THE HEIR OF LANCEWOOD

CHAPTER XLVIII.

She knew now that further disguise was useless. He had observed her too keenly to be mistaken. It would be folly to deny that she had a secret. She raised her white face to his.

"I do not deny that there is a secret," she said; "but, Adrian, it does not concern you. You have no share in it, and I decline to tell it to you."

"You must," he replied, sternly. "This is our first disagreement, Vivien—our first struggle for supremacy. You owe me at least wifely submission—you have never refused it. You must not refuse it now—you must tell me your secret."

"I refuse absolutely," she said. "I tell you again that it does not concern you—you have no share in it—no right to ask to know it."

"Nevertheless, I do ask. I can see some little way into it, but not far. Your secret concerns Lancewood, and it has also something to do with this boy whom you have been visiting."

She started, and then controlled herself. It seemed to her that her whole life depended now on her self-possession, on her self-control.

"If you refuse to tell me your secret, if you refuse to give me your confidence, you cannot surely refuse to tell me who that boy is."

"I do refuse," she answered. He drew nearer to her.

"Ah, beloved," he said, "do not be so cruel, so hard—do not be unjust! We are husband and wife. We have but one heart, one soul, one love, one interest between us. I would tell you the dearest secret of my soul. Why do you wound me? Why do you shut me out in the chill of doubt and suspicion? Who is the boy?"

"He told you himself, Adrian," she replied. "But you know that story is not true. He is no nephew of poor Dorman's, I am quite sure of that. Why did he speak so strangely? I shall never forget his words."

It was strange that he should, as it were, beat round the secret, yet never suspect it—that, while he felt sure it concerned both Lancewood and the boy, he should never connect the two.

"I do not understand," she said coldly, "why you should refuse to believe him. Surely it is no uncommon thing to have a nephew."

"It is your conduct which is uncommon," replied Lord St. Just, "not the fact of poor Dorman having a nephew. If he be, as he says, Gerald Dorman's nephew, why have you never mentioned him to me? Why have you kept his very existence a mystery from me? Why have you gone to see him under a false name? Why does the fact of his existence prey upon you like a secret curse? You think," he continued, passionately, "it is a chance that has led me to see and to notice all these things. I tell you, Vivien, it is the finger of Heaven. Answer me one thing—you, my wife, you whom I believed one of the purest, best, and noblest of women, answer me one thing. If that boy is Gerald Dorman's nephew, how comes he to have your face? I repeat it—your face, the curve of your lips, the shape of your features—how came he by those?"

He stopped abruptly, for the pale, beautiful woman had slipped from his arms and fallen like one dead to the ground. At any other time Lord St. Just would have been terribly alarmed, now his fears were lost in anxious wonder.

What was this secret that she persisted in withholding from him? What could it be? Had Gerald Dorman contracted a private marriage and left his child to the care of Lady St. Just? There was neither sense nor reason in supposing such a thing—that would not explain the mystery of the resemblance between this boy and Vivien.

"Who would have thought," said the unhappy nobleman, "that I should ever have such a sorrow as this? Only a few short weeks since I considered myself one of the happiest of men, and now—"

He raised the pale, lovely woman in his arms and laid her on the couch; he bathed her face with fragrant waters, and opened the windows so that the fresh sweet air might play over her; yet even as he rendered her these services his heart did not warm to her.

He loved her none the less; but it was not in human nature to forget he had loved her with all his honest heart. He had devoted himself to her, he had lived for her and her alone, and now he had found that she was keeping a secret from him—that, while he thought himself soul of her soul, he had never even known her thoughts—that one part of her mind and heart was barred from him. It was not pleasant; no man living, however much he might trust and love his wife, would care to look upon her face and know that she was keeping a secret from him.

Lord St. Just bent down and kissed his wife's pale face. "Vivien, my darling," he murmured, "what is this dark horror between us? My wife, my love, trust me."

Her dark eyes opened slowly. He was shocked at the pain and despair in them.

"Do you really love me, Adrian?" she asked. "Do you love me enough to care to keep me alive?"

"My dearest Vivien, most certainly. What do I care for in life except yourself?"

"Then, if you love me, cease to ask me any more questions. The secret is not all mine; you have no share in it; so I cannot tell it to you—I will not reveal it. If you love me, cease from speaking of it."

"No," said Lord St. Just. "I am certain of one thing—no wife has a right to keep such a secret from her husband; moreover I am quite sure that the hand of Providence has led me so far, and will lead me still further, even if you refuse to tell me. Now I shall consider it my duty to find out what you have chosen to conceal. In all sincerity, in all sorrow, I say still more—there can never be peace between us until you have trusted me fully and entirely. We may sit at the same table, live un-

CHAPTER XLIX.

Lady St. Just persisted in withholding her secret from her husband, and he as resolutely declared that she must reveal it.

"How cruel you are!" she sobbed. "Cruel, Vivien! I do not wish to wound you. It is you who are cruel. Put yourself in my place. Suppose that you found me changed, unhappy, full of a sullen, brooding sorrow. Suppose that you discovered I was keeping a secret from you; that you found I was in the habit of visiting some place unknown to you, of passing by a strange name; that you found I cared greatly for a child whose face resembled my own as Harry Dorman's resembles yours. What should you think?"

She made him no answer. "What any man who had less faith in your goodness and truth than I myself have would think about your silence. I know what the world will say if it gets hold of the story, and finds out how much the boy resembles you."

"What will it say?" she asked, faintly. "Nay, if you do not understand, I will not explain, Vivien. I have used entreaties, prayers, expostulations, all in vain. Now I threaten that unless you tell me the secret yourself, I will at once set to work to find it out; and I will never rest until I know it."

"I will never speak to you again if you do that," she threatened. "I cannot help it. Your silence to me is terrible; it shows that there is something far from right. I consider myself bound in duty to fathom the mystery. It strikes me that the boy himself would be the one to help me."

"The boy himself!" she repeated. "Yes, he seems struck with the word 'Lancewood.' If I were to send for him, and try all I could to awaken his memory, it seems to me I should get near the truth."

"Would you really do this, Adrian?" she asked.

"I would, indeed," he replied. "I should have no scruple in doing it." She remembered how the boy had seemed in some vague way to recognize her face. How would it end? How much would he learn from him? All surely—most surely all. With a deep moan she buried her face in her hands. Lord St. Just knelt by her side.

"Dear wife," he said, "there is a struggle in your heart, a struggle between right and wrong; be brave—let the right prevail. Own the truth, no matter what follows. Only cowardice needs secrecy. In the name of Heaven, by the love you bear to me and to your children, by the value you set upon your fair name, by your pride of race, I entreat you to tell me—trust me."

There was no answer save a low moan. He continued—

"I am your husband—the one in all the world who loves you best. Why can you not trust me? Who could help you and comfort you as I can? Who would share your troubles as I should? My darling, do not repulse my warm, true, deep love, but trust me. I am not a foe, not an angry judge, but your true lover. If there is anything in which you have done wrong, let me set you right."

He kissed her face, he kissed her hands, he called her by every loving and tender name. "Let me use the truest weapon in my armoury," he said, playfully. "For the love of Lancewood trust me, Vivien!"

There came a low cry from her lips, but she did not speak.

"It is from Lancewood your trouble comes," he said—"I can see that—Lancewood and this boy; but I cannot see yet how they are connected. Heaven, which has already shown me so much, will show me more. There is some mystery. Poor Gerald Dorman, the boy, Lancewood, and yourself are all concerned in it. With a little more patience I shall make it out. Vivien, would it not be better for you to tell me than for me to find it out?"

"Yes," she whispered—"but give me time."

"Take all the time you need, if you will but trust me in the end," he said. She tried to think that what he said was true. It was neither fate nor chance that was guiding him, but the finger of Heaven. She had done a great wrong, a great injustice; it could never prosper. Yet how could she give up Lancewood to Valerie and her dissipated friends—to the boy who really seemed to her to have no claim? How could she take the place from her son, whom she had fondly believed would make so noble a martyr for it?

Then, again, she reflected that if she did not tell her husband everything he would find it out; he was so near the truth that a few questions, a few inquiries, would elicit it; she had never dreamed that he would connect Lancewood and the boy.

She remembered Gerald's dying words—"He must go back to Lancewood—promise me." Dare she totally ignore those solemn words?

"What shall I do?" cried Vivien, wringing her hands. "Trust me," said her husband. "The time has come when you must tell the truth. Do not hesitate; be brave, Vivien, and tell it."

"You will hate me," she moaned; "but, oh, believe me, Adrian, it was not quite my fault! I was mad when I uttered the words that led to it—all quite mad; and he was so devoted to me he thought I meant it. I did not, it was all a confused horror."

"You forget," he said, "that I do not even know of what you are speaking. Tell me one thing, Vivien, which will make all else easier—tell me who is the boy?"

Should she tell him? If she did not, he would find it out—he would be sure to do so; it would be better to trust him now that he was so near the truth.

She rose slowly from the couch, she stood before him in all the magnificence of her beauty, her face pale, her eyes filled with the fire of pride; she drew herself up to her full height. He looked at her in wonder and amazement.

So, Wellington, B.C.—"For a year during the Change of Life I was all run down. I was really too weak to walk and was very despondent and thought I was going to die, but after taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Blood Purifier my health and strength returned. I am very thankful to you and praise your medicine. I have advised several women who suffered as I did to try your remedies. You may publish this if you wish."—Mrs. DAVID R. MORRIS, South Wellington, Vancouver Island, B. C.

No other medicine for woman's ills has received such wide-spread and unqualified endorsement. We know of no other medicine which has such a record of success as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. For more than 30 years it has been the standard remedy for woman's ills such as inflammation, ulceration, tumors, irregularities, periodic pains and nervous prostration, and we believe it is unequalled for women during the period of change of life.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

Cotton as Contraband.

(The Manchester Guardian.)

The case for declaring cotton contraband has often been presented in a form that baffles intelligence, as though by calling a thing by a different name you changed its nature and solved your difficulties. Names matter a good deal in politics, but not much in war. But intrinsically the argument for declaring cotton contraband is so strong that one's chief wonder is why there should ever have been any argument about it at all. Cotton is the basis of most explosives—that in itself, one would have thought, should settle the matter. It is important to understand why it does not. There are two reasons. One is, that for reasons only understandable on the theory that a state of European war was never contemplated by the representatives of this country, cotton was put on the free list by the Declaration of London. The war broke out just as last year's cotton crop was beginning to be shipped, when it was extremely important that what we did in the matter we should do at once. We did nothing, and Germany was free to import raw cotton in neutral ships not only through neutral ports but through her own ports too. Our policy, which was the same as that of France, was absolutely unintelligible except as an indication of our anxiety to abide by a document to which, though it was not legally binding, our representatives had set their signatures and to do nothing to offend the United States. At later dates both wool and copper, which were also on the free list of the Declaration of London, were declared contraband, but cotton has never been.

The only change in regard to it was made by the Orders in Council which followed the German submarine blockade. Under these an embargo was placed on all German trade through neutral ports or through her own, and cotton came under this embargo. That was (or should have been) a much severer measure than declaring cotton contraband. A declaration of an article as contraband does not affect neutral ports, but this embargo on German trade extends equally to imports through German ports and through neutral ports if these were ultimately destined for Germany. It follows that the demand, by itself, that cotton should be declared contraband is a demand for a policy which is much milder than the policy which is actually in force. Those, therefore, who are repeating the cry for making cotton contraband are, so far as their words go, asking us to relax the restrictions on the importation of cotton to Germany. They think that they are asking for them to be made more severe.

What sense, then, are we to make of the whole agitation? The sense is this. When they ask that cotton should be contraband, what some of them mean, though they do not always say so, is that we should assert the right to stop cotton going into neutral countries, irrespective of whether or not we can prove that it is going into Germany, and that we should restrict neutral importations to the amount that we think necessary for their domestic consumption. What others, however, mean—and among them the Times—is that we should make concessions to neutral countries, or rather to United States. How are we to reconcile these two opposing views? There is no reconciling them, but the explanation of the fact that the same demand is put forward for apparently contradictory reasons is this. The Times—and we go a long way with it—is very anxious to dispose of the American legal objections to the policy of the Orders in Council. It thinks that the legal case against our procedure by Orders in Council putting an embargo on all German trade, without any declaration of cotton (the trade with Germany with which the United States are most concerned) as contraband and without even a declaration of blockade, is so strong that it gives a handle to the German propaganda in the United States. It is anxious that our action should be made legally correct. And it therefore proposes that we should declare cotton contraband and so bring our action in form as well as in substance into line with acknowledged belligerent right. That would not cover the case of importation through neutral countries, but that could be put right by an extension of the doctrine of continuous voyage (an invention of the American Civil War) which should give us the right to stop all importation of cotton into neutral countries which we had reason to think was ultimately destined for Germany. The Times wants cotton to be contraband for legal reasons and for the motive, with which we have the deepest sympathy, of avoiding everything that could injure our good relations with the United States and lend an air of reality to the stuff that Germany is always putting about in America about the war being one for the "freedom of the seas." All this is not only intelligible but highly laudable; many other arguments used, especially in the press, for making cotton contraband frankly seem to us to be based on nothing more solid than a substantial misapprehension of the facts.

Cotton is more necessary for the purpose of war than any other article of commerce, and it passes our comprehension how it ever came to be put on the free list. The procedure of the Orders in Council, as we pointed out at the time, was a mistake, and gave a very serious handle. We could regularise our legal position and stop our enemies from talking to any purpose about the freedom of the seas and our tyranny by enlarging our list of contraband so as to make it include cotton, and by extending the doctrine of continuous voyage so as to assert the right, which is a perfectly reasonable one, of stopping imports of contraband as listed into neutral countries if their ultimate destination was Germany. What their ultimate destination actually was should be tried in the ordinary way, which served very well all through the wars with Napoleon, in the Prize Courts. Further than that we need not and should not go. It is suggested that we ought to buy up cotton from the Southern growers, or attempt to regularise prices in some way. Really, we cannot see why. If cotton is contraband, American growers ought in principle to suffer the loss. We are exceedingly sorry, but we see no help for it. Cotton was contraband in the American Civil War, and there was a famine here in consequence. But no one then in America proposed to buy up the cotton and sell it to starving Lancashire. We accepted it then as one of the fortunes of war, and our suffering did not make the least difference to the sympathies of Lancashire in that terrible time. We must do the Americans the justice of thinking them to be as unselfish as Lancashire was then. Let us see that our action is regular and in perfectly legal form. Let us recognize the overwhelming importance of maintaining good relations with the United States. Having done that, we confidently leave with America the judgment of our action, and we believe that that judgment will be as little influenced by pecuniary loss or gain as was that of Lancashire fifty years ago. Those who know America know that the mainsprings of her policy are not selfish, but ideal.

There will be a profusion of silks and satins used this season. Braiding appears in the oddest places on the new dresses—around the armholes and on the belts and pockets. Do not wear a white blouse if you would be strictly in fashion. Dainty rose, lemon and champagne tones are favored.

Fishery Report.

Sept. 4th. From W. J. White, (Cape Bay to Aquaforte)—The catch to date is 9691 qts. and for last week 12. Prospects this week were not so good as the bait supply was very limited, the only kind obtainable being a few herring. There is no sign of squid yet and of the 30 dories and 12 whale boats here not many were operating this week owing to the scarcity of bait.

Sept. 4th. From W. Ward, (Mosquito Pt. to Bryant's Cove)—Thirty dories, skiffs and boats are still fishing. The total catch is 4675 qts. but for last week, nothing. Prospects are poor, no bait is to be had and operations are hindered by stormy weather.

Sept. 4th. From A. T. Keats, (Piacentia to Long Pt.)—Prospects are brightening somewhat and some squid is being fished in the bay, but so slowly that they have to be salted before enough is secured to proceed to the grounds with. Otherwise, the fishermen think they would do much better as there is a fair sign of cod even with the limited supply of bait. The traps which have now been taken up have landed 806 qts. Twenty-five dories and skiffs have 1,105 qts. with 80 for last week and 28 boats, 6000 and 100.

The King's New Armies

Roadside Inspection at Aldershot. Aldershot, Aug. 18.—A column of the King's New Army, marching into Aldershot all complete, even to field kitchens and stretcher parties, passed by His Majesty this morning, and the King watched it with the keen eye of an enthusiastic soldier.

Galloping across the Long Valley, with a brilliant staff in attendance headed by General Sir Archibald Hunter, the King drew rein at the bottom of a steep path leading from Cocked-hat Wood to the main road, hard by Elbrook Bridge, a secluded nook in a country so military in character that no civilians were to be seen. He paused for a moment to examine the latest devices in trenches, dug-out, and "funk-holes" which are taught on the plain, and to glance at the work of the men who are practising the throwing of petards and hand grenades.

The tap of distant drums was heard, and the King reined his horse to the roadside to see the new men in khaki who are training for the work of the nation across the seas. Bugles blared a stirring call. The head of a long, long column approached at the quick march, "eyes right," the general riding ahead, with his crimson pennant behind. At a sign from the King the general left the ranks and drew up beside His Majesty to answer questions about the troops who were passing.

The King's right arm moved incessantly in acknowledgment of the salutes of detachment after detachment.

Thrilling Scene. The picture had a curious interest, as an illustration of the new civilian army which has been created to meet the German attack. These were no professional soldiers, and sergeant-majors of the Guards might have criticised some of the details of their movements; but they were all men who meant business, and the most determined of them all were those of middle age who have left wives and families and comfortable employment at the country's call.

They had had a long march; they carried rifles and full kit; but they straightened their backs against the straining packs (which begin to weigh heavy after a few hours on the road), and passed the King with a good stirring step.

There were no full bands, but there were brass bands and bugles and above all there were drums. "Oh, the brave music of a distant drum!" and it is even better when it is close up. Napoleon knew its throbbing stimulation, and so did Wellington; and the New Army has rediscovered the secret.

The Drummers' Salute. As they passed the King big drummers put in their finest work with twists round the head and sounding booms, and the proud possessors of the kettledrums showed what each detachment could do, some beating tattoos with rhythmic clicks of the crossed sticks in between, others beating measures which were unmistakably "The British Grenadiers" or popular, music-hall choruses. Then the troops did lift up their feet and march with a swing.

It was noticeable what a number of mules the British Army possesses. Most of them were tall. A considerable number were tall enough to mount the Life Guards.

At last the long column passed on its way to barracks, and with a final salute the King galloped across the sandy ridges of the Long Valley, the staff following. His Majesty, a grand horseman, loves a good ride, and Aldershot provides him with opportunities for it.

YOUR BOYS AND GIRLS

Nearly always sulky children are the smartest, have the keenest minds, the best business habits. The child who has a fit of real anger at a disappointment does lose self control and ought to be very kindly treated, shown the reason why it cannot have its wish, taught lovingly the lesson of self control. Its anger is a sign of weakness, but its sulks are an acquired accomplishment, the fit is well reasoned out in this way.

The child thinks that the mother is loving in nature, does not like to see it unhappy, is miserable herself, and though there may be good reasons why she refuses what it wants, yet it persists in its ugliness then the mother will sacrifice her judgment to the child's obstinacy and give it what it wants even to its own hurt.

The rose has a wretched disposition there in the shade-worm eaten leaves, poor colored bloom, but plant it in the sun, don't let it sulky, try a different and better place, and it will do all right then.

Good Manners.

Little Acts That Speak ALOUD About a Person's Breeding.

It is always the merest trifles rather than the big things of life which indicate the manners and tastes of the average person, says a writer in the London Chronicle. A glaring social error, a particularly rude action or tactless speech are not made with too great frequency, but other less obtrusive faults are often committed—some times solely through ignorance or want of thought.

It is just as grave a mistake to be too polite as to be abominably rude. The painstakingly polite person is very trying to encounter, for extremes often meet, and he generally succeeds in being actually ill bred. For instance, there is always the man who, in the mistaken idea that a woman should always precede him, allows her to fight her way into a crowded train, descend unaided and walk before him into a restaurant that is rather full.

Removing his right glove before shaking hands with a woman; raising his hat when he offers a damsel his seat in a car; carefully piloting his fair companion across a crowded street; walking on the outside of the pavement and refraining from sitting when talking to a woman who happens to be standing, are all instances of those little things which mark the good breeding and thoughtfulness of a man. Unfortunately in some cases these things do not come by instinct, but rather through the hard school of experience.

On the other hand, a woman requires to be just as careful of her manners. It is very exciting no doubt to talk loudly and initiate casual hearers into the mysteries of an intimate conversation with another woman. Unfortunately the listeners are only contemptuously impressed with the fact that the speaker is incapable of controlling her own voice.

It is usually either nervousness or thoughtlessness that prompts a woman to display her worst side to the world. She will take a seat that is reserved to her in a crowded car without a word of thanks or else will make the chivalrous person feel more embarrassed by a quick and emphatic refusal to profit by his generosity, or perhaps she will rush through swing doors without bothering to notice if any one is likely to be caught in the rebound, elbow people who are in her way, walk on the wrong side of the street or fall to remember that she must always bow first to her men acquaintances before they raise their hats.

Wall Street Wise Ones.

You Can't Fool Them by Losing Things on That Thoroughfare.

While carrying a bar of gold weighing about two pounds from the United States assay office in Wall Street recently a messenger dropped the little package from among other bundles he had in his care. Upon discovering his loss he retraced his steps quickly, but no sign of the gold could be found. He was notified he would have to make good. The policeman on duty near the assay office had this to say:

"It will be some half baked idiot who will pick that bar up. The wise ones of this street will never do it. If they saw it on the street they would think it a hoax of some kind and leave it severely alone. These very shrewd Wall streetors can't see this way a quarter of a block without matches in broad daylight.

"Two years ago a bank messenger dropped a leather bag with no more or less than $73,245 in it right in front of J. P. Morgan's office, corner of Wall and Broad. Was it picked up right away? Not for two hours. And covering his tracks with packs on their backs came up Broad Street, saw the bag, kicked it, and then one of them, after a furtive look around, dared to pick it up.

"He laid down his pack, and so did his companions, while they examined it. I happened to be watching, and I saw the bills. They apologized abjectly in their jargon when I took it from them and saw by the lettering on the bag where it belonged.

"I didn't let on how cheap I felt myself. I had seen the bag an hour before, but refused to believe it worth while picking up. Some swif for a cop, eh?"

But he was no exception in Wall street.—New York Sun.

The Present Crisis

"Once to every man and nation comes the moment to decide, In the strife of Truth and Falsehood, for the good or evil side; Some great cause, God's new Messiah, offering each the bloom or blight, Parting the goats upon the left hand, and the sheep upon the right, And the choice goes by forever 'twixt that darkness and that light."

In these lines James Russell Lowell sets forth some of the outstanding features of the approaching plebiscite in this country. A great opportunity has come to the people of Newfoundland to finish once and for all the stupendous evil of the traffic in intoxicating drink. If this falls, such opportunity will probably not come again to the men of the present generation. In the past we have been tinkering with the business, voting it out in certain sections and allowing it to remain in other sections, at once to flow over the border and largely undo the good work accomplished. The people of the outports have generally voted right; but the application of their vote has been limited; now they have the golden opportunity of making their decision effective. A majority of voters in St. John's Districts have always voted for drink; now they have the privilege of making amends for all—insofar as that is possible. The slain by the cup they cannot recall; the weeping and broken-hearted wives and mothers they cannot undo; the souls lost forever by the traffic they cannot redeem; and an awful responsibility rests and must forever rest upon those who by their influence and their votes made possible the ruin of so many for time and for eternity. The results of their influence and their votes have gone before to meet them at the bar of a justly offended God. Good were it for such men had they never enjoyed the privilege of the franchise than to have used it to destroy men. Now approaches another opportunity of saying to this gigantic evil—"thus far and no farther." The people of Newfoundland are to be divided into two camps—one camp on the Lord's side determined to do all in their power to remove this great obstacle to the onward march of the Kingdom of Christ in this land. The other camp made up in part of men swayed by greed of gain and carnal appetites, and in part of the lethargic and the careless. These will find excuses, ready made, for their conduct; they always do; but what will such excuses be worth in the light of the realities that confront us?

Here is a traffic recognized by good men the wide world over as an evil, a gigantic evil; an evil so stupendous that the full toll of its effects can never be estimated. It has sent some of our ships to the bottom of the sea with all their precious cargoes of life and property. It has cut down young men in their prime and sent them to dishonoured graves. It has made possible a host of other crimes too numerous and vile to enumerate. It has helped to fill our jails and penitentiary; it has added to the roll of those in our hospitals and our Lunatic Asylum. It has robbed homes of the comforts that should have been theirs; it has left wives, mothers' and little children hungry and cold and naked. It has despoiled some of the finest types of our manhood, ruining them morally, intellectually, physically. It has rendered the ministry of the gospel of no effect on the part of many in this land, sending them into an eternity for which they were not prepared. And now the clock of destiny is striking. God has given us another opportunity to be free from the curse so huge that W. E. Gladstone computed its effects greater than those of war, famine and pestilence combined. This is for us the "strife of truth with falsehood"; this presents "the good or evil side"; this is the "great cause, God's new Messiah, offering each the bloom or blight." This will part the goats upon the left hand, and the sheep upon the right, and the choice will go by forever 'twixt that darkness and that light."

In the conflict for the overthrow of this foe of God and man we hope to have representatives of every class in the country. Many business men will be with us, as the business men of Canada and the United States have been in the fight for the freedom of their countries. At the present time the business men of British Columbia are lining up for Prohibition in that Province. The labouring men should be with us, as members of their class suffer most by giving to the saloon money sadly needed by their families. A large proportion of the fishermen will be with us; for they have already voted it out of their own settlements. And is it too much to hope that in the moral conflict between good and evil the clergymen of the different denominations will be engaged actively against the drink demon? Can any of us question for one moment what the attitude of Jesus Christ would be if as a man amongst men He lived in Newfoundland to-day? Would He bow the knee in the temple of Bacchus? Would He smile upon the saloon as it made moral wrecks of men redeemed by His precious blood? or would He pour upon the traffic the corrosive of His bitterest curse? What then should be the attitude of those who are His ambassadors, His representatives among men? We believe the clergymen of Newfoundland are God-fearing conscientious men who desire to correctly represent their Divine Master; and, therefore, we hope to see an unbroken front arranged against the liquor traffic. Should this become a reality, its doom is a foregone conclusion.—Methodist Greening for September.

Irish Hand Out Bad Defeat to the Cubs.

The unexpected happened yesterday afternoon when the B. I. S. and Cubs clashed with the result that the Wanderers are now the holders of the championship pennant for 1915, without having to face off again with any other team for this season. The players, scores, and officials at the game were:—

B. I. S. Simms Carew
Clouston Barnes
Crawford French
St. John 1st base
Crawford Campbell
Collins McGrath
Winter R. McGrath
Tessier Channing
Ryall Grace
Hall Doyle

The score by innings follow:—
B. I. S. 1 1 5 1 1 2 5 5 x—21
Cubs 1 0 0 0 3 2 4—12

Messrs. Cheaman and Hiltz were umpires and Messrs. Outerbridge and Hartnett, scorers. The standing of the clubs now is:—

Wanderers 750
Shamrocks 500
Red Lions 500
Cubs 500
B. I. S. 250

The B. I. S. trained hard and the Cubs could not stand the pace of their opponents. Carew's twirling and McGrath's effectiveness of third were mainly responsible for the success of the B. I. S. It was Manager McGrath's first time in harness this year and he showed yesterday that he has the ability all right. The Cubs displayed poor fielding. This is the second year the Wanderers have won the Allen Cup.

To-day Marks Many Anniversaries.

To-day, Sept. 9th, marks anniversaries in connection with the R. C. Cathedral here. First it is the Diamond Jubilee anniversary of the consecration of the Cathedral, at which His Grace, Most Rev. Dr. Hughes, Archbishop of New York, officiated, Sept. 9th, 1855, the other Bishops present on the occasion being Rt. Rev. Dr. Mullock, Rt. Rev. Dr. Charbonnel, of Toronto, Rt. Rev. Dr. Connolly, of New Brunswick, and Rt. Rev. Dr. McKinnon, of Arichat; next it is the 45th anniversary of the late Bishop Power's arrival and likewise the 45th anniversary of the first arrival of the late Archbishop Howley in St. John's after his ordination.

Ship on Fire Reaches Port.

With clouds of smoke issuing from the interior of the ship, indicating fire, the S. S. Joseph W. Fordney, laden with cotton flax and 21 days out from Archangel, bound to Boston, steamed slowly into port yesterday and anchored in the harbour. Fire was discovered in the cargo in No. 6 hold, but it was kept under control by pouring in water. The outbreak, the origin of which is unknown, started on Monday last. When first detected a furious blaze raged. It was an anxious time for the crew who worked hard pumping water into the hold. They succeeded in subduing the flames, though yesterday morning the cargo was still smouldering and it was decided to come here. All yesterday the ship's sea pumps were kept going. A survey of the ship's cargo and damages are now being made. The steamers is 3,567 tons gross; 2,297 net; 344.5 feet long and 31 feet deep. She is owned by the Merida S. S. Co., Cleveland, U. S. A. and was formerly the Mira, owned by Bowring Bros. Ltd., and ran in the cargo trade for the Dominion Company. The agents at the ship are Bowring Bros.

Hr. Grace Notes.

Several nurses from the General Hospital, St. John's, arrived on Saturday night to spend Sunday in this town among the number we noticed Nurses Archibald, Cron and Larder. They left for the city by Monday morning's train.

Our Naval Reserve boys who were on the Niobe, arrived on Saturday to spend a couple of weeks with friends here. The boys have been twelve months at sea, and their ship has done good work.

Dr. Goodwin is having his new dental parlor and operating room fixed up in the house lately purchased by him from Mrs. W. H. Thompson. The doctor is having a large bay window put in on the southern side of the building which will give him all the light he requires.

A stone cutter is now here cutting the name of Mrs. Agnes Peterson on the monument in the Presbyterian cemetery.

Mrs. W. H. Thompson and her son Mr. Ian M. Thompson, left yesterday for Botwood, where they will take a steamer direct for England, en route to Scotland. Their many friends wish them bon voyage and much success and happiness.

The marriage of Miss Holmes, daughter of Rev. A. A. Holmes, of this town to Mr. Allan Vatcher, of Freshwater, took place at the Methodist Church here yesterday afternoon. The ceremony was performed by Rev. F. R. Matthews in presence of a large number of well wishers. Miss G. Holmes was bridesmaid and Mr. Chesley Holmes was best man. The happy couple left on the afternoon train to spend the honeymoon at Holyrood, taking with them the best wishes of all their friends.

Mr. M. Hayse and his two sons went out fishing early on Monday morning, and as it was blowing hard all day, and Mr. H. did not return late in the evening his family became uneasy about him. His staunch little boat made the harbor next morning very early as he had taken shelter in one of the coves outside, during the night.

Mr. Weir, of the Blind School, Halifax, gave a very interesting illustrated lecture in St. Paul's Hall on Monday evening. The object of the lecture was not so much to raise funds at present as to interest people in this laudable work. His explanation of how the blind, deaf and dumb are taught to work and thereby make their lives so much happier than they would otherwise be, was very interesting. A very large number of our citizens responded to the poster announcing the meeting, and all went away delighted.

The Garden Party in aid of the Hospital Cot Fund, held in the Rectory grounds last evening between 3 and 6 o'clock was very enjoyable and the handsome sum of $65 was realized.

Miss Elsie Parsons left for Boston yesterday afternoon on a visit to Mrs. Mayor Oakes (see Miss M. James). Her visit will extend over several months.

School Children Can't Afford Handicaps

In a remarkable test, recently made under the supervision of a western Board of Health, over 9000 school children were questioned as to what they ate for breakfast.

A large percentage of the breakfasts consisted of coffee, bread and butter; coffee and oatmeal or some other cereal; coffee and hotcakes; coffee and biscuits; coffee and coffee cake, or coffee alone. Probably the same conditions prevail generally.

"IS IT ANY WONDER," SAYS THE EXAMINING PHYSICIAN, "THAT 23 PER CENT OF THESE CHILDREN HAVE FREQUENT HEADACHES?"

He was thinking of the chief cause—coffee. It IS no wonder when we consider that coffee contains the powerful drug, caffeine, a nerve poison and notorious cause of headaches, heart trouble, sleeplessness, irritation, and other ills! The results of tea drinking are similar to those of coffee, because they both contain the same drug.

Parents often wonder why their children are sickly, dull and backward in school, when frequently the cause lies in the homely, accepted habit of giving them a beverage containing an insidious poison.

When scientists and Boards of Health everywhere are speaking out against the dietetic dangers to which children have been so long subjected, it is high time that parents take heed and correct these conditions. No child should be permitted to use tea or coffee. It is easy to furnish them instead the pleasant, pure food-drink—

TRYING TO SAVE THEIR FACE.

BERLIN, To-Day. Admiralty officials here were under the belief that the submarine which sunk the Arabic had been lost. No reason for delay in returning to port has been given. The news was communicated immediately to James W. Gerard, American Ambassador, for transmission to Washington. A high official of the Foreign Office, in discussing the case with the Associated Press, pretended that prior to the receipt of the report of the submarine commander they had adequate reason for believing that the submarine was about to be attacked, and that he was justified in taking steps necessary to save his boat's crew. The torpedoing of the Arabic, according to this official, could not be considered an unprovoked attack without warning, but a measure of self-defence, which the commander of the under water craft was compelled to adopt by the alleged action of the Arabic. News of the return of the submarine and the commander's report has been published in Germany, but there is still no report available here in regard to the sinking of the Allan liner Hesperian.

COALITION GOVERNMENT FORMED IN RUSSIA.

PETROGRAD, To-Day. The Novoe Vremya announces the formation of a new majority in the Duma which comprises the Liberal and Progressive elements, replacing the Conservative majority. The newspaper editorially comments favorably on the formation of the new majority, saying: "After a year of war we now witness the union of all parties upon a general programme of political action. What was impossible a year ago has been realized. It is a union in a single political programme, regarding the requirements of the day, of parties differing in political creeds. This is an act of great importance, the consequence of which cannot but be reflected immediately on the entire policy of the Empire." The change in the supreme command of the army which was made known here to-day came as a surprise to the general public, although it has been rumored for several days in army circles. The Novoe Vremya is the only newspaper which has commented on the subject. It says: "Our insolent foe has now received a worthy answer to its projects. The Russian Emperor has placed himself at the head of the military forces and the hopes of the Germans for peace has turned to dust and ashes. For more than a year the chief command of our army has been vested in Grand Duke Nicholas, Nicolaievitch, whose name will ever remain graven in the heart of every Russian soldier."

PROGRESS ON THE SUBLVA BAY FRONT.

ATTEMPTS TO ADVANCE TUESDAY IN THE REGION OF THE RAILWAY STATION AT GROSS EKAR, SOUTH OF RIGA AND SEUBAL, WERE REPELLED.

In the direction of Dvinsk there were only unimportant advance post actions. The fight for the river Lautze continued. In order to occupy a more covered position our troops removed a little to the right of the Lautze. There have been no important changes on the routes toward Vilna. The Germans directed a violent artillery fire against our troops occupying outlets from the lakes in the region of Novo Troki. Near the town of Orany the enemy yesterday made attempts at an offensive from Grodno. Stubborn German attacks continue in the region of the railway station at Druskiulki and towards Skidale. In the latter direction in repulsing the enemy we inflicted on him great losses and took some scores of prisoners. In Galicia, near Ternopolia, we achieved great success against the Germans. The German third Guards division and the 48th reserve division, reinforced by an Austrian brigade, with great quantities of heavy and light artillery, according to statements made by prisoners, had been preparing for several days for a decisive attack. This was fixed for Tuesday night and Wednesday. Forestalling the enemy our troops took the offensive and after a stubborn fight on the river Dolinka, the Germans were completely defeated Tuesday evening. The enemy left prisoners in one hands more than 200 officers and 8,000 men captured, thirty guns, fourteen of which were heavy calibre, many machine guns, gun limbers and other booty. After a brief pursuit our troops occupied their former positions on the river Sereth. The Emperor sent an order to express to his troops his joy and thankfulness for their success and the heavy losses inflicted upon the enemy. The fortunate withdrawal of our armies from a difficult position before the Vistula, where they were surrounded by the enemy, is beginning to make itself felt now by partial successes.

WHY THE FLAG FLIES IN BRITISH ENEMIES.

Will Crooks, M.P., in an address at Newcastle-on-Tyne the other day, said that when he was in Australia he saw the Union Jack flying on many a lonely road with only a couple of houses in sight. Once he asked if the flag was flying because of his visit, and he was told it was not. "No one knows," said an Australian, "that the flag is here. The flag is flying to let people see to which nation we belong."

Alcohol Useless in Strain—German Experience.

The "Daily Chronicle" of June 2nd gave some interesting particulars of a report presented at a recent meeting in Berlin of German societies established to deal with inebriates. These reports showed that a large number of men who had been cared for by these societies had been ordered to the front. It was found, however, that the majority of the men who had been drunkards at home, had to be dismissed from the ranks, as neither their nerves nor their physical condition enabled them to stand the strain. An important point brought out in the discussions of the conference was the deteriorating effects of even moderate drinking on military efficiency. The investigations made by the officers, surgeons and the chaplains were to show that in the vast majority of cases the moderate drinker was subject to collapse at a much earlier stage than the man who had led a temperate life. Most of the speakers, supporting their remarks by reports from the front, agreed that the very worst preparation, which a young soldier could be subjected to was indulgence in drink. The more closely he approached total abstinence, especially in the period before engaging in active operations, the better soldier he became. "He that ruleth his own spirit is greater than he that taketh a city."

OPERATION UNDER BOMB FIRE.

During one of the recent air raids a surgeon was performing the operation of tracheotomy (putting a tube in the throat) at a nursing home when German aircraft came over the place. The town electric current was cut off at the very moment when the surgeon was opening the windpipe. Fortunately, says the Lancet, it was not the first attack, and the operator had warned his nurse and assistants that lamps should be kept ready for use during all operations at night. With a trifling delay the tracheotomy was finished and the child patient is now doing well.

In addition quite a number of sailing vessels will be leaving here this month with fish cargoes for foreign markets.

EDISON WANTS TEST OF HIS NEW BATTERY IN READ UNDER SEA WORK.

"Let's wait and be absolutely sure," said Thomas A. Edison, when asked about his new submarine battery. The inventor was unwilling to say positively that his device would be a success although he believes it will be as he worked on it four years, and it has been subjected to the most rigid tests at the Brooklyn Navy Yard for the past three months. In 1910 Lieutenants McNair, Ellyson, Warren and Miles visited Mr. Edison and asked him to concentrate his efforts on the invention of a storage battery containing chemicals that would not attack fastenings in submarines, and which, when reached by salt water, would not generate chlorine gas or any other dangerous fumes. The officers said our navy had been handicapped, because the submarines using lead batteries had to lay up once a year to have the batteries overhauled.
