farmers who are directly concerned, we will not have a stabilization plan that will be acceptable. Surely as members of parliament that is what we wish. If one looks around the various departments of the government one will see many whizz-kids of 22 or 25 years of age who are just recently out of university. There are many of these very bright young people in government departments. They are very competent in their fields, but they have one great disability. They lack experience. One cannot hold that against them because they will gain experience as they become older.

Most of us who are members of parliament have some limited experience, and should be in a position to adopt a program which we believe is the ultimate. Surely we want the best plan to stabilize income for agriculture. We are quickly running out of farmers. It has been mentioned that the average age of a farmer is well over 50.

Recently I witnessed a sad event. It involved a farm that was started up by a chap who came to the country when it was opened up. The son of this original farmer, who is now on in years and who has farmed for many years, has two sons of his own. The farm is a good operation. It has all the necessary livestock, implements, and necessities for farming. But this farmer sold the farm because the two sons took a look at it and said that they could get more money by working in a machine shop or in other employment off the farm. They said they would have every Saturday and Sunday off, and a number of paid holidays. They said that in this way they could take a few days off without being hurt too badly financially, and without allowing the cows to suffer. So we do not get young people on the farms.

This farm was sold to a buyer from Toronto who intends to hold it strictly for speculation purposes. He has offered to rent it to another farmer for the next year or two because he does not anticipate selling it again in that period. He has also bought eight or ten other farms.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I have been listening very carefully to the hon. member and fail to see the link with Bill C-41. Perhaps the hon. member would speak on Bill C-41 now.

Mr. Peters: Madam Speaker, I am shocked at your lack of knowledge on the subject.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Peters: We are really are not discussing the bill. We are discussing an amendment to send the whole problem of farm income stabilization to the committee without the bill, so that the subject may be discussed and representations heard in order to decide whether or not this is the kind of bill we should be implementing in respect of stabilization. I was indicating that the need for farm stabilization is obvious in view of the lack of income in the farming community today, which has resulted in very few young people going into agriculture.

The age of the average farmer now is increasing well beyond the half century in years, and unless we get additional farmers we will have serious difficulty not only in this particular field but in all fields directly related to agricultural production. I am sure the minister's advisers would agree that this bill is only one form of stabilization. The minister, of course, will argue that it is the ideal one for this purpose. The purpose of the amendment, however, is to have the subject matter, which is really grain income stabilization, sent to committee so that we may ascertain whether or not this is the proper route or whether another route might be suggested.

I have indicated I am doubtful that the minister will agree we should look at other forms of income stabilization, but I suggest we have already in the past looked at two, three, or four types of income stabilization in the agricultural field. The other stabilization bill involves a totally different method, and I am sure there are also others.

I have not spoken at all of the method that was used in the other stabilization bill. One form of that of course is deficiency payments, where the marketplace is allowed to play the full role and at the end of the year you calculate on your political basis, or your cost of production basis, or however you wish, the need of the producer in respect of that particular commodity to have a certain amount of money, and if the price of that commodity in the open market is not sufficiently high a deficiency payment is made almost always on a subsidization basis without any regard to premium paid by the producer. There are also other methods.

On a number of occasions we have used named commodities and have agreed that a commodity would be pegged at a level that would be a percentage of the actual cost of production and what would be necessary to keep the producer in business. In those instances we have made an offer of a percentage of the cost of production of the commodity, and have said that any amount they wish to produce we would buy. This has been done on a number of occasions, and in fact the largest expenditure in agriculture has always been in stabilization under the Agricultural Stabilization Act.

On numerous occasions we have obtained large quantities of surplus products which we had to dispose of eventually, often at a considerable loss to the nation. In all those cases, when the cost of production increases rapidly, to raise prices to the same level becomes futile because the input in production is usually considerably higher than the increase in the cost of the product. This is one of the major problems that we have to face, and we must face this problem in almost any type of stabilization program that we put into effect.

If this bill were in effect today and prices started to drop, the payment we would be making would be very high, but the income level would be dropping and we would be paying a premium on that loss to the farmer at the same time that his input cost for the production of the commodity was going up rapidly.

It is normal, when prices are low and income is based on a five year or any other average, that when prices start to increase farmers continue to have yet higher input costs. So that when the price of the product is low, input prices continue to go up and are never below the five year average. The farmer will be paying premiums, but he will not get any benefits because the market price may be going up gradually.

It seems to me that there are a number of ways in which the problem of stabilization can be solved. This is a very important subject, probably the most important subject that agriculture has ever faced. Farmers do not have the advantage of the strike weapon, they cannot withhold their product from the market. Also, it is impossible to organize a boycott among farmers. I remember one time when, in an effort to get a better price for fluid milk, producers organized a meeting at which they discussed what they needed to do to stay in business. I suggested to them that the way to go about it would be to dump their milk, thus creating a shortage on the market. Immediately the farmers asked, who will pay for the milk?

When a labourer goes on strike, he knows who will pay for it—he will. But when the farmer was asked to withhold his product—

Mr. Horner: The farmer had already milked the cows.

Mr. Peters: That is true. The hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) has made a very good point. His labour had gone into it, but in the other case, the guy just hung around. However, whether or not a man has worked, he has put in his eight hours, so their losses were somewhat the same.

It seems to me that that is not the way in which prices can be maintained by Canadian farmers, that withholding their products is not the right way. I am sure every member of the House is well aware of the fact that if farmers adopted that method, there would be a shortage of food in all parts of Canada and we would all suffer.

Farmers should have no complaints about the actions of Canadians in general with regard to them because the Canadian population has been willing to support agriculture, and on many occasions to stabilize farmers' incomes. They have done so gladly and without reluctance. In return, farmers have had to pay a very severe price, namely, a loss in their income.

In bringing forward this legislation the minister has put forth a method by which grain production can be stabilized. It is true that it has many variables and that large sectors of producers in western Canada might find themselves making no deliveries and no sales. Yet, under this bill, if the other areas receive a good price for their commodity, a price which meets the criteria established in the bill, then no pay-out takes place anywhere. It is possible that if grain production is good in Assiniboia, in the Palliser triangle, and in other extremely productive wheat producing areas where number 1 wheat is the rule rather than the exception, the remaining three quarters of the prairie region which on many occasions produce substandard grain whether it be because of frost, hail, or grasshoppers, will get nothing for their product.

An hon. Member: That is not so.

Mr. Peters: I suggest that probably the hon. member is right because no farmer will agree to a bill under which the whole prairie region would be taken as one area. I am sure that every farm organization that comes before us will agree with the minister from Assiniboia that it cannot be that way, and that the regions must be divided into districts which would be about the size of the PFAA districts, and that they would number 15: one in western Ontario, one in the Peace River country, one in British Columbia, and the remainder in the major producing areas.

I suggest that that is not in the bill and it is an obvious deficiency to anyone who looks at the bill. I am sure that the young whiz kids who drafted this bill were more interested in the form than they were in facts.

This reminds me of a meeting which I attended—and this is not on the subject before us. A number of bright young people from Toronto came to a small community numbering 500 people and presented a plan for which the Ontario government paid $40,000. It brought many benefits to the community, but the plan would have suited better the new city of Pickering. It was done by excellent planners and it would have developed any city of approximately 100,000 people. The program was totally unrelated to that small community. Similarly, I suggest that much of the bill before us is totally unrelated to the reality which is well known to the farmers. I sincerely hope—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to say a few words in the debate on Bill C-41. I was not in the House when the minister introduced the bill, but I did have the opportunity to read his speech. I hope he did not strain his arm as he patted himself on the back for the programs and planning he claims he has developed or is developing to put grain farmers on the road to prosperity.

Bill C-41 is entitled: "An act respecting the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain . . .". The history of grain production in the west is one of instability in the thirties and the early forties, caused by drought and grasshoppers. These were acts of God. There was really no means by which the producer could control those hazards. Since then, while there have been dry periods and hoppers, there have been new developments in the field of farm machinery, there are new farming practices, new chemicals to control weeds and hoppers, and these have enabled the farmer to increase his grain production so much that the annual average yield per acre has increased over the long term average by as much as 10 or 15 bushels per acre in some areas.

In the last 10 or 15 years we have been producing a substantial amount of grain every year, with the exception of the year we had the LIFT program. Basically, production is not really the problem in the west. Our problems are primarily man made. They are problems of inadequate or poorly planned transportation systems, labour disputes, strikes both with the railway company on the west coast and amongst the longshoremen, and a lack of salesmanship. If we can solve these problems that will take most of the instability out of grain production in the west. We must solve these problems.

The lack of an international wheat agreement has and will continue to lead to instability. Many parts of the world are faced with starvation. Surely as a producer of cereal crops it is Canada's responsibility to help feed the starving world. I am not suggesting that we give this grain away, but I am wondering what we as Canadians have done to work out an international wheat agreement with other producing countries of the world. What are we doing to make satisfactory financial arrangements with some of the underdeveloped countries in order to help them in their plight?

As the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) said, the bill before us is complicated. I sometimes wonder who drafts the legislation which is presented. When I started practising law some 20 years ago one could pick up the statutes of Canada, or the statutes of any of the provinces, and any layman could read those statutes and understand them.

An hon. Member: You've got to be kidding.

Mr. Neil: This is a fact, if you will go back that far.

Mr. Cullen: Did you ever read the Succession Duty Act?

Mr. Neil: Yes. It is fairly simple compared to the legislation before us. Every piece of legislation I have seen come into this House since 1972 has been complicated. The only legislation I have seen in the last three years which a layman could understand is the Corporations Act. Someone with some sense drafted that legislation.

The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton read clause 6 of the bill. That clause is simple compared to clauses 9 to 11 inclusive. When I first saw the bill I did a careful study of it, and I did relatively well in understanding what it meant until I reached clauses 9 to 11. I sat down with a pencil and paper, as did many of my colleagues, in an attempt to try to understand what those clauses meant, and it seems to me that unless one has a computer or has studied higher mathematics, it is an impossibility to understand what it is all about.

Perhaps the minister has access to a computer or to someone who has studied higher mathematics. He did give some examples in his speech in the House. He spoke about benefits if the plan had started in 1965 and carried on until 1975. He spoke of the amount of benefits a producer would receive for the period 1968 to 1971. Presumably he was working on the basis that the producer had contributed the maximum for the years 1966, 1967 and 1968. But what would the payment be to the farmer if we started in 1975 and the net cash flow for each of the next three years was below the five year average? This is something hon. members should know, and something members of farm organizations and individual farmers should know so that they can study the bill and understand it.

There has been the suggestion by hon. members on this side of the House that the stabilization bill should be tied into the Crop Insurance Act. The minister has said that this is impossible. I believe that it is possible and that it can easily be done. It needs some study, perhaps, but I sincerely believe that the matter of combining the stabilization bill with the Crop Insurance Act should be seriously considered.

The bill as it stands covers the whole of the Canadian Wheat Board area. I can visualize many areas over the years where no payment will be made under this legislation where there will be crop failures, perhaps due to isolated areas of drought, hoppers, Bertha Army Worms and other problems, but the Wheat Board area as a whole will have an income which will prevent payment out to these areas.

It will be like the PFAA program when for many years it worked on the block system. There were many instances where farmers with good crops received benefits because the average of the area they were in was low. There were neighbours across the fence who had no crops year after year, but they were in an area where the average was high, and they received no payment. I know, because I lived on a farm which was on the wrong side of the fence.

I submit that the administrative machinery is in place under the Crop Insurance Act to administer a program such as this. The minister has not told us what it will cost to administer this legislation. Will there be a duplication of inspectors? Will the inspectors under the Crop Insurance Act come to the farm one day, and will the inspectors under the stabilization program come to the farm the next day to measure the same bin and perhaps arrive at a different figure? I see the minister smiling.

Mr. Lang: May I ask the hon. member a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Neil: Yes, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Lang: I wonder whether the hon. member can tell me how he develops the fear that any bin measuring is required at all. As I read the bill, everything depends upon the sales of grain. Some of his colleagues may have spoken about on-farm transfers, which were in fact not put into the bill because of the administration which would be involved. There is no necessity for the bins at all. I would like the hon. member to point out where there is any such necessity.

● (2150)

Mr. Neil: In response to the minister, Madam Speaker, I would point out that the bill calls for a year end inventory, and it would seem to me that an inventory would require the measurement of the grain on the farm.

Mr. Lang: Where is the inventory?

Mr. Neil: I would assume the inventory is in the farmer's bins.

Mr. Lang: Nonsense.

Mr. Neil: Where is it?

Mr. Lang: It is not in the bill.

Mr. Neil: Unless the bill has been changed since it was first presented or since I last read it—in any event, Madam Speaker, I do not have the time now to read the bill through, but I will be happy to dig out the particular section and send a note across to the minister later.

I wonder if the minister is afraid to combine this stabilization plan with the crop insurance program. Is he concerned that, because the crop insurance is administered provincially and the stabilization plan will be administered federally, the provinces will get the credit?

Stabilization of income for the western grain farmer is important and essential. It is important that the program be effective and not one that just tosses out a few dollars to the farmer, particularly at election time. I think that the bill should be referred to committee for study and that the minister and officials of his department should appear and give open and frank answers to questions raised by the committee. That information should be fed back to farm organizations and individual farmers. There must be thoughtful study in order that the plan may be workable if it is adopted.

It must be a plan that is as free as possible of red tape, and it must give real stability. It must also be a plan that the producer wants, and that he is satisfied with. It must not be forced upon the producer in the west, because he is an independent person who wants to make his own decisions and not be dictated to by anyone. He is suspicious of government and suspicious of bureaucrats—and who can blame him?

A producer in my riding handed me a news report from the Western Producer of April 10 when I was home last week, which reads as follows:

> Wheat Board Commissioner R.M. Esdale announced April 4 that all quotas on durum and the top three grades of red spring wheat will be open until May 16, when they will terminate.
> Mr. Esdale said the quota changes are necessary to ensure that remaining on-farm supplies of high-grade wheat are delivered into the elevator system between now and mid-May, to meet immediate export requirements at both east and west coast positions.
> "With the recent resumption in export shipments out of the west coast and Thunder Bay, every effort must be made to compensate for the delays we have experienced over the past few months," the commissioner said. "This means that the grain needed to fulfil sales commitments must be moved forward as quickly as possible."

The producer told me that he had the grain, and would like to deliver despite the fact that he was in the process of getting his machinery and his farm ready to seed. But the roads have a ban on them, Madam Speaker. The provincial government will not permit the trucks to travel on the highways, so he cannot deliver. He asks, "Am I to be cut off at May 16 and not allowed to deliver any more grain?" The western grain producer does not take kindly to threats, Madam Speaker. He was threatened by the minister under the LIFT program and told, "Cut back on your grain production or you will have a cutback on your quota." In this case it is, "Deliver by May 16 or you will be cut off—you cannot deliver any more grain this crop year".

The western grain producer is a smart businessman. If left alone and not threatened, not given bad advice, he can operate a good and efficient business. He, and he alone, can tell this government and this minister what kind of stabilization program he needs and what type of program will be efficient. Let us give him a chance to have an input.

We are asking that this bill be not now read a second time but be referred back to the committee in order that the individual producer and the farm organizations can have an input. The committee should travel. There is no point in a committee meeting only in Ottawa and, only organizations appearing before it; there must be the individual input as well.

I would therefore ask, Madam Speaker, that members on both sides of the House support the motion of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker).

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, in rising to take part in the debate on the amendment now before the House—

An hon. Member: It is a filibuster.

Mr. Horner: When the hon. member speaks of filibuster it seems that Liberal members of this House of Commons are so eager to get legislation passed that they forget the purpose of parliament. Parliament is to represent the democracy we still have in Canada.

The amendment which is proposed commends itself to all members of this House. When one studies the track record of this piece of legislation—and I say this to the new members who were not here in 1971—one realizes that the farmers were actually saved money in 1971 by parliament not passing the bill that was then before the House. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board is a great mathematician, so if I am wrong in that statement I am sure he will rise tomorrow and prove it. But I know he cannot, Madam Speaker.

In 1971 the House of Commons saved money for the farmer by not passing a piece of legislation similar to that which is before us now. If the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board had brought in operation LIFT as legislation instead of by order in council and regulations, members who were here at that time could have saved the farmers' money by opposing and defeating that legislation. The minister did not have the farmers' point of view when he brought in that earlier legislation.

May I call it ten o'clock, Madam Speaker.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO RESTRUCTURE RELATIONS WITH DEVELOPING COUNTRIES

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, if we have learned anything in the past year, especially from conferences conducted by the United Nations on the subjects of energy, population, food and the Law of the Sea, it is that all of these problems are not diminished but are interlocked and required an interlocking solution.

It is no longer enough for us to consider unilateral solutions to problems which cross national frontiers and are global in character. We need a comprehensive policy by the countries known as the developed countries, in which we bring together reforms of our trade and international monetary arrangements, our foreign aid programs—all of these things must come together. I think this is one of the things we have learned.

It is not enough for us just to consider CIDA, important as that agency is, and which the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence is now considering. Certainly CIDA needs to be investigated and there are things which the committee needs to highlight, but it is wrong to think that only an examination of CIDA is enough to repair the damage done to the poor nations or the world.

Today I put a question to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), who has just returned after acting in his capacity as chairman of the International Monetary Fund. I asked him about the situation concerning the recovery of the industrialized nations, the rich nations of the west, from the excessive prices that we have had to pay as a result of the quadrupled oil costs of the past year or 18 months, because the International Monetary Fund reported that the industrialized nations have been able in this very short space of time to come back. We have recovered.

The minister responded to me that the situation with the poor countries of the third world is still desperate. It is as it was before. That illustrates my point. Despite all the CIDA aid and other aid of the developed countries to the developing countries, that aid was wiped out because of the escalation of energy costs which has resulted in those countries being unable to buy sufficient fertilizer. It has led directly to famine situations in Africa, India, Bangladesh and other countries of Asia. In short, what do we have?

I wish to quote from a brief presented to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence from the Canadian Council for International Cooperation. I quote:

> No real solution of the food problem can be found unless fundamental social reforms are initiated that will allow the weak nations to share with the powerful in political power and the control of resources. In some way, CIDA could become the government indicator showing the way toward a new international economic order. Along the same line, non-governmental organizations are convinced that they can contribute new thinking. But, to this end, it would be necessary to cut the ties of dependency of the poor on the rich, and recognize that external aid can no more be considered the primary element of Canadian policy toward the third world.

That is where we are now. That is why I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) back in March if he would support the suggestion of a permanent sub-committee of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence to consider international development because of the need for a long-range comprehensive policy that gets us beyond just foreign aid. The Prime Minister said at that time he would welcome suggestions and input from all members of the House. When I put the same question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) in committee, he said he would not oppose it.

Because of the special session on development which the United Nations will hold in September when these problems will come into their proper focus, and this is something for which Canada is now preparing a special policy stand, the time has come for the members of this House to share in the development of a Canadian policy that will reflect a comprehensive way in which the Canadian government can take a leadership role internationally to do that which will go beyond what we have done this far.

I believe the members of that committee are ready to move in this direction. I believe that would be the most constructive way in which we could help to reduce the dependency of the poor countries on the rich countries.

There must be new structures worked out for social reform. It is not enough just to have an interdepartmental committee on economic relations with developing countries. That is quite a mouthful. It is a committee of officials from the various government departments who are meeting to draw up this comprehensive policy about which I am speaking. It is not enough just to have officials from the various departments concerned with Canada's new role internationally, about which the Prime Minister is speaking at the Commonwealth Conference and about which the Secretary of State for External Affairs is speaking.

There are members on the external affairs committee who want to share in the development of the Canadian policy. We can do the same kind of job that was done when there was the special committee on international development at the time of the total foreign policy review in 1970. Many things have changed throughout the world in the short space of five years. We now see the hopelessness of single actions by countries which are not responding to the full approach of the United Nations' desire for a comprehensive policy. This is the way Canada can move ahead.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to respond on behalf of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Breau) to the question from the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche) concerning co-operation between the developed countries and the developing countries of the third world. This is certainly a very appropriate time for such a matter to be raised having regard to the role and activity of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) at the Commonwealth Conference now going on in the Caribbean.

The concern of the government to ensure that developing countries are able to derive greater benefits from their participation in international trade, investment and finance was indicated very well in the Speech from the Throne where it was stated that Canada's contribution would involve us not only in increasing the flow of financial assistance through developing countries but also in re-examining other policies which affect our economic relations with the third world. The Prime Minister reiterated this concern in London.

The interdepartmental committee on economic relations with developing countries was established by ministers at the suggestion of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) to carry out the re-examination of those other policies which affect our economic relations with developing countries. The policies in question fall in the areas of tariffs and trade, investment, the provision of appropriate technology, and financial and monetary policy. They may also touch on questions of transport, energy, resources and agricultural development. The committee is pursuing a continuing review of these policies from the perspective of the bearing they have on Canada's over all relationship with developing countries.

A number of international meetings in the future, at which issues of importance to the developing countries will be discussed, will afford Canada the opportunity to consult with both developing and developed countries with a view to taking appropriate action to respond to the needs and aspirations of developing countries.

MANPOWER—OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—PROPOSED CONTROL OF GRANTS ON A CONSTITUENCY BASIS

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): I rise tonight to follow up a question I put to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) on March 24 concerning the Opportunities for Youth program. My question was:

> Given the fact that the consideration and granting of OFY grants through the use of management area advisory groups is suffering from a lack of information, advice, control, and any indication of managerial competence on the part of his department, is the minister giving consideration to allotment and control of OFY grants on a local constituency basis where the advisory group would at least have some knowledge of the project being considered?

At this point the record reads:

I might say that the hon. members who applauded my question were mainly Liberal backbenchers. The minister replied—I will excerpt parts of what he said:

> We do not have the sound statistical base in such detail as to be usable for OFY allocations at the constituency level . . . . From that stems the problem of having to make allocations in a broader geographical area, such as labour management areas where the consultation process takes place. Also, it was a choice between giving hon. members the opportunity to name people with whom we would consult or arbitrarily, as in the past, have the people with whom to consult in the community selected by the departmental staff.

This is an attempt to excuse a shocking method of dispensing public public funds. I am reminded of the days when Jimmy Walker of New York City was caught the same way. His reply then was: "There comes a time in politics when a man must rise above principle." This seems to me to be what the minister was attempting to do.

Last fall or winter I received a direction from the minister to select two members for this advisory committee from among my constituents, and I did so. Another direction was that one member should be under 25 years of age, and I was fortunate to be able to select two very competent people. This administrative area group comprised five constituencies. We expected there would be ten delegates or members of the committee. I found out, somewhat to my surprise, that there were the two from my constituency, one from Esquimalt-Saanich, none from Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, none from Comox-Alberni, and none from Coast-Chilcotin. So this group was filled in by the Department of Manpower which appointed delegates that it knew, and the members it appointed were largely those people who had had OFY projects the previous year.

The pair that I sent to the committee meetings came back to me somewhat horrified after the first or second meeting and said that fantastic things were going on. There was, to them, this large amount of money, and to me it is a large amount of money, some $750,000, and they had not been given any advance notice or copies of the project summary sheets. Consequently, on the night of the first meeting they were handed hundreds of these sheets and were expected to start getting ready to make decisions regarding disbursements of taxpayers' money on this basis.

I could see no way out of it at that time so I encouraged these two people to continue going to the meetings, and they did so. But the difficulty was compounded by the enormous distances involved. For example, one constituency, that of Coast-Chilcotin, is on the mainland of B.C., and I suppose the closest point from my constituency is 80 to 100 miles away. Yet my representatives were expected to vote on projects submitted from Coast-Chilcotin without their knowing the people involved. In fact, they were fortunate if they knew the people involved in projects submitted from Victoria.

Let me point out that the summary sheets which they received, some of which I have, were models of brevity, certainly not models of any method known to mankind for giving information to other people. I have one in front of me. The name of the applicant does not matter, but this is the entire project description: "The objective of this project is to create a film on the concept of dance improvisation as an art form". I am told that there were five participants, the total work weeks involved amounted to 48, and the salaries to $5,280. With this scarcity of information the people on the OFY committee were expected to allocate funds. It is expected of the people who were appointed to these committees that they would give final advice on this kind of project.

It may be a great thing politically for the Liberal party to be able to disburse vast sums of money. But they need fall guys, and that is where we MP's come in, to take responsibility for the bad decisions. I suggested at one time that we should say we do not want any of this money so we can save the money of the taxpayers, but that just would not happen; the other four constituencies would get that many more projects. So our hands are tied. We cannot save the taxpayers' money, and we have to go along with this idiotic way of disbursing funds.

There may well be some good OFY projects; indeed I am sure there are. I have nothing against the basic concept of trying to get young people into the work force. They have a lot of good ideas, but how on earth are we expected to judge the good from the bad on the information provided? I have a booklet that lists the previous year's projects, but once again there is no information about whether any given project was any good or whether it was in fact accomplished. All we know is that the money was paid out. The book contains hundreds of projects. For example, this is the one for Ganges:

Ganges—Salt Spring Youth Activity Centre (4X 1339) To provide a recreational and education experience for children on Salt Spring Island: $9,523; Jobs—12; Linda Stafford, Rainbow Road, 537-2937

The people on the committee could not tell whether that project was ever carried out, whether it was considered a good, bad, or indifferent project.

If the OFY is to go on, Madam Speaker, and to get the support of the community which the projects may well deserve, then we must have some kind of management procedures that will bear some resemblance to reality.

Mr. William Rompkey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to reply to the hon. member. I should like to explain first of all why the management area advisory group system was introduced under this year's OFY program.

It had not been in existence before and was created as an offshoot really of the constituency advisory group instituted under the Local Initiatives Program. This type of consultation had been very successful, and it was thought that some sort of system like that would be appropriate under the OFY program. We needed to have community input and we needed to set up priorities, and we needed somebody who knew the local situation.

With regard to the comment of the hon. member that there were people on these advisory groups who had no knowledge of certain areas in which they were asked to make decisions, that of course was true. Then, of course, members of parliament are really in that same boat. An hon. member for British Columbia quite often has to make decisions in this parliament with regard to the Atlantic area, Quebec, or other areas of Canada with which he may not be totally familiar. In that sense I suppose democracy is a system which has faults, but is still the best system we have devised so far.

There may be refinements of the management advisory group, but this was an effort at least to involve local people in the decision making process. While it might not have been absolutely perfect, I believe it did have some sucess. It certainly did in my area, and the people I recommended to my own advisory groups I believe were quite satisfied that they were able to achieve what they set out to achieve.

Since the OFY program is aimed at a very special segment of the population it was deemed necessary to set up these advisory groups on the basis of management areas. As the minister said initially, we did not have the statistics available at the constituency offices to set up advisory groups in the same way we did with LIP.

Under the management advisory group system, representation can be made by people selected by the member of parliament and, of course, I should point out that an MP still gets the chance to make his own personal representations to the minister. If there should be somebody on the advisory group who does not know parts of the constituency, the MP having a knowledge of the whole constituency can make his representations to the minister on a very sound basis with very sound knowledge.

As the management area advisory group system is an experimental process, and because the program by its nature must operate within very restrictive time frames, some administration problems were to be expected. However, I would think that—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman but his allotted time has expired.

POST OFFICE—ALLEGED LACK OF AUTHORITY FOR SALE OF NON-POSTAL ITEMS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Madam Speaker, I am at a bit of a loss to know whether I should commence my argument when there does not seem to be anybody on the other side to reply, although I received a note a few minutes ago from the hon. member for Lachine-Lakeshore (Mr. Blaker) indicating that he might answer. If the Chair wishes I will proceed.

On Friday last I asked the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) a question concerning an operation of the Post Office, and I should like to read it into the record. It is:

Since the Auditor General has again criticized the Post Office for selling non-postal items to the public without parliamentary authority, a practice which continues today, will the minister tell the House why this program was entered into without proper authorization and why suitable accounts had not been established to determine whether or not the program was profitable?

The minister replied on that day:

—a better authority on the subject is the deputy minister, who has appeared before the miscellaneous estimates committee to explain precisely the reasons for this. I assume the minutes are available. If I am wrong, I will find out for the hon. gentleman and report back on Monday.

At the time I was unable to ask a supplementary question which would have been in these terms: Why have steps not been taken to obtain the approval of this House for the program with which the Post Office is proceeding?

To give the House a little background I would point out that the Auditor General in his 1972 report first mentioned this problem. He referred to the marketing branch of the Post Office which had set up this program. The Auditor General said it involved the creation of 177 new positions, and was established in March 1971. He further stated that in addition to the sale of philatelic and other postal items the branch embarked upon a program of sales to the public of a number of miscellaneous items such as coin sets, commemorative spoons, and so on. He also observed that there are no established policies governing sales, inventories, or other facets of the activity.

Furthermore, he said whether or not the program was profitable in 1971-72 could not be determined as suitable accounts were not established for the activity, and over-all operating statements have not been prepared. The Auditor General suggested that the Deputy Postmaster General seek the opinion of the Department of Justice, and concluded his remarks by saying the department had included proposals for legislative action for the 1973 session by additional provisions in section 5 of the Act.

A comment in terminology similar to that of the 1973 Auditor General's report appeared again in the 1974 report as follows:

We questioned whether this fell within the powers of the Postmaster General.

Then the report continued:

. . . it could not be determined whether the program was profitable since suitable accounts had not been established and over all operating statements had not been prepared.

It concluded:

A suitable financial reporting system to determine profitability by product has not yet been established . . .

Three years in a row this situation has continued. The Deputy Minister appeared before the Public Accounts Committee and, although section 5 of the act gives wide powers to the Post Office but does not give the power to sell at retail non-postal items, the Deputy Minister suggested the section did give that power. There is no way a layman could interpret it in that manner.

Furthermore the minister said that a better authority is the Deputy Minister. Surely someone might argue that there is no better authority than the minister himself. The Deputy Minister told the Public Accounts Committee that he was afraid he could not answer on behalf of the Postmaster General. Now we have a minister telling the House that the best authority is the Deputy Minister, and the deputy minister is telling the committee that he cannot answer for the Postmaster General.

I should like to refer to the minutes of that committee for a moment. This meeting was held last Tuesday, April 29. The deputy minister admitted that their legislation did not cover the powers they were using, and said that they would in fact prepare legislation to be more specific concerning what this might mean. He went on to say that it is their intention to introduce a bill as soon as they can, and added that unfortunately he could not dictate government priority. Finally after persistent questioning he said it has not reached the House because it never reached bill stage.

He said the motive was profit. They wanted to reduce the deficit of the post office, in other words, produce a little profit. He actually said, "to increase the revenue which actually reduces the deficit". Well, now, it is obvious if one wants to produce a profit and determine whether or not one is producing a profit, one needs to provide the proper accounts. The Auditor General observed at the committee just last week that the Post Office was not authorized to do this anyway, and they agree with that. He continued by saying that there is no way to determine whether or not a loss is being incurred, but if a loss is being incurred he said he thinks it is fair to say this is an unauthorized drain on the public purse. The Public Accounts Committee in its fifth report stated:

. . . a government department should not initiate or take any action that is not authorized by Parliament even though it contemplates that Parliament may eventually take action to provide that authority. It considers that the actions of government departments must be limited at all times to the legislative authority existing at the time the action is taken.

If there were any doubts that the Post Office was continuing to carry on with this unauthorized practice, let me read from the most recent list of products the Post Office is offering for sale, and it includes mint sets dated 1975. In addition to that, there are some strange things called—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. William Rompkey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I am happy to reply to the hon. member on behalf of the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) with regard to the selling of retail items through the Post Office. He has asked why the Post Office entered into these transactions. In 1970-71 when the Post Office embarked on a program of offering for sale certain items through some postal outlets, it did so in the belief that it had the authority under section 5 of the Post Office Act. I should like to read from that section which states:

> 5(1) Subject to this Act, the Postmaster General shall administer, superintend and manage the Canada Post Office, and without restricting the generality of the foregoing may—
> (c) Establish and operate a system . . . and such other services and systems as he deems necessary or advisable for the efficient operation of the Canada Post Office.

Subsequently the Post Office encountered a difference of opinion with the Auditor General who took the approach that unless the Post Office had specific authority for these sales, it was in fact limited to the activities mentioned elsewhere in section 5.

In the interest of clarification, the Post Office proposed to introduce legislation which would set out specific authority for the sale of what it termed "postal related items". The nature of this legislation would be similar to that included in Bill C-196, an act respecting the 1976 summer Olympic games recently approved by parliament. This legislative amendment, however, was not regarded as a priority item by the government and has not yet been tabled for parliamentary consideration.

Since the Auditor General has registered his concern, the Canada Post Office has restricted its retail operations to convenience postal items related to its philatelic service, or encouraging better packaging, or supporting other government operations.

The government, in tabling proposals for legislative consideration, has devoted attention to matters that were regarded as having greater priority.

With regard to the adequate accounting system let me say that a system of accounting was not introduced which would reflect a full allocation of costs to these convenience items. The department considered that sales of these products would not result in an increase in overhead costs. Consequently the pricing on these convenience items during the initial period was limited to the direct or out of pocket costs plus a mark-up representing a contribution to overhead. The department has since taken steps to introduce an improved form of reporting.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

PROPOSED REFERENCE OF FUNDING OF NATIVE AND ENVIRONMENTAL GROUPS TO STANDING COMMITTEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact recent statements in the House by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan) have undermined native participation in the Berger Commission, and in view of the fact that Mr. Ian Scott, counsel for the Berger Commission, has stated that the inquiry was advised by the Department that the minister does not wish to support environmental organizations through the inquiry's operating budget, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil):

That the critical matter of funding for the native and environmental groups be referred immediately to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion is proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43 and requires unanimous consent of the House. It there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT IN SENATE OF BILL TO INCREASE MEMBERS' SALARIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to present a motion under Standing Order 43 which is of urgent and pressing necessity. The urgency has to do with the state of our economy and also the need to establish the credibility of the leadership being given at this time. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman):

That this House calls upon the government to instruct the government leader in the Senate to propose an amendment to Bill C-44 imposing a limit on any increase under that bill of 12 per cent or $2,400, whichever is the lesser.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the motion. It being proposed under Standing Order 43 it cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO EFFECTIVENESS OF MODIFICATIONS TO DC-9 AIRCRAFT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43, namely that an Air Canada DC-9 on flight 223 departing from Ottawa at 2.35 p.m., May 1, destined for Winnipeg and Regina, was abruptly returned to Ottawa airport due to faulty equipment in the depression components, causing upheaval in the luggage compartment and concern to the passengers. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie):

That this House instruct the Minister of Transport to conduct an inquiry into the efficiency and effectiveness of the 21 modifications performed on its fleet of DC-9 aircraft by Air Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The motion being proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43, it requires the unanimous consent of the House before it can be debated. Is there unanimous consent?

REASON FOR ALLEGED SUPPRESSION OF FIRE COMMISSIONER'S REPORT CONCERNING DANGER OF BOAT FIRE DURING LOCKING PROCEDURE ON CANALS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to propose a motion which is self-explanatory. In view of the existence of a report labelled "Restricted and Privileged" made by the Dominion Fire Commissioner and submitted on October 2, 1974 to Parks Canada, which declares in part, with reference to all canals operated by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, that a boat fire occurring any time during a locking procedure would bring a major loss of life, and which makes four specific essential recommendations for immediate adoption for human safety, the House requests the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan) to make a statement as to why this report has never been made public, why the recommendations contained therein have never been carried out, and assuring the House that immediate steps will be taken to remedy this shockingly dangerous situation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion is proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43. It cannot be presented without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—PRESENT STAGE OF DISCUSSIONS SEEKING CONSENSUS ON RESTRAINT—STAGE AT WHICH MINISTER MIGHT PRESENT HIS VIEWS TO ORGANIZED LABOUR

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In early April he advised the House that the first stage of the consensus talks was over. Yesterday the minister alluded to the idea of a final stage of the discussions. Would the minister tell the House whether we are now witnessing the middle stage of the discussions and, if that is the case, how long will this non-defined middle stage continue?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I said yesterday that if it appeared that there was a possibility of getting into the final stage by the end of the week, the final stage would be concluded by the end of the month.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I recognize that for the Minister of Finance, of course, all the world has become a stage and he will understand that I am only trying to play my part.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the minister having said yesterday that if he accepts an invitation to sell his consensus program to organized labour it would be at a later stage, I should like to know whether that would be part of a new stage, whether it would be part of the final stage, or is it some undefined stage of some other stage?

● (1410)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I said yesterday that if the leaders of organized labour felt it would help matters after their meetings today and tomorrow, I would be quite willing to appear before them to do what I could to explain the process.

[Mr. Cossitt.]

INFLATION—LACK OF PRECISION IN GUIDELINES FOR RESTRAINT TO SECTORS OTHER THAN LABOUR

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Just one final supplementary question at this stage, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the documents which apparently have been sent to representatives of organized labour for their consideration seem to set forth quite precise forms of restraint for them to consider but very imprecise forms of restraint for other principal sectors of the economy, I should like to ask the minister, in all seriousness and very earnestly, whether he is supplementing the restraints he proposes for other elements of the economy in order to avoid what I would call the comedy the government has been going through all winter and spring, now degenerating into a real tragedy for the people of this country?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the documents to which the hon. gentleman refers must have been earlier working papers, because the documents now being discussed include moderation on the part of all sectors of the economy.

INFLATION—METHOD BY WHICH UNORGANIZED WORKERS WOULD BE GIVEN EIGHT PER CENT INCREASE ACCORDING TO GUIDELINE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance concerning the interesting guidelines that have been circulated. These guidelines propose a minimum increase of some 8 per cent. I should like to ask how the government plans to have unorganized workers in particular get even that 8 per cent to which the government says they are entitled when they are outside a trade union movement and do not have anyone to bargain for them? More particularly, if the minister wanted to get acceptance of the principle of certain minimums for low income Canadians why was there not embodied in the proposal the suggestion that the federal minimum wage be increased and that the guaranteed minimum income program which the Minister of National Health and Welfare has been talking about for some years now should be implemented as soon as the program is brought into effect?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the document to which the hon. member refers, as I said yesterday, is among working papers that have been circulated over a period of time. They do not represent a definitive position on the part of the government, which is still considering these documents, nor a definitive position on the part of leaders of the labour movement, leaders of the business community or other segments of the economy. I might just add that in so far as organized labour is concerned, the leaders have been particularly anxious to ensure that any consensus which is arrived at takes into consideration the unorganized labour force of the country.

INFLATION—REASON FOR SPECIFIC PROPOSALS TO LABOUR CONCERNING INFLATION BUT NOT UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, since according to the expert opinion of many there is now a turn-around taking place in the North American continent with the problem of inflation diminishing in comparison with the problem of unemployment, which most people expect to increase, and this is supported by most recent indicators, will the minister inform the House why the proposals that were sent to organized labour and provincial governments contained certain specific targets for the reduction of inflation, which is not likely to be the increasing problem, but contained no specific targets or other suggestions, and not even an intimation of them in respect of the reduction in unemployment levels?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am just suggesting to the hon. member that a large number of working papers have been circulated, but I am not going to sustain or base my position on any alleged working paper that may have been published by the media. What I am saying to him is that inflation and unemployment are equally difficult problems for this country to face and unless we can solve the problem of inflation, unemployment will become worse in terms of the stimulus injected into the North American, particularly American, economy. Inflation remains a recurring problem in terms of our competitive position with the United States and other major competitors and the disadvantage we will incur and are incurring in terms of our costs will become very dangerous for this country in the next 12 to 20 months unless we do something about it now.

INFLATION—REASON FOR FAILURE TO MAKE PROPOSALS CONCERNING RENT INCREASES AND HOUSING

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, since one of the major aspects of the recent increase in the cost of living, and presumably in the near future, is the question of housing and the level of rentals, could the minister explain to the House why there was nothing in the several proposals that would have dealt with the problem of restraining rent increases and increasing the supply of housing, both of which steps are essential if we are to bring down the cost of living as affected by the cost of housing accommodation?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I said to the Leader of the Opposition, the documents to which he was referring were incomplete because every segment of the economy is being called upon to exercise moderation.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SUGGESTED RESIGNATION OF SOLICITOR GENERAL BECAUSE OF VIEWS ON CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Solicitor General.

Parliament passed an act on capital punishment for murder of policemen. Now, after having voted for that act, the Solicitor General stated last week that he would not respect the decision of Parliament. Since the minister has decided not to respect the laws of the land, would he at least have the decency and courage to resign as minister?

[English]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, Parliament also adopted a law which provides for commutation of sentences. I must say in voting for the law the last time I felt we were moving in the right direction toward the policy I approved of, but I have no intention at this time of taking the step indicated by the hon. member.

POSSIBILITY OF REFERENDUM ON CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

Since those two bills were passed and bearing in mind the commutation provided for, according to a recent scientific poll on public opinion, 70 per cent of the Canadian people are in favour of keeping the death penalty. Does the Solicitor General intend to have more serious consultation with the people?

[English]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I have no plans to have any kind of a referendum, but we are in consultation on a continuing basis with citizens and citizen groups. As a matter of fact, last month I consulted two groups of policemen on this subject. I propose to continue consultations but have no intention to have a referendum.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a last supplementary.

Has the Solicitor General been in touch, in any way, with the six Toronto idlers who have pitched their tents and continue their hunger strike? Finally, have the police forces of Canada had some influence over the behaviour of the minister?

[English]

Mr. Allmand: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have had no communication with the group which is demonstrating in front of the Don Jail in Toronto. With regard to the second part of the question, yes, I have been impressed with the position of the police on many matters but the one position that some of the police maintain with regard to capital punishment I cannot accept.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO DATE OF BUDGET

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. As we pass through stage after stage of consensus discussions while unemployment rises, inflation continues and our trade slumps into deficit, would the minister indicate when we may expect the budget and whether he is still hopeful it will be brought down in May or must we wait until June?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Roughly that is the case, Mr. Speaker. I hope to be able to present a more definitive date in due course.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary again is addressed to the Minister of Finance. In view of the urgency of the matter would the minister indicate if it is likely that the budget will be presented in the first two weeks of June or in the last two weeks of June?

● (1420)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The hon. gentleman will just have to wait.

Mr. Stevens: With the background of Canadian consensus chats and their inflation orientation, would the minister indicate whether, in his consensus discussions with the OPEC countries, the possibility of an oil price increase in September was raised and, if so, did the minister tell the representatives of those countries that he felt that a price increase was not warranted and Canada would not follow their lead, if taken, or did he in effect—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Even the hon. member would recognize that there is great difficulty in connecting that as a supplementary question to his first one.

ENERGY

OIL—REASON FOR REDUCTION IN EXPORT TAX—EFFECT OF DECLINE IN EXPORTS ON EQUALIZATION OF DOMESTIC PRICE

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Has the decision of the National Energy Board to reduce the export tax on Canadian crude by 80 cents any implications for the government's policy with respect to the export of crude oil at the rate of 680,000 barrels a day in mid-summer? In other words, was the reduction made because of the decline in markets there or has there been some fundamental change in our decision regarding the amount of oil we want to export?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the target we set for 1975 was 800,000 barrels a day. In fact, the level has been much lower, around 650,000, and indeed in the last several months it has been in the neighbourhood of 500,000 barrels a day. The decision to lower prices was made partly because of the representations received from western Canada and partly because of the desire to maintain the exports at a certain level. That was the basis for dropping the price, to meet the competition in the U.S. There has been no fundamental change in the maximum levels we had in mind.

Mr. Gillies: As I understand it, basically the answer is a softening in the market rather than a change in policy. What implications does this decline have on our policy of equalization of oil prices across the country?

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The decline in exports will have an effect on the extent to which resort will have to be made to the general revenues for the purpose of paying compensation. If indeed there is an increase in exports, it is believed that the increase in volume going through would more than counterbalance the revenue dropped through the export tax. The over-all level of exports being somewhat lower has meant a greater exposure for the treasury, than was the case when the export tax was at a higher level.

Mr. Gillies: May I ask for a clarification of the last answer, Mr. Speaker? Is it the minister's contention that the reduction of 80 cents will stimulate sales sufficiently to reduce the demand on the general revenue fund in terms of the compensation program?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): A more accurate description would be that the deterioration in the export tax receipts would not continue.

OIL—POSSIBILITY OF CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES ON REDUCTION IN EXPORT TAX

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. As I listened to the answers given by the minister I was wondering whether the decision to cut the export tax by 80 cents per barrel of crude was taken by the National Energy Board, or was it arrived at in consultation with the provinces and, if so, what provinces were consulted?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we have had representations from the heavy oil producers and from Saskatchewan. They stated that because of the shut-in of capacity there they were suffering economic hardship. The decision, of course, is made by the board from month to month on its analysis of the U.S. market. The figures produced represent the board's conclusions as to the appropriate price levels for Canadian oil, with the consequent effect on the export tax.

Mr. Woolliams: My question to the minister related to consultation with the provinces, but the minister spoke about submissions from the provinces. Was there consultation by the federal government with the provinces and, if so, with which provinces? That was my question. Was there consultation or was it a unilateral decision?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The decision, of course, was that of the Energy Board and the government, but it was based upon representations received by me from the province of Saskatchewan, and as I recall, by my officials from the province of Alberta with regard to the levels of exports.

PUBLIC SERVICE

NURSES IN HALIFAX—REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF WAGE PARITY IN VIEW OF POSSIBLE STRIKE

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the President of the Treasury Board. It arises from the fact that the nurses at Camp Hill Veterans Hospital in Halifax have rejected a conciliation award and are considering strike action. Would the minister consider, in making up his mind whether to make a new offer to them, that all his Liberal colleagues from Atlantic joined Progressive Conservative candidates in the last federal election in calling for wage parity? That is what the nurses want.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the conciliation report has been a unanimous report from the president, the representative of the Treasury Board, and also the union. We have accepted it, and we believe it is fair to all nurses throughout Canada.

[English]

NURSES IN YUKON—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO MAINTAIN SERVICE IN VIEW OF STRIKE

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I will ask the shy and retiring minister what steps his department is taking in connection with the Yukon-wide strike of federally employed nurses, which is effectively shutting down all hospital services in the Yukon save only for emergencies.

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, all essential services are guaranteed in institutions and hospitals under the responsibility of my department. A number of nurses have been designated to provide the necessary services to those who need medical care. We will, however, respect the right to strike given to all other nurses.

[English]

NURSES IN YUKON—GOVERNMENT VIEW OF REQUEST FOR PARITY OF SALARIES

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): My supplementary question is for the President of the Treasury Board. By way of enlightenment for the Minister of National Health and Welfare, even the designated nurses in the Yukon are on strike. Is the President of the Treasury Board actively considering the crippling strike now under way in the Yukon with respect to health services, and if so, is he taking any steps to bring the nurses' salaries to parity, as they are asking, or as a minimum, to raise their salaries to the amount being received by garbage collectors in the city of Whitehorse?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, a conciliation board presented a unanimous report on that subject and we accepted it. We think that this report gives justice to everyone. As for those who do not have the right to strike, I ask them to go back to work, because the government's policy is that we will not tolerate people going on strike when they cannot legally do so.

[English]

STRIKE OF WORKERS AT CHARLES CAMSELL HOSPITAL—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO SETTLE

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to be parochial, but in view of the recent strike of 100 members of the Public Service Alliance of Canada in Edmonton which has halted all surgery at the Charles Camsell Hospital, has the minister, or the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, done anything to bring the two sides together in order to restore this vital service?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I take the hon. member's question as notice.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—POSSIBILITY OF GUIDELINES ON PRICE INCREASES—REASON FOR GOVERNMENT CONFIDENCE IN SUCCESS OF VOLUNTARY GUIDELINES

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Judging by the work papers or discussion papers which have been distributed to labour unions preparatory to a meeting to be held tomorrow, the government appears to be very willing to be specific regarding limitation on wage increases. Is the government equally willing to be specific on price increases, and does it have in mind any penalties which it would impose for non-compliance with regard to either limiting wage increases or price increases?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we are trying to move toward a voluntary agreement in this country.

Mr. Hees: As this appears to be about the same kind of approach as was made by the government in 1970, which failed dismally, does the government have any indication that the present approach will be any more successful? If so, what reason has the minister for feeling confident—the government is dealing with the same people in the same kind of way?

● (1430)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I think the situation facing the country today is far more apparent, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Questions

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CONFERENCE ON TREATY ON NON-PROLIFERATION OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS—SUGGESTED AGREEMENT NOT TO SELL REACTORS TO NON-SIGNATORY COUNTRIES

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. In light of the statement issued by the minister today regarding the important conference at Geneva to review the provisions on the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, will the Canadian government, in addition to the proposals and policies outlined in the statement, give consideration to putting forward to the conference a proposal that the signatories of the treaty, including Canada, agree not to sell nuclear reactors or other materials capable of being diverted from peaceful purposes for the creation of materials for nuclear weapons to any country which is not a party to the non-proliferation agreement and which does not accept the safeguards prescribed by the International Atomic Energy Agency?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member will realize, the way his question is asked, there is no provision in the treaty covering the case he mentions. But it is certain that many countries interpret the treaty, in particular Canada, or promote an interpretation of the treaty according to which the government which signed the treaty do not accept to sell any atomic products to nations that did not sign the treaty, unless the transaction includes the very strict safeguards Canada applies to all transactions of this kind.

[English]

Mr. Brewin: A supplementary question. Will the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs seek consideration of Canada's trying to get an amendment to the treaty that will make it clear that the nuclear reactors and similar devices that can be diverted to the production of nuclear weapons, will not be sold to countries that will not sign the agreement nor accept the inspection and safeguards of the International Atomic Energy Commission. I suggest to him that this is a very practical matter because I understand that Canada is contemplating sales to some countries which have not yet accepted either the treaty or the safeguards.

Mr. Pelletier (Hochelaga): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I will convey this suggestion of the hon. member to the proper authorities. I want to be very precise, however, and repeat that each party to the treaty does undertake to provide nuclear equipment or material to other states only if it is subject to the safeguards of the International Atomic Energy Commission.

INFLATION—POSSIBILITY CONSENSUS PROGRAM ON RESTRAINT MAY BE SELECTIVE RATHER THAN COMPREHENSIVE

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday the minister said that it is still premature to speak about precise guidelines on all forms of income and prices. Earlier today he said that his policy would call for moderation on all sectors of the economy. Has the government made the decision, in principle, that the program must be comprehensive, must include all forms of income and prices or is the government now envisaging a kind of selective program with no specific guidelines on certain areas such as dividends, metals, shelter and others?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think it is obvious that if there is to be any long term program it should embrace the total economy.

Mr. Fraser: A further supplementary. Can the minister assure the House that this is in fact government policy and that it has been clearly put forward to the representatives of labour who are meeting tomorrow?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, that is the basis on which we are discussing matters. There is no government policy until we are assured of agreement.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

PROFIT-SHARING PLAN FOR NORTHERN OIL AND GAS—EXTENT OF DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN INDUSTRY AND GOVERNMENT

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of certain statements that the minister made to the Independent Petroleum Association in Calgary last Thursday, can the minister advise the House to what degree discussions were held between officials of the oil industry and the government before he made his statement concerning the proposed profit-sharing plan for northern oil and gas exploration and development?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, there have been some ongoing discussions, without actually getting into the precise details, about the type of regime that we are planning. This was the general nature of the discussions.

Mr. Neil: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. To what degree will discussions be held with industry officials before the details of the profit-sharing plans are finalized?

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, it is not only a question of the profit-sharing plan but the total regime or system that we are dealing with at this time. There will be ongoing discussions prior to the matter being finalized.

POSSIBILITY OF INQUIRY UNDER LABOUR CODE INTO ACTIVITIES OF THE SEAFARERS' INTERNATIONAL UNION

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. Now that certain allegations, information and evidence have been before the government for several months, and in particular before the minister for several days, respecting blacklisting, hiring hall practices and other employment practices of the SIU, is the minister going to order an inquiry under section 65(1) of the Canada Labour Code or some related section or one of the other statutes under which he has power to order an inquiry?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have had the report for several days—since last Thursday, I believe. It is receiving active consideration and I hope to be in a position to announce the government intentions within the next few days. In the meantime, I should like to remind the House, and the hon. member, that as far as any abuses connected with hiring hall practices are concerned, I have already indicated that in our next batch of amendments to the Canada Labour Code, which is fairly new, will be included amendments to deal with the whole question of abuses in hiring hall practices. As I said, I hope to have a report for the House within a few days.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO STIMULATE THE FOREST PRODUCTS INDUSTRY

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance and concerns the prolonged difficulty experienced by the forest and wood fibre industries in Canada. In light of drastic cutbacks on purchase commitments for pulp and paper products recently announced by our three major trading partners, Japan, Germany and Great Britain, and in light of the continued recessionary trend in the lumber industry, can the minister advise the House today what measures, if any, the government intends to take to stabilize this commodity group which represents by far the largest manufacturing capacity in the country?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have been reviewing this matter continually with my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I should say to the hon. member that it is a little difficult to sustain export oriented industries when the economies of our three largest customers, the United States, Japan and the United Kingdom and some other countries that are markets for wood products are in a state of recession.

Mr. Oberle: A supplementary question. Since this commodity group represents not only the largest capacity of manufacturing in Canada but also employs one million people, can the minister tell the House if the difficulties we are presently experiencing will be reflected in the forthcoming budget and in the consensus discussions with labour?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the subject the hon. member raises is, of course, relevant.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CLEANING UP OF QUEBEC RIVERS—POSSIBILITY OF AGREEMENT WITH QUEBEC

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of the Environment.

Considering that a number of Quebec industries have to face river water pollution problems and that they shall have to spend considerable sums of money to process such waste waters, can the minister inform the House whether or not an agreement has been signed between Ottawa and Quebec to offer financial assistance to such industries so as to help them fight more effectively water pollution in our rivers?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, there already exists a program to facilitate the fight against water pollution so that industries wishing to obtain anti-pollution equipment may do so. The program was established by the Minister of Finance and its aim is to allow depreciating the cost of such equipment over a relatively short period of time.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary.

Are the industries concerned authorized to deal directly with Ottawa on this matter, or does the government of Quebec have authority to intervene so that the projects involved are first accepted at the provincial level?

Mrs. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, this is a federal program, and the industries may contact directly the federal Minister of Finance in this regard.

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO PREVENT CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS FROM DUMPING MATERIAL INTO HAMILTON HARBOUR

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I hope you will allow my supplementary question. We are talking about the pollution of waters and it concerns Hamilton Harbour. In view of the recent court decision which indicates that the law passed by the province of Ontario regarding the conservation authority is ultra vires of the province of Ontario in so far as that law purports to apply to the CNR, and as, by way of an order in council approved by the minister's department in 1973, the CNR is still dumping or intends to dump in Hamilton Harbour, will the minister use his influence with his cabinet colleagues to see to it that such order in council is revoked.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am ready to hold new discussions on this matter.

Mr. Alexander: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the confusion arising from the complexity of the jurisdiction which involves the city of Hamilton harbour, the Hamilton-Wentworth region, the province of Ontario and the federal government—a confusion brought about by the Hamilton Harbour Commissioners Act which was set up in 1912—will the minister assure the House that he will meet with representatives of the Hamilton-Wentworth region, the city of Hamilton, the province of Ontario and the CNR, in order to determine how best we can update the Hamilton Harbour Commissioners Act and meet the several needs existing within the several jurisdictions just referred to?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, in his first question the hon. member asked me to authorize the revocation of an order in council of the cabinet. This authority I do not have. Now, he wants me to organize a federal-provincial conference, which is not my responsibility. But I can promise him so far as CNR is concerned, for which I am responsible to the House, that I will talk with them and try to convince them not to do these things.

HEALTH

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE CONNAUGHT LABORATORIES PHARMACEUTICAL PRODUCTS MEET PROPER STANDARDS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare? In view of the great anxiety caused by the acknowledged deficiencies in the production of biological products by CONNLAB, can the minister now assure us that these deficiencies have been corrected and that CONNLAB is following procedures required by the producers of other high quality pharmaceutical products and by other CDC subsidiaries selling comparable products in this country and abroad.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, to the last part of the hon. member's question, the answer is an unqualified yes. As to the first part, I do not know whether deficiencies are still being corrected or whether any correction which was required has already taken place. I will inquire; but I can assure the hon. member and the House that we have had the full co-operation from CONNLAB in that respect, as good co-operation as from any other firm in the country with which the health protection branch must deal.

Mr. Rynard: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister state how many vaccines have had to be discontinued by CONNLAB because of quality or otherwise and if the manufacture of any of those vaccines has been transferred to other countries? If so, does the minister have the figures?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I do not know, but I will inquire for the hon. member.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NAMIBIA—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PREVENT FALCONBRIDGE MINES FROM EXPLOITING WORKERS AND END PRIVILEGE OF CLAIMING FOREIGN TAX CREDITS

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of Canada's support of the UN position regarding South Africa's continuing occupation of Namibia and in view of the fact that Falconbridge Nickel Mines is being permitted, under section 126 of Canada's Income Tax, to claim foreign tax credits for taxes and royalties paid to the South African government because of its Namibian mining operations, can the minister inform this House what steps the government intends to take to put to an end this practice which only strengthens South Africa's illegal occupation of Namibia?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government has been studying the recent declaration on Namibia of the United Nations official concerned with this matter and we are looking at the implications, to see what effect this will have on the operations of Canadian companies in Namibia. When this study is complete we will make the results public.

Mr. Rodriguez: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since it is obvious that this government does not intend to interfere with Falconbridge's and South Africa's exploitation of Namibian material resources, is the minister prepared to use the good offices of his position to intercede on behalf of the Namibian workers and insist that Falconbridge Nickel Mines Ltd. end its pernicious practice of using contract labour in its Namibian mining operations?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with the premise of the question. After all, I have answered that the government was studying the particular report which has been made. Since the hon. member does not agree with that position, I have nothing to add.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CIRCULARS CONCERNING NATIVE RIGHTS AND OBLIGATIONS—REQUEST FOR CONSULTATION WITH FEDERATION OF SASKATCHEWAN INDIANS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has to do with the policy circulars which have been issued by his department concerning Indian rights and obligations. As the Federation of Saskatchewan Indians as well as the chiefs of the various tribes in that province have taken strong objection to those circulars, on the ground that they were drafted without Indian consultation and represent an arbitrary, bureaucratic action, and that the implementation of the guidelines would result in the loss of their tribal identity, would the minister be prepared to hold back the application of these guidelines and circulars until there has been the fullest consultation, so that the Queen's wards shall not have their rights sacrificed in any way.

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. member has, I take it, referred to the local government guidelines and the education guidelines. First, I do not accept the suggestion that there has not been consultation. There has been considerable consultation on these guidelines.

Mr. Diefenbaker: With whom?

Mr. Buchanan: With the Indian people, or the National Indian Brotherhood. I indicated to them in a letter that the ones which have been proclaimed will remain in force, but we regard them as being of an interim nature and will review them at the end of the year. With respect to the ones which have not been proclaimed, we would wait for their response, which would be in addition to the discussions we have had to date and we shall give them until June 1 to respond to the ones which have not yet been put into force.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Apparently, consultation in the mind of the minister and consultation in the minds of Indians are two different entities. They are at two stages, if that is the proper expression to use today.

In view of the fact that the Saskatchewan Indians and the Federation have been consistently law abiding and reasonable in their representations, will the minister not reconsider what will obviously result in a feeling of deep resentment among the Indians for failure to consult in the true sense of the word?

Mr. Buchanan: I share the high opinion the right hon. gentlemen has expressed for the Federation of Saskatchewan Indians. On the other hand, to balance this, there are the requests which many chiefs and councillors have been making to us to lay out the guidelines related to all these funds they are now handling on behalf of the department. We are prepared to regard these guidelines as being of an interim nature. If they create difficulties and problems, we are prepared to change them.

PUBLIC WORKS

DREDGING—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF ADEQUATE SUPERVISION OF CONTRACTS

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works who, by his own admission, says there are four separate agencies responsible for the letting of dredging contracts in Canada. In addition, mention has been made of the many reports and comments of the Auditor General since 1963. May I ask the minister why, in these circumstances, his department made no attempt to bring together all these agencies to supervise dredging contracts and contractors?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): The new interim policy was brought about only as a consequence of police activity last fall. The suspicion of collusion against which these measures are now directed did not exist prior to that.

Mr. Ellis: My understanding is that in 1971 there were already suspicions. Will the minister assure us that from now on these four agencies will be working together to supervise dredging contracts, or, preferably, that one agency, the Department of Public Works, will be doing so?

Mr. Drury: I can give an assurance that there will be continuing co-ordinated supervision with regard to all these contracts.

SYSCO STEEL—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON AID IN FINDING MARKETS TO AVOID LAY-OFFS

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. A few days ago I posed questions to him with regard to the lay-off of over 200 workers by the Sysco Steel plant at Sydney and the possibility of assistance by his department being provided in this unfortunate situation. Can the minister now advise me whether contact has now been made, as he assured me would be the case, and, if so, what has he to report?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Contact has been made and discussions have taken place between my officials and the company. At the moment I cannot report any specific program of assistance for the industry.

Mr. Muir: Knowing that the minister is interested in cutbacks and lay-offs if they happen anywhere in Canada, may I ask whether he made a point of obtaining an assurance from the officials that there would be no further lay-offs by Sysco?

Mr. Gillespie: I do not know whether such an undertaking was given or volunteered by officials of the corporation or not. If the hon. member would like me to do so, I will find out.

SYSCO STEEL LAY-OFFS—POSSIBILITY OF REQUEST BY NOVA SCOTIA FOR SPECIAL PROGRAMS TO ALLEVIATE EFFECTS OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): A supplementary on the same subject to the Minister of Public Works. Having regard to these recent heavy lay-offs in the Sydney steel plant, can the minister inform us whether the Nova Scotia minister responsible for development or the prime minister of Nova Scotia have requested a special program to offset the additional unemployment in the Cape Breton area?

POST OFFICE

SUGGESTED ASSURANCE AUTOMATION, JOB CLASSIFICATION AND SECURITY AND SUSPENSIONS ARE NEGOTIABLE—MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): A question to my old friend, the Postmaster General. In the light of recent statements by the President of Canadian Union of Postal Workers to the effect that such matters as automation, job classification and job security are not being considered in the course of the current contract negotiations, and in the light of the Postmaster General's constant assurances that these matters will be covered in the negotiations, can the hon. gentleman set out his position on this matter in crystal clear fashion? Can he assure us that the current sources of irritation, such as the casual earnings issue and the suspensions arising therefrom, will also be considered?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Beginning with the last reference, the reference to suspensions, that is the 49 or 50 indefinite suspensions which Mr. Davidson says must be retracted before any settlement can be reached—may I say that these indefinite suspensions are now a month old, and during the coming week I hope they will become definite suspensions related to the infractions at the time of the original suspensions. They are not negotiable, even in return for a national collective agreement. In other words, I am not wiping the suspensions out of existence in order to please Mr. Davidson. The quickest way to deal with the problem of automation and all the other problems is for him to stop running around the country and go back to the bargaining table were he belongs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dinsdale: In the light of the acceptance of the recently negotiated contract by the large majority of the Letter Carriers Union, in spite of provocation by the Montreal local, can the minister give an assurance that the same terms of reference will apply in regard to the negotiations now under way with the Union of Postal Workers?

Mr. Mackasey: I am not certain what the hon. member means by "the same terms of reference". If he is asking whether the government, or the team negotiating on behalf of the government, is prepared to sit down and negotiate in good faith, the answer is, definitely, yes. There is no particular reason why a settlement could not be achieved in a matter of a couple of weeks if, for instance, that union were to bargain on money, and bargain on fringe benefits, and come up with a viable formula to deal with technology over the life of the contract, as suggested by outside observers. If, however, one of the conditions of arriving at a settlement is that we waive or cancel the suspensions, I suspect we shall still be waiting for a settlement in 1980.

CANADA MANPOWER TRAINING PROGRAMME

Question No. 2,227—Mr. Herbert:

1. In each year since the inception of the Canada Manpower Training Programme, how many persons have received (a) part-time (b) full-time training?

2. Has a record been kept as to whether any of these persons have received more than one course of training?

3. What is the approximate average weekly cost of full-time training?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. For each year since the inception of Canada Manpower Training Program, the following numbers of persons received training:

Year	(a) Part-Time	(b) Full-Time	Total
1967–68	Statistics not available		183,540
1968–69	147,200	154,000	301,200
1969–70	71,662	233,237	304,899
1970–71	76,223	268,623	344,846
1971–72	49,879	302,231	352,200
1972–73	71,454	281,377	352,831
1973–74	83,508	236,218	319,726
1974–75*	55,537	202,768	258,305

*April 1, 1974—February 28, 1975 only.

2. Yes.

3. The approximate average weekly cost of full-time training per trainee for 1974-75 is estimated at $60.42. Until recently the costs for full-time and part-time training, as paid by Canada to the provinces and other contractors, were not maintained separately. Consequently to arrive at approximate costs for each fiscal year the total number of training-days purchased has been divided into the total cost of training to produce a cost per training day. This in turn has been multiplied by five to produce a cost per training week per trainee. This is a very rough figure, since it ignores shifts in the mix of institution-centred and employer-centred training and in the mix of full-time and part-time training. Subject to these limitations, the approximate average weekly cost of training per trainee by fiscal year is as follows: 1967-68, $28.28; 1968-69, $33.10; 1969-70, $33.52; 1970-71, $35.09; 1971-72, $46.80; 1972-73, $58.13; 1973-74, $64.60; 1974-75, $58.44. It should further be noted that these figures do not include the costs of training allowances, for which full-time trainees may be eligible.

MORTGAGE LENDING AGREEMENTS WITH THE PROVINCE OF NEWFOUNDLAND

Question No. 2,270—Mr. Marshall:

Has agreement been reached between the government and the Province of Newfoundland to extend the mortgage lending programme beyond March 1975 and, if so, what are the details of such agreement?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I have been advised by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows: The provincial government has sought an extension to the lending program under Section 40 of the National Housing Act, and a draft agreement is now with the province for execution. The agreement to extend the program will cover the same terms and conditions as provided for in the original agreement, with the previous restrictions related to the number of units and time limitation being deleted.

PUBLIC SERVICE COMPETITION 74-AGR-CC-HA-19

Question No. 2,278—Mr. Lachance:

Was Public Service Competition 74-AGR-CC-HA-19 as advertised held and, if so (a) how many candidates made application (b) was there an appeal against the competition on the basis that certain requirements were not met (c) on what date will the next competition be held for the position advertised in competition 74-AGR-CC-HA-19 (d) who is holding the position?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows: (a) Seven; (b) Yes; (c) As a result of the first appeal, interviews were scheduled a second time. Thereafter, further appeals were lodged and upheld. It was therefore planned to conduct a new competition in January 1975, but this was delayed by a further action on the competition before the Federal Court of Appeal. (d) No one is holding the position.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

The House resumed, from Monday, May 5, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lang that Bill C-41, respecting the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain and to amend certain statutes in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton) (p. 5468).

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate last evening on the amendment to Bill C-41, I mentioned a number of things. First of all, I suppose I should state clearly that the amendment is asking for a referral of the subject matter to committee without the bill being dealt with in principle. If there is one time in my 17 years of political debating in the House of Commons that I wish the government would adhere to the wishes of the opposition, this is the occasion. I am not given to begging very often, but if it would do the trick I would beg the government to comply with the amendment now before the House.

I intend to deal, within the next 30 minutes or so allotted to me in this debate, with my reasons for this request. But first let me say that something very interesting happened last evening. The hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) was speaking about inventory and the difficulty of equating just what inventory really deals with. The minister in charge of the bill, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang), interrupted the hon. member and asked him this question which is to be found at page 5495 of Hansard:

I wonder whether the hon. member can tell me how he develops the fear that any bin measuring is required—

The minister then asked: "Where is the inventory?" and the hon. member for Moose Jaw replied: "I would assume the inventory is in the farmer's bins." To which the minister replied: "Nonsense".

The minister is piloting the bill through the House and we must deal with the legislation that is before us. At page 11 of the bill, subclause (4) of clause 9, paragraph (A) refers to "the opening inventory, in bushels, of farm stocks of such grain". How do you find a farmer's stock of such grain, Madam Speaker? You measure it in bins most of the time. At least, I hope most farmers keep their grain in bins. The paragraph continues, "for the year under review, determined as being the closing inventory". Paragraph (B) refers to the "closing inventory, in bushels, of farm stocks of such grain determined in December of the year under review".

I do not know whether the hon. member for Moose Jaw is interpreting that particular clause correctly, but I do not know how else to interpret it. When the minister who is piloting this bill through the House says that the equating of inventory in bins is sheer nonsense, one can realize why we on this side of the House would like the whole subject matter of the bill dealing with grain income stabilization sent to the agricultural committee so the committee can hear briefs from farmers and farm organizations.

The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) said in his speech that all farm organizations agree with the bill, that all farm organizations think it is a necessary piece of legislation. He said the same thing of Bill C-19. As reported at page 26 of issue No. 4 of the agriculture committee's proceedings of November 7, 1974, the hon. member said:

It is interesting to look at what the farm reaction has been in fact. According to the announcements and pronouncements of the various farm groups with respect to this two-price wheat program ... every farm group that I have heard of endorsed it. At the moment I cannot think of an exception that voiced a contrary opinion last fall to this legislation.

That is what the hon. member said about Bill C-19, Madam Speaker. I have with me quotations from all the farm briefs, and if time allows I should like to read them. Every farm group that appeared before the committee, including even the Palliser Wheat Growers which the hon. member for Assiniboia brought down here, wanted changes made in the bill. The National Farmers Union wanted changes made, so did the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, Unifarm of Alberta and the Ontario Wheat Growers. So it is only logical that we cannot take the word of the hon. member for Assiniboia in regard to Bill C-41.

To emphasize the conflict of jurisdiction in the field of agriculture, this very afternoon the agriculture committee is sitting. Members of the opposition have stated that this grain income stabilization bill is very complex and confusing and that members of parliament knowledgeable of agriculture should be here, either explaining it to those who do not understand it or listening to the explanations of the experts on the government side who are proposing the legislation. But the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) said, "To heck; that's not even agriculture. The agriculture committee sits". So it is sitting. It is with regret that I have to point that out to the House, because I have always believed that as grain income goes, so goes agriculture for the whole of Canada.

[Mr. Horner.]

Last night I was saying that the Minister of Justice has not done anything beneficial for Canadian wheat farmers during the whole of his political career. The only major piece of legislation that he ever got through parliament was an enlargement, to take into account the costs of production and inflation, of a piece of legislation put forward formerly by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) when he was prime minister at the time the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) was minister of agriculture—namely, the cash advances legislation. What else has the minister done? He brought forward this bill about four years ago. Last night I stated that defeat of the bill four years ago saved the farmers a great deal of money. I went to the trouble of looking up exactly how much money was saved, Madam Speaker. I found that in the crop year 1970-71, under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, $39 million was paid out. In the crop year 1971-72, under the same act, $86,135,000 was paid out.

The defeat of the grain income stabilization bill four years ago carried a price tag: the cancellation of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, the cancellation of PFAA and the cancellation of the government's right or ability to pick up the barley deficits. Those three measures were cancelled in lieu of this grain income bill. Yet in those two crop years alone, over $100 million was paid out through the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. In the crop year 1972-73, $2,918,000 was paid out under the same act and the money went into the Wheat Board pool account. In the crop year 1973-74, $5,832,000 was paid out into the Wheat Board pool account. So somewhere in the neighbourhood of $129 million has been paid out under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. In other words, members of parliament who contributed to the defeat of the grain income stabilization bill saved the farmers $129 million on that basis alone.

That is only one aspect. Another relates to payments under PFAA. In the year 1971, nearly $5 million was paid out to the farmers under PFAA. If we had passed the grain incomes stabilization bill four years ago, that money would never have gone out. In 1972, the amount was $5.4 million, and in 1973 it was $524,000. I have not done the mathematics—I could, because the figures are here before me—but this amounts to about $11 million that would not have been paid out to the farmers had this House of Commons passed the grain incomes stabilization bill of four years ago.

There is another matter involved, and that is deficiencies in the barley pool account for the years 1970-71 and 1971-72. If this House had passed the old grain stabilization bill, the government would not have had to pick up those deficiencies. In 1970-71, the barley pool account lost $9,945,000, and in 1971-72 it lost $3 million. If parliament had passed that bill, the government would not have picked up those losses or paid out those amounts, so in effect parliament saved the farmers millions of dollars which this minister tried to take away from them, and would have if we had readily passed that bill.

The reason I am making this case is to show beyond a shadow of doubt that the complexities of Bill C-41 are not understood by members of this House, so the subject matter should be referred to the committee. Let us take a look at operation LIFT, that other great measure the Minister of Agriculture sometimes likes to boast about while most people realize that it was a colossal error. The minister says this had to be done. I heard him recently in Saskatchewan say that it was just one of those necessary things. He said that world wheat production had to be contained back in 1969. What are the facts? Farmers cut down their wheat acreage at the direct order of the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. I say it was a direct order, but that is a polite term; it was as a result of browbeating and blackmail by the minister in charge of the Wheat Board.

Let me give the House some figures from the 1973-74 annual report of the Canadian Wheat Board. The total acreage in wheat in 1969 was 24,400,000, and in 1970 this had dropped to 12 million acres. That was a reduction of over 12 million acres as a direct result of the order of the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. What happened in the rest of the world in respect of wheat production? Reading from page 3 of the same annual report, we find that world production of wheat back in 1969-70 reached about 10 billion bushels. Production has increased successively each year since, until in 1973-74 world wheat production reached 13.6 billion bushels. In causing the Canadian farmer to reduce the production of wheat by reducing the number of acres, the minister effectively lost markets and sales at higher prices for Canadians. This cost the farmers quite a bit.

Wheat seeded in 1970 would have sold in 1971, 1972 and possibly in 1973. The price to the farmer at that time varied from $2.15 a bushel to a low of $1.60 a bushel. According to this report, the 12 million acres yielded an average of 26 bushels to the acre. Anybody with a pocket computer can figure out what that reduction in Canadian wheat cost the Canadian farmer. The equation is 26 times 12 million times about $2 a bushel. That is colossal amount of money which this minister cost the Canadian farmer. Let me be specific by saying that it was a direct loss to the farmers of Saskatchewan, the very people the minister attempts to represent sometimes in this House.

The most soul-saving thing I can say as a member of parliament representing farmers in my constituency is that I cannot be blamed because the minister did not bring into operation the LIFT program in my area. I was not asked to recommend it to parliament or to vote for it. I was not asked to say whether it was good or bad. At the time I did say it was bad. There were newspaper headlines to the effect that as a result of the LIFT operation some $60 million would be paid out to the farmers. I remember headlines two inches high in the Globe and Mail at that time. The money paid out under the LIFT program was closer to $64 million. I have given the equation regarding how much was lost, and it appears to me that about $600 million was lost of the prairie farmers.

Is it any wonder that with that kind of track record we on this side ask the minister not to bring forward this complex bill and ask us to vote yea or nay on it? Please do not ask us whether we fully understand clause 11 which gives a calculation on the aggregate amount of stabilization payments. We want it worked out. It is not good enough that we understand it; the farmers must understand it. When there is a crop failure the farmers will, without a shadow of doubt, come to their member of parliament and ask why they are not getting some of this money. They will tell us they paid 2 per cent on last year's crop and the government contributed 4 per cent, so they expect to get something out of the fund. We will have to convince those farmers that clause 11 is being interpreted correctly by the officials—and that will not be an easy task.

The farmers have to understand this bill, and they do not understand it today. I suggest that no farm organization today understands either clause 10 or clause 11. In fact, the minister last evening proved beyond a shadow of doubt that, rather then the hon. member for Moose Jaw not having read the bill, the minister has not read it. The minister has to go on his past record in respect of the old stabilization bill. He gave us an equation, in his speech, in relation to his old grain stabilization bill of four years ago. I think I proved beyond doubt that the old bill should have been defeated. Perhaps this one is an improvement. The old bill referred to gross sales, as this one does, although from time to time when reading it I have noted some reference to net income.

I am not suggesting I fully understand the bill, and I am not ashamed to admit that I do not fully understand it. I have a rough idea how it is going to work. However, it is not surprising that farmers in western Canada do not understand it. One of the biggest jokes you can tell farmers at a meeting in western Canada is that whenever the government suggests they should do something, if they do the very opposite they will come out better. That joke goes over well with the farmers because this minister has proved it to be accurate.

Mr. Lang: They laugh, but they don't do it.

Mr. Horner: The minister suggests that they laugh, but do not do it. I suggest that if they work out the equation I gave which shows that the minister cost the farmers some $600 million as a result of his LIFT operation, they will realize that if they do not do the very opposite of what he tells them to do, then they should. There is no question about that in my mind. The minister says they do not do it. Let me quote from the February edition of the Country Guide, a well known publication, one of the better ones. This magazine does not go off half-cocked in respect of its editorials. Generally speaking, research is carried out: the editors of the magazine research articles which they write, having in mind the betterment of agriculture in Canada. This is what appears in the editorial section. The heading reads, "Don't go 'All out'". This has reference to the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Justice telling the farmers to grow all the wheat they can this year. The editorial reads:

● (1520)

Spring isn't far way. The time's approaching when farmers will make final decisions on what crops and what acreages they're going to seed this year.

Since last fall, there's been plenty of advice on that second point. It's mostly come from the mouths of politicians; it revolves mostly around one central message: "Grow everything you can. Canada and the world rely on the heroic efforts of you farmers to keep us from starvation".

That is what the politicians have been telling the farmers. The minister says that the farmers listen to him. This magazine, which publishes and researches articles on western and Canadian agriculture in general, does not quite agree. The article ends saying:

This is not the year to sacrifice the future, or take abnormal risks in order to grow extra grain. At least not unless there's something more concrete than politicians' promises at the end of the road.

It states pretty clearly that the farmers should not buy the promises of politicians but should look for something better. It is as though the farmers listen to the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board and then proceed to do the very opposite. The request by the opposition to refer the subject matter of this bill to the agricultural committee or another committee of the House of Commons bears very careful consideration by the government for another reason. A committee which has before it a piece of legislation can amend its clauses. I should know, because I have moved amendments on a number of occasions. However, if one should amend, say, subclause (b) of a clause, this would affect subclauses (a), (c) or (d). But if the subject matter were referred to committee and the committee heard witnesses, then the legal minds of the Department of Justice and the Department of Agriculture could draw up a bill which would comprise roughly what the farmers and the farm organizations want. This makes much more sense than the proposals of some members of parliament who may have great legal backgrounds.

It is difficult to amend a bill that is already drafted, in order to meet the very divergent views which may exist in the farming community. Prior to this amendment being moved, I stated my opinion that the bill is not regional enough. That question could be dealt with. I have asked myself how we can amend Bill C-41 and equate several regions within the Canadian Wheat Board area. I have looked at this bill and tried to figure out how it could be amended so there would be 14 different regions within the prairie area. I could not figure out a clause which would have that effect. If the subject matter were referred to the committee, a bill could be drafted to deal with the geographic areas which naturally exist on the prairies. The area of the Wheat Board extends from Manitoba to the interior of British Columbia. The Peace River area is a natural geographic area. The inner lake region of Manitoba is another natural geographic area, as is the area around the Carrot River in the Mackenzie District. None of these areas is the same as the Regina plains area.

This bill is not regional enough. Therefore, many farmers feel they could have a crop failure and would not be able to obtain a payment. This bill also deals specifically with the question of sales. Sales depend upon the volume sold and the price. If twice as much is sold at half the price, the total sale is the same as if you had sold half as much. Therefore, it is not good enough to deal strictly with sales. We saw in Canada, during the last 365 days, the west coast tied up for 206 days. This greatly affected sales. In a study entitled "Transportation Implications of Canada's Trade with Japan" by Keith A. J. Hay and S. R. Hill, we find this statement:

This strike, along with a strike by lakes crews, which totally eliminated water movement from Thunder Bay, continued into the next crop year. Bottlenecks have been particularly severe upon westward movement of prairie grain. The Wheat Board estimated that about $350 million of wheat sales were lost in 1974 as a result of transportation difficulties in the west, and countless potential sales were jeopardized with the decline in the Canadian reputation for reliability.

I wanted to put that specifically on the record because this bill deals with sales. Sales can be affected by conditions which have nothing to do with the farmer. The farmer can grow the wheat and pay his costs in respect of fuel, production, machinery and taxes. The Lord, I suppose, can interfere with his crop and instead of bringing rain can bring hail. However, the farmer has other problems with which he must deal which are far beyond his control, such as the problem of moving his grain through the normal pipeline to the markets. We have seen these problems this year.

We have also seen this Minister of Justice interfere directly with collective bargaining. Last May 8 he directly interfered with collective bargaining by telling the unions they were right and the company was wrong. Therefore, he prohibited meaningful negotiations taking place in a two-month period between May 8 and July 8. He deliberately cost the farmers $350 million which the Canadian Wheat Board says it lost in the calendar year 1974. So, is it any wonder that members of parliament become pretty leery about anything this minister touches with regard to agriculture?

The minister was born on a farm, but he left the farm because he hated agriculture. I say to you, Madam Speaker, and to all members of this House of Commons, that he still hates agriculture. He has done nothing for agriculture in western Canada. Every piece of legislation in which he has been involved, with the exception of the cash advances legislation, has cost western Canada money. Every time he turns around he costs western Canada money. The greatest thing the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) could do would be to leave him strictly with justice or some other department. While I do not advocate that the Canadian Wheat Board be placed in the hands of the Minister of Agriculture, I do say: Give me Whelan or anybody other than this minister who has cost the farmers money with respect to every piece of legislation he has attempted to pilot through this House.

The minister of agriculture for the province of Saskatchewan says that we should not rush this bill. All the prairie ministers say that we should look at it because it is not fully understood. All the amendment says is that we should study the subject matter and then determine what we really want. If the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Justice are prepared to put in 4 per cent of the gross sales in the form of government money, the farmers can use that money. Since we do not particularly trust the track record of the minister and the government, this makes sense to me.

Normally, legislation before the House must be dealt with in a hurry because of the need for change. Labour unions must tell their men to go back to work, so parliament has to deal with it; corporate rip-offs take place, so parliament has to deal with them. This is a long-term measure, in the minister's own words. Since only four or five payments will be made in the next 20 years, why tie the farmer that length of time to a piece of legislation which demands that he pay in 2 per cent of the sales without giving him some warning in this complicated bill? No payments will be made in 1975 or 1976 because probably sales will be good and prices may hold up. Payments will be made when the bill has been in effect for a number of years.

Then there is the question of compulsion in the bill. In clause 5 it is stated that by 1978 the farmer must make up his mind whether he wants to opt in or out of the program. I say that if the minister is not careful, farmers will not understand the bill and will not know whether to exercise the option. However, if the committee travels across Canada, studying the subject matter of the bill and discussing it with farmers, farmers will have a better basis for understanding it and they will know whether they prefer to opt in or out of the program and run their own insurance scheme.

For all these reasons, I believe that the amendment before us is justified and in conclusion I should like to plead with members of the House to pay heed to it and vote accordingly.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise again to take part in this debate because I have some additional reasons to put forward for the subject matter of the bill being referred to the standing committee. It is my strong conviction that if that were to happen, as a result of the proceedings of the standing committee and what its members would hear, the minister and parliament would wish to make substantial changes to the legislation before it was brought back to the House. I also want to present the views of one of the provinces which will be affected by this legislation, views that the province is presenting today in Ottawa.

One reason that I think the subject matter of the bill should be referred to the standing committee is that I think members of the committee, farmers and farm organizations in the Wheat Board area, must realize that what the bill does in one area of the western grain industry is to shore up and insure operations on the open market. I know that what I will now say will not be supported by the Conservatives or, for that matter, by the Liberal and Social Credit parties, but it is my opinion and that of my party that this legislation should be applied in such a manner so as not to benefit those who are selling grain on the open market: I must protest this bill being used to shoreup the Winnipeg commodity exchange. If any farmer is foolish enough to sell his feed wheat, oats and barley on the open market and wants to take his chances with the fluctuating, open market prices, I see no reason whatsoever why we should use federal legislation to stabilize income which is obtained on the open market rather than through the orderly marketing system of the Canadian Wheat Board.

So far as I am concerned, if the farmer wishes to become involved with grain speculators, then he should damn well take his chances and forfeit his opportunity to receive any payments from the grain income stabilization plan. The payments should go to those who deliver wheat to the Canadian Wheat Board. The government should licence feed lots and feed mills as agents of the Canadian Wheat Board, so that farmers who deliver directly to a feed lot or a feed mill would be eligible to participate in a proper grain income stabilization plan. As is obvious from the bill, that matter has not been considered by individual farmers and farm organizations.

The major difficulty with the legislation before us is the fact that those who do the best in terms of income, collect the most whenever there is a pay-out. Surely that flies in the face of any principles of a good insurance or stabilization program. One has only to look at any unemployment insurance, health insurance or a host of other programs: this provision in the bill flies in the face of the principles underlying any such program.

In 1970-71, and again in the past few weeks, the New Democratic Party proposed that any grain stabilization program should be integrated and meshed with crop insurance programs. This is the best, easiest, simplest and most understandable manner in which to operate. The two fit logically together. I would point out that with the repeal of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act which was a form of crop insurance—everyone out west called it the "dry bonus" that worked reasonably well and although it was not all-inclusive in the risks it covered, at least it was a beginning, the federal government, to its credit and it is to be commended for it, increased its contributions to the crop insurance programs to cover 50 per cent of the premiums under crop insurance in all provinces. The rate of participation in crop insurance was 66 per cent of farmers in Manitoba and 62 per cent in Saskatchewan. I suspect it was somewhere in the same neighbourhood in Alberta. Each year, thousands of additional farmers come under it and I predict that in another year or two the plan will be almost universal.

When we have that amount of participation, the program will become that much better because under it we will be able to provide greater coverage and greater benefits when crop losses occur. It is logical and proper for an income stabilization plan to be integrated and meshed with a crop insurance program. Crop insurance covers the risks that Mother Nature sometimes inflicts on farmers. Income stabilization will cover economic risks such as the world situation and other conditions over which the farmer has no control.

I agree that the government should be commended for being prepared to put up $50 million or $60 million a year—it might be more than that in some years—out of the national treasury, from all the people of Canada, toward stabilizing the incomes of western grain producers. We all support that idea. But the content of this legislation makes a farce of any proper grain income stabilization program. It completely betrays the principle of a real grain income stabilization program.

I think the government did a deplorable thing when it repealed the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. When it increased its contribution to the crop insurance program it deserved commendation. But there was some $8 million to $10 million left in the old PFAA fund. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) does not want to put that into crop insurance. That is what it was raised for. Levies were imposed on farmers and they contributed to the PFAA fund. It was to help them in the way of pay-outs when they suffered crop losses due to weather conditions and natural hazards. That is what the crop insurance program does now. I would like to know why the minister will not put the money left over from the PFAA fund into the crop insurance program, where it rightfully belongs.

What does the minister want to do? He wants to start his grain income stabilization fund with that money. That money belongs to the crop insurance fund and not to the minister to do with as he pleases. This matter needs to be considered in committee; it is part of the subject matter of the legislation before this House. Even though I have commended the government for its intention to put up $50 million or $60 million per year toward a grain income stabilization program, I want to remind the House that it will not be additional money from Canadian taxpayers; it is money the government had already saved when it succeeded in disposing of the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. When that legislation was in operation, the Government of Canada paid anywhere from $20 million to $65 million per year as its share of the cost of grain storage in the terminals of Canada. That was a good principle: it should have applied to all grains, not just wheat. But the notion as a whole was to contribute toward the cost of a national inventory or national pantry—storage for the world's hungry.

The burden of those storage costs was not borne by farmers alone; the nation as a whole contributed. For the last two successive crop years the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang), through the Canadian Wheat Board, has not had to pay a nickel toward the cost of grain storage. The federal government has saved somewhere between $40 million and $120 million just in two crop years. The government plans through this legislation to give out with one hand money it has already taken away with the other hand. I think it is a disgrace that the government no longer participates in a meaningful way in the sharing of grain storage costs from coast to coast, not just in western Canada. This is a national inventory or pantry which is maintained for our customers, for the aid programs we have and for the needy and hungry of the world.

That kind of program should be reinstated, instead of the minister saying that the government is prepared to pay up to $40 million toward grain storage. The problem is that I am afraid he plans to pay up to $40 million toward grain storage but also to hand out grants, loans and what-not to private enterprise commodity exchange types who want to put up inland terminals which will cost farmers more and will destroy hundreds of communities in the prairie provinces which can and should be viable. These communities are composed of two, three or four generations of people who have put in a lifetime of endeavour.

[Mr. Benjamin.]

When I was listening to the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) the other day, he said that the old grain stabilization bill of 1970-71 was withdrawn by the government because it was compulsory. He was talking about the participation in the plan proposed under the bill before us. I want to remind the hon. member that that is not why the bill was withdrawn. It was withdrawn because the opposition parties in parliament were unanimous in their opposition to the way it was structured and to the way it was intended to be implemented. Every farm organization was opposed to it, all three western provinces were opposed, and the Minister of Justice was stubborn and refused to listen. It required a court case, involving four farmers taking the government and the then minister of finance to court and applying for a writ of mandamus to force the minister of finance to pay $92 million owing to the Canadian Wheat Board by the federal government. That is what forced the withdrawal of that bill, and thank goodness it happened.

While I admit that the minister has made some improvements in this legislation over the old legislation, it still flies in the face of the principles of a good grain income stabilization plan. It may be called a bill guaranteeing incomes, or whatever expression comes to mind. I notice the Minister of Justice has left the chamber, but I see the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. McIsaac) is here and I want to put on record the position of the province of Manitoba. I should tell the hon. member that Manitoba is presenting its position right now to the Standing Committee on Agriculture. I expect he will receive a copy of this tomorrow, or perhaps I can make one available to him tonight. I want to put on the record Manitoba's position as follows:

> Manitoba Crop Insurance Corporation and the Government of Manitoba are very concerned over the proposed Prairie Grain Stabilization Act as set out in Bill C-41. While we commend the Government of Canada for its intention to provide a greater degree of stability for the prairie grain producers, we have serious reservations with regard to the type of stabilization program that is being proposed.
> We said earlier that the objective of crop insurance is to provide farmers with a means to protect themselves against serious financial losses caused by acts of nature.
> One would assume that the objective of the grain stabilization plan would be to provide farmers with a means to protect themselves against serious financial losses caused by economic events beyond their control. Indeed, Bill C-41 is being portrayed as having that purpose.
> We regret to say that if that were the objective of the proposed Prairie Grain Stabilization Act, it could not be achieved by the measures envisaged in Bill C-41. What is more serious in our view, however, is the fact that Bill C-41 does not have as its specific purpose the protection of farmers against losses due to economic events beyond their control. One of the most exasperating aspects of the bill is that it is next to impossible to detect the rationale behind it, and this lack of rationale together with the extreme complexity of the bill makes any attempt at explaining this important legislation to farmers an exercise in frustration.
> Yet, since the scheme proposed in Bill C-41 is a contributory plan, farmers should know what insurance they are buying; in other words, the plan must relate to the needs of individuals, and it should be possible for individuals to determine what benefits would accrue to them if the events against which they are insuring themselves should occur. That is a cardinal principle of all insurance plans, be they private, mixed private and social such as crop insurance, or universal social insurance schemes such as workers' compensation, unemployment insurance, hospital or health insurance.

A second cardinal principle of all such schemes is that indemnities are paid to those who experience the ill effects of the event against which the plan provides insurance, and not to others. The proposed Prairie Grain Stabilization Act sins against both these principles; in fact it completely ignores them.

For example, a farmer who insures his crop with Manitoba Crop Insurance Corporation knows what he insures himself for; he knows to what level he will be indemnified if his yield is below the insured level. A worker who pays unemployment insurance knows what he may expect in benefits in the event he loses his job and fails to find another. That is as it should be. In contrast, a person participating in the proposed Prairie Grain Stabilization Act has no way of knowing when he will receive benefits, how much he will receive, or whether he will receive benefits when he really needs them.

Secondly, Manitoba Crop Insurance Corporation will indemnify only those insured farmers who suffered specified losses but will make no payments to all insured farmers because the over-all yield in the province was below the five-year average. Similarly, the Unemployment Insurance Commission will pay benefits to insured persons who lose their job, but will not make payments to all those making unemployment insurance contributions on the basis that there is a slack in the economy. Yet that is precisely what the measures proposed in Bill C-41 purport to do.

In a nutshell, payments will be made by the grain stabilization fund if the proceeds from the sale of a proportion of the prairie grain crop in any year falls below the average proceeds in the previous five-year period, after adjustments have been made for changes in certain—but by no means all—expenses incurred in production. Participating farmers will receive payments proportionate to their contributions. Whether individual farmers actually suffered declines in receipts or income is immaterial under that plan.

If Manitoba Crop Insurance Corporation operated on that principle it could conceivably have taken the $8.2 million paid in indemnities in 1974 and distributed them to insured farmers on the basis of their premium contributions. It is quite possible that farmers with very high yields would have received large payments and farmers with a total crop loss would have received far less.

I am sure the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) will be interested in what comes next:

If the Unemployment Insurance Commission operated on the same principle as the grain stabilization plan, it would calculate for all of Canada the average annual bill for wages and salaries on which unemployment insurance contributions are made, adjust it for changes in the number of unemployment insurance contributors and for certain changes in the consumer price index, and if the adjusted total wage bill fell below the average of the previous five years, the Unemployment Insurance Commission would make a payment to all wage and salary earners. Each would be paid proportionate to this contributions; those who had paid the maximum would receive most; those who had paid less would receive less, and the unemployed who had made little or no contributions would receive little or nothing. We doubt whether such a scheme to "stabilize the net proceeds from wages and salaries in Canada" would meet with the approval of the Canadian people. Yet this is precisely the method "to stabilize the net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain" that has been presented as Bill C-41 to the Parliament of Canada for approval.

Earlier in our submission we commended the Government of Canada for its intention to provide a degree of stability for the prairie grain producers. We are appreciative of the willingness of the federal government to ask the Canadian people to set aside some $50 million or $60 million per year—perhaps more—to be channelled to prairie grain producers if at some future date economic factors beyond their control cause a severe decline in receipts from the sale of prairie grains. While we appreciate the intent, and while we approve of the establishment of a prairie grain stabilization fund, we respectfully suggest that a more rational, more equitable and more effective plan should be adopted than the one proposed in Bill C-41.

Now we come to the meat of the argument presented by Manitoba, and to their proposal. Indeed, this is what we proposed in 1970-71 but the minister refused to listen. I mentioned it again last Tuesday night. The Manitoba brief continues:

We suggest that the present all-risk crop insurance programs operative in the western provinces could be broadened to include price guarantees. Prices for the various crops could be adjusted from year to year to reflect changes in the cost of production and to protect profit margins so that net farm incomes would be kept commensurate with the general standard of living in Canada. By adding price guarantees to the present yield and quality guarantees of the crop insurance program, farmers could be offered a complete package of basic income protection.

The program could be operated by the crop insurance administration presently existing in the western provinces. With a slight addition to staff, Manitoba Crop Insurance Corporation could administer a much more equitable crop and income insurance program than is envisaged in Bill C-41. It would also make it unnecessary to establish a complete, new administrative organization to administer a separate western grain stabilization program.

Above all, the approach suggested by Manitoba Crop Insurance Corporation is consistent with the cardinal principles of mixed private and social insurance, that the insured knows what he is insured against and what his benefits will be, and that payments are not made at random but to those who need them.

Madam Speaker, if that does not tell us that the subject matter of this bill should be referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture, I do not know what does. If you were to apply the principle of this bill to unemployment insurance or any other social program, the people just would not stand for it. It provides for making payouts to those who get the most—the ones who get the most, get the most; and the ones who get the least, get the least. If that is stabilization of income, I'm a monkey's uncle!

The subject matter of this bill flies in the face of its title and flies in the face of the principle of income stabilization. Surely a simpler and more equitable system would be to guarantee prices. A member of a crop insurance board told me that if they were to administer crop insurance and income stabilization together, all they would have to do is add one column on the crop insurance form. I am not an overly suspicious fellow, Madam Speaker, and I would not want to accuse the government of any political designs on western Canada, so I will give them the benefit of the doubt and accept their intentions as being good. I commend them for trying to stabilize grain incomes.

In the dirty thirties we on the prairies had a bitter experience with the organization of the relief inspectors and the separate, little, private administrative machines. I do not know why the Minister of Justice needs a separate, massive administrative machine to implement a grain income stabilization plan when the machinery is already in place. All four western provinces have viable, functioning crop insurance programs. To its credit, the federal government pays half the premiums but the provinces administer the programs and bear that cost. As well, the farmers contribute to the program.

This is what should be done when grain incomes suffer as a result of things other than natural hazards. If the world market crashes or other economic disasters over which the farmers have no control take place, at that point the crop insurance administration—let us call it a crop incomes insurance plan—should step in. This would be a step in the direction of a real incomes policy in Canada. This is what farmers and farm organizations want to talk about, and they could do so if the subject matter of the bill were referred to the standing committee.

This bill is a real mare's nest. I had a couple of good lawyers look it over and they are still scratching their heads. If anything would cause farmers to lose confidence and withdraw their support from any proposal for grain income stabilization, this is it. That is why we ask that the subject matter be referred to the standing committee. The way the minister wants to apply this legislation flies in the face of the principle of grain income stabilization or any kind of income insurance and opposes the title of the bill. As the Government of Manitoba has said, it would be an exercise in frustration to try to deal with this legislation as it stands. To have farmers ask questions and give information would be a complete waste of time if the legislation were to pass in its present form, because within one or two crop years the majority of grain farmers in western Canada would be so fed up and angry that they would start opting out of the plan. They would realize they had been had again; that this is not an effective way to deal with the wildly fluctuating incomes of grain farmers.

All parties in this House agree we must do something; that never again must the grain industry be afflicted by the wild variations of income which it has experienced in the last 40 years. Although we agree, surely this is not the way to do it. The legislation must be as simple as possible. I submit, on behalf of my party, that the simplest and most practical way of doing it would be to guarantee prices and bring in adjustments related to costs of production so that the incomes of farmers are comparable with the incomes of the other people of Canada. It is as simple as that. The government's payment of $50 million, $60 million or $80 million a year will cover half or two-thirds of the cost of the program. But you will still need premiums. You can make the 2 per cent deduction from the income on grain sales. This could be done when deliveries are made at the elevator, in just the same way as it was done in previous years under the prairie farm assistance program when there was a 1 per cent deduction. That method is simple, efficient and, most important, fair.

I submit that pay-outs should be made on an individual basis and not on a total area basis. I know that the minister and his officials want to come up with some system which will provide for pay-outs on a regional basis as opposed to a basis involving the whole Wheat Board area. That would be an improvement but it is still not good enough. Having a crop insurance and incomes plan will allow for individual pay-outs. Again, it remains contributory: the farmers will put up the money and pay into the plan individually and the deductions are made simply when they sell their grain. Actually, I suspect that a 2 per cent deduction from farmers would be sufficient to cover the premiums of both the income stabilization and the crop insurance programs. I did a little checking this morning and learned that less than 1 per cent of deductions based on grain sales in the province of Manitoba would have more than covered the premiums for crop insurance. If you raised the deduction to 2 per cent or 3 per cent, you would cover the premiums for all-risk crop insurance and income insurance.

A guaranteed price based on the cost of production has been an article of faith of my party for a long time. It was in our election program of 1935, would you believe! We have raised this issue ever since, in every election. We have raised it in every parliament since then. Many countries of the world have done this. It is not socialistic. It is civilized; it is a proper way to deal with such an essential part of the economy of our nation. Moreover, it is the essential and proper way to deal equitably with grain farmers. In my opinion, that principle should apply to all agricultural production.

We are in favour of a system of guaranteed prices related to costs of production, and there should be variations in that to protect the farmer's net income. Since the end of the Second World War Canada has lost 400,000 families from farming; in other words, well over 1.25 million people have been driven from the land because of inadequate economic policies for agriculture. All parties can take some blame for this. Here we have a golden opportunity: we are legislating the beginning of an income program for grain farmers and it can lead the way and be an example to all other sectors of agriculture. Indeed, it can lead the way for all other parts of our economy. This could be a sensible and civilized incomes program.

Unfortunately, the bill is inadequate. Surely, in view of the attitude of the Government of Manitoba, which has criticized the contents of the legislation and pointed out most lucidly how the bill flies in the face of the principles of income stabilization, income guarantees or income insurance, unemployment insurance, hospital and medical insurance and principles to which private plans adhere, the government should listen. The members of the National Farmers Union have said the same thing. I have talked to members of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, and made it a point during the winter to talk to as many farmers as I could. These people are all perplexed and frustrated. They do not know what the legislation involves. They do not know what will happen. They do not know what the benefits will be if and when the bill passes.

As the bill now reads, some farmers could be adversely affected. Let me give an example. In my constituency a piece of railway track was washed out over a year ago and still has not been fixed. If the farmers of the area cannot deliver their grain and if their income drops as a consequence, they will not be covered under this legislation. They are not covered unless the whole grain industry suffers. You could also run into this situation: say that in one small corner of the western provinces, grain crops are of poor quality. We know that our customers want high grade, high protein grain. Assume that the rest of the Wheat Board area has grown high grade, high protein grain. Farmers in general have delivered lots of grain and farm incomes generally are high. But in this small corner where the grain is of low grade, low protein content, sales are poor and farm incomes drop. As the bill now reads, there will be no pay-out for them. The province of Manitoba makes the point that pay-outs should be on an individual basis; I submit that point is well taken.

Surely this is the sort of thing we should consider in committee. That is why, before this legislation passes, it should receive the scrutiny of the Standing Committee on Agriculture. The standing committee could spend all summer and fall talking to farmers; it is too late now, because the boys have just about finished spring seeding.

But the committee could start its work in late June and could continue holding meetings during the summer. The offices of farm organizations are open all summer. This might mean that a few members of parliament would have to work for a couple of weeks during the summer, but that is all right; we are already more than well paid and it would not hurt us a bit.

We could meet farmers and farm organizations all summer and return to this House in early September with a report and recommendations to the House on the basis of which the minister and his officials could draft a bill. We could get it through quickly and it could be the law of the land. We could establish a real grain income stabilization program which would be a crop insurance and income insurance program. It would be administered by the four western provinces, and the farmers would contribute to it. The government would contribute, but the provinces would pay the cost of operating the plan and each farmer would be eligible for benefit on an individual basis. The farmer's income would be protected.

Surely that is the least we can do. It is what we must do. Attempting to deal in committee, let alone in the House, with the legislation as drafted will result in nothing but frustration for farmers. As Manitoba says, it will be an exercise in frustration for all. So far as I am concerned, only the organizational genius of an ex-dean of law could implement a bill which reads as this one does. That reminds me of a story which happened in Britain. When the British parliament brought in rationing under Sir Winston Churchill's government during the Second World War, Nye Bevan got up and said something like this, "Mr. Speaker, England is an island full of coal, set in a sea full of fish, but only the organizational genius of the prime minister can see to it that we shall ration both."

Well, farmers in western Canada can grow grain like you wouldn't believe. Sometimes it is good quality, and sometimes it is not so good. Sometimes the crops are poor, and sometimes they are affected by events over which they have no control, whether is it weather or international developments or the Liberal government. But they have the ability to grow the stuff and they have the wherewithal, the machinery to ensure their incomes.

I can just see what the workers around London, Ontario, would say if you implemented an unemployment insurance program the same way as this grain stabilization program. You would have a riot on your hands. There is not a worker in the country who would stand for it. It is sheer nonsense for any government to be so dumb as to try to bring in legislation of this nature. I urge the government to study carefully what Manitoba is saying today before the committee on agriculture: they have five or six pages on what is wrong with the grain stabilization bill and what an income program should be, and they put it most succinctly and, I know, sincerely and positively. They are not looking for any fight with the federal government. They are, in a positive way, asking parliament and the government to reconsider its approach to a grains stabilization program.

The least we can do is take the subject matter of this bill to the farm organizations, the municipal organizations, the provincial governments and the crop insurance boards of all four western provinces, ask them how they would like it done and if they would like it done this way. If we did not get an almost unanimous negative response, I would be very surprised.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The question is on the amendment in the name of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker). All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Call in the members.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost. Is the House ready for the question on the main motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the bill before the House deals with one of the most fundamental problems facing farmers in Canada. We have just seen the government apply the whip to the Liberal members to vote against the interests of farmers whom they are supposed to be protecting.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): In the amendment which was just defeated, government supporters turned down a simple request that before we decide on the important principles in the bill farmers should be given a chance to express their views.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): In speaking on this amendment, I made it very clear that all parties in the House wish to provide for agriculture in all parts of Canada some form of insurance against instability of income. Yet, when we asked the government to let the principle of the bill be put before the farmers and let them decide whether they want it, the government refused that simple, democratic right to the farmers of western Canada.

[The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin).]

When we proposed that one of the things that was concerning farmers in western Canada was that this was an agricultural matter, and agricultural matters should be the responsibility of the Minister of Agriculture and not of the Minister of Justice—the latter should look after matters such as abortion, which has nothing to do with grain income—the government refused to consider it. If we could only get the Minister of Justice off our backs a great deal of confidence could be engendered in the agricultural industry.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): On the vital principle of voluntary or compulsory participation, the government refuses the farmers the right to decide what they want. Now we have to go into the committee with these principles established as the will of parliament; but I can assure you, Madam Speaker, that they are not the will of the farmer.

I did not speak in the early stages of the legislation for the simple reason that I wanted the House to hear the viewpoints of members of parliament who represent the farmers of western Canada, and most of them are on this side of the House. For 70 years, western Canada has borne the burden of Liberal parties on its back. For 70 years we have felt in the west that no one gave a damn for the interests of the western people. For years western farmers tended to be Liberal. Now you can see all across the country the reason why they are not any more, because when you ask for a chance for the farmers to express a view it is not given to them.

In spite of the minister in charge of the Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) and in spite of the whip the government applied to its members today, this bill is required in western Canada although not in the terms in which it is couched. This bill aims to do something that we have been talking about in the west for 35 years. I know that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) will agree with me when I say that one cannot solve the problems of agriculture piecemeal; they must be dealt with as a package. Just as we in the west know that we cannot attack the problem of the costs of agriculture, which are rising at 20 per cent a year, until we have resolved the problems of the people who live in the high-cost areas such as cities, so the city people in the east should recognize that they cannot solve their problems until we give a fair and equitable economic basis to all sections of the community—and that includes farmers. This bill should be part of a package; and the five points in that package are clear. The first point in building an agricultural policy should be the marketing of the produce of the farm to the people of the world who need food. The second principle should be stability of price. Over the last number of years, parliament has tried to deal with that problem through the Agricultural Stabilization Act which was put into place in 1959 and is being amended by the House now. It stabilizes prices to a degree and it is an insurance purely against disaster. It is a type of "stop loss" legislation, but it is fundamental as a base on which to build.

The third principle is stability of income. We have tried to deal with it under crop insurance. Crop insurance deals with the weather, and if you look at the statistics for western Canada today you will find that nearly two-thirds of all the farmers in the three prairie provinces have now educated themselves to the advantage of contributing to a fund that will protect them in times of crop loss. But that alone is not enough. The tremendous dips and dives of income over the last 70 years in western Canadian agriculture have made it the most risky of any industrial segment in Canada. It is this question of stabilizing incomes that this bill is all about. Before concluding the question of stability of incomes I should mention the other points in the package.

The fourth point is a modern system of farm credit. During the last 15 years, governments led by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) and Liberal governments have tried their best to give us a modern system of farm credit, and in general it is doing very well.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

PROVISION TO REVOKE PRIVILEGE OF VOTING BY PROXY IN FEDERAL ELECTIONS

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot) moved that Bill C-232, to amend the Canada Elections Act (proxy voting), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He said: Madam Speaker, a member of this House putting forward a private members' bill in the first instance wants to do two things: he would like to accomplish what his bill outlines, and if he is not successful in that he would like to direct the attention of the government toward the problem with which the bill deals. In this case the bill deals with the question of proxy voting. To me, the principle of one man, one vote is a sacred privilege which is part and parcel of most western democracies, and is a principle we should not tarnish in any way.

Many arguments have been made in the cause of proxy voting. Proxy votes are sought after and fought for in corporations and corporate empires. Some bitter feuds and fights take place over proxy votes in the corporate structure. It is not impossible to envisage proxy votes causing fights and squabbles within a constituency. It is a matter of who gets to the person who is unable to vote first, and in some instances who has him sign the paper. Then he is locked in, in the sense that his voting privileges are taken away while the facts or issues of the election may not have been explained to him. A voter may say, "It is nice of you to call. You knew I could not vote because I will not be in the country on voting day"—or it may be because of ill health—But it was nice of you to call and for that reason I will give you my vote." Three or four days later somebody may come along and reveal a different situation to the same voter, and the voter would have to say, "I am sorry, but I have given my proxy vote to your opposition." That situation could arise.

Much argument for proxy voting is sometimes centred around the thought that people who are hospitalized during an election cannot get to the polling station to vote. That is true in a federal election. It has never been explained to me why, in the province of Alberta, for example, ballot boxes in provincial elections have for years been taken to hospitals and hospitalized people have voted, but that in a federal election we are repeatedly told that that cannot happen, that the person has to appear at the polling station. In cases where they cannot, we now have the provision of proxy voting.

I think before the principle of one man, one vote is eroded in any way—this is merely a very small way but everything starts somewhere—all other avenues should be examined very closely. A case can be made in regard to invalids; they must have a doctor's certificate. A case can be made for a fisherman or prospector who is out of the country and therefore not able to vote.

It is interesting that from time to time we have 75 per cent or 78 per cent of the population taking part in a federal election. Sometimes the figure is closer to 70 per cent. In provincial elections it is lower than that, and in municipal elections lower still. It is interesting to note how many more people proxy voting has brought to polling stations and how many more fishermen and prospectors really wanted to take part, and took part, in the democratic procedure of voting. In the 1974 election, 6,915 people made use of the proxy voting privilege. That, to me, is a minuscule number. I would suggest that those who did use that privilege were badgered by political legmen from various political parties. If they had not been badgered, they might have showed up on voting day in any case.

An hon. Member: The Conservatives are guilty of that.

Mr. Horner: Conservatives are guilty of that, yes, but I would like to think they are no more guilty than Liberals.

I do not appreciate the erosion of the principle of one man, one vote. The other system works fine in a corporate structure where big business deals with money; money buys power, power buys votes, and so forth. That kind of thing has gone on for years within the corporate structure, but I do no think it enhances our democracy to see it within out voting system.

Proxy voting will remain if my bill tonight is defeated, but if it is sent to committee I would suggest that the committee consider its application. With proxy voting today, the returning officer has to witness the signature of the person who wants to give up his right to vote. That may work well in a city riding where there is a high population density, such as in downtown Toronto, Montreal, Calgary or Edmonton. I can say that it does not work very well in a widely scattered riding where the returning officer may live in one corner of the riding.

Mr. McKinley: He has to drive miles and miles.

Mr. Horner: That is quite right; the returning officer had to drive miles and miles to an invalid, to people who are not going to be in the constituency, to people who are leaving on holidays or for prospecting, and to students who are out of the constituency. Students out of the constituency now have the right to vote at the university they are attending. There should be greater safeguards if proxy voting is to continue. The committee should propose greater safeguards against abuses which may arise. That will certainly make the application of proxy voting apply more fairly throughout the various parts of one's constituency and throughout Canada.

I believe that proxy voting opens the door to widespread abuses which will only grow as people become familiar with the concept. It is interesting that in the 1972 election there were 1,309 people in rural areas who used proxy voting. In urban areas—basically, city and suburbia—8,389 people used proxy voting. I think that clearly demonstrates that it is a privilege given to those living in proximity to the returning officer and not to those living miles away.

It is of value to our democratic system that steps should be taken to allow hospitalized people to exercise their federal vote as they do their provincial vote. We should not weaken the importance of the duty of the citizens of Canada. We should not minimize that duty by allowing them to barter their vote to someone who may suggest that their interest will be looked after; that if they sign a piece of paper the right man will be elected.

This bill is a small thing, but so are most initial steps. We must face the fact that the abuses of proxy voting will increase. I choose this way to register my opposition to anything which lessens the duty that each man assumes when he accepts citizenship. We see lobbying for votes going on within the power structures of corporations. Sometimes such votes are bought and sold, and there is nothing to stop this happening in our democracy. While we might say it will never happen, that such things do not happen in elections, we all know that elections cost money. A voter wants to know what promises the politicians will give in the way of legislation or better treatment for people.

We have just witnessed the evils uncovered by Watergate in the United States and I think it is safe to say that most Canadians were upset. I am not suggesting that proxy voting at some future election would cause a similar situation in Canada, but it could be the beginning of something nearly as bad. I know, Madam Speaker, that my conscience will rest a little better from having put this bill forward at this time. I hope the House will send the bill to committee so that the whole question of proxy voting can be examined by the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Gilbert Parent (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, I do not think the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) and I disagree on the substantive issue of proxy voting, although there might be some disagreement on the procedural aspect of the question. The history of democracy is tied to the right to vote, but the right to vote should not be moulded to fit a system. Rather, the system should be flexible enough to permit that all qualified people, all citizens, will have the opportunity to vote. The hon. member for Crowfoot said that voting is a privilege. I might add that it is also a right and duty. It is not a right that was arrived at by simply talking about freedom. He also said that due to the abuses of proxy voting, people might be badgered, I think was his word. It is my understanding that in a democracy such as we have in Canada, we subscribe to the idea of advise and consent.

The hon. member pointed out that only 6,900 people voted by proxy in the last general election. That is a minuscule number compared to the total number of voters, but it was an important opportunity for those 6,900 people who exercised their right to vote. This is about the same number as voted by proxy in 1972, but we should remember that in 1972 many more students used the proxy vote because school was out at the time of the vote.

In a press release of September 12, 1972, Jean-Marc Hamel, the Chief Electoral Officer, estimated that at least 10,000 eligible citizens studying overseas would be left out of the voting procedure: a great number of people living or working overseas before the date of the first advance poll would be left out as well. The only people outside Canada who could vote in the election were civil servants, members of the armed forces and dependants of both categories. These numbered approximately 110,000. Their ballots were taken prior to election day so that they could reach Canada in time to be counted with the regular election returns.

The problem for students arises in determining the place of ordinary residence, particularly in the case of the single student living away from home but who still has his residence in the home of his parents or guardian. In the instructions to student voters away from home, four categories are defined. Married or single students living at home offer no problem; they simply vote at the polling division in which their home is located. In the case of married students, this would be the residence where they were physically residing on enumeration day.

The single student on his own, in other words financially independent of his parents, can vote where he is physically residing on enumeration day. The single student living away from home but dependent on his parents or guardian is the only one eligible to vote by proxy. This is a multistep procedure involving a variety of forms and is outlined in the Canada Elections Act.

Many people who were interested in having a voice as to who would govern the country were disappointed at the timing of the last election. I do not place the blame on either side of the House for that, but accept it as a fait accompli. These people felt cheated, however, because they were not able to vote and because as the law stands they were not treated as equals.

I suggest that proxy voting is not the only way we can get around our problems, but it is the one way we have devised to solve the problem of those who want to take advantage of their rights as citizens of Canada to have a voice in their government. I put forward another suggestion: perhaps we should consider establishing a permanent voters' list. It does not seem fair that we should do all this in such a rush. The hon. member mentioned that there were abuses.

[Translation]

Of course, errors may be made but they are errors of omission and commission. Efforts must be made to ensure that all Canadians have a chance to vote for the men and women who will represent them in this House.

[English]

I urge, as does the hon. member for Crowfoot, that more consideration should be given to this question. Let us assure all our citizens that they have a voice; that they have a chance to mould the future or our beloved Canada.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, there are occasions when my hon. friend from Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) comes into this House with good ideas. There are days when he makes an awfully good case, whether the idea is good or not. I do not think this is one of those days. Actually, so far as this bill is concerned it does not matter whether it is rejected or talked out. I do not think it should get any more consideration than it will be given during the present private members' hour.

The hon. member for Crowfoot talked about abuses. No doubt there are abuses under the Canada Elections Act and there are abuses in election campaigns; but I submit that the percentage of abuses involving proxy voting is perhaps the lowest there is in the whole election machinery. The hon. member gave the statistic I wanted, that in the last election 6,915 persons exercised the proxy voting privilege. If you divide that figure by 264, it comes out to an average of 26 per constituency. That makes sense to me, because in my constituency, Winnipeg North Centre, the number was about 18.

I can go further and say I checked the list at the office of the returning officer in my constituency. I found that I knew, or knew of, just about every name on the list; I knew those who were for me and those who were against me. Most, of course, were for me. It was clear to me that every one of them was a person who was in hospital or in a nursing home, or confined to his own home and, hence, not able to cast his vote except under the provisions of the proxy voting regulations. The 18 votes in Winnipeg North Centre did not make any difference to the outcome of the election in that constituency, and I suggest that the 6,915 votes across Canada did not make any difference to the make-up of this parliament. But, as the hon. member who just spoke so well put it, their privilege to vote made a great deal of difference to those particular persons. They were given a right to participate in a general election, a right which previous to 1972 such persons did not have.

Actually, I think this is one of the most humane improvements we made to the Canada Elections Act the last time we revised it. We did not make a sweeping change that could result in a different outcome at an election, but we respected the right of the ill, the handicapped and the shut in to exercise their franchise at election time. It was the humane and decent thing to do, and I hope that under no circumstance will this House consider revoking that right. That, of course, is what would happen if the bill before us were passed.

Some changes still need to be made. Perhaps the proxy voting system needs to be enlarged. I found that a half dozen or more people who wanted the right to exercise a proxy vote under the regulations were not able to do so because the regulations are just a little too strict. I remember, when we were enacting this legislation, that we accepted the proposition that we had to tie it up so tightly that there would not be abuse. Perhaps what we should look at is not a proposal to cancel this right but a proposal to extend it.

In the same way, we must consider the whole question of advance polls. In this area we run into many frustrating experiences. The advance polls are further ahead now than they used to be, and they do accommodate quite a number of people, but in every election there are individuals who will be away and who will not be able to vote either on the general polling day or at the advance polls.

We must also consider the question of absentee voting, which now takes place in a number of provinces but still does not apply in a federal election. My hon. friend from Crowfoot says we must guard against abuse and make sure we do not erode the integrity of our electoral system. But, on the other side of the coin, we must make sure that every Canadian citizen who has the legal right to vote has that right in a practical sense. Therefore, I hope the House will not support this bill. I have no objection to the hon. member's introducing it, in the sense that by doing so he has raised election issues. It gives us a chance to air some of these things, and I express the hope, already expressed across the way, that we will take another look at advance polls, absentee voting, and so on.

When we talk about proxy voting, I think mainly of those who are ill. I think particularly of a quite well known woman in Winnipeg, a victim of multiple-sclerosis who spent a long time in hospital and who worked for this right to vote for many years. I think of how much it meant to her when, after years of not being able to vote, she was able to do so. I think that a large percentage of the 6,915 people who voted by means of proxy in the last election were Canadian citizens who suffered from illness of one kind or another, and they feel just a little better as Canadian citizens because they had the right to vote.

I emphasize that under the proxy regulations there are serious restrictions: the proxy has to be obtained in advance of election day; there must be a visit to the office of the returning officer; there must be various signatures, and so on. The person who will do the proxy voting has to be on the list in the same polling division as the person for whom the proxy vote is to be cast; he must be acceptable to the person for whom he will vote, and no one may cast a proxy vote for more than one person. I suggest that the protections in the regulations are pretty good; that we should not restrict this right but, rather, that we should look at the other side of the picture and make sure we are providing all possible ways for Canadian citizens who have the legal right to vote to exercise that right, in fact, on election day.

I have been rather strong in my criticisms of the bill proposed by the hon. member for Crowfoot. Perhaps he likes it that way. I am glad he raised the issue and gave us the chance to have this discussion, but hope this bill will not pass. I want the proxy vote to remain.

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Madam Speaker, I want to make a few remarks on Bill C-232 introduced by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner). First I want to congratulate him for the courage he has demonstrated in introducing this bill. At first sight, I had felt that proxy voting would provide a few more people with the right to vote. This legislation is very difficult to administer. In my own riding, a number of people tried during the last election to avail themselves of this proxy voting. It is quite an involved process, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) indicated a while ago: obtain the necessary papers from the returning officer, meet the person who will not come to vote and obtain a proxy to cast a vote on his or her behalf. There are people who will cover 100 or 125 miles to fetch a little piece of paper. During the last election, in my own riding, a farmer with the best intentions wanted his son, a university student, to vote. He took the necessary steps, spent three or four days getting all these papers together, and when voting day came, he went to the poll to cast a vote on behalf of his son, just to be told that a student had already been there to cast a vote on behalf of his son. It happens sometimes that overly zealous people go and vote on behalf of others. With such a system as the one we have now, a person can very easily vote for about 10 others the very same day.

Such irregularities will occur so long as we do not have the identity card called for. I could give evidence to support my case. The big parties have it very easy today. They have a majority and are well organized. As for us, the cost of contacting in our ridings for instance a hundred or so people who would vote by proxy and ensuring that it is done in an orderly way would be prohibitive. A special collection would have to be made to pay the costs of getting in touch with those people. In my riding, three persons voted by proxy. And when I was asked for explanations I said: Don't make useless applications, it is too much trouble, costs too much and leads to nothing.

So, we might as well cross out the amendment, but anyway it is before the House and I am sure the government will want to let things stand, but there are other ways. I heard someone say earlier: It seeks to allow all people, as many people as possible, to vote. I would agree if that enabled everybody to vote, but vote themselves, and not have somebody else vote for them. There is a difference, because no one knows whom the person who will do the proxy voting will vote for.

With respect to proxy voting, we are told that people who have to stay in hospital cannot go to the polling station. I wish to draw the attention of the Chair, because it is a point which will require an amendment from the government. To end the ridiculous situation in hospitals, we should take up the method used in the provinces, establish one, two or three polling stations, and go from one room to the next, as in Quebec, to have everyone vote themselves instead of voting by proxy.

At the last election, we were told there would be a polling station in the hospital, and suddenly the organizers of a large party decided that, since there were too many Social Crediters in there, there would be no polling station in the hospital. We lost 510 voters, because 80 per cent of those people in the hospital voted for me. So they just closed the polling station there. This is merely an indication—

I did not care, Madam Speaker, I had enough people voting for me, but those people were not given the opportunity to exercize their rights as citizens as freely as anyone else, and that is the point I am making, that it is not fair. They should, yes—

An hon. Member: In cities—

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): That goes on to a larger extent in big cities. I have already seen what happened in cities. The same kind of thing went on on a larger scale in hospitals. They say it is not possible to have everybody vote by going around bedrooms. In large hospitals, if one voting station is not enough, they set up two, three or four. But in my constituency, they even established voting stations at the last minute for 50 voters in the forest. A poll was opened and delegates had to be sent 125 miles away to lumberjacks who had already voted on Saturday in their parishes, before leaving. They had already voted in their parishes. A poll was opened for them. That is why I say it is very easy, because we must not forget that all lumberjacks come down from the forest on Friday nights. They know very well that there are temporary polls. No need to fear, the temporary polls close. They have a poll in the forest. This often doubles the number of voters. I would be in favour of establishing many polls in hospitals so that all sick people may be visited and vote in their rooms.

All the provinces do it: why couldn't the federal government? Why? At the provincial level, it is considered fair; it would only be fair and equitable for all the sick to be able to vote in their rooms. To my mind that is the main point. Even if this bill was introduced merely to discuss this point, I invite the government to study it, because the problem exists right across Canada.

I had an unfortunate experience in my riding, but for the sick people, every election is an unfortunate experience. Of course, after the election, it is maddening to have 500 fewer votes than were expected! But what revolts me is that the democratic system is not respected by small time politicians who exist to foul everything, to keep those who do not share their ideas from voicing theirs. As for me, I respect every party in my riding, whether blue, white or red, and that is why almost everyone votes for me because I respect and defend them. I went to these hospitals, and was asked to bring this to the government's attention, in order that this same error does not happen next time. Because errors of this kind happened a number of times. And then there is the identity card error.

We have been proposing the identity card for more than ten years. This would be fair to the voter. After all, everyone has his social security number in his pocket. Why not add a photograph, this would double up as an identity card. The voter coming to the poll with his identity card cannot be mistaken for somebody else. But of course this would not suit the old parties.

With everything that is being done at election time, democracy is going down the drain. Quite often families living next to a poll do not vote, through laziness or otherwise. I believe the Canada Elections Act should be more stringent. Voting should be compulsory. If a citizen is too lazy to do his duty, he should be forced to. I also found it has come to the point where you have to pick up people at their homes so they will vote. Sometimes people living next door to the poll. If you do not pick them up, they will not vote. Can you imagine that? And then they say they have done their citizen's duty. I welcome this bill because it gives us an opportunity to point out to the government weaknesses in our electoral legislation. We are all elected members, and we are all interested in bringing justice to the people. Even if the bill is not discussed in committee, I expect the government will bring some amendments to the Canada Elections Act, which is often somewhat undemocratic.

[English]

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, we have always had the belief out west that the eastern barons were after us, and I am very surprised to hear that the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) is going to be put in the class of these eastern barons, because obviously he is trying to take something away from the west. Perhaps I should not just say the west because the same thing could be said of the east coast. If the hon. member has not heard, we have a fair fishing industry along the west coast of British Columbia, and I understand the same can be said of the maritimes.

I think the hon. member for Crowfoot would have to agree that one thing the government should not be doing is trying to discourage people from voting. We have enough problems getting people to realize that the government they elect will control their lives and that they cannot be apathetic about voting. If the hon. member for Crowfoot had mulled this bill over a bit he would have realized that it is not the role of a government or politician to discourage people from voting.

I am glad to see the hon. member has come back into the chamber, because I want to tell him that in the northern part of my riding we have no roads or railroads. But we do have people who are prospectors, and although they do not have television sets or radios in many instances, they do have proxy voting. And here is the hon. member for Crowfoot trying to take away one of the few small things in life that these people up there have. At least at election time they have their proxy and they can vote. It may not be much, but they do have a proxy vote.

Perhaps I am being a little facetious in saying this, but one of the experiences I had when I ran for the first time in the last federal election was going to hospitals where there were people who were either sick or infirm because of age, and I was surprised at the amount of interest shown by them and at what it meant to them to be able to vote. I am sure many members must have had the same experience. It certainly brought something into their lives. This may sound a very small point, but when people are infirm, especially the elderly, an election gives them something to talk about among themselves, something to which they can look forward.

Mr. Horner: Would the hon. member permit a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Will the hon. member for Comox-Alberni permit a question?

Mr. Anderson: Certainly, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Horner: Seeing that this bill is going to be talked out, we might as well understand each other very fully.

May I ask the hon. member this question: in provincial elections in the province of British Columbia are there ballots in the hospitals? There are in Alberta, and I understand in Ontario.

Mr. Anderson: I believe there are, Madam Speaker. I hope the hon. member will not use me as an authority on this because, to be quite honest, I am not sure whether they have them in hospitals or not.

Mr. Horner: Why not have them in hospitals for federal elections then?

Mr. Anderson: The hon. member asks that question. I wish he had asked me a question about proxies for fishermen, if he thinks a different system should be used in our hospitals. Has the hon. member any question about a system that we can bring in to give fishermen out on the seas the same right to vote as the hon. member for Crowfoot?

Mr. Horner: Surely fishermen would find election day a pretty stormy one for fishing.

Mr. Anderson: Obviously the hon. member does not have this problem in his riding, so I can appreciate the fact that he is not concerned about fishermen. However, I think the hon. member must treat all Canadians fairly, and surely those who are covered under section 46(1), I believe it is, of the act, namely fishermen, mariners, prospectors, people absent due to illness or physical incapacity, or full-time students absent at Canadian educational institutions, should be encouraged to vote at election time.

Mr. Horner: They have the advance poll.

Mr. Anderson: Would the hon. member like to put a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. We are not in committee of the whole.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: Could I ask the hon. member a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Would the hon. member allow a second question, which will be the only question put?

Mr. Anderson: Yes, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Horner: The hon. member is obviously short of words. If he has to talk the bill out until six o'clock, I might as well help him out. Do the people in his riding take advantage of the advance poll; and does he realize that only 1,300 people in rural ridings took advantage of the proxy vote? I suggest that those 1,300 could have been taken care of by having ballots in hospitals and by greater use of the advance poll. So far as election day last year was concerned, July 8, does he not agree that the advance poll fell on a particularly difficult day—July 1?

Mr. Anderson: I think the hon. member is sincere in his question. First, I do not know the exact number in my riding who used the proxy vote. I do know that in 1974 in British Columbia 650 people used the proxy vote. Interestingly enough, in 1972 the number was 601, so the two figures were very close.

My point, which I think was emphasized before, is that I do not care if there is only one person who took advantage of the proxy vote in British Columbia—I would retain it in British Columbia for that one person, to make sure that all those who wished to vote have the opportunity to vote. I do not think the hon. member realizes that many fishermen do not go out to fish just for a day or two but for several weeks at a time. These are the sort of people we should be considering, just as we should consider prospectors. I do not think people fully realize that all Canadians do not live in cities, that all Canadians do not have the same facilities.

If I were asked for suggestions to improve the situation, I would extend proxy voting to the sort of person who works in the woods, who lives in Vancouver but works on northern Vancouver Island. These people should be given proxy voting because they are away from home for several weeks at a time, and they do not return home from a distance of 400 or 500 miles just to vote. As I said earlier, it is the responsibility of the government to encourage people to vote, not to discourage them.

I suppose I will be accused of speaking against this bill, and I apologize—I should not have used the term "baron from Alberta". However, sometimes we regard them as easterners too.

I was interested to note that Ontario and Nova Scotia headed the list in federal proxy voting. My theory is that we have not done a good enough job telling people about the proxy vote. I do not think people do not wish to use the proxy. Our information service has not been of the highest calibre. This is a relatively new act, and the 1972 election was the first one in which it took effect. As time passes I hope that more and more people will realize this right does exist and will utilize it. It is up to me and to the hon. member for Crowfoot to do the job of making sure people are aware of this.

I would seriously oppose the suggestion that this privilege of voting by proxy be taken from people who, because of their occupation, are unable to attend the advance polls or the polls on election day. Perhaps we do not have the facilities in my area that the hon. member for Crowfoot has, although his is a rural riding also. The northern part of Vancouver Island lacks roads and certainly railroads, and in many cases boats are the only form of travel.

The provision for the proxy vote was well designed to meet a certain need. In the area of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) I would assume that the proxy vote is used by people who are in hospitals. This is a humanitarian provision adopted by the government and members of parliament. It has been extended to those people who would not be able to vote normally. Surely hon. members agree with the principle. There may be different ways of carrying this out, but surely we all agree that the proxy vote has been a good provision. I suggest that anything we can do as members of parliament to encourage the Canadian public to vote is a step in the right direction, and I say that very sincerely.

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Madam Speaker, I should like to say a few words on this matter in the short time we have available. I believe this has been a worthwhile and constructive discussion if nothing else, and for that reason, and because he had the courage to bring this matter forward, the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) deserves congratulations. This is the type of thing that should be discussed at times in the House.

Mention has been made by the hon. member for St. Catharines (Mr. Parent) of a permanent voters' list. Perhaps this is something that should be considered along with the suggestion of placing ballot boxes in hospitals, nursing homes, and elsewhere. There should be a better method for mariners, prospectors and fishermen to exercise their right to vote. These and other matters have been considered today. Does the government really intend to consider ideas and suggestions of this nature? These are things that should be given some priority of attention within the duration of this parliament.

There is one thing that does bother me in respect of the proxy vote provision contained in the Canada Elections Act. Citizens have the right to vote, and it is a right. We should make it convenient for all citizens to exercise that right. The thing that bothers me is that this provision does not enhance the right to vote, it provides an individual with the right to transfer that vote to somebody else. The right to vote should be a personal thing. The vote is a right one must exercise by one's self. I believe the intention of the government and parliament when this measure was enacted was to give those persons listed in Section 46 the opportunity to vote. I wonder if the provision does not in fact give them the opportunity to transfer that right.

There are several sections of the Canada Elections Act that should be deleted or amended, and I should like to take this opportunity to refer to them in the House. One involves the requirement that the leader of a so-called recognized party, or his delegate, must provide a certificate to be filed with the nomination papers of a candidate. To my mind this is very undemocratic, and this act should be democratic, just like the right to vote and the right to be a candidate. These should be rights just as is the right to exercise the franchise in as convenient a manner as possible, without coming under a fascist rule.

I trust this discussion will be considered by the government and that something will come of the comments that have been made here today on some very worthwhile and necessary matters.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I am overwhelmed. I should like to say in the few minutes left to us that we have had some discussions to determine what can be done to provide an opportunity for members of parliament to take a close look at the Canada Elections Act. It has been the practice in past parliaments that after an election has taken place there should be an opportunity for members to have a close look at amendments to the act and to promote ideas they have to change it, bringing it more in line with changes that have taken place in Canadian society.

I might say that the idea for a proxy vote arose from the discussions that took place in the privileges and elections committee following the 1968 election. Anyone who looks at the regulations governing the proxy vote will find that not only is the act drawn very finely, but the regulations which permit those people qualified under the act to participate in proxy voting are also drawn very narrowly. We have experimented through two elections with the proxy vote, and I think most members would say this has worked out reasonably well and the abuses we feared have not developed.

There are other groups in society who should be provided for under the act. We should be looking at other areas in order to extend the opportunity to vote in Canadian elections to as many eligible people as possible. While the proxy voting procedure may not be the most ideal, perhaps there are other ways in addition to the suggestion of the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Jones) of allowing people to cast their votes without having to go through the necessity of delegating the right. In the period of time we have from the opening of advance polls it may be possible that the returning officer in a given community could go around to those places or residences of those people who are unable to get out to vote. Perhaps the ballot boxes could be taken along in order that they might cast their votes in the way ordinary people can do so.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING THE STABILIZATION OF NET PROCEEDS FROM THE PRODUCTION AND SALE OF WESTERN GRAIN

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lang that Bill C-41, respecting the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain and to amend certain statutes in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, when the House rose at five o'clock I was outlining the five basic points or fundamentals that go to the establishment of a logical and coherent policy on agriculture. First and most important is marketing. Second is stability of price. Third is stability of income, and fourth is a modern farm credit system.

The fifth fundamental is the redevelopment of the industry to meet the new challenges and needs of an ever changing world.

In order to provide this package everything must be coordinated. Our policy must be based on one sound principle leading to the next one. This bill, C-41, should be a part of this package. It should enable the farmer to insure himself against the vagaries of income. As I mentioned earlier, the crop insurance legislation is doing a fairly good job in allowing the farmer to have some money to insure himself against the vagaries of weather, but on top of that we should build an insurance program so that he may be ensured a fair rate of income. For some reason or other the government has chosen not to keep this program within this package of a logical, coherent policy leading to the objective of a stable, healthy, agricultural industry designed to meet the demands of the world.

We have this particular bill introduced in effect under the Canadian Wheat Board Act. The Canadian Wheat Board Act has nothing to do with stability of income in respect of agriculture. The C.W.B. is purely a marketing device to set prices. So, on the first test this legislation is not part of a coherent and logical package to help agriculture. Also, it should be under the Minister of Agriculture.

The second point about this bill is that legislation dealing with agriculture should treat all farmers alike. We have farmers in eastern Canada, and with them we associate the farmers of British Columbia, who are quite different in respect of their techniques and the products they grow from the grain farmers on the prairies. One reason is geography. Essentially we have a desert area which man has learned to master and has made into a great food source for the world. The other parts of Canada have different types of agriculture based on different soils, moisture, different heat units, and so on.

Here we are bringing in legislation by which the parliament of Canada gives one sort of a deal to the farmers of one part of Canada, and yet in no place in the government's legislation is there an opportunity to offer the same deal to all the farmers. So, on the essential question of the unity of the Canadian people in this industry of agriculture we have again divided the east and the west. This seems to be part and parcel of the attitude of the Liberal party when it is in power.

Second, on this question of treating farmers alike, there is a tremendous clash today in western Canada, for example, between the pure grain farmers and the livestock farmers. What is good for one industry sometimes hurts another industry. We are going through one of those periods now. With the present technology, livestock such as poultry, hogs, and cattle now require tremendous volumes of grain. The sudden rise in the price of feed grain in the world markets two years ago has wreaked havoc not only in Canada but all over the world with the price of red meat and the cost of producing it. Here in this bill we have in effect added and exaggerated the difference between the wants and needs of the livestock industry and the grain industry.

The third point, which bears on the first point, is that farmers look above all to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) to be their spokesman in parliament on all matters concerning their welfare. They have seen the Department of Agriculture over the last ten years split and divided among four ministers.

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain).]

Agriculture now comes under the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce through the structure of the Grains Council. Agriculture also comes under the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang). What abortion has to do with agriculture, we are never quite certain, but they are put together by this government. Agriculture also comes under the Minister of Agriculture once in a while; it comes under the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) and, if you want to take all the other things with which it is associated, it also comes under the Department of Finance. But my main point is that we have seen the breaking down of the agricultural industry into little parts in so far as the administration of the affairs of agriculture in the last ten years are concerned.

I put this down to the fact that we have begun to worship here in Ottawa the idea that everything should be turned away from parliament, from the control of ministers, and put into the hands of technocrats who look at it from the point of view of diagrams on the wall. When a new department is set up, they put a certain number of squares on the minister's chart which, I suppose, give him prestige equal to that of other ministers. They look for some department from which to rob activities, and so the ARDA program came out of the Department of Agriculture and agricultural rehabilitation was put under another minister. No matter how well intentioned that other minister may be toward agriculture, the people in his department are not in contact with agriculture, their main interest being something else.

Likewise with the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act—it was taken out of the Department of Agriculture. Here we have a whole section that was once the pride and joy of the Minister of Agriculture because prairie farm rehabilitation had brought a huge area, almost 1,000 miles in width, back into productivity after the great drought. It was an example all over the world of what could be done when technology and science were applied to a difficult program in so far as geography, soil and climate conditions are concerned.

This once proud division of the Department of Agriculture lies dormant. The division, which used to number 120 engineers ten years ago, is now reduced to 80, and as the years go by and some will retire there will be less of them. Nothing is given them to do. I have seen what a group of men can accomplish in bringing an area back into productivity. I know how much has to be done, and my only comment about PFRA is not that the objectives have been changed but that that program has been taken out of the Department of Agriculture and put under another department which has nothing to do with agriculture.

The men sit there waiting for their pensions. Yet we have so much to do, not only in rehabilitating the soil on the prairies—which should be done not only on the prairies but all across the country—but also in bringing this program back under the Department of Agriculture and applying it in the Atlantic area, the northern parts of Quebec and Ontario, and even the settled parts of these provinces, as well as in the valleys in British Columbia.

The great experience and technical know how of these men in rehabilitating soil and making it productive should be put to use. Once again I point out that there should be one minister in charge of the bulk of the agricultural divisions.

The minister who has particularly concerned us in western Canada has been the Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. He is obviously able. He passed all his exams in school, became the dean of law at the university of Saskatchewan, and came down here to become Minister of Justice—a tribute to his ability and seriousness. But it was a calamity to us in the west to have this inflexible man put in charge of our most vital possession, the ability to produce high protein wheat in dry land farming. He is not content to look after the Department of Justice and the Canadian Wheat Board. We hear announcements in the west that he deals with transportation there, and with labour problems, in fact with anything that concerns the west. No other minister is allowed to interfere in these matters.

We hardly see the Minister of Agriculture in the West. All the announcements about justice, transportation, regional economic expansion and everything else seem to come from the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang). Everything this minister has touched, as many hon. members have made very clear, has turned out to be bad for us. I cannot name all the things, let me say simply that the LIFT program is on the lips of every western farmer. They were sold down the river on the basis of false statistics, they were taken out of production, and when the demand came and the price went up from $2 to $5 a bushel, many farmers did not have too much grain to sell, not to mention the fact that hungry people could have done with the extra 300 million bushels that would have been produced.

Then there is the grain exchange. For two or three generations farmers fought to get grain under the Canadian Wheat Board, and this minister said he was considering it for the handling of feed grain, but only considering it. Throughout the election that was fought last summer he said that was not the policy of the government, just a series of things which, as a good minister, he was considering. But, the minute the election was over, feed grains were put under the grain exchange.

Then there is the question of inland terminals. It goes back to 1921 when this was first proposed. There is the choice between a system ensuring the lowest cost of handling grain in the inland system or establishing a grain system that would be in harmony with the social and economic needs of the west. The inland terminal is economically sound for those who own it, but disastrous for the people who live within its shadow.

Next we come to the Crowsnest pass rates. This country, out of its desire to have a national railway, gave large chunks of land, great tracts of forest, and great areas of mineral wealth to the CPR in return for a guarantee that the grain from the prairies would be moved into position at a fixed rate.

Everyone knows that with the technology of the last 80 years the cost of moving bulk products has decreased year by year. Yet we see a program beginning, which seems to happen every time there is a lapse of about 10 years, to persuade the people of Canada that the Crowsnest pass rate deal must be broken. Who was it brought this to public attention? Naturally the men who run the railways would love to get at this helpless captive prisoner, the wheat farmer. They would just love to get their rates and charge the farmer the same price American farmers are charged to haul their grain to markets. American farmers did not give away half a continent to a group of men to build their railway.

I simply ask who brought this Crowsnest pass rate back into public discussion again? Sitting in this House 10 years ago the minister in charge of transport said that the Crowsnest pass rate would never be raised again. He became the head of the Canadian Transportation Commission eventually. I am referring to Mr. Pickersgill.

Who brings this back in? Who roused all the western farmers this last eight or nine months? It was the Minister of Justice. Then, when all the fires are burning, and every farmer and every group is talking about it, he says that it was just a personal opinion. A legislative chamber in Saskatchewan voted a resolution opposing it. The Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) had to send a wire repudiating his minister, by saying that it was just personal views he was expressing.

Why does the minister keep stirring everything up? Everything he stirs up is to get westerners alarmed about the possibility that the government is going back to its traditional practice of goosing the west.

Railway line abandonment is coming up this year. We were promised in this House 10 years ago that no railway line would be abandoned until we obtained all the information about traffic on each line and until each line produced the operating costs. It was not until this year that a bill was introduced into this House forcing the railways to give us this information.

Who should be our defender in these matters? It should be the Minister of Agriculture, but he is left wandering around in Ontario. We have no one speaking for agriculture in the west.

We had a little trouble on the west coast last year. Negotiations were going on under the principle of collective bargaining. Two ministers of the Crown went out and interfered with that collective bargaining procedure. It was not that we lost so much money on the wages we paid the terminal workers, but during the period of the strike we lost $12 million in demurrage, and the government refuses to pay for its own mistakes. Those two babes in blunderland wandering around out there cost us heavily.

Last year we had a debate across the country on resource taxation. The Minister of Justice even moves into finance and lays down an ultimatum in western Canada that those provinces are not going to push the federal government around, at a time when the provinces were fighting to get and hold control of what was theirs.

I would say that this is more than just a bill to stabilize net income. It is a tragedy that it has to be fought on this wider issue. This afternoon we gave the minister and the government a chance to withdraw from their position and let the farmers decide, after they have heard discussions of the bill, what principles they want. There was no flexibility or willingness to give the farmers a chance. We are seeing the same technique as we saw on the LIFT program. What the government decides is the law of the Medes and Persians. This is infallibility speaking, this is the ex cathedra announcement, and the farmer is not allowed to express his viewpoint. He will express it all right, after we have committed ourselves to principles which may not be acceptable to him.

It is clear that all parties, as well as the government, want to do something about the stabilization of the income of grain farmers. Hopefully the government wants to do the same thing for all farmers, but there are certain things which have to be done before any form of sound approach can be taken.

What is missing in this basic foundation? If we are to stabilize income and if we are to stabilize price, we should first ensure that it is possible for farmers to produce the maximum amount. Second, we should ensure that it is possible to sell all that is grown or produced. The first step in giving the farmer real security of income in the production of grain is to give him markets at a fair price. There used to be long term agreements with eight or nine different countries. Where are they now? We still have the agreement with China, but that is all.

From 1945 to 1967 the grain farmers of the world had an international commodity agreement. They set a floor and a ceiling price for three year periods. Where is that agreement now? It is gone because this government connived with the American government to get rid of the international wheat agreement. This government had a new philosophy: sell at any price; that it called competition. The government sent farm income plunging down in the years 1969, 1970 and 1971, after it destroyed the international wheat agreement.

In February, 1972, led by the Saskatchewan wheat pool, the farmers of this country joined with the farmers of the United States, Australia and Argentina, went to see the United States Secretary of Agriculture in Washington and pleaded with him to let the price of grain go to its real price because there was a shortage of grain. On this minister's orders, we kept selling grain during the winter of 1972 at a price below the cost of production. Then we ran out of grain, and I, along with the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton), made the statement that we were running out of grain.

Mr. Lang: When did we run out?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): We ran out in 1972.

Mr. Lang: Go on. Three hundred millions bushels is running out?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): The minister is sensitive.

Mr. Lang: I am sensitive about the truth.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Yes, and it hurts.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): If the minister would tell the truth he wouldn't be in the spot he is now. He keeps quoting figures the statistics people give him, and those figures have been wrong for 25 years.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): This minister believes in computers. He said during the election campaign that "there is lots of grain, I have it from the statistics". The Wheat Board repudiated him and said, "We can't find it, where is it?"

Mr. Lang: That is false, too.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): The minister has always acted on behalf of the system, and if the system has statistics which say there is a surplus, he says there is a surplus. These figures were wrong 20 years ago, they were wrong 10 years ago, and they are wrong today. And that is not the end of it. If we examine the same source of information with regard to beef in North America and Canada we find that in the last five years, according to the statistics this government takes as gospel truth because they come from a computer using a formula, we in Canada consumed 7 per cent more beef than we produced and imported.

The same applies in the United States. They are supposed to have been consuming over the last five years 9 per cent more beef than they produced and imported. So we have this silly situation of farmers being told by governments that the people concerned have produced more beef than they did this last ten years because the figures said so. How asinine! Those figures are just as wrong for beef as they are for wheat. The minister has not learned anything. He is like the Bourbons—he forgets nothing and learns nothing.

We need an international wheat agreement. Instead of talking about getting rid of the Crowsnest Pass rates the government should take the lead, as the government did in 1932, and also after the Second World War in 1946 and 1949, and get an international wheat agreement. Roughly 80 per cent of bread grain going into export markets today comes from the United States and Canada. Our two countries together could make an agreement. We could tie up with Argentina and Australia which would always follow good leadership. But we have a Prime Minister lying in the sun down in the Caribbean saying, "I am not going to join a cartel that sets prices for producers. I do not care about any sort of producer in Canada." This minister is just regurgitating what the Prime Minister is thinking.

Without a basic world price level and floor, Mr. Speaker, there will be no income stability, regardless of how many laws we pass and how much money we put into a fund.

If an incomes policy is to be put on top of a good international floor price there should be a good domestic foundation on which to build. Such a foundation is in place, and the Conservative Party is willing to tell the government how to administer the program if the minister does not know. There is already a workable crop insurance plan in place for which all the figures have been worked out. The federal-provincial machinery is working smoothly, and the farmers like and trust the program. All that has to be done is build this income stabilization plan on top of the crop insurance program on an individual basis.

This afternoon the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) read into the record portions of a brief prepared for submission to the Senate Committee on Agriculture by the Manitoba Crop Insurance Corporation and the Manitoba Department of Agriculture. I should like to quote from the same brief, beginning with the last paragraph on page 8, as follows:

> We regret to say, Mr. Chairman, that if that were the objective of the proposed Prairie Grain Stabilization Act, it could not be achieved by the measures envisaged in Bill C-41.

They are referring to protection of income here. It continues:

> What is more serious in our view, however, is the fact that Bill C-41 does not have as its specific purpose the protection of farmers against losses due to economic events beyond their control. One of the most exasperating aspects of the bill is that it is next to impossible to detect the rationale behind it, and this lack of rationale together with the extreme complexity of the bill make any attempt at explaining this important legislation to farmers an exercise in frustration.

This is the view of the Crop Insurance Corporation of Manitoba. It will be the same in Saskatchewan and Alberta. Yesterday and this afternoon we asked the minister to put these matters before the farmers before we committed ourselves to these principles.

The brief continues:

> Yet, since the scheme proposed in Bill C-41 is a contributory plan, farmers should know what insurance they are buying; in other words, the plan must relate to the needs of individuals, and it should be possible for individuals to determine what benefits would accrue to them if the events against which they are insuring themselves should occur. That is a cardinal principle of all insurance plans—

That means individual responsibility for payments in and payments out. Does this bill provide for such a thing? The farmers want a scheme that is best for a whole area, not the fallacy which appears in the PFAA legislation which caused us so much trouble.

I should like to quote another paragraph from the brief as follows:

> A second cardinal principle of all such schemes is that indemnities are paid to those who experience the ill effects of the event against which the plan provides insurance, and not to others. The proposed Prairie Grain Stabilization Act sins against both these principles; in fact it completely ignores them.

I think you can see why we proposed that before this bill repeated the mistakes of the LIFT program and the mistakes of Mr. Bennett in 1932, farmers should have a chance to decide what they want. After all they are putting up the money. The government should have been flexible and allowed the amendment to pass this afternoon.

I had a series of other points which I do not have time to go into, Mr. Speaker. There is the need for a foundation under this incomes plan. We could have built it on top of crop insurance or on top of the Agricultural Stabilization Act. Either would have worked, but the crop insurance program would have been the most suitable. Income protection could have been put on top of it on an actuarial basis and an individual basis, and there would have been no need for a great bureaucracy.

Some support has been voiced for a regional system. Believe me, Mr. Speaker, I know why the minister turned that down. It would not work, just as putting the whole area into one block will not work.

The government moved away from gross income to net income, but as cost it brought in a list of seven or eight items. One of the greatest costs in farming today is interest costs, followed by labour and management. It will be interesting to hear the government's reaction when farmers realize what is missing from the bill.

I have expressed my views about bureaucracy. We do not want any more in western Canada. We had it under the PFAA and the old PFRA, and got rid of it. The minister is trying to build a political machine, and so he wants to add this new bureaucracy under his control. We believe that the principles of this bill can be made simple and easy to administer. This type of legislation is necessary, but we have no confidence in the minister and would like to get him off the backs of the farmers. Let the farmers be consulted. Let them decide what the principles should be. Let them support, with confidence, the type of legislation which is so necessary today.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I have been waiting for several days for an opportunity to speak on this bill, which is very important to western Canada. Two years ago this party suggested a plan or tried to encourage the government to develop a plan for the protection of the western prairie grain producer. The proposals we put before the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) at that time would have supported agriculture in other parts of Canada as well.

It is a great obstacle to agricultural producers to have to deal with two ministers, neither of whom will act on good honest proposals submitted on their behalf. It is a great misfortune that the government has adopted this policy.

Two years ago we asked the Minister of Agriculture to adopt certain crop insurance policies which would set the pattern for the industry. Our proposals, if followed, would have obviated the necessity for further stabilization of the grains industry of western Canada, but the minister did not accept our suggestion and left the way open for the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang), minister in charge of the Wheat Board, to put his finger in the pie. That is why we are facing so many problems today. Actually, many of our problems flow from the inequities associated with those two ministers. I cannot differentiate between the two. They are responsible for several programs, including the ones coming under Bill C-19, Bill C-50 and Bill C-41. We also have our crop insurance program.

If these two ministers knew what they were doing they would bring in one or two programs which would stabilize the entire agricultural industry. Such programs would benefit all agricultural producers. The ministers have not done that. Apparently they cannot agree, and that is why we face difficulty in the agricultural sector of our economy.

Inequities associated with the administration of our grains business have necessitated the program which the minister has now brought forward under this bill. When the present session of parliament began one of the first difficulties with which we had to deal was that of the grain handlers' strike on the west coast. Three Canadians contributed materially to that problem, namely, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) and the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. The latter minister threw his weight, or authority, behind the Minister of Labour and behind the Prime Minister when the government tried to force grain companies on the west coast to accept a 61 per cent settlement. We, on my side of the House, said that such a settlement would set an inflationary pattern which would be unequalled in Canada's history, but the government would not listen. In no way would it pay attention to what we were saying.

I am glad to see the minister sitting in his seat. I hope he will listen to what we say. Allow me to quote from a speech I made in the debate just alluded to, and I am quoting from page 226 of Hansard for October 8, 1974. After quoting the minister's words at a Vancouver news conference on May 24, to the following effect:

The government will introduce legislation to approve contract recommendations by conciliator Dr. Perry as a binding collective agreement on the two parties.

I said:

On what advice or consideration was such a cowardly step based? I hope the hon. members opposite recognize the importance of the situation with which we are dealing. On July 18 the Minister of Labour reaffirmed the government's decision to force settlement terms upon the grain companies. The minister responsible for the Wheat Board urged producers to exert pressure on their own organizations in order that the inflationary conciliation recommendation would be accepted. What right did he have to do that? A telegram sent by the two ministers to the grain companies on August 23 reads in part:

'We have made it quite clear, as has the Prime Minister, that the government will legislate the recommendations of Dr. Perry, if necessary.'

Of course, that position met resistance. Why? Because the grain companies are owned by the producers and they backed the companies up to the hilt. Ninety per cent of them supported the companies. What else could they do? What else could the companies do, if they were to discharge their responsibility to those they served? Clearly, the three members of the government previously referred to have put the government into an intolerable position. Let me put on record letters which the companies have received from farmers.

I then read into the record the following letter from a farmer at Cupar, Saskatchewan:

Do I, as a grain farmer, also get a 61 per cent increase in the price of my products? In two years time can I negotiate as a body for another 60 per cent increase? . . . I agree that when the cost of living increases 10 per cent, so should everything else—not 60 per cent. I, as a farmer, am finally able to get my head a little above water. If price and wages increase at the same rate, that water is going to get . . . deep again. Keep up the good work.

What I have just quoted shows why our agricultural economy is in difficulty. Government promises enabled the government, including the minister in charge of the Wheat Board and the Minister of Labour, to be elected in the July 8 election last year.

On April 8, as recorded at page 4599 of Hansard, I asked the Minister of Agriculture the following question:

Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture and arises because of his presence at the Rome food conference. As it takes about one month to load grain for Bangladesh on the cargo carrier Amoco Cairo, one of the largest vessels ever to enter the port of Vancouver, because it is necessary to tow the ship into ocean water several times during the loading and turn it around in order to keep the cargo balanced, and as this ship must drop anchor 65 miles from the port of destination because of shallow waters, it is obvious somebody boobed. Can the minister advise the House who is responsible?

[Mr. Towers.]

Neither the Minister of Agriculture nor the minister in charge of the Wheat Board rose off his posterior to answer. Then we were told the ship would carry 4.8 million bushels of grain and would take about one month to load, if there were no delays. I point out that there was a ship in Seattle harbour which would take on 4.2 million bushels of grain in five days, using seven men to load. Further, the ship carrying Canadian grain had to anchor 65 miles off-shore from Bangladesh; it could not unload nearer the coast because it could not go into shallow waters. I said, when I asked my original question, that somebody boobed. I suggest that repeated boobs on the part of the two ministers concerned are creating problems for agriculture.

This afternoon we voted on an amendment which was defeated. We asked the minister to allow us to take this bill out to the producers and give them some input as to the type of program they want. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) mentioned that the Manitoba crop insurance people were in town today appearing before the Senate Agricultural Committee. I know crop insurance commissions from other provinces are also appearing before that committee. I think it rather unfortunate that a request I made of the Standing Committee on Agriculture was refused when one of these commissions was in town. The request was refused primarily because the government will not listen to advice from my side of the House. Ministers go along in their own bull-headed way and will not listen to good counselling.

The hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Douglas) suggested that the committee is going to travel. Has the hon. member discussed the idea with the Minister of Agriculture and the minister in charge of the Wheat Board? Certainly I see no support evident on the part of the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. McIsaac), or on the part of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale). They are so busy patting the minister on the back for what he has done that they are failing those who elected them by not criticizing the government for what it is doing. In no way will the people of those constituencies receive adequate representation until those two members adopt a different stance.

Let me quote part of the brief that the Manitoba Crop Insurance Commission presented earlier today to the agricultural committee of the other place. It says in part:

We suggest that the present all-risk crop insurance programs operative in the western provinces could be broadened to include price guarantees. Prices for the various crops could be adjusted from year to year to reflect changes in the cost of production and to protect profit margins so that net farm incomes would be kept commensurate with the general standard of living in Canada. By adding price guarantees to the present yield and quality guarantees of the crop insurance program, farmers could be offered a complete package of basic income protection.

● (2050)

The program could be operated by the crop insurance administration presently existing in the western provinces. With a slight addition to staff Manitoba Crop Insurance Corporation could administer a much more equitable crop and income insurance program than is envisaged in Bill C-41. It would also make it unnecessary to establish a complete new administrative organization to administer a separate western grain stabilization program.

Above all, the approach suggested by Manitoba Crop Insurance Corporation is consistent with the cardinal principles of mixed private and social insurance, that the insured knows what he is insured against and what his benefits will be, and that payments are not made at random but to those who need them.

This is the type of program we want to see put in place. It would have been so easy, but apparently the minister does not understand. He does not seem to understand that the Crop Insurance Commission presently establishes that there will be so many bushels of grain sold at so much a bushel. If you multiply those factors you arrive at an answer in dollars and cents.

It is ridiculous for the minister to tell the House there is a great difference between the two systems. The scheme proposed here is unnecessary, and it will cause many problems for grain producers. The minister's record has been poor. He has probably been one of the poorest ministers any government has had.

One of the first problems with which I had to deal as a member of parliament arose because of regulations and laws connected with the operations of the Wheat Board which were not working to the benefit of producers. The producers were caught. Everyone knows that when a permit book is taken out a producer may allocate so many acres for, malting barley. Perhaps the House will allow me to use barley as an example. As we all know, frost, rain, and weather conditions generally determine whether the barley will actually malt or not. In this instance frost hit the crop and producers could not deliver their grain as malting barley simply because it would not malt. Therefore the agent required a permit from the Wheat Board to transfer those designated acres back to allocated acres.

I made representations to the minister responsible for the Wheat Board, but he said he could do nothing. It would seem to me that, when producers are caught in this web of legislation passed by parliament, every effort should be made to help them, particularly by a minister in charge of the Wheat Board who is also Minister of Justice. Did this happen? No. They were hauled into court and had to pay fines of $50, as well as legal fees. The agent was fined between $200 and $300. This is not justice. We are not getting justice from the minister in charge of the Wheat Board.

Here we are asked to bring in another piece of legislation, and even the minister is not completely aware what the bill contains. Last night, when the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) stated that an inventory would need to be taken at the end of the year, the minister said this was not the case. I will put this exchange on record. I realize that the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) did so this afternoon, but we have to keep hitting the minister with it in the hope that eventually the message will get out to those who elected him to the House of Commons, and that those electors will realize what they are doing to the prairie grain producer. This is what was said in the debate last night:

MR. LANG: I wonder whether the hon. member can tell me how he develops the fear that any bin measuring is required at all. As I read the bill, everything depends upon the sales of grain. Some of his colleagues may have talked about on-farm transfers which were in fact not put into the bill because of the administration which would be involved. There is no necessity for the bins at all. I would like the hon. member to point out where there is any such necessity.

MR. NEIL: In response to the Minister I would point out that the bill calls for a year-end inventory, and it would seem to me that an inventory would require the measurement of the grain on the farm.

MR. LANG: Where is the inventory?

MR. NEIL: I would assume the inventory is in the farmers' bins.

MR. LANG: Nonsense.

MR. NEIL: Where is it?

MR. LANG: It is not in the bill.

Mr. Woolliams: You wouldn't make that mistake, would you?

Mr. Lang: It was not a mistake.

Mr. Towers: I appreciate, Mr. Speaker, that we are not supposed to deal with the bill in detail at this stage, but I should like to read just one excerpt because it does affect what we are discussing. This is from clause 9:

(4) For the purpose of determining the adjusted marketing to production ratio referred to in paragraph (1)(b) for a year under review, the Minister shall

(a) make the following calculation in respect of each of wheat, oats, barley, rye, flax seed and rapeseed:

(i) divide the actual aggregate number of bushels of such grain produced in the designated area and sold by all producers in the year under review by the number of bushels per acre of such grain that is the average yield for such grain for the five years immediately preceding the year under review;

(ii) divide the difference obtained by subtracting

(A) the opening inventory, in bushels, of farm stocks of such grain for the year under review, determined as being the closing inventory, in bushels, of farm stocks of such grain for the year immediately preceding the year under review, determined in December of that immediately preceding year.

The minister said it is not in the bill. He does not know what is in the bill. This is why the wheat producer is in such a horrible mess. If there were a business-like approach to the grain-handling system we could solve many of our problems, and there would be no need for programs like this intended to protect growers in years of hardship. What we are up against in Western Canada is the fact that labour leaders have been using the movement of grain as a whipping boy. The time is coming when we can no longer accept such a situation.

Every Canadian should be aware, too, that we depend to a great extent on grain exports to balance our foreign exchange account. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) has told us that our balance of payments deficit will be in the neighbourhood of $4 billion to $5 billion this year, and I can tell the House why this is so. Primarily it is because we had a poor grain crop in western Canada last year. I should like to put on record figures showing movement of grain in western Canada over a six month period in the last five crop years. In 1971 there were 330.2 million bushels; in 1972, 386.6 million bushels; in 1973, 410.8 million bushels; in 1974, 293.6 million bushels; in 1975, 275.1 million bushels. These figures are for clearance of grain for six month periods during those years, and the figures show a decline in the years 1974 and 1975.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the lower price of grain at the present time is adding to the problems of the Canadian economy and our balance of payments deficit. According to a report that I received some time ago, no grain cars had been unloaded at the Pacific coast or Thunder Bay terminals since Monday, February 17. As I said a while ago, we are unable to get our grain moving. If the minister in charge of the Wheat Board, together with the Minister of Labour, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien), and the Prime Minister would sit down with representatives of labour and get an assurance that our grain will be moved, our economy would be in a much better position.

I should like to put on record a comment in a newsletter put out by the Palliser Wheat Growers' Association as follows:

> The government of Canada seems incapable, for whatever reason, to control inflation. In the absence of government guidelines and programs to curb inflation, it is difficult to expect labour and management to exercise restraint in wage demands and company profits.
> Out of this situation arises the immediate problem: the complete shutdown in the movement of grain. This is resulting in a shortage of feed and food supplies for our customers and, most damaging of all, the loss of confidence in Canada's future reliability as a supplier.
> To the Canadian grains industry this could be a near-mortal blow; Japan is our Number One customer for rapeseed and our Number Two customer for wheat and barley.

It seems to me that the way that the prairie grain producer would manage the situation would be to see to it that the grain is moved. If he made a contract for delivery, he would ensure that the person making the purchase would receive the product on time.

In the minister's speech he gave figures showing payments that had been made between the years 1968 and 1971 to the producers, but one thing he did not say was that one-third of the money paid out was subscribed by the producers. He said the money was paid out of a subsidy fund, and true enough it was, but one third was put up by the producers, the other two thirds being put up by the taxpayers of Canada.

We are concerned to see that this money is spent to the best possible advantage, and at the present time there is no way we can be assured that money paid into the fund will be used to the benefit of the prairie grain producer. It is a well known fact that any money returned to the producer will go to those in a strong financial position as well as to those who are not, something we ran into under the old PFAA. While that program was in effect one of its shortcomings was that money was paid out to those who did not need it as well as to those who did, and quite often some of the farmers who required money were overlooked.

I think it is unfortunate that the minister has more or less copied the old PFAA program, as well as incorporating into the new program the shortcomings of PFAA. I can think of farmers in any one of the three prairie provinces, as well as in the Peace River block in British Columbia, who could be completely wiped out because prices as well as production are up in other parts of the country; hence there would be no pay out. Producers may have to rely on this program to carry them over difficult periods, whereas we could have had an adequate crop insurance scheme for those who really require it.

If the minister had tied this program to a crop insurance plan, the extra money could have put in place a program that would not only have been acceptable to the producers but would have worked to their advantage. As it is we have no guarantee that the minister's present program will work. Most of the crop insurance commissions in the four western provinces—I include British Columbia since it has a crop insurance commission too—fear that this program will have an adverse effect on their programs. I know the minister says these are two separate programs, and that one is complementary to the other, but things do not turn out that way, Mr. Speaker. People get fed up with this type of program. They may take one or the other, but I question whether they will take both in many cases.

When representatives of the Palliser Wheat Growers' Association appeared before the agriculture committee they told the committee that they were relying, and had relied, on crop insurance to get them over a bad spot. Now, in order to build up his ego, the minister is bringing in a program that could almost destroy the crop insurance scheme if the producers elect to participate in this new program and not crop insurance. If the producers do not accept both schemes, then actually one will work against the other. This is why the two schemes should be tied together. It is also why the crop insurance commissions are very pleased to have the opportunity of appearing before the Senate committee on agriculture.

I have felt that perhaps not too much good has come out of the Senate, but I hope that the Senate committee on agriculture will take a good look at this program before approving it. If, in their wisdom, they see it is not going to serve the purpose intended, then I hope they will turn it down. The vote we had this afternoon is an indication that the members on this side of the House do not have the manpower to turn it down.

I hope that our Standing Committee on Agriculture will have an opportunity of visiting the west and discussing this bill with the producers, individual farmers, and farm organizations, and that we will be able to put into effect a program that will benefit them. Certainly this is a grave responsibility, because the minute this program is implemented without any changes I would question whether it will serve the purposes the minister would like it to serve. I think he would like to put a program in place to do the job, but for the life of me I cannot see why he will not accept some advice in the development of a program that will work.

I see no reason in the world why the committee should not go out and discuss this matter with the farmers, and then decide what type of program is required. Let me impress upon the House, Mr. Speaker, that whatever program is set up it will be the only one, because there is not room for another. There is certainly no room for any more programs, and I would hope that this one will be designed so that it will serve the best interests of the producers.

I have a copy of a letter written by the Flax Growers of western Canada to the minister in which it is stated:

> We would respectfully request that you use your best influence to assure that the Standing Committee on Agriculture hold public hearings in Western Canada on Bill C-41.
> We believe that our members would gain a much better understanding of this bill and the mechanics of operation of the proposed stabilization plan, through discussion at a public meeting, than is possible from its perusal.

The subject is too important to be left to representatives of organizations alone. It would also be impossible for our members to make representation in Ottawa in any numbers.

Our association will present a brief on this bill to the standing committee and would appreciate the opportunity for discussion of its contents.

Surely the minister will grant this request because the agricultural community is going through a very serious period in its history. Grain has been dropping in price in the last six months. It would appear that western Canada at the present time is about a month late with seeding, and we are not sure just what kind of crop we are going to get this year. If we have an early frost, as we did last year, the crop could be as short as it was then.

In addition, there are increased costs of production. Fertilizers are up 50 per cent, including ammonia and 11:48. We were told the other day that as of July 1 freight rates are going up 25 per cent to the chemical industry. The minister was out west and flew a kite when suggesting that perhaps we could take another look at Crowsnest Pass freight rates. I believe he was in Edmonton when he said that. I think he was flying a kite, and he found out that western grain producers soon shot it down. He has been trying to retract the statement ever since. Just the other day I noticed a statement from the minister's Regina office which said that he was not going to touch those rates. If he was not planning to touch them, why did he mention this? He certainly frightened the very dickens out of the western grain producers when he mentioned that. They guard these rates very jealously because they know that if they are changed the cost of grain movement will quadruple over a 12-month period.

I have been asked many questions about this bill, and I should like to refer to one query by an officer of a grain company who is also a producer. He stated in his letter:

The plan is described as voluntary, which is some stretch of the imagination.

Farmers near retirement will not join the plan because they could not withdraw their contributions a few years later when leaving the farm.

Should feed mills receive financial consideration for the extra book work involved?

This is a very important point. I said earlier that this minister caused me problems when I first came to this House. I saw innocent producers and grain handlers fined in our courts, and there was nothing I could do. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board in his dual capacity as Minister of Justice told me there was nothing he could do either.

We are now getting involved in the same sort of thing, but it is even worse. There is a penalty section in this bill which provides for a fine of up to $5,000 for an infraction. These grain dealers are supposed to deduct the 2 per cent representing the producer payments and forward them to the stabilization account within 30 days. What happens in the fall of the year when these grain handlers or elevator operators are handling a great deal of grain, are very busy and go over the 30 days? According to the law that will be legislated by this bill if it is not changed, they will be liable to a charge and a fine in our courts of up to $5,000.

What happens to feed mill operators if they should happen to do the same thing? The minister has suggested that there can be the movement of grain through licensed grain dealers. What about the grain that is transferred from one farm to another? Is that to be included under this bill? What happens in respect of the grain sold by one farmer to another? I do not think there is any provision in the bill for that.

What this is going to mean is simply that if producers take part in the program the farmers will haul their grain and sell it to the feed mill operator, who will in turn sell it to the feeder. There will be extra charges and extra costs involved, which means less profit for the producer and for the feedlot operator.

There are so many faults and holes in this bill it is as the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) has suggested, just like a sieve.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): I recognize the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

Mr. Woolliams: The automobile man.

Mr. Horner: Is this a leadership race? The hon. member is going to make a speech on wheat in support of the farmers.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, it is always a pleasure for me to receive a round of applause from my Conservative colleagues on my right.

Mr. Horner: He hasn't any of his own colleagues in the House.

Mr. Broadbent: Those hon. members are wrong in their facts as usual.

Mr. Horner: I see the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) has just come in.

Mr. Broadbent: That Alberta Tory is wrong in his facts again. My colleagues are here cheering from the seats behind me.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member just stated that, as usual, the hon. member for Alberta is wrong in his facts. What I said was that he did not have any of his colleagues in the House, and just as I said that the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) came in. I see that the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) has arrived since I rose. The point I am attempting to make is that he suggested his colleagues were here, contrary to what the hon. member for Crowfoot just said. He can speak in defence of his colleagues as he has the floor, but he cannot dispute what I stated. Now here comes the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters).

An hon. Member: They are coming out of the woodwork.

Mr. Horner: If I keep on speaking I am sure all his colleagues will arrive. The point I make is that when the hon. member rose and I said none of his colleagues were here, the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre at that moment walked in from behind the curtains. Up to that point the hon. member was alone in that part of the House. He is making a speech because he is running for the leadership of the NDP, and he wants to be on record as being in support of the wheat farmers of Saskatchewan.

● (2120)

I hope in some way that he does better than the member for Yorkton-Melville.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to continue. I should not be taken to task for the shortsighted opinions of the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner). I can tell the hon. member for Crowfoot that one quarter of the members of my caucus are here tonight, and in relative terms that is substantially more that is present from his party.

Mr. Horner: No, it is not. I rise on a point of privilege—

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, if we could put our private dialogue behind us perhaps I could get on with the comments I should like to make. In providing the last contribution to the second reading debate I should like on behalf of my party—the hon. member for Crowfoot has made his contribution and now he is leaving.

Mr. Horner: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, what I in fact said was that I can now step behind the curtain because I have made the member honest this evening. I would not want that statement to be considered in longevity or anything like that.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, at the outset of my comments I want to re-affirm the commitment of the New Democratic Party to the principle of income stabilization for farmers. Indeed our party has been the pioneer of orderly marketing systems and price supports that would guarantee Canadian farmers a decent livelihood and would ensure the viability or rural communities. To those goals we remain firmly committed. We will continue to expose and oppose, with all the force and determination that we can muster, any attempt by the government to destroy the system of orderly marketing of western grains through the Wheat Board, and any attempt to force western producers back on to the mercy of the open or so-called free market.

It is perfectly understandable that members of the New Democratic Party are suspicious of the moves that are made by the Liberals in respect of western grains. Over the last few months we have been witnessing their attempts to weaken the authority of the Canadian Wheat Board by turning domestic feed grains back to the Winnipeg Commodity Exchange.

We have been hearing proposals for the repeal of the Crowsnest rates, to which the preceding speaker for the Conservative Party quite correctly alluded. We have been hearing calls for the abandonment of thousands of miles of branch lines on the prairies. We have also seen amendments introduced to the Agricultural Stabilization Act which is now in committee, which make specific provision for the support of wheat, oats and barley grown on the prairies and marketed, not through the Wheat Board as they should be, but on the open or so-called free market.

[Mr. Horner.]

Now, following an abortive attempt to foist an unacceptable stabilization bill on western farmers in 1971, an attempt that was stopped by the combined opposition of every farm organization and every provincial government involved, as well as by the determined efforts of the NDP members in this House, we have another stabilization bill that is simply too complex, too complicated, and too inexplicable. Several of my colleagues at earlier stages in this debate outlined our objections in detail to the bill so I shall be brief, much to the relief of some of my urban colleagues to my right.

Mr. Alexander: No. I want to hear you.

Mr. Broadbent: I was very sorry that the amendment proposed by the Conservative Party this afternoon was voted down. I think it would have been most appropriate to refer the subject matter of this bill to a committee of the House before proceeding further. I agree with them on that point. Not only would this have permitted some clarification of the principles behind this particular scheme, it would also have afforded an opportunity to canvass, in co-operation with farm groups, other possible kinds of stabilization plans. I think that should be done.

I should like to summarize briefly some of the problems in respect of this particular piece of legislation. We will do our best to deal with these in the form of amendments at the committee stage. The purpose of this legislation, briefly stated, is the continued operation of a free market in western grains and the need to protect producers from its inevitable failings. Production surpluses and deficits will continue to exist after the passage of this measure. Under this bill the government is to play no active role in determining the allocation of productive resources. In our view this is a fundamental fault.

The stabilization effect of the plan is reduced by a number of factors, and I shall single out a few. We are in a period of decline. The five-year average of net cash flow would become progressively lower. Net income would show a progressive decline. Producers would continue to contribute the levy. Pay-outs would occur during periods of relatively high but falling commodity prices, whereas no pay-out would occur during periods of relatively low but rising price levels. The cost of the plan to the federal government is overstated, and the stabilization effect reduced due to the fact that a portion of federal contributions, around 15 per cent, would be recovered through taxation when a payment is made.

Because the stabilized margin or net cash flow is not indexed to inflation, net income would decline in terms of real dollars at a rate approximately equal to the rate of inflation, with no support payments being made. Stabilization payments themselves are not included as proceeds in calculating the five-year average. Further, the levy is based on the financial position of the stabilization fund, not on ability to pay. The levy could actually increase in a bad year. Surely this is an undesirable situation.

Finally, the support level drops to 90 per cent of the five-year average after the fund has been in a deficit position for three years. What are the implications of aggregate calculations and pay-outs? Because the plan operates on an aggregate basis, all regions and all grains are lumped together in the calculation of aggregate payouts. This offers little or no protection on a regional or commodity basis. For example, rapeseed producers may experience depressed markets but not receive any pay-outs from the plan if the aggregate proceeds from all grains—and wheat of course is dominant—remain at or above the five-year average level.

Eligible expenses incurred in the production and sale of grain include only cash expenses as listed in the bill. They exclude depreciation on buildings and machinery, interest on indebtedness, interest on equity, and the labour and management of the producer himself. Surely this is another undesirable feature of this measure.

An individual producer's share of the aggregate pay-out, in a year when a stabilization payment is made, is determined in proportion to his share of contributions through levies for that year and the immediately preceding two years. In other words a producer who has had good sales, and therefore has made a relatively substantial contribution to the fund, will receive a proportionately high pay-out. A producer who has done less well will receive proportionately less. The plan therefore rewards good fortune, and penalizes misfortune. He who needs most gets least.

At this point I would like to refer to an important point that was made before the Senate committee on agriculture this afternoon by the deputy minister of agriculture for the province of Manitoba in a discussion of this bill. He compared some of the provisions of this bill with what exists in our unemployment insurance legislation. It reads:

> If the Unemployment Insurance Commission operated on the same principle as the grain stabilization plan, it would calculate for all of Canada the average annual bill for wages and salaries on which unemployment insurance contributions are made, adjust it for changes in the number of unemployment insurance contributors and for certain changes in the consumer price index, and if the adjusted total wage bill fell below the average of the previous five years, the Unemployment Insurance Commission would make a payment to all wage and salary earners. Each would be paid proportionate to his contributions; those who had paid the maximum would receive most; those who had paid less would receive less, and the unemployed who had made little or no contributions would receive little or nothing.

I know that such a scheme to stabilize the net proceeds from wages and salaries in Canada would be rejected not only by the ordinary working people in Oshawa but by the working people in every village, town and city across Canada. Yet such is the principle at the heart of the bill.

I believe that all Canadians, consumers as well as producers, whether they live in cities or rural areas, have come to see the urgency of providing adequate and stable incomes for our farmers. I think also that most people can understand the need to support the farming industry as a whole, just as our society now supports, through a variety of means, almost every industry in one way or the other by way of sharing in a variety of governmental schemes. What we must insist upon, however, whether in respect of industrial subsidies or support for agricultural producers, is some assurance that the funds so used will be used to achieve their desired effect. It is in this respect that my colleagues and I object most seriously to a number of details in this bill, although there is over-all agreement on the basic principle.

It is concern with these detailed objections that will lead members of my party to present to the House and to the government amendments at committee stage, and we hope at that point that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) will show more wisdom and flexibility than he has up to this point in the debate on this very important subject.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill C-13, an act to amend the Northern Canada Power Commission Act, with an amendment, to which the concurrence of this House is desired.

TWO-PRICE WHEAT ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR PAYMENTS FOR WHEAT PRODUCED AND SOLD IN CANADA FOR HUMAN CONSUMPTION

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-19, to provide for payments in respect of wheat produced and sold in Canada for human consumption in Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot) moved:

> That Bill C-19, an act to provide for payments in respect of wheat produced and sold in Canada for human consumption in Canada, be amended by deleting "1980" in lines 27 and 32 at page 2 and substituting therefor "1977".

He said: Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in the debate on Bill C-19, and on the motion which I put forward, I should like to point out that this debate is taking place at a very unsettled time with regard to the world food situation.

I am one of those who, over the years, have been deeply concerned about people throughout the world starving, and I was particularly pleased and proud that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), who was at the Rome food conference in late 1974, vouched for the Canadian contribution to alleviate the plight of starving people throughout the world. I was disappointed at that time that the United States, a much wealthier country than ours, a country much more capable of producing food for human consumption than is Canada, was so reticent in offering its resources to satisfy the hungry world.

Having said all that, I now come to Bill C-19, an act to provide for payments in respect of wheat produced and sold in Canada. The concept of Bill C-19 is basically that world wheat demand and world wheat prices will rise, but wheat sold to Canadian millers will sell at $3.25 a bushel. Any amount of money above $5 a bushel, at which world wheat sells, will be compensated by the producers, and any amount of money between $3.25 and $5 will be compensated by the government.

This is a very interesting piece of legislation at a time when world food supplies are, I repeat, in what might be called an unsettled condition, a thunderstorm, a reoccuring storm, or what might be called at best stormy conditions. We saw world wheat prices rise well above $6 a bushel in December 1974. In early 1975 we witnessed the withdrawal by the USSR of its offer to purchase wheat from the United States. This caused world wheat prices to drop from January 1 until the middle of April by about $2 a bushel. The interesting thing is that throughout that drop no comparable drop took place within Canada. Wheat prices within Canada dropped from about $5.90 per bushel on the international market to $5.16 at Thunder Bay on April 1, the asking price of the Canadian Wheat Board. The reason I point this out is that it must obviously be clear to everyone that the Canadian wheat farmer is still subsidizing wheat later by the Canadian consumer.

This bill locks the wheat producer into a seven year agreement. I cannot overemphasize that. Everyone in this House has witnessed several labour negotiations. I can recite the railway negotiations, the longshoremen on the west coast, grain handlers and longshoremen on the St. Lawrence, and so on. None of them relate to a seven year contract. Bill C-19 locks wheat producers into a seven year contract. What has this parliament got against wheat producers? Why lock them into a fixed price for their commodity?

We all know that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) is unable to control inflation, much as we might wish he could. We might admire his command of the finance portfolio, but we know that he cannot contain inflation within Canada because he does not have the support of the Liberal party or of the Liberal cabinet in his back pocket. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) runs this country, and the Minister of Finance is just one of those people who must grapple with the facts. Grappling with the facts does not enable him to reach the proper conclusion with regard to inflation. We have come to the conclusion that inflation will continue, whether we like it or not.

Bill C-19 locks Canadian wheat producers into a seven year agreement which suggests that Canadian millers will buy wheat for $3.25 a bushel, and the government shall make up the difference between $3.25 and $5. On anything over $5 the poor—I cannot overemphasize that word—producers must bear the loss. When this bill was studied in committee, we were told that all farm organizations agreed with it. But before I get to the committee question, I should emphasize what my amendment does. It proposes to delete 1980 in lines 27 and 32 on page 2 and substituting the year 1977.

In other words I am saying that we should stick with $3.25 and a subsidy up to $5 until the year 1977. That is a two year contract. Is it so unusual for this House to be asked to support a two year contract? What labour and management negotiations has this House dealt with in recent years? It has dealt with the railways, the grain handlers on the west coast, grain handlers on the St. Lawrence river, and all of them in two year contracts. Why should we superimpose our desire for a seven year contract upon the farmers? Do we think farmers are so naive that they will willingly negotiate this contract? Do we think farmers are so ignorant that they do not know the facts?

Mr. McKinley: There are no farmers in the Liberal Party.

Mr. Horner: The Conservative Party whip is absolutely correct when he says there are no farmers in the Liberal Party, and that is a sad situation. I dealt with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang), who is in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, earlier. He grew up on a farm, but he hates farming. His assistant, his little boy, the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale), hates farming as well, and he has never farmed.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIsaac)—

Mr. Lang: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) has said that I grew up on a farm and hate farming. I know he often says things which are wrong, but in a few short words he was wrong in a double barrelled fashion, and I know he would not want to mislead the House. The fact of the matter is that I did not grow up on a farm and I do love farming.

Mr. Horner: Well, everyone reaches his own conclusion about his fellow man. If the minister says he did not grow up on a farm, I was wrong. If he did not grow up on a farm, he grew up in the farming community of Humboldt in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Lang: That is wrong too.

Mr. Horner: But he did not choose agriculture as his vocation, he chose law. I have nothing against lawyers. I have a secret desire for my son to study law, if he can qualify. My secret desire results in a fight or squabble between us. He wants to remain on the ranch and farm. The minister did not pursue agriculture, he pursued law because he did not like agriculture and did not want to have anything to do with agriculture.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): You don't like it either.

Mr. Horner: Furthermore, he never even practised law.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank God for that.

Mr. Benjamin: I wouldn't hire him even if I was guilty.

Mr. Horner: I think the minister would be a lot better person today if he had practised law. He would have learned more about humanity than he now knows.

Mr. Caccia: How about talking about the bill?

Mr. Horner: There is no question that I have deep reservations about the bill. Farmers have often found themselves pitted against unions. One does not have to be born and raised in Saskatchewan to realize that. I do not have to be a member of the NDP to realize that farmers often find themselves pitted against the unions. I am asking the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, who comes from Saskatchewan, to recognize something that we all know, "Ask not more of the farmers than you will ask of your unions". This bill does ask more, Mr. Speaker. It asks farmers to sign up for seven years. When the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) spoke this afternoon about another bill he asked "what union would sign this bill?" He did not think any union would sign up for seven years.

My amendment is a simple one, Mr. Speaker, and even the Minister of Justice could understand it—just change the words 1980 to 1977. If the government is worth relying upon, what is wrong with saying let us move in two stages? That is all I am asking. If the minister cannot equate the cost of production figures to this bill then he should not ask farmers to sign up for seven years, but take it stage by stage. But the government says no.

When the bill was considered in committee the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale), the minister's good little boy, had some strange and interesting things to say about it. Committee proceedings No. 4, pages 26 and 27, report him as saying:

> I think there is a basic problem in the confusion that resulted from those comments between this measure that is before us, which as the minister has pointed out is really dealing with the consumer subsidy aspect of the two-price wheat program, and the stabilization program.

He went on to say:

> It is interesting to look at what the farm reaction has been in fact. According to the announcements and pronouncements of the various farm groups with respect to his two-price wheat program—and to find that specific reaction you have to go back to last fall to look at what the farm groups were saying—it is interesting to note that they have not had much to say or many comments to pass on this legislation—

I am not going to read the whole paragraph but later, as appears on page 26, the hon. member had this to say.

> Almost every farm group that I have heard of endorsed it. At the moment I cannot think of an exception that voiced a contrary opinion last fall to this legislation. Some had reservations when the initial discussion was proceeding during the late summer when that legislation was proposed; I think that announcement was made on September 12. The farm groups, almost to a man—I would want to check my records to be absolutely sure—endorsed the idea.

That is what the hon. member for Assiniboia said to the committee—that almost to a man they endorsed the idea.

I would like to read what farm groups had to say about the amendment I put before the House, and which is being debated today. I defy any member of the House of Commons to say that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture is not the most reliable group to put forward the concerted viewpoint of what is best for agriculture. When they appeared before the Standing Committee on Agriculture on Bill C-19, they had this to say as reported at page 6 of committee proceedings No. 9:

> Since the guaranteed price was set in September of 1973 to the end of September this year, the farm inputs cost index for western Canada has increased by 14.73 per cent and for Canada as a whole by 12.6 per cent. By taking a 13 per cent average and increasing the base price by 13 per cent for the 1974-75 crop year the indicated starting guaranteed price which should be in the bill and the Wheat Board regulations would be $3.67 per bushel—

This bill deals with a basic starting price of $3.25 per bushel, and they deal specifically with $3.67. The brief concludes:

> In summary, it is the policy of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and its members that the producers' guaranteed base price should be reviewed annually and indexed with changes in the inputs price index with additional payments up to the maximum of $1.75.

I am just asking for a simple amendment to reduce the number of years by three. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture asked that the basic price be reviewed annually. They may condemn me for asking for it every two years. The minister claims to love agriculture so why does he not believe the federation when they ask for an annual review? The minister may not have been born on a farm, and he certainly never went into agriculture when he chose a career. Instead he took law to "bleep bleep" the farmer.

May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the government House leader if we will continue with consideration of Bill C-19 tomorrow?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, it would be the intention to continue with this bill, and probably go on to Bill C-57.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

HEALTH—IMMIGRANT MEDICAL STUDENTS—REQUEST FOR DATA ON WILLINGNESS TO SERVE IN GENERAL PRACTICE AND IN REMOTE AREAS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, tonight I am going to speak in the adjournment debate on the question of bringing foreign doctors into Canada when we have many fully qualified medical students who are being rejected by our universities. One student was even rejected because he was one point too low in mathematics.

It is incredibly selfish for us to bring in half our supply of doctors in the provinces from less affluent countries. Is that Christian ethics, or is it foreign aid in reverse? One doctor came from a country which only had one doctor for every 5,000 people. We have one doctor for every 700 people. Many of those doctors could not qualify for our Canadian medical schools because their education was held to be inadequate. We are concerned about our medical manpower, but where is it? Are the medical authorities concerned about this, or are they shelving their responsibilities? Is medical manpower receiving attention at the federal level?

The only criterion for entrance to Canada is that a doctor wishing to come here must practise where a doctor is needed. That is the admission ticket, and that is some ticket. If a foreign doctor comes to this country and goes to some remote area, he may find it cold, or develop arthritis. He will be lonely and upset, and may develop emotional difficulties and go to the city. Of course if he is in B.C. he can go to Vancouver or Victoria and enjoy a fairly warm climate.

To say that escalating health care costs and abuses can be cut by cutting the number of doctors in practice is nonsense, is pure rubbish. People want to see a doctor; they do not care how many doctors are on the street; they only want to see one. A health care program, if honestly handled, would in no way increase health care costs. It always amuses me to hear people say, "We are well fixed for doctors; we have one for every 620 or so." Let us look at the figures.

About half our doctors are specialists and only see referred patients. What about the other half? Many of those doctors have administrative jobs. They work as insurance medical examiners. They do part-time work. They include members of parliament. Others do local part-time work only when they feel like it. Some work short hours, and only in hospitals. So really, how many doctors are there in general practice? Is there one doctor to every 2,000 people?

In addition, of course, you must consider those who are teachers and researchers. Their numbers must be subtracted from the total. Anyone who argues that health care costs will not go up must, of course, show the government how to take care of all the old people who become ill as they go over the hill in their 40s, 50s, 60s and 70s. As people get older they tend to develop more and more diseases, and you see multiple diseases developing in the same person. We are training geriatricians. Western University, at London, Ontario, I believe has a qualified geriatrician as head of that university's intended chair of geriatrics. Queen's is making a start in this field. Actually, Western had to go outside Canada to obtain a qualified geriatrician.

Let's consider the list of applicants. The University of Toronto leads in having the most medical freshmen born outside this country. I understand that 25 per cent of their freshmen class were born outside Canada. But we reject hundreds of Canadian boys and girls who were born in Canada, who have been brought up in our customs and know our reactions. Many of them have a burning desire to minister to the sick. Many have compassion and feel the urge to become involved in this field. When rejected by this country and its institutions, they go to Ireland, Mexico, or other countries, and come back, after taking this circuitous route, to practise in Canada.

[Mr. Rynard.]

You know, it has never been proven that brilliant students make better doctors. Often the bright and the brilliant suffer from offsetting disadvantages. Often the average student with average marks makes the best doctor.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rynard: All of us in the profession can point to examples showing the truth of what I say. After all, what have mathematics, physics and chemistry to do with general practice?

In conclusion, we say we need foreign doctors to go to our wide open spaces. I object to this tactic. We are asking those doctors to go to places where our own, native trained doctors will not go. How wise are we? I suggest that we shall often find that these foreign doctors will practise for a little while, but then become sick. It is cold in outlying parts, and they are not used to those conditions. They develop arthritis; they get emotionally ill, so they head for the big cities.

Wouldn't it be far better when the prospective medical student is filling out his application for entrance to the university, to ask him: are you willing to go into general practice in outlying areas or where required for the next three to five years? Give him incentives to do that—remove his income tax. You would then find you would be able to pick the number of doctors who would go there, and they would be all the better doctors because of their training in that field. I ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) to accept his responsibility in the medical manpower field, to admit some of these average students of medicine, and to stop discrimination against students who may be, in the long run, the best general practitioners of all.

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, on February 5, 1975, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) undertook to inquire about data concerning applications made by medical students to universities in Canada indicating their willingness to do general practice for a stated period, and/or indicating their willingness to go where there is a need for medical manpower in Canada. A check with the department and the provinces has concluded that at the moment no data appears to be available in any comprehensive form at national and provincial levels on either foreign or Canadian medical students applying to the medical colleges indicating their willingness to do general practice for a stated period, and/or indicating their willingness to go where there is need for medical manpower in Canada.

According to the Association of Canadian Medical Colleges, in some medical colleges applicants may be interviewed on their future interest in general practice and their willingness to practise in areas where there is a need for medical manpower, but the answers to these questions are not recorded in any usable form.

NATIONAL PARKS—RIDEAU-TRENT CANALS—AUTHORIZATION OF TOLLS—ESTIMATE OF REVENUE

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my subject of debate at this time on the adjourned motion is one of vital interest to the tourist industry of southern Ontario in the region traversed by the Rideau-Trent canal systems. Up until this year, 1975, these systems have historically remained, as they should always be, free of tolls. Their construction is unique in the western hemisphere and a marvel of construction methods of the 19th century, especially in the Rideau system where the name of Colonel John By, its builder, will endure for centuries.

These canal systems have drawn an increasingly important patronage to the tourist industry, not only from our own users, but all over the North American continent, and a healthy and prosperous tourist industry has been built up along these waterways. This industry has helped our balance of trade more and more each year, and no impediment should be placed in its way. But now the government, through the Ministry of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, has announced that it is placing toll and lock charges on these waterways. I must protest this action as strongly as possible.

I first brought this matter to the attention of the minister in the form of a question on March 24. A supplementary question yielded the information from the minister that the expected revenue would be more than $11 million. He did not give me the right answer to my question. I was asking how much revenue they expected to receive from the canal systems. His answer of $11.6 million was the expected revenue from the whole parks system. I have learned since that they only expect about $300,000 per year revenue from users of the canals, Mr. Speaker. This sum is not worth the effort and should not be levied, considering the damage it is going to do our tourist industry and outfitters along the canals.

I have always been among those who advocate as much freedom as possible in our roads, waterways and communications systems. That is why I have always fought the increase in tolls on the St. Lawrence Seaway just as I fight the installation of tolls and lock charges on the Rideau-Trent tonight. The government is apparently seeking to Americanize our free systems and, in doing so, to stultify and discourage private business. These two waterways have been the vehicle which has helped build our tourist industry and brought business to tourist operators. These operators in turn, individually and collectively, pay tremendous amounts of taxes, municipal, provincial and federal.

I brought this matter up the other night in committee, in fact on April 24. I stated there, and I state again, that the action of the government in placing tolls and lock charges on these formerly free systems directly promotes inflation. By placing charges and tolls on publicly owned and free waterways, the government in a sense is saying, "We are going to get ours—our revenue" and is saying to the tourist operator, "You get yours the best way you know how".

The natural result of this move by the government is to reduce patronage of the waterways by the Canadian and American public, and at the same time reduce patronage and use of the tourist hotels, outfitters and tourist businesses all along the waterways, including the sale of fuel, licences, fishing tackle, liquor, beer, meals, marina services, room and motel and hotel accommodation, and everything that is required for holidayers and tourists. The reduction of gross business may necessitate the raising of rates for accommodation. This is inflationary.

The government already has a taxation stake and interest in those other revenues, so in imposing tolls for the comparatively paltry sum of an estimated $300,000 the government is only going to cut off its nose in order to spite its face. If the government has any regard for the people of southern Ontario who depend on the tourist industry for a living, it should forget about this installation of tolls.

I am not alone in my fight. The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) has protested this, as has the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt) and the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard). Here is a recent report from the Ottawa Journal of April 30 headlined "Lock tolls will hurt tourism":

> A federal government plan to charge lockage fees on the Rideau Lakes waterway has drawn sharp criticism from resort and marina operations and the boating public.
> Regulations now being drafted by the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs (which administers Parks Canada) would have pleasure craft under 18 feet paying from $3 a day to $50 a season to use the locks. Craft more than 18 feet would pay from $4 to $80.
> It's the first time in 70 years that tolls will be charged. And businessmen along the waterway are worried.
>
> "It's bound to affect that tourist trade," said Roy Towle, president of the Smiths Falls Chamber of Commerce. "When people add up the cost of boats, campsites, gasoline and now this, they just won't come."
> Joseph Kenny who runs a hotel at Jones Falls, near Elgin, Ontario, is worried his business will drop this summer and he's been writing to his regular guests urging them to protest to Ottawa.

Mr. Kenny's hotel at Jones Falls is typically one of hundreds of small businesses to be unfairly and adversely effected by this toll and lock charge policy.

There is also another point, Mr. Speaker. There is more than the tourist industry involved here. The government is discriminating against the local farmers, landowners, residents and cottage owners along the canal systems who have always used their historic right freely to use the waterways. Farmers often have to go up or down through a set of locks to tend their cattle or livestock, to cut wood, or practise forestry in the husbandry of land, and indeed often have to go through a set of locks to go fishing. Cottage owners often have to go through a set of locks to go to the nearest village to buy their provisions.

These people have riparian rights that the government is now going to charge them to use. If the government insists on putting tolls in place Mr. Speaker, it should give the people I have mentioned special free permits to use the locks; but I protest, as strongly as it is physically possible for me to do so, the charging of tolls to anyone.

On behalf of those in business and resident along the Rideau-Trent waterways from Ottawa to Kingston and from Trenton to Georgian Bay, I call upon the government and its ministry of Indian and northern affairs to reconsider this ill-advised scheme which will be so harmful to these residents, to the tourist industry, to the province of Ontario and to Canada as a whole, and to maintain the free use of these waterways by the already heavily taxed public.

Adjournment Debate

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Hillsborough has attempted to show that lock tolls and other levies on the Rideau-Trent canal system will have an adverse effect on tourism. I should like to reassure the hon. member that experience elsewhere, in situations analagous to the canal system in question, has shown positively that tourism continues to grow, and in fact increases if additional funds collected by such charges are used to enhance the service, as will be the case in this instance.

Mr. Alkenbrack: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am not the hon. member for Hillsborough.

Mrs. Campagnolo: I submit that the charges authorized by the minister are indeed reasonable when one considers the level of services given.

In response to the hon. member for Hillsborough on March 24, the minister stated that in 1975-76 $11.6 million would be realized from the total operation. It was the minister's understanding that the question asked pertained to the over-all revenue estimate for parks in Canada. On further reflection it would appear that it was the intention of the hon. gentleman opposite to be apprised of projected estimates from canal systems only. The figure for 1975-76 is $571,000, which I would like to point out is estimated as 7 per cent of the operating costs of those canals. Let us just look at the operating costs estimated at $8,400,000 from which we may subtract user fees estimated at $325,000, and land rentals and licences at $246,000, which total the aforementioned $571,000 in expected returns.

Surely this amount cannot be deemed to be excessive, and it is only prudent to expect that a minimum and reasonable return be made on the investment made by and for the benefit of the people of Canada.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Speaker, I realize I am not allowed to rise on a point of order during the adjournment debate, but I should like to point out to the respondent for the government that I am not the hon. member for Hillsborough. I am the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington.

Mrs. Campagnolo: Might I extend my apologies to the hon. member, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—NAMIBIA—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PREVENT FALCONBRIDGE MINES FROM EXPLOITING WORKERS AND END PRIVILEGE OF CLAIMING FOREIGN TAX CREDITS

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, Namibia, formerly Southwest Africa, was assigned to the Dominion of South Africa by the League of Nations to be held in trust; with a mandate to guide that territory toward political modernity and economic development. For nearly 50 years South Africa neglected her responsibilities and treated Namibia as a colony of her own. For years, as she does today, South Africa refused to co-operate with international organizations, arguing that the United Nations did not have authority over a territory assigned to her by the League of Nations, a different organization, all the time exploiting the resources of Namibia, which rightly belonged to the Namibian people.

Finally on October 27, 1966, the General Assembly of the United Nations took decisive action by terminating the South African mandate and declaring the area to be under the direct responsibility of the United Nations itself. That was United Nations Resolution 2143 (XXI) of 1966.

In July, 1970, the Security Council called upon all states in Resolution 276:

—to withhold from their nationals or companies of their nationality not under direct government control, government loans, credit guarantees and other forms of financial support that would be used to facilitate trade or commerce with Namibia—

In addition the council asked states:

—to discourage their nationals or companies of their nationality not under direct government control from investing or obtaining concessions in Namibia and to this end withhold protection of such investments against claims of a future lawful government of Namibia.

The issue has become increasingly more important. The International Court of Justice in a recent ruling regarding South Africa's presence in Namibia stated:

—that a binding determination made by a competent organ of the United Nations to the effect that a situation is illegal cannot be without consequence—the precise determination of what is to be done is a matter which lies within the competence of the appropriate organs of the United Nations.

This is a specific reminder to countries like Canada of their obligations to uphold Security Council resolutions dealing with Namibia.

Finally the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia issued a decree on the natural resources of Namibia, which has as its purpose the outlawing of any extractive industry in Namibia which operates without the permission of the United Nations Council for Namibia.

It was this kind of background which led me to place some eight questions on the order paper to probe the extent of Canadian involvement in Namibia. These questions led to the discovery that Canadian based corporations operating in Namibia can claim a foreign tax credit under Section 126 of the Income Tax Act.

The largest of these corporations is Falconbridge Nickel Mines Ltd. which shares ownership, 75 per cent to 25 per cent, with the Industrial Development Corporation of South Africa in Oamites Mining Company Ltd.

Falconbridge's performance in Namibia is not one we should be proud of; contract labour, poor housing conditions for black workers, vastly inferior wages and benefits for black workers, and no job advancement for Namibians. Through it all our Canadian government is calmly studying it all, and studying, and studying, and waiting for this report and that report.

● (2220)

It seems to me that this situation is quite clear cut. Canada has agreed by its vote at the United Nations that the government of South Africa is an illegal authority in Namibia. It is not right that Canadians should seek economic gain there in ways which, directly and indirectly, involve an acceptance of such an authority.

How much more reprehensible it is for the Canadian Government to go on making all sorts of fatuous statements about helping developing countries achieve economic stability and health! How gross it is for our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to be talking about a new economic world order which would give citizens of third world producer countries a better deal! How phoney! The only ones getting a better deal in the Namibian experience are the shareholders of Falconbridge Nickel Mines, and the bosses of South Africa. And don't forget, Mr. Speaker, that even more despicable is the fact that Falconbridge is extracting non-renewable resources from Namibian lands and seas, so that when South Africa finally decides to turn Namibia over to United Nations trusteeship, and eventually to SWAPO, there will be few, if any, resources left.

I would urge the government to initiate the following action now: First, to inform Canadian-based companies that Canada recognizes, as the only legal authority in Namibia, the United Nations Council for Namibia. This position is totally supported by the International Court of Justice, the Security Council and the General Assembly of the United Nations and our vote in that body. Second, since the only legal authority is the United Nations Council for Namibia, henceforth no Canadian-based corporation in Namibia will be permitted to claim foreign tax credits for income taxes, fees, royalties and other payments where such were paid to the Government of South Africa. Third, the Canadian government instructs all Canadian based corporations to negotiate any exploitation or concessions of Namibian resources with the only legal authority there, namely, the United Nations Council for Namibia. Fourth, all Canadian-based operations in Namibia must be informed of these decisions.

That is the kind of action that is needed. Is the Acting Prime Minister trying to tell this House that a government which was as tough as it was in 1970 bringing in the War Measures Act to crush a handful of dissidents, lacks the courage to live up to our international commitments? Who is the Acting Prime Minister afraid of? Was he afraid of world opinion when he supported the United Nations' free Namibia? Is he afraid today to tell Falconbridge Nickel Mines that he supports that position? I don't think he is afraid. I just think he and his government are mealy-mouthed. We have seen that in the so-called energy crisis, the Chilean fiasco, and the recent stranding of approved South Vietnamese immigrants to Canada. Truly it may be said of the Acting Prime Minister and his government as it was said of the seventeenth century Spanish viceroys in New Spain, "They obeyed all laws, but enforced none".

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I wish to respond on behalf of the Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Breau).

The Department of External Affairs, in consultation with other interested departments, has for some time now been examining the question of Canadian companies operating in Namibia. Under Canadian law the government cannot force a mode of conduct on business operations of subsidiaries of Canadian corporations in Namibia. It is, furthermore, a principle of government policy not to interfere in the operations of Canadian companies abroad. The various Security Council resolutions on Namibia, and the General Assembly resolutions of 1967, are not mandatory resolutions under Chapter VII of the UN Charter and do not, therefore, impose binding obligations on member states, as is the case with regard to Rhodesia.

The government's position on Namibia has been outlined publicly several times, at the UN and in other international bodies. While we have articulated it in response to inquiries from individuals and companies, it may be appropriate and useful for us to repeat it here. Canada does not recognize the right of the Republic of South Africa to legislate in or for Namibia. In 1971 we informed the government of South Africa that Canada accepted the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice to the effect that South Africa's administration of Namibia was illegal.

However, we must recognize that South Africa does de facto remain in control of Namibia. But, as I indicated, the Government of Canada does not recognize this as having a legal basis. The Canadian government recognizes that the Council for Namibia has the right to make decrees concerning Namibia that are within its competence. The applicability of such decrees, their effectiveness and their status, however, must be examined individually and are dependent upon further action that the United Nations may take either through the General Assembly or the Security Council.

The Canadian government considers that any Canadian companies operating in Namibia do so entirely at their own risk and initiative. Should such companies be subject to confiscation or nationalization of their properties in Namibia, the government's attitude will accord with this position.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.28 p.m.

SUGGESTED LOANS TO PROVINCES AND MUNICIPALITIES AT REDUCED INTEREST RATE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion of urgent and pressing necessity.

Considering that a $4 million loan in addition to a $1 million subsidy have just been granted to Jamaica for a 30-year period at a 3 per cent rate,

Considering that our government contributes very generously to the development of other countries,

Considering that it is a very commendable action, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That the government of Canada take the necessary steps to make such handsome loans available to Canadian municipalities, cities and provinces in order to lessen the tax burden and enable Canadian citizens to be treated on the same standing as foreign countries, thus contributing to reduce the effects of inflation and unemployment.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no unanimous consent; therefore, the motion cannot be put.

SUGGESTION DEPARTMENT PROMOTE CAREER PERSONNEL TO TOP DIPLOMATIC POSITIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43 to seek leave of the House to propose a motion, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) as follows:

In view of the absolute necessity of preserving a high morale among career personnel of the Department of External Affairs and in view of the absolute necessity of maintaining the right of such persons to work towards promotion to the top positions in Canada's diplomatic service, the House requests the Secretary of State for External Affairs to confirm whether or not the government will not proceed in the very near future with the appointment of a former Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, Jean-Luc Pépin, as Canadian ambassador to Tokyo succeeding Ross Campbell, and the appointment of the Minister of Communications, Gérard Pelletier, as Canadian ambassador to Paris succeeding Léo Cadieux.

REQUEST THAT CN-CP TELECOMMUNICATIONS MAINTAIN STAFF LEVELS AND EXPAND SERVICES IN NORTHERN ONTARIO—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact the Canadian Transport Commission approved an application for an 11 per cent rate increase by CN-CP Telecommunications in 1974, and in view of the fact that CN-CP Telecommunications has announced a policy of one-man offices in Sudbury, Sault Ste. Marie and North Bay while the quantity of business is increasing in these offices, and since this policy means the loss of two or three jobs per community, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan):

That this House instruct CN-CP Telecommunications to maintain present staff levels in all northern Ontario offices, reopen the office in Kapuskasing which was closed last month and institute a program designed to expand services in these areas.

INFLATION—REQUEST FOR OUTLINE OF PROPOSALS TO CANADIAN LABOUR CONGRESS IN SEEKING CONSENSUS ON RESTRAINT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister who I am sure will now agree that whatever stage the consensus discussions may have reached, at this time they have certainly reached a stage of utter confusion. Now that the government has received a response from the CLC—and I am not asking the Acting Prime Minister to comment on what the attitude of the government may be in this regard because it has not had time to consider it—will the government disclose quite frankly to the Canadian people what proposals the government has put before the CLC and other groups concerning the consensus program.

[Mr. Hogan.]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Finance said yesterday the government has been in discussion with various groups in the community in an effort to arrive at some consensus concerning what kind of national action, participated in by all groups, would be appropriate. The papers that were circulated, one of which got into the press, were working papers. At this stage the government is not committed to any particular proposals.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, is the Acting Prime Minister now agreeing that the papers published on Monday called, "Proposals for the First Year of Consensus", and "Machinery for Administering a Voluntary Restraint Program", are in fact the working papers or proposals put before the CLC and other groups with whom the government is having discussions.

Mr. Sharp: Well, Mr. Speaker, in the course of any discussion or consultation of this kind, which is extremely complicated, it is necessary from time to time to put down certain working papers for discussion purposes. I emphasize what the Minister of Finance said yesterday in the House. The government is not committed. These are working papers on which we are seeking to get some reaction and in respect of which we hope to have a continuation of the consultation and which I hope my hon. friend will agree with me, should be successful in the national interest.

Mr. Speaker: A final supplementary by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister who is telling the truth, the Acting Prime Minister who today admits that the documents published Monday were in fact the documents sent out, or the working papers sent out, or the Minister of Finance who yesterday pretended that these must have been earlier working papers that were sent out.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, there have been several working papers. I do not think there is any conflict between the two statements.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, may I express the hope that the government is dealing more honestly with the CLC in this connection than it is with the opposition.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, may I express the hope that the Leader of the Opposition agrees with us that it is desirable to reach a national consensus.

INFLATION—INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT MADE PROPOSALS TO PROVINCES CONCERNING APPROPRIATE INCREASE IN MONEY SUPPLY

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Acting Minister of Finance. In the documentation sent out during the consensus discussions, would the Acting Minister of Finance indicate if there was any documentation supplied especially to the provinces concerning what the government felt would be a suitable increase in the money supply during the restraint period and if so what percentage increase does the government propose? Is it 4 per cent, 8 per cent or even higher?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Acting Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think this present line of questioning indicates the difficulty of achieving a consensus and conducting negotiations. If the government is to behave intelligently it must make proposals without thereby being bound by them. A variety of proposals have been made to a variety of groups. We are now in the process of getting the reaction of these groups and are trying to synthesize and to resolve the conflicting interests. I do not think it would be particularly helpful to deal in detail in the House at this juncture with the initial proposals made.

INFLATION—REASON FOR LARGE INCREASE IN MONEY SUPPLY

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, since the Acting Minister of Finance does not appear to wish to deal with the future, and in view of the fact that the Wood Gundy, May, 1975, publication reviewing the economy states that our money increased by 33 per cent, annualized in the first quarter of this year, compared with 4 per cent in the United States, would the minister indicate why such a staggering increase in our money supply was felt justified in the first quarter of this year?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Acting Minister of Finance): I think that on a number of occasions the Minister of Finance has pointed out the hazards of endeavouring to project performance in a relatively short period to an annual or continuing basis.

INFLATION—INCREASE IN LABOUR COSTS—POSSIBILITY OF PROPOSALS TO BUSINESS AND LABOUR TO REVERSE TREND

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Considering that the Department of Finance review for 1974 notes that labour costs per unit of output are rising more rapidly in Canada than in the United States, did the government discuss the need to maintain Canada's competitive trade position in their consensus talks with business and labour and, if so, did the government offer any program to help reverse this undesirable trend in the nation?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Acting Minister of Finance): Obviously one of the fundamental purposes of the exercise is to achieve just those objectives.

HOUSING

RENT INCREASES FOR SENIOR CITIZEN UNITS—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PREVENT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Considering that the documents that were sent out to both organized labour and to provinces—which they received last week and which were the only written documents sent out in this exercise, and as far as the provinces and the organized labour movement are concerned it is their understanding these are the only written documents they will get from the government—contain no provisions for dealing with rent increases, would the minister say, in light of the announcement that CMHC will permit an increase in the rent for senior citizens in metro Toronto of between 21 and 59 per cent effective on August 1, whether he has any plans which he intends to implement to head off what could be a disastrous increase in rents for senior citizens in that area?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the rental increases to which the hon. member referred are under the limited dividend rental program. These are the only rents to be increased that I know of and they are carefully observed by the corporation to make certain that they reflect only actual increases in operating costs and nothing more. I believe it would be wrong to have one segment of the population paying less and others paying an undue amount more. We are trying to achieve equity in this situation for all Canadians, and these increases reflect actual increases in operating costs.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, just to ensure that I understand what the minister is saying, is he saying that it would be inequitable for the government to take steps specifically to keep down the housing costs of senior citizens, or is he saying that such a selective move would be unfair?

Mr. Danson: No, Mr. Speaker, we do it all the time through senior citizen housing, through section 44(1) of the National Housing Act under which we subsidize those people who need it and where high priority is given to senior citizens, and for those in low income groups this is also done in other ways. In this situation for limited dividend housing, if the rents did not reflect the real increase, no more apartments would be built. The fact is that we have more than double the number of calls for building new rental accommodations at low rates for Canadians as a result of those programs and of keeping the rents low, but allowing them to reflect an actual increase in costs.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT PLANS TO INCREASE NUMBER OF STARTS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Specifically on the issue of increasing the housing supply, the figures released just the other day show that there was a decline in starts for the last month of some 25 per cent compared with the same month a year ago, and we now have a cumulative decline in housing starts in 1975 for the first four months of some 40 per cent compared with last year in urban areas. Could the minister inform the House at long last what he soon plans to do to increase the supply of housing in urban areas of Canada?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): As the hon. member will acknowledge, the rate of starts is up from 138,000 to 185,000, an encouraging increase. That is not as far as we would like it to go, and if I am asked what I am going to do, the answer is plenty.

AIR TRANSPORT

SUGGESTED INSTALLATION OF NAVIGATIONAL EQUIPMENT AT VAL D'OR AND ROUYN

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Transport.

Surely the minister is aware of the very serious problem situation which has existed at both Val d'Or and Rouyn airports ever since the withdrawal of the National Defence component. Air traffic at both these airports is so heavy that it has become a major source of danger for aviation in general. Could the minister advise the House today whether his department is taking the necessary steps to install navigational equipment so as to ensure safety as soon as possible both in Val d'Or and Rouyn?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think I already answered a somewhat similar question last week. Following the removal of the radar station at the military airport, we have sent investigators in the field—they are probably still there—to study the issue of air traffic. If they should report the least possible danger, as suggested by the hon. member, we shall see to it that navigational equipment is in operation to prevent any possible accidents at both these airports.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question.

Could the minister advise the House whether these people are now carrying out their investigation in Val d'Or and Rouyn at the same time?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I think so, Mr. Speaker, but I would rather find out first before saying "yes".

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REASON FOR POSTPONEMENT OF DEATH PENALTY IN CAPITAL MURDER CASES

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Solicitor General a question, but I will wait until he gets to his seat.

Many statements have been made since the leader of the Social Credit party asked the minister questions yesterday. Violent crimes are on the increase in Canada, and the minister is blamed for many things, including the housing situation in Canada, where starts are down 25 per cent. Is the purpose of the extension date of the penalty in reference to capital murder to bring in new legislation to ban capital punishment, or is it to bundle all capital murder convictions—and there may be seven or eight—together and have one political smell at one time?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Woolliams: What then is the purpose of the extension?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, it was impossible to deal properly and fully with the question of Mr. Vaillancourt before May 15, the day set for execution. The case was quite complex, and there were implications which went beyond that one particular case. We wanted to consider it in depth.

SUGGESTION SOLICITOR GENERAL POSSIBLY MISLED HOUSE WHEN INTRODUCING LEGISLATION ON CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Could the minister advise the House if his attitude and philosophy at the time he produced the legislation banning the death penalty for capital murder was the same as the philosophy and attitude he exercises now where he says he will not under any condition agree to having the penalty for capital murder carried out at this time? Does he feel under those circumstances, particularly with his colleagues from the province of Quebec and other provinces, that he misled the House?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): With the information I now have I am completely opposed to capital punishment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: However, as a Liberal I believe in reasonable discussion with people who hold other views and I will continue to do so. If they put forward other arguments I will take those under consideration.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, in light of the answer the Solicitor General has given and with reference to his change of attitude, does he then agree that he should support the 30 per cent of the people and object to the 70 per cent and is he prepared to listen to that 70 per cent or is he only prepared to listen to the 30 per cent?

URBAN AFFAIRS

TORONTO WATERFRONT PARK—ALLEGED FIRING OF MR. MISKIMAN—REASON FOR INCREASED COST—SUGGESTED CLOSER COOPERATION WITH CITY OFFICIALS

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Can the minister clarify the statements made by this special assistant about the firing of the Toronto Harbourfront chief, Mr. Miskiman, as a result of the unsuccessful attempt to date to develop the 1972 Liberal election campaign promise, which was one of many? Can the minister also tell the House what steps are being taken by his department to bring some semblance of order to the chaotic situation which now exists surrounding this election "goodie"—some goodie it was, too.

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is no chaos. It is only in the mind of one journalist who seemed to have the situation totally confused. Mr. Miskiman is still there and I hope he will continue to be. He is a very able person from the executive exchange program. He is running the show and doing an excellent job and we are behind him 100 per cent. I will meet with the mayor of Toronto on Friday following the regular weekly meeting with the intergovernmental steering committee which meets regularly. There is complete co-operation and understanding between the city, Metro, the province and ourselves and we are producing what will be an excellent program of excellent planning for this park which will be for all time.

Mr. Jelinek: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. It is obvious there exists a lack of communication within the minister's department. Can the minister explain why the $30 million original estimate for the park has skyrocketed to some $100 million with very little to show for it? I have personally inspected the site, as have many others. Can the minister assure the House that closer consultation will take place with Toronto city officials who have objected that there has not been enough consultation with them in the past?

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, the elected representatives have not made that objection to me, that there has not been sufficient consultation. Certainly, consultation has been continuing and positive between those people and myself. As I mentioned, I will be meeting with the mayor, to whom I spoke twice in the last couple of weeks, on this subject. There is continuing dialogue and we want to see continued co-operation. As far as the cost of the land is concerned, that is within the province of my colleague, the Minister of Public Works. This is perhaps one of the most valuable sites in Canada and I understand expropriation is proceeding.

Mr. Jelinek: A final short supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister advise the House why it is taking so long to have any obvious development on the waterfront park when it was promised that the date of completion would be earlier?

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, I mentioned that this is probably one of the most valuable sites in Canada and that is why we are taking time in the preparation and planning so that the people of Toronto will have a park that is for all time. It should be developed well and I think we should show a considerable amount of forethought. In the meantime, activity is taking place. Over half a million people visited the site last year and that is a lot of people, even for Toronto.

NATIONAL PARKS

FUNDY NATIONAL PARK—REQUEST FROM ALBERT COUNTY TOURIST ASSOCIATION TO DISCUSS ENTRANCE FEE

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I tried to widen the perspective from Hamilton to the Bay of Fundy and today I find that Toronto is occupying a good deal of the time of the House, as usual. I have a very important question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Has the minister responded to an urgent request from the Albert County Tourist Association in New Brunswick to visit Fundy National Park and the adjoining village of Alma to discuss the hardship anticipated by the new fee schedule?

● (1430)

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, some representatives from the Albert County Tourist Association met me when I was in Cape Breton a couple of weeks ago and indicated their concern. I told them that we would watch the situation closely, and if it had an adverse effect would be prepared to see what modifications we could make. Our experience in other areas has been that where similar fees have been imposed, tourism has continued to go up rather than to decrease.

ENTRANCE FEES—POSTPONEMENT OF IMPLEMENTATION FOR ONE YEAR IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Now that the minister has been to Prince Edward Island and held discussions with the premier and government of that province, has he changed his mind and given the right answer to their representations on this matter, which were very, very correct?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member is aware, because of the particular situation in Prince Edward Island we agreed to defer the fee there for one year. However, we pointed out to the people of the area that the fee is to apply to vehicles, not individuals. We are looking at the possibility of building parking sites in several areas so that there will be access by foot to the beach.

RENT INCREASES IN LIMITED DIVIDEND PROJECTS—REQUEST FOR REVIEW AND TYING RENT TO INCOME

Hon. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Has he asked or will he ask Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to review proposed rent increases in limited dividend apartment buildings and consider tying those increases to income?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are reviewing this on a regular basis but I will have the corporation look at any increases that seem out of line. There is provision for those who are tied to income under our rental supplement program and other programs. The limited dividend provision works a little differently, but I accept the hon. member's representation and will check any specific ones which seem to be out of line.

Mr. Broadbent: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

INCREASED RENT FOR SENIOR CITIZENS UNITS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST MINISTER INTERVENE TO REDUCE

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question which is supplementary to that of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby to the minister responsible for housing and urban affairs. As the people's government of British Columbia froze all rent increases in the private sector to 10 per cent but raised the price of federally funded low cost housing for the aged by about 45 per cent, will the minister intervene and give the aged of British Columbia the same break as others are getting under federal housing programs, where increases and set at about 6 per cent?

Mr. Broadbent: They have the best deal in Canada, and you know it.

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, sometimes it would seem more appropriate for some members of the House to ask their colleagues in the provinces the questions they ask me. These rents, of course, are entered into on the basis of agreements with the provinces. The provinces have jurisdiction in the specific area. We share those rent supplements, but if the province wants to do it another way there is little we can do about it except discuss it with them, which we shall do.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby on a point of order.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, my point of order pertains to an earlier question and answer.

Some hon. Members: Order.

An hon. Member: Remember the new rules!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I have lots of time. My point of order refers to an answer made by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs to the hon. member for Parkdale. If I understood the minister correctly, he said something contrary to what he had said to me earlier. I asked the minister about rents for senior citizens and he at that time said—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder if the hon. member would be good enough to raise his point at three o'clock.

[Mr. Danson.]

MICROSYSTEMS—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE EQUIPMENT PURCHASED BY FORMER EMPLOYEE DOES NOT BELONG TO GOVERNMENT

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce? As a former employee at Microsystems recently purchased at an incredibly low price equipment from Microsystem analytical chemistry laboratory, would the minister assure the House that this equipment was not part of the equipment which belonged to the government by reason of loans to that company which are still outstanding?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to make inquiries and reassure the hon. member on that point. I think I should take the opportunity of drawing his attention to a letter from the president of Microsystems to his leader, which was made public today and which should set at rest some of his concerns and concerns of his leader with respect to so-called missing equipment.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, if I must choose between the word of the president of Bell and the word of my leader, I will take my leader's word.

MICROSYSTEMS—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE WHEN EQUIPMENT SOLD IT WILL REMAIN IN CANADA

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): May I ask the minister this supplementary question: As several microelectronic firms have expressed interest in buying the processing equipment which this government helped Microsystems to acquire, and as these companies intend to use this equipment to employ people in Canada, will the minister assure the House that he will make it a condition of sale that the machinery is to be kept in Canada and that whoever buys it will use it for the manufacture of semiconductors?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we will certainly raise that question with the officials. Indeed, we have already done so. I should make it clear to the hon. member that the loans made to that company were secured by this equipment. If those loans are fully repaid, that equipment will belong to the company, and in law they have the right to use that equipment or dispose of it as they see fit. Notwithstanding that, I assure the hon. member we will do everything we can to make sure the equipment is used for Canadian industry in Canada.

TRANSPORT

LOSS OF GRENADES DURING TRANSIT BY RAILWAY—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON INVESTIGATION

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. On April 29, in responding to my question, the minister indicated he would conduct an investigation into circumstances surrounding the theft of grenades in Chilliwack. Can the minister now say what were the results of the investigation?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, a few days afterwards I met with Mr. Bandeen, president of the CNR, and asked him how this incident had happened. He was to inquire into the system they were using for the transportation of explosives or grenades. Now, they are looking for a better way, because it is not necessary to have—

May I be allowed to say it in French, Mr. Speaker: to have the whole grenade, or the fuse and the grenade, and to transfer them together. In other words, any of the two parts, either the grenade without the fuse or the other part, that is the fuse, could be moved separately in safer conditions.

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ENCOURAGE HIGHER PROPORTION OF FABRICATED PRODUCTS FOR EXPORT

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. As figures published by the Department of Science and Technology indicate that the trade deficit in high technology products approached $7 billion in 1974, can the minister explain what progress has been made to date and what action is planned toward the goal of encouraging a higher proportion of fabricated products in total Canadian exports?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this has been done by a variety of programs, through PAIT grants, through research and development grants, through DIP grants, by measures to assist those entrepreneurs in Canada who want to develop and specialize in new technology products, and through other measures such as the negotiated undertakings under the Foreign Investment Review Act.

WHEAT—SUGGESTED EXTENSION OF DELIVERY QUOTA DATE

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of the Wheat Board's announcement that quotas on red spring and Durum will be closed effective May 16, and as road bans will stop many producers delivering before that date, would the minister inform the House if he intends to ask the Wheat Board to extend delivery quotas beyond May 16?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have had discussions with the Wheat Board about this problem, relaying to them many requests from farmers which I received while I was in meetings in the prairie provinces a week ago and since. The board has confirmed its usual position that it will try to be as reasonable as possible. It will consider the appropriate steps to take to ensure that all farmers who do not otherwise have reasonable opportunity to deliver will in fact have that opportunity before their quotas terminate.

STRIKE OF LONGSHOREMEN IN QUEBEC—REASON FOR FAILURE TO PROSECUTE FOR NON-COMPLIANCE WITH BACK-TO-WORK LEGISLATION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. All across this strike-ridden country people are asking why it is that when the Supreme Court of Parliament spoke and gave its direction to the longshoremen on the St. Lawrence that they must go back to work that no prosecutions for this flagrant contempt of parliament have taken place. What is the reason for that?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the right hon. gentleman's analysis of the situation. Having said that, I would tell him that everything is being done—

Mr. Diefenbaker: What?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Let me just tell you what is being done. The matter is coming before the courts in Montreal tomorrow with respect to the application for an order under the act of parliament. That is as soon as the Justice officials can get a hearing before the judge. I believe the right hon. member will agree there is no question that we must pursue the legal sanctions of the act of parliament and that is what we are doing. The unions have a right before the courts of this land to contest the legislation if they desire. They will have this opportunity tomorrow.

While that course of conduct is being followed, I would advise the right hon. gentleman that investigations are taking place with regard to accumulating evidence necessary to lay charges under the Labour Code and possibly the Criminal Code. I hope to be able to report, not only to the right hon. member, but to parliament that charges will be laid against certain individuals in the near future.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Has the minister any assurance that these lawbreakers will obey the direction of a court of law while at the same time contemptuously treating parliament? Has he any such assurance? Also, why has it taken ten days or more to investigate wrongdoing that is so apparent even a blind man could gather together the necessary evidence to prosecute these people?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): To start with, Mr. Speaker, the right hon. member should reassess the number of days that have elapsed. The employer is not overburdened with work, particularly in the port of Montreal where most of the longshoremen are hired, and did not call the workers into work until several days after the law had passed.

Mr. Fairweather: Ships were being diverted.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): That is right. As a result of the delay in asking the men to come to work, there could be no evidence to gather as to the refusal to work. That is most definitely an element in the situation. On the other point, I am satisfied, and I hope I can convince the right hon. member of this, that the Justice officials are doing everything they possibly can to get the necessary evidence and the court time to hear it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: As a lawyer, does the minister not realize the fact that these people have not obeyed the order is sufficient to take proceedings without any further investigation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

SOCIAL SECURITY

THE ADJUSTMENT OF WELFARE PAYMENTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare concerning the difficulties experienced by senior citizens under 65 who must rely on welfare benefits.

For example, in the province of Quebec, two people under 65 are allowed approximately $250, whereas at 65, they will receive at least $400 if they have no other income. In the discussions which have been held with the provincial ministers of social affairs could the minister say whether the possibility of raising welfare benefits was considered, at least up to the amount of the old age security pension?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, that question was not considered as such, but I had already suggested in February and at the last conference, that a guaranteed income program for those unable to find work, should be implemented as soon as possible, even as soon as 1976. As my hon. colleague knows, certain provinces, especially the representatives of the province he is from, objected to our proceeding too fast in that field.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

The minister says that this question has not been raised, but would he tell us whether he feels this is a normal situation when, for instance, a couple aged 64 who receive benefits in the amount of $250 will receive $400 next year when their needs will be the same.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, this is a matter about which I made many speeches in this House, specially when I objected to arguments brought forward by the NDP and the Creditistes, when they wanted old age security pensions increased and not let us do anything for those under 65 who were in need.

DATE OF REPORT OF DR. HALL ON RAILWAY PENSIONS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Can the minister now say when he expects to receive the report of Dr. Noel Hall, the commissioner appointed to examine all aspects of railway pensions?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have been advised by Dr. Noel Hall that he is having hearings all across the country. This is taking time. We want him to do a thorough job. He is inviting briefs from everyone who is interested. The latest report I have is that the exercise he is now going through will be completed relatively soon and we might expect the final report around mid-July.

SUGGESTION COMPANY INDEX PENSIONS WITHOUT WAITING FOR HALL REPORT

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that Canadian National Railways escalated the pensions of its retired employees for three or four years but has not yet indexed them in 1975, will the minister make representations to the CNR to do this for 1975 without delay and without waiting for the Hall report?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, that is a very appropriate question. I have already discussed this problem with the Minister of Labour. I will discuss it with the authorities of CNR so that the employees will not be frustrated as they have been for many months.

TRADE

SUGGESTION CANADA NOT EXPORT URANIUM OR THE CANDU TO COUNTRIES NOT SIGNING NUCLEAR NON-PROLIFERATION TREATY

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. Given the fact that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has said that Canada is one of the strongest supporters and advocates of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty, can the Acting Prime Minister assure the House that Canada will not under any circumstances export any uranium or nuclear related products to any country that is not a signatory to that agreement?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I can give that undertaking. However, we certainly will not ship any technology or uranium to any country that does not observe the safeguards that we consider necessary.

Mr. Gillies: Can the Acting Prime Minister assure the House that if Canada engages in any deals to sell the CANDU to any country that is not a signatory to the non-proliferation treaty that we will insist on on-site inspections by approved Canadian inspectors to make sure that the tragedy that happened in relation to our dealings with India does not happen again?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I remind the hon. member that the arrangement that was made which led to the Indians using our reactor in a so-called peaceful nuclear explosion occurred before there were any international safeguards in place. Since that time, however, we have always insisted that India observe international safeguards. That has been our position and it continues to be so. I am not absolutely sure that we can enforce a rule about nuclear proliferation treaty signature or ratification, but certainly we will insist on there being adequate safeguards either in that form, or in the form of the international safeguards with international inspectors or Canadian inspectors.

CANDU REACTOR—POSITION OF INDIA ON ACCEPTANCE OF SAFEGUARDS AND INSPECTION

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister. Could the Acting Prime Minister indicate whether India has presently accepted the International Atomic Energy Agency's safeguard of on site inspection, and would the minister confirm whether or not India has the right to inspect Canadian installations on Canadian soil if, for example, Canada wants to send spent fuel cells to a country that has adopted the IAEA regulations?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is a very complicated question for the question period. I would remind the hon. member that when we entered into our agreement with India, which antedated the international system that was later established, we had a system of mutual inspection in which India had certain rights as well as Canada. I am sorry I cannot answer the question specifically. I will have to take it as notice and I will undertake that either I or the Secretary of State for External Affairs will provide an answer.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON GOVERNMENT ACTION TO SECURE RELEASE OF CANADIAN MISSIONARIES

Mr. Sean O'Sullivan (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the commitments given the government that non-combatant, non-political civilians would not be held captive in Viet Nam by the communist occupation forces and that any Canadians detained would be released as soon as they were identified as citizens of this country, would the minister advise whether there is any progress to report regarding efforts to secure the release of seven missionaries held in a prisoner of war camp at Dak To, including a five year old girl and two Canadians from Hamilton, Ontario?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. gentleman I have been receiving many letters on this subject, particularly from residents of Hamilton. I can assure the hon. member that we will do everything possible to secure their release.

Mr. O'Sullivan: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that this is not a new issue but one with which the minister has been involved for at least a couple of weeks, perhaps several weeks now, would the minister advise what substantive efforts, if any, the government has taken to secure the release of these people who are being held captive in direct violation of the Paris peace agreement?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I would have thought the Paris peace agreement, which was between the various parties involved in the Viet Nam war, has now been superseded by events. I think we shall have to depend upon other means to secure their release. I would hope that in the near future we will have established relationships which will enable us to make direct representations, and I hope we will have the hon. member's support if we do establish those relationships.

AIR TRANSPORT

USE OF FRENCH BY AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MEETING WITH PILOTS ASSOCIATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Transport. On April 30 I raised the question of possible danger to the air travelling public as a result of other than the English language being used in air to ground communications in Quebec. My question at that time was based on the fact that the Ministry of Transport has itself investigated and reported on two recent Canadian aircraft accidents in which English French language usage and confusion were contributing factors. The minister promised to meet with members of the Canada Air Line Pilots Association. My question today is: Can the minister now inform the House of the results of that meeting, and is he now in a position to reverse government policy on this matter regarding the safety of Canadians?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we did not have one meeting but we had several meetings on that question. The officials in charge of the department met not only with the CALPA group but will also meet with the national organization early next week, I think, in order to receive their representations and to try to define a policy that will ensure there is no risk for those who are travelling as a result of the use of two languages.

THE ARTS

REQUEST FOR SUPPORT FOR FEATURE FILM INDUSTRY

Mr. F. A. Philbrook (Halton): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State and concerns the desperate state of the Canadian feature film industry. Is the minister prepared, either directly or through the provincial governments, to offer concrete support to the industry in the form of quotas, levies and/or distribution controls?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, officials of my department have now completed or have almost completed a series of meetings with the provinces on the matter of quotas and levies. There have been meetings with nine provinces; we are meeting with the tenth on Friday of this week. The legislative jurisdiction in this field is clearly provincial. I am simply making representations to the provinces on behalf of the industry in regard to both the question of quotas and levies.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

SUGGESTED RECONSIDERATION OF RESHOWING OF PROGRAM, "ENCOUNTER WITH CANCER"

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State who is responsible for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. My question arises by virtue of representations received from the Saskatchewan division of the Canadian Cancer Society relating to the proposed reshowing on CBC of the program "Encounter with Cancer". In view of the fact that the Canadian Cancer Society had some serious misgivings with respect to the promotion on that program of a wonder cure drug for cancer, laetrile, would the minister be prepared to have the CBC reconsider, or would he ask them to reconsider, their proposal to reshow this particular documentary?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I have received representations from many private organizations and from members on both sides of this House. I have also had representations from the Minister of National Health and Welfare which support the position taken by the hon. member. These representations have been made to the CBC on behalf of those who have made them, and I am now awaiting a reply.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR OUTLINE OF MEASURES TO INCREASE NUMBER OF STARTS

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs responsible for housing. Earlier the minister seemed to indicate his satisfaction with the present rate of housing starts. Is the minister aware that total starts for the first four months of 1975 are more that 40 per cent below those for the same period last year; and is he yet prepared to announce any new measures that would accelerate this retarded growth rate?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I apologize, Mr. Speaker, but I do not know what the word "retarded" refers to. I said quite clearly that I was deeply disturbed and I was going to do plenty about it. I cannot make an announcement now but I will at the appropriate time.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The "retarded" refers to starts being 40 per cent below this time last year. Given the critical need in the housing sector, would the minister say when these new measures will be implemented, or are we to expect that they, too, will be implemented on a stage by stage basis?

Mr. Danson: No, Mr. Speaker; they will be as soon as it is possible to do so. I have spoken with the housing ministers of all the provinces in the last few days, and I am hoping to speak to another minister today. Another is away in Europe. There has been close consultation throughout. They are aware of the urgency, the government is aware of the urgency, and we are proceeding with all haste.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. My point of order, to which I referred earlier, concerns an answer given by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson). I know Your Honour is not concerned with the quality of answers given in the House; if I may say so, that would be entirely inappropriate. But there is some concern that the minister not misinform the House, and I should like the situation clarified.

When I asked the minister about the increase in rents for senior citizens in Toronto from 21 per cent to 59 per cent, the minister told me that the matter was proceeding and that they were going to pay this increase. In fact, he went further and said that the government did that all the time. Then when the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz) asked the question about the possibility of having rents geared to the income of these people, if I understood him correctly the minister said the government would consider that possibility.

My point of order is that those answers, if I understood them correctly, are contradictory. Either they are going to pass on the increase, as the minister said to me, or they are going to consider making the increase dependent on income level. I should like the minister to clarify the situation.

Mr. Danson: I acknowledge the point of order, Mr. Speaker. I believe the hon. member has misunderstood me. Since he has, I would expect him to be concerned—as he always is, anyway. There were two different questions, as I understood them. We were dealing precisely with limited dividend section 15(1) rental accommodation, where rents are allowed to reflect the actual increase in cost. If I understood the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz) correctly and they were not properly reflected, those increases would be looked into.

In so far as senior citizens' accommodation, per se, is concerned, we have other and special arrangements there. Even in respect of limited dividend accommodation—I must say this is further than I went in the previous answer—and the new call for $200 million, which produced some $540 million in responses, we require that the entrepreneur allows at least 25 per cent of those units for low-cost housing, much of which is senior citizens' low-cost housing where there is aid for other forms of housing as well.

Mr. Speaker: I express my gratitude to both hon. members for clarifying that very difficult point.

PRIVILEGE

MR. LALONDE—QUALITY OF QUESTIONS ASKED DURING ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order or a question of privilege. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) has just raised a question about the quality of answers; I in turn should like to raise one about the quality of questions. Yesterday the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) asked a question about nurses in Yukon. In his question, at page 5505 of Hansard, he said:

> By way of enlightenment for the Minister of National Health and Welfare, even the designated nurses in the Yukon are on strike.

I certainly would not want to believe or to lead anyone to believe that the hon. member would have wilfully misled the House. I have carefully checked this matter and think, for the sake of the reputation of the nurses who are working for the federal government and doing an outstanding job, I should point out to the House that there is no evidence at all that designated nurses in the Yukon have not obeyed the law. They are respecting the law as it exists. No designated nurses are on strike in the Yukon.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, as one who is just as concerned as the minister with the reputation of Yukon nurses, let me say at once that I am prepared to accept the results of his investigations and concede that my information may have been inaccurate.

MR. McKENZIE—CIDA FINANCIAL AID TO CUBA

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege is directed to the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Sharp) and is in respect of a front page story in today's Ottawa Journal under the headline, "CIDA conceals full amount of huge aid package to Cuba". The article in part states:

> Top Canadian International Development Agency management has agreed to keep $11 million earmarked for Cuba hidden to avoid conflict with other government departments, the Journal has learned.

I raised this matter last Friday in the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. I asked the president of CIDA, Mr. Gérin-Lajoie, to tell me the exact amount of aid to Cuba and he said; I quote from the evidence of that committee hearing at page 19:19:

> That is the past, and for the future as from the present year and the coming three years, the answer is $10 million if the form of a loan and about $3 million in the form of grants.

In the minutes of the president's committee that was held at Montebello on December 2 to December 5, we find at page 6 the following:

> After involved discussion of the Cuban program it was agreed that as a tactic in presenting the reviews interdepartmentally reference to a $23.5 million program would be changed to a $12.5 million program.

They were not going to publicly announce the full amount of the loan because of the outcry and apparently some difference of opinion between the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen). The minutes went on to state:

> It was felt that interdepartmental—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am having difficulty grasping the nature of the hon. member's question of privilege.

Mr. McKenzie: The question of privilege is that the Journal has already obtained the minutes of these meetings which state that the actual loan is $23.5 million, and they are not going to announce the full amount but conceal $11 million. This is taxpayers' money, and this is a Crown corporation. There is no way this development agency should deliver $23.5 million to Cuba and publicly state it is only $12 million. In addition, in other minutes of their meetings—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think, in fairness, the hon. member may have a very valid point of concern or of debate, but surely this is a question which he ought to put before the standing committee or during consideration of the estimates. The fact of the matter is that the hon. member must surely realize that while this is a valid point of concern for discussion, it cannot be considered a valid question of privilege in any sense of the language.

Mr. McKenzie: In view of the conflicting statements in those minutes and in the newspaper, and the conflicting statement to the external affairs committee last Friday, I would ask the Acting Prime Minister to conduct an independent inquiry into these allegations to find out whether this loan to Cuba is $23.5 million or $12 million. We are entitled to a correct answer as to the amount. That is my question of privilege.

Order Paper Questions

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Like yourself, Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure what the question of privilege is. If the hon. gentleman or one of the spokesmen for his party decides that they would like to have the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) or the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) before this House on one of the allotted days when these questions could be put, then his curiosity could be satisfied.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 535, 1,536 (Supplementary), 1,806, 1,863, 1,995, 2,110, 2,112, 2,150, 2,159, 2,223, 2,224, 2,244, 2,275, 2,294, 2,348 and 2,359.

Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call starred question No. 2,284?

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

How many Air Canada employees at the senior management level (a) took early retirement (b) were dismissed during each year 1970-1971 to 1973-1974?

HAINES—FAIRBANKS PIPELINE AGREEMENT

Question No. 1,806—Mr. Huntington:

Since 1945 and by year, how much money does the government receive as rental fees for the use of the oil pipeline running through the Yukon and British Columbia to Haines seaport from Fairbanks?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): None. It should also be noted that the Haines-Fairbanks Pipeline Agreement consists of an exchange of notes between the government of Canada and the government of the United States, dated June 30, 1953. It was mutually agreed at that time that the pipeline be built for common defence needs and that the USA would be granted without charge an easement for the pipeline for the duration of the agreement. The pipeline is no longer in operation.

METRIC CONVERSION

Question No. 1,863—Mr. Jones:

1. With reference to the implementation of the metric system, what consideration was given to housewives?

2. What discussions, if any, were held with housewives to assist them in cooking problems, particularly in view of the fact that all recipe books, to date, are not based on the metric system?

3. Does the government propose to have all recipes for good food rewritten under its auspices and, if so, will it underwrite the cost?

4. What is the total cost for implementation of the metric system for both the public and private sector?

5. What other nations in the North American continent are implementing the metric system?

6. What inconveniences will result to the average householder and housewife, landowner, the municipal government, manufacturers, consumers, etc.?

7. What input has there been by the citizens of Canada to implement the metric system?

8. What group, if any, requested the change to the metric system at this time when our economy is so strained?

9. Does any particular group stand to benefit financially by the implementation of the metric system and, if so, which one?

10. (a) Who is responsible for the educational system to convert to the metric system (b) what action has been taken in this regard and in what way (c) in what locations has such action been taken (d) at what cost?

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. Some of the ways in which housewives are represented in the committee structure of the Metric Commission are through the Consumers' Association of Canada, the Canadian Home Economics Association and the Canadian Dietetic Association. These association members of Sector Committee 9.5 participate in the investigation, planning, scheduling and implementation of metric conversion in their own specific and related sectors. They also assist in informing and educating the general public, and in particular, housewives.

2. As representatives of housewives and consumers, the Canadian Home Economics Association and the Consumers' Association of Canada have participated in the development of the metric standards for kitchen measures on which new recipes are now being based. They also contribute to the preparation of information and in the defining of guidelines for housewives as metric conversion is being implemented.

3. Canadian housewives have traditionally measured their cooking ingredients by volume, and Sector Committee 9.5 of the Metric Commission has recommended a metric standard of 250 ml to replace the 237 ml(8 U.S. fluid ounce) measuring cup used throughout Canada. This is an increase in the size of the measure of only 5 percent and in most cases will allow either old or new recipes to be used interchangeably. So long as housewives keep their present measuring equipment, they can continue to use existing recipes and it is anticipated dual reading equipment will be available in the future.

4. Since metric conversion, well under way in some sectors, will proceed over a number of years, in others, in ways to be determined by the needs and opportunities in different sectors of the economy, the cost of conversion is, by that fact, undeterminable at this time. Its magnitude will depend on the pace and the phasing of conversion adopted within and without the respective sectors.

5. In the United States, Congressional Committee hearings scheduled for April 29 and 30 and May 1, 6, 7 and 8, will deal with the passage of metric conversion legislation in the United States Congress. Industry, coordinated by the American National Metric Council, has for about two years been proceeding with metric conversion. Many multi-national corporations in the United States are converting. An amendment to the United States Education Act has been passed by Congress to promote the use of the metric system in educational agencies and institutions. Mexico has used the metric system since 1862.

6. Experience abroad, particularly in South Africa, New Zealand and Australia, indicates that a well planned, speedy metric conversion supported by timely amendments to legislation will create an environment conducive to a minimum on inconvenience to the general public and economic sectors.

7. In the White Paper on Metric Conversion in Canada of January 1970, representative national organizations put their views on metric matters before the Government and suggested courses of action ranging from initiation of studies to immediate adoption. Subsequently, all the national representative organizations were requested to respond to a survey prepared by the Metric Commission. These organizations participate directly in the planning, scheduling and implementation of metric conversion in Canada through the committee structure of the Metric Commission.

8. The White Paper on Metric Conversion of 1970, setting out the policy of the Government and the background for its decision, was placed before Parliament and received unanimous endorsement. The program of guideline dates for metric conversion has the unanimous support of all provinces and of all sectors of the Canadian economy represented on the Steering Committees of the Metric Commission. The adoption of a resolution, approving the program of guideline dates, was introduced by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, on March 17, 1975.

9. Canada wants to make the change in a manner that will produce the greatest net benefit to the Canadian economy.

10. (a) The governments of provinces are responsible for metric conversion in the educational system. (b) At a meeting on March 20, 1974, an agreed method of liaison was established between the Metric Commission and the Provincial Departments of Education through the Council of Ministers of Education. Associations related to elementary and secondary, post-secondary non-university, and university and college education are all represented on sector committees within the committee structure of the Metric Commission. The representative committee members of the respective groups and the provincial governments carry out investigation, planning and scheduling towards metric conversion in the educational system. The actual implementation phase is being carried out as described in (a) above. (c) Each provincial government has jurisdiction over its own education conversion plans, and the locations where action is being taken. (d) Not available.

TENDERING PROCESS

1. How many steps in the tendering process are designed for contracts under the $10,000 figure?

2. How many steps are necessary for amounts over this figure before a contract is proven successful or unsuccessful?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1 and 2. Regardless of value, the following steps apply: (a) Establish list of eligible sources of supply; (b) Bid solicitation (competition or single source); (c) Receipt and opening of bids; (d) Bid evaluation; (e) Contractor selection.

FARM POPULATION

Question No. 2,110—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. What was the percentage of the population working on farms in or near the years 1945, 1955, 1965, 1970, 1971, 1972 and 1973?

2. What was the approximate number of farm families or family-owned farms for the same years?

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada reports that: 1. Agricultural labour force as a percentage of total population. Note: The data given is for Census year.

Year	Number in Agricultural Labour Force	Total Population (Estimated)	Per cent of Total Population in Agricultural Labour Force
1972	481,000	22,095,000	2.2
1971	510,000	21,724,000	2.4
1970	511,000	21,569,000	2.4
1965	594,000	20,015,000	3.0
1946	1,186,000	12,551,000	9.5

2. Farms have not been classified as to whether they are family-owned in the Census of Canada. However, in the 1971 Census of Agriculture 336,175 census farms of a total of 366,128 were classified as being operated privately by an individual. The number of rural farm families (families residing on a rural farm as defined and tabulated in the Census) was as follows:

Rural Farm Families

Year	Number
1973	not available
1971	305,155
1961	428,808
1951	601,622
1946	not available

UIC—DISENTITLEMENT OF INSURANCE

Question No. 2,112—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. How many persons were refused unemployment insurance allocations (a) for lack of documentary evidence attesting that they tried to find work (b) because they had not tried to find work (c) because they had not made enough applications?

2. How many applications must a claimant make for a period of unemployment of (a) one month (b) three months (c) six months?

3. Does UIC provide applicants with weekly reports on the number and types of vacant positions in their area and, if not, for what reason?

[Mr. Goyer.]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. During 1974, 93,133 claimants were denied some unemployment benefits with respect to periods during which they failed to prove that they had made reasonable and customary efforts to obtain employment. The Commission does not maintain statistics permitting identification of claimants subject to disentitlement for reasons listed as a, b or c.

2. The number of applications considered a reasonable and customary effort to obtain employment depends on the state of the labour market in the claimant's area. Therefore, the answers to a, b and c would vary depending on the extent to which opportunities of employment were available to the claimant. Generally speaking, the Commission expects claimants to widen their search for employment as their period of unemployment lengthens provided there are job opportunities.

3. UIC does not provide applicants with weekly reports on the number and type of vacant positions in the area since this type of service is the responsibility of the Canada Manpower Centres. However, the Commission does maintain general statistics on the labour market by occupation and advises claimants when suitable employment opportunities exist in the area in order that they may carry out a job search appropriate to their situation.

CBC SHOWING OF FILM "HOCKEY VS XOKKEN"

Question No. 2,150—Mr. Herbert:

1. Has CBC found it impossible to find or allocate prime time for the showing of the film of the 1974 Canada-Russia series "Hockey vs Xokken" and, if so, was the difficulty connected to the need for or the lack of a sponsor?

2. Is a sponsor essential for such a showing on prime time?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. A very high proportion of the prime time schedule of the CBC television network is devoted to NHL hockey play-offs and finals in the spring season. As for the summer schedule, the CBC believes such a production would have a larger audience in the autumn months. The price being asked at present for the film is such that a sponsor would be necessary to meet that price.

2. If a sponsor was not available the CBC would still be interested in purchasing the film but the price would have to be lower. The Corporation is, however, very hopeful that negotiations can be concluded successfully.

The above figures represent the net total of benefits after the deduction of income tax.

CBC "PERFORMANCE" PROGRAMMES

Question No. 2,223—Mr. Korchinski:

With reference to the CBC series "Performance" (a) which programmes are mentioned as most objectionable (b) what are the reasons for the objections?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): (a) Of the plays in the Performance drama series which had been shown as of the date of the question, the ones receiving the most unfavourable mail and telephone response were "Baptizing" by Alice Munro and "Ten Lost Years" by Barry Broadfoot. (b) The reasons given for objecting to these plays included the following: sexual references, profanity, not entertaining, unsuitable for family viewing, not up-lifting, treatment of social conditions and issues too realistic, inaccurate depiction of history, unfair to religious group.

LETTERS PROTESTING CBC "PERFORMANCE" PROGRAMMES

Question No. 2,224—Mr. Korchinski:

1. How many letters has CBC received protesting presentation of the series "Performance" as indecent?

2. Does CBC acknowledge receipt of such letters and, if so, is each letter dealt with on an individual basis or is an acknowledgement provided by way of a form letter?

3. Are letters of protest addressed to the President of CBC dealt with in a different manner than those addressed to the Corporation and, if so, in what way?

4. (a) Do responses to letters receive the personal attention of the President (b) are they turned over to another authority within CBC and, if so, what is the name and position of the individual?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. Not all CBC locations maintain mail records in a way which would enable a comprehensive count to be made. However, there have been about 1,040 unfavourable letters regarding Performance in those locations where the count is available. This figure includes comments about all aspects of the plays, since it is impossible to sort out those which complained that the plays were indecent. See the answer to part (b) of question 2,223 for reasons given for complaint.

2. The CBC receives a great deal of mail at its various locations and endeavours to answer each letter individually. On occasion there are more letters about a specific program or subject than can be handled within a reasonable length of time by staff already engaged in handling the regular mail load. At these times a form letter giving the CBC's position on the most often repeated points can be sent with the minimum delay.

3. Letters addressed to the President of the CBC are received in his office and, if they do not require the President's personal attention, are sent to the appropriate department for reply.

4. (a) In some cases. (b) Yes. Letters addressed to the President are sent to the department in the best position to provide the requested information or deal with the points raised.

CODE OF CONDUCT FOR LINER CONFERENCES

Question No. 2,244—Mr. Forrestall:

Is it the intention of the government to establish an interdepartmental group to examine the impact upon Canadian shipbuilding, ship repair and merchant seamen and officers, of the possible ratification by Canada and sufficient others of the world community, of the proposed Code of Conduct for liner conferences flowing from the UNCTAD meetings in 1974 and (a) if not, for what reason (b) if so, on what date?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): This question was raised on December 11, 1974 as No. 1,130, Order of the Day No. 51. The answer subsequently provided by the Ministry of Transport still holds true. In addition it should be noted that on January 30 Cabinet decided that a full scale review be undertaken of the Canadian international shipping policy. A Shipping Advisory Board has been established under the chairmanship of the Ministry of Transport and the implications of the Code of Conduct for Liner Conferences will be examined within this context. Pending greater clarity as to the likely effect of the Convention, and the likelihood of its implementation and acceptance by Canada's major trading partners, interdepartmental working groups have not been assigned to the specific subject areas in question.

UIC—ASSISTANCE IN FILLING OUT APPLICATION FORMS—BELLECHASSE CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 2,275—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. In the Constituency of Bellechasse, as redefined in 1968, do any employees of Unemployment Insurance Commission help beneficiaries to fill out their application for benefits and, if so, how many?

2. What are their names, addresses and annual salaries?

3. On what dates did they commence employment?

4. In what municipalities are they employed?

Order Paper Questions

*INTERCESSION BY GOVERNMENT ON BEHALF OF SENATOR BENIGNO AQUINO, JR.

Question No. 2,284—Mr. Fairweather:

Will the government intercede with the Ambassador of the Philippines on behalf of the welfare of Senator Benigno Aquino, Jr., who faces trial by military tribunal which violates universal declaration of human rights?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): The trial of Senator Benigno Aquino, Jr., is a matter falling within the domestic jurisdiction of the government of the Philippines and as such the government of the Philippines has no obligation under international law to accept representations from a foreign government on this or any other domestic matter. The proceedings of the Military Tribunal on the Aquino case were suspended April 8, 1975, following the issuance of a restraining order by the Supreme Court of the Philippines pending a ruling by the Court on the question of whether the Military Tribunal had the right to try Senator Aquino on the charges laid against him. The Supreme Court has not yet ruled on the case.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

TWO-PRICE WHEAT ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR PAYMENTS FOR WHEAT PRODUCED AND SOLD IN CANADA FOR HUMAN CONSUMPTION

The House resumed, from Tuesday, May 6, consideration of Bill C-19, to provide for payments in respect of wheat produced and sold in Canada for human consumption in Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture; and motion No. 1 (Mr. Horner).

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, to continue the debate on the amendment, I think first of all I should make the House fully aware that Bill C-19 is a bill to allow Canadian millers to buy wheat at $3.25 a bushel while the government subsidizes the consumer to the tune of $1.75, making the total price received $5. When wheat sells at above $5 a bushel—as the Canadian Wheat Board is pricing wheat now, or at other times above $5 or $6—the farmer, in essence, subsidizes the consumer. My amendment suggests that it might be all right today, but the bill really establishes an agreement that would be in effect for a period of seven years from 1974 to 1980.

My amendment suggests that while it may be all right today, with the cost of production accelerating at the rate it is, we should not lock the farmers into this agreement any longer than 1977, because with inflation and the cost of production rising the farmers may find themselves subsidizing the Canadian consumers more than they can afford. I stated that the Federation of Agriculture certainly agreed that there should be some indexing built into the guaranteed price. They say that if this bill were effective in 1974, and if one took the average increase in the cost of production of 14 per cent last year according to Statistics Canada, the base price should not be $3.25 but $3.67. The Palliser Wheat Growers' Association appeared before the committee. At page 5 of committee report No. 10, Mr. Nelson had this to say:

> We discussed it at a directors' meeting two weeks ago and I will tell you what the representative of the wheat growers came up with, a $4.25 floor. We will take a $5 ceiling knowing that we are taking 80 cents, 90 cents to $1 less than the world price—

So, the farmers are fully aware how much they are asked to subsidize the consumers in this issue. The point is that all the farmers are not particularly satisfied with the concept of no indexing in this bill. Mr. Nelson goes on to say at the same page, in reply to a question put to him by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil):

> That is right. You cannot really rationalize what is going on and what has taken place in the past 12 or 18 months. It would not be inconceivable that we could go to $10 a bushel before spring or in the next two or three years.

They can hardly determine what the price of wheat will be, but every farm group that appeared before the committee wanted the indexing. Mr. Atkinson, of the National Farmers' Union, had this to say:

> I think it is rather dangerous to establish policy for seven years on any matter, given current economic conditions. I think it would be most unsatisfactory and it would be more desirable to approach it, at first, from a more enlightened point of view. The seven-year period could be handled if they had an adequate indexing system.

In committee we attempted to index the price of wheat, but that was ruled out of order. We all know that members of the opposition cannot increase government expenditures, so we could not move an amendment to that effect. The best amendments I could come up were the two I filed. We cannot index unless we bind the farmers to a very limited period. In my amendment, the period would be three years which is longer than the period in any agreement signed by workers; at the very most, their agreements run for two years and sometimes 30 months, but rarely for three years.

In what I believe is a reasonable amendment I am suggesting a three-year period from 1974 to 1977, rather than a seven-year period. To give the committee some idea of the situation, I should mention that a similar piece of legislation is now before the Senate of the United States. In the farm prices bill in the United States the Senate has set a floor price for wheat of $3.41. Therefore, it is not out of line to suggest that if we cannot have indexing we should certainly shorten the period concerned, for the benefit of the farmers in this period of rising costs of production.

I think it only fair to point out that the interesting thing about the price of wheat to the miller is that it has not controlled the rise in the price of bread to the consumer. It has not accomplished what was intended. I believe a very comparable study would indicate that in recent years the price of wheat in the United States dropped 30 cents, but the price of bread in the United States increased 15 cents. While we have had a drop in the price of wheat to the Canadian miller, the price of bread has continued to go up in two or three stages. I am not asking for any great changes in the legislation.

If the government's guarantee is any good, if the price of $3.25 is a guarantee to the millers and there is a guaranteed subsidy of $1.75, why should we sign up the farmer for a period of seven years? There could be reinstatement for another three years after 1977 if the costs of production should not go up. There is no need to lock the farmers in for such a long period. In fact, if I were looking at it from a strictly political point of view, I would think the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) is making a grave political error in attempting to treat the farmers so callously by locking them into a period which is longer than the period involved in any collective bargaining agreement today, or even in attempting to negotiate this agreement for a period of anything approaching seven years.

Once again the minister is treating the farmers with a callous disrespect for their intelligence and well-being. In this amendment I am offering a logical "out" for the minister. If he accepted the amendment he might gain some respect from the farming community. Personally, I would like to think that he would accept this amendment. I do not think that everyone in the House of Commons should be so political that good ideas which originate on this side cannot be accepted by the other side. I believe that the minister should accept suggestions which are put forward from this side from time to time.

Sometimes government members suggest that we criticize but never offer suggestions or solutions. From time to time the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) asks a member of the opposition, "What is your solution? What would you do?" Now I am putting forward what I would do. I would limit the time period during which this act will be in effect from 1974 until 1977. I think it would be a major improvement because this legislation does not take into consideration the cost of production. If it did, I suppose it could be, in effect, in perpetuity; but since it does not take the cost of production into account, the life of the legislation should be limited so that we could reappraise the situation in 1977, at which time we could adjust the floor price.

Members of the committee have suggested from time to time that the minister would automatically adjust the floor price when he found it justifiable to do so. But there was no doubt about the minister's view on this subject; he left no doubt that the ceiling will not be adjusted and that it will remain set.

With regard to the over-all wheat situation, hon. members might have noticed a story in yesterday's newspapers which stated that the prospects for a bumper crop of winter wheat in the United States are good, but that stocks on hand in the five major exporting countries are 300 million tons less than last year. So it appears that prices will remain relatively high. Of course, when one starts to price wheat internationally, one finds that much depends on the U.S.S.R. and China and that it is very difficult to gauge exactly what prices will be before one knows the intentions of those two countries. In any case, it appears that prices will remain high this year and possibly next year, and if that is so farmers will continue to subsidize the Canadian consumer.

With regard to prices remaining high, I should like to quote Mr. Vogel, chairman of the Canadian Wheat Board who was before the Standing Committee on Agriculture on November 14. As recorded at page 15 of committee proceedings No. 7, Mr. Vogel said:

> It would then take probably one year at least to replenish supplies to a point where most people in the world would feel comfortable, which tends to say that prices would remain relatively firm even next year, even though perhaps not as high as they are now. That would take us until at least 1976, maybe even 1977. To the 1980s, though, you would be really crystal-balling.

I say that the amendment which would limit the life of the bill until 1977, at which time we would be better able to gauge whether we want to tie farmers down to this floor price and to the ceiling of $5 a bushel on wheat consumed in Canada, should be adopted. The Wheat Board price, it seems to me, is still $5 a bushel although the international price is below that. To be exact, the asking price for Canadian wheat is still $5.16.

Mr. Lang: You are out of date.

Mr. Horner: That is interesting, because the Wheat Board had an offer recently of less than $5 and they might have taken it. Certainly the price of wheat has come down on the international market to about $2 a bushel. But never mind what the price of wheat will be; we all know that costs are going up considerably so long as this government has no control over inflation. That is where the problem lies. We believe that rather than accept a fixed floor price of $3.25, we should be able to pass on additional costs to the Canadian bakers and consumers. Everyone else is passing on their costs, so why should not the agricultural industry do the same?

I really believe that the price of wheat does not greatly affect the price of a loaf of bread; it is only about a 3 per cent factor in the price of a loaf of bread. Most of the cost is in other ingredients and in the labour that goes into baking the bread. It is demonstrated in an American study that the price of wheat on the U.S. market has dropped 30 per cent from a year ago, but the price of a loaf of bread is up 15 per cent. We have had a similar increase in Canada. I believe that limiting the price of wheat until 1980 would not really keep down the price of bread to the Canadian consumer; bread prices will continue to rise. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) can make all the noise he wants, but sometimes an inflationary economy justifies an increase in the price of bread.

So I urge the Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board not to be so political in his actions, to look at some of the ideas put forward by members on this side of the House, and to accept what I am certain most members of the opposition parties agree is a very good suggestion which will improve the bill before us in the interests of farmers caught in a price squeeze.

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of pleasure that I second the motion now before us, because if you look at the two motions under consideration you will see that the amendments moved to this bill by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) cover the basic objections of this party to the legislation.

Quite frankly, I am somewhat disturbed by the attitude of the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Lang), of stubbornly refusing to incorporate an indexing system to reflect the increase in the cost of production, a system which has been applied in many other programs of the government, such as agricultural programs, pension programs and others. Pension programs, of course, take into consideration the increase in the cost of living. I want to make it abundantly clear that we as a party have always supported the principle of a two-price system for wheat, but in saying that I emphasize that it must be a two-price system that is adequate and will accurately reflect the increase in the cost of production. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has always argued this rather forcefully and we agree with that position. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) indicated in a recent communiqué that the prices which farmers are getting now are somewhat below the cost of production.

This fact should be recognized. But what have we here? We have nothing more than a bill which amounts to a seven-year freeze. We oppose that concept.

I sincerely think that the minister should recognize the fact that if he were to incorporate an indexing provision, or if he were, so to speak, to shorten the contract which would provide an opportunity for reviewing the pricing structure, this bill would be accepted not only by parliament but by the producers of Canada. I am sure that was the major objective in drafting the bill. As the hon. member for Crowfoot pointed out, surely no union involved in the collective bargaining process would accept a proposition such as this. The incomes of most people are based upon anticipated or projected costs of living. Most manufacturing firms base the cost of their products on anticipated cost of production. But here we have a situation where the cost of production factor is not taken into consideration and no adjustment is allowed for: there is a seven-year fixed price.

We had similar objections to the grain stabilization bill, which we have just concluded. But it, in effect, averages farmers' incomes on the previous five years, so surely it is time we became a little more forward-looking in our approach to agriculture, particularly in the grains industry. It is time we dealt with it in such a way that we can effectively and realistically consider those elements which go toward the production of that commodity.

The minister's position on this bill is inconsistent with stated government policy. As the hon. member for Crowfoot pointed out, in the absence of an over-all anti-inflationary policy or pricing and incomes policy, the government has embarked upon a program of indexing to protect the purchasing power of Canadians in reflecting the cost of living and, indeed, in areas of production in agriculture to reflect the increases in the cost of production. It has been stated that many elements of inflation are beyond the control of this government. I believe that a great deal of the inflationary pressures are domestically created and that effective measures could be introduced. Failing that, the government has undertaken to ameliorate or to try to cushion the effects of inflation, so we have the program of indexing.

It is rather amusing to note that that is the nature of the stabilization bill the Minister of Agriculture recently introduced: it took into consideration the cost of production. In other words, guaranteed floor prices would be adjusted to reflect changes in production costs. That is an agricultural bill and it was proposed by this government. The beef stabilization plan is another program in which provision is made to index production costs. A whole host of similar measures have been brought forward by this government. They take into consideration provisions for increases in the cost of production, and it seems to me it is rather unrealistic on the part of this minister to deviate from that stated government policy. It is difficult for me to understand, and it seems that by acceptance of either one of these amendments, if the minister refuses to incorporate an indexing system, parliament or the government will have an opportunity to review this seven-year contract and adjust it as may be necessary.

Wheat Payments

We all know that input costs are generally increasing. The Edmonton Journal of January 20, 1975, reporting on the agricultural outlook conference, said the following:

> The Canadian farmer is being warned to brace himself for a year of reduced profits from the fruits of his labour.
> Federal agriculture officials predict another large increase in farm operating expenses will wipe out a slight rise in revenues in 1975 . . .
> Last year, gross farm income climbed nearly 26 per cent to $9.2 billion, according to preliminary Statistics Canada figures. But a $1 billion jump in operating costs meant net farm income increased only $50 million, to $3.39 billion.

It seems absolutely ludicrous for this government to disregard this important element in a so-called effective two-price wheat system. We are talking about the increase in production costs over a period of seven years. I have before me a table which outlines the increase in production costs, a five-year record of list prices and 1975 projections in respect of key inputs, dated May 1, in central Saskatchewan. These are largely inputs which go toward the production of grain. It is an article printed in the Free Press Weekly Report on Farming of November 16, 1974, and it cites the tremendous increase in basic commodity inputs which have been registered over a five-year period. For example, 11-48-0 fertilizer, 50-pound bags, per ton in 1970 cost $103; in 1975, the projected price is $200. The price of 128-ounce 2-4-D Ester, per five-gallon pail, in 1970 was $24.95; in 1975, $70. Carbyne, in 1970, cost $59.90; in 1975, $75. I could go on with grain bins, baler twine, diesel tractors, combines and diesel fuel: all these items have increased tremendously over a five-year period.

We need only consider the tragic change which occurred in the last year. For example, the farm input index from 1972 to 1973 rose 19 per cent, and the 1974 index rose by 15 per cent. Surely, with that type of historical pattern, it is only natural, if this government believes in stabilization and in producing a reasonable income for prairie wheat farmers, particularly when we consider the domestic price, that some means should be found to compensate and adjust for realistic input costs. Failing that, the bill does not really get to the principle and the heart of the subject.

It seems that there are many arguments for acceptance of these two amendments. I am sure the hon. member for Crowfoot would have no objection to acceptance of either one, because I think the principle embodied in both of them meets our major objection to this legislation. Quite frankly, I do not think this bill is worth the paper it is written on unless one of the amendments is accepted. I see no reason why the government should not accept one or the other, because the bill as it stands is a complete contradiction of and total deviation from stated government policy.

All I can say is that if the government and the minister in charge of the Wheat Board, who is the person who has to pilot this bill through the House, fail to recognize this inherent deficiency, that will reflect the intransigent attitude of the minister. We have a Minister of Agriculture who accepts indexing, and we have a minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board who does not accept indexing. Mr. Speaker, I say there is a glaring deviation and a glaring inconsistency in the views of the cabinet and the government. All the farm organizations support the two-price system. The 1975 policy statement of the western agricultural conference recommended at page 5:

An adequate two-price system for all grains used for domestic human and industrial consumption, including grain used for distilling, brewing and malting, miscellaneous chemicals, explosives, etc.

That the Government of Canada amend the current price arrangement with the Canadian Wheat Board respecting wheat for domestic human consumption, which would provide for an annual review of the guaranteed floor price, so that the floor would reflect changes in the index of farm input costs.

That sums up the situation quite well, Mr. Speaker. A press release issued before the minister in charge of the Wheat Board headed west to talk about transportation boasted about the importance of communicating with the farm community and quoted the minister as follows:

During my 5½ years as minister responsible for the federal government's programs and policies affecting the western grain industry, I have found these encounters with producers to be both informative and productive. I am looking forward to this next week in the same light.

Surely, if that dialogue is to be meaningful, the minister should pay attention to the wishes of the body of agriculture represented by the major farm organizations such as the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and the National Farmers' Union. In this regard, the minister should immediately consider one or both of the amendments. It is interesting to notice that there is a degree of consultation taking place at the moment on the government benches, Mr. Speaker. Maybe the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. McIsaac) and the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) can pool their wisdom for the minister and help him see the light.

I hope the minister will stand in his place and at least recognize the deficiency in this bill which has been echoed by members in this House and in committee. If he has the interest of the grain producers at heart, surely he will see fit to accept the amendments proposed by the hon. member for Crowfoot.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, this issue, as well as the one arising under the subsequent amendment, was thoroughly discussed in committee. It seems to show that hon. members opposite are in some doubt about where they stand on such things as guarantees and long-term agreements for the sale of grain. I would remind hon. members that, as I made clear in committee, the question of how long the agreement or price relationship between the Canadian Wheat Board and the domestic market should be was put to the Wheat Board before it was adopted in the present form by the government.

As the body which can ordinarily enter into long-term and short-term contracts for farmers, the Canadian Wheat Board was asked if, with a price range lower than the one before us now, they would prefer an agreement for five, or seven, years. They opted for the seven-year period because of what they saw as a protection in the floor price of $3.25. The Canadian Wheat Board confirmed this at the time of its appearance before the chief commissioner. It is essentially the business of the Canadian Wheat Board to enter into contracts like this.

The principle of long-term contracts and international wheat agreements is one which is ordinarily applauded by hon. members opposite. Certainly, it is consistently applauded by members of the New Democratic Party and in the rather more traditional way it is applauded and not applauded by the more inconsistent members of the Conservative Party who always seem to be on all sides of any issue.

[Mr. Mazankowski.]

The other day the agriculture critic of the Conservative Party, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) came down emphatically in favour of long-term agreements, international agreements, firm agreements. Obviously, in those circumstances we have to make some judgment about price. There has to be a price range with that kind of agreement that will balance the forces at work. We cannot expect a price range where the minimum is somewhere near the maximum of history. What we have here is a very good arrangement. This is the first time that the price of wheat in Canada has moved above $3 except for the very special circumstances of one wartime occasion. For the first time in history, the price has moved rapidly above $3 and we have a seven-year agreement with the price in the range of $3.25 to $5 in terms of the return to the producer. Surely that is to the advantage of producers. The Canadian Wheat Board saw that advantage.

The Saskatchewan Wheat Pool over the years has consistently favoured international agreements and recognizes their value. That is why, in a statement of policy which followed their last meeting, they indicated support for international wheat arrangements with firm prices. On page 8 of the statement they indicated that they liked having the principle applied here and that they liked the idea of an annual review. In fact, an annual review was included in this legislation in the course of committee hearings.

Hon. members opposite like to take the view that ministers, perhaps myself in particular, are inflexible. I may be inflexible when dealing with certain of the very political pressures and doctrines of the parties opposite when they are as inconsistent as members of the official opposition, but my record shows flexibility in response to reasoned arguments, particularly those from farmers and farm organizations.

In this particular case I could have said that an agreement for seven years of $3.25 to $5 looked very good in September, 1973, and that price should be binding over the whole seven-year period. I could reasonably have taken that position. If the Wheat Board had entered into a similar agreement with the principal buyers in other countries, it is likely that nothing more than that would be said about the prices within the agreement. Both would want to be bound by the floor and the ceiling and not move away from them.

But I recognize the concern of farmers that suddenly certain prices in this country have begun to rise more rapidly than was contemplated at the time of the 1973 decision to go to a $3.25 and $5 range, even though the $3.25 figure was 25 cents higher than had previously been both the maximum and minimum and was in itself a record price, and the $5 was something that until a few months before had never been dreamed of by anyone outside of the Canadian Wheat Board and those who shared their knowledge of international circumstances.

The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) put the proposition to the committee that an annual review might be desirable because of what has happened in terms of prices, and that we should be looking at the annual cost of production and the returns in total coming to farmers. That change is now found as clause 5(3) in the bill as it emerged from committee. That is the answer to both the first amendment and the second amendment of the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), Mr. Speaker.

I should add that in the course of the committee deliberations one hon. member saw fit to make sure that the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Assiniboia was distributed to farm organizations. The response from them was extremely good and generally approved of the amendment. The resolution from the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool used the same words almost exactly. They said that the agreement between the government and the Canadian Wheat Board should be amended to provide for an annual review of the guaranteed floor price and subsidy limits so that the floor and ceiling would level changes in producer costs. In other words, the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool endorsed the amendment proposed in committee in answer to representations from farm organizations and the reasonable arguments that the hon. member for Assiniboia put before the committee at that time.

May I say one further word about price. Hon. members opposite blow hot and cold on the question of price. After saying that prices will never be as high as this again, they quickly say that we are facing disaster, that prices will go through every floor known and we shall be in deep trouble. Once again they take both sides of an issue. The fact is that prices have generally been within the range of the agreement. The end returns for the Canadian Wheat Board pool for the year ending in 1974, which really means the selling period to October, 1974, were well under $5. This represents the final value of wheat sold through the Canadian Wheat Board.

During that period, although prices reached some of their highest peaks, the returns when they were in represented less than $5; therefore the farmer was getting from the treasury full benefit bearing in mind the international price. The price since has weakened. I hope prices will go higher again. The fact is that this agreement was struck at a time when it looked to the Wheat Board, the best protector of the farmer, as reasonable in price terms in relation to the international market. They saw the value of a seven-year agreement as opposed to one of three years or five years when the choice was open to them. It seems to me that that ought, for all hon. members, including Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, to conclude the matter in favour of the bill as it now stands.

Surely we want to keep this guarantee for the seven-year period. I hope, therefore, all hon. members will join in opposing the amendment. It may be that the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) on reflection will want to withdraw it, and I am sure members of the House would accommodate him in that regard.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to participate in this debate and support the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner). Disaster occasionally strikes western Canadians. The greatest disaster that has struck them is the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang). In no way has the minister been flexible or shown that he intends to listen to reason or appreciates the difficulties of western farmers. Not long ago we saw the upper hierarchy of the Liberal Party called to Calgary to attend the western economic opportunities conference. People were wondering what had come over the Liberal Party. The Liberals wondered why western Canadians were complaining. Well, we were complaining about the situation which has existed for some time. The minister's present position is one more ground for complaint.

The minister tried to suggest, a few minutes ago, that we are not in favour of long-term agreements. We are. But can the minister point to any other agreement which is to stand for seven years? Why are other agreements for a shorter period? Why does he want to pin farmers down to a price which is to stand for seven years? The government is in favour of long-term agreements. However, we do not know where we stand; there is no floor and no ceiling price and we do not know what we can look forward to.

The minister takes the position that the western farmer is to be held down to a certain price for seven years. How can the minister justify his position? Who can say if $5 will be sufficient two years from now, let alone seven? We are only asking for this matter to be reconsidered two years from now. The provisions of the bill can again be implemented then. There is no suggestion they would change. We are merely asking for the opportunity to review the situation in two years. Let parliament approve this measure again at that time. After all, the composition of the House of Commons in 1977, barring any unforeseen elections which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) may call, will be the same as at present. This parliament will still be in existence and hon. members opposite will still have the power to push through any legislation they want. We are merely asking the government for the sort of consideration we wanted when we debated the grain stabilization bill.

Western Canadians do not trust this minister. For years we asked for a two-price system; we were not given consideration except during the period when the Conservatives were in office, led by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). That is when we were given acreage payments in lieu of a two-price system. In those days the dollar was worth a dollar. In those days a budget of less than $6 billion was enough for all federal expenditures, including health, defence, and so on. Today the government spends more than $30 billion—and it has come along with a niggardly 25 cents for farmers. Where is the breakthrough?

The cost of machinery in the last year rose by 38 per cent, yet the minister wants to tie every farmer down to a price for seven years, until 1980. I know farm organizations have made representations, I know there has been agitation for a two-price system, and I know that someone could push the argument to the point where the minister will simply refuse to move. Nevertheless, a lot of people are in favour of that principle.

No responsible farm leader will say honestly that he wants prices held at $5 until 1980. How then, can this minister make that suggestion? Further, how can he suggest that reconsideration of this measure in two or three years will in any way jeopardize or change the measure? We bring the Canadian Wheat Board Act before the House from time to time; there is nothing permanent about it. Why cannot we do the same with this bill? After all, it breaks no new ground: why should we be stuck with seven years? It will be seven years bad luck so far as some people are concerned. They know inflation is not being dealt with and they know that costs are rising sharply.

An agricultural conference several months ago pointed out that farmers' incomes would drop by 15 per cent. We know they will drop, but we know prices are going up. Fertilizer costs have already tripled, and machinery costs have gone up by 38 per cent. Inflation has hit the farmer from every angle. Why, then, should we pin ourselves down for seven years? I cannot see what the minister is afraid of. Is he afraid the consumer will be unreasonable? The consumer is going to be reasonable. This minister and this government do not seem to understand that the farmer is the biggest consumer in Canada. These farmers specialize. They do not have their farms cluttered with every product they require; they produce one product and get everything else they require at the market. They no longer tan their hides. As a matter of fact, they buy their milk, butter and eggs. They are consumers. It is not as though the farmers were arguing against the consumers; they are consumers.

The minute there is buoyancy in the economy as far as the farmer is concerned, everyone benefits. Manufacturers benefit. When the farmers think there is a possibility of getting a payment, they spend that money in advance. They know what has happened with the price of machinery, for example. Long before they even receive the money, they make arrangements at the bank to borrow the maximum amount they can. Because of the great demand for borrowing, parliament recognized that fact and increased the amount it is possible to borrow. Everyone knows prices have gone up because we increased the amount that farmers can borrow.

We are simply asking the government not to tie the hands of the farmers for seven years. We plead with the minister to be reasonable and not to be so entrenched in his ways. Because the idea comes from a member of the official opposition, it is immediately discarded. Surely it must mean something to the minister that Liberals have been defeated time and again in western Canada. The reason is obvious. The minister has his eyes and ears closed with regard to western farmers. For all his forays into western Canada, the Prime Minister will not help the situation unless the minister shows a willingness to recognize the plight of these people.

As was pointed out by the hon. member for Crowfoot, we in this party cannot introduce a motion to ask for more money: that is not the right of members of the opposition. The minister has that right; however, he ties it down to a fixed price. Instead of waiting until 1982, we simply ask the minister to reconsider this question a few years from now. There is nothing on the horizon to indicate that costs will go down. There is a possibility that the price of grain will go down. If the minister does not want to recognize the principle of indexing, perhaps we could come to him at that time and ask him to reconsider his position. As a matter of fact, it might work out very handily; by that time we might be ready for another election. The minister could bring forward an amendment and increase the price even if only on a one-year basis. He could tell the farmers of western Canada that he was increasing the price even though it may not be below the $5. He could say he was increasing the price because of the increased cost of production, inflationary trends and so on.

The amount involved would not be terribly great. It would involve the consumption of 50 million or 60 million bushels of wheat. Even if he increased the price at that time by $1, considering the way this government blows money left, right and centre, $50 million or $60 million in another two or three years would not break the back of this government. After all, they have been very wasteful. Maybe by that time we could cut down some of the expenses of the Prime Minister's office.

One would think we were asking for the moon. However, we are only asking for the same principle that applies to every labour organization and pensioner. We do not want to be tied down to a seven-year period. We want an even break. What we are asking for is not unreasonable. We want what every other segment of the economy is getting. If we do not get a better price, we want consideration within a few years. We do not want the minister to shelve this problem for seven years, which is exactly what he wants to do.

Because they want the principle of a two-price system, the members of the New Democratic Party voted against this suggestion in committee. However, on reflection I am sure they will realize that what we are asking for is very reasonable. I think they, too, would like to have this question reconsidered. I feel they will even support us at this time because they have found out the farmers want to be like other Canadians. Despite the comments the minister has made, if he would reverse his position and be on the side of the farmer, it would not be anything to be ashamed of, but it would be a credit to him.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I must say that on the motion I am of two minds. As I said on second reading, our party fully supports a two-price system in Canada: one price for grain used domestically for human consumption, with support from the federal treasury to, in effect, subsidize the consumer, and the farmer getting a reasonable price for his grain. Since the government has finally come around to agreeing to the principle of a two-price system for wheat, I repeat the question: Why just wheat? In all the years we have made this proposal, we have said grain. If it is logical for wheat, it is logical that it should be applied to all grains for whatever period of time is provided in the legislation. Oats, barley, rye, flax and rapeseed sold in Canada for human consumption should also be eligible for a two-price system.

It is a habit of this government and the Liberal Party in general that whenever they finally come around to a good principle, they only go part way or, at best, halfway. There is continual battling to get them to move further than they normally do. I understand the fears of the hon. member who moved this amendment and those of the other speakers from the Conservative Party. If I had more confidence in getting some fast results from this minister in terms of adjusting prices to reflect increased costs of production, I would have little worry about the length of the term in this legislation. I appreciate that the hon. member who moved the amendment also does not have that confidence. The government did at least move slightly to amend the bill so as to provide for an annual review, but it is still too softly worded, I think. The bill says that the minister "shall review", but then it goes on to say "with a view to recommending to the governor in council changes in the price system which would reflect the cost of production". I would rather it said "and shall recommend to the governor in council changes which would reflect the cost of production". One could then agree that the amendment would be totally unnecessary.

I am still inclined not to agree with motion No. 1. The seven-year guarantee at a minimum of $3.25 was a success in finally getting the minister to take such a step, after repeated demands from prairie farmers and farm organizations over many years. Having got that much out of him, I am somewhat reluctant to lessen the length of time. I fear that if we reduce the period from 1980 to 1977 as proposed in the motion, this would leave the door wide open, if we are still stuck with this minister in charge of the Wheat Board in 1977, for him not to further extend the two-price system. He might do less than is already provided in the bill.

This is why I am inclined to vote against the motion. We run the risk of the matter being left wide open in 1977 and of losing even what we have in this measure, especially if we then happen to be in a period of recession and the Minister of Finance is still screaming for restraint and trying to cut back on all the different departments of government. I wonder whether the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) has thought of the risk. Whatever inadequacies there are in the legislation, I think shortening of the length of time, on the other side of the coin, does constitute a risk.

With regard to calculating the cost of production, the minister and the majority of the committee refused to accept an amendment which both the Conservatives and my own party members proposed regarding a cost of production escalator. They refused it on the excuse that it would be very difficult to arrive at a proper calculation of the cost of production. I understand that the Department of National Revenue, under the Income Tax Act, has no problem arriving at the cost of production of a farmer because it is what the department allows him for his costs. I am sure that even a computer analysis of farm costs shown on the income tax returns of the grain farmers of western Canada would produce a pretty good figure, because you can be sure that the farmers attach every bill of expense they can so as to reduce their income tax liability.

Statistics Canada has done a lot of work in this field. There have been several farm management studies, and farm management groups in Canada have carried out extensive work on the question. I believe that two or three of the universities in the prairie provinces have done work on the matter. All these sources can be used in arriving very quickly at a cost of production calculation that will at least reflect an average cost of production in Canadian Wheat Board areas.

I asked the minister in committee, after the amendment calling for mandatory review by the minister on an annual basis was passed, whether he would be good enough to consider carrying out a review of the 1974 experience, and he said he would not. He refused in the committee and said his first annual review would commence after 1975. This means that the farmers have lost an additional year in regard to having their cost of production taken into account and reflected in the prices to be paid under this legislation.

I should like to hear the minister assure the House that he has had a slight change of heart for the better; that he will in fact make a review, under the legislation, of the 1974 experience and that he will make appropriate recommendations to the governor in council this fall, or as soon as he possibly can, regarding additional funds. I do not think there can be any question that the increased cost of production in 1974 will be, if not the highest then certainly one of the highest for some years ahead. All of us know about the kind of jump in farm costs that occurred in 1974, particularly for products related in any way to oil, such as farm fuels, fertilizers, farm machinery and farm machinery parts. Then, of course, interest rates increased. I submit that farm costs made the highest jump in history during the year 1974, yet the minister does not want to make a review of that year.

The legislation provides that the minister shall review on an annual basis. The amendment does not ask that he shall review, commencing in 1975; it just says he shall review on an annual basis. We have had the 1974 experience. Although I am no lawyer, I interpret the amendment moved by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) which the committee accepted to mean that the minister must begin now to make an annual review of the cost of production in 1974. I trust that his officials would draw on Statistics Canada, the Department of National Revenue and any other source necessary in order to come up with a good calculation of the average increase in cost of production.

I appreciate that this cannot be done farm by farm, that cost of production varies from one part of a designated area to another. But surely the total increase in costs can be arrived at. This will take several weeks of work and statistical study, and I hope the minister is already working on the matter. If he is not, then it seems to me the minister should be—at least as I interpret the legislation. I, for one, will want a legal opinion on the question; I am not just going to rely on the opinion of the Minister of Justice. It seems to me from the way the amendment reads, and the way the legislation as amended reads, that the minister must carry out a review for last year. If he were to do so, I would be even more inclined to vote against motion No. 1, because such action would at least restore a little confidence that until 1980 farmers would get a fair shake in terms of any increase in the cost of production since it would be reflected in the price they receive for hard wheat and durum.

The other point I want to make is this. The minister failed to respond to suggestions that he do something about how durum wheat should be treated in the legislation. When one looks quickly at the bill, one gets the impression that the floor for durum is $5.75, whereas it is in fact $3.25. As and when the world price drops for durum wheat below the $5.75 figure, so does the floor in this bill drop, and it keeps dropping until it gets down to $3.25.

I submit, as many farmers have, that historically durum has always brought a somewhat better price than hard wheat. I appreciate that you cannot maintain a $2 or $3 per bushel spread between hard wheat and durum because you would then be up to your eyeballs in durum and would not have enough hard wheat. Farmers would, quite naturally, grow more durum than we could use or sell. It is fair that at least a 50-cent or even a $1 differential should be maintained between the price of durum and hard wheat. I still think that should be the case. I hope the minister will agree to amending his own legislation, although it is a little late to do that at this point in time. When he makes his annual review and appropriate recommendations to the governor in council, he could bring in additional amendments to the legislation to accomplish that very thing regarding the price of durum wheat.

The whole principle of long-term guarantees and contracts for farmers has been fought for by my party and farm organizations for many years. We have finally obtained a commitment from this government in respect of at least $3.25 per bushel. That is insufficient in my opinion since it only applies to wheat and does not do a proper job in accounting for increased costs of production, but at least it is a beginning. The fact that we have finally succeeded in getting something in this legislation that gives the farmer the assurance of some certainty in respect of what he is going to get for several years causes me to object to the motion. I object to it, as well, because I am fearful that if we shorten the time to 1977 from 1980, the whole thing will be left wide open and we run the grave risk of losing what we have in this legislation, getting less or not getting anything better for the years after 1977. On balance, I have to oppose the motion.

One can hope that the annual review will produce some results and I hope that the confidence of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) is not misplaced in that regard. I hope the hon. member will add his support to my suggestion that the first review should be carried out for 1974. It is very likely that the cost of production in 1975 will not increase as much as it did in 1974, so the farmers would lose out in respect of the worst year in relation to rising costs of production. I hope the hon. member will attempt to persuade the minister to make that review on a retroactive basis for the crop year that has just finished.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I have only a few points to make on the bill as I do not want to repeat what has just been said. I support the amendment. I am sure the wheat farmers in western Canada would be satisfied to have either of the suggested principles included in this bill. I think it is necessary to make some points in relation to the cost of production, and I intend to put on record some statistics from Statistics Canada which show this dramatic increase.

[Mr. Benjamin.]

The proposed amendment of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) is vague in relation to whether the minister has to bring forward these aspects of production costs. The Conservative Party has been consistent, contrary to what the minister suggests, in having the best interests of the farmers at heart and in attempting to see that the farmers get a proper deal. We are concerned that if the price of wheat increases above $5 a bushel, the farmer will not from now until 1980 be able to take advantage of that price increase in respect of the number of bushels consumed in Canada, but he will still have to absorb the increased cost of production during the years from now until 1980.

I appreciate that this bill ultimately provides a consumer subsidy and the farmers, being consumers, will be able to take advantage of the price of bread remaining relatively stable. One very important element has not been taken into consideration, and that is the increasing cost of producing wheat on the prairies. If production costs increase as they have in the past, the farmer will be penalized in respect of the amount of wheat he sells. Essentially, he will have to make a contribution rather than realizing a slim profit or even breaking even. To set the price per bushel for such a long period without making some concrete provision for escalating input costs is totally unrealistic.

The guaranteed price is basically $3.25 a bushel. Perhaps a year ago, or even today, $3.25 would be a satisfactory price. However, we certainly have no assurance that in 11 years $3.25 or, for that matter, even $5 will be sufficient to cover the increase in input expenditures. The Federation of Agriculture appeared before the committee and stated that since this bill was introduced to the House the cost of production had already risen 14.6 per cent, particularly in western Canada where this grain is produced. Given this fact, the figure of $3.25 should increase to approximately $3.67 a bushel. If the price of wheat should fall below the $3.25 guarantee, the farmer would only receive the same price per bushel regardless of his increased production costs.

We all know how important wheat production is at this time, particularly when the world is finding itself in a deficit food position. We have even heard pleas for increased wheat production here in this House. Surely we must give more consideration to the producers of wheat than is currently being given in Bill C-19. The agricultural sector is the very backbone of our economy, and the grain producers make up a very substantial percentage of this agricultural bloc. Only through a demonstration of fairness and a willingness to consider their arguments can we encourage them to increase their production of No. 1 wheat.

Statistics Canada is today putting out figures on the increased costs of farm production. It would be very easy for the minister to use those statistics as a basis for increasing the $3.25 price. The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) has shown how the costs increased dramatically during 1974. I should like to put on record the percentage increases according to Statistics Canada. Statistics Canada has stated that total farm input costs increased, between 1973 and 1974, by 27.3 per cent based on 1961 dollars. The report has four columns in which they show that the cost of land and farm buildings increased, between 1973 and 1974, by 16.1 per cent. It is well known that farmers must increase their land holdings from time to time and update their old buildings or build new ones.

Farm machinery and motor vehicles have increased by 18.1 per cent, farm labour has increased by 39.4 per cent, and all the other materials used in the production of agricultural products have increased by 39 per cent. This is in the period between 1973 and 1974. To project that from 1974 to 1975, if we look at the industrial price index we see that the cost of production will increase at approximately the same rate as it did during the 1973-74 period. That is why it is so important that either of the amendments of the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) be accepted by the House. The amendment placed before the committee by the hon. member for Assiniboia takes us a short way toward obtaining that principle, but I think far better than that would be an amendment to the bill that would assure the farmer that the increased cost of production in fact would be added to the base price he would receive.

Another point I should like to bring before the House is the fact that, while many people may be pessimistic concerning the price of wheat, a number of witnesses who appeared before the committee said that the price in fact could go very much higher in the next number of years than it is today. We have been accused of blowing hot and cold concerning the price of wheat. That may be so. Perhaps the farmers as they look at the fluctuations in prices and input costs are a little leery of the future. But these witnesses, who I believe are in the know because they deal with the grain situation from day to day, have stated that the price of wheat could go as high as $10 a bushel. I should like to quote from page 5 of the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence, issue No. 10. The chairman of the Pallliser Wheat Growers' Association had this to say in reply to a question put to him by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil):

> That is right. You cannot really rationalize what is going on and what has taken place in the past 12 or 18 months. It would not be inconceivable that we could go to $10 a bushel before spring or in the next two or three years.

The Washington agricultural outlook conference had the same thing to say: this was also brought before the committee. It was stated in that report that if we can pay the international price in Canada, it is quite conceivable we could reach a price of $10 a bushel in the future. These are the predictions of people who have studied the situation. I believe western wheat farmers are optimistic that the price will increase and that they will be able to meet their cost of production but they are concerned that if in the next two or three years the price should go up they would be committed to a maximum of $5 for their wheat even if the price should go beyond that. If the farmer does not receive a proper return for his product, he may well go into the production of other forms of grain. I think this would be disastrous to our economy because a large portion of our export wealth is based on wheat. It is important that we see that farmers do not go into other types of production because of being locked into an agreement under this bill.

I think it is important that we consider these two amendments and pass one or the other in order to make this a better bill for the western wheat growers. I hope the minister and other members will take note of this and will look favourably at the amendments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): The question is on motion No. 1 in the name of the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): All those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred. The House will now direct its attention to motion No. 2.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot) moved:

> That Bill C-19, an act to provide for payments in respect of wheat produced and sold in Canada for human consumption in Canada, be amended at page 3 by (a) deleting the word "and" in line 40 (b) deleting the period at the end of line 44 and substituting therefor ";and" (c) adding immediately after line 44 the following paragraph:
> "(c) regarding payments authorized under section 4 of a bushel of wheat consumed in Canada; that each year the Canadian Wheat Board, through the minister in charge, report to parliament the average estimated increase in the cost of production.".

He said: Mr. Speaker, there are two significant things about this amendment which I should like to draw to the attention of the House before a decision is reached on it. First of all, the amendment suggests that the Canadian Wheat Board estimate the cost of production. It is not suggested that the minister, for political reasons one way or another, or that some other group should make the estimation, but that the Canadian Wheat Board should estimate the cost of production and the increase in the cost of production each year. Then, through the minister, that figure would be publicly reported in the House of Commons so that everybody would know what in fact was happening concerning the farmer's cost of production in respect of products under this bill which are sold for domestic consumption.

A few minutes ago the minister said that the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) had moved an amendment in committee which he thought would take care of an annual review. That amendment can be found at page 4 of the reprinted bill. It reads:

The minister shall, on an annual basis and in consultation with the producers, review the provisions of this act—

I should like to think that any minister would annually look at the provisions of an act which came under his jurisdiction. I think it would be an insult to a minister to have to be told to do that. I believe it is improper for a minister to be told in a bill that he should do his job. The amendment goes on to say:

—and all related regulations enacted by the governor in council with a view to making such recommendations to the governor in council as are appropriate in the light of prevailing costs of production of wheat and returns to producers.

I have read many wishy-washy words around the House of Commons and have seen some wishy-washy words in pieces of legislation, but from my point of view this amendment to the bill does nothing. It does not enhance the bill. If the minister is doing his job, certainly he would tell his cabinet colleagues about the problems in the part of the agricultural industry for which he is responsible, namely, the wheat farmer and the Canadian Wheat Board. Certainly he would tell the governor in council about the problems of increased costs which the farmers have to put up with.

● (1640)

In looking at committee proceedings No. 12, I find that the hon. member for Assiniboia had quite a lot to say about costs going up or down. At page 12 of the proceedings he is reported to have said the following in reply to Mr. Atkinson of the National Farmers Union who spoke about the squeeze in which farmers would find themselves if a fixed ceiling were set, a squeeze brought about by the escalation in the cost of production:

The legislation is, of course, flexible on that point; it allows that figure to move up and down.

I do not know how much it allows it to move up and down, unless the hon. member is considering adjusting the subsidy that the government puts in at $1.75. If the hon. member wants it lowered to $1.75, then that is a pretty interesting concept. I would hate to think the minister would do that, or that he would pay any attention to his former side-kick in this regard. The hon. member went on to say:

The other issue which is really quite a different one is whether the $5 present talk that is in the legislation is realistic, given the nature of world prices at any particular moment in time. I wonder whether an indexing feature, although it would deal with the base price problem, would really solve any concerns that some people might have about the problem at the other end.

It is interesting to note that every farm organization that has come before the committee, including the Ontario Wheat Farmers, the National Farmers Union and the Palliser Wheat Growers, has stated that indexing is necessary. On page 5 of committee proceedings No. 10, Mr. Nelson, former president of the Palliser Wheat Growers' Association, spoke about the escalating factors in the cost of production. He was replying to a question put to him by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) who said:

[Mr. Horner.]

You mentioned that your executive, in discussing it, were not happy with a $5 ceiling, but I gather there again you would like to see that adjustable. Is this correct?

Mr. Nelson answered:

Right, either through an escalator clause which would, in turn, take into consideration the cost of production; for example, if the cost of production went up 20 per cent in a year, both the floor and the ceiling ought to go up 20 per cent, or a review aspect in it.

That is what I am asking for in this amendment. Although I could not amend the bill to put in an indexing clause which the Federation of Agriculture wanted, as stated in its very able brief to the committee outlining their point of view, I am suggesting that if the minister had to report to the House of Commons on how much the cost of production went up each year, attention would be focused on the plight of the farmer and members of parliament would bring attention to the need to adjust the bill to compensate for any increase in the cost of production.

The minister stated that the $3.25 floor price is actually the world price. It can be argued that the world price is a few cents below the $3.25 which is the fixed price the Canadian miller would have to pay for Canadian wheat. The minister said in committee that while that price took into consideration the cost of production, the cost of production was not necessarily used in establishing the $3.25. It is immaterial to argue whether it does or does not take into account the cost of production, because we realize that in these inflationary times eventually costs will exceed that floor price.

I think it was generally agreed by all farm organizations that the base price should at least take into consideration the cost of production. The Federation of Agriculture, in their brief to the committee, stated that point quite clearly as recorded in committee proceedings No. 5. The federation stated that since the guaranteed price was set in September of 1973, farm input costs have gone up 14.73 per cent. They estimated that taking an average for the whole of Canada of about 13 per cent of the $3.25, and adding that to the floor price, you will get the base price for 1975 of $3.67. They believe that the base price should at all times include the cost of production. They figure that for 1975 the price should be $3.67.

Surely all we are stating in this amendment is that it should be publicly noted by the minister that the Canadian Wheat Board, whose business it is to know the cost of production of wheat, because they are designated as the major handling agency for western Canada in the Wheat Board area, should assess the cost of production, report to parliament on it and then the onus would be on parliament to adjust the legislation. The amendment moved by the hon. member for Assiniboia does not do much, in my view—or, I am certain, in the view of many farm organizations. It does not make public the cost of production. If the cost of production was made public, everybody would be clearly aware of the responsibility of the minister and of parliament to adjust prices so that farmers could stay in business and continue to produce wheat.

The minister can talk all he likes about the price of wheat going above $5 a bushel, but we all know that costs to the farmers are going up rapidly. We can all remember a few years ago the old cry of farm organizations about the cost-price squeeze and we can foresee it happening again in the years ahead. We hear talk of shortages of gas in Canada and increased oil prices because of Canada's becoming very shortly a net importer of oil. We are not farming in what some people like to refer to as the good old days when we fed our horses a little oats which gave them the energy to pull the plow. We grew our crops with horse power, but we now farm with highly mechanized agricultural implements such as tractors which burn diesel fuel, gas or propane. All farm implements burn a considerable amount of fuel, and fuel costs will more than likely increase unless someone can find a major supply of cheap energy from somewhere other than the OPEC countries.

It is foolish to think that we should tie farmers down for seven years with no escalating clause and no publicly recognized indicator as to how much farm cost will go up. My amendment only suggests that there should be public acknowledgement that those costs will go up, and that the onus is on the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, whoever that might be in 1977, 1978 or 1979. There will certainly be a new minister after 1978. I would like to think there might be one before that. However, the onus should be on that person to consider those costs which have increased and will continue to increase. Even if we contain inflation, energy costs will more than likely go up as we become a net importer of oil. I put no value on the amendment moved in committee, and I urge the House to accept my amendment. It does not change the legislation; it just makes the minister report to the House the findings of the Canadian Wheat Board on cost of production.

One can read the 1973-74 annual report of the Canadian Wheat Board. It is a very nice, blue document which pertains to the field of agriculture. There is on it a beautiful picture. When I first became a member of parliament this report was referred to the agricultural committee every year. In recent years the government has had to be badgered in order to have a thorough study of the report in the agricultural committee. Nowhere does it suggest that production costs have increased. Nowhere does it deal with the aspect of how much the cost of wheat production has increased. It deals with the total world population and the growth of world production of wheat. It deals with countries we compete against such as Australia and Argentina and their possible production capacity. It deals with importing countries on the continents of North America, Asia, and so on. It deals with feed grain production in the United States and in Canada.

The report deals at length with international wheat agreements. I have nothing against international wheat agreements. Even in international wheat agreements of the past few years there has always been room for the price to fluctuate and move up if there was demand and if the costs of producing countries went up. Of course, if the price did not move up, there would be less and less wheat in the world and more and more people going hungry.

My amendment places greater onus on the Wheat Board to analyse the cost of production. It places greater responsibility on the minister to report those costs to the House. Then, of course, it is up to parliament to assess those costs and perhaps at a future time to adjust Bill C-19 accordingly.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to add a few words to those of the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) in support of his motion, because in the committee I originally moved some amendments with the same idea in mind. Farmers are receiving a bad deal from this government. I have pointed out on various occasions that farmers simply do not trust the minister responsible for the Wheat Board, although at every turn they find it is not only the minister himself; he is simply running true to form as far as any Liberal government is concerned. This has always been the pattern when dealing with Canadian farmers, but we notice it particularly with regard to grain because everyone is aware that grain is one of the great commodities we have for sale. Many of us are dependent on the sale of that commodity for our livelihood.

At one time there was what was known as the British wheat agreement. That agreement was signed by another Liberal government back in 1945 to 1950. At that time there was a "have regard" clause. I merely bring this out because the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) squirmed and turned in committee after I proposed an amendment which I thought dealt with the matter adequately. There was a rush and a scurry on the part of the Liberal members who were wondering how in the world they could take the credit away from me at that time. They had consultations because my amendment was to appear before theirs. They did not know how to get around that. They had the same idea as I did, but they were not prepared to give me credit for it.

Be that as it may, it turned out that the committee voted on my amendment first. Naturally, it was turned down for no other reason than that it came from a member of the opposition—as though they have any priority on ideas! However, the motion introduced by the hon. member for Assiniboia was dealt with but it is so wishy-washy, as has been pointed out by the hon. member for Crowfoot, that it really leaves us with nothing. It leaves us with nothing except a vague reference to a law. It does nothing with regard to pointing out the facts in relation to the cost of production, because at that particular time under the British wheat agreement there was a "have regard" clause. There may be some who remember that clause. There are perhaps very few members who were in the House at that time. Certainly I was not here, but I remember the debate very clearly. At that time, thanks to the Liberal government's lack of foresight, the western farmer lost something like $500 million or $600 million. At that time, the government said that the British would have regard to the cost of grain, that they would take that into account and perhaps pay more if the world price became higher.

As it turned out, the world price of grain dropped tremendously after the war, and countries that were not tied into that type of agreement were getting high prices. Canada was tied to the agreement, however. The present minister looks back on the pages of history in order to follow the pattern of the Liberal Party, so now he is tying us to a fixed price for seven years. Of course, we all know that the cost of production will go up. But what recourse do we have? We cannot introduce an amendment to ask for a higher price, so we ask that the facts be revealed to the public. It is our opinion that the Canadian public will deal more honestly and fairly with the demands of western farmers than this government, if all the facts are known to them. We already have a Food Prices Review Board. What we are asking for now is a cost-price review board. The Wheat Board has an accounting system and a computer all set up and could take care of the accounting involved.

I really think, Mr. Speaker, that the minister should be required to report to parliament on the cost of production. What we need is a truth squad to go out into the country and determine what the price is. At the moment the minister believes that the $5 price is high enough. I am sure he will have no hesitation in saying a year from now that the bill presented under the two-price system is a good one. We want the minister to be brave enough to tell the western farmer a year from now that his cost of production has not gone up, or has gone up. If he can tell a farm audience, "We paid $5 for seven years", then I want him to stand in this House each year until 1980 pointing, on the one hand, to the $5 ceiling and, on the other hand, to the way the government has managed the cost of production factor. If the government has done its work well and the cost of production has gone down, by 1980 he will be able to say to the farmers, "I gave you $5 and your cost of production has gone down." I would like the minister to do that every year, Mr. Speaker.

After the bill was in committee, I believe the hon. member for Assiniboia complained that some opposition members had filibustered and found fault with it. Well, I am finding fault with it right now, Mr. Speaker. I believe the cost of production will go up. The minister may not believe that, but if he feels so strongly about it he should accept this amendment. If he is confident that the bill is valid now, and will still be valid by 1980, he should accept the amendment. The minister would find a truth squad a valuable instrument to investigate other areas. If the Food Prices Review Board is able to check the cost of food and determine whether anybody is ripping off the consumer, then a parallel case could be made for a cost-price review board.

I hope this House will support the amendment. I hope that two years from now the minister will be brave enough to come before the House and give us the facts, instead of hiding behind unreliable statistics. The relevant statistics are already in the hands of the Canadian Wheat Board, and that is where the minister should look for his information.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I just want to say quickly that we feel we can support this amendment. It will not do any harm, but it might do some good. Some hon. members expressed fears that the amendment might make the Canadian Wheat Board unhappy and place on it the burden of hiring additional staff to produce a statistical analysis on this scale. In the end, of course, the cost would come out of the pockets of the farmers through Wheat Board funds. If the amendment were to pass, however, I think the Wheat Board could use information from Statistics Canada, the Department of National Revenue, universities, research groups and farm management groups.

[Mr. Korchinski.]

I like the fact that the amendment calls for the report to be made to parliament. It may well be that the minister will report to parliament following his annual review in any case although nothing in the legislation says that he must. I do not think the amendment would impose any extraordinary requirements on the Wheat Board. If it meant it would have to put in a computer and hire several hundred more people to do the statistical analysis, of course that would be a duplication of effort and a waste of time and money. I think this amendment could be helpful, Mr. Speaker; I do not see how it could be harmful, and I think the minister should accept it and save time in getting his bill through.

● (1710)

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I have listened to interesting comments from both sides of the House on a useful and important bill, Bill C-19, which has been before parliament since last fall, although the mechanics of the program have been in place somewhat longer. Its principles of operation are well known to members of the House who are interested in this subject, and well known particularly to western farmers who, as you know, are most interested in this legislation.

As the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) has pointed out on other occasions, members of this House of all political parties, members of farm organizations across western Canada and, I suspect, of other parts of Canada as well, have made representations about the need in this country for a two-price system for wheat. We saw a proposal of that kind presented to parliament last fall in specific statutory form. We hope soon to see final approval of it.

Let me deal with some misconceptions about this legislation, misconceptions made evident by the amendment which is now before the House. The impression has been conveyed by members opposite speaking on Bill C-19—I hope the impression has been conveyed from a mistaken notion and has not been conveyed deliberately—that this legislation deals with some kind of pegged or fixed price, with a price which will be there for seven years, without room for variation. That, clearly, is not so. The very attractiveness of the legislation lies in the fact that it does not provide for a pegged price, although I suppose a pegged price in Canada is acceptable if it is above the going world price, and that was the situation for some time before this legislation came forward. When you come to the other situation in which the international price is the high price, you cannot talk about a pegged price that is going to to be fully adequate and reasonable over a period of time.

The legislation provides for a price range. It is a useful and good price range and we should look at the parameters of that range as set out by the minister earlier this afternoon. It is a range that is fair and reasonable in the circumstances. Certainly, when it was first established in September, 1973, it was broadly heralded as one that was fair, reasonable and good, and one that exceeded our wildest expectations for grain prices, even for the longer term, just a few months before that range was established. Let us consider what has happened to the price since the beginning of this exercise. Since the Standing Committee on Agriculture finished working on this bill in January or early February, we have seen demonstrated the real value of this kind of arrangement for domestic wheat sold in Canada, as prices have been coming down.

Nobody in this House is happy with that prospect, because we all know what it means in terms of the incomes of western grain and wheat producers and a lot of other producers across the country. Although we are quite optimistic and hopeful that prices in future will continue to be strong, that prices in the rest of the decade will be high for Canadian grain producers, we must face the prospect, unhappily, that prices could and at some stage no doubt will begin to drop. This is borne out by history, unfortunately. So the price range established by this legislation has proved to be a reasonable and realistic one if you consider it from the point of view of the maximum figure which is set at $5 for hard wheat.

On the other side of the coin, some useful opinions were expressed about floor prices. Perhaps one of the most educated and useful opinions which one should consider is that expressed by the chief commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board, Mr. Vogel, who appeared before the Standing Committee on Agriculture and was questioned strenuously by hon. members on the very point I am making. Mr. Vogel appeared before the committee on November 14 last and his remarks are recorded in issue No. 7 of the proceedings of that committee, on page 26. After dealing with some of the questions I raised and after mentioning the $5 price, Mr. Vogel said, as recorded on that page in the committee minutes:

> However, I think it is not correct to ignore the other part of the program which was important to us and that is the guarantee at $3.25 which we do not have on the export market—

Lower on the same page Mr. Vogel is reported as having said:

> —I will tell you that as a board we regard the $3.25 as a meaningful figure.

I think it is useful to record that opinion from one who is clearly an expert in the uncertain game of trying to assess where grain prices will go from time to time. He indicated what the realistic expectations of grain producers are if they want to assess their prospects over the longer term. Clearly, the bill is useful in that it provides not for a pegged level of price but for a range of prices. We have, in addition, the amendment which was passed by the committee and presented by government members after it had been thoroughly discussed by committee members. I am referring to clause 5(3) which provides specifically for a review procedure, not in 1977 or some later date but every year. I think that would be a useful exercise, and that amendment by itself makes the amendment now before the House unnecessary.

For the benefit of hon. members who may not be aware of the language of the amendment as adopted by the Standing Committee on Agriculture, I shall read it. The new clause 5(3) reads:

> The minister shall, on an annual basis and in consultation with the producers, review the provisions of this act and all related regulations enacted by the governor in council, with a view to making such recommendations to the governor in council as are appropriate in the light of prevailing costs of production of wheat and returns to producers.

It is an all-encompassing amendment which will achieve the objectives hon. members opposite have been urging on the House most of this afternoon.

Mr. Benjamin: For 1974?

Mr. Goodale: We are talking about a contract, or an arrangement if you like, the duration of which is to be until 1980. Periodically, we should look at it to ensure that in all circumstances, from the point of view of cost of production and the point of view of total return to producers, the arrangement is fair, reasonable and serves the best interests of this country and, of course, of grain producers who are particularly affected by this legislation.

The members of the Standing Committee on Agriculture did not rush their consideration of this matter. We heard excellent witnesses from farm organizations. At this point I will commend hon. members opposite who came forward in the first place with the suggestion that farm organizations and others should be invited to present their views. That was a useful and constructive idea made by members of opposition parties. As I said, we heard witnesses who presented useful testimony and all who took part in this debate referred to the things they said. After that, and after we had discussed this matter among ourselves, members of the committee on my side of the House felt that the basic argument was well taken and that we had to provide for some ongoing mechanism to take into account changes which might occur from time to time in costs of production and in other circumstances which might affect the effectiveness of the program.

We therefore proposed a review mechanism, but we specifically declined to propose a rigid indexing system. I think the comments made to the committee by the president of the Palliser Wheat Growers' Association, Mr. Nelson, are important. He pointed out that indexing is all very well and good and would at least partly compensate for increases in a farmer's cost of production, but that a host of other factors need to be taken into account between now and 1980, and indexing could not do that. He suggested that an annual review by the minister would be the best way to take these factors into account. These factors might involve cost of production changes or any other changes which might bear upon this legislation.

I think we on my side of the House and, I suspect, hon. members opposite as well, found a good deal of merit in what Mr. Nelson had to say, and we suggested the amendment which is now in the legislation and which I submit largely eliminates the necessity for the amendment presently before us and recently moved by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner).

● (1720)

As we come to the conclusion of our discussion on this legislation, I want to commend one member of the opposition in particular who participated very actively in the deliberations on Bill C-19. He is not in his place today but I know these remarks will come to his attention. I refer to the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn). Once the amendment had been presented to the committee for consideration, that member took it upon himself to contact at least some of the farm organizations that had appeared before us previously. He asked them to comment on the amendment the committee was considering; the amendment I read into the record a few moments ago.

It is interesting to see the reactions that came back; they are part of the official record of the committee proceedings. All members of the committee have copies of the letters which came from the various organizations. A reply was received from the Ontario Wheat Producers' Marketing Board. The letter is from Mr. K. A. Standing, general manager of the board, and it reads as follows:

> My board have reviewed the proposed amendment to Bill C-19 entitled "Annual Review by Minister".
> This board is in accordance with the proposed amendment, and I would appreciate advice on the destiny of the amendment and the bill.

That is clearly an endorsement from that organization. We received a reply from the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. In his remarks earlier today, the minister commented on what the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool had to say about the amendment. I will read a paragraph of the reply from Mr. Turner, president of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. In his testimony he clearly opted for the more rigid and less flexible indexing approach. In his letter, he said:

> The above amendment, while not specifically committing the government to adjustment of the guarantee and/or the subsidy according to an index of farm input costs, at least recognizes the principle and provides opportunity for annual review.

We also have a reaction from the president of United Grain Growers Limited. The letter is rather lengthy. Mr. Runciman included a copy of some useful remarks he delivered in a speech. I will read the first two paragraphs of his letter to the committee:

> The directors of United Grain Growers are most pleased to have the cost of production factor entered as an amendment to Bill C-19.
> This is a good amendment and, on behalf of UGG's members, allow me to compliment the Standing Committee on Agriculture for moving it.

From that survey of opinion, which was initiated by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar, we see a general approval of the kind of amendment that is in the legislation at the moment. It is clearly acknowledged that certain of the farm organizations that appeared before us would like to have seen in the legislation a very inflexible and specific indexing factor. However, for the reasons I discussed earlier, that particular idea did not commend itself to most members of the Standing Committee on Agriculture. I urge the same arguments this afternoon upon members of this House as we come to a final decision on this matter.

I wish to make some comment on certain remarks made during the course of this debate regarding testimony given before the standing committee by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. I think the members of the committee will agree that, like all the groups, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture made a very useful and informative presentation. I think it would be useful for the committee and indeed this House if all members would adopt a rather more consistent attitude with regard to the kind of advice that from time to time comes forward from farm organizations. I say this particularly in connection with advice we have received from the Canadian Federation of Agriculture because they have been singled out by members opposite for consideration in today's debate.

[Mr. Goodale.]

It is important to consider their representations with some consistency. In the course of this debate, members opposite have spoken very highly about what the Canadian Federation of Agriculture have to say. It is quite proper that they should do so because the Canadian Federation of Agriculture presented a very useful brief to the committee on that point. However, this House should demand that hon. members be consistent.

I recall the remarks made in the past week or so by members opposite with regard to another piece of legislation, Bill C-41. The message was just the opposite, that we should not be relying upon the farm organizations and the commentaries they bring forward but, rather, we should circumvent them and address ourselves almost exclusively to the farmers. I do not think the Canadian Federation of Agriculture or any other duly elected farm organization would appreciate that suggestion.

My only plea is for consistency. It is an important principle that we should not treat the advice and counsel of farm groups favourably when it suits our purposes and unfavourably when it does not. It is very important that wherever possible we talk to the individual producers in western Canada or wherever they may be found in this country. However, it is also important to consult with and discuss policy proposals with organizations and groups. Let us do it on all occasions in both directions, not simply in one direction when it is convenient and in another when it may be particularly handy.

I am pleased to note that this government has a high regard for the expressions of individual farmer opinion which come forward to us from time to time. This minister in particular, the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, has repeatedly sought direct advice from individual farmers both formally and informally. I think of the formal occasions when he has sought that advice in the manner of a vote or poll. I think of the original vote on the two-price wheat program and the rapeseed marketing plebiscite. Then, there was the recent vote to elect the advisory committee of the Canadian Wheat Board. There have been many informal consultations, too, directly with producers in connection with such things as the stabilization plan, the feed grains policy, grains transportation and other very important issues.

In addition to those consultations between this government and individual producers, directly one to one, this government has demonstrated a high and consistent regard for the counsel and advice of farm organizations duly elected to represent the interests of farmers across the country. I plead that we in this House and elsewhere treat their recommendations with some consistency.

In my view, the basic point is that the amendment of the hon. member for Crowfoot is not necessary. I believe that Bill C-19, with the review procedure—and it is very important that it be in there—is adequate to deal with the situation. We have the obligation of an annual review. The bill as it stands should now enjoy speedy passage; it does not need the additional requirement of the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Crowfoot.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. We have just had a reiteration of platitudes about the Liberal Party's agricultural policy.

They are platitudes, and platitudes only: they produce nothing. Let us look at the platitudes which emanated from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) as an election gimmick. Let us look at the losses suffered by the hog growers in the Atlantic area. Let us look at the cost of the provincial government's stepping in to fill a federal vacuum. A review by the minister will be reflected in every piece of agricultural legislation that we have and in every approach by the government to agriculture. It has finally been decided by an interdepartmental committee, or by a multidepartmental committee, that agriculture is no longer number one. The primary consideration is the politics of the situation, which means that the individual farmer is not given the priority that he deserves.

● (1730)

I submit that the responsibility being placed at this moment in time in the hands of the minister leaves agriculture in the hands of an urban-oriented cabinet which has shown a complete lack of comprehension of the needs of agriculture in all its phases. I will be eating the bread that comes from the wheat that comes from the west; and what this bill does is to ensure that if the international price of wheat goes up, the farmers will lose income: if the international price of wheat goes down, the farmers will then sell on the international market. So the farmer loses either way. The referral structure that has been set up leaves the farmers, as I say, in the hands of an urban-oriented government which has not served, cannot serve, and has no intention of ever serving agriculture as an industry of importance in this country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): The question is on motion No. 1. All those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Penner): Call in the members.

The House divided on motion No. 1 (Mr. Horner) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost. Mr. Lang, seconded by Mr. Sharp, moves:

That Bill C-19, an act to provide for payments in respect of wheat produced and sold in Canada for human consumption in Canada, as reported (with amendments), from the Standing Committee on Agriculture, be concurred in.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time? Next sitting of the House?

Some hon. Members: Next sitting of the House.

Mr. Horner: No. On a point of order Mr. Speaker, in order to go into third reading today we must have unanimous consent, and I say no.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, there are three people in the gallery tallying the vote. That information can be obtained from Hansard. I ask whether those people work for the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and if they are trying to find out who is here and who is not. I want to know what they are doing.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I would designate Friday of this week as an allotted day, pursuant to Standing Order 58.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for that advice. Can he assure the House that Bill C-58 will be before us tomorrow?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the business for tomorrow will be Bill C-58 dealing with Time, Reader's Digest and assorted subjects. I should advise the House that it is very likely there will be allotted days on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. On the point of order raised by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), I am able to inform him offhand that two of the persons in the gallery to whom he referred are employees of the Journals branch and are not related to any political party. I will check on the matter, however.

It being after six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock tomorrow.

At 6.13 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—STAGE OF THE DISCUSSIONS SEEKING CONSENSUS ON RESTRAINT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance with regard to the consensus program following the reply from the representatives of the CLC. Can the minister indicate to the House what stage the process is in now, having said on Tuesday, the sixth, that it appeared there was a possibility of getting to the final stage by the end of the week. I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether it is still in the middle stage or whether we will get to the final stage at the commencement of next week.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the government will be seeking further clarification from the Canadian Labour Congress on its statement. Indeed, I intend to canvass the views and reactions of the provinces and the business community as well. We will be issuing an invitation to meet the executive of the Canadian Labour Congress early next week.

INFLATION—KNOWLEDGE OF MINISTER OF WORKING PAPERS PRESENTED TO CANADIAN LABOUR CONGRESS SEEKING CONSENSUS ON RESTRAINT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry the minister will not indicate at what stage we are. Yesterday, the Acting Prime Minister indicated that the working papers on this subject that were revealed to the press on Monday were in fact before the CLC and others. I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether this was done without his knowledge since on Tuesday last he indicated in response to questions that these papers published in the press on Monday must have been earlier working papers. Were there in fact papers presented to the CLC and others by the Acting Prime Minister without the knowledge of the Minister of Finance?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker. The working papers and discussions have been continually evolving. The reports I read seemed to concentrate primarily on the wage and salary side. The papers which have been in circulation were based on the assumption that every sector of the economy was entitled to bear its burden in the moderation for which we were seeking agreement, and particularly on the wage and salary side there was an assumption there would be sufficient flexibility for catch-up for those areas of the working force that had fallen furthest behind. Also there was a legitimate bias in favour of the lower paid men and women in the work force. It was for this reason I felt the report did not fairly reflect the amplitude or totality of the propositions or proposals in discussion.

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition on a final supplementary.

INFLATION—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF WORKING PAPERS SUBMITTED TO CANADIAN LABOUR CONGRESS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, at least it is clear today that these were not earlier papers as the Minister of Finance seemed to suggest at the first of this week. Now that the Minister of Finance and the Acting Prime Minister have conceded that certain papers have in fact been circulated to the CLC and others, and particularly since the CLC has commented or made a response on these papers, is it not appropriate that the Minister of Finance or the Prime Minister should make public these papers, together with any covering letter, so that those of us who are mere members of parliament at least would have some accurate idea concerning what the CLC is commenting on, particularly since the Minister of Finance and others in the government keep telling us their position has been misrepresented.

● (1410)

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think that in the interest of public policy, because of the events in the last few days, it would be in the interest of the House to have these working papers, such as they exist at the moment, tabled in the House, and I am prepared to do so.

INFLATION—INQUIRY WHETHER GUIDELINES ON RESTRAINT HAVE BEEN PREPARED FOR ALL SECTORS OF THE ECONOMY

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, we do not know just what papers the Minister of Finance wishes to submit. On Tuesday, the minister stated that the program should be comprehensive and should embrace the total economy. Since the working papers which we know about to date do not express such a resolution, can the minister advise whether new documents have been prepared that make specific proposals on guidelines and mechanisms for all sectors of the economy and, if so, will they be mailed, and to whom and when?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I have just said that there will be meetings next week with the Canadian Labour Congress and representatives of the business community to assess the situation subsequent to the statement made yesterday by the CLC. At that time perhaps we will be working on the basis of further discussion documents, but I am not yet prepared to say whether or not we will be operating merely on the terms of reference suggested by the CLC in its own statement.

INFLATION—POSSIBILITY OF MONITORING BOARDS WITH POWER TO ENFORCE GUIDELINES

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I understand that yesterday the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs expressed some concern about this entire matter and said he is almost ready to introduce his price justification legislation. In order to find out whether he is coming to the rescue or is just throwing out a red herring in the matter, may I ask the Minister of Finance whether the government has changed its earlier position expressed in the April 10 statement and is now proposing monitoring boards that would have powers within the consensus program to enforce certain guidelines?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, when I heard my colleague's name mentioned, I focussed on these papers before me. I apologize. Would the hon. member repeat his question?

Mr. Alexander: It has been reported that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is almost ready to introduce his price justification legislation because he is concerned with the progress made by the government at this time. In order to determine whether the minister is coming to the rescue or just throwing out a red herring in this regard, may I ask the Minister of Finance whether he can advise us if the government has changed its earlier position expressed in the April 10 statement and is now proposing monitoring boards that would have powers within the consensus program to enforce certain guidelines?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Within the consensus program, the papers—that I hope you will allow me to table, Mr. Speaker—provide for a series of alternative suggestions as to whether a board or boards should be constituted. Those boards, as I said in reply to the hon. member's leader, would have a monitoring power but no power of enforcement except, of course, the scrutiny of parliament and of public opinion.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Minister of Finance has asked for leave to table certain documents. Is that agreed.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

INFLATION—APPLICABILITY OF RESTRAINT PROGRAM TO CORPORATE DIVIDENDS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in view of the finance minister's statement a few moments ago that the income restraint program should be borne equally by all segments of the economy, I want to ask him what restraints will be placed on corporation dividends in view of the fact that the proposal which the minister has sent out definitely excludes corporation dividends on the ground that "the disposition of profits is better left to the companies so that they may feel freer to determine how best to raise their capital". In view of the fact that they may not entirely divert their profit to capital but pay it to their shareholders, how does the minister propose to apply restraint measures, or is this restraint program to be applied solely to the workers and wage and salary earners of this country?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that is no. Business is being called upon within those discussions and working papers to limit price increases to increases in cost. With respect to dividends it was recognized in all quarters that there would have to be some equilibrium between a moderation in the payment to shareholders and the necessity for the private sector and for companies to remain attractive enough to attract investment, that being badly needed to sustain the momentum of the economy. There are no clear answers to that, but that certainly is a subject which is open for discussion.

INFLATION—METHOD OF ENFORCING INCOME CEILING FOR PROFESSIONALS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In view of the fact that multinational corporations can manipulate their costs by paying larger amounts to their parent companies, it seems to me that that is no answer. How does the minister propose to make effective the $2,400 ceiling of income increases for professional people? If a doctor, lawyer or real estate promoter makes an additional $10,000 instead of $2,400, what restraint on that individual is there, or is this merely a piece of window dressing to make the wage restraint more attractive to the person who signs a collective bargaining agreement.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): The hon. gentleman is, of course, referring to some of the items set forth yesterday in the statement by the Canadian Labour Congress. A good many of those items reflect the current thrust of government policy. A good many of the items, however, as in the case of professional fees and rents and probably in certain respects, land speculation, fall under provincial jurisdiction and could only be enforced either by firm provincial commitment, or as the paper seems to imply, by the federal government using mandatory power under the peace, order and good government clause. That is a subject, of course, which needs firm provincial commitment.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The minister certainly answered my question and demonstrated that the proposed restraints on professional groups is pure window dressing. In view of the fact that the wages and salaries of workers in organized trade unions will be binding by virtue of collective bargaining agreements which they signed, am I to take it from the minister's reply that the only groups in the country upon whom there will be any binding restraints are those who sign collective bargaining agreements, and that really any other restraints upon either corporation profits or upon the income of professional groups are simply wishful thinking on the part of the minister?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, sir, I deny that categorically.

NATIONAL REVENUE

ALLEGED SEIZURE OF DOCUMENTS FROM OFFICE OF CREDITISTE PARTY

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I want to put a question to the Minister of National Revenue, and I think it will be of interest to all parties in the House.

Yesterday I called the minister on the phone to inform him of an incident that took place yesterday morning at our office in Rimouski. An official of his department broke in and seized all papers in our possession concerning our operations which are legal under the present elections act. Did the minister authorize such a search and, if so, under what section of the act?

[English]

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, those records were obtained under a director's requirement, and ministerial seizure was made, so I would have to confirm under which precise section of the act.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Could the minister say whether, for instance, certain provisions of the act authorize such investigations here at the present time, and whether similar action is being taken with regard to the Liberal, Progressive Conservative and New Democratic Parties, in order to get hold of their records concerning their respective electoral funds?

● (1420)

[English]

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, there is authority in the act to examine the affairs of any taxpayer and to make seizures relative to inquiries about taxpayers, so the answer is yes.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

The minister says that civil servants are authorized under the act to check the data of ordinary taxpayers. But since when are electoral funds subject to the Income Tax Act? I wish to point out to the minister that yesterday morning we authorized his official to investigate in our offices but not to seize the papers and bring them to Quebec City. That is what I object to, and I ask the minister whether he is prepared to give instructions to his department to have our records returned immediately.

[English]

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, since the hon. member telephoned me yesterday I have been endeavouring to get a report from my department so that the inquiry could be conducted in the offices that the hon. member speaks of, and so that the operation of his political party would in no way be interfered with.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

AMOUNT OF CIDA LOAN TO CUBA—SUGGESTION INTERVENTION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE CAUSED CIDA TO MISLEAD PUBLIC

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fairweather: I am glad to afford the right hon. gentleman an opportunity to be welcomed by his colleagues and the rest of us.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): What about the House?

Mr. Fairweather: I said the rest of us. The Minister of Finance is sensitive.

An hon. Member: Maybe he has good reason to be.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): He didn't get a welcome.

Mr. Fairweather: Perhaps Mr. Speaker would like me to proceed with the question. In light of reports and documents which indicate that the total amount of funds involved in CIDA's arrangements with Cuba will be about $20 million rather than the previously disclosed $10 million, will the Prime Minister state that the amount in fact is $20 million that Cuba is expected to receive?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted—

Mr. Fairweather: I didn't welcome you back!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: I was going to explain that the same question was raised yesterday on a question of privilege. I have had some investigations made and I can answer very briefly that the amounts disclosed by CIDA were the amounts authorized. There was no concealed amount. I think it would be better if this question could be pursued where an adequate explanation could be given, however.

Mr. Fairweather: A supplementary question. Did the intervention by the Minister of Finance into the Cuban proposals causing the loan to be changed from an interest free one to one bearing 3 per cent interest force CIDA into a tactic of attempting to mislead the public on this whole issue?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

Oral Questions

ALLEGATION FOOD AID NOT REACHING THOSE IN NEED—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question for the Prime Minister is a supplementary in the area of developing countries. Is the Prime Minister aware that of the total amount of food donated by Canada last year to developing nations, 80 per cent was sold to local people and only 20 per cent given, which means in effect that Canadians are subsidizing people who can afford to buy food and is not reaching those we most want to reach, the destitute?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Roche: A supplementary question. May I ask the Prime Minister if he will take steps to stop this misrepresentation to the Canadian people who are under the impression that food donated by Canada is given, not sold, to local peoples? Also, will he assure the House that the one million tons of food pledged by Canada at the World Food Conference for the next three years will be given to the people of developing countries and not sold.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I will try to ascertain whether in fact there was misinterpretation or misrepresentation, and who made it.

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

INQUIRY WHETHER RECOMMENDATIONS OF CONFERENCE WILL LEAD TO LEGISLATIVE ACTION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, first, I want most sincerely to welcome to this House again, after an absence that was deeply felt, the Prime Minister. I say that in all sincerity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Having some knowledge of Commonwealth prime ministers' conferences, I ask the Prime Minister whether he, on behalf of the government, intends to bring before the House for implementation any of the recommendations that were made, as contained in the communiqué. I realize, of course, that there is nothing binding that requires them to be produced here, and that the recommendations are just that, recommendations? I am wondering whether as a result of this conference, important as it was, any particular phase of activity or change, organizational or otherwise, will be brought before this House for implementation.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for welcoming me back. He, having attended these conferences himself as Prime Minister, understands well the comradeship which prevails at these meetings. I am glad to be welcomed by my comrade, the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. Trudeau: I do intend to table the communiqué, Mr. Speaker, and would have done it today, but the French translation was not quite finished. I intend to table it tomorrow, so that the House will be able to take official notice of what was transacted there. As the right hon. gentleman suggested in his question, the Commonwealth is not a decision-making body and I would have difficulty stating that every aspect of the communiqué will be before the House by way of some decision which the government will implement. Certainly, the policies which flow from the Canadian position at the Jamaica conference will result either in policy statements or legislative action, or in executive action which I am sure the House will have the opportunity to examine and criticize, if necessary.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that comradeship which has always characterized relationships between members of parliament. I ask the Prime Minister whether he would mention specifically one or two matters which will require implementation? I have read the communiqué and wonder if it is composed of generalities which are not to be implemented in any way by legislative enactment.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I would gladly answer a question on the specifics the right hon. gentleman has in mind, but I am not quite sure to which few areas he is referring.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There are six matters.

COMMUNICATIONS

CABLEVISION—ALLEGED THREAT OF UNITED STATES STATIONS TO PREVENT RECEPTION OF THEIR PROGRAMS IN CANADA

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs? Has our government been in touch with the United States, to indicate our displeasure at proposed plans of American Buffalo border stations to jam their own signals and prevent their reception either in Hamilton or Toronto? These stations plan to do this if the Canadian government goes ahead with its policy requiring the deletion and substitution of commercial spaces in American programming received by Canadian cable companies in Canada.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. gentleman, I have heard reports of this kind. We have had no occasion, of course, to protest or take action of any kind, even if we thought this was desirable, because nothing has as yet happened.

Mr. Beatty: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the impasse to which present procedures have led, does the cabinet approve CRTC policy which requires Canadian cable casters to strip or delete commercials from American programs received in Canada? Is this strictly the policy of the CRTC or is it something of which the cabinet has approved? Perhaps the Prime Minister might reply.

● (1430)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will take notice of the question on behalf of the Minister of Communications. I must say I was not aware of this subject of jamming to which the hon. member refers.

INDUSTRY

MICROSYSTEMS—POSSIBILITY INDEPENDENT ADVICE SOUGHT BEFORE COMPANY PERMITTED TO CLOSE

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that Northern Electric's decision to shut down Microsystems semiconductor operations will cost the Canadian taxpayer something in the neighbourhood of $30 million to $31 million, and since there are people in the semiconductor field who disagree with Northern Electric's reasons for shutting Microsystems down, will the minister tell the House whether or not he sought independent advice on that matter or did he accept the company's opinion only? If he did seek independent advice, will he indicate from where that advice came?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we did not shut down Microsystems.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, the minister seems to be ignoring the question I am putting to him. While it is true that the government did not shut down Microsystems directly by any statement on the part of the government, by standing aside and letting Northern Electric do as it pleases, it effectively shut it down.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

POSSIBILITY OF CHANGE IN METHOD OF EVALUATING PROSPECTS OF COMPANIES RECEIVING GRANTS

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): I have a supplementary question for the minister. In view of the unhappy experience with Microsystems, which the government did not shut down on its own, is the government working out new ways of evaluating the prospects of companies to which loans or grants are given and, if so, what changes are taking place?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this is a question of continuous evaluation. There are many different programs and projects which my department is supporting. They are under constant evaluation.

Mr. Saltsman: While there are many evaluations, none of which seem to have worked, can the minister indicate whether he has come up with one single evaluation in which we can have some confidence?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—INQUIRY WHETHER GUIDELINES ON RESTRAINT SUBMITTED TO CAPITAL AND MANAGEMENT REPRESENTATIVES

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. As labour in the form of the Canadian Labour Congress has indicated very clearly that it rejects the propositions of the government for consensus unless very strict controls are placed on the operation of capital and management, has the government submitted to those who speak for the capital and management side of the economy working papers to examine on this very important proposition, such as organized labour were given? If so, when and when is an answer expected from the capital and management side on this important matter?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the discussion papers were also distributed on the management side during the past two weeks in the course of discussions with the technical groups that we set up, to which I referred earlier in the week in response to the hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Hees: Can the minister indicate very briefly who those representatives of business are the government considers speak for business and capital in this matter?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, there is a representative list. Obviously, no one comes with a particular mandate for the business community generally, neither to a certain degree does the Canadian Chamber of Commerce or the Canadian Manufacturers' Association on the other side. The Canadian Labour Congress has only persuasive power over its constituent unions.

Mr. Hees: Can the minister indicate very briefly from whom he is awaiting a reply on the management side?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REASON TEN NURSES SENT HOME FROM MEDICAL CENTRE, OTTAWA—REQUEST FOR ACTION TO GRANT WAGE PARITY

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board on one of my favourite subjects, federal nurses. Was it the decision of the Treasury Board to send home ten nurses from the National Defence Medical Centre this morning, which nurses had been on strike yesterday, as a means of breaking the strike?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Treasury Board does not give such instructions. We do not administer hospitals, but the Department of National Health and Welfare does. Nothing has been reported to me that seems abnormal.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I did not get the tail end of the reply from the translator. The minister might reassure the House by saying that these nurses will be taken back on strength and the impression will not be left that it was a strike breaking move on the part of Mr. Fothergill. When giving that assurance, perhaps he might inform the House that something is being done with regard to federal hospitals at Camp Hill in Halifax, Camsell in Edmonton and throughout the Yukon with regard to bringing the wages of nurses in these jurisdictions under the federal employ up to parity.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I said in this House yesterday that a conciliation board has submitted an unanimous report. The union representative, the government representative and the conciliator have reached the same conclusion. The basis of the agreement was that parity should be given up to the amount paid to people in the provinces; this is exactly what the conciliation board tried to do.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, the minister overlooked the portion of my question asking for assurance that the ten nurses who were told to go home this morning from the National Defence Medical Centre will be taken back.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, as far as I understand what happened, a number of patients had to be turned away yesterday. There was no work for the nurses this morning. When the patients are back, the nurses can go back to work, of course.

FISHERIES

LOBSTER—REQUEST TO MOVE SEASON FROM APRIL 20 TO MAY 5 AND RECONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF 1974 COMMITTEE ON ICE DAMAGE

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of State (Fisheries). As has happened in the past few years, ice conditions persist in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and there has been a delay in the opening of the lobster season. Is the minister prepared to take the necessary action to move up the lobster season from April 20 to May 5, as is the wish of the majority of fishermen?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I will be very happy to look into this matter. Wherever possible I will be as flexible as the regulations permit. I would say to the hon. member the problem is that in those ports that are ice free, the men want to go fishing. There was a recent problem in New Brunswick where there were conflicting views among fishermen in the same district. However, I am quite willing to be flexible.

Mr. Marshall: While the minister is looking into that problem, will he also look into the fact that ice damage reports from 1974 indicate that the federal-provincial committee were lax in their duty in declaring the zones which would be eligible for compensation. Will the minister look at those reports and consider the decision made last year in order that those zones that were excluded may be given consideration for inclusion?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I will look into this. If there is anything I can do to remedy obvious unfairness, I will do it.

AGRICULTURE

HOGS—POSSIBILITY OF PAYMENTS TO PRODUCERS UNDER ASSISTANCE PROGRAM—SUGGESTED CHANGE FROM FIVE TO TWO YEAR AVERAGE AS BASIS FOR ASSISTANCE

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Now that the period for assistance to hog producers is over, as announced last year by the minister, can he advise whether there will be any payment to producers because they have had substantial losses during that time?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the average price that hog producers received for that period exceeded the support price by approximately $5.96 per hundred. Therefore, there will be no payment.

Mr. McKinley: Is the minister prepared to admit that the basing of feed costs on the last five year average almost guaranteed there would be no payment because feed costs in the last two years alone almost doubled? Is the minister now prepared to do a re-assessment of this program for the past year, basing it on average feed costs for the past two years?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the current legislation presently before the Standing Committee on Agriculture will allow us to do that very thing. It will allow us to use current costs.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—VIEW OF BUSINESS AND LABOUR ON NECESSITY TO MAINTAIN CANADA'S COMPETITIVE TRADE POSITION

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Considering that the Department of Finance Review for 1974 notes that labour costs per unit of output are rising more rapidly in Canada than in the United States, and this has in practical terms become painfully apparent and has already seriously affected the lumber and pulp commodity groups as well as other industries, did the minister discuss the need to maintain Canada's competitive trade position in his consensus talks with business and labour, and were the spokesmen he talked to willing to concede the importance of Canada's competitive position?

● (1440)

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I said to both labour and business representatives during the course of the last two months that I felt time was running out—that our competitive position was continuing, and does continue, to deteriorate and that the situation must be reversed unless we are to suffer a massive loss of jobs in this country. I said the government was committed to bringing prices and production costs into a competitive posture—into a range within which we can compete in world markets and defend our own markets. This view was shared by leaders of both labour and business.

Mr. Oberle: Is the minister prepared to endorse the downward float of the Canadian dollar as a mechanism to compensate for high Canadian labour costs per unit of output?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That would be a short term palliative indeed because it would expose us to higher import costs; we would be going down a steadily declining slope.

TRADE

ARAB BOYCOTT OF COMPANIES TRADING WITH ISRAEL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Roberts (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Having regard to reports that 150 Canadian companies have been placed on a boycott list by the Arab boycott office in Damascus because they have Jewish directors or because they trade with Israel, will the Prime Minister assure the House that the imposition of trading restrictions on the basis of racial, religious or ethnic factors is repugnant to Canada and that Canada will look with disfavour on countries and companies which implement trade discrimination on this basis?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can say that the government is opposed to any such kind of discrimination, particularly the kind mentioned by the hon. member. I have not had time to look into the facts upon which the allegation is based; perhaps some other minister has. If not, I will look further into the matter and discuss it further with the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON REVIEW OF CLAUSE BOYCOTTING TRADE WITH ISRAEL

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): On April 28, the Acting Prime Minister stated in the House that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce had instructed the Export Development Corporation to review the Arab boycott clause as it applies to both insurance and direct lending operations. I should like to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce whether he has issued any such policy directive to his department and to the Export Development Corporation with regard to government involvement with export companies which agreed to boycott Israel and, if so, what is the nature of that directive?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I think government spokesmen have made it clear to the business community, to countries abroad and to the EDC itself that the government does not support or condone discriminatory measures of this kind.

Mr. Bawden: But no directive has been issued?

Mr. Gillespie: I have asked the president, and the board of directors, which will be meeting next week, to consider their practices in the light of this policy.

Mr. Bawden: A supplementary to the Prime Minister. Has the cabinet considered and drafted a directive covering all agencies and departments of the government concerning this important matter and, if not, is one now being prepared?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. I think it is sufficient to say that this type of practice is alien to everything the government stands for and, indeed, to what in general, Canadian ethics stand for, and I would hope that no specific directive is necessary. Action of the type referred to by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is, of course, warranted when special rumours attach to any particular agency.

COMBINES

APPOINTMENT OF PRESIDENT OF PETROFINA TO COMMISSION—POSSIBLE CONFLICT OF INTEREST

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

As a result of the appointment of Mr. Pierre Nadeau as one of the three members of the inquiry commission on corporations, and as Mr. Nadeau is, among other things, president of Petrofina Canada Ltd., a multinational company, does the Prime Minister not fear that there may be a very serious conflict of interest that would make the commissions's objectivity questionable?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the three member commission was appointed quite deliberately with the intention that several points of view would prevail in the study of that very difficult question. We wanted specifically that someone who is well versed in that field of business be a member of the tribunal.

HARBOURS

POSSIBLE CONSTRUCTION OF PORT AT GROS CACOUNA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct to the hon. Minister of Transport a question concerning the famous construction project of a port at Gros Cacouna.

Can the Minister advise the House of the progress of the negotiations with the province of Quebec, and whether an analysis has been made by him on the very special role such a project would have at Gros Cacouna?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there have been no negotiations on that matter with the Province of Quebec, only discussions. With the Cabinet's permission, I hope to make public in the near future a global policy for ports in Canada. This will not deal only with Gros Cacouna, but also with Halifax, St. John's, Sept Iles, Port Cartier, Quebec City, Trois-Rivieres, Montreal and so on. We shall try to find the perfect balance, so that the cost for shipping our goods will be satisfactory and that ports will not strangle each other.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ALLEGED RELEASE OF PATIENTS FROM OTTAWA MEDICAL CENTRE AS RESULT OF NURSES' STRIKE

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. In view of a report that scores of patients were released from the National Defence Medical Centre yesterday due to a nurses' strike, may I ask what arrangements have been made for the accommodation of those patients who were discharged and who had come from far away points in Canada?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): My information is that the Medical Centre was adequately staffed by the nurses who are part of the regular armed forces—some 70 of them—and that there was no shortage of nurses.

Mr. Scott: Do I gather from the minister's statement that no patients were discharged?

Mr. Richardson: Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, other than those who were able to be discharged because they were well.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ENTRANCE FEE TO LOWER FORT GARRY—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development? In view of the fact that the slight adjustments the minister made in admission fees to Lower Fort Garry struck the people of Manitoba as something of an insult, will he reconsider this matter with a sense of history to the end that admission to Lower Fort Garry might be at a very low fee or none at all?

[Mr. La Salle.]

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): This is a subject which the hon. member has raised before. We did go part way down the road by making Lower Fort Garry available on a more equitable basis to family visitors, which seemed to be the primary concern. I really do not think we can go any further.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Ten o'clock.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED INVESTIGATION OF INCREASE IN ENTRANCE FEES TO NATIONAL PARKS

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): My supplementary, Mr. Speaker, concerns entrance fees to national parks and I wish to direct it to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Since increases in entrance fees to the national parks announced by the minister responsible for that department amount to anywhere from 500 per cent to 1,000 per cent, will the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs investigate these huge increases and take action against the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development just as he would against any private firm that attempted to impose increases of this size?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I take this question as notice.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Why not raise that at ten o'clock, too?

MULTICULTURALISM

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF MINISTER

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, in light of the growing interest in multiculturalism in Canada I should like to ask the Prime Minister to indicate to the House when this government intends to appoint a minister whose sole responsibility is multiculturalism?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have the Minister of Labour who is entrusted with this special aspect of policy in Canada. I think the hon. member should not be pressing the government to set up a ministry for every special interest group in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: We would have a great deal many more members of Cabinet—

An hon. Member: Keep on.

Mr. Trudeau: I will keep on if you will shut up. Excuse me, Mr. Speaker, that was not directed to Your Worship.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that more than one-third of Canada's population is composed of people who are not members of the two dominant groups in Canada, does the Prime Minister not consider the needs of this rather large group as being important enough to warrant their own minister and their own ministry?

IMMIGRATION

ALLEGATION APPEAL BOARD REVERSING DECISIONS OF OFFICERS NOT TO GRANT LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration I should like to direct this question to the Prime Minister. In view of testimony given by officials of the Immigration Appeal Board to the standing committee today that despite rejections by investigative officials of the Department of Manpower and Immigration of applications, which would indicate that a certain number of people should not be granted landed immigrant status but that deportations should be issued, and despite the fact that the Immigration Appeal Board by its record is now reversing eight of every nine cases it hears, will the Prime Minister indicate what safeguards are being considered or being put into place in order that this practice will stop, giving the immigration officers the confidence they deserve?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to have a look at these statements made before the committee. Of course, the Immigration Appeal Board has specific powers and terms of reference which were given to it by this parliament, and as far as I know it has been acting within those terms of reference, and acting on a certain discretion which I think members of parliament generally consider to be very valuable, indeed.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—INQUIRY WHETHER WORKING PAPERS SUBMITTED TO LABOUR SEEKING CONSENSUS ON RESTRAINT HAD APPROVAL OF PROVINCES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether the papers tabled today, since they hopefully envisage the co-operation of the provinces, carried the approval of the provincial governments before they were sent out?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, these papers are also the basis for current discussions with the provinces.

ENERGY

NATURAL GAS—POSSIBILITY OF AGREEMENT WITH PROVINCES ON USE OF REVENUE FROM INCREASED PRICE

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question relates to statements earlier this week about the increases in the prices of export gas and oil. I should like to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources whether in the talks or agreements with the provinces there were any effective conditions laid down or agreed upon as to the use by the producing provinces of the revenues to be derived directly or indirectly from the higher price of natural gas?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No, Sir, except that the arrangements made in January with the government of British Columbia concerning the deemed price provisions of the recently passed income tax bill would make some provision for the taxation of the production industry in British Columbia.

NATURAL GAS—REASON FOR DELAY IN ANNOUNCING PRICE INCREASE—ASSURANCE INCREASED REVENUE USED FOR EXPLORATION

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Having specific regard to the case of British Columbia, Mr. Speaker, since the formula for distributing the revenues was made public about two weeks earlier than the announcement in this House, and since no part of the funds under that formula is to be devoted to the search for new sources of natural gas, why was the announcement of the new gas price delayed in this House until this week, and what means does the government now have for ensuring that at least some of those additional revenues shall be devoted to the search for new sources of gas?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am interested in hearing that from the hon. gentleman since he and his colleagues spoke at tiresome length over the last six months on why a province should make its own decisions with regard to its own resources. It is because of our respect for the constitution that we have not imposed those conditions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REFUSAL OF QUEBEC LONGSHOREMEN TO OBEY BACK-TO-WORK LEGISLATION—REASON FOR FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO PROSECUTE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, in view of the substantial damage that has already been done at the St. Lawrence River ports in Quebec, not to mention the damage to the reputation of parliament and the principle of the rule of law and by the failure of the Prime Minister and his colleagues to enforce the law as passed by this parliament, I would ask the Minister of Labour when we can expect the longshoremen of these Quebec St. Lawrence River ports to obey this law passed by this parliament more than two weeks ago?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, without belittling the problem in terms of parliament, and I do not do that, I would remind the hon. member that when he refers to the rule of law, the rule of law apply to every citizen's right to take the matter to court, and this matter is before the courts today.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I am not denying in any way the right of the stevedores to the due process of law, but I ask the minister why he has not invoked those sections of the bill which allow the government to place charges against those people where it appears in the minister's view there is prima facie evidence? I submit there is prima facie evidence, and my question is why the minister has not invoked those provisions?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the hon. member was in the House yesterday when the right hon. member for Prince Albert asked precisely the same question, which I answered indicating the action the justice officials were taking, but that is the situation as of today. If the hon. member wishes further elaboration, I think it would be appropriate to direct his question to the Minister of Justice.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Minister of Justice why Section 17(3) of the act concerning evidence of failure to obey the act has not been invoked, since I submit there is clearly prima facie evidence of the law being disobeyed?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Labour indicated to this House, and as has been indicated before by me, action is being prepared, and today there is a proceeding in the courts in Montreal in connection with an application for an order under Section 16. Other material is being obtained in connection with evidence of personal offences, and charges will be laid as soon as that evidence is obtained. It may come as a surprise to hon. members that what may seem completely and absolutely obvious to them still requires evidence before the law.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You have all the evidence you need but you won't enforce it.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—REQUEST FOR ALL-PARTY COMMITTEE TO SEEK CONSENSUS ON RESTRAINT

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the serious and fragile condition of the economy and the alleged need for a national consensus, will the Prime Minister and his government consider an all-party consideration and negotiation of all matters on which consensus, so-called, is required on an impartial, non-partisan and non-political basis with co-operation and understanding to help restore some stability and confidence in the economy as well as in this parliament immediately before a deep-seated depression results?

Mr. McKinley: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order because of the answer the Minister of Agriculture gave to a question I asked earlier. I asked whether he would give consideration to assisting last year's hog program by using the two-year average feed cost rather than the five. In his answer he said that is what the bill presently before the committee would do, presumably referring to stabilization Bill C-50. My recollection of that bill is that this will be based on the average five-year price previous to stabilization, and 90 per cent of that price.

It seems to me that if there is any assistance coming to the hog producers in this country, this bill should provide for it for the simple reason that the highly touted program of last year did not provide any assistance, even to the producers who had losses. If I am incorrect in that assumption perhaps the minister would so advise.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Surely, this is the type of discussion which should be held before the committee when the bill is being discussed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the government House leader if he could confirm the business of the House for the latter part of this week and into next week.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, today we will have the opening of the debate on second reading of the bill to be dealt with by my colleague, the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner), concerning amendments to the Income Tax Act to cover Time magazine, Reader's Digest, and so on. As I indicated yesterday, tomorrow will be an allotted day. Perhaps I should take advantage of the occasion to say that Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week will also be allotted days.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, last week I asked especially that my starred question No. 2,284 receive urgent attention. It involves a political colleague of the Philippines who is on a hunger strike and has received the last rites of his church. I hope we can get an early and positive reply before he dies.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 636, 1,676, 1,732, 1,954, 2,035, 2,036, 2,146, 2,175, 2,204, 2,205, 2,255, 2,290, 2,297 and 2,337.

If questions No. 1,373 to 1,440 inclusive, 1,877 and 2,106 could be made orders for return, these returns would be tabled immediately.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

The objectives of this study are to: (i) establish the short-term needs and the long term potential for the development of the Corner Brook Harbour area; (ii) identify the development potential of both the private and public sectors; (iii) present a staged master development plan with economic justification, and with firm recommendations for decision making. RESEARCH PROGRAMMES—AGRICULTURAL AND VETERINARY FACULTIES

Question No. 2,146—Mr. Herbert:

1. Was consideration given to increasing the funds for research programmes in agricultural and veterinary faculties in Canada as part of the programme to assist the underdeveloped countries to improve their production and management of food products?

2. How many foreign students are presently enrolled in Canada in agricultural and veterinary faculties?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by Agriculture Canada, the Canadian International Development Agency and the Department of Manpower and Immigration as follows: 1. Since 1971, including fiscal 1975/76 CIDA has channelled $1.5 million through the IBRD/UNDP/FAO sponsored Consultative Group on International Agricultural Research for research identified by the group sponsored centers and done in Canadian universities.

2. There are at present 192 students sponsored by CIDA for study in Canada in agricultural and veterinary faculties. In so far as the Department of Manpower and Immigration is concerned, the number of all foreign students in Canada is recorded by academic institution rather than by faculty. A response to this question is therefore not possible.

3. A proposal is under study by CIDA. In so far as Agriculture Canada is concerned, consideration is being given to the expansion of the grants program and to the expansion of contract research, with significant portion going to universities.

FLOOD PREVENTION STUDIES

Question No. 2,255—Mr. Howie:

Is it the intention of the government to assist provinces in financing studies or taking other measures to prevent flooding in areas subject to repeated and frequent flooding?

Mr. Len Marchand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment and Minister of Fisheries): The government has approved a national flood risk mapping program to be carried out jointly with the provinces. Accords will be developed with each province to share the cost of this mapping, and to develop appropriate strategies to reduce potential flood damage in flood-sensitive locations. Once the flood risk is clearly identified the federal and provincial governments will implement a program to discourage further development in the threatened areas. The government will continue to participate in traditional flood control programs and studies, such as those conducted under the Canada Water Act Agreements, Agricultural and Rural Development Act programs, and Special Agreements. Since 1965 the federal government has committed more than $84 million in structural flood protection works, in cost-shared programs with the provinces. Steps are also being taken to improve flood forecasting, flood warning and emergency measures in cooperation with provincial authorities.

ENGLISH LANGUAGE INSTRUCTION

Question No. 2,106—Mr. Cossitt:

What are the names, addresses and occupations of all persons who have received English language instruction at public expense since January 1, 1972?

Return tabled.

[Editor's Note: For answers to questions Nos. 1,373 to 1,440 inclusive, see Appendix A.]

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Mr. Paproski: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. These questions are so important to many people in Canada that I would appreciate having the unanimous consent of the House to have them printed as an appendix to today's Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: It has been suggested that the questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary on which returns have been made be considered as though the answers had been read, and appended to Hansard. I am holding them now. I wonder whether the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski) realizes the gravity of the problem.

Mr. Paproski: I did not realize there were so many, and I withdraw my request.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, I want to apologize to the parliamentary secretary. I was not in the House yesterday at the time the question was answered, and I thank him for the answer.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I rise in respect of questions Nos. 2,315 and 2,316. These questions ask for information in respect of the free passes of Air Canada, and whether the members of families of cabinet ministers have such passes. These two questions have only been on the order paper since April 17, but in essence they are somewhat like a question I had on the order paper for about four months, the answer to which really was not an answer. Although these two questions have been on the order paper only since April 17, those concerned have had sufficient notice of them and I think I am due an answer. If there are those who are freeloading on the taxpayers of Canada in respect of Air Canada, I believe we have a right to know this.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw attention to starred question No. 2215 which has been on the order paper since April 7, a little longer than a month. It deals with expensive odysseys by members of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and we would like an answer as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. O'Sullivan: I rise on a point of order. Mr. Speaker. While we are dealing with the matter of starred questions, I am wondering if we may have a reply to my questions Nos. 1,738 and 1,739 dealing with the expenditures of the political staff of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras). The parliamentary secretary has taken cognizance of the fact that these are important questions, and surely we should be entitled to an answer within a reasonable period of time.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Paproski: I, too, rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. When you showed me that large volume of papers I was a little disturbed about its size, but it really is not that much. There would seem to be about 25 pages concerning CIDAS's financial contributions to many of the world's third countries, and I believe many people will want to know what this is all about. I would appreciate it if we could receive unanimous consent.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder whether it is the wish of the House to give unanimous consent to our appending to Hansard, as though it had been read into the record, the information contained in the answers to which the hon. member has referred.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

INCOME TAX ACT

REMOVAL OF PROVISION ALLOWING DEDUCTION OF EXPENSES FOR ADVERTISING IN NON-CANADIAN PERIODICALS

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (for the Minister of Finance): moved that Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, in introducing Bill C-58 at second reading I should like to sketch in some of the background to this legislation. It seems to me it is a fact that in any free society, magazines significantly influence the development of the culture, the national sensibility, the free play of ideas and exchange of views and the critical faculties of its citizens. One might say that the part magazines play in this process is perhaps not as directly influential as television or films, but that may be largely a matter of taste and circumstances. Certainly, if one can judge by the views expressed by hundreds of persons who have written to me during the past few months about possible changes in the income tax law affecting advertising in periodicals, magazines are a very important factor indeed in terms of developing and nurturing a distinctly Canadian culture and identity.

During the past quarter-century, several royal commissions and special committees, charged by the Canadian government with looking into matters relating to the survival of a Canadian culture, have held in common the belief that the capacity and capability of Canadian periodicals to support the writing and exchange of ideas was of great importance and ought to be strengthened and supported by government assistance and intervention where and when appropriate. In the words of the Massey commission report:

> The periodical press of Canada . . . does undoubtedly make a conscious, and it seems to us, a successful appeal to the country as a whole . . . We do have . . . a periodical press which . . . insists on remaining resolutely Canadian.

The report, in 1961, of the royal commission headed by a distinguished Canadian, Grattan O'Leary, stated that the role of the periodical press in building Canadian unity cannot be ignored. It said:

● (1510)

> Periodicals educate, inform, entertain, and amuse. They provide the forum for debate and discussion which is essential to the democratic process.

It added that the problems besetting the Canadian periodical press affect its ability to add to "the richness and variety of Canadian life." To attain self-sufficiency, the O'Leary report stated, Canadian periodicals required adequate advertising revenue, and it concluded:

> A nation's domestic advertising expenditure should be devoted to the support of its own media of communications, and . . . a genuinely Canadian periodical press can only exist if it has access to a fair share of advertising revenue.

More recently, the Davey committee suggested that "in terms of cultural survival, magazines could potentially be as important as railroads, airlines, national broadcasting networks and national hockey leagues." It recommended that the benefits enjoyed by such foreign-owned periodicals as Time and Reader's Digest under the special exemption provision in section 19 of the Income Tax Act be withdrawn. Now, some years later, this government is asking parliament to give effect to the views and recommendations of this trio of learned and significant reports.

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. Speaker, this is an important bill and an important debate. Our discussion in the House will focus attention upon and enhance public understanding of a very significant section of our society, the Canadian periodical industry, and could affect significantly the future role, direction and prosperity of that industry. The difficulties facing that industry have for some time been a matter of concern to my department and to me; for some months now we have been engaged, in co-operation with the industry, in the development of a plan of action aimed at finding solutions to certain of its problems. I regard the amendment proposed in this bill as an important element of that plan and one that is essential to its success.

The government's intention to seek an amendment to section 19 of the Income Tax Act respecting foreign-owned periodicals has been termed by some critics a negative decision. I submit that it is not a negative decision if its succeeds in eliminating a situation which for years has had a negative effect on a very large part of the Canadian-owned periodical press in this country. It is not a negative decision if it leads to positive results; when it is seen as a stage in the development of a program of effective government assistance to Canadian periodicals about which I shall be speaking a little later.

It is probably trite to say that the government did not arrive easily at this decision. Throughout the course of our deliberations my colleagues and I have been conscious of the implications of the proposed measure for those magazines affected. But the arguments, as we saw them, outweighed those other considerations, arguments that took into account the inequities of the situation preserved by the existing legislation, and the intangible but no less real factors of cultural integrity and the preservation and growth of an indispensable medium of expression of Canadian ideas, sentiments and values.

Mr. Woolliams: What about censorship?

Mr. Faulkner: This bill has nothing to do with censorship.

Mr. Woolliams: This sounds like censorship.

Mr. Faulkner: It may sound like it, but I suggest the hon. member read the bill. The approval which my statement in the House on January 23 received from all parties, and the public approval as evidenced by press commentary and by the volume of favourable messages I have received, leave no doubt that in the minds of the majority of Canadians the government's decision was well taken.

In taking the decision, the government—and I dare say this parliament—is declaring what it is we do not want. First, we do not want the continuance of a special case provision in the Income Tax Act the justification for which, whatever it might have been when it was introduced ten years ago, no longer exists and which is inconsistent with the intent of section 19; a provision which not only discriminates in favour of a handful of Canadian-based, foreign-owned magazines against a very large number of foreign magazines circulating in Canada but, much more seriously, gives a very inequitable advantage to those few magazines over Canadian-owned periodicals.

Second, we do not want the continuance of an arrangement whereby two very large, foreign-owned periodicals—one with a weekly circulation of 1.4 million—together drew off $19 million of the $39 million of advertising revenue earned in 1974 by the 13 largest consumer magazines in Canada.

Third, we do not want the continuance of a situation wherein the world view of Canadian readers is being influenced by American periodicals the operations of which in Canada are facilitated by a tax deduction provision primarily intended to assist Canadian publications.

Fourth, we do not want the continuance of a practice whereby the stories and articles reproduced in the French language Canadian edition of Reader's Digest are usually translated outside Canada.

Fifth, we do not want the continuance of an arrangement whereby the editorial content of these foreign-owned magazines is imported from parent houses in the United States, which have already paid for it from large advertising and circulation revenues in that country, at a cost that is negligible by comparison with what it costs Canadian-owned magazines to produce their editorial content.

Sixth, we do not want the continuance, on the part of two foreign-owned magazines, of editorial policies that can hardly be said to be making a real contribution to Canadian cultural development and expression.

Seventh, we do not want the continuance of a situation wherein foreign-owned magazines claim the right to be called Canadian while taking their editorial direction and most of their editorial content from their parent houses abroad.

Eighth, we do not want the continuance of a Canadianization progress record which, after thirty years, finds Time in Canada still owned and controlled entirely by Time Inc. in the United States and publishing perhaps 10 per cent Canadian content; and Reader's Digest only 30 per cent Canadian-owned and carrying in its English language edition about 25 per cent and, in its French language edition, about 15 per cent Canadian content.

What we do want is: first, the continuance of a situation wherein there is no interference with the freedom of Canadians to read Time and Reader's Digest, the foreign editions of which, should the owners choose to cease publishing in Canada, would still be able to enter and circulate freely in Canada in the same way as a multitude of other periodicals of foreign origin. In this respect, whatever may be the decision of the owners regarding publishing editions in Canada, we would expect that it would continue to be seen as being to their advantage to have their magazines printed in this country and distributed by the Canadian postal service.

Second, we want the diversion of a proportion of the advertising revenue now earned by Time and Reader's Digest to Canadian-owned consumer magazines.

Third we want the emergence of a Canadian weekly news magazine, or magazines, designed to meet the needs and tastes of Canadians in both official languages.

Fourth, encouraged by improved competitive conditions in the market, we want an increase in the size, number and saleability of Canadian magazines and resultant enlarged opportunities for Canadian writers and readers.

Those, Mr. Speaker, are the main things we would like to see come about as a result of this proposed legislation. I, personally, am confident we shall see them. In the Speech from the Throne on September 30, 1974, this government said it would be taking further steps to enchance Canada's independence and sense of identity, among other ways, by promoting the sale of Canadian books and magazines. The bill now before hon. members proposes a considerable measure of assistance in that respect where Canadian magazines are concerned. At Trent University last January, in an address to the conference on the state of English language publishing in Canada, I outlined a series of other measures the government intends to take to enhance the capability of Canadian magazines to develop and prosper and to compete successfully in the home market. I talked of a program of assistance, not through hand-outs but by financial contributions aimed at enabling magazine publishers to help themselves.

I emphasized the government's willingness to support co-operative and collective self-help projects of Canadian magazine publishers, especially the class of smaller, paid circulation magazines which speak to and for Canadians about Canada and Canadian issues and interests and which survive because of their combined appeal to both readers and advertisers but only with great difficulty in the face of tough competition from imported publications.

I announced that beginning in fiscal year 1975-76, the Canada Council would be extending its already substantial assistance to literary and arts magazines and to other magazines of a more varied nature to help them with co-operative endeavours to strengthen their competitive capability. I said that I saw additional resources being directed by Canada Council to finance projects proposed by the publishers through their representative associations and aimed at improving the promotion, distribution and marketing of Canadian periodicals as well as in achieving a higher level of management skill. The Canada Council now has this program in hand.

I spoke of the government's willingness to give financial assistance to the development of a common national distribution service designed to get Canadian periodicals into outlets in communities where they are rarely, if ever, accessible to Canadian readers at the present time, I am glad to report that proposals for such a service have been developed by groups representative of the periodical industry and these proposals will soon be ready for discussion with my department and other government agencies. I said that we are consulting with other federal departments concerned with a view to providing greater display space for Canadian periodicals on newsstands and book-stalls operating on federal government facilities such as airports and railway stations. We are considering schemes for using federal government buildings in towns and cities across the country for displaying and promoting Canadian publications.

We are examining the possibility of increasing the amount of space purchased by government departments and agencies in Canadian periodicals, to increase the awareness of Canadians with regard to programs and activities of those departments and agencies. Interdepartmental consultations at the official level are now going on with that end in view.

These are some of the plans we have for extending assistance to the periodical industry. The magazine associations have recommended additional courses of action and we have them under careful consideration. The measure before us today will help to ensure that these proposals for support to Canadian magazine publishers achieve the desired results by creating an environment that is more conducive to competition on fairer terms than now prevail.

No government, and certainly not this one, is interested in underwriting mediocrity. It has no intention of using taxpayers' dollars to help create an environment wherein a magazine is able to keep on publishing, shielded from the rigours of the marketplace, simply because it is Canadian, a container of Canadian culture and a reflector of Canadian identity in one or other of the many forms in which those concepts tend to be manifest. We are not concerned with making the marketplace safe for Canadian magazines. We are prepared to do what we can to make it fair and to help those Canadian magazines which have shown by their performance that they are deserving of a fighting chance.

It will be up to Canadian readers to decide whether a particular Canadian magazine shall survive, because it is their newsstand purchasers and their subscriptions which alone will decide what amount of available advertising dollars will be attracted to it. As with any product, quality and customer acceptance are the essential ingredients for success. Where they are present in a magazine, the assistance it will need from government will be minimal. Magazine publishers know this to be the government's stand in respect of financial support, and most of them endorse it.

I said at Trent University and earlier in my remarks today that I was hopeful that one of the results of the proposed changes in the income tax law would be the emergence of a Canadian magazine. Canadian readers are entitled to a news magazine which will report both national and international events in a manner which makes them relevant and significant to Canada and Canadians. A "window on the world through American-tinted glass", as Senator Keith Davey aptly put it recently, is not a satisfactory function of a news magazine where Canadians are concerned, regardless of how clearly and colourfully those events may be presented.

I have reason to believe that more than one Canadian publisher is interested in starting a weekly magazine, and indeed one at least is on record as saying it will start one if the changes in the Income Tax Act are made. It will be our hope that such a magazine, besides informing its readers on major events and issues on the international scene would, while dealing with current topics of national concern, give special and adequate attention to matters of regional significance and interest.

A leading Canadian advertising agency stated recently that there is no guarantee that the so-called expulsion of the domestic editions of Time and Reader's Digest will allow the introduction of a new Canadian news magazine. I agree with this statement; there is no such guarantee. All this government can expect from the proposed changes in the tax law is a situation to be brought about wherein a Canadian news magazine, as well as other consumer magazines, will have a better chance to get started and to keep going once they are under way.

Concern has been expressed in some quarters over what is expected of publishers in terms of the amount of so-called Canadian content a periodical must contain in order to be classified as a Canadian periodical for the purposes of the Income Tax Act. I should like to make it quite clear that there is no intention of introducing, in connection with the proposed amendments, a new Canadian content rule or a new formula for measuring how substantially a magazine published in Canada must be different from another published abroad in order to qualify for the benefits of section 19 of the Income Tax Act. Such a criterion has been part of the taxation law since 1965; it is not new and it is not unique. All periodicals published in Canada are bound by the "not substantially the same" clause in section 19 and have been for nearly ten years.

What is new is that for the first time certain periodicals being published in Canada and which are now foreign owned, if they decide to become Canadianized through transfer of ownership and control will, at the same time, like their fellow Canadian magazines, have to abide by the "not substantially the same" clause if they expect to benefit from the provisions of section 19. It is as simple as that. It may not seem simple from the standpoint of the publishers of those magazines, but the requirement is clear and has been clearly stated in the law since 1965. Nothing would be changed except the extent of its application.

There need be no mystery or uncertainty as to how this clause is to be interpreted and administered. Administrators of the Income Tax Act are called upon daily for such interpretations and administrative decisions in respect of many sections of the act, and in the case of dissatisfaction on the part of a taxpayer with an interpretation or decision, there is a well established process of appeal to the courts. In the case of uncertainty in the mind of any publisher contemplating the publication in Canada of a periodical with a certain format and editiorial content, it is possible, I am assured by my colleague the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Basford), to obtain an advance ruling from his department on the eligibility of that periodical for the benefits under section 19.

What some persons are calling the new Canadian content requirement has nothing whatsoever to do with censorship, about which the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) seems to be confused, or with government control over what Canadians may read. It in no way implies government interference with the editorial policy of periodical publishers. It has to do with the application of those provisions of the existing law which define what makes a periodical a Canadian periodical and thereby entitled to the benefits of certain fiscal provisions, benefits intended for Canadian periodicals.

Contrary to the view expressed in a recent editorial in one of our leading financial journals, a periodical, to be counted for tax purposes as a Canadian publication, does not have to have a certain minimum percentage of Canadian content. It should be understood by everyone that to be "not substantially the same" as a periodical printed, edited or published outside Canada does not mean that a magazine's contents have to be Canadian in whole or in part. They simply have to be such as to make that magazine, for the most part, different from a foreign counterpart. It is conceivable that a periodical published in Canada and which satisfied all the requirements of section 19 could be ruled to be a Canadian periodical even if it contained not a single article or story by a Canadian writer or about a Canadian subject. I say "conceivable" but, I am bound to say—and I am sure hon. members will agree—not desirable.

● (1530)

Section 19 of the Income Tax Act is not aimed directly or primarily at encouraging Canadian authorship, although one might reasonably expect it to have that effect. Its purpose, in particular the "not substantially the same" provision, is essentially to help Canadian periodical publishers to counterbalance undue foreign competition caused by the dumping of editorial material prepared outside our country and reproduced virtually unchanged in so-called Canadian editions. This is editorial material the cost of which is already amortized abroad before it is supplied to so-called Canadian editions at a fraction of what it would cost a Canadian-owned magazine to prepare and publish comparable material. The editorial I have referred to went on to ask:

What gives Ottawa the idea that it has the right to determine what shall and what shall not be printed in Canadian publications?

An hon. Member: I wonder.

Mr. Faulkner: The simple answer, and one which the hon. member will easily grasp, is that this government—that that is what the writer means by "Ottawa"—is asserting or claiming no such right. It is saying simply that the law of this country requires that a periodical published in this country, in order to profit from the benefits provided by section 19 of the Income Tax Act must, among other requirements, be "not substantially the same" as another periodical published outside Canada. It is saying the law in this respect as well as others must now be the same for all magazines published in Canada.

An hon. Member: Did you write that?

Mr. Faulkner: As I have suggested, Mr. Speaker, it is anticipated, and with justification, that Canadian authors—

An hon. Member: I thought Peter Newman wrote it.

Mr. Faulkner: I thought the distinctive style would have come through, even to hon. members.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Faulkner: The hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) will have his turn, and I will listen with a great deal of attention and even some silence when he speaks.

Mr. Beatty: It is the red crayon that tipped us off; we know it is your own.

Mr. Faulkner: As I suggested, Mr. Speaker, it is anticipated, and with justification, I submit, that Canadian authors, journalists and commentators will benefit from this amendment. We believe that Canadian periodicals now in print, as well as others that we hope will emerge in time, will attract a growing number of Canadian staff writers and contributors. We look for the appearance of new Canadian periodicals that will address themselves to subject matters of major interest to Canadian readers and will give expression to the Canadian point of view. But it is precisely because this government and this House believe in the freedom of Canadians to choose what they wish to read that neither is about to direct publishers of magazines, or of any other kind of publication, how they should discharge their responsibility to serve the Canadian community and the Canadian purpose, culturally or in any other way.

Then, Mr. Speaker, there is in addition the question of producing or publishing a periodical in Canada under licence from someone abroad. But this is largely a matter of the facts of the contractual agreement that exists between the two parties and should not be a cause for uncertainty in the mind of a publisher. Again, I would expect that Revenue Canada officials can be helpful in advising a publisher of his position as regards that aspect of the act. The provision on licensing has been law since 1965.

Mr. Speaker, I spoke earlier of the importance the government attaches to this measure. It is important because the growth and prosperity of a periodical industry are important to any country that wishes to preserve and reinforce its identity and the special character of its society and culture. It is a natural and laudable desire for a country to favour its own publications to the fullest possible extent but within reason and with equity. Canadian magazine publishers have been forced to exist for too long in an economic and psychological climate that has not been conducive to growth or new ventures. We want to see that climate changed, and the measures now before this House is, in our judgment, designed to help that change take place. We want to see a better economic environment for magazines edited by and for Canadians, with a Canadian point of view. Whether they make the grade with Canadian readers will depend upon the free choice of Canadians. Influencing that choice in their favour remains the task and the challenge of Canadian magazine publishers.

If, as I said at the beginning, periodicals significantly influence the development and expression of a country's culture and identity, it seems to follow that if this influence emanates in very large part from periodicals of foreign origin or under foreign control, such development and expressions are unlikely to take a form or direction that is desirable from the point of view of most Canadians. In so far as the outlook of Canadians is shaped largely by what they find in American magazines, this is not to be critical of what may be called the American world-view; it is simply to point out that it is not ours and should not be. Many Canadians are often better informed on United States politics and affairs than on those of their own country.

Non-Canadian Publications

The contribution of Canadian magazines to the enhancement of Canadian cultural expression, to the articulation of Canadian issues and to the knowledge and understanding of Canadians of their own country and their fellow Canadians is overshadowed by that of American publications. Surely, ways have to be found to redress the balance, and by that I do not mean ways that entail interference with the free flow into Canada of periodicals published abroad. The erection of cultural barriers or hidden tariffs has no part in what we are trying to achieve through measures to assist Canadian magazine publishing.

If Canadian readership patterns are to be changed in respect of magazines, so that Canadian magazines have a fairer chance to influence Canadian cultural growth and the expression and diffusion of Canadian ideas and creativity, Canadian magazines must come to be of such quality and so varied in content as to offer Canadians acceptable substitutes for the numerous choices of foreign-owned publications now available throughout the country. This transformation—and it can hardly be called less than a transformation—has got to be the absolutely top priority for magazine publishers in this country in the years to come if there is to continue to be any validity in the claim that Canadian periodicals are important to our culture.

As the minister responsible for federal government policy and programs aimed at the betterment of cultural and artistic activity and achievement, I have an obligation to see to it that Canadian periodical publishers who address their efforts determinedly and vigorously to this priority get all the support and assistance it is practicable and appropriate for the Canadian government to extend to them.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in the absence of my colleague, the Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier), I would now like to refer to the various aspects of the bill which deal with broadcasting. The clauses dealing with advertizing broadcasted by foreign stations are generally similar to the above-mentioned clauses on periodicals and newspapers. The aims are the same, that is to strengthen and promote the development of Canadian media by improving their profitability.

The advertising market for Canadian viewers is operated through American border stations. There are about a dozen American television stations located close to the Canadian border whose programs are seen by a great number of Canadians either directly or through cablevision. Those stations have reaped substantial advertising revenues in Canadian towns where their programs are widely seen. Indeed, the very existence of some of those stations is based on advertising made in Canada.

According to present estimates, some $20 million are paid each year out of Canada to those American stations for advertising directed to Canadian viewers. From that yearly amount of $20 million, some $9 million come from the television market in the Toronto area and some $7 million from Vancouver. Southern Manitoba loses about $1.5 million each year to American stations. The remainder comes from Ottawa, Montreal and a few other smaller markets.

[Mr. Faulkner.]

Most of the American stations involved, especially those situated in Buffalo (N.Y.) in Pembina (North Dakota), in Bellingham (Washington) are actively canvassing advertising accounts with Canada companies who wish to sell their products to Canadians. It can be safely stated, Mr. Speaker, that some stations have been created for the sole purpose of tapping the Canadian market.

● (1540)

[English]

The economic exploitation of the Canadian advertising market has important consequences for our broadcasting system. The licensing policy of the Canadian Radio-Television Commission is based on the ability of each local market to support with advertising revenues the Canadian stations licensed to serve it. Clearly, when revenues which would otherwise go to local Canadian stations are siphoned off to United States border stations, the CRTC's licensing policy is undermined. The Broadcasting Act passed by this House in 1968 states:

—the Canadian broadcasting system should be effectively owned and controlled by Canadians so as to safeguard, enrich and strengthen the cultural, political, social and economic fabric of Canada—

One of the objectives this government has pursued in the development of communications policy is that Canadians should have access to as wide a choice of information and entertainment as possible and Canadian sources of creativity and information should be emphasized. We are confident that this measure will not in any way limit the choice of programming available to Canadians. However, uncontrolled siphoning off of advertising revenues adversely affects the financial viability of many Canadian stations. Affected, as well, is the ability of Canadian stations to assume greater and more costly policy obligations such as local program production. Moreover, the loss of revenues to United States border stations threatens to hinder the expansion of the Canadian broadcasting system by reducing the amount of money available to provide service to the smaller areas where the markets are not large enough themselves to support a private broadcasting operation.

The objective of this bill is to create a financial incentive which would encourage the repatriation of Canadian advertising dollars. By taking away the privilege of deductions against income of the costs of advertising broadcast on non-Canadian stations, the bill will effectively double the cost of advertising time on the United States stations. This will not eliminate all advertising on United States border stations, but it will become more attractive to purchase time on Canadian stations. In this way, the bill will contribute to the reversal of the outflow of Canadian advertising revenues. Not only will the viability and integrity of Canadian broadcasting stations be enhanced, but the development of the Canadian broadcasting system will also be assisted.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, while it is difficult to predict the amount of funds that will be diverted to the Canadian broadcasting system, more funds will become available to assist in extending the coverage of the Canadian broadcasting system to more Canadians, and more money will be available to assist the development of Canadian sources of creativity. To prevent the harm which could befall Canadian advertisers if the deductions were removed before adequate alternative time was available on Canadian stations, the provisions of the bill dealing with broadcast advertising will not be implemented until adequate time is available. Of the two markets which were previously fully bought up, southern Ontario and Vancouver, the former, southern Ontario, has seen the recent licensing of both the Global television network and channel 79. Consequently, Canadian advertising time is available in that area now.

In the Vancouver area, it is expected that a third television station will be licensed in the near future by the Canadian Radio-Television Commission, thus ensuring that advertisers in that area are able to buy Canadian advertising time. It is proposed that the implementation of this bill should take into account the timing of the licensing of this third Vancouver station. To that end, those parts of the bill relating to broadcasting will be put into effect by proclamation. There may, therefore, be a delay between the enactment of the bill and the proclamation of the broadcasting clause in order to allow the establishment of the third Vancouver station.

[Translation]

This legislation will amend the Income Tax Act so as to encourage the return of Canadian advertising revenues to the Canadian broadcasting companies just as we have done up to now and as we will keep on doing regarding the fourth estate. This amendment has been supported by the CRTC, the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts, the Special Senate Committee on Mass Media and by all the representatives of the Canadian broadcasting industry. It is part and parcel of the government's endeavour to maintain in Canada a wholesome and strong broadcasting system.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, the support which the proposed legislation will provide to the Canadian periodical industry and to the Canadian broadcasting system manifests the determination of this government to encourage all areas of cultural expression. The government has the duty to ensure that the imagination and talent of Canadians be given room to develop and to grow. The measures we are proposing here today are an important step toward that goal.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, will the minister permit a question? I did not want to interrupt while he was delivering his speech. Will he clearly and unequivocably say what constitutes Canadian content, because this question concerns me?

Mr. Faulkner: Mr. Speaker, I went to some length in trying to point out to the hon. member and the House that this bill does not deal with the concept of Canadian content. It deals with the concept of "not substantially the same," a provision which has been in the act since 1965 and concerns material edited abroad, no matter where, placed in so-called Canadian editions and passed off as Canadian. The bill does not deal with the concept of Canadian content. I went to some length in attempting to clear up that misconception. Obviously, I did not do it to the satisfaction of the hon. member, but I will do so in committee.

Non-Canadian Publications

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, the report of the Royal Commission on Publications dated May, 1961, emphasized that in an area as vital and as sensitive as the press, whatever is done should be positive rather than negative, with the goal being the promotion of the Canadian periodical and not the suppression of the foreign periodical. That is the theme I want to develop this afternoon. I shall raise some points which the minister obviously overlooked.

Although the minister made a most interesting speech, the amendments he proposes to the Income Tax Act as put forward in Bill C-58 in no way constitute a periodicals policy for Canada. I think, personally, and I hope most will agree, that is wrong of a tax policy to differentiate with respect to, say, Time and Reader's Digest as this leads to all sorts of anomalies and possibly unfairness. A tax policy should apply equally. Time and Reader's Digest could easily fulfil their obligations as Canadian citizens by broadening substantially, over an agreed span of time, their Canadian ownership.

If I may draw an analogy, I suggest that both these magazines have been in Canada long enough to apply for Canadian citizenship. Perhaps application for citizenship could take the form of an increased sale of their shares to citizens of this country. Other acts, be they with respect to newspapers, banks or whatever, have demonstrated that this can be done if a reasonable length of time is permitted. I think the Bank Act provides for a period of five years, although I have not directed my mind to the exact length of time. In any event, there could be a time-frame in which publications could at the very least sell a majority of their shares to the citizens of this country.

The minister has admitted that the passage of this bill will not automatically mean the flow of revenue to Canadian magazines. As a matter of fact, an independent survey by Canadian Facts indicates that 19 to 20 per cent of the advertising revenue of Time and Reader's Digest will probably accrue to Canadian publications. When I had the privilege of meeting with the publisher and editor of the revitalized Saturday Night the other day, the question was posed to the publisher about the effect of Bill C-58. He admitted that from the point of view of policy, it would not be significant. Some of the other matters the minister mentioned, and some of the points I hope to develop, will have a much more significant effect on the future of Canadian publications.

As these magazines become Canadian citizens, it might be fair to ask that more of the decisions relative to their editorial content should be made in this country. The minister gave a somewhat lengthy exposition of the Canadian content rule. I am not convinced about this. Despite the fact that the legislation has been in place since, as the minister said, 1965, I hope the officials have made very few rulings. Perhaps the committee would be the place to learn just how many rulings have been made about content. My party and I are very nervous about this particular provision. I think that content rules, particularly as they have application to news magazines—here I am not making a plea for any magazine, but the whole concept of news magazines—are repellent to me and to this party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fairweather: Having said that, what are the elements of a Canadian periodicals policy? I suggest that there are in this country a host of writers who without any trouble could man, if that is the word—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fairweather: The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) and several others are chastising me about that phrase. Anyway, there are enough editors of talent and writers of talent, be they men or women, to adequately provide content for any number of Canadian periodicals. That is not the problem. However, there is a very serious problem about management talent. I hope that in the development of a periodicals policy, some agency will assist. Also, I hope there will be a subsidy provision to provide for the training of managers of periodicals. Many knowledgeable people in the industry have told me that it is on the management side that the weakness lies.

There is, of course, the perennial problem of any artistic of cultural endeavour—the problem of money. I suppose, and I will develop this a little later, that the Canada Council or some organization along the lines of the Canadian Film Development Corporation could fulfil a useful function here. The last point—I am just highlighting at this stage—is that I was interested in the minister's comments about the distribution system. However, still he has done nothing more than make protestations about the need for an adequate distribution system.

When speaking at Trent University the Minister said that the strength, originality and vision of the Canadian publishing industry was not a matter of marginal interest or importance to the Liberal government but, rather, a true measure of what constitutes our national life. I like rhetoric as much as anybody else. At another time and in another place I would like to make a speech about the misuse of rhetoric, the raising of the expectations of people because of hyperbole when no firm policy follows the rhetoric.

The minister announced the government's intention to delete subsections (2) and (4) from section 19 of the Income Tax Act effective January, 1976, thereby eliminating the tax advantages currently enjoyed by the Canadian editions of Time and Reader's Digest. The minister stated, further, that the strength, originality and vision of the Canadian publishing industry was, as I said earlier, a matter of priority. I will suggest in the next few minutes that I would like to see substantially more evidence of the minister's concern. Similar sentiments about a periodical policy were expressed by the minister's predecessor in 1972. The then minister said the development of a Canadian publishing policy was a matter of top priority. Apparently "top priority" is nothing more than an empty phrase if Bill C-58 is the only evidence of the earnestness of the government in this regard.

In the minister's address to the Trent University conference on "The State of English Language Publishing in Canada", his sole commitment was to the amendment of the Income Tax Act. As I said earlier, a survey by Canadian Facts Incorporated, in January of this year, of Canadian advertising executives indicated that the Canadian publishing industry will not benefit substantially from the removal of tax advantages for advertising in Time and Reader's Digest. As a matter of fact, the figure is only 19 or 20 per cent. However, there is a worrisome theme; it worried Senator Davey who headed the committee on publishing: only 19 per cent of the revenues freed by this measure will go to the publishing industry, and of that 19 per cent almost 60 per cent will go to Maclean-Hunter Publications. As a consequence, Maclean-Hunter will effectively control at least half of the advertising revenues obtained by the magazine industry. Little magazines will derive an almost insignificant amount of benefit from the legislation, despite the minister's admission that the smaller, special interest magazines constitute a real problem area, to use his words, in the publishing industry.

I began by referring to the report of the royal commission handed down in 1961 and its desire that legislation be positive. It seems to me that the legislation under debate today has been conceived along precisely opposite lines, that is to say, it would perform a negative function; it embodies a policy of negative, rather than positive assistance to an industry which, upon the hon. gentleman's own admission, is a true measure of what constitutes our national life. It would be more accurate to describe Bill C-58 as a true measure of the government's inability to meet the pressing problems of the Canadian industry and Canadian identity by not bringing forward concrete, positive policy commitments.

I intend to suggest a couple of positive commitments. The first has to do with postal rates and postal services. Because 91 per cent of Canadian magazine sales are through subscription, an efficient and economical postal service is of crucial importance to the survival of an indigenous periodical industry. Prior to 1968, the Post Office Act provided mailing rates for magazines of between 1½ cents and 3 cents a pound. The rate depended on circulation: periodicals with a circulation of less than 10,000 paid 1½ cents per pound; for a circulation between 10,000 and 50,000 the rate was 2½ cents per pound, and publications with a circulation of 50,000 or more paid 3 cents per pound.

However, the passage of Bill C-116 raised the price per pound from 3 cents to 5 cents and instituted a minimum floor rate of 2 cents per piece. Under such an arrangement, magazines with fewer pages, smaller size and consequently a lower volume of advertising are placed on the same footing as the larger, better financed periodicals. Similarly, the existence of the 2 cents per piece minimum charge has led to the establishment of independent distribution firms to distribute magazines which carry no price and which therefore concentrate heavily on advertising as a source of revenue. The growth of these controlled circulation publications has placed a serious drain on the pool of advertising revenues available in Canada.

Surely, a government which professes to be so keenly interested in encouraging the growth of the periodical industry would consider the removal of the floor charge of 2 cents, as advocated in the Davey committee report of 1970, in an attempt to restrain the controlled circulation section of the industry which it has fostered at the expense of Canadian periodical sales. Canadian publishers consider that no other single action which the government could take would do as much to provide immediate relief and encouragement to those involved in this difficult and discouraging business. If the government's concern is to be considered sincere, positive steps must be taken to initiate a serious inquiry into the implications of Bill C-116 for the Canadian publishing industry, with a resultant recommendation that a return to the calculation of postal rates on the basis of circulation should take place.

At the core of this submission is the need for a fair, speedy and cheap postal system. I, for one, have never felt particularly discouraged about the fact that the Post Office did not return a profit. I am much more discouraged by the almost total breakdown in delivery of second-class and third-class mail, to say nothing about the fact that the delivery of even first-class mail seems to be disrupted all too often.

The government might also examine the speed and efficiency of second-class mail service, as subscription sales are surely dependent on people getting their magazines at the time they expect them. I suppose that other than on some of the more emotional social issues, the largest volume of mail members of parliament receive comes from frustrated constituents who are upset about the inadequacy of the postal service. If we are to judge by the quality of the first-class mail service in Canada, the publishing industry is indeed in deep trouble.

The last major point I wish to make—I hope the government will accept some of these submissions—has to do with the distribution system. If I might say so, the minister made a somewhat casual reference to this sector. But there is something he could do today, by fiat, if he wanted to: he could see to it that all the leases with respect to kiosks and magazine counters in Canadian airports, for example, contain a provision requiring adequate display and distribution of Canadian periodicals.

In this area, the minister need not worry about the constitutional aspect, though undoubtedly there are constitutional aspects attached to the establishment of a more thorough-going distribution system. He could give us earnest of his intention, however, if he were to apply such a provision immediately throughout establishments controlled by the Department of Transport, the Canadian National system, Crown corporations, and so on. In this very city of Ottawa there must be enough kiosks in government buildings to enable the minister to make an excellent start in providing a better distribution system. One of the things that has bothered me for many years is the overwhelming number of United States periodicals on display at Canadian airports. If one succeeds in finding a Canadian magazine among them, it shows one is a good explorer indeed.

Thirteen of the 14 magazine distribution firms operating in this country are American-owned. It follows that Canadian newsstands are inundated with American overflow copy to the extent that only 9 per cent of Canadian magazine sales are newsstand sales. Newsstands and other agencies distributing periodicals should be required to ensure the fair treatment and exposure of Canadian magazines. I do not have the statistics, but I would guess that most of the magazines making up the 9 per cent to which I have just referred are sold in the large cities. Those of us who represent constituencies in other than the large cities find it frustrating not to be able to locate Canadian periodicals on the newsstands.

Newsstands and other agencies distributing periodicals should be required to ensure that fair treatment and exposure of Canadian magazines takes place. The government might also consider instituting an establishment of national distribution to guarantee the promotion and circulation of periodicals. As an immediate measure, the government should encourage the display and sale of Canadian magazines at federal installations and Information Canada offices. Public corporations, as I said earlier—and there are several of them—are providing a selection of our own publications for their clientele.

I mentioned earlier that another need in respect of a positive policy for Canadian periodicals is cash flow—money; capital. Consideration should be given to the establishment of a national periodicals development corporation or, if the government resists this—and I would be surprised, because this is a government with a proliferation of agencies, boards and commissions—there could be a modification or an expansion of one or other of the existing structures, for example the Canada Council, for the purpose of granting both resources of capital and assistance to the publishing industry.

If I can interpolate one small comment, I think the Canada Council system, now, of distributing books to some of the smaller libraries of Canada, is a worth-while program and one that could well be copied for Canadian periodicals, providing subscriptions to the smaller and less adequately funded libraries in our country. I might say that in my own constituency, this very year two packages of Canadian books were sent out to what might be called libraries of modest size and it was a matter of great personal satisfaction that this occurred. I have always felt it would be very helpful if the same policy were adopted with regard to some of our periodicals.

In co-operation with the provinces, such an agency might make grants available to journalists engaged in the periodicals industry to further develop and assist the talents and energies of Canadian writers. As an immediate measure, the council should expand its present book purchase program to include Canadian magazine subscriptions for public and school libraries. The government might also consider the purchase of a more substantial amount of advertising space. I think the minister alluded to this matter. I may say that the Saturday Night people, when they saw us last week, alluded to advertising space in Canadian periodicals rather strongly to counteract the possible loss in advertising revenues resulting from the present legislation.

My only caveat in respect of government advertising is that it is one of the great, unexamined pork barrels, as I understand it, in the government system. A government that prides itself on being Mister Clean seems to dibble and dabble in advertising patronage to an extravagant extent.

My theme, and I hope the minister will agree, has been one of trying to suggest to parliament ways in which the periodicals industry in this country could be made much more healthy by a distribution system, an improvement in second-class mail, in cash flow, and so on. I resist very much, intellectually and in every other way, the matter of Canadian content which was so casually alluded to by the minister in his speech. I resist having officials, by some inadequately explained measure, trying to add up what is or is not content. As a matter of fact, in the minister's speech he said it might be possible for all the stories in a magazine to be written by offshore people, with no article alluding to this country, yet the magazine could get a Canadian content rating. This paradox is the very issue, and particularly when we get into the matter of news we are getting into an area that through the years—

Mr. Stanfield: Or opinion.

Mr. Fairweather: News or opinion, as my leader has said. Then we are getting into an area that through the years has given tyrannical governments the power that free men have resisted through the ages. That, then, is the tenor of this speech. I have tried to make it positive rather than negative, and I adopt as the party position the suggestion that positive rather than negative policies will substantially increase the availability, the health and the viability of the periodicals industry in this country.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, the NDP welcomes, as long overdue, this legislation to end the special status for advertising in Time and Reader's Digest.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Symes: I hear a bit of applause from the Liberal side. Maybe they should wait a few minutes. While the legislation is welcomed, I regret that this government and its predecessors have dillied and dallied so long that the Canadian periodicals industry is in the sad state it is in today. Had the government acted on the royal commission report back in the early 1960s, or even on the special Senate committee report of the early 1970s perhaps the situation would not be as desperate as it is.

All members of the House must, or should realize the importance of magazines in Canada. If we are concerned about Canadian independence and identity, we must be concerned about the health of the Canadian magazine industry. We have heard much concern expressed in debates in the House about the economic independence of Canada, and we now have on the books the foreign investments review act, which is a token gesture because it is not totally proclaimed yet, in an effort to regain control of our economy which in so many sectors is foreign owned; 60 per cent, for example, in manufacturing and 90 per cent in terms of oil resources. We seem concerned about Canadian independence and identity in the broadcasting field, in that the Canadian Radio-Television Commission has suggested 80 per cent Canadian control of the broadcasting media, cablevision and Canadian stations and has also advocated 60 per cent Canadian content in programming.

I maintain that our cultural independence and identity is just as essential as our economic independence if we are to remain a sovereign nation and a sovereign people. What is the good of achieving economic sovereignty if we lose our identity in the process? What good is there in Canadianizing industry if we ourselves are Americanized through what we read?

Therefore, I suggest that magazines are special and have a vital and important role to play in promoting the Canadian identity. I would maintain that magazines are as important as our national railway was at the time of confederation, in terms of binding the nation together and helping Canadians understand one another from coast to coast.

Magazines are the only national press we have. They are the only media whereby we can have an in-depth study of Canada and Canadians. Magazines are not bound by daily deadlines or the pressures that newspapers, television and radio have to meet in order to get their message out on time. In respect of magazines, time is provided for more analysis which is sadly lacking in the news media in this country.

Through magazines, we as Canadians can become aware of the needs, problems, successes and failures of Canadians living in Newfoundland, British Columbia, the Northwest Territories and all points in between. That need, to me, is very essential today because our cultural identity is being eroded by the presence of a huge country and a huge entertainment industry south of our border. We often know more about American history and politics than our own, through the medium of television. Often our heroes are Hollywood stars and others to whom we are introduced through the medium of the American movies which Canadians watch.

Many of our entertainment figures or people in the music industry are Americans, because of the penetration of American music. Also, in the news media we are subject to a heavy dependence of foreign correspondents to interpret the news of the world, not only in terms of reporting but in terms of news and film clips from CBS and other United States networks. Because we do not have too many Canadian foreign correspondents, we rely heavily on Associated Press, United Press International, and Reuters.

Through this process, Canadians get a view of the world through the eyes of other people. Indeed, it seems that our very lifestyle is more and more becoming Americanized. When I was up in the Yukon Territory I was amazed to see, in Whitehorse, a Colonel Sanders Kentucky Fried Chicken outlet: One cannot go anywhere in Canada without seeing McDonald's hamburger stands in the cities, American-produced cars, and so on. Our whole lifestyle seems to be more and more influenced by the American presence.

Our magazine industry is no exception. Magazines in Canada generally are dominated by foreign publications. For example, Playboy magazine collects about as much money in Canada as the 17 largest English-language magazines combined. We have competition from United States news magazines which have access to resources with which Canadian news magazines cannot compete. Therefore, I say it is very important that we have a healthy and expanding Canadian magazine industry because magazines have a vital role to play in countering the cultural influence the United States is having on our citizens. We need Canadian magazines to interpret Canadianism to Canadians and to interpret the world to Canada.

As I said earlier, our magazine industry is in deep trouble; it is facing severe and unfair competition from foreign magazines. This industry—I want to underline this—is in trouble because of the procrastination, lack of concern and shortsightedness of Liberal and Conservative governments over the past 15 years. Very briefly, I should like to document that statement. I would say, for example, that as early as 1922 the Magazine Publishers Association of Canada asked for protective tariffs on foreign periodicals. The Conservative government of 1931 did levy such a tax, but the Liberal government in 1936 removed it. The result was that foreign magazines began to penetrate into Canada and the two most important foreign magazines, namely, Time and Reader's Digest, in the late 1940s and early 1950s began to capture a great deal of the advertising revenue in Canada. In fact, by 1955 those two magazines, Times and Reader's Digest, had captured one-third of the magazine advertising revenue in Canada.

In the same year, only one-fifth of all consumer magazines read in Canada were Canadian. In light of this trend of foreign domination of the magazine industry, in 1957 the Liberal government finally imposed a 20 per cent tax on advertising in Canadian editions of foreign periodicals. However, with a change in government when the Conservatives came in a year later in 1958, that legislation was repealed because of the very heavy pressure by the United States government. I think one should ask oneself why the United States government was so concerned about the status of Time and Reader's Digest in this country.

I should like to elaborate the thesis that the United States government is concerned about these two magazines, because they really are agents of United States diplomacy. In 1960 and 1961, finally, the Conservative government instituted the Royal Commission on Publications which recommended that an end be put to the right of advertisers in foreign magazines in Canada to deduct the cost of advertising for income tax purposes. It was typical of Conservative procrastination that the government refused to accept the recommendation and exempted Time Magazine and Reader's Digest. Certain political events took place, the government was defeated and no subsequent legislation was introduced. Then when the Liberals returned to power in 1965 we find that once more the United States government put very strong pressure on the Canadian government to officially, through legislation exempt Time magazine and Reader's Digest from any future legislation to end the tax advantage for advertisers in those two foreign magazines.

The minister of finance at that time, Mr. Walter Gordon, said that the government came under such pressure that the United States was threatening not to agree to the Canada-US auto pact and was threatening to reduce Canadian oil exports to the United States if these two magazines were not exempted from the foreign periodicals tax legislation. As a typical example of the Liberals bowing to the United States on this important issue, the two magazines were officially exempted. Then in 1969 the government instituted the special Senate Committee on the Mass Media which reiterated the problems of the publishing industry in this country and reached the same conclusion that had been reached by the previous royal commission. I should like to quote from the Senate committee's report:

> It seems plain to us that if Time and Digest are allowed to maintain their present competitive advantage, it will become increasingly difficult for existing magazines to survive, and for new ones to be launched ... but we are satisfied that the long-term prospects for Canadian periodical industry—and probably the short-term as well—would be enhanced by removal of subsidized foreign competition.

There we have evidence through the years of the publishing industry expressing its concern, of a royal commission after exhaustive study coming out with concrete recommendations, of a Senate committee also coming out with concrete recommendations, but this government and its predecessor having refused to act until now. What happened to the Canadian magazine industry in the interim when those Liberal and Conservative governments delayed? It is interesting to look through the records and see what went on.

In the 1920s there were 96 consumer magazines in existence, and during that period 23 of them folded and died. In the 1930s, 75 magazines were started but 65 of them folded. In the 1940s, 92 magazines were started and 70 died. In the 1950s, 29 new magazines were started and a total of 50 died. By the 1960s we had 250 new magazines and 137 died. Meanwhile, especially in the 1950s and 1960s, Time and Reader's Digest were leaping forward because of their special status regarding advertisers in their magazines. The circulation of Time rose from 215,000 in 1960 to 557,000 today, and the circulation of Reader's Digest rose from 1 million in 1960 to 1.2 million today. But perhaps even more important than that, Time and Reader's Digest together have now captured 48 per cent of all magazine advertising revenue in Canada, that is to say, over $17 million.

Time and Reader's Digest, two foreign magazines with Canadian editions, unlike any other foreign magazine such as Newsweek, U.S. News and World Report, have a special status so far as advertisers are concerned. They are treated as Canadian magazines for advertising, income tax purposes. Therefore, Time and Reader's Digest have an unfair advantage over any other foreign magazine circulating in Canada. Time and Reader's Digest also have the advantage of being subsidiaries of foreign publications, which prevents Canadian magazines being on an equal, competitive footing with them.

That is something on which I would like to elaborate in my speech. Neither Time nor Reader's Digest can claim to be Canadian magazines with regard to ownership, content or editorial control. The principle of fairness and equity must dictate that they be treated under the law as foreign publications, which they are. This has been the policy advocated by the NDP for years. Bill C-58 which is before us defines Time and Reader's Digest as foreign magazines for income tax purposes. It will end the special advantages they have received under section 19 of the Income Tax Act, and its aim is to free more advertising revenue for Canadian magazines by diverting such revenue away from Time and Reader's Digest.

What do we mean by a Canadian magazine? The minister gave a rather vague definition with regard to content. Earlier, other ministers spoke about a 75 per cent content which had to be Canadian, but the minister said simply that the content of a Canadian magazine had to be substantially different from any non-Canadian publication. The other aspect of a Canadian magazine must be that effective editorial control is exercised in Canada, and that at least 75 per cent ownership of the magazine must be Canadian.

How do Time and Reader's Digest measure up to those criteria? For example, in no way can Time be considered a Canadian magazine. It has a mere five pages of Canadian news, which represents about 10 per cent of its content. Its editorial control resides in the United States in its parent company, and Time Canada is wholly owned by Time Incorporated of the U.S.

Reader's Digest has been making a pitch; it has been lobbying members of parliament, getting the public to write letters and trying to argue that it should have a special status, it deserves a special deal because, somehow, it is more Canadian than Time. Reader's Digest only has 24 per cent Candian content in its English edition and only 12 per cent Canadian content in its French edition. Its editorial control resides in the United States—every article published in Reader's Digest has to meet the approval of the editorial board in the U.S.—and only 32 per cent of the shares of Reader's Digest are open to Canadians for purchasing. But we should remember that not all of those shares are owned by Canadians. As the president of the company, Mr. Zimmerman, said, some of the shares have filtered back to the United States.

But even if Time or Reader's Digest were to go public and issue shares in Canada, even if they had something like 75 per cent Canadian ownership, that, to me, would be fudging the issue, because when we talk about magazines and news the key issue is not who owns the actual publication, but who controls the editorial policy and, hence, the content of that magazine. Unless that kind of control resides in the hands of Canadians, those magazines will still be promoting and interpreting Canada and the world from a foreign viewpoint. We cannot get around the fact that Time and Reader's Digest have been, and will continue to interpret America and the world through American eyes and from an American viewpoint.

I could give many examples but I think two would suffice. Can anyone in the House recall, during that sad conflict of the Viet Nam war and American involvement over a decade, any substantial criticism in either Time magazine or Reader's Digest of American policy in Viet Nam? It was only when the tide turned in the U.S. and America wanted to get out of Viet Nam because of the realization of the morass in which they found themselves, that we found these two magazines publishing critical analyses of that war. But earlier on, when other magazines in Canada and the world were publishing critical articles—and I say "critical" in a positive sense; you can have both sides of the story in the same publication—that was not true of Time and Reader's Digest.

More recently, when Canada wanted to sell locomotives to the United States through the M. L. Worthington firm, the U.S. government tried to prohibit that subsidiary from doing so, using the Trading with the Enemy Act. If you looked up that issue of Time magazine you would notice that Time was being apologetic, trying to justify the U.S. government's imposition of the Trading with the Enemy Act. What I am saying is that basically we are not getting news from the Canadian perspective in those five pages of Time or the articles selected for Reader's Digest.

What other advantages do these two magazines have other than their special status with regard to income tax? It seems to me that they have an unfair competitive advantage for a number of reasons. First of all, they have a great economic advantage over their Canadian competitors because their editorial content is supplied by their parent company in the United States. This means that the two magazines can obtain material that is costly in terms of research, and so on, at a cut rate, at subsidized cost, from its parent company. No Canadian magazine can do that.

Another advantage is that these magazines have a tax advantage over their American competitors selling in Canada, because only these two magazines are permitted to have their advertisers deduct the cost of advertising for Canadian income tax purposes. Another great advantage these two magazines have is that they have captured almost all of the magazine advertising revenue in Canada. Therefore, on the principle of equitable treatment it would seem that we have to end the special status of Time and Reader's Digest. They should be treated on the same basis as any other foreign magazine and should not have any special privileges for advertisers.

Why else should we end the special status? It seems that by not having an advantage regarding income tax, Time and Reader's Digest advertisers will begin to divert advertising revenue to Canadian magazines and other Canadian media. I do not have any illusions that all the revenue freed from advertising in Time and Reader's Digest will go to magazines, but it may go to Canadian television and radio. At least we will be able to keep this revenue in Canada, rather than seeing the bulk of the revenue raised by advertising in Canada flow back to the parent companies in the United States. Time and Reader's Disgest have carried out a survey showing that only 19 per cent of the freed revenue would go to Canadian magazines. This would be something over $3 million. We do not know whether that survey is accurate; but even if it is, $3 million would be beneficial as cash flow for Canadian magazines.

It seems, also, that we must stop the advertising advantages of Time and Reader's Digest because of what they are doing to regional editions. Time especially has 12 regional editions; it can attract local and regional advertisers, through special rates, to advertise in the magazine for those local and regional audiences. That, therefore, inhibits local and regional magazines such as Toronto Life and Vancouver Life. Once we end the special advertising advantages for Time and Reader's Digest in their regional editions, we will help promote regional magazines which are a vital part of the Canadian industry.

It seems that the revenue raised through ending this tax advantage will be a great boon to existing Canadian magazines and it will encourage others to get into the market and expand. I would like to point out that this bill will not necessarily mean that the Canadian editions of Time and Reader's Digest will fold; they still have a large circulation, which must be attractive to some advertisers. We should remember that the revenue of Reader's Digest does not primarily come from advertising in Canada. Three-quarters of the revenue of Reader's Digest comes from sources other than advertising revenue, that is, from book clubs and record clubs. Even if the Canadian editions of Time and Reader's Digest were to cease, Canadians would still be able to buy the American editions just as they can now buy Newsweek, Playboy or any other American magazine.

If the two magazines were to fold—and I do not think it is inevitable that they would—their staff could certainly be absorbed by the Canadian publishing industry. It seems to me that ending their special status will stimulate the Canadian weekly news magazine industry. Already, Macleans has indicated it will move to that kind of format. There are other publishers expressing similar intentions. In conclusion, I say that we have an important need for a strong and healthy Canadian periodicals industry. I would like to read from the report of the royal commission of 1960:

> Only a truly Canadian printing press, one with the feel of Canada and directly responsible to Canada, can give us the critical analysis, the informed discourse and dialogue which are indispensable in a sovereign society.

Neither Time nor Reader's Digest conform to that concept of Canadian publishing. Nor, by definition of their content and editorial policy, can they ever hope to conform to that definition. I again quote from the royal commission:

> A nation's domestic advertising expenditure should be devoted to the support of its own media of communications, and ... a genuinely Canadian periodical press can only exist if it has access to a fair share of domestic advertising.

For years the Liberal government has let Time and Reader's Digest capture half of that revenue through the special status given to advertisers in those magazines. Now, hopefully, this trend will be reversed. But this bill is not the be-all and end-all. We need more positive measures. We need a comprehensive periodicals policy. We need to end foreign domination of ownership of magazine distributing agencies in this country. We need to revise postal rates for magazines to end discrimination, especially against our smaller magazines. We need to take measures to discourage the overflow circulation of foreign magazines. For example, in 1961 it amounted to over $150 million per year, compared to a domestic production of only $40 million.

We should consider the example of Switzerland, which imposes a postal surcharge on foreign periodicals. Germany imposes a tax on foreign periodicals. We could use the revenues thus raised to promote a Canadian magazine industry. So far, this government has failed to move positively in those directions. We still do not have a policy for periodicals.

I would like to reiterate my faith in Canadian writers and publishers. When the CRTC demanded higher Canadian content in music, we saw how this caused our recording industry to flourish. I believe the same kind of talent exists in Canadian writers and publishers. A few Canadian magazines in Canada have achieved high audience penetration. This bill will end the unfair advantage of Time and Reader's Digest and create more equitable competitive conditions in this country for the magazine industry. The audience is there; so is the talent. To argue that the Canadian magazine industry cannot now grow and flourish is negative and defeatist.

The NDP welcomes Bill C-58, Mr. Speaker. Had the government accepted the royal commission recommendations in the early sixties, the industry would not be in the precarious state in which it finds itself. This bill is not a panacea, but it is an important step in the right direction and we welcome it as long overdue.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I ought to congratulate the Chair. We are happy to see a former Deputy Speaker in the Chair again.

I am somewhat suprised by the presentation of Bill C-58 which aims to remove the provisions allowing deduction of expenses for Canadians who buy advertising space in Time and Reader's Digest magazines, under the pretext that this will enable them to have magazines of equal quality in Canada.

I listened carefully to the minister's speech this afternoon. I have tried to find an argument that would convince me that the passage of Bill C-58 will enable Canadian magazines to improve their publication in such a way as to be appreciated in the same manner as Reader's Digest by the Canadian people, and particularly by the French-Canadians. The numerous letters I received on this subject endorse my view. In none of all the letters I received asked the Member of Parliament to support this bill. On the contrary, they asked that the legislation enacted by Parliament with regard to periodicals listed in the 1965 act be maintained and fully enforced.

Mr. Speaker, in the 1965 act, amended in 1971, Canadian publications are defined in such a way as to exempt Time and Reader's Digest from the legislation. As a matter of fact, it was considered at that time that Canadian publications are those which are 75 to 100 per cent Canadian owned. However, there was an exception for periodicals edited in whole or in part in Canada in 1965, and such was the situation of the two magazines involved.

I am of the opinion that the government should first of all fully apply to Time and Reader's Digest the definition given in the Income Tax Act concerning the exact nature of a Canadian periodical. It is stated in the act that such a publication must be at least 75 per cent Canadian-owned by Canadians having a right of undisturbed possession on the shares in their name.

It is also provided in the legislation that in order to be recognized as a Canadian edition, a publication has to be drafted, edited and printed in Canada.

Then, Time and Reader's Digest are already complying with these legal requirements. Well, I should like also to indicate what financial benefits these two publications are bringing to the development of the Canadian economy. First of all, their combined annual turnover amounts to $30 million, which is quite impressive, and they do spend 90 cents out of every dollar here in Canada. They have $8 million in capital investment in Canada, that is in land, buildings, machinery and equipment of all sorts. There are also 500 people earning a living in Canada as their employees.

There are also 1,000 other jobs, maybe more, which exist only because these firms are using Canadian materials. These firms could very well have done without having to use more and more Canadian products, but they have decided to take into account the fact that they are operating in Canada, that they have the chance of being published in Canada and so they seek to increase their business dealings with Canadian suppliers.

Moreover, it has not been said five out of the six members on the board of directors who administer the Reader's Digest operations in Canada are well-known Canadian personalities.

Also, as far as the Canadian culture is concerned, the selecting, reviewing and writing of the entire contents of every copy is all done in Canada, both in French and in English. The English contribution is of course larger than the French, but it remains that the bilingual character of our country is respected. According to my information, there are also some 80 writers, artists and lay-out men employed in putting the periodicals together. Moreover, there are 80 writers who are making a selection of articles out of other publications to make it a truly informative and objective periodical and to encourage Canadians to read these articles.

These periodicals also contribute Canadian articles in foreign editions of the Reader's Digest throughout the world, which represent a potential readership of 105 million people. I think that this is an excellent vehicle for promoting Canada abroad. These are things we must consider and keep in mind. I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are about to interrupt me. May I call it five o'clock?

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

AIR CANADA CONTRACT, ADDITIONS, REVISIONS AND AMENDMENTS THERETO

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville) moved:

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the Air Canada contract and all additions, revisions and amendments thereto.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the government's refusal to provide the information requested by motion No. 24 in my name is a classic example of this government's perpetual desire to function under a veil of secrecy, no matter what the consequences may be, and without regard to the public's right to know and the public interest. Because of your earlier announcement, Mr. Speaker, I regret that my motion will not be debated for as long as I wish. I say, in all sincerity, that I find the government's reasoning incredible, its refusal to release information requested by motion No. 24 unbelievable, and if the scene we are witnessing were to be acted out in the National Arts Centre we should find it humorous. Unfortunately, this scene is taking place in the House of Commons and it is beyond a joke; it is downright contemptible.

On a previous occasion, the parliamentary secretary said that the Air Canada contract alluded to contain considerable confidential information relating to the organization, operation and maintenance of Air Canada lines. I ask the parliamentary secretary, or whoever is to respond, to tell us what this confidential information is. What is so confidential about it that it cannot be formally released to this House, especially as the contract I have requested is readily available from the Public Archives of Canada. I have the document here and I will be prepared to table it if the government or the spokesman on the other side of the House is not prepared to do so.

When I raised this matter previously, the parliamentary secretary went on to say that Air Canada competitors are not obliged to provide such information or expose their contractual arrangements to similar scrutiny. He then said that to place Air Canada in such a disadvantageous position would not be in the public interest. That is utter nonsense. Air Canada is in a special position and enjoys advantages which other airlines do not enjoy. Under the provisions of section 16(7) of the Aeronautics Act, and sections 14 and 23 of the Air Canada Act, the governor in council directs the CTC to grant Air Canada permission to serve points X, Y or Z. The airline does not need to go through the regular channels, the ordeal of petitions, hearings and red tape to obtain the routes they choose. Air Canada is given preferential treatment and quite a free hand with regard to route approvals, as well as a free hand in schedules, levels and frequency of services provided thereafter. Section 5 of the Air Canada contract of 1950 reads:

> The schedules, frequencies and non-stop operations on the air services herein or hereinafter designated and the service to points of call herein or hereinafter authorized shall be determined by the corporation in accordance with traffic and operational requirements, technical facilities and government regulations.

It could be argued that Air Canada tends to abuse its special privileges. For example, consider how the Sudbury-Thunder Bay route was awarded. It is unlikely, if Air Canada refuses to provide the service it is supposed to provide until prodded by another airline, that the other airline will go through the expensive procedure of applying for the route if that route is to be ultimately taken over by Air Canada. For the parliamentary secretary to suggest that it is improper to expose the terms and conditions of Air Canada contracts is totally absurd, given that Air Canada is in a preferred position, that it functions as a quasi-monopoly and that it is owned by Canadians, for the benefit of Canadians. The airline's purpose, after all, is to provide for the speedy and efficient transportation of passengers and goods across Canada and points outside. Over and above that, the corporation must be answerable to parliament and thereby to the people of Canada.

That brings me to another point I want to make about all Crown corporations. I am referring to the whole question of disclosure relating to Crown corporations or, rather, to the absence or lack of disclosure in the interests of the public. I also draw attention to the current practice in which we engage, to do with the examination and scrutiny by committees of parliament of the operations, affairs and activities of our Crown corporations. In my view, there are far too many restrictions relating to the important and basic issue of the examination of Crown corporations, as the motion we are debating now makes evident.

Let me give some more examples of what I mean. I draw the attention of the House to motion No. 77, which I brought forward in the previous parliament, as recorded on page 5507 of Hansard for July 11, 1973. That was a request for documents and had to do with some questionable dealings concerning a change in auditors. That was a fiasco. As well, I refer the House to the request for correspondence between Sunset Crest Ltd. and Air Canada. This matter is the subject of a judicial inquiry. It seems to me that the government ought to have released such information and documents as were requested concerning Air Canada. If the affairs of Air Canada could have been scrutinized diligently and thoroughly by the transport committee, the story might now be different. The committee should have the power to look into the questionable actions indulged in by some people involved with Air Canada. But we were denied information about leases, arrangements, salaries, benefits, and so on.

Under our committee system it is almost impossible to examine and scrutinize effectively the activities of our Crown corporations. Although the officials of Crown corporations in theory answer to parliament, in fact they answer to no one except the government of the day. The result is evident. Air Canada is now being subjected to a judicial inquiry. Because of its insistence of secrecy aided and abetted by the government, the national airline finds itself in a period of turbulence and trouble. I submit, again, that if there were a requirement for disclosure, if officials of the company were forced to appear before a proper investigatory committee on a regular basis and testify, if they were forced to defend their actions and answer for them, the result would be good for the airline and would engender public confidence. As it is, the affairs of Air Canada are being probed by a judicial inquiry.

On the basis of what happened the last time these people appeared before a parliamentary committee we became convinced that, given the constraints of the present committee system under the rules, and because of present procedures and terms of reference, it would be impossible to get to the bottom of what causes the malaise within this company. That malaise has grown deeper because there has not been an effective check by parliament.

I think it is time we took a leaf from British parliamentary practice. That parliament has seen fit to establish a select committee which deals with specific nationalized industries. When it meets it looks into all aspects of the operation of a nationalized corporation, and looks in depth.

This practice, if adopted here, would do two things. It would provide for greater public disclosure; also, it would serve as an effective check on the behaviour of those charged with the responsibility and administration of that particular corporation. Considering the increased proliferation of Crown corporations in this country and the obvious need for greater parliamentary control, examination, and scrutiny, I recommend that this parliament should seriously consider the establishment of such a select committee. It should be a committee composed of members of parliament, with wide powers. It should be able to engage highly expert assistants. It should consider the operation of a Crown corporation not in a retrospective way but in a prospective way.

In the United Kingdom they have a committee which requires government agency officials to provide evidence requested by it. It is up to the committee to decide whether such information should be made public or not. This system imposes more effective parliamentary control over institutions of government and provides a needed system of checks and balances. Our present committee system is too politically motivated. It functions in far too superficial a manner. The objectives of a special select committee on Crown corporations would be to review their operations experly, in a reasonable and constructive way and in the interests of the public and the welfare of the corporation.

It always appears somewhat ironic that the socialists continue to recommend nationalization. They say in that way the public will know what is going on, parliament will examine, parliament will be the final judge and the board will have to answer to parliament. That is sheer nonsense. In reality, the public has probably less access to the officers of socialized enterprises than the shareholders of capitalistic enterprises have to their officers. The more dogmatic the socialist theory becomes, the less access the people have to the operation of the socialist enterprise. If we are to have socialized enterprises established for the benefit of the people, then clearly they should be operated for the people and not for the government of the day.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Therefore, accountability to parliament must be increased and the overriding influence of senior civil servants and government technocrats must be decreased. If Air Canada or any other Crown corporation cannot stand up to a thorough and effective scrutinization, the management should clearly be questioned. On the other hand, if they are handicapped because of undue government interference and too much pressure by the government of the day, that should be brought out into the open so that the public can judge whether their mandate is being properly carried out.

My time is almost up. The parliamentary secretary may wish to respond. I hope he will not be as hostile as the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Reid). I hope that on behalf of this government he will come clean, take one step forward and produce information that rightly belongs to this House and the public.

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) has been very persuasive in his argument. He stated that he has obtained part of the copy of the Air Canada contract dating back to 1937. Because of that, and the fact that he has made some very persuasive arguments, he has convinced me that he should have all of the contract. There are other orders in council that go with this. I propose to agree to the hon. member's motion. If I get the unanimous consent of the House, I propose to table those copies.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McIsaac: There is more than one order in council that makes up the current contract. I must say that I believed what I told the hon. member in my earlier answer. At that time I was not personally aware of all of the contract. I do not mind telling the hon. member that I agree in a general way with the spirit of his remarks. Some of the problem and perhaps misunderstanding with regard to Air Canada and other Crown corporations could be prevented if there were more agreements to the kind of request made by the hon. member. There is no reason, in my mind, why there should be any tremendous security surrounding Crown corporations such as Air Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McIsaac: As I say, if we are going to do in this House as we did a few weeks ago with regard to rail transportation and costing, surely the same argument should apply to making available what has been requested by the hon. member in this regard. I will accept the hon. member's motion. When we have dealt with it, I will ask for unanimous consent to table two copies of the contract, in English and in French.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, even before we got the favourable word from the other side of the House, I was prepared to support the motion of the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). I am delighted that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIsaac) has indicated the government is prepared to agree to it. It does seem ridiculous that a document which is available in the public archives is one that the government for so long has been refusing to table in the House of Commons.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): It will support a pension bill, too.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My good friend and neighbour, the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) who represents a constituency just across the river from me, has brought in the question of pensions. I certainly hope that one of these days very soon he and I will be able to persuade the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) to talk turkey to Canadian National Railways and get something done about those pensions. I know that is not the subject, but I do not mind getting off into it. However, I can hear our very efficient occupant of the chair saying "Order".

I always enjoy these quips with my good friend from Vegreville about socialism and socialists. He either looks at us or appears to be looking at us. However, I thought there was a bit of inconsistency in his argument today. He cited the United Kingdom as a place where this sort of thing would not happen because they have a special committee to deal with nationalized industries. Does he not know that it is a Labour, or socialist government in Britain? Does he not know that in Sweden, a socialist country, they have the best arrangement in the world for making documents public? The trouble with socialized industries in this country is that they are run by Liberals.

Mr. Horner: Socialists in a hurry; that's the only difference.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I say to the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) that the Liberals are in a hurry only in times of minority government. When they have the kind of majority they have today, their speed is that of either a tortoise or a snail. Take your pick. At any rate, I got that off my chest. The hon. member for Vegreville and I have had the kind of exchange in public that we sometimes have in private. I join with the rest in saying we are glad this motion is going to be carried and that the documents in question will be tabled.

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take very much time in this discussion since the parliamentary secretary has swallowed his earlier words and is now prepared to table documents which he previously withheld. Because I think it is a remarkable development, I want to deal with the demonstration that is inherent in the action by the parliamentary secretary today and the absolutely arbitrary method in which documents are considered to be confidential or not confidential.

We have a situation here where an Air Canada contract was regarded as confidential yesterday. Suddenly, today, by some act of magic or some magic wand, it is deemed to be acceptable to table it in the House of Commons. Yesterday it was confidential, today we can have it. That indicates how completely arbitrary the position of this government is as to keeping public information out of the public domain. There is obviously no consistent policy on the part of this government regarding information. There is no consistent policy with regard to what is to be held back in the public interest and what is to be made available to the House of Commons in the public interest.

We have known for some time that the government has no information policy except as indicated to me by an assistant deputy minister in a senior department, that is, to stamp "Confidential" on the toilet paper or any other paper which happens to be in circulation in the offices. Surely today we have underlined the complete absence of any kind of over-all policy regarding the public right to information. It has been made absolutely clear that the decision whether a document should be published or should remain secret is an arbitrary one depending on such things as the state of the moon, or which side of the bed the minister or the parliamentary secretary got out of in the morning.

Yesterday the document was so confidential that neither parliament nor the public could be permitted to see it. Today, by some magic occurrence, it can be tabled in the House of Commons. I welcome the tabling of the document. I welcome the latter-day conversion of the parliamentary secretary. I hope he does not disappear from our midst as a result of his conversion to the point of view that parliament has a right to obtain information with which it is properly concerned.

While the decision is very welcome, it demonstrates, as nothing else can, how arbitrary is the information policy followed by the government and the complete lack of consistency regarding what will be kept secret and what will be made public. It also underlines the futility of the guidelines applied to the release of information. We now know that the only guideline is what members on the treasury benches opposite want to do. In a system which is supposed to be concerned about the informed participation of the citizenry, that is obviously not a proper viewpoint to take.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is it the disposition of the House that I should put the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Does the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIsaac) wish to table documents in pursuit of the motion?

Mr. McIsaac: Yes, Mr. Speaker, two copies in both official languages.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

REMOVAL OF PROVISION ALLOWING DEDUCTION OF EXPENSES FOR ADVERTISING IN NON-CANADIAN PERIODICALS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Faulkner (on behalf of Mr. Turner) that Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act, be read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

Non-Canadian Publications

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, it is in a very unpleasant mood that this House is dealing with a bill which, offhand, may seem of little importance but which is nevertheless very important. I wish to continue the remarks I had begun before the private members' hour.

I must say that this is the third time that this matter has been put before the House and twice the Liberal government contended that to allow the tax deductibility of advertising expenses of both magazines was beneficial for the Canadian people. How is it that it was justifiable in 1965 and in 1971 and that it should be condemnable in 1975? Was the government right in 1965 and in 1971 or is he right in 1975? Such are the questions which must be asked and about which Parliament is entitled to answers from the government. What justifies the government's new attitude on this matter which is raised today the same way it was ten years ago?

It might be interesting, Mr. Speaker, to review the reasons put forward by the government members at that time and those put forward in 1975. Why this policy reversal? As for me, as member for Bellechasse, I am wondering about that. I would like very much to get answers and very clear explanations. Why the change in attitude? Will that be really beneficial for the Canadian people? Will the Americans be the losers? In short, what will be changed? I think we are entitled to very clear answers from the minister who piloted this bill. As for me, I am ready to receive the explanations that will be provided so that we may give valid answers to our electors, since we have received many inquiries on that matter.

I imagine all hon. members are in the same situation. Many people have taken the trouble to write asking that we take such or such a stand. The majority of letters I received, as I said this afternoon, were mostly in favour of maintaining the status quo.

So can the minister tell the House whether those who advertise or those who own the magazines in question will be the losers? Who will be the losers? Who will be the winners? We need to know. In view of the large public appeal of Reader's Digest I tend to think that Canadians will continue to advertise in those magazines, even without the benefits available under the act. I am giving a pretty neutral opinion but I think that actually, with or without the benefits, in view of the large circulation of those magazines, current advertisers will continue to advertise. So, working on that assumption, I consider that Canadians will be the losers from a monetary standpoint. According to a Canadian Fact poll, even if Reader's Digest loses advertisers, that does not necessarily mean that other Canadian magazines will benefit because they do not have the same circulation; proper consideration must be given to how many people will be reached by an ad.

The same poll shows that 85 per cent of surveyed advertisers want Section 19 of the Income Tax Act to remain as it is. According to the surveys made by Canadian Fact of Digest subscribers who were asked whether they found the magazine to be a threat to our Canadian culture, 65 per cent answered no. So, to have a valid opinion, the reader must be consulted in order to find out whether subscribers feel robbed of their culture by reading such or such an article in that magazine. Twenty-two per cent do not have an opinion or did not want to answer; 7 per cent agree to some extent that it may affect the Canadian culture, and 6 per cent fully agree and are convinced that it is likely to hurt the Canadian culture.

So one can conclude that there is a ratio of 6 per cent to 65 per cent on the cultural side. I would not want to leave the impression that I am more in favour of Americans than Canadians. There is no need to try and show that my preference certainly goes to Canadians and my country. I must analyse the situation objectively in order to be able to make a decision. I hope it will be the right one and if I happen to be wrong, I would not do any worse than those who made mistakes in 1965 and 1971.

However, if the present legislation could be enforced more strictly, I think that eventually the Canadian Reader's Digest would be owned entirely by Canadians. We would then benefit from the experience and the great value of a first rate magazine. I am not attempting to depreciate the others, but I must say that we tried to develop in Canada magazines of true merit. I recognize that we have succeeded, but it does not mean that we should no longer appreciate the fact that many Canadian readers subscribe to a magazine that reports a great number of facts, discoveries and data from other countries that could benefit Canadians.

All the same, we must be sincere and fair in our legislation. I think that each of us is striving to be in the reasons that we put forward to justify our decisions.

I for one remember that a few years ago in the province of Quebec the alarm was sounded with this slogan: Masters in our own house. I remember quite well. Thank God, I still have some memory. Newspaper pages were not big enough to print the key of the masters in their own house, it had to be printed diagonally. Quebecers believed in that memorable phrase: Masters in our own house. However, ten years later we realize that we are not any more masters in our own house than we were before.

One after the other, the Quebec governements have kept going to New York to beg for the money needed to develop our natural resources. Then, we are not yet masters in our own house, we still depend on American financiers. If my memory serves me well, the Canadian government and all the provinces, including Manitoba, did the same thing. They are still going to the United States to ask permission to develop our natural resources. The credit of our country is based on the work of Canadians that is guaranteed by our natural resources, the processing of all kinds of products that our people can use to satisfy their needs. In 1975, we still have to ask permission to New York financiers when we could do otherwise.

We depend on American finance when our country, under the authority of Parliament, the House in which we are sitting tonight, the "salon de la race", should be the supreme authority in our country. We could proceed otherwise under existing legislation, if we decided to act, to exercise fully the authority of a sovereign Parliament and I am in favour of a sovereign Parliament. I am so today, as I was yesterday and will be tomorrow. Because I believe Parliament is the chamber of the representatives of the whole country, of all parts of Canada. According to the Constitution, we are sent here, in a democratically-organized chamber, in order to legislate, to pass laws, to administer the country, and we do hope that we will administer the country in a sovereign Parliament.

That is why I am convinced that we have authority to act legally and, then, to have the decisions of Parliament carried out by the government which consists in the Cabinet. Ministers are there for carrying out the decisions of Parliament. This is the way I feel our democracy should be.

If we do want our ministers to administer this country efficiently, we must give them tools, it is imperative that we show to the people of Canada that we are truly responsible at any level, even at the financial level which is as was said not so many years ago, the sinews of war. Well, if finance is the sinews of war, it is also the sinews of social peace which is a must to administer a country, to be able to really be an autonomous people, a people willing to be the master of its own destiny. I am convinced that the ministers here tonight in the House realize the full significance of what I am saying, and they perfectly know that I speak with the utmost sincerity, because I am fully aware that I am a member of this House which is the supreme authority in my country, and that I am ready to cooperate with all my colleagues, so that we could offer all organizations and citizens of this country with a healthy administration.

It is not only through writings, Mr. Speaker, that culture may be threatened or improved. What is going on with films and television? Nobody can stop Canadians with a TV set from turning it on and picking up American programs. Those programs come to us, our young people watch them. I have children at home and they look at those programs. They are interested or they are not. Future will tell us to what extent they may have been impressed, to what extent our culture will have been improved or destroyed by movies coming from the United States via television.

We let ourselves be overrun, although we do have people with real talent. It is always a surprise for me, week after week, whenever I have a chance to attend events put up by teachers or welfare organizations, who have young people acting in plays as we used to say. I am always favourably impressed with the easiness and talent displayed by our young boys and girls performing in sketches from which a moral can be drawn. They may not always understand the true meaning, of what they play but later on in life they will.

I remember when I was a small boy, I acted with seven girls in a play at the village school. I was the only boy at the end of the row, and I had a role to play. At the time I did not understand it very well, but today I do, and this is why I have a better understanding of Parliament's role.

I remember very well the last sentences which ended the play. We called it the grumbler's scene. There was this teacher who was always dissatisfied with his pupils. If the door was open, he would say: Shut the door. If the door was shut, he would say: Open the door. In my role I had this to say to the teacher: "Finally, do you know exactly what you want? A door must be either shut or open. How do you want it?" And that ended the play. Well, we have the same thing here. We wish to be either a sovereign Parliament, or a dependent Parliament. How do we wish it to be? If we would have a sovereign Parliament. we will have to do what is needed. As far as I am concerned, I am aiming at the essentials, not what is accessory. The essentials I put above everything else. This is why I am against this legislation, because in my view it is not truly essential.

Other measures are vitally needed, but nothing is done about them. We did propose such measures. We are sometimes told that we, in the Social Credit Party, have it easy, because all we have to do is criticize, we have no responsibility as far as governing is concerned. I am well aware of that, but give us a chance to manage this country.

Mrs. Sauvé : Ask the voters!

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): This country is in the worst situation in years.

Mrs. Sauvé: That is for the voters to decide.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): The voters do decide and I am quite happy that they do. However, we do not have the same possibility as the traditional parties of reaching the voters. Those parties influence the voters and the situation remains the same.

Mrs. Sauvé: You must organize more meetings!

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Let me finish my statement and you will see that what I suggest is not so stupid.

I do not wish to make personal remarks since I have always admired my colleagues in this House. When I had the opportunity to speak, I have also respected the opinions of my colleagues. I believe this to be true. Let us be aware of the fact that our country is in an extremely difficult situation. We must fight, on one hand, against a terrible situation called inflation and, on the other hand, against an even more terrible situation which is called unemployment. This is no fun for anyone.

I am not saying that the government is responsible for this. This situation has been brought about by a whole set of circumstances. It has been caused by a system that is diseased, which sometimes opens the valve too much. Then the pressure goes up. Afterwards, the valve is closed up too tight, and the pressure goes down. So, we are never comfortable. We have often suggested to the House, as I am doing again tonight, that we make an earnest effort. We could do worse than the others who tried. We are at the bottom of the hill. The cart is stuck in the mud up to the axles. It cannot sink any further.

Let us try at least new formulas to finance our country, other formulas than those that we have applied until now, at least in the public sector. I believe that it would not be unreasonable for Canada to try to implement a new formula, and if we fail, it would not be worse than in your case: you did fail! Then, we shall say that there is no magic formula. The formula is as follows:

Mr. Béchard: Which one?

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): I thank the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine for his question. This is great! He is a good friend of mine. I know that he is responsible, reasonable. He is asking me: Which formula? Here it is:

The period from 1930 to 1940 was unproductive, a period of inflation, deflation, unemployment, that I and several other members of this House lived through. We had at our disposal some means to feed the people but we did not have any financial means. The then Prime Minister Mr. Bennett, from 1930 to 1935, tried all kinds of formulas to give work to the people. We called that, in the Quebec area, for those who went to work in Valcartier, "the 20 cents". I do not know if you remember that, but I, for one, do remember.

Mrs. Sauvé: We are too young.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): The young people went to work in Valcartier for 20 cents a day; quite a bright future on 20 cents a day! It is really possible to build a house, to build a future! In 1935, the government went to the people. They called an election and it is on that occasion that the leader of my friend, the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Béchard), was elected prime minister.

Mr. Béchard: When was that?

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): In the days of Mackenzie King. He was the one who, during the election campaign, made the same remarks that I am making here tonight. On September 23, he stated in Saskatoon . . .

Mr. Béchard: Were you there?

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): No, I was not there, but newspapers reported what he said. And in those times, the newspapermen really gave information. Then we were told . . .

Mrs. Sauvé: They were not paid for that then.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): They were not paid or coaxed: the party fund took care of that. Mr. Mackenzie King said this: As soon as a people, a nation does not control its currency and its credit, it is useless to talk about democracy. And then he added: If I am elected, the Canadian people will witness the greatest battle between Canadians on one hand and the government and high finance on the other hand that Canada will have ever seen. Then Mackenzie King was elected. So the battle never took place, because he was on the side of those controlling currency and credit in our country. He did something that every Canadian should be proud of. He introduced a legislation establishing a Canadian bank. At that time, they gave the Bank of Canada limited powers but in 1975, we can give the Bank of Canada less restricted powers, in order to allow the government to finance the public sector without being forced to borrow continuously from foreign sources at usurious rates exceeding sense and sensibility. If we, in Canada's Parliament, really want to be responsible citizens in this country, to be a Parliament with a supreme authority, we are empowered to amend that legislation in 1975, so as to authorize the Bank to coin credit for Canadians and to lend at interest rates not exceeding administrative costs.

We have forgotten that the monetary system of a country must be a service meant to serve instead of being exploited by private institutions, just as the postal system must serve all Canadians. The monetary system must serve all Canadians. No one should have the privilege of multiplying by 12, 15 or 16, as is the case now, the deposits of Canadians.

That is where the evil lies, and if we refuse to consider seriously the fact that those are the main tools of those who control our economy, we will never accomplish anything because money is the mainstay, the main tool in our economy. A while ago, I was asked what I intended to propose. This: that we discuss seriously and decide once and for all to amend the Bank of Canada Act in such a way that the Bank of Canada will truly be the Bank of Canadians, the bank serving Canadians. Then, we can shout, arms outstretched to the skies, that we are truly masters in our own house.

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, it is not easy to rise tonight to speak on Bill C-58 and voice the criticisms which I intend to make this evening without being labelled anti-Canadian. I find it hard because I am as fiercely patriotic and as proud as anyone in the country. I long for the day when we, as Canadians, exercise control over many areas of our economy which are presently foreign dominated, but it is important that one remain realistic, and start from conditions as they exist and not from a position that we wish existed. On the one hand we must learn by our mistakes and not lack the courage to initiate measures which will correct those errors. On the other hand, we must face the consequences of our actions and not let our emotions control our minds.

What is this bill attempting to do? The Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) has authorized his special assistant, when replying to letters, to state as follows:

> In the government's view, it is necessary to remove from the Income Tax Act an inconsistency in the application of the law and a provision which works to the disadvantage of Canadian periodicals.

The letter goes on to say:

> Whatever may be the results of the new legislation regarding the operations in Canada of Time and Reader's Digest, they will continue to be sold in Canada and provide the kind of reading material which is enjoyed by their many readers.

Who is being inconsistent? Has anyone told the Secretary of State that advertising revenues and the number of subscribers go hand in hand? When the readers of Reader's Digest are subscribing to American rather than Canadian editions will they, as proud Canadians, start buying Maclean's?

A press release issued by the Secretary of State quotes a royal commission as follows:

> A nation's domestic advertising expenditure should be devoted to the support of its own media of communications, and . . . a genuinely Canadian periodical press can only exist if it has access to a fair share of domestic advertising.

Let us look at that point for a moment, Mr. Speaker. In 1973 general magazines had a 2.4 per cent share of net advertising revenues, or $32 million of a total of $1-1/3 billion. Radio took 11 per cent of that total and television 13 per cent. Radio and television have increased their share of the market, while the share to general magazines has decreased. The real competition for advertising revenues is not foreign controlled magazines but other media. Even amongst magazines, have the Canadian magazines fared badly in comparison to American controlled competition? Miss Chatelaine, Chatelaine and Maclean's have all experienced greater growth than Reader's Digest.

The three Maclean-Hunter publications had a total advertising revenue in 1973 of over $12 million, or 42 per cent of the total advertising revenue of the publications comprising the Magazine Association of Canada. This compares with $6 million for Reader's Digest. I do not believe I am being unfair in suggesting that the motivation of Peter Newman might be profit rather than patriotism. Of course it could be argued that the two go together.

A survey conducted by Canadian Facts Limited indicated that only 7 per cent of the advertising revenues of Reader's Digest would be diverted to Canadian magazines. That is approximately $400,000.

What is the real cost to Canada? Inspection of Reader's Digest Association (Canada) Limited records indicates that five of a board of six Digest directors are Canadian. All of the officers of the company are Canadian citizens, all 500 employees are permanent residents of Canada, and the company gives work indirectly to at least 1,000 other Canadians.

The two magazines are fully edited in Canada for Canadians.

Reader's Digest employs some 80 editors, graphic and production staff on books and magazines. Both magazines have substantial Canadian content amounting to an annual average of 24 per cent English and almost 15 per cent French. Almost 80 Canadian freelance writers, researchers and artists look to Reader's Digest books and magazines as a market for their work. The company has invested $8 million in buildings and manufacturing equipment. Reader's Digest Canadian produced magazines, books, record packages, and educational materials are welcomed as suitable for all age groups.

Close to six million Canadians read and enjoy the Canadian edition of the Digest every month. Reader's Digest Canadian material is made available to, and much of it is used by other editions around the world. Some articles receive exposure to 100 million readers in 13 languages. Reader's Digest has made some 32 per cent of its common stock available to Canadians through a public issue, the only Digest company in the world to do so. Shareholders bought their stock with the understanding that the company's operations were not under any threat at the time the stock was issued. Reader's Digest had that assurance from the government.

● (2040)

Reader's Digest has exceeded every guideline for corporate citizenship ever declared by a government of Canada. The Digest has already outlined to the Secretary of State the economic alternatives facing it if section 19(2) is removed. The only one that would leave it in even a marginally profitable position was based on the following assumptions: ceasing publication of the French language edition, which for years has been subsidized by other profitable operations; importing all English language editorial material from the U.S., with no Canadian editing and selection of articles; dismissing English and French editorial staffs and reducing employment elsewhere in the company. Survival on these terms would mean substantial loss of employment, reduced Digest expenditures in Canada, the loss of the French edition, and the abandonment of Canadian content—in other words a complete negation of Canadianization policies built up over the last 30 years.

Mr. Crouse: Are you listening, Hugh? This chap makes sense.

Mr. Herbert: French-Canadian readers, 1.3 million of them, stand to lose an edition in their own language edited by French-Canadians. French-language editions published in France or other francophone countries are not a practical alternative for French-Canadians.

English-Canadians would lose the substantial Canadian content now in the magazine—24 per cent last year, rising to 30 per cent. They would lose the research, complete editing and article selection now performed by the Canadian editorial team, and would receive instead a magazine edited and designed for American readers. Canadian authors would lose a good market for their work. Reader's Digest Canadian edition's articles about Canada could not be financially supported, and thus would no longer circulate world-wide to an audience of 100 million readers.

Canadian magazine growth since protective legislation was introduced in 1965 has been healthy. Eighty-seven new Canadian magazines, each with a circulation of over 10,000, have emerged since 1965. Total annual circulation of these magazines is 199 million copies. Moreover, with some exceptions, established Canadian magazines have done well. Last August, Lloyd Hodgkinson, publisher of Maclean's, was quoted in the Toronto Globe and Mail as saying, "We have just had the three most prosperous years in the last ten at Maclean's, Chatelaine and Miss Chatelaine."

Has the present Canadian publishing industry considered what would be the effect on it if other countries adopted a requirement on ownership and content similar to that detailed by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Basford)? Thomson Newspapers Limited, through U.S. subsidiaries, publishes some 49 daily and seven weekly newspapers in the United States. Maclean-Hunter Limited in the United Kingdom publishes business periodicals through a wholly-owned subsidiary. In the United States Maclean-Hunter Limited publishes business periodicals through a wholly-owned subsidiary. In France, Italy, Germany, Austria and Brazil, through 50 per cent affiliated companies Maclean-Hunter publishes trade and business periodicals.

Would not our Canadian industry be severely weakened if other countries, specifically the United States, retaliated against the measure we are discussing? Let us face facts. In 1973 Canadians invested more money in foreign countries than was invested by foreigners in Canada. We may not like to see so much of our economy foreign-controlled, but the Canadian investor does not seem to be sufficiently concerned that he wants to buy out foreign investments in his own country.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) has clearly indicated government direction with the Foreign Investment Review Act, a bill which I chaired through committee and which is, I believe, a positive approach to Canadian control. The same ministry issued in 1966 a listing of a dozen guiding principles for good corporate behaviour in Canada. These were for the subsidiaries of foreign companies in Canada. The Reader's Digest Association (Canada) Limited has faithfully lived up to and exceeded those principles.

Let us look for a moment at the clause that requires that issues of a periodical must not be "substantially the same" as one or more issues of a foreign periodical. Since the basis of the Digest's world-wide editorial operation is an exchange of articles of international origin and universal interest, a drastic change in the magazine's content and character would be necessary to meet such a requirement. If such a change were made the magazine would no longer be the Digest. Paradoxically, the clause would also inhibit Reader's Digest from circulating Canadian material abroad, since each time a Canadian article is used in an international edition the Canadian edition becomes more "substantially the same." No publisher, and no reader, could support such a grave restriction on magazine's editorial freedom.

I want now, Mr. Speaker, to turn to the consideration of dumping, corporate profit, and its relevance to this bill. In 1974 Reader's Digest paid $1.6 million in Canadian corporate taxes; the company had a net income of less than $1.5 million, re-invested over $500,000, distributed nearly $300,000 to its Canadian shareholders, and exported, although I do not like the term, something over $500,000 to its parent company. That is what we Canadians paid in 1974 for the foreign investment in Canadian plants and equipment and the creation of 1,500 jobs. That is about 8 per cent on investment, or $400 per job. That return, which could surely not be termed excessive, would be substantially less if the parent company charged more for the material it supplies. Thus I suggest that, thanks to the U.S. parent, Canadians are provided with good material at low cost, and benefit at the same time from the corporate taxes levied on the extra profit resulting from this policy. Far from being detrimental this, I suggest, enables us to make a double gain.

The debate on this bill, Mr. Speaker, would not be complete without reference to the cultural aspects. Is Reader's Digest American culture? Is Maclean's Canadian culture? Do we want less of the former and more of the latter? It is not that simple a choice, even if we answer yes to all three questions. We will certainly lose the Canadian content in the American Reader's Digest. Will we buy fewer copies of Newsweek and U.S. News and World Report, or fewer copies of Playboy or Paris Match because they are American-owned or foreign magazines? Incidentally, Air Canada had a full-page advertisement in the April issue of Travel and Leisure, which magazine has a large Canadian circulation. CP Air had a full-page advertisement, and CN also advertised in this same magazine. All that advertising was paid into American companies and was presumably 100 per cent deductible as an expense.

If I may refer to a recent edition of another U.S. magazine, well over two thirds of the advertising in this magazine applied to products available in Canada. I doubt if the influence on the Canadian consumer goes without recognition.

I would like to quote a few points from articles in magazines and newspapers on this subject which I think are quite pertinent. Martin Murenbeeld, associate professor at the University of Toronto's faculty of management, writing in the Toronto Star said, and I quote:

> To run the risk of error in over-simplification I submit that Saturday Night's problems were not lack of advertising revenues, but lack of consumer appeal. Its circulation is poor; business recognizes the facts for what they are and so does not rush at the opportunity to advertise in its pages. Peter Newman and others will no doubt correct me in my belief that audience appeal leads to circulation leads to advertising revenue . . .
> Canadian culture is something that I and many others personally believe in and wish to contribute towards building. This does not, however, mean that we as consumers must be forced to consume Newman's, the Committee for an Independent Canada's, or anyone else's interpretation of what Canadian culture might be.

Mr. W. E. Belliveau, president of Wilshar Advertising Limited, stated in a letter to the Montreal Gazette, and I quote:

> How many of your readers know that the Maclean-Hunter group already controls 50 per cent of the Canadian magazine publishing industry, plus radio and television stations? With the loss of Time Canada and Readers' Digest this monopoly could exceed 70 per cent. Are we to trade Time Canada for the monopolistic editorial view of world news that would be supplied by the Maclean-Hunter group?

George Radwanski, writing in the Montreal Gazette, said:

> —if a publication could attract readers in the absence of these giants—

That is referring to Time and Reader's Digest.

> —it could also do so right now. And if it can't, then the problem isn't unfair competition but reader appeal.

In a recent edition of the Ottawa Citizen, there is an editorial which begins as follows:

> The regulations governing Time and Reader's Digest to qualify them as Canadian publications, announced by Revenue Minister Ron Basford, are wrong in principle and should be dropped . . .
> The regulations amount to censorship. It is reasonable to insist on Canadian ownership for a publication to get a Canadian tax break. But it is quite wrong to control content.
> In a free society, the contents of magazines and newspapers have to be left to their staffs and subscribers. There may be many publications whose contents the government views with distaste. That's too bad; but that's democracy.

In a recent article, Charles Lynch, who is not always a good friend of the government, said and I quote:

> When governments enter the picture, subsidies cannot be far behind, and government subsidies in the field of publication almost invariably are bad news, never more so than when they are coupled with appeals for patriotic support of the publications in question.

My last quote is a comment in an editorial in the New York Times. I think it is of significance. I quote:

> Cultural chauvinism, never an attractive feature in the affairs of modern nation states, is particularly objectionable when translated into governmental policy reinforced by economic sanctions . . .

—we do not see how a democratic country such as Canada could justify in any way the proposed policy of dictating editorial content. Any prescribed quota of Canadian content would be a form of government censorship.

Ultimately, the issue is neither one of percentages nor of the quality of the material. If Canadians feel that they are badly served by foreign cultural imports, they can always respond by producing better publications at home and lending their patronage to foreign magazines more sensitive to Canadian interests. Censorship or news management by law are the wrong answers.

I have tried to outline the reasons why it is my sincere hope that when this bill gets into committee there will be amendments proposed which will rectify some of the injustices I believe are presently being done, particularly to Reader's Digest, a good corporate citizen. That company has tried hard to follow all the directions of the government, and has endeavoured to live up to all the principles that have been established by the government.

In conclusion, as a member who was elected to support this party I shall abide by the majority wishes of this party which have been clearly expressed in caucus, and I shall vote to send this bill to committee. My speech tonight is made with the sincere hope that in committee suitable amendments will be proposed so that the disastrous effects of the legislation as it is presently drafted will not mean the demise of Reader's Digest magazine.

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, although I do not have a reputation for offering gratuitous bouquets to members opposite, I would be mistaken if I did not commence my remarks this evening by saying it was a pleasure to be able to sit through the speech of the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert). His comments were well informed, balanced and very fair. I hope his colleagues on the government side, particularly the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner), were attentive to what he had to say and will be responsive to the concerns he expressed.

All of us agree with the goal of trying to give protection and incentive to the Canadian magazine publishing industry. There is no question about the validity of that goal or our desire to see it achieved. While we agree upon the goals we would like to see achieved, we differ sharply on the means of realizing them.

I am an economic nationalist. I believe it is vital that we control our own economy if we are to remain as an autonomous country. It must be obvious that, if the political independence of this country is to be meaningful, we must ensure that decisions as to the future of this country and its people are made here in Canada and not in the corporate board rooms, union head offices, or legislatures of other countries.

Since the days of Macdonald the members of this party have strongly supported the concept that there is a need for the government to act to protect our nationhood and give incentives and protection to Canadian industry to develop here in Canada. However, we have also taken the position that our nationalism must not be destructive. It must not be timid, inward looking, or xenophobic. This is something that distinguishes us most directly from our friends to the left and from some of my colleagues across the way. Very often the comments they make under the guise of nationalism seem to be anti-American or xenophobic. They show some expression of a national inferiority complex. They feel we are incapable of competition on an international scale.

Let us do whatever we can to give protection to Canadian industry and Canadian culture, but let us be careful that when we provide protection for our industries and our countrymen that we do not also deprive our people of the benefits of international competition and the enrichment of our national fabric that comes from interchange with those from other countries. Let us also make sure that we do not simply enshrine mediocrity as a national goal.

Just as I am an economic nationalist, I am a cultural nationalist. There is no purpose in maintaining the mechanisms of political autonomy, or of being masters in our own house in economic affairs if, when we make decisions, we think in the same way as we would think if we belonged to another country. We are responsible for creating an environment in which Canadians are able to live their own lives, to foster dreams which are unique to this country, and to set goals which are good for Canada. It is for this reason that I think we cannot help, as a parliament, being economic nationalists and, as well, cultural nationalists.

I personally support unequivocally the government's plan to disallow advertizing write-offs for television when that advertizing is shown on American television stations and aimed at Canadians. The broadcasting industry in Canada today is threatened in large part by the myopia suffered by Canadian governments and by the ham-fistedness of those governments in dealing with the broadcasting industry. We must give whatever assistance is necessary to prevent limited advertizing dollars from being bled off into the United States, especially when we receive so little in exchange.

The provision contained in the bill before us is a position step in favour of Canadian nationalism and is not one which is designed to penalize anyone or to get at a particular corporation. It is readily defensible, because what the measure is designed to do is to give some degree of protection to the Canadian industry. I do not think the U.S. can very properly object to our desire to keep Canadian dollars from flowing out to American television stations when the products they advertize are American and contain little of Canadian content.

If the actions of the government since the minister has been Secretary of State had been positive and aggressive, if he had taken action to protect our fledgling film industry or to encourage our book-publishing industry and our Canadian magazine industry, I would not view the legislation before us with such suspicion. But that is not the case. The measure we are considering here is a punitive action more fitted to drive American-owned publications out of our country rather than building a strong and vital Canadian publishing industry. This is the one thing which to me, Mr. Speaker, distinguishes the actions of the government and of the Secretary of State. Far from creating, through aggressive positive policy, an environment in which the Canadian publishing industry can prosper and thrive, the government instead has taken merely symbolic and punitive actions against two prominent American corporations.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Merely punitive tokenism.

Mr. Beatty: As my hon. friend says—punitive tokenism. Mr. Speaker, make no mistake about it, the passage of the bill before us will not ensure the success of the Canadian publishing industry. Speeches of members on the other side leave the impression that once the Canadian editions of Time and Readers' Digest have been killed we shall move into the golden age of the Canadian magazine industry. Such is not the case. Indeed, there is a significant possibility that the action we are contemplating may be detrimental to the future of the industry in Canada. As Canadian advertizers may well find, it is by no means certain that the remaining periodicals in Canada will give economic access to sufficiently large markets to make advertizing in Canadian periodicals a worthwhile prospect.

We might very well find that because of the absence of a package which would include Time and Readers' Digest to deliver a large market to Canadian advertizers at a very low cost, advertizers will be inclined to shift their advertizing dollars to another medium, resulting in money going from the publishing industry to some other media. Indeed we have only to look at the size of the market reached by Time and Readers' Digest to realize how important they are as part of a package to deliver a large advertizing market to Canadian advertizers.

Readers' Digest is the number one magazine in terms of readership sold in Canada. Time magazine is number four. The survey which was taken on behalf of Readers' Digest by Canadian Facts Ltd. showed, as some previous speakers have mentioned, that probably only about 19 per cent of the revenues which currently go to Time and Readers' Digest will go to Canadian periodicals instead. The government disputes this figure, as did the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) earlier. But no one has offered any evidence to the contrary. It has simply been said that the figure might be wrong, or that it was felt to be wrong. What is striking about the minister's attitude in this regard is his insistence on pushing ahead, forcing the legislation through the House before we have had an adequate opportunity to assess the impact it will have upon the Canadian periodical industry.

I think it worth saying, because it is true and because it is not stated often enough, that Canadians have not been ill-served by Time and Readers' Digest. I listened with interest to the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie decrying the activities of Time magazine. But I do not think we have been ill-served by Time. Yes, that magazine does give an American perspective, but it also provides an extremely good synopsis of world events over the week. I would argue that as well as reading Time we can diversify our reading by following comparable magazines published in other countries, such as The Economists.

Even if the elitists among us—people like the Secretary of State—believe that Canadians have been ill-served and that their needs have not been satisfied by Time and Readers' Digest, I would plead with the government to listen to the voice of the Canadian public. Canadian readers do not believe they have been ill-served. It is apparent when one considers that Readers' Digest enjoys first place in sales of magazines, and Time is number four, that these periodicals fulfil a need in Canada. The Canadians in my constituency who are regular readers of Readers' Digest and Time do not buy these magazines because they think that they are poor in quality or content; they do so because they find they have needs which are only being met by these publications at the present time.

The minister may argue that it is necessary for Canadian magazines to fill the void. I hope that Canadian magazines will do so. But I would prefer to see Canadian magazines growing up in competition with the magazines we now have available to us, rather than see those two particular magazines destroyed and merely hope that Canadian successors will be good enough to take their place.

With respect to Time magazine I would point out that the reporters working for that publication have distinguished themselves among others in their profession. Although I had some quarrel with the author of an article in which I was mentioned earlier this year, I certainly cannot disagree with the high regard in which reporters of Time are held by their peers. They have often broken stories ahead of their competitors. The Canadian section of the magazine has provided good sources of Canadian news.

I would also stress, as did the hon. member for Vaudreuil, that Readers' Digest has consistently provided a high degree of Canadian content. Even more important though is that Readers' Digest has presented a vehicle for Canadian writers to get their work read abroad. I am very interested in having Canadian works read in Canada by Canadians. But I think that Canadian artists are first rate and that Canadian writers are first rate. Their work should be seen or read abroad, and we should find mechanisms to encourage the distribution of Canadian work abroad.

There is a great distinction in my mind between the parts of the bill which deal with television and those parts which involve publications. The part of the bill concerned with television is a measure to protect the outflow of Canadian advertising dollars into the United States where those dollars provide few jobs for Canadians and little, if any, Canadian content. The second part of the measure, that dealing with periodicals, is very different. It will cost hundreds of Canadians their jobs. It will eliminate Canadian content currently made available by the two publications affected, and it will remove substantial secondary and tertiary benefits to Canadian suppliers. This is particularly the case in Montreal where many small Canadian businessmen do work for Readers' Digest. It will soon become apparent that many small businessmen will be adversely affected by this part of the bill.

There is no significant and positive step taken under the legislation to provide incentives for Canadian publishers. What it will do is merely redistribute the same number of advertising dollars, and the suggestion is that the number of advertising dollars going to periodicals may in fact diminish.

I am sure that I am just as interested as the Secretary of State in seeing a Canadian news weekly established in this country. We should make no mistake about the reason for the absence of such a Canadian publication at the present time. It is not because of U.S. controlled competitor has co-opted the market in Canada by publishing a Canadian news weekly. The minister stressed the fact that Time magazine is not a Canadian news weekly, and I agree with that. The content is largely American or international, and the percentage of Canadian content is in fact low.

● (2110)

Of course the people who read Time are not paying their 75 cents primarily for the six or seven pages of Canadian news. They are buying it because it provides a perspective on world and American affairs which they cannot get elsewhere.

An hon. Member: They still will.

Mr. Beatty: The hon. member says that they still will be able to buy it, but he misses the distinction I am trying to make. I suggest that if after the Canadian versions of Time and Reader's Digest are killed, as the minister and my friends to my left would like, there is going to be a market for a Canadian news weekly and Canadians will want to buy it then, but that need is not being met at the present time.

My friend suggests that they will be able to buy the American edition of Time even after the Canadian edition is put out of business. Indeed he is correct. This is why people are buying it at the present time. They are buying it largely for United States news. The hon. member is not addressing himself to the fact that the existence of an American news magazine concentrating on American and international content has not co-opted the field if there is a market for a Canadian magazine concentrating on Canadian affairs. Both the Secretary of State and the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie have made the point that it is the American content we are buying and not the Canadian content. If there is to be that market after this bill passes, there is that market today.

I am not satisfied with the blandishments of the minister who suggests that it is only by driving out Time and Reader's Digest that we are going to get the seed money necessary to establish a new Canadian news weekly and allow it to get going. I simply do not see any evidence for that.

Let us look at who is going to be filling the vacuum if my friends drive Time and Reader's Digest out of business. The vacuum will be very ably and very quickly filled by Maclean-Hunter, a large, wealthy and powerful Canadian publishing giant. I am intrigued to see my hon. friends to my left, who often go on at great lengths to decry large business, supporting a measure which is going to result in the lion's share of the revenue which is currently going to Time and Reader's Digest going into the hands of the corporate giant in Canada in the publishing industry. Let us make no mistake about that.

My friends have talked about the need for a Canadian publishing industry. None of us quarrel with that. Indeed the most dynamic Canadian publishers are not the fat cat corporate giant publishers who are publishing their widely read Canadian publications at the present time. The most innovative ones are the small ones who are publishing on a very marginal footing at present.

The advertising revenue which is going to be taken away from Time and Reader's Digest is not going to go to the publishers operating out of church basements; it is going to find its way largely into the hands of the Maclean-Hunter group. I think that instead of talking about punitive action directed against Time and Reader's Digest we should be talking about positive action designed to create an environment in which the Canadian publishers can flourish. That does not mean handouts by the government, it means creating an environment in which they can survive on their own.

I mentioned earlier that the reason why there is not a Canadian news weekly concentrating on Canadian affairs at the present time is not that Time magazine has co-opted the field. If anybody in Canada has the resources and the entrepreneurial skills to fill the void and to satisfy those market needs the Secretary of State is talking about for a Canadian news weekly, that is Maclean-Hunter. It has the money and the entrepreneurial skills to do it at the present time.

While I do not deny that Canadian nationalism is an attractive concept in the Maclean-Hunter corporate board rooms, I also do not take lightly the dedication of that corporation to profit, and that is something that was glossed over by my friends to the left. It is clear they are the ones, and not the struggling Canadian publisher, who will be reaping the most substantial benefits from the government's action.

I personally, as a Conservative and a free enterpriser, would be the last to denounce the ability of the Canadian businessman to make profits. But I do ask that we do not delude ourselves as to who the government beneficiaries in fact will be. They will not be the small businessman, they will be the large corporations.

Another area in which I have strong concern is in the area of interpretation of "Canadian publication" and what would constitute a Canadian publication. The Minister of National Revenue would assign in effect a Canadian content quota on our magazines if they are to receive the critical designation of a Canadian publication. This provision, despite the government's anxious denials, smacks very much of censorship, and it could readily be applied to newspapers which rely substantially upon international wire services for foreign news coverage, or television programs that are taken from foreign networks for events that take place outside our country.

Having sat in parliament for some time and having watched the government perform, it certainly would not be inconceivable to me to see the extension and the invocation of this principle or doctrine against newspapers and television networks in this country that are printing or showing reports about domestic activities or domestic events which the government dislikes. Certainly the case in the United States was that the administration there used its power to intimidate the news media, and used it in a very heavy-handed way.

I believe, as a Conservative who believes in limited government, that where the potential for abuse exists we have a threat to our freedom in a democracy. However much this government protests that it does not intend to abuse its powers, I believe Canadians should regard the government's actions with considerable attention, as indeed they should regard any attempt by its successors to take more power that will affect the freedom of information in a democratic society.

There is no doubt that in this majority parliament, and particularly in respect of this measure on which the government is assured of the support of their ideological cousins to my left, this legislation will in fact be passed. Before long in Canada the Canadian editions of Time and Reader's Digest will disappear, and Canadians will be able to get articles about how Adrienne Clarkson discovered Toronto, and about the Prime Minister's 10 favourite recipes for maple syrup, on a bi-weekly basis instead of on a monthly basis as is the case at the present time.

The government, once it has taken the punitive and symbolic measure it proposes at the present time, will then resume its policy of dynamic paralysis in which the minister allows Canadian culture to struggle alone against governmental indifference, and protest like crazy that somebody else is to blame.

This minister who is so anxious to push this through would have more credibility if he could convince me that the people he is supposed to be serving, the Canadian artistic community, in fact have his backing. Such is not the case. Indeed rumours abound that if the minister fails to get Reader's Digest put out of business, Canadian writers will have a market for a new article to be published in the Canadian edition of Reader's Digest on the Secretary of State, entitled "My most forgettable character".

If it wanted to, the government could move tomorrow to pump new life into our publishing industry. It could reform the operations of our costly and inefficient Post Office so Canadian publishers could get their material promptly and cheaply distributed. If it were serious the government could change the write-offs for advertising in Canadian publications to a positive and substantial tax credit which would provide a positive incentive for Canadian businesses to advertise in our publications. If the government were sincere it could improve distribution of periodicals in Canada to assure Canadians access to Canadian publications.

It has not been the federal government but the government of Ontario that has pioneered in pointing out the breakdown of our periodical distribution industry. This government has sat idly by as the periodical industry in Canada and in Ontario was taken over by a United States corporation, and as Canadian periodicals suffered at the hands of those U.S. distributors. The government would not act.

I started my remarks by mentioning our first Prime Minister, Sir John A. Macdonald. I shall now turn to him because his government differed from this drifting and complacent government. The difference between our present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and our first Prime Minister is striking. In Macdonald's day we did not have to call conferences to decide what it means to be a Canadian. There was no opposition, except from the predecessors of today's Liberal Party, those who periodically cherish continentalist notions in the desire to preserve our Canadian nationhood. Our artists did not have to try to convince our citizens of our potential to build a society that would be unique in the world, and an example to other countries. In Macdonald's day Canadianism was not simply a refuge from the world. Canadians defined themselves not in terms of what we were not, but in terms of our goals and dreams for this country.

Today Macdonald's vision has been lost and we are governed by an administration that is characterized by drift and default. In its resources, its geography, its idealism, and industry in respect of its people, this country can be the envy of the world. But if we are to realize our potential it will take new leadership on the treasury benches. The need for new direction in government has never been greater than now.

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, in this debate on Bill C-58 it is my intention to deal with the publications issue and not with the implications with respect to the television industry. My colleagues who have more knowledge in the broadcasting fields will, I am sure, be better able to comment on that aspect.

In my remarks I should like to examine first of all the basic problem the government has sought to solve, and then I should like to deal in some detail with the adverse affects of this proposed legislation. By way of background it should be said that Reader's Digest has had a Canadian edition and a Canadian company for some 32 years, and Time Magazine, perhaps sensing government action, established its Time Canada in Montreal to produce Canadian editions in 1962. These companies have both been good corporate citizens, and we have been bad hosts. The losers, if the government goes ahead, will be the Canadian people generally. Time and Reader's Digest can pull back and go to freer political climes. Someone might ask how that could be.

In his statement on January 23, 1975, the minister, in referring to the 1965 law said that the intent of section 19, in the first place, was to support the Canadian magazine industry, then as now, weakened by the virtual domination of the market by American publications. Did Canadians want the government to support the Canadian magazine industry? We do not know. We do not have the information on which to base that conclusion. If the government thought so, why did it not just take some funds from the general revenue and give them to the industry if it wanted to support the industry? Heaven knows the government has given away money pretty freely, probably in many instances where the recipients may be less worthy.

The minister in that statement continued to say that instead of legislating against the entry of American material, which would have been an interference with the free flow of information and ideas, the framers of section 19 legislated an advantage, or incentive, for actual and potential Canadian magazines. Well, what was the result of the incentive for actual and potential Canadian magazines? Ten years afterward, in 1975, Newsweek, United States News and World Report, and hundreds of other foreign periodicals are selling well in Canada while, curiously, many Canadian publications have had severe financial problems and some have ceased publishing. Perhaps it is time to do something for the Canadian publishing business. What does the government say it will do?

It might be interesting for a moment to look at the words of the minister who, in November, said that section 19 will have an advantage or incentive for Canadian magazines. I have paraphrased that slightly, but the intent is there. How often have we heard recently about the special privileges granted Time and Reader's Digest? Even the Canadian Periodical Publishers' Association does not seem to have their story straight. I should like to read a short paragraph from their recent letter dated April 21 this year, in which they say:

We firmly believe that with Time 'Canada' and Reader's Digest competing with Canadian magazines on an equal basis, there will be exciting new work for more writers, designers, photographers, printers, typographers and others in the graphic arts across Canada.

But they have been on an equal basis. The government seeks to alter that by this legislation. The intent was to give special privileges to Canadian magazines, and Time and Reader's Digest for reasons we will examine later were deemed to be Canadian magazines. So, what these two were getting was not treatment that differed from that given to Canadian magazines, but rather was identical treatment.

Probably realizing the contribution of some publications to the well-being of Canada—and do not forget that section 19(2) uses the expression "being edited and printed and published in Canada"—the government decided in 1965 to treat certain non-Canadian publications as if they were Canadian. One can see the government's dilemma. It had pressure on the one hand from its friends in the publishing field in Canada, and pressure on the other hand from its friends in the foreign publishing field.

Let us step back for a moment and take a look at the real effect of Bill C-58. It really will have little effect on Canadian readers. Time and Reader's Digest will still be available to mail subscribers and at newsstands. What it really will do is discriminate against Canadian advertisers. How will it discriminate against Canadian advertisers, one may ask? It will tell the Canadian advertiser that the cost of his advertising in the periodical of his choice will double if the magazine is a non-qualified one. It should be obvious that the Canadian advertiser is unlikely to buy space, for example, in Playboy because the distribution in Canada as a market area is such a small fraction of the total distribution.

That same Canadian advertiser, however, might not want to buy space in a Canadian magazine, even at a much lower cost, because the cost index per reader is too high. But the Canadian advertiser who wants to advertise in a magazine edited, published, and printed in Canada, such as Time Canada and Reader's Digest, is told by the government that the penalty for so doing is the denial of deductibility of this expense. This is discrimination, or censorship by taxation. That is not news to us on this side. Who can not remember the retaliatory action taken by the government against resource producers in the western provinces?

What may not be fully realized by some hon. members is that the advertising that would be placed, for example, in Playboy would be deductible by the advertiser because it would not be, to quote the act, "directed primarily to a market in Canada". So, too, advertisements in Time U.S., Newsweek and other foreign publications would be allowed as a deduction in arriving at net income under the Canadian Income Tax Act because it could be directed to a market that was primarily Canadian.

Similarly, Canadian advertisers in say Vancouver or Montreal can deduct the cost of advertising in daily papers in Washington State or New York State. Many businessmen in real estate and other fields use this method of selling their goods or services.

Another aspect of such discrimination will come from the situation where a foreign brand name producer will be able to advertise and deduct the cost in a periodical in Canada. Although not directly involved, the Canadian dealer selling that product will have in effect deducted his share of the cost of this advertisement because it will be hidden in the cost of his product. To put it in simpler terms, a Chevrolet dealer—if we want to take that example—will benefit from advertisements by the U.S. parent company, and the cost of those advertisements will be written off by that Canadian dealer because it is hidden in the cost of his automobiles. Compare this with the Canadian producer of some product who wants to advertise in the same magazine and is refused the right to deduct the cost. Will the "Big Brother" Liberal government help him out when his sales lag or when his expenses are too high? Is this a way for our government to encourage Canadian industry?

I do not want to enter the emotional debate on the value of either Time or Reader's Digest. In fact, I seldom read either of them. May I say, however, that I have received hundreds of letters from readers in my constituency who will be very disappointed and angry if these magazines are forced to leave Canada.

In an article released in March the minister said:

Our intention is not to throw these magazines out of the country.

They can conform to the law by meeting the conditions set out in section 19 and become Canadian magazines. Or, like hundreds of other popular foreign magazines which get no special favours from the Government of Canada, they can compete for your attention and advertisers' money. Whichever alternative Time and Reader's Digest accept, Canadians will not be "deprived of the right" to read editions of these magazines.

First of all, commenting on the minister's remarks, if Time and Reader's Digest were to conform to the law by meeting the conditions in section 19, they would cease to be controlled by the present producers, and there is every likelihood that through change they would indeed cease to exist.

Picture, if you can, the Canadian issue of Time or Reader's Digest competing with the U.S. issues. After being stripped of the benefits of the parent organization, the resulting losses would probably call for more government interference to ban, perhaps altogether, foreign publications in Canada.

The minister went on in his remarks in that article to mention the hundreds of other popular foreign magazines which get no special favours from the Government of Canada. It should be pointed out that the advertisers therein are also not penalized by the Canadian government. These foreign magazines are purchased for enjoyment and probably carry little advertising for the Canadian market, but if they did carry some the cost would be deductible by the advertiser because it is not directed primarily to a market in Canada.

The minister says that Canadians will not be deprived of the right to read editions of these magazines. Certainly I would agree that Time and Reader's Digest will continue to be available on our newsstands and will continue to be mailed to Canadian subscribers, and that Canadians will still read them. But Canadians will be deprived of the Canadian section of Time magazine and they will be deprived of the articles in the Reader's Digest which now appear only in the Canadian edition.

Will Canadians suffer any other losses through this government action? Well, the French edition of Reader's Digest will certainly disappear. I am not sure how the government, which supports so strongly the bilingual program, feels about eliminating the French edition for French speaking Canadians. The advertising that Canadians read in these magazines will be strictly American. Who knows what sales will be lost by Canadian businesses which will have lost this great audience for their advertisements?

What will happen to Canadians presently employed in Vancouver at Evergreen Press, and in Montreal, who edit and print the Canadian editions of these magazines? I am sure that the electors in Vancouver Centre and in Westmount wonder what they were doing when they voted to send two cabinet ministers down here—not just two backbenchers—who would agree to close down these businesses in their very own ridings.

What about the editorial and support staff? Will they be thrown to the wolves as well? And what of the rights of the 550 Canadians who presently own 32 per cent of the Canadian operation of Reader's Digest? They are in a minority position, and the value of their considerable investment has been jeopardized by the actions of the government.

I have not followed the value of Reader's Digest shares on the Toronto Stock Exchange recently, but earlier in the year the stock had fallen from a high of $10.25 to $7, a loss of 30 per cent of the value for those Canadians who invested their hard earned cash in a venture in which they believed.

This Canadian company provides employment for 500 Canadians, and twice that number have supporting jobs outside the company. The Canadian company has a capital of some $8 million, and we have a government that says it wants Canadians to invest in Canada!

One other little heard comment in this argument is the effect that this legislation will have on the Post Office. I am sure the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) has thought of it, but even the Secretary of State agrees that subscribers will still be able to read their Time and Reader's Digest, even if it happens to be the U.S. edition. What is not often mentioned is that the Canadian Post Office will deliver these magazines free of charge even if they are not mailed in Canada.

At present some $3 million is gained by the Canadian Post Office for carrying these magazines from Montreal and Vancouver to subscribers' homes. If they are mailed in the U.S., the Canadian Post Office will still be called upon to deliver them, but under international post office agreements will get not one cent for its trouble. Perhaps the Postmaster General should whisper this tale of woe in the ear of the Secretary of State.

I have not dwelt at all on the content requirements which the government wants to impose. The main reason is that it is still quite unclear just what requirements the government has in mind. The Minister of National Revenue has made some reference to the percentage of Canadian content, but nothing has been said about what constitutes Canadian content. Would it be written by a Canadian in a foreign country, or would it be written about a Canadian by a foreigner, or would it be all right if it was written in Canada but by a foreigner about a foreigner?

The Secretary of State says this is not censorship, but he goes on to state what the content must not be. He says his government is not telling Canadians what to read, but it is telling magazines what they can print. I am sure readers in Canada will see this as censorship and as another step in the government's attempt to control the people of Canada.

My colleagues have explained our party's position, which has long been known by Canadians. The PC party favours Canadian ownership of business in Canada. We have long advocated incentives for individuals who are willing to invest in Canada. We are prepared to accept the facts of majority Canadian ownership, but we object most strenuously and cannot agree to government control in publishing content, and we know of no branch of the publishing industry in Canada that would be willing or able to accept this kind of censorship.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak on behalf of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang). There have been consultations between the various parties in connection with third reading of Bill C-19, and I understand that there has been agreement that we proceed now to third reading of Bill C-19 before hearing another speaker on the present bill. My colleagues may want to say a word on this.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I thought for a moment the minister was rising to participate in the debate and I would look forward to hearing his contribution, but there have in fact been consultations, in the usual disarming way in which these are conducted, and we have agreed that there might be third reading tonight. I understand that agreement is satisfactory to the New Democratic Party as well, although there is no one here from that party.

Mr. Symes: Walter, please!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I do apologise. There is a member of the New Democratic Party here.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCleave): It would have been my intention to recognize the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Joyal) next in the debate on Bill C-58. If there is unanimous consent that that debate be adjourned, at least temporarily, the motion for third reading of Bill C-19 may be put. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

TWO-PRICE WHEAT ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR PAYMENTS FOR WHEAT PRODUCED AND SOLD IN CANADA FOR HUMAN CONSUMPTION

Hon. Marc Lalonde (for the Minister of Justice) moved that Bill C-19, to provide for payments in respect of wheat produced and sold in Canada for human consumption in Canada, be read the third time and do pass.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

INCOME TAX ACT

REMOVAL OF PROVISION ALLOWING DEDUCTION OF EXPENSES FOR ADVERTISING IN NON-CANADIAN PERIODICALS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Faulkner (on behalf of Mr. Turner) that Bill C-58, An Act to amend the Income Tax Act, be read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

Mr. Serge Joyal (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I am really anxious to take part in the debate this evening not solely as a result of the points made by some of my colleagues who spoke on the meaning of Bill C-58, but also to correct some statements reported by newspapers and media on the future activities of the Readers' Digest if Bill C-58 is passed in its present form. However, before taking up again each of those arguments, I would like to remind the House that Bill C-58 is not an isolated bill. For the past five years more particularly, the government has undertaken at the international level, to diversify considerably the traditional markets of Canada. We have noted at the international level that our economy is much too dependent on the American market and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce has made considerable efforts to send missions and open offices in various countries, more especially in Latin America and the Middle East.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) stated this week during the consideration of his estimates that our trade with countries such as Venezuela had more than doubled during the past year. We have registered a large increase as far as Iran and Saudi Arabia are concerned.

On the national level, the government has set as its highest priority the passage in two steps of a legislation meant to enable the Canadian people to make a fair and complete contribution to the definition of our economic destiny. The policy presently implemented by the Foreign Investment Review Agency which has operated for the past year has shown that the need was becoming more and more urgent and that without an immediate intervention, we would very shortly be running the risk of merely becoming an extension of the neighbouring market. The second stage of this legislation aiming to control new foreign investments has been long overdue. This morning, newspapers reported that the Quebec government has revealed the guidelines of its control policy on foreign investment. It is not without reason that one of the major sectors that will be subjected to the provincial agency will be the social and cultural sector, and for obvious reasons in the case of the province of Quebec.

In the cultural field, and particularly in the field of publishing, the federal government has taken many steps over the last three years. I listened this afternoon to the opposition spokesman who read a list of suggestions that he qualified as positive ones in order to improve the publishing industry in Canada. I should like to remind him that several of his suggestions have already been implemented by the federal government. On the one hand, the federal government directed its efforts to the consideration of amendments to the Foreign Investment Review Act in such a way as to include publishing firms, and also to allow the Review Agency to consider and refuse, as the case may be, the expansion in Canada of foreign-controlled publishing firms. Bill C-58, therefore, is not an isolated measure. On the other hand, the Canadian publishing industry support program has been substantially increased in the last year. More than $1,500,000 have been earmarked for this program and during the year 1972-73, more than 400 books have been published and put on the Canadian market.

The hon. member of the opposition also pointed out the need to put publications on the Canadian market in federal buildings. Rules were passed under which adequate quantities of Canadian publications, books and magazines, should be made available to the public in bookshops located in federal buildings.

Finally, direct financial assistance was given owners of bookshops to enable them to open shops not only in the capitals and large centres but also in smaller towns which do not now have access to that kind of service.

Mr. Speaker, I listened closely to my colleagues who brandished the spectre of censorship when Canadian content in the field of publication was discussed. I always find an element of demagoguery in that argument, especially considering the regulations passed by the CRTC in the last few years which are intended to encourage broadcaster now operating in Canada to ensure a Canadian content of at least 60 per cent.

● (2150)

I cannot recall that since those regulations are enforced there have been fears of censorship or protests on the part of the Canadian public about their timeliness. In fact, from the comments I have heard, I note that the public has wondered precisely why the government did not take those steps sooner. Which does not mean, Mr. Speaker, that Canadian television, whether private or public, exercises a censorship or even an embargo against foreign artists or producers or foreign films, which is detrimental to the freedom of which our country has always been a champion.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that a country like Canada, whose economy rests on a relatively limited foundation, whose population is scattered over a territory as vast as that of our neighbours to the south, must take positive steps to ensure not only that it keeps its national identity, but especially that it develop in an atmosphere of freedom.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-58 is part of this general context, and I felt I should recall its outline because I am convinced it is not an isolated gesture but rather one of many elements of the total concept of a cultural policy which it is intended to be as dynamic in the publishing sector as in the film industry and the performing arts. I do not have to recall that the Income Tax Act was amended in order to enable investors who are mainly interested in the movie industry to have appropriate abatements, in order to facilitate and to induce Canadian investments into this industry which must be developed. When we think that a country like Canada is neighbour to an international monopoly at the level of movie production, we cannot help but hope that such legislation will be passed.

When we try to apply the same objectives to the publishing industry, we realize, Mr. Speaker, that one of the first things to do is precisely to define a context in which Canadian publications will be preferred by Canadians.

With Bill C-58, the government does not seek to eliminate Time or the Reader's Digest or the Sélection du Reader's Digest. The government has no right to decide on the relevance of one of these magazines when they comply with the laws of public order and security, Mr. Speaker. The responsibility of the government lays more in ensuring that Canadian publications receive adequate treatment and that, if privileges are to be given, they are given first to Canadian publications.

In the course of the discussions, the spectre of the disappearance of the Reader's Digest has also been raised. Mr. Speaker, this argument does not take into account the economic basis of this firm. As a matter of fact, since 1958, this firm has been engaged in the sale of all kinds of products, because it had a very expanded list of customers, perhaps one of the longest in Canada. It engaged in the sale of records, books, publications, reference material which represent more than 58.6 percent of its aggregate turnover for 1974.

Of the $30 million turnover of Reader's Digest in 1974, more than $18 million came from the sale of articles which have nothing to do with the publishing of the Reader's Digest, the Sélection du Reader's Digest. That means that from 1958 to 1968, the corporation significantly diversified its economic basis in such a way that the portion of the revenue it draws from the sale of the magazine represents only $6 million, that is 20.5 per cent of the gross revenue of the corporation.

It is therefore erroneous to say or to maintain that this corporation would inevitably go bankrupt if it had to stop publishing the magazine tomorrow. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the company made a wise decision in 1958 when it diversified its economic basis, as most dynamic entreprises in Canada do, to protect themselves against market instability. I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that even if Reader's Digest stopped being published, the company would be driven out of business on the Canadian market. Indeed, if it stopped publishing these two magazines completely, it would only lose 13 per cent of its total gross revenues.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that to tell employees and lead them to fear that they would lose their jobs if the magazine was no longer published is to use for demagogic purposes a staff that has always served this entreprise well. And I think that since the federal government is also committed to assist printers, we must keep in mind that the Department of Supply and Services gives contracts to small printing companies for amounts five times higher than those the Reader's Digest receives for the publishing of its two magazines.

The Canadian government is aware that it must help small publishing and printing companies, and I think, Mr. Speaker, that if the government must review its policy, it is precisely in order to decentralize the granting of government contracts, much more than to force small publishers out of business in remote areas, be they in Eastern or in Western Canada.

Through Bill C-58, Mr. Speaker, the government is in fact seeking three things which are quite legitimate. First of all, the government wants a Canadian control over the content of these two periodicals. How can we allow a firm to benefit from tax privileges when it holds a permit under which it can veto the content of articles to be published for the Canadian market? What we are asking this firm is to change its charter so that the control over the content of its publications be brought back to Canada. I do not feel it is too much to ask a multinational in 1975 to surrender this control to the country where it is operating at a profit and has tax privileges.

The second condition the government imposes on Reader's Digest and Time Magazine is that of the Canadian content. Mr. Speaker, I must say that as a Francophone, I was extremely sorry to hear that the translation into French of Reader's Digest is being done in France and not in the province of Quebec. I feel that for the past five years, this government has made great efforts, with the support of the House to promote the development of bilingualism in Canada. The government has even set up a program to transfer to the provinces large amounts of money in order to ensure that services are provided in both official languages.

To leave to France the translation into French of the Reader's Digest, that is a kind of colonialism which the Canadian government has rejected several years ago. Mr. Speaker, I hope, if the Sélection du Reader's Digest is to continue to be published in Canada, there will be enough qualified French speaking Quebequers to ensure the French translation of the articles.

I think it would be quite easy to define, on the basis of the CRTC experience, a content that would take into account the Canadian identity, at the level of either the author or the subject matter or through the way a foreign author could be associated with the magazine. I think, Mr. Speaker, that we have set with CRTC a precedent which still leaves room for a Canadian content in that magazine.

Mr. Speaker, when we talk about foreign ownership, and I will end with that point, I think the Foreign Investment Agency has shown with more necessity that to ask today a corporation to offer Canadians the ownership of its capital is a perfectly legitimate request within the government policy. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I hope I will have the privilege, during the committee stage, to put these arguments forward again, so that the real elements of the problem and not only the ghost of veto or loss of jobs will be out in the open.

HISTORIC SITES—ENTRANCE FEE TO LOWER FORT GARRY—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, during question period this afternoon I asked the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan) to take another look at the question of charging an admission fee to get into Lower Fort Garry which is located on the Red River, about 18 miles or so north of the city of Winnipeg. This afternoon, in asking my question for the seventh or eighth time, I asked the minister to look at this matter with a sense of history.

● (2200)

The fact is, Sir, that for many years Lower Fort Garry was privately owned and operated. It was the preserve of an elite club and the only way you could get into the fort was by belonging to the club or by being a friend of a member of that club. Some of us thought this was unfortunate, for the result was that an historic site in Manitoba was effectively closed to the general public. The day came when the federal government took it over and made it available for the public, which was to be admitted free of charge. We in Manitoba, thought this was a good idea. That regime lasted for quite a few years.

Recently the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development imposed an admission or entrance fee to Lower Fort Garry. In response to the appeals that some of us made, the minister made an adjustment, but it did not amount to much. The fee is still $2 for an adult, and 50 cents for a child. At the beginning there was a family fee of $5, but that has been reduced to $4. That is not much; actually in Manitoba it is felt to be a bit of an insult. Another adjustment was the provision for an annual family pass for $10, which really is meaningless.

I make the point that Lower Fort Garry is not a picnic ground, is not a national park like Banff, is not like Lake Louise or Cape Breton Highlands; you do not travel around in it and camp, and so on. It is an historic site, something one goes to see, not because of the beauty of the place, although it is an attractive spot, but because of an interest in history. One goes in there to see the relics of a bygone century and to feel some of the history of Manitoba, some of the history of western Canada. We, in Manitoba, think it is most unfortunate and most unwise for the government to dampen interest in that historic site by imposing this fee.

All of us who come from the province of Manitoba know that the opposition to this fee is widespread. Organizations right across the spectrum—religious, political, economic and others—feel that this is an unfair practice on the part of the federal government. I hope that even yet the department will go back to the practice of a number of years and charge no fee at all; or, if there must be a fee, let it be a very minimal one indeed. The idea of a family pass for $10 a year or special fee for tour groups, students, and so on, really does not meet the situation. I earnestly hope that the appeal we are making will be considered.

I was interested this afternoon to note a sheer coincidence, because that is what it was. Immediately after my question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development came the question of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Stewart), which he directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), in which he asked if it was not time to prosecute the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development for such an exorbitant increase in its fees. He, of course, was referring to Riding Mountain national park where the increase was 500 per cent or 1,000 per cent. Of course I am referring to a case where the increase is infinity, from zero to the figures to which I just referred.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Just like the Rideau Canal.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No doubt there will be complaints about that; I hope there will be. But I make the point that the Rideau Canal is something on which one travels. One uses a boat to go on the canal. That is not the case with Lower Fort Garry. There is attached to it a kind of park with a golf course and so on. But it is not a campground, a place where you stay overnight. Nor is it a place you drive around. You go there to see the fort, the walls, gun holes, the boats and the ancient equipment in the museum.

If you start charging people to go to a place like that, what will be next? Are we going to charge people to get into any kind of library, art gallery or museum? Maybe we should start charging people to come into the galleries of this House of Commons. We might retire the national debt. Of course we might go broke.

Mr. Cullen: There are some relics in here.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member says there are some relics in here. In that connection, I trust the member opposite noticed the news report the other day about the longevity of members of parliament.

We do not charge people to get into the Peace Tower or the rotunda of this building. We want people to come here. We want them to have a sense of history. We want them to visit Lower Fort Garry. It is a foolish policy to try to pay for the operation of it by these fees. I waved goodbye to the Minister of Indian Affairs when he left at ten o'clock, for his answers have not been satisfactory. I hope his parliamentary secretary will do a lot better.

Adjournment Debate

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, all I can say to the hon. member is that the people of western Canada have paid for the use of parks for 40 years. Some of the people in eastern Canada are now beginning to discover the virtue of paying for parks.

Parks Canada has recently undergone a period of expansion which included increasing the number of national parks and national historic parks and sites, as well as taking over operation of historic canals in Ontario, Quebec and Nova Scotia which are part of the newly created ARC branch, Agreements for Recreation and Conservation.

Although the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has raised the issue of entrance fees at Lower Fort Garry, I would like to note there has been a growing demand for parks facilities. I would like to lead into some of the background of the decisions about which he speaks.

Last year there were more than 21 million visitors to parks across Canada, almost double that of ten years earlier. Parks Canada has been striving to meet this demand with increased facilities. However, in many instances this expansion has been at the expense of the older, established parks in the system which have not had the general servicing they once enjoyed due to the pressing priority of funding to the newer park areas.

To meet this growing challenge, and subject to parliamentary approval, Parks Canada will undertake a $376 million development program during the next five years.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): At Lower Fort Garry?

Mrs. Campagnolo: I am getting to Lower Fort Garry. Operating and maintenance expenditures during this period are expected to be $500 million. During the previous five years, Parks Canada spent $157 million on capital and $226 million on operations and maintenance. With the vast improvement anticipated by the consequent upgrading of park facilities with this increase in funding, Parks Canada is naturally required to produce greater revenues. In the instance brought forward tonight, the capital and operating maintenance expenditures over the next five years at Lower Fort Garry are estimated at $6.5 million.

These revenues from the newly imposed fees at Lower Fort Garry are forecast at $0.9 million for that same five year period. Our revenues will therefore represent approximately 14 per cent of our total cost. The majority of Canadians, through their taxes, will therefore bear the majority of the cost, while a small percentage will be borne by the actual users.

The hon. member has stated certain charges that I would like to re-assess. Originally it was our intention to charge $2 for adults and $1 for children for the cost of admission. After extensive review, the following schedule of rates was agreed upon: For every person over 16 years of age, $2; for every person under 16 years of age, 50 cents; for a family group entering together regardless of the number of persons over or under 16 years of age, a maximum of $4—

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCleave): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to her has, alas, expired.

PUBLIC SERVICE—SUGGESTED INCREASE IN REGIONAL PAY RATES IN DISADVANTAGED PROVINCES

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to pursue my question of April 28 concerning regional rates of pay in Canada for federal employees, a subject which is causing understandable concern and unrest among citizens who are affected.

I have tried to be reasonable in presenting the case but it is impossible for me to believe there can be any justification for the present differences in pay rates, nor can I be persuaded that the policy fits in with what are supposed to be our national goals—equality of opportunity, an end to regional disparity, and the maintenance of human decency. It is evidently the policy of the government not only to maintain the discrepancy in regional rates but to expand the present practice.

The whole basis upon which regional pay rates are established is that it costs less to live in certain parts of the country. However, in present conditions this contention is out of date, and this being the case the whole trend should be reversed. Rather than pay rates in Newfoundland, for example, being lowest and those in Vancouver being the highest, the reverse should be true at a time when the cost of living in Newfoundland is the highest in Canada. So the present policy is unfair, as well as lacking in sense. Not only is it contradictory to the objective of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, which is to overcome regional disparity; it is preventing the achievement of that goal. As I have indicated, the Treasury Board is operating on the basis of discrimination against federal employees in the Atlantic region.

What the government is really saying is that federal firefighters are not as capable of protecting an aircraft if, God forbid, one burns in Newfoundland as if it burns in Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg or Vancouver. It is saying that the Canadian passenger is less a Canadian after he leaves Montreal to fly east. What it is really saying is that the federal nurse who serves the veterans in Camp Hill, Halifax, or in the veterans' wing in St. John's, Newfoundland, is treating her patients with less care than that received by patients in other parts of Canada. What it is really saying is that the heavy equipment operator cannot perform his duties as a snow cleaner, for example, in Newfoundland as well as those who work in other parts of the country, or that the safety factor is of less importance.

I should like the minister to explain to me how, to give one example, a company which has contracted to manage the Deer Lake Airport can pay higher salaries to its employees than the Ministry of Transport under regional pay rates. How can I give an answer to the secretary-treasurer of a component of the Public Service Alliance when he expresses the feeling of his membership that Treasury Board is adamant in trying to destroy the national pay structure for federal firefighter as well as other groups? How can I explain to a heavy equipment operator why, after he has worked for ten years, at $3.54 an hour, he is not deserving of equality in pay rates although his son, working between school terms, can earn as much as he earns by working as a carpenter's helper?

Something has to be wrong, and while I appreciate the difficulties experienced by government it is ridiculous that qualified personnel in the Public Service should be classified as lesser Canadians in certain parts of our country though they perform duties equal to those carried out in other parts of the nation. I hope the minister will recognize the inequity which exists, and correct it in the interest of all that is right for Canada.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the problem which the hon. member has raised is not an easy one. It is not, of course, a question of justice or injustice. I think we have to look at two sides of the question. The government wants to be equitable in its treatment of its employees, and pay rates comparable with those paid outside the service to those in similar occupations.

The other day I was talking with the provincial Minister of Finance for the New Brunswick government. He was complaining that some of our civil servants are too well paid and that we are raiding his civil service because he cannot pay them that much. You can appreciate the problem.

Let us take the case of a secretary, a plumber or a carpenter, or some such occupation. We want to pay these people the prevailing rate in the area. Because of our potential we could pay higher rates but we would then create a lot of pressure on the local economy. Really good regional rates will take into account the cost of living in the regions.

This is not a question of discriminating. We want to be absolutely neutral on regional rates. We want to pay our employees at the same level as the municipalities, provinces, and private sectors in the area or locality are paying. This is just fair to the various regions. If we pay the national level in a little village or a town, everyone will want the same level, and some of the local governments cannot afford this.

I have received complaints about this. Of course it depends very much on the kind of occupation involved. We are not in competition for local manpower in the various areas. Take the postal workers, for example. We are not competing with another system so we pay them at the national rate. When we are competing with the locality for local manpower we want to be fair to the local economy. This is something we are debating and negotiating with the unions in some areas.

We saw an example of this last year in regard to the firefighters working at Vancouver. Because they have a national rate they were getting $2 less than the firefighters working for the city of Vancouver. I felt it was unfair, and my predecessor was willing to give them the prevailing rate for firefighters in Vancouver. The union said no, they wanted the national rate. So the thing works both ways.

When we are in competition we have to make sure our employees are as well paid as the local people, but not too well paid in relation to them, because soon after that the local people complain that they are being raided by the federal civil service. They complain that we are taking away their best manpower by paying them at higher rates.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCleave): I regret to interrupt the hon. minister but his time has expired.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY—INFLATION—GOVERNMENT POLICY ON RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN CANADIAN AND UNITED STATES DOLLAR

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, on April 18 in reply to a question put by me concerning what steps the government was taking to ensure that the Canadian dollar would not be allowed to drift down and remain at the 96-cents to 98-cents level in terms of the United States dollar, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said:

> —it is Canadian policy that the dollar respond to market forces and that any intervention by the governor of the bank would be only to assure that the float does not have any . . . dirt in it.

The Prime Minister was not being candid with the Canadian people in that statement. To suggest it is Canadian policy that the dollar should respond to market forces and any intervention by the government is only to ensure that the float does not have any dirt in it, is totally misleading.

The government guides the market and, as it guides it, the government influences the exchange rate of our dollar with other currencies, in particular that of the United States. While the Prime Minister was misleading parliament with that answer he gave to my question Wood Gundy was reporting.

> We expect the authorities will continue to support the dollar if need be by continuing to run down reserves. The Canadian dollar could easily fall to the 97-cent level, in terms of the U.S. dollar, in the next few months.

We have to take a look at the government's policy and what it is costing the Canadian public. The four point drop in the Canadian dollar in terms of inflation, as a result of higher import costs to Canadians, is going to add approximately 1 per cent to the level of inflation in this country.

● (2220)

The other factor I believe we should realize in this House is that by following a high interest level in this country the government in fact is insisting for example that those who have mortgages, will have to carry the cost of the national deficit on their backs. Translated into terms that are perhaps understandable to all of us in this House, I would point out that the government in requiring present domestic mortgage rates—and let there be no doubt that it is government policy to have a mortgage rate of 10¾ per cent in this country—is subjecting a man who has a $40,000 mortgage to an extra cost of $875 a year compared to the American level of 8 per cent for the same mortgage. If this rate is maintained for a full 25 years of amortization, the cost to a Canadian is $21,861.

The fact is that the Prime Minister knows that through the Bank of Canada he is influencing mortgage rates in this country, and in turn is causing the average home owner to pay a severe penalty for the trade deficit we are now running with the rest of the world.

Speaking about the trade deficit, I think the government must answer—and I would hope it would answer at an early date in this House—for the sad unproductivity we have, so far as our unit costs in the world are concerned. The Citibank in its April 1975, bulletin suggested a comparison of labour costs in the various countries as against the United States.

It is interesting to note that when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) took over in 1970 hourly compensation in Canada was 75 per cent of that in the United States. In 1974 it had gone up to 86 per cent. The output per man hour in 1970 was 88 per cent. In the past year it actually went down to 87 per cent. The staggering thing is that we have lost entirely the unit labour advantage we had in 1970. In 1970 it was 85 per cent of the American while today it is 99 per cent. That is the situation into which the Minister of Finance has got us. The Minister of Finance now suggests there is a new system called recycling. He is running around the world trying to get money to cover the trade deficit which is accruing at an alarming rate.

Let us face the facts. What he is suggesting is that through recycling he will pile debt on debt in this country. If you cycle far enough there is no surer way to put this country in a disastrous situation, and I think the Minister of Finance, instead of being candid with the Prime Minister, and the Prime Minister instead of being candid with us, are not facing the facts. We have lost our competitive position in the world. We are running up, according to Industry, Trade and Commerce figures given us in committee only two nights ago, a decline of 7 per cent in current volume terms in our trade with the rest of the world. A staggering deficit is coming. I suggest it is government policy deliberately to keep domestic interest rates high in this country in order that we can attract foreign funds through this process called recycling. That is, they will try to get back some of the money that is being lost through the trade deficit with other nations at a higher interest cost.

One of the groups in this country that is going to pay dearly for this government policy is made up of the mortgage holders. As I have stated, the total cost on an annual individual basis is almost $800. I believe this warrants a proper answer from the Prime Minister. I think that the government must be more candid with the Canadian public on what exactly is its policy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCleave): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Jack Cullen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, when one listens to the conclusions reached by the hon. member through his convoluted reasoning, the word that comes readily to mind is claptrap.

The Canadian dollar has fallen somewhat in recent months. But I might point out that its value is still high relative to its level in recent years. Indeed, since observance of the par value of $92.5 U.S. cents was suspended on May 30, 1970, the Canadian dollar has risen by more than 5 per cent.

The advantages and disadvantages of a changing exchange rate cut both ways. While a decline in the value of the Canadian dollar adds to the cost of our imports, it also provides a competitive edge to our exporting industries. The converse is true when the dollar rises, of course. Generally, we cannot label movements in the Canadian dollar as unambiguously beneficial or harmful for our economy.

In any event, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) pointed out on April 18, it is the policy of the government to let the value of the Canadian dollar be determined by market forces. Intervention by the government is confined to maintaining orderly market conditions, that is, to preventing erratic movements in the exchange rate. In fact Canada's official international reserves have fallen since May, 1974, when the Canadian dollar reached a peak of more than U.S. $1.04, by more than U.S. $400 million. This drop reflects the stabilizing role intervention has performed and does not run counter to our "clean float" policy.

Movements in the value of the Canadian dollar reflect changes in the many components of the balance of international payments. Whether the dollar goes up or down in any given period of time depends on whether the balance of changes leads to a greater or lesser net demand for Canadian dollars.

In the past year we have seen a substantial deterioration in the balance of current account, that is, in the value of goods and services we sell to non-residents less the amount we buy from them. In 1974 the deterioration amounted to almost $1.5 billion. Preliminary numbers for 1975 suggests some further decline has occurred this year. These developments in the current account reflect the weakness which prevades the economies of our major trading partners. This has kept our exports down. On the other hand, Canadian imports have been sustained in line with the relatively favourable conditions we have experienced here at home.

Whether or not such developments cause a currency to decline depends on the concomitant movements in the capital account, that is, the extent to which net borrowing from non-residents increases sufficiently to finance the current account decline. In 1974 net capital inflows into Canada increased by more than enough to finance our growing current account deficit. Nor do we anticipate any problem financing our net imports in 1975.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Claptrap versus claptrap.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McCleave): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—SUGGESTION OF MASSIVE UNEMPLOYMENT IF PROGRAM FOR CONSENSUS ON RESTRAINT UNSUCCESSFUL—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I will put my question to the Prime Minister. Since many of us feel we now have an unacceptable level of unemployment, would the Prime Minister clarify the statement made yesterday by the Minister of Finance that further unemployment would be massive if the consensus program is not resolved, and specifically, if there is such a serious emergency would the Prime Minister explain why the government's current documents on restraint are so half-baked after eight months of incubation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for York-Simcoe on a supplementary.

INFLATION—INQUIRY WHETHER SPECIFIC PROPOSALS ON RESTRAINT SUBMITTED TO PROVINCES

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): My supplementary question is again for the Prime Minister. The documents tabled yesterday with regard to the monitoring of professional fees, the role of marketing boards and the place of shelter and rent in the consensus program referred to further exploratory talks with the provinces. Has the government, which is supposed to be leading this fight against inflation, presented any specific proposals of its own to the provinces on these matters, and does the Prime Minister have any confidence that concrete proposals on these matters will be arrived at before meetings with business and labour next week?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): When the hon. member speaks of "these matters" is he referring to specific things or is he talking about inflation in general?

Mr. Stevens: I am referring to the specific references in the document tabled yesterday in which it was stated, with respect to the monitoring of professional fees, to the role of marketing boards, and to the place of shelter and rent in the consensus program, that further discussions have to take place with the provinces. I am asking the Prime Minister: have such discussions taken place and what confidence has the Prime Minister that these points will be resolved before further meetings take place with business and labour next week?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I believe discussions are taking place with the provinces at the official level today, and if it is not today then I am only out by a day or two, but I believe it is today that these discussions are taking place.

On the second part of the question my answer is, yes, I have confidence because the provinces themselves at the first ministers' conference a few weeks ago indicated that they were very concerned about the problem of inflation and that they wanted to share any initiatives with the federal government. The hon. member will recall that at the interprovincial conference last August or September they were asking the federal government to indicate to them what means might be used to fight inflation.

INFLATION—POSSIBLE INVOLVEMENT OF PRIME MINISTER IN DISCUSSIONS SEEKING CONSENSUS ON RESTRAINT

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): In light of the fact that the Minister of Finance has apparently not done his homework and has not been able to put together a meaningful document which could have been expected to elicit a meaningful response—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member please put his question.

Mr. Stevens: Is the Prime Minister, who is supposed to be giving the program general direction, now going to get involved directly and oversee the government's planning and himself meet with business, labour and the provinces?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): If the hon. member had been doing his own homework, he would have realized that I have done those three things.

INFLATION—SUGGESTION GOVERNMENT STOP ITS INFLATION-GENERATING POLICIES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is to the Prime Minister, and it is prompted by another increase in the consumer price index of .5 per cent for the month and the apparent failure of the government to obtain a consensus on voluntary restraint. Considering that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources supports a hefty oil price increase, higher food prices at the farm gate have been sponsored by the Minister of Agriculture, higher wages by the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Finance is ignoring higher import prices, all these things contributing to the inflationary spiral and the inflationary psychology of this country, can the Prime Minister tell the House if he and his government are prepared to stop these inflation-generating policies so that this government will be imposing upon itself the same kinds of restraints it expects from business and labour?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is obviously an argument, and I do not believe the hon. member himself agrees with its premise.

INFLATION—REASON FOR EXPECTING LABOUR TO EXERCISE RESTRAINT WHEN NO GUIDELINES CONTROLLING PRICES AND PROFITS

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In light of the statistics provided by the Minister of Finance in his economic review which indicate that over the last year profits per unit of output have been rising faster than labour costs per unit of output, can the Prime Minister indicate why in the minister's recent working documents he did not outline in more detail his proposals for controlling prices and profits as a factor in the economy, and can he indicate also in which way he expects labour to exercise restraint when there does not seem to be any formula for restraint in the area of prices and profits?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on the contrary, there is a formula for restraint, and the formula has been spelled out in the documents. It is in the nature of not increasing the margin between costs and prices, and this is a formula which has been made clear.

Mr. Saltsman: I realize that the statement has been made, but there seems to be great doubt as to whether it is possible for that to be carried out or to be monitored. Can the Prime Minister indicate whether he is prepared to ensure that unless this is carried out he will not go ahead with his restraint program on wages?

Mr. Trudeau: I think that is a fair suggestion. All along the government has said that in order for its restraint program to be successful there would have to be justice as it applies to all sections of the economy, and the hon. member is really indicating that he agrees with that in saying that the program should not work if it does not work equally for all, and this is certainly our intention.

SUGGESTED PAYMENT OF PRICE DISCOUNT

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance, I would like to direct my question to the Prime Minister.

Due to the rather difficult situation facing the country at this time, the Minister of Finance launched a program of voluntary restraint a month ago. At that time, I was out west, and I stated that within three months the government would have to resort to mandatory measures. We have come to that point now. Does the Prime Minister not believe that the government is in the process of causing anarchy in this country? On the other hand, with all the expenditures caused by these numerous studies, would the Prime Minister consider seriously the possibility of issuing an order for the payment of a discount of 20 to 30 per cent on retail prices in order to satisfy the Canadian consumers' fair claims in the face of inflation and the high cost of living, while maintaining peace in Canada?

[Mr. McGrath.]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I must say in the first place that I do not accept the hon. member's view on the country and I am unaware of the anarchy which he mentioned. I suppose he was referring to the non-application of the Social Credit concepts, but I have never identified that with anarchy.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

The Prime Minister is not aware of any anarchy, but I see quite a lot at the present time in the Post Office Department in Toronto and Montreal, and the Créditistes are not responsible of those conditions, while the government has attempted by all possible means to solve the problem. Does the Prime Minister not agree that other extraordinary means should be taken to try to correct the situation?

Mr. Trudeau: There are no doubt other ways, but the hon. member knows that the steps taken by the government are being implemented and discussed. If those steps were absolutely ineffective, I would understand the hon. member's question, but according to the questions asked today and the press reports, he knows on the contrary that the means advocated by the government and the Minister of Finance are now very actively discussed by unions, by contractors and the provinces.

REASON FOR FAILURE TO PROSECUTE LONGSHOREMEN IN QUEBEC FOR NOT COMPLYING WITH BACK-TO-WORK LEGISLATION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour with respect to the direction made by parliament 16 days ago that the dockers should go back to work. Since then there has been flagrant lawlessness among those affected who have been refusing to comply? This has had the natural result in another field of labour relations where today the head of a large union has stated that the Olympic games may have to be postponed to 1977. Can the minister tell the House why it is there have been no prosecutions when the law passed by parliament is being deliberately broken?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated before, officials of the Department of Justice are at work to bring together the evidence that they feel is necessary for the prosecutions to which the right hon. gentleman has referred. I would also say in regard to the application before the court that I referred to earlier this week in answer to the right hon. gentleman's question, that I have been advised that Mr. Justice Deschênes will be handing down his decision tomorrow afternoon.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A supplementary question. In view of the law passed by parliament in solemn form which is being deliberately broken, is it not reasonable to ask why prosecutions are not taking place? Why is it necessary to ask the courts to grant an injunction when parliament has passed a law? Another question arises out of this, and I am not criticizing the minister personally, Mr. Speaker, because I know he is tied by the orders of the government. Can anything be simpler than this: these wrongdoers have been advised that it is necessary that they go back to work; why does the government not act? Why this attiude of supine subservience to a group of lawbreakers which can only have the result of other lawbreakers following their example?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I think the right hon. gentleman will agree that I cannot substitute the government or myself for the judicial process. The allegations being made must be substantiated in the courts, and that is the process we are going through at present.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am trying to be of assistance. As one who knows something about prosecutions, I can not think of a clearer case. There is the law; it was made known to these people; they have broken it for 15 or 16 days, and the minister and the Minister of Justice say, "We are having the matter looked into." Surely, the case is so clear that even a blind man could get a conviction.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I think the right hon. gentleman will agree that it will take a court to make that kind of decision.

LAW OF THE SEA CONFERENCE—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON RESULTS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Prime Minister? As the law of the Sea Conference ends today in Geneva, and in view of the importance to all Canadians of the decisions that are reached at that conference, does the government intend to make a statement in the House concerning the results of the conference? If so, when can we anticipate that statement in the House?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has just now returned from the conference. He was preceded there by several ministers. I am sure he and other ministers will be happy to answer questions, if they are asked of them.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, may I redirect my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I am sure he listened to it carefully and in the interest of saving time I will not repeat it.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have returned from the Law of the Sea Conference—

Mr. Fairweather: When? Is that classified information?

Mr. MacEachen: I have to be cautious. I have just returned, I should emphasize. Although I am satisfied with the general progress that has been made at the conference, and the progress made in reaching Canadian objectives, I point out that today the conference will receive the so-called unified negotiating text, from which we will see more clearly what the results have been of the work of the chairmen of the three committees. I should like to consider the possibility of making a statement after we have had the results of the tabling of the documents. This, I expect, would have taken place today at Geneva.

LAW OF THE SEA CONFERENCE—POSSIBILITY OF UNILATERAL ACTION TO PROTECT OFFSHORE RESOURCES IF CONFERENCE FAILS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of reports which have been made available to Canadians by news services it seems that no comprehensive agreement will be reached at the conference, will the Canadian government, therefore, act unilaterally to protect its interests, in the fisheries and other resources off the coasts of Canada? If not, what action does the government plan to take to protect the resources of our continental shelf, resources which rightfully belong to all Canadians?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I realize, as the hon. member realizes, that even though progress has been made and even if the unified text is agreeable to Canada, it is still not law. It is still only a basis for further negotiations. At present we are and will be discussing the results of the conference and will be determining as a government what future course of action should be taken. It has been made clear already that unilateral action is one of the policy options open to the government, and it certainly is a lively option at present and will be considered in the light of all factors.

FISHERIES

POSSIBILITY OF CANADIAN PROPOSAL AT ICNAF THAT OTHER NATIONS REDUCE QUOTAS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of State responsible for fisheries. The minister indicated at the Law of the Sea Conference that he was requesting nations to cut their quotas by 40 per cent. I wonder of the minister obtained that agreement; also can he tell the House what action he took to discuss the reduction of quotas with certain nations and if he is going to show leadership in the so-called ICNAF council and discuss this matter.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, what I said at Geneva was what will be proposed to the ICNAF meeting next June in Edinburgh, which is that foreign fleets, but not those of Canada, should reduce their effort by 40 per cent. We will go to this conference with a very clear position on this issue. I talked to some of the key delegations at Geneva about this very question and asked for their understanding. I made it very clear that if we are asked to be patient, at least ICNAF will be an area where we will see some real progress.

SUGGESTED UNILATERAL ACTION TO PROTECT FISHERIES IF LAW OF THE SEA CONFERENCE FAILS

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of State (Fisheries). In view of the fact the Law of the Sea Conference which ends today will fail to come up with a solution to the problem of over-fishing, and in view of the fact that in the eastern part of Canada time is running out, is the minister prepared to recommend to his colleagues and the House that unilateral action be taken to protect our fisheries and our fishermen?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member must have been listening to the answer of my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I hope very much that the assessment we are making will be a collective effort of this government and that is my intention.

CYPRUS—SUGGESTION NO FURTHER PERMITS ISSUED FOR EXPORT OF ARMS TO TURKEY UNTIL MILITARY OCCUPATION ENDED

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I think my question should appropriately be addressed to the Prime Minister in view of the fact he recently returned from the meeting of Commonwealth Prime Ministers and because it affects more than one department of government. Since July 20, 1974, export permits for war materials have been issued by Canada without any restriction as to the use of the material on the island of Cyprus. In view of the fact that Cyprus is a member of the Commonwealth and the Turkish armed forces have continued military occupation on part of that island, will the Prime Minister either give today, or consider giving, an undertaking that no further export permits will be granted for the export of arms to Turkey until the military occupation of the territory of a fellow member of the Commonwealth is ended?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will take notice of the question. I am not aware of the countries to which permits for export of arms have been issued.

Mr. Brewin: Perhaps I could call to the attention of the Prime Minister that on March 10 a return was put in by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce setting out all the details of these export permits.

[Mr. Marshall.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

GARRISON DIVERSION—POSSIBLE REFERENCE TO INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. On February 4 the minister stated the government had under consideration the matter as to "whether the International Joint Commission might be the appropriate body to carry out the task" of determining how the Garrison Diversion project could be remodelled to avoid any harmful effect in Canada. Will the minister please inform the House as to whether or not a decision has been reached concerning this matter and what are the results of that decision?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to refresh my memory on the developments that have taken place since that time. We have had discussions with the government of Manitoba. I believe the situation at the present time is that we are working on a possible reference. We have not made the final decision to have that reference to the joint commission, but we are taking preparatory action in the way of working out the terms of that reference. As I say, I would like to refresh my memory and give the hon. member a more detailed answer.

ENERGY

NATURAL GAS—POSSIBILITY OF AGREEMENT ON PRICE WITH PRODUCING PROVINCES—DURATION OF AGREEMENT

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources whether he has reached an agreement with the natural gas producing provinces as to price, and, if so, for how long will that price remain constant? I think he will share my view that the price of energy is one of the most aggravating causes of inflation in all countries.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): There has been no agreement with the gas producing provinces on the question of price. I had a further meeting yesterday with the Alberta ministers at which the position of the two governments was made more precise. But there has been no agreement.

Mr. Woolliams: When the minister says the positions taken by the two governments have been made more precise, does he mean that the governments concerned are not very far apart in reaching agreement to fix the price of gas for a certain period of time? How long would that period be?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I do not think one could necessarily draw that conclusion from what I have just said. We shall be going on to discussions with other provinces, particularly the consuming provinces, in an effort to reach some general agreement on this question. I think it would be desirable if some agreement could be achieved on the phasing of natural gas prices to commodity value over the period of three years.

NATURAL GAS—APPLICATIONS FOR PIPELINES TO TRANSPORT GAS FROM ARCTIC BEING CONSIDERED BY ENERGY BOARD

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Could the minister tell us whether the National Energy Board is processing certain applications for pipelines carrying natural gas from the Arctic in the light of the disclosure that Panarctic, on Drake Island, I think it is, has produced one of the largest natural gas fields in Canada, if not in North America?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Panarctic, and some partners under the title of Polar Arctic Gas Project, is studying the possibility of a gas transmission system from the higher Arctic islands but at the moment there is no application before the National Energy Board. With respect to Mackenzie Valley and Mackenzie Delta gas, there are applications from two competing firms before the Board. Hearings will begin this summer.

BILINGUALISM

POSSIBLE REFERENCE OF QUEBEC'S BILL 22 TO SUPREME COURT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Has the cabinet had an opportunity to complete its review of the petition by the Quebec Association of Protestant School Boards and others, submitted on February 17, 1975, asking for the disallowance of Quebec's Bill 22 and/or its reference to the Supreme Court of Canada, and has any decision been made by the cabinet with respect to that matter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I would have to refresh my memory as to the follow-up in response to the petition. On the substance of the question, however, the government is not disposed to bring this matter before the Supreme Court. I have made that clear on previous occasions.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): In view of the government's intention to recognize in a financial way the bilingual capacity of some public servants, can the Prime Minister explain how at the same time he can ignore a provincial statute which seems to violate the principles for which he stands?

Mr. Trudeau: I thought it would be clear to most members that a provincial government has authority in areas within provincial jurisdiction and the federal government in areas of federal jurisdiction. The hon. member should know that the jurisdiction of the federal government applies only to areas under the authority of the federal government.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Ten o'clock.

INDUSTRY

FOOTWEAR—SUGGESTED AID TO MANUFACTURERS

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Considering the many layoffs in the footwear industry in Acton Vale, Granby and other Quebec localities and the fact that this industry had to cut back its production by 60 per cent, mostly because of cheap labour imports from communist countries, is the minister looking into this matter at present and will he soon have other effective proposals to make in order to help this industry where jobs are threatened, in addition to the only remedial measure taken by this government, that is the establishment of retraining committees for workers with 25 years or more of experience in this field, whereas the cost of those committees is now supported by the employers and future or retrained unemployed?

[English]

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): We have produced a program for the footwear industry in Canada. It took effect, I think about 18 months ago at the beginning of 1974. The industry has moved rather more slowly than I had hoped in availing itself of the benefits of the program but I believe there has been a significant move toward modernization of the industry. In addition, we have provided a number of grants, and assistance through such organizations as Fashion Canada to assist the design side of the footwear industry in Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Since we are aware of an industrial program related to the footwear industry and of a 60 per cent cutback in production in my riding, will the minister reconsider this program in order to put forward other more effective solutions than the ones which the employers now feel are inadequate?

[English]

Mr. Gillespie: We are always prepared to seek improvements; we are actively looking for improvements. We are working with the industry itself. The hon. member will agree that a program of this kind must have the full support of the industry or else it will not work.

Oral Questions

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTION CANADA NOT DEAL IN NUCLEAR ITEMS WITH COUNTRIES NOT SIGNATORIES TO NON-PROLIFERATION TREATY

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Given the fact that within the last two or three days the chairman of the Atomic Energy Board of Canada has stated that it is impossible to apply any appropriate safeguards in dealings involving nuclear items, will the government reconsider its proposal to deal with countries which are not signatories to the non-proliferation treaty?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I have not seen the comments made by the gentleman to whom the hon. member has referred but I shall be happy to look at them. My colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, announced last December the government's policy on safeguards; we believe it to be the best that can be provided at the present time. We apply these stringent and rigid bilateral safeguards to all sales.

Mr. Gillies: What confuses Canadians with respect to this issue is that if the government has taken a strong moral stand in connection with the spread of nuclear weapons, and, indeed, the spread of armaments of any kind, how can it justify dealing with any country which does not subscribe to the non-proliferation treaty? How can the minister reconcile dealing with and financing sales to countries which will not sign this treaty, while at the same time declaring that he supports the treaty in its entirety?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: We are, of course, strong adherents to the NPT. Yesterday, or the day before, at the review conference I expressed once again the position taken by the Government of Canada. In my statement I made it clear that in terms of aid we would require NPT adherence from the receiving country; in the case of export financing this would be considered as an important factor. In all transactions with other countries we shall certainly consider their membership in the NPT. The hon. member will have noticed that recently the Republic of Korea expressed its adherence to the treaty. This will certainly make it easier for the Government of Canada to undertake nuclear arrangements. In all cases we shall insist on bilateral safeguards which are as strong and as rigid as those imposed by any other supplying country.

Mr. Gillies: Surely, it is more important for the government to show its support for the non-proliferation treaty by declaring it will not deal with any country which does not sign the treaty rather than sell a few extra reactors. My question is this. How can the government reconcile its position of saying that it supports the treaty in the strongest way but in fact still deals with countries which do not support the treaty?

[Mr. Gillespie.]

● (1140)

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me that is precisely the question to which the hon. member has received a response.

Mr. Brewin: May I put a supplementary question to the minister?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

ALLEGED INEFFICIENCY OF TORONTO OFFICE RESULTING IN RECIPIENTS NOT RECEIVING BENEFIT CHEQUES

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare on a different subject. In view of the apparent confusion and lack of efficiency that exists in the Toronto regional office of the Department of National Health and Welfare which has resulted in many GIS recipients not receiving their GIS cheques for the month of April, even after submitting two or three application forms, would the minister investigate the situation with dispatch in an effort to restore some degree of efficiency and better business practice and procedures to that office?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly look into the matter. This is the first time this has been brought to my attention, and if there are certain cases along the lines mentioned by the hon. member, I can assure you we will look after them.

NORAD—ALLEGED CONFLICT BETWEEN CABINET MINISTERS ON MEANING OF THE AGREEMENT

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the joint, integrated command nature of the NORAD agreement, is it a premise of the agreement that an enemy of the United States is an enemy of Canada, and that an enemy of Canada is an enemy of the United States?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Wenman: A supplementary question. In view of the Prime Minister's negative answer, and in view of the statement made in answer to the same question by the Minister of National Defence, who said "In my view an enemy of the United States would be an enemy of Canada, and an enemy of Canada would be an enemy of the United States," is the Prime Minister therefore reversing government policy, or is this a new foreign policy thrust by the Prime Minister?

Mr. Trudeau: No, it is not a new foreign policy, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member asked me a specific question about NORAD and whether that entailed certain positions of policy and my answer was no. The Minister of National Defence may have been stating the general position, that we are friends with the United States and that we have a very long lasting friendship with them.

Mr. Wenman: A final supplementary question. In view of conflicting statements by members of the cabinet, including a positive response by the Minister of National Defence and a negative response by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, would the Prime Minister consider making a statement in the House of Commons on the policy and philosophy of the NORAD agreement?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I think the NORAD agreement was debated at some length by the parliamentary committee in recent weeks. If the hon. member would only read the minutes of the meetings he would learn a little bit about it.

NATO—POSSIBILITY OF REMOVING LAND FORCES FROM ORGANIZATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Prime Minister is supplementary in terms of Canada's foreign policy. While the Prime Minister was at the Commonwealth conference discussing mutual problems with the various Prime Ministers, did he consult with the Prime Minister of Great Britain and advise him that the cabinet is considering pulling back all of its land forces to Canadian territory, leaving just the air element in NATO?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, may I ask whether the hon. member is asking about Canadian land forces or United Kingdom land forces?

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, let me ask the question specifically. Is the cabinet considering withdrawing completely the land element of Canadian forces in NATO, leaving only the air element portion that is still there?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I certainly did not discuss anything of that kind with the Prime Minister of Great Britain.

Mr. Nowlan: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since we have had a rather listless day from a lazy, lackadaisical government that does not want to answer a question about anything, let me be very specific. I appreciate that I cannot find out all that the Prime Minister may have talked about with Prime Minister Wilson, if he talked with him at all, but is the cabinet seriously considering a withdrawal of land forces in NATO to this country, thus leaving only the air element to give some symbolic significance to Canada's participation in NATO, since our Prime Minister was indisputably the leader in one area in first pulling out of NATO back in the heydays of 1968?

Mr. Speaker: Be that as it may, that is exactly the question put by the hon. member to the Prime Minister in the first place.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is diabolically clever—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nowlan: —in terms of evading or parrying questions.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has twice asked the Prime Minister whether the cabinet is seriously considering pulling back its land forces. If the hon. member has a final supplementary he may put a different question.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, my basic question is this. Is the cabinet seriously considering that proposal? The Prime Minister parried my question and referred to discussions with Mr. Wilson.

Mr. Trudeau: That was no parry. The hon. member mentioned Mr. Wilson in his first question.

Mr. Nowlan: You are listless, lazy and lackadaisical, the whole bunch of you.

NURSES—SUGGESTION GOVERNMENT CONSIDER INCLUSION OF COST OF LIVING CLAUSE IN CONTRACT TO SETTLE STRIKE

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board having to do with nurses on strike throughout the country. Since one of the major obstacles to settlement of the strike and to returning to work seems to be the failure of the government to agree to the inclusion of a cost of living clause in nurses' contracts, and since the inclusion of such a clause would go a long way, if not all the way, to getting the nurses back to work, is the government going to accede to their reasonable request for the inclusion of such a clause and bring this strike to an end?

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question that I was going to put to the Minister of National Health and Welfare but since he has stepped out for a moment perhaps the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development would answer my question. Since the entire nursing staff at Watson Lake, which is one nurse, is out on strike and that that community also serves the mining community of Can Tung, and since the government has seen fit to throw the only doctor in that community into jail for failure to register for medicare, can the government inform me and the citizens of those communities what steps it is taking to provide adequate medical facilities under the circumstances?

REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF REPORT OF INVENTORY INSPECTION OF RAILWAY BRANCH LINES

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I was going to suggest that perhaps the lighting should be checked. After one week I was wondering whether there was a dark spot here. My colleagues on either side of me have also been trying for a week. My question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In view of the inventory inspection of railway branch lines which is going to be conducted by the Canadian Transport Commission, will this inventory report be made public and will it also include any reduction in inventory since the last freeze was imposed in 1970?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to know whether the hon. member is referring to the inquiry which is led by the WEO conference or to the one by the CTC?

Mr. Korchinski: The CTC.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Then, I will get in touch with them and ask.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I am not the one who established that law.

● (1150)

Mr. Korchinski: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the railways now have to open up their books to the government, may I ask the minister whether it will be possible to determine from these books the amount of the systematic reduction in inventories by the railways, particularly on those branch lines which are scheduled for abandonment such as has taken place in the last five years?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman is aware that it has been announced there is an inquiry is respect of all branch lines.

Mr. Korchinski: I am talking about the books being opened up and not about branch lines. In view of the fact that the railways now have to reveal their books to the government and not to the public, may I ask the minister whether it will be possible for the public to determine the amount of the reduction in the inventory on those branch lines scheduled for abandonment to determine the degree to which the railway companies have conducted a systematic scuttling of those rail lines prior to any approval either by the government or the CTC of the abandonment of those lines.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think I indicated, and it has been clarified, that the railways are now compelled to supply the Ministry of Transport and the CTC with all the elements which constitute the freight rates, but I can say there is no law that says the railways must open their books. I tell you it is not being done. I asked for information last week and received a very nice answer saying that this is not going to be revealed to anybody, including the Minister of Transport. Someday I hope we will have an opportunity to discuss that here in the House.

I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he will cause Mr. Michael Pitfield to appear before the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee when the committee considers the general estimates of the Privy Council office on Monday night next so that members may question directly the most powerful public servant in Canada as we can question the less powerful public officials?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council will be appearing before that committee on Monday.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, is the Prime Minister then suggesting to the House that he intends to hide from public view and Parliamentary questioning the most powerful public servant in the country and not even send someone of cabinet rank to answer questions about

DRUGS

GLUE SNIFFING—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO COMBAT PRACTICE

Mr. Sean O'Sullivan (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare now that he has returned. In the last Parliament I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare what action the government was considering or taking in connection with the damaging use by very young Canadians of toxic substances such as in the practice of glue sniffing. Today I ask the minister whether he can announce any progress in combatting this practice which continues, and which can cause permanent damage to the youthful users?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the answer is the same as last year.

Mr. O'Sullivan: Mr. Speaker, since the answer of last year was a non-answer, I now ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether he is, within the large budget of his department, hoping to embark upon a national educational program in conjunction with the provinces to warn young Canadians of the very serious dangers involved in the use of glue and other toxic substances in this manner.

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, the real problem is not glue sniffing, but drug abuse in general. There is a major program presently implemented throughout Canada in co-operation with the provinces. We must therefore launch an all-out attack against the drug abuse problem in every shape and form, including the substitutes mentioned by the hon. member.

NEW WESTMINSTER—ALLEGED ATTEMPT TO STOP PROSECUTION OF SEVEN GUARDS FOR ASSAULT AND SENDING OF LETTER OF COMMENDATION

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. About two months ago seven guards at the New Westminster federal penitentiary were convicted of assault against one of the prisoners. I should like to ask the Solicitor General whether he or someone in his department attempted to stop the prosecution by phoning a member of the provincial Attorney-General's department or by asking the special prosecutor to drop the charges and did the Solicitor General or someone in his department send a letter of commendation to the convicted guards?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, so far as I know there was no attempt to have the Attorney General drop the charges, although we had discussions with the Attorney General while the case was under consideration concerning whether charges would be laid and the reasons and so on. In respect of the second question, I think the hon. member asked if we sent a letter of commendation to the guards. We did not do that. We sent a letter, I do not know whether it was to the guards or the institution, stating we would support the guards if they wished to bring the case to appeal. The guards decided that they would not bring it to appeal because they had been given a discharge on the sentence. I think that is the content of the letter, but I will read it again.

NEW WESTMINSTER—INQUIRY WHETHER SEVEN GUARDS CONVICTED OF ASSAULT RECEIVED PROMOTIONS OR TRANSFERS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, did any of the seven guards receive promotions or transfers away from the correctional division of the penitentiary?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I will have to check that. I would not be involved in that kind of a promotion or transfer in any case. That would be an administrative matter under the penitentiary service, but I will find out what happened to those seven guards.

TRADE

PROPOSAL DEVELOPING COUNTRIES USE RAW MATERIALS TO FORCE INDUSTRIALIZED NATIONS TO GIVE THEM GREATER SHARE OF WEALTH—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In light of a statement to the effect that the developing countries plan to use their raw materials to force the industrialized nations to give them a greater share of the world's wealth, what was the position of the Prime Minister on this view and does he plan to increase trade with developing nations and pay higher prices for their raw materials?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my position was very simply to remind the conference that more than 50 per cent of the world's raw materials come from developed countries, and this kind of a suggestion would really not have the effect the third world might desire.

[Mr. Friesen.]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RHODESIA—GOVERNMENT VIEW OF CONTRIBUTING FUNDS TO AID IN REMOVING PRIME MINISTER SMITH'S GOVERNMENT

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, does the Prime Minister plan to contribute funds to help bring about the ouster of Rhodesian Prime Minister Ian's Smith's white minority regime? If so, how will he ensure that these funds will not be used to buy weapons?

● (1200)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the communiqué speaks for itself. There is no indication in it that the Commonwealth governments as a group will buy weapons for freedom fighters. It is well known, of course, and several members of the Commonwealth indicate quite openly, that if the talks to achieve independence with majority rule are not successful, they intend to return to the guerilla tactics.

INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

Fourth report of Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, in both official languages—Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi).

[Editor's Note: For text of above report, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, my point of order arises as a result of the generalization of answers given today, as has been the case throughout the last few months, on matters particularly connected with foreign affairs. I am in no way suggesting that I agree with the viewpoint of the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) who described the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) as possessing a quality that I am sure he does not possess. I would call it Machiavellian casuistry.

We have had no opportunity to discuss foreign affairs. It cannot be done simply through questions asked in the House. We know nothing about what is happening in NATO, the withdrawal of forces and the answer to the question raised by the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies). We know nothing about the NORAD situation and we cannot obtain information and will not unless one or two days are set apart for the discussion of foreign affairs in the House. Today it is a closed book, with the government simply hiding the facts behind the rules of parliament which prevent any elucidation of foreign affairs through questions.

I think it is unusual to have a minister giving one view concerning the withdrawal of forces from NATO, and to have another view expressed by the Prime Minister today in reference to a statement made by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson). Realizing the importance of foreign affairs, I ask the government House leader to make arrangements so that we can discuss these matters, so that foreign affairs do not become a matter of secrecy for the government.

We know nothing about the Chinese diplomat. The government has hidden behind clouds of questionable statements on the subject. We want to know. There is only one way in which we can get the information; that is, to have the views of parliament respecting these matters. Then, possibly, the government will be able to give us some insight into its thinking on what is happening internationally.

Mr. Sharp: I rise on the same point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am sure it is well known to the right hon. gentleman that there are 16 allotted days designated before the end of June, and it would be possible to call the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) before the House of Commons in committee of the whole. I know of no more democratic form than that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In the British House of Commons, opportunities are given—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The government is hiding behind subterfuge.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The point of order having been made and responded to; we should not get into a debate on it.

CBC DRAMA CRITICS

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. No.

2. CBC conducts regular surveys of audience response to its tv network programs. The information in these surveys is not, however, provided by "volunteers" but by persons selected by a process of geographically stratified probability sampling that ensures that, within acceptable limits, each survey sample represents a cross-section of all persons aged 12-plus resident in the respective coverage areas of the CBC's English and French tv networks. (a) The total number of respondents varies slightly from survey to survey but, this past season, has averaged close to 2,500 per English network survey, 1,200 per French network survey. (b) These respondents are located in all regions of the country (excluding only Yukon and the Northwest Territories) and, within each province, are distributed in cities, towns and rural areas in approximately correct numerical proportion to the actual population distribution, in these areas, of each network's potential audience aged 12-plus.

INCOME TAX OWING—MR. ARTHUR GRIBBEN

Question No. 2,267—Mr. Reynolds:

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of National Revenue): The Department of National Revenue is prohibited by Section 241 of the Income Tax Act from divulging information relating to taxpayers' affairs.

QUESTIONS NOT ANSWERED FOR VARIOUS REASONS

Question No. 2,364—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Since April 20, 1968, what is the total number of times that questions have not been answered in whole or in part on the grounds that the matter being questioned is regarded as confidential, secret, not in the national interest to reveal, or any other similar phraseology?

2. Since April 20, 1968, has the government invoked a supposed need for secrecy, confidentiality, etc. in order to avoid answering questions that are politically embarrassing and, if so, on what date will the government cease this practice and permit full disclosure to Parliament of information requested by elected representatives of the people?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): 1. The information requested is not readily available and could not be obtained without excessive cost.

2. See guideline No. 45 tabled March 15, 1973 and Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, citation 171.

ELECTRIFICATION OF RAILROADS

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The railways are presently keeping abreast of electrification technology and, up to this time, many studies have been made on the economics of electrification. However, the capital cost of conversion, at present, on the (a) Toronto-Montreal, (b) Toronto-Ottawa, (c) Toronto-Hamilton, (d) Toronto-London-Windsor, (e) Ottawa-Montreal lines have not lead to consideration of electrification. These capital costs include the construction of the catenary and electric power distribution systems.

*NATIONAL POLITICAL PARTIES RETURN OF CONTRIBUTIONS FORMS

Question No. 2,399—Mr. Dick:

Did all registered national political parties file a Return of Contribution form T2092 by March 31, 1975 as required by the Income Tax Act and as specified in Information Circular 75-2 of February 3, 1975 and (a) if not, which parties failed to file (b) if they have since filed, on what date?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): A return of contributions to a registered party (form T2092) is to be filed annually by all registered agents, rather than by each party. The return is to be filed by March 31 of the following year except for the year 1974 when the return is to be filed by June 14, 1975.

The regulation was authorized by P.C. 1975-922 dated April 24, 1975, to be gazetted May 14. It provides that the filing date for 1974 shall be one month after the coming into force of the section. Information circular No. 75-2 did not anticipate a delay in the authorization of regulations and did not indicate an extension of the filing date for 1974 returns. Some registered agents had not filed returns by March 31, but have until June 14 to do so.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58

House in committee of the whole to consider certain items of the estimates for the year ending March 31, 1976, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 58(9)—Mr. Penner in the chair.

TREASURY BOARD

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $20,432,000 be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1976 (less the amount voted in interim supply) as follows:

Vote 1—Central administration of the public service—program expenditures and the grants listed in the estimates, $20,432,000.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the committee to adopt the resolution?

● (1210)

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Chairman, may I first thank the opposition for doing me the honour of finding me important enough to inaugurate the proceedings on the discussion of departmental estimates in the House of Commons. The members of our party are very happy to be able to take part in the debate, and as you can see, Mr. Chairman, many of them are here to ask questions because they know the administration of the country is in good hands.

An hon. Member: This is debatable.

Mr. Chrétien: We have hardly launched the debate and already the opposition is on the defensive.

[Mr. Reid.]

Mr. Chairman, the control of government expenditures is not an easy task. Everybody is in favour of as much restraint as possible, but not a day goes by in the House without opposition members, who claim we spend too much, rising and calling for further outlays. That is why I welcome this opportunity of defending the government spending program before the House and not before a committee.

I am happy to report to the House that, true, there are internal administration problems, but the Canadian people are confident that we can solve them. The Canadian people know full well that if the Opposition were on this side of the House, it would be a disaster.

A year ago yesterday, the Opposition defeated us in the House of Commons and is still regretting it. The New Democratic Party no longer exists, it has no leader, it may have a new one soon who will perhaps devote three or four days to his responsibilities, provided he can listen to Brahms during the week-end. The Social Credit Party of Canada is faced with all kinds of problems, and the Progressive Conservatives have two or three leaders for the time being but none for the future.

So, Mr. Chairman, you can see why we are very much at ease today to defend our estimates in the House of Commons.

Over the last nine months, since I had the privilege of being appointed President of the Treasury Board, we have been faced with certain difficulties, and I would like to take a few minutes of the time of the House to deal with one problem concerning the general policy of the gouvernment; it is important for the Treasury Board in its expenditure policies, and for all Canadians, to realize that everyone of us, both in the House of Commons and outside, must face the facts.

Canada has been very lucky over the last 19 months since it was spared the economic recession our Southern neighbours, the United States, have been fighting over the last 18 months. Here in Canada, even though the economic expansion we wished for did not realize, we have been in a much better position than the United States, where recession has existed for 18 months now. Of course, we feel some of its effects, because we depend to a great extent on that giant neighbour by which so many of our resources are absorbed and with whom we do a great deal of trade.

Recently, Mr. Chairman, I had the pleasure to represent the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) at the special meeting of the Ministers of Finance of the OECD in Paris, and when I explained the situation in Canada, almost all my colleagues, ministers who were attending that conference, told me privately that while they admitted that we had some problems in Canada, they were all prepared, all those ministers of the OECD countries except perhaps one or two, to switch problems with us. Which means that our situation is not as difficult as it may appear to be.

Unfortunately, if we think that we have a ticket to absolute security, I feel we are simply deluding ourselves. That is why the Minister of Finance and members of the Cabinet initiated consultations throughout the country over the past months in order to encourage each and every Canadian to face the economic situation and to contribute as much as possible to the bettering of our economic situation.

As for us, within the federal government, although things have been relatively peaceful for a long time in the field of collective agreements, we may have been experiencing more difficulties over the last few months. And we have sought to establish principles in order to clarify the situation.

That is why, for instance, we have said repeatedly over the last nine months that we intend to allow civil servants to keep the right to strike which was granted to them by Parliament in 1967, but on the other hand, we also said that in the case of all those who would defy the law and strike illegally, we would take legal action to have them abide by the law. Unfortunately, we have been forced to do so since the month of December against more than 2,000 civil servants.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: If it takes as long to prosecute the longshoremen as it takes to prosecute the others, it will be a great success for the administration of justice in Canada!

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I am listening with interest to the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), but I am not the court. I have done my duty. I submitted the 2,000 cases to the Federal Government's Labour Relations Board, and from then on, it is up to the courts to decide. The chips are down. As far as I am concerned, I must say that the government has fulfilled its obligations. If the legislation is not sufficiently expeditious, if the machinery proves too slow, the Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons studying the Finkelman report may submit recommendations. We, as members of the government, have committed ourselves to table legislation following the submission of the Finkelman report, once the hon. members and senators will have made their recommendations to the government. But considering the legislation as it now stands, I feel, Mr. Chairman, that we have done what our duty called for us to do.

During the years 1971, 1972, 1973 and 1974, governmental expenses may have been considerable, I agree. Of course, in general, the Progressive Conservatives say that we spend too much. However, the New Democrats say that we do not spend enough. But the Canadian people recognize that we always have a much more balanced judgment in these situations and we do not fall into one extreme or the other.

In view of the inflationary pressures on the Canadian economy at this time, and in view of the increase of the unemployment rate in Canada, which is regrettable, but which can give us some satisfaction if we compare it to the rate in the United States since traditionally, during the winter, the United States always have 1 or 1.5 per cent less unemployed than Canada, during the last winter, despite the two metres of snow that we had, our unemployment rate was lower by nearly 2 per cent than that of the United States. However, in view of the delicate situation of our economy, we decided to control our expenses and we hope limit to 16 per cent the increase of our expenditures from 1974-75 to 1975-76. This is the policy that we have established and, since the beginning of this fiscal year, we believe that we can achieve this goal, but I must say, because it is important, that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) may soon present a new budget and, if he discovers any change in the economic situation of Canada following his present analysis, I shall have to adjust this prediction on the basis of any possible change in our economic policy.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that up till now, even though we have had many problems, we have coped with them in a much better way than most other countries, and I hope that the hon. members will make positive contributions when examining these estimates because, by its nature, my department is involved in the operations of all the other departments. I would like for once to see the Progressive Conservatives stand up and say where they would like us to cut down on our expenses. They always talk in a general way.

The hon. member for York-Simcoe is very good at that.

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Chrétien: No. We hope that he will do that; we know that he has great political ambitions, and we hope that some day he will come forward with concrete proposals.

We would like to know what kind of policy could be worked out. It is quite easy to criticize all the time. I was so critical when I was young that my friends in my riding are surprised that I am sitting on the government side, but I learned to be responsible and to face the facts. The member for York-Simcoe is supposed to have been very successful then, but some people will disagree with that. I am thinking of the Western Bank for instance, and maybe of other well-known activities. We would like to hear him some day tell us what he would do if he were to take my place, we do not want to repeat the disasters we have seen in the past, and we would like to hear logical and concrete suggestions. At least, the previous financial critic for his party tried from time to time to propose concrete proposals as a price and wages freeze; we did not agree with that but it was a concrete proposal. We knew then what it was and the proposal was discussed during the election campaign and the people reacted accordingly.

The Canadian people read his speeches, they voted on the basis of his speeches on July 8th, and the results are known. We have read all his speeches.

● (1220)

[English]

We made sure the people were aware of their speeches. A year ago smiles were on their faces, but on July 8 last year we saw their long faces because we went to the people of Canada and we won. Hon. members opposite begin to realize that they made a mistake in calling these estimates today. They thought it a great scheme when they developed this new technique, but we will use it to put our case to the people of Canada.

Mr. Woolliams: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. Would the minister try to stay with the facts? The procedure we have now is not new; it is almost as old as parliament. We lost the old rules by closure imposed by this government, but the minister's memory is so short that I thought I had better remind him before he got himself in trouble.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I feel very humble when I receive advice from the hon. member. I am glad he has given me the opportunity, but perhaps I should sit down if he is hurt too much.

Mr. Woolliams: It doesn't bother me; I just turn up my collar and let the blizzard blow.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): We will remember this speech on budget night.

Mr. Chrétien: I think I will sit down now. I welcome—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: I can tell the hon. member for Edmonton Centre that I will be here at five o'clock. I have the right to reply to everyone, and I will enjoy that time. I am not going into a back-room; I will hear the questions and reply to them. I hope I will be invited again, because I enjoy these occasions.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I wish the President of the Treasury Board had explained, in the 20 minutes allotted to him, some of the inconsistencies in the estimates now before us, not only within his department but in other departments of which he has over-all control. Instead, we have been subjected to some type of verbal biomass.

I believe that the essence of committee of the whole procedure is to get the facts. I notice that the minister adopted the trick of the government in talking about other jurisdictions and stating that somehow there are other countries that are doing even worse than we are. This is not in accordance with the facts. I think we should get that on the record at the beginning of this debate.

I find it very interesting that the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance have suddenly discovered that somehow the average worker in Canada is losing his productivity in relation to the United States. They must have known this at least a year ago, but they failed to reveal it to the Canadian public. The April 19, 1975, monthly economic letter put out by the First National City Bank of New York compared the competitive position of various countries with that of the United States. I think this government has a tremendous amount to answer for. The comparison shows that in 1965 the unit labour cost of Canadian production in relation to the United States was 85 per cent, and by 1970 it was still 85 per cent. That is when the Minister of Finance and his predecessor, and the President of the Treasury Board and his predecessor, started to tamper with things.

We find that by 1973 the productivity percentage had risen, in terms of Canadian productivity to that of the United States, to 96 per cent. Did any minister at that time point out that we were losing our productivity in relation to the United States? No, Mr. Chairman. At the end of 1974 our productivity was up to 99 per cent of that of the United States. That is one of the things the government should be more candid about with the Canadian people.

Look at it another way. How often have we heard people boast that we are the second wealthiest nation in the world. Actually, we are no longer the second wealthiest nation, per capita: we now rank sixth, behind such countries as Switzerland, Sweden, Denmark, the United States and Kuwait. The last named country jumped ahead, of course, because of its huge oil revenues. Canada has slipped, largely because there has been too much public sector interference with the private sector. There has been too much government and too much Treasury Board spending in the past.

The minister said he looks forward to answering each participant in the debate. I hope he is making notes because I want him to answer some questions. For example, why did estimates of $22.4 billion in 1973 jump to $28.7 billion in 1974? That represents a spending increase of $6.3 billion. The minister admits that this is so and suggests he will try to do better next year. By that, the minister means that our annual increase in spending will not be 25 per cent but 16 per cent. If all federal government spending in the first 77 years after Confederation, from 1867 to 1944, were added together—and bear in mind that spending in two world wars must be included—the total would be $27.8 billion, which is less than the federal government spent in 1974 alone.

Mr. Blais: What does that mean?

Mr. Gillies: You don't know?

Mr. Stevens: How typical of a government supporter to ask what that means. At one time governments were concerned even about $1 million; now the government appears to be unconcerned about the spending of $28 billion and more.

Mr. Gillies: It's just the taxpayers' money; that's all.

Mr. Stevens: Let me put the figures in perspective. Federal government expenditures for 1974 were twice the size of expenditures for 1969, three times the size of 1961 expenditures, and more than 12 times the size of 1950 expenditures. If expenditures continue increasing at the rate they increased between 1973 and 1974, they will double in less than three years. I suggest that members of the House ought to be concerned because government spending is out of control.

Mr. Gillies: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Since 1968, that unfortunate year when the Prime Minister took power, federal government expenditures have increased by 134.8 per cent, but the average weekly wage has gone up barely 100 per cent. As you know, the federal government in 1974 spent $28.7 billion. Let me bring that spending into perspective. This represents daily spending of $78.7 million, hourly spending of $3.3 million and, taking it down to the minute, $54,600 every minute. That is how fast the government spends the taxpayers' money. If you want to know why, consider the number of civil servants employed. The President of the Treasury Board has the nerve to say that he is doing a good job containing the numbers employed in the civil service.

Mr. Woolliams: He said he is just learning.

Mr. Stevens: I wish he would learn a little better, because despite the computer age in which we live we employ proportionately more civil servants today than ever before in our history. In the last four years the increase has been significant. There was one civil servant employed in 1970 for every 78 Canadians; in 1974 there was one civil servant for every 67 Canadians.

The great advantage of committee of the whole procedure is that it gives us the opportunity to question the minister on various aspects of his estimates. I hope government supporters will not start their sandbagging tactics, as they often do in standing committees, as I think it is in the public interest that the minister should be asked questions directly. Hopefully, he will give direct answers. The minister said that he hopes to contain spending this year to a 16 per cent increase. What are his intentions for future years? Is spending to increase next year by 14 per cent, 12 per cent, or 10 per cent? In short, will he adhere to guidelines the government is asking others in the economy to follow?

Mr. Nowlan: He is going to use his Ouija board.

Mr. Stevens: If the government is allowed to increase spending by even 16 per cent per year, cumulative government spending will increase by 110 per cent in five years. An increase of 16 per cent is extravagant. Therefore, when the government says it hopes to hold its spending to about 16 per cent more, that is totally unacceptable.

Mr. Gillies: Especially when the gross national product goes up only 3 per cent.

Mr. Stevens: As the minister keeps talking about restraint, I think he should explain why it is necessary for his department to be housed in such luxurious quarters in Place Bell Canada. I think all members of the House should look at those quarters, and the conditions under which the minister and his staff are working. They will see palm trees, Australian umbrella tree—

Mr. Nowlan: Swimming pools.

Mr. Stevens: —split-leaf philodendrons, and all the rest of it. I think they will agree that the quarters are lavish.

An hon. Member: Beyond extravagance.

Mr. Stevens: The Treasury Board is operating in quarters which would do justice to a tropical botanical garden.

Mr. Nowlan: It is a lotus land.

Mr. Stevens: Take a look at it: it is a paradise.

Mr. Fleming: But not compared with some of the homes in your riding.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: In the standing committee I tried to obtain details as to what the department is paying for these luxurious quarters. What is the rent per square foot? What did all the tapestries, beautiful shrubs, desks and other luxurious appointments cost? This is one of the most luxurious suites one can see in Ottawa.

An hon. Member: If not in Canada.

Mr. Stevens: I was told that information would be supplied, but so far it has not been and I trust the minister will supply it without further delay.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I can give the hon. member that information right away. Treasury Board has 220,000 square feet on five floors in Place Bell Canada. The rent was negotiated by DPW at $5.97 per square foot.

An hon. Member: And how many palm trees and split-leaf philodendrons are there?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, that is precisely the point I was making. The department is renting 220,000 square feet at more than $5 per square foot. Why, that is the equivalent of almost four acres of land at more than $5 per square foot. If you add what the Department of Finance has in the same luxurious building, you find they have almost ten acres of space that they are renting at approximately $5 per square foot.

● (1240)

Mr. Paproski: That is shameful.

Mr. Stevens: My colleagues tell me it is almost five acres of space that they are renting. Let me put it in another context. Five dollars per square foot, times 220,000 means $1,100,000 for rental space alone.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Stevens: It costs almost $100,000 a month to house the minister and his entourage—and this is the minister who has the nerve to talk to Canadians about restraint.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: If the minister wants to give us some information, he can tell us the price of some of the furniture in his palatial offices. What did it cost for the wall-hangings, plants and the botanical niceties he apparently feels is necessary?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. The President of the Treasury Board has not bought one chair since taking over these offices for the department.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Did you ever see such irresponsibility on the part of the government?

Mr. Chrétien: The hon. member was not telling the truth.

Mr. Stevens: Here we have the minister, sitting four seats away from his predecessor, and he has the nerve to suggest that whatever furnishings he is enjoying at the present time have nothing to do with him. We are talking about the fact that the government has housed the Treasury Board in extremely extravagant space and then turns around and tells the civil servants, wage earners and taxpayers of this nation to use restraint. In the standing committee I asked the minister to supply us with the cost of furnishings, carpets and all the rest of it for the 220,000 square feet being rented in Place Bell Canada. What did it cost to furnish those five acres of palatial quarters?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member will be allowed to put his questions, and the minister will have an opportunity to respond. This will facilitate the procedure.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member can ask questions and I will reply. However, he cannot say that I have not given a reply. The hon. member has not done his homework. It was replied to in the House of Commons on May 7, 1973, as reported at page 3460 of Hansard. Because the hon. member has not done his homework, we will have to table it again and again.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The minister is entering into debate. In order to facilitate the proceedings in committee, the hon. member for York-Simcoe will put his questions. When the hon. member's time expires, the minister will have an opportunity to answer all or any of the questions that have been put.

Mr. Stevens: Speaking about doing homework, I remind the minister that in the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates on April 28 of this year I put the following question to him:

> Could you also give us the cost of furnishing your quarters down there?

The minister replied:

> Yes. We can provide that to you. I do not know how much—

I simply ask why the minister cannot give us the information that he agreed to give us on April 28, 1975. I am not talking about 1973.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, with the indulgence of the committee I would like to reply to this question.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Chrétien: The hon. member asked me for a—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The Chair has ruled on the procedure to be followed in committee of the whole. The questions will be put, and they can be answered following the time that has been allotted to the hon. member.

Mr. Stevens: To be explicit, Mr. Chairman, I have referred to the 16 per cent target the minister feels they hope to restrain themselves to within the current year. In answering the points I have raised, I would like the minister to specifically indicate the following. First, does he believe that the 16 per cent will be attained in the current year? Second, what does he see for each of the subsequent years 1977, 1978, 1979 and 1980? If this government is going to attempt to work out a consensus arrangement with other sectors of the economy, surely they have to state at what level they are willing to restrain government spending.

The document that was tabled yesterday was very clear. As far as labour is concerned, they are spelling it out. They believe labour must systematically cut their increases to roughly 8 per cent per annum. Does the President of the Treasury Board have a similar program to ensure that government spending will fall by a certain percentage each year over the next five years, assuming that this restraint program comes into position?

We should also have an indication from the President of the Treasury Board as to the mechanics within the department while working out the spending programs of government. I understand that at the present time they are considering the 1977 estimates. Certain submissions have been made to the department. I believe the minister should outline the significance of budget A and budget B which are submitted in that process.

He should also indicate to what extent he has been overruled by his cabinet colleagues. For example, is it true that the family allowance program that was advanced by the Minister of National Health and Welfare did not go through Treasury Board until after it was agreed to by the cabinet? The President of the Treasury Board should indicate whether the spending program that has been announced by his colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, has been approved by Treasury Board; or is this, again, a proposed spending of $1 billion that has been cleared by cabinet with Treasury Board being told after the fact?

Does the minister believe that the amount in the current estimates is appropriate to cover the shortfall in the unemployment insurance fund this year? Also, to what extent do they have spot audits? To what extent do they examine the month by month spending programs within the various government departments? More important still is the need for a thorough review of some of the consulting contracts which have been let by the government. We have to know why there appear to be such inconsistencies in the contracts themselves. I should like to hear more concerning the tests applied to determine the productivity and efficiency of civil servants. This subject has been raised by some of the minister's own backbenchers. How do ministers judge whether a department is functioning efficiently or not?

● (1250)

Again, here is a government which is talking restraint to the labour community; talking in terms of a 12 per cent increase. What are the government's own guidelines with respect to the wage structure of its civil servants? Are settlements being reached within this range at the present time? We understand they are not. I should also like to know what percentage of the total gross national product the minister feels is a desirable percentage for the government to take. In the last ten years or so the government take, at all levels, has risen from some 30 per cent to around 40 per cent. Does the minister feel that this is an objectionable trend and one which should be reversed?

Will the minister explain why salary levels within government are dramatically higher than those of similar civil servants in the United States? I should like him to tell us what role he has played in the consensus discussions which have been taking place.

I have many questions I want to put to him.

Mr. Caccia: You have just revealed your ignorance. Carry on.

Mr. Paproski: Was that Caccia?

Mr. Woolliams: The great brain of the Liberal Party.

Mr. Paproski: Speak up, great wise one from Toronto.

Mr. Caccia: I don't pretend to be a financial critic, you know.

Mr. Woolliams: That is obvious from your remark.

Mr. Stevens: If the hon. member would like me to continue by asking a few more questions, I will be pleased to do so.

Mr. Chrétien: Go ahead, because they are not that dangerous.

Mr. Stevens: I should like the minister to tell us what is the current debt level in Canada. He should explain why it has been felt necessary to increase it from about $33 billion at the time the present government took office to almost $60 billion today. This is a sensational increase. The minister should tell us whether he anticipated it will continue to increase or whether the cabinet intends to ensure that the liabilities of the government shall not continue to increase at such an alarming rate.

Mr. Woolliams: What is the interest rate on that?

Mr. Stevens: My hon. friend has asked, what is the cost of this debt? Not only has the debt risen by almost 100 per cent, but interest rates have risen dramatically. We should be told, too, why the government has allowed such a high proportion of this debt to get into short-term securities and Canada Savings Bonds which are cashable on demand. This lack of foresight cost the Canadian public millions of dollars in the recent conversion of Canada Savings Bonds.

The minister should also indicate why he feels it was justifiable to increase the financing of Crown corporations from about $8 billion in 1968 to more than $16 billion at the present time. The government is now proposing to incorporate a new Crown corporation, Petro-Canada. It wants to reach into the public pocket for another $1.5 billion to finance that fantasy.

Mr. Woolliams: More jobs for Grits.

Mr. Stevens: I believe the minister should tell the Canadian public what the forecasts are for the coming years. We are not asking for anything unusual. Most democracies in the world furnish such figures as a matter of course. In the United States they even forecast the output for 1979 in the budgetary papers; they show, year by year, what they anticipate will be the spending program of the government. But this government likes to dwell in secrecy. It refuses to level with the Canadian public. It is the only government of a democratic country which will not reveal its forecasts of inflation, which will not reveal its production forecasts, which will not reveal its forecasts of unemployment.

Mr. Paproski: They do not know.

Mr. Stevens: Perhaps that is true. The fact is, we have a government which seems to be feeling its way by touch; one which refuses to come up with a well thought-out program capable of being justified to the public. Again, I hope the minister is making a note of some of these points. I believe he should indicate what percentage of the budget is controllable at the present time. As the figures are developing, not only is the budget skyrocketing but the percentage which is becoming uncontrollable is increasing even faster.

Mr. Chairman, perhaps I may continue after the recess.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): Order, please. The committee will continue consideration of vote No. 1 of Treasury Board. The hon. member for York-Simcoe had the floor when the committee rose for lunch, and he has three minutes remaining in his contribution.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, in summing up, may I say I hope the minister will attempt to answer some of the questions I have put to him, as soon as I have finished my remarks. We believe that we need more than a token President of the Treasury Board in this country. If you link the President of the Treasury Board with the attitude displayed by the Minister of Finance, who claims that political expediency today must take precedence over economic reality, you have a bad combination. The fact is that these two ministers, who should in any cabinet be the watchdogs of the treasury and should insist that their colleagues restrain their spending, are not performing their job. This is why we have such high spending in this country and it is the reason the Canadian public is skeptical about any talk of consensus so far as restraint and an anti-inflation program is concerned. We have a government which, due to the increase in the money supply and their own spending habits, have contributed more to inflation than any other single force in the country.

Having said that, I hope the minister can start answering some of the questions we have put. Let us hear, for example, what it has cost the Canadian taxpayer to supply the lavish surroundings that this minister and his predecessor have enjoyed in Place Bell Canada. Let that be put on the record so we can hear specifically what some of the tapestries, rugs and other fancy plants down there have cost the country.

I should also like to hear, early in his remarks, to what extent the government is committed to a more restrained spending program. They have said it will be 16 per cent this year. But what about 1977 up until 1980? Can we anticipate the government dropping two or three percentage points in their spending spree in each of those years, just as they are asking other sectors of the economy to do under the consensus policy? In short, we need a few answers and I hope we will get them this afternoon.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I think I should reply to some of the questions asked by the hon. member, because if I do not do so right away, he will be inclined to say that I do not want to reply. I was ready to reply right after he had asked his questions. I have already answered him about the square footage; $5.97 is competitive with other buildings in Ottawa. We have 220,000 square feet for the whole department. The hon. member was speaking about the business of the nation and he commented on the size of the offices in our department. Does he know that members of the department are forced to work in open spaces? Some people who make up to $30,000 a year do not even have a door to close, because we cannot afford it.

Mr. Stevens: Are you saying they are in the street?

Mr. Chrétien: No; they work in open spaces. We have to make it a little more agreeable for them, so of course we have a few plants here and there. The hon. member asks about how much money we have spent, but he does not ask how much money we have saved on that sort of thing. However, I am not going into that kind of nonsense because I think the people want us to be serious around here.

● (1410)

It was a great spectacle this morning when the hon. member asked all those questions and referred to the kind of government we had in 1867. He was 100 years late. We are talking about modern governments today. He compared the level of expenditures in 1867 to today. It is like comparing one banana with a crop of bananas. It is not the same ball game. He should be serious.

Mr. Stevens: Will you reply?

Mr. Chrétien: Yes, I will reply. He asks what the expenditures increases are from year to year. We have put $1.3 billion into oil compensation for the eastern consumers—Ontario, Quebec and the maritimes. He voted for that. His party voted for it. Everyone in the House agreed, and today he is sanctimonious about the cost of it. They all voted for the items.

Then we have the matter of equalization payments. This was one of the issues in Canada. A former premier of Nova Scotia, the present leader of opposition, asked for this. The hon. member is repudiating his leader. What kind of a party is it when they speak against each other like that? Of course there has been an increase in the public debt and we must pay it. With the kind of friends the hon. member has, if we do not pay our interest he will be the first to get up to complain. So we put $650 million into debt payments. What about health services? We had to put $678 million on top of the expenditures of the previous year for health services. This is to pay the nurses, for example. The members of the hon. member's party were on their feet in the House this morning asking us to give more to the nurses.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): We just want to get them back to work.

An hon. Member: Give them equality.

Mr. Chrétien: Equality among nurses in the same province?

Mr. McGrath: No, across the country.

Mr. Chrétien: What about the Tory minister of finance of the province of New Brunswick, who the other day told me that I was paying the civil servants too much and that the provincial civil servants wanted to join the federal government?

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Chrétien: I am not ashamed. The policy of the government is to be fair and to give its employees good salaries that are comparable with those of their competitors. We must have an overview of the situation. The kind of questions put to me by the hon. member for York-Simcoe are a good example of the reason the people do not vote for members of his party. They vote for something such as an increase in family allowances, but when the bill comes, they complain about the money being spent. They cannot have it both ways.

If you have any guts, you should vote against something if you do not want to pay the bill. If I vote for something, I know I must pay for it. The hon. member complains about the increase in the expenditures of the federal government. Of course there was an increase over the years, but there was a greater increase in the provincial field.

Mr. Stevens: Not last year.

Mr. Chrétien: Yes. On top of this, most of the increases in our expenditures last year were in the form of support payments either to individuals within the provinces or to provincial governments. This is not money we spend for fun. We are trying to redistribute the wealth of this country. From 1969 to 1974, the increase in federal expenditures was 110 per cent. For the same five years, the increase in the provincial field in respect of expenditures has been not 110 per cent but, rather, 139 per cent, or 29 per cent more than that of the federal government. The same story is true of the good province of Ontario which has had a Tory administration since eternity.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): And will continue to have.

An hon. Member: Until the election.

Mr. Chrétien: We will have the answer soon. They are in trouble down there.

The kind of argument the hon. member put to us is almost unbelievable. He compared the wealth of Canada, for example, with the wealth of Kuwait. This is stretching the argument a little. The situation there is very unusual. They are taking a lot of wealth from the ground and selling it in the world markets. It is an abnormal situation because of the increase in the price of oil around the world. They became rich quickly. We are not dealing with the same kind of situation. In fact, they do not know what to do with the money they have.

An hon. Member: Neither do you.

Mr. Stevens: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman; if the minister wishes to deal with the subject he is now on, I should like to hear his comments on the per capita situation in Sweden, Switzerland, Denmark and the United States. We once were number two in the world and were trying to be number one: under this government we have slipped to number six.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): That is not a point of order. The President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Chrétien: Anyway, Mr. Chairman, I think most of our expenditures have increased.

An hon. Member: What about Switzerland?

Mr. Chrétien: I follow the rules of the House, and the very able Chairman said this is out of order. For example, there has been an increase in expenditures because of the increase in the old age pensions. We have indexed the old age pensions. We have increased the amount of money we give to our older people.

The people who earn $25,000 working in the Treasury Board are working in open spaces without even doors to close. They should complain to me that I do not treat them well.

Mr. Stevens: What was the cost of furnishing those offices?

Mr. Chrétien: I gave you the price per square foot.

Mr. Stevens: What did it cost to furnish the offices?

Mr. Chrétien: We can provide the information for the table. I cannot give it to you now. We are always faced with the same problems. The hon. member should get serious. He speaks about office furniture when he should be talking about the problems of the nation. We want the House to tell us what to do. Members opposite ask questions but never give answers. They vote for increased expenses and then complain. This is why the people do not believe them.

I think it is true that the federal government and provincial governments are spending more than before, but we have a better quality of life in Canada than in most countries.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: No, we are number six.

Mr. Chrétien: I would prefer to have the view of the New Democratic Party.

An hon. Member: That, I can believe.

• (1420)

Mr. Chrétien: Because they are like us. As Mr. St. Laurent said, the only difference is that they are in too much of a hurry; that is the only difference. Hon. members opposite are living in the past. I want a modern society, and when you have a modern society you have family allowances, old age pensions and all the programs that the federal government has to offer. We equalize revenues across the land. But what I cannot stand and what the Canadian people cannot stand is hon. members opposite saying that they support a program and then not wanting to pay for it. When I go to a restaurant and they present me with the bill, I pay it; I do not quarrel with it. I do not want to have a free meal; I pay my way. We have decided to have a society in Canada that will be an example to the modern world, and that is why expenses are increasing.

Mr. Stevens: What about the furniture?

Mr. O'Sullivan: Do you call in a consultant to read the menu?

Mr. Chrétien: I am desperate when I see the hon. member with the ambition to become leader of his party. Is it the kind of leadership the country needs today? Is it the kind of leadership that Canada must have? I am sorry, because I had hopes that some day I would have the chance to be on the other side.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: I would love that, but I have to be responsible. I cannot take the chance, for the good of the nation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: So I have to stay here. The people of Canada agree that is good.

Mr. Stevens: What about the furniture?

Mr. Chrétien: I gave the information on the furniture. You will have it, Mr. Chairman, on the table on Monday; and the hon. member for York-Simcoe will get the colour of the furniture and if it is in leather—

An hon. Member: Or suede.

Mr. Chrétien: —or some other material, and he can play with all the chairs he wants for the next 20 years. However, something is certain: that after that speech the people of Canada will never give him anything else to administer but a few chairs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, it is one of the traditions of this place that we always have a good time on Friday. Today seems to be no exception and I do not quarrel with it, but at the risk of sounding like a long-faced, serious person—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): We would never accuse you of that.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): —I would like to make the point that we are dealing with one of the most important portfolios in the federal government. The Treasury Board is responsible for not just the $335 million listed in its own estimates; it is, in effect, responsible for the whole book because the estimates of all departments have to receive the approval of the Treasury Board.

In the process of doing its job, I suggest that the Treasury Board has an influence far beyond government itself. It has a commanding influence on the very make-up of Canadian society. I break this down, for the purpose of this short speech, to three headings: the Treasury Board is responsible for the spending policy of the federal government, it is also responsible for the wages and incomes policy of the federal government, and it is responsible for policies relating to pensions and other social benefits.

To the extent that the Treasury Board sets standards in these three areas—how we spend our money, what our incomes are, and what our pensions and other social benefits are—we are into the very heart of Canadian society itself, and I hope that for at least some of the afternoon the discussion will be on these serious matters rather than on the question of whether certain office chairs are covered with leather or suede.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I always enjoy listening to the President of the Treasury Board. I enjoyed meeting him when he first came here a dozen years ago. He was not quite the orator he is now, and, he did not know a word of English. Just listen to him now! He has come a long way.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He likes to say that the Tories across from him claim that he is spending too much money, while we down here in the NDP corner want to spend more. So he feels very comfortable being in the middle. May I point out to him that it is true that we criticize the Progressive Conservatives for having only one notion, namely, to cut down expenditure, but we do not—

Mr. Paproski: That is not true.

Mr. Woolliams: That is not right.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hon. members have had all the morning and they will have the rest of the afternoon. Let me have my 20 minutes. We are not just advocating the expenditure of more money; we are advocating proper priorities in government spending. We do not want to see money wasted on frills and non-essentials. We do not want to see our society given the kind of direction that results in overcapitalization in terms of filling stations, office buildings and an undersupply of homes, health services and the other things that our people need. Therefore, I say we are deeply concerned about the activities of this department because it not only determines how government money will be spent, but it sets the pattern for the spending of Canadians generally; and I argue very strongly that the kind of society we will have in the years immediately ahead and in the distant future depends on the kind of priorities that this department establishes.

I urge very strongly, therefore, that the Treasury Board think in these terms and realize that there is a point to our claim that the first charges on public money should be for the health, wellbeing and housing of our people; that public money should be spent to provide the jobs and services necessary to improve the quality of life in Canada.

So I say, let us not spend all afternoon on the question of whether so many dollars were spent on a particular office here or somewhere else. Let us have some discussion about priorities in our spending, knowing that in so doing we are determining the kind of Canada that we will have in the years that lie ahead. The President of the Treasury Board, a few weeks ago in the course of one of the labour disputes that was taking place, made the remark that he did not want the federal government to be a pace-setter. I suggest to him that, whether or not he wants the government to be a pace-setter, that is precisely what it is. The percentage of people who work for the federal government or Crown agencies is much higher than it used to be. This is the direction that we have pushed for, and we welcome it. The government is involved in so many of the activities of our country that the standards the government sets determine to a very large extent the standard of life—indeed, the quality of life—in Canada. So I say the priorities the Treasury Board establishes for the total expenditures of the government give a lead to the priorities of spending in Canada as a whole; and that makes our function at this moment terribly important .

● (1430)

The second heading I gave a few moments ago was wages and incomes policy. The Minister of Finance does a lot of talking about what wages should be paid and he talks about restraint on everybody except, of course, ourselves. But it is the President of the Treasury Board who, in very practical terms, has the final say about the wages and incomes of many thousands of persons, those in the employ of the federal government and, in turn, Crown corporations, and so on. I welcome the fact that we have established collective bargaining; and for all the aches and pains there may be in the process, it is alive and well and I hope it is here to stay. But there is one idea the government ought to start putting on the table when it comes to collective bargaining and I hope the President of the Treasury Board will take this to heart. I suggest that one of the reasons we are having so much trouble in the wages and incomes field in Canada is the growing spread between the incomes of those in lower brackets and those in upper brackets. I suggest that one of the myths we continue to subscribe to at the bargaining table is the myth of percentage increases. It sounds fine and plausible to say we should give a 10 per cent increase, but 10 per cent of $10,000 is $1,000 and 10 per cent of $40,000 is $4,000.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. O'Sullivan: Very good.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My hon. friends approve of my arithmetic, but I suggest that this is not a laughing matter. This is one of the things happening in our day. We are assuming that to raise wages on a percentage basis, is the thing to do but the result is that we are getting increasingly wide discrepancies and when people in the middle or lower income groups see people in the upper income groups going higher and higher into the stratosphere, they want more, too—and that is the picture we have.

An hon. Member: Tell that to the unions.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am telling it to members of parliament. This House gave a lead to this country. Hon. members wanted a 50 per cent increase but toned it down to 33⅓ per cent with 7 per cent escalation compounded on an annual basis. I suggest that if we want to give some leadership, it should start here. We made that decision or, rather, parliament made that decision. Some of us were strongly opposed to it, but I suggest to the President of the Treasury Board that in wage talks going on with those involved in collective bargaining and in the adjustments which are made in the upper reaches of the public service, it is time to start talking increases which are in lower percentages for those in the upper brackets but not for those in the lower brackets.

I do not know what will happen in terms of salaries for those at the top level, the deputy ministers, assistant deputy ministers and assistants to assistant deputy ministers—those in the $30,000, $40,000 and $50,000 bracket. I believe there is some kind of study being made about them and no doubt a report will be made discussing what has happened in the private sector, and so on, and setting it all out in percentage terms, and we are likely to receive another of those recommendations. Such a recommendation will do just as much damage to the wage situation in this country as has been done in this place and over in the Senate as well.

When one talks about the cost of living having gone up and the need for people to be compensated with higher wages to meet the rise in the cost of living, I suggest that that percentage increase should apply only to that portion of one's income which is actually spent meeting the cost of living, but because persons have enough to cover the cost of living and then more for luxuries is no reason why the percentage increase should apply both to the basic part and to that which is gravy on the top.

I make this speech on this occasion because although the President of the Treasury Board may not set all the wages in Canada, he has much to do, even in the collective bargaining process, with the wage levels in the public service, those which come under collective bargaining, and perhaps even still more to do with the wages and salaries of those in higher brackets who receive more. The strong plea I make to him is that he not live for ever by the myth that percentage increases solve the problem. Percentage increases are fine for those in the lower or middle-income brackets, but the same percentage increases given to those in the upper brackets simply cause more trouble.

Mr. Jamieson: Is the union movement agreeable to that?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My hon. friend asks a very good question. He wants to know whether the union movement is agreeable to that. There is real trouble in the union movement over that; I do not deny that for one moment. Those higher up still want to receive just the same percentage as those lower down. But someone has to give the lead somewhere. If my idea is sound, and there are many people in the union movement who agree with it, I think someone has to give a lead to it somewhere and I am hoping that the President of the Treasury Board will try to give that lead.

Mr. McRae: Explain your split-level cost of living percentages to some and not to others.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If my hon. friend is asking that I set a figure, I think by doing that I would simply start an argument over such a figure, and I do not feel like doing that. I want to stick to the principles.

Mr. McRae: Explain how it would work.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I think that if there has been an increase in the cost of living of, say, 10 per cent, wage increases should be 10 per cent of that portion or up to that level which is regarded as covering a standard, basic cost of living. For incomes above that point, the increase should be less than 10 per cent. Where incomes are way up, there should be none at all.

Mr. Railton: About 7 per cent?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My hon. friend had better just sit in his seat and keep quiet. That 7 per cent we are to get is compounded on top of 33⅓ per cent, so that by the end of this parliament we will be getting an increase of 62 or 63 per cent. If my hon. friends want to continue debating the pay increase, they can take me on any day they want.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Don't get Stanley ruffled.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I will move to the other heading I mentioned, that of pensions and social benefits. One is aware that old age security and other benefits in that area come under the jurisdiction of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, but the President of the Treasury Board is responsible for pension policy as it affects public servants, the armed forces, RCMP personnel, and a whole host of others. We will receive the list in a few days when we deal with Bill C-52. I call upon the minister to straighten out some of the anomalies in that situation, little details such as the fact that armed forces personnel have to wait until age 60 before they get their escalation, and also the fact that the escalations are always behind, as applies in some other cases as well. There is also the need to increase the percentage paid to widows. But I mention this subject now because I think the principle I have suggested regarding wages and salaries will some day also have to apply to pensions.

I take some pride in having fought for about 25 years to have retired civil service pensions escalated. I remember the thrill it was when we finally won and the present Minister of Public Works stood here one Friday afternoon and announced it, but I am disturbed by the fact that in one respect we won too well. The kind of percentage increase we now have is such that when in January of this year there was a 10 per cent increase in all public service pensions, that meant that the $2,000 people received an increase of $200, but those with $25,000 pensions received a $2,500 increase. I think the principle I have just been enunciating regarding the wages and incomes of our people should apply to pensions. In other words, I am arguing for us in Canada to move more in the direction of an egalitarian society. Perhaps it will take us a while to get there, but at least we can narrow the gap. You do not narrow the gap when you use the percentage formula and keep raising those at the top salary more than those at the bottom. You narrow the gap if you exercise restraint for those higher up and bring the others closer to them.

● (1440)

As I said earlier, I am arguing for this not just because it applies to many thousands in the public service or retired from the public service, but because what the President of the Treasury Board said the other day is the fact: he is a pace-setter. To the extent that we establish these ways of doing things in the public service, we establish them as a whole.

I am prepared to let my case rest at that for the moment. I call upon the House to treat this department as the serious one it is. The estimates of the Treasury Board itself are a little over 1 per cent of the total estimates in the book, but the Treasury Board approves all the estimates in the book and so is largely responsible for the social direction established in this country. I hope the President of the Treasury Board will pay some attention to the ideas I have submitted this afternoon.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I should like to reply to the two points that the hon. member has raised. I must congratulate him on the level of his participation; he is much less concerned with the quality of furniture than with people. The hon. member spoke about wages and incomes policies and the influence that the Treasury Board has. I disagree with him, however, when he says that sometimes we become the pace-setter, because I have tried to avoid that. I have said many times that when I resist some demands as President of the Treasury Board, it is not just because it would be too expensive for the federal government to implement them. Of the $32 billion estimates in front of the House today, we spend only 14 per cent on wages, so even if I overspent my budget by 10 per cent it would be only 1.4 per cent of the total expenditure, which would not destroy the whole system.

It would be a very simple solution for me to become a pace-setter and to put pressure on all other levels of public and private administration, but I do not think we should use the federal government for that purpose. We have to maintain high standards and we cannot allow problems to develop that would affect other levels of government and the private sector. Our policy is comparability. We want our people to be as well paid, but not better paid, than other people.

Some hon. members complain to me because in Canada 20 per cent of the federal civil servants are on a regional rate, and other members from places like Vancouver, the Yukon, or Seven Islands complain about the national rates because the cost of living is higher there. We try to pay blue collar workers, who are not too mobile, a rate comparable to that paid to the same type of worker in the same town because we feel we should not put a burden on the local economy by paying higher than our competitors in the same labour pool.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

With a national rate, you end up with a situation like the strike of firefighters in Vancouver. They wanted the regional rate because they earn $2,000 a year less than the city of Vancouver firefighters. We wanted to pay them the same as the city, but the national rate did not permit us to do that and the unions do not permit us to do it either. We are negotiating those things with the unions now, winning some arguments and losing some. So, Mr. Chairman, I do not agree with the hon. member that we have to be the pace-setter. I think we should avoid that, but should treat our employees as well as anybody else on a comparable basis.

As far as the spread between the lower and the higher bracket is concerned, I think the hon. member has a good point. We have to avoid speaking in terms of percentage. The hon. member's arithmetic is simple and understandable—10 per cent of 10,000 is 1,000, and 10 per cent of 40,000 is 4,000. We have managed to narrow the gap to some extent in the last five years when we have given 8.7 per cent more to people in the operational, administrative, support and technical categories than for the people at the top level. That means the people who are lower than the SXs receive 8.7 per cent more than the higher echelon. It is not much of a difference, but it is a difference.

The hon. member argues that everyone should earn more or less the same salary, but I do not know any country where everyone is equal. I had a discussion with the ambassador to Canada of one of the socialist countries, and asked him the difference in pay between a minister and a plumber in his country. He said that the minister gets about five times more than the plumber. If a plumber in Canada makes $20,000, then I should be making $100,000, and I am very far away from that. Mr. Chairman, it is just a dream to think of everyone on the same level of pay. That dream has not been realized over the centuries and I do not think we are on the verge of realizing it in Canada or anywhere else.

The hon. member said that the government should intervene in society and try to correct some of the inequities. Just to show the increase in our expenditures, I should like to point out that in 1966-67 the federal government spent a little less than $2 billion on health and welfare; in 1974-75, we will spend more than $7 billion. In eight years, social and welfare expenditure has increased 3½ times. Of course, all members of the House have been associated with that. When I came here in 1963 we did not have things like medicare. Old age pension payments were very low and were not indexed. We had no national hospitalization program, nor were there many of the social benefits which exist today in our society. We have quadrupled family allowances, and I am proud to have been associated with this.

That is the trend, but there is a limit. In our society, there are now fewer inequalities than existed, say, 25 years ago. Today you will see fewer people begging on the sidewalks. We do not see beggars any more and this is the result of legislation which members of this House have supported in the last 10 or 15 years. I think we should keep on this course. I know we cannot do everything in one parliament or in one generation, but I think most hon. members agree that the fabric of our society is stronger now and there is more social equality than there was 25 years ago. Of course, a lot remains to be done. We hope that if the economy grows sufficiently strong, we can do more. But we need time and more growth in our economy if we are to achieve our aims. I hope everyone will get the message and do their best to improve conditions in the land.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, when I first listened to the minister this morning I wondered where I was. I have always understood that in committee of the whole ministers make submissions and that estimates are dealt with seriously. I admit that my practical experience is limited, but I have read about this procedure and we dealt with several matters earlier in the session in committee of the whole. Frankly, I was offended by the minister's attitude earlier today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): He has used this procedure which has been established in other parliaments and which, until 1968, was followed in this parliament for the purpose of getting his message across. The members of the committee and the public want to know, basically, how the government is managing the affairs of this country. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said, this matter must be treated with seriousness and not in a partisan way.

An hon. Member: Oh, boy!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Earlier today I heard the hon. member for York-Simcoe direct a number of questions to the minister, not one of which, so far as I can remember, has been answered. Those questions dealt with furniture, office space and other matters. They were legitimate questions put to the government on behalf of the people of Canada and they have not been answered. The government should not treat committee of the whole procedure in the way the Prime Minister treats the question period. This is not the place to parry: this is the place where the government is to be held accountable for its spending, for its objectives and for the working of its policies.

An hon. Member: Get to the point.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I will get to it in a minute. The President of the Treasury Board says to those in the opposition who are asking questions, "Tell us what you would do." I say to the President of the Treasury Board, "My God, you won the election"—and I don't begrudge the victory, but in that election the people of Canada placed on the shoulders of the government certain responsibilities. One of them is to account to parliament and the people, and the other is to act.

Mr. Woolliams: And to govern.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): The minister spoke about the Canadian people having long faces. You bet they have long faces. We are discussing these estimates in a strange atmosphere, an atmosphere in which unemployment is increasing, inflation is escalating, senior citizens are falling ever further behind, housing starts are down, our balance of payments situation is in trouble and our dollar, according to rumours, may be devalued. The Minister of State responsible for housing cannot meet his optimistic expectations. Further, the optimism of the Minister of Finance of five months ago has evaporated. Yesterday he put on his red tie and grey suit and finally admitted that this country is in trouble.

That is the atmosphere in which we are asking the government to account. The President of the Treasury Board has a responsibility. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said—I do not always agree with him, but I agree with him on this—the Treasury Board is the heart and soul of the government's operation; its tentacles spread to every department. It has the responsibility to account and to establish priorities. I suggest that there is little evidence of priority planning on the part of that department of government.

More than that, Treasury Board has the responsibility of overseeing government programs. It should not hide expenditures, but disclose them. It should not refuse to give forecasts on unemployment and inflation, but give them to parliament and the Canadian people. That has not happened in this country. If we are to continue in committee of the whole with the kind of charade we witnessed before lunch, I do not hold out much hope for the continuation of this kind of procedure.

I hope that some backbench members on the government side are prepared to ask the kind of questions which we on this side of the House are asking. They, too, are private members and ought to be concerned about the workings of parliament. They, too, ought to be concerned about where this country is going, at what pace and what the benefits are to be. They, too, should ask how the government is to solve this or that problem; what we are to do about housing, for example. They, too, should question the President of the Treasury Board and not try to barrack those who are trying to question the minister in committee.

An hon. Member: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Sit down and go back to sleep. The Treasury Board has the responsibility to oversee the financial operations of this government and to see that rules concerning the spending of money are observed. It must see to it that cabinet ministers follow those rules in their spending. I say that is not happening in this country. It has not happened recently.

I directed a series of questions to the Minister of Labour, in his capacity as minister responsible for multiculturalism, about a certain matter. On December 20, 1974, I asked the minister certain questions about a contract involving the sum of $250,000. The figure is not important; the principle is. I asked the minister why a certain contract had been awarded to Price, Rubin and Partners who are, coincidentally, the former law partners of the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order—on two points of order, actually. First, I submit the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton is going beyond the scope of these particular estimates by raising a matter to do with multiculturalism. Second, as the hon. member invited backbenchers of the governing party to pronounce themselves on certain matters, I suggest to him that they have not done so because none of them has been recognized by the Chair.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Blais: Hon. members here have tried to catch the attention of the Chair.

Mr. Nowlan: That is not a point of order. Pull in your horns.

● (1500)

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Dealing with this matter, Mr. Chairman, that firm received three contracts without tenders during the fiscal year 1974-75. There was $170,000 provided to promote the efforts of the Department of the Secretary of State. That submission was signed by the Minister of Labour. There was $75,000 for an ethnic festival in Ottawa.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Woolliams: Why don't you sit down?

Mr. Blais: Perhaps the hon. member for Calgary North would like to take the chair and rule on this matter. I point out to you, Mr. Chairman, that I raised a point of order, namely, that the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton is attempting to deal with the Department of the Secretary of State. I suggest he ought not be allowed to do that.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. If the hon. member will look at vote 1 of the Treasury Board, he will see that the hon. member is in fact in order.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): The last one was $250,000 to publicize the aims of several departments and cultural agencies, launched in the winter of 1974. That submission was signed by the Minister of Labour on November 21, 1974.

I am not going to deal with the question of the commission that was received by that particular department because in terms of the amount I understand the commission was reasonable. However, it is a fact that under the rules of the watchdog, Treasury Board, its approval must be sought for all ad expenditures exceeding $10,000 before commitments are made. The fact is the ads in this campaign for a quarter of a million dollars appeared in the papers well before January 16, 1974. This is the information I tried to get from the Minister of Labour without success. I questioned the President of the Treasury Board as well. Treasury Board did not give final approval until January 16, 1975. The Minister of Labour admitted that in a letter he wrote to me on April 9. He said there was a Treasury Board document to cover it dated November 21, 1974, but the fact is the money was spent on this contract well before Treasury Board approval was received. I believe, and will continue to believe unless I am advised to the contrary, that was an attempt to cover up this kind of program which has been going on for a long time.

I am also advised that Mr. Price of Price, Rubin and Partners stated that he was not aware he needed Treasury Board approval before work could proceed. I do not know how he could be unaware of that. I am not going to make any comment with regard to the connections between the Minister of Labour and Mr. Price who heads that department. I have said all I want to say. However, out of this litany of difficulty there are a few questions I want to put to the President of the Treasury Board. This is only exemplary of a number of things that the government has been doing, even if it is well intentioned.

What procedure did the Treasury Board follow when Price, Rubin and Partners, Inc. were recommended for the $250,000 contract? Would the minister explain what procedure is followed by the government which enables individuals or firms to be granted government contracts without tenders being called? Does the minister not agree that the granting of government contracts without tenders being called smacks of political patronage, and that legislation should be introduced to prohibit this from occurring in the future?

Mr. Blais: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. I understand that the order for today is to study votes Nos. 1, 5, 10 and 20 of the Treasury Board. I have looked at those votes. None of them covers any of the matters which have been brought to the attention of the government by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Blais: I am on a question of privilege and I would like to complete my point.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. Whether it is on a point of order or a question of privilege, the Chair has ruled on the matter which disturbs the hon. member for Nipissing. To repeat, vote No. 1 concerns those matters which come under the administrative authority of the Treasury Board. This is a broad category dealing with a large number of policy matters under the jurisdiction of the government. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton is quite in order in his remarks.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I will begin by repeating the question I tried to put before I was interrupted. Does the minister not agree that the granting of government contracts without tenders being called smacks of political patronage, and that legislation should be introduced to prohibit this from occurring in the future? Is that not a reasonable proposition?

Will the minister explain why Price, Rubin and Partners, Inc. proceeded with their multiculturalism campaign before the Treasury Board approved this contract? Is this standard procedure for all government contracts or just those which are granted without tenders being called? Will the minister explain why Price, Rubin and Partners, Inc. were not informed that they must seek Treasury Board approval before their work could proceed? In light of Mr. Price's statements that he was not aware that he needed Treasury Board approval, is this House to assume that work was started on the two previous contracts before they were approved by the Treasury Board?

I think there is something to be answered for here, and this is only with regard to one minister, albeit in a relatively small monetary area of government expenditures. However, in terms of the principle of accountability and the integrity of Treasury Board, and indeed of the President of the Treasury Board, what discretion do ministers have to spend money? How is it being used? These are legitimate questions to be put to any President of the Treasury Board in the course of this kind of proceeding.

I think the hon. member for Nipissing would be well advised to sit back and listen rather than interrupt on questions of privilege. The answer may well be that there is innocence.

Mr. Gillies: I doubt it.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): There may be some who doubt that. I can forgive them if they do. However, regardless of what might be said, I think these questions are legitimate and should be answered.

There is another question I want the President of the Treasury Board to answer. Will he consider, or in fact review all government contracts which the Minister of Labour has approved for similar irregularities and, if they exist, report to this House? I think that is a legitimate request. At the same time, he might ask his brothers in the ministry to do the same. I think this is quite legitimate in view of this kind of matter occurring.

As I understand it, the purpose of committee of the whole is to deal with the whole issue of accountability in parliamentary government. The estimates must be accountable as well. They must stand up to scrutiny. I have been going into this matter. I will mention certain estimates.

It is a fact that the estimates for the official languages branch are down 48 per cent although authorized man-hours, according to the same estimates, are the same. In an age when the government, following its policy, is promoting the use of two official languages, expanding schools and hiring teachers, the estimates of the official languages branch are somehow down. Do you know what this suggests to me, Mr. Chairman? It suggests that if the true cost of the program were known, however well intentioned the expenditure might be, the people of Canada would shake in their beds. I ask the President of the Treasury Board to produce the figures. They are scattered, now, through all the departments. It is important that he should produce them.

The Official Languages Act embodies a principle which was supported by all parties in the House, but there is a difference of opinion as to the manner in which it is being implemented in the public service. Surely, these items should be brought together. How much is this program costing? Are the Canadian people getting dollar value for the tremendous amount being spent?

I ask this question in the light of another revelation. Here is the document which was produced to the Director of Finance and Administration and the Director of Planning and Evaluation by the personnel adviser of a certain department of government. It said:

> For the third consecutive year, the Commissioner of Official Languages has reported to cabinet that in general the public service is not meeting the requirements of the Official Languages Act.
> In February of this year, the Prime Minister met with the deputy heads of all government departments and agencies and indicated that the Public Service was not making sufficiently rapid progress toward the attainment of the objective of institutional bilingualism and that the bilingualism process must be accelerated.

What have they done? They have decided that term employees who fill designated bilingual positions for six months or more must be bilingual at the time of selection. Not only is this stupid in terms of policy but it is discriminatory. In effect, it is saying that those who want to work for the government on a term basis in a position which is designated bilingual must be bilingual from the outset. Nobody quarrels with the principle of the Official Languages Act, but it is this kind of nonsense which arouses the ire of Canadians. Indeed, it is this kind of nonsense which prompts me to ask: how much is this program costing? I think this is a legitimate question for one to ask, especially in this committee where the government is supposed to account for such matters.

The minister might not be able to answer all these questions immediately and if that is the case I am prepared to see the answers tabled. Preferably, I should like to have the answers now, because if this procedure in the committee of the whole is to mean anything these are questions to which answers should be forthcoming.

Mr. Chrétien: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I cannot reply to the questions at this moment because each time I get up to reply another member of the House is deprived of an opportunity to speak. If my speaking has the effect of depriving another hon. member from asking questions I prefer to remain in my seat.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Laurier.

Mr. Woolliams: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, this arises from the position the minister is taking. While the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton was speaking, several meetings were going on across the way. In fact, there was louder talk over there than I could hear from this side of the chamber. Now the minister says he wants to let everybody speak. Mr. Chairman, I saw the Liberal whip going around among the members of his party. They are going to talk, and we shall get no answers. This whole procedure will be a farce unless we can get information.

This morning I reminded hon. members that the opposition had enjoyed certain well established rights, ever since confederation, when it came to voting supply. I might have added that in the old days we would say to a minister, "We are not going to pass your estimates until we get answers to our questions." But under this hanky-panky compromise in which we find ourselves today the minister can remain silent and hide all the facts from the people of Canada.

Mr. Chrétien: I should like to reply to the hon. member on that point of order. I am sitting in my place as a Minister of the Crown, not as a member of a party, yet the time I take is counted against the party on this side. I should like to give all the answers, but it is unfair that others should lose an opportunity to take part in asking questions. The hon. member for York-Simcoe urged me to reply right away to his questions. I did so, but I realized that the Liberal party would be deprived of time, and I respect the rule of the majority.

Mr. Stevens: The minister's suggestion, if followed, would make these proceedings absolutely worthless. We have sat through debates with the Minister of Finance, for example, when his department was involved. He answered the questions we put to him, and there was no suggestion that somehow he was taking up the time of his hon. friends on that side of the House. I should like to see the minister answer some of the questions we have raised. He said he answered the questions I raised. I put 13 questions to him and he touched on two of them.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I should like to know from you whether it is true that each time I speak the time allotted to members of the Liberal party is shortened accordingly?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): It doesn't really matter whose time the minister uses up. What is important is that the minister answer our questions. How could he possibly say he is not here as a party man. If he is not a Liberal, I have not seen a Liberal. Of course he is here as a party man, but he is also here as a member of the government appearing before the committee of the whole, the rules governing which have been worked out by his own House leader, the House leader of the NDP, myself, and others, because we wanted to see the thing work. The only way that it will work at all is if the minister exercises the responsibility that is his, rises in his place and answers the questions that have been put to him.

● (1520)

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): He has not got the guts.

Mr. Reid: On point of order, Mr. Chairman, something has occurred this afternoon that was not contemplated when these new rules were designed and when they were discussed in committee. Some of us had always had the idea that when a minister rose to answer question put to him in these proceedings this was time that would not come out of the time allotted to the political party the minister represented, because he was answering as a Minister of the Crown. What has happened this afternoon is that members on this side of the House have not had an opportunity to speak because it has been considered by some members of the House that, in speaking, the minister has been a partisan of the Liberal party instead of speaking as a minister of the Crown.

It is clear that something has arisen which had not been contemplated. We do not dispute the right of the Chair to take the attitude it has, and we are not raising a point of order from our side, but there will have to be discussions among the House leaders and others to decide how this procedure is to work. Mr. Speaker has made it clear, time and time again in the question period, that he is recognizing more members on this side than he has before. Therefore, if the Chair takes the attitude that the time taken by the minister is time taken from this side, then we will have to seek an accommodation to satisfy the members on this side, who are also members of parliament and have the right to participate in the proceedings of this House in the same way as any other elected member.

Perhaps the matter could be left where it is now and we will abide by the practice you have followed; but perhaps the committee would give the minister 20 minutes to sum up before the proceedings are concluded this afternoon.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The duty of the Chair is clearly that of balancing the time on both sides of the House. On the point of order that has been raised, members will recognize that time has been taken from the hon. member for Laurier who has been recognized. The hon. member for Laurier has the floor.

[Translation]

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Chairman, twice you rendered a decision to the effect that when the estimates of the Treasury Board are examined, in view of the objectives set out in the Blue Book, almost any problem could be discussed. I do certainly not wish to—

[English]

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Rocky Mountain is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): I should like to have clarified, for my benefit and that of other members who want to have this proceeding make some sense and serve some purpose, whether it will be the intention of the minister responsible here, the President of the Treasury Board, to answer the questions put to him by members of the House, or whether he is going to use the lame excuse he just used, as another cover for not providing information to members of parliament. Is he going to get up and answer questions asked by my colleague from Grenville-Carleton, or is he going to continue to hide out?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, this morning I was very keen to get up and reply to the questions. I will take note of the questions, and if the House gives me time at the end I will try to reply. I felt it was a proper procedure to reply now, but in doing so, the rule, as it stands now, was depriving the majority of their time, and I decided I would not get up and deprive the majority of their rights as members of parliament.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Laurier.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): In other words, you won't answer. You have absolute contempt for the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): It seems, Mr. Chairman, that the opposition would like to muzzle the Liberals. I do not feel that this procedure is in order in a parliament, and when there is an indication that the Liberals wish to muzzle the opposition, then the members of the opposition grumble. Well I too am also going to grumble, because something had already been agreed upon almost ten minutes ago, and since then I have been interrupted.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member for York-Simcoe on a point of order.

Mr. Stevens: The minister made reference to what he understands is some rule governing these proceedings. I should like clarification. Is there any rule such as the minister has referred to, because the committee of the whole proceeding is absolutely useless if what the minister says is true? These government members can sandbag this thing until five o'clock.

Mr. MacEachen: They are members of parliament too.

The Deputy Chairman: There certainly is no such rule as that to which the hon. member for York-Simcoe has referred. There has been a decision from the Chair that it is standard practice in committee of the whole to balance the time on both sides of the House. That the Chair will endeavour to do. If the minister rises to respond he will, of course, be recognized. If he does not rise to respond on this side of the House, then another hon. member will be recognized, which is what has happened at the present time. The hon. member for Laurier has been recognized, and members have been eating into his time on various points of order.

[Translation]

● (1530)

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Chairman, I hope that the interruptions I have been submitted to since you recognized me about 15 minutes ago will not be included in the time I was given to speak on the important matter of the Treasury Board's estimates.

As I said earlier, you did make a ruling that, when—

[English]

Mr. Paproski: Go ahead and ask some questions.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Have you anything to say? If not, sit down because we have.

[Translation]

An hon. Member: If you have something to say, say it.

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Chairman, I have a lot to say, but even if there are very few opposition members here this afternoon, I think the matter we are considering is an important one. There are hardly ten of them, so I believe they are not entitled to ask me if I have something to say. They do not seem to have anything to say, except destructive criticisms. The member of the House asked whether I have anything to say. I do have a lot to say and I am going to take all my time to say it. I cannot see why they should continue to interrupt me in such a disgraceful way. But it is a habit that particular member has indulged in for some time and I cannot see where it will lead him. He may believe that his attitude will lead him to the leadership of the Progressive Conservative party, but I do not think it will. I believe that more qualified people might get the job.

Mr. Chairman, I would not like to be interrupted every other minute because I surely will have many difficulties to express what I have to say this afternoon about the Treasury Board.

As I said before I was interrupted many times, a ruling was made and sustained on two or three occasions, that, when one speaks about the objectives of the Treasury Board, one can speak about many matters. I am very glad—

[English]

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Why don't you ask some questions?

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): If you have something to say I will sit down.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): I have a number of questions to raise with the President of the Treasury Board. The hon. member has ceded his time to me. I am delighted to have that happen, and I am prepared to put my questions now to the President of the Treasury Board.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for Laurier has the floor.

[Translation]

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Chairman, it shows once more that he will surely not become the leader of the Progressive Conservatives.

As I was saying earlier, you made decisions that I consider very important as I am the chairman of a committee which is, as you know, the miscellaneous estimates committee and this, fortunately or unfortunately for the opposition, since 1968. From time to time, I had to make similar rulings as your own, Mr. Chairman, and the Liberal members of that committee often discussed my rulings on the relevance of the question put to ministers and you can be sure that I shall refer to your ruling when my own decisions will be discussed in committee.

As usual, it is not surprising, the opposition takes advantage—

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I must again rise on a point of order because the hon. member referred to the fact that your ruling would be remembered by him when he chairs one of his committees. We must get this proceeding into perspective. What is supposed to be happening today is in our opposition day the estimates have been brought back from a standing committee at which point we hope to have an opportunity to re-examine the situation and receive answers from the minister. In a standing committee there is never any suggestion when a minister is under questioning that his time should come out of the time of the Liberal members on that committee. They receive their relative pro rata time in the committee. To suggest that every time the minister stands up to answer a question from our side or from the government side the time should come from the Liberal side is totally wrong. I think it is an extremely alarming thing to hear from the chairman of one of the standing committees the suggestion that he will take this type of ruling back to the committee. The fact is that we should have the right to question the minister. Instead of loading the questions as I have to do by asking 13 of them I think he should be allowed to answer each question if we wish. I would ask that this would be reviewed and that we have a meaningful proceeding here. We have less than an hour and a half to go. We have questions we wish the minister to answer and at the present time it is obvious that we are going to be sandbagged up until five o'clock.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I rise on the same point of order, Mr. Chairman. If it is your ruling, and we are bound by that ruling for the balance of the afternoon, then may I say with the greatest respect that I hope you will place on the record that this is at least an experimental project. We are attempting to marry the old opposition day in the traditional sense with the committee of supply day of an even longer tradition. The marrying of this situation may contain some difficulties and there may have to be some discussions. If I may say so I would hope that you would at least indicate that your decision here today ought not to in any way bind the committee forever and that if it is to stand for today, at the very worst it should stand only for today and ought not to go any further.

I say this because there has been an honest attempt—I have said this to the government House leader and have said it on previous occasions—to do something to make this a meaningful procedure. When the hon. member for York-Simcoe stated as he did a few moments ago that the members of this House ought not to be impeded in terms of their time by virtue of an interjection or an answer to a question by the minister I think it is in the mind of every one of us that it should happen in this way and I hope you, Mr. Chairman, will not bind anyone occupying the chair in the sense of giving the hon. member for Laurier any comfort in his suggestion that he could take notice of this in committee as some sort of precedent. I do not think that should be the case.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that it was my point of order that initially fuelled this fire I might indicate I would join with the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton in his comment and hope that if there is to be some sort of consultation we would also consider my first point of order which was the subject matter and the length of the examination or debate which could take place.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The President of the Privy Council on the same point of order.

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I wish to support my colleague the acting House leader for the Conservative party, the Official Opposition, in saying I hope you will look upon this as an experimental day and an experimental procedure and avoid making any rulings until we have had an opportunity to discuss these proposals. I have only one comment to make which I believe also should be borne in mind by those participating in the discussion this afternoon. The minister is placed in a rather awkward position when a member asks for answers to 13 questions and expects the minister to be able to answer them all in a very few minutes. I think this is one problem which has arisen. If this had not happened we might not have become involved in the difficulty we have this afternoon.

[Mr. Stevens.]

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. Hon. members have referred to a decision from the Chair. I must say no such decision or ruling exists. The Chair simply declared that every effort would be made to apportion the time on both sides of the House. If the minister stands to be recognized, of course he will be recognized. So, there has been no ruling or decision made.

The standard practice in this committee is to apportion the time as equitably as possible. That responsibility which rests with the Chair is taken with the utmost seriousness. In the meantime the hon. member for Laurier has been recognized. He has had great difficulty in presenting his comments and time has been eaten up in this apportionment of time we are attempting to achieve.

The hon. member for Laurier.

[Translation]

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Chairman, I was certainly not discussing your ruling and the translation may not have rendered exactly what I wished to express. Occasionally, as chairman of a very important committee of this House, the miscellaneous estimates committee, I must say that many members raise points of order concerning the relevance of questions.

I was saying that when we wish to discuss bilingualism, multiculturalism and other matters while reviewing the estimates of the Treasury Board, if members of the Opposition or Liberals are asking me similar question I might refer not necessarily to your ruling, but to the debate of this afternoon which I consider as a very valuable experience. I might occasionally refer to that debate to make a decision that might be favourable or unfavourable to the members asking the question depending on the problem raised. So, I would certainly not want in any way members of the opposition to think that I wanted to encroach upon their right to speak in committee. On the contrary, I think I am one of the committee chairmen who accept many questions that might otherwise be out of order. Then, of course, Mr. Chairman, it is a matter of experience.

I would like to come back to the problem before us this afternoon—the Treasury Board estimates.

It would seem the opposition is taking advantage of the new tentative set of rules now in the form of a nice white-cover book. It is a temporary set of rules for the House of Commons that was passed on March 24, 1975, but it would seem we will regret a lot having passed that new set of rules since the problems raised this afternoon do not seem to have been foreseen by the Committee on Procedure and Organization which drafted the new rules.

As you know, Mr. Chairman, the Treasury Board estimates were considered by the committee which I have had the honour of chairing, as I said earlier, since 1968 in this House—they were considered on Monday, April 28, 1975. One can read the debates that took place on that occasion—quite interesting debates at that—in issue No. 29. Votes 1, 5, 10, 15 and 20 relating to the Treasury Board were considered. On that occasion, the minister responsible felt bound to reply to all the questions of the official opposition which was represented at that time especially by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), who is now away on official business, by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), who, of course is present as usual, and also by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling). As I said, we considered votes 1, 5, 10, 15 and 20.

It seemed then that the opposition was interested mostly in votes 5, 10 and 15 which I shall not read because it would take up some of my time, but they were explained by the minister, and I believe that the opposition should be satisfied with the replies given at the time by the President of the Treasury Board and his officials. However, under the new temporary rules in the House of Commons, it has been decided to discuss the Treasury Board issue further, and I understand this because, despite its comparatively low estimates compared with the total estimates, the Treasury Board is still one of the most important departments in the government, since it must select the programs and projects through which the government can achieve its goals as efficiently as possible, considering its priorities, and since it must also ensure that the departments and agencies use their manpower and equipment efficiently in implementing their programs and projects.

● (1540)

A while ago, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker)—and I understand him because this is the role of the opposition—made a rather scathing attack on the minister, but I have still to hear from the members of the opposition, of the official opposition or other opposition parties, positive suggestions and worthwhile recommendations likely to solve certain problems which now exist concerning the Treasury Board.

We all know that the hon. member for York-Simcoe makes scathing and partisan attacks, mostly unfounded, in committee, and he attempted during the study of the estimates—

An hon. Member: It's the same thing everywhere.

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): My colleague says it is the same thing everywhere. I do not know, because I am not everywhere, but in the committee I chair, he tried, as I say, to "corner" the president of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien), by making comparisons with the estimates of the whole government.

On that occasion, the minister answered he was confident he would reach his objective, and he trusted there would be a moderate increase of 15 to 16 per cent, subject of course to changes in the economic situation, and also to possible changes which might be introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) with respect to some tax situations which might be amended by May 31st or June 15th. This is something the Minister of Finance hinted at in this House anyway. Of course, when I say that, I am convinced I am not revealing anything confidential.

Besides, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) tried to have both ministers, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) and the president of the Treasury Board, contradict each other, and he did not seem or want to understand that the increase percentage may vary in a department whose main budget item deals with personnel. The 16 per cent objective of the hon. president of the Treasury Board is an average, and when talking about averages, one can talk about extremes, of course, because before one reaches an average, one has to deal with minuses and pluses. Now, the president of the Treasury Board said: Our objective for 1975-76 is 15 to 16 per cent, and I am confident, these are his words, that I will reach that objective inasmuch of course as the tax situation is not amended by the Minister of Finance. But that 15 or 16 per cent may mean 25 to 30 per cent increases in some departments and of 5 to 10 per cent in others, which may lead to an average of approximately 15 to 16 per cent, which is his present objective.

I believe every member here does not appear to understand the exact role of—

[English]

Mr. Gillies: A great speech!

[Translation]

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): I thank the hon. member. It is kind of him to suggest I am making a good speech. I appreciate this remark, coming from someone of that calibre, an opposition member. I am deeply touched indeed!

A number of opposition members do not seem to understand the exact role of the Treasury Board. It might be appropriate to state for the record the aims of that department. But once again, this might take too much time. So I will simply suggest that hon. members here, potential members and the population in general look up our blue book which of course is quite impressive. On page 284, both in English and in French—

● (1550)

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him for participation in this debate has now expired.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I want first to congratulate you for the manner in which you have directed the proceedings, difficult as that has been.

I would like to take two seconds time in reference to the rules. As I look around the House there are a few hon. members who were in the House when we used to meet and, under the old rules, go into committee of supply. Through you, Mr. Chairman, to the minister and to the House leaders who may be present, I say that, although I know each leader tried to bring about a compromise which would be somewhere between the new rules, which did not work at all, and the old rules, where there seemed to be too much time used in talk, the weakness in this new suggestion is that any minister can take the position that he is not going to answer questions, that he can sit out the storm of argument and questions, and therefore the opposition can never obtain any information.

I do not want to get into an argument with the minister; I simply point this out in an academic way. With the greatest of respect to everyone in the committee this afternoon, it becomes a total waste of time. The only suggestion I can think of, if we are not able to obtain answers, is to ask the House leaders to put their heads together again. I do not expect any minister to be a walking encyclopedia, because every department is large. There may be some information ministers may not be able to make available, but there should at least be an undertaking that at another time legitimate questions will be answered. There is always politics in the chamber, but ministers could come in at another time and make that information available.

Having said that I just want to say one other thing, which is of a political nature. When we went into the new rules brought about by closure, the Prime Minister had not even gone home for summer recess—I believe it was July—when I picked up the paper, and the Prime Minister was reported as saying that he had sure pulled the wool over the eyes of the opposition.

I believe that happened, but there is no use going back over old history. I see that the Secretary of State for External Affairs, a senior minister, is present. I ask all hon. members in this House, particularly those who have knowledge of the committee of the whole house, to consider this and to see whether we can devise a plan where we can ask legitimate questions and receive legitimate answers.

I want to discuss two or three points in reference to the minister's job. There may be something in the suggestion made by an hon. member that we cannot expect the President of the Treasury Board to answer for all departments, but I hope the other ministers will supply those answers.

The only growth in Canada is through real production and by trading our real production. The hon. member for York-Simcoe clearly pointed out that federal expenditures have increased 134.8 per cent from 1968 to 1974, from $12,229 million to $28,715 million. While the average weekly wage went from $88.19 in 1968 to $177.52 in 1974, an increase of only 101 per cent, the expenditures of the government went up 134 per cent. These figures spell inflation. Government expenditure is not real production or growth. When we get out of line that far, are we not fanning the flames of inflation?

I do not accept the minister's statement on several occasions that parliament approves the right of people in the public service to strike. I only differ with the minister academically, this is not a question of credibility. Particularly, I do not approve of certain areas of the public service having the right to strike; I have always said that if they are going to strike, let them all strike. I wish the Department of National Revenue would strike. People would be pretty happy about that.

What I am coming to now is under the jurisdiction of the minister, and I think it is very important. For 70 long days grain handlers and other people in the public service joined with the longshoremen in Vancouver while 55 ships waited in the ports. One could not even get into the ports with a shoehorn, and nothing was done. Finally the government acted after 70 days and put those people back to work, but when they went back to work out of the pockets of western Canadian farmers $40 to $50 million went to demurrage charges.

We have now reached the point where men and women working in those kinds of industries, which are unique to the development and growth of Canada, and which we describe as essential services, must find some method other than the bargaining process to settle economic violence between management and labour. I was very pleased to hear the Prime Minister say something about that, and I can make it clear where I stand. I am prepared to stake my mandate in Calgary North or any other seat in Alberta on the belief that in the essential industries of this country the system we are using has failed, and it is feeding the fires of inflation across the nation.

I wish to point out to the minister how bad the situation is. The Minister of Justice responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board told farmers to produce more wheat in Saskatchewan and Alberta next year. Incidentally, grain is the second largest dollar producing industry in the country. Farmers are prepared to do as the minister has asked, but what happens now that quotas are going to be closed on May 15 and wheat is piled up on farms and in country elevators? Where will they store it if they do produce more grain? All of this has occurred as a result of disruption at the ports. The right hon. member for Prince Albert today pointed out that men and women are still on strike in the St. Lawrence ports. Western grain is being held up and is not going to the cattle industry, the poultry industry, and other industries important to the province of Quebec.

I want to ask the minister—and I wish I could get his ear instead of someone else talking to him—whether he does not feel that the time has come to have another system for settling this kind of economic violence. Second, has the time not come to enforce the law with regard to having men and women go back to work? If so, how is he going to do it?

Those are the two major questions, but I have one other I wish to put. This matter is not totally under the jurisdiction of his department, but it was raised by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton, and it is in reference to the Calgary airport, which is a $40 million project. I have a wire in my hand from Darlington Haskins and Co. Ltd. and P.M. Dartnall Agencies, who point out that tenders were asked for certain jobs at that airport. These tenders were held 90 days from the time they were to be opened.

The contract was given to a company which they maintain is partly owned—I do not know whether this is correct but someone could check it out—by a former minister in the Liberal government. So they play ducks and drakes with companies in western Canada in order to break the tender rule, to give contracts to eastern Canada. I would ask them to check that. I do not think the minister can answer it today, but I hope that in the question period he will say that those jobs on the airport at Calgary will be properly tendered and there will be no hanky panky with Mr. Benson's Frontenac Company or any other Minister of the Crown.

These people maintain a Canadian company and have been in business since 1920. They say that the government architect in Calgary will confirm that their product was superior. They are a Canadian company but, due to hanky panky, a company from another part of Canada is to supply an inferior product at higher cost. That is what we are talking about, the right to tender when dealing with $40 million. The minister has the responsibility of administering the finances of all departments.

I have asked three questions, Mr. Chairman: first, about the violence on the docks; second, is the government going to pay back the farmers for their losses due to demurrage charges and third, is he going to get the men back to work on the St. Lawrence—is he going to force them back? I want to know about the contracts on the Calgary airport and the point raised by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton.

Those are my questions, Mr. Chairman, succinct and to the point.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): The hon. member for Saint-Michel.

Mr. Chrétien: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, if my time was to be taken out of that of the hon. member for Calgary North I will reply now, otherwise I will not reply until the end of the debate.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): The hon. member for Saint-Michel.

Mr. Woolliams: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether you were in the House when the former chairman took the chair but, as I understood his suggestion, although he did not make it a rule, this is pretty important to us and I hope you will hear me out. I am not trying to take up the time of the proceedings. I cut my time by half but I asked four important questions. The minister said he would answer me provided you did not take it out of the time of the government. I do not think we should. I think we should take it out of my time, and he has 10 or 15 minutes. I would like that exercised. You may look annoyed but, with the greatest respect, I am asking you because I did not take all my time and, secondly, I think he should answer those questions regardless of what rules you interpret again with the greatest respect to you.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): The hon. member for Saint-Michel.

Mr. Woolliams: On a point of order I want your ruling and I am going to stand my ground. You can ask me to leave the House. I am a senior member. I have asked for the minister, and the minister is prepared to answer my questions out of my time. Are you ruling against me on my time?

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): Order, please. The hon. President of the Treasury Board has indicated—would the hon. member take his seat? The hon. President of the Treasury Board has indicated he would reply later on in the time that is allotted to the hon. member's questions. I think that is sufficient for the purpose of the questions put. The hon. member for Saint-Michel.

Mr. Woolliams: A question of privilege.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): The hon. member for Calgary North on a question of privilege.

Mr. Woolliams: I want to point out, with the greatest respect, that if we have enough people talking at a quarter to five the time you speak about becomes superfluous. There will be no time and I will get no answers to my questions. What I said earlier—if that is the kind of proceedings and we are trying to work it out—and I was very gentlemanly when I dealt with the rules—if that is the ruling, then you yourself have contributed to the kind of farce we have had this afternoon.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): I think the hon. member, upon reflection, since he is an experienced member of the House, will later on perhaps want to rise and make some reference to what he has just said. In the meantime, I recognize the hon. member for Saint-Michel.

[Translation]

Miss Bégin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to apologize to the hon. member for Alberta—whose name I forget—for having said that his constituency represents a double or a treble minority. I am a woman. I intend to talk about female employees in the public service. I am a French-Canadian, this is quite fashionable these days. Unfortunately, I have only two and a half years of service. This means that I am a fool, an idiot according to what I understood from his comments. This being said, there was such verbal inflation this afternoon that I nearly lost the thread of the questions I had intended to put to the hon. President of Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) about the public service. These questions dealt with what I thought was the principle of a fine public service in Canada.

The public service, to me, is something that provides a service of quality and shows an awareness to the needs of the public. Secondly, it is an available organization and thirdly, it is the embodiment of the government of this country, which should be demonstrated through simple justice for every member of the public service and it is with this point that I should like to deal in particular.

I was deeply struck, Mr. Chairman, by the speech of the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). I feel that this is an extraordinary example of chauvinism of all kinds and I have just understood why this side won the last election. That man is part of a "winners" and "losers" culture. He is a dollar man and a square foot man. Some are more square than others. I realized while listening to him—because he had a long creed in 13 points—that all that counts in life is money, not people. Therefore it is obvious that if he were a minister—he is eager to be a minister, at least Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce—he would never want to be Minister of Health and Social Welfare, because that is obviously too common.

It is certainly not chic to be a minister of people's problems. Besides it seemed to me that he would perhaps reduce the family allowances. Therefore he is interested in output, in the number of waste baskets a public servant is entitled to have in his office. As far as I could understand, it is for him a measure of efficiency and productivity in the public service. I am deeply disturbed because it is in a totally different way that I visualize that public service which includes almost 400,000 people.

I should like first to ask a question about one of the first minorities which need simple justice in that public service, namely the French-speaking Canadians. Over the two and half years I have been here, I have been hearing such nonsense on the French Canadians that I am beginning to ask myself serious questions. I should like to know how many bilingual jobs were added to those of the 53 per cent employees mentioned in his November 21, 1974 release.

I will not dwell any longer on the matter of French Canadian public servants except to mention that many of my constitutents and myself consider the bilingualism program in public service as a gift for English speaking Canadians because they have the opportunity to learn the second official language of the country during their work time at the expense of all Canadians. Many French Canadians suffered culturally from an impoverishment of the economical knowledge and of the management. Many wonder whether some kind of compensatory program should not be worked out on a sort of historical correction, offering to the French Canadians not English language courses, because the vast majority of them have to learn it painfully, but a management training program in order for them to have the same opportunities as English Canadians do have and for our public service to be really representative.

I would like to turn now to the bilingualism premium. In this week's newspapers the minister is reported as having made inconsistent statements. I could remember when I was a public servant that were forced by the pressure of the labour market to implement the bilingualism premium policy for secretaries and other related groups. I would like to know what philosophy he is in favour of so as to face the problem recently developed in Montreal in particular, concerning federal public servants who are using both languages at their own expenses because they learned them by themselves, and because their wage level is not quite much higher than the secretaries, and who wonder where is the equity in that bilingualism premium policy.

I will now turn to another issue. Nothing is easier for me, because I understand from the speeches . . .

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): What is your question?

Miss Bégin: If you understood French, I am asking questions. May I go on?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): What is the question?

Miss Bégin: Listen, and you will understand what I am trying to say. Just make a little effort.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Then, why not ask your question?

[Miss Bégin.]

[Translation]

Miss Bégin: Mr. Chairman, as to the second item, I would like to say—I understand quite well that the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) should be particularly concerned at this point. His question is not complicated: he wants to make a separate mental category to know how much it costs to have French Canadians in the Public Service. Basically, that is the purpose I saw in his question. So, I suggest him to add another question: how much does it cost to give simple justice to women in the Public Service? We could perhaps in a year or so, with public opinion and the experiences of the opposition, ask how much it costs to have Indians in the Public Service. And then we could cover nearly everyone like that, at random. One day we will be left with a nice minority. How much does it cost to have Progressive Conservatives in the Public Service? I would like very much to know the cost of that, Mr. Chairman. It costs very much to have Progressive Conservatives in the Public Service.

Some hon. Members: Yes, yes.

Miss Bégin: Much too much. Progressive Conservatives in the Public Service are people who systematically prevent male and female Canadians from obtaining simple justice. They are the ones systematically sabotaging government programs, all programs that do not come under the dollar sign of the hon. member for York-Simcoe who operates on the basis of square footage and of the number of waste paper baskets in the offices of public servants.

That means that for him human beings, as he suggested, are not needed. That gentleman as well as the one I am talking to are people who work on the nineteenth century's principle of economic laissez-faire. It suits them because it is very simple. There is an expression for that—the law of the jungle, where the strongest wins. We French Canadians have indeed a very picturesque way of explaining it. It is an expression that I will not use because I am sure that the censorship will not allow it to pass.

I shall add that I consider the hon. member for York-Simcoe as a dinosaur, rather as representing dinosaurs and that he is an extraordinary prototype of the "winners" and "losers" culture. Mr. Chairman, I have been elected to care about the people who need and wish to be represented here in this House and surely not to make richer those who are already rich and one may wonder how they achieve their wealth.

With those republican words, I shall ask a few questions about a group that is not in fashion this year, the female public servants. Unfortunately, I heard the president of the Treasury Board say that we might be going backwards in that respect probably because of a few conservative minds that can still be found at certain levels of our public service. I am very concerned about it after the speeches made by the opposition today because if there is a priority presently in Canada, it is certainly to give justice to the employees. Therefore I should like to know how many women—and what percentage they represent—have been able to attend the courses recommended by the Royal Commission on the Status of Women and adopted by this government, which I commend it for, designed to help them to move from the ST or CR groups to the managerial levels. I express here the problem of the promotion of women within an institution where a contemptible conservatism is still a blot on the escutcheon of the government.

Let me explain: there are bottlenecks at two levels and because of the old structures of our economy, they prevent women from having fair opportunities of equal promotion. First, secretaries and other related clerk categories do not manage to reach the managerial level, because their job is by nature or tradition entirely reserved for women.

Strange enough, I believe that it is exactly what happened between French Canadians and English Canadians in the public service. Up to March 1974, only 212 women and 47 men had been able to take advantage of the program I referred to. Of course, I do not object to male clerks having the opportunity to attend free courses and being promoted to the junior management level, but I know very well that this program has been initially designed for women, for a large group of women and that they are not fairly represented on a percentage basis.

Secondly, very few women have been able to reach higher positions; how and how many can and will reach the SX or the DM categories? This is the real issue of equal opportunities for men and women in the public service. I think that several deputy ministers appoint their assistant deputy ministers and directors.

It is practically obvious that if this system is not reviewed and is maintained, no woman will ever be able to accede to the position of director, assistant deputy minister and, naturally, deputy minister. Of course, all I have just said is based on the principle of equal ability. I am not concerned with that problem. When women reach a certain level, in general they are twice as qualified because they had to overcome obstacles which sometimes are legal, very often psychological, but nonetheless real, as we have seen this afternoon in the House while listening to the chauvinist remarks on the other side.

Concerning both aspects I have been dealing with, I would add that I am of the opinion that it is very important for the female public servant to have an opportunity to choose her career. In conclusion, I would ask the president of the Treasury Board whether he can give me the assurance that all these equal opportunities programs for female and male public servants will always be developed in close cooperation with the Advisory Board on the status of women.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): As we approach the 4:45 adjournment, perhaps I could ask for the co-operation of two members of the committee, the President of the Treasury Board and the hon. member for Yukon. Because of questions raised by the hon. member for Calgary North and the hon. member who has just taken her seat, possibly the President of the Treasury Board could speak until 4:30. This would give the hon. member for Yukon 15 minutes. Is this agreeable?

Mr. Chrétien: Yes, Mr. Chairman, with the caveat that I expect the hon. member for Yukon to ask some questions, and there is the vote at a quarter to five.

Mr. Nielsen: I will give you time.

Mr. Chrétien: Of course hon. members cannot expect me to answer everything this afternoon. However, I will reply to some of the questions. As for the other questions, I will provide the answers to hon. members either through letters—

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I do not want to cut off the President of the Treasury Board. I just want to point out in fairly calm indignation that members on both sides have sat here trying to get involved in this committee of the whole dealing with supply.

I am one of the members who sat here when the old rules applied. In 1968 the new rules came in with closure and time limits. This whole thing has become a little farcical.

The hon. member for Saint-Michel asked detailed questions about the place of women in the public service. The point is that most of those questions could have been placed on the order paper. The point I want to make is that this is an opposition day based on supply. That is the prerogative of the opposition, not the prerogative of the hon. member for Saint-Michel and others.

Up until now there have been three members of the opposition who have participated in this afternoon's farce. I had a subject matter that was rather topical. I have specific questions I want to direct to the President of the Treasury Board about a dredging problem. It affects many areas in Canada. Unfortunately, because of Your Honour's suggested ruling and the compliance of the President of the Treasury Board, we will not be able to get into it.

I seriously suggest to the Chair that before we continue this farce on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week, which are supposed to be opposition days dealing with supply and which are supposed to be the prerogative of the opposition and not the handmaiden of all the ladies in this place to deal with their favourite subject, this matter should be looked at, otherwise we should not go ahead with it.

[Translation]

Miss Bégin: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. For the record, I would simply state that I am deeply annoyed by the paternalistic attitude shown by the hon. member from Nova Scotia. I realize quite clearly he was following all his colleagues from the opposition, and that he systematically opposed equal opportunities for women in the public service of Canada.

[English]

Mr. Alkenbrack: On a point of order—

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): The hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington on a point of order.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I have priority over a point of order.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): Order, please. This sounds like the anvil chorus. Unfortunately the Chair happens to be the anvil. I will recognize the hon. member for Annapolis Valley on his question of privilege. However, I tried to make as fair an arrangement as I could, knowing there are a dozen members who want to speak.

Mr. Alkenbrack: My point of order, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Nowlan: Your Honour knows a question of privilege has priority over a point of order.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): Will the hon. member resume his seat? I have recognized the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington. Surely I am allowed to be as good a Chairman of the committee as possible. If I am not, hon. members can take steps to remove me. The hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Chairman, my point of order is that I have some questions that I sincerely wanted to ask of the President of the Treasury Board. However, along with many others, I have been precluded from doing so because of the unethical tactics of the government.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member for Saint-Michel has started to make a hasty retreat so I will be short and simple. Obviously I am not going to challenge whatever the lady says. That is not the point. However, I listened to her. I did not interrupt when she started in the first five minutes of her contribution drawing some slander against the public servants by suggesting that the Progressive Conservatives are against women. Any number of men or women in this chamber could have challenged the lady on those rather fantastic remarks. The Conservative Party was only in power for six years. If the hon. member was serious, that was a deliberate slur and slander against people in the public service. However, I do not think she was serious. Certainly from the other remarks she made, and the last remark concerning me, I know that she could not be serious because she is so frivolous.

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Chairman, as we begin this experiment under the new rules that will only last for a certain time, I cannot think of anything that will collapse this experiment more quickly than the performance of the hon. member who just sat down. He said it was the understanding that these days would be for the opposition. I sat in that committee on procedure and organization.

Mr. Nowlan: It is a supply day.

Mr. O'Connell: Supply days are for all members of this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. O'Connell: The point of order I want to make is that it was not at all the understanding of that committee on procedure and organization that the members on this side of the House would be silent on this day. We were told—

Mr. Gillies: Filibuster.

Mr. Clark: You only have 15 minutes left to filibuster.

Mr. O'Connell: I invite the hon. member to read the proceedings of that committee. We are on an important point of order. If we on this side are given to understand that the perspective of the people on that side with respect to this experiment is that this belongs to the opposition, there will be no continuation.

[The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave).]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. O'Connell: The hon. member for Annapolis Valley sat on this committee. He should go back and look at the record. His party begged for this experiment. They told us that they would have more chance—

Mr. Clark: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member for Scarborough East is deliberately trying to prevent the minister from answering questions on this subject.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): Order, please. The hon. member is clearly out of order. The hon. member for Scarborough East has been recognized. Obviously two points of order cannot be spoken at the same time.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I do not want to interrupt the hon. member. I agree with what he is saying as to what went on in the committee. I think he is right. However, I am concerned about what has happened to that understanding. I think—

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): Order, please. The deputy House leader will have to make his observations after the hon. member for Scarborough East has completed his point.

● (1630)

Mr. O'Connell: I shall be brief, Mr. Chairman, but I wish to make what I consider to be an important comment and one which I consider to be fundamental to this procedure. If members wish to read the proceedings of that committee they will see that I stood almost alone against this experiment. Now we are finding that perhaps I was right.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman—

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): Order. Traditionally the debate would be wound up by a member of the opposition. Could the hon. minister make his remarks in, say, four minutes, and then the hon. member for Yukon will have a few minutes in which to speak?

Mr. Nielsen: We have 12 minutes left and I suggest the minister take six.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: In reply to the hon. member for York-Simcoe I have a few answers to give. He asked for the costs of furnishing Place Bell Canada. The cost was $490,000, something like $600-odd per capita. It is not that extravagant. The amount of space is 22,000 square feet, and we pay $5.97 per square foot in rental.

As for the cost of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, as usual the hon. member has not done his homework. What appears in the books this year is the cost of the Unemployment Insurance Commission for last year; the cost this year will be found in the Blue Book of next year. So next year he will know. As far as the other questions are concerned, I shall look into them. If they are serious, and not too closely related to the furniture and so on, I will answer them. I will give all those answers by letter or by other means.

Turning to the remarks of the hon. member for Calgary North, of course I would like to have a better method of settling strikes, but I would point out to him that only 2 per cent of the collective agreements in the civil service since 1967 have been concluded following strikes; 98 per cent of the collective agreements between the government and its employees have been settled either by arbitration or through conciliation. The hon. member referred to the dockers. These are not civil servants. They work in the private sector and the Treasury Board has nothing to do with these disputes. I would like to debate that question, but I cannot do so now.

As to the question of compensation to farmers for the cost of demurrage incurred at Vancouver, the answer is no. I cannot be more precise. A further question was asked concerning the airport in Calgary. Tenders were called but only one bid was offered to the government which met all requirements, and we approved it. I might add that I have received a number of strong representations on the subject from members representing constituencies in Alberta—they were made in a very professional way; they have nothing in the back of their minds, but they wanted to have an answer. I gave them the answer. This expenditure of $40 million was approved by Treasury Board the other day. It was the only bid we had. Of course we wish we could have done better but we had no taker, and it was felt by the department that the bid was acceptable.

The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton is interested in bilingualism. He was complaining that figures as to cost are not easy to obtain. Well, the figures are in the Blue Book and I will, with the indulgence of the committee, read him some. Incidentally, the same question has been directed to me many times in the committee.

In the estimates of the Treasury Board, vote No. 1 official language branch, we find $1.3 million. Other figures are: Public Service bilingualism program, vote 15, $50 million; Department of the Secretary of State, bilingualism development branch, votes 5 and 10, $107.7 million; translation program, vote 30, $31.7 million; official languages minority group citizens program, votes 35 and 40 of those estimates, $3.6 million; under training, Public Service Commission, part of vote 115, $31 million; Urban Affairs, $300,000. The total is $225.5 million. There are some other items I cannot give to the House because I cannot go and count all the signs on all the doors of the toilets and the elevators and so on. Perhaps there were some costs involved there, but unfortunately I cannot give the figure. It would cost more to give the answer than the cost of putting on the signs.

The hon. member asked about bilingualism guidelines and about an incident which occurred this morning. I will have to give some thought to it—I am not in a position to give an explanation; these are term employees hired for four months only and we cannot send a man on a course for 12 months if he is to work for only four months.

Six minutes is not very long in which to answer all these questions, but I am doing my best. The hon. member for Calgary North asked me another question—

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): I regret to interrupt the hon. minister but the time as allotted to him by agreement between the hon. members has expired.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, my questions will be very brief. Perhaps the minister will have more time in which to answer further questions when I am through.

Before I get to the matter which is closest to my heart, the subject of the federal nurses, I might be allowed to say a word with respect to the procedure presently being followed. There are not many members here who are familiar with the procedure followed when we dealt with estimates in the committee of the whole House. When that happened it was a day of accountability for Ministers of the Crown and members on the government side—and I know, because I have sat on that side and I remember how the whips applied the pressure—kept us quiet because they realized the minister concerned wanted to get his estimates through the committee. It developed into an opposition day; it was the opposition which was inquiring into the estimates, not members on the government side.

Try to transpose that system into the rules we are now following, under which the system is being used for the purpose of an allotted day. It won't work. If we are going to use the old system as a method of dealing with estimates, and call it an allotted day, new rules will have to be developed. The whole concept of an allotted day dealing with estimates loses all purpose if time is taken up by members of the House other than members of the opposition, whose duty it is to call the government to account.

I turn now to the further discharges this morning—I call them discharges even though they are not so called by the minister. I do not have my notes here now but my understanding is that out of 24 nurses at the National Defence hospital here in Ottawa, 17 have been told to go home because there was no work for them. They said to the hospital authorities, "Give us a certificate stating we have been laid off so we can apply for unemployment insurance." The hospital officials said no, they were not going to do that. They said, "You are on off duty status". The nurses maintain—and it seems logical to me—that there is no such thing. In effect it has every appearance of being a method to break down the nurses and to break the strike.

If the nurses are going to be laid off they should be told in order that they can have the same right as any other unemployed person to apply for unemployment insurance benefits. It is no excuse for adopting this tactic to say that there are not enough patients in the hospital and therefore their services are not required. My information, which could very well be inaccurate, is that this is being done by Treasury Board officials. Indeed, the name of Mr. Fothergill has been mentioned in this connection. He is not here to answer for himself, but the minister is. I raise this because it is a very serious matter if the muscle of Treasury Board is being used in this fashion to break the strike.

This morning I again raised the question of a COLA clause in the nurses' agreement. I know the conciliation board has recommended an increase, I think of 20 per cent, in the nurses' salaries, which just brings them level, for instance, with nurses in British Columbia. I understand the latter are already on the threshold of negotiating a new agreement, so that if the federal nurses accept the conciliation board report they will be behind again almost immediately, because the B.C. nurses are negotiating a better deal. I urgently suggest to the minister that he consider granting the nurses' request with respect to the inclusion of a COLA clause. If he does not, I think he will be a long way away from settling the strike. The minister has a minute left so I yield the floor to him.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, in regard to the National Defence Medical Centre, those people were sent home because there was no work for them. We have done the same thing in other cases; for example, the postal workers in Toronto. We are not under an obligation to keep people on the payroll if there is no work for them.

With regard to the COLA clause, although the nurses in British Columbia may be negotiating a new contract we have to live with the facts of today. We do use comparability. It was debated and there was a unanimous report. There was no discussion of a COLA clause, and probably because of the nature of the increase the conciliation board did not feel it should include a COLA clause.

[Translation]

As far as the hon. member for Saint-Michel (Miss Bégin) is concerned, I am not in a position to give answers. She raised very valid questions on bilingualism and the status of women in the Public Service. Both these problems stand high in our priorities. Hopefully, we will be able to make significant progress in the years to come, and I expect that, as the situation of women within the Public Service, we will not be forced to give the same kind of answers as on the issue of bilingualism.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, before you see the clock, would the minister deal with the other serious aspect of the question that I raised regarding the muscle of Treasury Board being used deliberately for the purpose of breaking the strike of the nurses—that is to say, sending them home from work and not laying them off?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, the Treasury Board is an employer and it does these things in conjunction with the department. We are exercising the right of an employer as laid down in the legislation.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, without looking at the clock may I say I realize the minister did not have a chance of answering the first set of questions I put respecting the contract for advertising. I want to tell him that if he does not have time now he can write me.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I should like to write the hon. member on that. I should like to make one specific comment, and that is that if someone starts to work on a contract that has not been approved by Treasury Board he does so at his own risk. I have seen cases where people took that chance and received no compensation at all.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. McCleave): Order, please. It being 4.45 o'clock p.m. it is my duty, pursuant to section (9) of Standing Order 58, to interrupt these proceedings and to put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the proceedings. Shall vote No. 1 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

COMMUNICATIONS

SUGGESTED INVESTIGATION OF FAILURE OF BELL AND CNT TO PROVIDE ADEQUATE TELEPHONE SERVICE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. The deterioration of the telephone service between parliament hill and eastern Canada indicates the need for an investigation into the capabilities of Bell Telephone and CNT. The service can only be described as deplorable and a national disgrace. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan):

That both agencies be called to account for their inability to cope with the normal needs of Canadians, particularly in the more remote provinces, before a joint committee on Transport and Communications, and Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and that the government order that future rate increases be denied until they satisfy the normal needs of Canadians.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion is proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43 and cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity, and therefore the motion cannot be put.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REFUSAL TO ALLOW MICHAEL PITFIELD TO APPEAL BEFORE STANDING COMMITTEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to propose a motion arising out of the outright refusal last week by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to allow a parliamentary committee to question his chief aide, Michael Pitfield, in his capacity of clerk of the Privy Council. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan):

That in the opinion of the House no public servant, including Michael Pitfield, should be placed above and beyond the authority of this elected parliament, that the refusal of the Prime Minister to allow the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee to question Mr. Pitfield constitutes extreme arrogance and utter contempt for the parliamentary process and that a full investigation of the staggering increases in costs of the Privy Council and Prime Minister's offices, including expenses for lavish living at 24 Sussex Drive, should be carried out by the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee with Michael Pitfield and all other witnesses deemed necessary by the committee being questioned.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Speaker: I detect that there is not unanimity, and therefore the motion cannot be put.

Mr. Baldwin: If he can't answer questions any better than his boss, it would be a waste of time anyway.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

BERGER COMMISSION—GOVERNMENT VIEW OF NECESSITY FOR COMPLETE EXAMINATION OF ENVIRONMENTAL AND SOCIAL IMPACT OF MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, if he could be lured back into the House. He was here a minute ago, but in his absence I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. In light of recent disputes concerning the funding of the—

Mr. Fairweather: He is sneaking behind the curtain.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): I welcome the minister back to the House.

In light of recent disputes concerning the funding of the Berger Commission inquiry into the Mackenzie Valley pipeline and the funding of related groups appearing or wishing to appear before the commission, is it still the commitment of the minister and the government that there should be a complete and effective examination of the total environmental and social impact, long and short term, of the proposed Mackenzie Valley pipeline on the northern environment and the people in the north?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Yes, Mr. Speaker, and the economic impact as well.

Oral Questions

BERGER COMMISSION—LACK OF FUNDS FOR NORTHERN ASSESSMENT GROUPS—RESPONSIBILITY FOR ASSESSMENT OF EFFECTS OF MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Since the Northern Assessment Group is the only scientific and technical research team concerned with the long term effects of the Mackenzie Valley pipeline upon the environment and society of the Canadian north, and because the government has now cut that Northern Assessment Group from federal funding, will the minister please advise the House upon whom the obligation now lies for the assessment of the long term effects of a northern pipeline and how that group, whoever it is, will be funded?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Last year when funds were provided to Mr. Justice Berger, the intention was that part of these funds would be used to enable the Northern Assessment Group to do its studies and the various analyses it had to do so that this information would be available to the commission. It is my understanding that was done. It is now a question of having the experts appear before the commission. On that issue, the decision was taken by the Treasury Board to provide the additional $100,000 to native groups so that they could hire or use the experts to appear as their witnesses before the commission.

● (1410)

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): A supplementary question. If it is determined that the investigative work referred to by the minister has not in fact, been carried out in an adequate way, is it the position of the government that there will be more funding to the Northern Assessment Group so that there will be a capacity to have information on the long-term environmental economic and social impacts of the pipeline on the north?

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, it was felt that the funding that was given through Mr. Justice Berger plus work that was done in-house by various government agencies which was made available to the commission, was sufficient for the research purposes.

BERGER COMMISSION—REASON FOR CUT IN FUNDING OF NATIVE ORGANIZATIONS PARTICIPATING IN INQUIRY

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. On April 24 in response to questions the minister implied that this year's budget for the native organizations participating in the Berger Commission inquiry covered a shorter period than the 1974-75 budget. The 1974-75 funding, however, commenced in September and ran only seven months, a shorter period than the minister's nine months estimate for this year. In the light of those facts would the minister justify to the House the very substantial cut made with respect to native organizations?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I will have to go back and check that item. It is my understanding that funding went back further than that. The feeling was, however, that the research, the studies and analyses were being done primarily during that period. Now, we are basically funding appearances before the commission plus the informational aspect going on in the various small communities.

[Mr. Buchanan.]

Mr. Holmes: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In light of the statement by Mr. Ian Scott, counsel for the Berger inquiry as follows:

> . . . The inquiry was advised in February by the department that the minister does not wish to support environmental organizations through the inquiry's operating budget . . .

Would the minister reconsider statements that he made on April 24 concerning the funding for the northern assessment group? Would he also indicate if he is prepared to make an announcement to the House concerning future funds for the Northern Assessment Group before the Berger Commission reconvenes?

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, I believe I said the funding would go—I stand by that statement. There is no intent to fund the Northern Assessment Group to any further extent. The intention is to fund native groups so that they can hire, if they wish, members of the Northern Assessment Group to appear as expert witnesses before the Berger Commission. That is the purpose of the additional $100,000 that has been given to the native groups.

REASON FOR DELAY OF REPORT ON TAX CONCESSIONS AND FAST WRITE-OFF TO MANUFACTURING AND PROCESSING INDUSTRIES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, in view of the absence of the Minister of Finance I shall direct my question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Can he explain to the House the reason for the delay of 4½ months in tabling the final report on tax concessions to manufacturing and processing industries—that is, the lower tax rate and the fast two-year write-off on machinery and equipment? Can he also inform the House whether the government intends to table the report and give the reason for the 4½ month delay?

Mr. Jack Cullen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I will take notice of the question and find out for the hon. member.

Mr. Nystrom: That is hardly good enough, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the delay in tabling the report results from the fact that the government is having difficulty proving that the tax cuts have actually created more jobs, as we have heard in this party from sources within the government? Is that the reason the report is not being tabled today?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will gladly take that question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

INQUIRY AS TO NEW PROGRAMS TO CREATE JOBS AND DATE OF BUDGET

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): A further supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Can the Prime Minister inform the House whether the government intends to bring in new programs to create jobs shortly? Perhaps he can tell the House the date of the new budget.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the budget date is usually announced by the Minister of Finance and he will do so in due course.

SUGGESTED DISTRIBUTION OF BENEFIT CHEQUES THROUGH BANKS AND CREDIT UNIONS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Supply and Services.

In view of the fact that work stoppages in postal services delay considerably normal mail delivery, can the minister tell the House whether he has looked with his colleagues into the possibility of having family allowance, old age pension and veterans' pension cheques distributed through banks and credit unions through a credit to each beneficiary's account which would be made up at the end of the month to each of those institutions, and of allowing the beneficiaries to select the bank or credit union of their choice?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, we are co-operating closely with the departments responsible for issuing socio-economic cheques and the postal authorities. I believe we have reached agreements that are quite satisfactory to the beneficiaries.

POSSIBLE DELAY IN PRESENTATION OF BUDGET IF PROGRESS SLOW IN OBTAINING CONSENSUS ON RESTRAINT

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance may I direct my question to the Prime Minister? In view of indications given on Friday by finance officials during the federal-provincial consultations and by press reports over the weekend that a budget is to be presented on June 2, and as the working papers on consensus which the Minister of Finance tabled presumably form the basis from which the minister is prepared to negotiate, is the government prepared to delay the presentation of the budget if negotiations should go slowly, or has the Minister of Finance given business and labour a deadline, in effect, the date of the presentation of the budget?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I take that to be a representation. I will gladly transmit it to the Minister of Finance.

ALLEGED SALE OF DISEASED MEAT BY QUEBEC PACKING COMPANY—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, may I direct my question to his parliamentary secretary? As the minister warned last Friday that meat processed by a Quebec packing company may have come from dead or diseased animals and sold to consumers in the Province of Quebec, mostly in the form of minced meat or hamburg, what steps have been taken to track down this meat, reported to consist of approximately 210 tons, and what action is contemplated not only against Federal Packing Incorporated of Magog, Quebec, but against beef retailers who, as co-conspirators, accepted the tainted beef and sold it to unsuspecting consumers?

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will take that question as notice.

THE MINISTRY

POSSIBILITY OF CHANGES IN CABINET—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. As the Prime Minister announced, when leaving for the Commonwealth Parliamentary Conference, a widespread shake-up of deputy ministers as a means of trying to strengthen the operations of government, is he planning, now that he has returned, to announce a similar widespread shake-up, in the near future in the cabinet as a means of trying to lift the country out of the chaotic condition in which its economy finds itself?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the premise of the question is incorrect, but if the hon. member believes in shake-ups, I suggest that his leader should shake up his front bench.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, that is the kind of snide, slick answer we have learned to expect from the Prime Minister. May I ask a supplementary question? Is not the real reason for his refusal to take action this: That he, like everybody else connected with the Ottawa scene, has learned that senior civil servants, not the cabinet, run the government and country, and that making a shift in the cabinet really would not have much effect?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the hon. member opposite is projecting from the time when he was a minister.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, yes, I am looking back to the good old days when we had action in this parliament and the government did a good job for the people of Canada.

BARLEY—POSSIBILITY OF INCREASE IN QUOTA

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. Can the minister inform us, western farmers, and particularly those in the Peace River district of British Columbia and Alberta, what action the minister through his agency is planning in order to lift the quota of three bushels per acre on barley, now that congestion on rail and ports, according to him, has been relieved?

● (1420)

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Wheat Board is opening quotas as quickly as space allows. It is a situation that is continually improving. I believe there was a fairly generous addition of four bushels to the barley quota opened last week. I will check its applicability to the Peace River area.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, this is the time of year when farmers get into the fields, buy fertilizer, machinery and equipment and hire labour to put the crop in the ground. If a further addition to the quota cannot be achieved within a reasonable time, will the minister consider some advance payments for barley immediately?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, this is hardly the time of year for advance payments. A more suitable time will be when the new crop year begins and the new limit of $15,000 which has been adopted comes into effect. However, as I indicated, the quotas on all grains are opening rapidly. Last week the wheat board announced the extension of the open quota to higher grades of wheat, and some additions in the case of barley. There will be a rapid movement of grain and I can therefore tell the hon. member to remain optimistic in this regard.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—POSSIBILITY OF CHANGE IN CANADA'S COMMITMENT TO FORCE

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It is sort of an epilogue to the very communicative question period of last Friday. Since the Prime Minister is in very good spirits today, possibly he can tell this House if he as head of the government going to the summit meeting in Brussels on NATO at the end of the month, will propose any change in Canada's commitment to the NATO force?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

LAW OF THE SEA CONFERENCE—POSSIBILITY OF UNILATERAL ACTION TO PROTECT CANADIAN OFFSHORE RESOURCES IF CONFERENCE FAILS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that no consensus or agreement was reached at the Law of the Sea Conference in Geneva and the next conference will not be held until March 29, 1976, in New York City, does the government plan on waiting for a general agreement that may not come within our lifetime or does it plan on taking unilateral action to protect Canadian offshore interests?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think I answered this question last week, namely that there was delivered at the conference on Friday the single negotiating text which is now under study. In many aspects, it seems to meet the objectives of the Canadian government. However, it is still a negotiating text. It has to be negotiated at the next meeting. If it were possible to implement these provisions with respect to the fisheries immediately, one would be much more relaxed, but that is not possible. In the meantime, the government will appraise the situation and will consider among the possible options the prospect of unilateral action. However, that prospect has not yet been considered by the government as a whole.

Mr. Crouse: How long is the government willing to wait in hopes of getting general agreement? Is the government willing to take concerted action with other countries which have similar interests and, if so, what are the names of those countries which have indicated an interest in co-operating with Canada on this important matter?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, obviously one of the possibilities is action in concert with a number of other countries. At the Law of the Sea Conference, there was comment that other countries might be considering action. However, no decisions have been taken. We will obviously be in touch with any countries which are interested. It is one of the possibilities which will be considered. I believe that my colleague, the Minister of State (Fisheries), has already stated that the upcoming ICNAF meeting will deal with the Canadian proposal calling for a considerable reduction in the annual take in that area. It would seem to be premature to consider any action of any kind until the results of that meeting are clear. However, Canada will be putting forward a proposal there for considerable reductions.

NUCLEAR NON-PROLIFERATION TREATY—INSISTENCE ON ADHERENCE TO TREATY BY COUNTRIES BUYING REACTORS ONLY IF FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE REQUIRED

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Will the minister explain statements made by him, both inside and outside the House last Friday, that where a Canadian reactor is being bought from Canada without Canadian financial assistance the government will not insist upon adherence to the non-proliferation treaty but that in cases where financial aid is required it will insist upon such adherence? Is not the danger of diversion of nuclear materials to weapons the basis of the treaty, and is not the danger as great in one case as in the other? Why the inconsistency?

An hon. Member: Because he is a Liberal!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I see no inconsistency in the position which has been taken by the government. With respect to any nuclear sales we apply uniformly the same bilateral safeguards irrespective of the country concerned. These safeguards have already been outlined by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. So there is total uniformity.

With respect to membership in the NPT, we have stated that where the nuclear capability is being financed in part by Canada we shall ask for adherence to the treaty because in that situation it seems to me the responsibility of Canada is of a different character. In other cases, as has been stated, membership in the NPT will be an important factor to be taken into account but it will not be a pre-condition. That is clear, at least to me.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF REPORTS ARGENTINA MAY BE SELLING NUCLEAR MATERIAL TO LIBYA

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): It is beyond my comprehension why the treaty is a safeguard in one case and not important in the other. My supplementary is this: will the minister look into reports that Argentina, with which country we are negotiating the sale of a reactor or reactors, is giving consideration to supplying nuclear material to Libya? Having regard to the Libyan interest in nuclear weapons will the hon. gentleman look into this and advise the House what the government proposes to do about it?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

RESUMPTION OF DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS WITH SOUTH VIET NAM

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Lafontaine-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

In view of the policy statement issued by the Prime Ministers of the Commonwealth concerning the possible recognition of the government of South Viet Nam on the one hand, and in view of the fact that the criteria established by the Secretary of State for External Affairs for such a recognition seem to have been fulfilled by the said government, that is the effective control of the country on the other hand, is the Canadian government considering the possibility of resuming shortly its diplomatic relations with South Viet Nam?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is a very important question and the government is studying it very carefully. For the time being, I cannot give the exact date when the minister will ask for the recognition of the government of South Viet Nam.

VIET NAM—POSSIBLE RECOGNITION OF NEW REGIME

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Will the Government of Canada use the opportunity afforded by the seminar on Asia now being held in Montreal at which visitors from South Viet Nam on PRG passports were admitted to Canada to exercise the goodwill of the government and hopefully arrange for recognition of that country?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker.

POSSIBLE TERMINATION OF CONTRACT WITH CANADA STEAMSHIPS LINES BY CANADIAN NATIONAL AND CANADIAN PACIFIC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, this question is addressed to the Minister of Transport. I believe the hon. gentleman is aware that the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific railways are terminating a long standing contract with the Canadian Steamships Line to move goods from eastern Canada to western Canada and I believe he has been in discussion with various representatives as to the terminating of the contract. I should like to ask the minister what state the negotiations have reached, or what conclusion the railways or the government have arrived at?

● (1430)

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should like some clarification before answering that question. Is the hon. member referring to the negotiations between CN, CP and Canada Steamships Line at Thunder Bay?

Mr. Murta: Yes.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): If so, I have asked CN and CP to resume negotiations with Canada Steamships Line so that the conditions that pre-existed will exist in the future.

Mr. Murta: May I thank the minister for his answer and ask him whether he is aware that if the contract is discontinued the additional cost that will be borne by the receivers in western Canada will be quite substantial. In fact, for Manitoba alone we are talking in some cases in the neighbourhood of $160,000 to the receivers, so I hope that the minister will proceed along the lines of these negotiations and discussions.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Yes, I will do so.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

NEWFOUNDLAND—ALLEGED NEGOTIATIONS TO USE ROAD TRANSPORT

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister. Is he aware of the fact that Canadian National is now negotiating to provide road transport to move goods from Newfoundland to other parts of Canada; and if this is so, would he explain how CN can provide this service in view of the deterioration of the Trans-Canada highway in Newfoundland and the lack of upgrading programs for this service? Not only that, but this will deny CN rail workers in Newfoundland their right to work. Would the minister explain that situation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think as all hon. members are aware, the Minister of Transport will be before the committee of the whole for two days, today and tomorrow, and perhaps this question, which will require rather expansive discussion, should be deferred until that time.

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE CROWSNEST PASS RATES WILL NOT BE CHANGED

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Justice, reporting for the Wheat Board. It concerns the number of diverse and ambivalent statements made in western Canada, both by telegram to the premier of Saskatchewan from the Prime Minister and statements made by the minister himself with regard to the Crowsnest Pass freight rates.

In view of the ambiguity of those statements, may I ask the minister whether it is his intention to assure the House and the country that the Crowsnest Pass rates will not be changed, diminished or monkeyed with between now and the next election?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have the opportunity to repeat what in fact has been said in connection with the Crowsnest rates. Some little time ago, I did indicate at a meeting at Edmonton that there was some argument for a rate that better reflected real costs as between meat and grain in order to encourage the further processing of meat in Canada. I also indicated that that was in no way a proposal from the government but rather a matter that I was putting before the west as a matter of real interest to the west in so far as the further development of processing there is concerned. Some have since attempted to concern the farmers about this, because in my proposal I had indicated that it would have been my idea to maintain the benefits of the Crowsnest rates by transferring this sort of payment or assistance to the farmers more directly in some other fashion.

In order to ensure that there is no doubt at all in anybody's mind or no fear in anybody's mind about anything that this government is doing with regard to agriculture, I indicated that in my view the test whether such a change could be made was really dependent upon the will of the farmers themselves. I presume that the right hon. gentleman has his own conclusions about what that would mean at the present time. The fact of the matter is that it is above all clear that what the government is trying to do is to assure the best possible handling and transportation system that money can buy, the best possible income for the farmers, and the maximum number of farmers on our farms in the prairie provinces.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, may I suggest to the minister that the ambivalence has certainly been increased by that so-called statement. Let me ask him, why does he not say that there would be no interference or monkeying with the Crowsnest agreement rates? Why does he not say that simply and clearly, instead of a multitude of words chasing an idea that turns out to be as uncertain as the course of the government has been in this connection for months?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I think that if the hon. gentleman re-reads my statement he will understand that this government is always open to new ways to help the farmers even more. That is the only qualification that I make to the flat statement that, as far as I am concerned, the Crowsnest Pass rates are here to stay.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Knowing the embarrassment of the minister and the government regarding this matter, may I ask the minister simply: Can he not give the assurance that there will be no interference with the charter of the western farmers in so far as freight rates are concerned, instead of circumlocuting the whole problem and failing to give an answer, which failure indicates that a change is ahead?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I do not know that any answer could have been much clearer than the one I gave a moment ago.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: I would point out to the right hon. gentleman that many people in the west are convinced of the fact that inequity in freight rates between meat and grain is a serious disadvantage to the west. Therefore, this leads to further questions and considerations.

I point out to the right hon. gentleman that in any statements that I have made which have been in relation to my own proposals and ideas, the notion of preserving the benefits to the west and the prairies of the Crowsnest rates has been foremost. I should like to ask him how anyone in any way can reasonably suggest that there can be any harm to anybody if these benefits are preserved and a better way is found to deliver to the farmers, so that more farmers in fact have a better income on the prairies.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I must say it is a little unusual for a minister of the government to ask a question of a private member, but since the minister has done so I will answer it. I would not monkey with the Crowsnest Pass agreement as the government is intending to do.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, it is also obvious that during his time as Prime Minister the right hon. gentleman did not monkey very much with the freight rates, or with all the inequities in them either.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—SUGGESTION GOVERNMENT SHOULD EXERCISE RESTRAINT IN EXPENDITURES

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance, it is reported in the toughest speech of his political career, has stated that Canadians who refuse to co-operate with the government's voluntary restraint program are forcing him to take harsh economic action. In his own words, it is "restraint or else".

In view of the fact that Canadians are looking for leadership in this area, would the Prime Minister say specifically what steps the government has taken to show restraint, particularly in government expenditures, which might be used as an example to all Canadians?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it would take a very long statement from me to indicate that.

Mr. Hees: You could do it in 15 seconds and say nothing.

Mr. Stevens: Name one.

Mr. Trudeau: Very well, I will name one. There is, for instance, the action we took on the Veterans' Land Act, which the opposition refused to support every time we brought it forth.

Mr. Bawden: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the government's original estimates for 1975-76 spending were 28 per cent higher than last year's original estimates, and in view of the fact that government policy and its own spending is the principal cause of inflation, would the Prime Minister say whether the problems Canada is facing today were unforeseen to him and his government at the time these recent huge increases in government spending were projected?

● (1440)

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I disagree with the premises. I think they are both false, therefore I cannot agree with the conclusion.

On March 3, 1975, the minister stated that the report by the Canadian Consultative Council on multiculturalism would be released in the near future. Will the Prime Minister ask that minister to indicate to the House when this report will be published and whether he intends to table it in the House?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the minister is presently meeting with the CLC in Toronto.

Mr. Paproski: What has that to do with multiculturalism?

Mr. Trudeau: I would gladly refer the question to him, Mr. Speaker.

SYNCRUDE—APPOINTMENT OF BRUCE WILSON TO LOOK AFTER GOVERNMENT'S INTEREST—POSSIBLE CONFLICT OF INTEREST

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources a question regarding a report that Mr. Bruce Wilson has been appointed for an indefinite period to look after the government's investment in Syncrude. Is this a temporary appointment until the National Petroleum Corporation takes over this responsibility, or is Mr. Wilson to continue this function when PetroCan is set up and is responsible for the federal government's investment in Syncrude?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the government's intention in appointing Mr. Wilson, who is now a consultant in this field, was to provide for an experienced executive on an interim basis to look after the government's interest in Syncrude. I regret to say that late last week Mr. Wilson underwent very serious surgery, and it looks very much as though he will not be able to continue in this function, in which case we will have to seek some other assistance on an interim basis until parliament has given us the authority to go ahead with Petro-Canada.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that Mr. Wilson, whose indisposition we all regret, was a former president of Canadian Bechtel Limited, a former vice-president of the Bechtel Corporation in the United States, and with Canadian Bechtel Limited as chief contractor in the Syncrude project, will the minister assure us that Mr. Wilson is not going to be the government watchdog in a situation in which he has formerly had a very deep vested interest? It seems to me this would be very much like putting a weasel in the henhouse in order to protect the chickens.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I think if the hon. gentleman made a few inquiries in the trade he would find that the relationship between Mr. Wilson and Canadian Bechtel is such that there would be very little love lost between the two of them.

ST-FÉLICIEN—REQUEST FOR AID TO ESTABLISH PULP AND PAPER INDUSTRY

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the hon. Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

For exactly 12 years the government of Quebec has been promising the establishment of a pulp and paper mill in Saint-Félicien in the riding of Roberval. Can the Minister tell the House whether a grant to the Donohue Company has been formally applied for, through the Quebec government, for the building of such a plant?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): To the best of my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, the answer is no, up to the present time except in very rare circumstances, such as those that existed in one location in Quebec a year or so ago, it has not been the policy of my department to invest or become involved in new pulp and paper enterprises as such. However, there is a supplementary agreement in place between the government of Canada and the government of Quebec relating to the forest industry in general, and it is possible that some form of aid might be available under that kind of program. I will make some inquiries and advise the hon. member.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

Would the minister check at the same time whether it is true, as the rumour has it in Quebec, that the federal government is delaying the project?

REASON FOR DELAY IN ESTABLISHING FEDERAL MORTGAGE EXCHANGE CORPORATION

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Given the depressed state of the mortgage market, can the Prime Minister explain why his government continues to procrastinate about setting up the Federal Mortgage Exchange Corporation which was legislated over a year and a half ago to provide a secondary mortgage market that would undoubtedly help attract mortgage investments into residential mortgages at this critical time?

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

OBJECTIONS TO RE-SHOWING OF PROGRAM ENTITLED "ENCOUNTER WITH CANCER"—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State whether he has received any objections from the Prince Edward Island division of the Canadian Cancer Society, or from the Canadian Cancer Society itself, regarding the re-showing next Sunday by the CBC of a program entitled "Encounter with Cancer"?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Yes I have, Mr. Speaker. As I said last week, I made those representations known to the corporation, but I believe the corporation still intends to show it and has a defence of its decision. I will be pleased to table it in the House tomorrow.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is a scandalous thing.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State if he has advised the CBC that it should seek advice as to whether the point of view put forward in programs of this sort are valid and agree with the policy of the Department of National Health and Welfare and such concerned bodies as the Canadian Cancer Society?

Mr. Faulkner: Mr. Speaker, without giving them my advice, I have been assured that they have in fact followed that course, and they do so traditionally.

SYSCO—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE NO FURTHER LAY-OFFS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is another in a series I have posed regarding lay-offs at the Sysco plant in Sydney, the possibility of aid from his department and so on. In my last question I asked if there had been a commitment that there would be no further lay-offs at the Sysco plant. The minister very kindly said he would seek that assurance. Is he in a position today to advise whether he received that assurance and what the future holds?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, no such assurances were volunteered by the company when its official visited my department to discuss this question. The outlook for the company continues, of course, to be somewhat uncertain because of a slowdown within the industry and, indeed, on a world basis. I would suggest to the hon. member that he might like to put the same question to the Premier of Nova Scotia, in view of the fact the government of Nova Scotia owns and controls the plant.

Mr. Muir: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact the minister might have better liaison with the Premier of Nova Scotia than I do, I wonder if he might impress upon him that at the moment we have unemployment running at the rate of 15 per cent to 20 per cent on Cape Breton Island and we just cannot stand anymore? I would hope that the minister and his government along with the Prime Minister would impress that fact upon the Premier of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member has difficulty getting through to the Premier of Nova Scotia, I would be very pleased to convey that message.

Mr. Muir: I will expect an answer, too.

REQUEST FOR TERMS AND CONDITIONS OF $500 MILLION LOAN TO U.S.S.R.

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Prime Minister would indicate if it is intended to inform the House of the terms and conditions of the recently announced $500 million loan to the U.S.S.R.?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is a question which I believe was or should be addressed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, may I redirect the question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I was talking to another member, so I wonder whether the hon. member would repeat his question.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, I was wondering whether it is the intention of the minister to outline the terms and conditions of the $500 million loan to the U.S.S.R. announced last week?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, this is the largest foreign credit which the Export Development Corporation has extended to a foreign power. It is to run for a period of 30 months and it requires that within the first 18 months approximately $250 million be committed—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question was quite valid in that it asked whether the minister intended at some time to inform the House about the terms and conditions of the loan. He seems to be prepared to do so, but it certainly is not the time for that now.

● (1450)

Mr. Yewchuk: Can the minister tell us whether or not it would be classified as a soft loan?

Mr. Gillespie: No, Mr. Speaker, it is fully competitive with international rates.

POST OFFICE

COMPLAINT ABOUT SLOW SERVICE—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO RECTIFY

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Postmaster General. In view of the fact that Van Horne moved a division of troops from Ottawa to Winnipeg in 1885 in less than 10 days when three major sections of the railroad were as yet incomplete, does the Postmaster General approve of the fact that it now takes 18 days for bulk mail leaving central Ontario to arrive at Camrose, Alberta? Moreover, does he approve of his special assistant writing to constituents telling them if they do not like the bulk rate service they had better switch to first class mail?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): No, Mr. Speaker, I am no more happy about the fact that Van Horne could move faster than we do today than I am about the fact that our first Canadians had a better service by smoke signals than we have at times.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

DATE OF SIGNING OF HEAD LEASE WITH WESTBANK INDIANS

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the length of time the Westbank Indians have been waiting for approval of the development of their land and as the minister has said he will sign the necessary head lease document, can he say now when he will sign it?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I share the hon. member's concern at the length of time taken to get these documents straightened away. However, I am happy to report that the head lease was signed on May 8 of this year.

Oral Questions

AGRICULTURE

FERTILIZER—JUSTIFICATION OF PRICE INCREASES

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. It is with reference to the fertilizer situation and concerns price rather than supply. From answers to earlier questions and from discussions with dealers, it would appear that short supply is not really a problem in general, but I wish to ask the minister whether he is satisfied that the recent price increases are in fact justified and, if not, what action, if any, he intends to take.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the hon. member has any new information on price increases, but the latest figures I was given last week showed some price decline in some brands of the fertilizer.

FISHERIES

POSSIBILITY OF PROGRAM TO ASSIST FRESHWATER AND INLAND FISHERMEN

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): My question is for the Minister of Fisheries. Following the minister's announcement of a $50 million program to assist the ground fish industry of Canada, can the minister advise the House whether consideration has been given to a similar program to assist the fresh water and inland fishermen of Canada?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, some days after this announcement was made further details were released to the effect that we would be assisting the fishermen with deficiency payments for mullet and lower qualities of white fish which are filleted. We are watching the freshwater fish situation very closely in terms of marketing. I should say that prices to fishermen will thus keep up pretty well with the trend in the past years which was fairly good.

AIRPORTS

REASON FOR FAILURE TO PROVIDE SECURITY CHECKS AT PRINCE GEORGE

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the interest shown by the government in beefing up the security procedures at Vancouver International airport following my question in the House last month, can the minister tell us why the government seems to feel that some passengers are not entitled to security protection since passengers boarding jet liners at some British Columbia airports, such as Prince George, are not required to submit to any security checks whatever?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will have to inquire into this matter.

[Mr. Buchanan.]

EDUCATION

ALLEGED BYPASSING OF COMMUNITY COLLEGES IN SEEKING INFORMATION ON SOCIAL PROGRAMMING

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. When contracting educational institutions for information and guidance concerning social programming, has the minister changed his policy by limiting inquiries to universities, thereby bypassing community colleges?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure I understand the question. Perhaps I can talk to the hon. member after the question period.

PUBLIC SERVICE

ALLEGED REFUSAL TO ALLOW MICHAEL PITFIELD TO BE QUESTIONED BY COMMITTEE

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cossitt: It arises from the fact that apparently he has placed Michael Pitfield beyond the control of questioning by a parliamentary committee. I would like to ask the Prime Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has made reference to this question a couple of times in the last two sittings. Surely, the proper place to question officials about who appears or who does not appear before the committee is the standing committee and not the House. The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich.

Mr. Cossitt: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF COST SHARING ARRANGEMENT WITH QUEBEC FOR OFFICES ABROAD

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration I should like to direct my question to the Minister of State for External Affairs. Considering that the province of Quebec is the only province which occupies federal office space abroad, can the minister explain to the House what cost sharing arrangement has been made between the two levels of government in order to provide this interesting method of recruiting Canadian immigrants, particularly at a time when the parliamentary inquiry into the whole matter of immigration is underway?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Acting Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, let me answer as Acting Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Some time ago an agreement was signed between the province of Quebec and Canada in connection with co-operative action between the two governments to improve the flow of immigration and the way in which immigrants are met and dealt with as they approach this country. I will be glad to obtain for the hon. member exact details with regard to the cost, which is a rather complicated matter.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Can the minister say whether these facilities will be extended to all provincial governments on request?

Mr. Lang: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The special initiative which the province of Quebec showed prior to the 1971 agreement would certainly be responded to by us in the same way with regard to other provinces.

THE CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

ALLEGED ASSERTION OF JURISDICTION IN CERTAIN FIELDS BY QUEBEC—POSSIBLE DISCUSSION BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND PREMIER BOURASSA

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. Has the Premier of Quebec discussed with the right hon. Prime Minister, in preparation for the nationalization and repatriation of the constitution, his assertion that certain fields, such as communication and immigration, be given to Quebec in order to assert what he calls cultural sovereignty in economic federalism?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have read the statement in the paper like every one else.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

REASON FOR DELAY IN GRANTING PERMITS TO OIL COMPANIES IN NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Mr. Jim Balfour (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Is it government policy that oil companies which have had applications for permits in the Northwest Territories pending in his department for the past four or five years, companies which have done substantial exploration work on such lands, will be denied priority in acquiring permits on those lands?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member indicated, this problem has been outstanding for the last four or five years. It is the question of oil and gas regulations on which we have not yet brought appropriate legislation to the House and the matter raised will be covered at that time.

DATE OF ISSUANCE OF OIL AND GAS REGULATIONS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, in light of the speech delivered by the minister in Calgary, to which I listened carefully, and the uncertainty of his answer today, can he advise when those regulations will be produced, what legislation will be brought forward and when?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): As I indicated in my speech, it is my hope that it will be in the early part of the fall.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege to reply to a statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). If the only example he can find of the government practising restraint in spending is the phase-out of the Veterans Land Act, I say that it not only is a slight to the veterans of Canada, but if that is the only example of restraint then God help Canada!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member may have a valid complaint that is a subject of debate, discussion or commentary at some time, but it surely does not constitute a question of privilege or a point of order.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order arising from the question I attempted to ask a few moments ago with regard to the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) had refused to allow Michael Pitfield to be questioned by the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

● (1500)

I rise primarily to seek direction from the Chair as to where a member can raise a matter of this kind. We are not, apparently, allowed to raise it in committee because the gentleman in question is not there. As a member, I raise a very legitimate question as to why the top public servant in Canada is being hidden from parliamentary examination and, indirectly or directly, the expenses of the offices of the Prime Minister and of the Privy Council, because we cannot talk to this deputy minister like we can all other deputy ministers. I feel that I have a very legitimate point of order in seeking direction as to how this matter can be brought to the attention of parliament and the people of Canada for proper examination of the very lavish and luxurious expenses being indulged in for the offices of the Prime Minister and of the Privy Council and the residence of the Prime Minister at 24 Sussex Drive without proper examination by parliament.

I feel that parliament has every right to examine this matter, but for one reason or another the Prime Minister seeks to block the right of parliament to know why he is spending public money on certain things. I should like to receive some direction as to where, as a private member of this House, I can raise these very legitimate questions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As I indicated when the hon. member raised the question, surely when the estimates of the Prime Minister's office or the Privy Council are before the standing committee—which I understand will be later this day—questions of that sort can be raised. Questions concerning all those items can be directed to whichever member of parliament is there in his representative capacity or responsible capacity, either a minister or a parliamentary secretary, because it is the responsibility of the minister and he assumes that responsibility to answer such questions.

If there is a refusal to answer those questions in the committee, on examination of the estimates, that refusal may warrant consideration at a later time in the form of a complaint or grievance, or perhaps a question of privilege; I do not know. The fact of the matter is that until such time as a representative member of the government refuses to attend or refuses to answer questions in respect of the estimates, up to that point surely no questions can be put in this House about those matters.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TABLING OF FINAL COMMUNIQUÉ OF COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 41(2) I should like to table, in both official languages, the final communiqué of the recent meetings of Commonwealth heads of government in Kingston, Jamaica.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 1,573, 1,935, 1,940, 1,949, 1,962, 1,973, 1,975, 1,976, 2,202 and 2,221.

Mr. Speaker, if question No. 554 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

[Mr. Speaker.]

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

AGE DISCRIMINATION IN EMPLOYMENT

Question No. 1,573—Mr. Herbert:

1. With reference to the answer to Part 1 of Question No. 251 was it stated in a letter dated May 1, 1974 for the office of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration that "for a number of years an educational campaign has been conducted, aimed at reducing or eliminating age discrimination in employment"?

2. With reference to the answer to Part 2 is it known that age discrimination is practiced by a requirement that new employees participate in compulsory company pension plans which have maximum age limits for new entrants?

3. (a) Is the responsibility for these pension plans mainly in a provincial jurisdiction (b) what means are available to the government to deal with this situation?

4. Is age discrimination often practiced through the requirement of compulsory participation for new employees in medical plans where high standards are maintained for the purpose of cost saving to the companies?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Manpower and Immigration and Labour as follows: 1. Yes. Although no formal campaign has been conducted recently, the department, through its Canada Manpower Centres, continues a campaign to persuade employers to eliminate all forms of discrimination, including age.

2. Some compulsory company pension plans contain maximum age limits for new entrants.

3. (a) Age limits for new entrants are found in pension plans under both federal and provincial jurisdictions. Information is not available on the distribution of these plans between provincial and federal jurisdictions. (b) The governments of Canada and some provinces are developing amendments to their labour codes which would remove discrimination based on age, sex and marital status from pension and insurance plans.

4. Information not available.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—STATION WAGONS FOR BROADCASTING PURPOSES IN TANZANIA

Question No. 1,935—Mr. Reynolds:

Were four Toyota Land Cruise Station Wagons purchased by Department of Supply and Services to be used for broadcasting purposes in Tanzania at a cost of approximately $60,000 each and, if so, what is the reason for the cost?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): A contract was placed on behalf of CIDA on October 18, 1973, for four Toyota Land Cruiser Station Wagons at a cost of $4,901 each, and a range of operating and maintenance spares valued at $5,356.92 for a total cost of $24,960.92 for vehicles and spare parts. In addition, supply, fitment and testing of broadcasting or recording equipment, complete with spares and instruction manuals as well as base-station equipment and spares, was contracted for separately at $268,000.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—CONTRACT TO ATLAS STEELS COMPANY

Question No. 1,940—Mr. Reynolds:

Did the Department of Supply and Services award a contract valued at $303,314 to Atlas Steels Company, a division of Rio Algom Mines Limited, Welland, Ontario, for the modification of one of the company's electric furnaces and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Yes. This contract was awarded for the development of new technology to smelt iron oxide pellets using significantly reduced amounts of electrical energy. The objective is to make the results available to all Canadian stell manufacturers and reduce Canada's dependence on imports of ferrous scrap. The requisitioning agency is the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—PURCHASE OF AERIAL CAMERAS

Question No. 1,949—Mr. Reynolds:

Was a contract issued for the design, development and supply of two handheld aerial cameras for $150 thousand approximately and, if so, was any consideration given to similar cameras available on the market at a fraction of the price?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Yes. All potential suppliers were made aware of this pending procurement and the minimum performance requirements of the Department of National Defence. The enquiry specified existing equipment but none was offered and only Ernst Leitz (Canada) Ltd. offered to develop and supply the complete camera.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—CONTRACTS FOR TURBINE FUEL

Question No. 1,962—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Were two separate contracts issued to Imperial Oil Ltd., Ottawa, Ontario and Gulf Oil Canada Ltd., Toronto, Ontario on April 2, 1974 and, if so, what was the rate charged by each per gallon?

2. For what reason were both contracts not negotiated at the same time with the Gulf Oil Company?

3. Does such purchase indicate coordination of the purchasing aim affecting such fuels?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. A contract dated March 14, 1974 was awarded to Imperial Oil Limited, Ottawa, and contracts dated March 13 and 14, 1974 were awarded to Gulf Oil Canada Limited, Toronto, for the supply of turbine fuel to Canadian Forces Bases in western Canada and the maritimes as required during the period June 1, 1974 to May 31, 1975. The news releases covering these awards were dated April 2, 1975. The price per gallon depended on the specification of the fuel, quantity, source, delivery point and method of delivery. The price per gallon varied from $0.2201 to $0.4826.

2. Gulf Oil Canada Limited did not submit bids for supply of fuel to ten of the 13 bases.

3. Yes. The annual DND requirement for aviation turbine fuel was consolidated into invitations to tender by geographical areas. In this instance, one invitation to tender was for Canadian Forces Bases in eastern Canada and the other western Canada bases. Six firms were invited to tender for the eastern requirement but only Gulf Canada and Imperial Oil submitted bids. Gulf Canada was the sole bidder for the supply of fuel to bulk storage for one base, while Imperial Oil was the sole bidder for the remaining five bases. Contracts were awarded accordingly. Seven firms were invited to tender for the supply of turbine fuel to seven sites in western Canada. Only Gulf Canada and Imperial Oil submitted bids for two locations, of which Gulf was the lower bidder and was awarded the contract. Imperial Oil was the sole bidder for the remaining five locations and was awarded the contract.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—REPAIR AND OVERHAUL OF MISCELLANEOUS HYDRAULIC MATERIAL

Question No. 1,973—Mr. Reynolds:

What are the details of two contracts awarded June 27, 1974 to Heroux Ltd, Longueuil, Quebec for the repair and overhaul of miscellaneous hydraulic material?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Contract 1: To cover the cost of servicing forecasted repair and overhaul hydraulic DND requirements during the fiscal period April 1, 1974 to March 31, 1975. Contract 2: To cover the cost of accountable advance spares ordered during the period April 1, 1974 to March 31, 1975 for use in contracts 1 and follow-on contracts.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—AIRCRAFT OVERHAULING

Question No. 1,975—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Was a contract awarded May 16, 1974 to I.M.P. Aerospace Ltd., Dartmouth, Nova Scotia for aircraft reparations costing $413,000?

2. Under the terms of the contract, what does "sampling inspection" of one C.P. 121 aircraft mean?

3. To what degree were the four C.P. 121 Tracker aircraft overhauled?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. Yes.

2. The contract item "sampling inspection" is an in-depth inspection of an aircraft at a pre-determined number of flying hours to provide maintenance data from which management determines the level of overhaul to be carried out on the aircraft fleet until the next sampling inspection is performed.

3. The work performed on the four C.P. 121 aircraft involved dismantling for inspection, and repairing as found necessary, specific areas and systems of the aircraft (selected through previous sampling inspections) using techniques and facilities available only at the designated overhaul depot.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—RENTAL OF TARIFF EQUIPMENT

Question No. 1,976—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Was a contract awarded June 25, 1974 to the New Brunswick Telephone Company, Saint John, New Brunswick for the rental of tariff equipment for a period extending from April 1, 1974 to March 31, 1975?

2. Was there a delay of three months in awarding the contract after operation was underway and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. Yes, a contract was issued on May 23, 1974. The news release was dated June 25, 1974.

2. The contract covers the ongoing rental of services initially provided in prior years. There was an approximate eight week delay between the expiry on March 31, 1974 of the similar contract covering fiscal 1973-74 and the insuance of this renewal contract. The delay was primarily due to the heavy contract renewal workload which arises each year in March and April as a result of the government fiscal year end on March 31.

INDIAN AFFAIRS—SETTLEMENT OF LAND CLAIMS IN TREATY AND NON-TREATY AREAS

Question No. 2,202—Mr. Firth:

1. Is the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development presently negotiating with individual Indian bands to settle land claims in treaty and non-treaty areas and, if so, with which bands?

2. Is it the Department's intention to extinguish Native peoples' rights and Native title to lands through land claims settlements?

3. (a) What amount of money is transferred to provincial governments for providing education to Native people (b) which provinces are party to such agreements (c) how much was received by each such province in the fiscal years 1970-71, 1971-72, 1972-73, 1973-74 and 1974-75?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Preliminary discussions or negotiations concerning comprehensive land claims arising in areas where it is alleged that native title has not been extinguished by treaty or superseded by law are being carried out with the Union of British Columbia Indian chiefs, the Nishga Tribal Council, the Kitwancool Indians, the Haida Indians, the Council for Yukon Indians and the Crees and Inuits of northern Quebec. Preliminary discussions or negotiations concerning claims relating to the administration of land and other Indian assets under the Indian Act and to the fulfilment and interpretation of Indian treaties are being carried out with the Enoch Band, Stony Band, Edmunston Band, Sydney Band, Union of Nova Scotia Indians and Wagnatcook Band. The department is also negotiating with some bands which have outstanding entitlement to land under treaties. Active negotiations have been going on with the Garden Hill, Red Sucker Lake, St. Theresa's Point and Wasagamack Bands in Manitoba, with the Peter Ballantyne, Fond du lac and Stoney Rapids Bands in Saskatchewan and the Cree Band of Fort Chipewyan in Alberta.

2. In comprehensive land claims it is the intention that native title would be extinguished in return for the compensation that may be agreed upon in negotiations or in any settlement legislation that might be applicable.

PROJECTS UNDER AGREEMENT SIGNED BY MINISTER OF REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION AND QUEBEC

Question No. 2,221—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

Since the signing of the umbrella agreement relating to development on March 15, 1975 by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and the Minister responsible for the Quebec Planning and Development Bureau, to date (a) how many projects have been submitted (b) how many were accepted (i) in what localities (ii) in what amount?

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: The General Development Agreement, signed in March 1974, between the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and the government of Quebec permits the conclusion of subsidiary agreements negotiated on a sectorial development basis. The projects which could be included in such a subsidiary agreement are not all presented directly to DREE, but often to the provincial ministry concerned or to the Quebec Planning and Development Bureau. We do not, therefore, have at out disposal the list of all the projects submitted at any given time. Taking into account the development priorities of each industrial sector in the various regions of Quebec and the objectives defined in the General Development Agreement, a list of projects is drawn up and becomes the starting point of negotiations aimed at the conclusion of a subsidiary agreement. The subsidiary agreements signed to date between Quebec and Canada are as follows: 1. March 15, 1974—Canada-Quebec Subsidiary Agreement on the Financing of the 1974-1978 SIDBEC Expansion Plan. Place: Contrecoeur, Quebec. Grand Total: $181,000,000. Breakdown of expenditures: Canada: $30,000,000; Quebec: $151,000,000.

2. September 13, 1974—Canada-Quebec Subsidiary Agreement on Key Highway Networks (construction of the steel route, Autoroute A-30, between Montreal and Sorel). Grand Total: $43,435,000. Breakdown of expenditures: Canada: $26,265,000 Quebec: $17,170,000.

3. March 26, 1975—Canada-Quebec Subsidiary Agreement on Industrial Infrastructure. This agreement is divided into three groups: a) Industrial parks: Haut-Saguenay, $3,600,000; Sherbrooke, $13,400,000; St-Romuald, $1,100,000; Drummondville, $5,000,000; Victoriaville, $2,000,000; Rimouski, $2,200,000; Rivière-du-Loup, $1,200,-000; Rouyn-Noranda, $1,000,000; Total $29,500,000; b) Fishery parks: Paspébiac Cap-aux-Meules; Rivière-au-Renard; Grande-Rivière; Norht Shore; Total $14,000,000; c) Important industrial projects (sites to be determined), $12,000,-000; Reserve, $4,500,000; Total: $16,500,000; Grand Total: $60,000,000; Breakdown of expenditures: Canada: $36,000,-000; Quebec: $24,000,000.

4. March 26, 1975—Canada-Quebec Subsidiary Agreement on Access to Forest Resources. a) Saguenay/Lac-St-Jean/Chibougamau: Chapais, Frotet Lake and Waconichi Lake; Bras du Nord, Bourgat Lake, Margonne Lake, Total $5,812,000; b) Northwestern Quebec; Quévillon-Matagami, Canica Island, Valet Lake, Ponteneau Township, Mazarin, Villebois and Bourque Townships, Claire and Lanoue Townships, Val d'Or-Laforce, Alfred Lake—Rapide Sept and Témiscamingue, Waswanipi Lake and Kokomis Lake Total: $12,703,000; c) North Shore: Sacré-Coeur, Outardes Crown forest; Du Tonnerre and St-Jean Rivers; Natashquan, Labrieville; total: $5,685,000; Grand total: $24,200,000; Breakdown of expenditures: Canada $14,520,000: Quebec: $9,680,000.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

DEPARTMENT OF MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION—RESEARCH EXPENDITURES

Question No. 554—Mr. Symes:

1. What was the total amount of money spent in each of the fiscal years 1972-73 and 1973-74 by the Department of Manpower and Immigration on contracts to outside persons and organizations for research, development and other consulting services?

2. What are the names and addresses of these outside persons and organizations and what amounts of money were involved in each contract?

3. What was the purpose of each contract and title of each report submitted?

Return tabled.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand that there have been discussions about proceedings in the committee. This matter will be dealt with by the Chairman as soon as the committee session begins. Pursuant to Standing Order 58(9), I do now leave the chair for the House to go into committee of the whole.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58

House in committee of the whole to consider certain items of the estimates for the year ending March 31, 1976, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Orders 58 and 59—Mr. Penner in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

Vote 1—Headquarters—Operating expenditures including reimbursement of the Ministry of Transport revolving fund in the amount of $200,000 for the value of stores which have become obsolete, unserviceable, lost or destroyed and authority to spend revenue received during the year, $18,467,000.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, as a result of our experience on Friday, when there was some confusion, there have been discussions through the usual channels and I should like to make some suggestions. I think I speak on behalf of the House leaders of the various parties with regard to our proceedings today and tomorrow. It is suggested that the Minister of Transport will not make a statement at the opening of the proceedings but that at 9.15 p.m. tomorrow he will be recognized for a 15 minute statement in summing up. A member of the opposition will then be recognized to conclude the two-day debate before the remaining votes are taken.

The minister's time in replying to questions is not to be counted as time taken by Liberal backbenchers; but on the other hand, speaking for this side of the House, we will not claim that Liberal backbenchers should have exactly the same time as all the opposition parties put together. Discussion, I suggest, should be divided into 15 minute units. A member may speak for ten minutes in developing questions, and the minister would have five minutes to respond or, alternatively, the minister and the member may engage in a 15 minute direct question and answer period. Of course, if a member so desires and does not expect or want a ministerial response, he may merely make a speech for that 15 minute period. Once a member of any party has used the 15 minute period, he will not be recognized again unless there are no other members of his party wishing to participate at that time.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman has correctly stated the understanding we have reached. There will still be problems which Your Honour may have to contend with, but may I say in one or two sentences that have attempted to marry the old committee of supply to the other system under which we have been operating. Whether the result of that marriage will be a bastard or a child of some consequence, I do not know as yet; but it is going to throw some burden upon the Chair.

I just wish to make the point that in the old days committee of supply was all carried out on government time and ministers were in the position of having to be exceedingly nice to members of the opposition in order to get their estimates through. Unfortunately, those days are gone forever and they do not have to be nice to us any more—although I hope the Minister of Transport will be.

We are looking at a series of miniature, 15-minute capsule debates on certain issues and it is hoped that it will be realized that opposition days are being given up for this purpose. While I agree completely with the President of the Privy Council that government members who feel courageous enough, or have some issue to take up with the government, should have the right to do so, I hope that recognizing them will not mean that they will simply be here to take time away from the opposition.

Those are the points I wished to make. This experiment could be very successful and could bring us a long distance in recovering the ground we lost some years ago. I hope the Chair will take these things into consideration when deciding who is to be recognized and under what conditions.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, the President of the Privy Council has stated the terms of the agreement reached this morning among the House leaders. I do have one qualification that I will come to in a moment, Mr. Chairman, but it is not serious. I should like to make the point that we agreed this morning to try this procedure for these two days on the estimates of the Department of Transport, without committing ourselves to what we may do in the future. In other words, what we are trying to do is find a method that will work to the satisfaction of the committee in general. We are prepared to do our best to make this system work today and tomorrow and then decide where we will go from there.

● (1510)

There was one point in the statement of the President of the Privy Council that seemed to me to vary slightly from what we agreed to this morning. He said that if a member chooses to speak the full 15 minutes without putting any questions, he may do so. I think there was some concern this morning that a member might speak the full 15 minutes and not ask any questions, but make the kind of attack on the minister that would make him feel he should reply. Maybe we can cope with that if we come to it, but in any case the consensus was that we work on the basis of 15-minute units. We are prepared to try to make this plan work.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Chairman, I would really want to feel confident about the new suggestion put forward by the President of the Privy Council for a two day experience. Does such an agreement provide that the spokesmen of the various opposition parties in the House will have the opportunity to talk in turn or if this is left to the discretion of the Chair? I would want to receive such an assurance before we start our proceedings.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I am very happy to see that there was further consideration of this matter. I was one of the members on this side of the House on Friday who was unhappy with the procedure. I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that your ruling seems to be absolutely in line with what has been suggested today. Unfortunately, as time goes by in a day, different Chairmen chair the committee who do not know what went on previously and a misunderstanding develops. I would hope that if a member speaks for, say, five minutes and then puts questions, provided there is time left in his or her allotted time the minister will answer the questions if he can, or at least take them as notice, and do so right after the member has spoken.

I appreciate that we are all members of parliament and as such are responsible for curbing expenditures. The point that is being made by House leaders today is a good one, in that this is a unique responsibility of the opposition. We are trying to pry information out of the government. I have sat on the back benches of the government and I know that sometimes it is of benefit to the government to hide information. I think that ought to be taken into consideration in these procedures.

There is one further point that I should like to leave with you, Mr. Chairman, and I am afraid I disagree with my House leader on this. I hope that when we bring back the estimates into the House in this fashion, we will have not only the same privilege that we had in the past but the power that we had at that time. In the past we would tell a minister that the estimates would not pass until we got the information. All they do now is put up their collars and let the blizzard blow; when the blizzard is over, we have no information. That is what we complained about on Friday.

I want to say, sir—I know I am not supposed to mention your ruling—that you were most fair and just under all the circumstances on Friday.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if this ruling, understanding or agreement among the parties takes into consideration the rights of members of parliament who are not members of parties?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I may answer, and the reason I do so will be apparent in a moment. This morning we discussed the position of the hon. member for Moncton and I agreed to speak to him. I have been looking for him, but he was not in his place until a few moments ago. His position was certainly considered, however, and I am sure it will be protected by the Chair.

The Chairman: The committee has heard the suggestion of the President of the Privy Council. Is it agreed that today and tomorrow this will be the procedure adopted by the committee?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Chairman, in starting this two-day debate on the estimates of the Department of Transport, I hope we will be able to deal with questions at the time they are asked. I think this is far more pertinent and more helpful to the committee and to the member involved.

I should like to begin by saying that in the time this government has been in office, since 1972, the Department of Transport has not shown much in the way of results, in light of the election promises made at that time. When we look at the estimates we see a sizeable increase in all areas of expenditure of the department. I am going to deal with vote A, but before I do I should like to outline some of the election promises and try to show that almost none has been implemented. I think this is important in view of the fact that this House is going to be voting a large amount of money to the department.

In May, 1974, the Prime Minister stated that Air Canada was going to build major new facilities in Winnipeg at an estimated cost of $12 million, which would create 800 new jobs. The Prime Minister also said that Air Canada would discuss with the western provinces the establishment of a regional network of air services to serve small and isolated communities and create more employment. Another promise was for a STOL service to link Winnipeg, Brandon, Dauphin, Yorkton and Saskatoon.

On June 12, in Edmonton, the Prime Minister announced that if elected, his government would revise freight rates, set up a Crown corporation to supply boxcars, and improve the ports of Prince Rupert and Vancouver. That is another election promise that has not been carried out.

On June 17, in Toronto, the Prime Minister announced a $270 million program to aid public transit. To my knowledge, the government has not yet come up with anything positive on that program. The Prime Minister said on that occasion that a Liberal government would pay 100 per cent of the cost of Canadian-made commuter vehicles and 50 per cent of the cost of platforms and stations. I could go on and on about the various promises made at that time, Mr. Chairman, but I am only trying to set the stage. In this debate we hope the minister will give the House of Commons the fullest information on the programs of the Department of Transport and the direction it will be taking in the future.

My first question to the minister concerns the headquarters of the department. According to the estimates, in the period 1975-76 over 1974-75 there is a 39 per cent increase in expenditures, which I feel is scandalous. I note that with respect to the 16.1 per cent increase in authorized man-years in 1974-75, part of the increase is attributed to improvements in public relations. Again, in 1975-76 a further 12.7 per cent increase in man-years authorized is to meet the growing demand for support in public relations. The information budget has increased from an actual expenditure of $48,000 in 1973-74 to an expenditure of some $1,687,000 in 1975-76. My question to the minister is this: From whom is there a growing demand for support in public relations? From where is that demand coming? Is it coming from the people of Canada? Apparently it takes 35 times more money to tell people this year that transportation is in a mess than it did two years ago. I ask the minister to explain the departmental figures concerning public relations.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, I will not answer all the statements which have been made, many of which are strictly political. The department has accomplished many things, and I will have the opportunity before this debate ends to tell the committee what the department has done in the west, with the agreement of the ministers of transport of the western provinces. I cannot ask the hon. gentleman to talk about Prince Rupert and the kind of agreement that we made with British Columbia about the development of northern B.C., about the development of Churchill or about the agreement reached with Manitoba, the maritimes, and so on. I will not take up the time of the committee with these matters; I know the hon. gentleman wants to gain some political credits in being strictly critical. This is what he is supposed to do and I am not going to interfere with that.

Of course, the total amount set aside for employees has increased considerably. We must take into account the training centre to be established in Cornwall, which will cost about $8 million. In addition, we must consider the new policy we are elaborating. I hope this will be ready soon. If the hon. gentleman scrutinizes the department's work objectively, he will agree that the number of hours spent in formulating the new policy justifies the differentials he alluded to. I do not know how much time I am to be allowed for answering.

Mr. Whittaker: The Chairman will tell you, never fear.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I do not intend to let the hon. member speak and then not answer him. I am not like that. The man-years allotment for the transportation task force has been increased by about 101 man-years. In addition, there has been an increase in the number of employees in the minister's and the deputy minister's offices. The number of people employed in the information bureau—I think that is the right term—has been increased. In addition, there is an increase of 15 persons employed in the public affairs part of the department.

There are increases in the transport training institute, in those connected with the bilingualism program, in the computer service, in administration and in the general category. One must also include the central registry, the financial service, financial planning, operational revenue, material management, micrographics, and so on. In these areas you will find increases in man-years allowed. These employees are not political creatures; they are civil servants working for the government.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Chairman, I am not suggesting that the percentage of increase indicates any political hanky-panky; nevertheless, I think the figures justify our asking where the Canadian taxpayers' money is being spent. I suggest that we shall resolve the political aspect tomorrow night after 9.45 p.m. The minister suggested that the new policy will come forward soon. Can he be more specific? I understand that it has to do with modes of transportation involving roads, water, and so on. Can he say specifically when this new policy will be made known? Also, will he assure the committee that when the new policy is made known or comes forward, the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications will be able to review it before it is actually put into operation? I think the minister said this would be done.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has raised an important question. I remember the promise I made last year that I would discuss this policy with the standing committee of the House, and I intend to do so. First, I must have the approval of my colleagues. This is a government matter and I will discuss it in the near future with my colleagues. As soon as I have cabinet approval, I will be happy to discuss all aspects of transportation policy with the standing committee.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister another question? Another part of the 16.1 per cent increase in authorized man-years in 1974-75 is attributed to improvements in transportation policy. In 1975-76, part of 27 additional man-years is to be allocated, according to the explanation, to strengthening or developing the planning policy development functions: that is the way the matter is described. My question is this: What results has this increase produced so far? Also, if the policy development and planning development functions have been as heavily strengthened as is apparent from the estimates, why has the budget for professional and special services increased by 332 per cent since 1972-73? I suggest that the allocation in the 1972-73 budget was in the neighbourhood of $613,000; in the 1975-76 budget the amount allowed is in the neighbourhood of $2,652,000. Can the minister answer my question?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, I will try to answer the hon. member's first question and to get the figures from those who help me in order to answer the second question. I do not carry these figures in my head. To answer the hon. member's first question, let me tell him that the elaboration of the new policy was hard work. We established an important task force composed of people who know something about transportation. Of course, when I talk about policy I am talking about the general philosophy of transportation in Canada.

That policy must be acted on; we must do something concrete. It is not good enough to say that transportation in Canada should be an instrument of national development; to say we agree. But what do you mean by that? Who will have to work on programs and who will have to work on projects? We know that this task force will keep on for the rest of the year, and probably in 1976 in order that we will not only have a policy but programs and projects which correspond to this philosophy.

● (1530)

With regard to the other point, if the hon. member will wait a second, I will try to find out the information. I am told it has to do with the Cornwall institute. They have divided the cost of the building with the cost of the professional fees which are paid to architects, engineers, designers, and so on; that is the explanation for that amount.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Chairman—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. Under the terms of the arrangement agreed to, the time of the hon. member for Lisgar has expired.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I should like to use the time allotted to me at this juncture to put questions to the minister on three different subjects. They are not related to each other, so I will put one question, get the minister's answer, move on to the second, and so on.

As the minister will recall, during May and June of 1974—I will not say what was going on then because I do not want this to be that kind of a question—a good deal was said about urban renewal. The things that were being said under that heading included relocation of railway tracks in some or our cities and the development of new methods of transportation in our urban areas. Can the minister tell us what has happened, or what is happening to plans or projects that were in mind when those statements were made to the Canadian people in May and June of last year?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, as the hon. member knows, transportation in urban areas is outside the jurisdiction of the federal government. However, we offered to co-operate with the provinces and municipalities in order to improve the transportation systems in large and medium sized cities. We cannot act on our own initiative; we had to meet with the provinces. We did that in order to determine how the problems could be solved.

I met with representatives of the British Columbia government and representatives of the city of Vancouver to see how we should proceed with regard to a better urban transportation system. This was also done in Winnipeg, Toronto and Quebec. We are now working with the provinces and the municipalities. This must necessarily be done by co-operation: we cannot impose our way of doing things. For example, we cannot provide a commuter service without the co-operation of the province. We made an agreement for a commuter service from Richmond Hill, Ontario, to Toronto. The agreement is for $10 million. The service will be fed by all modes of transportation. People will be able to get to the heart of Toronto without having to wait many hours. This will avoid having to use thousands of cars which not only pollute but paralyse the city of Toronto. Therefore, we are working on this mainly with the minister of urban affairs. Everything is on the tracks, so to speak. I hope to see more achievements in the near future than have been seen up until this time.

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the realism of the minister in referring to the necessity of co-operation between this government and the provincial governments and, in turn, with the municipalities. He will forgive me, I am sure, if I remind him that that was not quite the way it was given to the country last May and June. We were given great dreams of how our cities were going to be improved if the election went a certain way. However, we were aware of what was happening then. I am glad to know that at least something is being done.

The minister gave a bit of detail about the discussions relating to Toronto. Does he have at his fingertips any of the details relating to discussions involving Winnipeg?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I am sorry, I did not hear the last part.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I asked if the minister has any of the details regarding Winnipeg, similar to the details he has given about Toronto.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, there was a special study in Winnipeg. The problem is how to implement it. In the meantime, this House has passed the Railway Relocation Act. This was needed before we could do anything about the reform of urban transportation because we did not have the necessary money. We now have that instrument and we can work with the provinces and municipalities, not everywhere at the same time but according to our means. We intend to do that. We are ready to do this in Winnipeg because of the studies that have been made. As far as dreams are concerned, there is something I know. I am sure the hon. member shares my view. Anything that has been done in this world started with a dream. Mr. Woodsworth was a dreamer, a very nice dreamer.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, the minister in one of his better moments is trying to silence me. He makes it difficult for me to say that I am still aware of the difference between the things that were said last May and June about how quickly these things would happen if only the country would elect a Liberal government. I am glad to know the minister can say that something is being done. I hope he will turn these dreams into reality and we will not have to be given dreams all over again at the time of the next election.

My second question has to do with Air Canada. I will not steal the thunder of the hon. member for Central Nova. I want to deal with one specific problem and I shall give one specific example of the problem. I have in mind Air Canada's labour relations. Is there not something the minister can do to persuade this Crown corporation, of which we in this House are very proud, to do something to get over the bad record that it is developing? The particular case in point that I wish to cite is that of the employees of the Air Canada finance branch at Winnipeg. Unhappy misunderstandings have persisted there for months. Perhaps by now it is a couple of years. I hope this is concerning the minister and that he can tell us what he is going to do about it.

● (1540)

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Of course I am concerned about this problem; I would like to see labour relations working very well. Apparently there are some grievances in Winnipeg. One of the reasons, I presume, why so many of the things that came out through Winnipeg is that the people there were not satisfied with the way certain things were being done. This led to the inquiry which we instituted and which is now going on. I do not think it would be fair for Air Canada or its employees to begin discussing this issue at the moment, however. I realize that the hon. member's question had to do with labour relations which are not the subject of the inquiry led by Mr. Justice Estey, but I believe the inquiry will probably reveal many of the things that are going on inside Air Canada and the report might be helpful in leading to better relations between Air Canada and its employees.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Apparently the minister saw the look of puzzlement on my face when he referred to the inquiry which is taking place and intimated it would touch on the labour situation. I wondered if he was telling me that Mr. Justice Estey is looking into this aspect. If that is not the case, is there any other inquiry which can do so? Or is he saying that as a result of Mr. Justice Estey's inquiry, Air Canada will be put on its toes and realize it must patch up its labour relations in the same way as we hope it will patch up its financial affairs?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Even if there is no direct relationship between the grievances which have been expressed and the financial anomalies of Air Canada, there is no doubt the latter situation has some bearing upon the relationship between the group in Winnipeg and the headquarters in Montreal. Even if it is not a matter of collective bargaining, there is no doubt in my mind that some people are not satisfied with the way things are going. This creates unrest; it creates a bad atmosphere. If this were cleared up it would probably be easier to establish a better relationship within the organization.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If I share the minister's view, that means he shares mine. I hope he will pursue this matter with vigour. I have one other question, and if I gave the minister ten guesses he would guess it ten times. As we all know, a commission has been appointed by the Minister of Labour to deal with the whole question of railway pensions. Any questions relating directly to that inquiry should be directed to the Minister of Labour. But I shall narrow this issue down to that of Canadian National pensions. It is a question I have asked the minister during the question period. We have dealt with it on late shows. I find it difficult to jump too hard on the hon. gentleman because, again, I believe he agrees with me. But I am asking him to push as hard as he can with respect to this item.

It took a long time, and I mean a long time—decades—to get the CN to escalate the pensions of its retired employees. For decades, once CN workers had retired their pensions remained fixed throughout their lifetime. Four or five years ago we got those pensions escalated, but for about three years the escalation amounted to only 2 per cent a year and no more, no matter how much the cost of living went up. Last year, the CN improved the position by granting a 4 per cent escalation. But, Mr. Chairman, we are already in the month of May, 1975, and there has not yet been any escalation at all this year. I think the minister and I share the view that it is scandalous for the CN to ask its pensioners to wait all this time for a cost of living increase for 1975.

The excuse may be that the company is waiting for the Hall report. If so, that is not good enough. I am sure the report will not recommend anything less than the CNR and the CPR have been doing. Is there anything the minister can do to get the CN to come through, without further delay, with an escalation for 1975 in pensions of retired CN employees, either through his powers of persuasion or through his political clout? Since 10 per cent was the rate of escalation for the pensions of retired public servants, RCMP personnel, armed forces personnel, those on old age security and those receiving Canada Pension Plan benefits, that is what it ought to be with respect to CN pensions, certainly no less. This is my last question: Is there not something the minister can do to get Canadian National to be half decent to its retired employees?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): The hon. gentleman talked to me about that last week, if my memory serves me well. I know there is a private bill on the order paper on this subject in the name of the hon. member for Lévis. In the meantime, as I mentioned to the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Winnipeg "North" Centre.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Excuse me. I have never made any distinction as to that sort of thing. As I told the hon. member, I communicated with the chairman of the board of CN, making the representations he was making to me and with the same conviction, I think, as the hon. gentleman has displayed. The chairman of the board told me there was to be a meeting of the board on May 26 and that he understood very well our feelings here. Without giving a decision of the board—he is not authorized to do that—he did say he hoped we would be satisfied with the decision which would be taken. That is all I can say for the time being.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I just say I shall question the minister about this on Tuesday, May 27?

● (1550)

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Chairman, I am very glad to have the opportunity to put some questions to the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand).

Since his announcement of a great reform in this House, it seems to me that it is still at the study stage. We are told that the study is going on, but I wonder whether, when it has been completed, the Minister of Transport will have more authority, generally, on air or railway transport. Even if personnel increases as the budget increases year after year, in our area, the higher the budget, the worse the service.

Strange enough, as the budget increases, we note personnel increases in more comfortable offices and, in the same way, decreases in maintenance, so that today I think there are four technocrats for one maintenance worker, who will see to the maintenance of railways or airports. This is the remark I wanted to convey to the Minister.

Every time we have elections, we can see countless airplanes flying in the sky of our constituency. We are given promises and, then, we are told that they were only election speeches. I think that it is kind of cheating the population of Saguenay-Lac Saint-Jean. I know that the Minister is sometimes sincere. This afternoon I would like to put three or four questions to him. I would like him to answer directly, because he knows the needs of our area.

I would like to discuss airlines. He knows that the quality of air service in our area is presently at its lowest level ever. I do not know what are his plans for the future, but I would like to mention two or three problems and, particularly, the upgrading program of the Roberval Airport. I think it is the one he knows best. Does he still consider the Roberval Airport as the main one in our constituency? I would like to know what are his plans for this airport. In a moment, I will have another question to put about it. I would like to know his views on the Roberval Airport.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, I had a chance a couple of times to land at Roberval airport and for a small city that is located fairly far from the centre, it was indeed a rather wonderful experience to be able to land there in a jet. My hon. friend knows that Roberval strip quite well. In any case, as you know, the use of airports or the construction of landing and take-off runways is not simply a matter of government will. At the same time there must be people ready to use them and prepared to give the service.

It is not only a matter of saying: Let us build a landing strip, and let us wait and see, perhaps some people will use it. If we start developing that kind of philosophy I can assure you we might have to increase taxes, and I do not rely much on my hon. friend to convince the voters that it is a good thing.

In any case, there is the problem of traffic at an airport like Roberval. No doubt it is the most important in his riding but it is not the most important in the area because there is a bigger airport in Bagotville. Whether we like it or not, Mr. Speaker, the city of Chicoutimi is bigger than the city of Roberval, and to that I can do nothing.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

As to the increase in costs, what happens to other services happens to airports too. It costs more to dig ditches today than a few years ago; it even takes a little longer and requires more people. Of course, we live in the same world. People used to work 60 hours a week, now they work 40, and I think my hon. colleague understands that quite well, even in his business.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Chairman, I thank the hon. Minister for his reply but I would point out to him that when he said it was absolutely essential that municipalities do their share—and I think he realizes that himself—the city and parish of Roberval have done their big share and are still doing it today.

Now I want to ask him a question about another project. I think the hon. Minister has never been very clear nor very specific on that project that was requested by the northern towns, namely Dolbeau and St. Félicien, concerning the construction of another airport. I have here a recent reply dated April 14, 1975, about that project.

We would like an airport to serve northern towns. The Minister has already contacted those groups, but it would be what is called the Dolbeau-Saint-Félicien airport in Saint-Méthode or an existing airport. Air navigation courses are given there. In the answer I have on hand it is mentioned that a final decision regarding the location of an airport in this area has not been made yet but that studies are made regarding harbour facilities.

I should like the hon. Minister to tell us what he thinks about that second request in the riding of Roberval?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, I think that has been very clearly announced in the speech from the throne and in the program of the Ministry of Transport. Communications between remote locations and the major centres of our country are very important. We wish to multiply the number of airports insofar as it is financially possible or insofar as they can be used enough to be profitable. Otherwise, we would have to build airports in each town, each village. I am not against it, but I shall tell you what it would cost and by how much taxes would have to be raised. In each area there must be a means of communication. First, the Saguenay area is well connected to the cities of Quebec and Montreal by the Bagotville airport; I think that nobody has to complain about it. In the Lac-Saint-Jean area, there is the Roberval airport which might be improved. A certain amount has been provided for it in our estimates. This year, I do not know what is the amount provided for municipal and small airports serving remote areas. When all the money has been spent, it is not possible to print more. In Roberval the runway is already built, it has only to be made practicable. It might be the best place to start and a small municipal airport might be built later in Dolbeau. All that will be achieved according to our means, and we believe the Dolbeau municipality is right to try and develop faster communications with communities in the area and the major centres in the province.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Chairman, my second question deals with another kind of transportation, railway transportation.

On several occasions, I blamed the government, and especially the Canadian National, because it was the only company operating in our area. Now, they are not only taking trains away, but also closing down stations. They removed the Dolbeau station clerk, and I got letters from Chicoutimi, Jonquière and Iberville telling me stations had been closed down in that area too. I shall let hon. members for those areas say what they have to say about that. In my constituency, the clerk was removed, and tickets are no longer sold in Dolbeau, which is a serious situation in summer, because many workers leave from Dolbeau for the fruit and vegetable picking season. I think there is a considerable number of customers in Dolbeau during two or three months. But ticket sales have just been discontinued. This is what railway workers have been complaining about. They said: At least they should have done it in winter, not in summer, during peak traffic. I wonder if the minister is aware of that.

The "express" service is also being discontinued. I do not know if it is cheaper, but "express" services are being contracted out. They go to Montreal to get "express" contracts. One was awarded in Abitibi, another one will soon be awarded to our area; I believe that very soon the Canadian National and all its bureaucrats will be driving their desks, with their only job being to give out contracts to private enterprise. I believe this is what is coming. As things are going now, even passengers will be farmed out. I would like to know the minister's opinion on that, whether that is an improvement or whether it heralds the curtailment of our rail services?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, I suspect the hon. member is not completely aware of certain facts. They are quite the opposite from what he suggested. We are hearing numerous complaints about the Canadian National laying off employees. CP Rail does exactly the same thing. He says we are increasing the number of bureaucrats. On the contrary, I can assure him we are now reducing their numbers. They are bitterly complaining against it. I suggest the hon. member come to my office, where I can show him letters we are receiving exactly for this very reason that some are laid off.

We are now talking about a railroad and I think the hon. member will understand that it is not profitable to maintain a railroad on a year-round basis because the people in Dolbeau, Saint-Félicien, or elsewhere, use it only two months a year. If there is one area in the province where people use their car instead of the train to travel, it is in the Lac Saint-Jean area, and I know this area rather well since I lived there for many years. People like to have train service in case the roads are blocked or there are no other means of transportation. But this costs Canadian taxpayers a lot of money.

The problem in the Lac Saint-Jean area is the same as in Western Canada, where there are what are called "branch lines", which have not been used for years. Are we going to maintain them in the hope that one day we shall have customers who will board the train? I can give an example of this: there is at least one area in Canada which is costing us at least $6,000 a year for every passenger boarding the train.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The time allotted to the hon. member for Roberval has now expired.

• (1600)

[English]

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Chairman, it is sometimes said that living on Vancouver Island is reward enough in itself, but I wonder if I might refer to three areas of transportation in relation to Vancouver Island, ask a question on each and then sit down to allow the minister to reply. My first question relates to the fact that it is the present policy of the federal government and the minister's department to provide subsidies to ferries that operate interprovincially or that run from Canada to the United States.

The situation which exists in this regard in respect of the mainland of British Columbia and Vancouver Island deserves special attention because we do not have the Trans-Canada Highway connecting the mainland to the island, obviously, because of the Strait of Georgia. This is something about which the minister and myself can do nothing. However, because of the fact that earlier we did make provision for federal subsidies to provinces in respect of the Trans-Canada Highway from coast to coast, it should be relevant to consider some form of subsidy in respect of ferries. Perhaps this subsidy could be in the form of assistance in the construction of new ferries. A great number of people from other provinces in Canada use the existing ferry system and draw heavily upon those services to the people of British Columbia, particularly Vancouver Island, and for this reason I think we should look seriously at the idea of providing subsidies for this very important service between Vancouver Island and the mainland.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, we have been discussing this with the hon. member and the government of British Columbia for many months. We are trying to determine if it is possible to do this without creating a precedent that would, of course, cost the federal government hundreds of millions of dollars. If we decided to subsidize all intraprovincial ferries, the cost would be tremendous. We have departed from this policy and we have in many cases succeeded in eliminating all ferries which were operating within the limits of provinces.

In the case of British Columbia, we have been given some reasons for providing such a subsidy, probably the most important of which is the one referred to by the hon. member, that is, that the Trans-Canada Highway should really start in Victoria and continue from the mainland in Vancouver, maintaining the link from Vancouver Island to Newfoundland. Such a link should be part of the federal responsibility, and this is something we have been trying to achieve, but the hon. gentleman will understand that if we did this generally for ferries, then I do not know how we could avoid doing it in respect of bridges. The same argument would apply because they, too, form part of the Trans-Canada Highway. This is not something we are refusing to discuss and the hon. member can be assured that I am ready again to look into the situation.

Mr. Anderson: The second matter I should like to refer to is one that affects the northern part of Vancouver Island and the cessation of barge services to the isolated communities there. This service has been cut off because of the sparsely inhabited area, yet the barges are the only means of transportation since there are no roads or railroads in that area. I believe there is a precedent in that the federal government does subsidize the cost of bringing freight to those isolated communities in northern Vancouver Island by a ship called the Yewchuk. Recently, the Sea Span Barge Company of Vancouver terminated services to these isolated communities because, as it claimed, the cost of stopping at these areas was higher than the charge for delivering the freight. In other words, it is an uneconomical endeavour in view of the capital investment involved in bringing freight to these communities.

Since there is a precedent in that we do provide a subsidy to some sort of freight services for other isolated communities, I would suggest that we should provide a considerable subsidy to the Sea Span Barge Company which has within the last few months stopped providing this service to many communities on northern Vancouver Island because it is not profitable.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, I come back to the argument I was advancing a few minutes ago. We are providing this kind of subsidy in the Northwest Territories because there is no provincial government there. We do it at this moment in Hudson Bay, for example, and the Arctic Ocean and through the Mackenzie River because those are territories where there is no provincial government.

Of course, we grant subsidies—and this might be a precedent—to the maritime provinces for intratransportation, partly by truck. To a certain extent this might be comparable to what we do in the Newfoundland coastal service which is within the limits of a province and to which we grant some subsidies. We can look at it again. We knew that private enterprise could not make money on it and would abandon this kind of service. We can either have some sort of agreement with the B.C. government or we can do it in the same way we are doing it in Newfoundland and the maritimes.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Chairman, one of the things that should be pointed out at present is that, surprisingly enough, in the northern two-thirds of Vancouver Island, including the point from Nanaimo north, we have fewer transportation facilities than there are in the Yukon. The Yukon is considered to be a fairly remote territory which does not have some of the amenities of life that we are supposed to have in the southern part of Canada. But I think it is very interesting to point out that in the northern two-thirds of Vancouver Island, beside the fact that there is absolutely no rail transportation, we have no roads apart from logging roads at present and our airports there are fairly restricted. Therefore, we have a definite problem.

I would like to ask the minister a general question. In view of the fact that in my opinion this is a situation for which one can blame the federal, the provincial or the municipal government, would it not be appropriate, in view of the abysmal lack of transportation in our area, for a transport committee inquiry to be held regarding what we could do and what co-operation we could get from the various levels of government in order to make that area inhabitable? We have resources in that part of the Island, including copper and other minerals, and we have a tremendous forest industry in the area, but we are unable to keep people up there because of the isolation and lack of means of communication such as railroads, radio and television.

[Mr. Anderson.]

To be quite honest, I will do anything in my power to bring this matter to the attention of the minister as well as the provincial government. In my opinion, this area has been neglected for many years. I will not go into the reasons it has been neglected, but let us start with the assumption that there is need for an inquiry into how we can bring that area, so full of potential, into production so we can increase the benefits from the area and keep families and communities together, instead of having people come up there for several months in order to earn enough money to go back to the large cities.

Could an inquiry be held so that at some time in the future we could consider providing various modes of transportation such as ferries, highways, air transportation, and so on, and so we could provide a service for the people in this area who have been crying for help from the various governments for many years?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): In order to answer this question properly I would have to reveal a part of the new policy which we are designing. One of the points that we have studied in depth is the accessibility of certain communities because, of course, Canada is not the same everywhere, as the hon. member knows. Southern Ontario is different from northern Ontario which, again, is different from the Northwest Territories or the lower St. Lawrence. We will have to find formulas so that all these people can feel they are Canadians and have means of communicating with the main centres of Canada. This is something we are looking into.

We were speaking about subsidies a few minutes ago. Let me state that so far as British Columbia is concerned, right now we are giving over $700,000 to Vancouver and the northern ports, and for the service on the west coast of Vancouver Island—this is inside the province—we pay more than $168,000 through the CTC. So we are already doing something in this area. The problem which the hon. member raised, however, is a practical one of the accessibility of isolated communities. We have this problem not only on Vancouver Island but in many places in the north. Almost the whole of the northern portions of the provinces are in the same situation: they can hardly communicate with the south. The problem is one of isolation.

An hon. Member: This is not the time to brag about it.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): This is a problem to which we will pay much attention.

Mr. Anderson: I can understand that the problem occurs in the northern parts of our Canadian provinces, but I think it should be brought to the attention of the minister that we run into a special problem: this area is not even in the north, in the geographical sense. The problem is merely in the fact that we have mountains, fiords and inlets which tend to break up the communication links that we could have there. The difficulty of the problem lies not only in the inaccessibility of certain communities but in the cost of putting in services, which is bound to be very high.

The only redeeming feature—and one has to be practical in looking at these things—is the fact that there is tremendous potential in the area in respect of lumber, fishing and mining. This is a vicious circle, because population is needed there before the services can be provided. However, in order to get the people there, we need services to begin with. We seem to have been going around in circles for many years.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Chairman, I hope to have the opportunity to discuss for a few moments with the minister two or three topics related to Air Canada, and I shall do everything I can to avoid impinging on any areas of the inquiry being conducted by Mr. Justice Estey. However, I would like to say to the minister that I had the opportunity to attend the hearings briefly, and I can assure him that he can be most satisfied and proud of the way in which the hearings are being carried out. Certainly, I was impressed with the way in which the hearings are conducted, the calibre of counsel, and all other procedures.

Perhaps at the end of my brief remarks the minister will deal with the points I have raised. First, I would like to ask him to what extent he has been kept informed, and to what extent he feels it is proper for him to be kept informed on an ongoing basis of the management and policy decisions of Air Canada. Does he receive, for example, from time to time, regular reports from the chairman and chief executive officer and copies of the minutes of meetings of the executive committee of Air Canada? Consequently, does he make some input himself into certain basic policy decisions of our national air carrier?

I would also like to discuss briefly the proposed reorganization of Air Canada's southern and United States region where it is contemplated that the southern region, comprised of some sovereign countries in the Caribbean, will be amalgamated with the United States region and the office of the United States region, which is now in Los Angeles, moved to 600 Madison Avenue, New York, with a target date as I understand it of approximately August 1 this year. I suggest that this, in effect, makes southern locations located in the central regions since 1971 part of the United States region which will be called the United States and southern region.

Without going into the matter in great detail, I wonder if the Minister could say whether he is aware of the implications of what is being done, and is he aware that reports and submissions have been made by officials of the Department of External Affairs to executives of Air Canada conveying opposition felt by some Caribbean countries at being lumped in with the United States? I am informed that these nations feel a greater affinity toward Canada than the United States, and that there is a feeling special relationships could be lost if they must be considered as part of the United States rather than having their own special relationship with Air Canada, our national air carrier.

Before the minister answers I would like to suggest, also, that besides this possibly being counterproductive as far as efforts by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Department of External Affairs are concerned with respect to their aims in the Caribbean area in extending Canada's good offices and sphere of influence, there is also the case of businessmen in what is now the southern region having to change their procedures in dealing directly with Canada, since I suggest that if the region is amalgamated according to the proposed plan, businessmen may have to obtain a rate to Canada through the New York office rather than dealing directly with a Canadian centre. This could be objectionable, and although I am not suggesting to the minister that this proposed reorganization is necessarily bad, I wonder if he is aware of all the various consequences of it and whether it could be a regressive step, taking into account the whole picture. I hope the minister will carefully consider this question and deal with it, if not today then quite soon.

Another topic I would like to discuss is related to remarks made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre about labour-management relations. I have enormous respect for the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and I would also like to go on record as saying that it is not my purpose, and I am sure it is not the purpose of any member, to denigrate, hurt or undermine Air Canada but to try to improve this great institution of which we are all proud. However, I am wondering about the cost factors and some of the problems of Canada's image involved in the strike in Paris. There was also a problem in New York, as the minister knows, with the IAM people walking out a few days ago. It seems to me that the contracting out procedures Air Canada is taking might merit some personal review by the minister.

I would also like to know if we could have some statistics on the cost of this Paris strike because, as I understand it, the regular Air Canada fare from Toronto to Paris is $328. Because of the strike in Paris, it is necessary to take passengers from Toronto to London, England. That fare, at $315, is somewhat cheaper, but to carry on to Paris there is an additional sector fare of approximately $57. The airline, of course, is responsible and must absorb the cost of approximately $44 because it is an involuntary re-routing, using airline parlance.

It has also come to my attention that some passengers who would have boarded in Montreal for Paris must be taken to Toronto. The fare is another $37 for these passengers. So all in all, I suggest that considerable financial losses are taking place because of this contingency with which our airline must cope. The image of Air Canada in France must be considered. There are certain French laws, as the minister well knows, which have to be taken into consideration in determining the future of these employees of Air Canada whose services are apparently no longer needed.

In concluding my remarks, I would like to say sincerely to the minister that, being on the opposition side, it is most difficult for us and for me to obtain the type of hard, accurate information which is necessary to suggest changes or investigations. In the past, I have tried to be reasonably accurate with information I have given. I would now like to bring to the attention of the minister a situation which may exist—this is perhaps one of the most interesting parts, at least for me—where I have reason to think it would be a good idea if he would check to see what the relationship is regarding certain management consultant firms or personnel placement firms which deal with Air Canada, and supply or refer executives to this company.

As I understand it, it is the practice of the trade—at least, it has taken place in the past—that there is a fairly generous finder's fee involved when a personnel placement agency supplies an executive to Air Canada say at a salary of $40,000 per year. If the executive stays with the company for over six months, Air Canada is obligated to pay to the personnel placement agency half of the executive's salary for the first year, as a finder's fee, which, on the basis of the example of $40,000, would amount to $20,000.

I have reason to believe that a situation exists where in at least one case, and perhaps in others, a man who was vice-president and general manager of one of these finding bureaux, if I may use that term, arranged to have himself placed with Air Canada and worked there long enough that the firm which placed him qualified for the finder's fee, which was quite substantial because he was a fairly highly paid executive. During this time, the unusual part of the arrangement may well have been that he perhaps never really divested himself of his former interest and former position with the agency where he used to work which placed executives with Air Canada. If this type of situation does exist, it seems, to my comparatively untutored reasoning, that there could be a problem. I do not know how widespread it is. I have only heard of this particular instance.

There is another side to this situation which may be even more unusual than the one I have stated, and this is that one of the vice-presidents of Air Canada has a direct or indirect relationship with this management consultant firm. If that is the case, the minister can see the unusual problem involved. If, and I emphasize "if", this happens to be the case, I feel that the minister should be concerned. In checking into the relationships between management consulting firms of this type and Air Canada, perhaps the minister would begin by looking to see if that possibility exists with regard to the firm of John Hold Stethem-Claude Gareau Limited, of Montreal. There also is an Ontario wing of the company. If there is any substance to this, perhaps in the course of a few days the minister might make a report. If he requires more background information, I would certainly supply it to any of his officials.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, I can be more precise with regard to that relationship later on. Canadian National is the owner of Air Canada. Canadian National has representatives on the board, and so have we. What strikes me in the relationship between the federal government and its Crown corporation is that it is not the same type of relationship as exists with any of the other Crown corporations. It depends, I presume, on the minister or the government in power at any given time. I remember that Mr. C. D. Howe, who was not a socialist, created four or five Crown corporations and probably depended upon—

• (1630)

Mr. Benjamin: Where is he, now that we need him?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): We have a situation that is difficult to understand. For instance, the president of Northern Transportation Company is a member of Eldorado mines which is a Crown corporation. As president of the Northern Transportation Co. Ltd. he reports to me, while Eldorado mines reports to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. This is the way it was set up, and perhaps some day we can correct this.

We receive the minutes of the meetings of the board of directors of Air Canada—not of the executive committee but the reports of the board of directors. That is outside the control of the government; that is, the control that the government can exercise over the budget. Of course, Air Canada is more dependent on the CNR than it is on us. These are the things we have been looking into, and in future we will probably have a more normal kind of relationship.

As far as the vice-president who is involved in a placement is concerned, and whether there is a conflict of interest, I will make inquiries in the department and get the answer on that. Personally, I was not aware of that and I will be happy to look into it and give an answer before tomorrow night.

Mr. Francis: Madam Chairman, I want to deal with some of the matters touched on by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre concerning the programs of the government in aid to public transit in some of the larger urban areas. The question was put to the minister with regard to certain cities, and I should like to put the question in regard to the national capital region. It may be that I am putting the question to the wrong minister and, if so, I am sure I will be set straight.

I should like to know what program there is for the development of plans for other forms of mass transit in the national capital region, in the hope that the federal government might be able to take more initiative in this particular area for which it has more responsibility than it has in many other urban areas in Canada. I hope it will be possible for the federal government to do certain things in the national capital region that will be by way of demonstration projects to other urban communities across Canada to illustrate what is it possible to do in the way of innovation and things that are new. In this connection, I should like to know what measures the department is taking by way of encouragement in basic research in urban transit.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): The city of Ottawa is on the same footing as all the other important cities in Canada. I do not have special responsibility as far as the national capital region is concerned. The Minister of State for Urban Affairs is in charge of the National Capital Commission, and I know that plans have been discussed by the city, the province of Quebec and the NCC. The Department of Transport is not involved at this stage but might be later, as the province of Ontario might also become involved. I know they are working on all kinds of projects, but unfortunately I cannot enlighten my colleague about what is being done at this moment.

Mr. Francis: I appreciate the answer of the minister. I do not wish to press him on a matter which is not his responsibility, but I am interested in what he has to say as a senior member of cabinet and one who is experienced and knowledgeable in these matters. I wonder if one element that might bring forward something of special interest would be the money that the government is saving now in the national capital from the charges that are being made for parking facilities, which I support. There is a saving of perhaps $5 million a year to the government in this respect. I hope that the net effect will be to encourage the government to look to other measures that might assist because there is such a saving to it, in discouraging people from using private cars and to look with favour at alternative methods of getting to and from their employment.

In view of the special savings accruing to the government as a result of these policies, I hope the minister will confer with his colleagues to consider whether additional measures to encourage public transit can be undertaken.

Mr. Jarvis: Madam Chairman, I wonder if I might continue with the unhappy saga of passenger rail service in southwestern Ontario, a matter with which the minister is closely concerned and which has been raised repeatedly in this House since March or April, 1970. In order that the minister not be unnecessarily confused by other matters, such as urban transit around the city of Toronto, perhaps I should trace the history of the service, or lack of it, since 1970. In that year the CTC held public hearings as a result of a CNR application to discontinue certain trains. Permission for discontinuance of 400 miles of passenger service was given in November, 1970, in spite of a mountain of evidence of the necessity for the service.

During 1971, there was considerable debate in this House and considerable public uproar about the discontinuance of service. In the spring of 1972, the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications was charged with the responsibility of holding hearings throughout southwestern Ontario to determine the adequacy of passenger rail service. The committee visited London, Chatham, Stratford and Walkerton in the spring of 1972. The committee's report was published in June, 1972, and included a unanimous recommendation that the passenger service eliminated on November 1, 1970, be immediately reinstated.

In the twenty-ninth parliament a series of questions were asked, starting in April, 1973. There were motions, debates, petitions and groups which came to Ottawa. I remember that in the winter of 1972 or early spring of 1973 the warden of one of the counties affected went back to his locality and was reported in the Guelph Mercury of June 15, 1973, as saying:

> Our brief was very well received and Mr. Marchand appeared to react in a most favourable way to our presentation. I believe I can say that after our talks I am optimistic about the future of our area and provision of proper transportation for its residents.

That response was typical of the people who came to Ottawa and who talked to the minister, his parliamentary secretary or departmental officials. They always left Ottawa feeling optimistic. In mid-1973 the minister started talking about the CTC study and tri-level discussions, and emphasized the need to consult local people. In September, 1973, he agreed to release the CTC study around the first or second week of October. Nothing happened, Mr. Chairman. On November 20, 1973, Mr. Benson appeared in the standing committee along with the minister and said that the report might be ready by the end of November. He also mentioned a survey that was being taken by the CTC of some 12 families in the area affected.

On January 7, 1974, in reply to a question which I put to him in the House, the minister said that he had received the CTC report, it had to be distributed to all interested parties and that it was to be studied soon at a tri-level conference. I believe that everyone took tri-level to mean federal, provincial and municipal. On January 8, the next day, it was determined that the report had not been made available to members of parliament, provincial representatives, municipal officers and the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. On January 9, 1974, we were still waiting for the third portion of the report consisting of the survey, Gallup poll or whatever one may call it.

Finally, in 1974, parts I and II were tabled. Part III, received by the minister well over one year ago, has never been tabled despite requests to that effect. During 1974, the CNR continued to dispose of its railway stations in southwestern Ontario and continues to do so to this day. In October, 1974, the minister stated that the matter was still under study with Ontario and there was no further reference to tri-level conferences or consultations with municipal officials or others directly affected by this loss of service. On October 23, 1974, during debate on the Treasury Board estimates, an hon. member read the following portion of a letter dated October 9 and written by the minister's research assistant, as reworded on page 683 of Hansard:

> Last year, the CTC's research branch carried out a thorough study of transportation services in the area and came to the conclusion that rail passenger services were not supportable by the population and that the preferred method of travel would be an improved rationalized bus service, a possible link to the existing main line passenger trains between London and Toronto.

That brings us up to date. May I now ask the minister a number of questions? First, has a tri-level conference ever been convened, as promised by the minister on January 7, 1974?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Madam Chairman, we held a tri-level conference in Toronto at which the urban community was represented by Mr. Rhodes, a member of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario. There were other meetings in Ottawa, on this matter, with the provincial minister responsible for roads. The Minister of State for Urban Affairs is trying to institute the tri-level conference system right across Canada. This is a long process as some provinces are reluctant to include municipalities in an organization which includes provincial and federal governments. There are some difficulties of adjustment. We have met, probably four of five times with the government of Ontario in an attempt to resolve some problems which have existed since 1970 or 1972.

Mr. Jarvis: Madam Chairman, may I ask the minister why the third part of the CTC study, referred to as the survey, Gallup poll or what have you, has never been made available to members of parliament, provincial representatives or municipal officials? Why has the minister refused, to date, to table that report? If he is not refusing, will he tell us when he intends to table it?

Mr. Nielsen: He knows nothing about it; he is conferring with his officials.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Please excuse me, Madam Chairman; I am looking for the report as well.

Mr. Nielsen: The CTC would not even give it to the minister.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Perhaps it has been lost somewhere in the mail.

Mr. Baldwin: Move for the production of papers.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Madam Chairman, before tabling the report we must have agreement of the government of Ontario. After we obtain that agreement we can table the report and make known the basis on which we reached agreement.

Mr. Jarvis: Madam Chairman, may I ask another question arising from that answer? Has the government of Ontario not completely repudiated the efficacy of that report and suggested that it is totally unsatisfactory? It was not satisfied with the questions asked, with those to whom questions were directed or with the responses demanded by the nature of the questions. In other words, has not the province of Ontario said to the Department of Transport, "This report is completely unacceptable"?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Madam Chairman, I am told the province does not like the report. We are still working on the problems which must be solved in southwestern Ontario. Of course, if the province does not accept the report and does not accept our efforts at co-operation, we will not table the report: what would be the purpose?

Mr. Jarvis: Madam Chairman, does the minister consider it acceptable for his department to operate on the basis of reports prepared by the CTC, when the CTC ordered the discontinuance of services in the first place? In other words, is the report of a body which is really sitting in judgment on its own decisions acceptable as a guide for future policy decisions the minister might make?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Madam Chairman, I suggest that the hon. member should read the speech I made in the House on a previous occasion. Do we want to change the law? The CTC is given wide powers, and I do not know how many inquiries the CTC is making at one time. They have the authority to do this, and most of the time they are not even under the obligation of communicating the results to me. That is the way matters stand, and this was done with the acceptance of this House: many of us were here when we passed that law.

I do not blame anybody. We thought we were setting up a regulatory body which would prove useful. I think it is useful to have this regulatory body. The question is, can we take away from government the responsibility in this field? All I can say at present is this: it is just too bad, but they did not send me the report. They decided to hold an inquiry, but I did not ask for one. This is the way matters stand. If we want to change that state of affairs, we will have to make some suggestions to the House.

[Translation]

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. minister, but according to the agreement made today, the time allotted to him has now expired.

[English]

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Chairman, may I direct several questions to the minister. Since the holding of the western economic opportunities conference in Calgary, a number of policy thrusts have been announced and agreed upon by the federal government, in particular the Ministry of Transport, and provinces of Canada, particularly western Canada. I wish to ask the minister when the government intends to implement the announcements made by the Prime Minister, the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Justice in last year's election campaign. Specifically, I am referring to the minister's commitment to establish a passenger train corporation. What has happened to that corporation? When does the government intend to establish it? Also, has money been set aside in the present estimates for the corporation?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Madam Chairman, during the election campaign we said that if the passenger train system were not improved we would create a new corporation that would be given responsibility for operating passenger trains in Canada. The first thing I did after the election was to ask Mr. Sinclair and Mr. MacMillan to come to my office: I asked, "Are you interested in operating passenger trains, because you are losing money?" They both said they were very keenly interested in operating passenger trains.

● (1650)

Mr. Baldwin: If the price was right.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Yes, that is what they told me. I asked what they intend to do about it. There is something new since then. We do not intend to stop there. We now have a turbo train which operates between Montreal and Toronto and another between Ottawa and Montreal. CP is ready to start the LRC train. They want to operate this between Ottawa and Montreal, but we are not sure that is the best thing to do. Our agency in Montreal, the Transportation Development Agency, is working on this aspect of the problem.

If we cannot get a satisfactory decision from the railways, we will create this corporation. This has not been put aside. It is a right that we reserve and which will be exercised if the railways keep this attitude of not operating their services in the field of passenger trains, preferring to use old cars rather than renewing their rolling stock.

Mr. Benjamin: Other than the turbo train and the LRC experiment, neither railroad has placed any orders for new equipment. They have not extended any money to prove their so-called interest in passenger train service. Does the minister take that as any kind of sign that he should now move on a publicly-owned passenger train service?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Madam Chairman, I do not think that would be reasonable. We want to have a new, progressive policy in that field. We want the railways to follow this policy. However, it is difficult to ask them to follow a policy which is not yet known. This is why it is urgent that there be this policy. It must be approved by cabinet and the House. If the railways then do not want to do that, it will be just too bad; we will do it ourselves.

Mr. Benjamin: The minister has had 12 months to say that to them. I will now refer to another specific item in the Liberal Party's election program commitment—a freight car leasing corporation. Aside from the hopper cars that we all know about, since World War 11 the railroads have been short of freight cars, refrigerator cars, stock cars and gondola cars: there is no denying that. Is there anything about this in the estimates? What is the government policy to carry out a commitment they made in June and July last year with regard to a freight car leasing corporation?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Madam Chairman, the hon. member's questions are all related to the policy on which we have been working and which we want to announce. After that, the hon. member will be justified in saying we have forgotten a part of what we had intended to do. Of course, the situation this year is not the same as last year when we had a shortage of not only hopper cars but lumber cars and even box cars. There has been no such shortage this year. Of course, the economic situation is different. We have instituted a monitoring system which has helped us to a certain extent in attaining better productivity from our cars. The hon. member's question concerns something which is supposed to be integrated in the general policy we are about to produce.

Mr. Benjamin: I will move to another specific item in the commitments made by the government in June and July of last year and repeated in the communiqué issued on February 24 as a result of the conference in Calgary between the minister and his counterparts in the western provinces. It has to do with the freight rate structure. The minister and his counterparts said the principles on which they were going to act, led by the Minister of Transport, included rate groupings, a reduction of horizontal increases, maximum rate restrictions and the anomalies in the long haul-short haul of raw and finished products.

These anomalies have been compounded twice in the past six months. As a result of the public statements made by the presidents of both railroads, I understand they will be compounded. I remind the minister that the spread between shipping live cattle and dressed beef from Saskatoon to Montreal, Ottawa or Toronto, used to be 91 cents a hundredweight more for dressed beef than live cattle: it now costs $1.17 more a hundredweight. Since January 1, the spread has increased by 26 cents a hundredweight. That flies in the face of the communiqué of February 24 with regard to anomalies between raw and finished products. The packing industry in western Canada is in great difficulty.

The minister has allowed, in violation of the February 24 communiqué, a horizontal increase. That is violation number one of four items in the communiqué. Second, there is a violation of item number 4 in that communiqué with regard to the anomalies between raw and finished products. What is the minister going to do about that? What legislation does he have to give the authority? Are we going to get it? What is in the estimates concerning the commitments that were made by the Liberal Party during the election compaign and the February 24 communiqué?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Madam Chairman, we never said, and never will say, unless the policy of this government changes, that there will not be increases in rates in Canada. The western ministers and I spoke about rate grouping and horizontal increases; that is true. We also talked about a few other matters. We will stick to the policy we agreed to with the western ministers. New across the board increases which concern mainly what are called the class rates, and dont't forget this is only 4 per cent of the revenues of the railways—

Mr. Benjamin: That has nothing to do with it.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): It has something to do with it. If we look at the items and how they are broken down, we see all the categories with all rates increased, and it is not an across the board increase. The hon. member knows what an across the board increase is. Anyone connected with the labour movement knows that it means the same amount for everyone. The railways have not done that. Even if all the rates have been touched, the increases have still been selective. Therefore, we need to have the same definition for what across the board means and what actually happened. As far as the rest is concerned, we are still working with the western ministers so that the policy that was announced is implemented.

● (1700)

Mr. Benjamin: There is another item which has been hanging fire for four years or so. If the cabinet has made a decision on it lately, I regret my ignorance. I refer to the rates on rapeseed oil and rapeseed products. The western provinces appealed a decision of the Canadian Transport Commission in March of 1974. Has the cabinet made a decision yet and, if so, what was the nature of that decision? This matter goes back to a legal dispute between the shippers and the railways, the provinces supporting the producers and shippers. An appeal was made to the cabinet. What happened?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): We are waiting for a supplementary report from the CTC and we have asked that this report should be made available as soon as possible. The question of rapeseed rates is a very complicated one because it is related, to a certain extent, to the Crowsnest pass rate system. We have to judge what the impact is likely to be and, of course, we take all the time we need in order to protect the farmers of the west. We are expecting this report, but I can tell the hon. member personally that this is one of the most complicated problems which has ever come to my attention in the Ministry of Transport.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. The time allotted to the hon. member has expired. Before recognizing the hon. member for Hastings, I should like to inform the committee of the questions to be raised tonight at the time of the adjournment. They are as follows: the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark)—Health—Asbestos levels in Lake Superior; the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall)—Fisheries—Exclusion of some areas of Newfoundland from compensation program; the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale)—Air Transport—Service for southwestern Manitoba and southeastern Saskatchewan.

Mr. Ellis: Madam Chairman, there are so many questions which could be asked during the time available for questioning the minister that it baffles the mind, especially as so few answers are apt to be given; it has been extremely difficult to get information from the minister during the year. During the first session of this parliament some 346 questions were directed to the hon. gentleman or, in his absence, to the parliamentary secretary or, once in a while, to the acting minister of transport. This figure does not include the number of questions on the order paper or questions about transport directed to other ministers from time to time. Of those 346 questions, about one-third concerned railways—half of those on freight rates—and approximately one-third related to air transport. A large number of the latter concerned Air Canada; and there were, of course, a large number of questions lately on the popular subject of dredging.

However, we are not receiving answers to these questions. I have directed a good many questions to the minister, but most of the time we get from him a statement that the subject is under study, that he will inquire into it. In reply to one question which I directed to the hon. gentleman some time ago, I got the one word, "Soon". That was about a month and a half ago and I have received no further information since then.

This being a committee of supply, questions ought rightfully to be addressed, I suppose, to the increase which has taken place in the department's budget. My hon. friend from Lisgar asked a number of questions with regard to public relations. I recall asking similar questions in the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications and these, in turn, prompted me to make further inquiries. I will read through some of the questions and then give the minister a chance to answer them.

The increase in the cost and size of the department has, frankly, shocked me even against the current background of inflation. For example, the budget for the headquarters of this department has increased in three years by 108 per cent. Madam Chairman, this bears no relation to any increase in costs that we have seen or any indices which are available to us, which leads me to believe that these increases are actually leading inflation, not following it, and that they are the root cause of inflation in many areas.

I recall being involved in a discussion regarding one specific area of marine transportation. I might say I admire the minister's frank answers to certain questions even when such answers might obviously be somewhat embarrassing. I asked a question concerning marine transportation and I remarked there had been a 32 per cent increase authorized in man hours during 1975. I was curious how all these people could be employed—whether they were being used for cannon fodder or something like that. We were given to understand that studies were going on concerning two different types of ice-breakers. The minister himself brought out the fact that the department was actually engaged in studies concerning three different types of ice-breakers. I admire his frankness, but surely it would be possible to carry out one study directed at three types or ice-breakers rather than three studies of ice-breakers.

I am not being critical of individuals, but one day I did a rough calculation of the number of staff on hand during the committee hearings and found they outnumbered the members supporting the government on the committee, they outnumbered the members of the opposition, they outnumbered the spectators and they outnumbered the committee staff. My estimate was that it would cost between $10,000 and $15,000 to pay the salaries of the staff present during the hearings of that one committee. One of my hon. friend points out that they almost outnumber us in the chamber this afternoon. It is gratifying to see them here, in a sense, but my point is that with so many members of the staff available we should be able to get answers to some of the questions we ask.

In reply to one of the questions we asked in connection with transportation safety, the answer was given us in a document prepared by the Canadian Transport Commission. I know the minister does not feel that this commission comes under his authority, but reference was made in that reply to setting out a conceptual model for defining the socially optimal level of safety. Madam Chairman, what in heaven's name is a conceptual model for defining the socially optimal of safety? As I have said before in this chamber, I am just a huckleberry from Hastings county. But does the minister really know what that is? Apparently it is a tool. It says here it is an important tool. I don't know what kind of tool it is, but I get a little upset about the use of that kind of language, considering that a number of people we have here should be able to speak English.

With the range of questions open to us, I know I could go on for two hours without running out of questions. However, I want to put a few specific questions to the minister, in the time I have left, regarding the amount spent on consultants by his department. Again I hark back to the very large staff the department has. I remember at one time I facetiously asked the deputy minister whether he had brought the whole department with him, but I was assured that he had brought only a very small portion along. I have had individual dealings with members of the staff and there is no question that they have some very talented people. But with this wealth of talent, why do we make extensive use of consultants?

I should like to ask the minister to be good enough to give me an answer in respect to some of these examples. The first is a firm from New York city, John J. McMullen Associates, on whom we spent $46,000 to design a flame stabilization system for a railcar carrier. Another firm, R. L. Banks and Associates, of Washington, D.C., received a contract for $260,000 to study railway pricing methods and the effect that such methods have upon national and regional economics in Canada. Then a firm called Bruce Mallen and Associates—I like this example particularly—received a contract for $27,500 to undertake up to 700 interviews relating to motivational aspects of the private industry in Canada and provide information in tabulated form. Once again, Madam Chairman, why would we spend $27,000 to find out what any business student could find out in a very short time, and probably knows anyway? Another firm, Hedlin Menzier and Associates, received a contract for $153,200 to provide assistance in the development of an initial exploratory forecast for transportation in Canada and to assist in a final report. Once again, this poor huckleberry from Hastings county has trouble understanding why we are spending $153,000 on this.

I see my time has just about run out, so perhaps we could have some idea from the minister why it is we spend hundreds of thousands—yes, millions of dollars hiring consultants when we obviously have a very talented staff at our disposal.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Madam Chairman, the hon. gentleman wants to know why some of the answers are not satisfactory. I suggest he has only to read the questions that he just asked a few minutes ago. I do not know how any intelligent man can intelligently answer such questions. He simply cites the figures without disclosing what is behind the figures, what is behind the research, whether it is important or not. Because we speak about concepts and conceptual frameworks or schemes, he finds it difficult. I do not find it very difficult; it is easy. Anyway, I will copy the questions he has asked and I will send them to all the people in my riding so they can see what kind of questions are put to the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Nielsen: You will probably get some answers, too.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I will double my majority.

Mr. Ellis: On a question of privilege, what does the minister think I am going to do with some of the answers he has given me? I am going to send those to the people in my riding.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): The first question had to do with the increase in overhead of 108 per cent, which is quite an amount. I must repeat what I have already said; if the hon. member had had a pencil at the time he would not have needed to ask the question. Some 45 per cent of this increase is for the Cornwall institute, and this is a 20 per cent increase in man-years. That adds up to 65 per cent. As for the rest, I will find out and give him the details, but it is something that can be easily answered. There is no scandal. It is the kind of increase we meet almost everywhere, in all institutions and in all departments, and even in private enterprise.

As for contracts that are awarded outside the government, a case can be made on that, too, but not in the way the hon. member made it. For example, should we have a permanent staff of engineers to build airports, or should this be done under contract by outside engineers? Should we have a group of architects that are civil servants, and should we tell them to design all buildings for the government, or should this work be done under contract by outside architects? We do have, of course, a corps of engineers and a corps of architects who exercise control and help us in our work, but the best way is to get some outside engineers on many occasions. Take an airport like Pickering or Mirabel; we do not build those every day.

Mr. Oberle: That is not what the hon. member asked you.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): He simply referred to contracts without defining anything.

Mr. Oberle: He told you what the contracts were for.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): As for professional and special services, these totalled $85 million for the department, $53 million for the government and $32 million for outside firms. I agree we can discuss the philosophy of this, but not the fact that specific contracts were awarded.

[Translation]

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. minister, but his time has now expired.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Chairman, I have a few questions I wish to put to the hon. minister.

First, I should like to ask him a question concerning an inquiry he ordered to study the causes of losses of lives and fishing vessels on the Pacific Coast. He ordered that inquiry recently, and I should like to ask him whether he has yet received the report and whether he intends to include in the legislation the recommendations contained in the report.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Madam Chairman, we have received the preliminary report, the report on the first inquiry on the above-mentioned causes; this report, as such, is not for publication for the obvious reason that several of the witnesses who appeared before our own investigators would refuse to do so if they knew that their names would be used publicly. Whether you like it or not, that is the way it is. Usually, in such circumstances a formal inquiry is held afterwards and is used as basic documentary evidence.

In this case, the preliminary report is complete enough to allow us to readily suppress names and to submit a substantial summary so that members of parliament are made aware of what happened. As soon as I can have the report translated into French, it will be tabled in the House.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I wish to thank the minister for his clarifications on that subject.

● (1720)

[English]

I should like to refer to another matter that relates to confused or combined jurisdictions as between the Department of Transport and the Department of the Environment. This occurred at a time when the minister's department was responsible for certain shore rights and concluded an agreement with the developer of a marina at West Bay, near Esquimalt. I have had correspondence with the minister, and the confusion is being compounded. I have been assured by the minister that everything is in order and that the developer has fulfilled the terms of the contract and there have been no written complaints. I should first of all like to read into the record a portion of the terms of the contract completed between the department and the developer. It states:

> That the lessee shall not . . . do, suffer or permit to be done, any act or thing in or upon the said land which shall or may be, or might become an annoyance, nuisance or disturbance to the occupiers of any lands or premises adjoining or in the vicinity of the said land—

There have been letters from people who are living in an area adjoining this West Bay marina which was developed when the Department of Transport had the responsibility. People living in areas overlooking this marina have written me and I have sent copies of each of those letters to the Ministry of Transport. To suggest in writing to me that there have been no written complaints is not right. There were no written complaints to the municipality, and that is the context in which the reply was made, but there have been written complaints and the minister has them on his file. If he does not, I will certainly provide them.

The municipality resisted these written complaints and suggested these people should write to their member of parliament or to the Ministry of Transport. I feel there has been an attempt at a run-around here, in two senses: firstly, there is the suggestion that the terms of this contract have been lived up to. That is not the case, and I do not think it is right or proper for the Minister of Transport to indicate to a member of parliament that the terms have in fact been fulfilled when they have not. Secondly, as a result of the transfer of responsibility from the Ministry to Transport to the Ministry of the Environment there has been an attempt to suggest it is no longer the business of the Minister of Transport but that it belongs to the Minister of the Environment. This is just not good enough. The government has signed the lease; the minister signed in the capacity of a minister of the Crown. He has bound the Crown and the other signatory to perform certain things. To suggest now that this lease is being fully fulfilled is something I will not accept. I am going to keep at this until I get a satisfactory answer. Is there any clarification the minister or his officials can give now in respect of this matter? If that is not the case, I have a number of other questions.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, I will have to refresh my memory on this matter. Let me remind the hon. member of two things. Marinas have never been under the jurisdiction of the Department of Transport, but always under the jurisdiction of the Department of Public Works. We do have what we refer to as the small craft harbours act which was operating under the jurisdiction of the Department of Transport but was transferred to the Department of the Environment. Perhaps this is what the hon. member is referring to. If he is referring to a marina, then we have never had jurisdiction. This jurisdiction was transferred to the Department of the Environment a year and a half or two years ago.

[Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich).]

I would ask the hon. gentleman through you, Mr. Chairman, whether he thinks I am the one that should be responsible, even if I signed the agreement, when that jurisdiction was transferred? The hon. member refers to an agreement that I do not remember. I will have to refresh my memory. If I signed that agreement, then the responsibility now lies with the Minister of the Environment. I do not suggest the government has been liberated from its responsibilities, but if there are some objections, they belong to the Minister of the Environment and not to the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I thank the minister for that clarification and I point out that he signed the agreement in the name of Her Majesty, in right of the Minister of Transport, on April 26, 1973. The transfer of jurisdiction was subsequent to that but the binding aspect on the Crown is the same. What I object to is the issuance of erroneous information simply because the matter is now in the hands of another department. There are facilities for interdepartmental consultation.

There is another matter of interdepartmental relations to which I should like to refer. This is in relation to the loss of four tank cars filled with chlorine in the Strait of Malaspina. This happened about six weeks ago. The Minister of the Environment and the Minister of Transport have been saying different things about this. While I received some assurance the other day in committee, I should like to know whether the Minister of Transport will carry out the necessary salvage operations or make the facilities available to the company which claims to have found the cars containing this highly polluting material. Perhaps the minister would answer my questions.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I have just received this information, and have not been trying to withhold it. I am told that a search has been made and the chlorine rail cars have been found in deep water. I am informed that they intend to use a manned submersible in order to inspect the site to determine what can be done.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Again, I think these clarifications are worth having on the record. I am delighted we have got that far. We have to go a step further. We must get these chlorine tank cars out of the water. I understand there are facilities the Department of Transport can make available to a private contractor to undertake the salvage operation so that this pollutant will no longer be of danger to the community.

I should like to refer to earlier questions I raised in the House about safety measures for small craft, particularly commercial craft including tugs and fishing boats. Last October there was a question raised about the requirement of detector buoys or devices installed on tugs. I understand that regulations to that end were drawn up and ready for implementation, but there was some hesitation on the part of tugboat owners because of cost. I should just like to know where we are on this matter now because, for example, this would have saved a great deal of time in the search for the fishing vessels which were lost at sea. Has there been some device on which aircraft or other vessels could home? This might even have saved some lives. So far as I know, 14 lives were lost on that particular occasion in a very short time, a matter of ten days, and some 10 or 11 vessels. The installation of such safety devices on board commercial vessels before they put to sea would assist enormously in finding them in time to save lives and, of course, the vessels and their contents. Are we any further ahead with these regulations?

● (1730)

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Madam Chairman, I will answer in greater detail after the dinner recess, if I have the opportunity. However, I remember very well—and now I am speaking from memory—that it was impossible to install these devices even in small tugs because the devices were too heavy. I do not say that we cannot find a device for smaller craft. Perhaps we can and perhaps we should, and this is what we are looking into now.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Do I still have some time left, Madam Chairman? May I ask a couple more questions?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Yes, the hon. member has some time left.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): My next question relates to marine traffic control regulations. I believe there are some installations now being prepared or installed in Vancouver for remote monitoring of traffic coming in from the Pacific through the Strait of Juan de Fuca and up into the Straits of Georgia. There are LORAN or other similar types of radar installations along the coast so that incoming vessels may be followed. There are, presumably, shore to ship radio communications installed, and a general program for bringing in the ships in very much the same way as aircraft are brought in for night landings or through fog. In addition to the work being done by Canadian authorities, what consultations are there with Americans to combine their particular traffic operation with any operations on the Canadian side—a starboard-in starboard-out type of operation, for example?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The time allotted to the hon. member has now expired.

Mr. Fleming: Madam Chairman, I want to take the opportunity today to discuss a couple of areas in transportation that are of real concern to me. Earlier I heard one hon. member opposite, I believe from the Stratford area, discussing rail passenger traffic in southwest Ontario. That subject does not have a great deal of direct effect on my constituents but it is something about which I have some personal knowledge, having grown up and moved through different places within southwestern Ontario, and having relatives living in the area of the Bruce peninsula.

I am sure the minister does not have to be reminded of the unanimous agreement of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications in the 1968 to 1972 parliament that railway passenger transport should be put back into full operation in the general southwestern Ontario grid complex. I should simply like to encourage the minister, if I can, to give this the highest priority possible when he is considering the over-all issue of developing a general rail policy in Canada. I am sure the benefits of such a program would be overwhelming for the people of southwestern Ontario, and of other parts of the country, where there is density of population and where railway systems are not being put to their full use. I have the same sympathy for the development of efficient rail passenger systems from isolated communities of some population to more densely populated communities.

When you consider the cost and efficiency of rail traffic as against the passenger car—the railway car handling 40 to 60 people versus 30 or 40 automobiles for the same number of people—when you consider the fuel factor, the cost of road construction and the use of viable farm land for such construction, one realizes—and I am sure the minister and his officials agree—that railways can play a vital role in the transportation policy that I spoke about in the last election campaign, and which I look forward to helping to develop as a member of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications in this parliament.

In talking about the development of a rail grid in an over-all transportation policy I would like to suggest that another priority is the triangle formed of Ottawa, Montreal, and Toronto. It is vital. Often I hear from my friends in the west and in the east, and those who talk to me from the north, that attention is always focused on southern Ontario, Montreal, and Toronto. When I speak about the importance of a highspeed, efficient, rail system between these three cities—our two largest and most active commercial centres, as well as the nation's capital—I am not talking only of the benefit to the people who live within that densely populated triangle but also of benefits for the people from other parts of Canada who must do business with the government or with their counterparts in these cities. To them as well that kind of rapid communication between these three centres is vital.

It is not only passenger service for people within that area but also tourist traffic that would benefit from rapid communication so that people will be able to travel to our capital which has been developed, at the cost of so much Canadian taxpayers' money, into perhaps the most beautiful capital in the modern world. The Ottawa, Montreal, Toronto grid is vital to any national rail transport policy.

The second point I want to make is one to which I hope the minister will give serious consideration. I should like to spend a moment or two addressing myself to the issue of airports, and specifically to the problem we had with airports in the Toronto area. I think I have been one of the most outspoken people in favour of the development of the Pickering airport. I know that the minister and the government have taken a considerable amount of heat in finally arriving at that decision. I also have had the personal experience of meeting women who have to stay around the house in daytime and who suffer nervous breakdowns as a result of the tremendous noise pollution in the vicinity of the Toronto international airport. Coming from a very large riding with a population of 150,000 I can talk about 30,000 to 40,000 people living with noise levels beyond tolerance, so when I stand in support of the development of Pickering I think I stand in defence of my constituents and their right to a decent lifestyle in a proper environment.

You certainly cannot tell people in public housing who live along those flight paths, or the several thousands senior citizens who live in large complexes directly in line with the runways, that it is their fault and that they should have known ahead of time about the disadvantages of living there. Nor could you say to the people who live in moderately priced homes in the vicinity of the airport and have lived there for 15 to 20 years that they should have been able to predict what technology would bring in the development of air traffic in Canada.

I am pleased that the government has taken this difficult decision and I believe that in the long run, if the government of Ontario can say no to the Spadina Expressway to protect people in the downtown core, to improve their health, and if the city of Toronto can stop the development of high rise business complexes in downtown Toronto for the protection of the environment, then our federal government is acting similarly to protect people who are not immensely wealthy but who have the right to a decent environment.

Having said that, I noted in my mail in the last week or two considerable concern about the announcement of plans for passenger terminal expansion at Toronto international airport. An assurance was given in 1968 when the minister of transport at that time said that there would be no new runway expansion, and no new expansion of existing plans at Toronto international. But he also said that did not mean they would not go ahead with the plans as they were then on the books; these would have to be proceeded with because of a projected increase in traffic, and there would have to be adequate passenger facilities. I have explained that to my constituents who have written to me, and I support the minister. I know he is living up to the word of the government of that day when he announces that there will be some expansion of Terminal 2.

As I see the expansion which has now been announced; it will still not be as great as that which was on the books in 1968 when the commitment was made. But having talked about people in my area having hope of relief some years down the road because of Pickering, and knowing that in Pickering, thank goodness, we will have learned from mistakes in planning and lack of foresight at all levels of government which could not foresee the development and rapid advance of air passenger traffic at Malton, I hope similar mistakes will not be made at Pickering.

Comparing the number of people who will be displaced at Pickering with the number of people in areas beyond noise tolerance in my area, the percentage at Pickering is minuscule indeed. Meanwhile the proper buffer zone can be put in and still leave far fewer people disrupted. And I suggest that in many cases people who live in that area come from other parts and have taken the opportunity to live in older homes and have advantages most Canadians do not have.

The argument about losing excellent farm land is nonsense, to my way of thinking. I know the area extremely well, and a great deal of that land is occupied by gentleman farmers or landed gentry, in the sense that they do not work the land. In some cases they do rent it to farmers, and more will be in use as farm land with the development of Pickering than at the present time.

It concerns me that in my area, with the expansion we have because of the new terminal facilities going in at Toronto international, and because we know Pickering, even in its most minor development, will not be operational for several years, my people will not only not gain immediate relief from the very real noise problem they have, but the noise will grow worse until Pickering is started. When Pickering brings them relief, they will be lucky if it rolls back to the current intolerable level.

I wonder therefore, if the minister is giving consideration to ordering the installation of noise suppressors on Canadian aircraft. I realize it is difficult with international carriers, but Canadian aircraft carry the majority of passengers in Canada. I wonder whether the department is considering forgiveable loans, say forgiveable loans according to the sizes of the fleets of the airlines involved, and whether it would even consider, as a priority, trying to modify noise levels on the worst offenders, which are the DC-8's, if I am not wrong.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Madam Chairman, I have a couple of points I would like to inquire about.

Mr. Fleming: Madam Chairman, on a point of order, have I used up all my time? If not, I wonder if the minister might respond to my questions.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Madam Chairman, I agree entirely that we should improve and exploit, much more than we have, the passenger train system. As far as the parliamentary committee is concerned, I hope that we will have the opportunity of discussing that, because there are many aspects. We have met several times with the government of Ontario to study which lines to develop. We have an agreement on the Richmond line, and we are about to reach an agreement on another line, which corresponds with the suggestions of the hon. member.

I agree entirely that we should use passenger trains much more than we have in the past. There is no doubt that there is a natural corridor where the bulk of the population in Canada resides, from Quebec city to Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto and Windsor. In this corridor I think there should be a very efficient passenger train service. I agree with the hon. member on that too. These are not the only places in Canada where trains are needed. Trains are needed in Vancouver, Hamilton, Calgary probably, Edmonton and Winnipeg. There are other places, but I think there should be good service where there is a concentration of population. This is something we will try to achieve.

With regard to the airport, I think that the hon. member is aware that if we are having so much trouble it is because we stuck to our word. The people of Malton were promised that Malton would not be expanded in terms of runways, but there is no doubt that we have to expand in terms of terminals. If runways ever have to be extended, they will be extended without increasing the noise level. It is not only the noise of an aircraft which is important, it is also the frequency of the noise. We have to take both elements into account. We must consider the number of planes landing and the noise produced by each aircraft. When Pickering is in operation there is no doubt that it will have an impact on Malton, unless by that time the number of flights has increased so much that the present situation at Malton recurs. We cannot of course foresee exactly what type of aircraft will be in the air in 1977 or 1978, but this is something about which we will be careful.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Madam Chairman, I have two points I wish to bring to the attention of the minister at this time. The first is that of railway crossing protection. I have always been interested in railway crossing protection, and I am sure all hon. members and the minister have always recognized its importance. Since we are now in a period of depression and unemployment, why could the government not start a concerted program, and an increased and enlarged program to instal railway crossing protection devices? In my riding alone we had two allocated for installation recently on CNR crossings, and there are two more crossings urgently requiring protection, one at the Forest Mills CPR crossing in Lennox and Addington county, Richmond township, and another at Glen Tay on the same line of the CPR in Bathurst township, Lanark county. I remind the minister that it would seem to be a good idea for us to press for more railway crossing signal devices.

My second point is a very unpleasant thing to bring up, but it is in regard to public safety, and I think it should be made known to the House and to the minister. I spoke to the minister some time ago about the Ernestown wreck last December 20 on the main line of the CNR at about 8.25 p.m. in the evening, of that day, where a westbound passenger train, No. 45, and an eastbound manifest freight, No. 318, were in a head-on collision. That collision took a total of four lives; two enginemen and a passenger lost their lives at the scene, and a fourth person died about a month later.

The blood of one of the engineers was analysed as having an alcohol content of .08. This was revealed as the result of an autopsy. This is the level of impairment recognized in highway traffic cases. In this age of increased use of all kinds of transportation, those who use the systems take it for granted that the person driving is sober, whether he be in charge of a train, bus, boat or aircraft.

● (1750)

The recommendations of the coroner's jury inquiring into the accident at Napanee are very important and I want to put them on the record for the guidance of the minister. I know he will press for these recommendations to be put into effect. The addendum to the verdict of the coroner's jury stated in part:

> Train 318 proceeded at a higher than recommended speed prior to the collision. The presence of alcoholic beverages found in the engine, and the presence of alcohol as determined by an autopsy, is a probable factor in the failure of Train 318 to stop at the designated signal.

This was no doubt the cause of the head-on collision. The jury made a number of recommendations, two of which I should like to put on the record. Recommendation No. 5 reads:

> To initiate a study immediately to determine the effectiveness of the General Rules of the Uniform Code of Operating Rules, the adequacy of the requirements of the rules and employee adherence thereto.

Probably the most important recommendation was No. 6 which reads:

> The railways should set up standard surveillance procedures to monitor the fitness of train employees reporting for duty.

That is the point I wanted to make this afternoon.

Recommendation No. 9 reads:

> All operating personnel should be given a more frequent medical examination which would include co-ordination tests.

That recommendation probably is not the result of the proof that alcohol had something to do with this accident. It is more or less a recommendation made in the interests of the general health of train crews.

I am sure the minister will appreciate the importance of recommendation No. 11 which reads:

> The conductor should meet with his train crew prior to boarding the train.

The conductor has always been the boss of the train, and that is still the rule. If the conductor met his crew before the train left I am sure he could see to it that the rules were adhered to and these recommendations carried out and observed as to sobriety of the crew.

That is all I wanted to mention and I would respectfully ask the minister to take cognizance of these things and to consult with the CTC and the railways to make sure these recommendations are implemented.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Madam Chairman, there is no doubt that we will get the report of the CTC on this accident. I agree entirely with the hon. member's comments on the coroner's report, although I am not sure about the effectiveness of the suggested meeting before the train leaves. I should like to discuss that and see if it is practicable. If the problem were not alcohol it might be drugs or something else, and the question is how we can control that. I really do not know. In this case it is referred to as being a probable cause of the accident, and it might happen sometimes on aircraft, which is even more dangerous. I think we should take all precautions we humanly can, but some of them are really useless. The only way is to fire the man and never let him drive a train again.

When we have the impartial inquiry suggested some people will have the almost exclusive duty of looking into the causes of accidents and their prevention. I think we can improve the system. I agree with the hon. member, and cannot put too much emphasis on what he has said.

Mr. Ritchie: Madam Chairman, I should like to ask the minister some questions about Air Canada. We know it is a troubled airline and there is an inquiry going on at the moment. My questions are not related directly to the inquiry but to criticism of Air Canada long before the inquiry was initiated.

Certain questions have been raised by newspaper columnists and I should like to take them up with the minister now. When dealing with Air Canada in recent months has the cabinet committee refused to accept Air Canada's budget for future purchases of aircraft? If so, did Mr. Pratte, Chairman of Air Canada, refuse to give an explanation when asked about the purchases?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Madam Chairman, we have not refused, we have agreed. I know that Air Canada cancelled ten or twelve aircraft that were on order, but they did that themselves.

The hon. member says that Air Canada is a troubled airline, and I take exception to that because it is not true.

Air Canada is a very good airline, one of the best. I believe that if the same kind of inquiry were made into other airlines we would find that Air Canada is better than most. We have not refused the budget of Air Canada because, if we had, it would not be flying today.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Deputy Chairman: When the committee rose at six o'clock the hon. member for Dauphin had the floor.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister a few more questions about Air Canada? It has been widely reported that Mr. Pratte and Mr. Baldwin have engaged in a series of running battles since 1968, or since assuming command positions. At the beginning, was not Mr. Pratte's function to plan policy and make long-range projections and was not Mr. Baldwin, as president, to run the airline? Am I correct in this? was this the general plan? I believe the appointment of Mr. Pratte was a new departure for Air Canada.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, so far as I remember the job of Mr. McGregor was split in two and we appointed a president and first vice president, or chairman of the board, I believe, exactly as we did with the CNR. The head of the railway company was Mr. MacMillan, whose job was split in two. Now Mr. Bandeen is president of operations of CNR and Mr. Taschereau is chairman of the board. Something similar was done with Air Canada.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, is the minister aware of any long-standing disagreement between those two top officials of Air Canada in the last five or six years?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, no, I am not aware of all the personal relationships in our Crown corporations, as I have six or seven under my jurisdiction. If I were to decide to inquire into the personal relationships of officers, it would take up all of my time.

Mr. Ritchie: It has been suggested that the appointment of Mr. Long has created difficulties in Air Canada, that he has been given little responsibility, and that all vice presidents have direct lines of communication to the chairman of the board. In other words, it is suggested that Mr. Pratte had assumed much greater authority than he should exercise, and that is one of the reasons why Air Canada has become involved in misadventures. Is the minister satisfied that the top management of Air Canada is satisfactory, and is he satisfied with the way Mr. Pratte has carried out his duties in Air Canada?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman knows that I cannot very well answer such a question. If he were to ask me if I am happy with the structure of Air Canada, the CNR, the seaway authority, the CTC, the Northern Transportation Co. Ltd. or the National Harbours Board, I would tell him that, generally speaking, I am not satisfied with the way Crown corporations are structured. There should be more uniformity in their makeup. I do not say they should all be exactly alike, because they do not all fill exactly the same functions. At present they are constituted in such different ways that I do not know if they are to report to me, to parliament, or to the department. They were established to fill different needs. For example, Polymer Corporation is quite different from the others. I think the makeup of some was determined largely by how Mr. C. D. Howe felt when setting them up.

Mr. Stanfield: Shame!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I tell you Air Canada is a good airline. Is there friction between the officers of the company? I do not know, but I presume so, because all my life I have been involved with organizations and I do not know of any, including the one of which we are members, which is a model for all organizations, in which there is no friction at all.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, it has been charged that Air Canada management below the top level has been subjected to what are known as reorgs. Apparently reorg has followed reorg, if I may use the company's vernacular, and the morale of long service employees at the middle level has been damaged. Does the minister feel that this charge is correct, and is it true that Air Canada executives below the top level have been subjected to an abnormal amount of interference, which has contributed to fear among employees?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, I have no yardstick with which to answer such questions intelligently. I know that some people like Mr. Pratte; others think he is not good. Some people told me Mr. MacMillan is a great man; others that he is not so good. Some people told me that Mr. Sinclair is tops; others that he is a bully. I cannot make any judgment of that kind.

Mr. Stanfield: What do people say about the minister?

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Pratte has suggested at various times that Air Canada does not compare favourably with other airlines because it flies too many short haul routes. Does the minister think the airline makes too many short haul flights, and does he plan longer hauls for the company's aircraft? Also, are tariffs to increase for short haul flights, in accordance with Mr. Pratte's suggestion?

● (2010)

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, we could have a very long discussion about how the long haul and short haul should be balanced. Because Air Canada is a Crown corporation owned by the state, it must do things that other companies do not do. For example, last year Air Canada lost about $1 million on the Montreal-Moscow route. As a state we feel we should have a link with Russia which is a very important country.

Air Canada is asked to provide certain services that we cannot ask private enterprise to provide. Therefore when you compare the financial statement of Air Canada with another company's which does not need to meet these obligations, that is unjust.

It is true that in the airline business long hauls are much more beneficial than short hauls. Some companies prefer only long hauls, leaving the short hauls to other companies. However, Air Canada has to fulfill both jobs because we need airline service between Ottawa, Montreal, Toronto, Calgary, Edmonton and Vancouver. That is its duty. Even though it means a deficit, it is for the welfare of Canada. It does not have anything to do with the quality of administration of the company.

Mr. Ritchie: If Air Canada does not find short hauls lucrative, why did it oppose the application by Nordair to fly from Montreal to Sudbury and Thunder Bay? In presenting its case Air Canada proposed fares considerably lower than Nordair which expected to have losses for three years before building up any traffic. If Air Canada does not find short hauls to its liking, why in this case did it not allow the private company to take the loss? Why did it oppose the application to the CTC?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, are we going to give the short hauls to the regional carriers, the long hauls to CP and get rid of Air Canada? That is not the way I look at it. I do not want us to be in the same situation as the United States where there are many regional airlines. If an airline that starts flying from Hamilton to Winnipeg and eventually to Regina is classed as a regional carrier, I think that is stretching the concept of region.

The problem is that the regions are not very well served. The reason is that the regional airlines want long hauls because they have jets, and with jets there is only one way to make money, that is, to have long hauls. If we are going to give the long hauls to the regional carriers, let us sell the other two airlines. Maybe we should have five national carriers in Canada. That is nonsense in this kind of country.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Pratte has mentioned that he does not feel regional carriers should be involved in the charter business to any extent. He suggests that regional airlines with 707's or DC8's should give up this kind of equipment to Air Canada. Does the minister agree with Mr. Pratte that Air Canada should be the only airline with charters, and that the regionals should not be able to enter the charter business, particularly if they cannot use the 707's and DC8's which, I presume, are the large types of aircraft?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Unfortunately I have not read that statement by Mr. Pratte. Possibly I could see the text. Mr. Pratte never mentioned to me that that is an objective he is trying to attain. There is another airline in Canada, Wardair, which deals exclusively with charters. We may very well have charters during the busy seasons so that the main airlines do not need to have five, six or seven large aircraft that will be used only during a short period of the year. However, I do not think there should be five or six national airlines in Canada because most of them would be bankrupt within a few years.

[Translation]

Mr. Gendron: Mr. Chairman, as the old saying goes: "If at first you don't succeed, try and try again." That applies, I believe, not only in literature but also in politics, since in order to reach one's objectives in politics, one must often try again. In the area that I represent, we have set ourselves the following objective: we are aiming to attempt to benefit fully from our geographical position and from our potential, to develop as fittingly as possible our part of the country.

I ask the House the following question: In the area of Windsor, in one area of Alberta or in any other area in Canada, would an unemployment rate of 30 per cent be easily accepted? Would it be accepted that municipalities, as there are some in my riding, where 90 per cent of the people live on social welfare, should have to demand positive and efficient actions from our government for the development of our country?

We have had in our area studies upon studies, more than anywhere else in Canada. The BAEQ cost $5,700,000 to the Canadian government; later on, we had various studies on transports, communications, regional economic expansion, representing expenditures of $10 million for an area of approximately 300,000 people. However, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), who was minister of Regional Economic Expansion, was the first to conclude that the studies were outdated, that at the very time conclusions were arrived at, the problems were of a different nature and that those conclusions did not really solve the problems that we faced.

We still face the same problems and the member who is now speaking to you is really aware of the problems of the under-developed areas. The people who were claiming the right to an harmonious development deserved more than statements and studies, but effective measures and a real leadership. In order to run for Parliament, I demanded that the Right Hon. L. B. Pearson promise, not only as future prime minister of this country but as leader of the Liberal Party of Canada, not to keep on with studies but to build a deep-sea harbour and provide for a year-round ferry service between both shores because I am one of those who, like Bossuet, believe that common sense is to be found in common people. It was believed that such was the essential tool for its proper development and that besides studies, there should be concrete projects to put an end to frustration and insure the people that the area in which they live has possibilities and that men in public life understand that.

I know that it is said in my party: Equality of opportunities to all Canadian people to benefit from the resources and advantages provided to us by this country and our political system of government. We believed that the development instrument we were asking for was essential to our development. Numerous studies had drawn the same conclusion. When we called for that project, it was not because we had ITT, Iron Ore or all kinds of big corporations backing us, but because we really wanted to benefit from our geographical advantages, from the fact that the St. Lawrence River has tremendous depths, as much as 1,000 feet, which would enable ships of the new generation to come to the inner part of this country, insure in our area a rational and normal development and revitalize all the St. Lawrence Seaway, the harbour of Quebec and those of Trois-Rivières and Montreal.

And today the objections are basically the same as when at one time development of the St. Lawrence Seaway was sought; the port of Montreal objected to it because it was cut for a terminal function and it felt that with the extension of that seaway toward Thunder Bay it could lose that function. But after the St. Lawrence Seaway was opened, the port of Montreal saw its traffic increase five-fold so that if there were difficulties afterwards it is not because the seaway interfered with its development, but on the contrary it gave it a very large boom, and one should look for the problems elsewhere.

Today, there is a new phenomenon which is the new generation of ships. Are we going to turn that same seaway, as one slogan puts it, into a speedway for ships or are we going to continue as in the past to revitalize all along its shores industrial and commercial developments. Will we be stupid enough to give progress a cold shoulder, we who in the mining and energy areas, and in many other areas—perhaps that is not so accurate—but from the stand point of our resources and their development, are so dependent upon the United States that we will also be so for both the export and import of all our products. President Nixon himself stated that he would make sure they did not depend on Canada for their imports and exports; even if they did not have the natural seaports, they would build man-made ones in order to accomodate the new generation of ships.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think I could illustrate the feeling of frustration that exists in my area better than by reading textually a resolution of the city council of Rivière-du-Loup, adopted on Monday May 5, 1975, which reads as follows:

Whereas the Department of Transport of Canada has already stated that the Canadian government would do nothing more for the Gros-Cacouna port as long as a serious plan would not be issued with respect to its use;

Whereas the Havre-Champlain (Scott-Misener) company is ready to carry out in Gros-Cacouna a very important project for the loading and unloading of bulk dry cargo and has for many months submitted that project to the federal as well as provincial authorities;

Whereas, after reviewing the said project, the Minister of Transport of Canada said the federal government would make no decision in that respect as long as the port policy of the government of Quebec would not be known;

Whereas the aforementioned policy has been known for over two months and whereas the premier of Quebec said publicly at the beginning of April 1975 that the government of Quebec fully supported the development of the port of Gros-Cacouna and approved of the Havre-Champlain project, which the Quebec minister of Commerce himself did several months earlier;

Whereas, in spite of all the aforementioned, the minister of Transport of Canada is still hopelessly reluctant and, according to medias, wrote very recently to the premier of Quebec and told him that the federal government would not commit itself blindly into the development of the Gros-Cacouna port, and before anything was decided, the Canadian government and the government of Quebec would have to undertake joint preliminary studies . . .

Studies again—

. . . into the cost of facilities and the feasibility of a mixed (government and private) ownership system for the Gros-Cacouna port facilities; Whereas all those hesitations . . .

This is a polite way of putting it when you consider the frustration that exists in my area—

[Mr. Gendron.]

. . . seem to indicate that the federal government, rather than approving a job creating project, prefers to see 15 to 30 per cent of the people able to work collect unemploymant and welfare benefits;

Whereas the citizens of our area are fed up with studies of all kinds and know that several studies have already concluded in favour of the port of Gros-Cacouna (Brochu, Sorès, Camus, Lalonde & Valois, C.D. Howe, etc. reports);

Be it therefore resolved,

Councillor Roméo Bossinotte moved

Seconded by councillor J.-Jean Dionne,

That this council: 1) urge most strongly the Minister of Transport and the government of Canada to approve immediately the Havre-Champlain project for the ferrying of bulk dry goods to the port of Gros-Cacouna;

2) invite the Minister of Transport of Canada to come, in the last week in May or the first days of June, 1975, and meet with the municipal council and representatives of the Rivière-du-Loup Industrial Promotion Corporation, the Gros-Cacouna Port Promotion Committee and the local Chamber of Commerce, for a frank and constructive discussion about the port of Gros-Cacouna.

Mr. Chairman, my questions deal with those two resolutions: approval of the project and discussion with local authorities—

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Okanagan Boundary.

Mr. Gendron: On a point of order—

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry. I assumed the hon. member had completed his speech.

[Translation]

Mr. Gendron: No, Mr. Chairman, this is not a speech but a point of order. We did agree that the hon. minister's time in replying would not be counted as time taken by the hon. member who was asking the questions, so I would like the Minister of Transport to give an answer to the quite relevant questions I asked him.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, as I have mentioned several times in the last few months, I understand that the members of the House are rather impatient, because they are anxious to see the result of our efforts not in the field of the reorganization of our Department, but of the reorientation of its economic and social philosophy.

The port system, Mr. Speaker, is one of the issues that were examined in depth. One of these studies was followed by the Scott report, because Mr. Scott was responsible for it. This report must still be dissected before it can be handed to me officially and then presented to the cabinet. I realize quite well that my hon. friend from Rivière-du-Loup is defending as always his constituents with a lot of enthusiasm and sincerity and I cannot blame him for that. However, I could not at this time state my views on the Gros-Cacouna project as long as there has been no final decision on a port development policy for Canada.

What is taking place in the area of ports is similar to what is taking place in other areas—and this is in line with a suggestion I have already made in the House—a number of ports come under the National Harbour Board, others under port authorities or private administration, and still others under the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority. We are trying to tidy up the whole port facility scheme, so that each port may serve its own purpose and refrain from destructive competitive action.

That is the problem we are faced with now and why Gros-Cacouna has yet to receive a reply. I take due note of the resolutions which have been adopted, even if I feel some of them should be redrafted, but I appreciate the reasons they were put together this way, in view of the very serious problems the area as a whole, but more specifically the Rivière-du-Loup, region is faced with.

[English]

Mr. Whittaker: Mr. Chairman, entering into this debate tonight on the Minister of Transport's estimates, I welcome the opportunity. The main question I should like to mention is freight rates in the interior of B.C., or the non-competitive freight rates, and whether or not they are fair; and exports into the United States and whether the transportation companies of Canada are holding their end up in this export field.

We in the interior of B.C. have been long suffering as far as freight rates are concerned, and I should like to take the few minutes at my disposal to explain some of the reasons. I have been involved in freight rates for the fruit industry of British Columbia for quite a few years but it seems we are not able to get our points of view across.

Since becoming a member of parliament I have had many representations from people in the industry in my riding, complaining and talking about freight rates and how they seem to be discriminated against. We are, of course, in a non-competitive area and it would appear that the transportation companies take whatever the traffic will bear. A couple of weeks ago when we were in Prince George hearing representations from many of the industries there, almost every organization that came before us had something to say about freight rates. It sounded exactly the same as what we had been going through in my riding for years in the fruit industry.

I had a phone call today from a businessman in my riding who did not know or realize that we were going to enter into this debate, but what he told me is similar to what has been going on for a number of years in the interior of B.C., where it would appear there is a non-competitive rate and that transportation companies take whatever the traffic will bear.

For instance, you can ship to Vancouver from eastern Canada and back to Prince George for less than you can ship through the CNR directly to Prince George. The marshalling yards in Vancouver become crowded and they have a lot of problems there resulting in the tie-up of freight. Nevertheless, with the type of competition there, you can go into Vancouver, and in fact from there into the interior, for less money than if you go directly into the interior itself.

I think the first time I was exposed to these freight rate anomalies was when I found that we could load apples in Kelowna, ship them to Winnipeg, unload them, put them in cold storage, a month or so later take them out of cold storage, load them up again, ship them to Florida, and get a rebate on the freight rates. That sort of thing was actually happening. What did we do in order to be able to get some competition? We would actually truck fruit across the border, load it on to American rail lines, send it to a border point just south of Winnipeg, unload it, put it on trucks and send it up to Winnipeg, and it would be cheaper to do so. We had to do this kind of thing to show up our situation. The businesses in B.C., most of them small businesses, were not able to do this.

The result was that we could get agreed charges. This was quite good. We could get these agreed charges until the last few years. The railways were not able to supply enough, or did not supply enough cars to hold up their end, and so the agreed charges had to go; they could not ship the percentages they agreed to ship, although they would have liked to charge for them.

In the last two or three years we have had a shortage of rolling stock to roll fruit from western Canada, British Columbia, to eastern Canada. What happens is that the market gets filled by our competitor to the south, the United States. There was never any shortage of fruit in eastern Canada, but it was not Canadian fruit, mainly because we could not get the rolling stock from the railways. Today they are negotiating with the railways for some piggyback trailers on an agreed basis.

I am sorry to say that when these people asked me last fall, "What are we going to do? Are we going to get any transportation policy? Is our government going to do something about transportation in Canada?", I had to say to them, "I am sorry but the Minister of Transport gets up in the House and says that transportation is in a mess. We have been asking questions and we have had days of debate, but I would tell you that you had better get out and do some negotiating of your own because you are not going to get much of a transportation policy as far as I can see. You have to move your fruit to market; you have a responsibility to get it there". So now they are making contracts. They are looking for contracts today, and the contracts are all in the transportation companies' favour. This is why I say that we in the interior of B.C. are having a problem with non-competitive rates. I should like to ask the minister whether he has looked into these non-competitive rates, and are they fair?

● (2040)

I should like to say a few things about exports to the United States of our fruit and lumber, as well as other products from British Columbia. Industries there are getting absolutely nowhere with the transportation companies in respect of exporting products to the United States. These exports are very important to Canada's balance of trade position, as I am sure the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce would confirm. Are the transportation companies holding up their end in respect of these exports, making sure that we are able to get our products to the United States? Has the Minister of Transport told these transportation companies in Canada that they have a responsibility in this regard, or are the railway and transportation companies just saying there is no way that they will have a part in this?

I can assure the minister through you, Mr. Chairman, that the fruit industry in British Columbia is getting absolutely no co-operation in the export of its products to the United States. Those are the two main questions I wanted to ask today, and I hope the Minister of Transport is doing something about these situations.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, in addition to problems in respect of rates there were problems last year in the movement of fruit from the Okanagan Valley. I have been requested many times by members of parliament from that region to find boxcars in order that fruit can be exported expeditiously to the United States. However, when the hon. member states flatly that these companies did not receive any help, I suggest that is not true. I succeeded in convincing the CNR to send a certain number of boxcars for the purpose of exporting fruit from the Okanagan. Perhaps the CN did not provide as many as the industry wished, but there was a certain number sent at the request of the government, or because of the pressure of the government.

There was also a shortage of cars for the movement of lumber, as the hon. member mentioned. At that time we talked about the creation of a company to keep rolling stock in reserve so that when there are peak production periods this company could provide the rolling stock necessary, and in this way avoid any possibility of losing our markets.

The hon. member suggests that we should not rely too much on new policies because they may take a long time coming into place, or they may very well never come. Those who are aware of the history of transportation in Canada will realize that if, and I underline the word if, in a few months we can really produce a new policy in the field of transportation, we will have achieved something that has never been achieved since Confederation.

I am reminded of one inquiry on the subject of pilotage. In that case it took Mr. Justice Bernier six years to produce his report. I think probably he is entitled to his pension.

An hon. Member: So are you.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Well, not yet. The report of the MacPherson Commission, as well as reports in respect of other inquiries, took years to produce, and years before we had any new policies on transportation. Of course you can say that you do not believe a new policy will be produced until you see it. That is a normal attitude and probably the same one I would take if I were sitting in the hon. member's seat which seems, on the basis of comparison, at this moment to be better than mine.

This is one of the problems which exists and which we are trying to correct because Canada is an exporting country and it is very important for us that we have fast, accessible and cheap transportation in order to maintain our export position and protect our international markets. This is vital, but of course transportation alone cannot accomplish this. If our ports are paralyzed because the grain handlers decide not to load the grain, we have problems. We in Canada should not have the kind of problems we had two years ago, which was a good year for fruit and a good year for lumber. At that time it was impossible to provide enough cars to move total production. This is one of the difficulties we are trying to solve. You may not believe that we will succeed. I have no evidence to produce in support of my belief that we will, other than my good faith that we will succeed.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Chairman, I must say that at first sight, I like the procedure now being tried out in the House. It allows members to set forth problems that are peculiar to each of our areas and to take stock of the problems of interest to their area. I shall mention in support of my statement the remarks made by the hon. member for Rivière-du-Loup-Témiscouata (Mr. Gendron) a few moments ago. I think that the manner in which he has stated the problem of concern to him and to the entire population proves that our present procedure makes for a truly open discussion. Every member in the House tonight and every member who will read Hansard tomorrow may appreciate the seriousness of our proceedings.

Mr. Chairman, I know that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) is responsible for a large department since it deals with surface, water and air transportation. The minister is no more amphibious than the member now speaking. The minister must be constantly aware of transportation problems and it is not always easy to solve them in a few words. It is obvious that he needs numerous officials. Besides, we have proof of this tonight in the House. There are some on the floor of the House and there are probably two dozens in the galleries who are following the debate. The minister is not in a position to know them all; it would be asking too much from him. However, they must trust him.

It happens that in his department like in others, some bureaucrats take themselves too seriously and think that the Department of Transport is their own business. They forget that members of Parliament are answerable to the people.

Having said this, I should like to take advantage of the consideration of the Transport estimates to deal with a problem which is not new, namely the dredging of the channel the water from the St. Lawrence to the Montmagny wharf. Last year—and the minister will surely remember, when the Department of Transport estimates were under consideration, I made representations in that connection and the minister had seemed willing then to settle this problem. I hope he is still favorably inclined. That dredging matter, although often brought up in this House by the members who preceded me here as representatives of my riding, has never been solved even if it has repeatedly been discussed; but I have every reason, I say this quite sincerely, that we are nearing a settlement, judging from the dialogues and exchanges of views we had in committees, or on occasion when I met various ministers. Still, and I say this without wanting to offend anyone, everyone holds to his opinions, according to the studies I have made; it has even happened, when the file was sent to the Department of Transports for a quick perusal, that the officials mainly stressed disadvantages of the situation, its non profitability, with the various responsible ministers. And then, it was required to show what benefits might result from the dredging of that channel for the development of some natural resources in that area.

I think that the various departments in the federal government were ready to cooperate, it would be possible to solve this problem and ensure that the development of the area between Quebec and the Gaspé peninsula, I mean the south shore of wich the city of Montmagny can properly be considered as the capital, since it is located in the centre of that area.

Until now, Mr. Chairman, in every development project that has been implemented under the various federal policies or with the cooperation of the province of Quebec, the south shore has always been overlooked. In the studies conducted, the experts have always considered Quebec City and the surrounding area. Then, they flew over the south shore in order to go and study the needs of the Gaspé area, as I know that there are also needs to meet there.

However, the south shore is not included in the area surrounding Quebec City, being located many miles away, nor is it close to the Gaspé peninsula, as it is even farther; it is a different area and I ask that it be considered as such and that special projects be designed for that area in order to ensure its development. I think that it will never be able to develop further if action is not taken to fully develop all its resources. There is no need to mention them all, they are numerous. That area has a tremendous potential for touristic development; the many islands located in the St. Lawrence river are part of the area and better communications are needed to reach them and make the most of them.

I also wish to remind you that Montmagny and the vicinity is a paradise for migratory birds, and particularly the snow goose. It will be recalled that the mayor of Montmagny, Dr. Gauthier, and all his council, in cooperation with the Chamber of Commerce and every organization in the area, started in Montmagny an annual Snow Goose Festival. I wish everyone could see at this season, from approximately 300 feet behind my residence, thousands of snow geese currently migrating to their summer nesting grounds, from which they will be returning next fall. This is an industry that should be expanded. But in order to do that, outsiders coming into the area should have access to the islands, in the fall, to hunt snow geese. This is a tremendous sport. Unfortunately, transport facilities are inadequate.

Since the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury) is inclined to approve the renovation of the Montmagny wharf, I should like this evening to ask the Minister of Transport whether it is possible to very seriously consider whether, in turn, the Montmagny channel could not be dredged, so that the hunting and tourist industry may be further developed, and whether also a marina could not be built. I know this is not his responsibility, but somebody must take the lead to make things possible. Sheltered waters are needed so that small craft can take refuge during storms. This would be a suitable location if it was developed.

Second, I would ask the same thing I requested last year, and I am convinced I will have an answer since this item is again included in the estimates. I noted last year in the estimates a quite significant amount for the improvement of the channel opposite Cap-aux-Oies. I do not know if the minister remembers that.

In any event, there was amazement that $2 million were allotted for the improvement of the channel there. If I am misinformed, I hope I shall be corrected, but I am convinced this will be done this summer. I had an opportunity to discuss with pilots. I was told that the river is approximately 35 feet deep at that place. I wonder why this year a $925 million amount is again included in the estimates for 1975-1976. The sum of $925 million has also been forecasted for future years. If this is necessary, I do not object. It is very obvious that the channel must be maintained. Since the votes are here, if the Minister could use his authority to transfer these votes, which will be used to improve the channel, which would then be deep enough to allow normal navigation, maybe the channel from the river to the dock at Montmagny could be dredged.

Those are the few considerations that I wanted to bring to the attention of the Minister, very seriously and with a lot of heart, because I know that he is very concerned about the development of the area to which I have referred, like all the other areas of the country, and it is on behalf of all the organizations, which you will excuse me for not naming, that I am making this request; I am the spokesman for all the organizations which have already been named, and of which about thirty at least have been asking the same thing for many years. I hope that everyone is not wrong at the same time. I know in advance that the Minister will tell me: "Yes, this will take money". I understand this and so does everyone else, but if we wait for some garantee about the profitability of the service before doing anything, I think that we shall never do anything because there are public services now in operation which were supposed to be profitable and each year, the Minister has to come to Parliament and ask for new credits to set them afloat, to pay their deficits. It would not be any worse in Montmagny. I know that it would not be any better, but it would not be any worse.

I sincerely ask if it is possible to do something. I think that the government of the Province of Quebec would be willing to co-operate, as well as the Minister of Public Works and also the authorities of the city of Montmagny.

It is through co-operation that we will succeed in solving that issue and in providing the South Shore area with proper public utilities so that the standard of living and the per capita income of the South Shore population, which are unfortunately the lowest in Canada, may be improved. I would now ask the hon. minister to make comments on that subject.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, it was a real pleasure for me to hear again my good friend, the hon. member for Bellechasse who is asking again that there be dredging operations around the Montmagny wharf in order to allow better circulation between that town and the islands which are an extension to the Orleans Island.

● (2100)

The hon. member is right when he talks about the snow geese. It is a remarkable spectacle. It is not necessary to go there hunting, seeing them only is worth the trip. I believe that in such circumstances maybe he should make representations not only to the Ministry of Transport which has a marginal responsibility, but also to the Department of Tourism, in Quebec City, and to the Department of Public Works. The latter is concerned with the maintenance of wharves and small harbours.

He could also contact the Department of the Environment which is in charge of harbours for small boats. It is a complicated issue but surely he could do something about it and, in my opinion, I think that by making representations to those departments, he will succeed in getting the water level around the Montmagny wharf raised in order to allow the boats to come there and to visit one of the most attractive towns in the Province of Quebec.

Mr. Chairman, to get his figures straight when he reads the budget, he should read $925,000 instead of $925 million; it is not quite the same thing. The total amount is $2,100,000: we did some dredging at Cap-aux-Oies, but there has been some filling up and efforts must be made to bring the depth of the channel down to 40 and 45 feet at high tide. If the hon. member can transform the $925,000 into $925 million, I promise we will do some dredging at the Montmagny wharf.

In any event, he will certainly get a sympathetic ear; but this is not something I can assure him of as a project we will achieve solely with assistance from the Department of Transport.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order.

I apologize to the hon. minister if I said $925 million. That was certainly a mistake because I did read $925,000. I would not want the House to get the impression that I intended to falsify the figures in the budget. My apologies, and I thank the minister for having pointed it out to me.

[English]

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Mr. Chairman, I want to use my 15 minutes, or part thereof, largely in asking the minister some questions about my part of the country. I was delighted, as were a number of my constituents, about the announcement by the federal government that it would be building a railway link between Ashcroft, Cache Creek and Clinton. This will be a link between the CNR and the CPR to the B.C. rail.

Many of my colleagues from the prairies, and on both sides of the House, realise that the Fraser canyon can be a very difficult bottleneck with respect to the two rail lines, especially during the winter time and spring break-up. There are often slides which can hold up trains going down the Fraser canyon for long periods of time. This link has much potential for the economy of this country and for the economy of that part of my constituency, and I would like the minister to inform the House of some target dates. I would like to know what schedule he is following now, what kind of work might be taking place at this time, and the target completion date. That is mostly what we are concerned about. We would like to have some idea of the framework in which the Government of Canada will be moving.

Another question concerning the people of Kamloops relates to terminal facilities. Kamloops is one of the most rapidly growing cities in the province of British Columbia, and the number of passengers moving through the Kamloops airport in the past few years has probably been the most rapidly growing in the country, so the terminal facilities have really become quite inadequate over the past couple of years in particular. There have been some additions made to the facilities, which have been quite helpful both for onloading and offloading, but these are only temporary additions.

I have had a number of discussions with the minister's regional officials who have been very helpful, and I know they have a number of good plans on the drawing boards for terminal facilities in Kamloops. One date we had been kicking around, with regard to having the new facilities built, was 1977. I would like the minister to give me some indication of these possible new facilities in Kamloops and to advise whether that 1977 target date can be met or is realistic. Perhaps this was just in the very preliminary planning stages in his department, but I want to stress that it is very necessary that we have new and adequate terminal facilities in Kamloops as soon as possible.

The other area I was talking about with the minister's regional officials, and upon which I received co-operation, was the terminal facilities at Quesnel. They also had a number of good plans on the drawing boards for Quesnel. They just obtained jet flight service in there, Pacific Western Airlines, not too long ago. It is a service which has been very much needed, and it is warmly received by the people of Quesnel and that part of the Cariboo. I would like also to know what time schedule the minister and his department have for new terminal facilities in Quesnel.

● (2110)

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, the negotiations between the federal government, the B.C. government, BCR, which is owned by the B.C. government, and the CNR have been long and complicated. I know there is an understanding and it is supposed to go on. I am not even sure that the formal agreement has been signed yet. If the hon. member wants the target as far as the Clinton-Ashcroft bypass is concerned, it is not supposed to go beyond 1978, so the target of 1977 is about right. This is something which is urgent and essential to the development of the region and for the normal circulation of goods in the direction of the B.C. coast and ports.

Unfortunately I did not catch the second question. Would the hon. member mind repeating it?

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): The second question related to the new terminal facilities in Kamloops. I mentioned that I had a number of productive conversations with the minister's regional officers who had been very co-operative. There are some good plans on the drawing board for new facilities. In casual conversations the officials told me to look at 1977 for the new facilities there, but this was not their decision and it had to go to Ottawa for confirmation. The facilities were improved recently for loading and offloading, but still they are only temporary facilities. We need permanent facilities in Kamloops, and in Quesnel as well, and I believe the plans are also on the drawing board.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): If the hon. member does not mind I will take that question as notice and let him know tomorrow exactly what is the target.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Chairman, in opening I should like to say to the minister that I fully sympathize with him for all the reports with which he has to deal. There have been a multitude of them in the period since confederation. Unfortunately they have not been followed by policies. The reports have emphasized the problems which exist nationally and regionally, and it is now imperative to have policies.

There are some questions I should like to put to the minister. First of all, what is the depth of investigation by the minister or his staff into the branch line abandonment proposal of the railroads in respect of communities which may become isolated and put out of business if a branch line is abandoned? Secondly, what is the information on the revenue which will accrue to the main lines if the wholesale abandonment of branch lines becomes the policy of the two national railroad companies? Have these two questions been given proper appraisal?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Is the hon. member talking about branch lines generally?

Mr. McCain: That is right—not any specific one but just the basic policy on branch line abandonment, its effect on the community abandoned, and eventually on the traffic on the main line.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): There is a definite policy as far as the branch lines in the western part of Canada are concerned where 12,000 miles are frozen till the year 2000, and 6,000 miles are going to be reviewed by a commission so that we will know exactly what we are going to do with them. They are not going to be abandoned before the end of 1975, however, and what happens after that will depend on the report. There are about 500 miles which everybody agreed should be abandoned for all practical purposes.

Mr. McCain: Madam Chairman, I do not think the minister intended to evade my question. He has given me the position at the moment on branch line abandonment as far as policy is concerned. I should like to know if there is an in-depth study on two aspects of the consequences of abandonment—first, the consequence to the community located on a line to be abandoned and, second, the consequences on total traffic on main lines which have depended on the branch lines as sources of traffic or feeder lines for the main lines. Is this under study? I have never seen it mentioned in any report relating to transportation.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Madam Chairman, I am not sure that I understand the question clearly. No branch line can be abandoned in Canada without approval by the CTC. This is not a policy but is the procedure to be followed in the abandonment of an active branch line. As far as the policy of the government is concerned, this has been talked about at the WEOC Conference. I do not want to evade the hon. member's question, but was he referring to the section of 12,000 miles, 6,000 miles, or 500 miles?

Mr. McCain: There are areas of Canada which have been served by one line or the other and part of the industrial background of those communities is still dependent upon the railroad and will be damaged if the lines are abandoned. I should like to know what happens to the main line if producers of traffic on the branch lines go out of business?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Madam Chairman, I reserve the right to correct myself tomorrow if I am mistaken, but the information I have at the moment is that the mandate of the inquiry is not limited to the western provinces. It is to make a study of all Canada and see what the economic impact will be if some branch lines are abandoned, whether in the maritime provinces, Quebec, Ontario or the western provinces. If my information is not correct, I will rectify it tomorrow.

Mr. McCain: I should like to point out that the area of the Saint John River valley, the Annapolis valley and other areas in Nova Scotia have been served by railroads. Instead of bringing forward applications for branch line abandonment, why do not railroads, all of them, make it their policy to seek out business? Without business they will be forced to abandon lines. I suggest that the policy of the government should put the onus on railways to search for business in areas in which they intend to abandon lines. Other enterprises, whether they are banks, chemical companies, fertilizer companies or beer companies, pursue business. This approach seems to be totally lacking on the part of our railway system.

Why should businesses—I do not expect the minister to answer but I wish the department would consider this—which are not familiar with the workings of the transport industry need to buy their own truck units in order to deliver their own products to their own customers, especially as many of these businesses have been served by the railways? This does not involve rates; this involves service. Service which was available to some of these businesses 10 or 15 years ago is no longer available, although the railway lines still run past their front doors. It seems to me that in seeking a solution to the difficulties of railways the minister should ask why so many companies have bought their own trucks?

Why does the Viau Company have its own trucks on the road? Why do Humpty Dumpty and Home Hardware have their own trucks on the road? Are these companies making money from trucking, or from manufacturing and merchandising? Further, are these companies, by entering the transport business, able better to serve themselves and at less cost than would be the case if we had a better rail transport system? Why should the publicly-owned CNR let this business slip out of its hands while other people, less experienced in the transport business, deliver products they manufacture, not because they want to, but because they must?

If the study previously mentioned is to be concerned about the east as well as the west, will guidelines be laid down regarding the consideration of the Maritimes or Atlantic area? Does the minister have any idea as to how profitable the CNR or CPR find Maritime region business? Also does the minister know, from cost submissions, whether the railways are making more or less profit than they ought to make, and what assurance can the minister give that the level of service in future will not fall below the level presently being supplied? What is the policy for improving service to Kelowna, Selkirk, Prince George and various other areas of the country? Can the minister comment on this question? After all, our economy cannot function adequately in the absence of a transportation policy. Such a policy is needed to help the economy.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Madam Chairman, perhaps my answer of a few minutes ago was wrong. If the jurisdiction of the commission is to be limited to western Canada, under our transport legislation a similar duty devolves on the CTC. This means that CN should apply to the CTC, and the CTC has to conduct an inquiry in order to justify any decision it might take. I will inquire and find out exactly the mandate of the special commission that was set up by the federal government.

The hon. member asked if the railways are making money in the Maritimes. I know that we are subsidizing the Maritimes.

Mr. McCain: And the west.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Yes, and the west. But the railways are not making money. This year they are all losing money. I would be surprised to learn they are making money in the Maritimes, but I will check and give the hon. member that information tomorrow. At the same time I will look into the other matters the hon. member put to me.

Mr. McCain: Madam Chairman, will the minister also ask the department to examine why so many people are going into their own trucking business, because once many of these companies were served by the railroads? How can they afford to do their own trucking, and why cannot the railways, the CNR, the CPR and other railways, do it more cheaply, especially when the rail lines already run past the front doors of these firms?

It has been recognized that an adequate transport system for the prairie areas and the west generally, primarily a rail transport system, is imperative if the agricultural industry of the region is to survive. An adequate rail transport system is equally necessary for the survival of agriculture in Kelowna, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and elsewhere. Such areas are equally in need of an adequate rail transport system. What policies will the minister advocate in order to allow the agricultural industry in this country to continue prospering? Further, what policies will the minister bring forward in co-operation with the Minister of Agriculture and his own departmental officials to make sure that the railways serve adequately the agricultural industry of the Atlantic area, at rates which will permit agriculture to make a profit?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Madam Chairman, the policy on which we are working, which has not been completed, concerns agriculture and all other sectors. We are convinced in the department that we must have a good railway service in this country. We need that in Canada. This country is too big to rely on trucking or other modes. We need a good railway system, not only for industry but for agriculture, too.

[Mr. McCain.]

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member who is about to rise, but his time has expired.

Mr. Peters: Madam Chairman, may I ask the minister a question concerning regional air carrier policy. I wonder if Air Canada service is to be substituted for regional carrier service in certain areas. I know the minister was interested in the Nordair application for the Ottawa-Sudbury-Thunder Bay route. Is there to be any substitution of service? I assure the minister that the flight, given present departure times, will not make money for Air Canada or anybody else. Perhaps someone could make money if the flight were at a different time. Does the minister intend to develop a new policy in this whole area, and how will we hear about it?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Madam Chairman, the last time we made an effort to elaborate an air policy in Canada was in 1966, I believe. Of course since then conditions have changed. I do not blame those who brought in the earlier policy. They did their best. Of course no regional carriers then operated jets. The business of regional carriers was to serve certain regions. Then they bought jet aircraft, DC-8s, DC-9s, Boeing 707s and 747s, and they put pressure on the CTC for new routes. They asked that Air Canada routes be given to them because they could not make money with jet aircraft on the kinds of routes they flew. Without doubt there is no money to be made in flying a jet from Brandon to Winnipeg.

Mr. Dinsdale: But there is from Brandon to Toronto.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): They can make money by flying from Brandon to Toronto, but not by flying from Brandon to Winnipeg.

• (2130)

We first tried to solve the problem of international routes. We announced last year how we are dividing the world and what kind of policy we are going to follow. However, we have not yet reached the regional carriers. At this time the policy is not designed. However, we intend to have one as soon as we have taken care of other urgent problems.

Mr. Peters: Madam Chairman, we have several problems with Air Canada. One is that it did not get all the international routes. We have two major air carriers in Canada, Air Canada and CP Air, which was probably a very bad mistake. Even France, Britain, and other countries considerably larger and more prestigious than Canada cannot afford that.

The minister stated that the regional air carriers have bought jets. That is true. They have bought them because Air Canada failed to meet the needs of travelling Canadians, particularly in the Caribbean. There is still a shortage in the Caribbean even with Wardair, Nordair, QuebecAir and Eastern Provincial.

I am sure the minister will agree that cutting out the regional carriers is not the answer. Nordair flies 727's and 737's into the Arctic. Air Canada should be doing that, but is not for two very good reasons. It does not have the planes that will fly in that area. Air Canada has bought the wrong kind of aircraft. It is looking for prestigious international service which the Canadian people cannot afford. We are not in that field.

I have no objection if the minister wants to be a real nationalist about this. I would be quite happy if tomorrow he put in a system that would meet the needs of the Canadian public for air service with one airline called Air Canada. It has all the machinery. There is no doubt about it. It has enough vice-presidents to fly the damn things, if only they were capable of flying. However, they will have to provide the kind of aircraft that regional carriers are supplying.

I am pleased that after the problem of international routes has been solved, the minister is going to look into the regional problem. I suggest that when he does that, he look at another airplane for Air Canada. He should be buying the Dash 7. I understand that is a large Otter. Air Canada should be buying 30 or 40 passenger planes.

If we are going to run a Canadian airline, it should use jets. We should be using jets to fly these routes.

Has the minister given any consideration to security costs at airports? We are not catching anybody. I have heard that one or two members of parliament carried guns through security in one or two major cities just to try it. The system did not work out. I can explain, to anyone who wants to know, how to beat it. It is very easy to do.

I have to spend a lot of time in North Bay where I make my air travel connections. There are ten RCMP officers there. They receive at least $10,000 a year. That comes to $100,000 a year. Air Canada hires Pinkerton people. There are three main flights a day. I do not know how that kind of expenditure can be justified. One RCMP officer would be enough. The only purpose for their being there is to back up the Pinkerton people.

Mr. Nielsen: North Bay is a bad place.

Mr. Peters: The same is true in Sudbury, Timmins, Calgary and Edmonton. I never went through a search like that before. They made everyone almost strip because there was a girl who was going through with gilt buttons on her coat. If the machine will pick up the gilt, it will pick up anything.

What are we doing? Are we training people for the Olympics? Is this why we are training the RCMP? I do not see why we need ten RCMP officers, not in the whole North Bay area, but just at the airport. I rode on a Cessna 402. No one is going to take that very far. I often wonder if it will make it to Ottawa. The Otters will not go very far. They are the planes which go through North Bay most. Air Canada has two main flights a day with a DC-9. Has the minister given any consideration to the cost of security? This seems to be away out of line. We are not getting anything for our money.

One of the RCMP officers said he did not like his job. He said it would be fine if they would move him somewhere else where there is something to do because he does not like sitting around all day drinking the bad coffee they have in the terminal. North Bay, as the minister is aware, has been changed to eastern air defence. In case of bad weather, Earlton becomes the emergency auxiliary field. Has the minister given any consideration to updating the buildings at Earlton? There are 24 hour weather and radio personnel there, as well as a terminal. All the buildings those three agencies use are pre-war. They were built about 1935 or 1936. Even if it is just to save on heating costs, a small terminal could be built at a fairly reasonable cost. Has the minister given any consideration to this?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Madam Chairman, I do not know if I heard the hon. member correctly. He said that Air Canada should go jet all the way. At the same time he said it should buy Dash 7's which are not jet, but turbo.

An hon. Member: They are not flying.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): They are still being tested, but they are flying. Apparently they are good planes. Anyway, we will wait and see.

In 1965 or 1966, it was in the policy I referred to a few minutes ago, Air Canada agreed to give certain lines to the regional carriers. That is why lanes were given to Quebec Air, UAWA in British Columbia and TransAir in Winnipeg. They were not given to Nordair, but all the others. It was the policy of the government at that time, rightly or wrongly, and I have my opinion on this, to take away from Air Canada a certain number of lines in order to allow the regional carriers to make a profit. After that, they succeeded in stretching their routes and that is when they started buying the jets. When you buy a DC-9, even if it is a short conventional one, you need to have room. Otherwise you cannot economically operate such an aircraft. At this time Quebec Air has two DC-8's which it purchased recently for a charter to Europe. TransAir has a 747.

Mr. Nielsen: It is Wardair.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): The hon. member is correct, it is not TransAir, but Wardair that has the 747.

● (2140)

In the United States they believed for a century that it was good to have as many railways as they could build, as many airlines as they could create. What happened? Half of them went bankrupt. Now even Pan-American Airlines is in trouble but has been saved by the banks. I would not like to see, one day, in our lap or in the lap of the opposition, one or two airlines which could not make a profit asking for a subsidy or new routes in order to keep going. I do not mind if we have to intervene more directly, but I believe it is preferable for the Canadian people to have healthy airlines which know what are their limits. Right now they do not know so they take chances, and one day the taxpayers are going to be called upon to pay the bill.

Mr. Peters: What about the cost of security and the minister's ideas as to its value?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): We do not seem to have any problem at the moment. We do, of course, collect knives and articles of that kind from luggage. I do not think Canada is the most dangerous spot. The United States may be. After all, it is easy to come from the United States to Canada, and we do not want Canada to become a haven for hijackers. This leaves us with the necessity of putting some kind of security measures into place. I can tell hon.

members that I am one who is probably the most allergic to these searches. Each time I come through, they do not even recognize me and I am screened like the others. When the hon. member talks about ten members of the RCMP in Thunder Bay or Sudbury—

Mr. Peters: North Bay.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): They were there accidentally.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Or because the hon. member was there! I know that in Montreal, though it is not as big as that city, I never see more than two at the same time, and I go there every week. In Toronto I have never seen more than two or three. Some are teaching, and some are backing up those who are making the search.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Chairman, I have a series of questions which may not seem important to the minister but which loom rather large in my constituency, which depends so heavily on communications facilities. At the outset though, may I say I fully endorse the security measures being taken at airports throughout our country. If I had any complaint to make it would be against the stupidity of members of parliament, of all people, trying to test the system. All that has done is bring the security personnel down around our necks. I find myself now being recognized and singled out for a more thorough search than ever before simply because of the stupidity of some hon. members.

I should like to ask the minister to give me a status report on the terminal building at Whitehorse, which has been on the book for so many years but which has still not got off the ground. I want to ask the minister why his department is phasing out the radio ranges in the remoter areas where, in my view, they are still vitally needed. The latest announcement concerns the elimination of radio ranges in Whitehorse and Tasland and the replacement of those ranges by non-directional beacons. The beacons are fine for getting from one point to another but they help very little in getting down through cloud to a safe landing.

Would the minister inform me as to the status of the installation of emergency locater transmitters in aircraft registered for use above the 60th parallel? I believe the time has passed when the law requires installation of ELTs in all aircraft operating in sparsely settled areas. Has this been accomplished?

I want the minister to give me a report with respect to a matter which was mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, that is, the setting up of an independent body for the purpose of investigating aircraft accidents. This has been promised, and it is long overdue. I know the minister is in favour of it. It simply does not look right, for example, in the case of the last fatal aircraft accident in the north in which Panarctic was involved, that one of the major shareholders of the company, the government, should be the accident investigating body.

I want to ask the hon. gentleman when new and improved navigational aids will be provided at the airfield at Faro where traffic demands an IFR facility. I wish to complain vigorously about the placing of electric power lines across the Yukon River at Whitehorse across the only available stretch of water which can be used for emergency landings by aircraft which have developed trouble on take-off from Schwatka Lake. These wires prevent safe take-offs and landings on that admirable stretch of river which is so essential to safe operating out of the lake terminal at Whitehorse.

I want to ask him, too, to exert whatever influence he may have with his colleague the Minister of Finance to get rid of that 10 per cent tax which has been placed on all new aircraft being imported into Canada for private owners, under the guise of some sort of fuel conservation plan. I believe there is not a member here familiar with general aviation who would object to the removal of this tax. Putting it in a more positive way, I believe every member, in all parties, with any knowledge of the general aviation industry, opposes the continuation of this tax. The minister should exert whatever influence he can to get it removed, because to an area such as ours where aircraft are so vital for getting around the country, it means a good deal to us to have 10 per cent added on to the cost of an aircraft.

I want to register my complaint, in what I hope will be taken as a non-bigoted fashion, in regard to the debate now going on with respect to the use of French and English in aircraft communications, air-to-air and air-to-ground. I think this can only have one result, namely, the impairment of safety standards in air transport. There is an international language of the air, and this country has been a signatory to it through ICAO for years now, and that language is English. If it were French, then it would be French; but it so happens that before the real debate on bilingualism developed in this country English was made the international language for air transport, and it should remain that way.

There are two accidents that can be directly attributable to the confusion caused recently over which language to use in the minister's own province. It is ludicrous to think that we may have French as well as English in air transport in Canada. This would mean rewriting, for instance, the international phonetic alphabet, which is now a combination of Latin and English words, which to me is silly.

If this were carried the whole way, we might find Air Canada and other international airline pilots doing cockpit checks in both official languages, which I think would be silly indeed. We should stick to safety standards and forget about the bilingualism debate so far as air transport is concerned.

I would also ask the minister to bring me up to date with respect to the rail studies in which the CNR is involved, so far as transportation in the Yukon territory is concerned. Studies have been undertaken in conjunction with other carriers and I should like to know whether those studies are ready to be reported; if not, when they will be reported; and what the feasibility is of interior rail into the Yukon connecting with the south.

Finally I want to register a complaint about telecommunications, something which falls within this minister's jurisdiction. His colleague, one of the "Three Musketeers", the Minister of Communications, came up to the Yukon on a business visit a short while ago and, I will not say as a result of the visit, but coincidentally after he left, telephone rates went up. Telephone services in certain areas were discontinued, and other operators got bills that they had never received before for their telephone services.

The minister does not know about this. I was hoping he would be here, as he was this afternoon, so he would be made aware of it. I have written to him, but I dare say my letters never get to his level in the ministry.

There are emergency telephone services operated by CN Telecommunications which are now being cut out. These telephone services provide a very essential service. One might run across a highway in the Yukon where there has been an accident and there is no way of communicating and getting medical or other aid. These telephone services should remain for emergencies, if nothing else.

I want here to register a personal objection. Because all parts of the north are not blessed with dial telephones or the push button type, in the remoter areas we have to use radio telephone service. One of the most common in use is the single sideband SBX-11. A unit like this would require an initial investment of about $1,000, which the owner has to shell out in order to provide himself with communications. In my own case I have one in one of the remoter areas of the Yukon, and I use this unit for passing on weather information to the minister's department and for passing on information regarding lost aircraft, both to his department and to the RCMP—all for nothing as far as I am concerned.

I have now been told that in order to carry my identifier on the books of his department—that, in radio communications terms, is the telephone number, which in my case is Sierra Queen 950—I have to pay $7 a month. I think that is carrying bureaucracy a little too far. It seems to me that I should be charging for the service that I have been rendering his department, which will cost a good deal more in terms of saving time and money than what his department is charging me, $7 a month. One little vital piece of information that could be passed over my unit could save his department and the government thousands and thousands of dollars spent on searches.

If it is the intention of his department, or of CN Telecommunications, to insist upon a rental for my identifier to use CN-T facilities for telephone service, then I will discontinue the service, and I know of dozens of people like me who will do the same. Instead they will not carry CN identifiers; they will carry identifiers and communicate with mining companies and people in the air transport business that do not charge them for doing so.

Having said that, I do not expect any lengthy answers tonight, but generally speaking I think the minister's department is doing, apart from the few exceptions I have mentioned, an adequate job in the north. I extend to him a personal invitation as minister, having national responsibilities, to visit the Yukon and take a first hand look at the operations of his department there. I should like him to be my personal guest and I will show him things that I am sure will surprise him.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Madam Chairman, I thank the hon. gentleman for his last words. It does not happen very often that we in this chamber feel we are in a civilized world, so it was good to hear that. I would not cross the floor for it, but it was nice anyway.

I will not be able in two minutes to answer all the hon. member's questions. Some are a little too technical. I am not highly specialized in directional and non-directional beacons. I happen to know what they are, but I do not know enough about them to make a speech in the House and to say whether the hon. member is right or wrong. Perhaps tomorrow I can say something about that matter.

As far as an independent accident board is concerned, the hon. member is right. We are exercising pressure on the government House leader to bring in legislation as soon as possible to set up an impartial board that will inquire into causes of accidents. The accident he referred to indicates that we need an independent body, not because I think anything irregular happened but because at the time everyone felt a little uneasy. We will do what we can here in co-operation with the other House leaders.

As for the rate study, as the hon. member knows, it has been completed. We know it is feasible to have a railway going up the Mackenzie valley.

Mr. Nielsen: What about the one for the Yukon?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I understand that study is not yet completed. The other one is, but the one for the Yukon is on its way and is about to be completed.

With regard to the use of English and French, that is a debate in itself. It is too delicate a subject on which to throw out a few words just before ten o'clock. This would risk giving a false interpretation of what the hon. member said, or a false interpretation of what I think should happen in this regard.

If the hon. member does not mind, I will call it ten o'clock. I hope tomorrow to be in a position to answer the technical points he has raised.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: It being ten o'clock, consideration of the estimates of the Department of Transport in committee of the whole is interrupted in accordance with the provisions of Standing Order 7.

Progress reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Pursuant to the provisions of Section 9 of Standing Order 58 the committee of the whole will continue and conclude consideration of the estimates of the Department of Transport at the next sitting of the House.

Adjournment Debate

FISHERIES—EXCLUSION OF SOME AREAS OF NEWFOUNDLAND FROM COMPENSATION PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Madam Speaker, may I say that the debate tonight is on a matter that I feel has been an exercise in dereliction of duty on the part of a federal-provincial committee appointed by both levels of government, that is, the federal Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland, to investigate the effects of ice damage on the west coast of Newfoundland in the year 1974 which destroyed many hundreds of lobster traps, and in turn resulted in the loss of livelihood for many hundreds of fishermen.

I would ask on behalf of these aggrieved fishermen how, in the name of fairness, the committee could declare certain zones on the west coast of Newfoundland which they determined should qualify, to the exclusion of other areas where it has become obvious that ice damage also existed, damage as serious in nature as that in those zones declared should qualify by the committee?

The damage existed along a coastline of some 300 to 400 miles in an almost straight line from Cape John in the southern part of the west coast to the most northerly part known as Cape Norman, yet that committee, in its questionable wisdom, declared an area almost half way between the two points, from Cape St. Gregory to Cape Norman; in other words, it declared an imaginary line which is not only questionable but smacks of discrimination against certain groups of fishermen. The committee acted as judge and jury without even the common courtesy of giving the said fishermen the opportunity to question that decision.

In the thrust of my effort to find out the basis for the declaration of the qualifying zones it has been impossible for me to get fair answers, beyond the normal bureaucratic answers from both levels of government that the decision was made by a federal-provincial committee. This is not good enough and is entirely unacceptable.

This unacceptability prompted me to investigate the ice conditions which existed during the 1974 lobster season from dates before, during, and well into the lobster season. I am satisfied as a result of Ministry of Transport reports, which I have today sent to the Minister of State (Fisheries) (Mr. LeBlanc), that there is evidence which shows beyond a shadow of doubt that ice conditions in the excluded area were as fierce or, if not as fierce, were such that they warranted consideration for compensation which heretofore has been denied those fishermen in the Bay of Islands, Port au Port and Bay St. George areas.

I have at hand ice condition reports for 17 days, from April 16, 1974, four days before the April 20 lobster season opening, to May 14, some 28 days into the season, and during a period when the execution of the lobster fisheries is at its best.

Let me put on record just a few of these reports. On April 18, just two days before the season opened, there was close pack ice from Cape St. George along the west coast of Newloundland, which is right in the middle of the excluded zone. On April 22, the west coast of Newfoundland remained congested from Cape St. George northward, two days after the opening of the season and after the laying of traps. On April 25 and 26, the report states that congestion of ice remained in the areas of Cape St. George, St. Georges Bay and Corner Brook. The report states that on April 29 there were strings and patches of ice in St. Georges Bay. On May 1 there was open pack ice in St. Georges Bay from Port au Port peninsula to Bay of Islands, on shore ice drift was increasing the ice concentration to open pack with a narrow strip of close pack ice across the entrance to the bay. On May 2 the report states that the west coast of Newfoundland remained heavily congested from Cape St. George, and with onshore winds this could cause some concern to west coast ports for the next week or ten days.

Finally, I will use only one more example of the report of May 10 which stated that open to very open pack ice was found north of the Port au Port peninsula extending 60 miles west of south head. The strait of Belle Isle was not recommended for commercial navigation at this time.

It is obvious then, Madam Speaker, that the reports from which I read substantiate the conditions which existed. They confirm that the committee was lax in its duty to declare the zones where damage occurred, and to support the requests of the fishermen in the area of concern. I hope the minister, who I know will be sympathetic, and his parliamentary secretary will review the reports that I have sent to him, and will cause a further investigation to be carried out and a review of the facts. If unfairness existed, I am sure he will not only rectify the situation but demand an ccounting by the committee to determine the reasons for their decision which is not helping the fast deteriorating fishing industry. I hope the anser will be satisfactory, both to me and to the fishermen in the areas concerned.

Mr. Len Marchand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member. He made his comments in a manner which, as usual, has been frank and informative. I think the hon. member made some new points tonight when he said that perhaps some errors have been overlooked by the provincial government and the federal government. I can assure him that the new information he has brought to the attention of the minister and the House tonight will be thoroughly investigated.

I know it has always been the position of the Minister of State (Fisheries) (Mr. LeBlanc) to be fair and just, and to do the right thing by the fishermen. That is the reputation he has gained so far as minister responsible for fisheries. I know he has been very co-operative in a number of ways and has tried to respond to the problems of fishermen.

However, I should say also that this disaster comes largely under provincial jurisdiction, a disaster which was declared as such by bhe province. The province must have made a request to the federal government for action, and we responded to the provincial request.

I should say in closing that we are always mindful of and willing to respond to provincial requests, but I hope we can take another look at this problem and perhaps we will find that some of the fishermen who have been left out should not have been left out of the program. We will really take another look at this.

[The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin).]

HEALTH—ASBESTOS LEVELS IN LAKE SUPERIOR—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO STOP ASBESTOS DISCHARGES AT SILVER BAY, MINNESOTA

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Madam Speaker, let me apologize for not being here promptly at ten o'clock, but I was at a committee meeting. I can recall one time, when I was younger, driving home from Calgary to my home in High River listening to the radio and knowing where two different radio station outposts were. I was amazed that what I thought was the same man could be heard within instants on two different radio stations. I was not aware then that you could record and can announcements, as did that man. I cannot move as quickly as he did in getting from committee to the House, and I apologize for being late. I hope I did not cause too much concern in the House.

My question relates to a question raised on April 17 by me with the Acting Minister of the Environment or the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde). I raise it again now in the adjournment debate not so much because of the substance of the reply but because of the attitude toward the House and toward serious questions on matters of human health and the environment which was displayed by the Minister of National Health and Welfare in his answers.

My question was:

What immediate action are the federal officials taking to stop asbestos discharges at Silver Bay, Minnesota which it has recently been revealed are leading to asbestos levels in Lake Superior which are higher than allowable and which United States scientists consider to be dangerously high?

The Minister of National Health and Welfare replied that I should make my representations to my colleagues in the Ontario government, since the health aspect of water quality is controlled by provincial and municipal health departments in Canada.

What the minister did by that partisan answer was to try to avoid the clear responsibility which the Government of Canada had for asbestos discharges which occurred outside the jurisdiction of Ontario and outside the jurisdiction of Canada directly but within the jurisdiction of the International Joint Commission, and which were raising the prospects of very serious damage to human health in the Great Lakes region, and particularly in Lake Superior.

The escalation of reported concentrations of asbestos in Lake Superior has risen from a point where, three years ago, it was not considered to be dangerous to where, today, it is considered to be very dangerous to human health, according to the records we had in our hand when that exchange occurred here in the House of Commons. An International Joint Commission report filed in February of this year indicated that asbestos fibres from industrial sources were contaminating drinking water in communities in the whole Great Lakes basin, and indeed the report which prompted my question indicated that the estimates of the IJC study were very much less than the danger appeared to be from the concentrations which were found by qualified researchers in existence in Lake Superior. It was clear that there were dangers.

It is acknowledged even by the Minister of National Health and Welfare in a letter to my colleague, the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick), that there is a danger of disabling but non malignant disease of the lung from asbestos concentrations. He went on to say:

It is also known that asbestos workers are more likely to die from cancers of the lung and gastro-intestinal tract than the average individual. More recently, mesothelioma, a relatively rare but highly malignant tumour of the pleural and peritoneal linings, has been strongly associated with exposure to asbestos.

Clearly there are some very real concentrations and possibilities of danger, and even lethal danger, to human health. It is not a matter to dismiss with partisan references or with directions to seek help in other jurisdictions, because there is clearly in the jurisdiction of the Government of Canada under the IJC generally a responsibility to care for the health of Canadians who might be affected by asbestos emanations.

I hope that in answering tonight the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Marchand)—and I know his minister was not in the House when the question was asked—will take this opportunity to outline the extent of action which the Government of Canada is now taking within its own clear jurisdiction to deal with harmful concentrations of asbestos in the whole of the Great Lakes basin.

This problem was pointed out three months ago by the International Joint Commission, and particularly in the area of Lake Superior, where it has been suggested by recognized and responsible experts that the concentrations might be lethally higher than that pointed out by the IJC study in February.

I hope the parliamentary secretary when he answers will also indicate what action the Government of Canada intends to take regarding the possibility of asbestos contamination in Quebec and elsewhere in Canada, and I hope that subsequently when matters of this kind, which relate directly to the jurisdiction of the Canadian government and directly to the health of individual Canadian citizens, are raised in the House of Commons, we will not be again exposed to a display of that kind of partisanship, and the attempt to hide behind provincial jurisdiction which was shown by the Minister of National Health and Welfare when this very important question was first raised on April 17.

Mr. Len Marchand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, I hope the hon. member does not feel that I can answer all the questions he has raised in the three minutes allotted to me, but I would like to refer him to a statement I made on the same subject in response to a question raised by the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McRae). I made the statement on April 29, 1975, that there are some conflicts with regard to both the type of fibres and the fibre counts in samples taken in Lake Superior by the different groups studying this problem, which have made the matter a little difficult.

At the present time the Canada Centre for Inland Waters at Burlington is co-operating with the Ontario ministry of environment to conduct inter laboratory comparisons of a common sample from the Thunder Bay municipal water supply. This sample is being split between Canada Centre for Inland Waters, McMaster University, Ontario Research Foundation and Lakehead University. We anticipate this inter laboratory comparison will assist us in establishing norms for standardization of analysis, which has been part of our problem.

Many people in responsible positions have carried out studies on asbestos fibres. The Great Lakes Research Advisory Board of the IJC began preparing a summary report on the status of research investigations on asbestos in the Great Lakes, and particularly in Lake Superior, in March, 1974. The Department of the Environment was conducting studies to evaluate the possibility of transboundary movement of asbestos fibres in Lake Superior in 1973. McMaster University was also involved in studies in 1973. The Ontario Research Foundation and the Ontario department of the environment have also been carrying out studies of asbestos fibres. This research into the distribution of asbestos fibres has been ongoing and will continue to be so.

AIR TRANSPORT—SERVICE FOR SOUTHWESTERN MANITOBA AND SOUTHEASTERN SASKATCHEWAN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Madam Speaker, my comments are actually a continuation of our discussion on transportation. I am pleased to see the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIsaac), who is also the member for Battleford-Kindersley, present as the subject I wish to raise tonight concerns his part of the country as well as my own.

My comments arise out of the question I put to the minister on April 30 with respect to an announcement that was promised by the minister on March 10 as being forthcoming by April 10 in regard to a study undertaken by Air Canada, at the request of the province of Saskatchewan for jet service into eastern Saskatchewan and western Manitoba.

Unfortunately the minister misunderstood the point I was making, and I think he replied to what he thought was a question on the experimental commuter service which is about to be launched into western Manitoba and eastern Saskatchewan. This is a service that will be sponsored by the Department of Transport in co-operation with the province of Manitoba. It is an experimental service of only two years duration and it is hard to fit it into any category that exists now with respect to announced air policy. It is not STOL and it does not seem to be third level air carrier service; it is an experimental commuter which will at least give some minimum air service in these important developing areas of Canada.

The point I wish to make is that this experimental commuter service will be just as ineffective as the other commuter services that have been tried in this area, such as the most recent one, the midwest service, which was withdrawn over a year ago, unless it is linked to a jet service which provides ready access to the rural parts of western Manitoba and eastern Saskatchewan, flying east and west.

In western Manitoba the airport located just north of the city of Brandon would be the centre of focus. Brandon is the second largest city in the province of Manitoba and it has been without air service of any kind for over a year. It has a new air terminal all ready to go. I think that what has to be accomplished by the Department of Transport is a two pronged attack, a commuter service feeding into the Brandon airport, and connecting with an ongoing jet service that is now under study by Air Canada.

[Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo).]

Perhaps when the parliamentary secretary replies he can indicate if the study has been completed, if Air Canada will be providing the service, and if Air Canada plans once more to resume regional area responsibilities. Originally Air Canada had this responsibility, but relinquished it to the designated air carrier, TransAir. Will such service, if assumed by Air Canada, be part of the service already available from Regina to Winnipeg, and to the east, with a stop-over at Brandon airport? Of course,, we shall want service in reverse order going west. It seems to me that such service, both east and west, is vitally important if the developing areas of Canada are to have the high quality of air service they need.

Mr. Cliff McIssac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) covered two or three points in the question he raised this evening.

As the hon. member is no doubt well aware, the federal government has participated with the governments of Manitoba and Saskatchewan in helping those two provinces set up a demonstration project with two Saunders ST 27 aircraft, to the tune of $2 million for the aircraft and another $1.35 million for the improvement of facilities at points those aircraft will serve.

The hon. member referred to the study being conducted by Air Canada with respect to air service in Saskatchewan. He made reference to this matter in an earlier question addressed to the minister. That study is the result of a statement made by the minister and, indeed, perhaps by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), during the last election campaign. The statement was to the effect that if provincial governments require the help of Air Canada and of the Ministry of Transport to look into particular air needs, help will be forthcoming. Following that, the government of Saskatchewan asked Air Canada to study its air requirements. It is my understanding that this study is not finished yet. Even though the Ministry of Transport is co-operating with Air Canada and the province of Saskatchewan, the study is being made at the request of the province, and it is up to the province to make the results public. I presume that perhaps it will.

So far as Air Canada providing jet service to the city of Brandon is concerned, I am not aware that Air Canada plans at this moment to provide this service at this point in time. I am not aware if the study being conducted by the government of Saskatchewan will include the possibiity of jet service per se to Brandon, but I am sure that it will be related to air service which will connect Brandon with that whole general area.

As the hon. member says quite rightly, the actual service being provided by this experimental commuter service does not seem to be a third level of service. Hopefully it will be a worth while experiment, will promote good air service to parts of Canada about which the hon. member is concerned, and will suggest further improvements we can make in this area.

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

SUGGESTED FULL DISCLOSURE OF DETAILS RELATING TO CONSTRUCTION OF SWIMMING POOL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise to propose a motion under the terms of Standing Order 43 arising out of the incredible admissions made in the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates last night by Mr. H. Stewart on behalf of the Privy Council and the Prime Minister's office concerning the swimming pool under construction at the Prime Minister's residence. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

With reference to the shocking disclosure that no one in government knows the identity of donors of the $200,000 swimming pool at the Prime Minister's official residence, that only the Minister of National Revenue could determine this from income tax deductions taken by individuals with such information being private and privileged, that no investigation whatsoever was carried out by the Privy Council or Prime Minister's offices as to whether improprieties or conflict of interest factors exist in this situation, that a group of unidentified persons—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Standing Order 43 permits the hon. member to make a brief description of the urgency of the matter, not to debate the question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cossitt: The wording I was reading, Mr. Speaker, was the motion itself. There are about three lines left:

—whose motives must therefore be considered unknown have been permitted to engage a contractor and to build on government property, the House therefore requests immediate and full disclosure by the Prime Minister of all hidden details surrounding this very peculiar affair.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43 and therefore requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO DATE OF BUDGET

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. When the unemployment figures were released about a month ago, the minister said he would be bringing in a new budget as early as he could and he hoped it would be by the end of May. Since the figures released today only confirm the depressing unemployment situation, could the minister now give the House the date of the budget or is he in the middle rather than the final stage of his consensus talks?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I want to consult with the Prime Minister and my colleagues before announcing a date. I still hope it will be toward the end of May.

● (1410)

MINISTER'S VIEW OF RESTRICTIVE MONETARY POLICY AS OPTION TO CONSENSUS ON RESTRAINT IN VIEW OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of the substantial unemployment which exists now, is the minister really serious when he suggests that a highly restrictive budget and highly restrictive monetary policies are really an option to this consensus program, or to compulsory income and price controls, as he seemed to suggest when he spoke last Friday in Sarnia?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman can draw his own assumptions from the speech. What I said in Sarnia was that, with the escalation of production costs in Canada, as compared with those of the United States and other competitors, we would have to face reality and I would be exercising, evaluating, rather, a range of options before bringing down the budget. As to the tone of the budget, I hope the hon. member will see that tone when the budget is brought down.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I will do my best in that respect. Does the minister not recall that on February 13 last he said, in response to questions, that he did not want the working men and women of this country to feel that he was trading off their ability to keep pace with the economy against their job security. He said, as recorded on page 3191 of Hansard:

The problem put in those terms, is a bit too stark in economic terms, and it is not the way I like to proceed in human terms.

What developments caused the minister to adopt a position of stark choices, as he said in Sarnia on Friday that "the stark nature of the choice confronting us is only reinforced by the experience of the United Kingdom over the past year or so?" What caused the minister to turn 180 degrees?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I recall those words, and those words echoed similar statements I made in the November budget, when it became apparent in the third and particularly fourth quarters of 1974, and more so in the first quarter of 1975, that our cost performance was deteriorating as compared with the performance of our competitors. I said in Sarnia that the so-called traditional trade-off between unemployment and inflation might not be quite as apt, because if we do not get our costs under control—even in the event of a recovery in the United States—and if our cost ratios remain the same, we will not be able to penetrate that market nor even defend our own market; therefore one of the prerequisites to growing employment or the avoidance of massive unemployment in this country consists of bringing costs in this country into some sort of range which is comparable with that of the United States.

Mr. Stanfield: Why did you not say that during the election campaign?

INFLATION—INQUIRY WHETHER MINISTER READ COVERING LETTER AND DOCUMENTS SENT TO CANADIAN LABOUR CONGRESS SEEKING CONSENSUS ON RESTRAINT

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. As two documents, one entitled "Proposals for the First Year of Consensus," and the other entitled" Machinery for Administering a Voluntary Restraint Program" which were sent out by the chairman of the inflation secretariat just before the CLC meeting of last week, were described by the Minister of Finance on Thursday as outlines of the government's current thinking, would the minister indicate if he read the covering letter and the final wording of the documents before they were sent out? Yes or no.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker. That letter was sent out by the secretariat in charge of the consensus process.

INFLATION—INQUIRY WHETHER INDUSTRY MINISTER READ COVERING LETTER AND DOCUMENTS SENT CANADIAN LABOUR CONGRESS SEEKING CONSENSUS ON RESTRAINT

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce? As the Minister of Finance did not read the final documentation, did the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who must be as concerned as the Minister of Finance about our balance of payments deficit, read the covering letter and the final form of the documents before they were sent out? Yes, or no.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Three o'clock.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order arising from the hon. gentleman's question.

Some hon. Members: Three o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is the rule, and the desire of the House, that points of order should be, if possible, deferred until three o'clock. However, I will hear the nature of the point of order so that I may, as I did recently with the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, be in a position to decide whether it is preferable to hear the point now or defer it until three o'clock. Therefore, I must hear it.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my point of order arises directly from the hon. gentleman's supplementary question. When I said I had not read the covering letter, I said just that; I did not say I had not read the documentation. The hon. member rephrased the question in wider terms when putting it to my colleague.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for York-Simcoe is recognized on a supplementary.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, may I address a final supplementary question to the Minister of Finance? Would he answer yes or no: did he read the final documentation that was sent out?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

UNEMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT PLANS TO COUNTERACT—REQUEST FOR ESTIMATE OF COST TO ECONOMY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance arising out of the unemployment figures released today which indicate that about 800,000 Canadians are unemployed. Unemployment is now running at the rate of 8.1 per cent which is even higher than at the worst point of the deflationary program of April 1971. In light of the request by the CLC that the government come forward, as part of its package of plans to deal with the economy, with some suggestions to deal specifically with unemployment, does the government intend to do that or has it already done this with the CLC?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, obviously unemployment was a matter that was thoroughly discussed in previous meetings with the executive of the CLC and yesterday. The response of the government will have to await the budget.

Mr. Broadbent: Will the minister advise whether his department has made an estimate of the cost to the economy as a whole of maintaining an unemployment level in the neighbourhood of 8 per cent. Has any estimate been done of the cost to the economy for the first four months of this year for the unemployment we have experienced?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I will have to check if we have the figures in terms of lost production and lost income. However, in terms of the incalculable human cost with regard to careers and the human consequence of unemployment, that is impossible to calculate.

POSSIBILITY OF PROVISION IN BUDGET TO INCREASE SUPPLY OF HOUSING

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I will take the minister up on his concern with human costs. Without giving the details of the budget he is going to bring forward at the end of this month or early in June, can he give some assurance there will be a specific component in there to deal with a significant increase in the supply of housing?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has been in this House for a number of years. He knows how difficult it would be for me to telegraph the budget.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CONSULTATIONS WITH QUEBEC MINISTER ON JURISDICTION

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Labour.

Following the representations made by his Quebec counterpart, to the effect that the federal Minister of Labour should discuss the various cases of projects carried out in the province of Quebec by the federal government, would the hon. minister be in a position to advise the House whether the study of these cases has been completed and, in the affirmative, whether he can inform the House of the findings?

[English]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member could be a little more explicit as to the source of his quotation from the Quebec minister of labour. I have indicated to him recently that I will be happy to meet with him. We are thinking of bringing all labour ministers together later in the year.

[Translation]

Mr. Allard: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

For his information, I should like to indicate to the hon. minister that the project is the one which is carried out in Quebec in connection with the flour mills and is under the federal government jurisdiction.

[English]

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Yes, Mr. Speaker. On the jurisdictional question, now that the hon. member has been a little more explicit, I have advised the Quebec minister of labour of the federal position. If he wishes to meet further with respect to it, I would be only too happy to meet with him.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT—PERIOD OF TIME BEFORE GOVERNMENT ACTION TO COUNTERACT

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. As the Prime Minister stated during the last election that he did not intend to fight inflation on the backs of the unemployed, preferring to wrestle it to the ground instead, I would ask him how long the government intends to allow unemployment to remain well in excess of 7 per cent as a means of trying to combat inflation, and when it intends to bring in effective stimuli to get the economy back on its feet and thus bring unemployment to a more tolerable level?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): That is a very constructive question. As to the first part, the time will be as short as possible. As to the second part my answer must, of course, parallel that given by the Minister of Finance in connection with the budget.

Mr. Hees: That is no answer at all, but it is refreshing to find the Prime Minister not trying to be Bob Hope, Jr. again today. Does that answer mean that the economy has simply got out of control, and that the reason unemployment is remaining at such a high level is that the policies of the government are making it impossible for Canadian products to be competitive with those produced in other countries with the result that jobs are going to people in those countries instead of to Canadians?

An hon. Member: Give us a quick answer, yes or no.

Mr. Hees: Obviously, that is what the Prime Minister is trying to say.

Oral Questions

FINANCE

POSSIBLE ADOPTION OF RESTRICTIVE FISCAL POLICY IF NO ADHERENCE TO CONSENSUS GUIDELINES ON RESTRAINT

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I have a question supplementary to that recently asked by my leader.

An hon. Member: Which one?

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, we have only one leader in the Progressive Conservative party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crouse: My question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Considering that the first priority of the minister's November 18 budget was, and I quote, "action to sustain demand" and that in his announcement of a new budget he indicated that the creation of jobs was a priority, can the hon. gentleman tell us whether he is seriously considering a resort to a restrictive fiscal policy, as the minister said Mr. Healey had done in the United Kingdom, if the consensus he seeks is not adhered to?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): The hon. gentleman will just have to wait and see the tone of the budget.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REASON FOR NOT PERMITTING MICHAEL PITFIELD TO APPEAR BEFORE COMMITTEE

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. It arises out of a series of questions last week relating to the appearance of the Secretary of the Privy Council before a parliamentary committee. I am sure the Prime Minister will accept this question in the spirit in which it is asked. Is his refusal to permit the Secretary to appear before a committee based on constitutional or upon historical grounds? What is the real reason behind not permitting him to appear?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The practice is that ministers or members of parliament appear before committees and are supported by the proper officials. In this case, any questions related to the planning, orientation or administration of the office would be answered by a very senior official. The Secretary of the Cabinet himself has traditionally not appeared before parliamentary committees and this, I suggest, is for a constitutional reason—it is that cabinet discussions are privy to the cabinet. They are not subject to questioning in the House or outside. I believe it is for this reason that secretaries to the cabinet never have, as such, appeared before parliamentary committees, and since I am a traditionalist I am following the practice,

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. The reason I wish to pursue this matter—and I am sure the right hon. gentleman understands the seriousness of it—is that in reality the conclusion that the Prime Minister is putting forth seems so close to the position put forth by former President Nixon in the Watergate case that—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, I tried to prejudice my remarks—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has a supplementary question; would he be good enough to put it.

Mr. Gillies: I should have said, of course, "preface my remarks". It seems to me that the question that follows is this. If we become concerned about executive privilege, which has been a matter of grave concern in the United States during the past, then if we take the literal interpretation of what the Prime Minister says, how will it be possible for members of parliament to bring before committees officers or people involved in the legislative function or the administrative function of this country? I think it is a very important issue in light of the apparent situation.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a very important question and it lies basically in the understanding of the difference between the American system and ours. Ours is a system of ministerial responsibility. Officials are not responsible to committees.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Where was the minister last night?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, I realize that the hon. member on the front bench is asking the question seriously, but obviously the rearguard is not very interested in the answer.

REQUEST FOR DEBATE ON RIGHT OF COMMITTEES TO EXAMINE PUBLIC SERVANTS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the government House leader. As this is only one of several instances—the latest of which occurred yesterday—of the exercise of executive privilege to prevent civil servants from giving evidence before standing committees, would the government House leader consult the other House leaders in order to try and arrange a debate in the House to find out exactly what are the rights of this House in regard to examining public servants?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I should have thought that the principle of ministerial responsibility was widely accepted in all parts of this House. Indeed, when the right hon. member for Prince Albert was Prime Minister, the secretary of the cabinet did not appear before parliamentary committees either.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Greenwood on a supplementary.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I listen to ministers on the government side of the House but I was unable to catch the golden words of the hon. gentleman. I wish he would repeat them. The only portion I heard was the reference to myself, and I should like to know what the reference was.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to repeat what I said. I was saying that the principle of ministerial responsibility was, I hoped, accepted on all sides of the House; and I said that when the right hon. member for Prince Albert was Prime Minister, the secretary of the cabinet did not appear before parliamentary committees.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that is absolutely true and correct. But what is happening today is that the government of Canada is hiding information by refusing to allow those civil servants who can tell the story to come before committees.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—SUGGESTED EARLY RECOGNITION OF NEW REGIME

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I understand that the British government has announced its intention to give full recognition to the provincial revolutionary government of South Viet Nam. While I appreciate that we in this country do not inevitably follow the British precedent, will the government give urgent consideration to such recognition, especially—

● (1430)

An hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Brewin: Just a minute and I will tell you why.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member could do that at some other time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, the "why" is incorporated in the last sentence of my question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think I understand what the hon. member was getting at even though he did not have a chance to complete his question. The government is presently giving urgent consideration to this question and is aware that the British government has taken or is about to take the action to which the hon. member refers.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, will the government, in giving attention to this question, also take into account that such recognition is important if we are to discuss directly with the de facto government of South Viet Nam Canada's participation in international aid and the reconstruction of that war torn country?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker. That would obviously be a possible subject for discussion when and if active recognition is entered into.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

BERGER COMMISSION—REQUEST FOR DIRECT FUNDING OF NORTHERN ASSESSMENT GROUP

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, despite the temptation to clarify the Prime Minister's obvious misunderstanding of what went on in the committee last night—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): —the deliberate misunderstanding of what went on, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Since Mr. Justice Berger has just announced that his budget will contribute $100,000 to the Northern Assessment Group, which would indicate that in Mr. Justice Berger's view the inquiry requires a long-term assessment which only the Northern Assessment Group can provide, will the minister accept that view and provide direct federal funding for the essential research by that group, or compensate the budget of Mr. Justice Berger?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as you will recall, this is a suggestion I made two or three weeks ago in this House, that Mr. Justice Berger could possibly find the money within his budget to assist, in this case, the native people to acquire the services of members of the Northern Assessment Group. I am delighted he has found that he is able to squeeze his budget to that extent.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct the attention of the minister to today's question and not one at issue three weeks ago. I would ask him whether it is the intention of the government of Canada to contribute directly to the research of the Northern Assessment Group or to compensate the Berger inquiry for moneys it has now allocated to that group so that the over-all activities of the Berger inquiry will not be limited or curtailed unnecessarily by the apparent desire of this government not to have that inquiry do its job?

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, to follow that along in sequence; firstly, it is not the intention of the government to contribute directly to the Northern Assessment Group; and secondly, we assume Judge Berger to be a competent and capable individual who has made the decision that he has these resources from the funds which are totally and completely provided by this government.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, is it still the position of the minister, as stated yesterday—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Oral Questions

BERGER COMMISSION—MINISTER'S VIEW OF ADEQUACY OF RESEARCH DONE BY NORTHERN ASSESSMENT GROUP

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Is it still the position of the minister, as stated yesterday at page 5672 of Hansard that it was his understanding that the research was done? I ask this in light of the fact that Mr. Justice Berger has now granted $100,000 from his own scarce funds which would indicate that in his view the necessary long-term research was not done. Is the minister still in disagreement with Mr. Justice Berger as to the adequacy of the long-term research that has been done by the Northern Assessment Group?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Personally, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that these are public funds being used and not those of Mr. Justice Berger. Secondly, as I indicated, this is a decision which he has taken in his wisdom, and also as I have indicated, it is not our policy to provide funds directly to the Northern Assessment Group. These funds last year were provided through Mr. Justice Berger for the original funding which was given to the Northern Assessment Group.

SOUTHEAST ASIA—SUGGESTED PROTEST AGAINST ACTIONS OF COMMUNISTS DURING TAKEOVER

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question relating to the one put by the hon. member for Greenwood to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. My question deals with the communist takeover of various countries including South Viet Nam, Cambodia and probably Laos. In light of the fact that the president of the United States has now disclosed in an official executive way the bloodbath that is going on during the communist takeover, and in light of the national press reports regarding the 5,000 refugees who lost their lives as the result of the sinking of a ship, has there been any thought by this government of making an official protest through the proper channels of the United Nations or otherwise in reference to this kind of conduct that is taking place during this communist takeover?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, I have already commented from time to time in the House in respect of events in South Viet Nam.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I am well aware that the minister has commented, but it seems to me he is now afraid to comment. I am asking whether his government has made any formal protest. If he is going to remain silent, it is obvious his government has made no protest, nor does it intend to protest.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman would specify in more clearcut terms exactly what the nature of the protest should be, it might be possible to answer his question.

[Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain).]

Mr. Woolliams: I was asking specifically about a protest in relation to the fact that there has been a bloodbath in Cambodia, as admitted by the president of the United States, and 5,000 refugees lost their lives as a result of the sinking of a ship. Surely, that kind of conduct against refugees calls for a protest by this government.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I believe I have stated in the House in the strongest possible terms—

Mr. Woolliams: In your terms.

Mr. MacEachen: —in the strongest possible terms our feelings of regret, indeed in much stronger terms than that, about the suffering which has been inflicted, as a result of this conflict, on innocent civilians, especially those who have been displaced as a result of this conflict and who are now of a refugee status. Obviously, the government of Canada has gone much further than that in opening its doors to refugees from Viet Nam, and in offering humanitarian assistance in every way it is possible for Canada to act effectively in this context.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INDUSTRY

AUTO PARTS—POSSIBLE CONSULTATIONS WITH UNITED STATES ON MEASURES TO COUNTERACT TRADE DEFICIT

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact the automotive parts trade with the United States for the first quarter of 1975 shows a deficit of $529 million, does the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce plan any discussion with his United States counterparts in relation to the auto pact to see what can be done to bring this valuable part of our economy into balance? Could the minister also advise us about the results of the studies of the effect of DISC for western hemisphere trading corporations on our automotive parts trade?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we have no specific plans for discussions with the Americans, but we do have plans to have discussions with the auto parts industry.

AUTO PARTS—LONG-TERM EFFECTS OF IMPORTS

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, in view of the continuing high level of unemployment in the automotive parts industry, could the minister advise us about the long-term effects of imports of automotive parts from developing countries, and can he justify the classification of Brazil, Argentina, Venezuela and Mexico as developing nations when the investment in the automotive industry and the production of units in those countries almost equals ours?

● (1440)

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I gave a full explanation of these particular measures before the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs last week. If the hon. member will take a look at the record, he will get the answer.

SUGGESTED PROCESSING OF SURPLUS EGGS AND POTATOES FOR USE IN FOOD AID PROGRAMS

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the honourable and humane Secretary of State for External Affairs. In light of Oxfam's recent purchase of surplus eggs from the Alberta Egg and Fowl Marketing Board, which have been processed for disaster relief in the East Indian states, would the minister consider adopting the suggestion of the manager of the egg board and look upon the plan as a pilot project for future Canadian aid programs, and will he also discuss with his colleague the Minister of Agriculture the progress being made on a program to process this year's surplus potato crop for food aid and thus avoid yet another shameful destruction of valued food stocks?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in view of the hon. member's preamble I will be happy to give very careful consideration to each of the points he has made.

BILINGUALISM

REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF REAL COST OF POLICY

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister.

The Commissioner of Official Languages, Mr. Keith Spicer, is of the opinion that the people of Canada should be made aware of the real cost of the bilingualism policy in Canada, of the expenditures related both indirectly and directly to this policy. Would the Prime Minister tell us whether the wish expressed by the Commissioner of Official Languages will be answered soon?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not recall the particular context in which this statement was made but, of course, it corresponds to the general position taken by the government, namely that the citizens, the taxpayers, are entitled to know how their tax dollar is spent. In principle, I agree with him. As for the details, I shall confer with the President of the Treasury Board to see whether there is any way to provide the hon. member with further details concerning the expenditures involved.

UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO COUNTERACT SITUATION IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Unemployment figures released today show an unadjusted unemployment rate for April for the Atlantic Provinces, excluding Prince Edward Island, of 14.6 per cent. What plans does the minister have for the critical task of job creation for this hard-pressed region, and especially the very hard-hit areas such as Newfoundland, Cape Breton and Northern New Brunswick?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I hope the budget when it is brought forward will recognize the regional pattern of the four Atlantic provinces. I echo the sentiments set forth by the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: One supplementary by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond.

Mr. Hogan: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry the Minister of Finance did not recognize this in his November budget. In 1971, when this government chose to fight inflation by wiping out the livelihoods of many working people in this country, the Atlantic provinces experienced an unemployment rate of 8.6 per cent—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a supplementary question would he put it?

Mr. Hogan: Yes, Mr. Speaker. How high will the minister allow the Unemployment rate to rise in the Atlantic region before we can get relief?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington.

CRIMINAL CODE

PROPOSED INCREASE IN PENALTIES FOR EXTORTION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. I am sure I voice the concern of all members about the alarming increase in the crime of extortion which is now prevalent in our country. Current press reports cite an increase—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member put his question.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Yes, Mr. Speaker. As a result of the prevalence of the crime of extortion in this country, preying mainly on the banking and financial professions, will the government and the judiciary immediately review this very serious situation and legislate to increase the penalties for such crimes in order to more severely punish and deter those who would commit them?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Well, Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to receive any positive suggestions from the hon. member, but it is my impression that there is a good deal of flexibility in the sentences which are available, and that the courts and judges can indeed increase these penalties if this matter becomes a more frequent problem. I think the question is more one of an enforcement problem and the facilities in that regard. I will be glad to receive any suggestions the hon. member has.

TRANSPORT

INQUIRY AS TO WHICH DEPARTMENT RESPONSIBLE FOR OPERATING COSTS OF SEVEN FALCON JETS

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In January the Minister of National Defence stated he would dispose of seven Falcon executive jets to cut costs. On Tuesday he told the committee that his department no longer has the seven jets in its budget but that the Ministry of Transport might include them in its fleet. Can the minister inform the House if the planes are now under his control?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Could he inform the House what department is paying the operating costs of these planes, and whether there is any saving to the taxpayer by shuffling executive jets from one department to another.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the aircraft are being operated by the Department of National Defence, but as I informed the committee they are not in the National Defence budget. Their cost will be carried by the government but the department which will carry that cost has not been determined at this time.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

POSSIBILITY OF INQUIRY UNDER CANADA LABOUR CODE INTO ACTIVITIES OF SEAFARERS' INTERNATIONAL UNION—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Labour. On May 1 the minister stated that he had just received material from the Minister of Justice showing that there may be enough evidence to form the basis for an inquiry into labour activities of the SIU under the Canada Labour Code or by using another option for conducting a further inquiry. Last week as well, he indicated he would make his decision known to this House within a few days. I would, therefore, like to ask the minister whether he has studied the Justice Minister's material and whether the information now justifies an inquiry under either the Canada Labour Code or under one of his stated options?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have studied the report of the Minister of Justice. I have taken the matter up with my colleagues now, and hope to have a decision which I can bring to the House perhaps by the end of this week.

FINANCE

REASON FOR DELAY IN ESTABLISHING FEDERAL MORTGAGE EXCHANGE CORPORATION

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Given the fact that yesterday the Prime Minister said he would inquire into the nature of the difficulties which have delayed the setting up of the Federal Mortgage Exchange Corporation for over a year and a half, would the minister say what these difficulties have been and when we can expect this corporation, designed to provide a secondary mortgage market, will be established.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the difficulty has been to find, first of all, a president and board of directors who were not already in a potential conflict of interest and yet had experience in the field. I hope we will be able to announce the board shortly.

ALLEGED WITHDRAWAL OF VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION FACILITIES FROM NATIVES OF TREATY STATUS—POSSIBLE CONTRAVENTION OF BILL OF RIGHTS

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Has a directive gone out from the minister's department to the Department of National Health and Welfare of the Province of Manitoba announcing that the vocational rehabilitation services of that department are to be withdrawn in respect of persons of treaty status.

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker. I am afraid I will have to look into it for the hon. member and get back to him.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, while the minister is investigating this matter, could he also determine whether the withdrawal of services would be contrary to the Canadian Bill of Rights?

Mr. Buchanan: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO DISSEMINATION OF INFORMATION ON HOUSING PROGRAM—DISCUSSION WITH ORGANIZATIONS ON NON-PROFIT PROVISION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs, and I welcome him back from his trip to Italy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marshall: Now that the minister has returned, I wonder if he would advise the House what action he is taking to disseminate the information on the three minor factors under the veterans housing program which he announced and which came into effect on May 1.

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member's question, today's press carries quite a dissemination of it, and also there will be further information released by the office of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. This will be in effect pretty soon.

Mr. Marshall: In view of the fact that the non-profit section of the program would require non-profit organizations to implement the building of apartments or housing for veterans, what action has the minister taken to discuss with veterans organizations, and particularly the Canadian Legion, the initiation of such programs on behalf of veterans?

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): The legion branches themselves have shown great interest, and some have already put forth some effort in this respect. Members of our department from various areas across the country have informed them where the information is available, where they can apply and what have you.

HOUSING PROGRAM—PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO INCLUDE REHABILITATION OF SUBSTANDARD HOUSES

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): One of the most important needs of veterans today is the rehabilitation of downgraded and substandard homes. Would the minister, in consultation with the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, consider amending the program announced to include a rehabilitation factor so that grants could be made available to veterans to upgrade their homes which are now substandard and which they cannot afford to fix themselves because of fixed incomes?

Hon. Daniel MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. This portion of it can certainly receive consideration, the same as other programs in the Department of Veterans Affairs which are always under consideration for further improvement.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

USE OF LEGITIMATE ENTERPRISES BY ORGANIZED CRIME—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General, and it may be supplementary to a question asked of the Minister of Justice a little while ago. In view of the fact that a tremendous amount of gutter money from organized crime in Canada is being laundered into so-called legitimate enterprise, what new initiatives are the minister's department and the RCMP taking to eliminate or reduce this grave economic and social peril to our country?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, that question would take me some time to answer, but I should tell the hon. member that we will be dealing with it this afternoon when I am before the justice committee with my department's estimates.

HARBOURS

MONTREAL—ABILITY OF MARITIME EMPLOYERS' ASSOCIATION TO MEET LOAN COMMITMENTS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Darmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Minister of Transport will not be shocked by my question. I want to ask about the financial obligations of the Maritime Employers' Association to both the government and the banks with respect to certain guarantees. I ask the minister whether the Maritime Employers' Association has approached the government with respect to their ability to meet their commitments to the banks, commitments which the government has guaranteed, and whether they are now in a position to continue with the retirement of that debt and to meet the interest and principal payments, in view of the very lengthy strike in the river ports.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, I cannot do it today, but I might be in a position to do it tomorrow. I know that the MEA was asking that we forgo the tax which was supposed to come back to the National Harbours Board in order to help the MEA meet its obligation, but I do not know what agreement has been reached, and by tomorrow I should be able to answer the hon. gentleman's question.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

REQUEST FOR DISCLOSURE OF NAMES OF DONORS OF SWIMMING POOL AT PRIME MINISTER'S RESIDENCE

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cossitt: In view of the disclosure to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates last night by a senior member of the Privy Council that no one in government knows the names of the donors to the $200,000 swimming pool at 24 Sussex Drive, and that no investigation was made of their background or connections to determine conflict of interest, will the Prime Minister now agree to full disclosure of all details concerning this affair?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I made it clear before that no one in the government, not even myself, knows the names, and therefore there cannot be any possible suggestion of conflict of interest.

Mr. Cossitt: What law or cabinet decision permits a group of persons unknown to the government or to parliament to enter upon government property, hire a contractor, dig a big hole—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Cossitt: —do thousands and thousands of dollars worth of work without their names and motives being known to the government or parliament? What authority does the Prime Minister have, without the authority of parliament, to order this particular—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for St. John's West.

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF VIOLATIONS OF ICNAF QUOTAS

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Fisheries). Some weeks ago I asked the minister a question regarding the ICNAF quotas and whether any countries violated those quotas, and if so, to what extent. The minister promised to tell the House at a later date. I wonder if he is now able to tell the House just what happened with regard to the quotas.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, the quotas from the beginning of the year, which is January, as far as I know have not yet been violated. There has been heavy fishing. We are keeping a careful eye on this. In fact, the DND vessel Annapolis boarded 12 Russian ships in the last few days; 10 Spanish ships were boarded and surveillance is quite effective.

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

Mr. Carter: My question was connected with last year's quotas, not this year's.

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): I will have to check into this and inform the hon. member.

INFLATION—RESPONSIBILITY FOR DISCUSSIONS SEEKING CONSENSUS ON RESTRAINT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister, who made it clear a number of months ago that the consensus program was under his direction. Is this program still under the direction of the Prime Minister, or now that it is not going so well, is the responsibility pinned on the Minister of Finance.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: He's handed it over to John.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Calgary Centre on a question of privilege.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, there was a development just prior to noon this morning in one of the standing committees which, when combined with answers given to questions raised by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) in the question period, gives me reason to ask the Chair's permission to consider this as notice of my intention to raise a question of privilege tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member ought to know that if events have taken place today which give rise to a question of privilege, he should raise it now.

Mr. Andre: I am prepared to do so, although I have not done the preparation I would have liked, But if that is the proper procedure, I will proceed at this point.

Mr. Speaker: There has to be some indication of what the question is. At the moment I have notice of a question of privilege but I have no idea with what it is connected.

Mr. Andre: My reason for giving notice is that I have not had the opportunity of giving the required notice according to my understanding of the rules, and in order not to preclude the possibility of raising this question tomorrow I give notice at this time.

Mr. Speaker: I think perhaps the hon. member misunderstands me. That is not the problem. In the past, when a member has found himself in a position where he wished to raise a question of privilege but needed time to prepare it, I have always taken the position that once having given notice he was freed of any difficulty about having raised it at the first opportunity. The only trouble is that the hon. member has not told me what the question of privilege is about. If he raises it tomorrow I will know what it relates to.

• (1500)

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege deals with the right of members of parliament to obtain information and to question officials and representatives of government. I am giving notice at this time of a substantive question of privilege to be raised tomorrow on this subject.

Order Paper Questions

BORROWING REQUIREMENTS FOR CAPITAL DEVELOPMENT

Question No. 2,076—Mr. Herbert:

1. With reference to the answer to Question No. 864, does the Minister of Finance intend to rely solely on discussions with provincial governments in order to attempt to regulate borrowing requirements for capital development purposes or is he considering any fiscal regulatory measures?

2. By what means will the borrowing priorities of the provincial governments be rated and is the government intending to impose any controls on the inflow of foreign capital?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): 1. The purpose of the annual federal-provincial exchange of borrowing information described in the answer to question 864 is to aid the design and conduct of shorter-term economic stabilization policies through better data related to the provinces' role in the domestic demand for goods and services and the financing of the capital account of Canada's international balance of payments. The discussions have had a macro-economic setting, exclusively, and have not touched on the regulation of individual provinces' access to foreign bond markets. On February 27, 1975 the Minister of Finance announced the withdrawal of the foreign borrowing guidelines introduced by the government in 1970. Mr. Turner said the government no longer wishes Canadian borrowers to feel constrained by the request made by his predecessor and since repeated on several occasions to explore fully the availability of funds in Canadian capital market before floating issues outside of Canada. This specific request to Canadian borrowers is being withdrawn at this time because the current account of Canada's balance of payments is not now in a surplus position as it was when the request was made. Mr. Turner noted that the House of Commons approved an amendment to Clause 118 of Bill C-49. The effect of that amendment was to extend the exemption from withholding tax for interest on government bonds for a further three-year period—that is, government securities issued before 1979. This should resolve the immediate problem which has been of particular concern to the provinces—the problem of organizing their budgetary and borrowing requirements over the difficult next period of several years. The minister expressed confidence that these changes will help Canadian authorities and businesses in planning their financial affairs.

2. The government has no intention of rating the borrowing priorities of provincial governments. The government is not contemplating imposing any controls on the inflow of foreign capital to provincial governments.

UIC—NUMBER OF PEOPLE DENIED BENEFITS IN 1974

Question No. 2,113—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

For the year 1974, how many persons were deprived of unemployment insurance allocations because (a) they did not have a way of transportation (b) they had moved or were living in a community where job opportunities were practically non-existent (c) they had moved in an area where another language was spoken and could not obtain a job in the other language (d) they could not give the name of a babysitter for their children?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The commission does not compile statistics on these component factors of "availability". To be eligible for unemployment insurance benefits, Section 25(a) of the act requires that the claimant be capable and available for work. The factors of transportation, residence, language competence and child care arrangements are but few of the multiplicity of factors which are taken into consideration in establishing a claimants "availability" for work. For example, distance and transportation are considered against the background of normal commuting practice of workers in the area in which they reside, the opportunities for return to suitable employment in immediate and contiguous areas, and claimants' duration of unemployment. The principle here is that the claimant who is genuinely interested in returning to work must be given a reasonable opportunity to make the adjustments necessitated by the realities of the labour market and associated conditions.

EDUCATIONAL REQUIREMENTS FOR ENTRY TO MILITARY COLLEGES

Question No. 2,173—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What is the educational requirement for admission of French speaking students to military colleges operated by the Department of National Defence and specifically, is it, among other things, a Grade 10 education?

2. What is the educational requirement for admission of English speaking students to military colleges operated by the Department of National Defence and specifically, is it, among other things, a Grade 12 or 13 education?

3. Are French speaking students admitted to National Defence Military Colleges with a lower educational requirement than English speaking students and, if so, what are all the reasons for this?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. The educational requirement for admission of French speaking students to military colleges operated by the Department of National Defence is based on provincial secondary school standards as they apply to all students of that province. Canadian Military College academic entry standards are entirely associated with an applicants' academic eligibility to enter the baccalaureate programs.

2. The educational requirement for admission of English speaking students is based on exactly the same criteria as outlined in part 1 of this question.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—EXPENDITURES FOR GOODS AND SERVICES EXCLUSIVE OF PERSONNEL COSTS

Question No. 2,181—Mr. Forrestall:

1. In each fiscal year ending March 31, 1963 to March 31, 1973, what was the level of DND expenditures for goods and services exclusive of personnel costs?

2. In each case, what was the percentage increase in the level of DND expenditures for goods and services exclusive of personnel costs of the given year over that of the immediately preceding year?

3. In each case, what was the real increase in total cost for goods and services to the Department for the given year over that of the immediately preceding year and what deflator was used?

4. In each case for which a deflator of any type was used in calculating the real increases sought in Part 3, what was the deflator as a percentage?

5. What is the deflator to be for the purposes of the 1975-76 fiscal year?

6. Are the deflators used identical to those used in arriving at the figures in answer to Question No. 1,325 and, if not, in what respects do they differ?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1, 2 and 3. The level of Department of National Defence expenditures for goods and services exclusive of personnel costs, percentage increases and real increases for the years in question are all contained in table below.

4 and 5. The deflator used in calculating the real increase and the deflator used for 1975-76 are all contained in table below.

6. The deflators used in the response to this question and questions 2,184, 2,185 and 2,186 are similar but not identical to those used in the response to question 1,325. Since question 1,325 was answered more complete actual expenditure data have become available on fiscal year 1974-75 and further economic analysis has been done on other recent fiscal years. The source of the deflators used in all of the referenced questions is the base data for the DND Economic Model (EM) which is a set of indices calculated within DND in order to measure the impact of inflation on defence expenditures more precisely than could be done with more widely used measures such as the Consumer Price Index (CPI). Economic Model rates are determined by analysis of economic data from a variety of sources including government departments, defence related industries and actual defence expenditures. Because inflation model data have not been developed for years prior to fiscal year 1970-71, a statistical derivation from the CPI had to be used for the earlier years.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—ESTIMATED REAL INCREASE IN COST OF GOODS AND SERVICES, 1974-76

Question No. 2,186—Mr. Forrestall:

Is the estimated real increase in the total cost of goods and services supplied to DND during the fiscal period 1974-75 as compared to the fiscal period 1973-74, 0.27% and, if so, expressed in percentage and using the same procedures based on the present estimates, what is the estimated real increase in the total cost of goods and services for the fiscal period 1975-76 as compared to the fiscal period 1974-75?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): The actual Department of National Defence expenditures on goods and services during the fiscal period 73/74 were $822 million. The forecast actual expenditures for fiscal year 74/75 are now $932 million. When the fiscal year 74/75 forecast is deflated to fiscal year 73/74 dollars there is a forecast real decrease of $22 million or 2.676 per cent. The estimated real increase of 0.2 per cent in the total cost of goods and services supplied to Department of National Defence during the fiscal period 1974/75 as compared to fiscal period 1973/74, reported in response to question No. 1,325 in February, 1975 has now shifted to a real decrease of 2.676 per cent due to the availability of an additional three months of actual expenditure data. This estimate could be further revised following analysis of final expenditure reports in July, 1975. For fiscal year 1975/76 the estimated level of expenditure on goods and services is $1,109 million. Using the same procedures, when this estimate is deflated to fiscal year 74/75 dollars it amounts to $983 million for a real increase of $51 million or 5.47 per cent over fiscal year 74/75. The source of these data are the Department of National Defence Economic Model as described in the response to question No. 2,181. (See table).

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58

The House resumed, from Monday, May 12, consideration in committee of the whole of certain items of the estimates for the year ending March 31, 1976, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Orders 58 and 59—Mrs. Morin in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

Vote 1—Headquarters—Operating expenditures including reimbursement of the Ministry of Transport revolving fund in the amount of $200,000 for the value of stores which have become obsolete, unserviceable, lost or destroyed and authority to spend revenue received during the year, $18,467,000.

Mr. Nowlan: Madam Chairman, the minister had an interesting day yesterday as we started this experiment of marrying the old rules with the new. The minister, departmental officials and members of the House were all trying to find out how parliamentarians can best scrutinize the expenditures of any department, not only the Department of Transport which the minister himself has said is a mess. This is a real problem for any ordinary member, but I know the minister is enjoying the experience.

The minister and I came to the House at the same time. He has always been on the government side, however, and has never had to worry about the scrutiny or accountability of estimates. While he is in many ways a great parliamentarian, perhaps he does not appreciate the frustrations of a member of the opposition with this kind of procedure. It was even worse when we were in committee for days at a time under the old rules and a minister and his officials had to remain until their estimates were passed.

When I came here in 1965, the total estimates of the federal government were $7.2 billion. When the rules changed in 1968 and the committee of supply disappeared to be replaced by the rather sterile procedure of opposition days and days for considering supply in the House, coincidentally perhaps, government spending seemed to run faster than Niagara Falls in the middle of spring: from $7.2 billion in 1965, spending increased to $28.2 billion in 1974. The increase in this year's budget over last year's is slightly more than $6 billion—almost the total amount of government spending in 1965, the year the minister and I first came to this House. I know this is not the minister's responsibility and that he is only responsible for the Department of Transport.

I hope that this experiment of having meaningful discussion with the minister on the floor of the House, in committee of the whole, will work out well. It could do away with the frustrations of members of the opposition who try to get answers to questions about the almost runaway government spending. I am glad we are trying this experiment; it should be an improvement over the old system where a minister sometimes had to stay in the House for a month before an item was passed because members of the opposition were perhaps given to rhetoric. I think this method is a compromise.

Madam Chairperson, Madam Chairlady—whatever you are—you are most courteous, and the most gracious ornament the chair has had. I say that because it is such a beautiful summer's day outside.

There are two points I want to make. I want to ask some pertinent questions about the Department of Transport and the dredging problems in this country. The second question is national in scope and has real interest for Atlantic Canada. I ask, what has happened to Atlantic transportation policy? In the words of the minister's predecessor, the Atlantic adjustment and freight assistance legislation was to be the first plank in an over-all, comprehensive Atlantic transportation policy. We heard those words when we last considered a legislative enactment dealing specifically with Atlantic transportation problems.

● (1510)

I wish to ask the minister two questions which involve the Department of Transport and dredging contracts in Canada. One has to tread a careful line here and not trespass on territory involved in court proceedings. There are certain areas which can be touched on; for instance, the problems of lack of supervision and control in dredging procedures, accounting procedures, and so on. These can be touched on without infringing upon matters under consideration by the courts.

My first question concerns discrepancies in dredging contracts. The reports of Auditors General for 12 years have referred to such discrepancies. I appreciate that Treasury Board, in a sense, has primary responsibility, and I know that many of these contracts are authorized by the Department of Transport and carried out by the Department of Public Works. The Department of Transport initiates requests for dredging. As I say, these matters were first raised in Auditors General reports.

My question is this: Has anybody's position in the department been changed; has anyone been fired or reprimanded because of problems to do with dredging contracts, overruns in contracts or lack of supervision? In other words, has anyone been held accountable, as it has been well documented in Auditors General reports for 12 years that there have been discrepancies and overruns in dredging contracts? Has internal disciplinary action been taken by the minister against anyone in the Department of Transport, or anyone in the Department of Public Work? Has anybody besides the minister taken responsibility for the improper supervision, or lack of supervision with regard to dredging contracts involving thousands, and sometimes millions of dollars of the Canadian taxpayer's money? That is the first question.

My second question is this: Have different procedures been implemented within the Department of Transport in the awarding of dredging contracts or their supervision? Again, I realize that the Department of Public Works is involved in this matter and many dredging contracts are initiated by the Department of Transport and carried out by the Department of Public Works; sometimes contracts are given to a subcontractor. Nevertheless, someone has jurisdiction or authority; that is obvious. Is anyone within the bureaucracy of the department to be held accountable? I do not want the minister to name anybody, but is there someone at whose feet this matter can be laid? Was anyone sloppy in administering dredging contracts? That is the gist of what I am driving at.

Therefore, my second question really is this: After this matter was brought to the government's attention through Auditors General reports, were changes made in procedure? Were dredging contracts awarded differently? Was there any change in the relationship between the Department of Transport and the Department of Public Works with respect to the implementation of dredging contracts?

According to the doctrine of ministerial responsibility, the minister has over-all responsibility. Certainly, he shares that responsibility with others; that is the theory under which we operate. Obviously, the minister must take over-all responsibility. Can he say, without naming names, if anyone has been subjected to internal disciplinary action? Have changes in personnel been made, or have changes in procedure been adopted since this matter was first brought to the attention of the minister and his predecessors? As Auditors General have drawn attention to this matter for 12 years, I would be amazed to learn that efforts have not been made somewhere along the line to change procedures in an attempt to overcome discrepancies. I suggest that in the awarding of dredging contracts there has been at least sloppiness and, at most, negligence. I am staying away completely from any suggestion of criminality.

Let me give specific examples. Although they are not covered by these estimates, they show what can happen. One incident took place in 1963 concerning a development to do with the St. Maurice River. In that case, the Department of Transport asked the Department of Public Works to do some dredging work in the St. Maurice River in connection with the development of a municipal park and marina by the city of Trois-Rivières. The Public Works Department stated that it would be prepared to recommend only the sharing of the cost of dredging the access channel, which would mean a financial outlay of about $9,000, but that it could accept no financial responsibility for the mooring basin and the berthing area associated with the municipal park. The department suggested that the city should negotiate a contract for the dredging and that the payment by the department would be in the form of a contribution to the city. In other words, the Department of Public Works said, "We can only do so much."

It had been a long-term policy of the Department of Public Works to limit its participation in the cost of dredging access channels from private areas to main channels to sharing the cost equally with those desiring such access, and not to accept any financial responsibility for dredging slips or berth areas considered to be of a private nature. That, at any rate, is what the department said to the city of Trois-Rivières. But in January, 1963, Treasury Board gave the Department of Public Works $45,000 to cover the full cost of dredging not only the access channel but the berth and mooring areas.

I appreciate that the contract involved the Department of Public Works and Treasury Board, but I want to know whether the Department of Transport was involved in any way with the contract concerning the St. Maurice River at Trois-Rivières. Originally, the department agreed on a contract costing $9,000, but in January, 1963, Treasury Board gave the Department of Public Works $45,000 to cover the full cost of dredging of the marina and berth areas.

I suggest that Treasury Board should never have given the Department of Public Works this money. That action was at variance with established policy. As well, it was open to question because there is a long-standing policy which says that financial assistance may be given to outside organizations only from parliamentary appropriations specifically provided or intended for such assistance. This was a payment which had never been approved by parliament. It was for dredging which was, obviously, of a private nature and which would enhance, in effect, a private operation.

In 1966, further interesting examples of dredging irregularities arose. These involved more directly the Department of Transport. A number of test borings for dredging work were made which proved to be inadequate. In at least four Auditors General reports, dredging or construction costs exceeded estimates because test borings produced results that did not accurately reflect the nature of the terrain to be dredged or excavated. Of course, Treasury Board has the over-all supervision of the expenditure of money; it has the final responsibility. I must say I tried to bring this matter forward at the time Treasury Board estimates were on the floor of the House last Friday. However, because of a procedural hassle and other problems at that time, it was not possible to ask these questions.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired. The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville.

Mr. Nystrom: Does the minister want to reply before I ask some questions?

[Translation]

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: I am sorry but I must inform the hon. minister that the hon. member chose to speak for 15 minutes; his time has therefore expired. Perhaps the minister could take note of the questions and answer them this evening.

The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville.

[English]

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Chairman, I want to direct a few questions to the Minister of Transport. The part of the country I come from has for a long time benefited from the Crowsnest pass agreement of many, many years ago with regard to shipping grain. Recently there has been a bit of controversy in the prairies because of a series of telegrams sent to the Premier of Saskatchewan by the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. Many statements have been made by the minister and other Liberal politicians in western Canada, including the Prime Minister, and a lot of farmers are worried that the present government will change the Crowsnest pass agreement which provides lower shipping costs for grain shipped by prairie farmers.

I want to ask the minister his position with regard to the Crowsnest pass agreement. What concerns me is that the Minister of Justice seems to be getting too involved in the responsibilities of the Minister of Transport. The Minister of Transport should be the one to decide whether there is to be a change in the agreement. What is the minister's position with regard to the Crowsnest pass agreement? Will he answer yes or no as to whether there will be a change in that agreement between now and the next election which will probably be some time in 1978?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Madam Chairman, I have stated in the House, and in the west, my position as far as the Crowsnest rates are concerned. The Crowsnest pass agreement, the Maritime Freight Rates Act, the Atlantic Region Freight Assistance Act and many other special measures exist to help one region or one product. This is part of the policy on which we are working. There is no doubt that the Crowsnest pass rate should be part of our national policy. However, in what form will it be? My only interest is the advantage it will give to the western farmers. I do not think they should have any worse deal under any future policy.

The Maritime Freight Rates Act was modified last year; in fact, it was improved: we increased the 30 per cent subsidy to 50 per cent for exports from the Atlantic provinces. I do not think anyone in the department or in the government thinks we should get rid of the Maritime Freight Rates Act. That does not mean that in the future, in co-operation with the Atlantic provinces, we will not find a better formula for helping industrialization or the export trade in that very important region of Canada.

I would like this to be clear. This is an advantage to the western farmers. If ever the policy is changed, the advantage should be no less than it is now. Whether this will be forever, I cannot say. I cannot say that no statute of Canada or even the constitution of Canada will never be changed. How could I say that? However, I can say that it is our intention to keep the advantages which the farmers in the west now receive.

Mr. Hogan: Madam Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I ask the minister to correct himself. I think this needs correction. He said the Maritime Freight Rates Act—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville has the floor for the purpose of asking questions.

Mr. Nystrom: With respect, the minister is not very clear. He talked about the benefits of the Crowsnest agreement and the possibility of giving those benefits to the farmers in a different form. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board said the same thing in the House yesterday: he said he would like to see the benefits preserved but perhaps in a different way. The farmers are worried about what might be that different form. Can the minister give an absolute guarantee that the government will not tamper with the Crowsnest agreement between now and the next federal election? This is what the farmers in the prairie provinces are asking me.

I would like the minister to be a little more clear. Will he, or will he not, tamper with the Crowsnest agreement? He talks about a different form. To what kind of form is he referring? What kind of benefits is he talking about? I want to know definitely.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Madam Chairman, even if it seems the hon. member did not understand what I said, I know that he did understand. He wants me to say that Crowsnest is there and will remain there, without any change, forever.

Mr. Nystrom: Until 1978. At least until that time.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Chances are we would not have time to change it before then. If there is a change before 1978, which I doubt very much, it will keep the advantages and benefits the farmers now have. I sometimes go to the west. It is unfortunate the hon. member does not go more often. The farmers understand what I am saying. They do not care about the name; what they want is a guarantee that they will not have to pay more for the movement of grain. We want to keep this is in the same way as we have the Maritime Freight Rates Act. I expect a question later about that, and I am ready to answer it.

An hon. Member: He's waffling.

Mr. Nystrom: My hon. friend says the minister is waffling. I heard the minister say—this is what I am nervous about—that if there is any change, the farmers will still have the same benefits. Having him think that is not good enough. Can he guarantee there will be no change whatsoever which will be detrimental to the farmers, between now and the next election?

● (1530)

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): The only thing I can say, as Minister of Transport, as one who presided over the new policy which is going to be known, I hope, in a short while—

Mr. Stanfield: As the Marchand policy?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): —is that at no moment did we discuss in our working group that the Crowsnest pass rates should be changed. We are going to work on freight rates; we are going to work in co-operation with the Atlantic provinces, but nobody is going to make me make a statement—and I hope this is clear—that something which is in the statutes of Canada is not going to be changed. I am not going to make any definite statement, because I do not have this power and any minister who contended that he did have this power should not, I think, be in a democracy but should be somewhere else.

We are ready to protect the farmers and give them the advantages that they have; either to keep them under the present formula or under any other formula to which everybody, or the majority, would agree. I really do not mind, and I am sure the farmers don't mind; only those who are ready to exploit politically the symbol of Crowsnest pass rates discuss this question.

Mr. Nystrom: Yesterday in the House, Madam Chairman, as reported at page 5676 of Hansard, in response to a question by the right hon. member for Prince Albert, the Minister of Justice in charge of the Wheat Board said:

I indicated that in my view the test whether such a change could be made was really dependent upon the will of the farmers themselves.

I would like to ask the Minister of Transport what mechanism will be established to determine the will of the farmers. Will it be the minister in charge of the Wheat Board who makes that decision? It really worries me, if that is the case. I would like to remind the Minister of Transport that it was not our party or any other opposition party in the House which first started the question about what the government was doing about the Crowsnest pass agreement. It was the minister in charge of the Wheat Board, in his speech in Edmonton, who first said there might be some changes made to it. Now he says that any changes would depend upon the will of the farmers. How do we interpret that will? Is the minister thinking of a plebiscite? Is the minister in charge of the Wheat Board going to interpret their will? I ask this question because his interpretation of their will is often different from mine, or different from that of the farm organizations. After all, you are the Minister of Transport, not him.

I am very tired of the minister in charge of the Wheat Board meddling with the Minister of Agriculture, meddling with the Minister of Transport, meddling with several other ministers. Is he a czar? Is he the king of the government? What does he mean? I want to know from you what he means when he says he will interpret the will of the farmers.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Madam Chairman, I think that on the principle involved here nobody can contest that it is very important to know the will of the farmers. I do not think you oppose the will of the farmers, as I am sure the hon. member will agree. What the hon. member is asking is, how you would define, or how you would get to know the will of the farmers. I suggest he asks the Minister of Justice exactly what he means and what method he proposes to use.

Mr. Nystrom: Is not the minister we are questioning today the Minister of Transport? Surely to goodness this falls under your purview as it is a freight rate question. If he is going to decide to meddle with your department, why in the devil don't you slap his hand? You should be making that decision, not the Minister of Justice; right?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Such a decision, a very important one, will be made by the cabinet after a recommendation of one minister whose name, now, is the Minister of Transport; and nobody else.

Mr. Nystrom: I have it very clearly, then, that it is the Minister of Transport who will make the recommendations regarding the Crowsnest rate, regarding transportation matters, not the Minister of Justice. It will be you.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. I should like to remind the hon. gentleman that he is supposed to address the Chair.

Mr. Stanfield: I should like to go back to the subject of dredging and ask the minister a question or two. I was amazed when the alleged bid-rigging—I say "alleged" because nothing has been proven—came to light and charges were laid as to how it could have happened, how the government could find itself in a position where something was alleged to have been going on for such a long time and on such a scale. I think the answer came when the Minister of Public Works disclosed the guidelines which have intended to protect the public in the future.

Apparently there are dredging contracts let by the Department of Public Works, by the Department of Transport, by the National Harbours Board and by the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority. As a result of this, as the government now recognizes by having set up the safeguarding committee, there is not sufficient expertise, apparatus or machinery available in Public Works, Transport or anywhere else to protect the public. As a result of the lack of adequate machinery in the Department of Transport, for example, there was no way in which the public could be protected. The people in the department had no suspicion that in fact the bids were so far above what they should be that bid-rigging was quite possible.

I would like to know how the Minister of Transport can attempt to justify this fragmentation of authority in the field of dredging. Some of it is done in Transport, some in Public Works, some here and some there. How can the minister justify this situation having continued, I do not know for how long? When he became minister in 1973, for example, he had reason to be suspicious about some things in Hamilton. Shortly thereafter he had reason to become suspicious about the St. Lawrence River dredging. Yet the system continued. Nobody in the government, nobody in his department, seemed to make any move in order to improve the administrative machinery or to create some unit in the government which would know enough about dredging to ensure that the bids were appropriate, and thus protect the public.

Despite the belated move the government has made to set up an improvised cabinet committee, I charge that the public of Canada has paid very dearly for the fragmentation of authority in the area of dredging. The lack of expertise in the Department of Transport meant that apparently no accurate judgment could be made as to whether bids in connection with dredging were appropriate or not, or whether contracts for the salvage of a ship were in line or not. The government apparently had no idea that there was something seriously wrong with regard to the bidding or with regard to dredging generally.

I suggest this could not have happened at all if the departments concerned had been able to assess properly, or even estimate properly, what the appropriate bids should have been in connection with these contracts. Yet the system went on year after year despite warnings by the Auditor General that contracts were running over. I make the charge that the government did not take the trouble to protect the public by setting up the necessary machinery, and as far as I can understand it failed to provide adequate measures to protect the public after contracts had been let.

● (1540)

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Madam Chairman, perhaps I can be as blunt as the Leader of the Opposition. Not only this government, but all governments prior to this one have been following exactly the same regulations and laws. We ask for bids and we choose the lowest, unless the lowest bidder is not in a position to do the work. If he does not have the machinery required or the ability to do the work, then I think any government would tell him that he is not going to get the job. That has been the practice.

The hon. member for Annapolis Valley referred a few minutes ago to some contracts that were given in 1963. That is when Hon. Leon Balcer was minister of transport, so he should check into that. I do not know why he did not verify that beforehand.

I would be as prudent as the Leader of the Opposition. If the charges are founded, then it means there has been collusion to cheat the government. That is not the first time it has happened; it happens everywhere in the world. There is no way you can protect yourself against four, five or six firms who agree to get together and establish a floor. This was revealed in Hamilton by a commission over which I have no jurisdiction at all. The contract there was awarded by the harbour commission of Hamilton, not by the Department of Transport, and I think the hon. gentleman should ask why this commission did not make a better check than it did. As far as the other cases are concerned, hon. members will have to wait until the trial is over to see whether there has been any collusion. That is all I can say.

The other day I received quite a high bid for a project in a city in the west, and there was only the one bid. I spent at least 15 days consulting all kinds of people in Justice, and so forth, and I asked them what I should do. They told me that in that particular city there was nobody else who could do the job. We assess what the job is worth, and they told me that the job was worth it and that that is what we should do; otherwise we would have to go to Vancouver, Montreal or Toronto.

I agree with the Leader of the Opposition that this means there are some weaknesses and holes in the system. However, we now have some new rules under which all bids are submitted to Justice to see whether they can see something we have not seen. We are trying to be more strict. If there is a big difference between what we assess and the bid of the lowest bidder, then in such case perhaps we should scrap the whole thing and start all over again or tell the firm in question that we suspect there is something wrong.

Perhaps this sort of rigging has happened in the past; I do not know. The inquiry may reveal that the same situation has existed in many other cases. Perhaps it took place under the right hon. member for Prince Albert. I have no way of knowing; but he was applying exactly the same regulations.

Mr. Stanfield: Madam Chairman, I do not know whether it happened under Sir Robert Borden or under Sir John A. Macdonald, but we are talking about the present administration. I cannot make a charge that there was collusion, but I am assuming that charges have been laid by the government. I make the assertion that if there was collusion in bid-rigging in connection with dredging contracts with the Department of Transport, then it was because the Department of Transport was a sitting duck for such bid-rigging and collusion: it did not have the expertise and apparatus to know whether or not it was being taken to the cleaners.

I ask the minister, through you, Madam Chairman, why this was allowed to continue for a year or so after the minister became suspicious. It was not until the whole thing was out in the open that the Minister of Public Works announced in this House the appointment of a committee, which itself is probably quite inadequate.

The minister says that something happened in Hamilton. I am not blaming him for that. The whole organization behind dredging operations for harbour commissions and so on may very well need looking into. But I am asking him this. Apart from talking about what may have happened 20 or 40 years ago, is there any way he can explain to this committee and to the people of Canada why he, as minister, and why his predecessor and the government as a whole, allowed to continue an obviously inadequate system of administering dredging contracts, one which apparently permitted the Government of Canada and the people of Canada to be taken to the cleaners for years?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Madam Chairman, I must correct something which has been said by the Leader of the Opposition. I do not know whether he was including me when he said we knew something was wrong in the awarding of dredging contracts a year ago. If so, I tell him that that is not true. The first time I heard about that was at the beginning of March. Immediately I took action, as I did in the case of Air Canada. But one year ago I was not aware of anything of this kind. If he contends that the Minister of Public Works knew, I would be happy to be here when he puts the question to the minister, because I do not think he is the type of man to let that kind of thing go on.

Mr. Stanfield: Madam Chairman, I am not going to get sidetracked by charges of who did what, or who did not know what.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): You are the one who brought that up.

Mr. Stanfield: I am saying that the system in the Department of Transport—and I dare say the same applies to the system in Public Works—was very inadequate to protect the public, and that there was no justification for allowing it to continue through the years, particularly in view of the reports of the Auditor General. As I say, I do not intend to be sidetracked by statements about who did what, or about what the minister found out subsequently.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Madam Chairman, the system which existed in Transport is the same system that existed everywhere in the government and in all governments I know of in Canada. It is the system of asking for tenders and bids. I do not know what the future has in store for those who might be involved, but up until now no civil servant has been involved, accused, charged or even suspected of wrongdoing. When four or five firms control a whole industry, they do not need any civil servants; they just decide themselves what they are going to do.

Mr. Forrestall: That damns you all the more for not keeping abreast of it.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Then in one case it became apparent, the police found out and we acted as quickly as we could. There may be other situations and perhaps hon. members opposite will be able to give us some help. There are certain industries where it is almost impossible to find a second bidder. For example, if you want some transistors, outside of IBM of Canada where would you go? Where would the competition come from? Even if you went to the United States, perhaps you would have to go to IBM even there. Certain industries are monopolized, so we have to be very careful. As I say, we have followed the rules. No civil servants have been charged or suspected of wrongdoing.

● (1550)

I do not see why the Leader of the Opposition would make that kind of attack. Perhaps he is suggesting that the prevailing system in Canada is not foolproof and we should see how we can improve it. That is right, and that is what we are trying to do.

Mr. Stanfield: I have just one more sentence, Madam Chairman. The system is inadequate and the government has finally recognized this in setting up a makeshift kind of citizens' protective committee. The system is inadequate to anyone who has made an examination, if only because of the fact the Department of Public Works was responsible for part of it, the Minister of Transport for another part of it, and somebody else for another part of it. We were just taken to the cleaners.

[Translation]

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. The time allotted to the hon. Leader of the Opposition has now expired.

[English]

Before recognizing the hon. member for Davenport, I should like to point out that the time of the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville was cut short by one minute, so perhaps I might recognize that hon. member for one question.

Mr. Nystrom: If I have one minute, I will take 20 seconds and the minister can take 40 seconds. If there are any changes whatsoever which will limit the benefits of the Crowsnest pass rates, will those changes take place before Mr. Justice Hall has had time to report on western transportation problems, with recommendations to the government; or will they, if there are any, come after Mr. Justice Hall's report?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): If you want my opinion, and you will understand that is all I can give, it is no.

Mr. Caccia: Madam Chairman, there are three brief questions I should like to direct to the minister. The first relates to whether the Minister of Transport is playing an active role in relation to urban growth by providing Canadians who are prepared to live in smaller centres in the neighbourhood of metropolitan regions with adequate commuter services that would permit them to work in large metropolises.

It is quite clear that we have now reached the stage where certain cities are becoming very large, and there are certain towns and small cities in Canada where Canadians might buy homes and settle at a lower cost while still working at their jobs in the large industrial centres. There is a growing body of Canadians who feel that the urban growth of our metropolitan areas can be slowed down if we adopt a transportation policy which will encourage the growth of smaller centres. Is the minister actively involved with the Minister of State for Urban Affairs in developing a policy of that kind?

My second question stems from an observation I have made over the years of bus terminals, railway stations and airports. On the face of it, one wonders whether the allocation of taxpayers' money for travelling Canadians is proportionately divided between those travelling by ground transportation as opposed to those travelling by air. In other words, putting it in reverse, one gets the impression that we are investing a substantial amount of taxpayers' funds for that portion of the public travelling by air which is much smaller than that provided for those who travel by train or bus.

One gets the impression that we pay much greater attention to and place more emphasis and financial support on air travel for those who use that service than we do in respect of bus or train transportation. I would be very grateful if the minister could indicate whether this is a superficial appearance, or whether in fact there is something in what I have suggested.

My final question relates to a local matter. In Toronto we have a large project called the Metro Centre which has been in the hands of a corporation called Metro Centre Development. This involves large tracts of lands which are publicly owned, including land owned by Canadian National and Canadian Pacific. I understand that the current agreement on Metro Centre expires in November of this year. If a new contract is to be arrived at following the expiration of the existing one, it would be helpful to know whether the Ministry of Transport and Canadian National will insist that the publicly-owned land remain under public control and managed, in terms of planning and utilization, by the local municipality rather than by the private developer who is developing the specific tracts of land. Those are my questions.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Madam Chairman, I was not involved in this discussion until January 20, if my memory serves me well, when Premier Davis invited me to Toronto to discuss this matter with him, his officials and some of the senior officers of the Ministry of Transport. Since then we have been looking into this matter and a report will probably be produced within a few weeks, at which time we will know exactly what is to happen concerning the ownership of this land. I have my own opinion on this, and when I get that report I will see how my opinion compares with the opinion expressed in it. That is the situation at the present time. We are awaiting the report of this study, and it is only when we receive it that we will indicate exactly what we are going to do.

Mr. Jelinek: Madam Chairman, I will be very brief and I will stay with one aspect of transportation, that is, the proposed Pickering airport in the Toronto area. I only have two or three brief questions, but before I ask them I should like to summarize the background of several contradictions I believe exist in statements by the Minister of Transport and the Prime Minister regarding this proposed airport.

It is a publicly known fact that several surveys have been conducted in the metropolitan area. The Elliott Research Corporation carried out one survey, the Toronto Star carried out another, and a poll survey was conducted by the Canadian Facts Company Limited. Within the metropolitan area, 61.4 per cent of those who had an opinion were opposed to the airport decision. Even in the Malton impact area, which the government argues will benefit from reduced noise as a result of the second airport, the majority of those who had an opinion were against the airport.

The Ministry of Transport's traffic forecasts do not reflect the current economic and fuel picture and the recent decline in international air travel. Furthermore, the government has made absolutely no effort to spread peak hour load which is the real measure of airport capacity at the Malton airport today. The Gibson commission, for example, concluded that provision of terminal capacity at Malton would not be a problem until 1985, even assuming the inflated Ministry of Transport's passenger forecasts which will not be realized for many years after 1985. So that is an inflated figure.

● (1600)

Further terminal needs, should they become evident over the next decade, could be met either by more efficient use of lands within the present airport boundary, such as by achieving the same ratio of passenger handling capacity to required land area as the present Terminal 1, or by annexing a moderate amount of vacant industrial land. There is definitely no spreading of noise involved in the placing of extra terminals at the present Malton airport.

Runway capacity at Malton is no problem except during the peak hour when strong north-south winds limit use to one runway, 14-32. Opening one runway at Pickering in the east-west direction does not solve the runway capacity problem. When additional runway capacity is required at Malton, a fourth independent runway in the north-south direction within Malton's existing boundaries could be added. The minister's department admits that at a separation of 4,400 feet, no more people will be affected than with the three-runway situation. The airport inquiry commission agrees that with the addition of such a runway, Malton can handle Ministry of Transport forecasts to beyond 1990.

It can be assumed, also, that due to technological advances noise will continue to decrease as long as realistic assumptions are made about the phasing out of DC-8 type aircraft and some control over night flights, particularly of noisy aircraft, is exerted even if no new noise technology is introduced. This has far more effect on noise than the government's plan in respect of Pickering. In addition, if the government pursues its own proposal to have aircraft meet standards similar to FAR 36 at Malton by 1980, the noise reduction will be even more dramatic. Once all aircraft meet FAR 36 standards, the additional beneficial effect of opening a second airport is very small.

The minister gave the following answer to a question I asked in the House on February 21 regarding the airport. He stated, as reported at 3436 of Hansard:

> If the hon. gentleman can bring some kind of evidence to show that the majority of the population is against the airport, I am ready to revise the whole thing.

This evidence has been presented very emphatically through the media and through different polls. I expect my first question is obvious. Why is the minister not sticking to the statement he made in this House, along with the statement of the Prime Minister, to the effect that if there were even 51 per cent of the people around the Pickering area against the airport, the government would reconsider the matter and look into the different options? Surely an airport as expensive as this—it is expensive and I will be asking a couple of questions about the expense—is not needed at this time; the money could be handed over for the purpose of helping the housing situation which is drastic in the Toronto area. I believe the number of housing starts in that area has been reduced in the past year by 60 per cent.

The first question I would ask is whether the minister is taking a different position now from the one he took in the statement he made in the House, and outside the House, and one the Prime Minister took in his statements.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, the answer is very simple. I have no idea how the inquiry was conducted, who was consulted or what was the form of the inquiry. One thing we did in respect of Pickering which we did not do in respect of any other airport, and certainly not in respect of Mirabel, was that before we chose the site of Pickering we had many consultations, including consultations with the government of Ontario, and everybody thought it was the best place. When I say "everybody," I do not refer to the people around Pickering but I refer to the government of Ontario and those who are involved in the building of the airport.

So it is one thing if the population of Ontario or of greater Toronto does not want this airport, but no Gallup poll or anything of that kind was conducted which would suggest this. I did not need to conduct an inquiry: our information was very instructive. The results the hon. member produces in the House may have some bearing, but we had the Gibson inquiry and its report. In that report, the arguments were made by a person who was in no way tied to the government and who, with two colleagues, gave an opinion and answers to questions which to my mind are much better than the opinions cited by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Chairman, of course, much of the opinion stated in the Gibson inquiry report has changed since the inquiry took place. So far as the polls are concerned, surely the Toronto Star poll conducted by the Canadian Facts Company Limited would not be considered a one-sided opinion. This is a very important matter and a costly affair which I am sure will not help the majority of the people of Toronto, because they are still looking for better housing rather than a second airport. In view of this, would the minister be willing to have the government conduct its own poll concerning the situation in the Toronto area, to determine whether the people there are for, or against, that airport? I know the minister wishes to abide by the wishes of the people of that city and of Canada, so perhaps he will take it upon himself to conduct a poll of his own.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, I think we have done all that can normally be done in the circumstances. We even had a special inquiry. Witnesses have been heard, briefs have been presented and there has even been cross-examination of witnesses. The same conclusion was reached as that of the ministry. So far as I am concerned, the decision has been made. If another government, another minister, or someone else should change his mind, that is all right; but so far as I am concerned, this is a closed case and I will not go back on it.

Mr. Jelinek: So it can be taken that the minister either unintentionally misled the House when he made the statement or has changed his mind. The possibility exists, if sufficient pressure is put on him by the majority of the people, that he might change his mind again so far as the airport is concerned.

I should like to ask a question about the cost of the airport. Early in the year 1974, the minister stated that the Pickering airport, including construction and land, would cost $204 million. In an answer to a written question I placed on the order paper, which I received on April 7, the department stated that the authorized cost for the construction of the international airport and related facilities in land approved by the government on February 20, 1975, is slightly in excess of $200 million. This relates to the figure of $204 million; but there is an addendum which says that no airport construction is included in this figure. The figure previous to this, of $204 million, included the construction.

As well, on February 20 the minister said that a runway and appropriate passenger terminal and related facilities would be built. Given the existing examples of passenger terminals at Malton and Edmonton international airports, where passengers are forced to trek considerable distances, would the minister offer his definition of an appropriate passenger terminal and the separate cost involved for the construction of the terminal facilities to begin this year, or whenever that may be? What will be the additional cost?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Unfortunately, I am not an architect. I cannot say exactly what kind of terminal will be built there. I presume that we will receive some designs and suggestions from technicians of all kinds, including engineers, and so forth. Then we will make up our minds. But if I am asked exactly what I mean by an appropriate terminal, I presume it would be a terminal which would receive passengers who land in Pickering. We would try to avoid what happened in Terminal 2 and have something which is convenient for the people who are going to use it. When we have the design, if the hon. member wishes I will be happy to receive him in my office. My office is not far away, and I will show the design to him.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Chairman, that is very kind of the minister. It is assumed that the proposed airport will be an international airport. The question, of course, is whether the minister or the government have received any assurances that international airlines will operate out of Pickering airport, seeing that the airport as it now stands in the plans will only have one runway. Several air carriers use international airports. These air carriers would be in the air at all times, and having one runway is like being half pregnant without wanting to be pregnant in the first place.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, we in Canada tell foreign airlines where they can land, and in turn we negotiate with France, for example, or Great Britain, as to which airport we are supposed to use. They told us where we could land; we did not tell them where we would land. We are not free to land just anywhere in Berlin or elsewhere. This is in the agreement, and I think this is what we will do with the airlines.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. member because the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Jelinek: I have just a short, final question.

The Chairman: That can be done if the committee accepts it, and if it can be done in a few seconds I am ready to accept the question.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Jelinek.]

Mr. Jelinek: It will just take a few seconds. I know that the minister has a great deal of interest in the development of STOL aircraft and STOL routes such as the route existing between Ottawa and Montreal. At least he had interest in this. Does this mean that with the additional airport at Pickering, the interest toward the development of STOL aircraft in Toronto—I am speaking specifically of the possibility of Toronto island as an airport for STOL aircraft—will be laid aside? Will this become secondary to Pickering?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): This is an experiment we are doing with Twin-Otters between Ottawa and Montreal. To this date we are very satisfied with the success of this experiment. We do not have all the elements. Some airlines have already asked for permission to operate STOL systems between certain Canadian cities. We are not ready to allow that because our experiment is not completed. Nothing has been excluded. We have not excluded the island in Toronto, nor the island in Montreal; and if ever we decide to have a STOL program for those two cities, those might be the proper places to have them.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Chairman, I congratulate the previous speaker because his last question ties in exactly with what I want to discuss with the minister this afternoon. I would like to state that as far as I and, I think, many members of this House are concerned, the topic of transport is probably one of the most all-encompassing topics up for discussion at any time, because through the transport policies of governments of Canada this nation was brought together in the first place. It is through transport policy that it has kept together, and through transport policy in the future it will be determined how well this nation remains together as a corporate entity.

I want to direct my remarks to the minister, not on the primary level of air traffic—Air Canada or CP Air—but to take a look at the over-all scheme for regional air carriers and the use, as the previous member was discussing, of the hub and spoke concept of STOL air service. In my opinion the success or failure of transport in the future will depend on the proper integration of all types of transport, whether it be by land, sea, air, rail or bus, and in particular the phasing in of a comprehensive and well run hub and spoke STOL air service; because I think the success of our national railways in years past has been primarily through use of feeder lines, the small lines which were brought in to bring people from outlying areas into the centres of communication which joined up with the transcontinental systems which ran from coast to coast. I believe the hub and spoke air concept will become the feeder lines of transportation in years to come.

As the minister knows, Canada, and in particular the De Havilland Aircraft Corporation, have been world leaders in the development of the STOL concept, first with the De Havilland DHC 6 Twin Otter and now with the recent unveiling of the DHC 7 and 7-R, the second generation of STOL aircraft. It is here in Canada that the augmenter-wing concept was designed, and while we are world leaders in the design and development of these aircraft and of the hub and spoke concept of transportation, our failure to use this concept of proper advantage where it would fit is something I find rather deplorable.

For the betterment of our own population I do not feel the very concept we have developed to such a high degree has been used as it should be. I would ask the minister to give this House, at some time, an indication of the progress made by his department in adopting this important concept of communications into a national transport picture and in putting it into implementation on a nationwide and regional scale.

I would like also to point out my concern, and the concern of the people I represent, about the continuing policy of our national railways of branch line abandonment both in the passenger field and the freight field. I would ask the minister to make every effort to encourage both Canadian National and Canadian Pacific to stop completely the withdrawal of what I consider to be an essential element of cohesion across this country. I speak with the knowledge which comes from representing an area where the withdrawal of rail service, particularly in the passenger field, has taken place and where the effects of that withdrawal are still suffered.

I would point out that had it not been for the work of at least one private company—I refer to Bruce Coach Lines of Kincardine, Ontario—in picking up the slack which developed in the transportation system which was available to the people of western Ontario and to my particular section of the country, we would indeed be in a very difficult position at this time. Since that time the bus service facilities have been upgraded and increased. As a result, the people have started to use it. The travelling time between Kincardine and Toronto is now 3½ hours by bus, but it still takes 5½ hours by rail.

I hope the minister will give us his views on this serious situation and indicate whether this practice by the railways can be reversed, if not stopped. As a private enterprise, Canadian Pacific Railway has to be concerned with the return on investment, but Canadian National Railways is a little different in that for the most part it is financed by public money. It therefore has a duty and responsibility to provide the transportation that the people so desperately need.

I should like to return to the question of STOL. It is interesting to note that transporting people and commodities economically and efficiently is one of the things that this country does best. One reason for this is that our geographical footprint dictates it. We have 3,852,000 square miles of land mass to cover; and for those of our friends who are interested in metric measurement, that is 10,015,000 square kilometres. This includes large metropolitan areas, mountain ranges, plains and inland waters, so it has been an absolute necessity that we develop this expertise. The fact is, however, that the expertise is more essential now than at any other time in our country's history.

I should like to turn, now, to the regional development of the STOL concept. If STOL is to work, I believe it will work best in a number of networks of well planned, regional services interconnecting through the national air carriers which will provide the type of service this nation requires. The type of system operating up and down the Norwegian coast to provide isolated hamlets with air service to the larger centres, and thence to Oslo, the capital, and other centres of population and industry is an example of what can be done. The effect has been to decentralize some of the large cities. This might be useful to us, with such large centres as Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver growing the way they are. We must get the people out of these centralized communities into places which need to build up their industry and population.

I should like to ask the minister what his department thinks can be done about the Toronto island airport. To my way of thinking, this airport is absolutely essential to provide the hub and spoke concept for southwestern and central Ontario. It is ideally situated and is currently licensed for STOL use on a VFR basis, but must be upgraded to a STOL IFR standard.

An hon. Member: Not with that big needle sticking up in the middle of the city.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): That is outside the approach patterns that would be used for STOL aircraft. In closing, Mr. Chairman, I would like to put forward some statistics about STOL. First of all, it saves fuel. The DASH 7 will save up to $100,000 a year on 200-mile routes over the operation of the DC-9—about a 64 per cent saving in fuel.

We are all worried about the ecology and the emission of pollutants. The average car, on a 200-mile trip carrying 1.25 passengers—I will never figure out why they use 1.25 passengers; I can see one passenger, but not 1¼ passengers—would produce about 27 pounds of pollutant per passenger. The DC-9, on a 200-mile trip, would produce about 1.14 pounds; the bus, one pound per passenger and the train about nine-tenths of a pound. The DASH 7 would produce only six-tenths of a pound per passenger, on a 200-mile trip. That is something to think about, Mr. Chairman.

The DASH 7 also saves time, and today time is money. Let us take, as an example, a trip from the Parliament Buildings here to downtown Montreal, the Bonaventure Hotel. The total time for the trip by conventional air traffic, using a taxi from here to the airport and from the airport in Montreal, is two hours and three minutes. That is taxi time, terminal time and flying time. By STOL, using the Twin Otter plane, the total time is one hour and 22 minutes. I believe it is the answer to many of the transportation problems not only in Ontario but throughout the country. It could be used in other provinces, and to put it into operation would only cost about the same as it would to build two miles of four-lane highway in southwestern and central Ontario. Tied in with the proper rail and bus service, it would provide the people with a transportation system second to none.

If the minister has time, I would appreciate some answers to my questions, and if he has not I should like to hear from him by letter.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, I only have three minutes so I am going to answer rapidly. We are co-operating with the province of Ontario on the hub and spoke concept. As far as STOL is concerned, we have to complete our experiments. At the moment, we cannot use the DASH 7 because it is being tested and will not be ready for a few months or a year. The concept is of interest, and that is why we have invested so much money in it.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Chairman, I should like to put a few questions to the minister concerning the dredging contract at Île-d'Orléans. Initially, this contract was for dredging in the main ship channel of the St. Lawrence River below Quebec in the reach commonly known as the North Traverse, extending from St. Jean, Île-d'Orléans to Sault au Cochon, consisting of a quantity of approximately 14 million cubic yards. The contract was to be for a period of three years commencing the summer of 1971. The estimated cost of the contract was $20,860,000, with the basis of payment being $1.49 per cubic yard.

In response to public advertisements, three bids were received. One was from J. P. Porter Ltd., McNamara Co. Ltd. and Marine Industries Ltd., a joint venture, for $20,860,000. One was from Canadian Dredge and Dock Ltd. and T. C. Gorman Ltd., a combine of two, for $28,140,000. The third was from C. A. Pitts Engineering Construction Ltd., for $30,100,000. Authority for the Department of Transport to enter into a contract with the lowest bidder was given by Treasury Board minute 706359 dated August 30, 1971, and subsequently a formal contract was entered into with the successful bidder. Since the department's estimate is identical to the price quoted by the lowest bidder, would the minister confirm my research of this item and explain this coincidence to the committee? That is my first question.

My second question relates to the minister's comments concerning the Hamilton Harbour Commission, made just a few moments ago in response to questions raised by my leader. The Hamilton Harbour Commission and the Toronto Harbour Commission are corporate bodies which are audited by the municipal auditor of the municipality which has a major interest in the commission. The minister, under the Harbour Commissions Act, may authorize an inspection of the books and records of the harbour commissions, but the Department of Transport financial audit and review branch has never made any audits or reviews of these commissions. To the best of my knowledge, the government has never asked the Auditor General or any of his staff to examine the records of the harbour commissions.

Since the present audit system of the Auditor General is not designed to detect fraud and deliberate collusion, the onus in my view is on the minister and on the government to take the necessary action. Will the minister inform this committee why he never authorized an inspection of the books and records of the harbour commissions I have mentioned?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, I will need to verify the hon. member's assertion that we must verify the books of the harbour commissions. I always thought that the cities were supposed not only to supervise but to award contracts. I may be mistaken. I want to check. I should like the hon. gentleman to tell me what part of the act authorizes us to inspect those books in the city in which the commission is located. I think the city of Hamilton, which awarded this contract, is also supposed to supervise.

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding that the minister, under the Harbour Commissions Act, RSC, chapter H-1, may authorize an inspection of the books and records of harbour commissions. He has that authority but has never exercised the authority which is in RSC, chapter H-1. Surely his departmental officials can verify that statement right now.

Secondly, I should like him to answer my first question concerning the coincidence whereby the consortium composed of J. P. Porter Ltd., McNamara Company Ltd. and Marine Industries Ltd. could come up with a figure of $20,860,000 for the dredging to which I referred, exactly the same figure as estimated by the department. I think the committee deserves some explanation of that.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, I think you must consider that this is part of the trial or the case which is before the courts now, and I think the committee will surely have an opportunity to learn when the judgment comes down.

An hon. Member: The judgment?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Oh, yes; a judgment will be handed down. Surely the hon. member is not asking me to give him an opinion when the matter is before the judge. The judge can hear witnesses, and he has not yet made up his mind.

Mr. Stanfield: Come, now! This is public information.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Chairman, by leaning on the fact that this case is presently before the courts, the minister is not playing fair with the committee. It is true that the vouchers and departmental files have been seized by the RCMP and that a writ has been issued; it is true that these documents are presently being held and are under investigation by the RCMP. But the questions I raised surely come within the authority of the minister and the department. After all, the bids to which I referred, the public tenders which I mentioned, are public knowledge. Public tenders were called. The three companies, making up a consortium, bid $20,860,000 for this project, exactly, the amount estimated by the department. There must have been a coincidence as between the department's estimate and the figure bid by the lowest bidder, namely, the consortium made up of the Porter Company, the McNamara Company and Marine Industries.

I do not see how the minister can refuse to answer by suggesting the matter is before the courts. I am asking him to explain how this coincidence concerning the bids occurred. For example, did someone in the department tell Porter, McNamara and Marine Industries, "Our estimate is $20,860,000"? Did someone in the minister's department volunteer this information? Did these companies ask some official how low an estimate the department itself had made for this work? Because the next highest bid was $28,140,000 the third bid was $30,100,000. There may have been collusion; I do not say there was but there may have been. Certainly, someone was in the confidence of the minister's staff if there was a tender for this contract which was identical to the figure estimated by the minister's officials. I suggest that such a coincidence is unique and can be explained without infringing on the matter now before the courts.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, I am in a difficult position. I am sure the hon. member was honest in his research. But how can I explain it if the RCMP and the courts cannot explain it? I do not know how I can explain it. The RCMP have investigated this case and looked into the books of these companies and of other companies—even in my riding if you want to know. They searched everywhere. At no time did they charge or indicate that a civil servant was involved. The whole thing is now before the courts. It may be pure coincidence. If so, we will say it is a coincidence and that is all. If fraud is involved, I say to the hon. member that the police have investigated and that the courts are acting. So do not ask me why there is a coincidence unless you assume that the whole thing happened in my office. I am sure that is not what the hon. member assumes.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Chairman, may I ask one short question? Does the minister concede that the estimate by his officials of $20,860,000 is exactly the same figure that was paid to the consortium when they signed the contract?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, we will have to check.

Mr. Crouse: After he has checked, will the minister make that information available to the committee?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Yes, certainly.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Chairman, I believe most members will agree that the Minister of Transport heads one of the most important ministries of government and has one of the most important portfolios in this House. Transportation affects all Canadians. The ministry is a grass roots ministry, a department which provides service to more Canadians than any other of which I am aware.

I am a new member, as you know, Mr. Chairman; an independent without party affiliation. Nevertheless, the minister has generally co-operated with me; other ministers have, too. Actually, I have already invited the minister down to the Atlantic provinces, and particularly to the city of Moncton, so that he can see first-hand our transportation problems in the area instead of leaving it to bureaucrats. I might say that this invitation is extended to the minister's confrères. We hope they will hold a cabinet meeting in Moncton this year as this is an anniversary year for the city.

I marvel at the huge staff of the Ministry of Transport and at the huge staffs of Crown agencies and corporations which come under its authority. How many persons hold executive positions in the ministry, its agencies and Crown corporations? What is the total amount paid in salaries to them and their support staff, and overburden expenses? I imagine many members of this House ask themselves what do these people do. What is the evidence of what they do? Possibly bureaucrats have too much to say, not enough to do and assume little or no responsibility for the high wages they receive.

We hear of studies for this, and studies for that, and a study of this study and another study of that study—all at substantial cost to the taxpayer; all in addition to the cost of salaries of overburdens. We need action, and we need it soon.

Maritimers are still concerned about their freight rates. The consumer is paying the shot. When will the Ministry of Transport unveil a national transportation policy and a regional transportation policy? Will the minister advise what amounts have been provided for rail line relocation, in particular for the proposed rail line relocation in the Moncton area?

I wish to ask some questions with regard to transportation problems in my constituency. I know some of the national problems; however, Moncton is the transportation centre of the maritimes. First, there is the problem of CNR pensioners and widows. I suggest to the minister that this is a problem of government because in the Atlantic provinces the railways were formerly operated by the Canadian government. I suggest the government has a responsibility to these people. Second, there is need for an improved and enlarged CNR station in Moncton. Colloquially, in Moncton, that station is called the musical shoebox. It certainly fits the description. I am told that regularly tracks are out of commission in the Atlantic region. The rolling-stock is not kept up to date. There are very serious matters concerning the safety of passengers, cargo and materials.

We also hear of lay-offs. The condition of the equipment, the rolling-stock, the trackage and the lay-offs are not consistent. I suggest if there are no lay-offs, the railway gives the excuse that they do not have the men to do the job. With the lay-offs, I suggest this is an excellent time for the railways to bring their equipment, goods and trackage up to standard. I suggest the minister has a responsibility to the public on these matters of safety.

There are other matters in so far as the budget of the Department of Transport is concerned. Recently on the order paper there were items with reference to the cost of bilingualism in the CNR and Air Canada. I would like to know the cost of implementing bilingualism and any training in the Department of Transport and the Crown corporations and agencies under that department. This matter of the cost of bilingualism is completely out of hand. It has recently been revealed that upward of $3 million was spent on this by CNR. In Air Canada, therefore, we can assume it was $4 million.

Recently, Mr. Keith Spicer, the Commissioner of Official Languages, reported that languages should be taught in school. It has occurred to me that finally this gentleman, like many members of this House, is now beginning to see the light. Linguistic problems are educational problems and should be solved within the school system of this country and not within the government. It should be done in an integrated, non-separate, uniform school system with both English and French languages being taught to all our children together. You cannot do it by teaching people at age 30 to 50 or 60.

I raise this matter here because employees of CNR, Air Canada, other Crown agencies and the Department of Transport—and, for that matter, other departments of government—are in a state of fear as a result of the policy and method adopted for the implementation of bilingualism. It is unfair, unreasonable and results in poor labour relations and costs that are a burden. It is creating disunity and is separating our country. It is destroying it. These funds could, and should be used to create productive employment. The present policy detracts substantially from the service now provided by Air Canada and CNR employees. It is reducing the morale of the employees and this results in lack of initiative and fear in jobs. Bilingualism in air traffic control is creating a real problem. I suggest that this is an international, English fact and we should leave it alone.

Another matter which concerns my constituents is the reduced air service provided to the city of Moncton and, in fact, the whole province of New Brunswick. There is no direct air service between the nation's capital and the province of New Brunswick. In conjunction with the Greater Moncton Chamber of Commerce and the Moncton city council, I met with Air Canada officials. A suggestion has been made to Air Canada in order to rectify the problem. I ask the minister to use his good offices to have this matter rectified. This is one case where Air Canada can do something to produce revenue. That is something Air Canada, CNR and some other agencies and corporations of government are reluctant to do. It might mean a little diplomacy, but it can be done.

Further, for years in southeastern New Brunswick we have been without adequate passenger facilities and baggage facilities. The runways should be repaired, improved and extended. In some cases, aircraft have to come in on the wrong runway. That should not happen in this day and age. The passenger terminal is packed. Customs facilities are inadequate and should be improved. The services and facilities of that airport are taxed to capacity. I want to know from the minister if provision has been made for these additional facilities. They are needed now. Incidentally, if there are any more problems in the controversy with regard to the Pickering airport, I suggest that the minister divert the funds allocated for the Pickering airport to the needed improvements and extension of services and facilities of the Moncton airport and other needs in the Moncton and Atlantic region.

In addition, the matter of a national transportation policy and a regional transportation policy, whether the minister agrees or not, and the problem of urban transportation in its fullest and most complete definition and interpretation cannot be forgotten. These matters are most essential: they deserve the attention of the minister and his department.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, I am sure the hon. member will understand that I cannot answer all the questions or deal with all the subjects he has raised, particularly with regard to bilingualism. It would take much more time that we have at the moment. There will be another opportunity. I think the hon. member is interested in knowing whether the facilities at the Moncton airport will be improved. I can say there is something in the estimates and we hope to make these improvements this year. I think the amount for this year is just over $2.5 million. With regard to how that amount will be spent, I will have to check with the department to see exactly what they have in mind. I know there is another amount provided for in the next fiscal year. I promise the hon. member that some day I will visit Moncton so that I can see for myself what is going on. Does the hon. member want to ask a question?

[Mr. Jones.]

Mr. Jones: Regarding what the minister has just said with respect to the $2.5 million, is that for the aircraft control relocation or does it include extention of the terminal facilities, including passenger and baggage facilities?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, that is what I want to verify. If the hon. member has no objection, and if I cannot give him the information before the end of the day, I will write to him tomorrow telling him exactly what we intend to do with that amount of money.

● (1650)

The Chairman: At this point I should inform the committee of the questions to be raised at the time of the adjournment. They are as follows: the hon. member for Parkdale—Immigration; the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants—Public Service; the hon. member for Simcoe North—National Parks.

Mr. Landers: Mr. Chairman, as a preamble I should like to thank the Minister of Transport and his staff for their co-operation in the past. In particular, I wish to express my thanks to Lucy Dion and Judy Scott of the minister's office for their efforts on behalf of my constituents in Saint John-Lancaster.

Mr. Chairman, within the city of Saint John, New Brunswick, in the federal constituency of Saint John-Lancaster, there is a harbour. Within the Saint John harbour at the present time there is an anomaly called Rodney terminal. It is an anomaly because there is no other terminal owned and operated by the National Harbours Board which has been financed in such a peculiar manner. Though the wharf is owned and operated by the National Harbours Board, the Premier of New Brunswick agreed to guarantee the funding necessary. Presently, the province of New Brunswick has invested $20 million of provincial money, plus $5 million which the province borrowed from DREE in the form of a repayable loan. The National Harbours Board has invested $12 million which it received from Treasury Board in the form of repayable loan funds. In effect, we have the province coughing up $25 million and the owner and the operator, the National Harbours Board, contributing only $12 million into the project which has so far cost a total of $37 million.

Mr. Chairman, my question to the Minister of Transport is: Why should the province of New Brunswick have the only terminal in Canada owned and operated by a federal board but which is two-thirds funded by the people of the province?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, in response to this first question I must say that we have co-operated quite closely with the government of New Brunswick so that they could keep going; but they needed more help than we were able to give through the National Harbours Board. Now I can tell the hon. member, without citing any figure at the moment, that it is our intention to help more if it is necessary. From what the hon. member is saying, it seems as though there is a necessity for there to be better co-operation from the federal authorities, and this is something we will do with pleasure.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, some time ago the minister told the House that the transportation policy now under study would embrace everything that moves and that it would be announced some time during the spring or summer. The minister further stated that the policy would cover not only regional air carriers but airports and highways. We have been waiting for the unfolding of this vitally needed transportation policy. I notice from reading the estimates that considerable funds are devoted to the function of strengthening the policy and planning programs of the department; I see a reference in the blue book, under these headings, to a sum of almost $19 million.

I rise to take part in the debate today following a brief reference by the minister last night to a change of direction with respect to air policy. His comments are to be found at page 5712 of Hansard. The change results from the fact that the regional carriers are now fully involved with the larger jets; the old policy was never designed to embrace this concept. To bring the matter into focus, may I remind hon. members that when the regional air policy was announced in 1966, the categories were reasonably flexible. The minister is aware of them:

(a) Where appropriate, limited competition on mainline route segments of Air Canada or CPA may be permitted to regional carriers if this is consistent with their local route development.

(b) In a few cases, secondary routes presently operated by Air Canada and CPA may become eligible for transfer to regional carriers.

(c) A larger role will be allotted to regional carriers in connection with the development of domestic and international charger services, inclusive tours and new types of services.

It seems to me that those categories are still broad enough to embrace the advent of the jet plane. This view is supported by outstanding leaders in the field of regional air carrier service. Among them is the Hon. Lionel Chevrier who is now president of QuebecAir. He criticized the application of the policy and accused Air Canada of an inexcusable lack of civic spirit in intervening before a foreign agency to limit the growth of Canadian regional air lines. I say this because before I reach the end of my remarks I want to get an opinion from the minister as to whether Air Canada is now moving back into some of the regional air categories it abandoned immediately before the announcement of the 1966 policy and thereafter.

Incidentally, that statement by Mr. Chevrier was reported in the Globe and Mail of February 13 of this year. More recently, on April 23, another leader in the regional aviation field, Mr. Arthur Mauro, of TransAir made very much the same point when he told the company's annual meeting that regional airlines were supposed to be granted additional passenger routes under the federal regional air policy announced in 1966, but that this had not happened. He suggested that the proper allocation of domestic routes would reduce the magnitude of the fare increases being requested by main line and regional carriers. Both types of carriers were losing money on short haul routes. Canada's route system should therefore be redesigned so that is would be more in keeping with the equipment and organizational structures of various carriers.

This opinion seems to be reinforced by what the minister stated last night. We were given a preliminary idea of the upgraded policy by the minister's statement on November 23, 1973, which dealt with the international aspects of air policy. This was to be followed by an expansion of the regional concept affecting also the primary or third level carriers, as they are sometimes called.

I agree with the hon. member for Bruce-Grey who suggested that, if we are going to make these two essential parts of the air policy about to be enunciated serve the air transportation needs of Canada, we will have to use the hub and spoke principle. I think that is why the minister indicated that he is putting the emphasis on primary and third level carriers.

I bring the problem right into focus now in a specific area of Canada to which I have directed the minister's attention before. I refer to western Manitoba and eastern Saskatchewan, that area of Manitoba outside the city of Winnipeg which is in the southern part of the province. The minister has announced that there will be an experimental commuter service operating quite soon in co-operation with the province of Manitoba. I lay emphasis on the word "experimental" because this is to be a two-year experiment. It replaces a similar service that was being provided up to a year ago by Midwest, a subsidiary of TransAir. The reason Midwest asked for suspension of service a year ago was that it had to be subsidized. It was not economically viable. I understand that the proposed service is also going to be subsidized, and it will bring into air service communities like Brandon, Yorkton, Saskatoon, Dauphin, and so on. The point I want to make is that unless the hub and spoke principle is adopted, that service will not be any more useful than was the suspended Midwest service.

What is needed in this part of Canada is a jet service that will provide rapid access to the eastern market from these particular parts of southeastern Saskatchewan and southwestern Manitoba. I am sure the minister realizes this, because in an interjection last night he said: "They can make money by flying from Brandon to Toronto but not by flying from Brandon to Winnipeg". That is just the point I want to make. The hub and spoke principle, as enunciated by the hon. member for Bruce-Grey, demonstrates that you have to feed into these regional areas. In this particular part of Canada there would be a population of about 250,000 which would be a potential market for air services. Air service is urgently needed because the city of Brandon, for example, is the home of the provincial exhibition of Manitoba and of the Royal Manitoba Winter Fair, and it is becoming increasingly difficult to attract the interest of the eastern part of Canada, agronomists, and so on, in these fairs—which were, and still are outstanding shows on the continent—unless there is jet access.

The specific question I should like to ask the minister—perhaps he will also enlarge on some of the points he made in his preliminary statement last night—is this: Is it within the concept of the revised regional, air policy that is about to be enunciated that the commuter service necessary for gathering passengers from surrounding rural areas will be reinforced by a jet service that would operate out of Brandon airport? Air Canada flies over Brandon about eight times a day in both an easterly and westerly direction. TransAir, the designated regional carrier, offered a jet service but this was turned down by an ATC decision. I trust the minister is taking a hard look at that decision to see whether the refusal is within his contemplated regional air policy and to see whether it is economically feasible. This was a service to be operated without a subsidy of any kind based on the availability of the new Fokker 28 jet aircraft.

I know that Air Canada has been asked by the province of Saskatchewan to review jet service to this area, and perhaps the minister can give us an insight into any decisions made in this regard. I am also aware that Air Canada is offering a jet service into Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, which is a community very similar in size to Brandon, though I doubt it will have a population base of some 250,000 upon which to draw.

In summary, this is a very urgently needed service. We encourage the minister to proceed expeditiously with his review. I feel the regional air policy can still fit pretty well within the original categories if sufficient flexibility is given to make use of the wide potential of the jet planes that are now available to all regional carriers.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, in regard to the policy of 1966 of switching air routes from Air Canada to the regional carriers, the hon. member made reference, not to Mr. Chevrier but to the other gentleman whose name I forget.

Mr. Dinsdale: You mean Mr. Mauro of TransAir.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I can give the hon. member the list if he wants it, and he can ask Mr. Chevrier about it. Mr. Chevrier is with QuebecAir, one of the airlines that profits the most from routes which used to belong to Air Canada, one of which is Quebec-Bagotville-Seven Islands. I might point out that TransAir got the Thunder Bay to Toronto route, for example, in competition with Air Canada. So I think that kind of statement leads nowhere because there is no truth to it. If I am told it is insufficient, then we will discuss it further.

Be that as it may, we are now compelled by circumstances—this is something we will probably have to discuss shortly—to create a third level carrier. This is the experiment at Brandon, Yorkton, Dauphin and Saskatoon with the S-27, I think it is, manufactured by the government of Manitoba. The experiment has two purposes. First, it will give service to the area; second, it will be a good opportunity to test the aircraft to see whether it is suitable for this kind of service.

As far as jets are concerned, this is a matter for the ATC, as the hon. member mentioned. The ATC is a committee of the CTC, and it is the ATC that decides whether there is to be a service between two cities. Although there may be a change in the future, all I can say at the moment is that I am ready to discuss the matter with the CTC. But I am not sure that we are in agreement that it is a good thing to have new jets covering different sectors of the country so that one day we will be so overloaded by aircraft or by equipment that—

• (1710)

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the minister, but the time allotted to the hon. member for Brandon-Souris has now expired.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I was able to ask a few questions of the minister yesterday, and I listened carefully to most of the questions of hon. members yesterday and today, and to the minister's replies. Let me say at the outset that what I am about to say has nothing to do with my personal regard for the minister. I have a high personal regard for him and I hope that nothing I say from here on will be taken by him personally. I am sure he will not do that.

Earlier, in reply to the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville regarding Crowsnest pass freight rates, the minister said if there was going to be any decision, he would make it. Since the hon. member became Minister of Transport he has repeatedly made speeches in this House and has answered literally thousands of questions during the oral question period on various aspects of the whole transportation system in Canada and all modes. I should have thought by now he would have got the message that there needs to be some fundamental change.

He has repeatedly said the government will be coming up with a new policy. His predecessor, and the minister before him said the same thing. This sort of thing has gone on for some time in this parliament, and in the previous two parliaments: we have had a continuous litany of this sort of answer. I, for one, and I suspect most other members of this Chamber and the majority of the public in Canada, have run out of patience. We have heard great speeches, funny speeches, we have heard crying and whining by this Minister of Transport, and we have been asked to wait for this and to wait for that. I, for one, do not think we can wait any longer. We are tired of waiting. Our patience has been exhausted. It seems to me that three successive parliaments and the public generally have been more than patient, kind and understanding with the minister.

When this minister talks about making the decisions, whether they are in respect of Crowsnest pass rates or anything else, and says that he will be the one to do so, I should point out that we have seen nothing but a continual display of weakness and indecision. We have had no decisions from this Minister of Transport. When it comes to announcements or statements in respect of Crowsnest pass rates, who makes them? It is not the Minister of Transport; it is the Minister of Justice. When it comes to transportation studies in respect of grain movement in western Canada—and I would think that would be under the Department of Transport—who makes the announcement? I suggest the announcement is made by the Grains Council under the Minister of Justice.

When statements are made about branch line abandonments which are killing hundreds of communities in western Canada, who makes those statements? They are not made by the Minister of Transport; they usually come from the Minister of Justice.

An hon. Member: Because he believes in capital punishment.

Mr. Benjamin: When there are speeches and statements to be made about rail line relocations, who makes them? They are made by the minister in charge of housing, or the Minister of Regional, Economic Expansion—but not by the Minister of Transport. When it comes to urban transit—and I should think that would have something to do with transportation—who makes the statements? Who made a speech in Toronto yesterday in this regard? It was made by the minister in charge of housing, not by the Minister of Transport. Who supported the railways in opposition to a CTC ruling on freight rates? Where was the Minister of Transport at that time? The Minister of Justice supported the case of the railways, not the Minister of Transport.

The railway company presidents, including the president of the one the people of Canada are supposed to own, have no compunction about making arbitrary decisions in respect of freight rates, totally ignoring the Minister of Transport. If one looks at the reply which appears at page 5640 of Hansard for last Friday, he will get an indication of how the railway companies ignore this Minister of Transport. The minister was asked a question by the hon. member for Mackenzie, to which he replied:

—I can say there is no law that says the railways must open their books. I tell you it is not being done. I asked for information last week and received a very nice answer saying that this is not going to be revealed to anybody, including the Minister of Transport. Someday I hope we will have an opportunity to discuss that here in the House.

I can remember one, two or three days of special debate going back to early 1969 when the same sort of thing was being discussed and the minister said something different. The presidents of these railroads can totally ignore the Minister of Transport; they act on the basis of being a law unto themselves. The president of the Canadian Pacific can rewrite history in respect of the Crowsnest pass rates or anything else. I am sure the Minister of Transport has had a few bitter experiences with that gentleman and that company.

The minister was complaining yesterday about there being so many Crown corporations that he does not know who they report to or how they report, whether through the department or through the minister to parliament. How many years has the hon. gentleman been the minister? He and his predecessors have had 12 years to bring in a new transportation policy. Where is this new policy? Where is this restructuring of transportation? Where is this fundamental change to our transportation policy and our transportation system in this country? This minister and his predecessors have sat idly by while our two railway systems have coldly and calculatedly, at the expense of the economy and the people of this country, allowed our railroads to deteriorate to a state where they are a national disgrace.

These companies have siphoned off hundreds of millions of dollars for investment in shopping centres, high-rise office buildings, oil companies, pipeline companies and mining and processing plants while our railroads have been crying for help. As a result, we have totally inadequate and completely unfair freight and passenger services. We have a transportation system that discriminates against people of this country because of where they happen to live.

The minister has said that competition does not work in respect of transportation. Perhaps he limited that to railway transportation. I do not wish to misquote him or put words in his mouth. He said that two or three years ago. I am not suggesting things he does not already know; I am just reminding him of them. Where is the policy that will eliminate this discrimination resulting from a nineteenth century concept of transportation in Canada? Transportation services in Canada have deteriorated to the point where they are as bad as any in the world. No industrialized nation in the world still operates transportation on the concept of competition and profitability. Where is this fundamental change in transportation policy?

The complaints of members from all parties, and from members of the public in all parts of Canada surely should be sufficient to indicate to the minister that any policy he brings in will have to be fundamentally different. Such a policy must be so different that it will require courage, a massive effort and a great deal of leadership. Such a policy cannot be implemented by a Minister of Transport who allows himself to be undermined continually by his colleagues in the cabinet. It cannot be implemented by a minister who allows himself to be treated like dirt by the heads of the transportation companies in the country.

I hope when the minister uses the final 15 minutes tonight, and I intend to use my entire 15 minutes now, he will tell this parliament that he is either going to bring in that fundamentally changed transportation policy and stop all this fractionating that is going on in our transportation system, or he is going to quit. If he is not prepared to stand on his own hind legs and stop allowing himself to be pushed around and treated like some clown in the House of Commons—and we do not need any more funny speeches or jokes that get laughs from members of the press gallery—then we are not going to see this new transportation policy.

● (1720)

Mr. Chairman, the requirements of transportation and everything else in the economy depend on the integration of transportation. We keep messing around with concepts that were thrown out long ago by most countries. Transportation must be treated as a public utility, an essential public service. Yet the government seems still to think it can have a little bit of free enterprise here, a little bit of public enterprise there, a little bit of regulation here, a little bit of regulation there, a little bit of this and that, and a little bit of a Minister of Transport. This business will not work. You cannot have it both ways.

We might look at the countries of Europe, Japan and Australia. We must treat transportation as a public utility, owned and operated by the public and controlled by the public through the Minister of Transport, the government and parliament, with a utility rating board or whatever overseeing body might be set up. Instead of that, we keep enlarging the jungle and compounding all the inequities, discrimination and inadequacies of a transportation system. Nineteenth century concepts have got us into a mess here. Our railroad system across the country has failed year after year to meet the growth in the transportation needs of Canada. There is nothing new about there being a shortage of boxcars. I remember in 1946 and 1947 that there were not enough stock cars or refrigerator cars. That was forgiven because of the wartime period. They have never caught up. There has always been a shortage of locomotives. I remember in the early 1950s when locomotives were leased from the United States.

The minister must, once and for all, say that the government will bring in a national transportation policy that will get rid of the concept of competition which cannot function in a public utility. It would be just as logical to have two competing highways running side by side, or two competing electrical or telephone companies. We did that years ago. It would be just as sensible to have two competing sewer and water systems running under our streets. This is nonsense. There have been duplications, inefficiencies, backhauls and failure to keep the system up to date. Some people in the government propose that perhaps we should take over the roadbeds of the railroads. They would love that. They have allowed them to deteriorate to a point where it will take something like $1 billion to put the roadbeds back into the standard they should be in. They have never kept them up. Where was the Minister of Transport—this one or his predecessor? Who was telling the railways that they had two choices, either compulsory or "you must"?

The same situation applies in respect of the airlines. The minister says that Air Canada is asked to do things for the country as a whole. I agree with his remarks about Air Canada yesterday. They lost $1 million on their Montreal to Moscow route last year. We asked Air Canada to do something we would not ask private enterprise to do. That has been the problem. The concept has been to siphon off the lucrative routes and pad up some regional carriers or CP Air to the detriment of our own airline. I am amazed that Air Canada has done as well as it has. Half a dozen of the largest privately owned airlines in the United States are presently on their hands and knees pleading with their federal authority for several hundred million dollars to bail them out. As I have said, I am amazed that Air Canada has done as well as it has. I submit it has done that despite the transportation policy of this government and despite some of the senior management. Had it not been for the quality and character of most of the employees, it would not have done as well as it has.

The way we handcuff our own airlines and railways is criminal. It is beyond belief. I thought that by now the minister, even if it means having a knock-down, dragged-out fight with some of his nineteenth century colleagues, would have said, "This will be the new policy, or I quit. This is what I want to bring to parliament. This is what we need to do about transportation." We have all this nonsense about flying DC-8 jets over 100-mile flights. It is ridiculous, wasteful and inefficient. One can get from downtown Ottawa to downtown Toronto more quickly on the turbo than on Air Canada. Try it. This is a waste. The CNR removed one passenger train when it got the turbo going between Montreal and Toronto, and something in the order of 10,000 or 15,000 automobiles a day go back and forth between Montreal and Toronto with one person in each car. Really, what is transportation policy? Why should people leave their automobiles behind? The congestion in our cities requires a massive effort on the part of the provincial and municipal authorities as part of our national transportation policy. We need an urban transportation system. It will take ten years and hundreds of millions of dollars to do it. It will also create tens of thousands of jobs.

[Mr. Benjamin.]

The railroads refused to work together for the benefit of the various regions and areas of Canada. Why? They are supposed to be competing. The CNR and CPR have tracks side by side, but the minister in charge of the Wheat Board and some of his allies say that we must pick up branch lines way out on the prairies where farmers may have to drive an additional 15 or 20 miles to haul their grain. We have nonsense like that on the 45-miles between Regina and Moose Jaw. There are CNR tracks right beside the CPR tracks. You could remove those 45 miles of CNR track and nobody would be hurt. Then you would have a much more efficient and sensible operation between those two cities. But oh, no; they must compete.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The time allotted to the hon. member has expired.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I will be very brief, Mr. Chairman. I think the hon. member has not been very nice. He did not put any questions to me; rather, he made a series of attacks and I do not have an opportunity to answer.

Mr. Benjamin: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I made it very clear to the minister that he would have 15 minutes tonight, and I hope he will do whatever he likes about what I said. There is no use asking questions any more. This has been going on for two years, and we get nowhere.

Mr. McIsaac: Mr. Chairman, I think it is worth while bringing to the attention of members that the Premier of Saskatchewan called an election today, and we are witnessing the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre conducting his campaign. It is interesting to note that he has the same backward-looking approach he has had for 20 years.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Mr. Chairman, I shall try to be a little nicer to the Minister of Transport. The port of Churchill is totally dependent on the CNR for the delivery of grain and other imported and exported materials to this great inland seaport. I have mentioned on other occasions in the House that this port is not used to its capacity, for the following reasons. First, there is lack of concern and effort by this government. This is reflected in the estimates we are discussing today. I feel that the money that is being spent on capital projects and also on maintenance projects represents nothing more than housekeeping. I do not feel this is good in relation to the expansion of the inland port of Churchill.

Most of the railway that runs from The Pas to Churchill has been upgraded over the last few years to the point where it is now capable of handling the hopper cars that have been built for the transportation of grain. However, the portion of the railroad from Gillam to Churchill has not been upgraded to this point. There have been several serious rail problems which have caused several wrecks. This has cost the CNR a large sum of money. It has also hampered the delivery of goods to the port of Churchill. Another problem between Gillam and Churchill which also affects the delivery of goods to Churchill is that there is no passing track from Gillam to Churchill, a distance of some 200 miles.

If the port of Churchill is to be brought up to its full capacity, we have to provide some money to upgrade the railway facilities and the facilities of the port itself. I would like to commend the members of the harbours board who deal with Churchill because the fellows I have met in Churchill who are working there are making a good, honest effort to upgrade this port facility, but we must have the help of the government in order to develop this port to its full capacity. I am not thinking now about submarines, and so on. I want the port brought up to the capacity of which it is capable.

The port at the present time is under the authority of the eastern region of Canada, which gives Montreal complete control over this very vital port. Why is this port not under the control of the western region where the goods shipped through that port originate? Grain comes from the central prairie region of Canada, sulphur is now coming from western Canada and is being shipped out through Churchill. Why is it controlled by the eastern region? Why can the control of that port not be in the hands of the western region where the people are closer to the situation?

Another problem with regard to the delivery of grain is the fact that there is no co-ordination whatsoever between the wheat board, the Department of Transport, and the harbours board. There does not seem to be co-operation in getting the grain to that facility and on to ships. I have stated before in the House that today when there are boats which can carry 1,300,000 bushels out of Churchill we must have better facilities and more storage capacity. Some of our trackage is completely plugged with the traditional type of boxcars, and that is why we have to upgrade our facility and the trackage in order to handle hopper cars, thus bringing the port of Churchill up to its full capacity with the facilities now there.

I was interested today to see the interest the harbours board is now taking in the diversion of the Churchill River. Hopefully not, but that will probably have some effect on the town of Churchill with regard to its water intake, and so on. I was pleased that the harbours board has the National Research Council carrying out a study.

I would also like to mention the air transport committee. In the area I represent we, fortunately or unfortunately, do not have Air Canada, but we have carriers like TransAir, Lambair, Calmair, Cross Lake Air Service, St. Andrews Air, Ilford-Riverton Airways and Parsons Airways. These carriers are not being subsidized to the tune of some $9 million. No one is picking up the tab for them. They must either provide a service and make it pay, or they are just out of business. When we consider the problems they have in making application for additional runs and reclassifying runs they already have, many of the air carriers, because of the time element and the slow rate at which ATC makes a decision, have to wait anywhere from 9 months to 18 months for a decision.

I say those air carriers are the backbone of transportation in the north at this time. At one time the railway was the backbone, but it has become such a dilapidated transportation system, and so undependable, that air transport is the key to transportation around the Churchill constituency, yet we are forcing these air carriers to violate the law almost every day because there has not been a decision handed down by the ATC.

The ATC should be considering the entire air carrier system. Perhaps we should be dealing with regions of Canada instead of trying to make rules applicable right across the country. There are air transportation problems which could be solved within each individual area. We also find that air carriers in many cases are not being considered for other regional contracts which come up, and I think they should be taken into consideration when these contracts are being let.

Freight rates in general are so out of line for people living in communities served only by the railway that it is at this point forcing not only small industry out of business in much of the Churchill constituency, but also some of the larger companies. I can cite International Nickel as an example. The Department of Transport appears to take the view that it can put a tariff on a particular item because the only way that item can be moved is by rail, but I can assure the minister that the companies are aware of this, and they feel they are being penalized. They are considering other means of transportation to move articles into their mine sites, and so on.

The small businesses along the railway to Churchill, and those along the railway to Lynn Lake are suffering an increase of 20 per cent. This was announced just last week in the area. It makes it impractical for small businesses to ship articles. That is not so for the large operator who can receive containerized goods, but the small operator is almost completely out of business because he does not have that alternative to move his goods. Many people in the smaller communities have begun chartering aircraft to move goods even though trains run right past their doorsteps because they can no longer afford to pay the rates set by the railway.

I would like to mention that the NTCL has moved into Churchill on a contract for the next 15 years to move goods up the coast of Hudson Bay. I welcome this type of development because this will help the port of Churchill. I hope this will be a jumping off spot for the development of the Arctic gas pipeline, which I hope will come down the west side of Hudson Bay. I can think of no better place than the port of Churchill as a distribution centre for that pipeline. The railway is there, ships have access, and so on. I think it would be a good move to get the facilities in shape now.

I see that there is also development on the airstrips at Eskimo Point, Whale Cove and Rankin Inlet. This is being done under the jurisdiction of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It will be very beneficial if the pipeline does come down the west side of Hudson Bay, where I think it should, because it is the only practical route.

I would like to ask the minister if he can give me any answer on the future development of the port of Churchill. Is the government just sitting back? Is the government completely controlled by the ports in the east? Why is Churchill not developed to its full potential of, say, 40 million bushels of grain per annum, as opposed to what the minister announced last year as another record year of 22 million bushels? I cannot accept that, when the facilities are already in place at Churchill and there are people there who operate the port. I cannot understand why the port cannot operate to its full capacity.

● (1740)

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, I have not got much time. I do not see why the hon. member draws a conclusion exactly opposite to that which he should draw. The port of Churchill had been very much neglected in the past and I have been negotiating with the government of Manitoba to change that. Before we met a year ago there was $12 million that we were supposed to spend in about six years. We decided to reduce the period to three years in order to expedite the project. Also, as the hon. member knows, we cannot use the port the year round and so we are trying to see how we can extend this period.

The hon. member asks why Churchill is serviced by ships or companies from Montreal. This year I decided that the company which is going to serve the North and the Keewatin area will be the NTCL. That is not a company from Montreal, and there have been complaints about that. It must be recognized that we are making an effort to pay $3.3 million for engineering purposes to see how we can develop the port of Churchill. This is at the same time that we are developing the port of Prince Rupert.

The emphasis could have been put on the port of Prince Rupert, but the government decided to do something for Churchill, and is doing it. The hon. member may say it is not doing enough. Mr. Chairman, we are dredging in the port of Churchill in order to allow ships to use the harbour more easily than in the past. We are not regressing, we are progressing. Maybe it is not fast enough and maybe next year we can go faster, but we have been worried about Churchill, as we have been worried also about Prince Rupert.

The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre forgot all this in his speech, because there was Prince Rupert, there was Churchill, and there was all the development we have done in the northern part of British Columbia. He did not mention the Clinton-Ashcroft bypass. This is of no interest to him. He did not talk about the strengthening of the highways so that trucking in the western provinces can move better than in the past. He did not talk about what we have done in the maritimes because he has no interest in that. But we have done something, Mr. Chairman, and there is something in the budget for Churchill. It is better than it used to be.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to take part in the debate because we are dealing with a very important problem in this country.

I am always astonished to realize how much Canada and ancient Greece are alike. In both countries the transportation problem was the one to solve to achieve national unity, economic prosperity at home and in our relations with our neighbours.

Mr. Chairman, because Canada has an area of four million square miles and 22 million people, as Greece is faced with a series of small communities which must be interconnected.

[Mr. Smith (Churchill).]

In my maiden speech, that was the problem to which I wanted to draw the attention of the House because it directly concerns people in my riding. Indeed, my constituents owe their very existence to the transportation system.

Before Confederation, of course, people used waterways, rivers and lakes to travel. Things have changed since and North Bay, as all the other towns in my riding, would not exist if the railway from this town towards the western coast had not been built.

[English]

Recently I had occasion to read a document called "Canada Courier", Volume 12, Number 9, which deals with the Canadian transportation industry. When Canada faces up to its transportation dilemma it will find solutions that will not only enhance communications between Canadians but which will also contribute to its future as a technological and industrial nation.

It is evident that since we developed our industrial power we have concentrated on transportation and a highly sophisticated transportation technology. I am reminded of the MLW controversy last year when we were attempting to export diesel engines to Cuba. We must realize that Canada is one of the main suppliers of diesel engines, and that is because of a highly developed technology in diesel construction. It was a surprise to me to find that Canada was one of the first developers of an international commercial jet airliner. Unfortunately the development was abandoned and Canada lost its technological advantage. That was followed by the abandonment of the CF-105, from which we still suffer.

We can look with pride on the government's involvement in the development of aircraft and air express technology. The "Canada Courier" referred to the DASH 7 and described it in glowing terms. When we see the DASH 7 coming out of the hangar we can take pride in it. As it was developed by de Havilland there was reason for the Canadian government to become directly involved in that company.

The situation in regard to the short takeoff and landing plane has been indicated by the hon. member for Bruce, and I believe the future of Canada resides in that particular domain. In the area I come from, short takeoff and landing planes have been serving the North Bay airport for some time and we expect the service to continue.

I should like to quote one paragraph from the front page of the "Canada Courier" relating to the aerospace industry as I think it describes succinctly what has taken place in that industry. The article reads:

> Canada's aerospace industry manufactures a broad range of products, 75 per cent of which is exported to world markets.

In a country which is so very interested in export markets it is interesting to see that 75 per cent of the production of this industry goes to international markets.

The article continues:

● (1750)

> Highly skilled technical and scientific personnel ensure the most advanced technology and production methods as well as the most meticulous quality control procedures. The results have been marked.

Production value in 1974 was approximately $700,000,000 of which almost $500,000,000 was exported.

We are talking about half a billion dollars' worth of exports.

The Canadian aerospace industry has produced first-class satellites like Anik, a communications satellite taking advantage of the most advanced space technology. I suggest that Canada can be considered as being among the world leaders in communications and transport technology.

[Translation]

If I may now deal with a question which is parochial in nature, so to speak, I would like to direct some questions to the minister whom I congratulate for his initiatives relating to the North Bay airport. Of course, it is not the most popular air terminal in the world. It is in fact a small air terminal which bears already the name of one of my predecessors in the House, Jack Garland. It had not formerly a large custom, but of late years it has been served by three air lines, including Air Canada which calls at the air terminal three times a day, Norantair, an air service of the province of Ontario for the North-East which calls four times a day, and another airline called Voyageur Bradley Air Services which calls regularly too.

So, the air terminal is serving about 400 people a day, and we feel now that the facilities leave much to be desired. There is no refreshments bar. The essentials are there, but it is not possible to have meals or refreshments there. Unfortunately too, the population of the area cannot be served by charter lines, because overseas-borne travelers must go through Toronto for customs clearance.

So, Mr. Chairman, Air Canada has in that building facilities that are, to say the least, shabby. I know that it is not directly due to the fact that this situation was brought to the minister's attention previously. All the representations I made to the minister until now have been successful. Of course, in that field, things change every six or seven months. I wanted to take this opportunity to call the minister's attention on the situation at that airport.

Needless to say that the facilities are inadequate, although the runway itself is one of the best in all north-eastern Ontario, because it is where all the flights which cannot be directed towards Toronto, for one reason or another, because of a strike or bad weather, are sent.

So, we must often welcome great numbers of passengers of Air Canada or other international airlines which are forced to stop there. I would therefore ask the minister to give me some information or to indicate what he intends to do regarding that air terminal and its facilities.

Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt, as I explained at the beginning of my remarks, that my region owes its very existence to the national transportation system. As I said, it is there that the transcontinental line originated from.

[English]

Without doubt, the future of Nipissing, North Bay and Sturgeon Falls depends on transportation. Three railroads serve the area, the ONR, CPR and CNR.

Now that we are involved with the aerospace industry I hope the minister will remember the extent to which North Bay depends on the Department of Transport. The future development of the area is at stake. I therefore hope the minister will make sure that the area's facilities are adequate for present services and also for any contemplated growth in the future.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, first let me make a few comments about the STOL experiment. If the experimental service between Montreal and Ottawa proves to be a success, and if it is proven that the DASH 7 is really an aircraft with STOL performance, not only will some problems in Canada be solved but there will be industrial benefits as well.

About 15 days ago—this does not happen often—a French delegation came here because they were interested in the DASH 7. The head of the delegation was Mr. Ziegler, the man who conceived the Concord, that big supersonic aircraft. Incidentally I do not want to see it here. At any rate he is considered as the father of the Concord. The delegation he headed came here because it was interested in the DASH 7 and in the STOL system. Mr. Ziegler is the head of a company which is concerned about air travel between Paris and the Alps. He found that we have the kind of aircraft they need for their service in France. The delegation went to Toronto, to the de Havilland company, because they wanted to see the DASH 7.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Chairman. I should like to answer the hon. member's second question after supper.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The time allotted to the hon. member for Nipissing has expired. It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The committee will again consider vote No. 1 of the Department of Transport.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, I note the minister is present and his officials are just arriving. I want to say, with no offence to the minister, because I am allowed 15 minutes, if I use the total 15 minutes I do not think that he has no answer to the problems I have chosen to bring before him this evening. However, I hope that he and his officials will consider them.

I was greatly alarmed last Friday when, during the question period, the minister stated he had received a letter from a railway company which said quite clearly that their books were their own, they were not going to make them available to anyone, and there was no law in this land that could force them to do so. That remark concerned me greatly. I understand the predicament the minister is in, Mr. Chairman.

Last evening I read the annual report of Air Canada. Having read a number of annual reports of a number of airlines in recent years, I was concerned about their annual report. I want to put my concerns on record, in essence broadcasting to the people of Air Canada the questions I would like them to answer when they appear before the committee to defend that annual report.

For many months we have heard from the president of Air Canada that it is short-haul traffic that causes them trouble, and long-haul traffic that makes money. He said it is the short-haul traffic they have to look after that really costs them money. I saw no evidence of that in their annual report. They referred to the Rapido air service, but gave no special accounting. Does the Rapido air service make money for Air Canada? That is my first question. The reason I bring that to the attention of the minister and Air Canada is that this is a service only between Montreal and Toronto. They may have, and in fact should have, a separate accounting of that system.

Venturex Limited, a subsidiary of Air Canada, handles their charter service under two groups, CanPlan, and some other one. There is no special accounting and no amount estimated in the Air Canada annual report as to the profit or loss of Venturex. There is hardly any mention as to whether they lost money in their courtship with Wardair or whether they made an actual contribution toward Wardair's credibility to carry on, which I think they did, at a cost to Air Canada and the Air Canada structure generally.

The annual report says with regard to the STOL air operation that there is an "encouraging public response". The president of Air Canada complains about short-hauls costing them money, long-hauls making them money, the short-haul having to be subsidized by the long-haul, yet there is no report as to whether STOL air operations can become a money maker for Air Canada, only that there is an encouraging public response.

If I would like to make an examination of Air Canada's annual report as a shareholder of that company, and I must speak for several thousand shareholders in the constituency of Crowfoot, I would like to know whether the STOL air operation has the potential of being a money maker. If it has, is there any substance to the argument that short-hauls are costly for Air Canada?

I wonder about Air Jamaica and the operations there. Is that operation costing Air Canada money purely and simply because of a commitment to the foreign affairs policy of the government?

What about Canadair and the whole involvement of Air Canada in aircraft construction? Is that operation costing Air Canada money today? Will it eventually prove to be the noose around the neck of Air Canada, forcing it to accept aircraft manufactured by the Canadian aircraft manufacturing industry?

Most airline companies suggest, without a word of a doubt, how much of their income is derived from charter service. Air Canada's annual report does not suggest that at all. It just leads us to believe it is a functional operation, and a very worthwhile one.

Having made those remarks about our air policy, I now wish to deal briefly with our railroad policy. At page 21 of committee report No. 20 of the Standing Committee on Transport Communications, I asked Mr. Sinclair, the president of CP, the following question:

Do you believe that a transportation policy should be geared to regional interests, or for our international interests, or for our ability to compete internationally?

We are attempting to evolve a new transportation policy. I asked a very simple question, should it be geared to regional interests or international interests? I wonder what the minister's opinion is in that regard. Mr. Sinclair replied without any equivocation. His answer can be found at page 21 of the committee report. He said:

Quite frankly, Mr. Horner, I do not think transportation should be used as an instrument of regional equalization. I think there are more effective ways of bringing that about.

● (2010)

He left no doubt that transportation policies should be geared to our ability to compete internationally.

This brings me to the next subject with which I want to deal. I once debated in Regina the question of whether the Canadian Pacific Railway should be nationalized or not. I took the side that it should not be nationalized. I am not ashamed of that. I do not believe it should be nationalized. I am not ashamed of the present management of CP. I think they are good. Mr. Burbidge, Mr. Sinclair, Mr. Martinelli are knowledgeable, capable men. However, from my vantage point I believe they are overlooking certain things and this evening I wish to draw a number of these omissions to the minister's attention.

As hon. members may be aware, there is a great publicity campaign currently going on across the prairies. The CP is spending thousands of dollars to convince the lowly farmers, or people they think of as lowly farmers, that there is a better way—and I know CP is not an easy aminal for the minister to get along with. In that same committee the question of grain shipments arose. The CP said "the bottleneck was on the prairies". That is a direct quotation. The minister in charge of western transportation—no offence to the present minister; I am aware of the fights that go on within the cabinet—came down hard and heavy on the side of the CPR. He turned out to be the spokesman for the CPR in Saskatchewan.

A few minutes ago I spoke about taking part in that debate in Regina. Well, I do not think the CP should be nationalized but I do believe it should perform a national service within the province of Saskatchewan. That is where the Minister of Justice and I disagree. On April 10, about a year ago, the Minister of Transport and I, at a transportation conference he called, sat and watched various spokesmen enlarge upon the ills of transportation.

The CP laid out a chart of a car cycle of grain car movements in western Canada. They said the total car cycle was 18 days. I have the chart before me, now. A car spent 1.7 days in the City of Calgary, 4.4 days moving from Calgary to Vancouver, and 4.4 days in Vancouver trying to get unloaded. So of the 18 days, it spent over half the time being made up into a big choo-choo train in Calgary, and going on being a big choo-choo train through the mountains, and trying to get that choo-choo train unloaded in Vancouver. So when the President of CPR tells the transportation committee that the bottleneck is really on the prairies, his own charts do not substantiate that statement.

He goes on to say, as we read at page 22 of the committee report that the whole cause is the five-day work week on the elevators on the prairies. Mr. Chairman, the whole cause is not the five-day work week because, according to this same chart, the time the car spent on the prairies in spite of a five-day work week is 2.9 days; the car spent 2.9 days out of the 18 being loaded. So it is readily conceivable that the biggest bottleneck is Vancouver.

Has the Department of Transport investigated this bottleneck? Is it because of the inefficiency of the elevators? Should they work on what I ordinarily refer to as the spout and auger principle? Or is the bulk loading system preferable? Do these delays arise because loading facilities at Vancouver are based on a five-day week? These are questions which I ask the department to examine. If it has not done so already, I think it should. In any case it is important that the transportation committee of the House of Commons should consider these matters carefully.

I know from evidence given at the same committee hearings that between now and 1980 the CP plans to spend $30-40 million on the purchase of boxcars. Yet during the transportation conference the minister called on April 10, 1974, it was suggested that if they could cut the grain car cycle by one day the number of cars required could be decreased by 763. If they could lower the cycle by two days another 747 cars would be saved, making a total saving of 1,510. If they could cut that cycle by three days—these are CP figures I am quoting—they would save a further 754 cars.

Reducing the cycle from 18 days to 15 days is certainly not an impossible goal. With a reduction of three days, over 2,100 boxcars could be saved. This would save the Canadian government $40 million on the purchase of 2,000 boxcars. This gives some idea of what confounds me when I sit and watch an hour of slides being shown by CP on the basis of figures which cannot stand up to close, knowledgeable scrutiny. The CPR has been obsessed with the idea of breaking the Crowsnest pass rates. It has a disciple in the Minister of Justice. He, too, is obsessed with the idea of breaking the Crowsnest pass rates. I think other means could be found of providing efficient service to western Canada in the movement of grain.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Chairman, I welcome this opportunity to put a few questions to the minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) this evening. As was stated yesterday by my colleague the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier), the estimates keep increasing every year, but services in our areas are constantly reduced. I have nothing against progress and updating. But if a service must be discontinued, we ask that it be replaced by a more adequate system, so that the people be better served. We should expect service commensurate with increased estimates, and better still in certain areas. Mr. Chairman, the minister is aware of air transport problems faced by the constituency of Villeneuve, and I would like to put a few questions to the minister concerning Val d'Or airport, which has had no radar for the past month and a half.

My first question is this: Since we are examining estimates, can the minister advise the House whether the estimates provide for the installation of new radar or similar facilities required for the smooth operation of air services at Val d'Or airport? And if so, can the minister tell whether this will be done soon? I raise the question because a number of air passengers in northwestern Quebec fear for their safety in foggy weather.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, I have answered this same question three times in this House over the past week, once for the benefit of the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) and another time for another member in the Abitibi area. Of course the forces left the airport with their equipment. We now have inspectors on site in order to determine what type of signal equipment is needed for maximum aircraft safety. As soon as I have their report, I shall be in a position to tell when we shall take action.

Mr. Caouette (Villeneuve): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. My second question is this: Can the minister tell whether there were developments concerning another airport in the Northern part of my constituency of Villeneuve, the Chibougamau airport for which the people have been pleading for a number of years? It would serve an estimated population of 20,000. According to certain airlines a new airport in Chibougamau would be profitable. Can the minister tell whether there are developments on that matter?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, in the estimates, $2,700,000 are allocated to local or municipal airports. Of course, there is an order of priorities; we cannot build up airports everywhere. People tell me: "It seems it would be profitable. The hon. member should be able to go a little further than that with local authorities, which he probably knows quite well. I know some of them too. If he wants me to give him a hand, I can help him. He should be able to prove that the money would not be invested to allow one or two planes only to land."

There are already airports in the Lac St. Jean area; there is a very big one in the Saguenay area. That does not mean that there must not be one in Chibougamau, a city where there is industrial development. Besides, during the last elections, I went there and even visited a new barking plant of considerable importance. In any event, I think that a case must be made which will demonstrate that an airport is essential there. Then, we would be able to come to an agreement with the municipality and help them. However, I cannot tell him in such a candid way.

I remember a very simple incident which happened in my office when a full delegation told me: "We would like an airport at such a place". I answered: "What planes are going to land there?" They said: "Build up the runway and we shall see." Then, we should build up runways everywhere. All I ask you is that the case be made and, then, we will see how we can help.

Mr. Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Chairman, yesterday morning, I had conversations with the manager of Nordair, at Val d'Or, and he told me that he had submitted an application, I do not know whether it is to the minister or the Canadian Transport Commission, in order to get the privilege to go to Chibougamau to connect Val-d'Or and Chibougamau; this is what makes me conclude that the company finds it profitable.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, Nordair might be interested because it is going to serve the whole area as it is already serving the Abitibi. The decision will be made by the Air Transport Committee of the Canadian Transport Commission. We shall see what their decision will be and if there are problems, we might discuss them.

Mr. Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Chairman, would the minister tell us if he is aware of representations made in order to discontinue the railway passenger service between La Reine and Senneterre?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): As far as railway service between those two communities is concerned, as mentioned by the hon. member, I think it is under the jurisdiction of the CNR. I believe that the company needs the approval of the Canadian Transport Commission. I do not know whether the CNR has submitted an application to that effect, perhaps you might give me some more details as I do not locate those communities very well geographically. But, wherever they are located, the CTC must authorize the CNR to discontinue the service.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I will try to be brief. I should like to discuss for a few moments some problems in the city of Calgary, but before doing so may I join in the remarks of the hon. member for Crowfoot with reference to Air Canada short-hauls. It is not so long ago that Air Canada had a route between Calgary and Edmonton. They claimed it cost them so much money that finally the route was given to a small branch company. The small branch company has made so much money that it is probably the gold mine of the west. So it sure boils down to straight management in these things.

In the city of Calgary we have the only airport in which the depot is owned by the municipality. In the days before we saw the new depots built at Toronto, Winnipeg and Edmonton—this was when the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings was minister—Calgary was missed, not because the government missed it intentionally but because the depot was owned by the municipality.

Then at the time Mr. Pickersgill was passing the bill through which he was going to become head of the Canadian Transport Commission, which ensured that he would get a good pension, the department negotiated a contract with the city of Calgary for the government to purchase the equity from the city. At that time it promised that within three years we would have a new depot. This was some time around 1966 or 1967. It is now 1975.

The old depot has been extended in all directions. During the winter it is equipped with electric heaters. Calgary airport is called an international airport, yet while you are waiting for Air Canada, if you happen to sit under one of the heaters you get one of those so-called Florida tans. Some say that they even interfere with the fertility of the human race, they are so hot. There are no decent washrooms. The ones they have are so dirty that even the hogs you find in rural areas in the northern part of Alberta would hesitate to use them.

There is no air conditioning at the airport, but there let me congratulate the minister. I once raised this matter in the House during an argument, and since then someone must have read about it and something was done. So I thank the minister for finally putting in some air conditioning to neutralize this terrific heat that you get when waiting for Air Canada in order to crowd on to a 747. They even have pens there. They must have thought they were in the stockyards.

We are now to have a $40 million shiny new depot for which we have waited ten long years. I sent a copy of a telegram I received to my good friend, the minister, who always tries to co-operate if possible within his own sphere of jurisdiction so as to deal with some of the monstrosities that exist in the Department of Transport. Some people claim there is a lot of hanky-panky going on with the tendering. Take, for example, a simple thing like tile. I should like to put this telegram on the record:

> We request your intervention to rectify a situation that is very unfair. We are the low tender for the supply of Gail brickplate tile pavers, approved by the architects—

By the way, they are solid Grit too. I would have thought they were solid gold, but I do know they are solid Grit. They have never been known to go to anybody but the Grits, so they should be palatable to the government.

● (2030)

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): There are a few survivors?

Mr. Woolliams: There are a few survivors in Calgary, and that is what makes them such tremendous characters.

In any event, the title was approved and this company was the one which had its tender in on time. Then along came a company in the east, and my hon. friend laughs because it happens that the company is in her constituency. Apparently the officers of this company were great friends of another noble character in this House, who used to be the Minister of Finance and then the Minister of Transport. He was the man who could always predict the economy with such accuracy.

An hon. Member: You mean Benson.

Mr. Woolliams: You guessed him; it was Benson. Apparently Mr. Benson at some time in his political career advanced a large sum of money to keep this company afloat. The company is still in some trouble and it wants to pull itself out at the expense of the Calgary company.

I have a telegram from Darlington Haskins and Company Limited of Vancouver, which is a branch of P. M. Dartnall Limited, Calgary. I might tell you that the man involved is a kind of character himself. I arrived here after seven hours on the plane—my wife had joined me on this trip—and at two o'clock in the morning he phoned me and he was in no humour to be soft-soaped in any way about this hanky-panky going on in respect of tenders for the Calgary airport.

I would ask the minister if he has an answer in respect of this matter, and I hope he does not tell me there is nothing wrong. I have done a little more research on this and I know that the tenders were closed. I think it was the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton who made a speech about the method of tendering on these contracts. An election has just been called in Saskatchewan, and they say the only difference between the NDP and the Liberals is that the Liberals are full of money. I know they need money for their election, but I do not want it all to come from the Calgary airport and other projects in Calgary.

Seriously, I would like to hear what the minister has to say. Would he now promise to cut out this hanky-panky at our airport and please get it finished so that we do not lose our fertility in the city of Calgary just trying to catch Air Canada flights?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, I think the best way to answer these questions is to refer to a memo I received from Mr. Windsor who is in charge of airports in Canada. This is probably a confidential document but I am fully confident of my discretion. It states:

> Following tender call by the Project Office for supply of quarry tile for Calgary terminal, it was brought to my attention that the specification was more stringent than the Canadian Government Specification Board Standard 75-GP-1B.
> Subsequently, officials recommended that CGSB Specification was adequate for the purpose intended and inasmuch as there was insufficient time to issue an addendum to the tender prior to the close of tenders, the project office is now requesting quotations on the basis of the revised specification.

This was in reference to a tender call for floor tile for the Calgary airport.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, my sympathy is with the minister. The fact is that what has taken place was something over which he had no control.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Well, I thank you.

Mr. Woolliams: If I were the minister I am sure I would not have control, as he does not have control, over this hanky-panky stuff that goes on behind the scenes. Here we have an architect laying down the specifications, and then people come along and change them and a Canadian company loses the contract. This is a Canadian company, by the way, which employs about 1,500 people between Calgary and Vancouver. I know the Minister of National Revenue will appreciate that.

Because specifications are changed I hope the department does not tear up all the tenders. I do not blame the minister for this hanky-panky that is going on. I am going to sit down, Mr. Chairman, but I want to say that there is at stake some $40 million. I hope they do not tear up all the tenders and then grant these contracts on an ad hoc basis.

This is Calgary's centennial year. For 100 years we have been discriminated against in the city of Calgary, by taxation, and in the west generally by freight rates, and by having the poorest international airport in the world. Except for the character and the stamina of these people they would have gone under ground. However, we flourished as a metropolis, but we could still use the help of the minister to cut out this hanky-panky that is going on, or this little dealing under the table. We like to play poker on top of the table, but we have a feeling there is something going on under the table. I would ask the minister to take a look at the situation. Let us get this project built so that we can have some kind of equity and cleanliness.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I think the only suggestion I can make at this moment is that, if I am still around when it happens, the hon. member is cordially invited to the opening of that new airport.

An hon. Member: Let him cut the ribbon.

Mr. Woolliams: Let me thank the minister for his graciousness. Even if I have to stand on Grit tile, I appreciate the invitation.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): This matter of tenders was discussed this afternoon with the Leader of the Opposition and other members, including the member for South Shore. Unfortunately he is not here.

Mr. Stanfield: I will take the message for him.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Yes, you take the message. I may be mistaken, but I think the Leader of the Opposition adopted exactly the same argument. He asked why we did not audit the books of the Harbour Commission in Hamilton in order to discover these things. If the hon. Leader of the Opposition did not use that argument I am sure the hon. member for South Shore did. As hon. members know, there are two commissions in Canada that operate under a special statute adopted by the House of Commons. They do not fall under the general rules, and the Hamilton Harbour Commission is one of the two. It states in that statute that the audit is to be made by the municipality and not by the federal government.

Mr. Stanfield: What about the bids?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): The same thing for the bids.

Mr. Stanfield: I am talking about the St. Lawrence bids.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Oh, well, you changed the subject.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I understand you because, of course, you have no interest in the other one.

Mr. Turner (London East): Mr. Chairman, on behalf of the London District Railway Workers Council I should like to direct a few questions to the minister. That council stated in a letter to the minister that they have been informed by the news media that Mr. Bandeen, CN president, wants the CNR split into smaller companies as an economic shot in the arm, and the taxpayer as a shareholder would see his investment increase in value.

The Globe and Mail of April 5 also informed the council that the CN has sold the Chapman trucking firm on the west coast, wholly owned by the CNR, to a United States trucking firm. They suggest that this would be selling a part of a Canadian Crown corporation into foreign ownership. They point out that if Mr. Bandeen has this authority it would be logical to assume that he could sell off any part off the small companies into which he wants to split the CN.

It is interesting to note that on the CBC national news of Sunday, January 27, 1974, confirmed in the London Free Press of January 28 the same year, it was reported that the trade minister and 33 Canadian businessmen attended a trade mission to Mexico, and that our government had agreed to a loan of $200 million for the purpose of upgrading their railways, while at the same time our own railways are being neglected and falling apart.

My question to the minister, to which I believe we are entitled to have answered, are as follows. First, were the four days of hearings held in southwestern Ontario by the Commons Standing Committee on Transportation from May 29 to June 1, 1972, mere tokenism? Second, if that is not the case, when does the minister intend to recommend the implementation of this committee report which was tabled in the House in June, 1972? Third, does the CNR president have the authority to split this Crown corporation into small subsidiary companies? Fourth, if the president does have that authority, does he have authority to sell these small subsidiary companies to private foreign-owned companies? Fifth, if the CNR is split up into small subsidiary companies what will happen to the employees and their bargaining units? Sixth, will they have a voice and be kept informed of proceedings? Seventh, did our federal government pay the $200,000,000 to Mexico?

● (2040)

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, it is quite difficult to answer these questions outright. I think I will have to get in touch with Mr. Bandeen and discuss with my hon. friend the contents of this letter and the allegations contained in it, because I think this is a very important problem. Sometimes Crown corporations believe they can do almost anything. The government is interested in certain things the Crown corporations are doing. Maybe some of the Crown corporations even if the statutes do not compel them to do so, might inform the Minister of Transport of what they intend to do so that the newspaper men are not the first to know what is going on in certain Crown corporations. This is very serious.

If you will allow me to do so, Mr. Chairman, I should like to say that the kind of debate which has been going on is something that personally I appreciate very much. It is very useful to have the points of view of everybody in respect of the real problems. It is frustrating for anyone who has an executive job to be in the situation of discussing something with the wrong facts. Probably this is true not only in respect of executives but also in respect of other jobs when the exact facts are not before one.

There was a reference in the House today to the third report on midwestern Ontario. Of course I do not remember all the reports that are filed and tabled here. I received the information later that this report had been tabled on May 1, 1974. I was asked what we did with this third report. I did not know offhand what we did with it. It was tabled on that date. I believe it is very important to check to find out exactly what is happening.

This is similar to the situation in respect of the hon. gentleman who was here a few moments ago and who is probably now behind the curtains, my good friend from Central Nova. He spoke of the vice-president of a personnel agency who opened a business, and suggested that Air Canada paid a fee of six months salary to this agency. Well, I looked into this and I did not find anything. If he has some evidence I think he should produce it to me so that I can honestly look into it, but if it is only a rumour I think it is wrong.

If Air Canada does not behave as it should I believe it should be attacked, just like any other company. You never saw me attempt to protect any Crown corporation under my jurisdiction just because it was a Crown corporation. However, I do not think it is right to attack them wrongly. They do commit a number of sins but I do not think I want to react to all of them. We are often much more strict in respect of the Crown corporations than is the case in respect of private organizations. Some say no, but I am sure it is yes.

This afternoon the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre made a real effort to find out everything the Minister of Transport did not do and what other ministers did in the field of transportation. He forgot to mention all that has been done through the Ministry of Transport during the past year. Many things were done, not only in British Columbia as I mentioned. Twice this year in the west, in Ontario, in Quebec and in the Atlantic provinces I met with all the provincial ministers. I even met with some of the premiers in order to discuss the policy I intend to present first to the committee and then to the House. In my view this is very important if we are to have a coherent national policy.

I do not speak of a federal policy. I speak of a national transportation policy. If we want one I believe we must consult with the local people, the people in the regions, the cities and the provinces so that we will have a policy which really meets the need of the nation. We have been working hard. I am not speaking only of the trips I made and the discussions I had but also the discussions my officials and I had on a number of other problems.

Mr. Baldwin: And the opposition too.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): And the opposition too. I know I am due to meet it in any event so I prefer to do it in a good atmosphere. The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre forgot about all those things. He forgot about STOL and how important it is. He forgot about all the air agreements we have entered into in order to expand the air influence of Canada. He forgot about all we did in respect of the Northern Transportation Company and what we did in respect of the government of Manitoba. This is something on which we worked very hard. I worked with Mr. Evans and we succeeded in arriving at a formula. The hon. member did not talk about the highways and what we did in that field. He did not talk about the monitoring service which followed the meeting he had with me. He stated that that produced real results. He did not talk about the cost disclosure bill which came before this House.

Mr. Benjamin: It took three years.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): It was passed this year. We had a nice agreement with the western ministers on the freight rates, and even the premier of Alberta said it was a really great breakthrough. The hon. member did not talk about the ferry service in the maritimes. He was not interested in that. Then there was the matter of protection of coastal trade and the adoption of the Darling Report. He was not interested in that. He was not interested in the protection we gave to Canadian flag carriers. He did not talk about the development of the railroad in northern British Columbia or about the improvement at the airports of Calgary, Saskatoon, London and many other places. He was not interested in that. He did not talk about the improvement in safety standards. He was not interested in safety at the airports.

Mr. Paproski: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. Is the minister summing up his whole debate now?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): No, just part of it.

Mr. Paproski: May I ask the minister a question while he is summing up?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): No. I am just answering Mr. Turner.

An hon. Member: Which Mr. Turner?

● (2050)

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I only wish to make the point that we should be reasonable. As we used to say, if you cannot stand the heat, get out of the kitchen. That is fair enough. I will talk in a few minutes about what we have done in the field of new policy, and after that, perhaps the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre will justify what he said when he started talking. He started by saying that he was not personally opposed to the Minister of Transport, but after that he criticized me all the time.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Chairman, it is good to see the minister in such a jovial mood tonight. I take it he was replying to the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): No, no, it was a question by the hon. member for London East.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Chairman, I have a series of questions I would like to ask the minister, and a number of them arise from the debate which has been going on with respect to the Crowsnest pass freight rate. I take it there has been a change in the attitude or the mind of the minister from last October, because in the same exercise last October when we talked about the Crowsnest freight rate the minister indicated and implied that at that point in time no one in his department, and certainly no one in his office, was working on any changes with respect to the Crowsnest freight rate. Then on January 30, 1975, at page 2747 of Hansard in a question posed by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar the matter was again raised, and the minister replied that there had been no discussions or consideration with respect to changing any part of the Crowsnest freight rate. That was confirmed on January 31 in a reply to a question posed by the right hon. member for Prince Albert. The only thing the minister mentioned was the fact that he would not undertake to make that promise for the rest of the century.

In the discussion today it seems that the minister has implied that studies and consideration are going on with respect to the Crowsnest freight rate, and that in fact he is looking at means to transfer the advantage of the Crowsnest freight rate to the farmers of western Canada. I wonder if the minister could inform the House or elaborate on just what form that transfer might take and what sort of studies and consultations are taking place. I notice that the minister in charge of the Wheat Board is here, and he has indicated that he very much enjoyed the—

Mr. Baldwin: He is the associate minister of transport.

Mr. Mazankowski: The hon. member for Peace River has said that he is the associate minister of transport. The Minister of Justice has indicated in a press release that he takes very seriously the input of western Canadian farmers, and I know that he has been out west discussing freight rates and the whole subject of rail transportation. I am wondering if the minister can take the House into his confidence and outline what kind of review there might be in respect of the Crowsnest freight rate, having regard to the fact that the subject of the Crowsnest freight rate is actively under consideration.

Will there be a change in the statutes? Will it be a form of subsidy to producers? Will it be in the form of a subsidy to the railway companies? I sincerely hope the minister will clarify that once and for all, because it is an issue which affects every western Canadian and particularly every western Canadian grain producer. If the minister could do that, I think the record would certainly be put straight, and hopefully that would allay the fears that the whole concept of the Crowsnest freight rate might be removed. But if the advantages are to be maintained, I think the minister owes it to this House and to the country to advise us of just what form the transfer of the advantage will take.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, once or twice this afternoon the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville put exactly the same question to me. The first time he was not satisfied with the answer, and I gave another answer. I do not know whether he is satisfied, but I have already given the answer. I would appreciate it if hon. members would read Hansard tomorrow. It is not that I do not want to make the effort of answering, but the more answers one gives, the more interpretations can be given to those answers. I prefer to maintain what I have already said.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Chairman, it is precisely this kind of thing which this committee is trying to clear up. The minister is now being as evasive as he was with the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville. If he cannot remember the answer, perhaps he might prevail upon his colleague, the Minister of Justice, to answer the question because he seems to answer these questions more frequently than the Minister of Transport himself. I listened very carefully to the response the minister gave to the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville, and it was very cloudy and confusing.

I simply want clarification. If the Minister of Justice is prepared to stand in his place and respond, I would certainly accept his answer because I believe that the Minister of Justice has a plan and has been actively engaged in considering the Crowsnest freight rate, and ways and means to alter it. As the hon. member for Crowfoot pointed out in his contribution to this debate, we all know that the railways are engaged in a very vigourous campaign to undo the Crowsnest freight rate, and the minister seems to be acquiescing in their request. For example, we know, and I am sure that the minister knows, that the average per ton mile freight rate with respect to the Crowsnest pass is something in the order of 0.5 cents. The Chairman of the CPR in the transport committee the other day indicated that he considered a fair rate to be something in the order of four times that amount, yet at the same time we find that in moving grain from Thunder Bay to Montreal, which is not governed by the Crowsnest freight rate, CP Rail is charging 0.97 cents per ton mile.

If the minister is going to sit in his place and condone and acquiesce in that kind of action, to the destruction of the Crowsnest freight rate, aided and abetted by his colleague, the Minister of Justice, we in western Canada and we in this whole country are in for a rude awakening because this minister and the Minister of Justice seem to be on the road to ruining any advantages the transportation policy of this country may have for western grain producers.

I am not satisfied with the minister's answer, and I reiterate that if the Minister of Justice knows the position and the policy of the government better than the Minister of Transport, perhaps he may want to answer.

● (2100)

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, these are my estimates and I am supposed to answer the questions. What I said this afternoon will appear in Hansard tomorrow, and it is not what the hon. member repeated. He can check Hansard to see what I said. All the freight rates are a part of the policy we are working on, and I stated that we will act in such a way that western farmers will not lose anything in the new transportation policy or the new freight rate structures.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the Minister of Transport how he proposes to transfer the advantage of the Crowsnest freight rates to the western Canadian farmer?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): This is part of the general policy that we are going to discuss in a short time, Mr. Chairman, and I would be glad to receive any opinion that the hon. member may have.

Mr. Mazankowski: May I ask the minister a further question, Mr. Chairman? Will legislation be introduced in the House at the appropriate time to deal with this aspect of the transportation policy?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I have every reason to believe that if the House agrees to discuss this in the standing committee—because it has to be referred to a standing committee of the House—then we will be in a position to discuss the new policy and the principles of what we intend to do before the end of June.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the minister would undertake to guarantee to the House that legislation will be brought forth before any changes are made unilaterally. Will the policy position papers that the minister is now improvising be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications to be dealt with as was promised by the minister on April 25, 1974, at page 48 of issue No. 4 of the proceedings of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications?

[Mr. Mazankowski.]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, there is one point I should like to have clarified. Which law is the hon. member referring to that should be modified?

Mr. Mazankowski: I understand that the Crowsnest freight rates are statutory law. Will the minister undertake to bring forth legislation? We hear conflicting views. One time we hear the minister saying that the Crowsnest freight rates would not be touched; we hear the Minister of Justice saying that the Crowsnest freight rates would not be touched; and today we find that they will be touched and the advantages will be transferred. Will those advantages be transferred to the producers or will they be in the form of a subsidy to the railway companies?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, I am not in the position to say there will be any modification to that statute so I cannot guarantee that we are going to introduce legislation. It may very well happen that no legislation at all will be introduced on that subject.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the minister would undertake to tell the House what procedure the government is adopting with respect to the review of the Crowsnest freight rates? Is it going through the CTC? Is it going through the grains group? Is it going through the upper echelons of the minister's office, or is it being studied by the Department of Transport?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, as soon as the new policy on freight rates is discussed by the committee, or by the House, we may make some recommendations and those recommendations can be modified according to the suggestions of the opposition. I am not going to say at this time what is going to happen when the policy itself is still not defined.

Mr. Baldwin: Has the minister got authority under the National Transportation Act now to change the Crowsnest rates?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): The hon. member can debate this at that time if he wants to do so.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Chairman, this commitment is like so many others that we have received from this minister. On February 24, 1975, and it was classified as a great breakthrough, we found in that report that there were changes with respect to rate groupings, changes with respect to maximum rate restrictions, long and short haul—I could quote ad infinitum the commitments that were made. In regard to the minister's commitment to establish rate groupings to aid industrial development in small centres which had been promised at that time, I wonder if the minister could now tell the House when these will be put in place?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): According to the agreement we reached in the west recently, the railways are holding discussions with the provinces and trying to reach an agreement on this particular subject.

The Chairman: I regret that I have to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Hogan: Mr. Chairman, there are many questions that I should like to put to the minister about transportation in the Atlantic region—not the Crowsnest freight rates. Until we get a new policy, however, it seems that we are going to get just vague answers.

The minister said something this afternoon which I should like to have clarified. He referred to the changes in the Maritime Freight Rates Act raising the subsidy from 30 per cent to 50 per cent on goods moving outside the Atlantic region. That left the impression that we are doing very well. He did not mention the huge increase of 25 per cent, and likely more coming, on all movements within the Atlantic region, which will go hard with the small and middle sized business men in the area about which we are concerned. We welcome the raise to 50 per cent from 30 per cent for movements outside the Atlantic region, but we are more interested in stabilizing things within the region. That is one matter that I should like the minister to clear up for us.

I hope we will have some definite information on the new transportation policy that is coming out before the House adjourns for this session. I should like to ask the minister if there have been any requests from the province of Nova Scotia for special help for privately owned municipal bus companies in Cape Breton. These companies are writing to me and saying that, unless something special is done, they will go under. The situation is that grave, Mr. Chairman, and I could show the minister all kinds of correspondence about it. I realize this is primarily a provincial responsibility, but they do not seem to be handling it in Nova Scotia in a way to give some stability to the municipal bus companies.

I have a third question that I should like the minister to spend a few minutes on, and to be as specific as he can. I realize he cannot speak for cabinet, but when can we expect an announcement on whether his department is going to recommend a merchant marine for Canada? The minister has said on several occasions that he is in favour of this, and I have heard him refer to it myself. Is his department going to recommend this to cabinet and, if so, when can we expect an announcement? This is vital to the development of the Atlantic region, and I hope it will be in the new transportation policy.

I hope the minister will consider the movement of goods from the Atlantic region to central Canada and will look into the way in which the Maritime Freight Rates Act needs to be adjusted from time to time. How will the federal government, with the help of Atlantic province premiers, develop our superports so that we can take advantage of new technologies in transportation, deal more with the rest of the world by developing our export sector, and concern ourselves less with so-called internal transportation links between the Atlantic region and central Canadian provinces? These transportation links have been of concern to us for 100 years and we have made relatively little progress.

I agree that in the metropolitan areas of the Atlantic region we have made substantial progress in the last ten years. This progress is not really the result of deliberate government policies but is the result of defence spending in Nova Scotia and growth of government services.

One million people, in Canadian terms but not world terms, are living on the margin of subsistence in the Atlantic region of this country. The government's policy must be geared to help them.

Let me repeat and clarify my previous questions, in case the minister has forgotten them. First, I wish the minister would clarify the statement he made today concerning the Maritime Freight Rates Act. It has been suggested that the act is of benefit to the Atlantic region. How will we continue to feel the benefit in the Atlantic region in view of the increase requested by the railways? Further, has the minister received requests from the government of Nova Scotia for special help for privately owned municipal bus companies in Cape Breton Island? These companies are constantly writing to me, saying they will go under unless something is done. Thirdly, when can we expect an announcement from the minister or the department saying that he or the department recommend the establishment of a Canadian merchant marine? I repeated my questions in case the minister forgot them.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, I said this afternoon that it is true, we improved the subsidy system of the Atlantic provinces. It is true that most rates were increased, although some have been decreased a little at our request, as we thought they were unjust. But we must consider this in terms of relationships, in terms of what has gone on in the rest of Canada. These increases did not take place only in the Maritimes; they took place everywhere in Canada. The subsidy which the Maritimes receive is something which they have and the others do not have. I think the hon. member was suggesting something like this, "You agreed to give us a 50 per cent subsidy on certain commodities, but it is not worth it, because rates have increased generally—

Mr. Hogan: Who said it is not worth it?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): That was the suggestion. The problem is this: the Maritimes, the Atlantic provinces in general, wanted to be in a position to compete in central Canada with their manufactured goods, and they received a subsidy of 50 per cent on a great number of commodities. The fact that there was a 25 per cent, 20 per cent or 15 per cent increase across the board in Canada does not change the relative position of the Maritimes. That area has received a special subsidy because it is located far from markets. This statement holds true for the Atlantic Region Freight Assistance Act and for the Maritime Freight Rates Act.

I think we provided about $22 million to the Atlantic provinces under the assitance legislation, and $14 million under the Maritime Freight Rates Act. It is unjust not to mention that, and to say, "But you must not consider that, because our rates have been increased." I say that you were not placed in an unfavourable position on account of these increased freight rates. Of course you do not like it. I do not like it. I do not like inflation, and I do not like price increases. Neither does anybody else. In Europe, the United States and elsewhere, people do not like these things. As I say, we do not like it, but your relative position is better than it was. We have reached an agreement. I met with the hon. member's provincial minister. I even met with the premier of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Stanfield: Even with the premier?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Oh, yes! I have no prejudices! We said on that occasion, and I think this was published in the newspapers, that if any industries in the Atlantic provinces are affected by these increases, which are being asked for by the railways, to the point where they must curtail their production or close down, please communicate with us and we will see that such industries are given special help by the CTC or the federal government. Up to now we have received no demands, or no requests at all, only complaints in general terms like the one made a few minutes ago. I do not think we can establish a meaningful freight structure in Canada that way.

We have worked on the policy all year and we are convinced, more than ever, that we must deal separately with each region. The problem is not the same everywhere. The problem of northern Ontario is not that of southern Ontario; the problem of the Atlantic provinces is not that of B.C.; the problem of the prairies is not the problem of parts of Quebec.

Mr. Mazankowski: And it took you five years to find that out? We have heard that so often from you.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Yes, you have heard it.

Mr. Mazankowski: From you.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Yes, from me.

Mr. Mazankowski: Well, do something.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): We want to do something, not only talk about it.

Mr. Mazankowski: Your speech has not changed in the last two years.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): And your questions have not changed one iota.

Mr. Mazankowski: And you still insist on making that same speech.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Not only are the questions the same, but—

Mr. Hogan: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): —most of the questions are in the same category. Up to 95 per cent of the questions which have been asked today in committee are questions—

Mr. Hogan: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the minister's zeal for transport policy in Canada, but I wonder if he can answer the second and third questions I asked.

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

The Chairman: Order, please. Perhaps I should remind hon. members that, according to the agreement already accepted by the committee, the minister is speaking during the last 15 minutes allocated to him in order to summarize all points which were brought to his attention. At 9.30 a member of the official opposition will be entitled to speak for 15 minutes and close the debate.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, I tried to be as cool as I could; but some always find a way to provoke me. I can take it and shoot back, to be sure, particularly after hearing the kind of questions I have heard here for two days. We were discussing transportation in Canada and trying to find a new policy which will bring more justice, more equality to the transport system of Canada, and all we have heard are small and mean questions concerning one small corner of Canada.

Mr. Mazankowski: You call freight rates a small item? Nonsense! This is something we shall remember.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Those are the kinds of questions which were asked 95 per cent of the time. The other 5 per cent was taken up with cries of a kind which have nothing to do with argument, reason or intelligence.

Mr. Mazankowski: We shall see just how small an item freight rates are.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Most members, I know, are convinced that transportation is a serious matter. Some say that I keep repeating the same thing. Of course I do and I am going to keep on repeating it, because I want something to be understood very well by all Canadians and by the majority of this House.

● (2120)

We have to take into account the special conditions of each region so that the policy we develop is equitable, accessible and efficient. We do not want a transportation policy such as that set out in the old act where it must first be economic, then efficient, and then adequate. This is something which has some bearing in the law. We have been working on it. We have not been working alone, but with the provinces and the railways.

Mr. Stanfield: Answer his questions. The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond did not put mean questions. He is not getting answers.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): The Leader of the Opposition does not understand the rules of the game. At this time I have 15 minutes to sum up and close this part of the debate. Following my remarks, a member of the opposition will be in the same position. Therefore I do not have to answer any more than I have done. The Leader of the Opposition is just trying to take a few minutes away from me.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Members opposite do not like it. Did they not accept this rule?

Mr. Paproski: You have been winding up all evening.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I think it would be impossible to wind you up. We not only have to study the problems of the railways, freight rates, trucking, buses, ports, and ships, but study them altogether to see how those modes of transportation can be integrated into the best system that we can produce for Canada. We have been working on this.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Tell us about it.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): You do not know what has been done. You have not read it.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Do you know?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Yes, but you do not know, so shut up and wait until you hear it. When you have heard it, you may want to criticize. I do not think the role of the opposition is to just yell without knowing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): There are men who are very serious. They have spent their whole life on transportation. They have been working on this policy for many months, trying to find the best formula. We want to find a solution to the problem in the west as well as in Ontario, Quebec, and the Maritimes.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): When are we going to get the policy?

Mr. Paproski: Before the next election.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I remember at the beginning I used to react violently when members opposite made these remarks. I no longer react violently. I remember the first time I talked about the law, amendments to the Immigration Act, and a new policy members opposite, and I could give their names, said "When is the minister going to bring that in? It has been four months now." It was brought in. It passed. Now there is talk about changing it. It was the same when we talked about Manpower, and when we created the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. Members opposite said, "You are not interested in that. You are not going to create it." It has now been in operation for many years. When members opposite get the books in their hands, they will stop saying, "Give it to me, please." However, outside the things they will regret saying tomorrow and the things I may regret saying tomorrow, I think we can work on a new policy for Canada which will help both the producers and the carriers.

An hon. Member: When?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): All I can say is that before the end of June cabinet will have approved what will be the basic policy on transportation in Canada. That is all I will say because you do not believe it.

In conclusion I wish to thank the western farmers who received me with such warmth. If they could see how their representatives are behaving here this evening, I think they would change their minds about a certain number of them. They forget that this is an important problem. It should be discussed in a serious way, not by laughing and yelling.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Don't take that, Otto.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I will not take it out. I will explain that in the west at any time. I feel at home there. It is my country as well as eastern Canada.

I thank those members who are really interested in the welfare of this country and who asked serious questions. Even though some of the questions were difficult, I think they were fair. That is one of the rules of the game. There are others who only cried "shut up" or "produce". I do not know if that is recorded in Hansard. If it is, that is what they leave for the future generations of Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I was outside the chamber for a moment or two. I did not get the purport of an answer the minister gave to one of the questions I asked earlier in the debate. Possibly I could ask the minister to repeat it briefly. I am sorry I was not here when he said it.

The Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member may be very interested in getting the answer, but that can only be done with the consent of the representative of his party who is entitled to 15 minutes to sum up the debate. If I were to allow the question without the consent of the hon. member for Lisgar, I would have to allow the minister to reply. That would take away time from the 15 minutes that are available. I am at the disposal of the hon. member for Lisgar.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Chairman, I think it is agreed now that the hon. member for Central Nova has at least stated his position on the record, and the minister will hopefully answer tomorrow the question which was asked at the start of the debate.

● (2130)

In winding up this two-day debate on transportation I should like to make a few points for the Minister of Transport to note. In his last few statements the hon. gentleman seemed to be doing some philosophizing, but it comes back to this: certainly, since I have been in the House, that is, since the fall of 1970, the minister has said basically the same things as he has been saying for the past four years; I would assume they were the same things he was saying when he was minister responsible for DREE. I do not necessarily say this in a partisan way, but the hon. gentleman does seem to be buried in the bureaucracy of his department. He is like someone trying to escape from an octopus without knowing how to do it.

He says that the same questions have been put to him over and over again. I suppose they will continue to be put to him until some of the problems to which they relate have been solved. He also said he had been obliged to sit through a lot of small and mean questions. Well, if the hon. gentleman thinks they are small and mean, they are the kind of questions which represent people across Canada. I thought there was a good cross-section of views put forward in the past two days.

I am glad to see that the new deputy minister of transport sat through most of the debate. This may give him a better understanding of the transportation problems we experience in this country. In the course of the debate we have covered many areas, but there are many other areas which have not been covered. I suppose we could continue this discussion for the rest of the week and still find we have not touched upon all phases of transportation. In the last two days the minister at least seemed to be interested—more interested than he seemed to be during other debates on transportation. I think he should be given some credit for this. But in no way has he convinced the official opposition, at least, that he has his department under control.

In answering our questions—what you would consider the 5 per cent of the good questions which were asked—I really feel you did a lot of waffling.

The Chairman: Order. I have been listening to the hon. member, and I think he should make a strong effort to address himself to the Chair.

Mr. Murta: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I apologise. Any further remarks to the minister will be made through yourself.

We have all heard the term "too little and too late". I always hesitate to use it because it is a stock phrase to use when speaking as a member of the opposition about a minister or a government department. Nevertheless I think it perfectly describes the situation which now exist—it describes the efforts of the minister and his department to rectify the situation which has developed over the past few years. One can go over the policy guidelines which the government has used for the last two election campaigns and see that virtually no part of that program has been implemented. The minister has finally got a larger staff; we have seen a substantial increase, a 39 per cent increase in the staff of the department itself. It seems the minister is finally beginning to realize the extent of problems with which he is faced.

As to the ambivalent statements respecting the Crowsnest pass rates and the jurisdictions of the two ministers, the Minister of Transport and the minister responsible for the Wheat Board, I venture to say that the Minister of Transport is not quite sure of his ground in connection with the Crowsnest rates. I believe the minister responsible for the Wheat Board has that issue pretty well under his wing at the present time.

I should like to pass on a word of caution to the Minister of Transport. If there is any attempt to change the Crowsnest pass rates without legislation there will not only be a rebellion in the House of Commons, there will be a rebellion throughout western Canada. I would point out that there are two studies going on at the present time, one is the Snavely study in which a costing account will be done—it will take about eight months—and the other is the Hall Commission which will take about 18 months. I say to the minister, and to the minister responsible for the Wheat Board, that it would be foolish to bring in any change whatsoever regardless of the new policy we are talking about as far as the Crowsnest pass rates are concerned.

Once again, and I am not speaking politically, we in the official opposition sincerely believe the Minister of Transport is not giving any direction to his department. He is not giving any leadership. I commend the deputy minister for sitting through this debate. Possibly the most important aspect of the whole debate is that we feel the Minister of Transport does not understand the importance of transportation in such regions of the country as western Canada, the maritimes, and northern Canada. This has been demonstrated time and time again. If the minister can convince the official opposition that he is making an effort to change his attitude we shall certainly give him all due credit.

I had intended to mention the unfulfilled promises contained in the transportation policy which the Liberals presented in 1974—promises which have not been fulfilled. I shall not do so because my time is running out. The fact is that very few of these promises have been implemented in any way at all. When the minister reacts with irritation to criticism from this side of the House that he is not doing anything, we are entitled to bear in mind the failure to carry out the policy put forward at the time of the election and draw our own conclusions.

● (2140)

In conclusion, officials of Air Canada will be before the transportation committee in the near future, hopefully toward the end of May or the first part of June. We will have the new modes of transportation policy that the minister talked about some time in June also before the transportation committee. All that is left for me to say at the present time is that this kind of debate has been constructive. I think it has brought the problems of transportation in various areas of the country to what you might consider front and centre stage. In doing that hopefully it will focus the attention of the minister and his department on the various problems which were raised and alluded to over the past two days.

I conclude by saying that we on this side of the House certainly welcome any move or policy commitments in the upcoming months, and we will take part to the fullest extent in any policy debate on transportation in the future.

[Translation]

The Chairman: May I call it 9.45?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: It being 9.45 o'clock p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to sections (9)(a) and (9)(c), of Standing Order 58, to interrupt these proceedings and to put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the proceedings.

[English]

Department of Transport votes 1, 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, 30, L35, 40, 45, 50, L55, 60, L65, L70, L75, 80, 85, 90, L95, L100, 105 and 110 agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall I report the resolutions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Resolutions reported and concurred in.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We have now completed the estimates that have been considered. I was going to put to Your Honour that the proceedings are analogous to the proceedings we used to have in this House some years ago after supply, when some time was left before ten o'clock. During that period grievances were raised by hon. members. It was the right of members of the House, before the estimates were finally completed, to present grievances to the House through the Chair.

We have some excellent grievances, Mr. Speaker, which we could raise in the ten minutes that are left. I am particularly interested in the grievance concerning the infamous conduct of the government in refusing to allow civil servants to appear before committees, and I should just like to raise the matter briefly. I hope we will have some reply in the ten minutes remaining until the adjournment motion can be put. I think it is the best use that can be made of the time since it is not yet ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member sought the floor on what I expected to be a point of order, which it seemed to be in the first part of his remarks. At the same time he seems to have made the decision for the Chair, and he went on to adopt a new procedure, to which of course the Chair has no objection. The committee did not make any suggestion in this regard, but since the House is in a kind of trial mood I am ready to put the question to the House and seek unanimous consent in order to use the next ten minutes to experience once again the grievance procedure. Does the House give unanimous consent to the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) or to other hon. members to use the time available until ten o'clock for this purpose?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, this is an experimental period, and we have no objection. I am sure that the House leader for the official opposition will give our side equal time, however.

Mr. Baldwin: Yes, I will.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to adopt this procedure?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PUBLIC SERVICE—PRINCIPLE GOVERNING APPEARANCES BY CIVIL SERVANTS AS COMMITTEE WITNESSES

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, this matter is so serious that I expect to give the members on the government side far more time than I take to answer these accusations. I put it to the House, through you, Mr. Speaker, that the present position is shocking and intolerable. It is a grievance that must be brought up in the House. We have a situation where the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), by what is the equivalent of a Papal Bull, is saying that a civil servant cannot appear before a committee. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) appeared before a committee of the House and said that civil servants can only appear when he allows them to appear, that they can only say what he allows them to say.

I suggest to the members of the House that it is this House that is the highest court in the land, and that we cannot tolerate any decision that exempts a minister or a civil servant from the rules that apply to all others. If a witness is called before a committee and refuses to appear or to answer, then he or she can be committed for contempt. Why then should civil servants be exempt?

I recognize that there are situations when civil servants should not be allowed to answer questions. The secretary to the Privy Council, or the secretary to the Cabinet, should not be allowed to answer questions dealing with what went on in Cabinet. Of course, I do not think an awful lot goes on when we see the results. Nevertheless, he should not be allowed to answer questions as to what goes on in Cabinet. Outside of that he is no better than anybody else in this country, and if he is called as a witness he should be compelled to appear.

I know my hon. friend is going to talk about responsible government. Of course we have responsible government, or we used to have, but the government is not very responsible now. Responsible government does not mean that civil servants can be exempted, or that they are above the law and should not be competent and compellable witnesses. That is what I would like to hear my hon. friend speak on when he replies.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this subject is not new. It has been referred to during the question period on a number of occasions, and I understand it was discussed yesterday when my parliamentary secretary appeared before the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee. It seems to me that the essence of the point is who is answerable to parliament, and I suggest it is the government and the ministers.

Mr. Stanfield: Oh, no.

Mr. Sharp: Surely if that were not the case we would find that members on the other side could be subject to questioning, and so on, and that is not the principle upon which we operate.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): We didn't think you understood; now we know.

Mr. Sharp: Ministers take responsibility not only for their own actions but for the actions of their departments and for their civil servants. Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition can remember when he was the prime minister of a province.

Mr. Stanfield: It is a long time ago.

Mr. Sharp: He then had to take the responsibility for the actions of his civil servants. That is the principle upon which we operate. If you go behind the minister and compel civil servants to appear, then, of course, you break down the whole principle of ministerial responsibility.

Mr. Stanfield: Rubbish.

Mr. Sharp: I suggest to my hon. friends opposite that they should consider very carefully what they are doing.

Mr. Stanfield: We do, every day.

Mr. Sharp: If they were to force officials to appear before committees then, of course, the minister could hide behind civil servants.

An hon. Member: You do every day.

Mr. Sharp: I am sure that is a situation they would not relish any more than we would. I suggest that this is really a spurious issue. I can only believe there are some people on the other side who have some personal animosity toward particular civil servants and are trying in this way to vent their feelings.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sharp: As far as the ministers are concerned, we are prepared to answer any questions put to us and, if necessary, we are prepared to have our officials advise us. There are occasions in committee when ministers do ask their deputies to come and help them in answering questions. Indeed, we have seen this happen during this day's debate in the committee of the whole when the minister was advised by some of his officials. No one in this House asked those officials to answer. They were asked by the minister to be present. Surely this is the principle upon which this House must operate, otherwise the whole system of responsible government breaks down.

Mr. Baldwin: Look what happened to Nixon. That's what he said.

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I was very interested to come here and hear the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) speaking about the reliance of Cabinet ministers appearing before committees of the House of Commons, considering estimates or otherwise, on civil servants, and their responsibility to answer questions on policy instead of public servants. In light of that I would be very interested in knowing what was the rationale that was followed by the Government of Canada in refusing to send either a senior public servant, the Clerk of the Privy Council or the official of that office now held by Mr. Gordon Robertson, to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, and not even sending a minister who could answer on behalf of that public servant.

Mr. Baldwin: Shame!

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): We had an absolutely absurd situation in the standing committee last night when a public servant who could have provided the answers was not allowed to come as a result of a decision of the government, and when there was not even a minister or a member of the Cabinet sent.

Instead, the person who was sent was a parliamentary secretary, not to the minister responsible for the estimates being considered, but a parliamentary secretary to the wrong minister. That is surely an absurd situation which, if it had any purpose at all, was designed to obstruct the capacity of parliament in considering the estimates to speak to anyone in authority who might have been able to describe the policy reasons for which those estimates were being presented and for which support was being asked.

The minister just cannot have it both ways. If he is going to deny the right of parliament to question public servants on important questions when a minister is present, he surely cannot, if he has any belief at all in the parliamentary system, refuse to send to a standing committee on estimates either a public servant who can answer questions, or a representative of the Cabinet who is in a position to speak on policy matters.

I would be very interested in knowing what rationale, if any, the minister and his colleagues were following last night in sending a person without Cabinet responsibility, or sending a person who does not even have derivative responsibility, if such exists, such as a parliamentary secretary, to a committee considering estimates.

An hon. Member: Using that person as a flunky.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): The only possible reason might be—

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): The only possible reason might be to cut off any consideration or analysis of those estimates.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I just take a few seconds to congratulate the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) on initiating this interesting procedure, and to stake a claim for one of our grievances the next time this opportunity occurs.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baldwin: I rise on another point of order, Mr. Speaker, which may have more attraction for the President of the Privy Council. Would he be good enough to indicate to the House the business he intends to proceed with on Thursday of this week?

Mr. Sharp: As the House is aware, Mr. Speaker, tomorrow is another allotted day, and I understand there will be a motion by the NDP. On Thursday we will call Bill C-47 amending the Judges Act.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Not another one of those?

Mr. Sharp: If we conclude that on Thursday we will go on with the salaries bill dealing with Lieutenant Governors.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Oh, no!

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

IMMIGRATION—VIETNAMESE REFUGEES—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON REQUESTS BY OTHER COUNTRIES THAT CANADA ADMIT CERTAIN NUMBER

Hon. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I wish to obtain a reply to the supplementary question I posed on May 1 asking whether the Canadian government has approached, or will be approaching the new government of South Viet Nam with a request to allow relatives of Canadian Vietnamese to immigrate to Canada. The Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) referred this question to his colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen).

My supplementary question was prompted by disturbing press reports about the chaotic circumstances surrounding the abrupt withdrawal of Canadian diplomatic personnel from Saigon on April 24, 1975, five days before the official surrender of the Government of South Viet Nam to the P.R.G. As a result, more than 3,500 sponsored or nominated relatives of Canadian residents were stranded in South Viet Nam. I hope that they are not abandoned.

Canada has an enviable record of humanitarianism. Our country has assisted in many ways in the reunification of thousands of families. Since 1946, 10 per cent of all immigrants to Canada have been refugees. This humanitarian tradition is the pride of Canadians, and a credit to Canada's enlightened and courageous governments.

This same humanitarian tradition must be carried on by our government by assisting sponsored and nominated Vietnamese relatives of Canadian residents. Canadian immigration officials sent over 3,500 letters to heads of families in Viet Nam promising Canadian visas. These people and their relatives in Canada are awaiting our government's action to help reunify their families. Canadians have a pride in their country's reputation for diplomatic excellence, and our government should not spare any effort, any peaceful avenue, to make known to the new government of South Viet-nam that we would like the stranded relatives of Canadian Vietnamese to be allowed to emigrate to Canada.

Furthermore, it has been reported that there are more than 30 Canadians in South Viet Nam, including some missionaries and their families. Their status is unclear. Their safety may be in danger. That is why I ask what the Canadian government is doing to assist these unfortunate people.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to have an opportunity to respond to the question put by the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz). His concern for humanitarian considerations, his concern for immigrants, and the special interest he has taken in immigrants to this country, both in his own constituency and in the country at large, are well known.

With regard to the question he has raised concerning the families and relatives of the Vietnamese people, the government is now considering the question of recognizing the new government in South Viet Nam and establishing diplomatic relations with that country. If diplomatic relations are established and a Canadian mission is sent to Saigon, the question of relatives of Canadian citizens being allowed to come to Canada would be a natural subject for discussion in view of the government's well known policy of encouraging the reunification of families of Canadian citizens.

PUBLIC SERVICE—NURSES IN HALIFAX—REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF WAGE PARITY IN VIEW OF POSSIBLE STRIKE

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I live in a part of Halifax which is a block away from the Camp Hill Veterans Hospital. This is an ancient structure not in the style of the modern hospitals. Fortunately it is to be replaced soon. If one goes over there, as I do about 20 times a year, one will find that the veterans are complaining about a good number of things, but I believe this is in the tradition of veterans. The one thing they have never complained about is the quality of the nursing services they have received from the dedicated women whose case I wish to bring before the House this evening.

I have been there and I have seen men, in the last stages of going out of this world, surrounded by these angels of mercy. These are scenes I find impossible to describe in this House, but which will be written on my heart and my mind until the end of my days. Therefore I have no hesitation, and indeed I have a great deal of willingness to enter into the battle on behalf of these people. I feel that their pay position is bad, and I hope that sometime I will be able to tug sufficiently at the strings on the heart of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) in order to correct it.

For years the Conservative candidates in Atlantic Canada have stood for the removal of these iniquitous regional inequities, and in the last election campaign we were joined by our friends from the other side. Liberal candidates meeting in Halifax expressed their support for a full examination of existing regional wage policies to ensure greater equity for all within the federal public service. This included such senior adornments as the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson), plus the more junior ministers, the Minister of State (Fisheries) (Mr. LeBlanc), and the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald).

There were 32 Liberal candidates who took those words forth on the hustings in the last federal election and, given the circumstances of that election, this immediately became translated into removal of regional wage discrimination and inequity. But we now know that those were very hollow words indeed because only recently the nurses at Camp Hill Hospital, and other nurses, continued their fight to remove these inequities by making public protests, one day strikes and the like.

It is a fact that in 1964 there were about 25,000 in the federal government employment staff who received regional rates, and in 1974 under the "just society" this number was 48,300, almost twice as many. The actual increase was from 15.5 per cent of strength to 19.5 per cent of strength. I provide these figures thanks to my colleague, the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), who has pursued this with the help of a member of his staff named Henry Brown with remarkable vigour and strength of purpose.

It is no wonder then that Halifax nurses at Camp Hill Hospital and nurses in other parts of Canada can complain, but in the case of Halifax their complaint is not only that the nurses there are not receiving the average for federal nurses across Canada, they are not even achieving what is paid to provincial nurses, and yet the President of the Treasury Board, the present incumbent in that position, in writing my colleague on March 4 said that:

> The Treasury Board, as the employer, seeks to pay public servants rates of pay comparable to those paid by other employers for similar occupations.

That is simply hogwash as it concerns the nurses at Camp Hill Hospital. On May 1, 1974, I wrote to the then president of the treasury board, the hon. member for Westmount (Mr. Drury), and I quote:

> Dear Mr. Minister:
> Two wards at Camp Hill Hospital are now closed because of a shortage of nurses. Surely this cries for a whole new approach to a federal policy which is driving nurses away from the employ of the federal government.

Nothing has happened to alleviate that particular situation. The number of wards occupied at Camp Hill Hospital is still down, and there are still vacant wards, vacant beds and vacant space, at a time when veterans are growing older and when there is obviously more of a cry for medical attention for them. If this does not tear at the conscience of hon. members, I do not know what can.

Finally, a doctor from Halifax who is a very respected member of the medical community, has written me about the salary policy of the federal government, and I quote:

> When they come down east, the game has a new set of rules. The principle now is to pay regional pay rates, and not a consistent rate across the country. Thus they can pay federally employed nurses at Camp Hill Hospital the relatively low regional rates, rather than the much higher salary scales paid to federally employed nurses in Ontario. Paying federal employees on regional pay scales seems a clear principle as well.
> But how come the rules change according to the circumstances?

He writes more than that, but that is the question I pose in winding up these remarks. My argument is not only to overcome the disparity that exists between nurses federally employed in the Halifax area and their sisters in provincial employ, but also between these federally employed nurses and their sisters employed elsewhere in Canada.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I want to respond to the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave). His concern for his contituents in that area is commendable. The pay policy is a regional one, that is, people employed in one area of the country will be paid rates comparable to rates in the private sector and other wages in the area.

The pay proposal of the Treasury Board for the majority of nurses in the Halifax area represented 26.1 per cent in the first year and 12.7 per cent in the second, retroactive to December 30, 1974, with considerable improvements in vacations, which in fact provides not only comparability but parity with nurses employed by the provincial governments.

This, as part of the total Treasury Board offer, was seen to be "fair and reasonable" as a basis for comparability by all three members of a recent conciliation board, including the nurse's own representative, the president of Quebec Nurses Inc. This unanimous conciliation board report has been accepted by the Treasury Board but has not yet been sent to the nurses for ratification by the professional institute.

NATIONAL PARKS—TOLLS ON RIDEAU-TRENT-SEVERN WATERWAY—POSSIBLE CONSULTATION WITH CORTS COMMITTEE BEFORE IMPOSITION

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe-North): Mr. Speaker, my question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan) follows on one asked by the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Alkenbrack) concerning the authorization of the first ever tolls on the Rideau-Trent-Severn waterway.

I am particularly disturbed about this toll on a waterway that was used first of all for military purposes, then for commerce and trade, and goes through the heartland of Ontario connecting Lake Huron and Georgian Bay with Lake Ontario. It travels for a couple of hundred miles through some of the most scenic and agricultural country in the world. There are two very fine lift locks which people come hundreds of miles to see, and the waterway serves a population of over 60 million people.

I think this is a very backward step on the part of the minister. At one time there were tolls on the roads in Ontario—the last one at Bradford about 40 miles north of Toronto. At one time it was used for oxen and horses and carts, but the toll was abolished because the province began to build highways into the north country to develop it. The main waterway we had then was the one which connected Lake Ontario to Georgian Bay and went from Trenton along Lake Ontario to the Ottawa River, down to the St. Lawrence. This is a particularly historic area and I am amazed that the minister would impose this toll without consulting parliament or consulting the CORTS Advisory Committee which was appointed by the province to work in conjunction with the federal government.

I suggest that at no time has the CORTS Advisory Committee advised the imposition of tolls. Rather, it boasts of the fact that here was an area which people could enjoy, an area rich in history. And it has a great history. Hon. members who know their history will recall that Champlain came to Georgian Bay, and established the first white man's agricultural land on the north American continent. We look with pride on our history; we look on this land with a sense of history, knowing it was used by Indians before Champlain came there. Yes, Champlain himself stopped over in that area of the country I have the honour to represent. It seems sacrilegious for someone now to come along and say that we must impose tolls on the canal. The tolls are for what? We are proud of this area. This land is part of Huronia. The settlers who came to the area built up Canada. Now those who want to use the waterway are to be taxed.

Mr. Paproski: Shame!

Mr. Rynard: I regret that the minister did not see fit to consult the CORTS Advisory Committee, and ask it what it thought was the best thing to do. After all, the committee did not meet all that long ago. I think that you, Mr. Speaker, were a member of this House when Mr. Pickersgill said in this House that this area is a great tourist attraction and has brought the province a great deal of money. Many people are attracted to the area. He suggested that Uncle Leslie, that great premier of Ontario who has since gone to his reward and who won the respect of Liberals, Conservatives and NDP members, should be given a suitable birthday present. He was to be asked to carry on the tradition of this province in a suitable and honourable way. This was not done.

Previously, action was taken under the Conservative government of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). That government, in its wisdom, set aside $20 million for the repairing of the Rideau-Trent-Severn waterway. Two locks were to be put in. Let me be fair to those members of the Liberal party who acted on this matter. Hon. George McIlraith, now a member of the other place, looked at plans concerning the waterway system and told me personally that what was proposed was good, that the plan was good, and that so far as he was concerned as minister, the plans would be carried out. I go further and say that the plans were carried out to the letter. Now a minister without sense of history has come along and is doing things differently. Perhaps he does not know the history of the area as perhaps you, I, and others in Ontario and Quebec know it. Perhaps he has lost perspective, has forgotten history. I suggest that those who forget the past can never deal with the future.

The government has already taxed the voters of the area in connection with certain changes which have been made. Now the minister is proposing another tax, a toll to be levied on those who use the waterway. I remind that House that people have built cottages along the waterway. They rented the land from the Department of Transport and paid taxes on it. Incidentally, the rent was recently increased. Those people experienced difficulties in carting the lumber to the area. They hewed down trees of the forest in order to build their houses. Now, if they want to use their cottages and they have no roadway in, they must pay a toll. In my opinion this is deception. I am a bit disturbed and a little disappointed that the minister has put on this tax.

In conclusion I want to ask some questions. What is the minister going to make out of this? What amount of money is he going to collect on it? What is he going to pay for the services he is giving? Where is that money to be spent? Is it to be spent on the Trent Canal, or not? The minister has not given any satisfactory answer to those questions.

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his comments. The hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) raised the matter of the relatively recently constituted CORTS Advisory Committee not having been consulted by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan) in the matter of fees being charged on the Rideau-Trent-Severn waterway.

The CORTS Advisory Committee is a body of ten private citizens, five appointed federally and five provincially, to advise the federal and provincial ministers of the public response to programs and developments in the canal corridor. Treasury Board had approved the increase in Parks Canada user fees for national parks, national historic parks and sites and canals on February 4, 1975. The CORTS Advisory Committee was created by the signing of the CORTS Agreement on February 20, 1975. Therefore consultation was impossible. The fees which Parks Canada is charging are not limited to the canals, but apply throughout the program. They are based on the recovery of a portion of the annual costs resulting from a major capital investment program of $376 million during the next five years. In the case of canals, the cost recovery is estimated to be 7 per cent of the annual operating costs of the canals.

It would be incongruous for the government to apply new or increased levels of fees for national parks and sites throughout Canada while leaving the canal's activity free from similar charges. It is a modest return on investment made by and for Canadians. The money is to be used to improve the system and to preserve the history of which the hon. member speaks so eloquently.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10:25 p.m.

PROPOSED INVESTIGATION OF BANKRUPTCY OF SOCIETY FOR THE STUDY OF THE HERITAGE OF CANADA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, involving the bankruptcy of an organization called the Society for the Study of the Heritage of Canada which is being investigated by, among others, the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco), some of whose constituents are affected; he is presently in Toronto pursuant to this matter. As large sums of money are involved as well as government departments, and as very reputable persons have been involved as advisers from various fields of endeavour, including athletics, entertainment, parliament and Air Canada, and they probably have been deceived, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker):

That the Secretary of State, or the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs immediately take the same course of action as their colleague, the Minister of Transport, and cause an investigation to be commenced, and report to the House at the first opportunity.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion is proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43 and requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SUGGESTION HOUSING PROGRAM NOT BE IMPLEMENTED WITHOUT CONSULTATION WITH NATIVE ORGANIZATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I request the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion of pressing and urgent necessity. Given that the government has admitted that its present policy on native housing is a costly failure and since native people were not adequately consulted at the time the program was devised, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That any revised policy for native housing be not implemented without full consultation and agreement in principle with the National Indian Brotherhood and the Native Council of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43 and requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FISHERIES

PROPOSED INVESTIGATION UNDER COMBINES ACT OF PRICES OFFERED TO LOBSTER FISHERMEN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a third motion under Standing Order 43, to present a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. I am sure the House will recognize its importance and give unanimous consent. It has to do with prices being offered to lobster fishermen by buyers in the Atlantic region. Prices vary by as much as 150 per cent. This places the fishermen at the mercy of the buyers, who are evidently combining to take advantage of the fishermen.

As the price of $1 per pound being offered in Newfoundland does not even cover the basic costs of the fishermen, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Carter):

That the government direct the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to investigate the matter under the Combines Investigation Act and that, if such practice is confirmed, the buyers be charged with unfair practices, or ordered to pay fair prices in line with market demand.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is proposed pursuant to Standing Order 43 and therefore requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR CONFIRMATION OF REPORTED ATTACK ON CAMBODIAN NAVAL VESSELS BY UNITED STATES AIRCRAFT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask either the Prime Minister or the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs for a little more information about reports saying that United States Air Force aircraft have attacked and possibly destroyed Cambodian naval vessels in the Gulf of Thailand. Has either hon. gentleman any information to give the House?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have no information on this. Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition will direct his question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who is expected back in the House in a few minutes.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

DECLINE IN PRODUCTION—GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO COUNTERACT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance concerning the revelation that output in the Canadian economy for the first quarter of this year declined by some 2.8 per cent, or, averaged over the year, at the rate of 11 per cent. Since this is the third quarter in a row in which there has been either no increase in output in Canadian economy, or a decline, will the minister inform the House if he intends to bring forward specific measures which will help in what is clearly a major recessionary period?

● (1410)

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Without accepting the preamble of the hon. member's question, Mr. Speaker, a proper response would be on budget night.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I somewhat suspected that answer. I wish to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce since a good part of the responsibility for this totally unacceptable situation in the Canadian economy must reside with him. Apart from budgetary matters, can he inform the House what his department plans to do to reverse this unfortunate situation?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this year we probably have the most impressive list of foreign trade initiatives that the government has ever put forward. We have more outgoing missions than at any time in the past. We have more incoming missions. I will be meeting with the French minister, the Iranian group, the German minister, and a very large delegation from Russian within the next six weeks. We are participating in, and I will check this figure, better than 100 separate fairs and missions abroad. We are trying to develop exports in both our traditional and non-traditional markets.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Apart from incoming and outgoing missions, can the minister inform the House of one, and I do not ask for more, concrete program the government has embarked upon on which he can give us information as to an increase in sales or leading to an increase in productivity in the Canadian economy?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, on a very recent mission to Cuba and Venezuela, we signed $25 million worth of business in Cuba and $25 million worth of business in Venezuela. We identified very close to $1 billion worth of potential business. The hon. member may recall that last week I signed a $500 million line of credit with the U.S.S.R.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. As the measures which the minister has been outlining to the House for the past three years have produced in the last 12 months two periods of zero growth, a third quarter with a decrease of 1.3 per cent and the final quarter, which we have just gone through, with a decrease of 2.8 per cent, will the minister tell the House what he is going to do in the near future in the way of introducing really effective measures, as the measures he has been adopting and is proposing at the present time have not done anything to improve the economy in any way, but have depressed it considerably in the past 12 months.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That kind of question lends itself to debate, discussion and argument. I think it ought to be avoided so that we will not get into any long-range discussion.

● (1420)

Mr. Hees: As we were given exactly the same kind of meaningless promises before each of the last three budgets, namely, that the government intended to bring in measures to stimulate the economy, and since the economy has continued to decline—

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Hees: —can we expect something better this time or will the same kind of fiasco be produced when the minister brings down his budget in June?

INFLATION—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON RESULTS OF MEETING WITH BUSINESSMEN SEEKING CONSENSUS ON RESTRAINT

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question, too, is directed to the Minister of Finance. Can the minister tell us the results of his meeting this morning with an undoubtedly distinguished though unidentified, group of Canadian businessmen?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): The names may not be known to the hon. gentleman but they were made public; I invite him to go through the names to see what a representative group of businessmen they were. I was accompanied by my colleagues, by the Minister of Labour, by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Baldwin: Worse and worse!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We had a good general review of the proposals in the working papers which the government has distributed to various sectors of the economy. Suggestions were made by the business leaders for improvements to these papers. Universal concern was expressed by the meeting about the state of the economy if we are not able to get prices and competitive costs under control. We discussed a wide variety of options which might be available to the government as remedies for the situation. I think my colleagues and I were generally encouraged by the positive tone of the meeting and by the willingness of the business leaders to continue these discussions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INFLATION—REACTION OF BUSINESSMEN TO POSSIBLE IMPOSITION OF WAGE AND PRICE CONTROLS

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): During the course of the discussions was the issue of compulsory controls touched upon and, if so, what was the response?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): No general proposition to that effect was put forward. As I say, a wide range of options and remedies was discussed.

Mr. Gillies: Given the fact that it is generally conceded to make a program of compulsory controls work, there has to be confidence that the people responsible for them support them and favour them. If the government should opt for some compulsory program, would the Minister of Finance feel both morally and intellectually obliged to resign?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is a hypothesis loosely constructed on the basis of another hypothesis, a question I have no chance of answering.

INFLATION—INQUIRY AS TO GUIDELINES PRESENTED TO BUSINESSMEN DURING MEETING SEEKING CONSENSUS ON RESTRAINT

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): When the hon. gentleman met with the representatives of organized labour, he put forward suggested guidelines within which organized labour was to operate as an exercise in voluntary restraint. May I ask the minister what guidelines he presented this morning to the representatives of the business community?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): I do not want to adopt the vocabulary of the hon. member, but the proposals and working papers before the meeting this morning were the same as those tabled in the House last week.

FINANCE

SUGGESTED REDUCTION OF INTEREST RATES TO CURB UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Finance.

In view of the fact that the number of loans made by the Industrial Development Bank has been drastically reduced over the last few months, would the minister tell the House whether he is ready to recommend a lowering of interest rates in order to entice industries to take advantage of that legislation, thus helping to relieve the serious unemployment problem?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the matter of interest rates has been clarified very recently by the Governor of the Bank of Canada. In principle, we are somewhat affected by international rates. It is also obvious that the problem raised by the hon. member will be clearly dealt with in the next budget.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary.

I thank the minister for his very earnest answer. The situation being serious and urgent, will more beneficial measures than those we now have be brought before Parliament in order to stimulate further the development of small businesses in our country, which employ at least 60 per cent of working Canadians? Since small businesses are facing financing problems and are sometimes forced to borrow at usurious rates, would the minister be prepared to introduce measures likely to give them the benefit of loans at interest rates in line with their possibilities and their return?

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, the answer about the fiscal and monetary aspects will necessarily be given in the budget. As for small businesses, especially those having between 10 and 100 employees and which, as the hon. member said, account for 60 per cent of jobs in Canada, the government takes a particular interest in them. When the last budget was introduced, we raised the exemption amount from $25,000 to $50,000 for the special rate granted those businessmen, as well as the gross amount, from $400,000 to $500,000, and I subscribe to the principle on which the hon. member's question is based.

Oral Questions

METHOD OF RESOLVING PROBLEM OF HIGH INTEREST RATES

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Would the hon. Minister of Finance explain to the House how he can say, on the one hand, that there is no way he could limit the interest rate increases on housing and industrial loans, because they are international woes, and claim, on the other hand, that his forthcoming budget will settle this problem?

How can he explain that his budget will bring a solution to an international problem, if this is really one? Or can he assure the House that this time his budget will serve the interests of Canadians, rather than those of foreign countries?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this question is so very well put together that it deserves a longer reply than I could make this afternoon. But perhaps I will say a few words about this during my budget speech.

FEDERAL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT ACT

DATE OF PROCLAMATION

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is addressed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that, notwithstanding the lowering of the number of loans made through the IDB in the rest of Canada, in northern Ontario there has been an increase in loans, and in view of the opportunities for lending to small businesses, would the minister indicate when the Federal Business Development Act will be implemented and proclaimed?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I expect it will be proclaimed on July 1.

HARBOURS

MONTREAL—ABILITY OF MARITIME EMPLOYERS' ASSOCIATION TO MEET LOAN COMMITMENTS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport and arises out of a question I asked yesterday respecting certain loans incurred by the Maritime Employers' Association in connection with their operations in the river ports. The minister indicated yesterday that he might be in a position to inform the House whether or not the Maritime Employers' Association had come to the government seeking some relief under their obligations to the National Harbours Board and whether or not, at the same time, the Maritime Employers' Association had given the government any indication whether or not they were able to meet their commitments to the banks, or at least that portion of their commitments to the banks for which the government has issued guarantees.

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, at the end of the afternoon yesterday I thought I would have some information. I do not know what the situation is at the moment, but what I heard this morning was that they were still negotiating with the banks and National Harbours Board to see how the MEA can operate and meet its obligations. As soon as I have the information, I will be ready to communicate it to the hon. gentleman.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR CONFIRMATION OF REPORTED ATTACK ON CAMBODIAN NAVAL VESSELS BY UNITED STATES AIRCRAFT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he is aware of reports that United States aircraft have destroyed a Cambodian naval vessel in the Gulf of Thailand, and can he give the House any information in this regard?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have just been made aware of these reports which apparently have been confirmed by United States authorities, but we have not had an opportunity to study the details of the incident in order to make any thoughtful comment on the situation. It would be possible after we have informed ourselves and given the matter some thought to make some comment. Obviously, this is a matter of concern.

INQUIRY AS TO WHETHER CANADA INFORMED PRIOR TO ATTACK ON CAMBODIAN NAVAL VESSELS BY UNITED STATES AIRCRAFT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, was the government of Canada advised officially that these measures would be taken before they were taken or at the time they were being taken, and did United States authorities give the government of Canada any explanation as to the reason for the action or the scope of it?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have just made inquiries since I came into the House on this point. When I have some information I will be happy to give it to the House. Up to the present time my only information is that I understand the State Department has confirmed to us that this action has been taken. I would have to ask for further details when I have the opportunity in order to provide effective information.

AIR TRANSPORT

FIXING OF FARES BY AIR LINES—REQUEST FOR DELAY IN HEARINGS SO CONSUMERS' ASSOCIATION CAN PRESENT EVIDENCE

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, in light of confirmation by the minister that the air lines have been involved over the past while in fixing fares, and noting that the air lines have been working together for several months preparing their case for the hearings presently going on before the CTC while interested parties have only had some 30 days to appeal, will the Minister of Transport urge the President of the CTC to reverse his decision and comply with the request of the Consumers' Association in the four western provinces to postpone the hearings for two or three weeks until the provinces and the Consumer Association of Canada have more information to present to the hearings?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the only thing I did was intervene in order to have certain fares decreased because they really were too high, and the air lines accepted that decrease in a certain number of fares. If somebody wants to appeal the decision of the CTC there is a procedure to do so under the law. It is not my responsibility to do so, but rather the responsibility of other organizations.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the organizations involved in the appeal feel they have not sufficient time to prepare a proper brief, and since the annual report of Air Canada, which contains financial information that is required by the provinces and other interested parties, was only tabled last week, will the minister personally intervene in order to allow a fair hearing in respect of this whole matter of air fare increases?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, if I am given any evidence that someone is interested in appealing the decision of the CTC, and the only problem is one of time, perhaps then I could intervene and ask the CTC to extend the time until they are ready. Up to now, the only one who has spoken to me about this is the hon. member.

AIR CANADA

REQUEST FOR DELAY IN APPLICATION FOR FARE INCREASES

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Minister of Transport was successful in his intervention in respect of the proposed increases on short routes in the golden triangle, that is Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto, will he now use his good offices to ask Air Canada if it is prepared to withhold its application for an increase, particularly in view of the disclosure today that the golden triangle rates are riding on the backs of and at the expense of prairie rates in western Canada? I wonder if the minister would ask Air Canada to wait until we get equalization of rates based on cost as opposed to this structure we now have.

● (1430)

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this method and this law has existed now since 1968. There is a procedure that has been established. It has been recognized by this House and never contested. I do not say we will not propose an amendment because I think there are some shortcomings, but I am not ready to do it at this moment.

FINANCE

REASON FOR DELAY OF REPORT ON TAX CONCESSIONS AND FAST WRITE-OFF TO MANUFACTURING AND PROCESSING INDUSTRIES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It is a repetition of the question I asked the Prime Minister on Monday. In view of the decline of industrial output in this country I should like to ask the minister now if he could explain the reason for the four and one-half month delay in the tabling of the final report on the tax concessions to the manufacturing and processing industries. While he is on his feet, in addition to informing us why there is that delay can he tell us when that report will be tabled?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I was not in the House to handle that question on Monday. The additional time taken to complete the final report on the corporate tax measures review has been due to a number of factors. I think I told the House earlier that the originally intended mailing date for the second and final survey of the Canadian manufacturing and processing firms was postponed because of the election last summer. We did not think it was appropriate to send out those questionnaires at that time and so they were not mailed until after the election. I have already conveyed that to the House. This later mailing did cause a further delay in that in many cases these firms were unable to respond as quickly as they might have otherwise due to shortage of key personnel who were on summer vacation after the election. More recently additional time has proven necessary to complete all the additional analyses which the committee wished to carry out for the purpose of the final report. The report is now in its final stages and I am advised the committee expects the report to be ready for tabling within a month.

Mr. Speaker: One supplementary by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether or not he can tell us if he expects that report to demonstrate the effectiveness of the tax concessions in creating employment or whether or not he can tell us that that might not be the reason for the report being delayed as we have heard in our party from this department.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the question is posed in cynical terms, and I could not reply to it except by saying that it will be tabled within a month.

Then the hon. member is free, as he always is, to draw his own conclusions.

PUBLIC SERVICE

DATE OF PAYMENT OF WAGE INCREASES TO GENERAL LABOUR AND TRADES GROUP

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Supply and Services. Would he please tell the House when arrears of pay and current increases in pay negotiated in the settlement of March 19 of the strike of the general labour and trades group will be paid?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, in fact, every department must forward to my department the payroll in order to allow the issuance of cheques. Now, it is a complicated task since approximately 21,000 employees are involved and they are paid according to certain varying rates and are working within different sectors within which rates vary too. The collective agreement has changed the definition of sectors, which complicates the task further.

It has been said, when the collective agreement was signed, on March 28, that it would take 90 days to issue the cheques. But, as a matter of fact, I can inform the House that the tradesmen will be paid according to the new agreement: 5,000 will be paid on May 16 and others on May 30. As for retroactive payments, most of the employees will receive their cheques around May 30, and others around June 28.

DREDGING CONTRACT TO J. P. PORTER, McNAMARA AND MARINE INDUSTRIES—RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN DEPARTMENTAL ESTIMATE AND AMOUNT OF CONTRACT

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. Yesterday I asked the minister if the three-year contract awarded to J. P. Porter Limited, McNamara Company Limited and Marine Industries Limited by his department on August 30, 1971 in the amount of $20,860,000 was identical in value to the estimate prepared by his officials covering the removal of some 14 million cubic yards of material at Île d'Orleans and the minister promised to make this information available to this House after he checked with his officials. Has he now checked or investigated this matter and was the estimate of the departmental officials for this work identical to the amount of the contract awarded to the three companies in the joint venture.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Well, without checking the contract itself, I should say I was told that probably the hon. gentleman is about right, that there is a coincidence between the two amounts. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would be kind enough to give me time to re-check. I did not do it last night. I just checked the Hamilton case and the Toronto case. The hon. member can read the answer in Hansard.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, will the minister make this available to us as soon as he has checked?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I have no objection to it.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

SUGGESTED RESTRAINT IN INCREASE OF MONEY SUPPLY—MINISTER'S VIEW OF LABOUR'S SHARE OF GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. As Federal Reserve Chairman Burns in the United States has indicated to Congress that the money supply in that country will increase by only 5 per cent to 7½ per cent in the current year has the minister received any similar assurance from the Governor of the Bank of Canada that our money supply increase will be similarly restrained, and if so has he conveyed this commitment to those he meets in his consensus talks?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman put this type of question to the House before. Over the whole 12-month period ending March, 1975, the increase in the money supply series has been 12 per cent, M-1, a figure which appears to be within the range that is reasonable in the circumstances in terms of the nominal growth of the economy.

Mr. Stevens: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. In line with the minister's consensus talks and in view of his speech in Sarnia in which he pointed out to labour that its share of the gross national product had jumped up to 54.9 per cent as of the last quarter of 1974, would the minister indicate whether he believes labour is receiving a fair share of the gross national product of this nation? As this figure has increased fairly steadily since 1963 to the 55 per cent level, does he now feel that it should be capped out?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, that question is posed in the wrong terms. It depends very much on the state of the economy, our productivity and our standard of living at the time.

Mr. Speaker: A final supplementary by the hon. member for York-Simcoe.

REASON FOR MINISTER'S REFUSAL TO APPEAR BEFORE COMMITTEE

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, since during May the minister has met with labour and business representatives in Ottawa and other centres, and with the Sarnia-Lambton Liberal Association, would he indicate why he has declined an invitation to appear before the Committee on Finance of this House, in spite of the fact that every available day and time was offered to him for his appearance.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have appeared before that committee on four occasions in the last two months, including two appearances just before I left for the Middle East. I think, despite the invitation of the committee at the moment, that the traditional discretion left to the committee and the Minister of Finance prior to the budget should be observed. When that budget is over, I will be back and I hope the hon. member shows up from time to time.

SUGGESTED STUDY BY SOLICITOR GENERAL OF COMMON ASSAULTS OCCURRING DURING HOCKEY GAMES

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Solicitor General. In view of the fact that Canada's hockey season is now drawing to a close will the minister endeavour to establish a study to ensure that starting next year there will not be a continuation of common assault taking place on the ice that we would not allow outside the hockey arena.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have serious reservations concerning whether that question comes within the administrative competence of the Solicitor General.

LAW ENFORCEMENT INTELLIGENCE UNITS—SUGGESTION UNIT HAS BEEN SPYING ON CITIZENS WITH NO LINKS TO ORGANIZED CRIME

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Solicitor General. It concerns the law enforcement intelligence unit, a co-operative international police data bank, that has about 19,000 files on Canadians and Americans in its computer. May I ask the minister, in light of the fact that several Canadian organizations, including the Department of Manpower and Immigration, the Ontario provincial police and the Toronto and Montreal police, are members of the LEIU, has the Canadian government investigated the allegations by the Houston police department that LEIU has been spying on legitimate businessmen and other citizens with no links to organized crime or subversive groups, and can he assure that the allegations by the Houston police department are without foundation?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): That is a very specific and detailed question to which I will get the answer from the RCMP.

POSSIBLE ESTABLISHMENT OF REFINERY AT ANACORTES, WASHINGTON—POLLUTION HAZARDS IN JUAN DE FUCA STRAIT

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the hon. Minister of the Environment.

Has she been made aware of the information from the West coast of the United States, whereby Shell intends to establish a new refinery at Anacortes in the State of Washington. That refinery would be supplied with Alaskan crude oil, thus requiring increased shipments across the Juan de Fuca Strait by large tankers, which would therefore create further threats to the environment?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I think that the hon. member goes beyond the statements of the said company which has submitted a report on a number of alternate sites for a reloading port for supertankers. In fact, it has been decided that the port in question would be the most suitable for those kinds of activities. There is no intention at all for the time being to build a harbour there. Should such a decision be taken or even contemplated, we would object quite strongly.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Does that mean that the minister does not intend to protest in advance?

Mrs. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to protest when no serious intention has been expressed of really going ahead with the construction of the port.

NURSES—MINISTER'S VIEW ON WAGE PARITY WITH PROVINCIAL NURSES AND PAYMENT ON NATIONAL RATHER THAN REGIONAL SCALE

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I have a question and a supplementary to ask of the President of the Treasury Board and it is in relation to the current labour dispute of the federal nurses. Does the minister accept and support the concept of parity with nurses working under the jurisdiction of the provinces, and is he aware of the fact that a contract is now being negotiated on behalf of nurses in Nova Scotia which would be retroactive to January 1 of this year, thereby destroying any basis for parity for federal nurses before it is granted?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I said before in the House that this was a unanimous report and the union representative on the Conciliation Board agreed with the other two members, after studying all the facts, that this package should be accepted for all the nurses across Canada. The federal nurses represent only two per cent of all the nurses. So far as the supplementary question is concerned, the answer is no.

Mr. Speaker: Now that the hon. member has the answer, would he put the question?

Mr. Firth: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that I should not give too much notice of the questions I wish to ask.

My supplementary question is whether the minister has considered paying nurses on a national scale rather than a regional scale to bring the department's pay practices for this group in line with almost, if not all, other groups in the Professional Institute? I thank the minister for the answer.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I will give the proper answer.

POSSIBLE ESTABLISHMENT OF A NATIONAL URBAN TRANSPORTATION DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the statements that have been made over the past three years, and continued negotiations with respect to the establishment of a national urban transportation development corporation, can the minister let the House know when that corporation will be established and when an announcement will be made on that matter?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the creation of this corporation is not only the responsibility of the federal government which will be only one of the shareholders of that corporation. Ontario has agreed to use its own corporation and to extend it nationally; Alberta already agreed, and so did many provinces. Quebec has not agreed as yet, and here in Ottawa we have not yet given any formal answer.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Can the minister assure the House that negotiations with respect to that subject are being carried on, and is it a fact that the difficulty in establishing the corporation is, as he said, that the province of Quebec has not yet agreed?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I think the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce met his counterpart in Quebec city and I think they found grounds for an understanding so that Quebec can come in. But the negotiations are not yet concluded because we are discussing among ourselves how the federal government will participate in this corporation.

AIR CANADA

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF INTENTION TO SELL VISCOUNT AIRCRAFT

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Can he verify that Air Canada spent $273,000 overhauling each of the eight of the 24 retired Viscount aircrafts and are now considering a bid of $44,000 for each of the overhauled aircraft, and will the minister report the results of his investigation to the House?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I can ask for a detailed report. The only thing I know is that Air Canada has many problems selling the Viscounts which they have been repairing in Winnipeg. I do not say that the aircraft cannot be sold because of having been repaired in Winnipeg.

Some hon. Members: Better not say that.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): The difficulty lies in the fact that the market for this type of aircraft is very tight and it is difficult to sell them.

Mr. McKenzie: Can the minister also check into the report that Air Canada is offering to sell the Viscounts to "Wings of Hope", a Montreal based charity organization operating mercy flights to Peru, and will the minister verify if Air Canada has cancelled this offer and, if so, for what reason?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I hope that some day employees in Winnipeg will be able to give me information as well as the hon. member on what is going on in Air Canada. However, I will check what the hon. member said and I will try to find someone who can provide me with the information.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CLOSURE OF OFFICE AT VERNON, B.C.—REQUEST FOR OUTLINE OF PLANS FOR FUTURE

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. After the recent forced closure of the Indian Affairs Office at Vernon, British Columbia, can the minister give the House any indication of the present status and future plans for that office?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the indication to us from the various bands being served from that office is that they felt they could get along quite happily without its services. Therefore, in agreement with the request of the Indian people being served by the office, we closed it.

Mr. Johnston: I wonder by what means the minister has ascertained whether that was the decision of the people being served. However, I would like to ask whether all Indian Affairs offices in the country are as vulnerable as the one at Vernon, or have some been designated by the department as essential?

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, the means of verification was the communication we had with all the bands through their chiefs in the area. They replied in the affirmative that they would like to see the office closed. So that is our present situation.

HOUSING—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF CONSULTATION WITH NATIVE PEOPLE ON NEW POLICY

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Given that the government admitted in a cabinet document on April 4 that its native housing policy is a costly failure, a fact directly attributable to the lack of input to that program by the native people, would the minister give a commitment that he will not force any new housing policy on the native people which they feel it would be impossible to implement and which does not have their agreement in principle?

● (1450)

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is aware that the native people did, in fact, have input into that paper. They prepared a study which they presented to us a year ago and there have been ongoing consultations, the last one last week, with members of the National Indian Brotherhood Housing Committee and officials in the department.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): A supplementary question. Because the lack of adequate housing is one of the major social problems facing the native people, will the minister see that far more effort is made than there has been to date, to develop a program which relates to the culture and needs of the native people rather than to the dictates of CMHC?

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, that is the reason we are currently having these meetings with the native people.

BILINGUALISM

ALLEGED STATEMENT PASSAGE OF BILL 22 BY QUEBEC IS REFUSAL TO ACCEPT OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. On Friday, May 9, 1975 the Moncton Times reported Senator Louis Robichaud, former Liberal premier of New Brunswick, as saying that the passing of Bill 22 in Quebec to make French the official language could be interpreted as a refusal to accept the Official Languages Act. Would the Prime Minister please comment on whether he agrees with Senator Robichaud's conclusion?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Surely, the hon. member realizes that he is seeking information on the interpretation of a statute. One supplementary question.

Mr. Hogan: Could I ask the Prime Minister if the Senator was in any way interpreting government policy in this matter?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Brandon-Souris.

ENERGY

NELSON RIVER POWER PROJECT—GOVERNMENT VIEW ON USE OF EQUIPMENT MADE IN CANADA AND TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE IN MANITOBA LEGISLATURE

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): My question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Could the hon. gentleman inform the House whether the government of Canada is still carrying on negotiations with the province of Manitoba in connection with the supply of long-distance power transmission equipment for the Nelson River power project? If so, is the federal government's emphasis placed on Canadian content and the establishment of a plant in the province of Manitoba to provide this equipment?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, there is no specific negotiation under way as there was in the past with respect to the extension of the Nelson River system. It is anticipated that there will be further discussion as further extensions of the system are planned, but the Manitoba government has decided to go ahead on its own now. As the hon. member will recall, if the bid with the highest Canadian content had been accepted by Manitoba hydro there was the prospect not only of more jobs in Canada but of the establishment of the plant at Brandon. I believe, as a result of the Manitoba decision, that plant will not go ahead at Brandon.

Mr. Dinsdale: A supplementary question. Is the federal government withholding its approval of the tabling of documents on this subject in the Manitoba legislature?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): No, sir, we are happy to table exchanges in this regard. What we asked Manitoba to do was table additional documents so that the full record would be out in the open.

SUGGESTED UNITED STATES SUPPORT FOR COMMONWEALTH PLAN TO CLOSE GAP BETWEEN RICH AND POOR NATIONS

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. In view of United States Secretary of State Kissinger's statement yesterday that the United States is prepared to deal with the raw materials question "with economic realism, political imagination and understanding for the concerns of the developing world", what steps will the Prime Minister take to secure United States support for the position taken by the Commonwealth heads of government in Jamaica that "a comprehensive and inter-related program of practical measures" including trade and monetary reform, be drawn up to close the gap between the rich and the poor nations?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I had occasion to meet the American ambassador in Jamaica. I am sure he was following the Commonwealth deliberations and the result of it as contained in the communiqué, with great interest.

OPPORTUNITY OF PARLIAMENT TO EXAMINE CANADIAN STAND ON DEVELOPMENT PRIOR TO UNITED NATIONS MEETING

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): A supplementary question concerning the follow through to the Jamaica conference. Has Canada extended an invitation to the new group of ten experts to meet in Canada? Since the group of ten is to report to their own governments prior to participation in the special session of the United Nations on development in September, what opportunity will this parliament have to examine the Canadian stand before the opening of this critical United Nations conference?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we always welcome constructive suggestions by parliament on this subject. The subject itself is well known and has been debated at some length in the council of the United Nations and the meetings of the non-aligned countries. Everyone knows what they are. I hope hon. members opposite will feel free to put forward their constructive suggestions either by contacting me or the foreign minister or perhaps, as the House leader suggested, taking one of the opposition days to discuss this vital matter of foreign relations.

BANKRUPTCY OF SOCIETY FOR STUDY OF THE HERITAGE OF CANADA—KNOWLEDGE OF MINISTER OF SITUATION

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. I should like to ask the hon. gentleman how long he has been aware of the difficulties, reportedly culminating in bankruptcy, of the Society for the Study of the Heritage of Canada and an RCMP investigation into this affair. Since a number of prominent Canadians seem to be involved in an advisory position and are probably a little embarrassed about it, I wonder if the minister could tell the House something about this?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to tell the hon. member and members of the House more about the events but I would have to brief myself. On the first part of the question, I first heard about this a couple of months ago, it seems to me.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief supplementary question for the Solicitor General. Has the hon. gentleman been aware of this situation and has any advice been given by his office in view of the report that grants from the Secretary of State ceased some time ago and that this was the cause of the "reorganization" of this particular body?

[Mr. Roche.]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I do not recall hearing about that particular grant and I do not recall giving any advice to the Secretary of State.

BAIL REFORM ACT

REQUEST FOR RELEASE OF STATISTICS PROVIDED PROVINCIAL ATTORNEYS GENERAL

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): A question for the Minister of Justice, Mr. Speaker. On February 4, 1975 the minister stated that statistics on the operation of the Bail Reform Act had been provided to the provincial attorneys general so that they might be aware of the figures before they were made public. Has the minister received any comment from the attorneys general, and is he now in a position to release the statistics?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think the news release was made about ten days after that exchange in the House. I do not know that I have received any specific representations from the provincial attorneys general. The intention was simply to give them the material before the public was informed.

POSSIBLE EMPLOYMENT OF ILLEGAL IMMIGRANTS ON CLEANING STAFF—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question for the Minister of Public Works. About two weeks ago I asked the minister a question with regard to illegal immigrants directly or indirectly employed on cleaning by the Department of Public Works. Has the minister checked into that matter—I think by his smile he may not have. Would he check and give me an answer?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry if my smile is misleading.

An hon. Member: That's because we don't see it very often.

Mr. Drury: It is not the policy of the Department of Public Works to engage the services of people who are in Canada illegally. Further, the conditions of employment we impose upon contractors who do cleaning services contain provisions to the same end.

PRIVILEGE

PROCEEDINGS IN STANDING COMMITTEE ON NATIONAL RESOURCES AND PUBLIC WORKS

Mr. Harvie Andre: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege of which I gave the House warning yesterday, and of which I gave notice in writing to the Chair earlier this day concerning a matter which culminated yesterday in the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

May I say immediately, Mr. Speaker, that I am aware of the procedural difficulties in raising a question of privilege in the House when the incident occurred in a committee. A fairly recent ruling is that of your predecessor given on December 4, 1973. However, Mr. Speaker, this matter concerns the denial of that freedom of speech to which members and witnesses are of ancient right entitled in a committee of this House.

Throughout history, in those states of which this parliament is the present heir, the ultimate ruler has ever reserved to himself—as his prerogative duty—the protection and preservation of the fundamental rights and freedoms upon which the state and the institutions of that state are founded. In such a state, when such rights have been denied by the lesser magistrates, there has always been an appeal to Caesar. If there had not been, we would not be here, nor would this institution exist. A denial of freedom of speech in a committee of this House is so essentially an attack on this House that the matter must transcend the convention that a committee chairman's ruling should be settled in committee and not reported to the House.

● (1500)

A committee report that aborts the truth by suppression of evidence aborts the truth no less when it is presented to this House. I suggest that when a ruling by a committee chairman denies those rights which have been given into your protection on behalf of all members of this House, and this House itself, by Her Majesty, then your duty to intervene to preserve those rights is clear.

I shall read the matter complained of directly from the transcript of the May 8 proceedings of the committee. This ruling was appealed yesterday, and upheld by the committee.

The chairman of the committee is reported to have said, according to the May 8 minutes, the following:

> ... hon. members recall that during our evening meeting yesterday a point of order was raised by the hon. member from Nipissing with regard to the acceptability of a question asked of an official of the National Energy Board by the hon. member from Don Valley.

Then the chairman quoted the question, which reads as follows:

> Is it your opinion that you have the authority to answer questions such as: Is it the view of the board, as a result of its studies and analysis that the price of oil in Canada should be equivalent to world prices?

He went on to say:

> And at that time I reserved my decision relating to the acceptability of the question. However, I am ready to rule on that point this afternoon. I wish to point out to the hon. member that it has been long the practice of the committees of the House to leave to the judgment of the officials of the department to decide whether the question would involve them in controversy over government policy ...

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but two things trouble me. First there is the contradiction involving citation 234. The hon. member has referred in detail to proceedings before the committee. I appreciate that in some way the hon. member may want to raise the possibility of disagreeing with a decision taken in the committee. There is a method by which this can be done. Once the report of the committee is tabled, it becomes subject to a motion for concurrence. If that motion is moved, it becomes a debatable motion. It can be called and, in that way, the hon. member could debate whether proceedings in committee were proper. In that way he could expose the matter for debate.

But it would be a departure from the proceedings, traditions and practices of this House if the Chair were to consider in any way an appeal or ruling of the chairman, or a vote taken in committee which would indicate an appeal from the chairman's ruling. Unless I can be persuaded at the outset that I ought to depart from that practice as a general approach, I would not wish to look at the details of the proceedings in the committee to which the hon. member refers.

The hon. member may wish to pursue his point as to whether there should be some change in the practice and argue, on his question of privilege, that the Chair ought to sit in appeal on rulings of committee chairmen. Certainly it does not do so at the present time and it will be a departure from practice if it did so. Until the Chair can be persuaded on the general point, I feel we ought not to look at the committee proceedings in particular.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, if I may touch on the point Your Honour just raised, may I refer Your Honour to an unusual debate which took place last night. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) brought this matter before the House when he asserted categorically, as recorded on page 5769 of Hansard, that:

> If you go behind the minister and compel civil servants to appear, then, of course, you break down the whole principle of ministerial responsibility.

I suggest to Your Honour that you must combine what the minister said with what the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) said, because there is now a categorical assertion by the government that civil servants do not have to appear before committees. That, I think, is the issue with which Your Honour ought to deal.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am prepared to hear the hon. member on the general point as to whether a breach of privilege has been committed in any standing committee. If the hon. member wants to talk about that general point, I can listen.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I regret that my introduction was excessively lengthy. I was quoting the remarks of the chairman of the committee. Those remarks speak for themselves and show the merits of the position. My question of privilege is not so much on the merits as on this point: that although the Standing Orders provide for an appeal, the chairman refused to allow members of the committee to debate that matter. Therefore I feel that the basic freedom of speech of members of parliament on standing committees was abridged. In a moment I will move a motion in support of my position. If the Chair please, may I continue.

The chairman said:

> . . . it has been long the practice of the committee of the House to leave to the judgment of the officials of the department to decide whether the question would involve them in controversy over government policy which they are called upon to implement and not to decide. In this particular instance, I feel that the question would involve the officials in policy-making and should more properly be directed to the minister. Therefore, I find the question out of order . . .

As a lawyer would say, the thing speaks for itself. I must point out that the chairman compounded this denial of freedom of speech by refusing to listen to debate on the point of order. At any rate members of my party were not permitted to debate the point of order. This incident reminds me of a similar occasion in the mother of parliaments. A member rose, and stood with his hand cupped to his ear. When asked by the Speaker to explain his conduct he said, "Mr. Speaker, I am waiting for the cock to crow a third time." As the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has already said, it is totally unacceptable for ministers to indicate that they shall have veto powers under—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I remind the hon. member once again that he is seeking to raise as a question of privilege the refusal of the minister to co-operate in the proceedings before the committee, that is an area which I might be able to examine. I would have difficulty, but I might be able to examine it. But if the hon. member is asking me to listen to an appeal from a ruling of a committee chairman, he ought to know that I cannot do that, unless we change the general practice in this area.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: No, Mr. Speaker, that is not my intention. I will put my motion in a minute. I am referring to the question of ministerial policy to limit witnesses appearing before committees. I suggest, Sir, that that is a debatable point. We have strong feelings about it. In the present instance the chairman of the committee decided what questions should be put. That, I suggest, was an infringement of our privileges, and I am prepared to move a motion in the following terms:

> That this House, upon hearing a report on the actions of the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell while purporting to act in his capacity as chairman of the Standing Committee on Natural Resources and Public Works, is of the opinion that he has caused and created a situation whereby the privileges of members have been infringed upon through the denial of members' rights to question witnesses, and that this matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I wish to comment on the motion proposed this afternoon by the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre). I think Your Honour was quite right in saying that the substance of the question should not be raised in the House, and that it cannot be properly discussed here. The practice of the House has been that such questions cannot be raised in the House unless the committee had actually reported to the House. I refer to the ruling of Mr. Speaker Lamoureux, as recorded in the Journals of the House of Commons for December 4, 1973. Mr. Speaker Lamoureux ruled as follows:

> It is well established practice that committee proceedings cannot be brought into consideration or debate in the House except by way of a report from the committee. If a point of order or a question of privilege should arise in a committee, it should be settled there rather than by way of an appeal to the House.

That is exactly what happened yesterday in the standing committee.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): No, it did not.

Mr. Foster: The chairman's ruling was appealed and a decision was taken on it.

The hon. member for Calgary Centre suggested that members of all parties did not have an opportunity to debate the matter. I suggest that representatives of at least three parties represented at that committee meeting spoke to the motion to appeal the chairman's ruling.

An hon. Member: Not true.

Mr. Foster: May I also refer Your Honour to citation 295(1) of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, which says in part:

> On July 24, 1956, an appeal was taken to the House from the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, and the Speaker ruled that the chairman's ruling should be settled in the committee and not reported to the House.

● (1510)

We have these two precedents, Mr. Speaker. I might point out that they go back over almost 20 years. I would also point out Standing Order 65(11), which reads as follows:

> The chairman of a standing or special committee shall maintain order in the committees; deciding all questions of order subject to an appeal to the committee, but disorder in a committee can only be censured by the House, on receiving a report thereof.

The committee has not reported to the House and I do not feel this matter can properly be taken up here at this time.

The hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) is saying that the chairman of the standing committee is ruling willy-nilly deciding whether questions can be put to civil servants and others who appear before committees who normally do not comment on questions of policy. That is not the case at all. In the instance the hon. member has spoken about, the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) put a question to the chairman of the National Energy Board, which has an advisory responsibility to the government and to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald). Therefore, their discussions would normally be private. The hon. member for Don Valley put the question like this—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think we are getting into a discussion of what took place in the committee, and it is in someway being suggested that I should decide whether what took place in the committee was right or wrong. The only question I will decide is whether it is proper practice for this Chair to sit in appeal on events or rulings that took place in the standing committee. I do not want to hear the specifics.

Mr. Foster: I will conclude by saying the chairman essentially ruled that in this case, where a matter of policy had been put to a civil servant, that a point of order was raised by the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais). As the parliamentary secretary, I spoke to that point of order. I said I did not feel it was a proper question to be answered by a civil servant. The chairman ruled that the question could not be put. In his ruling, he made it very clear, and I will just read—

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Are we going to debate the whole question of whether or not the Chairman of the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works was in order or not in order? That could be a lengthy debate. I certainly am not prepared to have the hon. member who is now speaking put on record his interpretation of the chairman's ruling. Either we are discussing that ruling or we are not. I took it from Your Honour's statement that we are not discussing the ruling of the chairman.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) has said for the fourth time what I have said three times, that is, that I do not propose to get into discussing an appeal of the chairman's ruling. The question is whether this Chair can sit in appeal on rulings or events that take place in the standing committee. I will entertain discussion on that. I have already indicated it is my firm view it cannot. However, I am open to listen to argument on the subject. I really do not want to get into the substance of what took place in the committee.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I will be guided by your suggestion and say I do not feel this is a matter which can properly be brought before the House at this time.

Mr. Speaker: I propose to examine the arguments that have been put forward and the ruling to which reference has been made. I might indicate that my position earlier is in conformity with what I have already examined as to precedents. However, I will re-read what hon. members have contributed, and make my decision tomorrow.

AIRCRAFT FUEL FOR MINISTRY OF TRANSPORT AIRPORTS

Question No. 1,904—Mr. Howie:

1. On what date were the last tenders called for the supply of aircraft fuel for Department of Transport airports in New Brunswick?

2. (a) By whom, and in what amount were tenders submitted (b) to whom was the contract awarded?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. Tenders were called on February 18, 1975 for the supply of a full range of petroleum products at all MOT airports in the maritimes in support of MOT aircraft based at Moncton. MOT airports at Moncton, Fredericton and Saint John were included in the invitation to tender.

2. (a) Tenders were submitted by Shell Canada Limited and Imperial Oil Limited, the only contractors at the time providing into-plane refuelling at maritime airports. In so far as aviation fuel is concerned, i.e., aviation gasoline and aviation turbine fuel, both companies quoted on the basis of dealer's price on day of delivery, plus an airport fee of $0.0168 per gallon for into-plane service. (b) Standing Offers for the supply of an estimated quantity of a full range of aviation petroleum products, as and when required, at MOT airports in the maritimes in support of MOT Moncton based aircraft for the period April 1, 1975 to March 31, 1976 were awarded on March 27, 1975 to Imperial Oil Limited and Shell Canada Limited. Both companies can provide aviation gasoline 100/130 octane at the Moncton airport and an arrangement to use either or both sources was requested by MOT to ensure operational effectiveness. MOT has been advised that whenever possible, requirements should be drawn from the supplier offering the most advantageous price to the Crown at time of refuelling. The standing offer awarded to Imperial Oil covers the supply of aviation gasoline 100/130 octane at the Fredericton airport. Negotiations are still underway to locate a supplier for other MOT POL aviation requirements at Fredericton and at the MOT airport in Saint John, New Brunswick.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—TELESCOPE PROJECT

Question No. 1,994—Mr. Reynolds:

1. What criteria were used when the contract award of $800,000 was issued to Surveyer, Nenniger, and Chênevert Inc., Montreal, Quebec for the Canada-France and Hawaii telescope project?

2. What is the speculated cost of the construction and development of this venture both in terms of Canada's contributions and the other parties involved?

3. What contribution of Canadian labour and construction goods are to be provided?

4. For what reason was the Hawaii site chosen?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. A predetermined weighted point system was used to select Surveyer, Nenniger, and Chênevert on the basis of the following criteria: relevant company experience and management capability; proposed methodology and work plan; availability and competence of human resources; understanding the objectives and scope of work; Canadian content; industrial benefits, i.e: capability to exploit the expertise gained on the program; costs to the Crown.

2. The expected contribution of Canada and France is $13,550,000 each for the one-half share of the cost of the observatory. Hawaii's contribution is the site, access roads and administration buildings, deemed to be worth $4,782,000.

3. Approximately one-third of the construction cost will be spent on contracts with Canadian firms, one-third on French contracts and one-third will be decided by international bidding.

4. The site on the summit of Mauna Kea on the island of Hawaii was chosen because it has unique optical observation qualities with respect to the absence of humidity, pollutant particles and minimal temperature variations.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—REFRIGERATED CONTAINERS

Question No. 2,000—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Was a contract awarded by the Canadian Commercial Corporation on behalf of CIDA for the supply of twenty refrigerated containers at a cost of $620,765 to be used by the Railways Improvement Programme in Zambia?

2. Did the Department of Supply and Services invite tenders from companies that deal with our national railways for supplying such equipment?

3. Would it have been much more economically efficient to purchase refrigerated containers from the CPR supplier and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. Yes.

2. With the advice of CIDA, the consultant for the program and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, DSS approached all potential Canadian manufacturers of such equipment agreeing to accept either the specified or an equivalent system.

3. DSS and the consultant to Zambian Railways were aware of the refrigerated containers used by the CPR, however the manufacturer of its "piggy-back" containers did not respond to our initial survey of manufacturers. We understand that the refrigeration units, which are fitted by the CPR, are not manufactured in Canada.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—CONTRACTS TO UNIVERSITIES FOR RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Question No. 2,023—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Were contracts awarded to various universities in Canada over the past two years by the Department of Supply and Services similar to contracts for "research and development" issued to industry and, if so, for what reason were the latter issued?

2. What purposeful end do they achieve?

3. On behalf of what departments are such contracts made?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1 and 2. Research and development contracts are awarded by the Department of Supply and Services in accordance with the policy set out in Treasury Board "Guidelines for the Implementation of the Make or Buy Policy Concerning Research and Development Requirements in the Natural SCIENCES" dated January, 1973, a copy of which is available in the Library of Parliament. The Policy as a general principle, all mission-oriented research and development requirements as well as their associated and subsequent contracts for hardware, systems and services are to be acquired from Canadian industry, as defined below, unless it can be conclusively demonstrated by a department that optimum benefit to Canada would be better served by obtaining the research and development requirements from federal government facilities. The anticipated result of the policy will be that Canadian industry, by becoming increasingly aware of the research and development requirements of government, will satisfy more of these requirements and thereby produce increased benefits for Canada through greater stimulation of the innovation process. Definition Canadian Industry means all business organizations located in Canada and incorporated or registered under federal or provincial legislation which are engaged in manufacturing, processing, primary and service industries. This definition includes industrial research institutes jointly operated by groupings of companies in Canadian industry. (While universities and provincial research foundations and councils are not included in this definition and therefore not covered by this particular policy, there is no intent to change the practice of placing research and development with them whenever this is the most effective way of proceeding. Each requirement is carefully considered by the Department of Supply and Services in relation to known potential sources for the particular capabilities required. As in normal procurement, if the capabilities required are more likely to be found in universities, these will be included in the request for proposals and proposals will be assessed in the normal manner. A summary of contracts awarded to universities on behalf of client departments during the period of the question is attached, along with a summary of all research and development contracts placed by the Department of Supply and Services during that period.

3. Details concerning the client departments and the nature of work covered by these contracts is contained in the Department of Supply and Services monthly Research and Development Bulletins covering this period which were tabled in response to question No. 1,993.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE PARLIAMENTARY RETURNS OFFICE

Question No. 2,048—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

In the last fiscal year, what was the cost of operation of the Parliamentary Returns Office of the Department of Finance?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): There is no Parliamentary Returns Office as such in the Department of Finance. Parliamentary returns are handled by several members of the deputy minister's staff.

DEPARTMENT OF SUPPLY AND SERVICES—PARLIAMENTARY RETURNS OFFICE

Question No. 2,063—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

In the last fiscal year, what was the cost of operation of the Parliamentary Returns Office of the Department of Supply and Services?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): The Department of Supply and Services does not operate a Parliamentary Returns Office. A parliamentary advisor's office is responsible in part for returns of both the Supply and Services administration. In addition there are other administrative and personnel responsibilities. Therefore the direct costs for parliamentary work cannot easily be separated from the other responsibilities.

NUMBER OF POST OFFICE FACILITIES IN PAST 10 YEARS

Question No. 2,138—Mr. Herbert:

How many post offices were there in each of the past ten years and what is the number projected for each of the next three years?

Mr. Raynald Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): Fiscal year 1964-65, 11,255 postal facilities; 1965-66, 11,172; 1966-67, 11,059; 1967-68, 10,838; 1968-69, 10,450; 1969-70, 9,575; 1970-71, 9,023; 1971-72, 8,564; 1972-73, 8,684; 1973-74, 8,710. The Post Office Department does not project the number of postal facilities for future years as the establishment of such is dependent on municipal, provincial and federal programs; i.e. the establishment of town sites, municipalities, resource development projects, etc. and the department's capabilities to provide postal services to meet the customers' needs.

RACETRACK SUPERVISION REGULATIONS

Question No. 2,220—Mr. Bawden:

Were sections 211, 213, 214 and 215 of Part V of the Racetrack Supervision Regulations governing the use of narcotics, unacceptable medications or other stimulants, enforced during the 1973 and 1974 horseracing seasons or were they revoked on June 15, 1973 and, if so, in either case (a) is a review being made by the Minister in consultation with the provincial racing commissions (b) for what reason has it taken almost two years to review the sections (c) on what date will the review be completed (d) on what date will the sections be reinstated?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): The sections were revoked on June 15, 1973. (a) Yes. (b) The delay is attributed to a study of controlled medication and pre-race testing under way by the department in collaboration with the various racing commissions. (c) No target date has been set for the completion of the review, but it will require at least a year. (d) The results of the study will determine whether the sections will be reintroduced and their effective date.

5. Has Mr. Lewis been asked by the government for a report or has he volunteered, any suggestions and/or reports as a result of his Cuban visit?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. Mr. Gillespie was in Cuba from March 19 to 23, 1975. The whereabouts of Mr. David Lewis do not fall within the responsibility of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

2. Not to the knowledge of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

At this date 13 offices have been opened and seven others are at varying stages of development. There are plans for the establishment of ten more offices in 1975-76 and another ten the following year. The exact locations of these offices will be based, as in the past, on on-site evaluations by departmental personnel of the needs and resources of various areas.

3. During the fiscal year 1974-75, the department accorded grants to several voluntary agencies: Consumers' Association of Canada (C.A.C.); Association Coopérative Économie Familiale (A.C.E.F.); l'Institut de promotion des Intérêts du Consommateur (I.P.I.C.); the Canadian Toy Testing Council, Automobile Protection Association (A.P.A.); the National Anti-Poverty Organization (N.A.P.O.); the Citizens' Bureau in Belleville, Ontario; the Consumers' Association of Canada (Quebec); and the Quebec City local of the Consumers' Association of Canada.

5. (a) Between January 1, 1974 and December 31, 1974, Box 99 received 28,265 complaints and 15,422 enquiries. (b) No data is available that would provide an accurate answer to this question. Whether or not a consumer is happy with the results of an enquiry to Box 99 depends upon the initial expectations of the consumer in approaching the department.

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICIAL RESIDENCE

Question No. 2,306—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 1,352 which listed an additional $38,470.31 expenditures on household items at the Prime Minister's official residence at 24 Sussex Drive, will the Prime Minister continue to purchase items in such large amounts from public funds or will he curtail expenses as part of government policy to reduce government expenditures?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The purchases referred to in Question No. 1,352 were long overdue and were necessary to the efficient and appropriate operation of the official residence at 24 Sussex.

MONCTON AIRPORT—MAINTENANCE OF RUNWAYS

Question No. 2,363—Mr. Jones:

1. What work was done in each year 1972, 1973 and 1974 to maintain runways at the Moncton Airport and, at what cost?

2. (a) What runways were out of service on April 14, 1975 and for how long (b) are such runways presently out of service and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. Runway maintenance, including crack filling and asphalt patching, was undertaken to the amount of $14,396 in 1972, $32,796 in 1973 and $33,795 in 1974.

2. (a) and (b) Runway 11-29 has been out of service since April 11, 1975 due to winter damage. To prevent further damage and to permit necessary repairs the runway has remained closed with anticipated reinstatement of aircraft operations for early May, 1975. During this time the runway was available for emergency aircraft landing and taxiing purposes. Runway 07-25 has always been available for aircraft movements and thus the airlines' operations have not been jeopardized due to the closure of runway 11-29.

3. Adequate maintenance was undertaken on runway 11-29 in 1974.

4. The Airport Manager of the Ministry of Transport at Moncton Airport and his staff are responsible for runway maintenance.

5. Funds to the amount of $15,000 have been programmed to purchase material and services for runway maintenance during the fiscal year 1975/76. In addition, the 1975/76 operational and maintenance budget provides $225,175 for maintenance personnel salaries, with a portion allocated for runway maintenance purposes.

6. (a) and (b) Air traffic control personnel utilizing space in the Air Terminal Building are to be relocated to the Area Control Centre expected to be completed in 1976/77. Modifications to the Air Terminal Building are, therefore, planned for 1977/78 providing for improved passenger handling facilities. Funds, other than building maintenance, are not programmed for Terminal expansion in 1975/76.

MOVE OF PARKS CANADA OFFICE FROM CORNWALL

Question No. 2,370—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 2,163 which states in part that the current level of federal employment in Cornwall, Ontario will be maintained despite the removal of the Regional Headquarters of Parks Canada from that City, what is the total number of persons employed by Parks Canada in Cornwall in each of the past three years and, of these, how many of the jobs which they occupied or occupy will be transferred to whatever location is selected for the new Regional Headquarters?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): The total number of permanent positions in the Ontario Regional Office during the past 3 years are: 1974-75, 108; 1973-74, 94; 1972-73, 78. The actual numbers vary slightly from the above from time to time due to vacancies or short term casual employment. All of the jobs in the Parks Canada Regional Office will be transferred to the new Headquarters location.

POWER LINES—CHANGE OF FLYING REGULATIONS—CONSTITUENCY OF VAUDREUIL

Question No. 2,376—Mr. Herbert:

1. Will the proposed Hydro-Quebec power lines which are to convey electricity to New York State necessitate any change to flying regulations applicable to the private airfields located in the Constituency of Vaudreuil?

2. Will there be any change to the flight patterns of aircraft from the Montreal International (Dorval) Airport or to the proposed flight patterns from Mirabel Airport?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. No.

2. No.

FEES FOR NATIONAL PARKS

Question No. 2,382—Mr. Schellenberger:

1. Are fees for national parks based on years of existence and stages of appropriate development?

2. Will the new fee structure under the five year capital development programme apply to recently opened parks before their development warrants it?

3. Are most of the recently opened parks in Eastern Canada and, if so, will Western Canadians who more often frequent Western parks have to bear the brunt of such increase?

4. What are the criteria for assessing the development stage?

5. Will such charges differ for various types and sizes of campers?

6. Will the new fee structure adversely affect the ability of various groups of Canadians e.g. the young, senior citizens and lower-income families to use the parkland facilities?

7. Would the Minister consider applying the new fee structure to foreigners only, since Canadians have already spent many of their tax and personal dollars in the development of national parklands?

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Fees for National Parks are based on level of development.

2. No.

3. The recently opened parks are located as follows: Yukon Territory (1), Northwest Territories (2), British Columbia (1), Ontario (1), Quebec (2), New Brunswick (1), Nova Scotia (1), Newfoundland (1). The fees are the same at all the parks where park motor licences are required. There are two categories, a single entry licence valid for entry and reentry on the day of issue and an annual licence good for unlimited entry to all National Parks for those who more often frequent the Parks.

4. Assessment of the development stage is based on availability of access routes, basic accommodations and information and interpretive services.

5. Camping fees are based on the services provided at the site, not the type or size of equipment making use of the site.

6. No, since the fees form a very small part of any travel or recreational expenditure.

7. No.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—ALLEGED GOVERNMENT FAILURE TO PLAN THE ECONOMY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby) moved:

That this House condemns the government for its failure to plan the Canadian economy and in particular for the injustice of its current wage and price restraint proposals which discriminate against working Canadians while failing to deal with persistent unemployment and the related need for government investment planning.

He said: Mr. Speaker, last week-end in a speech outside the House the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) suggested that unless the trade union movement in Canada agreed to his program of voluntary restraints, his forthcoming budget would have to be restrictive in nature.

After almost a year of inaction since the election, suddenly we have intimated in concise form what the Minister of Finance sees as our economy's principal problem, its cause and its cure.

Coming hard on the heels of the revelation of the government's price and wage guideline package, it was no surprise to learn that the Minister of Finance thinks there is only one economic issue, and that is inflation; that there is only one cause of this inflation, and that is wage levels; and that there is only one cure other than guidelines, and that is further deflation of the economy.

Rarely has an economic situation been so badly understood. Rarely, except for the incomparable Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), has a minister so deserved to be repudiated by this House. As a time when figures released by his own department clearly show that we are in the middle of a major recession the minister remains traumatized by his own doctrine of restraint. He has not only offered a partial diagnosis of our economic problem by concentrating exclusively on inflation, but in addition he has produced a totally unjust and unworkable scheme to deal with inflation. Such a combination of errors would be laughable if it were not for the sad fact that Canadians have to live with the mess which results.

● (1520)

Consider the guidelines governing inflation. The subtitle of that proposal should read "How we plan to get labour to accept the blame for inflation". The hitch in the minister's scenario proved to be that labour was not prepared to be fooled. While favouring a comprehensive approach to the problems of our economy, labour made it abundantly clear that current proposals were totally unacceptable. Why? Let us consider the minister's proposals to deal with inflation.

First, there is nothing in the program to restrict interest rates, even though the amount of income going to those whose incomes are derived from investments and interest is now at the highest level as a percentage of our gross national product since Statistics Canada began compiling data.

Second, there is nothing in the proposal to guarantee low or average income Canadians that they will actually receive the 8 to 12 per cent increases set out in the guidelines. Are the companies which employ the majority of working Canadians—those who do not belong to a union—going to give their workers what is due them out of the generosity of their hearts? If they do so, it will be the first time in history that it has happened. To believe it possible requires a degree of credulity miles beyond that of the most optimistic of Utopian socialists. Why did the minister not commit the federal government to raising its minimum wage to at least three dollars an hour thus ensuring that at least some low-income Canadians got an increase? Why did he not propose immediate implementation of a minimum income program—such as is advocated by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde)?

Third, nothing is contained in the guidelines to increase the supply of housing, or to hold down rents, both of which are essential to a reduction in the price of accommodation, a presently crucial component of the cost of living. Rents are shuffled off to the provinces to deal with, and virtually nothing is said about increasing housing starts. Does the minister not know that, next to food, housing is the most important component of the cost-of-living index?

Fourth, no mention is made of oil prices despite the fact that if the government permits a $2.00 per barrel increase in the price of oil this act alone will wipe out entirely the government's chance of reducing the rate of increase in the cost of living by 2 per cent per year in line with its present objective. A commitment to freeze the price of oil would have achieved the minister's minimal objective without involving the whole country in a tangle of unjust guidelines.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, there was nothing effective proposed to hold prices and profits in line. Given the corporate sector's almost infinite capacity to manipulate cost data, and the related ability of multi-national corporations to increase their intra-company prices to their Canadian subsidiaries, it is evident that the price and profit guidelines are totally incapable of being effectively enforced.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

The only effective part of the minister's proposals would be that which involves the wage levels of working Canadians. Federal and provincial governments would be expected to enforce the guidelines with respect to their employees. The private sector would also have the moral sanction of a government program to enforce them on their employees. The trade union movement—if it had agreed to the proposals—would be expected to bargain within the framework of the guidelines.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, why any working Canadian should ever accept an anti-inflation policy which restrains him and no one else? I ask the Minister of Finance why he brought forward such a totally unfair proposal? Not only is the anti-inflation aspect of the proposals unfair to ordinary Canadians, but of even greater significance at this time is the total absence of any policy to increase employment.

If some plan to reduce the rate of inflation is desirable—as is accepted in principle by our party—then surely we also require an equivalent commitment to produce jobs for the 800,000 Canadians who need them. I will have more to say about unemployment shortly, Mr. Speaker. But at this point I want simply to stress that the total emphasis of the proposals put forward by the Minister of Finance is on inflation and, more specifically, on what he considers to be wage-induced inflation.

For a number of months now the minister has been trying to convince the Canadian public that in the crime of inflation wages are the culprit. He and others have pointed to wage settlements reached in the last quarter of 1974, citing with misleading regularity the statistic that the average wage settlement for that period was 17.4 per cent. Two conclusions were drawn from this statistic, first, that this was proof that labour was getting more than its share of the economic pie and, second, that Canadians would price themselves out of competition in international markets. I would like now to deal with both points.

First, it is important to note that the 17.4 per cent wage increase figure referred to pertains to no more than 3 per cent of Canadian workers. It was an average of the settlements reached in the last quarter of 1974 by the better organized unions in the larger bargaining units. I stress here that 97 per cent of the Canadian labour force is excluded from the 17.4 per cent statistic. Indeed, 97 per cent of Canadians received substantially less than this increase precisely because the vast majority are either in no union or belong to weak unions. The average wage in Canada for the last quarter of 1974 increased by only 5.4 per cent. And for the first quarter of 1975 average wages increased by only 2.4 per cent, or an annual rate of just under 10 per cent. Why, then, is the minister so preoccupied with wage rates?

The second point to be made is that labour income must be seen in the context of all other sources of income. The Department of Finance, in its economic review issued about a week ago, puts the situation in perspective. During 1974 labour income represented the smallest percentage of the GNP since 1968. At the same time corporate profits were at their highest proportion of the GNP in 25 years—since 1951. Is it not understandable and entirely just, especially given the recent rates of inflation, that labour should get these higher increases to make up for the decline in real income that they have experienced in the last few years? If they are still getting increases of only 10 per cent, as they are for this year, why, I ask again, is the Minister of Finance putting the squeeze on the working people of Canada?

● (1530)

I want now to turn to the Minister of Finance's stated concern that, if wages and salaries keep going as they have been, we will price ourselves out of world markets. I say, with respect, that I think his argument in this case is even weaker than the first argument he has made.

What is the evidence? In 1974 Canada had a lower rate of inflation than any of her trading partners in OECD, with the exception of Germany. The latest OECD figures for March, 1975, show that Canada's price increases are somewhat lower than the average for OECD members. However, the main point that I want to make is that any problems we are experiencing with exports have virtually nothing to do with wage settlements. During the first two months of 1975 we had a drop in exports of manufactured products to the United States of about 2 per cent compared with the same period in 1974. What is important to note, however, is that most of this decline is due to a fall off in automotive exports, and that none of this decline can be attributed in the slightest way to wage settlements in Canada.

During the first two months of 1975 our exports in dollar value of raw materials, which account for about 70 per cent of our exports, were up by 43 per cent over 1974. Most of our raw materials industry is capital intensive, with labour costs therefore playing a small role in the total cost of output. Even if this were not so, international forces well beyond our control or influence determined the world price for iron ore, copper, zinc and so on.

Apart from the United States the only other of our major trading partners where the dollar value of our exports was down for the first two months of 1975 was Japan. I stress that the only one of our other major trading partners, with the exception of the United States, where we have had a decline in exports is Japan. This is due to a decline in the exports of lumber and wood products, which have fallen because of a recession in the sectors of the Japanese economy using these materials. Again, like the decline in automotive exports to the United States, Canadian labour costs have absolutely no bearing on the issue.

So far I have argued, first, that the minister's program of restraint is full of loopholes and is unfair to working Canadians; second, that Canadian wages and salaries are not growing disproportionately compared to other countries; and third, that in terms of our trade problems Canadian wage levels have either had no effect or they are entirely irrelevant. All of this makes me conclude that, on these grounds alone, the Minister of Finance's proposals and their supporting arguments should be rejected outright. However, there is an additional and equally compelling reason, and that is that in his bungling fascination with inflation the minister has ignored the ominous problem of unemployment.

On behalf of my party, in both the throne speech and budget debates last fall, I warned that unless the government took immediate corrective action then we would have a major recession on our hands. Again in a special debate in February of this year I urged the minister to bring in a new budget quickly to head off a deepening of the recessionary trends. It is no consolation to look at the unemployment figures which were announced yesterday, which reveal that some 800,000 Canadians are out of work. It is no consolation either to look at the industrial output figures that became available today showing a decline in productivity running at a negative rate of some 11 per cent this year. It is no consolation at all to be able to say, "I told you so".

The decline in output at this rate of 11 per cent has tragic implications for thousands of Canadians. This decline for the third quarter in a row means that we are deeply imbedded in a recession. No amount of evasive talk from the Minister of Finance, no amount of charm or clever answering in the House, will enable Canadians to escape this sad fact. With 800,000 Canadians out of work now, unless the Minister of Finance brings forth an expansionary budget within the next few weeks the situation will worsen in a dramatic way. If he remains preoccupied with his current proposals, a million Canadians—I select the figure with care—could be walking the streets seeking employment next December. The Minister of Finance must admit he has been wrong, and must move quickly to take corrective action.

The new budget must be expansionary, and wherever possible increased expenditure should be aimed at both job creation and at mitigating inflation. These are not, as some would have us believe, mutually contradictory objectives.

Let me make some specific suggestions, Mr. Speaker. First of all housing starts, for example, are down by 40 per cent when compared with the same quarter of last year. The minister should radically revise his target of 210,000 units upwards to 400,000 units. Again I select the 400,000 figure not out of the hat but with care.

To achieve this target the government would have to increase in significant proportions its own expenditures. To make sure that the job is done it should also follow the example of the British Columbia government and go directly into the development business. It should take immediate steps, by changing the Bank Act, to bring down the level of mortgage rates so that average Canadians could afford to buy a house once again. By so acting, I want to stress that no or little inflationary pressure will be put on the economy. Indeed the slack in the lumber industry in New Brunswick, Quebec and British Columbia would experience a recovery, and the 25 per cent now unemployed in the construction industry would once again find jobs. Instead of putting new inflationary pressure on labour and resources, such action in the housing field would simply take men and women off the unemployment lists.

Secondly, we need a reasonable tax reduction restricted to average and low income groups in order to compensate for inflation and to stimulate demand in the economy, which I repeat has ground to a halt.

Thirdly, there should be a public commitment to freeze the price of oil. This would be good both for Canadian consumers and for Canadian industry, and would keep the latter in a competitive position. I repeat the point I made a few minutes ago, that if the government permits the price of oil to go up some $2 a barrel, this will have a negative effect of some 2 per cent alone on the rate of inflation.

Mr. Stanfield: They won't like that in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Broadbent: I could deal with that point but I won't take the time.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Oh, come now!

Mr. Broadbent: I am sure that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) would not want to distort the proposal put forward by the premier of Saskatchewan, which is not the position he just intimated. But I will not be sidetracked, Mr. Speaker.

My fourth point is that the government should raise the federal minimum wage to $3 an hour by at least July 1 of this year, and get the provinces to take corresponding or equivalent action in terms of the provincial minimum wage. Again this would be concrete action that would enable low income Canadians to cope with an inflating economy.

Finally and importantly, what Canada requires in the area of employment is a national development plan that takes fully into account certain short run and long run advantages that we possess as a country, and which other countries do not possess. Potential self-sufficiency in petroleum gives us an immense edge over the industrial countries in the Common Market and over Japan in the immediate situation. Our immense natural resources give us a long run advantage shared by few other nations of the world.

What is required is a decisive expansion of the role played by the federal government in planning and directing the economy. Private investment has fallen off recently, for the perfectly rational capitalist reason that profit expectations have diminished. It would be crazy to invest if you do not expect to make a profit.

● (1540)

The government, in our view, is the only force capable of filling this vacuum in the short run if massive unemployment is to be avoided. In the long run, Mr. Speaker, the selective and strategic use of public investment, public ownership and government expenditure, must be at the core of a national development plan whose ultimate objective is to achieve full employment and hold under control, as far as possible, escalation in the rate of inflation.

We must get beyond the boom and bust cycle, the cyclical nature of the Canadian economy; and only a national economic plan can come close to achieving this kind of objective. Unfortunately only the New Democratic Party is committed to such a policy for Canada. The Liberals in a majority situation, which they have had since last July, are once again demonstrating that they are a party of indifference, unemployment, and inequality, a party wedded to the foolish and unjust economic ideas of the past. We are long overdue for a change.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal primarily with the arguments put forward by the leader of the NDP in the House, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). I understand that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) will be speaking later and I want to apologize to him in advance, because the short notice of the motion has put me in the position where I have commitments later this afternoon which are physically impossible for me to cancel. I do undertake to him that I will read what he has to say and be back here for the vote. If it were the hon. gentleman's motion I would be here to listen to him as well, as I usually make it my practice to listen to him when he speaks because of his position in the House.

The hon member for Oshawa-Whitby concentrated, and he is entitled to his choice, on unemployment. I share his concern in that regard, particularly at current rates. I have said on several occasions, and particularly in my last budget of November, that we have twin problems; we have the problem of unemployment and threatening world recession, as I said in November, and we also have the problem of inflation.

The argument I want to make today, as I have made on several occasions inside and outside the House, is that if in present circumstances we do not solve the problem of inflation and non-competitive prices and costs of production, then we will risk future unemployment in this country, particularly because of the non-competitive posture in which this country will find itself. In other words, it is not an either or situation.

The hon. member has talked about outmoded economic policies, but I suggest he has been dealing with that this afternoon. Unless we solve the problem in respect of costs and prices in this country our problem of unemployment will be rendered severely worse. In other words, it is a precondition to expansion in this economy and employment opportunities, with the fastest growing labour force in the world, that we get ourselves back into the competitive range of prices and costs.

If the hon. member is talking in terms of traditional trade-offs, then I think he is off the point. You will recall that the budget of last November has a different thrust than the budget of the previous May, because it was in response to the deterioration the government then saw in the world economy. I have admitted in the House that we underestimated that deterioration. We underestimated the depth of the recession in the United States, and the depth to which that would bring the world economy.

I said then that the budget was aimed at dealing with the twin problems of inflation and slow growth, and that the first essential action then was action to sustain demand. Of course the budget was an expansionary budget in November.

The major cause, as I have said, of this continuing deterioration of the world economy has been the plunge by the United States into the deepest and most prolonged recession in the history of that country in the post-war period. The United States administration only belatedly recognized that, and switched from a restrictive fiscal and monetary policy to an expansionary policy in early spring. The President turned from a policy of tax increases to a policy of tax cuts. It is only now that the administration and Congress are negotiating what the energy policy is going to be, because at one time it seemed to have been counterproductive with tax cuts and with the fiscal spending program.

Aside from the U.S. economy and the prospects we see for the world economy, and aside from oil and gas pricing and some other factors I have brought to the attention of the House, one of the factors the government and I have to take into account in formulating the next budget is the outcome and the prospects of the long series of discussion and consultations we have been undertaking with various groups in the economy, to which the hon. gentleman's motion is really directed, in an effort to arrive at some mutually agreed course of action, if that is possible. That is a course of action for bringing inflation under control in Canada in a gradual process over a period of three or four years. I suggest a period of three or four years, because we can see that such a period is necessary if we are not going to restrict the economy overly and provoke massive unemployment.

I recognize that in some quarters, particularly some rather close ones across the aisle, this whole endeavour has tended to be dismissed as so much window dressing on the assumption that, and this is in other quarters not shared by the Leader of the Opposition, the problem of inflation is rapidly receding of its own accord.

I do not want to include the Leader of the Opposition in this, because he is aware of the seriousness of the problem, but some feel that the recent trend over the last four months, in which inflation has been running at the annual rate of somewhere between 7 per cent and 7½ per cent, now indicates that we have the problem beaten and under control. As I said in Sarnia, I believe this is a very dangerous and mistaken assumption.

The problem of inflation, far from receding, has become more critical for the Canadian economy with every passing month because of the extent to which it increasingly threatens to undermine our competitive position both here in our own markets and abroad in foreign markets.

I have seen it suggested that certain government spokesmen, among them myself, have greatly exaggerated the threat posed to our competitive position by inflation. Indeed this was the argument just put forward this afternoon by the leader of the NDP in this House. He argued, as have others, that the rise in Canadian consumer prices recently has compared favourably with the United States and most other industrial nations, except Germany. He argued, as it has been argued in other places, that the increase in Canadian wages and salaries has also been lower than in most nations other than the United States and Germany. He argued, as it has been argued in other places, that the increases in the prices of Canadian manufactured goods have been moderately less than the increases in the prices of those manufactured goods we import from abroad.

While all these points are valid enough, they fail to take account of the trends and tendencies which this country is now facing, and fail to take account of a number of crucial situations. In every country, and this has been stated by Helmut Schmidt, Chancellor for Germany, to whom the hon. member loves to refer as being in his social democratic fraternity, and by U.S. Secretary of State Simon, who does not quite jibe with the political and economic philosophy of the hon. gentleman—both of them have said—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He belongs to your fraternity.

Mr. Nystrom: He is with you and Dick Nixon.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Now Lorne, you don't believe that. Both of them, from different economic and political points of view, have pointed out the risk of the re-appearance of inflation, perhaps in a more virulent form than ever, as the tone of economic activity tends to pick up, if it picks up simultaneously in the major industrialized countries of the world.

For Canada, I believe and submit to Your Honour, this danger is particularly great because of the substantial increases in costs that are now being built and have been built into our economy in the second, third and fourth quarters of 1974 and the first quarter of 1975, as a result of very large increases in wages and salaries. It is quite true that these increases generally have been below the average experienced in Europe and Japan, but that overlooks the fact that the United States is still by far and away our largest customer, our largest market, and we export 65 per cent of everything we produce. In manufactured goods that percentage is even higher.

● (1550)

Mr. Broadbent: Most of it is raw materials.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am talking about our manufactured and processed goods where the situation is even more critical. The very fact that for a considerable period Canadian wages and salaries have been rising at a very much faster rate than those in the United States should make obvious that our competitive position is being jeopardized.

The hon. gentleman says that the recent figures for the first quarter of 1975, of between 16 per cent and 17 per cent, cover only 3 per cent of the work force, but these are the recent settlements. These are the figures that are setting a trend. The recent figure for the United States—and I know that these figures are not exactly comparable but they are close enough—is 7.8 per cent. I am just saying to the hon. member that if that trend continues then it poses some difficulties for this country.

Mr. Broadbent: It is a trend for a small percentage of the labour force.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Well, the real danger is down the road when the United States economy recovers against the recession. When the productivity at that stage of the cycle comes up it will experience not only a greater increase in its productivity but a greater unit cost economy than we will have in Canada. I believe the risk, if the present trend continues, is that the inevitable result of such a development will be a substantial widening in the differential of unit-labour costs in Canada compared to those in the United States, and therefore a sharpening deterioration in our competitive position. Now more important is that, as a major trading nation, we have already reason to be concerned about the import-export picture that has been developing over the past several months.

It is true that the major impulse of the deterioration up until now, although I am advised that the cost of production figures are beginning to be negative insofar as Canada is concerned, has been the deterioration in the American, Japanese and British economies. Those recessionary effects have been the primary impulse in affecting our exports. The cost of production figures are now becoming very relevant.

Mr. Broadbent: Would you give us some examples—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I have half an hour and I have to outline the argument as best I can. The fact of the matter is that the more severe the impact of inflationary pressures is in eroding our competitive position, the more severe will become the problem of unemployment, at a time when unemployment is unacceptably high. I agree fully with the Leader of the New Democratic Party. At a time when our labour force continues to grow at the fastest absolute and comparative rate in the world we simply cannot afford to impede the development of new job opportunities on a massive scale.

In my view, therefore, we have no practical alternative but to do everything we possibly can to break the spiral of inflation. The question is, and the difference of opinion in this House is, how? There are a number of different views. To put the issue in some perspective let me recall that this was a question which confronted us with growing urgency in the fall of last year when it was becoming increasingly apparent that sharply escalating domestic costs and prices were rapidly replacing international forces as a major source of inflationary pressure in this country.

We concluded then that there were only three alternative courses open to the government to deal with the serious threat to Canada's competitive position, both at home and abroad, which is created by the soaring spiral of domestic prices and domestic costs. We could adopt highly restrictive fiscal and monetary policies to curb inflation. We could use the fiscal and monetary tools. We could propose comprehensive mandatory price and wage controls, or we could attempt to work out a mutual understanding among all sectors of the economy in an attempt to gear down fairly and equitably the inflation rate through voluntary means. All these approaches involve hard choices. In fact what is before the country now is a series of unpalatable options. We recognized that each of these presented major problems but we also recognized that we had to make a choice.

Rather than adopting the most strict fiscal and monetary policies, which would have resulted in declining output and rising unemployment, the budget which I brought down in November was aimed at stimulating both output and employment in the least inflationary way possible by reducing taxes. We did not feel that imposition of mandatory controls should be considered then, because of the serious problems they would undoubtedly create. Mandatory controls imposed by government fiat, without the strong backing of the public, stand little chance of achieving even minimal success in controlling inflation. We saw no evidence that the necessary degree of public support would be forthcoming at that time.

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]
