THE MILITARY-RIFLE LEAGUE.

The second of the series of five telegraphic matches of the Canadian Military-Rifle League was held on Saturday last, with more favourable weather conditions and higher average scoring. The returns received are so incomplete that the list showing position of the teams cannot yet be published, and even in the leading places there will probably be changes when all are heard from. There are, for instance, no figures at all from Halifax. The highest scores on Saturday, so far as heard from, were as follows: 96th Bn., 811; 13th Bn., 809; 43rd Bn., 801; 54th Bn., 799; C Co., Infantry School Corps, 798; Queen's Own Rifles, 796; Toronto Rifle Association, 790. This gives the high average, for Snider shooting, of 81 points per man for the first seven teams. Taking the two matches, the teams, so far as heard from, now stand in this order:

	Total two matches.	Score 2nd match.
1. 54th Battalion	1652	799
2. 13th Battalion	1642	809
3. 96th Battalion	1595	811
4. 53rd Battalion	1587	729

6. 45th Battalion, Lindsay.....	1565	774
7. Toronto Rifle Association	1563	790
8. 43rd Battalion.....	1555	801
9. 62nd Battalion.....	1544	758
10. Queen's Own Rifles	1538	796
11. 21st Battalion	1525	734
12. 45th Battalion, Bowmanville.....	1512	716
13. 7th Battalion.....	1508	782

For Lung Diseases only those Emulsions which are scientifically prepared can expect to succeed. SLOCUM'S OXYGENIZED EMULSION OF PURE COD LIVER OIL, compounded at their manufactory in Toronto, Ont., has, from the start, won a place in public confidence which surpasses any success achieved by a like preparation. It is handled by all druggists.

REGIMENTAL.

THE TWENTY-FIRST FUSILIERS.

The 21st Fusiliers went to the town of Essex on the 25th May and joined the citizens there in celebrating Her Majesty's 72nd Birthday. The demonstration was a credit to the town; and the Regiment received an enthusiastic reception. The parade and sham battle was fully carried out in accordance with the Regimental orders, and was the event of the day, proving in every way a splendid success. Constant drill for the past month and a half had well prepared all for the day, consequently the Regiment was very steady, and looked fine indeed. The muster was large, an average of 31 files, band 21 strong and in splendid condition, under the leadership of Professor A. Ruthven, bandmaster. Drum-Major Leach was the admiration of everybody.

The Regiment was under the command of Col. Wilkinson. The following officers were also present: Capt. Cheyne, acting Major for the day; Surgeon Casgrain, Capt. Reeves, Capt. Ley, Capt. Dewson, Capt. Sicklesteel, Lieuts. W. H. Russell, Johnston, Laing, Jackson, Bartlett and Ponting.

Nos. 1 and 5 Companies, Windsor, Staff and Band held a very successful church parade on the Sunday previous, to All Saints church, Church of England, when Rev. Canon Hincks preached an eloquent sermon. The streets were lined by admiring friends.

THE MONTREAL GARRISON ARTILLERY.

On Friday evening last, 29th May, the Montreal Brigade of Garrison Artillery had there oft postponed heavy gun drill. Shortly after eight o'clock the Drill Hall began to fill up with spectators, and both the back and side galleries were crowded, a close estimate putting the number of spectators at 3,000. At half-past eight Lt.-Col. Montizambert, the Assistant Inspector of Artillery, arrived, accompanied by Lt.-Col. Houghton, D.A.G., 5th district; Lt.-Col. Mattice, B.M. 5th district, and Lt.-Col. Stevenson, President of the Dominion Artillery Association. The fall-in was sounded, and Lt.-Col. Turnbull, who was present in plain clothes, addressed a few remarks to the men. This was the first time that Lt.-Col. Turnbull has seen the brigade since his return from Europe, he having been confined to his residence with a severe sickness. The competition then started, No. 2 Battery taking the lead, and as they filed out of the armoury they were greeted with loud applause by the spectators. After Capt. Hooper, of the Field Battery, had been appointed time-keeper, the umpire, Lt.-Col. Montizambert, gave the signal to commence and the nineteen men of the Battery went to work dismounting and firing the 50-100 cwt. 64-pounder gun. They did it in the remarkable time of 4 minutes and 30 and 1.5 seconds; but the official time was five seconds more on account of a miss fire. This time was not beaten by the other Batteries; in fact, it would be hard for any battery to do better. No. 1 Battery was the next to compete, their time being 5 minutes and 20 seconds, which won them the second prize. No. 3 Battery did it in 6 minutes and 9 seconds, and No. 4 in 6 minutes and 3½ seconds. No. 5 Battery accomplished it in even shorter time, only taking 6 minutes and 2 seconds. No. 6, who were the last company to compete, were doing splendidly, when all at once the gun fell athwart the carriage, which knocked them out of the race. They afterwards did it over again in 5 minutes and 27 seconds. After the competition was over, the men reformed in their armoury and listened to a few remarks from Lt.-Col. Montizambert, who congratulated them on their efficiency and on the remarkable time in which they had executed the commands. He also said that he hoped that the men would be in their present state of efficiency at the coming drills at Quebec. He also congratulated Brigade Sergt.-Major Benton for being to a great extent the means of the Brigade's present high standing.

A LEAGUE MATCH FOR JUNE.

EDITOR MILITIA GAZETTE.—I fully endorse your suggestion in your last issue, "now that there are to be no camps until September," it would be wise to have at least one of the League matches fixed in June. Let the whole series be concluded in July. As one of the Executive of the League I would recommend this.

DISCIPLINE.

(By Colonel H. B. Hanna, late Commanding at Delhi. From the Broad Arrow.)

A commanding officer should carefully avoid nagging at his officers and men. If he has to admonish or reprimand, he should do it in a few well-chosen, forcible words; but, having once disposed of the matter, it should be dropped once for all. Nagging is not only weak and contemptible, but often leads to insubordination. "When to let things alone is, perhaps, the subtlest, rarest, and most useful of all knowledge." A commanding officer should eschew tittle-tattle and scandal, and above all espionage, for it is mean and despicable, and fatal to discipline. In telling off prisoners in the orderly room, a commanding officer should, after hearing the evidence against them, listen patiently to what they have to say in their defence. He should then, without hesitation, or display of indecision, remand them for trial by court-martial (possibly for further evidence) or dispose of the cases summarily. Each case should be judged on its own merits, and no comparison should be made between the offender's conduct and that of his comrades, such comparisons do no good and may even lead to unseemly altercations and bad blood. I have myself known trials resulting from injudicious remarks of this kind.

In matters of duty unpleasant things must be said. Both officers and men have at times to be brought to book, but our English vocabulary is quite sufficient for the purpose without resorting to intemperate language. The commanding officer should point out quietly in what manner the offender has erred and, when necessary, warn him that punishment will assuredly follow a repetition of the offence; but let him make no empty threats. If the offender be again brought up for a similar offence, punishment should invariably be inflicted. It is the certainty of punishment, far more than its severity, which checks crimes. Admiral Collingwood declared that a first fault should never go unpunished. A commanding officer, who consistently deals with his men in this spirit, will soon be appreciated and respected by them, and the maintenance of discipline among them will then become an easy matter, for he may rely on the support of all good soldiers and of some of the bad too.

A commanding officer should have his temper under perfect control, but occasionally and intentionally he may give it a little licence; it must, however, come out at once, "like the devil hail, rain, thunder and lightning." The habitual use of bad language is quite unpardonable, and generally reveals a bad officer. Sometimes it is done to hide ignorance, or stupidity, but where this is not the case, it shows, at least, a lack of the fine feelings of a well-bred man, without which no officer can expect to win the respect and confidence of his men, and may end in inspiring them with the bitterest resentment. A case in point came under my notice a few years ago. The officer to whom I refer, commanded a fine regiment, but was in the habit of addressing the men with or without provocation, in the foulest language. Although, by no means, a man of intellect or culture, he had the effrontery, in the hearing of the men themselves, to draw attention to what he was pleased to call "their low type of countenance." The natural consequences followed, insubordination and violence were rampant in the ranks; he was frequently insulted in his own orderly room, and how it was that he escaped personal chastisement, considering into what a bad state of discipline the men had fallen, has always surprised me. As soon, however, as he gave place to a different type of commanding officer, things changed for the better; crime rapidly diminished, and the regiment is now as well behaved as any corps in the service. Let me add this caution, in case my reference to personal chastisement may be misunderstood. However gross the provocation of which a superior officer may be guilty, a soldier (I use the word in its widest sense) can never be justified in taking the law into his own hands. He can always obtain redress under the provisions of Section 42 or 43 of the Army Act.

All officers should also refrain from using sarcastic language to their men, for nothing wounds a sensitive man's amour propre so deeply as sarcasm. Commanding officers should set a good example in this respect, and firmly suppress all approach to sarcasm in their juniors. Intentional sarcasm, when used towards one's subordinates, is a petty tyranny, tainted by cowardice, for the victim is defenceless and cannot resent it with safety. The habit is easily acquired, and often originates in vanity—a desire to put one's wit at the expense of others—of all vanities, perhaps, the most ignoble. No gentleman should, wittingly, wound any one's feelings, and officers have special need to put in practice St. Paul's injunction: "Be courteous," in their dealings with their men, since on their courtesy depends, to a great extent, that good feeling, without which discipline can be but superficial. A touch of humour, however, thrown into a well-deserved rebuke, is very effective; but this is a very different thing from sarcasm. I once served under a general officer who could do this to perfection. On one occasion he was inspecting a regiment, when he suddenly stopped opposite one of the men. Said the general to the soldier: "Is that your best coat?" Soldier: "No, sir." General: "Then where is it?" Soldier: "In barracks, sir." General, turning to the colonel of the regiment: "This is very remarkable, colonel. I put on my best clothes to visit this man, and he receives me in his worst!" I fancy the man must have had, later on, rather a rough five minutes with the adjutant, and not a little chaff from his comrades.

Favouritism is a fatal sin in a commanding officer, for it strikes at the very root of discipline—justice; and, unfortunately, this is no uncommon fault. All men are liable to be led away by outward appearances, or influenced by class or national prejudices. Officers serving in India, and belonging to native regiments composed of different races and castes, some, undoubtedly, much higher than others, are peculiarly liable to err in this respect; and commanding officers should keep a strict watch over themselves and their subordinates to guard against the faintest shadow of a preference for Sikh over Pathan, or Goorkha over Hindustani, betraying itself in their treatment of their men. As I have already said, favouritism kills justice, and where there is no justice, discontent prevails, and discipline suffers.

IV.—COMMANDING OFFICERS. PART II.

A commanding officer's rule should be consistent, firm, and benevolent; just, but considerate. In an article by "Trobador," in Colburn's United Service Magazine, mention is made of an officer, "who, when about to get his battalion, did not hesitate to confide to his friends, that he intended to be pretty strict all round, because he would rather, he said, he thought a brute than a fool?" Alas, for the regiment whose commanding officer pursues a policy of severity, to conceal his own short-comings; a policy which is, I fear, followed more frequently than is generally supposed. I heard an able and experienced officer the other day say calmly, that he believed discipline amongst British soldiers could only be maintained by the exercise of extreme severity. I wonder if he had ever heard of the "ferocity" of discipline, which disgraced our military administration at the beginning of the century, when our maddened soldiers "sought," so Sir W. Napier tells us, "by a variety of devices, evincing extraordinary resolution and subtlety, to escape from their unhappiness, with the result that thousands of the finest men were lost to the Service." And what is extreme severity? It means undue severity, which is nothing more nor less than injustice.

Few commanding officers seem to recognize how injurious to the discipline of a regiment are the habits of extravagance that too often prevail among its officers; and yet they must know, by experience, that nothing affects the morale of an officer so much as the burden of debt; it depresses his spirits; it destroys his interest in his profession; it kills his ambition, in many cases it drives him into drinking. A man whose mind is entirely pre-occupied by his private anxieties, cannot possibly throw himself heartily into his duties, nor exert any good influence over his men. A commanding officer, jealous for the honour of his regiment and keen to maintain its discipline intact, should, not only by example and precept, set his face against extravagance, but should try to help any young officer whom he knows or suspects to have got into debt, out of his difficulties. Having gained his confidence, he should inquire into the nature and amount of his liabilities and how they were incurred, if at cards, or in racing, he should exact a strict promise from him to forswear gambling of every kind. He should then ascertain what means he has at his disposal and how those means may be best utilized. If necessary, he should write to the young man's friends, explain matters and urge on them to give the requisite help, especially if the debts were not due to vice or folly. Parents and other relatives, when they find that a commanding officer is interesting himself in the matter, will be more ready to come forward with the required pecuniary aid, for his doing so is a guarantee that their money will be used to the best advantage. Should the application to the friends fail, then a judicious circular letter to the creditors will often effect much. Creditors will rarely refuse to accept a reasonable compromise, when the proposal comes from the debtor's own commanding officer. As a last resource, there are the banks. A loan at a moderate interest, if properly secured by a life policy, may almost always be negotiated with a respectable bank. I have known the late Sir Charles Macgregor do all this and much more. His stern appearance concealed a most kind and generous disposition.

I am so strongly impressed by the close connection existing between debt and discipline in the army that, before leaving the subject, I will point out a few of the causes of extravagance among officers, and suggest some ways of putting a check upon them. Gambling and expensive entertainments are the chief of these causes, to which, in India, polo may be added; for officers who play polo—and many of them have to play volens volens, especially young men in the cavalry—must keep three or four polo ponies, if they ever hope to send up a regimental team to the inter-regimental polo tournaments; the keep of four ponies, added to their original cost, is no slight drain upon a young officer's resources. The game is a good game, but it costs a great deal of money to play it; and where it is made the chief object of life, it is detrimental to the efficiency of the service. A general officer, when recently inspecting a cavalry regiment, expressed himself very much pleased with the polo ponies, but very dissatisfied with the officers' chargers! The fact is that in some cavalry regiments the officers' first consideration is their ponies, not their chargers. Commanding officers should see that expenditure on this game is kept within reasonable bounds! Polo, too, leads to a number of casualties among officers, whose absence from duty must indirectly affect the discipline of their regiments. But this, to some extent, is remediable, as many of the accidents are due to the non-observance of the rules of the game, or to rash and foolhardy riding. A player who wittingly breaks the rules should be disqualified from playing for a period commensurate with the gravity of the offence.

Gambling, I am sorry to say, is too common in the army, both in England and abroad—more common, perhaps, in the hill stations of India than anywhere else. Year after year, old and young flock up to these hill stations during the hot season, and I do not exaggerate in asserting that many officers lose during one visit enough to cripple them for life. Yet I believe that the late Lord Strathmairn is the only Indian Commander-in-Chief who has ever tried to put a stop to this disgraceful state of things. He dismissed one of his own aides-de-camp, and ordered him and other officers to join their regiments and commands. One was a brigadier, who, it was said, lost no less than £10,000! The remedy for this scandal is to face it boldly, and to make an example of some of the senior officers who are directly responsible for it, and whose bounden duty it is to set a good example to their juniors in this matter.

As for entertainments, I agree with the late Sir Herbert Macpherson, who once remarked with his usual good common sense, "if champagne were forbidden, it would be unnecessary to limit entertainments." The reply to this was, "Such a restriction would be an interference with the liberty of the British subject," the subject in this case being an impecunious subaltern, who, perhaps, never saw champagne on his father's table.

Some years ago in Umballa, the Carabiniers introduced the very sensible mess rule that no champagne was to be opened on guest nights. The rest of the garrison quickly followed in their steps, with the most happy results, as there was more hospitality and less extravagance. And why should officers consider themselves bound to give champagne to every stranger who may call at their mess? Let them ask him to dinner by all means, but I can see no reason why they should offer him what many of them cannot afford to give. In the army champagne should only be seen on the Commander-in-Chief's table, and, perhaps, on a general officer's. I am not recommending parsimony—parsimony is, in my opinion, even more ignoble than extravagance—but I would have every officer regulate his expenditure by the length of his purse. Indeed, officers with private means, while in the service would be doing a kind and unselfish act if they were to regulate their expenditure by the length of their comrades' purse, and not by their own. Example, or false pride, would not then tempt poor men to live beyond their means, and thus many a good soldier, who is now absorbed into that body of ex-officers whose pursuits and manners of living is a mystery to most of us, would be saved to serve, with honour, his Queen and country.

How far familiar intercourse should exist between senior and junior officers is a very delicate question, but one that should not be passed over in an essay on discipline. The question is, should a commanding officer mix freely, in social life, with his juniors, or hold himself aloof? My reply is, unhesitatingly, in the affirmative, if he has sufficient self-reliance, and possesses a moderate share of tact, temper, knowledge of the world, and, above all, sympathy. Without sympathy he would be insufferable to his juniors, and eventually make himself thoroughly detested by them. If, then, a commanding officer feels that he can take no interest in the pursuits, pleasures, and every-day life of his juniors; if he looks upon their amusements and conversation as frivolous and beneath his notice; if he puts on an air of superiority and cannot divest himself of the commanding officer;—to this class of men I say, avoid your juniors, for otherwise you will lose the little respect they may have begun to feel for you, and thus authority and discipline will suffer through you.

There are, however, circumstances which render free social intercourse at first unadvisable. For example, if a regiment had got a bad reputation, and an officer were posted to it with a view to getting it into good order, a commanding officer, under those circumstances, would be wise to hold himself aloof until he had obtained an insight into the character of his officers, and, perhaps, shown his teeth once or twice; opportunities for doing so would never be wanting in cases of the kind. As he felt his position strengthen, he might begin to relax a little, and, without detriment to his authority, gradually fall into his usual ways. If isolated from the outer world, as sometimes happens in outlying stations in India and elsewhere, it becomes a nice point whether a little reserve would not be advisable, but each case would have to be carefully considered and dealt with on its own merits. It was said of Sir Charles Napier that he possessed "the rare quality of rendering the most familiar intercourse compatible with absolute authority." There are not many Sir Charles Napiers, but every commanding officer can at least try to emulate him in this respect. In concluding this portion of my subject I may observe that much of what has been written in this and preceding articles is, of course, applicable to all officers.

We cannot all be first, but T. A. SLOCUM, of 186 West Adelaide St., Toronto, Ont., must feel more than ordinary pride in the success of his valuable preparation for the cure of lung diseases, viz: SLOCUM'S OXYGENIZED EMULSION OF PURE COD LIVER OIL. Their Laboratory at 186 West Adelaide St., Toronto, Ont., is kept constantly going, and every druggist in the country is supplied with the famous remedy.

THE SOLDIERS' BATTLE.

The Grenadiers Gain a Large Majority of Votes.

They now occupy Third Place—Montreal Men still Active and Pushing—The Boys in Green at the Top of the Poll—Captain Symons and Lt.-Col. Jones again Change Places Growing Interest in the Competition.

(From the Toronto Mail, Tuesday, 2nd June.)

8. 34th Battalion, Ontario Infantry	974
9. Durham Field Battery	543

Montreal is evidently taking a great interest in the military contest, as is proved by the fact that Captain and Adjutant Macpherson has occupied the leading position for so many days, and that the boys of the Victoria Rifles have been given so good a support. The list of battalions shows that the Grenadiers must have made an extra effort yesterday, as they are now third in position, the 13th Battalion dropping to 5th place. It is rumoured, however that the Ambitious City is preparing a surprise, and Toronto had better look to itself if it intends to keep in front. The list of officers, it will be observed, is rapidly growing, and in consequence it makes daily an increased demand upon our space. A change in the position of leaders has again occurred, and Captain Symons resumes his former place.

CONDITIONS GOVERNING THE CONTEST.

A coupon will be printed in each copy of the morning edition of the Toronto Mail and in each copy of the Western Mail up to July 1st, and each of these coupons, properly filled up, if sent to the Mail Office by July 6th, will count as three votes for each prize. The voting power of any individual is not limited. The coupons may be sent in singly or in bundles. The Battalion or Corps receiving the largest number of votes will be presented with two horn cups mounted in oxidized silver and gold, and the officer receiving the largest number of votes will be presented with the solid silver pitcher and salver. Coupons out of Morning, Evening and Weekly Mail will be counted in the manner specified on each. Announcements of the state of the polls will be made from day to day as space will permit.

A BOOK FOR ADVERTISERS.

Geo. P. Rowell & Co., of New York, publishers of the American Newspaper Directory and of PRINTERS INK, a journal for advertisers--the oldest and best known of all the advertising agencies--conduct their business in such a way as to make it a material benefit to both advertiser and newspaper publisher.

They furnish plans for an advertiser and prepare his advertisement. For their services--designing his advertisement and preparing his estimate--they make a sufficient charge to pay for the required service of persons competent to do the work well. They tell the advertiser what papers he should use and what the price will be. If the advertiser wishes them to place the advertisement in the papers, they do as he directs, and for that service the newspapers pay them. If the advertiser wishes to place his advertising through some other advertising agency, or to contract with the publishers, he is at liberty to do so, and the estimate furnished by Messrs. Rowell & Co. serves as a guide. It tells him where he is securing a bargain and where he is paying more than he ought.

Every one who is in need of information on the subject of advertising will do well to obtain a copy of Geo. P. Rowell & Co's "Book for Advertisers," 368 pages, price one dollar. It is mailed, postage paid, on receipt of price, and contains a careful compilation from the American Newspaper Directory of all the best papers in the United States and Canada. It gives the circulation rating of every one and a good deal of information about rates and other matters pertaining to the business of advertising.

Whoever has made himself acquainted with what may be learned from this book will admit that from its pages one may gather pretty much all the information that is needed to perfect an intelligent plan of advertising. It is not a complete newspaper directory. It is much better; for although it names barely one-third of the newspapers published, it does enumerate every one of the best and all that a general advertiser is likely to have occasion to use.
