DOMINION OF CANADA

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, March 11, 1948

The house met at three o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

POST OFFICE—DISTRIBUTION OF COMMUNIST NEWSPAPER

Mr. FREDERIC DORION (Charlevoix-Saguenay): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. A few days ago many members, and I was one of them, received through the post office of the House of Commons a copy of the communist newspaper Combat. The envelopes containing that paper, like the one I hold in my hand, did not bear any post office mark, contrary to section 275 of the post office regulations, which reads as follows—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I would ask the hon. member to state his question of privilege.

Mr. DORION: I am about to do so, Mr. Speaker, but I submit that on a question of privilege we are entitled to explain why we raise the question. The section to which I refer reads:

> Postmasters should be careful to postmark distinctly all letters, registered or ordinary, posted or received at their offices, and to effectually cancel all stamps thereon.

As the envelopes we received did not bear any postmark as required by the rules, we cannot identify the post office they were mailed at or where they came from.

It is stated in that newspaper that it was published in Montreal, but we cannot ascertain where it was mailed.

My point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, is that our mail boxes are not rubbish cans and that they should be used only in accordance with the post office regulations.

DEBATES BRANCH—REPORT OF CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to lay on the table of the house a report of the civil service commission relating to the appointment of Miss M. E. Black to a permanent position in the debates branch of the House of Commons.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

BANKING AND COMMERCE—FIRST AND SECOND REPORTS—CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT

Mr. HUGHES CLEAVER (Halton) presented the first and second reports of the standing committee on banking and commerce, and moved that the first report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

NEWFOUNDLAND

QUESTIONS SUBMITTED TO CANADIAN GOVERNMENT AND ANSWERS THERETO

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yesterday there was a question on the order paper by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Church) with respect to developments in connection with the possible entry of Newfoundland into confederation, and I asked that it be allowed to stand. As I understand that the Prime Minister has information to communicate to the house today, before that is done, I should like to table copies of certain additional questions that were submitted to the Canadian government by the governor of Newfoundland, and copies of the answers that were given to those questions.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF REFERENDUM ON FUTURE FORM OF GOVERNMENT

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I might give the house immediately the statement to which my hon. friend the Secretary of State for External Affairs has just referred.

We have been advised by the United Kingdom government that a statement is to be issued today in Newfoundland announcing that the people of Newfoundland will be given the opportunity shortly to vote in a referendum on their future form of government. Three questions will be submitted to the people: continuation of commission government for a five-year period; restoration of responsible government as it existed in 1933 prior to the establishment of commission of government; and confederation with Canada. If no form of government receives an absolute majority, a second vote will be held some time later on the two forms receiving the largest support.

I think it would be useful were I to remind the house of the recent steps preceding the present announcement. It will be recalled that last summer a delegation from the national convention visited Ottawa to ascertain what fair and equitable basis might exist for federal union of Newfoundland and Canada. A committee of the cabinet was appointed to meet with the Newfoundland delegation. Several meetings were held during the summer for the exchange of information and exploration of the many issues that would be involved in union. At the close of these meetings a comprehensive report was issued, copies of which were tabled early in the present session of parliament.

After due deliberation the government sent the governor of Newfoundland, for transmission to the national convention, a statement of terms believed to constitute a fair and equitable basis of union of Newfoundland with Canada should the people of Newfoundland so desire. In a covering letter under date of October 29 last to the governor, I said in part:

> I feel I must emphasize that as far as the financial aspects of the proposed arrangements for union are concerned, the government of Canada believes that the arrangements go as far as the government can go under the circumstances. The government could not readily contemplate any change in these arrangements which would impose larger financial burdens on Canada. On the other hand, with respect to those matters which are primarily of provincial concern, such as education, the government of Canada would not wish to set down any rigid conditions, and it would be prepared to give reasonable consideration to suggestions for modification or addition.

The statement of terms transmitted by the Canadian government was discussed at length by the national convention in Newfoundland. The convention, however, voted 29 to 16 against recommending the inclusion of confederation on the referendum ballot. Subsequently many telegrams, bearing the names, it is said, of some 50,000 voters, were sent to members of the convention for transmission to the Secretary of State for Commonwealth Relations requesting that the people be permitted to vote on the question.

The national convention was only empowered to make recommendations regarding the questions to be included on the referendum ballot, decision on the matter remaining with the United Kingdom government. The dispatch from the United Kingdom government made public today in Newfoundland explains that—> —the terms offered by the Canadian government represent the result of long discussion with a body of Newfoundlanders who were elected to the convention and the issues involved appear to have been sufficiently clarified to enable the people of Newfoundland to express an opinion as to whether confederation with Canada would commend itself to them. In these circumstances and having regard to the number of members of the convention who supported the inclusion of confederation with Canada in the ballot paper, His Majesty's government have come to the conclusion that it would not be right that the people of Newfoundland should be deprived of an opportunity to considering the issue.

The decision to include confederation on the ballot having been taken by the United Kingdom government, the outcome will be watched with deep interest by the people of Canada. The question as to their future form of government is, of course, one for the people of Newfoundland alone to decide. Neither the government nor the people of Canada would wish to influence in any way their decision. Should the people of Newfoundland express clearly their will that Newfoundland should enter confederation, I am sure that the people of Canada will welcome them as partners in a larger Canada. Should they decide otherwise, this decision, I am no less sure, will be received with understanding and respect by the people of Canada.

Mr. DORION: Will the proposed arrangement addressed by the Canadian government to Newfoundland be submitted to this house before any agreement is concluded, in case the result of the referendum in Newfoundland is favourable to its entry into confederation?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The answer is yes. That is part of the terms we are prepared to recommend.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INQUIRY WITH RESPECT TO PROVISION FOR DEPENDENTS OF THE LATE DOCTOR BOWIE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. WEBB (Leeds): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Veterans Affairs. I am sorry that I did not have an opportunity of sending him notice of it before the house opened. What decision has been reached with regard to the payment of funeral expenses and a pension to the widow and children of Doctor Bowie, who was shot and killed while doing his duty as a medical officer in the employment of the Department of Veterans Affairs?

Hon. MILTON F. GREGG (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I have been in touch with this case, and have just been informed at the noon hour that the grant to Mrs. Bowie must be placed in the department's estimates. We are therefore placing an item in the supplementary estimates for this year in an effort to speed up action in this matter. In the meantime I can assure hon. members that all steps will be taken that can be taken to make sure that the widow is not under any disadvantage.

FUEL OIL

QUESTION OF AUGMENTING SUPPLY TO PROTECT PRESENT PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. PARK MANROSS (London): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that some dealers are raising the price of fuel oil for domestic heating from 17½ cents per gallon to 26 and 28 cents, will the minister make a statement as to whether anything can be done to augment the present supply so that existing contracts can be protected at present prices?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I should point out, Mr. Speaker, that neither the Minister of Trade and Commerce nor any other member of the government has any legislative authority to interfere with the distribution of fuel oil or to regulate the price. However, the good offices of the government have been exercised to see that no Canadian householder has been without fuel oil, and I think in that regard we have been successful. As far as the price is concerned, usually the difficulty lies with small dealers who took customers after the government asked them not to do so, and who did not contract for supplies sufficient to protect those customers. Those dealers must get fuel oil where they can. If there are extra transportation charges involved, the dealers must pay the charges, and I presume they must pass them on to their customers.

Mr. COLDWELL: Good old private enterprise!

VEGETABLES

INQUIRY WITH RESPECT TO IMPORTATION BY AIR FROM THE UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. O. PROBE (Regina City): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) who is not in his seat today. If the parliamentary assistant can answer, I will appreciate it; if not, it can be taken as notice for tomorrow. Is the minister aware that certain fresh vegetables now banned from import to Canada from the United States are being flown into Canada daily from California by commercial aircraft? Will the minister explain to the house why these vegetables are being admitted when ordinary bulk vegetables such as lettuce and celery are barred from import into Canada?

Mr. R. W. MAYHEW (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Finance): I will take notice of the question and bring it to the minister's attention and see that it is answered as soon as possible.

NAILS

PRIORITY FOR GOVERNMENT HOUSING PROJECTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. E. DROPE (Northumberland, Ont.): I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether any control is exercised by the federal government over the distribution of nails. If so, has any order or direction been given under which priority provision has been established for government housing projects? If so, when was that order issued, and under what authority?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Under the priorities officer the department does protect veterans housing and low cost housing projects generally. That is the only priority exercised. It is exercised by virtue of the reconstruction and supply act and the emergency legislation authorized by the house last session.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ALLEGED COMMUNIST ACTIVITY AMONG CANADIAN SEAMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. DICKEY (Halifax): Has the Minister of Labour any information with respect to recent communist activity in inciting unrest among Canadian seamen, and among officers, engineers and wireless operators of the Canadian merchant marine?

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): In reply to the junior member for Halifax I would say that efforts have been in progress to bring about an agreement affecting the personnel of the deep sea ships. The classes of personnel were unlicensed men and executive officers, engineers and wireless operators. The department has given conciliation service through the good offices of Mr. Justice McNiven of Regina, who for many weeks in Montreal endeavoured to have the parties concerned reach an agreement. I can only say that an agreement was reached as far as the unlicensed personnel were concerned, but unfortunately that has not been possible with respect to the executive officers, engineers and wireless operators.

I should add, Mr. Speaker, that as far as my knowledge goes, during those negotiations there was no evidence of communist activity. However, since the strike there has been picketing of ships which is hard to account for, because it is obvious that there are not sufficient officers involved to form the picket lines. This fact has led to the assumption by many people that there is a communistic activity, but I have no evidence at the moment that such is the case. I consulted the officials in charge of the R.C.M.P. and they have no evidence of communist activity other than the well known fact that the communist party has made statements in support of the strike.

UNEMPLOYMENT

SUGGESTED PAYMENT BY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT OF SHARE OF RELIEF COSTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. R. THATCHER (Moose Jaw): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour a question, of which I sent him notice earlier. In view of the unemployment in certain sections of Canada and the increased number of people on relief, has the government given consideration to paying a share of the relief costs, as was done prior to the war?

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): The answer is in the negative. I am sure the hon. member knows the employment figures as well as I do. According to the last report, roughly 200,000 people were registered for employment out of a total of just under 5,000,000, the highest employment figure in the history of the dominion. I think my hon. friend will also agree that some persons are very difficult to place, for reasons obvious to everyone who can read and write. I should point in passing to the progress that has been made since the period of which my hon. friend speaks. The various governments now spend an average of about $750,000,000 a year in social services, of which eighty per cent is provided from the dominion treasury. These embody such plans as children's allowances, unemployment insurance, old age pensions and the like. I am sure my hon. friend will agree that we are better able to face any temporary or what I might call seasonal layoffs than we have been since this parliament was first established.

LOANS TO OTHER COUNTRIES

INQUIRY AS TO AMOUNTS NOT REPAID

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. D. FULTON (Kamloops): In the absence of the Minister of Finance I should like to direct an inquiry to his parliamentary assistant. On Wednesday of last week I asked the minister a question about the repayment of Canadian loans and credits to various countries. I repeated the question on Friday, when the minister said he would let me have an answer on Monday. I would appreciate it if his parliamentary assistant would bring the matter to the attention of the minister and ask if I might have an answer tomorrow.

Mr. R. W. MAYHEW (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Finance): The minister is absent today on official business. I shall bring the matter to his attention and try to get the answer for the hon. member tomorrow.

WHEAT

PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE—OVERPAYMENT UNDER WHEAT ACREAGE REDUCTION SCHEME

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. S. ZAPLITNY (Dauphin): On February 27 I asked the Minister of Agriculture a question respecting certain regulations under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. At that time the minister indicated that he would reply at a later date. I wonder if he is able to reply today.

Right Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): If I remember correctly the questions asked were the questions I stated the other day had been referred to the Minister of Justice. As soon as I receive the final reply the question will be answered.

IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY AS TO POLICY WITH RESPECT TO COMMUNISTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. L. SMITH (Calgary West): I should like to repeat a question I have asked for the last two days, as to what has been done or what is the government policy with respect to the exclusion of known communists at our ports of entry. The Secretary of State for External Affairs was kind enough to tell me that when the Minister of Mines and Resources returned I would have an answer; but surely, sir, this must be a matter of government policy, and surely somebody can answer the question. This is Thursday; tomorrow is Friday, and then we go into next week. I should like to be sure I get an answer this week.

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I did not prepare any special answer to the question, but I can say this much. The sections of the act and the regulations have been under review by the members of the government in the light of known conditions with respect to certain persons who could be described as known communists, who were believed to be coming to Canada for the purpose of exercising here activities which under the Taft-Hartley Act they can no longer exercise in the United States. The decision has been that the immigration officers are to be asked or directed to take the view that under the existing law and regulations such persons are not admissible to Canada.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Then may I ask a supplementary question, to make sure I understand the position. My impression has been that we have always had the authority, by statute or by regulation, and that there are now instructions that these shall be enforced. Is that the simple position?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: The position is simply that we have no more authority at the present time because of this view taken by the government than we had before, but that the present circumstances, known to us at this time, seem to make the law and the regulations applicable in such a way as to prevent the granting of entry to Canada to such persons.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): In short, we have always had the authority but have not used it?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: We always had the authority if we had the evidence that the individual to whom it was to be applied came within the terms of the statute and regulations, and we now feel there are a number of persons with respect to whom we have that evidence.

Mr. THATCHER: Then I should like to ask a supplementary question. Has the government recently taken any steps to cancel the immigration permits of American communist labour leaders already in Canada?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I am afraid that is a matter of departmental administration, and I would not like to speak from what is my general impression. I would wish to have that impression confirmed by the officers of the immigration branch. I will ask them for accurate information about it. I hope the minister will be in his seat tomorrow. If he is not I shall endeavour to obtain the information from his department.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): You might include England; I am thinking of Pollitt.

Mr. ROWE: In view of this question as to the entry of communists into Canada, would the minister tell us what types of communists, different from those already here, might be kept out?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I should not like to express any opinion with respect to a comparison between individuals in Canada and those outside.

PENSION ACT

RATES OF PENSION FOR DISABILITY AND DEATH—SALARIES OF PENSION COMMISSIONERS

Hon. MILTON F. GREGG (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved the second reading of Bill No. 126, to amend the Pension Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in submitting this bill for second reading I shall try this afternoon to confine my remarks to points related directly to the bill and of interest in general to all members of the house, since a more detailed examination will, I hope, be possible by the members of the select committee.

It is a bill proposing certain amendments. The general principle I think might be indicated as follows: a greater degree of compensation to those who have suffered on account of disability or death due to war services in the armed forces of our country. The bill is designed to increase that compensation and to effect other changes intended to improve the administration of the Pension Act.

There is another subsidiary principle implied in the bill which was not recognized in the original Pension Act of 1916. In the middle of the old war one might perhaps guess that the terms of the original act were worked out in relation to the practice after former campaigns, campaigns in which a professional army went off, did its work, came back and was demobilized; and the scale for compensation for pension for various ranks was worked out bearing a direct relationship to the pay of those ranks when in the service.

Following 1916 the first upward adjustment of pensions was made in the year 1919. Then for the first time there came a recognition of new factors inherent in the make-up of a citizen armed force. Ever since then all ranks up to ex junior officers—here captains or equivalents—all received the same rate of pension, and all increases have been concentrated entirely upon that group of pensioners. That policy is continued in this bill.

I might say there that the proposed new basic scale of pension for disability and death is in excess of the rate being paid at the moment for captains. Following are the total numbers of awards payable at present to officers of the rank of major, or equivalent, and above. This is for both wars. The total of such officers now pensionable is 1,824 out of a total of pensionable all ranks of 199,250. I might refer here to a little bit of ancient history on pensions. In accordance with recommendations of a special parliamentary committee as far back as 1919 a bonus of twenty per cent over the basic rate of pension then in force for the rank and file was authorized by the Pension Act of 1919. The cost of living index for that year was 126·5. In view of the possibility that in future years prices might recede, the committee was of the opinion that increases in pension should be in the main effected by way of a bonus to be continued until such time as the cost of living warranted its modification.

This bonus was increased to fifty per cent by the 1920 amendments to the Pension Act, and authorized in such a manner as to make the pensions for others ranks equal to that of lieutenant, or equivalent. The cost of living index for July 1920 was 150·6. The average for the year 1920 was 145·5.

The bonus as such was authorized each year until June 27, 1925 when schedules A and B of the statute were re-enacted so as to include the bonus in the basic rate of pension, and this has remained in effect notwithstanding subsequent reductions in the cost of living. The cost of living index was 119·8 in June, 1925.

[Mr. Gregg.]

Recently, questions have been asked me outside the house somewhat as follows: Is it the government's intention that this present proposed increase constitute a new basic scale of pensions, or is it intended that the increase slide up and down in direct relation to the future cost of living index?

The answer to that and similar questions is this: The government does propose in this bill an increase in the basic rate of pension and it is not intended that it should fluctuate according to the changing cost of living index.

I should like now to give the house a brief outline of the main proposals contained in Bill No. 126 to amend the Pension Act.

Amendment 1 can be dealt with by saying that it will be appreciated by hon. members that a member of the forces cannot be considered as an applicant for pension until his retirement or discharge from service is effected. After world war I some members of the permanent force were retired one day and retaken on strength the following day, and awarded pension for service disabilities. Many who served in world war II elected to serve with the interim force and continued with the active force. They have never been boarded for retirement or discharge from service in world war II. There appears no reason why their claims should not be considered, and the proposed amendment will rectify the situation.

Amendment 2: This amendment gives effect to the proclamation in the Canada Gazette whereby, for purposes of the Pension Act, the first day of April 1947 was declared as the date of termination of world war II.

Amendment 3: The amendment provides for an increase in the salary of the chairman, as recommended by the Gordon commission report of July 1946. It also provides for the deputy chairman and the commissioners.

Amendments 4 and 5: The explanatory notes are sufficient; I believe they are completely self-explanatory.

Amendment 6: This amendment provides for an equalizing increase in the scale of awards of helplessness allowance to officers of the rank of captain to lieutenant-colonel, or equivalent, inclusive, as otherwise they would have received less than the total pension payment to those of lower rank.

Amendments 7 and 8 are to provide for certain necessary administrative changes. Amendment 9 provides additional compensation to a parent. When a member of the forces died and left a widow or a widow and children entitled to pension, and in addition a dependent parent, the act provided an award of $180 per annum to such parent. In 1944 this was increased to $360 and it is now proposed to make a further increase to $480 per year.

Amendment 10 is a much needed amendment to meet a few special cases. I will give hon. members an example. A South African veteran in receipt of 100 per cent pension died but his widow was not eligible for an award under British ministry regulations. This amendment will establish equality for all Canadians who served with the Canadian contingents in the South African war on the same basis as those who served in world wars I and II.

In the case of amendments 11 and 12, the former is mainly administrative.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am sorry to interrupt the minister, but on second reading of a bill only the principle should be discussed. I suggest that if the minister wishes to cover the amendments he just mention them rather than discuss them in detail.

Mr. BENTLEY: If it is within the right of the house to give unanimous consent for the minister to continue to do what he is doing, I suggest that it be given.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I would like to have the minister proceed as he has planned to proceed, because he is doing a good job.

Mr. SPEAKER: I suggest to the minister and to the house that the rules should be followed. There will be an opportunity in committee to discuss the bill clause by clause. Only the principle of the bill should be discussed on second reading, otherwise we shall be exposing ourselves to having discussion twice of the same subject.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Could not Your Honour make an exception in this particular case, inasmuch as the minister is ready to make his speech?

Mr. GREGG: I shall be glad to comply with your ruling, sir, and to resume before the parliamentary committee the giving of the information with respect to the amendments.

Mr. KNOWLES: On the point of order, may I point out that it has been more or less agreed that once second reading has been given this bill it will be referred to the committee on veterans affairs, after which it comes back to the committee of the whole. As there is so much interest in this matter perhaps unanimous consent might be noted by Your Honour and the minister permitted to proceed.

Mr. ROWE: The Speaker's ruling is not debatable.

Mr. SPEAKER: Hon. members will realize that if unanimous consent is given to do this the house will be exposing itself to a discussion of the clauses of the bill when it is up for second reading. I suggest to hon. members that as this bill is to be referred to a committee and then brought back to the committee of the whole house it would be preferable if the minister and the house would abide by the rules and discuss only the principle of the bill.

Mr. GREGG: I think the situation might be met if in my further remarks I covered certain points which hon. members have in mind.

As intimated by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) in the house on February 16, these increases will, to a greater or lesser degree, affect about 400,000 beneficiaries under the Pension Act, and with the co-operation of the house it is hoped to get the adjustment cheques in the mail by the end of this month.

The March pension cheque will be on the present scale and will be issued on the regular date. It is planned that the adjustment cheque will be a separate one and will practically be the equivalent of one month's pension. With that done as indicated, regular monthly pension cheques will be able to reflect monthly increases starting April 30 and continue in regular order from then on.

During the course of the debate last Monday the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Brooks) proposed that there should be a standing committee of the house on veterans affairs, and subsequent speakers endorsed the proposal. I know the suggestion is not a new one, but it is one which I as a newcomer would like to consider. In the light of the experience to be gained in the committee which is now set up I hope to be in a much better position to form an opinion later on in the session.

The hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. McKay) stated:

> Pensions and allowances still remain at the basic rate which was struck in 1926.

Actually the present pension scale was established in 1920 when a bonus of 50 per cent was added to the basic rate and the cost of living index for July of that year was 150·6.

Mr. BROOKS: The minister says the cost of living index was 150; what was the basic year?

Mr. GREGG: That was 1920.

Mr. BROOKS: What year was 100?

Mr. GREGG: I cannot answer that question but I shall try to get the answer. The bonus was continued at the same rate until 1925 when it was included in the basic rate and it has remained unchanged.

The hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch) was satisfied that the terms of reference of the committee would be wide enough to permit all matters relating to my department to come before the committee. I have already given assurance that such will be the case. In connection with his observations relating to the present procedure of reducing pensions of veterans of world war I when examinations show a reduction in their disability, I will welcome a full inquiry by the committee at the appropriate time.

In the meantime I should like to refer to a few figures relating only to world war I. I am sure these will be of interest to the house. These include the period from January 1, 1947 to January 1, 1948 and cover examinations in Canada, a few in the United States and in Great Britain. The figures are:

Pensions increased	2,274
Pensions decreased	147
No change on re-examination	2,913
Continued without change	64,402
Total existing pensions in force as at December 31, 1947	69,736

During the same calendar year there were 191 new awards of pensions to veterans of world war I and 88 reinstated on pension, or a total of 279 new awards as at the end of the last calendar year.

In the course of his remarks the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green) quoted figures supplied by my department regarding the number of cases wherein the Canadian pension commission had ruled an award of pension was not indicated because the condition claimed for was ruled to be pre-enlistment in origin and not aggravated during service. In so doing he stated that these men were "taken into the forces as fit and discharged as unfit." His assumption in that regard is not quite correct. The majority were not discharged as "unfit," but were discharged on "demobilization." Full details in that regard will be readily available to the members of the special committee. Every Canadian who incurred injury or disease resulting in disability during service is entitled to, and will receive, compensation in accordance with the assessment of the degree of service disablement as provided for in the Pension Act. That is mandatory, the responsibility of the Canadian pension commission, and is a trust which I know they endeavour to discharge with sympathy and understanding.

The hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross) asked about the report of the McCann committee. That report is available and was tabled in the house last Tuesday.

[Mr. Gregg.]

When the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Pearkes) referred to the adjustment cheques he said: "Let us get them out now." I am glad to have the assurance of his co-operation in that regard. The staff of the pension commission and of the chief treasury officer who have worked long nights and hours of overtime in the preparation of these cheques will be gratified to know that their spontaneous voluntary efforts are so well appreciated. He also mentioned some widows and orphans of Canadian members of the ferry command "who are in much strained circumstances." I am advised all dependents were notified in writing of the provisions of part X of the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act and I shall be pleased to have full inquiry made on behalf of any such case if the hon. member will send me the necessary particulars.

It was not my intention to speak at length, Mr. Speaker, but only to touch on a few of the major points relating to the bill which were brought out during the previous debate. As I stated at the close of that debate, "the record of Hansard will be studied and the points brought forward will be submitted to the committee." That discussion will not be limited. It may cover all phases of the Pension Act and of the various groups, merchant seamen, fire fighters, and so on, who are provided for in the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act, which is subject, in many respects, to the provisions of the former act. I have pleasure, Mr. Speaker, in now moving the second reading of the bill.

Mr. G. S. WHITE (Hastings-Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the members of the steering committee of the veterans committee have more or less arrived at an agreement whereby all parties in the house will make every effort to facilitate the second reading of this bill. As far as this party is concerned we hope that the debate will be limited to one speaker, but if other speakers rise that is, of course, something that we cannot control. I assure the minister that there will be no attempt on our part to hold up or delay the second reading, because we want to see the bill go forward to the veterans committee.

The main feature of Bill No. 126 is its provision for an increase in the basic rate of pension. Other clauses of the bill are of importance, but the one in which all members of the house are most vitally concerned is the one providing for an increase in the basic rate.

I presume, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Gregg) who has introduced and is sponsoring this bill feels that the increase it provides for is fair and reasonable and sufficient for the veterans. No doubt the bill has been most carefully studied by the cabinet, and therefore I take it that its provisions represent the opinion of the cabinet that this small increase is sufficient and is the amount to which the veterans are entitled. If I am wrong in that opinion, if the Minister of Veterans Affairs or any other member of the cabinet is not satisfied with the increase that is granted, we can only assume that it is the treasury board who are dictating the amount of the increase to be made in the basic pension rate.

No one will dispute my statement that this increase is long overdue. As the minister stated a few moments ago, no change has been made in the rate since 1925-26, despite the fact that today we are living in an entirely different world which has seen a huge increase in the cost of living and a great increase in the wages of all employees. I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that during the war years a very large number of employees and wage earners in this country were granted cost-of-living bonus, but no such provision or allowance was made to the veterans who received a pension. I well remember when the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley), then minister of finance, announced on introducing his budget that the pension paid to a veteran would be taxed as income, and the veteran did pay tax on his pension. True in a later budget that tax was removed. But today, after all these years since 1925, no adjustment has been made in the basic rate of pension. After the veteran has been denied the cost-of-living bonus during all the war years, and after he has had to pay income tax on his pension, the Minister of Veterans Affairs now brings in a bill providing for a slight increase in the basic rate of pension which in my opinion is totally inadequate. If there are any members of the house who consider that this increase is adequate, just, fair and sufficient for the veteran, I should be glad if he would get up right now and say so. This country can well afford to pay a larger increase. When one remembers the proposals of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) to beautify Ottawa and surrounding district as a national memorial to the veterans who gave their lives in world war II, one wonders how the government can undertake such an expenditure, running into hundreds of millions of dollars over the years which it will take to carry out this scheme, and yet hedge and quibble when it comes to raising the basic rate of pension. I wonder how many veterans, veteran organizations, soldiers clubs or associations have been consulted as to what kind of national memorial we should have to the veterans who gave their lives in world war II. It has always been my opinion, Mr. Speaker, that any national memorial to the veterans of world war II should be in such a form that the veterans or their dependents would derive some benefit from it. I have suggested several times in this house that the awarding of a large number of scholarships spread across the country, open only to children of veterans of world war II, would over the years yield a return far beyond the cost and would not in any way amount to the huge sum which it is proposed to expend in order to beautify the city of Ottawa as a national war memorial.

The general public are keenly interested in this bill, and that has been indicated by the wave of protests from across the entire country after the announcement made by the Prime Minister during the session in December. Apparently the general public do not approve of this small increase, and we had to wait for nearly three months before the Prime Minister made another announcement when he raised the increase from $10 to $12 a month.

The government and all members of parliament have received many letters, briefs and resolutions protesting against this small increase. During the last two weeks members have received copies of many resolutions from municipal councils who have taken the matter up and passed resolutions urging that the basic rate for a 100 per cent disability be placed at $100.

The Minister of Veterans Affairs a few months ago referred to the way in which the increase in bonus was given in 1920 and following, up to 1925. I find in The Legionary of February 1948 an article entitled "Pension increases are not adequate", and in that article the writer sets out certain information as to how the 1926 or 1925 rate, whichever is correct, was arrived at. I should like to read a couple of paragraphs from it. First I should say that in this article the legion proposes a basic pension rate of $100 a month, and the article goes on to say:

> Such a revision would be entirely equitable because it is based on the approximate rise in the cost of living since 1926 when the present pension rates were established by incorporation of the existing cost-of-living bonus. The index then stood at 121·8; today it stands at 146. Anything less than a 25 per cent increase would simply lower the standard of living of the pensioner, who is unable to support himself by any other means, to less than subsistence level. There are indications that the cost of living will mount still higher, in which case some additional supplementation may be required later. Such supplementation, we suggest, should be in the form of a cost-of-living bonus.

There is further justification for such an increase to be found in the wage scale of common labour. When the pension rates were established after the first great war they were based on the medically-assessed ability of a veteran to take employment in the common labour market. Thus there is a definite relation between the 100 per cent pension rate and the wages applicable to common labour. The average rate for such labour is somewhere between 50 and 60 cents per hour in rural areas and 65 to 85 cents per hour in urban areas.

A low average for the dominion would be 55 cents per hour. A monthly wage at this rate for an 8-hour day, 5½-day week, would be approximately $100. A 25 per cent increase over present rates would approximate this figure.

That seems to me a very fair and reasonable comparison, and I would point out to the minister that at the time this article was written the index stood at 146. Today I believe it is over 150 and will probably go higher. I would also point out that the index as it is given out does not, in my opinion, represent the true increase in the cost of living. This article shows that wages in the common labour market were taken into consideration, and if today the minister, or whoever worked out this formula or basis for the increase, is using the same method or formula, I hope he will tell the house when he closes the debate.

I would also like the minister to put on Hansard, if he can, a table giving a breakdown of the $75 a month and a breakdown of the $87 a month showing how they are apportioned for the support and maintenance of the disabled veteran.

Among the many letters that members have received is one from the Native Sons of Canada. This letter set forth the whole problem in a plain and simple way. The letter is dated February 7, 1948, and I do not think any member of this house could state the problem any better than it is set forth here:

This is an open letter on what should be a closed question—the debt of Canada to her disabled veterans and their dependents.

The rising cost of living has accentuated their plight and gained them the promise of a pension increase of $10 a month. But this crumb from the table of Canadian plenty is not nearly enough.

The whole approach to the problem is wrong. The veteran's pension is not a gratuity. It is the wages of war. It is the attempt to pay a debt that cannot be measured in dollars and cents—our liability for lives lost and bodies battered wherever Canada's men fought our fight. We cannot replace the war torn mind and body nor bring back life to the fallen. We cannot make blind eyes see, put back the arms and legs that have gone, heal all the wounds and ailments incurred in our defence. We cannot restore the son to his mother, the husband to his wife, the father to his children.

[Mr. White (Hastings-Peterborough).]

What compensation then can we make? The very least we can do is to give these disabled veterans or their dependents the equivalent of their lost earning power—what as average Canadian workers they would receive in their pay envelope if war had not destroyed or diminished their ability to work. We should give these men and their families everything they would have had in the normal course of events had not the ruthless hand of war ripped them out of their accustomed place in civilian life in Canada.

The people of this country expect their elected representatives, before declaring a surplus and reducing taxation, to pay the debts of Canada. This is the greatest. For the honour of Canada —pay it!

One of the amendments to the act mentions the case of a widow whose deceased husband had a disability of fifty per cent or over. In such cases the widow receives a pension after the death of her husband. That is quite proper. But it has always appeared to me that there is a certain discrimination here because the widow of a veteran who had a disability of less than fifty per cent receives no pension after the death of her husband. Apparently the government has recognized liability and obligation to the widow. If so, why restrict this obligation to the widows of pensioners who had a disability of fifty per cent or over? No doubt the majority of pensioners have a disability of less than fifty per cent, and I think it is true to say that after the death of the veteran his widow then is probably more in need of assistance than during his lifetime. The only assistance which the widow of a veteran with a disability of less than fifty per cent can receive is under the War Veterans Allowance Act, and then she has to pass the means test.

I recommend to the minister that he give most careful and earnest consideration to an amendment to provide that widows of veterans in receipt of pension, with a disability of less than fifty per cent, shall receive a pension at least equal to the amount payable to widows under the war veterans act, without the means test. I would also suggest to the minister, inasmuch as he mentioned today the matter of veterans of world war I, that there should be some provision in the act to make it impossible from now on for the pension payable to any veteran of world war I to be cancelled or reduced; also an amendment by which all pensioners would receive automatic increases when they reach a certain age, irrespective of whether their disability is due to gunshot wound or not. So far as this party is concerned, Mr. Speaker, we are in favour of and advocate a basic pension rate of $100 per month for 100 per cent disability. This is no new statement on the part of this party, because it has been advocated by our leader on many occasions and by many members in this house since the 1945 election.

With reference to the remarks the minister made about the sending out of adjustment cheques, I was not quite clear as to their import. I would ask him to state, when he closes the debate, if it is true that these cheques are now being made out and are to be sent out early in April; because if that is correct, it indicates to me that the government is firmly resolved that there is to be no further increase in the basic rate of pension.

The minister also mentioned the various scales of pension paid to privates, non-commissioned officers and junior officers as compared with the higher rates of pensions paid to the senior officers. As I pointed out only a few days ago when speaking on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, there is a tremendous difference there. A private receives $900, whereas a senior officer receives $2,700 a year; and now under the new rate the private will receive $1,044 while the senior officer will still receive $2,700. Why is there this great discrimination? Why the difference between the amount paid to junior officers and privates and the amount paid to senior officers? In world war II we found in the ranks men from every profession, station and walk of life. We found the same condition among the officers of world war II. How can the minister continue this unjust discrimination? A private may be receiving $900 a year and a brigadier $2,700; yet in civil life both engaged in the same occupation—bank clerks, labourers, teachers, or farmers. Why should we carry into civil life this class distinction which has no place in this democratic country? For I say to the minister that the payment of these large pensions to higher ranks makes it most difficult for the people of Canada to understand why the department can approve them and yet quibble, chisel and grant an increase of only $12 a month to the privates, n.c.o.'s and junior officers. I for one am most anxious that the minister should make some explanation on this point. After all, the loss of a leg, an arm or an eye—or any other disability—should demand the same payment to the private as to the brigadier. There is no question that the private went through far more hardship than any brigadier, and each may have suffered the same pain or torture as a result of his disability.

The bill also provides for an increase in pay to the thirteen pension commissioners, $1,000 a year, from $7,000 to $8,000. The estimates tabled a day or so ago showed that the commissioners received in salaries for the past year the small sum of $100,500. It is most unfortunate that the minister has seen fit in this bill to include an increase of $1,000 to the commissioners when in the same bill he is granting an increase of only $12 in the basic rate of pension. There are few in this house who will not agree that $7,000 is not a bad salary. A short time ago all county court judges in the province of Ontario received a salary of only $5,000 a year. A bill was introduced in this house by which the salary of county court judges was increased to $6,666 a year. Apparently the government thought that this was a proper and fair salary for a judge under present conditions. A judge is one who has had long experience in the law and who holds a high and important position in the community. He carries out the important duties of the judiciary which is the bulwark of democracy in our country. Even with the increase recently granted to judges, they are still below the present pay of the pension commissioners, which is $7,000; and it is now proposed to give them $8,000 a year.

In Ontario the magistrates receive from $5,000 to $7,000 a year. I think that the pay, work and responsibility of a judge or magistrate can be fairly compared with the pay, work and responsibility of a pension commissioner. Referring in this connection to the pensions advocate, my understanding was that it was his duty to protect the interests and welfare of the veteran; certainly the veteran needs somebody there to protect him. This important person, the chief pensions advocate, up until this year received the sum of $5,100 a year, but I believe there is an increase bringing him up to $5,680. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that if the pension commissioners are worth $8,000, then the chief pensions advocate, who has all these thousands of cases across the country to look after, is worth considerably more than the amount he is receiving.

Up to 1944 the pension commissioners received $6,000 a year. Either at the end of 1944 or in 1945 they were granted an increase of $1,000 and were paid $7,000 for the years 1945, 1946 and 1947. Apparently the commissioners, or whoever were responsible, were able to convince the minister at that time that, owing to the increased cost of living and other conditions, they were entitled to an increase. I am not arguing about that. They received their increase. But at the same time I would point out that the poor veteran who had to bear the increased cost of living and everything else received no increase in his pension. Now the commissioners are going to be granted another $1,000, which will make a total increase of 33⅓ per cent over their salary in 1944. How can the minister justify this further increase of $1,000 for the commissioners, and at the same time justify an increase of $12 a month to a veteran? Under the proposed new scale a totally disabled veteran will receive the huge sum of $1,044 a year; and I would remind you, Mr. Speaker, that when the pension board declares a veteran a one hundred per cent disability he has to be practically dead. Yet here we are going to give the commissioners another $1,000, which is only $44 a year less than the total amount we give a one hundred per cent disability pensioner. I think the house will be much interested in any explanation the minister can give justifying this increase, in view of the increase granted in 1945 and also in view of the miserly increase given the disabled veterans.

There are many matters which will come before the veterans affairs committee. I wish to mention only one, which was also mentioned by the minister today, when he referred to certain remarks made by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green) as to the pre-enlistment condition. The minister questioned the figures the hon. member put on Hansard showing that some 85,000 young Canadians who were taken in as fit and discharged as unfit were unable to qualify for pensions. The minister thought that figure was wrong. That may be so, but I still say to the minister that there are far too many veterans who were discharged because of disability but who are not in receipt of pensions because the officials of the pension board have ruled that they were suffering from pre-enlistment disabilities which the medical officers were not able to find on enlistment. I would mention also the reaction of many applicants to the manner in which they were treated when applying for pensions. It seems to me every veteran is entitled to every consideration from the officials of the pension board. A veteran should not be shoved around and treated as a lead swinger. In far too many cases the veteran comes back from a pension board hearing embittered by his treatment, full of resentment over the technicalities that have been raised against him, angry because no notice has been taken of the reports or findings of his family doctor or the local medical representative of the board; and even where a pension is granted, in many cases the amount is a mere pittance and not a proper recompense as far as the disability is concerned. The people of Canada are most anxious that every veteran entitled to a pension should get one, and at a proper rate.

[Mr. White (Hastings-Peterborough).]

I was very glad to hear what the minister had to say on the same point because, as I mentioned a moment ago, the public are not satisfied with the small increase in the basic pension. In every case the veteran should have the benefit of the doubt, which he does not receive today. He should be treated with respect and dignity in deference to the great service he has rendered Canada. I repeat that we of this party approve the legion brief, which proposes a basic rate of $100 per month for one hundred per cent disability.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would especially appeal to all veteran members of this house, irrespective of their party allegiance, and remind them that they have a special duty to perform to their former comrades. Today they are in a position of responsibility and have it within their power to see that a further increase in the basic rate is granted the veterans. I would remind them that veterans do not recognize race, colour, creed or political party. All veterans belong to the same fraternity. Let us who have these responsibilities not fail our former comrades whom we were so glad to have at our side in the days when the going was very tough. And remember, we may need every veteran again in the not too far distant future.

Mr. G. H. CASTLEDEN (Yorkton): Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to amend the Pension Act; to authorize, among other things, an increase in the basic rate of pension; to make statutory certain increases in the salaries of the pension commissioners and other officials, and in one or two minor details to make changes which the minister has said will increase the efficiency and wipe out some of the deficiencies of the old act.

The emergency of the present situation demands that the veterans affairs committee get to work and that this house do something with respect to increasing pensions as rapidly as possible. We are trying to co-operate in getting this bill before the veterans committee in order that they may make their report to the house and the bill may become law, so that these people will have some relief. I believe everyone recognizes this emergency. I think the people of Canada generally have been critical of the government for its failure to act rapidly in this matter. The rapid increase in the cost of living, particularly in the last three years, has made it almost impossible for a veteran in receipt of a pension to carry on. But in our haste to get this legislation through I think the house and the committee must be careful to see that the amounts to be paid are adequate, to see that they will really do the job and make it possible for those who are dependent upon war pensions to live properly and decently, as they should.

It is not surprising that demands like these should be made, when the government has allowed the cost of living to go up by removing their controls. I understand the present basic pension rate was struck about 1926, and I think we all realize that at that time the legislators of this country believed that basic rate would guarantee a certain standard of living. But as soon as you allow the cost of living to get completely out of line with that basic pension, in effect you are completely repudiating everything you assured these people they would get. As it stands today the pension is completely inadequate. I believe the conditions which exist among the families of many pensioners right across this dominion, because of the inadequacy of the pension, are a disgrace to Canada. It is a blot on our record that these conditions should be allowed to continue to exist until March, 1948.

The inadequacy of this pension I think has been pretty well proved by the previous speaker, and I think even by the statement of the minister when he set out the basis upon which the present rates were set. As has been said already, today $900 a year is practically nothing. The increase from $75 a month to $87 a month for a one hundred per cent disability pensioner just does not mean anything. It does not meet the requests of the veterans themselves; it does not meet the requests of the veterans organizations, and it certainly does not meet the situation which now exists. We are hoping that when the bill as it stands today goes before the veterans committee a fight will be put up to see that the pension is placed on a proper basis, one which will meet the situation as it is today.

The government has gone on record as believing in decontrol, and therefore it would appear that it does not want to control the cost of living. If it does not, then whatever basic pension it sets can be easily upset within a few months.

The other feature we advocate and shall continue to advocate is that the basic pension be set high enough. I agree with a previous speaker who said that $100 a month for a 100 per cent disability is about adequate in March 1948. The needs of the veteran will not be properly met if we leave it at that. Some machinery must be brought into action within the act under which those who are responsible for administration can guarantee to veterans who are suffering, disabled and helpless that they will be permitted to live decently and well, and to know that they have the form of security which the people of Canada would wish them to have.

It is necessary that there be geared to the pension some scheme by which a sliding scale would become operative, so that in the event of an increase in the cost of living the pension would automatically increase. There should be provision for either a cost of living bonus or a grant of some kind. It is our duty, and it is the special responsibility of the House of Commons, to see that those who have made sacrifices to save this country in time of war, and who as a result of their efforts are disabled, shall not suffer.

We must keep constantly in mind the needs of war veterans, discharged for medical reasons, a large percentage of whom are psychopathic cases. I believe that speaking generally the pension commission has ruled that such cases are not considered to be pensionable. Many of these veterans returned from the war suffering from nervous disorder. They have tried to carry on with their work, but have been unable to do so. On occasions they have to lay off for weeks or months at a time, but they are not permitted to receive a pension from the government. Special consideration must be given to these cases. There are altogether too many of them, and I hope that when the committee considers revision of the Pension Act, and a revision of the regulations under which the pension commission operates, it will see to it that more is done for these deserving cases.

It is not right that men who have returned from war in a disabled condition, and who are unable to carry on in their work, should be denied a pension when it is clear that their disability has resulted from or been aggravated by their war activities. Not only are veterans and veterans organizations asking for this revision, but boards of trade, village and city councils and other organizations are stirred by the plight of many pensioners living within their midst.

It seems to me the farther we get away from war the more likely we are to forget the men who fought. In the report given this afternoon by the minister I was surprised to learn that in 1947 there were 147 veterans of world war I whose pensions were decreased. Many pensioners of world war I who feel that their disability has increased and that they should make application for increased pensions fear that if an examination is held and they are at the mercy of the commission their pensions may be decreased. That condition should not exist.

The average age at the present time of a pensioner from world war I must be about 59 years. Surely pensioners who have suffered disability from the first world war are more likely in later years to feel the effects of the disability they suffered in that campaign. Those men should not be deterred, by fear of the commission making a reduction in their pension, from making application for increases.

I believe the promise of the government is inherent in any basic pension scheme. Certain standards should be maintained. When the cost of living goes up, the promise of the people or the government is being repudiated and the pensioners are not able to maintain the standard of living to which they are entitled. If we look at it in that way we will see to it that these men are given a proper pension and some form of security which will assure to them that they, their children and their families will not have to suffer as a result of their war service. I know of no other way in which that security can be guaranteed to them.

There are many other points which could be discussed and with which a committee of the house could deal when this matter is placed before it. We would like to see the bill go to the committee as quickly as possible. Naturally the committee will consist of a majority of government members, and as a result it will be difficult for members in the opposition to introduce amendments which would involve the expenditure of public money. Under the rules this is not permitted.

I can assure the government and all connected with it that we expect when the committee deals with this legislation it will bring back to the house a bill which can be considered adequate. If the bill is adequate to meet the situation, the support of this group will continue: if it is not, there will be opposition.

Mr. VICTOR QUELCH (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, in order to expedite the passage of the bill at this time, I should like to be brief in my remarks. Ever since the announcement by the former minister of veterans affairs in July last to the effect that the committee on veterans affairs would be set up at this session, veterans have hoped that the long overdue amendment to the Pension Act would be brought down. I am afraid the present bill will fall far short of their expectations.

In the first place, the increase in the amount of pension is considered too low. Second, none of the recommendations made by the committee on veterans affairs in 1946, passed unanimously—and later vetoed by the minister—has been included in the bill. Third, a number of recommendations already made by the legion and the national council of veterans affairs have been ignored.

However, since it is desirable that the measure should pass as quickly as possible in order that the payment of these increases in pensions may be made, perhaps it is fortunate that very little of a controversial nature, in addition to the increase in pensions, appears in the bill. I should hope however that the Minister of Veterans Affairs is in a position to assure the house that this bill is not the last word in pension legislation for the present session.

All veteran organizations have urged that the increase in pension for all beneficiaries under the act should not be less than 25 per cent. The hon. member for Hastings-Peterborough (Mr. White) quoted from The Legionary and built up a strong case for an increase of 25 per cent. Other organizations have emphasized the fact that the increase should not be less than 33 per cent, and I have received a number of resolutions from boards of trade in my constituency urging that the basic rate for a 100 per cent disability pensioner be set at not less than $100 a month. The present bill provides for an increase of only 16 per cent and therefore falls considerably short of those recommendations.

The veterans organizations are asking at this time that the pensions of veterans of world war I be stabilized. I was glad to have the assurance of the minister that when the pension bill is before the committee a thorough investigation will be made of this whole question. I think all of us agree that it is a deplorable situation that veterans of world war I, whose average age is around 59 or 60 years, are called up before a board and told that, since their disability has decreased, there will be a reduction in their pension. Surely when a veteran of world war I has reached the age of 59 or 60 years he should be assured that no action will be taken to reduce the amount of his pension. The present rates should be stabilized as a floor and the only revisions in the future should be upward.

In 1946 the veterans affairs committee voted in favour of deleting the deadline of April 1, 1944, affecting widows, wives and children of veterans of the first great war, but the Minister of Veterans Affairs vetoed that action. It should be remembered that, after careful consideration, the committee unanimously agreed that the deadline should be struck out. I suggest to the minister that legislation should be brought down this year to take care of that matter. I do not say that it should be included in this bill, because we want to get this one through as quickly as possible. The cost to the government would be insignificant, but on the other hand it would mean a great deal to many veterans and dependents who would benefit from the change.

It is also well to remember that in 1946 the committee voted in favour of inserting in the act a clause which would establish the presumption that an applicant's condition as recorded at the time of enlistment was in fact his true condition and that any subsequent deterioration be pensionable. While that received the unanimous approval of the committee, it was later vetoed by the minister. It has been argued by some that it would not make very much difference in the decisions of the pension commission. If that is true, and since various veteran organizations are keen to have such a provision in the act, I think the minister could very well see that the act is amended along that line. As I say, the members of the pension commission do not think it would make very much difference. It would give a certain assurance to war veterans if that were done.

War veterans allowances do not come under the pension administration but, since veterans who are unable to qualify for a pension have to seek help under the War Veterans Allowance Act, one might say that that act is the last resort. We feel that action should be taken this session to bring about a substantial increase in war veterans allowances and either remove the means test or permit additional income up to the amount of the income tax exemption.

I think the time has come when we should try to clarify the situation with regard to imperial veterans. Three days ago I had a case brought to my attention of a Canadian who went to the United Kingdom the latter part of 1913 because his father was seriously ill. He was living in England when war was declared and enlisted in the imperials. He was wounded and received a pension. After the war he returned to Canada and became domiciled in this country. His pension was stopped. Apparently he cannot get a pension from England, because they say he is now a Canadian citizen and that he was domiciled in Canada before the war and has been domiciled here since the war.

Apparently he cannot get any help under the War Veterans Allowance Act, because a veteran who served with the imperial forces must have served in the second world war to obtain a veteran's allowance. It is contended that this man was not domiciled in Canada at the time war was declared, having gone to England a few months before. They stop his pension in the United Kingdom because he was domiciled in Canada before the war, while in Canada they take the stand that he was not in Canada when war was declared. This man seems to fall between two sections. I bring this case to the attention of the pension authorities in the hope that the matter may be clarified. I hope that we shall be able to give the imperials a better deal than they have been given in the past.

I am not suggesting that blame rests with the Canadian government. I believe suggestions have been made by the Canadian government that they would be willing to give certain benefits to imperials if similar benefits were given to Canadians in England. That is, they are willing to act on a reciprocal basis. In the meantime, these imperials have to suffer. As I have said already, I want to expedite this bill and therefore I shall make what comments I want to make when the bill is in committee.

Mr. G. A. CRUICKSHANK (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a word in connection with this bill in order that it may not be said that private members on this side of the house are not interested. I want to compliment the two previous speakers upon having approached this subject in a non-partisan manner. I passed up a most important meeting this afternoon in so far as I was concerned, in order to be here to express my opinion on this bill. I want to say to the house, through you, Mr. Speaker, that I consider it our duty to see that this bill gets to the committee immediately. However, I want to say that I do not think the bill goes far enough; it is not adequate.

In my opinion the best speech that has been made on this matter during this session was that made by a non-veteran, the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Gibson). The hon. member said that if we in Canada could find the sinews of war and the sinews of peace; if we were able to pay the interest on bonds bought by those who stayed at home, surely it was no alibi to say that we could not afford to pay an adequate pension to those who fought and gave so much for their country.

The bill goes a long way but I do not believe it goes far enough. There is one thing about the bill to which I object strenuously. I am not here to criticize the salaries being paid to the commissioners because I believe the labourer is worthy of his hire, but I do not think this or any other government is consistent when a bill is introduced to increase salaries by $1,000 a year when we are going to pay a totally disabled blind pensioner only approximately $1,000 a year. To me that does not make sense. In so far as my influence in the committee may go, and in so far as my ability may go I will do my utmost as a private member to see that we give an adequate reward, particularly to those who are disabled and to widows of veterans.

I do not think the present provisions go far enough. I do not think they go as far as the people of Canada want us to go. I do not think they go as far as our economic set-up permits us to go. In fairness to the minister, I think some criticism could be made of the previous speakers. One of them said the minister had vetoed a certain matter. We all know that a private member cannot introduce measures involving the expenditure of public money and that a cabinet minister has to persuade, first of all, the other members of the cabinet and then try to overcome that obnoxious little group called the treasury board. In anything that concerns the veteran I say that no one should be allowed to sit on the treasury board but a front-line soldier. not a desk soldier.

I shall say no more. I realize just how far a private member can go. But I, for one, coming from British Columbia, which has a higher percentage of enlistments than any other province—

Mr. PROBE: Are you sure of that?

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I am sure of it, and a higher percentage of veterans living within our province.

Mr. PROBE: That is a different matter.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I do not want the people to think the private members of this house from British Columbia sitting on this side are satisfied with a $12 increase in the pension for a totally disabled veteran. I do not want the veterans of Canada to think we are satisfied with the present situation of the war veteran's allowance, with its means test. If the war veteran's allowance means anything, why apply a means test to a soldier who has reached the age and circumstances that entitle him to the allowance? That is something I cannot understand.

I believe that the veterans committee can do great work, and in closing I wish to pay a tribute to the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) who got up in his own branch of the legion in Kamloops and said not to blame the members from British Columbia who sit on this side of the house but that pension and allowance increases should be decided by the house on an absolutely non-party vote, with each member free to express his own opinion. Anything that pertains to party should be left out of such a question, which should be decided entirely on its merits.

Mr. E. G. HANSELL (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I recognize that it is desirable to send this bill to the committee on veterans affairs as soon as possible and I shall therefore take but a moment to express my views.

Looking at such a bill, one thinks generally in terms of dollars and cents, whether we can afford to take chances in taxing the people in order to pay higher pensions and allowances. I say that may be the general way of viewing a measure of this kind, but that is not how I look at it. I view it on the basis of what I consider a very valuable principle, and the principle I have in mind is that any individual who, in time of war, volunteers in His Majesty's forces and offers his life for his country and is fortunate or unfortunate enough to serve in an actual theatre of war, should be guaranteed, upon his return to civil life, economic security for the rest of his life in return for offering his life for his country.

What I am going to say I say upon my own responsibility. But holding that principle, I say that a volunteer who serves in an actual theatre of war should be given, for the rest of his life, a pension which is at least equivalent to the average income of a Canadian citizen. That is perhaps a very wide view to take; perhaps it is extreme, and it is quite likely that someone will take out pencil and paper, do a little figuring, and then say, "Hansell, that is beyond all reason." But my answer is this: Is Canada able, through its productive machinery, to produce enough to distribute to every veteran the equivalent of the average income of Canadian citizens? That is how I analyse the question, and I believe that Canada can do just that.

I make this further suggestion, and I do it in all seriousness because I believe it is a vital one. I believe that any individual who volunteers in His Majesty's forces and serves in an actual theatre of war should, upon his return to civil life, be exempt from all taxation. That may be a new suggestion; I do not know whether it is or not. But it does seem to me a preposterous and a very selfish thing that these men, after facing shot and shell, should, upon their return, be taxed mainly perhaps for the purpose of paying for the war which they helped and fought to win. I make that suggestion, I say, in all seriousness. I say these returned men should be absolutely exempt from paying income tax and all other taxes, except perhaps in cases where they have investments other than their homes. That is a suggestion which I hope the veterans committee will take into consideration, and with these words, Mr. Speaker, I take my seat.

I have some convictions on this matter. It is no light thing for a man to offer his life for his country. I had three members of my own family do so. I am not boasting at all, but it is no light thing, even for those who remain at home, to go through the strain and stress and worry of not knowing what will happen to these young men as they serve in an actual theatre of war. This country is vast enough and wealthy enough and has potential production enough to offer such men security for life, and in that case I go so far as to say that much of our veterans affairs department could be scrapped. There would be no questions asked. All you would have to do would be to look up the two conditions required: Did they volunteer their lives? Did they enter an actual theatre of war? You would not need a pension commission for that. You would simply need a good clerk to look up the record, and instructions would then go forth.

Mr. BLACKMORE: And you would not need any psychiatrist.

Mr. HANSELL: No psychiatrist, no means test, nothing of the kind.

An hon. MEMBER: No parliamentary assistant.

Mr. HANSELL: Perhaps you could do away with the parliamentary assistant and perhaps with parliamentary committees. I am not saying there would not be a great deal in connection with the administration of veterans affairs, because there would still be those who did not volunteer; there would still be those who did not see an actual theatre of war, and you would still have to conduct the veterans affairs department. But as regards those who volunteered and faced death, to them belongs a life of comfort from now on.

Mr. H. W. HERRIDGE (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to speak in this debate, but I must rise and express opposition to the unsound proposals made by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell). I am quite sure that the men who served the country did not serve in a mercenary spirit and do not want to be treated for the rest of their lives as mercenary troops. I believe that the men, and the veterans organizations that represent them, want to see that those who were injured receive adequate compensation. They want to make certain that those who returned from the war shall have an opportunity to earn a decent living and obtain their security in that way. I also believe that they want the dependents of the veterans to be well cared for. Because of that, I support the remarks made by the various speakers this afternoon in relation to this bill. I will not repeat what many speakers have said. I think that is unnecessary. I believe, however, as the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank) has pointed out, that this bill does not go far enough, and I trust that when it goes before the veterans affairs committee we shall be able to secure some further amendments to this bill.

Mr. SPEAKER: If the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. GREGG: I am quite sure, Mr. Speaker, that the house would prefer that the various points raised by hon. gentlemen this afternoon should be studied carefully in detail when they are brought before the veterans affairs committee, but there are one or two points, as brought out by several hon. members, to which I should like to refer. One hon. member stated that veterans with 100 per cent disability were helpless, and another said that a 100 per cent pensioner is practically dead. I should like to correct that at once.

I happen to have an outline which bears on that; and of the high disability cases, including the 100 per cent, registered with the department, there are actually employed 54 per cent. I am not saying that is full-time, year-round employment, but they are employed at some times during the year. There are 34 per cent on treatment or under training for employment, five per cent unemployed, and seven per cent not accounted for.

I wanted to refute immediately the impression given that the high disability pensioner was a helpless case. It is not so.

Several hon. members spoke with regard to the incorporation in this bill of an increase for the chairman and members of the pension commission. The only comment I wish to make is that, before I entered this chamber, for the past two or three years, as hon. members know, there has been going on in all government departments, in co-operation with the civil service commission, under a special committee, an investigation into salaries from top to bottom, and that recommendations in this regard were not confined to my department but have been general. This was part of the whole and was partly put into effect, I believe, a year ago.

The hon. member for Hastings-Peterborough (Mr. White), if I understood him correctly, made the statement that many pensioners' widows did not have a pension. All widows are pensionable when the death of the husband is attributable to his pensionable disability.

I think, Mr. Speaker, I should like to leave the case there for the present and carry it forward to the veterans affairs committee.

Mr. GREEN: May I ask the minister a question? In his earlier remarks he questioned the figures I gave on Monday with regard to men who have been ruled out in their applications for pension on the ground that they had pre-enlistment disability. I could not hear distinctly what he said, but I believe it was to the effect that not all these men had been discharged from the forces on medical grounds. I should like to know whether that was the statement. If it was, could the minister tell us how many of these men were discharged because they were medically unfit? In that connection, I would point out to him that in each one of these cases—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The minister has closed the debate.

Mr. GREEN: But I must clarify the question, Mr. Speaker. In each one of these cases there is admittedly a disability, and it is not a post-war disability, but the disability which the commission says existed is based on a pre-enlistment condition.

Mr. GREGG: In my earlier remarks I did not question the quotation of the figures but rather the implication in the hon. member's statement on Monday, that all these veterans came out because they were unfit, whereas the great number of them came out under general demobilization. I will undertake to get a breakdown of those figures.

Mr. GREEN: But it is a fact, is it not, that the rulings against these veterans in each case were based on the fact that they were suffering from a pre-enlistment condition?

Mr. GREGG: I think I may be right in saying no, but I will check that.

Mr. GREEN: The minister will find he is absolutely wrong if he checks up the statement.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. We are not in committee. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the special committee on veterans affairs.

[Mr. Gregg.]

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

PROVISION FOR EMPLOYEES' PENSIONS, MINIMUM PRICE OF WHEAT DELIVERIES, ETC.

The house resumed, from Friday, February 27, consideration of the motion of Mr. Howe:

That it is expedient to present a bill to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, to authorize the board to provide pensions for members, officers and employees and to make provision for the increase of the fixed minimum price on wheat deliveries; to extend the control of interprovincial movements of wheat products and to empower the governor in council to extend the present system to oats or barley.

And the amendment thereto of Mr. Ross (Souris).

Mr. SPEAKER: There is before the house an amendment moved by the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross), on which I desire to give a ruling. The amendment deals exclusively with procedure; it does not challenge the crown's recommendation for amending the Canadian Wheat Board Act. It is, however, lacking in a very important requirement. It proposes in the first paragraph to strike out certain words, but it does not say that these words are part of the resolution. Moreover, paragraph 6 of the amendment reads as follows:

That the words "Canadian Wheat" be substituted immediately before the word "board" in the third line of the resolution.

The word "substituted" is not the legal expression here, because a substitution cannot take place unless a certain thing is put in the place of another. On these two grounds alone, the amendment could be ruled out, but I shall not do so since I think the house is able to understand what the hon. member really had in mind. The amendment should not be turned down on mere technicalities. It purports to suggest that the governor general's recommendation, if accepted, be embodied in three bills instead of one.

The division of a bill into two or more bills may be permitted under our procedure, as may be seen in Bourinot, page 298 and May, page 530. It seems, however, that there are serious objections to doing this by amending a money resolution on the motion that the Speaker leave the chair for committee of the whole on the resolution. The house decided on February 16 to resolve itself into committee of the whole at a future date to consider the resolution which it is now proposed to amend. This decision precludes amendments to the resolution at the stage it is now in, because it must be considered by committee of the whole in the very words in which the house orders it to be sent there. An amendment of such a wide import as the division of the proposed bill into three bills should not be moved with the Speaker in the chair after the house has already ordered consideration by the committee of a resolution recommending only one bill. The main object of the resolution is to approve the expenditure involved in amendment to the Canadian Wheat Board Act. On that, a general debate may take place, and if the resolution is carried, it will be time to consider under proper procedure whether the expenditure should be embodied in three bills.

There are many precedents to justify this opinion. Beauchesne, third edition, reports at page 551 that Mr. Speaker Glen decided on February 19, 1941, that: "On the motion that the Speaker leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee to consider a money resolution, it is out of order to move an amendment to the resolution." He gave a similar ruling on February 23, 1942.

I have come to the conclusion that the amendment is out of order.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I maintain, Mr. Speaker, that our proposed amendment is a practical matter of modern common sense. I understand that your ruling is not debatable. If that is the case, I must respectfully appeal from it.

Mr. SPEAKER put the question as follows:

The question before the house is an appeal from the Speaker's ruling. We had before the house a resolution proposing to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act. The hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross) moved an amendment, which I declared out of order. I based my ruling on a ruling given by Mr. Speaker Glen on February 19, 1941, which may be found at page 551 of Beauchesne, third edition, and a similar ruling on February 23, 1942, that on the motion that the Speaker leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee to consider a money resolution it is out of order to move an amendment to the resolution. From my ruling the hon. member appeals.

The house divided on the question: Shall the Speaker's decision be sustained? And the decision of the chair was sustained on the following division:

Mr. JEAN: I was paired with the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Homuth). Had I voted I would have voted to sustain Your Honour's ruling.

(Translation):

Mr. BONNIER: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Robinson). Had I voted, I would have voted to sustain your ruling.

(Text):

Mr. RENE N. JUTRAS (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I am mindful of the fact that the resolution now on the order paper has been there for quite a few days. Therefore I shall do my utmost to stay within the terms of the resolution and not deal with anything which is not strictly relevant to the matter. I must, however, express my regret that it had to be a rural member from my own province who in his effort to test the strength of the government, further delayed the resolution. I shall do my best in my most humble way to make up for any time lost by not referring in any way to the amendment which, until this time, has been before the house.

May I refer particularly to the first part of the resolution which contains these words:

> . . . to make provision for the increase of the fixed minimum price on wheat deliveries.

[Mr. Speaker.]

With respect to that part of the resolution, may I quote what was said by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe), as reported at page 1677 of Hansard, where he sets the matter out clearly and concisely. These were his words:

> It is the wish of the government that, if prices continue strong, the advantage shall not be withheld from the producer, and that steps shall be taken to pass on the benefits as quickly as the circumstances may warrant.

And again, elaborating on this point, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) said, as reported at page 1719:

> We should be in a position, Mr. Speaker, not only once a year but at any time throughout the year, if the operations up to date have given them sufficient cash with which to make payments to the farmers—whether it is in the summer, in the winter or any other time—to determine that they are in a position to make those payments.

I think the principle of not mentioning the exact amount in the bill is a good one, and for many reasons. For one thing, it will eliminate a good deal of misunderstanding in the house. Every time a vote is asked on such a measure many members who are not fully familiar with the resolution, or the bill, are under the impression that they are actually voting money for western farmers, whereas, as a matter of fact, they are not voting any public money to anybody.

That is exactly the position now; and I think it should be made clear to all members that when they vote this amount they are not voting public money. I am referring to the initial price. From remarks made to me from time to time, I know this is a misconception common to many members. One cannot blame them, because they are told they have to vote for a certain amount of money to be paid to the western farmers when, in actual fact, they are only giving power to the Canadian wheat board to pay out another few cents, or some specific sum of money, which belongs to the farmers. For that reason, if for no other, this measure must commend itself.

Furthermore, the procedure of always coming back to the House of Commons causes endless delays in placing the money in the hands of the farmers. The principle involved is much the same as that in connection with the payment of dividends by a crown company. Naturally the commission or the administrators are the ones who know whether the financial position of the board or commission is such as to enable it to pay out any amount. What actually happens is that a payment is recommended. It is only right that if money

So this is a much more expeditious method of dealing with the matter, and one which is more practical. One must add that in the past, under the board which sat in 1935, and until 1943, it did happen that during certain years the initial price represented an amount of public money. In those circumstances there might be some justification for the view I have described. At the present time, however, no public money whatsoever is involved in these payments, and I think the giving of these powers is a practical method of doing things. May I commend the minister for having taken that step.

Without making further comment, may I refer to the third part of the measure which empowers the governor in council to extend the present system to oats and barley. Here I should like to quote the remarks of the Minister of Trade and Commerce who, I think, sets out the matter concisely. He said:

> The government is prepared to take whatever steps lie within its power to assist in establishing marketing arrangements that will help to maintain economic and stable prices for Canadian agricultural products. The government must, however, be satisfied that any given scheme for this purpose is a practical one, a constitutional one, a workable one, and one that will command the support of the interested groups concerned.

I think that statement sets out clearly the intention of the government and in a concise way it answers most of the criticisms. Most of the criticism can be divided into two main parts. First, it is charged that this measure is just a political manoeuvre and that the government has no intention of enforcing or promulgating it. The other criticism is that the powers granted by this bill are so compelling that the government is thereby imposing its views upon the farmer, whether he wants it or not.

As I say, I think the minister answered the first part of this criticism when he said that the government was prepared to take whatever steps lay within its power to assist in establishing marketing arrangements that would help to maintain economic and stable prices. In connection with the other point, I think it is important to trace the history of this demand throughout western Canada.

This is not a demand which started yesterday or the day before; it is a demand which has been evident for the last thirty-five years. As a matter of fact, all governments, Liberal and Conservative, have at one time or another had some kind of a board. We have had monopoly boards; we have had voluntary boards, and there have been periods when there were no boards at all. There is evidence throughout our history of a constant pressure by farmer organizations on provincial and federal governments to have some kind of marketing arrangement which would help to stabilize prices and conditions in Canada.

This is most important when we consider the charge that the government is trying to force something on the farmer. I think history shows clearly that the government has simply been acceding to growing demand. In 1917 we had a monopoly board. That was known as the board of grain supervisors, but in effect it was a wheat board with monopoly powers. Two years later, in 1919, we had another monopoly board. I think that board was really the origin of the Canadian wheat board. Those two boards were set up for entirely different purposes.

The next year, in 1920, there was no board. This parliament passed an act for the continuation of the 1919 board but it did not come into force. Immediately after the opening of the grain exchange in 1920, prices started to fall, and in this connection I should like to quote from the marketing service of the Department of Agriculture. The average price for 1919-20, the last year of the period when there was no open market, was $2.59. The next year it dropped to $1.99. In 1921 it dropped to $1.34; in 1922, to $1.10, and in 1923, to $1.04.

As prices fell, there was an increasing demand for the re-establishment of a marketing board for western wheat. In 1922 this parliament again passed legislation, but that legislation required that at least two of the three western provinces should put through concurrent legislation. As we know, Alberta and Saskatchewan did pass enabling legislation, but Manitoba did not. It is interesting to note that a resolution was moved in 1922 in the Manitoba legislative assembly, and I quote from the journals of that assembly for that year as follows:

> Whereas, there is general dissatisfaction with the present system of marketing grain;
> And whereas, the deplorable condition of the agricultural industry in this province is such that it demands the attention of the federal government to the need of national marketing of wheat and other grains;
> Therefore, be it resolved, that this legislature urge upon the dominion government the necessity of re-establishing the Canadian wheat board under the former management, with wide powers to sell wheat and other grains.

Even then the demand was for a board to handle wheat and other grains.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): The hon. member stopped about 1923 in giving the prices. Has he the prices for 1925, 1926, 1927, 1928 and 1929? Did the price not go up from then on?

Mr. JUTRAS: Yes, but I was referring only to the period when prices fell because, as prices fell, the demand for a board grew from year to year. I was not quoting comparative figures; I merely wanted to show that during the four years immediately after the re-opening of the exchange prices fell rapidly and that during that time there was heavy pressure from farmers throughout western Canada for the re-establishment of a board.

I had referred to what happened in 1922. In 1923 the three provinces and the federal government found that there was no competent man available to manage the board and the whole matter was dropped for a while. As hon. members know, from then on we had voluntary co-operative marketing measures, but in 1929 the government was again brought into the wheat business because the three western provinces had to give financial assistance to the pool. In 1930 we had the first instance of the government trying to stabilize the market. I am sure that all members are familiar with the pool selling agency under the management of Mr. John I. McFarland. Without going into the success of that movement, I point out that this is where the government initiated more or less the movement to stabilize marketing, and it was done under very heavy pressure from western Canada.

In 1935, after a change of government, a government bill was introduced creating, in effect, a monopoly board. The bill was referred to the agriculture committee, and the clause in the bill giving the board a monopoly of all grain handling was changed from a monopoly or compulsory board to a voluntary board. Here then starts the dual system of a board handling the wheat, along with sales on the open market. It is interesting to note that the minimum price set by the board was 87½ cents a bushel Fort William, while the average market price on the exchange—I am referring to the cash closing price of the day, as given by the publication from which I have just quoted—was 84 cents, or a difference of 3½ cents in favour of the board.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Is that a weighted average, having regard to deliveries per month or just a flat average?

Mr. JUTRAS: It is the flat average cash quotation.

In 1936-37 we started the year with a board, but shortly after the beginning of the crop year the board, in effect, went out of existence because, while its price was 87½ cents only if the market fell below 90 cents, the market, shortly after the crop year opening, went over 90 cents and the board marketed no wheat at all.

I draw the attention of the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Trade and Commerce to an interesting little incident that occurred in 1936-37. The board's price of 87½ cents was effective only if the market fell below 90 cents. The decision of the government was announced on August 28; but early in the crop year, in some cases by August 1, some farmers had already sold their wheat to the wheat board. Actually they had sold 617,655 bushels to the board. So that the board and the government gave them the choice of buying the wheat back or accepting the difference in price. Most of the farmers naturally bought their wheat back from the board and sold it on the open market, and in that way the treasury lost $49,574.88. The only reason I mention that is that it is a nice precedent for the government to follow in connection with what happened last October. I agree that there was some difficulty in the government announcing its decision very far in advance. However, it was announced in October and, as a result, many farmers lost large sums of money. I fully realize that some of the companies are endeavouring to pay back a certain amount of what the farmers lost in that way, but if the minister were to ask the treasury to assume a substantial loss this time I am quite satisfied that such a late announcement would not occur again in the future, but the announcement would always come by August 1. In my district particularly, our crop year is early, one of the earliest in Manitoba. We always harvest very early in August, and sometimes in late July, so that any government policy needs to be announced not later than August 1 to meet our requirements. I hope the government will do something about making good the loss that was taken by a great many farmers in my district last fall.

I now come to 1937-38, when we had the smallest crop in history, so that there was no marketing difficulty at all and no board required to take care of the crop.

In 1938-39 there were political uncertainties in Europe and we had a world-wide surplus, so that in that year the board took all the wheat. The board's initial price being 80 cents, and the average market price being only 62 cents, all the farmers sold to the board, getting thereby 18 cents more a bushel.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. JUTRAS: Mr. Speaker, just before six o'clock I was attempting to prove two points. The first was that this demand for a marketing agency such as the wheat board, to market wheat more particularly and also coarse grains, was a demand which had grown constantly and persistently over the last thirty-five years. A further point was that this demand is not the result of prejudice but rather the result of more generous financial returns through the board than through any other agency throughout that period of time.

At six o'clock I had reached, in the analysis of the various years, the years 1939 and 1940; and I showed that the board, before the crop year 1939-1940, was able to pay out six cents more than the average market price. In 1940-1941 the board again marketed most of the wheat, although it was on a voluntary basis, and was able to pay two cents more than the average price. Again in the crop year 1941-1942 the board marketed 44 per cent of the crop of wheat and the trade 56 per cent of that crop. For that year the board paid a minimum price of 85 cents, while the average market price was 76 cents, and therefore the average price was nine cents over the average market price. In 1942-1943 the board marketed 68 per cent and paid out $1.02 a bushel, with a participation certificate, as against an average price on the market of 94 cents, which means that the board was able to pay eight cents more than the average price on the market.

In that, I believe, lies more or less the reason for this demand in favour of the board. I think it can be said that at the present time there is probably 100 per cent of agreement among farmers for a wheat board, not necessarily a monopoly board, but for a board to handle wheat. I have not seen any resolution contrary to that.

We come now to the year 1943-1944. During that year we returned to a monopoly board. However, I wish to point out that a drastic and fundamental change took place in the wheat board in 1943. On September 27, 1943, the government itself assumed the primary responsibility in connection with wheat and the price and condition of sale. These three became directly subject to government policy. Furthermore, during the war, the wheat board acted more or less as agent of the wartime prices and trade board. In other words, it carried out many functions for the wartime prices and trade board. I would say here that the sooner the board is relieved of these duties and removed entirely from them, the better.

So that actually this demand, if it is not the demand of an over-all majority, is neither the demand of just a few. This demand is not merely the result of prejudice but the result of better returns which the board was able to show. However, there have been many changes in the board since the first board that was set up in 1917. Therefore it is important, I believe, that the extension of the powers of the wheat board today to include coarse grains, oats and barley, should be viewed in the light of the wheat board as it is at the present time. I do not think we can say that we have yet received a conclusive expression of opinion from the various groups in western Canada on the inclusion of coarse grains in the wheat board as it exists today.

I have noticed, from resolutions, letters and telegrams, that a great many think of the wheat board as it was in 1935, and a great many think of the wheat board as the agent of a price-setting agency. There are others who think of the wheat board as it is today, and that is indicated in a great many resolutions. Therefore I do not think that at the present time we really have any definite or conclusive expression of opinion on this subject.

For myself, I wish to make it quite clear that I consider it most important that, whatever is done, the wheat board, which has always been known as and, in fact, always has been the marketing agent of the western farmer for his wheat, should retain that characteristic, no matter what happens. For that reason I think the best thing to do at the present time would be to give an opportunity to all groups, co-operatives, pools, farmers' organizations and the trade, to discuss this question in the light of present circumstances. I think it would be the logical thing to refer the whole matter to a committee here, so that all these people would have an opportunity to express their views on the subject. The reason, as I have said, is that the board has gone through many transformations over the last thirty years.

I do not propose to add very much to that, except to say that I think the government is wise in submitting the bill now and proceeding in the way it is doing. I am sure that everyone will have to agree that, no matter how we look at it, it is the most democratic way in which the subject can possibly be dealt with under present circumstances.

Mr. A. L. SMITH (Calgary West): Mr Speaker, I made a note of the second last thing which the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jutras) said, and that was taking averages and showing the difference in the price paid by the board, I mean to the advantage of the board, and the average market price paid by private concerns. I am glad he said that, because all that we on this side have ever said is that we believe in a wheat board, but we believe in an alternative system of marketing. If the wheat board can pay more money than the other concerns can pay, then the wheat board will get the business and justify its existence. So that the hon. member, in having given the figures he has in favour of the wheat board—which I favour and which we all favour—is in this position. If the grain trade cannot pay as much, they will not get any grain. But let us have both and give the farmer an opportunity of choice.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that neither you nor any other hon. member will think I am setting myself up as an expert in the marketing of grain. Frankly, I do not think such people exist. The changes which have taken place in circumstances throughout the world and throughout this country in the last number of years have made all persons who make prophecies look rather foolish. In short, the position is this. We are living in a world where things are now changing infinitely more quickly than they did in times gone by. Therefore the value of precedents has been narrowed or cut down in view of these fast-changing conditions. Tonight I intend, with the information which I have, to discuss all methods of the marketing of western grains; that is, of wheat and coarse grains. I will say nothing about flax or rye unless my C.C.F. friends to my left want to know something more about rye. They changed that the last time I was on this subject, but I have no intention of dealing with it unless they, in the exuberance of their verbosity and, may I say it kindly, of their ignorance of the private marketing of grain, suggest it. I have no intention of touching upon rye.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member and I hope he will forgive me for doing so at this moment. But the hon. member realizes that we have before the house actually a resolution to go into committee of the whole which precedes a bill. In other words, the hon. member knows that whenever we have a money bill it must be preceded by a resolution. At this stage the discussion should be on the principle of the resolution. I wanted to intervene at this moment because, if I permitted the hon. member to discuss the opportunity to have a wheat board, the function of a wheat board, the marketing of grain and so on, I would be obliged to permit all other hon. members to do so if they wished, and we would probably have a repetition of debate on the second reading of the bill. So I would ask for the co-operation of all hon. members on both sides of the house in abiding by the rules, so that we may proceed with the business of the house. At this stage we should discuss only the principle of the resolution which is before the house. When the bill is introduced, hon. members knowing what is in the bill and knowing that on second reading they can also discuss the merits of the bill, it will be possible for a more general discussion to take place. But I do not think at this stage I should permit a long discussion on the opportunity of having a wheat board, prices of grain and so on. I should like to have the co-operation of hon. members in order that we may proceed with the business of the house.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Turning to the resolution itself, Mr. Speaker, at the bottom of page 6 of the order paper I find the following:

> Resolved that it is expedient to present a bill to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

I intend to talk about nothing except the act and the amendment brought down in this resolution which seeks to amend the act. That being so, with the greatest respect and deference, sir, may I say I shall not depart from that and speak of anything except the amendment of the act. If perchance I, in my enthusiasm, do depart from it I hope that you will immediately interrupt me.

I repeat that I do not set myself up as an expert in the marketing of grain, but it is a subject upon which I have necessarily gained some information. I was born into the problem. My mother's parents occupied a homestead in pre-emption in the district of Foxleigh some twelve or fourteen miles north of Regina. We had no problems then about drought. Our only worry was early frost. Thanks to the research of a number of people, we have been provided with kinds of wheat which mature earlier, and the frost problem has not been a real one for a long time in western Canada. From that farm wheat was produced. It was No. 1 hard in those days. Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4 northern had not, I think, yet been found at that time. I am not suggesting for a moment that we should revert to those days; but it is a fact that my grandparents on my mother's side from that half-section and with fifty-cent wheat, which was teamed twelve or fourteen miles to an elevator, were able to retire in Regina, build a little cottage and live there until they passed on.

Following on with the history—I hope the house will remember, because I am anxious that they should see this position—may I say that at that time line elevators, so-called, were not the prevalent places to which people went to sell. In the towns there at that time there was a country elevator; there was one which was owned perhaps by a grist mill and one perhaps owned by somebody else, to provide some opposition in the purchase of wheat.

Then we went to another stage, and I say this, because I think one should present both sides of a problem. I make this statement which will completely satisfy my hon. friends to the left, the C.C.F., because they know my attitude with respect to private enterprise, individual enterprise, or whatever you care to call it. We then had an agitation among the farmers—that was in the twenties—that they should join together and do something. That was done. Why was it done? I say this to the grain trade. It was done because of unfair practices carried on by the line elevator companies, particularly in connection with what we called street prices. Street prices were the cash prices paid for wagon loads or anything less than a carload, as grain was delivered to those elevators.

I could mention another instance where there was an agitation which brought results in connection with farming. That was not so much in reference to prices, but in regard to the conditions under which farmers purchased their implements. I have been practising law since 1908. I remember one of the jobs I had with a very large law firm; I was ashamed of myself then and I am still ashamed. The contracts under which farm implements were sold at that time contained some very fine print, which at my present age I could not read even with the aid of the largest magnifying glass in the world; and I was engaged in taking back implements from farmers who did not pay, who were perhaps unable to pay, implements which, in the early days of the introduction of tractors, perhaps were not worth paying for anyway. So another agitation arose. The result was that in Saskatchewan you had and still have what they call a statutory contract, while in Alberta it resulted in the passing of the farm machinery act to remedy the evil.

The point I make is that in those days movements like those grew. In any big movement in Canada, be it in agriculture, labour or anywhere else, if we probe to the bottom, no matter what names we may call individuals we shall usually find a sound reason behind it. Again I credit my C.C.F. friends that, on the economic side of the picture, their movement was born in grief, trouble and distress; and it was born in the city in which I live. But there is a great deal of difference between that time and the present. Then information passed from neighbour to neighbour in chats over backyard fences, or at casual meetings in towns where purchases were made. Then we had a pretty fair idea; in fact we were sure and even yet we can be sure, that the grievances were real. However, we all know that a grievance, sound though it may be, may reach a stature and complexity which causes it to lose its first purpose. In western Canada today we have three wheat pools which have plenty of radio time, which publish newspapers, and so on; so that I do not take statements made by officers of those organizations on the same basis as the movements which began years ago.

It may interest you, Mr. Speaker, as it certainly has interested me, to notice the parallel that exists between two movements which have grown up in this country. I refer to organization among the farmers and organization in labour. I am not critical of this; I think it is inevitable, but here is what we have now. In both farm and labour organizations we have had such a growth that at the top they are operated by professional advocates. I say I do not criticize that. I think it was perhaps inevitable, but I do say that if you go to the Canadian Federation of Agriculture with a problem you will get an answer back the next day. You can do the same with the C.I.O. or the A.F. of L.; but I for one do not accept these quick decisions as being the judgment of those whom these people head up and represent in these central organizations. So I say that with respect to barley and oats—and I am coming back to it, and this is all I am going to say now—there is no majority demand in western Canada for the passing of this legislation.

Mr. BURTON: Oh, oh.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I hear some groaning. I will give you a bit more.

Mr. BURTON: You are wrong.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I make that statement, and I shall prove it before I finish.

Mr. BURTON: Perhaps to your satisfaction, but not to mine.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Probably I could not prove anything to your satisfaction; you know I have my weaknesses as well as anyone else. Opinions in the west are not unanimous with respect to this matter. The Alberta pool at least are realistic about it; although they gave it formal endorsement, they are certainly well divided. Recently at Brockville the Canadian federation was also divided. There they debated a resolution requesting that the statement be inserted in this bill that it was designed solely in the interests of the grower of coarse grains. The meeting was divided, and the matter was hushed up. However, I shall leave that for the moment, but as I assured my hon. friend a moment ago I shall come back to it later.

I now return to wheat. I admitted frankly the grievance against the line elevator companies, the just claim and real grievance. Then what happened? Obviously there was an endeavour on the part of the farmers collectively to look after themselves. That is just history in its good common sense. Then we had the wheat pools formed. I have read and heard much as to who were the fathers of the wheat pool. Well, maternity is easily proved, but to prove paternity is still one of the most difficult problems in human endeavour. But I say I know the father of the wheat pools. He was a little chap from Chicago by the name of Aaron Shapiro. I was fortunate enough to be in Regina and attend his first meeting, and I heard him again in Calgary.

Mr. WRIGHT: Who invited him there?

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I can tell you that, too. He invited himself and you fell for it. You paid him, too, I am sure, because he has never done anything yet without being paid for it. After he got through with you, he went back to Dearborn and sued Henry Ford for libel damages in the largest amount ever heard of, and got the biggest settlement ever heard of for a libel action. Then he got into a little bit of trouble with the authorities in Chicago and sort of got the worst of the deal, perhaps for the first time in his life.

Well, then we had the pools. What is their history? I am not saying one thing against them; but it is history that in 1929, when they refused to use the existing facilities in Winnipeg for handling grain, they went broke. They were bankrupt. So they got the governments of the three prairie provinces, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, to guarantee their indebtedness. May I quickly add that this indebtedness is either fully discharged or in the course of being discharged.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Their indebtedness was due to overpayment to the farmers.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Their indebtedness, as my hon. friend says, was due to overpayment to the farmers; in other words, I gather he means due to the stupidity of the management.

That was the history up to that time. After that we had a wheat board, a voluntary board which, of course, I favour, always have and I trust always will. Here is something where I think my hon. friends will agree with me. The wheat board was constituted as an agency to help the man who grew the grain to get a price for his product. But what has happened in this country is this, that certainly since 1943, by action taken by this government, the wheat board has functioned not for that grower, but as a price fixing agency to hold down the price. I make that statement without fear of contradiction from anyone.

I now turn to some statements made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) when he spoke about this matter before the Christmas adjournment. He quoted what had been said by the hon. member for Provencher and, I think, was endeavouring to show that the Canadian farmer over a certain period of years had done better than the United States farmer in a similar position; or at least that he had done as well, or nearly as well. I do not know the minister's exact words, but I shall put it in that way.

Mr. GARDINER: Within not more than thirty-seven cents in 1946.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I was going to put it lower than that; but thank you so much for the admission. I can quite see that the minister is in a much more receptive mood than when last year he was sitting over there and I endeavoured to get him on my bandwagon—and he nearly came. But tonight he is pushing up the sawdust trail; he does not even need an invitation.

What they have done is this. Anyone who knows anything about the wheat business knows that in making comparison between wheat in Canada and wheat in the United States we must not overlook the fact that 80 per cent of the United States crop is soft wheat, and only 20 per cent is wheat comparable with that grown in this country; and that portion comes from the northwestern states.

The point I make is that it is incorrect—that is the word I shall use—to make comparisons with respect to individuals, from a total return, when the product is so entirely different. The only way one can make that comparison is to take a place on the international boundary line. The sections or quarter-sections on this side run from the 45th parallel, which is the boundary line. Here, on this side, we have a Canadian farmer, while on the other side we have a United States farmer with just the line between the two farms. They draw to a town of the same name, the one on the Canadian side being called North Portal, while that on the United States side is called Portal. These farmers draw their grain to elevators which are not more than 300 yards apart. The price the Canadian farmer receives is the only factor which is comparable with the price the other fellow gets, because they are growing exactly the same product. The difference in price received by those two farmers has been as high as $1.67 a bushel. So that when we are speaking of these things—

Mr. GARDINER: It has not been as much as $1.67, difference in price, at any time.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): On January 20 that was the figure.

Mr. GARDINER: The hon. member is comparing the advance with the price, and the advance at North Portal plus the deferred payments has never shown that much difference with the price at Portal.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I do not pretend to argue for one moment, because in my judgment the minister is the greater authority. Well, how would you like to add twenty cents, and then admit I am right? Would that be all right? Make it $1.47 or $1.30—I don't care—a very substantial amount of money. That is what I have in mind.

We have to bear this in mind when we are talking about these prices. In the northwestern states wheat is bought on a protein basis. This I know of my own knowledge, from a tour I took through the state of Washington. In the United States all the wheat goes to a chemist, who makes an examination of the protein content. On this side, on the other hand it is sold by grade. If I remember correctly—and I hope to be corrected by the minister, if I am wrong—No. 1 northern is a wheat where one out of every five kernels is red, hard and vitreous. It does not say anything about protein content. But it so happens that the kernels which are red, hard and vitreous have a very substantial protein content. And here we are still selling by grade, together with such premium for cash wheat as may exist either in Fort William or Vancouver. In the United States conditions are entirely different. Cash wheat in Chicago is almost always at a premium. You see, what happens there is this. We will say that a miller buys his supplies on the futures' market. Let us say that he wishes to have that wheat ahead of its delivery date. What he does, then, is to exchange his option with his vendor; and then he goes into the cash wheat market where it is sold, not on grade, but on sample. Cash wheat there is bought on a sample market.

So at times it is very difficult to make quick comparisons between prices, we will say, in Winnipeg and Chicago. And it goes to this extent, that when the United States government were seeking not so very long ago to get wheat out of the farmers' bins, to use in their commitments to Europe, they were paying a premium there as high as twenty cents a bushel on wheat.

That brings me back to something I intend to say now, for fear I forget to say it later in dealing with another phase of the matter, namely, that the farmers today, both United States and Canadian, are in the best bargaining position they have ever been in. I say that in connection with my advocacy of giving the farmer an opportunity to have alternative methods of sale, so that he may get the best price.

We who live out west know that nearly all the agreements for sale are gone; nearly all the mortgages are gone. It is not like the days of 19-cent, 25-cent and 30-cent grain where a man needed cash, and sold his grain so that he and his family could eat. Those days have gone, and that must make a considerable difference in our thinking with respect to methods of marketing.

I now turn to coarse grains, and I should first like to put on the record the history of what has happened in connection with barley. I shall not bother with oats. What I shall now state will show what has happened in connection with barley in 1947. At this time I am reading from notes. I know it is a bad habit, but there are a great many figures in here and I simply am not capable of remembering them. The first phase in 1947 lasted from the beginning of the crop year until March 17, 1947. Ceiling prices remained as they had been first established in 1941: 51½ cents a bushel for oats and 64¾ cents a bushel for barley, with a ceiling of five cents a bushel on premiums for barley selected for malting.

Having used the word "malting", I think I should say something about malting barley. During the whole time that we have had ceilings, all barley was sold at ceiling prices. I am speaking broadly and I do not want to be corrected for one per cent or anything like that. As I say, all barley was sold at the ceiling, irrespective of grade and irrespective of whether it was malting barley. Many pounds and bushels of malting barley have been fed to hogs in this Dominion of Canada. All that time there was a market in the middle west of the United States among maltsters and brewers for malting barley at $2 a bushel.

We did not sell it. We could not sell it. Why? Although there was not a complete embargo; although you could sell under permit from the wheat board, the price per bushel for your permit followed almost exactly the difference between United States and Canadian prices. Of course that nullified any idea of exporting malting barley.

Mr. WRIGHT: Was not the object of that to supply bacon to England?

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): No, the object was not that. No one has deliberately fed malting barley to hogs.

Mr. WRIGHT: Yes, we did.

Mr. BRYCE: I have.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): You did it because you could not sell it there.

Mr. WRIGHT: It was because Great Britain had to be supplied with bacon during the war.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): At the moment there are between twenty and twenty-five million bushels of barley more than are required in this country. That is just sitting around on top of this thing, flopping here and flopping there, and so you have your price. I know hon. members want to talk about the fluctuations in the price of barley on the Winnipeg grain exchange.

Mr. WRIGHT: No.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): You had not thought of that. All right; we will let that go. There is no free market now and, of course, you will have fluctuations; as long as there is a bar against exports of feeds to the United States, you will have the same thing. The sellers want to sell at once; the buyers want to buy at once, and there is no cushion or support from other export countries.

Mr. WRIGHT: Most farmers would have considered it a crime to have barley used to manufacture beer when Great Britain needed pork.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): The hon. member has mentioned beer, so let us talk about that. Here is the situation.

Mr. HOWE: I rise to a point of order. I understand that the motion before the house is that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of the whole to consider a certain resolution. I always enjoy listening to the speeches of my hon. friend the member for Calgary West, but I submit that his speech, as well as his debate with his hon. friends to his left have nothing whatever to do with the resolution. The position is that we have nine working days between now and Easter.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. ROWE: What is this, a steam-roller?

Mr. HOWE: I am just stating the position. In that time there is certain emergency legislation we shall have to deal with. We must pass this resolution this evening if there is any chance of having payments amounting to many tens of millions of dollars go out to the farmers before seeding. I just want to have it clear as to who is delaying this resolution. I do not want anyone to say that this government did not attempt to make those payments without delay.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Several of us are going to say it.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member for Calgary West, and I must say that as a member I enjoyed his remarks. However, I would call the attention of the house to the motion which is before it. It is that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of the whole to consider a certain resolution. Hon. members will realize that the resolution can be considered in the committee of the whole. A few minutes ago I called the attention of the house to the fact that if this were not a money bill we would not be considering this resolution. However, since it is a money bill it must be preceded by a resolution which gives authorization to the house to proceed with a bill, which will have to be read three times before being passed. What the house should do now is to consider the principle of the resolution. Then, if the resolution is carried, a bill will be introduced and it will then be possible to go into details.

May I say to the house, if the house will permit me, that in England they proceed differently with money bills. They introduce the bill first. When the principle of the bill has been accepted a resolution is presented to give the crown the power to get the money to execute the clauses of the bill when it will have become law. I really believe that we should not lose any time in going into committee of the whole in order to discuss the merits of the resolution.

Mr. GREEN: May I submit to Your Honour that if you are giving a ruling of that type you are altering drastically the practice of this house and also are not following strictly the rules of the house. There is a right to debate this resolution with Your Honour in the chair, and I submit that there is a perfect and unrestricted right to deal in that debate with the matters covered by the resolution. This resolution is broadly worded and I would read it to Your Honour. It reads:

That it is expedient to present a bill to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, to authorize the board to provide pensions for members, officers and employees and to make provision for the increase of the fixed minimum price on wheat deliveries; to extend the control of interprovincial movements of wheat products and to empower the governor in council to extend the present system to oats or barley.

I submit that that covers a very wide field and that, as long as the hon. member for Calgary West is dealing with those subjects, he has a right to do so and cannot be confined.

Mr. HOWE: Which one of those subjects has he been dealing with?

Mr. ROWE: With them all and nobody knows it better than you.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I should like to tell hon. members that I am not giving a ruling. I understand perfectly well that the wording of the motion covers what the hon. member has been speaking about.

Mr. CASSELMAN: Why is he not in order, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I called the attention of the house a moment ago to the fact that the motion was that the Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of the whole to consider the resolution. I understand that the practice has been to allow wide latitude in discussing the merits of a resolution when the Speaker is in the chair. I do not wish to give a ruling that it can or cannot be done. I am simply trying to be helpful to the house, in suggesting that the same debate should not be carried on twice, in the house and in committee.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, I would draw your attention—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I will ask the hon. member for Calgary West to proceed.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I am speaking on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, and it is this. From time immemorial when the government comes to the house and asks for money it has been the privilege of the members of the house to lay their grievances at the foot of the throne. The government is asking for money and that is where our opportunity comes in now.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member for Calgary West.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Trade and Commerce a moment ago told me that there were only nine days left. Probably we both realize that there is a little less that that now, since we have not advanced very far.

I was endeavouring to confine myself to the latter part of the resolution, which reads:

. . . and to empower the governor in council to extend the present system to oats or barley and on the proposed amendment thereto.

I was speaking about barley. I have a fair memory, but it does not extend over great periods of time and I have been quiet for so long that probably I have forgotten what I was talking about.

The first thing I say is this. I am entirely opposed to the introduction of those grains into any compulsory system, and I intend to explain why. I can understand the position of the C.C.F. They say: We believe in state control, production and distribution. They have a point of view, and there are many arguments which can be advanced for it. But I say this, that for those of us who have been giving lip service at any rate to private enterprise there is not one shred of excuse for bringing oats and barley into this picture. I go farther and say that the introduction of those coarse grains into this compulsory picture, this police picture —and remember the prosecutions with respect to wheat alone have been four or five hundred a year for the last few years—is without reason; no reason has yet been given why they should be brought under the marketing powers of the wheat board.

I say further that the wheat board a few years ago—and I know what I am talking about—were not in favour of and did not want power over oats and barley. I have the impression that they are still of that view. Perhaps one of the ministers might deal with that at an appropriate time.

What will happen to those who grow it, and I address myself particularly now to my C.C.F. friends who come from the prairies? You put the wheat board and, through them the government, in this spot. Coarse grains are so much different from wheat. Our wheat is exported all over the world; the major portion of it goes abroad. Only a small percentage, practically none at all, of our coarse grains is exported from the country, and only twenty per cent, I think, goes to other provinces. Here you have the wheat board in this spot. Your western farmer wants as much as he can get for his coarse grains. Your eastern and your British Columbia feeder wants to buy his feed as cheaply as he can. You have the wheat board in the middle, and what are they to do about the matter? It means price-fixing from a spot from which it is hard to fix prices and so I say, not of this government particularly, but of any government, that you will have political price fixing and nothing else, because we know that the buyers outnumber the growers at least four or five to one. The C.C.F. party, who want to sacrifice their people out west to the eastern purchasers, have got something to explain to the growers of coarse grains in the west.

So we find ourselves in this position. This measure is not seriously asked for by anyone. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture is divided on it; we know that. Yet we find coarse grains in the measure and, finding it there, I must assume that the government is serious about it. I do not think the matter can be left with the Minister of Trade and Commerce telling us practically that it cannot be implemented anyway. I may be exaggerating what he said, but if I have exaggerated he will accept this as my opinion from the legal point of view that you will never get it. But the government have the provision there, and therefore we must assume that they mean what they say.

May I pause to answer the interruption made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce as to who will be to blame for delaying the payment of money to farmers. I say the blame can rest right in his lap. This house, as the hon. member for Swift Current said, in speaking so heartily in favour of the amendment which he voted against this afternoon—

Mr. BENTLEY: I did no such thing. On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that I voted in favour of your ruling. My vote had nothing to do with the merits of the motion before the house, and the hon. member knows it.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): There are a lot of people I should like to quarrel with, but the hon. member is not one of them. He is one of the nicest chaps I know and one of the ablest because he has made a beautiful distinction without a difference which he did not mention in the speech in which he spoke to the resolution.

I come back to the resolution and make this simple statement by way of prophecy. The wheat board is a popular institution among the farmers of Canada, and justly so.

An hon. MEMBER: Why?

[Mr. Smith (Calgary West).]

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Do you want me to take you to school or what? I have only so much time. The wheat board is a popular institution. This legislation, if it is passed, can create nothing but friction between the eastern and the western farmers. That is inevitable. It cannot do anything else, and we all know that when a board or an institution, supported by the government, becomes unpopular, our psychology is such that it loses its effectiveness. And this is the best means that I know of, of effecting that end. It is unfortunate; but it is true nevertheless, that two of the most moving factors in human conduct are greed and fear. In the west we want all we can get; in the east they want to buy as cheaply as they can. The world has not yet advanced to the point where we are all altruists, each man his brother's keeper, thinking of his brother more than of himself. Let us be realistic, because that is the situation in which we find ourselves.

I close with this, and perhaps some will be happy that I have said that. Here we have a measure for which there is no general demand. Here we have a measure which will completely socialize everything that the farmer has to sell, with the exception of rye and flax. Remember that in all the things that he does these charges are now fixed—carrying charges, storage, everything. Everything is now fixed by the government, to put this where they want to put it, or where they suggest they want to put it, under the complete socialization of all farm products in western Canada.

Of course my hon. friends will vote for it. What do they care about the loss a man may suffer who is their neighbour out there, so long as they are able, by measures like this, to attain their objective, which is the control of the production and distribution of all these products? Why would anyone favour that? Why do farm organizations in certain parts of the west favour it? For this reason. There has been a propaganda conducted by radio and newspaper with one thing in mind, and that is to kill the Winnipeg grain exchange. I have told the house my view on that. I have no intention of repeating it tonight, but it does seem to me that the spread of that kind of thinking has gone so far that these pools and so on, with that object in mind, are content to have the farmers make sacrifices in order that that result may come about.

That is not new. We have propaganda agencies now which form public opinion rapidly and then go on to solidify it and make it cohesive. But that is not new in this world. Mob psychology—and I use that term most respectfully—is not new. We can go back to another day when Pontius Pilate made a certain offer and the answer was, "Crucify him, crucify him", not because that was right, not for a moment, but because that was the way the crowd were thinking at that time. Some people—

Mr. SPEAKER: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. gentleman again but he has exhausted his time.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Let him finish.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I shall conclude very quickly, Mr. Speaker. While it is important, with respect to barley and oats, to the western grower and the eastern and British Columbia buyer, this thing goes very much further. The constitutional aspect I leave alone. I was never much of a constitutional lawyer, although I have read with great care the last case, that is the marketing case, where it is all reviewed by the chief justice and confirmed by the privy council. But here is my original point, and all I am trying to say; I put this in the form of an appeal to all members of the House of Commons. I do not think I have been partisan, or very partisan, in anything I have said; but there are many, many of us here, who give lip service to our present form of economy. I go farther and say that I think those of us who have done so really believe in that form and that the lip service I have mentioned was honestly given in support of that method of carrying on our business.

But, sir, with this particular thing, with this thing for which there is no universal demand, with this thing which must inevitably end in disunity, are we to be driven, to be forced by the advocates, the professional advocates, of some farmer groups, into taking from our farmers the last vestige of permission to bargain for their own products?

I understand the position of the C.C.F. They are logical. That is their belief. The rest of us have said that is not our belief; and so, sir, I say to you that I think it is time that those of us who believe in this economy, this economy which has given us the best standard of living in the world, this economy which produced so much during the war and which helped to win the war, should stand up boldly and be counted.

I mention two persons who, I think, must vote against this resolution: the Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner). May I read from page 868 of Hansard of Thursday, February 27, 1947. I do not think it is against the rules to read from last year's Hansard. I was speaking and I said:

> There is another thing I wish to ask the government, and I think it has been fairly put to them by my hon. friends to my immediate left. I think the government should be as frank as I am. Do they favour the compulsory handling of coarse grain by a wheat board? I have heard the ministers talk all around or over the question.
> Mr. Ilsley: I cannot speak on behalf of the government, but I will say that, personally, I am not.

Then I go on:

> May I say that I heard the answer of the Minister of Justice with the greatest of delight. I was sure he would say that. Now that we are holding this evangelistic meeting, there are two more ministers for us to hear from.

Then the Minister of Agriculture spoke and he said:

> Even in a revival meeting I do not usually go very far beyond the present time. I wish to say that I am opposed to putting the compulsory clause as related to coarse grains into this bill, which is what we are dealing with at the present time. I am opposed to that, and I think that is about as far as one needs to go at the moment.

What has happened since that date, February 27, 1947, to have the minister change his mind and make such a speech as he did in this House of Commons not so very long ago in support of this bill?

Mr. KNOWLES: Those who came to scoff, remained to pray.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Then I went on. My old friend, the then Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. MacKinnon), with his usual astuteness and that charming smile of his, disarmed me and I sat down without getting an answer from him. But knowing him as I do, and knowing the things he believes in, I am perfectly certain that if he votes in favour of this bill, he at least has the grace left to blush in so prostituting the principle which has made him the great man he is.

Mr. G. H. CASTLEDEN (Yorkton): I am sure we all listened, Mr. Speaker, with a great deal of pleasure to the last speaker. He certainly made his position quite plain. He was quite frank in his statements, and I respect him for that. He talked long about the support that should be given to private enterprise such as the Winnipeg grain exchange. He knows the history of it, and he knows of the money which the grain exchange made out of the western farmers. That is probably why private enterprise supports it. But I say that in his whole talk he has yet to prove that the Winnipeg grain exchange justifies its existence by any useful purpose.

He referred to the stupidity of the pools, how they grew, and the officials of the pools. The organization of western pools, the co-operative enterprise there, has saved the western farmer millions and millions of dollars. Even those farmers who did not deliver any grain to the pools gained by the fact that the pools are operating. I listened to his eloquent remarks about this great economy which has given so much. It is a great economy under private enterprise where a group of people sitting in the grain exchange can extract their millions out of the toil and labour of the farmers of the western plains, where hundreds of thousands of farmers do their work and slave. Because of the very things that went on in the Winnipeg grain exchange, the mortgage companies and the machine companies, those farmers came out at the end of 1939 with about $688 million worth of debt around their necks. It ruined those farmers. They had no crop year after year. Those farmers have been staunch and firm in their determination that the Winnipeg grain exchange type of legalized robbery shall be done away with and that a co-operative, a non-profit-making organization, shall handle their grain.

As far as his story about the opposition of eastern and western farmers is concerned, the western farmer will know at least that he is not compelled to sell his coarse grain at a low fixed price and let the grain exchange boost the price up, have the feed companies in the east buy up that grain at a cheap price and use the inflated grain exchange prices on the open market to sell their high-priced feed to eastern farmers. No matter which happens under a proper wheat board, nobody will be making a pile of money out of it—that is, the middle man—and the farmers in the east and the west will be together on this point.

I was particularly interested in the legal aspect mentioned by the hon. member. I should like him to turn up—and I am sure he must have done this—the original act passed by the Tory government in 1935. They are the fathers, if he has any doubt about it, of the original Canadian Wheat Board Act. I should like him to read section 14, and I am going to read that section to the house. After section 13 which set up the board and outlined its duties and its privileges, section 14 states:

14. The governor in council may approve of the provisions of this act being made applicable to oats, barley, rye or flax produced in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia, if the board recommends that such approval be given, whereupon the provisions of this act shall mutatis mutandis apply to such kind of grain as they apply to wheat.

It was not illegal in those days. It was not unconstitutional.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): That was declared unconstitutional.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: When?

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Well, I will give you the citation.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: In 1937. There is no constitutional difficulty about that. Apparently there is a constitution in this country which allows the government to go out and tax people without parliament even sitting, but it will not permit this government to go out and pay back to the farmers money which rightfully belongs to them. The payments which are to be made under this act are to be made, not out of the consolidated funds but out of the money made by the Canadian wheat board through the handling of the farmers' grain. It is their own money that is to be handed back to them.

We in this group want to facilitate the passing of this resolution and this legislation in order to get the cheques out to the farmers as quickly as possible. Members sometimes seem to forget, while they are sitting in this ivory tower, away from many of the realities of what the people are facing in the country, that a great many farmers in western Canada live in drought areas; that they did not get any return from their crops last year and need these payments on the 1945, 1946 and 1947 crops to carry on and put in their new crops, and that they want to know what is to happen with regard to barley, oats and rye. They want to know whether they are to be handled on the open market or whether they are to be handled through the grain exchange.

In anything we say here we shall be in support of putting this legislation through as quickly as possible. We are not delaying this bill. We are trying to facilitate it. I resent the charges made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) the other night when he said we were aiding and abetting the Tories in having this thing delayed by having three or four bills put up instead of one. We moved an amendment to have oats and barley, the coarse grains, put into this act in 1947, just one year ago. There were all kinds of constitutional difficulties at that time. Now the government wants to put them in. I maintain, Mr. Speaker, that there are two parts to this bill or resolution which we have before us. One of them, I think, has the unanimous support of anybody who knows anything about the situation, and that is the one providing that the payments shall be made on the 1945, 1946 and 1947 crops. The other part is controversial, and I suggest that the proper committee, the parliamentary committee on agriculture, should deal with that part of it. I suggest that if we can get this legislation or the part that is non-controversial before the house this evening, it will pass through committee rapidly and the bill can go through. The second part of the legislation with regard to coarse grains can be adopted in the committee. We can get it through, bring it in here again and, if possible, get it passed through this house. But at any rate we shall not be holding up the money that is due to these farmers—a payment of their own funds. This money belongs to them because it was made out of grain which they grew and delivered themselves in those years.

This whole matter of coarse grains is of vital importance to the growers of western Canada, to the feeders of eastern Canada, to the consumers generally, to the feed companies and to the Winnipeg grain exchange; and quite rightly so. The life of the Winnipeg grain exchange depends upon whether or not they are to be allowed to handle these coarse grains and the other grains. On the other hand, the welfare of the Canadian farmer depends upon whether there is to be orderly marketing of his grain and his crop in this country and whether we are to have the old grain exchange. The Canadian people can make their choice. If there is to be orderly marketing, there must be the power within the Canadian wheat board, which operates and handles their grains, to control that grain. We cannot have part of it rambling out through the grain exchange and gambling on it here and there, and part of it sold through the wheat board. We think it should be settled, by a voluntary decision of the representatives of the people in this house, as to which they are to have. If the government is to decide on a policy of orderly marketing, I think this legislation should go into effect. I know it will have the support of the growers, because the growers know that under the wheat board if there is anything coming out of the sale of their grain, it will be returned to them. It is not costing the taxpayers of Canada anything. Of course there will be a big fight; those who believe in private enterprise, that is the grain exchange, naturally will oppose this legislation. We believe that the grain exchange should be done away with; that a government agency should operate, at no expense to the country, because the operations of the wheat board are paid for from the profits of their own undertakings and everything beyond the cost of handling goes back to the men who grew the grain. If anyone is entitled to profits, certainly it is those who grew the grain and not those people who gamble in the wheat pit and, as far as has been proved to date, perform no useful function or at least no function comparable with the amount of money they get out of it.

Personally I am doubtful whether the present government believes this legislation will go through. If the Liberal party had been sincere in its belief that the Winnipeg grain exchange should be done away with and that there should be orderly marketing of the farmers' produce through a government agency without profit, they could have enacted this legislation long ago. If the Tory party had believed in it they could have brought in legislation, while they were in power, which would have done away with the grain exchange. The truth of the matter is that both parties have been in power, but the grain exchange is still carrying on. The biggest blow it ever got was when all wheat had to be handled through the wheat board.

Mr. GARDINER: The Conservatives did bring in that legislation.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Yes, they brought in legislation but they did not implement it, and the grain exchange continued to operate. Last year, when we were considering amendments to the wheat board act, I moved an amendment, seconded by the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. McKay), which would have brought coarse grains under the wheat board. That amendment was declared unconstitutional. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) said it would endanger the wheat board itself. The chairman of the committee asked me to withdraw it, but we said we would fight for it because we believed that commodities of this kind should be handled by the wheat board, in order to prevent the very thing that happened last fall. That is, coarse grains remained under control; the price the farmer would get was fixed; he got his 1947 price and delivered his grain at that low price. Then on October 21 the lid was taken off; prices went up, and the feed and grain companies had picked up the coarse grains. Farmers were not allowed to deliver wheat; the elevators were instructed to get out all the coarse grains possible, that they were needed immediately, and I believe they were. But the farmer was obliged to sell at low prices. The minister claims they did so with their eyes open. They did not. They did not know what would happen. As a result, the grain companies made profits. I do not know what profits the feed companies made; I do not know how much grain they bought, but it should be possible to find out. Now the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) tells us, "Oh well, the fortuitous profits made by those companies are being returned to the farmers." I do not know what fortuitous profits are, or how you separate them from ordinary profits. They are all profits anyway. I can guarantee that the grain companies are not handling these grains at cost, which is what would have been done if they had been under the wheat board.

The position of this group is quite clear. We believe in orderly marketing, and we believe this requires that people should deliver their grain to the government agency. It is a non-profit agency, and the principle behind it is good and right.

Not very many minutes ago the Minister of Trade and Commerce interjected that we had to get this thing through as quickly as possible. I agree; I think that is necessary. We want to get these payments out to the farmers as quickly as possible. In order to facilitate this legislation—because apparently that is what the government considers necessary before it can make any of these payments—we are going to move that this resolution be divided into two parts; that the non-controversial part be placed before this house, go to committee, and pass through as rapidly as possible. We will facilitate that. The other part, which is controversial, we believe should be sent to the proper committee, where it can be considered. Then it can be brought back here and a decision reached, as the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) said, by hon. members standing up and being counted, to show whether or not we stand for the principle of orderly marketing. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member—

Mr. GARDINER: If I may interrupt the hon. member, I understand that he is proposing to move an amendment to the resolution which, as he says, would separate one question from the other. As I said the other night, that would mean four discussions in the house, two on the resolutions and two on second readings of the two bills. The opportunity to do at the proper time what is being suggested is provided at all times under the procedure in this house. The resolution itself can be passed and the legislation brought before the house. That legislation has to be given second reading, which provides an opportunity again to discuss the whole principle. Then it goes to committee, where the different clauses can be discussed. If at that time, when we reach that position, the house indicates that these two matters should be separated, there will be an opportunity to do so. But to do it at this stage would simply slow down the whole discussion on these matters so that we would take just twice as long to get them through the house.

As has been said by other hon. members, we are agreed on that part of it which provides payments to farmers, and this might be put through in a hurry. There is a reason why the other part should not be unduly delayed. Everyone admits that more than this legislation will be required to put oats and barley under the wheat board. That point is not a matter for discussion either inside or outside this house. There is no question about that among farm organizations, wheat pools or anyone else. It is agreed by everyone that, in addition to the legislation passed here, legislation must be passed by the legislatures before feed grains can be put under the wheat board. Those legislative bodies are now meeting; and the argument is that if we go ahead and refer this matter to the agriculture committee, if we discuss it back and forth here, and put ourselves in the position that we shall not pass it before Easter, there is no possibility at all of having coarse grains brought under the wheat board this coming year. So I would suggest that this resolution be allowed to reach the committee stage on the bill where at least we have the legislation before us and we can discuss the legislation rather than all these other matters we are talking about tonight.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: To some extent I agree with the minister, but I do not agree that there would be twice as much discussion if we divided this into two parts. There will be almost unanimous agreement on the first part of the resolution. It could be put through tonight; the resolution could go through the house and committee stages and the legislation brought down. The other part may be more controversial. The minister says the other provinces will have to pass complementary legislation; that is, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. I would point out that the government of Saskatchewan have already expressed their willingness to pass this legislation immediately. All they asked the government to do was send them some legislation which would meet the situation and, if necessary, they would have legal counsel here within forty-eight hours. Those provincial legislatures are now in session. If they are told that complementary legislation is necessary it can be brought down while their houses are still sitting. We do not want this delayed. As I said a few moments ago, we want to help the minister as much as possible, and we are trying to facilitate this legislation. However, we do see the possibility of a long debate on the coarse grains part of the motion, and we would like to avoid that.

Mr. HOWE: It may shorten debate if I say that at the proper stage when we are discussing the bill in committee, I will agree to separate the part concerning coarse grains and have that part sent to the agriculture committee for discussion, provided that such discussion will make it possible to expedite the remainder of the bill, which should be non-contentious. I am quite willing to do that. And if my hon. friend will delay the moving of his amendment until the bill is before us, and move it when we are considering the coarse grain section, I undertake to agree.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): May I ask the minister one question? Would he agree to referring the pension clause of it to the committee, too? There is general agreement on the payment of moneys belonging to the farmers; but there will be quite a debate on the contributory principle of pensions. If you wish to have the payments passed through quickly, and the money paid to the farmers, I suggest that you divide it up twice.

Mr. HOWE: I am willing to open the grain act twice. I know the fervour which overcomes certain members of the house when anyone mentions wheat, and I know that certain members, such as the hon. member who has just spoken, will speak on every such occasion, at great length. It seems to me that the matter of pensions is so much a part of the fabric of this country today that that section should not be contentious. I am not going to open the wheat board bill three times; I will open it only twice. I must say I will not open it three times.

If it is necessary to delay the payment of tens of millions of dollars because we cannot agree that the Canadian wheat board can pay pensions to its employees, then I think payments must be delayed. There is a limit to the patience of governments. There is also a limit of twelve months in the year. We can sit in this parliament for only twelve months; and I think we are booked with work for eleven months now.

I think the offer I have made is a good one, and I hope hon. members will feel disposed to expedite the bill so that the money can be paid out and so that a pension plan can be made effective.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I had only suggested that it be divided two ways. Make the payments separately.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: The minister gives his undertaking that, as the bill comes on, opportunity will be given to divide it. I shall be pleased to hold back my resolution until that time. We want these payments put through as rapidly as possible, and that will facilitate it.

Motion agreed to on division and the house went into committee, Mr. Golding in the chair.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. ROSS (Souris): On division.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Howe thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 135, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1935.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): When shall the bill be read the second time?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Now.

Mr. BLACKMORE: How in the world can we read a bill a second time, when we have never seen it?

Mr. ROSS (Souris): In all fairness, we should see the bill.

WAYS AND MEANS

EXCISE TAX ACT AMENDMENT

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Golding in the chair.

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Excise Tax Act and to provide:

1. That on and after November 18, 1947, there shall be imposed, levied and collected an excise tax of twenty-five per cent (25%) on the following goods imported into or manufactured or produced in Canada: (a) the following electrical appliances, grills, waffle irons; hot plates, roasters; kettles; chafing dishes; food or drink mixers; juice extractors; coffee makers; toasters of all kinds; portable humidifiers; curling irons or tongs; hair dryers; permanent waving machines and spacers or clamps; rods and heaters therefor; razors and shavers; food choppers and grinders; irons and ironers; vacuum cleaners and attachments thereof; garbage disposal units; floor waxers and polishers; (b) electric or gas refrigerators or freezing equipment, and coils, condensing or compressor units, cabinets, boxes, evaporators and expansion valves therefor; air conditioning, cooling or filtering equipment, and complete parts thereof; oil burners and oil burning equipment; all the foregoing when adapted to household or apartment use or when for use in places of entertainment, amusement or recreation, including rinks, auditoria, halls and clubs; (c) articles and equipment designed for use in golf, tennis, badminton.

squash, racquets, polo, billiards, pool, bowling and curling; fishing rods and reels; (d) firearms except for military or police purposes; (e) engines or motors for use in boats or vessels, except when the boats or vesesls are to be used exclusively in commercial or industrial enterprises; (f) outboard motors; (g) motorcycles, and all other two- or three-wheeled motor-driven vehicles including motors for attachment to bicycles but not including vehicles designed for use by invalids; (h) musical instruments of all kinds, not including organs for churches; (i) projectors for slides, films or pictures designed for industrial or professional photographers' use; and (j) toilet articles of all kinds, including combs, mirrors and brushes except tooth brushes, not coming within any other item in schedule one of the said act.

2. That on and after November 18, 1947, the rate of excise tax on automobiles adapted or adaptable for passenger use with seating capacity for not more than ten persons each, imported into or manufactured or produced in Canada be increased from ten per cent to the following rates, namely, on automobiles valued at $1,200 or less, 25 per cent over $1,200 but not more than $2,000, 25 per cent on $1,200 plus 50 per cent on the amount in excess of $1,200; over $2,000, 25 per cent on $1,200 plus 50 per cent on $800 plus 75 per cent on the amount in excess of $2,000.

3. That on and after November 18, 1947, the rate of excise tax on phonographs, record-playing devices, radio broadcast receiving sets and tubes therefor, be increased from ten per cent to twenty-five per cent.

4. That on and after November 18, 1947, the rate of excise tax on cameras, photographic films and plates, projectors for slides, films or pictures, except those designed exclusively for industrial or professional photographers' use, be increased from ten per cent to twenty-five per cent.

5. That on and after November 18, 1947, electricity and gas used in dwellings be exempt from consumption or sales tax; and

6. That on and after November 18, 1947, the excise tax of one per cent per pound on sugar, grape sugar, glucose, sugar syrup, corn syrup, etc., be repealed.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: We have amendments by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Shall these amendments carry?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall I report the resolution?

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): What was that you said, Mr. Chairman?

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: We have amendments, moved by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and I asked if those amendments would carry.

Mr. HAZEN: What amendments are they?

Mr. ABBOTT: They were moved a week or two ago.

[Mr. Ross (Souris).]

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: If the committee wishes, I shall read them now.

Mr. ABBOTT: Dispense.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: It was moved by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe), seconded by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner),

That the resolution to amend the Excise Tax Act now before the house be amended as follows:

1. By deleting from paragraph (a) the following: "grills; hot plates; food or drink mixers; food choppers and grinders; irons and ironers; vacuum cleaners and attachments therefor; floor waxers and polishers;"

2. By inserting the following paragraph immediately after paragraph (a) as paragraph (b): "(b) The following electrical appliances when adapted to household use; food or drink mixers; food choppers and grinders; irons and ironers; vacuum cleaners and attachments therefor; floor waxers and polishers;"

3. By relettering paragraph (b) as paragraph (c) and deleting therefrom the following: "air conditioning, cooling or filtering equipment, and complete parts therefor; oil burners and oil burning equipment;"

4. By deleting paragraph (c);

5. By deleting paragraph (e) and relettering paragraph (f) as paragraph (e);

6. By deleting paragraph (g) and substituting therefor the following:

"(f) motor cycles and all other two or three wheeled motor driven vehicles, including motors for attachment to bicycles, but not including vehicles specially designed for carrying goods or for use by invalids;"

7. By deleting paragraph (h) and relettering paragraph (i) as paragraph (g);

8. By deleting paragraph (j) and substituting therefor the following:

"(h) Toilet articles of all kinds (including combs, mirrors, and brushes other than tooth brushes or shaving brushes, the duty paid value or the Canadian manufacturer's selling price of which combs, mirrors and brushes is more than twenty-five cents each,) and which items do not already come within any other item in schedule one of the said act."

Shall the amendments carry?

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): No. We were dealing with this the night before last.

Mr. ABBOTT: We are just continuing at this time.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): When the house adjourned, the minister was to give us certain information as to what the last four months had shown with respect to taxes collected and the amount of United States exchange being saved.

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): Yesterday afternoon I was asked to give an estimate of the increase in collections as the result of the proposed new excise taxes. In the case of automobiles, the total tax collected from November to February inclusive was $10,449,779.03, and the estimated increase as the result of the proposed increased taxes is $2,263,977. On cameras, projectors and the like, the total for the same period November to February was $358,105.97, the estimated increase being $214,863. On phonographs, radios and the like, the total tax collected, again for the same period, was $2,766,195.84, with an estimated increase of $1,659,717. In the case of electrical appliances there was no tax previously, and the estimated yield is $1,544,499.46. On firearms the estimated yield of new tax is $55,830; on outboard motors, $56,773, and on motorcycles, $68,366. The estimated total increase is $5,863,995.46.

Mr. McKAY: Would the minister indicate the total?

Mr. ABBOTT: Subject to corrections in the addition which I have made rapidly, total tax collections for the various excise taxes, including taxes which were imposed on articles not subject to the tax before, during the period I have mentioned is $15,299,519.30.

Mr. JAENICKE: I listened with great interest yesterday to the minister's explanation for this tax, but I did not get an opportunity to ask some questions I should like to ask now. The minister told us that this tax is one of the measures necessary to conserve United States exchange. He told us that the first measure was the prohibition and restriction of imports. Then he went on to say, and I quote from page 2089 of Hansard:

> Another is the imposition of excise taxes, which is the measure we are now considering, to accomplish two things. The primary purpose is to reduce the consumption of articles in this country . . .

What is the second thing? I understand that these taxes are being imposed to reduce the consumption of these articles, because they are either imported from the United States or their make-up is largely of United States manufacture. The minister mentioned that there are two things and I should like to know what the other thing is.

Mr. ABBOTT: As I said, the first is to reduce the consumption of articles which contain either high United States content or substantial United States content. The secondary purpose, if I may so describe it, is to reduce the consumption of articles in this country which, for the time being, we can do without. I think I explained yesterday afternoon that if we are to continue to export to the war devastated countries of Europe we must reduce consumption in this country, whether the things we consume have a United States content or not. In other words, we must create what I refer to and what the economists refer to as an over-all current account surplus. I think the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario agreed that we must do that, although we may differ as to the methods of achieving that end. I submitted to the committee that one of the recognized methods of reducing consumption, and incidentally the one which I favour as being the appropriate one, is the fiscal method.

It seemed to me that the only valid criticism which could be directed against this proposed excise tax measure was that it did not cover a wide enough field, that we should have covered more territory, taken in more products and, by imposing a tax on those, endeavour to reduce consumption of some of these other commodities. That may or may not be valid criticism, but that is one which could be made.

Mr. JAENICKE: I thank the minister for the explanation. He mentioned that yesterday but he did not refer to it as being the second reason or cause.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is one of a number of other reasons.

Mr. JAENICKE: On February 23 the minister also spoke, and he told us why certain things had been taken off the first schedule. These were items which we were exporting to the United States, and I quote the minister's words, as reported on page 1539 of Hansard:

> Under this procedure the amount of such a tax as our 25 per cent excise tax is added to the value otherwise subject to duty, with a consequent increase in the total duty payable. On balance, as a result of this procedure in several instances we stood to suffer a loss of exports to the United States, and it is for this reason that I am proposing that the tax be not imposed in the case . . .

And he went on to name certain articles. It appears that the United States, in valuing for import duty purposes, added on this 25 per cent excise tax, but I maintain that is against the provisions of the Geneva treaty. Has the minister made representations to the United States authorities in that respect and, if so, with what results?

Mr. ABBOTT: The position is this. I think I would agree with my hon. friend that it would be contrary to the Geneva agreements. Representations were made to the United States authorities, and they agreed that it should be done, but it requires legislation by congress before they can do it. That legislation has not yet been passed. So for the time being the present United States customs law is to apply and the 25 per cent is to be added. That is the position the Canadian exporter is in until such time as congress passes the appropriate legislation to implement the undertakings in the Geneva agreements.

Mr. CASE: The minister said that the excise tax was intended to slow down the purchase of certain goods in Canada.

Mr. ABBOTT: To reduce the consumption of certain goods; that is correct.

Mr. CASE: On the evidence given this evening, $15,299,000 of excise taxes have been collected.

Mr. ABBOTT: Some of that was collected under excise taxes in existence before this proposed amendment. The estimated increase is between five and six million dollars.

Mr. CASE: Is the minister convinced that that amount has slowed down purchasing in Canada and, if it has, has it not also reduced production?

Mr. ABBOTT: I would answer my hon. friend in this way. If the people who have purchased these articles which are subject to the increased excise tax have done so because they prefer these articles to others they have, speaking in terms of economics, less purchasing power to spend on something else, and to that extent the tax is accomplishing the end we have in view.

Mr. CASE: Eventually you hope to draw off purchasing power by the tax?

Mr. ABBOTT: To some extent.

Mr. CASE: Would this tax be refunded if the bill failed to pass?

Mr. ABBOTT: Those who have paid the tax would be entitled to claim a refund.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Does section 1 mean that electrical appliances such as grills, waffle irons, hot plates, roasters and so forth are not to be taxed if used in restaurants?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is correct. We decided to remove from the operation of this taxing measure articles which went into commercial operation. Those are dealt with under part III of the import control restrictions. For that reason we decided to restrict the tax to articles which go into consumer use.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Am I to understand that I, as a member of this house and a veteran, am supposed to justify Mr. Weston and Mr. E. P. Taylor, who have taken over most of the restaurants and everything else in Canada, not having to pay any tax on the toasters and other appliances they use in Honey Dew and other places, while the returned veteran who is trying to set up house has to pay a 25 per cent tax on these same articles?

Mr. ABBOTT: Toasters are taxable, no matter who buys them. But in the case of commercial users, we get after them in another way.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Am I to understand that Mr. Weston and Mr. E. P. Taylor owning Honey Dew and practically a monopoly in many lines of business, can buy grills, hot plates, food or drink mixers, food choppers and grinders, irons and ironers, vacuum cleaners, without paying the 25 per cent tax? Am I to understand that the minister expects me to justify that to the veteran who has to pay a 25 per cent tax on these articles when he is trying to set up house, while Mr. Taylor and Mr. Weston have not to pay? I did not think my good and genial friend the Minister of Finance would have the audacity to bring in such a ridiculous measure.

Mr. ABBOTT: The principle we have been endeavouring to follow is this. We are not imposing taxes on goods which go into the cost of producing other articles or into the cost of carrying on business. The taxes which it is proposed to impose under this amendment to the act are taxes imposed on consumer goods. We are not trying to single out Mr. Taylor or anybody else for the imposition of taxation. The dividing line of principle is this: We are not imposing this tax on machinery which goes into the cost of operating a business. Those taxes are imposed in another way. This tax is in essence a consumer tax, intended to slow down the purchase of consumer goods until such time as we are in a better position to afford them. There is no intention to discriminate between one group in the community and another. This is simply differentiating between consumers and the industrial or commercial user of machinery or equipment. It is a clearly defined line. That is the only reason for excluding from the operation of this tax machinery or equipment or appliances which are going into factories, restaurants or other commercial enterprises.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: If anybody has done more for Canada than the veteran who has returned and is trying to set up house I should like to know it. I cannot follow the argument of the minister at all. If a tax should be put on restaurant equipment, all right; that should be a separate tax. But why the veteran who is trying to set up house should have to pay a tax on articles on which the restaurant does not pay a tax is something I cannot understand, and if the minister tries to tell me that Honey Dew is more entitled to get a toaster than the veteran I disagree with him entirely.

Mr. ABBOTT: Toasters are not in it. My hon. friend perhaps has not received a copy of the amended list in manifold form. The amendment excludes hot plates, grills, food or drink mixers, and so forth.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I have had a little legal advice from some members on the same side of the house as the minister, but if the minister can make it perfectly clear to me that the veteran is not subject to this tax, possibly I shall be satisfied.

Mr. ABBOTT: A few minutes ago the chairman of the committee read the amendment to the committee, but it was pretty difficult to follow. The amendment summarizes the deletions and alterations which have been made in the resolution since it was first announced by me on November 17. The proposed amendments are the results of discussions we have had with representatives of industry, consumers and others interested, and the amended resolution now comprises what we believe to be a fair list of articles which should be taxed. In its amended form it now excludes such things as toasters, grills and hot plates.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I am glad the minister has gone as far as that and I hope he will go farther, but I will ask him again: Is there any reason why Mr. E. P. Taylor, Mr. Weston, the Honey Dew or somebody else is more entitled to have a chafing dish or a waffle iron than a veteran of this war?

Mr. ABBOTT: Let me say that we do not draw our legislation with a view to Mr. E. P. Taylor or anybody else in this country but to everyone in Canada. We have not Mr. Taylor or any other individual in mind when the taxes are drawn.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Then, if the minister has not them in mind, why does the amendment not cover coffee makers, toasters and other things for the veterans? Is the veteran not entitled to exemption from taxation exactly the same as Mr. E. P. Taylor or anybody else? The minister is apparently ill advised by some of his brain trusters. Let me read it.

Mr. ABBOTT: The minister knows it pretty well.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: He may or may not. Take electric or gas refrigerators. I will ask the minister this question. Did he ever hear of a place called Cariboo? It is not in my district. The only refrigerator they can get is a gas or a kerosene refrigerator, but so far as any article for commercial use is concerned, for the benefit of Mr. E. P. Taylor and Mr. Weston, they are to be exempt. I for one wish to take strenuous exception to that. With all deference to the minister, and my compliments to him, he has been ill advised by some of his so-called bureaucrats, who have no sympathy whatever for the veterans of Canada.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I think the minister has contradicted himself in what he has submitted to the committee. He says, first of all, that the taxes are to discourage production. That is the main thought he has in mind.

Mr. ABBOTT: Not to discourage production, to discourage consumption.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): What is the difference? It is discouraging production. On the other hand, the minister says there are no taxes on machinery for the production of these consumer goods. How can he reconcile these two positions? First of all, he says he is going to discourage consumption, which means that he will discourage production, and what does that mean? That means loss of employment. I would point out to the minister that once you start a depression, once you start unemployment and get the skids greased with a 25 per cent tax, you discourage buying more and more, and you are in a dangerous position. This whole situation that we have today, this attempt to balance things up, only emphasizes the necessity, which the government should have realized, of devaluing our dollar. The whole thing could have been done easily in that way and it could have been done overnight. There is no doubt about that. What are the results to date? We have an average loss of United States currency of something like $70,000,000 a month.

Mr. ABBOTT: A net gain last month.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Seventy millions a month. The minister, in other words, is in the position of someone trying to trim the Christmas tree. He takes a little off this side and he finds that, to balance it, he must take a little off the other. Then, when he has taken some off the other side he finds that he is forced to take a little more from some other part. The result is that he has nothing but a skeleton left. The minister said this was to discourage consumption of such commodities as copper, aluminum, lead, zinc and things of that sort. I wonder if the minister has any idea as to what was the copper production of these things, or the consumption of these things, or what the exports were? How much does the government hope to save? I should like to know something about that, and I think it would be interesting to the committee to find out. I am sure the committee would like to know what the situation is in connection with these products. Can the minister tell us?

Mr. ABBOTT: I have not those figures available at the moment, but they can readily be obtained in a number of government publications. I could get them. Our production of copper, lead, aluminum and other base metals is well known and our exports are known, so that if one were to subtract the exports from the total production, one could arrive at the domestic consumption. I have not the figures this evening.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): What is the consumption of these various articles such as vacuum cleaners and radios? Take radios, for example. Most radio receiving sets made in this country today have something like 80 or 90 per cent Canadian content. What shall we save in that direction by reducing the production of radios and by a reduction in the consumption of this commodity? What effect will that have on investigation and research which is going on in connection with that industry at the present time? How will it affect that industry? I know the minister has had an interesting brief from the radio people and they have been turned down flat. What is the reason? It would be interesting to know something about reduction of employment in that business, and the same with vacuum cleaners and refrigerators. Can the minister give some estimate of the reduction that is likely to take place in the production of these articles?

Mr. ABBOTT: I have not those figures, but they are all on record. I gave figures earlier in the debate, but I have not them at the moment, as to the number of radios produced domestically and the number imported. From memory I would say that the larger proportion of radios purchased in Canada are domestically produced, while the proportion imported is relatively small. On the other hand, domestically produced radios contain in some cases a considerable proportion of imported parts, and even those which contain—

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Ten per cent.

Mr. ABBOTT: Even if they did not contain one per cent, on the thesis I developed earlier this evening, we should reduce our consumption of radios if we are to continue to extend aid to the devastated countries. We should do so even if they did not have five cents' worth of United States content.

The CHAIRMAN: It has occurred to me that the committee might be prepared to carry the amendment and then it could consider the resolution as amended.

Mr. ABBOTT: That would be helpful, and the committee would see what is covered by the proposed tax resolution, but I am in the hands of the committee.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Is this amendment merely to give effect to what the minister told us had already been decided, namely, that the articles originally put in were many of them now taken out?

Mr. ABBOTT: Some were taken out and the provisions of the resolution rearranged. That is correct. The original resolution as tabled by me on December 19, or whatever the date was, is amended by removing from it a number of articles which it had previously been intended should be subject to the tax. That is the sole effect of the amendment. It is to narrow the scope of the proposed tax.

Mr. CASE: Before I am asked to vote on the amendment, I should like to ask the minister a question somewhat along the line of the questions asked by the hon. member for Fraser Valley. With regard to these things now appearing in the amendment, will tax refunds be made to the people who made purchases, if they are veterans or otherwise? With regard to all these articles on that list, and on which you are collecting taxes, if this amendment carries have we your assurance that refunds will be made to the purchasers?

Mr. ABBOTT: That really has nothing to do with the amendment. The situation will be this. This proposed tax is being paid now by the manufacturers or on importation. If parliament refuses to approve this tax, they will have the right to claim from the dominion government, and will receive, a refund of the taxes which they have paid. The purchasers of the articles which are subject to tax will have paid a purchase price for them which will not be segregated so far as tax is concerned, and it will be within their right to claim, from the person from whom they have purchased the article, a proportionate reduction in the price for such portion of that price as may involve the tax content. That may be complicated from the point of view of the original purchaser, but I do not think that eventuality will arise.

An hon. MEMBER: It is impossible.

Mr. BENTLEY: I wanted to ask the minister a question also arising out of his reply to the hon. member for Fraser Valley. He said that those people who had purchased those things which were on this list and who are in the business of producing consumer articles as opposed to those who are producing for service, receive them tax free.

Mr. ABBOTT: That has been, broadly speaking, the principle we have decided to follow in connection with this tax. In essence, it is intended to be a tax on consumer articles, not on producer articles.

Mr. BENTLEY: I want to follow this up. What measures are the government taking to prevent some of these people in that category, who can buy these articles tax free, from also setting up a side line on the black market? If these things are to be scarce and people are willing to go out and pay black market prices to get something they want, what is to prevent some of these people in the category mentioned, who can buy them tax free, from buying them for friends and eventually creating a black market?

Mr. ABBOTT: The articles which are referred to, I am advised, are articles which are adapted to commercial use, not to household use. That is the language of the resolution.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: In pursuance of the question asked by the hon. member for Grey North, I think it is the duty of the minister to put this on record so that the people of Canada will know what the situation is. If a man has paid that tax, can he demand its refund?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes; and the only man who will have paid the tax will have been the manufacturer.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Pardon me.

Some hon. MEMBERS: And the retailer.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Just a minute, Mr. Chairman. Again the minister has been ill advised by some of his advisers. Individuals have paid that tax, through their retailers who, I presume, paid it through their wholesaler on these items. If the minister wants that to be proven to him, I shall be glad to do so. I want the minister to put it on record that the dominion government orders those retailers or wholesalers to refund any of those taxes which have been collected.

Mr. ABBOTT: If this tax is not imposed—and I do not think for one moment that parliament will not approve this resolution; but suppose it were not—then anyone who has bought an article which is subject to this new tax is entitled to go back to his retailer and say, "Refund me the portion of the price which represents taxation."

Mr. THATCHER: How can he do that without a cash sales slip?

Mr. LOW: I wanted to ask two or three questions following the speech made a moment ago with regard to radios. It occurred to me to ask the minister if there is an export market for Canadian-made radios that would be sufficient to take up the saving in Canadian consumption effected by this bill, so that Canadian manufacturers of radios would not be forced out of business.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am told that there is at the present time no substantial export market for radios. There is some export market. When I say export market, I was thinking particularly of exports into the United States. We export radios to a variety of countries in other parts of the world, such as the Azores, Afghanistan—I see in looking at this list—Cuba, Guatemala, Haiti, Iran and so on. The total value of radio receivers exported in the period of the first eleven months of 1947 totalled $1,500,000 odd, and a long list of countries was covered. Just looking at it quickly, there appear to me to be some forty or fifty different countries. But the export volume of completed radio sets is not substantial at the present time; nothing compared with the domestic consumption.

Mr. LOW: May I just finish that? Would it not be advisable for the government to assure itself that its measures under this act will not force out of business manufacturers of that type in Canada, because I think the minister admits it is a good thing to have Canadian manufacturers continue to supply the Canadian market with their own products?

Mr. ABBOTT: My information is that, notwithstanding the imposition of this proposed tax, Canadian radio manufacturers will sell every radio receiving set they have produced this year.

Mr. LOW: Just one other question and I shall be through, Mr. Chairman. The minister laid some emphasis on the slowing down of consumption in Canada through the effect of this measure which I can quite understand. But I wonder if the government has given careful attention to the alternative; that is, measures to bring production to the point where it will be possible for a great many more things to be exported beyond what Canadians want to use. I am afraid that not much evidence has been given to the committee to convince us that that avenue has been explored to the end. The minister mentioned yesterday that we had full or nearly full employment; but that does not mean to say, by any means, that we have our industries working at anything like 100 per cent efficiency. It seems to me that the minister should give us some assurance that the government, before it imposes this tax, has investigated this other alternative and has satisfied itself that it has given every assistance and leadership in trying to bring up the efficiency of the manufacturing industries in this country to the point where they just cannot get any more production.

Mr. ABBOTT: To answer my hon. friend's question, as I said yesterday afternoon, there are two ways in which we can re-create this over-all current account surplus that I have been discussing, and that is by increasing production and by reducing consumption; either or both of those methods. We are now operating apparently under a condition of practically full employment. Our production is away ahead of anything it has ever been before in this country. No doubt it could be increased by lengthening hours of work, by improving methods, and perhaps by a variety of other ways. There is this point to be borne in mind, however, that increased production in this country, particularly in the industrial field, involves increased imports of such things as steel, fuels, petroleum and so on from the United States. So I must say I do not believe the cure for this situation, namely the creation again of this over-all current account surplus to which I have been referring, can be achieved entirely by an increase in production. I would hope that we could increase production to some extent; but I think it has to be achieved in the volume we need by some reduction in the level of domestic consumption, either in the capital or in the consumer field.

Mr. FLEMING: There is a point in connection with this amendment which I think the minister has not adequately explained. We are dealing with a group of amendments which generally have the effect of reducing the list of articles in respect of which the excise tax is to be imposed. But some of these amendments have already taken effect. The minister undertook to levy this tax illegally and, according to his statement tonight, without any colour of right, legal or constitutional, has extorted from the people of Canada between $5,000,000 and $6,000,000 under the tax announced by radio on November 17. The same minister, as it has pleased him from time to time, has undertaken to remove this illegal tax from certain articles. For instance, on November 9 we read that the tax had been removed from pianos.

Mr. ABBOTT: What date?

Mr. FLEMING: January 9. Then on January 21 we read that oil burners and sporting goods had been removed from the list. On January 23 we read that the tax had been taken off air-conditioning equipment. The minister has not yet explained—

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes, he has. It was one of the few occasions when my hon. friend was not in his seat.

Mr. FLEMING: The only occasion during the course of this debate when I have not been in my seat was yesterday afternoon when for one hour I was fulfilling my duties in the prices committee.

Mr. ABBOTT: This was a week or ten days ago.

Mr. FLEMING: I can tell the minister I have read everything he has had to say during the course of this debate. I ask him to say what has been collected on each of these items he has purported to remove from the illegal tax, and exactly what he is proposing to do with the money that has been brought into the public treasury by his illegal act and which now, with the removal of the tax, certainly has less business staying there than it had to begin with, and that was none at all. I ask the minister if he will give the committee a clear picture in that regard. I am speaking now only of the amendment which has been proposed to the original resolution. I have something more to say on the resolutions as amended, but I am confining what I have to say now to the amendment. I ask the minister if he will give the committee a complete picture of what has been done or what is to be done with respect to the articles originally included in the list of November 17, but which since have been removed.

Mr. ABBOTT: I went into this in some detail one evening not long ago. I cannot give the date, because I have not had a chance to look at Hansard since my hon. friend commenced to speak, but in reply to a question by the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario I gave the considerations which prompted me to remove the various specific articles from the list of those subject to tax. As to what was done when those were removed, of course that action followed representations from those who were particularly interested; and the Department of National Revenue notified those interested in the trade of the proposed changes in the tax resolutions. I am informed that the manufacturers, who, after all, are the ones on whom the tax is imposed and who remit it to the Department of National Revenue, have, in order to protect their own position, taken appropriate credits in their monthly tax returns, or whatever it is, for any tax they may have collected. I am informed that is the case, by an official of the Department of National Revenue who is sitting before me at the moment. Of course I have not the figures in that regard. I shall inquire as to whether they could be made available; but, broadly speaking, that is the procedure which was followed. In most of these cases the tax was withdrawn before it had been paid to the department and passed on to the purchaser next in line, or so I am informed. Obviously the longer one waited to make changes, the more complicated the situation would become. I do not suppose my hon. friend wants me to repeat tonight the reasons I gave the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario as to the broad principles which motivated our decision to remove certain articles from the proposed list.

Mr. FLEMING: I am not quarreling with the removal of those articles from the list. I do quarrel with the minister to this extent, however, that I wish he would go further and remove the rest of the articles; that is all I ask. But my question was directed toward the disposition of the moneys which have reached the hands of the department under a tax which was levied by ministerial action.

Mr. ABBOTT: The position is that manufacturers, who are the collectors of this tax, make monthly returns to the Department of National Revenue with respect to their excise tax liability. In cases where they would have remitted the tax on some pianos, let us say, to use that as an example, and then following representations it was decided that the tax was not going to be imposed, in their return for the following month they would take credit as against the gross tax liability for that month for the tax they had remitted the previous month with respect to three or four pianos, perhaps. That is the method which was followed. Or alternatively, it is pointed out to me, the manufacturer could make formal application for a refund.

Mr. FLEMING: Does that mean that the removal of the article from the list was dated back to November 17, in all cases?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is correct; in all cases. I am glad my hon. friend brought that out. It is just as though the tax never should have been collected.

Mr. THATCHER: Let us speak about the tax on sporting goods for a moment. On November 17 the minister put this tax on sporting goods, and about two months later took it off. I would like him to tell me exactly how the retailer could get that tax back to a person who bought sporting goods in the meantime. Every sale which is made does not show the name of the customer. Probably when a customer buys merchandise he tears up his sales slip, and there is no possible way in which the minister or anyone else can get the tax back to that consumer.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am informed that the retailer would apply to his wholesaler and the wholesaler to his manufacturer for a refund of that tax, and would receive it.

Mr. THATCHER: But the consumer has not the slip. He has torn it up, and it is absolutely impossible for the consumer to get the tax back, whether or not parliament passes this legislation.

Mr. ABBOTT: It is possible that in a limited number of cases the retailer will have derived a benefit. It is open to the consumer, if he sees fit, to go back to his retailer and say, "I bought a badminton bird," or whatever it was—and remember this tax did not cover all sporting goods—or "I bought a tennis racquet" or a golf club, "and I paid the tax. I want the tax back."

Mr. THATCHER: But he has not the sales slip for it.

Mr. ABBOTT: He would have to argue that out with the retailer. I say there would be relatively few cases—

Mr. THATCHER: There would be thousands and hundreds of thousands of cases.

Mr. ABBOTT: Hundreds of thousands? Nonsense.

Mr. BENTLEY: I want to follow this up, if I may.

Mr. ABBOTT: Go and see the retailer; that is my advice.

Mr. BENTLEY: All right; I am going to ask this question. A customer goes to see the retailer. I think the minister or anybody else will admit that, as the hon. member for Moose Jaw said, there will be thousands of these cases. It may be the fault of the purchasers; I am not going to argue that point now. But there will be thousands of these cases, where individuals who purchased from retailers will have no documentary evidence upon which to make claims for refunds. If that is so, who owns that money?

Mr. ABBOTT: The position is this: I do not know whether the retailer charged the tax on stock on hand.

Mr. THATCHER: They did; I can tell the minister they did.

Mr. ABBOTT: Some did and some did not; because I have seen advertisements in papers with respect to some articles which are subject to tax, and those advertisements have stated, "On our stock in hand we are not charging the tax." Some retailers did and some did not. I do not quarrel with that, since the standard practice in connection with the imposition of a tax at this time is that the dealer can collect the tax with respect to stock which he has on hand; because, when the tax comes off, he is, of course, subject to whatever loss he may sustain. That is standard practice. But I have been told that in the case of this particular proposed impost it has not been the general practice of retailers to add the amount of the tax to the stock in hand. I have been told that that is so, and I believe that it is so.

In the case of the particular articles to which my hon. friend referred—sporting goods—that would apply to only a limited field. It applied to such things as tennis racquets and golf clubs, but it did not apply to articles for hockey, baseball or skating, or any of these other winter sports. So that I would doubt if there were any substantial amount of tax collected by retailers on sporting goods before the announcement was made that this tax was not to be placed on such commodities.

I know my hon. friend is in the electrical business, and he no doubt knows whether or not he collected this tax on the stock which he had in hand. I do not know whether he did or not, but I would not blame him if he did. If he did, that is all right; he knows that better than I do. I know some dealers did not.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I should like to get into this again, because I happen to be a customer of the hon. member for Moose Jaw. If my recollection serves me correctly, I understood the minister to say over the radio on November 18 that as of that date the tax became effective.

Mr. KNOWLES: Unconstitutionally.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I shall not argue that point now. But the minister did say that. I happened to be purchasing certain articles from my hon. friend from Moose Jaw.

[Mr. Bentley.]

Mr. THATCHER: And at wholesale, incidentally.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Well, I asked for it. Yes, I purchased it at wholesale. But that is all the more reason we should have price controls, because if the price I paid was wholesale, then heaven help the man who paid retail.

Mr. THATCHER: There was the eight per cent sales tax and the 25 per cent excise tax.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: But, to be serious about the matter, I happen to be a friend of the hon. member for Moose Jaw. I go to him, and if he had to refund it, he would refund it to me. But, as he says, what about the young man in the middle of Saskatchewan? He has not the same chance, because he does not know the hon. member personally who sold the goods. I happen to know him, and he knows me; but he does not know all his customers.

I say it is most unfair; and it can be carried through in respect of many items, not just on one item concerning sporting goods. It can be carried through on the whole list of items. Either this tax is legal, and the federal government must stand back of it, stand behind it, or it is not legal. It is one or the other. If it was collected illegally, then in my opinion it is the responsibility of the federal government to see that it is refunded.

Then, as it is getting near eleven o'clock, there is one other thing I should like to say. It is all very well to say that these are small items, but the minister has not yet given me a satisfactory explanation. And, incidentally, I did not get this information until tonight, when I asked a boy to get me one off the table of the house. One is expected to put these amendments together tonight. I say, when a minister or anyone else brings in an amendment, every member of the house should have a copy of it, at least on the morning of the day it is to be introduced.

Mr. LESAGE: You had it for a week.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Listen, my young friend from Quebec, if you do as good a job in trying to attend to price control, and bring down the price of bread and other things, you will be doing a very good job.

I had intended to speak particularly about refrigerators. If the minister can change the rates simply by bringing in an amendment, I cannot see why he could not bring in an amendment which would concern refrigerators particularly. I refer to those which are operated by kerosene and gasoline in rural districts. It is all very well for those who have the privilege of living in Westmount, or some such district as that. But those people who live in the rural parts of Canada do not have those privileges.

Mr. ABBOTT: Kerosene refrigerators are not taxable.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Thank you. I have done something tonight.

Mr. KNOWLES: I have a brief word to say. Once again tonight the Minister of Finance has tried—and unsuccessfully I think —to belittle the problem set forth by the hon. member for Moose Jaw, the hon. member for Grey North, and others, namely the difficulty of getting this tax, which was put on and then taken off, back to the purchaser of the goods. I suggest to the minister the fact that only a few may have been involved, or that it is only a few cents here and there, is not a satisfactory answer. What this whole thing does is to underline the fact that it was a bad piece of business to fly in the face of the constitution. I suggest again that the arguments which have been made from this side of the house and, in particular, against the way in which this was done, have been well taken. We have been attempting to get members of a Liberal government to have some respect for the constitution which, after all, does have some validity.

Mr. FLEMING: The minister indicated that certain wholesalers who had remitted the tax between November 17 and the date upon which the particular articles on which they paid it were removed from the taxable list, have made claims in one way or another for rebate. Could the minister give the total of those claims to date? I do not suppose for one moment that the list is complete, because delays in returns and in calculations are bound to occur. But it would be some guidance to the committee to know the total claims for refunds to date.

Mr. ABBOTT: I shall be glad to see what we can get on it. I do not wish to give too firm an undertaking because, for reasons which my hon. friend will appreciate, it may mean going through monthly returns from a considerable number of manufacturers and wholesalers to see what they had claimed by way of credits on their monthly statements, or specific claims for refunds. I shall ask the officials of the Department of National Revenue to see what information can be given.

For instance, the announcement was made with respect to electrical stoves on December 12, and I am informed that no tax was paid to the crown with respect to those particular articles, which were originally included in the list.

Mr. JACKMAN: The purchaser paid it, though.

Mr. ABBOTT: I doubt it. I am told by officials of the Department of National Revenue that few purchasers paid a tax on stoves.

Mr. FLEMING: I assume that when the original resolution was compiled and announced over the radio on November 17 there had been prepared by or for the minister an estimate of the revenue that was expected to be yielded by the 25 per cent tax on each of the items. Will the minister give to the committee the estimate for each item so that we may have some appreciation of the whole revenue picture?

Mr. ABBOTT: That question was asked before, again by the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario, and I told him that I had asked the same question of my officials and was told that it was absolutely impossible to attempt to make any estimate of what the revenue would be from the imposition of this proposed new excise tax, particularly because the taxes were being imposed, not for the purposes of obtaining revenue but to discourage consumption. My officials told me that they could not give me anything which would be really an accurate estimate.

We were able to estimate with a considerable degree of accuracy the amount of revenue which would be lost as a result of eliminating the tax on the domestic consumption of electricity and the removal of the one cent tax on sugar. If my memory serves me aright the estimated loss in the full year from those two taxes was something around the order of $19,000,000.

It was pointed out to me that the restrictive program under schedule III of the emergency import control act had not been worked out at that time, so that it was not possible to say with any degree of accuracy how many of these articles would probably be produced in Canada during the coming year. Taking all these different factors into consideration, my officials tell me that they could not give me anything that would be even a reasonably accurate estimate of what the tax yield would be from the imposition of these proposed taxes, and therefore I am sorry I cannot give it to the committee.

Mr. MANROSS: Organs are not mentioned in this amendment, so that I suppose the tax has been dropped?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is right. It was really off early in the game.

Mr. MANROSS: I would not be a bit encouraged over the minister saying that kerosene refrigerators are not mentioned in this tax. There is no tax on kerosene refrigerators because they are prohibited under schedule I.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have told hon. members that the question of whether a quota can be placed on those articles is now receiving serious consideration.

Mr. MANROSS: If a quota is given they will not be taxed?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is correct.

Mr. MANROSS: If we pass this amendment to the resolution tonight could we have a re-written resolution when we come back at this thing tomorrow?

Mr. ABBOTT: Earlier in the game I did provide a consolidation of the resolution in mimeographed form. That included the amendments. However, we have been taking this resolution in bits and pieces and I am afraid the original supply may have been exhausted. I will see that copies of the consolidation are made available.

Mr. MANROSS: I have the original one.

Mr. ABBOTT: The mimeographed copy is a consolidation, including the amendment.

Mr. HERRIDGE: I realize the task the minister has in attempting to conserve foreign exchange and I am not going to discuss the constitutional aspects of the matter. However, I submit that there is an element of discrimination in this act in addition to the one mentioned by the hon. member for Fraser Valley. The minister has said that the purpose of these excise taxes is to slow down consumption.

Mr. ABBOTT: One of the purposes.

Mr. HERRIDGE: I think it is logical to assume that it is the consumption of the lower income groups that will be slowed down to the greatest extent. It will not slow down the consumption of the middle-income groups or of well to do people. They will buy refrigerators and other things as they wish, but we shall be slowing down the consumption of the majority of the veterans in this country and the consumption of the majority of the lower paid working people. Does the minister not consider that to that extent these taxes are a discrimination against a large number of veterans and against a large section of the working classes of this country? Second, has consideration been given to a system of rationing to make it possible for these commodities to be distributed at least fairly?

[Mr. Manross.]

Mr. ABBOTT: I suppose any tax of this kind is bound to involve some measure of discrimination; it is inevitable that it should. My hon. friend is perfectly correct in saying that the well-to-do and the wealthy will be able to go ahead and buy refrigerators in spite of the tax. But they will pay the tax, and the lower income group will have kept their money and will be able to buy refrigerators a little later on when they are not as expensive to the extent of 25 per cent.

An hon. MEMBER: When will that be?

Mr. ABBOTT: I cannot say when that will be. This is the adoption of a fiscal measure in order to reduce consumption. As I said the other day, I think a valid criticism which might be directed at this tax is that it does not cover a great enough field of commodity and that it has singled out certain commodities which perhaps—I do not admit this—it is unfair to single out. To that degree there may be some discrimination. To some extent I am a believer in the fiscal method of accomplishing these things rather than in an attempt to set up a rationing system whereby one tries to determine, by the decision of some body here in Ottawa or of some official in Vancouver or somewhere else, who will get a refrigerator, who will get an iron and so on.

Mr. KNOWLES: That is exactly what you are doing.

Mr. ABBOTT: My hon. friends may interrupt and interject as much as they like, but I assert again that the fiscal method is a well-recognized method of accomplishing what we have in mind. It is a method which is accepted and approved by some of the ablest economists in this and any other country, and they are not socialists or followers of any other kind of ism. I assert today, as I did yesterday, that this is a perfectly well-recognized, legitimate method of reducing consumption for the purposes which I indicated yesterday, namely, creating an over-all current account surplus.

Mr. JACKMAN: If you believe that, why did you not devalue?

Mr. ABBOTT: The hon. member may make his own speech when he gets a chance.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): The minister has said that this was in part for the purpose of cutting down consumption, but I notice that he stated earlier in the evening that Canadian radio purchases, or, at any rate, production was still at the highest level.

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not know that; I am informed that it is.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): That raises a question which I think is important. Will the minister let us know just what indication there is to date as to whether the tax is having that effect? I know the minister will say that in a general way it is bound to have some effect, but I think we have a right to ask how much effect can be ascertained up to the present time.

I want to come back to what the minister said as to the main purpose of this tax, because I think we are apt to forget it. The minister said in his opening speech that the main purpose of the new excise taxes was to save United States dollar exchange. We have had nothing up to the moment to show how much dollar exchange has been saved, and I submit that that is a thing on which we should try to get whatever information is available before we take a vote on this measure.

In the first place, it seems to me the minister should tell us how much of the taxes, the figures of which he gave us earlier in the evening, were levied on United States parts. I take it from what the minister said that the only effect which this measure has, as distinct from Bill No. 3, the embargo measure, on the saving of United States exchange, is on the importation of parts, and in order to find out what the saving is on parts may we know what amount of tax has been collected on these parts since the measure came into effect; what was the amount of parts coming in before that time, and particularly what tax has been levied, so that we can in that way get at the amount which is being saved?

Mr. ABBOTT: I gave the estimated amount of tax which had been collected on radios, among other things, as the result of this proposed tax. There is no tax imposed on parts as such but on the finished radio set, on the manufacturer. For the reasons I have given earlier I cannot say what the effect of this particular section of our over-all program to conserve dollars has had, but, as I told the committee the other evening, our reserves of United States dollars at the end of February were $527 million as against $514 million at the end of January, and that is exclusive of the $50,000,000 we have drawn from the export-import bank loan. I think, with due reserve—and I am essentially conservative in these estimates—the program in its over-all aspects seems to be accomplishing the purposes we had in mind. We are not only holding the line but, instead of dropping $70,000,000 to $75,000,000 a month of United States exchange we were in February $13,000,000 up. I do not attach too much importance to that. I know that inventories were built up and the pipelines were full, and I say frankly that the results so far are better than I expected. I do not know whether it will last indefinitely. I would expect perhaps to see a downward trend, nevertheless in its over-all effect the program is doing what we set out to do. I cannot tell the committee what part is due to the discouragement of consumption as a result of the proposal to impose this tax, or what part is due to prohibitions on imports, or what part is due to quotas, or what part is due to the discouragement of capital investment under schedule III. I cannot break it down that way, and I do not think anybody else can. I can only give to the committee the over-all results to date. I should like to give my hon. friend further information but I just cannot do so.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I wonder if the committee would agree to carrying the amendment tonight?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. KNOWLES: May I suggest on the question you have just asked, Mr. Chairman, that possibly if the minister would place on Hansard in consolidated form the original resolution as amended the committee might accept it.

Mr. ABBOTT: It will be available tomorrow.

Mr. KNOWLES: It ought to be on Hansard.

Mr. ABBOTT: It would have to be by consent of the committee. I have to move an amendment to the original resolution which I moved on December 19, but I think it would be of great convenience to the committee to have placed on Hansard tonight the consolidated resolution which incorporates the changes and deletions. I would be very happy to do that, because I think it would facilitate discussion.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I had not finished my question. I want to read to the minister one thing he said, because I do not think he has given me his final answer. Referring to the goods excluded, he said on December 16, as reported at page 336 of Hansard:

> The import of practically all these goods in finished form has been prohibited or placed under quota restrictions and substantial savings in United States dollars are expected to result from this action.

Then he goes on:

The savings, however, would be considerably reduced if domestic production of the same type of articles were to expand to fill the gap in the supply, since this would involve further substantial imports of parts and components.

The amount of United States parts that goes into these goods is perfectly well known. The figures are available. They may not be easy to get, but this was put forward as the main feature of this measure, and surely it is not too much to ask for this information.

Mr. ABBOTT: We can possibly get the amount of radio parts imported and probably automobile parts; but when we get down to which part of an electric toaster is imported, I do not know, even if we had the information, just what practical advantage it would be. However, I shall ask my officials to try to get whatever information can be obtained as to the importation of parts of articles which are subject to this tax. I want to add this, that even if an article does not contain one cent's worth of imported content the chances are that it does contain metal, such as aluminum or copper or something else, which we could export to dollar markets and sell for dollars. In addition, I suggest that the consumption of these articles should be reduced.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I want to complete my question.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I want the permission of the committee to do two things. In the first place, has the minister leave to put the proposed amended resolution on Hansard?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. ABBOTT: It is as follows:

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Excise Tax Act and to provide:

1. Effective on and after November 18, 1947, an excise tax of 25 per cent is imposed on the following goods:

(a) The following electrical appliances: waffle irons; roasters; kettles; chafing dishes; juice extractors; coffee makers; toasters of all kinds; portable humidifiers; curling irons or tongs, hair dryers; permanent waving machines and spacers or clamps; rods and heaters therefor; razors and shavers; garbage disposal units;

(b) The following electrical appliances when adapted to household use: food or drink mixers; food choppers and grinders; irons and ironers; vacuum cleaners and attachments therefor; floor waxers and polishers;

(c) Electric or gas refrigerators or freezing equipment, and coils, condensing or compressor units, cabinets, boxes, evaporators and expansion valves therefor; all the foregoing when adapted to household or apartment use or when for use in places of entertainment, amusement or recreation, including rinks, auditoria, halls and clubs;

(d) Firearms except for military or police purposes;

(e) Outboard motors;

(f) Motorcycles, and all other two- or three-wheeled motor-driven vehicles including motors for attachment to bicycles but not including vehicles specially designed for carrying goods or for use by invalids;

(g) Projectors for slides, films or pictures designed for industrial or professional photographers' use;

(h) Toilet articles of all kinds (including combs, mirrors and brushes other than tooth brushes or shaving brushes the duty paid value or the Canadian manufacturer's selling price of which combs, mirrors and brushes is more than twenty-five cents each) and which items do not already come within any other item in schedule one of the said act.

2. That on and after November 18, 1947, the rate of excise tax on automobiles adapted or adaptable for passenger use with seating capacity for not more than ten persons each, imported into or manufactured or produced in Canada be increased from ten per cent to the following rates, namely, on automobiles valued at $1,200 or less, 25 per cent; over $1,200 but not more than $2,000, 25 per cent on $1,200 plus 50 per cent on the amount in excess of $1,200; over $2,000, 25 per cent on $1,200 plus 50 per cent on $800 plus 75 per cent on the amount in excess of $2,000.

3. That on and after November 18, 1947, the rate of excise tax on phonographs, record playing devices, radio broadcast receiving sets and tubes therefor, be increased from ten per cent to twenty-five per cent.

4. That on and after November 18, 1947, the rate of excise tax on cameras, photographic films and plates, projectors for slides, films or pictures, except those designed exclusively for industrial or professional photographers' use, be increased from ten per cent to twenty-five per cent.

5. That on and after November 18, 1947, electricity and gas used in dwellings be exempt from consumption or sales tax; and

6. That on and after November 18, 1847, the excise tax of one cent per pound on sugar, grape sugar, glucose, sugar syrup, corn syrup, etc., be repealed.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for Brant has been trying to get to his feet and I should like to give him that opportunity.

Mr. CHARLTON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The minister said some time ago that he did not blame retailers for collecting the tax on all inventory stock. Am I to assume from that, that a retailer who had a stock of radios would be able to collect the tax on a radio and stick the tax in his pocket and not send it in to the dominion treasury? By the same token, would a man who had a $4,000 car in stock on November 16 be able to collect in the same way $3,000 as a pure profit? Is that right?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is right, and that is standard tax practice. When a tax is imposed in this way there is no refund made to a retailer if the tax is taken off. If his stock consists of tax-paid inventory and the tax is taken off, the automatic effect is that the value of his inventory falls by the amount of the tax. So what the dealer gains when the tax is put on he loses when the tax comes off. That is standard tax practice. It has been the practice in this country ever since tariffs and taxes were imposed, that the holders of inventories benefit when a tax is put on and lose when a tax is taken off. I have had delegations come to see me within the last two months from wholesale grocers in connection with the removal of the tax on sugar. They say that they have had substantial losses by the removal of the one cent tax on sugar. With a sympathetic look on my face I had to tell them that that is unfortunate, but that is what happens when a tax comes off. They gain when the tax goes on but lose when the tax comes off.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. ST. LAURENT: It is the intention to call tomorrow resolution No. 3 on the order paper today, dealing with the Geneva trade agreement, for the purpose of referring it to the committee on banking and commerce.

Mr. BRACKEN: That is, without approving it at this stage?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: With nothing more than merely referring it to the committee on banking and commerce, hoping that further debate upon it can be had when the information will have been obtained in the committee on banking and commerce. Then the Minister of Justice would like to move his resolution, which is No. 17 on the order paper, having to do with the bill to provide for the continuation of certain orders and regulations of the governor in council for a limited period, and to make a statement as to what there is left to which the bill will apply, so that over the week-end members may have that information and know just to what extent this bill for prolonging the emergency powers would go. He would hope that the resolution might be adopted and that the debate upon the propriety of continuing some or all of these measures could be had after the bill is distributed. But even if that were not possible tomorrow afternoon, if the house were not prepared to adopt the resolution after short debate, the debate might be adjourned; but hon. members would have on Hansard the minister's statement as to what the bill will refer to. Then we shall proceed with the second reading of the bill to amend the wheat board act and, after that, return to the resolution dealing with these excise taxes.

Mr. BRACKEN: With respect to the wheat board act, I understand that the minister is having that brought forward in divided form.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: My understanding is that it will have to proceed to second reading and in committee of the whole in the form in which it is. The question of procedure is being considered by the minister and by the Clerk, but it seems that the only way to get the benefit of what has been done up to the present time will be to strike out of that bill the part which deals with coarse grains and carry it on only with the remaining provisions, and introduce another bill to deal with coarse grains. That is something which could be done in committee of the whole. In committee of the whole the new part dealing with coarse grains would not be passed and the bill would be reported without that part, so that it could go forward and be adopted without undue delay.

Mr. BRACKEN: The minister has said that the resolution moving discussion of the Geneva trade agreements will be brought forward tomorrow in order that it may be referred to the committee before being approved by the house?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Yes.

Mr. BRACKEN: And then come back to the house. Is the minister in a position to say he will do the same thing with the resolution with respect to the exchange of letters regarding the abandonment of the British trade preference?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: No. I am not in a position to say that, and I can say that it is not regarded as being as urgent as the others.

It being seven minutes after eleven o'clock, the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, March 12, 1948

The house met at three o'clock.

HONG KONG

DREW LETTER—QUESTION AND ANSWER IN BRITISH HOUSE OF COMMONS

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in view of some of the doubts expressed and implications made, which are recorded in Hansard, as to statements of mine concerning communications between the Canadian government and the United Kingdom government respecting publication of the letter known as the Drew letter and the refusal of the United Kingdom government to allow the publication of certain telegrams exchanged between the United Kingdom and Canadian governments in 1941, I am sure hon. members will wish to have the following information on an exchange of question and answer which took place yesterday in the United Kingdom House of Commons. In justice to myself I feel this question and answer should also be recorded in Hansard.

The question appeared in the name of Mr. Quintin Hogg, Conservative M.P. for Oxford City. The text of the exchange is as follows:

Question: "Mr. Hogg to ask the Secretary of State for Commonwealth Relations what communications have passed between the Canadian and British governments relative to the publication of letters known as the Drew (Premier Drew of Ontario) letters concerning Canadian troops at Hong Kong and if he now agreed to their publication."

Answer: "There has been no correspondence between His Majesty's government in Canada and the United Kingdom about publication of letters from Colonel Drew to which the honourable member (Hogg) refers.

"The Canadian government inquired whether they might publish certain telegrams exchanged between the United Kingdom and the Canadian government in 1941 relating to the dispatch of Canadian forces to Hong Kong and to the situation in the Far East at that time.

"We replied agreeing to the publication of those telegrams which related to the dispatch of troops but we said that we felt unable to agree to the publication of telegrams relating to the international situation.

"Such telegrams are framed on the basis that they will not be published and the whole system of full and frank communication between His Majesty's governments would be prejudiced if telegrams of this nature had to be prepared on the basis that this rule might not eventually be observed.

"The question was very carefully examined at the highest level and the United Kingdom regret that they cannot reconsider their decision."

TARIFFS AND TRADE

REFERENCE OF SUBJECT MATTER OF GENEVA TRADE AGREEMENT TO BANKING AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): It was announced last night, Mr. Speaker, that the first order to be called today would be the one which appears as No. 3 on the order paper with respect to the Geneva agreement. The purpose of calling that order today was to enable the subject matter of the trade agreement to be referred to the banking and commerce committee. The procedure in the house has always been to pass the second reading in the first instance, before assigning a bill by direction of the house to one committee or another. But hon. gentlemen opposite expressed the view earlier that it would be helpful if, before being asked to vote on the second reading, the subject matter could be referred to a committee, and the committee on banking and commerce was the committee agreed upon.

I just wish to point out, in order that this will not become a precedent, that it is quite exceptional to refer the subject matter of a resolution to a committee before the resolution itself has been voted upon. In order that the matter may be proceeded with in a regular way I would move, seconded by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. St. Laurent), the following motion, which serves the same end:

That the subject matter of the general agreement on tariffs and trade, including the protocol of provisional application thereof, together with the complementary agreement of October 30, 1947, between Canada and the United States of America, be referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

This is not a resolution and therefore no notice is required; if carried it will be an order of the house. But hon. members will see that it is to carry out the purpose that was intended, namely, to enable the house to have the subject matter of this agreement referred to the banking and commerce committee.

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): If it is in order to deal with this matter now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a very brief comment.

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion is debatable.

Mr. BRACKEN: My understanding is that if this motion is adopted it carries with it neither approval nor disapproval of the details of the resolution itself?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is correct.

Mr. BRACKEN: Our interpretation of the motion is that the resolution will be referred to a committee, there to be considered and sent back either with or without some recommendations, and that when it comes back to the house we will be free to deal with it as we choose. If that is the purpose of this motion, if that is what is to be accomplished, we will offer no objection at this time. But we want to reserve our right to take any attitude that seems necessary when it comes from the committee back to the house for further consideration.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I explain the position exactly to my hon. friend. The motion is not to refer the resolution to the banking and commerce committee. It is to refer the subject matter of the resolution, which is the Geneva trade agreement, to enable the banking and commerce committee to call before it experts or anyone it may wish to call to give the committee such information as it may wish to have. When the committee has all the information it wishes on the subject matter of the trade agreement, then the resolution which is on the order paper, and which meanwhile will remain there as it is, will come up for debate in the house. The committee cannot change the terms of the agreement, but in committee an opportunity would be afforded to look into the details of the agreement.

Mr. COLDWELL: As I understand it, this is an international agreement between various countries of the world. As such I presume the house has to accept or reject it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is right.

Mr. COLDWELL: Is not the purpose of referring the subject matter to a committee to enable all the points to be elucidated?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is it.

Mr. COLDWELL: In order that members of parliament may understand them, so that we may either vote for or against the resolution?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is the purpose.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. COLDWELL: That is my understanding.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is correct.

Motion agreed to.

WHEAT BOARD ACT

COMMUNICATIONS FROM WESTERN PROVINCES AS TO COMPLEMENTARY LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. CASTLEDEN (Yorkton): I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether any communication has been received as yet from the government of Alberta or of Manitoba as to their readiness or intention to pass legislation with respect to the Canadian wheat board which would be complementary to the bill now before this house.

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): A communication has been received from Alberta, not from Manitoba.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SUGGESTED CONFERENCE WITH RESPECT TO EMERGENCY LEGISLATION AND EASTER RECESS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. STANLEY KNOWLES (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister? In view of the number of items of business of an emergency character which have to be concluded before the end of March, and in view also of the general desire of hon. members for a little longer Easter recess than is indicated in the Prime Minister's motion—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. KNOWLES: Incidentally I note that the Prime Minister himself is to be in Virginia on April 2—would the Prime Minister consider calling together the leaders and whips of the various parties at this time to see whether arrangements can be made to get a certain amount of business through, and thus make possible a longer recess?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I have had the opportunity already of speaking to two of the leaders and saying I would like to have a word with them very shortly on the business of the house. This afternoon I hope to have a chance to speak to the other leader, to whom I have not spoken, and will indicate to him the same wish. I would hope to have a meeting with the three leaders today or possibly on Monday. As to a meeting of the leaders and whips, I think it would be preferable that I should meet with the leaders to see if we can arrive at some appropriate arrangement, and later the whips might confer to see if they can carry out any plan that may be agreed upon.

VEGETABLES

STATEMENT WITH RESPECT TO IMPORTATION BY AIR FROM THE UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): Yesterday in my unavoidable absence the hon. member for Regina City (Mr. Probe) asked whether I was aware that certain fresh vegetables now banned from import to Canada from the United States were being flown into Canada daily from California by commercial aircraft and, if so, would I explain to the house why those vegetables were being permitted entry when ordinary bulk vegetables such as lettuce and celery were barred from import into Canada.

I am familiar with the situation, which is as follows. Fresh vegetables in their natural state have been placed on the prohibited list, of course with the exception of cabbage, carrots, potatoes and onions, under tariff item 87, which reads, "vegetables, fresh, in their natural state". Vegetables, fresh, in other than their natural state, that is to say cut up in any way, are classified under tariff item 711, and are permitted entry without permit. I have been informed that importers are now taking advantage of this tariff item and are importing in growing volume salad greens, that is vegetables cut or shredded, consisting of almost every variety of vegetables, as of course they are entitled to do. In order to maintain the ban on the importation of fresh vegetable salads I am recommending that order in council P.C. 4678 and Bill No. 3 be amended to include in the prohibited list cut or shredded vegetables classified under tariff item 711.

LOANS TO OTHER COUNTRIES

INQUIRY AS TO AMOUNTS NOT REPAID

On the orders of the day:

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): The other day the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) asked a question about the repayment of certain Canadian loans and credits to foreign countries, and I apologize for not having answered the question before today. The situation is that all these loans are made under contracts, the terms of which call for repayment; and as Minister of Finance of course I expect that those contracts will be fulfilled. It is obvious to anyone, I suppose, that there are risks involved in loans of this kind, and one would be showing a false sense of optimism if one expected there would be no losses before these loans were repaid. Members of the house will recall that we have set aside some $25,000,000 each year out of current revenue to build up a reserve against assets of this kind, and of course that reserve is available.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): The Minister of Agriculture does not agree with you, does he?

Mr. FULTON: May I ask the Minister of Finance a supplementary question arising out of the statement he has just made? In view of the statement made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) on February 27 that everyone in the house knows that a "considerable part" of the loan is "never going to be paid back", I should like to ask the Minister of Finance if he would be willing to let us have a further statement which would better reconcile the statements of the two ministers.

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not know that I have anything to add to what I said a minute ago.

REPORTS AND PAPERS

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table P.C. 637—

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Louder.

Mr. MITCHELL: It is enough to have one loud-voiced person in the house. I wish to table P.C. 637 and P.C. 804, orders in council dealing with the Japanese in Canada.

UNITED NATIONS

TEMPORARY COMMISSION ON KOREA—ACTION OF CANADIAN DELEGATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GORDON GRAYDON (Peel): Mr. Speaker, has the Secretary of State for External Affairs any further information to convey to the house with respect to our position concerning the interim commission on Korea? When I asked the question earlier in the week he could not give full information; perhaps he could do so now.

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I am not yet in receipt of full information, although additional information was obtained by telephone communication with Canada's representative, Doctor Patterson. That is to be followed up by a dispatch which has not yet come to my desk, and which had not reached the Department of External Affairs before eleven o'clock this morning. I am in a position to say, on the information obtained over the telephone, that there was no walk-out. The matter of the election was being discussed and at a given moment Doctor Patterson, for reasons that can be understood, retired for a few minutes and then came back while the meeting still continued. The fact that he had been out for a few moments was described by newspapermen as a walk-out. That was not so.

Mr. GRAYDON: I suppose that can be referred to as an unofficial walk-out.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Certainly one that had no international connotation.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA

INQUIRY AS TO CANADIAN LOAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. R. THATCHER (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, on March 2 I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs what was going to be done with the balance of the Canadian loan to Czechoslovakia. Can he tell us that now?

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs): There have been no advances made on the Czechoslovakian loan over the last three or four weeks, and no question of further advances has been raised.

Mr. THATCHER: Can the minister say whether the credits under the loan have been frozen by the Canadian government?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: We have been having some pretty cold weather, and I do not think there is apt to be very much change at an early date in the international atmosphere in that regard.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

AUDIBILITY OF DEBATE AND PROCEEDINGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. A. CRUICKSHANK (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that some gentlemen are paid $18,000 a year to tell the house and the press gallery what is going on, is any provision being made for the amplification of speeches so that we can hear the mumbling that goes on in this chamber?

TRANSITIONAL MEASURES ACT, 1947

CONTINUATION OF CERTAIN ORDERS AND REGULATIONS

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Justice) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the continuation of certain orders and regulations of the governor in council for a limited period during the national emergency arising out of the war.

Mr. KNOWLES: Will the minister make a statement now?

Mr. ILSLEY: I believe it would be more appropriate if I were to make it in committee.

Mr. GRAYDON: Why would it be more appropriate?

Mr. IRVINE: Would the minister tell us what is before the house? We cannot hear.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: They are just mumbling among themselves down there.

Mr. ILSLEY: It is item No. 16 on the order paper.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Golding in the chair.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. ILSLEY: No; I should be very glad to have it carry, but I think I should say a few words about it, mainly for the information of hon. members.

I do not think the house will oppose the passage of this resolution in the terms in which it is drafted. The resolution states that it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the continuation of certain orders and regulations of the governor in council for a limited period during the national emergency arising out of the war. I believe there would be general agreement among members of the committee that some of the orders in council validated by legislation last year, and which have force until March 31 this year, must continue for a while at least after March 31, 1948.

The bill to be introduced will propose the continuation of the orders in council in force at the present time until March 31, 1949. It will not refer to the orders in council at all, but will be a bill for the continuation of and to amend the measure, so that instead of an expiration date of March 31, 1948, as it now appears, the date of expiration of the measure will be March 31, 1949. There will be a provision, such as is found in the measure, for a further continuation for one additional year by address of the senate and the House of Commons, followed by an order in council, if that is felt desirable. That is the section contained in the present bill.

Mr. BENTLEY: Why did the minister not do that before Christmas, when we asked him to do it, and save all this time?

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not think it would have saved time. As the situation developed before Christmas, perhaps it would have been the right thing to do; but we thought we had some sort of understanding with the leaders of the other parties that there would be a very short debate before Christmas on the basis that the orders in council would merely be continued until March 31, 1948. A long debate ensued, occupying a large part of the pre-Christmas session, and excluding the legislation we really wanted to pass during that period. Perhaps in the end it would have been all right to do the other; but that was not the understanding on which a great many members in the house felt they should desist from any discussion of the measure. If we had proposed that before Christmas we would have invited discussion of the orders in council themselves. Those orders in council were not discussed at all in the debate before Christmas. In that debate hon. members confined themselves to general principles.

Mr. COLDWELL: Is the minister sure there was a meeting of the leaders of the groups at which an extension to March 31 only was discussed? I do not think such a meeting was held.

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not think there was a meeting.

Mr. KNOWLES: I think the minister assumed that there would be less trouble for three months than for the full year.

Mr. ILSLEY: I understood that certain leaders at any rate intimated that if it were merely an extension until March 31 there would be no exception taken because it would have gone on anyway to March 31 if we had not called parliament in December. We would have departed entirely from the spirit of that whole arrangement if we had branched out into a discussion of this measure as a measure for another year which would have involved an examination of the orders in council themselves. I think there will be general agreement that some orders in council must be extended beyond March 31 of this year.

Mr. LOW: Such as?

Mr. ILSLEY: Such as the orders relating to price control, rent control and eviction control. There are others, but I shall come to them later. For the information of hon. members I think I ought to say just what orders are extant at the present time and just what orders are revoked at the present time. I ought to give the members of the committee an indication of where they can get further and full information as to the terms of the order in council that really will be extended.

Mr. LOW: That is what we need.

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes. Last year a list of fifty orders in council was appended to the Continuation of Transitional Measures Act, 1947. Of those, twenty-three have been wholly revoked since the passage of the act. Twenty-seven orders in council remain in force, but some of them have been partially revoked. This afternoon I should like to place on Hansard the details of what orders in council have been revoked and what orders in council are still extant. I think I shall have to do this by reading. It will be dry and it will take quite a lot of time, but I think the information should be put on Hansard.

Mr. LOW: We can take it; we are used to that.

Mr. ILSLEY: All right. The following are the orders in council which appeared in the schedule to the Continuation of Transitional Measures Act of last year which have been completely revoked.

Department of Agriculture. P.C. 5424 of 1944—I should say at this stage that in the material which I shall place on Hansard the exact dates of the order in council are given and the exact dates of revocation, but in reading I shall refer only to the year in order to save time.

Mr. MacNICOL: Would it not help to mention what each order refers to?

Mr. ILSLEY: Department of Agriculture. P.C. 5424 of 1944, agricultural food board regulations respecting recovery of subsidies; revoked by P.C. 5040 of 1947. P.C. 6759 of 1945, repayment of subsidy (agricultural products) regulations; revoked by P.C. 5040 of 1947.

Civil service commission. P.C. 8541-½ of 1941, preference respecting appointment to civil service, ex-servicemen of present war, as amended by P.C. 4320 of 1945; revoked by P.C. 4632 of 1947. P.C. 15/1647 of 1945, veterans preference respecting appointments to the civil service, service on the high seas in a sea-going ship of war; revoked by P.C. 4632 of 1947. P.C. 16/1647 of 1945, veterans preference respecting appointments to the civil service, not applicable to certain classes in naval forces; revoked by P.C. 4632 of 1947.

Mr. BROOKS: The reason for revoking these is that they are now incorporated in certain acts?

Mr. ILSLEY: So I believe. The next is P.C. 20/6173 of 1945, civil service war service preference, certain persons excluded, as amended by P.C. 29/1046 of 1946; revoked by P.C. 4632 of 1947. P.C. 30/7500 of 1945, veterans preference respecting appointments to the public service, as amended by P.C. 19/3727 of 1946; revoked by P.C. 4632 of 1947.

Department of Finance. P.C. 394 of 1942, anthracite coal, importation exempted from customs duty, as extended by P.C. 3472 of 1942; revoked by P.C. 5085 of 1947. P.C. 9058 of 1942, bagging material, et cetera, importation exempt from customs duty; revoked by P.C. 5085 of 1947. P.C. 6497 of 1943, ration coupon banking, as amended by P.C. 626 of 1944; revoked by P.C. 498 of 1948.

Department of Fisheries. P.C. 6289 of 1943, regulations for control of salt fish and appointments thereunder; revoked by P.C. 4976 of 1947.

Department of Mines and Resources. P.C. 7167 of 1943, reserves to the crown radioactive substances in Yukon territory; revoked by P.C. 5282 of 1947. P.C. 7168 of 1943, reserves to the crown radioactive substances in Northwest Territories; revoked by P.C. 5282 of 1947.

Department of National Defence. P.C. 6638 of 1945, post-discharge benefits to the members of the armed forces serving in an interim force; revoked by P.C. 5085 of 1947. P.C. 3617 of 1946, naval, military and air force estates regulations, 1946; revoked by P.C. 5005 of 1947. P.C. 349 of 1947, regulations respecting claims by or against the crown involving members of the naval, military or air forces of Canada overseas; revoked by P.C. 5005 of 1947. P.C. 363 of 1947, consolidated regulations respecting salvage services by H.M.C. ships; revoked by P.C. 5005 of 1947.

Department of National Health and Welfare. There are four orders in council referring to old age pensions.

Department of Transport. P.C. 3396 of 1946, merchant seamen out of work allowance regulations: revoked by P.C. 4939 of 1947. P.C. 133/510 of 1944, compensation to seamen, war damage to effects, regulations 1939, as amended by certain orders in council mentioned here; revoked by P.C. 498 of 1948. Those complete the list of revocation.

Now come the partial revocations. P.C. 5518 of 1943, repayment of subsidy order; order amended by P.C. 4815 of 1947 which revokes subsections (2) and (3) of section 4 and renumbers subsections (4), (5) and (6) as (2), (3) and (4) respectively. I think it is incorrect to say "amended by." There is really no power of amendment. It should be "partially revoked by."

Department of Fisheries. P.C. 251 of 1942. fishing licences prohibited to persons of Japanese racial origin; revoked as of April 1, 1949, by P.C. 804 of 1948.

Department of Labour. P.C. 946, 1943, evacuation and relocation of persons of the Japanese race in Canada, as amended by certain orders described here, paragraphs (ii) of (vii) of subsection (1) of section 3, revoked by P.C. 804 of 1948. Total revocation as of April 1, 1949, by P.C. 804, 1948, and P.C. 7355 of 1945, being financial assistance to voluntary repatriates to Japan and liquidation and transfer of their assets to Japan as amended by P.C. 268, January 23, 1947, amended by P.C. 637 of 1948, revoked, except in so far as it affects or relates to persons who, having made a request for repatriation, have proceeded to Japan prior to December 5, 1947.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Has the minister the dates for the last orders in council?

Mr. ILSLEY: I said 1948, but the exact date is the 2nd day of March, 1948.

Mr. KNOWLES: The minister indicated that P.C. 946 has already been made the subject of final revocation as of a date he gave?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES: What is the date?

Mr. ILSLEY: April 1, 1949.

Mr. KNOWLES: It should have been sooner, but it is good to see it go. These are the orders in council tabled today by the Minister of Labour?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes. If hon. members wish to get full information about these important orders in council they may get it from the copies of the orders in council that were laid on the table today by the Minister of Labour. He tabled two orders in council which have the effect that I have briefly described in the information I have given to the house, and I understand that if members desire further copies they are obtainable from the privy council office.

I have given the orders in council that have been revoked, those that have been revoked wholly and those that have been revoked partially. I have a list of the orders in council which remain, and with the consent of the committee I will put them on Hansard without reading them, because that is tiresome.

Mr. KNOWLES: Those are the ones in which no changes have been made?

Mr. ILSLEY: Those in which no changes have been made.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Has the minister leave to put the list on the record?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. ILSLEY: It is not quite right to say that they are the ones in which no changes have been made. The ones that have been partially revoked will be part of the orders in council still operative, and those are in this list that I am about to place on Hansard. My suggestion would be that if hon. members have the office consolidation of the orders in council of last year they can easily, with the information I am giving the committee this afternoon and placing on Hansard, go through it and with a lead pencil prepare a complete statement of exactly what is being continued. Hon. members will probably have to have last year's act before them.

Mr. KNOWLES: With respect to the list the minister is placing on Hansard now, of orders in council still in effect, does it include P.C. 1665 under the department of the Secretary of State, administration by the custodian of property of persons of the Japanese race? There has been no change in that as yet?

Mr. ILSLEY: No.

Mr. KNOWLES: And is the same true of P.C. 469?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes, the same is true.

I have not very much more to say at this time. I hope that the resolution will go through this afternoon, without much discussion, because I think that this is one of the occasions when the house can save time. I say that because it will give me an opportunity to introduce the bill and hon. members will have before them all the information that is important. Then when the bill comes on for second reading the principle can be discussed. The house can take such action as it sees fit with regard to them.

Mr. KNOWLES: May I say a word with regard to the procedure suggested by the Minister of Justice? I agree as to the desirability of having discussion in as few stages of the debate as possible, but it seems to me a difficulty arises and we must have some undertaking as to how we shall deal with it. Last year when the bill was before us the schedule to the bill included a list of all orders in council covered, which meant that when we got to the schedule we could express our views regarding individual orders, and in some cases we moved amendments or forced a vote to try to delete them, whether we were successful or otherwise. But this year the minister indicates that the bill he will bring in, based upon this resolution, is a very simple one which merely changes the expiry date—

Mr. ILSLEY: That is right.

Mr. KNOWLES: —in the act that is now on the statute book. I can see a member attempting on the second reading of the bill to discuss the orders in council having regard to the Canadians of Japanese origin, and being told by Mr. Speaker that that is pretty far afield from the general principle of the bill and that we cannot do it on second reading, and then when we get into committee on the bill these individual items will not be before us at all. All we shall have is one or two sections of the bill. I am prepared to leave the discussion to the second reading of the bill or in committee on the bill. As a matter of fact, the committee stage would be better because we could have a back-and-forth discussion with the minister. But I would not want to let this stage go by unless we have an undertaking from the minister or the chairman that at some future stage we can go into details if we wish.

Mr. ILSLEY: I have not consulted with the Chairman or with the Speaker, but I foresaw exactly the situation that my hon. friend has outlined and I will take no exception. In fact, I will favour the course of action I am now about to describe, that is to say, that members will be free in committee on the bill to discuss any of these orders in council. And moreover, they will be free, so far as I am concerned, unless I am prevented in some way by the rules, to propose amendments to specific orders in council on the bill.

The bill is an amending bill. There may be some question about the rules of order, whether other amendments can be proposed, but I think the house ought to be free in committee to discuss the details. Of course, no action could be taken on second reading except something attacking the whole principle of the bill, but when we get into committee on the bill I think the house must be free to discuss price control or the policy with reference to Japanese, or those other matters that I have outlined. The house must be free to do that. I am not inviting this discussion. In fact, I do not want the discussion, as far as that goes, but I have to see, as far as I can, that the house has an opportunity to discuss these details. I will now put the list on Hansard:

Mr. KNOWLES: I appreciate the position the minister takes, and the committee I think will recognize, as will the chairman, that it is very fair. Let me state a case in point with reference to the minister's feeling that we should be in a position to move amendments. He indicated today that P.C. 946 has been made the subject of another order in council finally revoking it as of April 1, 1949.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is correct.

Mr. KNOWLES: Suppose I wish to move an amendment to change the date of April 1, 1949, to April 1, 1948, can the minister give me any free legal advice as to how it might be done?

Mr. ILSLEY: There is a passage in May that is not too helpful on this proposal. What I had in mind all along was that if an hon. member wished to do that he would move an amendment to this bill adding a specific section that order in council so and so should be changed or dropped.

Mr. KNOWLES: Thank you.

Mr. MacINNIS: I think the procedure that has been indicated by the Minister of Justice is fair, and I also think it is according to the rules of the house. When a bill is proposed to amend a time section of an act my understanding is that the act as a whole is open for amendment. I believe there was a ruling made in that regard at one time on a question raised by the then hon. member for Comox-Alberni.

This is a very important matter. I do not think it helps us very much to have the minister say that he is willing to do so and so. I appreciate that, and I would appreciate it if the chairman also said it, but neither of them controls the house.

Mr. KNOWLES: No, but he has quoted May.

Mr. MacINNIS: He said May was not very helpful; perhaps May never is. Therefore if some hon. member raises a point of order the chairman is bound to decide that point of order not on what the minister has said nor on what he thinks himself, but on the rules of the house. I believe there is a rule which permits any amendment to be made once there is an amendment to an act.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is my understanding of it.

Mr. BRACKEN: As the minister has pointed out, this resolution is preparatory to the continuance of a measure passed some two or three years ago, a measure which continued in effect some fifty orders in council. The minister has indicated today that some of these orders in council have been revoked partially, some revoked wholly and some are being continued in effect. This is the first time we have had that statement. We cannot therefore be expected to discuss a measure of this kind intelligently at the moment. The suggestion of the minister is a very good one, that the major debate, whatever it may be, should be left to second reading.

This is the resolution stage preparatory to the introduction of a bill. The minister indicates that the bill will be very short; it will not have all the details that it has had in the past. It is pointed out that we shall have them from other sources and they will be available and subject to discussion. We gather that the bill in principle will be the same as the bills we have dealt with on three or four other occasions, but covering a less extensive number of orders and controls. I think it is very desirable to save time at this stage if we can do so. But I want it understood that if we pass this resolution now without much debate we have our rights reserved to oppose it or support certain sections of it when the time comes for doing so.

With respect to the general principle of this control measure, our position is well known. We supported it generally during the war period; during the immediate post-war period we favoured an orderly decontrol. As we got into the peacetime period it was our view that many of these controls were resulting in lessened production, and many of them were doing more harm than good. Many of us feel that one in particular, the rent control, should not be abandoned precipitately. We think that if we are to get rid of it, it should be done in an orderly fashion.

We have had this measure before us on four different occasions—this is the fifth—and each time it is brought back to us the government seems to have made very little progress in extricating itself from its wartime controls. Generally speaking, we think many of these controls result in lessened production and therefore do more harm than good. I am not going to take more time now to discuss this matter in detail. We are agreeable to having the resolution passed at this stage, subject to the understanding that we can take any position we choose when the measure comes back to us. Then we will have before us the orders that are being continued, as indicated by the minister this afternoon, and then we will know what ones have been discontinued. I think, Mr. Chairman, we can save a good deal of the time of the house if that general procedure is accepted now, subject to the understanding that on second reading, and when we go into committee on the bill after second reading, we shall be free to take any position we think wise with respect to the support or otherwise of the different sections of the measure.

[Mr. Bracken.]

Mr. POULIOT: I am sorry not to be in a position to accept the advice of the leader of the opposition. He has said: Well, we should swallow this resolution and wait until the bill is before the committee to discuss the matter and to ask for more information. In my opinion, sir, the rules of the house are apropos and very wise. They were drafted by men who had respect for law, men who knew that laws could not be made by the barrel, could not be made by the ton. They knew that an enactment is a matter of great importance because it affects everybody in this country. We are at the initial stage of the discussion, not the debate. The debate is on the second reading of the bill, but this is the initial stage of the discussion of a measure. The opposition is against control. The government is to reduce controls progressively. I personally am against controls.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Rent control?

Mr. POULIOT: If my hon. friend does not know that, he has not followed the debates since he has been a member of parliament. He knows that I am against all controls because they are an infringement of the liberty of the citizens of this country. But I will say more to him. There are some newcomers, like the leader of the opposition, for whom I have great respect, who say: We will save the time of the house by not discussing anything now; we will wait until the bill is before the committee. He does not realize the importance of the resolution. The very purpose of the resolution, especially when it is before the committee of the whole, is to give hon. members the opportunity to notify the government as to the information that they want to get before the second reading of the bill. This is the time to ask for that information in order that hon. members may be well posted and well informed when they discuss the principle of the bill. Where the first reading of the bill passes unnoticed, it is on the second reading that we discuss the principle of the bill. If we want information we ask the government for it when the bill is in the committee stage; therefore hon. members get the information after they have committed themselves on the principle of the bill. In other words the members must make their decision promptly, and it is a most important decision. How many rulings have I not heard in committee to the effect that the merits of the matter may not be discussed in committee? The member is bound by the vote he has given on second reading, and that is that. Is that not true, Mr. Chairman? How many times have you called members to order just because they were opposing the principle of a bill in the committee stage? Therefore I will tell the minister what kind of information I want to have, and I want to have it for the benefit of my fellow colleagues of the House of Commons. What does it mean to me if I hear that an order in council has been repealed entirely or in part? The minister surely told the truth. I admit that he must have told the truth. I believe him.

Mr. GREEN: He always tells the truth.

Mr. POULIOT: Well, he always believes that he tells the truth. That is why I said he was honest. But he may make some errors occasionally, and he will not mind my saying that.

Mr. KNOWLES: He is always careful.

Mr. POULIOT: Yes; errare humanum est—to err is human. The fact that one order in council has been repealed in part or in full is just some more paper; the effect of it is what members of parliament are interested in. Members of parliament who denounce bureaucracy are interested in that repeal or in that change, whether you call it an amendment or something else, from the point of view of the number of bureaucrats that have been dispensed with as a result of such repeal or such change. Therefore my question now to the minister is quite clear, and it is this. I want to know how many men and women were employed by virtue of all those orders in council, and how many have been shifted to other departments because they personally were found to be indispensable, although the work they did under the repealed orders in council was no longer considered indispensable. In the first place, how many were dispensed with entirely from the service? How many were shifted from the bodies created by the orders in council to another branch of the dominion government? How many are still in the pay of the dominion government for the purpose of rendering some services in the bodies that are kept up by the orders in council which have not been entirely repealed?

To turn now, for instance, to price control and the wartime prices and trade board, this is exactly the kind of economic council which was established by Mr. Bennett by virtue of his social legislation, and which I denounced in the house. I succeeded in getting it taken completely out of the statute book. If any hon. member takes the trouble to look at the statutes of 1936, he will see that in that book there is a short piece of legislation entitled "An act to repeal the Economic Council Act." I was the mover of that resolution. To me it is absurd that men in the government service, deputy ministers and others, should form an underground government to make policies as was done by the wartime prices and trade board. Let us look at those who composed that organization. Some of them are fine fellows. There are, of course, degrees of fineness among those who sat on that board. But men in various departments were taken from the work they had to do in order to meet together and decide about the prices that the people would have to pay in this country. I still think that the prices should be established by order of the Minister of Labour. I think it should be done by order in council, but on the recommendation of the Department of Labour and not under the wartime prices and trade board.

Perhaps I should qualify what I say in this way. If we find it necessary to establish prices, for instance, for agricultural products, those prices should be established by the Minister of Agriculture, but the salaries and wages should be determined by the Minister of Labour who is responsible to the government of this country, and members of parliament would be able to get much more information than we can get now from the wartime prices and trade board. I say nothing about the present chairman of that institution, because he is a much finer gentleman than was his illustrious predecessor. We can talk to him; he is sensible; he listens to us. I know that he wants to do a good job. But the trouble with these organizations that are not responsible to parliament is that those men who have fat salaries are most of the time considered infallible. They consider themselves infallible and they are considered by the government as infallible.

I hope the minister will be kind enough to give the information I have asked for, either at three o'clock on the day he brings in the bill or at any time before the bill is brought in, so that we shall know what progress has been made in the abolition of controls. Control is a form of despotism. Control is the antithesis of free enterprise. Control is the policy of the socialist party all over the world. That is why I as a Liberal am strongly opposed to control.

An hon. MEMBER: You are not doing badly.

Mr. POULIOT: There are some gentlemen who believe in control. It gives them importance. They like the strait-jacket and they are happy when they are not free. I am happy when I am free. The farmers of my district; those who work, on the railways and anywhere else; the merchants and all others want to be free. They want no controls. Here we have a measure of control. I am surprised that the leader of the opposition did not have indigestion, when he was so ready to swallow the resolution preceding the bill. He is against controls, but he says: that resolution tastes good; I will swallow it right away. He has swallowed it. Here we have imitative harmony.

Here we are, Mr. Chairman, so far in the control business that we cannot dispense with it. It is nearly three years since hostilities ceased but the controls still exist and we cannot say to the people of this country we will have no more controls. If controls are necessary, that may be established; but I know and the committee knows there are some controllers who are useless but who are well paid, like the man who is writing his memoirs. His job is finished. He has nothing to do. He is still paid, so he writes his memoirs for the next war. I wonder if these men cannot be fired at once. Then we will have so much less to pay in taxes. I hope the control bodies will be gone over with a fine comb so that both the big ones and the little ones will be combed out, to the great benefit, pleasure, enjoyment and relief of the taxpayers of this country.

Mr. KNOWLES: Just one further word, to go back to what we were discussing with the Minister of Justice a little earlier. Despite what has just been said by the hon. member for Temiscouata I think it is a good idea to get this stage of the debate over and get on to the second reading stage, but I do feel it is important that we protect our right to move amendments in committee on the bill. The minister's suggestion that there was something in May which was not too helpful led me to look into May, and I think it is fairly helpful if you read May closely. First of all, Mr. Chairman, I think citation 670 of Beauchesne, third edition, might be put on the record:

> In committee all the clauses of the bill are considered before any new clauses are brought up and added to the bill. But this practice is not rigorously followed and the committee is generally guided by what is most convenient in each particular case.

That seems to imply pretty clearly that the adding of new clauses is in order. The only question in that citation is whether the committee has to wait until all the clauses in the bill have been dealt with or whether new clauses can be put in as we go along. The citation from Beauchesne, which I have just read, refers also to May. I have in my hand May, thirteenth edition, and I think I should read a few sentences from pages 410 and 411.

> In the Lords, new clauses are brought up and inserted in their proper places, while the committee are going through the bill; but in the Commons, all the clauses of the bill are considered before any new clauses are brought up and added to the bill; though new clauses have been considered before postponed clauses. The new clauses proposed by the minister, or other member in charge of the bill, are considered before other new clauses. Members desiring to offer new clauses are called upon in the order in which their names appear upon the notice paper and before those members who have not given notice of their new clauses.

That, of course, has reference to a slightly different practice followed in the parliament at Westminster, where notices of amendments in committee also have to be put on the notice paper, unlike the situation here. There is this further paragraph:

> If a new clause be offered, the chairman desires the member to bring it up, and it is read the first time without question put. A question is then put for reading the clause a second time, and, if this is agreed to, the clause may be amended before the question is put for adding it to the bill.

I thought these references from Beauchesne and May might be cited at this time so there could be no doubt about the intention of the committee, namely that when we do reach committee on the bill we shall have the right to move, by way of amendment, additional clauses to the bill in the form the Minister of Justice suggested.

Mr. LOW: I presume when the minister brings in the bill, either on the motion for second reading or in committee, he will be prepared to provide us with justification for the extension of these controls. Naturally we would like a chance to look over and study the list he has given us today, and I think the procedure he is following is generally good. When the bill does come in, however, we would like the minister to give us justification for the extension. We have taken the position generally that while controls may be necessary to tide us over a hard time, a time of dislocation, until things become more or less settled, generally we are against controls because, like the hon. member for Temiscouata, we feel that they unnecessarily curtail the freedom of the people. But whatever the government can justify at this time we are prepared to grant.

Mr. ILSLEY: The ministers having the administration of the various orders in council will be prepared to justify their extension.

Resolution reported, on division, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Ilsley thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 136, to amend the Continuation of Transitional Measures Act, 1947.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

PROVISION FOR EMPLOYEES' PENSIONS. MINIMUM PRICE OF WHEAT DELIVERIES, ETC.

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved the second reading of Bill No. 135, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1935.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Last evening it was indicated by all groups in the opposition that it was their desire that this bill be divided into two parts, one part to be enacted at this time and the other part to be referred to the agriculture committee. It might be well to state the procedure that will be followed if that proves to be the wish of the house. The procedure will be that after Bill No. 135 has been read a second time, before the motion is put that Mr. Speaker leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of the whole on the said bill I will move that it be an instruction to the committee of the whole that they have power to divide Bill 135 into two bills, in order that one bill may deal separately with oats and barley. When the house is in committee I shall ask one of my colleagues to move that section 5 be deleted from Bill 135 and that it be embodied in a separate bill. When the committee has reported Bill 135 with an amendment, and has at the same time reported progress on Bill 136—

Mr. BRACKEN: May I interrupt the minister to ask a question? He refers to section 5. I have not a copy of this bill; has it been distributed?

Mr. HOWE: It has been distributed, yes. When and if the committee has reported Bill 135 with an amendment, and has at the same time reported progress on Bill 136 and asked leave to sit again on Bill 136, and when Mr. Speaker asks when the committee shall have leave to sit again, then I shall move that Bill 136 be referred for consideration and report to the standing committee on agriculture and colonization.

I make this statement to indicate the government's plan, which has been worked out in consultation with the law officers, and is considered a proper manner in which to split a bill. If this procedure meets with the approval of the house I shall proceed in that fashion.

Mr. BRACKEN: I understand the minister is now discussing procedure, not the merits of the measure.

Mr. HOWE: That is right.

Mr. BRACKEN: Then, under the proposed procedure are we asked to approve all sections of the bill on second reading?—because if we are not, one difficulty would be removed. If we are, I am afraid we could not agree to approval of all sections of the bill now.

Mr. HOWE: As I understand the situation, there is no known method by which a bill can be divided until we get into committee; and we cannot get into committee until we have had second reading. My hon. friend will appreciate that he is not committed to the bill simply by its having had second reading. The new bill will go to the committee on agriculture and can be returned as amended. After it is returned it can be rejected either by the government or the opposition. I scarcely think any commitment is involved.

Mr. BRACKEN: Is it correct that it is not the minister's intention, if the bill gets second reading that we shall be committed to all sections of it? Ordinarily when second reading is given one is committed to the principle or principles of the bill.

Mr. HOWE: I believe I can relieve my hon. friend's mind by saying that after the bill is divided it will come out of committee as two separate bills with separate numbers. Either bill can be defeated in committee or in the house; there need be no commitment so far as the oats and barley section is concerned.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: That may be a very good explanation, but it is scarcely in accordance with parliamentary procedure. We find in Bill 135 that part IV-A provides for a new section 29A, and deals with oats and barley. Why should there not be a motion by the minister to delete that part from Bill 135—call it 135A, if you like? Then the only bill before the house would be Bill 135 rather than 135A. I say that because a vote cast in favour of second reading, regardless of any explanation the minister may give, will actually signify approval of the bill as constituted and placed before the House of Commons.

Mr. TUCKER: Much as I would like to see these cheques authorized and sent out to the wheat growers of western Canada at the earliest possible moment—and particularly so far as Saskatchewan is concerned, owing to the crop failure in about half of that province, and the further fact that they are relying on receipt of these cheques and prairie farm assistance cheques to help put their crops in—it seems to me most unfortunate that the desire to get these cheques out should be used by the opposition to force the taking of a step which would make it impossible to have a bill which would provide, along with the necessary supplementary legislation passed by the provinces—

Mr. BRACKEN: Are we now dealing with a point of order, or is this a debate on the bill?

Mr. TUCKER: A point of order.

Mr. BRACKEN: I respectfully suggest the hon. member is dealing with the bill itself rather than a point of order.

Mr. HOWE: If we may continue the discussion on the point of order, may I say that the hon. member for Lake Centre and I are not far apart. Instead of calling it Bill 135A we have arranged to call it Bill 136. As soon as possible we will resolve the oats and barley section into Bill 136. There will be no commitment so far as the government is concerned in respect of Bill 136. It will not be considered as a commitment if the bill as now written receives its second reading.

Mr. MILLER: If we have second reading of Bill 135 then we certainly would not have another second reading. It would be a second reading of Bill 135 and Bill 136, in effect.

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. MILLER: And if we do not discuss on second reading the part that is to be included in Bill 136, namely part IV-A, as I understand it we would never have another chance, because when the bill is reported from committee of the whole as Bill 136 the second reading has been completed.

Mr. KNOWLES: May I say a word or two on the point of order?

Mr. MILLER: Would the minister answer my question first?

Mr. HOWE: That is true; there would be no second reading of Bill 136 if we follow the method proposed. There would be a third reading; but I would assume hon. members would wish to have a discussion of Bill 136 in the committee on agriculture.

Mr. KNOWLES: May I say a word with respect to the point of order? First of all I support the minister's contention that if a bill is to be divided into two parts this is the only way it can be done. Bourinot, fourth edition, pages 525 and 526, indicates clearly that the only way to consolidate two bills, or to divide one bill into two or more bills, is to do it in committee of the whole house, after second reading, and precisely as the minister has said.

As to the awkward position in which my hon. friends to my right find themselves, may I say I do not see how they can get out of it.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: It is not an awkward position at all.

[Mr. Tucker.]

Mr. KNOWLES: As to the position, then, that my hon. friends are in, I think they are right in contending that a vote for second reading approves the principle of the whole thing.

One other point, so that the record may be kept clear on it. The minister referred to the second bill as Bill 136. I would remind him that in the meantime the Minister of Justice has introduced a bill which will probably bear the number 136, so the second part of the bill proposed by the Minister of Trade and Commerce perhaps ought not to be numbered just yet. This is a minor point, but I think it should be mentioned.

Mr. HOWE: If I might clear that up, we have been informed that the number 136 has been reserved for this bill. However if the Minister of Justice in the meantime has pre-empted the number 136, then it will be 137.

Mr. ILSLEY: I will yield.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Are we through with procedure now?

Mr. WRIGHT: No. On the question of procedure it would appear that the Progressive Conservative party object to voting on the principle with oats and barley included. So far as we were concerned, in referring this bill to the committee on agriculture and colonization our first objective was to get the payments out on the wheat participation certificates as soon as possible. Secondly, we believed that by referring it to the agriculture committee we could expedite the agreement and the complementary legislation that will have to be passed in connection with oats and barley and other products covered by the bill. If our friends to the right are going to delay the matter now, then so far as we are concerned we are prepared to deal with the whole bill as it stands.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Speaker, there is a simple way to deal with this matter, so simple that no one has thought of it. The minister could easily withdraw this bill and bring down two good bills. We complain that the legislation is obscure, that no one can understand it. If we had two bills those who voted for the principle of one bill would know what they were voting for. If they were for one bill they could vote for it, and if they were for the other bill, they could vote for that. But if they were against either bill they would not be bound by a vote which was given against their will.

This legislation is of supreme importance. The minister has had too much experience, he is too broadminded to force bad legislation upon the House of Commons. Very often legislation is drafted by minor clerks. We cannot go on with separate bills before the committee. Section 29A refers to oats and barley. It is provided by that section that the words "oats and barley" shall replace the word "wheat" where it appears in the legislation concerning the wheat board. This is bad legislation. The minister is not stubborn; he is open-minded and broad-minded; he is full of good sense, and I am sure he realizes that this legislation cannot go through as it is.

We want good legislation, and it is time we had it, because we have had bad legislation for fifteen years. This is the time to start to have good legislation, and the best way to make it good is to have it acceptable to all. As it is now there is not a farmer in the west or in the east who could understand it. Those who deal with grain of any kind will have to go to great expense in order to have the opinion of eminent counsel on the effect of the legislation. It is to avoid these legal difficulties that I suggest respectfully to the minister that he withdraw his bill and come back with legislation that will be more understandable by everyone both in and out of this house.

Mr. LOW: Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch) spoke for the Social Credit group I think he suggested that there should be three bills instead of this one. Our idea was that there should be a bill dealing with payments to producers. The passage of that bill could easily be facilitated so that the payments could be sent out quickly. We feel that that is the way the bill should be divided. Then there should be another bill, as the hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) has suggested, dealing with the wheat board and the various things that are contained in the rest of this bill. I believe that that would be the best procedure. We are not at all pleased with the suggestion of the Minister of Trade and Commerce that he is going to bring in one bill dealing with oats and barley and another dealing with the other three parts of this bill. We do not think that will solve anything at all.

Mr. HOWE: Mr. Speaker, may I point out that the principle of the bill is that we amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act. That is the only principle. Any section of the bill can be voted out in committee. I should like to get these payments out to the farmers, and I will accept almost any suggestion to that end. I do not see what we can do at this stage except get second reading of this bill.

Mr. BRACKEN: May I make one suggestion? I think everyone in this house wants to get this money out to the farmers as soon as possible. The minister has put certain sections of the opposition in a difficult position when he asks us to vote on four different principles in one bill, some of which we can accept and some of which we cannot accept. He may do whatever he likes with this now, but I venture to suggest that if he would bring in a measure dealing with the paying out of this money he would get it through in ten minutes. I guarantee he would, so far as this party is concerned.

Mr. HOWE: We might get it through in ten minutes, but I would point out that even if we gave notice today of the resolution, that resolution could not be discussed until some time next week, which would mean that the bill would be discussed later in the week. It would take several days to get the thing through. Then the other place must consider it. There is a procedure for doing what I undertook to do last night, and that is the only procedure known. I said I would stand by that and I am prepared to stand by it. If hon. members insist, there is nothing I can do except to proceed with the bill.

May I point out that the breaking up of bills and bringing in separate bills to amend one act may lead to some rather absurd results. The Minister of Transport is bringing in a bill to amend the shipping act. It will have a great many sections. In all probability second reading will be given to that bill and then hon. members can strike out any clauses that they do not agree with when the bill is in committee. That is exactly the position we are facing here.

The Minister of Justice has an amendment to the criminal code consisting of forty or fifty sections. That is the procedure that is followed there; the bill will be amending one act just as this bill is. My hon. friends know that it is not the practice of this house to discuss a bill twice in the same session. The rules are against it. It is proposed in this instance that we bring in two bills amending the same act in the same session. I have never seen that done since I have been in the house.

Mr. TUCKER: Mr. Speaker, I might just continue what I was going to say because others have dealt with that matter. I would suggest with all deference that we go ahead with this bill. Surely by this time everybody in this parliament knows the facts about wheat, oats and barley. We should let the majority rule in this matter. There should not be an attempt made by the opposition to see that a bill which a great many believe should be put through is delayed, to adopt a procedure that will in effect kill part of the bill for this year.

An hon. MEMBER: No.

Mr. BRACKEN: That is nonsense.

Mr. TUCKER: I say this, and I think I am correct in saying it, that if we send part of this bill to the committee the committee will certainly keep it long enough so that most of the legislatures which will have to act on this matter will be adjourned. The opposition will then have succeeded in preventing this measure from being brought into existence to handle the 1948 crop.

Mr. BRACKEN: That is all nonsense.

Mr. TUCKER: It is not nonsense at all. I ask the leader of the opposition if it is not correct that the legislature of Saskatchewan, which is primarily involved and which must pass complementary legislation, will not be adjourned by Easter?

Mr. ROSS (Souris): They have agreed to call a special session.

Mr. TUCKER: My hon. friends know that if the part of the bill dealing with oats and barley is sent to the committee there would be no chance whatever of getting the bill passed before Easter, in which event the necessary complementary legislation could not be passed by the legislature of Saskatchewan in time to enable the wheat board to handle the 1948 crop. That is the effect of what the opposition is doing, and let there be no mistake about it.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. TUCKER: Let there be no mistake about it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): There is no point of order there.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. TUCKER: I will be called to order by the Speaker and not by my hon. friends opposite.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Then, Mr. Speaker, will you call the hon. member to order, because what he is saying has nothing whatever to do with the point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER: Hon. members will admit that I have given much latitude to every member on this point of order.

Mr. FULTON: Nobody else has abused it, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Tucker.]

Mr. SPEAKER: I have been generous to all members and I would ask the hon. gentleman to speak to the point of order.

Mr. TUCKER: The leader of the opposition said that what I was saying was nonsense and I have proved that what I am saying is not nonsense.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: It was an understatement.

Mr. TUCKER: That may be my hon. friend's opinion, but everyone is entitled to his opinion. Now I say, and let there be no mistake about it, that the effect of dividing this bill—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. TUCKER: I am in order, Mr. Speaker, surely.

Mr. SPEAKER: The question before the house is a point of order raised on the suggestion made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce in putting before the house a motion to divide the bill in two. If the hon. member wishes to discuss that matter I do not see any reason why he should not.

Mr. FULTON: But he is discussing a question of motives.

Mr. TUCKER: I am endeavouring to show what the effect of dividing the bill will be. I am saying that everyone knows, and all members from Saskatchewan will bear me out, that the legislature of that province will adjourn within the next week or ten days, before Easter. In fact, it will prorogue. Now if we divide this bill, what will be the effect? Everyone will admit that in order to bring properly into effect this provision with respect to oats and barley there must be complementary legislation on the part of the province of Saskatchewan.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): And the premier of Saskatchewan has agreed to call a special session to pass it.

Mr. TUCKER: The hon. member may know what the premier of Saskatchewan intends to do, but I also heard him say that he intends to have an election when the four years have elapsed and there may be an election right after the house prorogues. What I am saying is this. Let us be reasonable about this matter and look at the facts.

An hon. MEMBER: A swan song.

Mr. TUCKER: It may be my swan song, and other people may sing their swan songs in due course. I have known lots of people sing their swan song and they did not even know it.

Let us look at the facts as they are. On the opposite side there are members representing in numbers the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta. When they are arguing that the bill be divided I would suggest to them that they are in effect voting to create a situation whereby there will be no chance to have it apply to oats and barley until at least the crop year of 1949. If they support that viewpoint—

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Is this a point of order, Mr. Speaker?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): On a point of order—

Mr. TUCKER: If they support that viewpoint, that is their concern.

Mr. COLDWELL: You know we do not.

Mr. TUCKER: Then why did your speakers support it?

Mr. SPEAKER: I think the hon. member is taking a little too much latitude.

Mr. TUCKER: Mr. Speaker, last night—

An hon. MEMBER: He is too windy.

Mr. TUCKER: That may be your opinion, but I am entitled to speak for the people who sent me here, and I intend to do so. I am saying, Mr. Speaker, that a certain line of conduct has been suggested by the official opposition. It has been upheld by the C.C.F. party and by the Social Credit party.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Mr. Speaker, is the member discussing a point of order?

Mr. SPEAKER: I think the hon. member is out of order. Every member is anxious to proceed with the legislation. It has been suggested by the Minister of Trade and Commerce that the second reading of the bill be passed and that afterwards a motion be put to authorize the committee to divide the bill in two. That is the question before the house.

Mr. TUCKER: I have the floor, Mr. Speaker, and I claim the right to answer the arguments made by the opposition party last night.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Mr. Speaker, are we on the bill or on a question of procedure?

Mr. TUCKER: I have not spoken for forty minutes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER: I must point out to the hon. member that what is before the house is a point of order. If he wishes to speak on the merits of the bill he will have an opportunity to do so, but at the moment there is a point of order before the house.

Mr. BENTLEY: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, it is so fine that I do not know whether I shall be in order in what I am about to say. I will try to stick to the point, and if I get off the point you will call me to order. I am not greatly impressed with the remarks of the hon. member who has just taken his seat, neither am I impressed with some of the other things I see going on.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. TUCKER: The hon. member is speaking for the third time. I have not been permitted to speak once yet.

Mr. KNOWLES: This is the first time he has been on his feet on this point of order.

Mr. BENTLEY: The point of order is, I believe, on the procedure for dividing this bill.

Mr. SPEAKER: The question before the house is a point of order. If the hon. member wishes to speak on the point of order he may say what he has to say.

Mr. COLDWELL: He does wish to speak on it.

Mr. SPEAKER: He should not, however, discuss the merits of the bill. In the debate on the second reading of the bill he will have an opportunity to do so.

Mr. BENTLEY: I am trying, Mr. Speaker, to speak on the point of order, which, as your Honour has said, has reference to the procedure on the bill. I am speaking to that point. I am anxious to see everything in this bill—

Mr. SPEAKER: The question before the house is quite simple. We have before us the second reading of Bill No. 135, entitled an act to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1935. The Minister of Trade and Commerce rose and suggested to the house that there be second reading of the bill and that afterwards he would move a motion to direct the committee of the whole to divide the bill in two. That is the question. I think the house should now arrive at a conclusion. Either it will accept the minister's proposal or it will not.

Mr. BENTLEY: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. HOWE: May I speak to the point of order?

Mr. BENTLEY: I have not finished speaking to the point of order, Mr. Speaker. I suggest that in view of what has happened here this afternoon the minister should not divide the bill but should go ahead with the whole thing.

Mr. HOWE: I am in the hands of the committee. I have stated my intention, provided that it meets the approval of the house. I suggest that we proceed with second reading and, as we reach the various stages, I am willing to make the motions I have indicated.

Mr. GARDINER: In view of the undertaking given last night, may I say one thing. The rule states:

> The committee of the whole may, in conformity with instructions, consolidate two bills into one or divide one bill into two or more.

Before the committee can do that it must have instructions from the house giving it the authority to do it. Giving it the authority to do it does not mean that the committee must do it. That whole question has to be discussed in committee; but coming back to the question as to what we are doing on the second reading, may I say we are amending the Canadian Wheat Board Act. We are amending it with three or four sections which provide for three different things.

I think all hon. members will agree that in bills of this kind it has always been within the authority of the committee to oppose sections in the bill, and it is within the power of the committee of the whole, when this bill goes to that committee, to divide this particular bill about which we are talking, even though the house itself may have voted for the second reading. That can be done, but what the minister has suggested is this. If at that stage it is the will of the committee of the whole that it should be done, instead of voting for that section at all, the committee would be prepared to send it to a committee of the house. If it is sent to the committee on agriculture that committee would decide whether it is going to vote on it, and may determine to report against its being in the bill. That authority for the committee of the whole to take the procedure outlined must, according to the rules, be given by the house when the bill is referred to committee. The minister has simply said that he is prepared to make the necessary movements to make that possible, and the first thing that has to be done in order to get into committee at all is to pass the second reading. When we have passed second reading then he will ask this house to give authority to the committee to divide the bill if it desires to do so, and if it does not desire to do so, it can make the decision then just as well as it can make it now.

[Mr Bentley.]

Mr. FULTON: On that point, does there not have to be a motion now while the house—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. QUELCH: I think the suggestion of the Minister of Agriculture is a good one. On the other hand, is there not the other alternative? I understand that the bill on veterans affairs has been sent to the committee on veterans affairs, and that committee will report back to the house part of the bill, leaving the rest of the bill for discussion. Could we not have this bill sent in its entirety to the committee on agriculture, and then just report back the section relating to the payment of the increases?

Mr. GARDINER: We would not get the payments through for two or three weeks, and they should be out before that.

Mr. COLDWELL: I think the point made by the hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Bentley) should be considered by the minister. What we suggested last night was done in order to facilitate payment to the farmers. If we are to mix that up with a discussion of the amendment dealing with the manner in which oats and barley are sold and these payments are delayed, then I think the best thing to do is for the minister to go ahead as originally suggested and we will vote on the principle of the bill.

Mr. HOWE: The minister's position is quite clear, Mr. Speaker. He will follow the procedure outlined and at each stage he will offer these motions. The committee can pass them or can defeat them.

Mr. J. A. ROSS (Souris): I wish to make a few observations on the measure now that we are through with procedure. I am one of those who believe that we have either to go through now and discuss the bill at this stage or to agree to the whole principle of the bill. I realize the difficulties there have been today with the procedure. The minister gave all sorts of undertakings last night that he would divide the bill in two. When we come to that stage we shall be called upon to pass second reading of the bill, and if we all agree to it we agree to everything in principle, which I cannot do myself at this stage. Nobody in this House of Commons is more anxious than I am to facilitate the payment to the farmers. That is what I had in mind on the resolution stage—

Mr. GARDINER: On a point of order, the position taken by the members of the government is not in accordance with what has just been said. The Minister of Trade and Commerce has said that the government does not, or the introducer of the bill does not, consider that members in the official opposition or in any other part of the house are voting on this particular section when they vote on the principle of the bill. That was definitely understood in the procedure that was outlined, and there is a possibility of doing that. No one will be charged with that position at all. That section can be voted out. I hear someone whispering, "What about the rules?" I just read the rules. The rules give this house the authority to instruct the committee, and the minister has said that he will move to instruct the committee that it has authority to divide the bill. I do not know anything could be any clearer than that. When hon. members are voting on the principle, no one is voting for that. The bill may be divided and, if so, the feed grains may be considered separately.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Mr. Speaker, I wish to discuss this bill at this time and, irrespective of what any minister may have said, we are bound by the rules of the house. That is why we are in this dilemma this afternoon. I am very sorry about that, but I want to make a few observations today and I want to repeat that I and all members of this party are just as anxious as anybody else in the house to facilitate the immediate payment of the farmers' money that is now held by the wheat board for these crop years. We are anxious to have those payments made. As I followed the statement of instructions from the Minister of Trade and Commerce, immediately you call second reading this afternoon, and as I have read the bill, the bill will be divided in two in committee, and the matter of the pension and contributions will be linked with Bill No. 135 which has to do with payment to the farmers. It is on that point I want to make some observations. It is true that the bill dealing with oats and barley may be referred to the standing committee on agriculture and colonization. I know some people doubt whether I truly represent the farm constituency that I have the honour to represent, but, apart from two or three years overseas at one time, I have farmed all my life and I think I know something about the desires and wishes of the people whom I represent.

As to this matter of pensions, this is a government monopolistic board at this time. The officials of the wheat board are appointed by the government. The producers have no option at this time but to deliver their wheat to this board. There are some 676 full-time employees and twenty-eight part-time employees. My colleague, the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Miller) was able to obtain that information for us. I just wish to quote a short list of the employees to whom the producers will be called upon to contribute. Of those 676 employees, those receiving under $1,000 a year number 103; $1,000 to $2,000, 388; $2,000 to $3,000, 122; $3,000 to $4,000, 26; $4,000 to $5,000, 6; $5,000 to $6,000, 7; $6,000 to $7,000, 2; $7,000 to $8,000, 8; $8,000 to $9,000, 2; $9,000 to $10,000, one; $10,000 to $15,000, 11; over $15,000, one. That will give the house some idea what these officials are receiving today. According to the minister who introduced this measure, pensions will be paid on a contributory basis, fifty-fifty, which means that the board contributing the 50 per cent will charge that amount to the producers of any and all grain which they are handling at that time, and that is a principle to which I take strong objection. I say if this is a government board, one of the only boards with an entire monopoly that we have operating in Canada today, with government appointees, I want to make it clear on this one point that we are not objecting to pensions as such. I am a strong believer in pensions. But as regards a board such as this, appointed by the government, if they are to pay pensions on a fifty-fifty contributory basis, the board's 50 per cent contribution should be taken out of the consolidated revenue fund of this nation. That is my point there.

If we voted on this measure at this time we would be agreeing to the principle of the bill which says that the board shall pay the 50 per cent contribution, and if the undertaking is carried out to divide the bill that would be part of the basis of payment, unless eliminated at this time. We are anxious to see the farmers get the payments as quickly as possible.

With respect to payments, I want to say something with regard to wheat also. The Canadian wheat board handled 335,108,000 bushels of wheat in the 1946 crop year. Last year the then Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. MacKinnon) and the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) said there was a difference of seventy-seven cents on that crop as received by the farmer to date. True enough we shall have to take into account the further payments that will be made now and in the future; and whatever those are, they will reduce that difference. Anybody can multiply that by the amount of grain handled and he will know the loss the farmers have taken there to date.

Just prior to the announcement of the United Kingdom wheat agreement in the summer of 1946, I received from many farm organizations in my riding resolutions asking that there be an initial payment at that time of $1.80 a bushel for the 1945, 1946 and 1947 crops. They went farther than that, because at that time the payment had not been made on the participation certificates for 1943 and 1944, and they wanted payments made at that figure on those years as well. Many of those farmers who sent in those resolutions at that time were members of the Manitoba pool. It was estimated by the minister that the board would handle some 270 million bushels of the 1947 wheat crop. I want to say that at September 2, 1947, just about the time when harvesting becomes general on the prairies, class 2 wheat was quoted at $2.78 a bushel. On October 1, or practically a month later, it was quoted at $3.17 a bushel. Some time later on in the year, and at the first of this year, it was as high as $3.42. The Canadian farmer was receiving, on the average, for No. 2 northern wheat at the elevator, $1.17 a bushel. That is what he has received to date on the 1947 crop. Then, if I understand the situation rightly, all available class 2 wheat of the 1947 crop had been contracted for by January of this year. I understood the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) to say that, and that the estimated surplus for the year's business would be some $80,000,000. If you take into account the difference between the world price and the actual price received on the 1947 crop, you will have some idea of the loss there will be there.

On October 1, 1947, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) announced that under the United Kingdom-Canada wheat agreement Britain would pay $2 a bushel, basis Fort William, for the 1948 crop, effective August 1, 1948. On the date of this announcement class 2 Canadian wheat was quoted at $3.17 a bushel. When the original contract was announced in 1946 at $1.55 a bushel, basis Fort William, class 2 Canadian wheat was quoted at $2.05 a bushel. That is a great contrast. According to the debate, in the words of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, there should be somewhere around $234 million of the farmers' money in the wheat board's hands for the years 1945, 1946 and 1947 for disbursement. On approximately 842 million bushels handled in those years, that would mean approximately twenty-seven cents a bushel if it were all paid out on that wheat. If, as the Minister of Agriculture has suggested, twenty cents will be paid out in the near future, that would bring the payment received by the farmers net to about $1.35 a bushel when that payment is made. If the crop yield for 1948 and 1949 is the same average yield as it has been for the past three years, and if all of these next two crops for 1948 and 1949—including the contract to Britain, domestic consumption in Canada and other wheat disposed of—is sold for $2 a bushel—$2 for it all in the next two years—then there might be approximately another eighteen cents for disbursements on a total of 1,402 million bushels of wheat handled by the board over those five years, which would net the farmer an approximate average for those five years of $1.53 a bushel. I am going to repeat that on those figures before us—some of which are only estimates while others are actual figures—the greatest gamble in wheat in Canadian history was negotiated by the Minister of Agriculture during 1946, through the Department of Trade and Commerce of this government. This gamble will cost the Canadian wheat farmers many hundreds of millions of dollars that will never be regained by those producers. I feel sure of that at this time. The Minister of Agriculture stated in his argument earlier in this discussion of the resolution, as reported at page 1717 of Hansard:

> I am surprised to hear hon. members who represent agriculture constituencies, and who should know the views of their own people, talking in the manner in which they have talked.

I presume that was meant partly for me, Mr. Speaker. In the same debate he puts some figures on Hansard. He was talking about the 1945 crop. He said, and I think his figures were correct, that the Canadian average was $1.15 a bushel and the United States average was $1.50 a bushel for 1945. For 1946—

Mr. GARDINER: That is not what I put on the record. I put on the record the advance for the 1945 crop was $1.15 to the average farmer, not the price, as compared with the United States price.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): That is exactly what I meant. I said probably the amount of money already received by the Canadian farmers, and I have been making comparisons. My argument has been that there was still more money to pay. I am not going to quibble about the odd word.

Mr. GARDINER: Anyone who reads Hansard will not be misled.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): That is the initial payment.

Mr. GARDINER: The average initial payment in 1945 was $1.15.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): That is right.

Mr. GARDINER: We propose under this legislation to pay out more on the same wheat.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I know. I have already estimated another twenty cents at this time.

If that went on and in 1948 and 1949 there were average crops which were sold at $2 a bushel, there would be another eighteen cents to pay, certainly not over twenty cents on the total; and the farmer would receive $1.50 and some cents for this year. That should be quite accurate.

Mr. GARDINER: No.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): What is wrong?

Mr. GARDINER: It should be much higher than that.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I would hope that it would be, but I do not know what sort of mysterious operator we have in charge of this system. In view of the remarks about those who represent farm ridings, in discussing this matter—and the only opportunity we had to discuss that wheat bill with Britain was under trade and commerce estimates during 1946—at page 4832 of Hansard of August 15, 1946, I said:

I have received several resolutions from farm gatherings in my own constituency. May I quote one of them? It is not an official farm organization, but it is a large gathering of farmers in the east end of my riding. I wish to read the portion which has a bearing on this subject:

"We also consider that the 12½ per cent raise in farm implement prices, which with increase of fuel and other costs to farmers is of serious national and even international concern. For fifteen years the agriculturists of the west have, through no fault of their own, seen their equipment deteriorating with replacements difficult to make, and now, at a time when such great appeals are being made to produce more food, the government allows rising production costs with no comparable income increases and no adequate assurance of any. The farmer has never refused to produce at a cost plus 5 per cent basis nor has he gone on strike. Therefore we feel justified in strongly urging the government to either insist on lower production costs to farmers through price control or else to bring produce prices up to at least the level of the United States farmer's returns.

"We also believe that outstanding wheat participation certificates should be settled for on the basis of $1.80 per bushel."

That was before the announcement was made as to the price which will be paid for the 1943 certificates.

"If Canada wishes to sell wheat at a price below that obtained by competitors, then all Canada should meet the difference in price, not force the farmer to make the donation.

"And further that copies of this statement be mailed to the Prime Minister, the Minister of Agriculture and the member for Souris . . ."

I think I was representing those people and spoke for the vast majority of the people in the part of the province that I have the honour to represent. I also put on a quotation from a number of briefs at that time, and I will not quote all of them. But they pointed out, as may be found at page 4833 of Hansard:

It is a sellers' market and, as such, offers a great chance to rebuild our wheat trade on a broad and highly diversified base. Something much better than the pre-war diversity of markets might be achieved in the reconstruction period under freer conditions of trade and with a vigorous selling policy.

That has proved to be very true. Later on I said, at page 4833:

I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether anything is proposed for the purpose of holding down the export price of manufactured goods, lumber and other materials, as was done throughout the war years for the farm producer in the matter of wheat. I am sure that many farmers are misled. The pool officials themselves have been. When they said they wanted a contract of this type over some years they understood that the same deal would apply to the principal manufactured goods which the farmer finds it necessary to procure in this country. But that is not the case, because these other prices are rising daily in Canada . . .

They certainly have risen since those days. According to a pamphlet put out by the Bank of Canada, prices of farm implements have increased by some 27½ per cent, some types of tractor fuel by 50 per cent, binder twine by 126 per cent and building materials by 103 per cent. So the very situation we pointed to at that time, the first and only opportunity we had of discussing that agreement, came about. We were the only party in this House of Commons to oppose strenuously that contract and the price set then. We gave our reasons for our opposition; and what we predicted has come true beyond our expectations, I am very sorry to say.

I do not wish to take up more of the time of the committee right now. I wish the government had seen fit to divide this measure as I suggested on behalf of this party in the early stages. If that had been done the provision for payment of the farmers' own money now held by the wheat board could have been put through, and the government could have gone ahead and issued the cheques as soon as they wished.

Mr. W. A. TUCKER (Rosthern): I have not spoken previously on this motion, and I feel that I should say something about it before it goes through. I shall try to be as concise as possible in dealing with the various points covered by the bill. First it makes provision for pensions for officers and employees of the wheat board, half the cost to be paid out of the receipts of the board and the other half to be contributed by those employees and officers. Of course it is recognized that in working for the wheat board these people are serving the interests of the farmers, so I suppose it was felt by the government that it would be fair to take the same attitude in respect of their superannuation that would be taken by any business firm. However, I would say that there seems to be a tendency to set up more and more superannuation schemes. We have a superannuation scheme for members of the civil service. Now we have a superannuation scheme for the employees of the wheat board. Superannuation schemes are being set up here and there, and in the long run the average citizen must pay the cost of those schemes. As far as we who live on the prairies are concerned, we find that the man with a little business of his own, or the man who works for a small concern, or the farmer or other person who is self-employed, is contributing to superannuation schemes for other people but that he has nothing for himself except the old age pension, which at present is not paid until he is seventy years of age. So I would say I believe that without further delay we should move at once to protect the people who pay the taxes of this country and thus help pay the cost of these different superannuation schemes, by setting up an over-all superannuation scheme—contributory, of course—for all Canadians. I think this piecemeal approach is not the right approach, though I would not oppose it in this case because it is being done in other instances. I understand that in the civil service a person contributes to the scheme and may retire at sixty, if he wishes, while he must be superannuated at sixty-five. The taxpayers of the country help pay the cost of that scheme; and it seems to me the people who pay for a scheme like that for the benefit of those who work for them should have the right to a contributory scheme for themselves on exactly the same basis.

The next purpose of the bill is to make provision for an increase in the fixed minimum price payable to producers. It has been said that, as soon as this bill goes through, not less than twenty cents will be paid in respect of the 1945, 1946, and 1947 crops. In that connection, as I said a few moments ago on the point of order, in the part of Saskatchewan I represent, as well as a good deal of the rest of Saskatchewan, there has been a crop failure as great as the worst we have had in the last twenty years. Many of the farmers in the constituency I have the honour to represent in this house will barely get back their seed, and if it were not for the P.F.A. payments they would be in a very difficult position. So they are looking for the P.F.A. payments and these payments to help put in their crops. I have been urging the government since last October to get out these payments by not later than the middle of this month.

I can understand the position the government are in with respect to this matter. They want to get these payments out. They realize the necessity of getting them out; yet they are faced with the threat of sustained opposition if they want to put through the remaining part of this measure. In my humble judgment there is no need to send any of this to a committee. If on this important question of the handling of wheat, oats and barley the members of this house did not yet know what the situation is, it would be a strange thing. It should be possible for them to vote on this question without having the same people make speeches over and over again about it. It seems to me that it should be possible for us to vote on this entire bill before the Easter adjournment, including that part dealing with coarse grains. Personally I was sorry the official opposition were supported by people who in this house so particularly represent the prairies, the C.C.F. and Social Credit parties, in their attitude that we could not put through this bill as it now stands. I regret that they were so anxious to divide the bill, knowing as they must have known, that, by so dividing it, the very earliest the handling of oats and barley could be brought under the wheat board would be in respect of the 1949 crop year. When they supported that viewpoint they must have known that they were actually killing any chance of this measure coming into effect in respect of the 1948 crop; or if they did not know that they should have known it.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Who is talking of not getting it through?

Mr. TUCKER: Why did you suggest that part of the bill be sent to a committee? The hon. member for Mackenzie has seen fit to ask me a question. I ask him, from what he has seen of the opposition on the part of the official opposition, to bringing oats and barley under the board, if he honestly thinks that if this matter is sent to a committee it will come back in time to be dealt with before Easter, and in time for the provincial legislatures to deal with it.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Will the hon. member permit me to answer that question?

Mr. TUCKER: Yes, if you think you can.

Mr. NICHOLSON: My reason was in order that flax and other seeds might be included and made mandatory. That is our only reason.

Mr. TUCKER: I see; that is the answer. They say they want to prevent it from applying to the 1948 crop in order to have it apply to other grains.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. TUCKER: That is the effect of what the hon. member said. He did not deny that the effect of what they are doing will be to prevent this from applying to the 1948 crop. But he says the reason they are ready to do that is that they want it to apply to flax and rye. Well, my answer to that is that it seems a pretty weak excuse, because if we got it through to apply to oats and barley there would be nothing to prevent us from extending it to flax and rye at the next session. In that way we would have had it working in regard to oats and barley with respect to the 1948 crop, and we would have had it in effect just as soon in regard to flax and rye as they will have it by doing it their way. The only effect of what hon. members are doing is this: They are preventing this organization from being set up to apply to oats and barley of the 1948 crop. Let there be no mistake about it; that is what they have done.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. TUCKER: I know they hate to have the truth put to them, but that is their attitude all the time. They want to state their viewpoint, but when anyone else wishes to state his they ring out their anvil chorus, just to howl him down. This is the beginning of interference with free speech. This is why we in Saskatchewan have to pay thousands of dollars to put out C.C.F. propaganda at government expense.

And, if I may go on—

Mr. BURTON: The Saskatchewan election has not yet been announced.

Mr. TUCKER: Why, then, are you putting out so much propaganda at government expense? Then, may I go on—

Mr. SPEAKER: I would ask hon. members not to interrupt the hon. member for Rosthern.

Mr. KNOWLES: We are on the hustings now, not in the House of Commons.

Mr. TUCKER: I have pointed out the exact position of the C.C.F. party, and it cannot be denied.

Mr. BURTON: Point out the position of the Liberal party, then.

Mr. TUCKER: Of course, when this is pointed out and the government, in order to try to get money out to the farmers, says it will divide the bill in accordance with what they have been pressing for, they get up and say, "Oh, let us go ahead with the whole bill"—that is after they have got the government to commit itself to dividing the bill. Then they will be able to say, "We wanted to get the cheques out, and we wanted to get the other put through, too."

If this bill is divided, everyone knows where the official opposition stood in the matter. They have not jumped back and forth; they have been consistent. They were against the compulsory features of the bill, in regard to oats and barley. But what has been the attitude of the C.C.F.? Oh, they want it divided. Now—

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: On a point of order, that is a misrepresentation of the worst kind.

Mr. KNOWLES: So is the whole speech; so why worry about it?

Mr. GARDINER: Why is it?

Mr. TUCKER: Probably the hon. member can correct it later, then. I can only speak as I understood the hon. member's position. I listened last night to the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith), when he was greeted with applause, loud and sustained, from all members of the Progressive Conservative party.

Mr. KNOWLES: What about the members on the other side?

Mr. TUCKER: Not being a mind reader, I must judge their position from what they say on the floor of the house. That is all I can say to the hon. member for Lake Centre.

I will deal now with the C.C.F. After all, I am not so much concerned about the Progressive Conservative party.

Mr. WRIGHT: You have a coalition with them out there; why should you be?

Mr. TUCKER: No coalition at all. There is no coalition.

Mr. WRIGHT: There is in Melfort.

Mr. TUCKER: The Conservatives out there think more of their province than they do of their party, and they are ready to support us in order to lick you.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): You hope.

Mr. TUCKER: I do not think there is any doubt about it. If I may say, in regard to this particular bill, that is the state of affairs in regard to this matter. So far as I am concerned, I think there is enough support behind this government measure, in spite of the opposition of the Progressive Conservative party, to put the bill through as it is, and in time that we can have the provinces pass the necessary complementary legislation and have it applied to oats and barley in 1948.

I ask for the support of those representing the prairies. I ask that they oppose this idea of dividing this bill, as a result of which it would not come into force and apply to this year's crop. I ask for majority rule in this parliament, and I suggest that this bill be put through because a majority in this House of Commons wants it, and that it be put through at this session of parliament so that it will be effective at this session.

Mr. KNOWLES: Let us do it right now.

Mr. TUCKER: Oh, I know you would like to do a lot of speaking so that nobody else could say anything. I know that. I have seen that game before, on your part.

Mr. WRIGHT: You would rather talk.

Mr. TUCKER: If I may proceed—

Mr. BURTON: Why did you not ask for it two months ago?

Mr. TUCKER: I did. If you had listened to my broadcast report to the people of Saskatchewan—

Mr. BURTON: Now we are getting it.

Mr. TUCKER: —you would have heard me saying that I had asked the government last October to pass the necessary legislation to get these payments out not later than the 15th of this month. And I venture to say I asked the government for this legislation long before the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Burton) ever thought of it. Indeed it is probably after he heard my speech that he thought of it.

In regard to the attitude toward the money being dealt with in this bill, may I say I wish to express my support of the stand taken by the minister, that as soon as it was clear that any of the money could be paid out from time to time, it should be paid out; and after all, this is the farmers' money. There should be no thought that, when a bill like this is put through, the money is being taken out of the consolidated revenue fund. The money belongs to the farmers, and the government should be in a position to pay it out as it becomes available, and as it is made safe to do so.

Some question has been raised as to whether the people really approve this legislation, which means that oats and barley will be brought under the wheat board and handled by the wheat board on a compulsory basis. I wish to deal with that for a moment. First of all I would refer to the position taken by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture which, I think, is admittedly a responsible organization and one which represents all farmers in Canada.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Why do you say that?

Mr. TUCKER: I say that because I believe it. That is a good enough reason for me to say anything—because I believe it.

They made a submission to the government on February 26, some sentences of which I should like to read. They said:

> Certain fundamental principles of federation policy stand out, apply equally as well now as at any former time, and have guided us in respect to present-day policies, and to recommendations we are making herewith.
> The federation has repeatedly advocated market and price stabilization measures of varying types and varying degrees.
> In line with this policy we are urging:

I wish to commend the government for doing all it can to bring about international agreements in connection with wheat. I believe that that will assure the producers of the world, those who produce the basic food—wheat—a reasonable return for their labour. It will also mean that there will be less scarcity at one time with people going hungry and when the farmers have little to sell, and will avoid over-supplies of food at other times when the farmers would have to sell at low prices. It continues:

> (b) Stabilization of feed prices, and the placing of the marketing of coarse grains under the Canadian wheat board (one member body dissenting).

Only one body dissented from that submission.

> (c) Continuance of the freight assistance policy—

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Who was that? I know more than one.

Mr. TUCKER:

> —of feeds until such time as it may be embodied in a national feed grain policy.
> (e) Having many marketing schemes operating successfully under provincial legislation, we again emphasize our desire and need for federal marketing legislation.

I endorse that entirely; and I ask the government—and I am sure they will do so—to pay close attention to these considered representations of the farmers of this country, not only the farmers of western Canada, but farmers from Prince Edward Island to British Columbia. This is the most representative organization, so far as the farming industry is concerned, that has ever been organized in this country. The brief goes on:

In representations to the government the Canadian Federation of Agriculture has always advocated moderate prices, and have never asked for "all that the traffic would bear." Canadian farmers have consistently supported stabilized prices fair alike to producers and consumers of our farm products.

It is a great tribute to the far-sightedness and statesmanship of the farmers of this country that they have not sought to get the last nickel they could as a result of the extremities of the starving peoples of the world. Rather, they have said, "We would rather have a fair price now, with the hope of some stability running along through the years."

Mr. LOW: Where is the stability?

Mr. TUCKER: We have stability, I hope, in regard to wheat.

An hon. MEMBER: You hope.

Mr. TUCKER: All you can have about anything in this present day and age, in these difficult times, is a confident hope based upon reasonable policies. I submit that when thirty-six nations of the world get together to sign a pact in regard to the basic price of wheat, a pact which will give some security to the wheat producer, and some guarantee to the consumer that in days of scarcity he will not be charged a price which he cannot pay, it should ensure that the producer will not be faced with a recurrence of the situation we had in 1932 when people had to sell No. 1 northern wheat, beautiful wheat, for nineteen cents a bushel, less than what it cost alone to harvest and thresh; we hope that with this pact those conditions will never occur again. To see to it that they do not occur again, we must not listen to the suggestion that we should try to grab the last nickel we can today. If we take the last nickel we can today the time may come again, as it came following the first war, when the price will go down far below the cost of production.

I shall go on and read further from this submission:

As we have indicated, our dairymen, poultrymen, and livestock feeders are keenly concerned over the rise and fluctuations in the cost of feeds since decontrol, and are urging measures to stabilize these costs.

Our main recommendation in this respect is contained in a resolution passed by our annual convention, which urges once more that the Canadian wheat board become the sole marketing agency for all other grains in addition to wheat. (One member body has recorded its dissent.)

In regard to what the farmers really want I would much rather take the opinion of these elected and trusted leaders of farmers from Prince Edward Island to British Columbia than I would the opinion of the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith), the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross) or any other person who speaks as they have been speaking in this house. The presentation continues:

This resolution asks that the necessary amendments to the wheat board act do not disregard the principle that the wheat board be an agency operating primarily for the benefit of, and in the interests of grain producers; it asks that the purpose of the legislation be to enable the board to stabilize grain prices and prevent short-term fluctuations; and that it be provided always that the board's domestic operating and selling policy shall carry out the spirit and intent of a general agricultural policy that shall effect a proper relationship between grain and livestock prices, as determined by the federal Department of Agriculture after consultation with the Canadian Federation of Agriculture.

There is the basic idea of the farmers of Canada. They want stabilized prices at reasonable levels. From the time a man puts the seed in the ground, farming is a tremendously risky business. Wind, frost, drought, pests, hail;—all these things are items we expect governments to help us try to overcome. Pests, insurance against—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. TUCKER: I was not thinking of the C.C.F. when I mentioned pests, although they seemed to be rather self-conscious. I say that there is an attempt made by all reasonably honest people to try to eliminate pests and also to ensure against things that cannot be eliminated, such as hail and drought. Just as there is that struggle to eliminate some of the risks connected with farming in regard to the production of the product, so the farmer has said that he wants to be protected as much as possible against the ups and downs of demand and supply in regard to the price of his product.

He knows that the consumer is always willing to pay a fair price for his product, that the consumer would rather pay a fair price than have it go so low that the time would come when production would fall off and the consumer could not buy it at all. So he realizes that any long-run policy which gives a certain measure of stability to the price of food products is in the interests, not only of the producer but of the consumer.

Mr. ARGUE: Do you believe in price control?

Mr. TUCKER: No, if you do not control some other matters at the same time. Furthermore, I do not believe in the attempt to control prices by government edict.

Mr. ARGUE: Prices of farm machinery are going up every day.

Mr. TUCKER: That is another matter. I have only forty minutes in which to speak and I shall be ready to deal with that at another time. I say that what the farmers are asking here is that there be some measure of stability in regard to the things they have to sell. It is not a matter of prices being fixed by the government, it is a matter of saying that there shall be some floor lasting for some considerable time under prices, and then, in return for that, that there shall be some sort of ceiling. If the consumer is willing to pay a minimum price that is a fair price, then in days of scarcity he will not be asked to pay an exorbitant price at his end.

The suggestion has been made that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture is not representative of the farmers. I intend to answer that charge in this way. There is in Saskatchewan a gathering every year called the Saskatchewan association of rural municipalities. That gathering is representative of all rural municipalities in the province. The people gathered there were of all political parties. This matter was brought up at a recent meeting of that association. I cannot summarize better what they said about agricultural policy than to read an editorial which appeared in the Star-Phoenix of March 2, 1948. This reads:

> Delegates to the municipal convention debated farm marketing policies. A persistent campaign has been directed from Winnipeg to convince the Saskatchewan farmer that he should demand "the world price" for his grain. Not many who argue for "the world price" attempt to define which price they consider is "the world price." The inference always is that it is higher than the price the Saskatchewan farmer is receiving. A resolution urging the convention to ask for "the world price" and that the federal government subsidize wheat sales in the domestic and United Kingdom markets to bring growers' returns up to "the world price" was tabled after some delegates had asked for a definition of "world price." The resolution was brought out at a later session and amended to ask "parity price" for wheat. This resolution was approved. Debate on the resolution indicated that a large number of delegates were more interested in stable prices than in exacting momentary famine prices.

I commend that to the hon. member for Souris.

> Some of the delegates reminded the convention that if the farmer demanded top prices now he could scarcely ask for protection against possible depressed prices in the future. A resolution opposing the wheat agreement between Canada and the United Kingdom was rejected without debate. One other resolution fits into the general pattern of farm thinking about grain. It called for the closing of the Winnipeg grain exchange and the sale of coarse grains through the wheat board. All this adds up to an acceptance in Saskatchewan of the federal government's wheat policy. The delegates sheered off from any suggestion to destroy the marketing structure built up since the end of the war.

I suggest that there is a most convincing demonstration of the attitude of the western farmer toward the United Kingdom-Canada wheat agreement, toward the wheat board, toward closing the grain exchange, and toward this bill bringing oats and barley under the control of the wheat board. There were the elected leaders of the farmers; there were the representatives of the municipalities of Saskatchewan, Liberals, Progressive Conservatives, C.C.F.'ers, members of all political parties; that is what they decided almost unanimously. This indicates that the farmers of the west approve the stabilization policy of the present government. Those who attacked it by telling them that they were losing money did not get the approval of that convention. They realized that the first step toward 35-cent wheat was at the time to demand $3 for their wheat.

I wish to pay tribute to the far-sightedness of the farmers of the west. They are not listening to the propaganda put out from Winnipeg. They are thinking of past history and realizing that if they now ask for the world price the time will come when it will be too low for them to get along on it. They want stability and they appreciate what this government has done in giving them stabilized prices at a reasonable level. They approve the Agricultural Prices Support Act, and I for one hope that will be made a permanent policy of the government of the country. Just as the working man is entitled to fair minimum wages and to a guarantee of a fair standard of living while he gives his labour to the country, so the farmer who produces the food of the country and of the world is entitled to be guaranteed a fair minimum return for his work, so that he can keep his family and his dependents in a reasonable measure of comfort and educate his children and provide them with medical attention and all the other amenities of life.

I hope that every member will support the concrete steps to bring about protection and basic security for the farmers. What has been the foundation of every nation?—the sturdy farmers of the land. Our farmers stood by us in the days of war when they did not ask for the last nickel for their products. They stood for control of prices and they made stupendous efforts to feed us and our allies.

They stand by us in these days of famine in the world when again they say, "We do not want the last nickel".

They are saying to their leaders today, "Let us not be led away by asking for the last nickel. Let us realize that if we are to have a stable price we must not ask for the highest price possible in days when prices are rising if we do not wish to take the lowest price when prices are falling".

Therefore I commend the government for the way in which it is going steadily forward with a program for the purpose of bringing stability to the farming people of the country, the way in which it is going ahead step by step toward the goal of making the farmers' position more secure.

Let me say this in conclusion to those who declare that this is an attack on personal liberty. The only way in which the compulsory part of the oats and barley section of the bill can operate and stay in operation is if the provincial governments concerned, particularly the prairie provinces, are willing to give that board necessary powers. The farmers have asked almost unanimously that these powers be given. Is this not a democratic parliament where the will of the people should prevail? It should not be thwarted by a small and determined group, and I say that if it turns out that all the grim forebodings of the Progressive Conservative party prove to be in some measure correct, that, because the farmers ask to have oats and barley handled by a government marketing board, therefore all liberty is gone, then there is nothing to prevent them from taking action through their provincial legislatures to remove the necessary compulsion. Remember it is the provincial legislatures that will provide the necessary compulsion in this matter. This is only enabling legislation, and at any time that the farmers feel their rights are being interfered with they can withdraw the support they are giving through this complementary provincial legislation.

I say that the farmers of the country expect that their wishes in this matter, in the handling of their products, shall be recognized by this parliament. I ask the government to go ahead and take the sentiment of the house on the whole bill. Let us see who the people are who are against the will of the farmers being carried out with reference to this question of oats and barley. Do not let them try to bury it. I ask the government to go ahead with the bill and take the sentiment of the house upon it.

Mr. P. E. WRIGHT (Melfort): I do not wish to deal immediately with the remarks of the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker). First I wish to compliment the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) on his very fine speech yesterday. I do not know when I have heard so much nonsense talked so eloquently in the same length of time. First he set out to tell us about his close connection with agriculture. His maternal grandmother was married to a farmer who lived north of Regina, and on the basis of that close connection with agriculture he proceeded to tell us that the farmers of Canada were opposed to having oats and barley and coarse grains under a compulsory wheat board. He made little of the directorate of our wheat board and the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. He said they were professional advocates who did not know the will of the farmer. He knows. His maternal grandmother was a farmer's wife; he is a lawyer, and he knows much better what the will of the farmers in this matter is and what the farmers want with regard to this measure.

As far as I am concerned and, I believe, as far as the members of the house are concerned, I think it would be much better for us to follow the resolutions and suggestions made to this parliament by agricultural organizations right across Canada.

Our Canadian Federation of Agriculture have for at least the last two years advocated that all grains should be placed under the wheat board act and handled in that manner. It is the first time we have had agreement between eastern and western agriculture on this matter. We find that the farmers of the east, having met in the Canadian Federation of Agriculture with farmers from western Canada, and having there sat down and discussed the various problems in the marketing of grain, have come to a unanimous decision, and that unanimous decision is recorded in the resolutions of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture.

I think, therefore, the least that this parliament could do, the least that we as members could do, would be to implement this legislation as far as oats and barley are concerned. We have in western Canada three different provincial governments. The hon. member for Rosthern has stated that the referring of this bill to the committee on agriculture would be likely to defeat the purpose of the bill being implemented in 1948.

I am doubtful, from the actions of this government, whether they ever intended this bill to go into effect in 1948. If they had, they would have acted differently. They would have brought it in earlier, in the first place; and in the second place they would have had some consultations with the provincial governments with respect to complementary legislation, because that is an important point. It is indicated by various telegrams and letters which I have, and which I will read, that it is necessary that the legislation be approximately the same for the three provinces.

If the government were as anxious as the hon. member for Rosthern has suggested to have this legislation passed they would have called in these people before this and suggested to them some method whereby the complementary legislation could be passed in the provinces. That was one of the reasons why we were suggesting that the bill should be divided and go to the committee on agriculture. The intention was not to hold it up. It was simply so that the various governments could come here and there could be some consultation, some agreement reached as to the necessary legislation which should be passed by the provincial governments.

As far as the government of Saskatchewan is concerned, I have a telegram sent by the premier of that province to the Right Hon. C. D. Howe, Minister of Trade and Commerce, on March 1. It states:

Press reports you as stating that complementary legislation must be passed by provinces to enable wheat board to handle coarse grains. Saskatchewan government anxious that wheat board have this power as soon as possible and therefore regrets that we have not been approached with a view to having complementary legislation passed. Will you forward to us as quickly as possible draft of complementary approved legislation which in opinion of Department of Justice would give to wheat board necessary powers to handle coarse grains. Haste essential if this legislation to be dealt with by legislature during present session.

In reply to that, the Minister of Trade and Commerce wired the Premier of Saskatchewan to this effect:

Thanks for your wire March first re complementary legislation to enable wheat board to handle coarse grains. I am asking Minister of Justice to communicate with you. You will appreciate that federal legislation is still at resolution stage with indications of strong opposition which may delay enactment.

Immediately on receipt of that wire, the Premier of Saskatchewan wired the Minister of Justice to this effect:

Would appreciate reply to my wire March second re complementary legislation to enable wheat board to handle coarse grains. Inconceivable that resolution before parliament unless bill prepared. Would appreciate draft of legislation which in opinion of your department would enable wheat board to handle coarse grains. If you prefer it will have one of our law officers fly to Ottawa to discuss drafting necessary legislation. Please advise.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce wrote a letter to the Premier of Saskatchewan outlining in some measure the necessary steps. In reply to the premier's wire of March 1, he said this:

Ottawa, March 4, 1948

Dear Premier Douglas:

I have referred to the Department of Justice your recent request for a draft of approved legislation for the control of the marketing of oats and barley within Saskatchewan, to be complementary to the proposed amendments to the Canadian Wheat Board Act. I am informed that the control of the marketing of oats and barley within a province can be established under provincial legislation by several different methods, and that the necessary provincial statute can take one of several forms, depending on the scheme of control to be employed. As you know, it is contemplated that complementary legislation for this purpose should be passed not only in Saskatchewan but in other provinces, and it is felt that the controls to be established by the provinces should be uniform in form and effect in each province, and that such provinces should mutually agree to the duration and form of the provincial legislation.

I feel that it is the responsibility of the provinces, rather than the dominion, to select the form and to determine the duration of the legislation and the form of the controls to be established in relation to the marketing of oats and barley within each province. Until the provinces have agreed to a uniform scheme of control and have determined the duration of that scheme, it does not seem advisable for consideration to be given to the drafting of a statute for any one province. When such agreement has been reached, I feel that a uniform statute can be prepared by the legal advisers to the provinces.

I have discussed the subject of complementary legislation with Mr. R. H. Milliken, K.C., of Regina, solicitor for the Saskatchewan wheat pool, who seems to be thoroughly familiar with the problems involved.

On March 8 Premier Douglas replied to this effect:

Dear Mr. Howe:

Thank you for your letter of March 4 regarding the drafting of complementary legislation for the purpose of giving the wheat board power to handle coarse grains. As I stated in my wire, the Saskatchewan government is most anxious to pass the necessary legislation for this purpose, and would like to have this done during the present session. I note you suggest that the provinces should agree to a uniform scheme of control and draft legislation accordingly.

It would seem to me that if the federal government is really desirous of having this complementary legislation passed, they would either prepare draft legislation and submit it to the provinces concerned and ask them to pass it as quickly as possible, or they would take the initiative in calling those provinces together to confer with the Department of Justice in order that legislation could be drafted. I would therefore urge that you let us have a draft proposal as quickly as possible or that you urge the Department of Justice to invite the provinces to send representatives to Ottawa with a view to drafting uniform legislation at the earliest possible date.

The Saskatchewan government is prepared to have one of its law officers in Ottawa on 48 hours' notice if you will advise us of such a meeting. Otherwise, we would appreciate having a draft bill for consideration at the present session of the legislature.

It is quite evident that if this government is as anxious as the hon. member for Rosthern has indicated to have this legislation passed in 1948 and put into effect, then it should have done something more than what has been done to date with regard to having complementary legislation passed.

Mr. HOWE: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. WRIGHT: Yes.

Mr. HOWE: If the government of Saskatchewan wished to pass the buck on a contentious type of legislation the logical thing to do would be to ask the federal government to draft the bill, would it not?

Mr. WRIGHT: Saskatchewan is not trying to pass the buck to anybody. All that government are trying to do is to get this measure into effect, and they are prepared to co-operate. They are not the type of government that is all the time passing the buck. They are prepared to take responsibility when the responsibility is theirs. They have never given any indication that they wanted to pass the buck.

Mr. GARDINER: How could the Saskatchewan government, or anyone else, draft legislation which is complementary to legislation that has not yet passed this house?

Mr. WRIGHT: The answer to that question is simply this. The minister had a draft bill which he was fairly sure would pass the house. That certainly is no excuse.

Mr. HOWE: It did not look like that last night.

Mr. WRIGHT: He intends to put it through, and it is very likely to go through parliament. If the bill had been amended in parliament, certainly the complementary legislation could have been amended much more easily than entirely new legislation having to be drafted.

Mr. GARDINER: Based on the procedure so far, it would not get through in time for their present session.

Mr. POULIOT: I move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. WRIGHT: No; it is six o'clock.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

On the order:

House in committee on Bill No. 48 (Letter J of the Senate), intitled: "An act to incorporate National General Insurance Company" (without amendment).—Mr. Benidickson.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would call to the attention of the house standing order 110, Beauchesne, second edition, page 276, entitled "Bills reported together", which reads as follows:

All private bills reported to the house by any committee may, on one motion be referred together to a committee of the whole house and such committee may consider and report one or more such bills at the same sitting.

So, Mr. Benidickson moves, seconded by Mr. McIvor, that I do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of the whole to consider Bills Nos. 48, 49, 59 and 115. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. REID: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, does your ruling mean that if a member opposes one bill, the four would move into committee at one time? Or does it mean that if a member was against a certain bill, the four are opposed?

Mr. KNOWLES: This is not a second reading.

Mr. REID: I know that.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The bills will be taken one after the other in the committee. But instead of referring the bills one after the other to the committee, to report one after the other to the Chair, they may be referred to the committee all together. That has been the practice in the past and it is in accordance with rule 110. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. CHURCH: I want to have explained this bill about this insurance company.

Mr. COLDWELL: Do I understand that the bills which Your Honour proposes to refer to the committee are bills that have already been considered by a committee?

Mr. SPEAKER: Yes.

Mr. COLDWELL: The bills had second reading some time ago?

Mr. SPEAKER: Yes, and after second reading they were referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce and have been reported. Instead of having one motion for each bill, they are referred all together to the committee of the whole. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL GENERAL INSURANCE COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. 48, to incorporate National General Insurance Company—Mr. Benidickson—Mr. Golding in the chair.

On section 1—Incorporation.

Mr. CHURCH: I should like to ask, Mr. Chairman, what the law of Canada is regarding these particular insurance companies. I have not seen the bill, which is from the senate. In the first place we have an inspector of insurance at the present time who is over these general life companies. They must qualify for a certificate every year. You may remember that a few years ago, away back in 1928, 1929 and 1930, my hon. friends on the left here were objecting to the policy which allowed these companies to invest the premiums, the trust funds of their policyholders in common stocks all over the world. What was the result of that policy? Some of them could not qualify for an insurance certificate. I remember when, after the stock market collapsed in 1929 or 1930—I think it was around there—some of the stock they then held was quoted at 98 today and sold for 8 on the market tomorrow. But they got a certificate under the Insurance Act and some of them were in a dangerous condition. As a matter of fact, that was admitted and was proven by my hon. friends on the left and others.

I want to point out what was done during the war by some of the companies. When our engineers, doctors and surgeons went overseas, they had a difficult time carrying out payments on their premiums because their practice was gone when they went overseas. What is the policy of the government regarding this company? The Minister of Finance should be here to answer for the finance department, because the inspector of insurance is over these life companies. I will say this about them, they are all fine companies and made a great record of life insurance in this country. There is no doubt about that at all. They are well officered and run.

[Mr. Speaker.]

What I say now is subject to what I said before about common stock. In the twenties I brought a bill in the House of Commons in order to do away with their investing in common stocks all over the world, and to see that these companies should not be allowed to invest trust fund premiums in common stock without the consent of this parliament; because, as you will remember, there were large sums of money lost out of Canada on risks by pretty nearly all of them. They could invest in common stocks all over the world. What is the policy of the government, regarding this life company? Has it passed the inspector of insurance? Of course that does not mean a great deal. The inspector just looks over the preamble of the bill, sees who the incorporators are and all that kind of thing.

There is another thing I wish to call to the attention of the committee. A great many soldiers have come back from the war, and they have had trouble over housing and all that kind of thing. A great many soldiers had difficulty regarding their policies of insurance. I raised in the house the other day the question of excessive interest rates, but I did not get a satisfactory answer. The banks were charging them 4½ per cent interest on a loan for a small amount. For example, a small businessman may have a policy. He applies to the bank for something and they will not give it to him. They have to telephone from a little bit of branch bank to headquarters in order to lend a man money on current account. He may not have adequate security. The banker tells him, "Oh, you have a policy of insurance. I will keep that as security for you. I want it as collateral in my bank." They used to charge the banks 4½ or 5 per cent. "You have to leave it in the bank for a while and then I am going to transfer you to the insurance company". What are they charging? I raised the question the other day, and there was not a newspaper in Canada that published one line of the answer; not even C.B.C. or the Canadian Press did. As to the radio, it is hopeless. Some of these companies are charging over ten per cent on policies of these poor soldiers who have paid their premiums. Every year they are paid up. What are they paying today? I can tell you. It is or may be the rate written in the policy—six per cent. There is no such thing as six per cent. Government bonds were down to two per cent. Yet the insurance companies are charging the poor people who defended this country and defended these companies at the risk of their lives, six per cent and more on their policies. That is what they are doing. The banks turn loans over to them. They want to get the bank rates increased by this house. Some on this side of the house are advocating increased interest rates to a small man who has a store on bank interest. Some on this side of the house have advocated the raising of bank interest rates. They had better go back home and ask their constituents and ask also the bankers something about it before they propose it from this side of the house, because I am absolutely opposed to it. I can tell you I am a Conservative first, last and all the time. They can change their name all they like. I have always been a progressive, but I am too modest to call myself by that name. In those days, however, we had some support in this house for the doctrine of this party, which called for our own markets, for our own products and our own work for our own workmen.

I have nothing against the young member who is sponsoring this life insurance bill. He is a very likeable person, and I do not want to oppose his measure. But I should like to find out the policy of the Minister of Finance with regard to these life companies. Do we need any more of them at the present time? The banks charge something for transferring money from a bank to an insurance company, but the insurance companies not only charge the six per cent, as set out on the policy on their loans; they add a lot just for exchange, and I can tell you the poor people cannot stand it. There is at present no such thing as six per cent interest. During the war we got only two and three per cent on bonds.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. I would call the hon. member's attention to the fact that we are on section 1 of the bill.

Mr. CHURCH: You are quite right, Mr. Chairman, but I am raising the general question: do we need any more of these companies, in view of the number we have already? Some of them could not be called federal companies at all by the widest stretch of the imagination. I wonder what is the policy of the government. The Minister of Finance has control over the life insurance companies, and surely we should have some statement of policy from the government with regard to this matter. What is the minister doing? Has he recommended this bill?

Mr. FERGUSON: I would call attention to the fact that we are not discussing life insurance. Any company carrying on a fire and casualty business in this country cannot carry on life insurance; and this company cannot make loans. The committee should understand that we are trying to keep this money in Canada for Canadians, and I believe we should issue more charters along these lines. At the present time about fifty per cent of the premiums collected in this country for casualty and fire insurance goes to foreign countries. It is just too bad that we have not twice as many Canadian companies, and that the citizens of Canada do not insist that their money go to those companies. This is one way of keeping money here and creating employment for Canadians. This is a good charter.

Mr. COLDWELL: I quite agree with the last speaker that too much of the money we spend on insurance premiums is drained out of Canada. That is true, and I think we shall have to consider ways and means of keeping that money in Canada. But I do not believe we should adopt the method proposed under this bill, that of setting up another company of this description. What has been done in Saskatchewan in connection with automobile insurance should, I think, be a lesson to all in Canada. When a person in Saskatchewan takes out a licence to drive an automobile he also pays a dollar extra, and the owner of the automobile pays from $4.50 up to $6 for a passenger car. That indicates the amount necessary to protect an individual pretty adequately.

Mr. REID: What is the protection?

Mr. COLDWELL: I will come to that in a moment. I carry a policy on my automobile covering fire, theft, $50 deductible collision and public liability, and for that I think I paid $64.30 this year. But I personally am not insured, nor are the pedestrians in this province necessarily insured, if I should happen to hit someone with my automobile. All they can do is sue and endeavour to prove negligence on my part, if they want to collect anything by way of indemnity for the accident. That is in Ontario, with a private company. But with the small premium of from $4.50 to $6 in the province of Saskatchewan I am insured. If anything happens to me my widow, we will say, would get an indemnity of $10,000, paid from the insurance fund. The pedestrians on the street are insured, and they do not have to prove negligence in order to collect. The automobile is insured against collision, with $100 deductible; and for all that service the Saskatchewan resident pays from $4.50 to $6. A good many people thought it could not be operated for that.

Mr. FERGUSON: The hon. gentleman is suggesting that the type of insurance issued by the province of Saskatchewan makes such a low premium possible, but is it not a fact that it is largely because of the small population? Such insurance would cost you perhaps $150 in New York city. It does not cost so much in Saskatchewan because there are so few cars in that province.

Mr. COLDWELL: Insurance in this province is so expensive because of the number of private insurance companies—and this is to be another insurance company added to them—paying commissions, collecting fees, and so on. The public pay for that, whereas if everyone is insured without the payment of commissions and so on, the benefits are that much greater. I was going to say to my hon. friend that claims incurred to August 31, 1947, amounted to $683,389.86, leaving an estimated reserve for adjustment of premiums or benefits of approximately $850,000. In other words, after paying some $683,000 in damages and in indemnities to persons killed or injured in automobile accidents, they had $850,000 left in reserve. And I may add that all those claims were paid without legal intervention, without taking matters into the courts. If an individual is injured hospital bills are taken care of; an indemnity is paid for a number of weeks if he is a breadwinner; and protection such as I cannot get from a private company is given under these terms. I may add, though I am not sure of the exact amounts, that because of the large surpluses which have been accumulated this year the province of Saskatchewan has been able to increase the benefits under that automobile insurance act. And as far as fire insurance is concerned, those of us who have had property insured in the province of Saskatchewan know that, since there has been one over-all government policy in regard to insurance through the Saskatchewan government office, rates have been brought down by from ten to twenty-five per cent, and I say that without fear of contradiction.

Mr. REID: Are trucks included?

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes, they are included, but they pay a higher rate according to wheel base, weight and other factors. Buses pay the highest rate of all because of the greater risk due to the number of passengers, the weight of the bus, and so on. But one of the points I make is that when I insure my automobile in the province of Ontario and pay for public liability insurance, neither I nor the public is really insured unless it can be proved that I was negligent. They may have to take it to the court, and prove it; whereas under the act to which I have referred, the only proofs that are required are proof of accident, proof of injury or proof of death.

Mr. FERGUSON: Would you be satisfied that the taxpayer should pay out, from the public funds, in respect of a person who was injured in an accident and cannot prove negligence on the part of the car owner?

Mr. COLDWELL: I have pointed out to my hon. friend this, that the taxpayer bears no cost whatsoever. In the years of experience they have had, $683,000 has been paid out of the premium fund.

Mr. FERGUSON: Are you sure those claims are adequately reserved at the present time?

Mr. COLDWELL: I was going to say that, in addition, they have built up a reserve of $850,000 or more. That is in two years; and it is more than they have paid out in accident benefits. That, I would say, is a substantial reserve.

Mr. FERGUSON: Would you make a comparison with an Ontario stock company at the same time you are making this comparison?

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes, certainly. So far as the Ontario stock company is concerned, if I take out a policy in that stock company I know I am protected, so far as the policy which I own is liable for that protection. But the thing I am pointing out is this, that the time has arrived when the multiplicity of these insurance companies, all of which are collecting heavy premiums and high rates, and pay fairly substantial commissions, is something which we should consider, as a parliament, with a view to reducing the extortionate rates which are now paid for fire insurance, automobile insurance and other forms of insurance permitted under this bill.

I say it is something we should go into carefully. All I am doing is this: I am trying to give the committee an actual example of something that has been done in one of the provinces, something which was beneficial to all the people of that province.

It is true, as hon. members may remark in a moment, that this insurance is compulsory. Well, why should we not have compulsory insurance?

Mr. CASE: Everything compulsory.

Mr. COLDWELL: No, not everything compulsory. Let me say this to my hon. friend: is it fair, for example, that one man should carry insurance to protect the public—for that is what it amounts to? Then he is hit by a man who has not assumed his responsibility to the public. That man cannot make good the loss which follows a collision, or something of that kind.

I have had that experience, myself, where a man in this city while driving a car ran into me and was, so far as I knew—and I inquired into the circumstances—a man I could not ask to pay. He had a large family and a very small wage. He should not have been running an automobile, if he could not pay for insurance.

Mr. CASE: Ontario looks after that.

Mr. COLDWELL: Consequently, where everybody pays, where you have not to go out and get insurance from a private company, and pay commissions, you are able to provide a service to your people which is unequalled by any private company. And I defy anybody to deny that fact.

Mr. FERGUSON: I deny it. Do you consider that the wages paid by insurance companies in Ontario and Quebec today—

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. COLDWELL: Well, the hon. member can make his speech later, although I have no objection to his interruptions or his questioning.

Mr. FERGUSON: He defied anyone to reply.

Mr. COLDWELL: What the hon. member says gives me a good opening to say something I had in mind. I would say to him that if we are to have protection at the high cost of maintaining a large overhead, then that protection is too dear. And that is precisely what my hon. friend suggested by his question, namely, that we should maintain a high overhead in order to get very few benefits.

I have no more objection to this bill than I have to a good many others of the same sort which come before the House of Commons. But I do say that bills of this description coming before the house should be considered by the house. I do not think a bill of this kind should be allowed just to pass through simply because it provides for another insurance company. We owe a duty to the people who sent us here to see that these bills are carefully examined by the House of Commons before they are allowed to go through.

When we consider insurance of this description we should consider what is being done, and make comparisons with the other facilities of the same sort available to the people of Canada. All I have tried to do is to point out that the people of one of our provinces who own automobiles, and pay a very small fee, are able to get protection such as no insurance company will give.

Mr. LENNARD: What protection do you get?

Mr. COLDWELL: I thought I told the hon. member. I do not wish to keep repeating for hon. members who either were not here or were not paying attention.

Mr. LENNARD: I was here. I never heard you. I did not hear the hon. member say what the benefits were.

Mr. MICHAUD: If you had been here you would.

Mr. LENNARD: I was here.

Mr. MICHAUD: I heard him.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I must suggest again that when we are in committee hon. members should not interrupt the hon. member who has the floor. They will have their opportunity to speak as soon as the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar takes his seat.

Mr. COLDWELL: If I may put this on the record, this policy includes accident insurance against death or injury from motor vehicle accidents. There are five types of benefits under the policy. The principal sum for loss of life—

Mr. CASE: Which is how much?

Mr. COLDWELL: —is $10,000 to any one person; the principal sum for dismemberment; weekly indemnity for loss of income which is, I believe, $20 a week.

Mr. KNOWLES: For up to 150 weeks.

Mr. COLDWELL: Quite right.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): How many persons for loss of life?

Mr. COLDWELL: And then, hospital, medical and funeral expenses and out-of-pocket expenses; collision insurance for all licensed Saskatchewan motor vehicles with a deductible of $100 for private passenger cars and small trucks and up to $500 for trucks and buses. Then, public liability—insurance is provided to the extent of the amount payable to any person under the accident provisions. That is to say, if I hit somebody on the street he is entitled to indemnity up to the limit of the accident provision to which I have already referred.

Mr. REID: Have you the number of licences issued?

Mr. COLDWELL: In Saskatchewan?

Mr. REID: Yes.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): And, in that provision for $10,000, how many lives in one accident?

Mr. COLDWELL: It is $10,000 to each person killed in an accident, as I understand it, and it depends upon whether the person involved is the breadwinner of a family. I am sure my hon. friend who is a lawyer knows this, that if you take a case to court the amount payable as compensation in respect of individuals killed depends upon the status of those individuals. For instance, if it is a child, with no earning ability, the compensation usually allowed is very small, just about enough to pay hospital bills and funeral expenses. Under the Saskatchewan act the maximum is $625 for each child.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I was merely asking for information. The hon. member referred to $10,000 in the event of loss of life. I was trying to find out what would happen if three or four people were killed. Would the $10,000 cover all of them, or is it $10,000 each?

Mr. COLDWELL: It is $10,000 for each person killed in an accident; $5,000 for public liability or $10,000 maximum for any person killed in an accident.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I just did not understand it.

Mr. COLDWELL: That is all right; I am glad to bring that out. Then there is property damage insurance to the extent of the amount payable over the deductible sum of $100 in collisions.

As I have said, it provides protection that cannot be duplicated in any other plan in Canada. Over 85 per cent of those killed and the same percentage of those injured in auto accidents would not have received benefits if the plan had been based on the ordinary type of liability insurance. In other words, the experience of Saskatchewan has been, as in many provinces, that there are many people using automobiles who are either not insured or under-insured, and there would have been no protection in many instances but for this insurance plan. This plan is administered by a government insurance office maintained out of premium income.

I want to point out that this plan gives a complete coverage. If you want fire and theft in the policy, it will amount to between $20 and $25. But if you take $25 or even $30 for fire and theft and add $4.50 or $5 you will then have a policy that could not be duplicated anywhere in this dominion by a private company. I say that without fear of contradiction.

When we are permitting the setting up of a new company to handle fire and automobile insurance and the like we ought to give consideration as to how best we can provide our people with protection. I know that property and civil rights are matters within provincial jurisdiction and none of us wants to infringe upon the jurisdiction of the provinces. But again and again we have heard in this house the story of level crossing accidents, careless drivers and all the rest of it. I think we had a bill before us on one occasion which would have placed certain drivers under certain circumstances under the criminal code.

My purpose in bringing these facts to the attention of the committee is to impress upon hon. members that today we are paying a great deal in premiums because of the multiplicity of companies doing this kind of work under very high overhead. As my hon. friend said a few minutes ago, a great deal of this money is drained away to other countries. The saving grace of this bill is that it sets up a Canadian company with headquarters in Winnipeg.

But that does not satisfy me. I want to see the Canadian people protected by a form of insurance that will give maximum protection at minimum cost. If anyone wants to see an actual policy issued by the Saskatchewan government. I have one here. This particular policy includes many other features than those I have mentioned. The total premium, apart from the $4.50, amounts to $28.96. That gives additional $20,000 for loss or damage resulting from bodily injury to or death of any one person. There is additional $20,000 protection for loss or damage resulting from bodily injury to or death of two or more persons. There is legal liability for damage to the property of others of $2,000 additional in any one accident.

My hon. friend who has this policy and who sits with me here is a citizen of Saskatchewan. Because he wants collision protection, $25 deductible instead of $100 provided to everyone, he pays the additional amount to which I have just referred. The actual figures show a premium of $1.64 for the public liability and damage to person, $20,000 and $20,000. For the legal liability for damage to property, $2,000, the premium is $5.50. For collision, $25 deductible, instead of $100 he pays an extra premium of $16.

Mr. LENNARD: That is no different from Ontario.

Mr. COLDWELL: But I am pointing out that when you add to the $28.96 the $4.50 you get a total of $33.46 for protection which you could not get from a private company.

Mr. CASE: I have a better one for less money, $50 and $100,000.

Mr. COLDWELL: That is public liability. If you wanted an additional $20,000 under this plan it would cost you only another $1.64. The hon. member could not buy a policy that would insure him personally as an owner and operator of an automobile for $10,000 in the event of death. He cannot buy a policy that will insure the general public without possible contest at law to prove negligence on the part of the driver or the owner of the automobile. That is the point I am making.

Mr. LENNARD: You can get that for $5 in Ontario.

Mr. COLDWELL: You say you can get it for $5, but I say you can get everything I have mentioned for from $4.50 to $6 in Saskatchewan.

Mr. LENNARD: What is fifty cents?

Mr. FERGUSON: Most insurance companies settle their claims without ever going near the courts. They are settled out of court and without a lawyer.

Mr. COLDWELL: I know that some of them do settle without going to the courts, but the law is there and many of them go to the courts.

Mr. FERGUSON: Ninety per cent of them do not.

Mr. COLDWELL: That is all right for these defenders of private interests, but I am simply saying that many of these claims are settled by action at law.

Mr. LENNARD: Very few.

Mr. COLDWELL: I am saying that if they are not settled by action at law they are settled by lawyers outside the court—

Mr. LENNARD: No, never had a case.

Mr. COLDWELL: —who naturally collect fees for making the settlement. My hon. friends had better read this Saskatchewan insurance plan. If they do they will find that it has much to recommend it. They will realize that we are paying through the nose for much of the inadequate protection we are getting from private companies.

Mr. CHURCH: On a question of privilege, I never could get a copy of this bill on the table until after I had made my speech. It is hard to get bills that come from the senate. I have no objection to the bill, and they are good people, but I think some notice of it should have been given here. As it is listed, one would read it as a life company on our order paper, as called.

Mr. KNOWLES: May I ask the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River if "(b) automobile insurance" includes public liability and loss of life?

Mr. BENIDICKSON: It would cover the normal policy put out by a stock company for automobile protection.

Mr. KNOWLES: The hon. member is certain that loss of life is covered. It is not specifically set out anywhere else in that section or in the bill.

Mr. BENIDICKSON: This company will not carry on the normal type of life insurance business. This would cover the type of public liability that would follow an automobile accident.

Mr. KNOWLES: That is what I meant.

EASTERN TRUST COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. 49, respecting the Eastern Trust Company—Mr. Isnor—Mr. Golding in the chair.

On section 1—Capital stock and shares.

Mr. KNOWLES: May I ask the sponsor of the bill to indicate the reasons for such a large increase in capital, from $1,000,000 to $3,000,000?

Mr. ISNOR: This is one of our old and well-established trust companies in the maritime provinces. It has been doing business for a long period of years, in a very efficient manner, and because of that efficiency it has enjoyed exceptionally fine business not only in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island but also in the province of Quebec. The company now finds it necessary to expand its activities. It has recently opened an office in Montreal and it proposes to open offices in Ontario. With that expansion in view, it requires additional funds for mortgages and so on and for that reason is asking for the increase from $1,000,000 to $3,000,000.

Section agreed to.

On the title.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I wish to say a word about this, applicable to all these other bills which will come before us. Here we have a bill for an expansion in the capital of the company, while in the previous case we had a bill for the incorporation of a company. I am one of those who believe that the more insurance companies we license, the greater will be the competition and therefore the cost of insurance will be that much less. I am therefore in favour of this bill and the others like it. I think, however, that we should have a word more from the senior member for Halifax in view of the large increase in capital that is asked for. He merely said that they had expanded their business. I do not want him to think I am opposing the bill. I am not. If it is necessary to vote I will vote for it. Perhaps we had all better stop and consider that unless we are shareholders of the company we have not very much interest in what the capital is. I see that under the bill the present shareholders shall have pro rata opportunities. I do not know what that means. I gather they will have some opportunity of making purchase of shares. The only thing we need to guard against here is the watering of these stocks. If there is no watering of stocks I can see no reason why this House of Commons should not permit the business to proceed in the way it proposes, which it thinks best to carry out its interests, particularly when it increases competition in the line of endeavour in which the company is engaged.

Mr. ISNOR: I wish to thank the hon. member for Calgary West for the thought he has expressed in regard to the general principle of competition. Like him, I believe in competition and I think the creation of competition in any centre is bound to bring about better business methods. In answer to the question regarding watered stock, I assure him there is no such term nowadays in the maritimes, particularly in reference to a business such as this.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Please do not think I suggested that there was.

Mr. ISNOR: The increase is necessary owing to the expansion of the firm's business, in consequence of which they cannot extend additional credits unless they have extra funds. That is common sense.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): More money for lending purposes. That is it in a nutshell, is it not?

Mr. ISNOR: Yes.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I am all for you.

Mr. McMASTER: What is the reserve in this case? If the hon. member believes in competition, there will be no competition in the buying of this stock. It will all go to the shareholders.

Mr. ISNOR: The bill does provide an opportunity for the present shareholders to take up additional new stock if they so desire.

[Mr. Smith (Calgary West).]

Otherwise it will be put on the market in the regular way and listed, and the public will have an opportunity to subscribe.

Mr. McMASTER: The hon. member did not answer the question about reserve.

Mr. ISNOR: I am not a shareholder or a director of the company and I am not familiar with the details, but I believe they have about $500,000. There is a substantial amount in reserve.

Mr. COLDWELL: What kind of business does the company engage in?

Mr. ISNOR: Largely mortgage and loans in connection with estates.

Mr. COLDWELL: The management of estates?

Mr. ISNOR: Yes.

Mr. CASE: Is the stock listed now?

Mr. ISNOR: I have every reason to believe it is.

TRUST AND LOAN COMPANY OF CANADA

The house in committee on Bill No. 59, respecting the Trust and Loan Company of Canada—Mr. Pinard—Mr. Golding in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. KNOWLES: Is the sponsor here?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. KNOWLES: Then there is not much point in asking any questions if he is not here.

Mr. ISNOR: I shall be pleased to endeavour to answer any questions in reference to the bill, although I am not the sponsor.

Mr. COLDWELL: Will the hon. gentleman explain what this bill is? It looks to me a harmless proposal, but I do not know anything about it and I should like to have some information in order to decide whether it is or not.

Mr. MacNICOL: The sponsor is not here. Let it go over another week.

Mr. KNOWLES: Stand.

Mr. ISNOR: If hon. members wish to have it stand that is agreeable to me. This bill was before the banking and commerce committee and was approved by the committee without amendment. Moreover, it was approved by the federal Department of Insurance. It is rather a strange bill in this sense, that instead of seeking an authorization to increase, the company comes to parliament and asks for a reduction because of the peculiar circumstances and the fact that its funds are tied up in England. The background of this company is English. It is an English company doing business largely in Canada. Practically its entire business is done in Canada. The bill was quite fully explained on second reading by the sponsor, and hon. members will find that explanation in Hansard. I do not know whether they wish me to take up the time of the committee to go over that ground again, but I feel that the explanation given to the committee was such that all hon. members were satisfied as to the merits of the bill. They felt that no question would be raised by hon. members who had looked into the merits of the bill. For the information of hon. members, may I say that they will find all questions answered and details given in Hansard on pages 1929, 1930 and 1931 of March 5.

Mr. COLDWELL: As I understand it, this bill is before the committee on account of certain exchange difficulties.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is correct. My department looked into this bill. I think it is quite unobjectionable. The company is a very old established one. The control is in England and, as my hon. friend said, this capital reorganization is prompted by reasons which will appeal to all hon. members. I do not wish to intervene in the debate; I could express my own personal opinion, but I do not really think any objection could be taken to the capital reorganization.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): As I understand it, broadly speaking this is merely a reduction in the capital and, if so, I do not see any objection to it.

PEOPLE'S FRATERNAL ORDER

The house in committee on Bill No. 115, to incorporate People's Fraternal Order—Mr. Croll—Mr. Golding in the chair.

On section 1—Incorporation.

Mr. COLDWELL: Is this not the bill, the title of which received some objection in the house the other day? Is this not rather a wide sort of title, "An act to incorporate the People's Fraternal Order"? Does it not take in a lot of territory, and was it not suggested to the sponsor that that might be considered? I notice the sponsor of the bill is not here. Is there anybody else in the committee who can answer for him?

Mr. CLEAVER: I chaired the banking and commerce committee to which this bill was referred and I have just one suggestion to make in regard to these bills that are referred. All parties have representatives on the committees, and have the fullest possible opportunity to be heard. At the time this bill was before the committee it was gone into carefully and there were no objections of any kind as to the question of name. I personally cannot see any objection to it. If my hon. friend would elaborate on what he has in mind as to the objection to the name I would understand his inquiry.

Mr. COLDWELL: It struck me that the People's Fraternal Order is a pretty wide sort of title. It does not mean anything to me. It seems to me that the title of an organization approved by the parliament of Canada should mean a little more than this title does. It seems to be a closed corporation. I notice that section 5 dealing with membership says:

> Only persons acceptable to the society, or the wife or husband or any child of a person already a member shall be admitted as members of the society.

And so on. That does not seem to be as all-inclusive as the title. The title is pretty inclusive; it includes everybody, including members of this house. I have no objection to the bill, particularly, but I think the title is rather too broad and that some consideration should be given to it before the house passes the bill. Titles usually mean something and are usually more restrictive, indicating the type of membership to be expected under this charter. That is a point which should be considered.

Mr. CLEAVER: I should like to assure the committee, if I may, that the superintendent of insurance was present when this bill was before the committee as well as the chief of the actuarial branch. They gave evidence to the committee and informed us that the new proposed company as set up was actually sound. No question whatever was raised as to the name. The sponsor of the bill is not in the house tonight.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I want to associate myself entirely with the remarks made by the leader of the C.C.F. party. In these days we are learning more and more who people are. It seems to me that at this time we should not pass bills with titles of this kind. It would not be a great deal of bother to anyone to change the name. It does seem to me that we should not pass a thing using a great big, broad word like "people", which indicates nothing. I do not mind if people coin a word where you have to make inquiries to find out what it is all about, but I do object to the use of a word such as "people". You may as well call it, "The churches So-and-so", or "humanity", or something of that kind. It does seem to me that it would not be a great deal of trouble to ask the assistant sponsor of the bill to see if the name could be changed. It would not be much trouble to change the word and get one which would be much more attractive, because the way the thing stands it does not mean very much.

Mr. CHURCH: Is there some way in which we may have a better listing of these bills? Copies should be on the table. How are we to know whether it is life or fire insurance? These bills come from the senate, and we never see them.

Progress reported.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hour reserved for private bills having expired the house will now revert to its business prior to six o'clock.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

PROVISION FOR EMPLOYEES' PENSIONS, MINIMUM PRICE OF WHEAT DELIVERIES, ETC.

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Howe for the second reading of Bill No. 135, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1935.

Mr. POULIOT: I adjourned the debate at six o'clock.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. POULIOT: I was under the impression that my hon. friend was through with his speech.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. POULIOT: As he told me he was not, I shall follow the precedent and wait until he is through.

Mr. WRIGHT: Mr. Speaker, when the house rose at six o'clock I had just read certain telegrams and letters which indicated the desire of the government of Saskatchewan to have complementary legislation passed to enable this bill to be put into force at the earliest day possible. As far as we in this group are concerned, we are just as anxious as is the Saskatchewan government to see that this legislation is brought into force for the handling of the 1948 crop; and anything we can do in this house will be done to further that objective.

I was indicating that I thought it was probably out of place perhaps for the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker), in view of the actions of the government in failing to expedite its passage, to be accusing the opposition of holding up this measure. Last year we moved or tried to move an amendment, when the wheat board act was being amended, to do this very thing which we are doing this year. The hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. Castleden) moved that amendment, but we were told that it was unconstitutional and that there were many things which could not be done. As a result it was not done, and we had the fiasco that we had this last fall in connection with coarse grains. Had our amendment been accepted last year, or had this amendment been made last year, there would not have been the need for the rush today that apparently there is.

In the second place I believe that this measure should have been introduced in the pre-Christmas session, so that the provincial governments would have had time to give proper consideration to the type of complementary legislation that would be necessary for them to pass to implement in full the proposed amendment.

The third reason why I believe the government has failed is that it has not called the provinces together to consider the matter. I think it was the place of the dominion government to ask the provinces to get together on this matter. I am sure that, had they done so, there would have been consultations between the provinces before this. I do not know what the attitude of the province of Alberta and of the province of Manitoba may be. Apparently, the province of Manitoba has, as yet, made no representations to the government with regard to it. Probably they are waiting until the measure receives its final reading here. But at this late day it is extremely doubtful whether the provinces will be able, in their regular sessions, to pass the necessary implementing legislation to put this legislation into effect this year. It may be that if they are anxious to do so, by calling a special session they will be able to. I know that in Saskatchewan the demand for it is such that the provincial government will, if necessary, call a special session of the legislature to deal with the matter. I do not know whether the other provinces are prepared to do that or not.

I should like to deal for a short time with the first matter dealt with in the bill, namely, the initial payment on the participation certificate. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) stated that the government were not putting the amount in the bill. The reason given was that if at any future time they wanted to increase the payment, they would be able to do so without bringing in another amendment. Perhaps I am a bit suspicious, but I wonder if perhaps the reason may not have been that if they had put an amount in the bill, it would have meant that that amount would have been the floor price during the remainder of the contract. Since we are amending the bill at the present time, it leaves the $1.35 floor which is in the original bill.

Mr. HOWE: No. My hon. friend has not read the bill.

Mr. WRIGHT: Yes, I have read the bill.

Mr. HOWE: You did not read it correctly. The initial payment, whatever it is increased to now, will be the floor. For example, if it is increased to $1.75, $1.75 becomes the floor for the entire period.

Mr. WRIGHT: I am glad to hear that.

Mr. HOWE: Read the bill.

Mr. WRIGHT: It is a little bit indefinite in the bill. It says "during that pool period." I did not know whether "that pool period" meant the year or the five-year period. I thought that if it had been the five-year period, it would have said "during the pool period" rather than "during that pool period." I am glad the minister has cleared that matter up, and that whatever price is paid will be the floor price for the entire pool period.

I would suggest that the government try to make this payment as large as possible. If there ever was a time when it was needed in the west, it is at the present time after the crop failure we had over a large part of the west last year. With the amount that is available for this payment—and I believe it is $234 million—I think a fairly substantial payment could be made, especially if the government would accept certain of the recommendations which I believe all parties of the opposition agree should be accepted. One is that the farmers and growers of wheat should not be asked to subsidize the domestic use of flour in Canada. Last year we were selling wheat to the millers in Canada for $1.58½ a bushel. I do not know what the average price was last year for all the wheat sold; but I think, when that average price has been determined for all the wheat sold, the dominion government should be prepared to pay into the wheat board fund the difference between $1.58½ and that average price which was obtained for the 1947 crop. If that principle were carried out during the other years, 1945, 1946 and 1947, and were carried forward, it would mean that the participation certificates paid out in 1950 would be worth something. It would mean also that the government would be able to make a larger payment on the participation certificates at the present time. I do not see why the wheat growers should be asked to subsidize the consumption of flour in Canada. Nor do I believe that they should be asked to subsidize the British wheat contract.

I have been opposed to the idea of paying too much at the present time. I do not think we can determine what sacrifices the farmers will have made under the British wheat contract until that contract is terminated in 1949. When it is terminated in 1949 I think this government should be prepared to do as I have suggested should be done with regard to the flour consumed in Canada, namely, that when they have finally determined what the average price obtained for the wheat is, they should be prepared to pay into the wheat board fund the difference between the price obtained under the British wheat contract and the average price for the wheat in those particular years. If that were done, I believe it would make up at least in part to the wheat growers the increase there has been in the cost of production on account of the removal of price ceilings in Canada; because undoubtedly there has been a great increase in the cost of farm machinery and in the cost of all those things which go into the cost of producing wheat in this country. Our twine went up last year to almost double what it had been. Farm machinery went up first by 12½ per cent and then something over 15 per cent. All other costs have gone up. Unless something is done, it is hard for the western producer to understand just why his prices should be frozen when prices of the things that go into his cost of production continue to rise.

I should now like to say a few words with regard to coarse grains. Last year our amendment, which would have brought coarse grains under the wheat board, was not accepted, with the result that the price ceiling was lifted on October 21. Immediately the price of coarse grains went up by from twenty to thirty cents a bushel. Never in my experience in western Canada have I heard such a howl of protest as went up across the prairies when that action was taken by the government. So many protests came to the Liberal association of Saskatchewan that they felt it necessary to take some action, and they came to Ottawa to see if something could be done about it. The government say they are leaving it to the companies in the first place; that when the line elevator companies, the pools and the grain handling firms have made some restitution to the farmers from the profits they have made, then the government will be prepared to step in and do something. They have not said what they will do; but I want to point out the position in which they are placing some of the grain handling firms. Many of those firms, especially the smaller ones, had eastern customers whom they continued to supply with normal shipments; in other words they were not withholding grain from the market. Other companies perhaps more astute, believing this action would be taken, for at least a month before the ceilings came off supplied their customers with the very least they could get away with. They were withholding grain and, as a result, those companies will be able to make a much better settlement than the other companies which continued to supply their eastern customers in the normal manner.

I believe the government should have averaged the price for the first month, then made a return to the farmers on the basis of that average price for coarse grains during the first month after the ceiling was lifted. Then they could have gone to these companies and collected any money they made. As the matter stands at the present time, if the farmers are to get a fair return on any profits made by the milling companies or the feed processors, that money will have to come out of the treasury of this country. Otherwise the farmer will not get a fair return on these coarse grains. Had that policy been followed, these coarse grains could have been paid for long ago. More money would have been in circulation in western Canada, and the farmers would have been in a much better position. That policy was not followed. We do not know yet on what basis the government will make these payments; we have had no indication as to what it will be.

I should like to point out also that in connection with this whole bill our position is quite clear. We are prepared to support everything in this bill. It does not go as far as we would like to see it go. We believe it should include all grains. That is what western agriculture has been asking for—

Mr. MUTCH: Some of it.

Mr. WRIGHT: Can the hon. member name any organizations in western Canada that have not been asking for it?

Mr. MUTCH: I was not speaking of organizations; I was speaking of farmers.

Mr. WRIGHT: There may be individual farmers who have not asked for it, but certainly I have not heard of any organization that has not been asking to have all coarse grains placed under the wheat board. We are prepared to do all we can to expedite the passage of this bill—

Mr. HOWE: Then the best thing you can do is sit down.

Mr. WRIGHT: I am going to sit down in a moment, though many other people have spoken a good deal longer than I have on this matter. I just want to make it perfectly clear that, as far as this group is concerned, nothing will be done to hinder or delay the passage of this bill.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. POULIOT: I rise to a point of order. I do not wish to be unpleasant to the hon. member, but I adjourned the debate at six o'clock, when I was the only member to rise; and later I gave my place to the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Wright).

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I must say to the hon. member for Temiscouata, first, that when he rose to adjourn the debate the hon. member for Melfort had the floor; second, that it is not the practice to adjourn the debate at six o'clock; third, that when the hon. member for Melfort rose to speak the hon. member for Lake Centre was on his feet, the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Fair) was on his feet and the hon. member for Winnipeg South (Mr. Mutch) was also on his feet. So I believe I should give the floor to the hon. member for Lake Centre.

Mr. POULIOT: I ask the house to decide, by virtue of the rules, who has the right to speak. There is a rule to that effect, and you know it.

Mr. SPEAKER: If it is the desire of the hon. member to take the matter to the house he should have put a motion.

Mr. POULIOT: Yes; I want a vote on it.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member for Lake Centre.

Mr. J. G. DIEFENBAKER (Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to the concluding remarks of the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Wright), when he said it was most unfair that the farmers should have been required to subsidize the consumers in Canada in connection with the price of bread. With that there can be no disagreement. However, he added that it was also most unfair and unjust that the farmers should have been required to subsidize the British wheat agreement, and he felt that at the conclusion of that agreement, in the event there was any difference between the world price and the price paid under it, that difference should be made up by the people of Canada as a whole. The latter statement was most interesting, having regard to the attitude taken by the C.C.F. party when my leader and those associated with him took that same stand. My leader and they have stood alone in that view during the past two or three years. Only now, when my hon. friend and those associated with him are beginning to realize that the campaign on behalf of the western farmer waged by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) is securing support, when all through the piece hon. gentlemen of the C.C.F. supported the government and opposed the stand taken by my leader, are they coming to see that it is well to back track a little and support the position the leader of this party has taken throughout?

I am now going to deal with this bill and with the remarks made this afternoon by the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker). I always listen to the hon. member with a great deal of interest. He always has a great deal to say; he says it well, and he says it in such a way that everyone can hear him. He raised the old dodge that we on this side of the house, having asked that this bill be separated, would be committing the unpardonable offence of delaying the passage of the bill and the payment to the western farmers of the amount provided under the bill.

First and foremost in that connection I agree with the hon. member for Melfort. He saw through what was taking place in this connection. This bill could have been brought down earlier. It should have been brought down earlier, so that full and complete discussion could have taken place on the subject.

I am not going with him when he said he was suspicious. I am not suspicious; I believe it is a fact that the reason this bill was not brought down earlier was to deny us the opportunity of holding the government responsible for its failure in connection with its wheat policy in the past few years. They say, in effect, "Take it all, regardless of whether it is constitutional, regardless of whether it can be carried into effect."

They ask us to accept this omelette that deals with pensions for employees and payments to farmers, and the promise of the possibility, some time in the future, of the implementing, by order in council, of control over oats and barley.

So far as this oats and barley deal is concerned, again I do not want to be suspicious, but when it is introduced just on the verge of a general election in Saskatchewan it arouses one's interest as to the reason it is being introduced. Only a year ago, on February 27, 1947, an amendment was introduced to bring oats and barley under the act, and the answer given at that time by the government through the Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley) was, in effect, "It is not constitutional; it is dangerous; it cannot be done" —and all the other expressions that are used when a question of something being ultra vires is advanced. Have things changed in the last year, since February 27, 1947?

The only change that has taken place is that there was not a provincial election coming up in 1947, but there is one coming up in 1948. How are they to bring it about? Well, they do not say they will do it. They speak of enabling legislation and complementary legislation.

Even if complementary legislation were passed by the Saskatchewan legislature—and it would be, because the premier has already stated that that will be done, and, if necessary, that a special session will be called—can this legislation be made operative? It will be dangled before the people as to what might have been; there is no sadder word of tongue or pen than it might have been.

Supposing Alberta comes in with it; can it be brought into effect? I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) this question: if two provinces have passed enabling legislation, can it effectively be brought in? The answer is: No, it cannot—or even with three. That legislation can be brought in and be effectual under the constitutional powers of this country, according to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley) himself, who averred its unconstitutionality, only provided that each and every province affected introduces enabling legislation where and if oats and barley are to be marketed.

Mr. HOWE: Is that your legal opinion?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: That is the legal opinion of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. HOWE: Nothing of the sort.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I beg your pardon?

Mr. HOWE: Nothing of the sort.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): It is in Hansard.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I would not expect agreement from the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. HOWE: Would you like me to read the opinion of the Minister of Justice?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner); no, not the Minister of Agriculture, but my hon. friend has been in practically every other department—

Mr. HOWE: My hon. friend can at least be a gentleman; I have yet to see any indication of it.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Is there anything ungentlemanly in paying a tribute to the minister who holds nearly all the portfolios?

Mr. HOWE: It is very cheap politics, very cheap comedy.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I say to my right hon. friend that if he has any interruptions to make, let him speak up so that they can be heard.

Mr. HOWE: I will be pleased to. I wish to say that when we are discussing a wheat bill it is very cheap comedy to try to trade on the name of the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: It is cheap comedy to think of my right hon. friend as having all the portfolios! He is not satisfied. He controls industry all over Canada; he controls the right of industry to live; and now he takes over the greatest monopoly in the history of this country.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would ask the hon. member to confine his remarks to the bill.

Mr. HOWE: Criminal lawyer, doing his stuff, talking to the gallery.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: What is that?

Mr. HOWE: A cheap lawyer, talking to the gallery.

Mr. JACKMAN: Make him withdraw.

Mr. GRAYDON: What about that, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

[Mr. Howe.]

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I do not ask for a withdrawal of a statement such as that. It is the measure of the right hon. gentleman who makes it. And, sir, my right hon. friend does not get aroused unless he is faced with facts and begins to realize that we know what he is trying to do, in regard to this national problem.

We have this legislation promising to the farmers of western Canada that oats and barley will be dealt with under the wheat board, and it is nothing more or less than a delusion and a snare. It is designed to lead them to believe in a state of affairs which the government fully well realizes that constitutionally it cannot carry into effect.

I now pass on to another portion of the bill. That is this. The government ask us to accept the bill, comprising four distinct matters. They ask us at this time to bring into effect a system of pensions in connection with the operations of the wheat board in this country. Does anyone know the identity of the individuals of the wheat board with the salaries they receive? That question was asked—

Mr. McILRAITH: The hon. member for Souris read a list of salaries this afternoon. It is on the record.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I did not say "list of salaries"; I said the identity of the individuals receiving them.

Mr. McILRAITH: And the scale of salaries.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: No, no.

Mr. McILRAITH: Oh, yes.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I never made such a statement. The list of salaries was asked for in committee on July 1, 1947—that was the committee on agriculture—and the answer given was, "We pay high salaries, and we do not think it is fair to reveal them". I can give the exact words when, on July 1, 1947, the then minister of trade and commerce used these words:

> We have an organization that for years has been paying high salaries. I think it would be unfair if we had to place on public record the salaries we pay to the wheat board.

That was the answer which was given. What is the position of affairs? Why is it that this government continues year after year to build up a civil service in this country outside the operations of the Civil Service Act. That is not fair to a man in the civil service who devotes his life to the service of his country.

Think of the list of salaries referred to this afternoon by the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross). He said there were eleven receiving from $10,000 to $15,000, as I remember it. There is one between $9,000 and $10,000; two between $8,000 and $9,000, and so forth.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): And one at $15,000.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: That is the chairman of the board, a man who has been on the board for many years and who has had wide experience in connection with wheat. We are asked to bring in a system of pensions for civil servants to be paid for, not by the people of Canada but by the farmers, to be deducted from the amount of the pool in which they are entitled to participate. Is there any justification for setting up a great organization such as this government is setting up outside the civil service, and for paying them tremendous salaries? Why are they not put in the same position as civil servants whose pension scheme by way of superannuation is payable by the state? Why should we be required on second reading to adopt the government plan in this regard and give support to a course of conduct that cannot be justified?

No one knows what it is going to cost. I saw a computation the other day which showed that the setting up of this pension scheme would take approximately $2,000,000 of moneys which should go to the farmers. Is there any reason why the western farmer again should be penalized as he has been in the past, as, for example, under the British agreement? All of us want to do everything possible for Great Britain, and everyone in this house has given her support. Canada as a nation should show her appreciation of the sacrifices which the British people have suffered, but that appreciation should not be required to rest upon the farmers in the form of lower prices. It should be assumed by the Canadian people as a whole.

Until a year ago it was impossible to get any figures in regard to the operations of the wheat board. I want to thank the Minister of Justice in this regard. In February, 1947—I can give the exact date if required—I asked that something be done to furnish the farmers with an annual accounting, so that they would be able to see what was being done with their wheat and what disposition was being made of their money. The right hon. gentleman asked me whether it would be satisfactory to present a report similar to that presented from year to year by the Canadian National Railways. That was acceptable, and a full and complete report was given to the last committee on agriculture.

What do we find as a result of an examination of those accounts? We find that the wheat business of this country is the greatest single business any government has ever gone into. It is the biggest business the Canadian people are engaged in. Between September 15, 1935, and July 31, 1946, the total value of the grain purchased by the wheat board amounted to $3,103,551,000.

What about the cost of handling? What about the expenses in connection with that? They amounted to $244,862,266, or almost a quarter of a billion dollars. What do we find on examining the accounts? We find that since 1939 the expenses of administration have gone up 3·31 times. Approximately the same amount of wheat was handled in 1946 as in 1939. Salaries have gone up 3·48 times; rents have gone up 2·9 times, and travelling expenses, 4·58 times. I can understand that travelling expenses would be larger because of the greater duties assumed by the wheat board in 1943, 1944 and 1945.

Mr. TUCKER: Will the hon. gentleman not admit that the greater proportion of that, over 80 per cent, is the actual carrying charges on the wheat that had to be carried over?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I do not think it is 80 per cent.

Mr. TUCKER: It is 82·08 per cent, carrying charges at the elevators.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I will not argue that because I did not get the same figures. I know it is high. I am pointing out the expenses of administration, the total expenses in connection with the administration of the wheat board.

Mr. TUCKER: They are only 2·16 of the total cost.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: When it comes to talking about total cost—

Mr. TUCKER: You said cost of administration.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I know what I said; total costs of handling is what I said.

Mr. GRAYDON: That is what you said.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I know of the difference between costs of handling and costs of administration. I referred to costs of handling. Auditing costs approximately $58,000 a year, and that is beside this vast army of employees, some 650 in number. In fact the cost today of auditing where permanent auditors are kept on who give monthly reports, is approximately $1,110 a month.

These are things that should be looked into because the wheat board, as it was originally set up by the Bennett government, was designed to give the largest possible return to the western farmer. As a matter of fact under government policy during the last two or three years the purpose of the wheat board has been to keep prices down for the farmer's wheat, instead of assuring him the largest possible return in that connection.

I can give an example. When evidence was given last year before the agriculture committee the hon. member for Calgary East (Mr. Harkness) asked Mr. McIvor, the chairman, with regard to an item of $979,046 of accrued interest. The hon. member asked whether that would be paid to the farmers and Mr. McIvor's answer was, "I doubt that it will." I realize that as far as the Minister of Trade and Commerce is concerned, a million dollars means nothing because he once told the hon. member—

Mr. HOWE: Here he goes.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: —for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. Macdonnell) that a million dollars was meaningless. That is what my right hon. friend said. When the suggestion was made that it could be saved, he said, "What is a million dollars?" That is simply a continuation in the days of peace of the million dollar mentality of the days of war with nothing under parliamentary control.

Mr. GARDINER: Is my hon. friend opposed to the wheat board?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: No.

Mr. HOWE: What is the purpose of this attack on the wheat board?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: This is not an attack. Is this not interesting? A while ago my right hon. friend said that I was attacking him. The right hon. gentleman as minister is, according to Mr. McIvor's evidence, actually the dominant controller of the wheat board operations on behalf of the government. That is the situation. What I am asking is that the wheat board be used, not as an exponent of government policy but as it was originally intended to be used, namely, as an instrument whereby the farmer would be assured of the largest possible return for his production. I can understand why the government gets annoyed.

Mr. GARDINER: Not annoyed; just nailing you down.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Well, I do not know who is doing the nailing, but I think it is the other way around. In the two years, 1945 and 1946, 233,000 western farmers, as a result of government policy on wheat, lost $1,600 each on an average. Bring the wheat board back in its proper position; utilize it as it was intended to be utilized, as an instrument whereby unfairness and exploitation would be done away with and the largest possible return that could be assured would be given, less reasonable cost of administration.

Mr. TUCKER: Will the hon. member permit a question? Will he explain why, if the situation is as he states, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and organized farmers in Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta support the wheat board?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I am interested to know that my hon. friend the member for Rosthern is becoming such a friend of the federation of agriculture.

Mr. TUCKER: Why do you not answer the question?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Last year, at the last session, an amendment was introduced whereby participation certificates would be paid on the 1945 crop. That amendment was introduced into the house—

Mr. GARDINER: No; it was not.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Yes, it was in committee.

Mr. GARDINER: No; it was to increase the initial payment.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: It was an amendment whereby—

Mr. TUCKER: Answer the question.

Mr. HOWE: He is an artful dodger.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: —participation certificates would be paid on the 1945 crop, and that was asked for by the federation of agriculture.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes; that is right.

Mr. BOUCHER: Who is doing the dodging over there now?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: So the Minister of Trade and Commerce was not right a moment ago—

Mr. HOWE: Make your own speech and leave the Minister of Trade and Commerce out of it.

Mr. GARDINER: It was not the Minister of Trade and Commerce who said it was not done. I said it was not done and I am correcting myself now.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Thank you. As a matter of fact it has always been that way with the Minister of Trade and Commerce and those who exercise absolute power.

Mr. TUCKER: Answer my question.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: They resent any criticism and they deny any suggestions or ideas. What I am trying to point out is that the hon. member for Rosthern, who today paid such high tribute to the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, and it deserves it, one year ago was not heard when there was before the house the matter which he today said he agreed with, that the moneys of the farmers should be distributed to them. Last year when that matter was before the House of Commons the hon. member for Rosthern did not give to the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and its recommendations the support he gave to those recommendations today.

Mr. TUCKER: Why do you not answer my question?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: We on this side of the house, without any exception, have asked that the farmer's money should be paid to him. That was the view of all members of the opposition in 1947. The leader of the C.C.F. took that stand, the leader of the Social Credit party took that stand, and their respective parties took that stand, as did the official opposition. Here we are in 1948. It is only a coincidence, perhaps; but, sir, when you have coincidence and coincidence and coincidence it ceases to be coincidence and becomes evidence of conspiracy. This is an endeavour on the part of the government to delude the farmer with regard to the so-called increase of the initial price which he received.

Mr. TUCKER: Are you against the bill?

Mr. HOWE: He is killing off forty minutes, that is all.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I beg your pardon?

Mr. HOWE: I say you are killing off forty minutes.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I am not really concerned with my right hon. friend's interruptions, because they are only indicative of the type of mentality that he developed in wartime and is trying to carry into the days of peace. If you will permit me to do so, Mr. Speaker, I should like to read the new paragraph 2:

2. Section 21 (1) (b) of the present act provides:

"Pay to producers selling and delivering wheat produced in the designated area to the board, at the time of delivery or at any time thereafter as may be agreed upon, a sum certain per bushel basis in store Fort William/Port Arthur or Vancouver to be fixed . . ."

Then the change is "from time to time by regulation of the governor in council in respect of wheat of grade No. 1 Manitoba northern."

What the government is endeavouring to do is to lead the western farmer to believe, now that he is beginning to appreciate the loss he suffered through receiving so much lower a price than that received by the farmers of the United States, that the government is now raising the initial price of the farmer's wheat in those years. What it is doing is taking moneys out of the participation fund, which belong to the farmer, and instead of paying him in bulk, applying it in certain years. The endeavour is to lead the farmer to believe that he is receiving a larger return. He is not receiving a larger return per bushel. All he is receiving is fifteen, twenty or twenty-five cents, whatever the amount is. He receives that, added on to the so-called initial price and deducted from what otherwise he would have received in participation payments. All it amounts to is this—

Mr. HOWE: A subtle argument.

Mr. GARDINER: You mean to say the farmer gets twenty cents and he does not know it?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Twenty cents he would have got whether this legislation passes or not. It is a fine move to give to the farmer what is coming to him. It represents the stand we of the official opposition took last year and particularly the stand taken by my leader, the hon. member for Souris and other members associated with him. The payment per bushel is not an additional amount per bushel payable to the farmer as an initial price. It is, in fact, a pre-distribution out of the participation account. The government knows how much it will pay; $230 million, I believe, is the amount that it now holds to the credit of the Canadian farmer.

Mr. GARDINER: Everyone but the hon. member for Lake Centre always knew those facts.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: It was known last year approximately what it would be. That being the case, what is the idea of waiting until after this bill is through to let the farmers know what they will get in 1945, 1946 and 1947? I can understand the argument that we do not know the amount which will be available in 1948 and 1949 and that some freedom must be given to permit of the fixation of price. That argument does not apply to the fixation of price for 1945, 1946 and 1947.

Mr. GARDINER: Fix it at the same time for 1948 and 1949. It is a five-year price; it is not a three-year price.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: It will be a different price throughout the years; it will be different in 1945 and 1946.

Mr. GARDINER: It is the same every year; the same return every year of the five years by the time it is finished. It is a five-year payment.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Well, then, in my argument I was giving the government the benefit of the doubt. I said there was no reason why they should not carry out their policy in 1948 and 1949.

Mr. GARDINER: You have turned around now.

Mr. HOWE: He has changed his position.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I listen to my right hon. friend. Regardless of what he says I listen, and I do not keep up that continual grumble and growl. I say to him through you, Mr. Speaker, that his conduct is not parliamentary; it is not gentlemanly in parliament.

Mr. HOWE: Why are you worrying about my being a gentleman?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: We on this side of the house want to see payments made to the farmers. We have advocated it. I agree with what the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) said this afternoon regarding conditions in the western provinces and the need by the farmers of the earliest possible distribution. He mentioned the Prairie Farm Assistance Act and how many farmers were in need and required that payment. That is true. In my experience I can say that whenever needy cases have been brought to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture in connection with that matter payments have been made. As regards the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, all over the province there are farmers who year by year had paid their one per cent levy; yet because of the position in which they find themselves, they being in not sufficiently large areas to come within the provisions of the act, they are being denied under the law the right to the prairie assistance payments. I ask the Minister of Agriculture, and I ask for the support of the hon. member for Rosthern in this regard: when amendments are being brought in, why not bring in an amendment to the Prairie Farm Assistance Act that, as far as possible and as far as practicable, will reduce the area within which qualification takes place, and as nearly as possible arrive at an individual basis in connection with the payment of the bonus? I know the difficulties in connection with the individual—

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. GARDINER: The bill is on the order paper.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I want to thank the minister for that, because that is one thing—

Mr. GARDINER: No; the P.F.A. bill itself is on the order paper. I do not think it should be discussed in this debate.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Well, sir—

Mr. HOWE: Anything to take up the forty minutes.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: —is it not strange? The hon. member for Rosthern discussed it this afternoon and it was perfectly all right. Now I am out of order. We in the opposition want to be assured that the wheat board shall operate efficiently, carefully, not niggardly, but economically for the benefit of the farmer which shall assure him the best price, the largest possible return. We say, too, that it should not be used as an instrument of government policy whereby the farmer, in the midst of rising prices, has his price maintained at a level far too low, having regard to all the circumstances.

Mr. ROBERT FAIR (Battle River): I am glad to see that the water glasses have been drained so quickly on the other side of the house, and I hope the temperature has decreased a little on that side because I do not intend to take up very much time. In order that Social Crediters shall not be accused of holding up this legislation, legislation which we have asked for on many occasions during this session, I am going to state now on behalf of this group, that we are supporting this legislation, Bill No. 135. We may perhaps be accused of changing our minds from the stand we took two weeks ago. At that time we did approve the amendment which was moved by the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross) to divide the bill into three sections. We did that for one purpose, and one purpose only, namely, to speed the passage of the legislation.

Perhaps, if the government had been in a real hurry this legislation would have been introduced when we came here early in December. Then we could have dealt with it, instead of some of the other matters dealt with during the two weeks we were here in December; or perhaps we could have taken up some of the time to deal with this bill that we have used up on other matters of less importance since we came here on January 26; or perhaps better still the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) could have gone on the radio again on November 18. We remember very well that on November 17 he went on the radio and assessed or levied taxes on the people of Canada without authority of parliament, and on the next night he might have gone on the radio and told the farmers of the prairie provinces that this amount would be paid to them, and that when parliament met we would pass the necessary legislation. That, however, was not done, and if the suggestion of the hon. member for Souris had been followed out I believe this legislation could have been on the statute books tonight and the western provinces given every opportunity to pass the necessary complementary legislation.

Our big difficulty now is to see that this interim payment is got out without any further delay. We remember that last fall, after the agreement with Britain was signed, in which it was agreed that $2 a bushel would be paid for the 1948 crop, an announcement was made that there would be an additional interim payment. Later on we were told that the payment would run up possibly to thirty cents. Some people had it go as high as forty cents. Under present conditions I believe a payment of forty cents could be made, but up to the present time we have not been told what the payment will be.

I am going to suggest to the government that, in order relieve distress in many parts of the prairie provinces, the farmers who were either hailed out or dried out last year be given their payments first as far as possible and then get the other payments out just as fast as it is possible to do so, because today many farmers in all sections of the prairie provinces are in dire need of this money which they have figured on for many months in order to get their crops in this spring.

Let nobody make the mistake that the farmers are getting money from the treasury of Canada, because this money belongs to the farmers of the prairie provinces, as well as many millions of dollars that are not in the fund at the present time. In many cases farmers are still paying interest on their debts which should have been discharged with these belated payments on their wheat.

When speaking on the 27th of last month the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) mentioned the too high interim payments that were made by the pools back in 1929. At page 1717 of Hansard we find:

> We gave reasons which were referred to this afternoon by the hon. member for Swift Current, without drawing the conclusions which many of us have drawn on previous occasions.
> I asked him whether there had been any pooling of oats and barley since 1932, and I might have asked whether there had been any pooling of wheat since 1932. The only reason why there has been no pooling of oats and barley since 1932 is that the wheat pools prior to 1932 made the mistake of paying too high an initial payment and were not able to pay any participation.

In case that should go out without contradiction, I am quite satisfied that the pools did pay an initial payment which was too high for the conditions that followed afterwards, but while that initial payment was less than 90 cents a bushel, 87½ cents I believe, it must be remembered that the price of wheat was up to $1.50 a bushel during that fall of 1929. Had the grain trade and others interested had their way, the initial payment would have been much higher than 90 cents a bushel. But the officers of the pool, being sound administrators then as they are today, kept the initial price down; and it was the fault of the government in office at that time, in allowing a man-made depression to come about and bring down the price of grain and other farm produce, which made the initial payment too high. So that the government instead of the pool must accept full responsibility for losses which were sustained by the pool at that time. I might say, in connection with that matter, that grain men who had been in the grain business all their lives on the grain exchange went broke on that occasion. They were caught in a trap which they perhaps had helped to set.

Going on a little farther and dealing with prices, the Minister of Agriculture had this to say at page 1720 of Hansard:

> A very considerable part of it will never be paid back.

That is dealing with the money which was lent to various countries in order that they might be able to buy our wheat and other produce. To continue:

> And to the extent to which it is not paid back, in so far as it relates to wheat, the money which was paid to the farmer for the wheat is a charge on all the people of Canada. That money goes to the farmer, and I think it ought to go to him. As we go along with this plan of marketing and make the payments which are provided for in the bill as it is now before the house, we shall be in a position to show in due course that the farmer will have obtained more money, on an average annually, than ever before through his payments based upon $2 for next year, the $1.55 he has obtained from Britain in the three years that have gone by, and based upon the wheat which has been sold outside of Britain at higher prices running up as high as $3.40 a bushel, and out of a negotiated price from Britain in 1949. Out of all these the farmer will have obtained more money for his wheat than he could have obtained under any other system.

I do not think it is necessary for me to read any farther there, because I believe that the minister has tried to draw a red herring across the trail, not only in this instance but when he was dealing with the price of wheat in the United States. In Canada we have an entirely different situation from that which prevails in the United States. What we must compare is the price that we have received on an average on the British contract and the price of class 2 wheat that is sold by the wheat board, which, as the minister has said, on some occasions ran as high as $3.40 a bushel.

Mr. GARDINER: Pure nonsense.

Mr. FAIR: It is a pure loss in dollars and cents to the farmers, regardless of what the Minister of Agriculture may say.

Mr. GARDINER: Pure nonsense.

Mr. FAIR: I do not think there is any mistake about it, and the farmers are fully cognizant of that fact. So that in my opinion, and I have expressed it on many occasions before, the government has made a mistake as far as the farmers are concerned; and I again request the government to make good out of the consolidated revenue fund sufficient money to pay the farmers the difference between the price received from Britain and the world market price or the price of class 2 wheat, I do not care which you call it.

In addition to that, there is the matter of the subsidies borne entirely by the Canadian farmers in order to give the people of Canada cheap bread and also the subsidies that have been borne again by the Canadian farmers when wheat was sold at a controlled price of $1.55 a bushel in all export markets of the world.

We are in favour of coarse grains being marketed through the wheat board and of going just a little bit farther than the bill itself goes. We should like to see rye also included. That may not perhaps suit some of our friends in Winnipeg, but that does not make any difference. They have had their innings and now it is about time that farmers received that to which they are properly entitled.

I stated at the beginning that we would support this legislation. We shall not hold it up, because we believe it is necessary that this bill be passed without further delay so that the provinces may pass the necessary complementary legislation. I am glad to be able to state that the government of Alberta is quite ready to pass the necessary complementary legislation provided that the provinces agree that the interests of the prairie farmers are fully protected; that is to say that, among other things, we do not have a ceiling on the price of our coarse grain, and there are some other conditions which may be named later. The government of Alberta expects to finish its work within the next two weeks. This will mean that they should have from this government some clear-cut indication of what is required of them by way of legislation. It will be found that all possible co-operation will be received from the Alberta government at as early a day as it is made possible for them to give it.

I do not think it is necessary for me to speak longer. I have given the house our stand, and I hope that this legislation will be passed without much further time being taken up in discussion.

Mr. L. A. MUTCH (Winnipeg South): I hope the house will not misunderstand it, Mr. Speaker, if I do not enter into the Saskatchewan election campaign which we have been having most of the afternoon and a good deal of the evening. In the little time that I shall talk, I shall try to substitute common sense for eloquence and invective. Before this bill goes to second reading, I wish to express my view and the view which I conceive to be that of a good many Canadians on part of this bill before we are required to vote on the principle of it.

Before someone suggests to me that there is something unique about a member representing a city constituency, as I do, entering into a discussion of this kind, I should like to say that my own family have been farming the same farm in Manitoba since long before any of the hon. members of either the C.C.F. or the Social Credit party were born. That farm is still being maintained. Consequently, although I for various reasons have not had the physical experience of farming to any extent, I have been closely associated with it. I have spent my life in a province where farming is the main industry. I am one of those who knows what many members of this house sometimes seem to forget, namely that everybody in the Dominion of Canada, whether he or she knows it or not, is in the wheat business.

I should like to say one congratulatory thing to the modern "Saul" of Souris. Somewhere between the time of the by-election in Portage la Prairie and December of last year the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross) must have seen a great light. I am greatly encouraged, in the point of view that I have, to recognize that fact; because it indicates to me that for others, not only on the side of the house toward which I am looking but on the side of the house on which I sit, there is still hope for those who have lost sight of the realities of this discussion in a spate of invective and political adventuring.

I hardly need to say, in view of previous comments of my own in this parliament, that with respect to the pension part of the bill I have no objection. With respect to the payment of these moneys which have accrued to the credit of the farmers who created them I have no objection. My objection stems solely from my conviction that there is something fundamentally wrong and fundamentally dangerous—I almost said something insincere—about the third part of this bill which refers to the bringing of the marketing of coarse grains, oats and barley, under the wheat board. I am not an opponent of the wheat board, but I am an exponent of the freedom of the individual engaged in agriculture, or any other means of earning his living, from what is a sheer monopoly. It is the monopoly aspect of the wheat board to which I object. As a member of this house and as a citizen of Canada I would have no objection to this part of the legislation if there existed in Canada today, as there once did, the opportunity for the farmer to market his grain either through the wheat board or through the trade.

During the time I have been in this house I have listened to a great deal of nonsense with respect to the marketing of wheat through the trade, the free marketing of wheat. Perhaps the silliest of all the arguments I have heard—and most of them were silly—are those based on the oft-repeated suggestion that the system of marketing grain through the exchange and its facilities was a costly thing for the farmers of western Canada. It is useless to establish it, I suppose, because people have said the other thing so often they have come to believe it themselves, but it can be established and indeed has been established over and over again that no other primary product produced in this country—and I place emphasis on those words "in this country"—has ever been handled at such low cost as was the grain on the prairies when it was handled through the facilities of the exchange.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MUTCH: I know hon. members challenge that statement, and I would not be surprised if some of them do not believe it is true, but it has been established over and over again. The trouble is that the mentality of some of those who retain their popularity, not to say their positions, by constant agitation is similar to that of some persons I ran into in connection with the inquiry into the profits from the canteens during the last war. It is well known to people generally that commodities carried in those canteens were handled at a very narrow margin of profit, and when we came across an item of something like a quarter of a million dollars from the sale of Coca Cola there was a howl and a question as to why that commodity should not have been sold to the troops at a price which would not have brought that kind of profit. When we came to examine it, however, we found that the profit was a quarter of a cent a bottle, and we have no coinage in this country as small as that. It was found that the profit of a quarter of a million dollars arose from the fact that a million bottles of Coca Cola had been sold. A good deal of the unthinking criticism of the legitimate profits which were made from marketing through the grain exchange is the result of that same sort of thinking.

Mr. BENTLEY: The hon. member is making assertions. Why does he not support them with figures? He has none?

Mr. MUTCH: Oh, yes, there are figures; but let me remind my hon. friend that, while figures do not lie, very often people who use them do; and I am trying to follow what I think is the proper procedure on second reading of a bill, by dealing with the principle of the bill itself.

Mr. BENTLEY: I was being kind when I said you were making assertions.

Mr. MUTCH: I appreciate the unfailing courtesy of my hon. friend. However, my objection to this legislation is not based primarily on the effect it will have on a specific institution but on the effect I believe it will come to have on the whole political life of this dominion. I am aware, as some other hon. members who have spoken in this debate appear to have been aware, that the bringing into operation of this legislation is another step, perhaps almost the last step, in creating a state marketing monopoly, which to my mind is socialism gone crazy. It means simply the final and perhaps permanent division of the two branches of agriculture in this country, namely the producers on the prairies and the feeders in central Canada and on the Pacific coast.

I have been here long enough, Mr. Speaker, to realize what happens when a government gets into the position of having to give political consideration to decisions which have to be made. I would not be surprised or perhaps very indignant if someone should rise and try to justify the introduction of legislation to the disadvantage of the western farmer and to the advantage of the eastern farmer simply and solely, as far as the party I normally support is concerned, on the basis of giving consideration where consideration is received. But I do not consider that a healthy situation, and for that reason I do not want to see opportunities for that sort of thing multiply.

Politically I am perfectly certain that if we resort to absolute state trading, through a board to handle all grain in the country, we shall not only put the farming community into economic slavery, which is the first tragedy, but make farm prices a political football, the results of which action can be nothing but disastrous for generations to come. This demand for the inclusion of coarse grains under the wheat board is not primarily an attack upon one institution. It is a thoughtful, deliberate attack on the very principle of free enterprise itself. Many of those who attack the marketing of grain through the trade are at the same time the most vocal advocates of free enterprise with respect to other commodities and other businesses. But it does not require a great deal of imagination on the part of any hon. member to realize that all the arguments which can be advanced for the control of cereal grains, because they are foods, can be extended with equal facility to the control of fuel, of shelter and of clothing. In a country with a climate such as we have, even if everyone has enough to eat at a price they can afford to pay, there still remain the twin problems—and not inconsiderable problems at that—of fuel and shelter.

This, then, sir, is a disguised attack on the principle of free enterprise itself. If we can successfully attack free enterprise in its handling of one of the primary products of this country, perhaps its greatest product, it is then but a simple and logical step, and part of the planned procedure, to bring the whole economy of this country under the socialist concept.

So, primarily for the reasons I have stated, without eloquence, as I said at the beginning, on this occasion and on each and every other occasion that presents itself I do not propose, either in this house or out of it, to be a party to any piece of legislation which will give the impression that the elected representatives of our people believe in state control of marketing.

As I have said, I have been here and have listened to these debates now for, I think, fifteen sessions. The volume is building up. I say, as I said in an interjection a little while ago when the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Wright) was speaking, that I question seriously whether the house, or any member of it, has a mandate from his constituency or from the country as a whole to say there is a demand from a majority, or even a considerable minority demand, for the inclusion of coarse grains under the wheat board.

I am perfectly well aware that members on both sides of the house are very glib at quoting officers and officials of various farm organizations throughout the country. But I venture to say, on my responsibility as a member, that, so far as I am concerned, I do not believe that organized farm organizations speak for more than forty per cent of the farmers in any part of this country. And on the average I should think it would be considerably less than that.

I know sections of western Canada where there are farm organizations. Many of these have been little local groups belonging to various farm organizations that have perpetuated themselves, in my memory over a period of ten and fifteen years. These little groups have been in communities of six hundred or seven hundred farmers. They have met every year, and in each year they have passed resolutions in the name of all local farmers. I challenge the members for many of those constituencies or communities to show me twenty per cent of the farmers in their constituencies who know who the officers are.

Generally speaking, when in the House of Commons we want to do something to which there is opposition from farmers we are inclined to say that organization heads are the farm leaders, to claim that some gentleman from the Ottawa valley speaks for the farmers of western Canada. I do not know about other farmers, but I know something of the farmers in western Canada, and in these matters a great many are inarticulate, except at the ballot box.

There is only one more thing I wish to say, and that is this, that if something is wrong in principle, as I can conceive this to be, I do not think it is a defence of that particular wrong principle to say that this government will only enable another government to do something, and to admit, by so evading the responsibility, that there is a possibility that it will not be approved. Nor is it good enough to say the farmers and others in those provinces will have an opportunity, when election day comes along, to express their pleasure or displeasure with the provincial government.

If it is wrong in principle as I conceive it to be, then I do not think it is any better when a provincial and a federal government get together to apply that wrong principle than it is when either of them does it individually.

I could—indeed perhaps I should—detain the house for a little while and make a statement in answer to some of the specific charges which have been levelled, not against the principle of open marketing in the matter of grain, but the childish and often senseless repetition of charges against the Winnipeg grain exchange; not just because it happens to be in Winnipeg, because there are other exchanges. The same kind of people level the same kind of charges wherever free marketing flourishes. But I cannot see that it would do any good to discuss this. When you are facing a hurricane it is of little use to whistle. There is at the present time, I know, a campaign of thoughtless, inspired and, in some instances, malicious misinformation in the name of education going on against the Winnipeg grain exchange.

I think the responsibility to meet with that and to confound it and refute it is largely the responsibility of those who are most affected. I know this, that nothing I can say has not already been brought out over and over again in investigations and royal commissions. There is very little that anyone can say that is not known personally to those who from time to time, and for reasons which one must leave to their own conscience, repeat, in season and out of season, without shadow of justification and without even a sense of responsibility, these attacks on the grain trade; who attack men who, by their efforts, by their skills and the investment of their money, have served the public of western Canada to a degree which is appreciated more than many members of this house seem to realize, by those who have been the beneficiaries of their service. If in the not too distant future the wave or wind of discontent with the kind of tripe which is being levelled against free enterprise, specifically in the grain trade, should blow away from the picture some of those who have been actually carrying on this crusade, tilting at figures which are a figment of their own imagination, then they should not be too much surprised.

Mr. C. C. MILLER (Portage la Prairie): Mr. Speaker, I shall not delay the house long, because there is not much time left in which to delay it. There are, however, some points in connection with the bill about which I should like to speak for a few minutes.

I did speak on the resolution, but since the resolution has passed I have received some additional information which has caused me to make some additional remarks relative to the pension amendment proposed in this bill.

The parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Trade and Commerce has been good enough to give me in advance the answers to a question I put on the order paper in connection with salaries, and other information relevant to the employees of the wheat board. The reason obviously that question was asked was to give some idea of the number of employees and the amount of money they were being paid by way of remuneration, so that we could determine for ourselves and make up our own minds as to whether or not we thought that those employees of the wheat board should be pensioned, or that a pension fund should be provided for them at the expense, to some extent at least, of growers of grain in the western provinces.

The hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross) discussed this matter more or less briefly this afternoon. The first question I asked in my question on the order paper was as to the number of employees, including the members of the Canadian wheat board, as at December 31, 1947. The answer to that question was 676. That 676 included the members of the board. The second question was:

Is the consolidated revenue charged with the payment of salaries or wages of (a) the board; (b) the board's employees?

The answer to that was no. Therefore the salaries or wages of these employees are obviously paid as part of the operating expenses out of the proceeds of the sale of the farmers' grain. I am not taking particular issue with that. There is one small exception to that rule, but it is not important for the purpose of this debate. Then, as the hon. member for Souris stated, there were these various employees receiving these varying amounts of remuneration, beginning at $1,000 per annum. The following figures will show the rates of salaries, and the numbers of employees receiving those salaries:

1,000 to $2,000	388
2,000 to 3,000	122
3,000 to 4,000	26
4,000 to 5,000	6
5,000 to 6,000	7
6,000 to 7,000	2
7,000 to 8,000	7
8,000 to 9,000	2
9,000 to 10,000	1
10,000 to 15,000	11
15,000 and over	1

In addition to that, there were twenty-eight part-time employees at remunerations ranging from $660 to $1,560 per annum.

The hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) did not deal any too clearly with this question of pensions. He gave it his blessing to some extent, but not too definitely or in too clear language. I wonder if the hon. member for Rosthern is prepared to say definitely and without equivocation that he is in favour of the farmers of Saskatchewan, from the drought area if you will, having to subscribe or permitting to be subscribed on their behalf certain moneys into a pension fund to provide pensions for eleven men who are getting from $10,000 to $15,000 a year?

Mr. TUCKER: I am going to vote for the bill.

Mr. MILLER: The hon. member is going to vote for the bill because he dares not vote against it. There is no bill that this government would bring in that the hon. member for Rosthern would vote against.

Mr. TUCKER: They are a pretty good government.

Mr. MILLER: On top of that, the hon. member for Rosthern based a lot of his argument upon what was contained in the brief which was presented by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture to the government and from which he read at some length. I did not hear the hon. member for Rosthern read anything from that brief to the effect that the farmers who belonged to the C.F.A. wanted the wheat board to pay money out of their funds to provide pensions for employees already getting from $10,000 to $15,000 a year. My hearing may be faulty, but I have no recollection of having heard that read from the C.F.A. brief. I doubt if at any time any organization of farmers, including the C.F.A., ever asked the government to bring in an amendment to the act to provide pensions for men already getting from $10,000 to $15,000 a year.

Mr. GARDINER: That is true of all our deputies.

Mr. MILLER: The hon. member for Rosthern skated around that idea. So far as the farmers of western Canada are concerned, he was skating on thin ice. I doubt if the hon. member for Rosthern because of his build, either as a member of this house or as the leader of the Liberal party in Saskatchewan, should go too near thin ice.

Mr. TUCKER: He did not skate around as much as you did in regard to saying in the by-election that you would close the grain exchange when you are saying now you want to leave it open.

Mr. MILLER: The hon. member cannot get me on that. Above all hon. members of this house I have been consistent in my stand, both as to the wheat board and as to the grain exchange. I said it in that famous by-election to which he referred—if it is famous, and I hope it is not infamous—at meetings where there were grain exchange men and at meetings where there were farmers. I can say what I believe on that score at any time and at any place without having to change face.

Mr. HOWE: What did you say?

Mr. SINNOTT: Tell us what you said?

Mr. MILLER: I know the hon. member for Springfield is not really worrying about any answer I might make that might be taken down in evidence and used against me in my trial at the next election. I know he is not worrying about anything like that. I know he is sincere in wanting to know how I stand. I imagine how I stand would make an awful lot of difference to the way in which the hon. member for Springfield will vote on this amendment.

Mr. SINNOTT: You do not answer the question.

Mr. MILLER: There has been a lot of talk here about delay.

Mr. SINNOTT: You are doing considerable skating yourself.

Mr. MILLER: Yes, I played hockey once.

Mr. TUCKER: You are a better skater than I.

Mr. MILLER: If I were as big as the hon. member for Rosthern I would still be playing hockey.

Mr. SINNOTT: You are almost as good as Barbara Ann.

Mr. BENTLEY: Neither one of you are easier to look at.

Mr. MILLER: Let me refer to this question of delay which has been referred to so often today, particularly by the hon. member for Rosthern. No matter how loudly the hon. member for Rosthern may talk, there can be no accusation that hon. members on this side of the house are responsible in any way for that delay. The cure for the delay is simple. All that the government had to do was to bring in a bill at the outset providing for the payment of these funds and the funds would have been paid out long before this. But no, they did not bring in a bill providing solely for that. If they had had any foresight at all they must have known that that would have met with the unanimous approval of this house. But no, they mixed it up with all kinds of other things. If they did not know that the hon. members of this house would be opposed to some parts of this bill, then they were entirely lacking in foresight. They cannot by reason of that lack of foresight blame us or any other party on this side of the house for any delay.

Mr. KNOWLES: Question.

Mr. MILLER: What question? I want to say something about the amendments relative to coarse grains. As far as I can understand, we have been arguing all day as if the issue were just the simple one of whether coarse grains were to be under the wheat board or whether they were not. I submit that that is not the issue before the house. There is nothing in this amendment to warrant us in assuming for one minute that some people on one side are in favour of putting coarse grains under the supervision of the wheat board and that other people in other parts of the house are opposed to that principle.

I suggest that the government do not know themselves whether they intend to have the wheat board handle coarse grains this year, next year or ten years from now. No member of the government can rise in his place and say that, even if they had all the enabling legislation in the world, they would put coarse grains under the jurisdiction of the wheat board tomorrow.

Mr. KNOWLES: What would you do?

Mr. SINNOTT: The machinery is all set up.

Mr. MILLER: I suggest that they do not believe they will ever have to face that issue. I submit that the government are playing both ends against the middle on this question. There is not a law officer or a minister of the crown who can tell us, even if the proposed amendment were put into effect, whether the putting of coarse grains under the jurisdiction of the wheat board is or is not constitutional. They have not approached it in a manner that would lead us to believe in confidence that the government ever had or ever will have any intention of putting coarse grains under the jurisdiction of that board. I imagine that at this day and at this sitting the government do not themselves know that they will bring coarse grains under the operation of the wheat board act.

But suppose the government are acting in the best of faith. Suppose they are genuinely anxious to have coarse grains put under the jurisdiction of the wheat board, maybe not this year but perhaps next year. Let me answer some of the arguments of the hon. member for Rosthern with regard to delay. There is not a single, solitary cabinet minister who would stand in his place for one minute and try to convince this house that he believed that, no matter what the house does with these amendments, they could by any possible stretch of the imagination get the legislation through the various legislatures of this dominion in time to put this in operation this year.

Mr. TUCKER: Why not give them a chance?

Mr. MILLER: It is all right to give them a chance, but the hon. member for Rosthern today accused hon. members on this side of delaying it until the legislatures would be no longer sitting. If the government were in earnest and really wanted to get this legislation through, I know the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) is rather efficient in getting done what he really desires to have done, and I would wager that he would have had this all lined up last summer. He would have known exactly whether it was constitutional or not. He would have had conferences with the various legislatures. The various ministers of agriculture were here last December. Was there any talk of enabling legislation at that time? If so, why is the premier of Saskatchewan now writing to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) to find out what kind of enabling legislation is required by this government from the provinces?

Are the ministers of the crown prepared to tell us tonight whether they do or do not require enabling legislation from the provinces of Quebec and Ontario? The Minister of Trade and Commerce suggested that it might possibly be the situation that they might have to get enabling legislation not merely from the western provincial legislatures but also from the legislatures of the east where the grain would be sold. I suggest that the Minister of Trade and Commerce tonight does not know whether he has to get enabling legislation from the provinces of Ontario and Quebec or perhaps even from the maritime provinces before any such coarse grains can be brought under the operation of the wheat board act.

I believe that all that is going on here now is a little by-play, a little story to make those who want coarse grains under the operation of the wheat board believe that this government is doing all it can to that end, while at the same time it is in a position to say to those who are opposed to that proceeding, "Well, we have not done anything about it, have we?"

They are getting themselves into the glorious position of being able to play both ends against the middle. We have a wheat board. One of my colleagues made the suggestion that the Minister of Trade and Commerce dominates the wheat policy of the country and, in effect, actually runs the board. Nevertheless, both the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Agriculture do, at least on occasion, call in members of that board and members of their advisory committee to talk these matters over and perhaps advise the ministry on the course of action. I do not say that the ministry always take their advice, or are bound to take their advice, but it would be interesting to know whether that advisory board, or council, or whatever it is, or the wheat board, have ever advised the Minister of Agriculture or the Minister of Trade and Commerce that the wheat board wanted to handle coarse grains.

Mr. KNOWLES: What would you advise?

Mr. MILLER: I am not in the position of advising. It may not be long, but not yet. When, however, that time comes—

Mr. HOWE: You will be out of the house, probably.

Mr. MILLER: I would not wonder; but when that time comes, when we are in the position of advising, we shall never come into the House of Commons with a half-baked measure such as has been brought before us and which we are asked to accept now.

Mr. KNOWLES: You will probably do it by order in council.

Mr. MILLER: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is very good at jibing in on these things and I suppose that is fair enough, because I have been doing it to him.

Mr. KNOWLES: I want to find out where you stand on the question.

Mr. MILLER: When the time comes that there is a question I will vote. I never hide under a bushel.

Mr. TUCKER: Why don't you let us vote, then?

Mr. MILLER: The trouble with the hon. member for Rosthern is that he has been standing up and shouting and yelling in this house so long that he thinks, when he has made the welkin ring and this hall reverberate, all wisdom has been given the house and no one else has anything left to say. I say it to you, Mr. Speaker, that if any member of this cabinet, responsible for carrying this legislation into effect, were sincere in his purpose, in wanting to have coarse grains put under the operation of the board, the logical and natural thing to do, as the hon. member for Melfort said, was to have called the representatives of the provinces together long before this date and have the matter put into some sort of shape so that they could come here and tell us whether it was constitutional.

Mr. GARDINER: Might I answer the suggestion made to me a moment ago? The question was discussed last December at the dominion-provincial conference. It was discussed at the national meeting of the Canadian federation and was reported in the press. If my hon. friend followed these things he would know it was discussed.

Mr. MILLER: I know it was discussed.

Mr. TUCKER: Just ten minutes to go.

Mr. MILLER: I want to revert to another matter now.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Mr. MILLER: This is not bad initiation; I am rather enjoying it. I want to turn now to one other angle which perhaps relates at least remotely to the amendment we have before the house, and I wish to comment on the almost unique argument made in this house not so long ago by the Minister of Agriculture. I know we have been hammering away on this side of the house against the government, urging that farmers should not be asked to carry the whole load and bear the whole of what we claim to have been lost in connection with the sale under the British agreement. For the first time in my recollection, the Minister of Agriculture, not many days ago, advanced what I would call a unique argument. He said the loans would not be paid anyway—

Mr. GARDINER: A considerable part of it.

Mr. MILLER: —and therefore the farmer was not carying the load; that part of it would be carried by the general taxpayer of the country.

Mr. GARDINER: I made the same statement in the discussion of this same bill a year ago.

Mr. MILLER: Well, the Minister of Agriculture used to get up and make a speech almost every time we turned around last year, and he will forgive me if I do not remember every speech that he has made. Surely the minister will admit that the argument was unique, if he will not admit that this is the first time he has made it. I hope he will admit that it is unique. First of all, the Minister of Finance does not agree with the Minister of Agriculture. He says that, except for setting up a reserve to the extent of $25,000,000 a year, to take care of bad loans, the money will be got back. The former minister of trade and commerce, now the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. MacKinnon), used to gloat over his tremendous exports, and when he "blew" about exports we presumed that he was gloating about exports he was getting money for. It does not take a very wise man to figure that if you have ten, or one hundred, or six hundred million bushels of wheat, and you wish to have a big export trade, provided that you are ready to give it away, you can mighty soon do a big business. I could do the same thing in the automobile business if I had a bunch of automobiles and wanted to give them away; I could have a tremendous turnover. That is the position the minister is getting into.

Mr. MITCHELL: Are you objecting to coming to the assistance of the British people?

Mr. HOWE: He will not answer that.

Mr. MILLER: When a minister asks that question of a member I submit in all fairness that the implication is not a very good one.

Mr. MITCHELL: You brought it up.

Mr. MILLER: Would the minister suggest for a moment that I am not in favour of giving aid to the British?

Mr. MITCHELL: Why raise the question?

Mr. MILLER: That is not the argument at all. I have made myself clear on the record many times—

Mr. SINNOTT: You cannot skate around that one.

Mr. MILLER: I often wonder, when the hon. member for Springfield interjects such remarks, how, before he was elected in 1945, this house ever got along without his interjected effervescent wisdom.

Mr. SINNOTT: It had effect anyway.

Mr. MILLER: Surely I can draw this conclusion, from what the Minister of Agriculture said, which he now says he said twice, namely, that everybody has to pay on this wheat because they will have to pay the money that the British will not pay back. If that is his premise, then I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that at long last he has admitted the argument that we have been making here, that there is discrimination against the farmer and that the farmer is carrying an unfair portion of this load.

May I refer to coarse grains again? If the minister who is charged with the progress of this bill through the House of Commons is in earnest—he is a man of honour—and will rise in his place in this house and tell us without equivocation, tell us beyond question that he will see that an order in council is passed if the necessary enabling legislation is brought in; if he will rise in his place and tell us deliberately in no uncertain terms what provinces he thinks he must have enabling legislation from; if he will tell us when he expects to have enabling legislation; if he will tell us at least how long he expects it will take them to pass that enabling legislation, then we shall have a lot more to go on than we now have.

Mr. KNOWLES: We know where you stand.

Mr. HOWE: If you sit down I might tell you.

Mr. MILLER: I shall give you the chance if you will tell me, but I do not surrender my place; I will let you answer the question.

Mr. HOWE: If I speak now I will close the debate, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MILLER: The minister says he will answer my question and I have given him the chance. He would not be closing the debate.

Mr. HOWE: I would be.

Mr. MILLER: The minister did not start it and I do not think he will close it.

Mr. HOWE: I will close it.

Mr. MILLER: If we pass this bill, undoubtedly as the years go by, as they will, as the house meets from year to year, as it will, we shall have to listen endlessly in this House of Commons, unless we have an election in the meantime, to the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Agriculture from time to time answer my hon. friends to the left and try to explain to them, if they can, why they have not passed an order in council putting coarse grains under the operation or supervision of the wheat board, and I shall prophesy—

Mr. TUCKER: Why not put them in that position?

Mr. MILLER: I shall prophesy, again, Mr. Speaker, that, as time goes on, another excuse will be given. I shall give you the excuse in advance so that it will be on Hansard. The excuse will be, well, we have done all we could; we passed the bill. We took power by order in council and we got an enabling bill from Saskatchewan and Manitoba and from some of the other other provinces; but we have not yet been able to complete our negotiations with the two provinces of Ontario and Quebec and we have not made up our minds yet whether we have to get enabling legislation from New Brunswick and perhaps British Columbia because they feed chickens, and therefore we do not know exactly where we are. That will go on and on.

Mr. KNOWLES: On and on.

Mr. MILLER: If I did not go on and on it would be eleven o'clock.

Mr. KNOWLES: Question.

Mr. HOWE: Question.

Mr. MILLER: I want to deal with one other amendment that is mentioned in the bill.

Mr. MacINNIS: You will hardly have time.

Mr. MILLER: I want to speak of one other amendment that is in the proposed bill—

Mr. TUCKER: Three minutes to go.

Mr. MILLER: I refer to the amendment relating to—

Mr. KNOWLES: I rise to a point of order. It is out of order on second reading of a bill to deal with sections of a bill.

Mr. GRAYDON: An echo of the Liberal party.

Mr. MILLER: I had not got that far. I will speak of it in general terms. I think the objection was well taken, Mr. Speaker. It is an amendment that has been entirely disregarded in this house, or at least it has been too lightly regarded. There has been too little explanation in respect of it. The amendment relates to the control of the transportation of wheat products from one province to another, I presume. The only comment I heard on that amendment in the house was made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I think he referred to flour. If coarse grains come under the operation of the wheat board I presume that the amendment which has been proposed is wide enough to cover all products of oats and barley, and I suppose there will be a bit of a problem to a Scotsman like myself on the question of transporting from one province to another oatmeal to make porridge.

When the minister does close the debate I wonder if he would refer to that. It may not be an important matter, but perhaps it should be in here so that we do not overlook anything. When the minister closes the debate he should give us a list of the products that he thinks will be covered by the amendment which relates to wheat products and the other possible oat and barley products. I move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Mr. Miller the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. ST. LAURENT: On Monday we should like to take up, first, the resolution standing in the name of the Minister of Finance, which is No. 15 on today's order paper. It is one that I am told is not controversial. It has to do with the refunding of certain debentures of the New Westminster harbour commission, and it is something which has to be done before the end of the fiscal year. It is hoped that it may take only a very few minutes to introduce the bill. Hon. members will probably wish to have the terms of the bill for the purpose of any debate, should any debate be desired.

Then the Minister of Justice will proceed with second reading of the bill to provide that certain orders and regulations of the governor in council be extended for a limited period. If that is disposed of, the Minister of Agriculture will propose the resolution which is No. 8 on the order paper of today, to bring in a measure to amend the Agricultural Products Act.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, March 15, 1948

The house met at three o'clock.

PRIVILEGE

MR. FERGUSON—PROVINCIALLY OWNED INSURANCE COMPANIES

Mr. J. H. FERGUSON (Simcoe North): I rise to a question of privilege. On Saturday the Montreal Gazette published an article stating that J. H. Ferguson, Progressive Conservative member for North Simcoe, agreed with Mr. Coldwell, leader of the C.C.F. party, when a bill was introduced to authorize an insurance company to be established in the province of Manitoba. Many friends of mine in Montreal, Toronto and Ottawa have brought this to my attention. So that there may not be the slightest misunderstanding I want to make the statement that I did not agree in any way with the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) with respect to the successful operation of the insurance company owned by the province of Saskatchewan. I do not believe it can possibly operate as economically and successfully as the stock companies of England, the United States and Canada. I wish the Canadian Press and the C.B.C. would make this correction, and say that Julian Ferguson of North Simcoe does not agree with the operation of an insurance company by any provincial government.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SUGGESTED ARRANGEMENT AS TO LENGTH OF EASTER RECESS

On the order, "Government notices of motion":

That when this house adjourns on Wednesday, March 24th instant, it stand adjourned until Tuesday, the 30th instant.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the house, and without moving it at the present time, I should like to say a word on this resolution which has reference to the Easter adjournment.

This morning I had the privilege of meeting with the leaders of the three parties opposite. We discussed together what seemed to be most advisable with regard to the Easter recess. For reasons I need not enumerate at the present time, we were in agreement that what has been the customary length of adjournment in recent years might with advantage be followed again this year. This means a longer rather than a shorter adjournment.

As it now stands the notice of motion is that when this house adjourns on Wednesday, March 24 instant, it stand adjourned until Tuesday the 30th instant. It was thought—and later in the week I may make a formal motion to that effect—that it would be best to change "Tuesday the 30th" to "Monday April 5".

As to whether we shall adjourn on Wednesday night, the 24th, will depend upon the progress which may be made between now and the end of the present week. If it appears we have not made the progress which I believe will be necessary to make an adjournment on Wednesday advisable, I shall suggest that we sit on the Wednesday night and also on the following Thursday, to adjourn on the night of Thursday the 25th. However if the house can get through what seems to be imperative by the close of Wednesday afternoon, I shall then make a motion to adjourn on the afternoon of Wednesday, the 24th, until Monday April 5th.

Mr. BENTLEY: Has the government given consideration to sitting on Wednesday night of this week and on Saturday—and if necessary, some mornings—in order to make the progress desired?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The government has not given consideration to any of the points my hon. friend has mentioned.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I should like to ask a question of the Prime Minister in this connection, in order to avoid moving an amendment to the proposed motion. Shall we be provided with air service to the west?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I shall have to wait until later to answer that question.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER MR. SPEAKER'S REPORT ON PROCEDURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GORDON GRAYDON (Peel): May I ask Your Honour a question with respect to the house rules committee which was set up some three weeks ago? I know there were very good reasons which Your Honour advanced previously why this committee could not be called earlier, but I wonder if Your Honour could give the house some idea when the first meeting of this committee will be held.

Mr. SPEAKER: It was my intention to call the committee right after the Easter recess. I could do it before, but I thought that would be better.

Mr. GRAYDON: May I make a suggestion? Perhaps we could have an organization meeting. I realize it is not a large committee but there may be some things to which we would wish to give some thought and consideration over the recess. Perhaps it would facilitate matters if a meeting were called prior to that time.

HONG KONG

REFERENCE TO PRESS REPORT OF STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF JUSTICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called I should like to ask a question of the Prime Minister. I have not given notice of it, but I do not ask him to answer immediately. I would appreciate it however if he would give consideration to it and answer it later.

My question arises from a report which I find in the Montreal Gazette and which, I understand, has been published in a good many newspapers, respecting a statement yesterday by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley).

In view of the statement made by the Minister of Justice and in view of the controversy as to the interpretation of the evidence in the Hong Kong report, will the government give consideration to either printing or mimeographing further copies of that evidence? It appears there is only one copy, and not one person in ten thousand will see that document unless we can find a way of making it available to more people. Will the government give consideration to that suggestion, with a view to making more copies of the evidence available if practicable?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I can answer that question at once. The government had thought that the tabling of the evidence was sufficient, and it is not the intention to have further copies printed. If the matter were to be considered further it would have to go before the joint committee of both houses on printing, and the question considered there as to whether it is advisable that the evidence should be among documents to be ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRACKEN: Would the Prime Minister object to the committee considering it?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, I have no objection.

Mr. GORDON GRAYDON (Peel): In view of the statement given by the Minister of Justice yesterday to the press in which he criticized an editorial in the Globe and Mail of the day before, which editorial had criticized the former Chief Justice of Canada and his findings, will the minister and the government consider the matter of abandoning in future the practice of appointing to political inquiries men from high positions in the judiciary?

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, my views have been expressed on that subject in the house before. There are occasions when I think it is appropriate to appoint judges of high character and calibre to conduct inquiries. This was one of those occasions. My statement yesterday merely pointed out the ridiculousness of the editor of a newspaper, after having had the opportunity of seeing about 2,300 pages of evidence for only twenty-four hours, charging the Chief Justice of Canada with giving a false report.

Mr. GRAYDON: May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Justice?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. GRAYDON: I will be back.

[Later:]

Mr. GRAYDON: I desire to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Justice.

In reference to the case in respect to which he gave his statement to the press concerning the former chief justice, is the minister not aware that on that occasion the former chief justice was sitting, not as an ordinary judge on the bench, but as a commissioner? No appeal from his decision is possible, except to the public.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. GRAYDON: For that reason—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. GRAYDON: —we should not be denied the right—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member for Peel should resume his seat when the Speaker rises.

Mr. GRAYDON: I did not see you, Mr. Speaker. I could not hear you for the noise in the chamber.

RADIO BROADCASTING

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of National Revenue if it is the intention this year to set up the committee on radio broadcasting?

Hon. J. J. McCANN (Minister of National Revenue): The matter has not yet been given consideration, but I take it that if there is any request to set up the committee on radio broadcasting it will be set up.

GRASSHOPPERS

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE TO COMBAT MENACE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. B. McKAY (Weyburn): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Agriculture. What assistance is the dominion government prepared to give farmers in Saskatchewan in 1948 to combat a threatened widespread attack by grasshoppers as reported by the Dominion Department of Agriculture?

Right Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): The practice in the past in connection with combatting grasshoppers has been for the dominion government to supply all the technical services it possibly can in connection with that matter. But the financing has always been done by the provinces.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ALLEGED COMMUNIST ACTIVITY AMONG CANADIAN SEAMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. DICKEY (Halifax): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Labour in connection with one I asked him last Thursday. Has the minister any further information with respect to labour troubles among the Canadian merchant marine?

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member for Halifax may I say that this morning I did receive a wire from Mr. T. Gerald McManus, chairman of the marine council of the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada, in which he suggested arbitration to settle the dispute. I replied to him as follows:

Re your telegram of fourteenth, understand it to contain proposal which your council has decided to place before three unions of officer personnel now on strike. If unions concerned accept this proposal of your council and I am advised officially to that effect by the responsible officers of each union I shall be glad to take the matter up with representatives of ship owners. If then the ship owners accept the proposal but fail to agree with unions on the personnel of the arbitration committee I shall be glad to assist the parties in making the selection.

This is signed by myself.

NEGOTIATION BY SHIP OWNERS WITH COMMUNIST UNION MEMBERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. FERGUSON (Simcoe North): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour if it is necessary for ship owners to negotiate with union representatives that have been nominated by avowed communists.

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): I do not care whether they are ship owners or trade unions, they should abide by the law.

Mr. FERGUSON: Or communists.

BUTTER

QUESTION AS TO STEPS TO RELIEVE SHORTAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JAMES SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. What steps, if any, is the government taking to relieve the shortage of butter in Canada today?

Right Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): It has been found in Canada that in the four months of winter farmers are producing only about one-half of the butter consumed in those four months. In the four months of midsummer the same farmers are producing twice as much butter as can be consumed in this country during those months. During two months in the spring and two months in the fall of the year the farmers produce about the same amount of butter as is consumed. If there is not enough butter now to spread around all over Canada, there certainly will be very shortly when we get into the month of April and the cows are out on the grass.

REFRIGERATOR CARS

ON TRACK AT BORDEN BECAUSE OF SHORTAGE OF LOCOMOTIVES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. V. GRANT (Kings): Before the orders of the day are proceeded with I should like to call the attention of the Minister of Transport to a telegram which I received today from Prince Edward Island to the effect that 130 empty reefer cars are on track at Borden but cannot be moved because of a shortage of locomotives. I should like to know if the minister has received similar advice.

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport): I have not received a similar telegram but I shall be glad to take note of the hon. gentleman's question and see what can be done to assist in the matter.

INCOME TAX

FARMERS—NET WORTH PORTION OF RETURN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. C. MILLER (Portage la Prairie): Before the orders of the day are called I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the protests of farm organizations and also of members of this house will the minister give consideration to issuing a directive cancelling the necessity of farmers completing the net worth portion of the income tax return?

Hon. J. J. McCANN (Minister of National Revenue): In reply to the hon. gentleman's question may I say that the matter is receiving consideration and a statement will be made within a few days.

APPLICATION OF WHEAT PARTICIPATION PAYMENTS AND REFUNDABLE PORTION TO ARREARS OF TAX

Mr. H. R. ARGUE (Wood Mountain): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue, notice of which I have sent him. Is it the intention of the government to withhold wheat participation payments from the farmers because of income tax liability?

Hon. J. J. McCANN (Minister of National Revenue): I acknowledge receipt of the hon. gentleman's question and in answer I may say that officers of the taxation division have written to farmers who are indebted to the crown for income tax purposes to get in touch with the wheat board and request that the wheat board withhold deductions from their participation certificates for their income tax indebtedness. No blanket authority has ever been sought to withhold payment of the participation certificates. It is entirely optional with the farmer who is indebted to the crown to give an order to the wheat board for that payment.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Will that be done for other people in connection with the refundable portion of the income tax which was paid by taxpayers several years ago?

Mr. McCANN: It has already been decided that the refundable portion of the income tax is to be used to offset income tax now due to the crown.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue arising out of his answer given a moment ago. In view of the fact that the refundable portion of the income tax is to be used to offset arrears of income tax, will the Department of National Revenue make the necessary adjustments in interest, either reduce the interest on arrears from eight to two per cent or increase the interest on the refundable portion from two to eight per cent?

Mr. McCANN: That is not a matter within the jurisdiction of the officers of the crown; it is fixed by statute. When it is changed by statute in this house our administrative officers will be glad to carry it out.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

RECEPTION BY COMMITTEE OF DELEGATION FROM ALL VETERANS ASSOCIATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. MILTON F. GREGG (Minister of Veterans Affairs): On behalf of the chairman of the select committee on veterans affairs I should like to report to the house that today, I think for the first time in the history of the house, that committee has had the pleasure of receiving a delegation representing all veterans associations in Canada, including the Canadian Legion of the British empire service league and the National Council of Veterans Associations, which includes the Canadian Corps Association, the Sir Arthur Pearson Association of War Blinded, the Canadian Paraplegic Association, the Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans in Canada, the War Amputations of Canada, and the Canadian Pensioners' Association of the Great Wars. I should like to express our pleasure at having these representatives present here, some of whom are in wheel chairs in the gallery and others on the floor of the house beyond the bar of the house.

Mr. A. J. BROOKS (Royal): If I am in order, I should like to second what has been said by the minister and express the appreciation, I am sure, of all members of the opposition as well as those on the government side, at having these men present here today.

Mr. T. J. BENTLEY (Swift Current): Hon. members in this corner of the chamber are in entire agreement with what has been said by the minister and the hon. member for Royal.

HARBOUR COMMISSIONS

NEW WESTMINSTER—REFUNDING OF DEBENTURES, GUARANTEE OF LOANS AND REDEMPTION OF SECURITIES

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (for the Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to present a bill to provide for the refunding of certain debentures of the New Westminster harbour commission; the government guarantee of substituted securities therefor, and the making of loans out of the consolidated revenue fund to redeem securities that may be refunded.

Mr. FULTON: Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair I should like to ask if the minister will be prepared to make a statement in the committee stage.

Mr. R. W. MAYHEW (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I could make a short statement.

The bill to be based on this resolution provides for the refunding of a debenture issue of the New Westminster harbour commission which matures on April 1, 1948, the total amount being $700,000. The coupon interest rate is 4¾ per cent, and the securities are payable at the option of the holder in United States or in Canadian dollars. I should like to get this resolution through and have the bill read the first time. I hope that any discussion will be held over until the bill is before the house.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Mayhew thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 148, respecting the New Westminster harbour commissioners and to provide for the refunding of maturing obligations.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

TRANSITIONAL MEASURES ACT, 1947

CONTINUATION OF CERTAIN ORDERS AND REGULATIONS

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. 136, to amend the Continuation of Transitional Measures Act, 1947.

Mr. BRACKEN: Are we not to have a statement from the minister?

Mr. ILSLEY: Mr. Speaker, the bill before the house, the second reading of which I am moving, consists of one section only, as hon. members will have noted. The present act, the Continuation of Transitional Measures Act, 1947, is being amended in such a way that it will expire not on the 31st day of March, 1948, but on the sixtieth day after parliament first meets during the year 1949 or on the 31st day of March, 1949, whichever date is the earlier. The proviso contained in the act is to be continued, namely:

Provided that, if at any time while this act is in force, addresses are presented to the Governor General by the Senate and House of Commons respectively, praying that this act should be continued in force for a further period, not in any case exceeding one year, from the time at which it would otherwise expire and the governor in council so orders, this act shall continue in force for that further period.

It is not my intention to make anything but a brief explanation of the bill, because it is self-explanatory, nor is it my intention to make any extended argument for its necessity, because it is generally recognized I think by members of the house that the government's decontrol policy has not reached the stage at which all controls can be abandoned now or at the end of the fiscal year.

The terms of the extension are not the same as the terms of the act which provided for expiration. The present act provided for its expiration at the end of December provided that parliament sat in either November or December and failed to make any provision for its continuation. The result of that was that we spent six or seven days, if I remember correctly, in dealing with the act when we met in December last, and not to very much purpose because the act is up again now and two debates have been rendered necessary on the act within the space of two or three months. It is our hope that the present arrangement will appeal to members of the house and that instead of the act expiring on December 31 next if parliament meets in November or December next, it will be regarded as satisfactory if it expires at the end of sixty days after parliament meets in 1949, but in any event not later than March 31, 1949.

On Friday afternoon I placed on Hansard a list of the orders in council still extant. A large measure of progress was attained in the year 1947 in the revocation of orders in council and certain sections of orders in council which were appended to the act of last year, and I expect that in the months to come it will be possible to get rid of other orders in council and perhaps some sections of certain orders in council. Some orders in council now in force will manifestly remain in force for only a short time until legislation now before the house is approved by parliament.

I would hope that there would not be too much disposition on the part of the house to oppose this measure. When we get into committee of the whole the ministers who are acquainted with the existing orders in council which they are administering will be prepared to answer questions about them, which I submit is the proper stage at which to have those orders explained rather than at this stage. We are making progress, but it is manifestly impossible to contemplate the situation which would arise if the act itself were allowed to expire on March 31, 1948. Certain controls by common consent have to be extended beyond that time.

The other day the hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) asked me some questions about reductions in the staffs administering these control orders. I have gathered together some figures, but I should not like to mar these brief remarks while you are in the chair, sir, by putting the figures on Hansard. I can give them to the committee when we are in committee.

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): The minister has suggested that the details of our discussion be postponed until the committee stage is reached. I rise not to make any extended remarks but to state briefly our position with respect to this measure.

[Mr. Ilsley.]

This is a bill to amend the Continuation of Transitional Measures Act, 1947. As the minister has explained, the existing measure expires on March 31. The amendment before us would extend it for approximately a year in an abbreviated form. The existing act includes some fifty orders in council. While the amendment before us consists of but one section it provides for continuing in existence some twenty-seven orders in council, partly or wholly.

The principle of this measure, Mr. Speaker, has been before us on five different occasions. We have debated it more or less fully, sometimes very fully, sometimes not so fully, five different times since it was first introduced in December, 1945. The first National Emergency Transitional Powers Act was passed in December, 1945, to come into effect on January 1, 1946. The second act was to amend the first. It was passed in August, 1946, to continue to March 31, 1947. The third time it came before us was in the form of an address to His Excellency on March 18, 1947, to continue the measure in effect until the middle of May, 1947; and the fourth time was an act passed on the 14th of May, 1947 to further the extension of the measure until December 31, 1947. In December last year another address was made to His Excellency asking that the measure be continued until March 31 of this year. Now we have a bill to extend for another year the operation of the powers granted under the original act.

The measure has been debated so much that I think everybody knows where everybody else stands on the general principle of placing economic controls in the hands of the government at a time when essential parts of the control mechanism have been abandoned and at a time when even the government itself has no intention of restoring these parts of the original controls scheme. Nevertheless the government now seeks the continuance of powers contained in some twenty-seven of these orders in council. These powers, and others like them, it has had for over two years, and in our judgment there is very little to see by way of results from its use of these powers. Wage controls have gone; price controls have largely gone; the cost of living has had an unprecedented increase and inflation still continues on a widely increasing scale.

I had handed to me just a few moments ago the controls that still exist. They are relatively few in number, and are as follows: residential rents—with which continuation I think nearly everybody in this house agrees, though possibly in a modified form—sugar, oils and fats, soap, primary iron and steel and non-ferrous metals. Since October 17 of last year a few controls have been reimposed, namely, those on butter, certain citrus fruits, carrots, cabbages, grapes and certain canned fruit juices and certain canned vegetables, and the government is reported to have in mind the imposition of certain controls on the price of meat. Until recent months there have been hundreds of these controls in effect. In substance these few are the ones remaining.

As I have said, the government now asks for the continuation not of the powers under fifty orders in council but of the powers under twenty-seven. With certain of these powers nearly everyone in the house is in agreement, namely, residential rental controls. To some others many are still opposed. Under these circumstances, in view of the fact that we have debated the principle of this measure and the details of it five times prior to this date, personally I do not see any purpose in re-debating it now for the sixth time. I suggest that we get this measure to the committee as soon as possible and there examine each of these twenty-seven orders that the government seeks to continue, and call upon each minister to justify, in so far as he can, the continuation of each of them.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. STANLEY KNOWLES (Winnipeg North Centre): Before Your Honour accepts the motion that Mr. Speaker leave the chair and the house go into committee of the whole on Bill No. 136, I should like to propose a motion of instruction to the committee. The procedure I wish to follow is identically the same as that which the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) told us the other day it was his intention to follow with respect to Bill No. 135. He indicated at that time that after second reading of the bill had been passed he would move an instruction to the committee that they have power to do so and so with that bill. It is my intention at this identical stage to move as an instruction that the committee of the whole have power to carry out a certain procedure with respect to Bill No. 136 which is now before us. I do this, Mr. Speaker, under the authority of citation 407 of Beauchesne, third edition, which reads as follows:

> An instruction is a motion empowering a committee to do something which it could not otherwise do, or to direct it to do something which it might otherwise not do. It directs the order and course of the committee's proceedings and extends or restricts the order of reference according to the discretion of the house.

Citation 410 indicates when and where such a motion as I am about to make is in order. It reads:

> An instruction to a committee of the whole is a motion which ought to have the right of way on the question that the Speaker do leave the Chair.

I take it that it was on the authority of that citation that the Minister of Trade and Commerce outlined his proposed procedure the other day. It is on the same basis that I now rise, Mr. Speaker. I think it is only fair I should not go any farther without indicating the nature of the instruction which I wish to move. I shall move it at this time, seconded by my colleague, the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Nicholson):

> That it be an instruction to the committee of the whole that they have power to amend Bill 136 by inserting therein the following section:
> 2. Section four of the said act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:
> "4. The governor in council may revoke in whole or in part any order or regulation continued in force by or made under this act, provided that notwithstanding anything in this section no provision of any order or regulation of the governor in council specified in the part of the schedule to this act entitled 'Wartime Prices and Trade Board' shall be revoked by the governor in council unless addresses have been presented to the governor general by the Senate and House of Commons praying that such provision be revoked."

The Minister of Justice will recognize immediately that this is a point we raised last year when we were in committee on the original bill which was then before us. At that time, since we had the bill before us, it was competent in committee of the whole to move an amendment to section 4. Section 4 was, as I say, at that time before the committee of the whole. This year however we have before us, as the Minister of Justice has just indicated, a very simple bill with only one section, and it could be argued that that bill will bring before the committee of the whole only section 7 of the original act. Therefore if in the committee of the whole I were to rise and attempt to move an amendment to section 4 of the original act, it is altogether likely I would be told that section 4 is not before us, and therefore I would not be able to move an amendment to it.

That is my reason for moving that the house now pass this instruction to the committee, giving the committee the authority to take up section 4 and amend it by inserting another section in the bill now before the house.

I draw to the attention of the minister the fact that last year when I proposed this matter I did so on April 17, suggesting a wording which I felt met my point. The minister, although he did not agree with my motion, treated it with respect and asked that the matter stand, and the next day he suggested an alternative wording which is to be found at page 2181 of Hansard of April 18, 1947. The amendment which the minister then said would meet my purpose was:

Provided that notwithstanding anything in this section, no provision of any order or regulation of the governor in council specified in the part of the schedule to this act entitled "Wartime Prices and Trade Board" shall be revoked by the governor in council unless addresses have been presented to the governor general by the Senate and the House of Commons praying that such provision be revoked.

I accordingly withdrew the amendment in the form in which I had worded it in the first place and moved an amendment in the form in which the Minister of Justice suggested it to me. Later the committee voted it down; but, for reasons which I shall take a moment to indicate, I feel that the amendment should now be put into the original act.

I wish to point out as I go along that the fact that that amendment was accepted by the chairman of the committee of the whole last year and voted on indicates that it is an amendment which it is competent for a private member to move. But let me now give my reason for reintroducing the amendment at this time. The principal reason is that in our view the government has been going too fast along the road of decontrol. To use the words of the present Minister of Finance in some of his letters, he is strewing too many casualties along the path of decontrol, and we in this group would like to make sure of the one thing which we have the power to try to make sure of, namely, that the wartime prices and trade board set-up will not be scuttled in a matter of a few weeks. We want to be sure it will be kept in existence at least for the full year during which this bill is to be on the statute book.

Last year, as I have indicated, the Minister of Justice treated my proposal with respect so far as the idea was concerned, but opposed it, stating in fact on April 17 that he felt that the government should have the right to get rid of these wartime prices and trade board sections of the schedule in less than the twelve months for which the bill was then being passed. I submit that the minister will have to admit now that he was wrong. Not only were those sections kept in effect for the full twelve months, but he is now before the house with a bill which will continue them for a further period. Despite the fact that the minister asks to have them continued for a further period, which can be the full year, the original act still has in it that section 4 which gives the governor in council power at any time to revoke orders in council such as those that keep the wartime prices and trade board in existence; and my fear is that the Minister of Finance, who is now the principal authority with regard to those orders in council, may go to his colleagues in the cabinet one of these days before long and suggest that the wartime prices and trade board be done away with. If he does that and a few weeks later everyone, including the government, realizes that there are certain controls that should be re-established, he will be in a position to say that he cannot do it because the authority for price control has been abolished.

I was not surprised on previous occasions when the Minister of Justice took amendments of this kind, and speeches of this kind, as expressions of confidence in the way in which the government has handled price control. It is only natural that he should take it that way, and I say to him without reservation that I am glad to express confidence in the way the government administered price control during the war when he was Minister of Finance. But we are not satisfied with the decontrol policy which the government has been following since the end of the war.

If my amendment carries, it does not do everything that I should like to do. It still leaves the government and the wartime prices and trade board with the power to scuttle some of the regulations. I would go farther if I could, but I cannot move an amendment that would call upon the government to carry out the price control powers given to it by parliament because that involves the expenditure of money. I am going as far as a private member can go in seeking to write into the statute a section which will ensure that the orders in council establishing the wartime prices and trade board will stay there at least until March 31, 1949, and that at least we shall have the wartime prices and trade board in existence to carry out any policy of price control which the government might yet be persuaded is necessary for the well-being of the people of the country.

I point out that if the motion I have now presented to the house carries, that is not the end of the story. For, as citations in Beauchesne, Bourinot and May indicate, this kind of instruction cannot be mandatory. It may be only permissive. This does not instruct the committee of necessity to write this extra clause into the bill. It merely gives the committee the undoubted authority to do it, and since there is some doubt as to whether or not the committee would otherwise have this power under the bill, with section 4 of the original act not being before the committee, I suggest that the way to make sure that we can consider the matter when we are in committee is to accept and pass this motion.

I was really grateful to the Minister of Justice the other day for what I thought was the very fair way in which he dealt with the matter. He expressed his desire that hon. members have a complete and fair opportunity to move the kind of amendments they might wish to move. I know he may not agree with some of those we propose. He might perchance accept this one this year, but undoubtedly he was most fair, and I hope the house will see fit now to pass this motion I have moved.

If the house does pass it, that merely gives the committee power to consider this amendment. That means that when we get into committee of the whole at some proper stage, on the basis of the authority given the committee, I shall rise and move that a section 2 be inserted in the present bill in the words that appear in the motion I have just made.

That, I may say, explains the set-up of my motion. The bill before us will have only one section which amends section 7 of the original act. My amendment would call for the insertion of a section 2 which would amend section 4 of the original act. I point out again that this amends section 4 in the time-honoured way, by deleting the existing section and substituting another section made up of the wording already there, with no change, plus the addition of the proviso I sought to move last year.

In case the Minister of Justice has not had time as yet to compare the wording of these various proposals I assure him that the amendment I have now moved is composed of the original section 4, exactly as it stood, plus the proviso I sought to add last year, in exactly the words suggested to me by the minister on April 18, 1947. I repeat that this is not very far to go. It is not nearly the distance I and the members of this group would like to go. If it were at all possible we would call upon this house to instruct the government to use the powers provided by parliament to put price control back into effect and bring down the cost of living. That is denied us. Already we have moved an amendment to the address expressing this view, which this house has turned down, I think wrongly. But at least the government could go this far; and I should hope that at this stage the Minister of Justice would agree to my motion, and let it pass as an instruction to the committee. Then when we get into committee I shall move it at the proper stage, in the hope that it will pass, so that the country may have the assurance that the machinery of the wartime prices and trade board will remain in operation for a full year, or until parliament may decide to do away with it. That proviso, of course, is maintained at all times: no one would want to supersede that right. But if perchance this is written into the statute and the government and the board itself and its chairman all know that the life of the board is ensured for a period of time, I should hope they might be a little more aggressive in their job in trying to hold down the cost of living in this country. At the moment, however, all I have placed before the house is a procedural motion which I hope the government and the house will be prepared to accept.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): If I may ask a question, when the hon. gentleman quoted from the Minister of Justice in April of last year, was that at the same stage of some proceeding?

Mr. KNOWLES: The answer to that question is no. Last year we had before us Bill No. 104, which has since become chapter 16 of the 1947 statutes. When we were in committee on that bill last year in due course we reached section 4; and it was in order, without any doubt or question, since we were dealing with section 4, for any private member in committee of the whole to move an amendment. This year, however, section 4 of the original bill will not be before us, because all we have is Bill No. 136, which opens up only section 7 of the original bill. Since there might be some doubt as to whether the committee of the whole could deal with a section not brought before the committee, I am moving this instruction, that the committee of the whole have power to deal with section 4 of the original bill in the manner I have proposed.

Mr. W. GARFIELD CASE (Grey North): From what the Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley) said the other day in explanation of the resolution I understood that the committee of the whole would have an opportunity to discuss any section of the act. With respect to the amendment, if we are to give any direction to the committee of the whole I think enough leeway should be given to permit us to consider the act in part or in whole. I am interested in one particular section. We have been told by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) that the law officers of the crown discovered a provision in the act which even the administration did not know existed, which they said would permit the government to carry out what we have been inclined to call the austerity program. I do not think the government itself expected that the measure presented and passed last session would delegate such wide powers to the administration. For that reason I think when the committee of the whole is considering this bill clause by clause, or any part of it, we should have the right to seek out and deprive the governor in council of the right to deal arbitrarily with any situation with which parliament itself should deal.

We have heard a good deal about the legality of the taxes which have been imposed, and so on. By the admission of the Minister of Finance himself the administration must find itself in an embarrassing situation today, when it is asking parliament to condone something which was done on November 17 and which it had or had not legal authority to do. So I think when the committee is considering this bill, if any direction is to be given we should be privileged to review the act and suggest amendments thereto, so we may feel more secure and may know that we are returning to at least some semblance of democratic government.

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Justice): I presume I may now speak to the motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). The hon. gentleman gave no notice; therefore I have been able to give it consideration only during the last few minutes. I am inclined to think no harm would be done by giving this power to the committee. What we should do in committee is another matter. Last year I took the view first, I think, that I was indifferent to a similar motion, because I regarded it as an empty gesture; and I think it is not much more than an empty gesture at the present time. The preservation of the regulations of the wartime prices and trade board, exactly as they are contained in the schedule, gives the government full power to revoke individual controls under those regulations at any time they wish. For instance, they could remove any particular commodity from the operation of the regulations. It was for that reason last year that I thought it did not make any difference whether or not a similar provision passed. Finally, however, I stated that as a member of the committee I would vote against it. While expressing indifference as to whether it passed or not, I said I would vote against it, and it was voted down because it seemed to do something that actually it did not do.

[Mr. Case.]

The hon. member thinks that if this provision is added to the bill perhaps it will exercise some moral pressure upon the government to keep price controls on a little longer than they otherwise would. But that is the most that can be said for this resolution. In practice it may accomplish absolutely nothing. At the same time I do not think I can oppose the motion. I think the committee ought to have the power to make this amendment to the bill if it wishes. But what position I will take and what position the government will take on the amendment when the hon. member proposes it in committee is another matter.

Those who are more directly connected with the administration of this measure are giving it some attention at the present time. Perhaps there is some reason why it is important now that we do not surround the revocation of this order and the individual provisions of the order with these restrictions. Perhaps there is some reason why we should not now do that. It does seem somewhat illogical that the committee a year ago would vote against a provision like this.

Mr. KNOWLES: Perhaps the committee was then illogical.

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not know that they were. I think that the logical thing is to oppose this, because it is not of any practical value. If I am correctly informed it is not of practical value because within the framework of these orders, no matter how long they continue, the government has power to make orders under those orders in council for complete decontrol. That is the advice I got last year, and that is the reason I said last year it did not make any difference to me whether the order went through or not. I thought however that it would give a false impression, that it was an empty gesture—and I am afraid the same considerations would apply this year.

At the same time I do not know why on this short notice I should oppose his motion, because all it does is to give the committee an opportunity a little later, after we have given the proposal further consideration, to decide what we ought to do with it. And I may add that the notice I received was unfortunately short; my hon. friend might have given me notice of it this morning.

Mr. A. L. SMITH (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the motion, for a different reason—and what I shall say perhaps will suit the mover of the motion. My objection to it is that while it gives section 4 to the committee—and I would have no objection to that at all—if the committee is to take section 4 into consideration it should consider the matter without any limitation as to procedure, as is here indicated.

If we pass this as a directive to the committee, it means that the House of Commons directs the committee that it has the right to amend as specified, and that only. If we are in committee of the whole, wide open, on section 4, then of course my hon. friend will agree that he does not need this motion. His motion will apply only in the event of the committee not being open to deal with it. If we are to deal with section 4 it is my view that the committee should be free to deal with it in any way it sees fit.

My suggestion to the hon. member is this. I am quite content to have section 4 dealt with. Why would he not simply issue a directive to the committee empowering it to deal with section 4, so that we would not have to bring in this proviso two or three times? Perhaps someone in the committee would find a better way of putting an end to some of the operations of the board. I make the suggestion that perhaps this is a better way of handling the matter.

Mr. ILSLEY: With the consent of the house, may I ask the hon. member a question? What are his reasons for thinking that the committee would not have the power to propose this amendment in the absence of such a direction from the House of Commons?

Mr. KNOWLES: I suppose the short answer is that I have had six years of experience in this House of Commons. The other answer is the reference that the Minister of Justice unfortunately made the other day to a passage in May, which he said was not very helpful. I thought I had answered him by finding a helpful passage in May, but it so happens that the unhelpful passage is there too.

I believe this is a debatable point. There is however a helpful passage in Beauchesne which speaks about doubtful cases; and in doubtful cases the suggestion is that the thing to do is to get authority from the house. It is because there is doubt that the committee would have power to deal with the section brought before it that I felt the motion should be passed.

An hon. member to my right only a moment ago quoted the minister as saying on Friday that, in his view, when we got into committee all sections of the bill should be open. I doubt if that is what the minister said. As I recall it, the minister said we should have the right to discuss all the orders in council in the schedule. He answered the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low) by saying that we would be able to call the ministers, one by one, and ask each to defend the continuance of these orders in council. But having all the orders before us is one thing; having all the sections of the original act is another. And it is because section 4 of the original act is not before us that I was prompted to follow this procedure. I believe the minister's attitude in the matter has been fair.

Mr. ILSLEY: I can speak again only with the consent of the house. What I intended to say the other day was that I thought amendments to the various provisions of the orders in council would be in order. When I said that I meant of course that if they add to the expenditure, or are out of order for some other reason, those points of order may be taken by hon. members on this side of the house. There is however a passage in May to the effect that when an act is continued the original act cannot be amended in the continuing act. That is the unhelpful position I was referring to. In this instance, the bill we are introducing is an amending one. It is not an act which continues the original act.

Mr. KNOWLES: But that is all it does.

Mr. ILSLEY: Well, it amends the original act. And I think it does more than that. For instance there is a proviso in the amending section, and I was not able to see why another proviso in the amending section, or a separate section making some change in the orders validated last year or continued last year, would not be perfectly in order, and I am willing to take that position in the house.

It has been suggested by the officials that perhaps this increases the expenditure. I would not like to take that position in the present instance. In fairness to the committee I believe they will have to be free to propose amendments if they wish.

There is something in what was said by the hon. member for Calgary West, that if we specify this amendment and say that the committee has power to propose it, then that would appear to be based on the theory that that is the only amendment they have power to propose.

Mr. LOW: That is exactly what it does. I had the same feeling as the hon. member for Calgary West. My objection to the amendment as it is set out now is that it limits the part of section 4 that could be amended by the committee. If the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre will rearrange his amendment and make it possible for us to propose in committee any amendment we want to section 4, we will support it.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I think it should be made clear that the purpose of the amendment is to have the government come back to parliament for authority before repealing any order in council dealing with the wartime prices and trade board. As it now stands the government may do away with all the orders in council that come under this legislation without coming back to parliament for further authority. We are interested in that part which deals with price control, as was made quite clear by the hon. member who moved the amendment. I do not know why anyone should object to giving this parliament the right to discuss a matter of such importance particularly in view of what has happened in the last few months.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I am agreeing with you.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: The contention is made that the passage of this amendment would limit the committee to the amendment of section 4 in only one particular. I cannot see the logic of that. If the committee already has power to amend all the sections of the act, as is contended by some, then the giving of instructions or extra power to the committee would not limit the power which the committee already possesses.

It may be argued that if the committee has the power already we do not need to give them any power. But by giving this extra power, by giving these instructions, we are not taking away any power which the committee already has under the rules; therefore I think the amendment should carry so that this house may have the opportunity of discussing the setting up or abolition of a board which has to do with price control. I am not going to go into the question of price control at this time, because it would be out of order, but I do submit that by adopting this motion we will be giving parliament an opportunity which it otherwise may not have to discuss an important question.

Mr. MITCHELL: Could we not do that when we are discussing the orders in council?

Mr. KNOWLES: When we are dealing with the orders in council we are dealing only with their substance and their content. The power of revoking orders in council is not set out in the schedule or in the orders, it is set out in section 4 of the original act which is not before us. I feel strongly that the passing of this motion would not deny to the committee other powers which it might have. Hon. members may contend that it has this or other powers, but I want to be dead sure that the committee has the power to make this specific amendment.

Mr. REID: It seems to me that it would be out of order before the bill goes to second reading to give a restrictive direction to the committee. This amendment would restrict it to section 4 and I claim that that is entirely out of order. Surely to tell members of the committee of the whole after the bill passes second reading that we are to be restricted to section 4 is out of order.

Mr. MacINNIS: Section 4 deals with the power of the governor in council to move in revoking in whole or in part orders and regulations. I think it was on Friday that I made the statement that when an amending bill was before the house all sections of the act were open to amendment. This is an amending bill. It is not necessarily a bill for continuance; it amends section 7 in certain respects. That being so, in my opinion the whole act is open for debate and for amendment.

If my contention is correct the motion made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre does not restrict the committee. As a matter of fact it brings section 4 into the debate. Consequently I do not think there is anything restrictive about it. I should like to thank the minister for his fair attitude in this matter. He is reserving the right to pass it in committee if he thinks it is desirable and nothing is lost.

Mr. KNOWLES: Speaking to the point of order raised by the hon. member for New Westminster, this sort of procedure is not followed very often and it is not surprising that it seems to be perplexing. The hon. member objected to a motion that would give a direction to the committee, indicating that it was a form of dictation. I would refer to citation 409 of Beauchesne's third edition, which reads:

> An instruction which is generally made when a bill is committed, is not mandatory, and it is therefore customary to state explicitly in the motion that the committee "have power" to make the provision required. The intention is to give a committee power to do a certain thing if they think proper, not to command them to do it.

If this motion is passed it does not command the committee to do this at all.

Mr. McILRAITH: Read the rest of it.

Mr. KNOWLES: It does not prevent the committee from doing everything which it has the power to do. The amendment merely makes sure that this one particular right is protected. As I read the rules, it would be in order if my motion is passed for other hon. members to move other instructions protecting other rights. I submit to the hon. member for New Westminster that he might reconsider his point. He said that this was something that was being done before second reading, but second reading has already been had and I submit that my motion is perfectly in order.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): May I finish reading 409, which continues:

The right theory is not that the instruction should be given whilst the bill is still in the possession of the house, but rather after it has come in the possession of the committee.

Mr. KNOWLES: Go on and read the rest of it and also 410 and 411.

Mr. MARQUIS: I was paired with the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Dorion). Had I voted, I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. HERRIDGE: I was paired with the hon. member for Chambly-Rouville (Mr. Pinard). Had I voted, I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I wish to move an amendment to the motion, which will read as follows:

That it be an instruction to the committee of the whole to consider amendments to section 4 of the act, irrespective of whether or not this power falls within the general powers of the committee.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon. member cannot move an amendment to the motion, because there is no motion before the chair.

Mr. Ilsley moves that I do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of the whole to consider the said bill. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to, and the house went into committee, Mr. Golding in the chair.

On section 1—Duration of act.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take a moment to say a word on behalf of the majority of the members of the veterans affairs committee. We express our resentment at being called from a meeting of the blind and totally disabled to vote on such a trivial matter.

Mr. COLDWELL: That is what you think.

Mr. MacINNIS: Wait until you meet the people of the Fraser Valley.

Mr. KNOWLES: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the Minister of Justice, who is piloting this measure through the house, what arrangement he would suggest to facilitate discussion. He knows that there are twenty-seven orders in council before us. It seems to me that if it is just left to individual members to pop up to speak on the particular order in which they are interested we shall travel all over the place. I suggest that it might be a good idea for him to indicate the order and suggest that the various ministers responsible make a brief statement, which would save time in the long run.

Mr. GILLIS: Mr. Chairman, I want it understood that, so far as I am concerned, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is not speaking for me on this matter. I do not consider it my business, or the business of this group, to facilitate the particular matter that is now before the committee. It contains resolutions which are being carried forward which are indicated by just a number. Very few hon. members understand what is behind these resolutions and what the implications are. If the government was in a hurry on this particular matter it should have brought it in sooner. So far as I am concerned, this is one of the most important matters that we have to discuss, and during the discussion in committee I am going to get a thorough explanation of every resolution that is being carried forward under the Continuation of Transitional Measures Act, 1947.

Mr. KNOWLES: That is what I am proposing.

Mr. GILLIS: No; the hon. member proposed that the minister suggest some way to overcome our popping up and delaying the matter and so on. I do not delay the house very often except on something that I feel pretty keenly about. I am not particularly anxious as to whether these powers are carried forward or not, because in the final analysis I do not think it means anything to the Canadian people. Whether we vote for it or not, it will be carried forward and administered. All the controls which protect the ordinary people of this country in any way, shape or form are gone now.

[Mr. Speaker.]

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. In order to have the situation clarified so far as the chair is concerned, we ought to have some understanding now as to what is to be discussed, because the only thing that is before the committee is section 1. If by agreement the committee wishes to discuss something else, the orders in council, or the bill itself on which the amendment is made, we should get consent to do so; otherwise all that is before the chair is section 1 of the bill.

Mr. ILSLEY: Mr. Chairman, all that is before the committee is section 1; but it has been suggested that someone give the committee some guidance as to the order in which they will carry on the discussion on section 1. I am quite willing to do that if the committee will be guided by my suggestions. I suggest that the orders administered by ministers who are here today be discussed first, with the exception of some orders that are not very difficult. I might say a few words about those.

I hope that once we finish the discussion on any particular order we shall not revert to it. I express that merely as a hope. There is nothing in the rules to prevent our going back to it but I hope we do not do so. Might I mention the first two items at the beginning, the Department of Finance? Let us complete the discussion on these two items first. The Minister of Finance is not here today but the parliamentary assistant is. However I do not think the orders present any difficulty at all. One is an order exempting from customs duties coke made from coal for certain purposes, and the other is the exemption of oil-drilling machinery from customs duties. Those are two orders in council which have been carried along for some years and which will be dropped when they are dealt with in the budget. Budgets in recent years have not been making many tariff changes, but these items will have to be dealt with one of these days in the budget. They are a sort of remnant of some tariff orders in council of which there was a considerable number at one time. They have all been revoked except these two. I suggest that they would not require very much discussion, and such discussion as there might be could take place now.

Mr. GILLIS: That is exactly the point to which I object. I am not so much concerned about the orders which are being carried forward as I am about those which have been revoked. If the procedure now suggested by the minister is gone on with, it means that we shall take the few orders which still remain; and, reading those orders over, as far as I am concerned, I suggest that they do not mean very much. I am afraid that some of the orders which have been revoked do mean something, and I want an explanation of them before we proceed to deal with those which remain. For my part, you could wipe the whole thing out tomorrow and I do not think it would change anything, because all the orders which were beneficial to the people are gone, and that is clearly reflected in the spiral of inflation.

For example, I would ask the minister for an explanation of P.C. 20/6173, 1945, civil service war service preference, certain persons excluded, and so on. That order in council established a preference for certain service personnel with respect to employment in the civil service. While the order remained, that preference remained, and unless I am sure that the preference has been guaranteed by legislation I am not prepared to say that the government were justified in revoking it. The same thing applies to the next order and several others following that. They are revoked. If we accept this as it is now we may be taking away from service personnel the preference which they had under that order in council and it may not have been guaranteed them by legislation. I should like to have an explanation of those particular orders.

Mr. ILSLEY: Is the hon. gentleman talking about those under the heading "civil service commission" in the table of contents?

Mr. GILLIS: That is right.

Mr. ILSLEY: Those orders in council were embodied in legislation, or legislation took the place of them. Legislation passed last year substituted a statutory preference for the preference established by order in council. Last year there was an amendment to the Civil Service Act dealing with the whole matter and providing for the preference. That took the place of these orders in council.

Mr. GILLIS: The reason I am concerned about it is that right now there is a great deal of difficulty in the matter of employment for veterans in the civil service commission, and the question where their preferences begin and end. If the minister assures me that the revocation of these orders in council has not taken away any of the preference they had, I am quite satisfied. I want to be sure that the preference remains, though there is still much that is left to be desired.

Mr. ILSLEY: It was all dealt with last session. It is section 29 of the Civil Service Act. The matter was debated fully at that time. I know there is and always has been difficulty about the preference to veterans. That is not a new thing. When I first came into the house back in the twenties there was a continual debate as to whether the proper persons were being given preference, and so on, and it is a difficult matter to arrange satisfactorily, but the whole matter was discussed last year and embodied in legislation.

Mr. GILLIS: I agree with the minister that there have been difficulties in the past but I do not think there should be. The veterans were guaranteed certain preferences because of certain services and they should receive them. What I have in mind is this. A boy went overseas when he was twenty-two. He came back and wrote his civil service examination for a certain job and qualified from the academic point of view, but he is told by the civil service commission that, while he has qualified in that respect, he has not the experience. When will he acquire the experience, and how? I am not going to argue that with the minister, but I want to be sure that, by revoking these orders, we have not disturbed any of the anaemic preferences which the veterans now have in the matter of employment.

Mr. ILSLEY: I am confident that they are not being disturbed. The matter was dealt with last year. Might we now deal with the two finance orders to which I have referred? Is it necessary to have a discussion on those?

Mr. TIMMINS: Could the minister go back to Hansard where he dealt with the matter and give us some assurance that everything the veteran had before in the way of preference has been preserved?

Mr. ILSLEY: That is not an issue here. These orders in council have already been revoked and legislation has taken their place. It is of no use whatever for us to discuss something that is not before the committee. The matter was before the house last session; the time for discussion was then, and I have no doubt it took place. Certainly my understanding was that none of the rights conferred by these orders in council was omitted when the legislation came before the house. But that is in the past; that is not now before the committee.

Mr. TIMMINS: In other words, the act which brought it into being took place almost simultaneously with the dropping of the orders last year.

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. TIMMINS: I think that is right.

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes, it is right. Perhaps we could go on, if there is to be no discussion on the two small items to which I have referred, and deal with the Department of Labour items.

Mr. GILLIS: Would the minister give an explanation with regard to item 8042, the one dealing with coke made from coal. What are the implications of that?

Mr. ILSLEY: The order in council is set out in the office consolidation of last year. Certain coke is let in free of duty. It is found on page 15 of the office consolidation. There are a number of recitals, but it all comes to this:

> His Excellency in Council . . . is pleased to order and it is hereby ordered that, effective on and after September 15, 1942, imports of coke, made from coal, when imported to be used as a fuel for cooking or baking foods or for heating buildings or water be exempt from war exchange tax and accorded the tariff treatment hereunder indicated.

And it is made free, free, free. The effect of the order is that coke made from coal, when imported to be used as a fuel for cooking or baking foods, or heating buildings or water, is to be free of duty.

Mr. GILLIS: I know we cannot do very much about the matter, but certainly we do not agree with that. You are importing United States coal, processing it into coke, and admitting it into this country free, while we believe our own domestic coal should be used for that purpose. The money you are losing under the tariff could be very well invested in coking plants in certain parts of the country where we have a pretty bad employment problem.

Mr. MacNICOL: I want to ask a question in regard to P.C. 394 of January 20, 1942, relating to anthracite coal. Does this mean that anthracite coal is now coming in free, or will continue to come in free?

Mr. ILSLEY: That order in council has been revoked. It permitted the importation of anthracite free of duty in certain parts of Canada only. I am handicapped, because the Minister of Finance is not present; but I understand that as of some recent date, I think as a result of the Geneva trade agreements, anthracite coal is permitted free entry.

Mr. MacNICOL: Previously there was a duty of fifty cents a ton, was there not?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. MacNICOL: Is that on or off?

Mr. ILSLEY: It is off.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): P.C. 8042, as I understand it, did not deal with the importation of coking coal, from which coke was made, but with the importation of coke itself which had been manufactured in the United States. I believe it was the import of the coke for these specific duties that was dealt with.

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes, it makes coke free when imported for these specific purposes.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): But not the coal from which coke is made.

Mr. ILSLEY: No; that is provided for otherwise.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): That was the question asked by the hon. member for Cape Breton South.

Mr. ILSLEY: I understood that he was talking about anthracite coal, from which you do not make coke.

Mr. MITCHELL: I have drawn up a review of the situation with regard to the Japanese, which I thought might save a good deal of time in answering questions; it will take only about five minutes.

I wish, at this time, to outline the reasons which led the government to ask for the continuation for another year of the orders providing for control over movement of persons of the Japanese race in Canada.

The evacuation of Japanese residents from the coastal defence area in British Columbia was carried out in the early part of 1942 as a defence measure following the declaration of war with Japan. There was general agreement at the time as to the advisability and necessity of this measure.

When, in August, 1944, the Prime Minister made a statement of this government's policy to encourage the relocation across Canada of the Japanese who had been moved out of the coastal area of British Columbia, all parties in this house were in support of this policy as being in the national interest and in the interests of the Japanese themselves. In a statement on the Japanese problem in January, 1947, the Prime Minister said that the government would deal fairly with the claims of Japanese who had claimed that their property in the coastal area had been disposed of by the custodian of enemy property at less than a fair price. I believe hon. members will agree that the policy of relocation has been carried out in a reasonable, fair and humane manner with very gratifying results to date. Moreover, a commission has been established to deal with property claims of Japanese.

In January, 1942, out of a total of 22,837 persons of the Japanese race in Canada, 21,975, or 96·2 per cent, were resident in British Columbia. These were chiefly concentrated in the coastal area in or adjacent to Vancouver. Only 664 persons, or 2·6 per cent, were resident in the prairie provinces and 159 persons, or ·7 per cent, resident in eastern Canada. Thirty-nine persons were resident in the Yukon and Northwest Territories. As a result of the relocation program carried out by the Department of Labour, the distribution of persons of the Japanese race in Canada, as of February 1, 1948, was as follows:

In British Columbia, there are 6,291 persons, or 30·3 per cent, of the total 20,788 persons of the Japanese race in Canada. This number are resident in widely scattered areas in the interior of British Columbia. In the prairie provinces there are 5,684 persons, or 27·3 per cent, of the total Japanese population. In eastern Canada there are 8,779 persons, or 42·2 per cent. There are thirty-four persons of the Japanese race in the Yukon and Northwest Territories. In addition, a total of 4,067 Japanese have been repatriated to Japan on a voluntary basis.

As will be noted from the above figures, the relocation program has provided a practical solution of the Japanese problem in British Columbia both from a national point of view as for the Japanese themselves. The Japanese who have relocated are in self-supporting employment in a wide range of occupations. They have been well received and are well regarded in the communities in which they have re-established themselves. The progress made reflects great credit on the Japanese themselves.

Of all the persons of the Japanese race who were moved in 1942 into the interior housing centres operated by the Department of Labour in the interior of British Columbia, there remains today only a group of between 500 and 600 persons residing at New Denver, British Columbia, who, because of age or infirmity, are incapable of employment. An agreement has been completed with the government of British Columbia for the province to take over the responsibilities of administration of welfare of this group at the end of the current fiscal year and a sharing of welfare and administrative costs. At the end of that time the financial responsibility of the dominion government will terminate. This agreement has been approved by order in council P.C. 958 of March 6, 1948.

Hon. members will recall that, at the time of the evacuation of the Japanese from the coastal area, a group of some three thousand moved into the sugar beet areas of southern Alberta under an agreement with the province of Alberta, which included a provision that these Japanese were to be regarded as temporary residents of the province during the war period and would be removed at the termination of the war if the province so requested. The dominion also assumed certain financial responsibilities with respect to costs of maintenance and education of these Japanese. I am glad to be able to report that agreement has been reached with the province of Alberta in settlement of the obligations of the dominion under this agreement. By the new agreement the Japanese in the province are accorded full residence rights in the province from the first of April of this year. The dominion and the province will share equally for the next two years costs of maintenance and educational costs which have heretofore been the responsibility of the dominion, and at the end of the two-year period the dominion responsibilities will be at an end. This agreement has been approved by order in council P.C. 589 of February 17, 1948.

At the present time the only restrictions covering the movement of Japanese in Canada are those contained in an order made by the Minister of Labour under the provisions of order in council P.C. 946 of February 5, 1943, which prohibit persons of the Japanese race from entering British Columbia or entering or residing in the coastal area of British Columbia; that is to say, the area in British Columbia lying west of the Cascades mountains, except under permit obtained from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police acting on behalf of the minister. While this order, P.C. 946, originally gave the Minister of Labour wide authority over the movement and placement of persons of the Japanese race in Canada, by amending order in council P.C. 804 of March 2, 1948, this authority is now limited to the authority to make orders and regulations making entry into British Columbia or entry or residence in the coastal area of British Columbia subject to permit by or on behalf of the minister.

Moreover the amending order also provides that P.C. 946 is revoked effective April 1, 1949. Therefore, while the bill now before the house provides for the extension of the life of P.C. 946, as amended, for another year, there can be no further extension of this order beyond April 1, 1949, in any event.

The government is of the opinion that the control over movement of Japanese into British Columbia from other parts of Canada and into the coastal area from elsewhere in British Columbia should be retained for another year to afford additional time to ensure stability of resettlement elsewhere in Canada. While my information is that the very great majority of persons of the Japanese race have no desire to return to the coastal area of British Columbia, nevertheless the precipitate return of even a limited number at this time would possibly resurrect racial issues and animosities which have existed over many years but which will, I firmly believe, fully disappear within a very few years. The immediate abandonment of all control measures is bound, in my opinion, to have an unsettling effect on a number of Japanese, particularly perhaps the older age groups who are still in the process of re-orienting and re-establishing themselves in other parts of Canada. While personally therefore, I should be very happy to drop all controls at the present time, I believe that it is in the national interest and in the interest of all persons of the Japanese race in Canada that present controls over entry into British Columbia and the coastal area thereof be continued for the current year.

The necessity or advisability of retaining these limited restrictions over movement is a matter of judgment and opinion. I submit, however, that in this the house should be guided by the judgment of those who have had the responsibility for administering the relocation program. The majority of members of this house have, in the main, supported the objective of the relocation program. I do not know how the relocation and placement program could have been carried out with any measure of success without the retention of controls over movement. Had these not been continued in effect, I am satisfied that today well over fifty per cent of the Japanese population in Canada would be back in the coastal area of British Columbia.

I say that time and the success of the relocation program carried out by this government have proven that our judgment in this matter has been right.

If I may say so, even the majority of Japanese themselves are, I believe, now of the opinion that the relocation program has been in their own interests, and I quote for the information of the house, in support of this view, an editorial appearing under date of December 20, 1947, in the Japanese-Canadian newspaper The New Canadian which has a very wide circulation among Japanese in Canada:

> If a poll were taken among the Japanese Canadians across the country asking the question "Are you glad that the evacuation took place?" there is a strong possibility that the majority of them would answer in the affirmative.
> The reason for this answer is obvious wherever Japanese Canadians have scattered. Despite the losses sustained at the time of evacuation, many have been able to recuperate, and in the case of Niseis whose evacuation losses were relatively light, the balance sheet shows a decided gain.
> The widespread bitterness at being forced out of their original homes has given place to more positive outlooks, and the struggles for readjustment in new places east of the Rockies are beginning to bear fruit.
> But apart from material consideration, there has been definite improvement in other directions.
> The geographic and economic horizons of the Japanese Canadians have been extended. Niseis are now bringing up their children in an environment different from the Pacific coast, in an atmosphere relatively free of racial animosity . . .
> The evacuation experience has also given a deeper understanding to Japanese Canadians, and perhaps ironically, a deeper appreciation for democracy.
> While The New Canadian has attacked repeatedly during the year the restrictions and injustices suffered by Japanese Canadians, the balance sheet at the end of 1947 shows many gains which should not be overlooked.

I submit, therefore, that, inasmuch as our judgment has proven sound in this matter up to the present, our judgment as to the advisability of retaining a limited measure of control for another year should receive the support of this house.

Mr. MacNICOL: Did the orders in council apply to Japanese born in Canada as well as to those born in Japan?

Mr. MITCHELL: Yes.

Mr. MacNICOL: From my observations in Ontario I can say that the Japanese who were moved here have been well received and, so far as I can ascertain, they are highly respected.

Mr. GILLIS: I notice in the office consolidation of the orders in council to which the minister referred that he omitted everything between pages 70 and 110. The minister dealt only with the Japanese question. Why has he not mentioned orders in council with regard to labour—and I have in mind P.C. 1003, as amended up to January 30, 1947—and other agreements with the provinces whereby labour relations boards operated under some regulations from the federal government. I notice that these orders are inoperative, so far as I can understand. The whole matter is back in the hands of the provinces, and we are still carrying on this federal legislation. What is the purpose of it?

Mr. MITCHELL: As my hon. friend knows, with the exception of P.C. 1003, they were all struck out, at the request of the provinces. That was done with the abolition of wage controls and the assumption by the provinces of their jurisdiction in the matter. They have control over property and civil rights, which includes labour. If I remember correctly, that jurisdiction was returned to them about the middle of April or the beginning of May of last year.

Mr. THATCHER: Before discussion closes on the orders in council respecting the Japanese Canadians, I should like to make some comment. I was disappointed with the explanation the minister gave the committee as to why these regulations had to be continued. I do not think that, considered on most grounds, his reasons can be accepted as satisfactory. I believe the majority of Canadians who value freedom and our democratic institutions will be sorry to hear that the government has decided for another year to renew order in council P.C. 946.

Hon. members will recall that the original purpose of the order in council, as pointed out by the minister, was to allow the government to control people of Japanese origin during the war. I think no one would argue that during the war these controls were not necessary. But as we sit here this afternoon debating the subject we must remember that the war has been over for almost three years, and the original reason for the orders in council has, in my opinion, disappeared.

We are not threatened with a stab in the back from Japanese Canadians. We are not threatened by any fifth column today. Therefore I cannot see any logical reason why we should continue these orders in council. The minister has said that they will be discontinued a year from now. If it is good to discontinue them a year from now, why is it not good to discontinue them today?

I suggest that the committee should remember that the vast majority of those who are affected by these discriminatory orders in council are Canadians who were either born in Canada or naturalized here. In effect, today the government is asking us to deny them the privilege of Canadian citizenship for another year. I cannot understand the reason for doing that. It could not be because they were disloyal during the war, because not one was charged with disloyalty. No charges of disloyalty were even made against any Japanese Canadians. It cannot be because they were guilty of aggression. They were no more guilty of the aggression of the Japanese empire, than were other Canadians; if, indeed, they were as much.

As I said a minute ago, the reason for putting these orders in council on in 1943 does not hold water today. To boil it down, there is only one reason why these orders in council are brought up again today, and that is solely a reason having to do with intolerance and racial discrimination. These people have committed no crime. They have not been charged with any crime. They are denied the privileges of Canadian citizenship solely because their skins are yellow. Whether the minister admits it or not, I suggest that that is the fact.

I am particularly interested in these Canadians of Japanese origin because several hundreds of them were sent out to my own constituency two years ago. They were lodged in some old airport buildings. They did not want to go there, but they were put there by the government. After they had lived in these premises for about a year, the minister's department decided they should go somewhere else. The labour authorities told them to go into the bush to find some work, to go out to some farm, or elsewhere. They tried to force them to leave Moose Jaw, but they would not let them go back to their homes in British Columbia.

Several of the men who were living in that camp served with the Canadian army in the first great war, one of them having been wounded at Vimy Ridge. When this war broke out he was interned, his property was confiscated or sold on him, and then, after the war, he was put in the camp at Moose Jaw.

The authorities have been able to force these people one by one to leave the camp against their will, until today there are only a couple of dozen left. It may be that they are not co-operative; I do not know, but I think the government officials have been using methods to get these people to leave against their will, methods which are almost akin to those that would be used in a police state.

I have a letter from one of the inmates in that camp which was written to me about three weeks ago and from which I should like to read two or three paragraphs to show the minister just what has been done by the R.C.M.P., and some of his departmental officials. It reads:

> On February 10, at nine o'clock in the morning the electricity was discontinued. Around eleven o'clock the water was also discontinued.

The officials were trying to force these people to move out of the barracks into which they had been put. The letter continues:

> Near twelve o'clock the official in charge with the help of the R.C.M.P. came and carried away all government blankets and mattresses. Under the circumstances there was nothing we could do except to buy an oil burner to keep us going for an indefinite time.

I might say that we have pretty cold winters in Moose Jaw. The letter continues:

In the evening a group of mounties with the camp officials came in and saw us using the oil burner and they took it outside and destroyed it.

I am going to skip certain parts of this letter because they are so bad that I do not think they could be true.

Mr. MITCHELL: I do not think the last statement of my hon. friend is true either.

Mr. THATCHER: That may be so; I am prepared to admit that. The letter goes on:

We spent the whole of Saturday night with only a candle for warmth with 17° below temperature.

I do not know whether that letter is absolutely according to the facts because I have not had time to check it, but it is a letter which one of the inmates wrote to me and which has been verified by several others of the inmates of that camp. I think I would agree with the official in charge that the few who remained probably have not been co-operative, but they have had possibly many reasons for not being co-operative.

Mr. MITCHELL: On a point of order, unless my hon. friend is prepared to table the letter I do not think it has any value at all.

Mr. THATCHER: I am quite prepared to table it, but I do not want the R.C.M.P. going in there—

Mr. MITCHELL: Just one minute; just go a little easy on that. I will deal with it when it comes my turn to speak. Unless my hon. friend is prepared to table the letter it has no value whatever, and when I say, table it, I mean to give the name of the writer.

Mr. THATCHER: Would the minister be satisfied if I showed him the letter and did not put it on Hansard?

Mr. MITCHELL: If my hon. friend stands up in this assembly where he has absolute freedom, where he can say anything he wants to—

Mr. PROBE: The Japs have not.

Mr. MITCHELL: Just a minute. I asked the hon. member for Regina City just to keep quiet for a few minutes. I do not think the letter is worth the paper it is written on unless it is placed on the record with the name of the person who supplied the information.

Mr. THATCHER: Will the minister undertake that there will be no reprisal against the writer? If so, I shall be happy to table the letter.

[Mr. Thatcher.]

Mr. KNOWLES: Will the Minister of Labour indicate the standing order upon which he relies? This matter has come up in the house a number of times. I recall quite vividly one occasion during the last parliament when the former member for York South was called upon by a minister to table a letter of this nature, and later the Clerk of the House returned the letter to the member saying that it was not a public letter, that it was merely a letter to a private member of the house and it was not in order to ask that it be tabled.

Mr. MITCHELL: Let us put it on the basis of honesty and decency, and when I say that I am casting no reflection on any hon. member.

Mr. PROBE: Be careful.

Mr. MITCHELL: I do not need to be careful.

Mr. THATCHER: Is the minister doubting my word?

Mr. MITCHELL: I said that I was not casting any reflection upon any hon. member. The hon. member was casting reflections upon the police, perhaps inadvertently. It is easy to attack a person in this house or to cast reflections upon someone who cannot defend himself. I think we should consider this on a practical basis. I am not going to get into an argument on the rules of this house in order to satisfy the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I am simply working on the basis of common sense. Perhaps I had better read citation 316, which is as follows:

It has been admitted that a document which has been cited ought to be laid upon the table of the house, if it can be done without injury to the public interest. The same rule, however, cannot be held to apply to private letters or memoranda.

Mr. KNOWLES: There you are; the words are coming right out of your own mouth.

Mr. MacNICOL: You have to take it back.

Mr. MITCHELL: No, I will not. I will go back another chapter although I think it is a complete waste of time.

Mr. THATCHER: May I proceed?

Mr. MITCHELL: Just a minute; you asked for this and you are going to get it. I will read what the hon member for Winnipeg North Centre is speaking of. It reads:

On the 18th of May, 1865, the attorney general, on being asked by Mr. Ferrard if he would lay upon the table a written statement and a letter to which he had referred on a previous day, in assuming a question relative to the Leeds bankruptcy court, replied that he had made a statement to the house upon his own responsibility, and that the documents he had referred to being private, he could not lay them upon the table. Lord Robert Cecil contended that the papers, having been cited, should be produced—

Mr. KNOWLES: Go on.

Mr. MITCHELL: I am not like my hon. friend; I will read everything.

Mr. KNOWLES: But you stopped.

Mr. MITCHELL: My hon. friend is looking at himself in a mirror.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: That is an insult.

Mr. MITCHELL: It might be as far as my good friend who has just spoken is concerned.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: The sermon from the mount.

Mr. MITCHELL: It concludes:

—but the Speaker declared that this rule applied to public documents only.

Mr. THATCHER: I should like to finish my few remarks.

Mr. MITCHELL: I am speaking on a point of order.

Mr. THATCHER: When are you going to get to it?

Mr. MITCHELL: Citation 306 reads:

It is not in order to read articles in newspapers, letters or communications emanating from persons outside the house and referring to, or commenting on, or denying anything said by a member or expressing any opinion reflecting on proceedings within the house.

There you are; you can take it whichever way you like. You have to take the responsibility.

Mr. MacNICOL: He does not have to table the letter.

Mr. JAQUES: I do not pretend to have any expert knowledge of the rules of procedure, but I definitely remember that some years ago a member of this group read a letter and when he was required to give the writer's name it was decided that the contents of the letter should be stricken from the record. I forget the year, but it was before the war.

Mr. THATCHER: The minister said that I made allegations against the R.C.M.P., but he misunderstood me. All I am saying is that I received this letter from a person in my constituency. I hope the letter is not true, but I am afraid it is. I think the minister should at least investigate, because if the charges which this Canadian of Japanese origin makes are authentic, it is a reflection on Canadian justice. I do not say that I corroborate these charges. I simply say that we might expect things of that kind in a police state but not in Canada.

This afternoon we are being asked to extend for another year this measure, one under which a Canadian minority is being denied its freedom, whether we like to admit that or not. A few weeks ago parliament set up a committee to bring in legislation to guard the rights and freedom of Canadians, and it seems to me that we are being a little hypocritical, if we bring down legislation just two weeks later denying these rights to certain Canadians. It just does not make sense. I remind the committee of the words of the Prime Minister who, on August 4, 1944, said at page 5917 of Hansard:

We must not permit in Canada the hateful doctrine of racialism which is the basis of the nazi system everywhere.

As I said a year ago, this order is based on racial animosity and discrimination. I therefore move in amendment, seconded by the hon. member for Wood Mountain:

That the following words be added after the word "period" in line sixteen:

provided, however, that order in council P.C. 946 of May 2, 1943, shall not continue or be in force on or after April 1, 1948.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I do not think the amendment is in order. While discussion has been permitted on certain features of orders and regulations, we are dealing with the one clause now before the committee.

Mr. ILSLEY: Mr. Chairman, just consider the situation here. The government is asking the House of Commons to amend a section of the act which causes the act to expire on March 31, 1948. In effect, the government is asking the House of Commons to continue certain orders in council which have been passed under the act until such time as they are revoked, but in any event until about a year from now. There must in fairness be some machinery by which the House of Commons can give partial assent to that proposition which has been put forward by the government. I think that is essential. I do not think I could come before the house and ask it to swallow it whole, all or nothing, so to speak. I did not ask the house to do that last year and I am not asking it to do it today. Whether it could be done by proviso, as the hon. member has proposed, or by a separate clause, I do not care; but I feel that the house should be given an opportunity of moving an amendment one way or the other, and if you, Mr. Chairman, would indicate the way you think would be more appropriate I am quite agreeable to either way. But I would be very unhappy if we got ourselves into such a position that no amendments at all could be proposed.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I do not think the chairman should decide which method should be adopted; it should be by agreement of the committee as a whole.

Mr. CROLL: Mr. Chairman, in speaking to this bill one can say for it that at long last the end of official discrimination against the Japanese in Canada is in sight. This bill, tardy and ungenerous though it is, at least draws the line of April 1, 1949, and no farther. I hope it marks the close of a chapter in Canadian history that we shall not be very proud to print in our school books.

I am not going to say very much today by way of valedictory. I spoke and used whatever influence I had against the government's action against Japanese of Canadian citizenship, but the government persisted in its view, although whatever justification there may have been for it came to an end at least two and a half years ago with the end of the war.

I can only say this. As one who was highly privileged to serve my country during the war I hang my head in shame before my comrades in arms of Japanese ancestry. As a member of this house I can neither forgive nor justify the wrong that has been done to a blameless people. As a firm believer in democracy I must say that I think we betrayed the fundamental principle of democracy which I consider to be equality. As a human being I say that we have committed an offence in passing judgment on our fellow men solely on the basis of blood and race. As a member of a minority race I say to the minority people, be ever on your guard.

In Canada there is no room for the doctrine of white supremacy, nor is there any room for second-class citizenship. I only hope that my country will never again put me in the position where I have to stammer forth some sort of explanation or apology for the action which the government has taken. Our treatment of Canadians of Japanese ancestry was in my opinion wrong in principle and demeaning in its application both to the Japanese and to ourselves.

It is my sincere hope that Canada will never again be guilty of official discrimination against any race or creed. Liberty is indivisible. It seems to me that if the humblest citizen of Canada is not free there is no freedom in this country for any of us.

I said that I was not going to say much about the bill. To all that is contained in this bill I say good-bye and good riddance. I hope we shall never see the like of it again.

Mr. MITCHELL: The hon. member for Moose Jaw spoke of the situation in his city. I have an intimate knowledge of it. It was used as a redistribution centre for the allocation of Japanese across the country. It is the only camp where we had any trouble.

Mr. MacNICOL: Which camp is that?

Mr. MITCHELL: It is the one outside Moose Jaw. Forty-five people still remain in it. What we wanted to do was to consolidate them all in one building, and they would not go in the one building. That is the information I have. All during the period when there was a great demand for manpower in this country there was never any effort on the part of the individuals concerned to move into the life of Canada in the areas where they were permitted to do so at the time. Whether you fought in the first great war or in the second great war, when you have a battle between two ways of life raging steadily in Europe and also in the orient there is an obligation on everyone. Let it stand on its own feet.

My hon. friend talked about a police state. We hear a lot about the police state, from people who do not know what a police state is. They are using the jargon of certain ideologies that some people follow in Europe. I am not suggesting that my hon. friend is doing that. I do not think it is in the best interest of this country to use that language. I would rather use Canadian expressions.

Let me say this to my hon. friend, the member for Spadina. I hope the committee will forgive me if I say in a personal way that I served my country as he did himself. I know something about the movement that takes place in affected countries under the stress of war. We did the same as they did in the United States. For reasons best known to themselves and for reasons obvious to us, they found it necessary to move these people in 1942 from the Pacific coast. That was undertaken, and I defy contradiction in what I am about to say. I do not hang my head in shame at the approach we made to the orderly movement of these people. I know of no other nation on earth that would have provided the facilities for the Japanese, not only those who wanted to stay in Canada, but also those who wanted to go back to Japan even before the war was over, that we did. I like to hear some of these purists talk, but one cannot always be a purist in the light of practical considerations, when the life of a nation is at stake.

The first obligation of a government, and the first obligation of this parliament, over and above every other obligation, is the safety of the state. If that was necessary in 1942—

Mr. THATCHER: Admitted.

Mr. MITCHELL: My hon. friend admits it.

Mr. THATCHER: But not today.

Mr. MITCHELL: My hon. friend says, "not today". If I might say this to the hon. member for Moose Jaw, I would rather take the word—

Mr. REID: He is not in a position to know.

Mr. MITCHELL: —of the Japanese themselves, or the Japanese organ which reflects the opinion of the Japanese in this country than that of the hon. member for Moose Jaw.

Mr. REID: He has not enough of them to know.

Mr. THATCHER: I have quite a few.

Mr. REID: You have not enough experience with them yet.

Mr. MITCHELL: I would rather take their opinion than my hon. friend's opinion. It is easy to make the statements that the hon. member for Spadina made when you are not charged with the responsibility that this government was charged with in 1942 and since.

It is true that at the conclusion of the war the United States authorities said to these people, "You are on your way; you can go where you like". We believed, rightly or wrongly, and history will show whether we are right or wrong—at least at the moment the Japanese think we were right—in the policy of relocation across this dominion from the Atlantic to the Pacific. It was a man-size job. Hon. members will realize that when I tell them we spent a million and a half dollars in sending the Japanese back to Japan. I should like to know of any other nation that would have given these people who wanted to go back to Japan what we gave them. We gave them their transportation; we gave every adult $250 when he landed and $50 for every child in the family. I should like to know of any other country in the history of the migrations of people of that character who ever did a thing of that kind. Do not forget this, that under the stress of that time, in the midst of a war where freedom might have disappeared from the scene, desperate remedies were called for, especially after Pearl Harbor. You could not talk about it in public in this country or in any other country in which a free press existed at that time. It was necessary, and the responsibility of the government, to take adequate measures in their own interests. I remember flying across this country and asking some of my friends if they would take these people away from the west coast and allow them to settle in their own provinces. Obviously, for reasons best known to themselves, they said no. We did make agreements with Alberta and, if my memory serves me rightly, with one or two of the other provinces, but particularly with Alberta. The chairman of the British Columbia security commission made an agreement that the Japanese would be removed from that province at the conclusion of the war. Let me say, to the credit of the government of Alberta, that the recent agreement consummated by myself and officers of my department permits the Japanese in Alberta to retain full civil rights on April 1 of this year. In the last few days we have made an agreement with British Columbia for the maintenance of the older people and the indigent people in New Denver, British Columbia. It will be required to make arrangements with other provinces where this problem exists. As my hon. friend knows, these things are not done overnight. I am happy to state that, in conformity with the order in council passed a few days ago, the Japanese will be permitted to move anywhere in the Dominion of Canada outside British Columbia.

I do not believe there is any other way in which we could have done it, Mr. Chairman. In my judgment it is all a question of timing, not a question of slogans. I was recently in the city of Montreal where I met a Japanese father of eight children. He said he liked living in Montreal better than Vancouver. He did not say anything about Moose Jaw.

Mr. THATCHER: He did not have the chance, I imagine.

Mr. CLAXTON: He had pretty fair judgment, of course.

Mr. MITCHELL: Yes. There are more Japanese in Ontario today than there are in British Columbia.

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. MITCHELL: My hon. friend says, "hear, hear". I think there is some achievement. If we had listened to the pros and cons during the relocation of these people; if we did not maintain a steady course; if we had become hysterical, which it is quite easy to do when you have no responsibility—

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I thought that was what made you hysterical.

Mr. MITCHELL: I do not know; I have been tempted to get that way myself during the last five or six years. I think history will record—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MITCHELL: There is one thing about it, you have to have a sense of humour. I will put this proposition forward. History will record that, in the light of the desperate situation that existed in this country in 1942, the policy of relocation of the people of the Japanese race was carried out in a humane way. It was in the best interest of the country. There was no breakdown of law and order and it was in the interests of the Japanese themselves. They will thank this parliament for the policies which were set in motion.

Mr. THATCHER: If I understood the minister correctly, he said that the official organ of the Japanese Canadians favoured the continuation of this legislation.

Mr. MITCHELL: I read that article. I will read it again if you wish.

Mr. THATCHER: Just tell me, do they favour it?

Mr. MITCHELL: They said in effect—

Mr. KNOWLES: Will you table the article?

Mr. MITCHELL: No. I read it into the record and gave the source. What they suggested was in effect that, while it was looked upon as not in their best interests originally, they would regard it now as being in the best interests of people of Japanese origin in this country; that is, the relocation.

Mr. THATCHER: But they do not favour the continuation of this legislation at this time. Is that not correct?

Mr. MITCHELL: I believe my hon. friend was upstairs getting his notes when I made the statement.

Mr. THATCHER: No; I have been here all the time. The question is a simple one.

Mr. MITCHELL: They never expressed an opinion.

Mr. MacINNIS: As the Minister of Labour has said, I do not believe that we can deal with this question by just reiterating slogans, of which, may I say, he seems to be a past master. We can only deal properly with it if we try to understand the circumstances under which these people were removed from their homes on the Pacific coast and scattered across Canada. Remember, no crimes were charged against these people, and none of them were convicted of crimes.

Mr. WARREN: What would you have done?

[Mr. Mitchell.]

Mr. MacINNIS: If my wise friend up in the corner will tell us what he is going to do, if he keeps quiet, I will tell him what I should like to see done.

Mr. WARREN: I think the government did a fine job.

Mr. MacINNIS: That is my hon. friend's opinion and I suppose if he did not think so he would not get the nomination at the next election or, if he did get it, he would not have his expenses paid.

Mr. WARREN: Never mind my expenses.

Mr. MacINNIS: The Minister of Labour said that we did the same as the Americans did. True, we did the same as the Americans did up to a point; and at that point we continued our restrictions and discriminations against people who, as I said before, were not charged with any crime and had not committed any. These people were moved from the Pacific coast for military precautionary reasons. Their property was confiscated, and I shall have something to say about that before I sit down. In some cases they have lost the labour of a lifetime in becoming settled in other parts of the country. That they have accepted in good part what has happened to them is to their credit. They have accepted it. The Minister of Labour said that we were fighting for our way of life. He said there were two ways of life and we were fighting on one side while other people were on the other. But as far as these people of Japanese origin were concerned, they felt here the kind of life we were fighting against in other parts of the world. That is what I object to in the government's policy in this matter.

I congratulated the Minister of Labour on a number of occasions on the job that his department did in the evacuation of these people. There is no reason why there should be any quibbling about that. I am not finding fault with that, but I am certainly justified in finding fault with the government where I believe the government is in the wrong, and that is the only point I wish to discuss.

The point has been made that these orders in council are to come to an end on a date certain, April 1, 1949, and, that being the case, we should be satisfied. But suppose the Minister of Labour were in a position where he was told that he could not go to the city of Montreal for a year without a police permit. How would he like it? To say that it is only for a year is beside the point. As far as Montreal is concerned, I would not be surprised if he said, "I don't mind". But if he wanted to go to Vancouver he would say, "I want to go to Vancouver today without a police permit and I want to do so as a Canadian citizen; I do not see why I should wait until the first day of April, 1949". That is the situation.

There is an assumption—I do not know how it has been put over to the government—that there is tremendous race prejudice in British Columbia against the Japanese. That is not the case, as the government of British Columbia found out within the last few weeks. Mr. Chairman, I think it is six o'clock.

Mr. SKEY: Could the Minister of Justice tell us under what regulations we deal with rent controls, and approximately when we shall deal with them?

Mr. ILSLEY: The hon. member will find it on page 2152.

Mr. SKEY: Can the minister tell me when it will come up?

Mr. ILSLEY: When we get through with this we shall take it up. I expect so.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. MacINNIS: Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose at six o'clock I was just beginning a few remarks I want to make in regard to certain of the orders in council attached to this bill, affecting persons of Japanese origin in Canada. I mentioned that some people were under the impression that there was intense feeling in British Columbia against persons of the Japanese race. As a matter of fact the government of the province thought that was the case and recently, with a couple of by-elections coming up, they thought they could raise the same old race issue. So they evoked a regulation in regard to persons of asiatic origin working on crown timber leases, which had been in abeyance I think since 1942. However, I am glad to say they found immediately they had made a mistake, because it brought protests from one end of British Columbia to the other. For the first time since the evacuation from the Pacific coast, all the daily newspapers in Vancouver were as one on this question; and I am going to take a few minutes of the time of the committee to read from the editorials that appeared. Before doing so, however, may I say that so strong was the protest against the action of the government that the order was rescinded and the matter was referred to the legislature for a decision. I should like to warn this government that unless they are careful they will find themselves further behind than the government of British Columbia in this matter.

Here is an editorial from the morning newspaper, the Vancouver News-Herald, entitled "B.C. takes another crack at the Japs." I shall read extracts from it:

> This cruel and arbitrary act shows that the mentality which persists in persecuting these people is still very much alive in the government of this province—even in high places.

The regulation the government of British Columbia put into effect prevented certain people of the Japanese race from working on crown timber limits in that province. If it is cruelty and persecution to prevent these people from working in lumber camps in order to make their living, what can you call an order that prevents them moving from one place to another in British Columbia, or from other provinces to British Columbia? It is persecution, no matter which way you take it.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): Call in the hon. member for Skeena.

Mr. MacINNIS: If the hon. member is interested in calling in the hon. member for Skeena he may do so. I am speaking now for myself. If any hon. members, even those behind me, or anywhere else do not agree with me, it does not make the slightest bit of difference as far as I am concerned. I would, of course, regret it as far as the cause in which I am interested goes, but it dos not matter a bit who may or may not support me. I quote again:

> Now the federal wartime order has ended, and the provincial government has lost no time in restoring the thirty-five year old discriminatory ruling. It has destroyed the living of these people, many of them Canadian-born or naturalized, who had found a useful, peaceful occupation in an industry where manpower is urgently needed. Many of them had been previously evicted from their homes by the wartime ruling barring them from the coastal area.

There seems to be no let-up to the persecution of these people who, as I have mentioned time and again, have committed no crime and have been charged with no crime, merely because of the accident of birth. I quote again from the same editorial:

> Insistence on the part of politicians with their eye on an election, in persecuting—

Note that word again.

> —fellow citizens of Japanese race has already given British Columbia a bad name wherever human rights are respected. The contrast between British Columbia and the state of Washington in the post-war treatment of citizens of Japanese race is a travesty on vaunted British justice and fair play.

I should like the Minister of Labour to take note of that. I have often heard him say in this house, with great gusto, that the Englishman's home is his castle. If that be true, these Canadian citizens of the Japanese race did not find much security in their castles in British Columbia. I have another editorial from one of the evening papers, the Vancouver Sun, which I believe is a Liberal paper—

Mr. SINCLAIR: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacINNIS: As far as I know, this is the rst time the Vancouver Sun has criticized government policy, either provincial or federal, in regard to their treatment of persons of Japanese origin. The heading of the editorial is significant; it reads, "These Japanese are ours." Well, if they are ours we certainly do not show it. The extension of these orders in council for another year beyond what is necessary—and let me say that last year they went a year beyond what was necessary—does not show that we have much regard for our own. Let me read a few extracts from this editorial:

British Columbia has long since outgrown the kind of racism of which this order appears to be a reflection. C. D. Orchard, deputy minister of forests, cannot shrug it off by saying that "it has been done for fifty or sixty years." So what? This is 1948. Conditions which promoted racial antagonism have changed since Pearl Harbor.

Evidently they have not changed for many people in the Canadian cabinet. I shall have something more to say about that before I have finished.

Then it goes on:

Probably some of them will even return to Vancouver—

That is referring to the Japanese.

—when the coastal security zone is abolished. Their reception may be warmer than their welcome in certain quarters, but British Columbia must be fair. British Columbians have asked other provinces to absorb a proportionate share and British Columbia must retain its quota.

To deny them the right to work in the woods, which they obtained by federal wartime regulation, is a piece of needless aggravation. That merely cuts their new roots and induces them to drift back into their former haunts and habits.

Let me say again that to refuse them the right as Canadian citizens to travel anywhere in Canada is a needless aggravation.

Then I come to the third Vancouver paper, the Vancouver Daily Province. Let me say this for the Vancouver Daily Province, that while it supports the Progressive Conservative party—although I do not think it says it is a Progressive Conservative paper—I must say for it that, in my opinion, it has always taken a decent stand in this matter, from beginning.

The Toronto Daily Star in an editorial on February 5, 1948, quotes with approval, from an editorial on this subject, the following from the Vancouver Daily Province:

The policy the government now reinaugurates—

That is, the provincial government of British Columbia.

—is not a respectable policy, since it is based on racial and economic prejudice, and it is a dangerous policy since it violates one of the fundamental rights of a Canadian citizen—the right to earn a living in whatever occupation may seem desirable to the citizen himself.

The other day I heard some hon. members over here to my right make a great to-do about the effect of the placement orders in council passed by the British government, wherein a person would have to take essential service if so required. I hope they will express their fervour for freedom which they expressed at that time, when this amendment comes to a vote. I hope they will realize that in this country we have Canadian citizens who, according to the last statement I have had from the Minister of Labour cannot move for more than fifty miles in British Columbia without a permit from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Perhaps that is not the situation today; but if it is not, I should like to know.

I quote again from the Daily Province, as it has been quoted by the Toronto Daily Star:

This British Columbia policy violates the principle of equality which the citizenship act seeks to establish. How can that be tolerated by a people proud and jealous of their liberties? It is always dangerous to permit fundamental rights to be violated without challenge, or minorities to be pushed about.

I should be very much surprised if the Minister of Justice feels easy in his mind about the extension of this order for another year. I should be very much surprised if the Minister of National Health and Welfare felt easy in his mind when he had to give approval to this provision—because I imagine it came before council. I do not see the Minister of National Defence in his seat at the moment; but certainly I cannot understand his giving it approval; that is if the words of these ministers in the past are any indication of an inner sense of right and justice.

Mr. KNOWLES: Do not forget the Prime Minister.

Mr. MacINNIS: Well I can forgive the Prime Minister because he is a very busy man and perhaps has not the time to give to these matters that they should have. I cannot understand the newcomer to the cabinet, the Minister of Veterans Affairs, agreeing to a proposal of this kind; nor can I understand the Secretary of State for External Affairs doing so. I say I cannot understand them, that is, if one is to place any value on their statements of their high regard for liberty, equality and freedom. Their acceptance of continuing these restrictions is not understandable.

Let me now quote from a Vancouver Daily Province editorial direct. The editorial is entitled: "A Rule to Make Canadians Blush." It reads:

The circumstance that this right and certain others were interfered with during the war is beside the point.

I would ask the committee to keep that in mind.

The war created an emergency, the nation's existence was deemed to be in danger and emergency measures were taken to protect it. There is no national emergency now, and no justification for the violation of fundamental rights.

That is the issue, the only issue, before this committee. Are we to violate fundamental human rights of Canadian citizens simply on the score that they happen to be of a certain racial origin? Every other consideration has been swept aside. No one can say there is any more danger of an exodus to the coast at the end of March, 1948, than there would be at the end of March, 1949. There is no reason behind those things. Let me say again that the only question at issue is whether this Canadian House of Commons will protect the fundamental human rights of Canadian citizens, regardless of their racial origin or the colour of their skin.

To continue from the Daily Province:

It creates a lower type of citizen—one lacking in certain privileges enjoyed by others. How can that be tolerated by a people proud and jealous of their liberties?

If we are proud and jealous of our liberties, this is the time to act; not when someone of the Anglo-Saxon race has his liberties curtailed. That may be too late. Probably by that time we shall become accustomed to abridging people's liberties. This is the time to act, when people who are in a minority—an insignificant minority at that—find their liberties in jeopardy.

Then the editorial continues:

We are proud in Canada of our free institutions and—

I want the Minister of Justice to listen to this.

We are proud in Canada of our free institutions and the even-handed justice which, we boast, prevails.

We cannot boast that that even-handed justice prevails if we allow this discrimination to be carried out. The editorial continues:

How much justice has there been in our treatment of the Japanese minorities since 1941?

And let me quote again—I believe I have already quoted it:

It is always dangerous to permit fundamental rights to be violated without challenge or minorities to be pushed about. Small liberties, experience has shown, are the important ones. Where they are stamped out, it is easy for the larger ones to be destroyed.

I am quoting this because it relates to the action of the provincial government. But in this instance it applies just as clearly and for the same purpose as it applied in connection with what the government of British Columbia attempted to put over.

I shall quote briefly from a Toronto Daily Star editorial of February 5, 1948, as follows:

Public opinion in British Columbia appears to be mounting against the government's racial policy. Among the protest meetings was one attended by 700 students, held at the university of British Columbia. A resolution was unanimously adopted demanding enfranchisement, freedom of movement and equal employment opportunities for Japanese in the province, as well as the repeal of the forty-year-old crown lands order against them.

The Winnipeg Free Press, another paper which has consistently taken a fair and decent attitude in this matter, says:

But voluntary dispersal is a very different thing from a government regulation which says that any Canadian cannot live in a certain part of the country. If this precedent is once established for one minority it can be applied to any minority in a nation of minorities. It can be used to destroy the most basic rights of all citizens.

On February 10, 1947, I asked the following question of the Minister of Labour:

Which of the restrictions on the movement and actions imposed on and after the evacuation from the Pacific coast defence zone still apply to Canadian citizens of Japanese racial origin?

The minister's answer was as follows:

All restrictions have been revoked except the following which are still applicable to persons of Japanese race in Canada:

(a) The prohibition of issue of fishing licences to persons of Japanese origin contained in order in council P.C. 251 of January 13, 1942.

(b) The prohibition of movement by persons of Japanese origin in Canada without a permit from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police only in the following cases: (i) change of residence; (ii) entry into the coastal restricted area of British Columbia; (iii) travel for more than 50 miles in British Columbia.

I understand that in the Soviet Union a person cannot travel fifty miles without getting a permit. I am sorry the Minister of Labour is progressing so far in the same direction.

Mr. MITCHELL: You cannot travel a mile there. The hon. member knows that you cannot go across the street.

Mr. MacINNIS: I could not get in there at all.

Mr. MITCHELL: You made a good try though.

Mr. MacINNIS: Then the next provision:

(iv) Travel across a provincial boundary.

Except for (ii), these remaining restrictions on movement are not applicable—

I want the veterans in this house to note this.

—to discharged members of the armed forces who are of Japanese origin.

That is, if you are of Japanese origin and served in the armed forces the restrictions that I mentioned do not apply, with the exception of entry into the coastal restricted area of British Columbia. I imagine that these men, to the extent that they had the opportunity, were fighting for that part of Canada as well as for other parts. We have a special committee of the house now looking into veterans affairs. Ever since the session began, we have heard from day to day condemnation of the government for its refusal to deal fairly with the veterans of the last war and of world war I. But here we have veterans who are refused the right to travel freely in the Dominion of Canada.

When I was home in December just before the house opened a man from the Fraser valley district came to see me. He wanted to buy a piece of land which was owned by a Canadian of Japanese origin who had been removed during the period of evacuation. This young fellow eventually found his way into the army. The land had been taken over by the custodian of enemy alien property and had been sold to the administrators of the Veterans Land Act, but it had not been disposed of by them. I have the following report from the Secretary of State, to whom I wrote about it:

A report on our file indicates that this property comprised 6·67 acres all overgrown and bush except for eight fruit trees and on which there existed a one-storey house, sixteen by twenty—

I am not sure if the one-storey house existed on the fruit trees.

—containing three rooms unoccupied—

No wonder they were not occupied when they took the owner away.

—and that this building and also a woodshed and garage were all in very poor condition. The value for assessment was $500—and the annual taxes $8.13.

They offered him $280 for his land which had been compulsorily taken from him, and they charged him with the legal expenses of making the transfer. The details were:

Taxes	$ 9.34
Legal expenses	15.00
Certificate of encumbrance	1.00
Registration	3.00

and there remains a net credit in this account of $251.66. This amount is available to Suzuki at any time.

The man who came to see me was anxious to get the property. He was willing to pay Suzuki as much as $1,200 for it. He told me that was not all the property was worth and that if he was compelled to do so, he would go higher.

Mr. REID: Is that property in Surrey?

Mr. MacINNIS: I have the legal description of it. I think the gentleman who came to see me also saw the hon. member for New Westminster. I bring this matter to the attention of the House of Commons to show that we have two standards for veterans in this country, one standard for veterans of Japanese origin and another standard for other veterans. Citizenship on that basis cannot exist. Before hon. members let this thing go by, I ask them to realize that this is not an insignificant thing. A human being is a pretty peculiar mechanism. You cannot do anything which does not affect you either for good or for ill. If you do something today that you feel is not justified, that you find is in conflict with your conscience, you will be a worse person tomorrow for doing it. On the other hand, if you do a thing because you think you are right, then you will be a better person tomorrow because you did that today. I urge you not to let this thing go just because the freedom of only a few "Japanese" is at issue. It may be somebody else tomorrow, and tomorrow will be too late to rectify the mistakes of today.

The Minister of Labour said this afternoon that the Japanese Canadians themselves were not opposing this extension, if I understood him correctly.

Mr. MITCHELL: No, I did not say that.

Mr. MacINNIS: In any event, what he had in mind was, I think, and I agree with him, that they were satisfied that the evacuation had served a good end. I think that puts the matter straight. But the official organ of the Canadian Japanese, The New Canadian, makes it quite clear that the Japanese themselves are opposed to the extension of these orders. As a matter of fact I met their representative here last week. He interviewed some of the members. May I add that he is a returned man, but before he could go to British Columbia on business he had to get a permit from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I must remind the hon. member that his time is up.

Mr. MacINNIS: If I may just conclude, Mr. Chairman, with the permission of the committee, I should like to quote from this editorial in The New Canadian:

Parliament will shortly be asked to review two anachronistic orders in council. One denies Japanese Canadians the right to live where they please in Canada; the other denies them the right to engage in fishing.

The orders were passed during the war and kept alive through the exercise of special emergency powers of the government. These emergency powers are due to expire on March 31, and the restrictive orders will lapse too unless they are continued by the parliament through special legislation.

It continues:

We wish to bring to the attention of the government sound arguments why the restrictions should go:

1. The restrictions are fundamentally wrong. They have long outlived the original emergency purposes for which they were intended. Mr. H. F. Angus, a well-known political scientist and former government adviser, has denounced the orders as "an abuse of constitutional powers."

2. The government has sacrificed principle to expediency in attempting to make the dispersal of the evacuees stick by maintaining the restrictions longer than warranted by the original emergency. Now, even this questionable sacrifice has no point. The dispersal has been achieved, and we cannot visualize a large-scale return to the coast six years after the evacuation.

Those are two reasons they give, and I think they are valid reasons. There are many more, but I shall not detain the committee further. In taking my seat I would urge the committee to right this wrong while we have the time.

Mr. MITCHELL: Let me say to the credit of my hon. friend the member for Vancouver East that right down through the years he has always been consistent on this question of Canadians of the Japanese race. May I say in reply to him that if I had to do this thing over again, in the light of all the circumstances, I would do exactly what I was charged with the responsibility of doing.

My hon. friend says there is no intense feeling on this question in British Columbia. At least there are mixed feelings; and if the bars had been let down when the war with Japan was over and there had been an influx of these people into British Columbia and Vancouver particularly, at a time when the men were returning from overseas and when housing was short not only in Canada but in every other country that had been engaged in the conflict, I shudder to think of what might have happened. The government had to take the responsibility, and you cannot laugh that off by slogans which appeal to the mob. I am not suggesting that this evening my hon. friend was making slogans which appeal to the mob, but I say that we had to take the responsibility.

My hon. friend also spoke of property rights. I always thought human rights took precedence over property rights.

Mr. MacINNIS: I did not say they did not.

Mr. MITCHELL: I did not interrupt my hon. friend and perhaps he will allow me to develop my argument. I have a vivid recollection of meeting representative people in British Columbia at that time, and having some inside knowledge of the conditions and of the possibility of the destruction of our way of life, I had to say this to them: "I do not know whether you know it or not but you are probably living in the eventide of civilization." In any great war it is unfortunate but true that a loss of property rights is inevitable. Consider the question for a moment on another level. Take the people engaged in the retail motor industry and in the service trades. Their savings and investments went in just the same way as those of the people for whom my hon. friend speaks. That is one of the unfortunate things about war. But first consideration must be given to those who gave human life itself so that this parliament could be sitting here at this moment.

My hon. friend speaks of the accident of birth and says that I have often spoken of an Englishman's home being his castle. I still believe that, but if it had not been for some people with courage and determination in this world during those dark days of the war the Englishman today would not have a home or a castle. If I speak vigorously, my hon. friend will forgive me because he and I were brought up in the same school.

My hon. friend says that these Japanese are denied the right to work. I know of no time since I have been charged with this administration when these people have been denied the right to work. Our dispersal policy has scattered these Japanese across the dominion, to the advantage of themselves and of the dominion. My hon. friend will agree that an intense concentration of them in the city of Vancouver would have made conditions very difficult, taking a long view, in that community.

My hon. friend also spoke of the British government and said I had stated that the first duty of government was to look after the safety of the state. At the moment, as my hon. friend mentioned this evening, the British government finds it necessary to interfere with what many consider the fundamental right of the average person in the United Kingdom so that that nation might live. A personal friend of mine is a prominent member of the Labour party. He severely criticized the government of the day on that score. I have no objection; I do not have to live there although I was born there. At the moment the government of Great Britain in its wisdom knows it is necessary for that country, and is prepared to take the responsibility. That is what we must do in this instance. I am informed that the government of Australia prohibited the landing in Australia of Japanese women who married Australian nationals during the war. If I may say so, that is the attitude of one of the most democratic states or governments in the world today.

My hon. friend raised the question of some order of February 10, 1947. It has been changed since then. Under the administrative order the only power enjoyed by me is that of prohibiting persons of Japanese nationality from residing in or entering into the coastal area of British Columbia. That is the only regulation which exists at the moment.

My hon. friend referred to the figure of fifty miles and made an allusion to Russia. He said that they had to get a permit in Russia to travel fifty miles, and that the same thing exists in Canada. Of course it does not exist at the moment. Might I say this to my hon. friend? If this nation was being attacked and it was necessary for me, charged with some responsibility in the government of this country, to say to him that he could not travel ten feet, he would not travel ten feet if it was necessary for the safety of this nation. I say that very frankly.

I think that covers most of the points, but I want to say this before I sit down. If there is any criticism, of course we shall have to take it; but you cannot undertake the movement of a large body of people such as this without some criticism. It needs arrangement; it needs a tremendous amount of organization; it needs the building of schools, sanatoriums, hospitals and so forth; it needs the agreements of other provincial governments in connection with their social legislation so that they will be responsible at some time and give rights to those people equal to those enjoyed by the inhabitants of the respective provinces. That takes time. I would rather do it in an evolutionary way, as we have done, step by step, timing it as we go along, instead of in any other way, without all the inconvenience, might I say, to the Japanese themselves, that occurred in the United States, and the bitterness re-engendered in some of the cities on the west coast. It is like planting a tree; it is a slow growth. By the end of this year, as indicated in the amended order in council, I think these people will have found a niche for themselves in the other parts of Canada to their own distinct advantage and, in my judgment, to the vindication of the policies approved by this parliament.

In conclusion I wish to say I give my hon. friend credit for being consistent right through the peace, even in the darkest days of the war, in connection with this very difficult problem.

Mr. PEARKES: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the committee has been impressed with the sincerity and the idealism of the hon. member for Vancouver East. Without attempting to reach his eloquence, and knowing that I have not had the experience in the debate that he has had, I should like to put forward the point of view which I think represents that of those who live in my constituency. My constituency is on Vancouver island and in the islands surrounding it. It is a rural constituency, and I have lived in it for thirty or more years; therefore I feel that I can speak with some knowledge of conditions there.

Before the war there were many thousand Japanese living in that constituency. They were engaged in fishing, horticultural and small farming activities; they were engaged as gardeners around some of the big houses, and they were engaged in logging operations. In the main they were living in numerous small communities, but in those communities they frequently constituted a majority in that neighbourhood. They were difficult people to get on with, to co-operate with. They worked by themselves and for people of the same race. When war broke out, the order was given that they should be moved from the Pacific coast for defence purposes. Mind you, that was the opinion of all people who were living on the coast of British Columbia at that time, because there was fear in British Columbia. They did not know how far the navy, the army and the air force of Japan would move toward our coast. I am certain that it was regarded as a wise precaution to take. These young Japanese, when they were ordered away from these villages, moved out with arrogance. They laughed at the lack of preparation that there was for defence of our British Columbia, and they boasted that they would be back again before long. They were stupid boasts, without foundation, I will admit, but they impressed the people who were living there and who were fearful at that time of what might happen. Those boasts and that attitude amongst these Japanese living in the rural parts have not yet been forgotten.

Then the war came, and we were brought close to the war in Asia, much closer than other parts of Canada were. We saw the troops moving through our ports. We had submarine scares; we had a Japanese submarine firing shells on a British Columbian village. These things have not yet been forgotten. Then we saw repatriated prisoners of war, both British and Canadian, moving back from Hong Kong. They were billeted for a while in camps just outside of Victoria. Victoria opened her heart to the British soldiers who were passing through. The Victorians heard the stories of the privations which these British and Canadian soldiers suffered at Japanese hands. There are Canadian soldiers still in Victorian hospitals in British Columbia. These things are not easily forgotten, and I am most anxious today not to take an unreasonable attitude, not to try to continue race hatred and that sort of thing. But I must be a realist, and I know it is not only Anglo-Saxon Canadians who are still bitter against the atrocities which were carried out by the Japanese, for there are many other orientals living in British Columbia. There are many thousands of Chinese still on our coast; the Chinaman realizes that China and Japan have been at war for many years, and he knows of the events which have taken place in Asia during that war. There are fishermen who remember the attitude of the Japanese fishermen on the coast before the war, where a white fisherman was driven off the ground because there were several boats owned by Japanese fishermen fishing in those particular waters.

I am happy to say that time is healing many of the sores and that there is not the same bitterness of feeling there was three years ago. The government has seen fit to adopt the policy of removing Japanese from our coastal area, and it has followed that policy up by distributing them across Canada in various other provinces, each province taking a share of the burden. While I was pleased to hear the Minister of Labour state that those Japanese who were living in other parts of Canada were settling in those areas and were being absorbed by the people in the communities in which they are now living, I have also had communications from a Japanese who tells me that he thought it might not be wise to have a precipitate movement back to the coast and that he hoped that those Japanese who were living in other parts of Canada would be given an opportunity to settle down before the temptation to return to the coast was put before them.

I was pleased to hear the minister read the editorial from The New Canadian. I had not read it myself but it did bear out sentiments that have been expressed to me. Therefore I feel that the government is taking a wise course in saying that for another year it will not open wide the gates of British Columbia and allow all those Japanese to return to the coast before they have really had a chance to test out the living conditions in other parts of the country.

I accept the idealistic attitude, and I think it is right, that we cannot say that one class of Canadians must live in one part of Canada and cannot be free to move to other parts of the country. But I think we must use some reason in this matter and must accept the fact that there has been much bitterness of feeling in the past. That bitterness of feeling is gradually dying down and those Japanese who will one day become Canadian citizens and who are living in other parts of the country are gradually becoming acclimatized and gradually accepting the conditions of life in the other parts and being accepted by the other communities.

While therefore, the ideal, the objective, the goal must be that, as soon as it is practical, the boundaries of British Columbia must be opened and citizens of Canada, no matter what their racial origin, be allowed to move back to the coast, at the same time I question earnestly whether that time has yet arrived.

War is a difficult thing, a hard, ruthless operation. The innocent suffer with the guilty, and I think it better to go slowly in this matter and to give them another year. Would the government not blame itself, if some of those people went back prematurely and entered into the life of a community which had not forgotten all the hatred of a few years ago, and perhaps crimes were committed which all Canadians would regret?

In order to prevent the possibility of crimes being committed, crimes of revenge, I think it is wise to delay the removal of these restrictions for another year. If the government has decided it will remove them—perhaps that is all right—at any rate it will review them in a year's time. But this amendment is that the act will definitely be revoked a year hence, and I do not think either the commonsense people of British Columbia or the Japanese themselves will object to that restriction.

Mr. REID: I rise to take part in this debate for the reason that it might be said by those who are in favour of the Japanese returning to the Pacific coast that those who are against it were silent in the House of Commons because perhaps they could not meet the arguments which had been put up by those who advocated the return of these people to the Pacific coast.

I must commend the consistency of view held by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) and, while I am sympathetic to his views, I trust that he and others of that group are just as sympathetic to us who have long held the opposite view that the grouping of Japanese in one province was a terrible mistake allowed over the years. They are not an assimilable race. The fact has never been brought out that when we deal with this group we are dealing with a group that cannot be assimilated by marriage. I do not find many of our friends opposite willing that their daughters or sons should marry Japanese.

May I refer to two matters touched upon by the hon. member for Vancouver East? He rather beclouded the issue when he spoke of the law put into effect by the provincial government denying Japanese to work on crown lands. That is one of the things we fear on the coast, because I do not think there is any citizen in Canada, no matter what his views are, who would deny the right of any person to earn his livelihood. Realizing that, we take the stand that if they go back to the Pacific coast they will be back in the fishing industry, and therefore we want this delayed as long as possible. I shall speak of that later.

With regard to the particular case the hon. member mentioned, I interrupted to ask if it was the same case I had in mind because I knew this man had gone to my hon. friend. He found he could not buy the land belonging to the Japanese, and wrote me a letter saying, "I am through with the Liberal party forever; I am going to vote C.C.F. I am going to Angus MacInnis, and lay my case before him." Just what are the facts of the case? The government set up a commission to investigate the sale of Japanese property, and they took the stand, I think rightly, that they would not have anything more to do with Japanese property until the commission made its final report. Naturally, when this case came up, though the Japanese was willing to sell the property, the government took the stand that no property belonging to Japanese in British Columbia should be sold until the final report of the commission had been received.

I might say a word or two in this connection, because I happen to know something about the buying of the Japanese property; and I can tell hon. members that in 1942 we paid more than that property was worth. I venture to say that if the government of the day had handed $980,000 to reliable men and told them to go through the Fraser valley and buy the best land they could for our returned soldiers, they would have been able to buy more and better land than we bought from the Japanese. I make that statement without fear of successful contradiction. At that time, in 1942, you could hardly give away land. As was pointed out by the hon. member for Nanaimo, there was fear over the country. On the British Columbia coast there was a blackout. You could not move at night. No one knew where the Japs would strike next. That is all over now, though, and people say, "Oh, what a dastardly thing you did when you took away the property of the Japanese and moved them from the coast." But one has to go back to 1942 to appreciate the fear that existed at that time. When the Japs were moved from the coast I think that action met the views of every citizen of British Columbia. People in Toronto and cities like that were all right; they were quite safe, but on the Pacific and Atlantic coasts there was great fear of what might happen.

I believe those of us who have held to the view that the Japanese should not return to the coast have now gone a long way in our view. You will remember that we argued in this house that we should send back to Japan all those Japanese who had signified their willingness—and this at a time they thought the Japanese were winning, mark you—to go back to that country. We expected that after the war these men would appear before a royal commission of some kind and then be sent back to Japan. We expected that the Japanese would be combed out, and that those deemed undesirable would be sent back. That has not been done, and no one in British Columbia or in this House of Commons is now asking that it be done. Our views have changed to some extent, but I differ greatly with the hon. member for Vancouver East when he says the feeling in British Columbia has entirely changed.

In a moment I am going to mention one place, and I will ask any member of the C.C.F. to go there and tell the people the Japs should be allowed back. When I mention this place I do not want to hear any accusation that I am doing so for political purposes, because I can assure hon. members that the district I am thinking of will not be in the riding of New Westminster when the next general election takes place, so that I cannot be accused of pulling for votes. Incidentally, when this charge is thrown at us that we are doing this for votes, I am always struck with this thought: why were any C.C.F. elected at all in British Columbia? Many members of the B.C. provincial legislature were elected on the C.C.F. ticket, and we have in this house at least two or three members of the C.C.F. who come from British Columbia and who hold views opposed to those I hold. If it is true that we have been taking this stand for political purposes, how is it that these men were elected? I am just trying to draw to the attention of this committee the fact that such charges are utter nonsense. I take strong exception to them, because away back in 1942 —does my hon. friend wish to ask a question?

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): Would the hon. member give the committee the assurance that the property sold by the Japanese to the first purchaser was not resold, in some instances at a very much higher price?

Mr. REID: I cannot give any assurance, because that is a matter for the government and my assurance would not mean anything. I am pointing out that when the property was bought we paid more for it than it was worth at the time. In other words, we lost money. Now we have lawyers from the province of Ontario going among the Japanese and stirring them up, telling them they have been robbed; and I venture to say it will cost this country another six or seven million dollars before we are through. Someone says the C.C.F. are doing that. I do not know whether that is true, but I know these lawyers do not belong to British Columbia; and my great objection would be that these men going around the province are not conversant with property values there.

Mr. FERGUSON: I can assure the hon. member that the lawyer from Ontario is a member of the C.C.F.

Mr. REID: That makes it all the worse; he is doing this not only for money but for political purposes as well. The money end of it was bad enough, but the other makes it almost unpardonable.

I was saying that we on this side, together with many hon. members on the other side, were asking that many things be done in regard to the Japanese. Now, when we come along and ask the government to delay this order for another year, not only in the interests of the people of British Columbia but in the interests of the Japanese themselves, we are opposed tooth and nail by members of the C.C.F. I am not going the raise the old cry, but I would tell hon. members from other provinces that in British Columbia this was never a political question until 1932 or 1933, when the late founder of the C.C.F. party made the statement in the House of Commons that if he and his party were returned to power they would give the vote to the Japanese. I say, without fear of successful contradiction, and I am sure every member from British Columbia will support me, that prior to that time no one would have got up on the platform in British Columbia and talked about the orientals. We were in those days all agreed; but when the leader of the C.C.F. party said they would give the orientals the vote it became a political issue for the first time. I regretted it, because back in 1932 I raised in this house the question of Japanese fishing licences in the Fraser river, and there was no cry of racial discrimination then. I do not know that even the hon. member for Vancouver East opposed the curtailing of the Japanese fishing licences, because at that time, too, I pointed to cases where the Japanese had boarded the boats of white fishermen, first cutting their nets and breaking their engines, and then beating up the fishermen. So I said then that as long as I had breath in my body I would keep advocating in this House of Commons that the heritage which belongs to Canadians would be returned to the Canadian white people.

That was back in 1932, and like the hon. member for Vancouver East I have been consistent. Now we are told by those who hold opposite views that we are doing this for political purposes, and I say it is utter rot when any one throws that accusation at me. As I said before, if that is the case, how does it happen that any members of the C.C.F. party from British Columbia have been elected?

I challenge any member of the C.C.F. party to go to the town of Steveston, where there was a fourteen-room school. Thirteen of the rooms were filled solidly with Japanese children; one room had white and Japanese children. It was a completely Japanese town, taken over by the Japanese, until the war broke out. I challenge any member of the C.C.F., either when an election comes or before, to go to that town and tell those fishermen, "We want the Japanese back, and that when they do go back they will go into the fishing business." They had better take a bodyguard with them. I say that sincerely because at least three of the men of that town wrote me, and I can produce the letters if necessary, saying their boys had been tortured by the Japanese. One said to me, "Reid, if ever those Japs come back here I will give my life to get even with them." It cannot be said that I am making these statements for political purposes, because that part of the country will not be in my riding when the next election comes along. As the hon. member for Nanaimo pointed out, there is still a strong feeling in the province of British Columbia; but we believe that if this could be delayed for another year the problem would solve itself.

Every hon. member will recall the Prime Minister saying in the house that it was the desire of the government to have the Japanese distributed throughout the various provinces. But it was found out that they could not be distributed, legally. They could not be kept in any province legally; we had no law which would do that.

In the government's motion we are taking as humane a method as possible to keep them out of the coastal area for a period, believing that, once they are thoroughly settled throughout Canada, many of them will not desire to return to British Columbia. Let me say this to hon. members from Ontario that if you live long enough to have two or three thousand of them in a group in your province, in the days to come, you will say, "Well, those boys from British Columbia were right; we did not realize it." Wait until they get down to the Niagara district! Wait until they get down to the county of Essex! Just wait until they get to those places and take over from you your land! Wait until they begin to work among themselves and to live like an entire Japanese group and marry within their own group, speak their own language and live their own lives, and you will then say, "Those boys from British Columbia were not wrong, after all. But we did not heed them. They were right."

We have another group in British Columbia I might mention at this time; and British Columbia has always been the place in which one finds racial groups. Out there we also have the Doukhobors. There is no man or woman who can tell what to do with that group. It is one of the greatest problems we have in British Columbia, from a racial group point of view.

An hon. MEMBER: Your government brought them in here.

Mr. REID: I do not care what government brought them in; and I have no doubt if you had been living in that day you would have helped to bring them in. Then we have heard lately a good deal about sending guns and ammunition to China. We hear all kinds of protests about that; but I hear no one protesting about supplying anything to Russia. Oh, no! It is all wrong to send anything to China; but what we send to Russia is all right!

I say if we take a realistic view of this matter it will solve itself in the interests, both of the Japanese and of the people of British Columbia. Continue this order for at least another year. We hear a great deal about minority rights, but no one talks about minority provincial rights. British Columbia is a minority province; yet our cry has gone unheeded year after year.

And so to those of you from other provinces we say: Just ask yourselves why we from British Columbia, after the long years of experience we have had, get up and plead with you to listen to us. We ask you to be with us in this move to try, if we can, to distribute the Japanese across the entire dominion. We are not now asking that they all be put out of the country; I think we should be commended for modifying our view. We have now taken a rational view; but apparently that will not satisfy the C.C.F.

I have risen tonight to express some of my views, to contradict some of the things which have been said, and to show that at least I am not convinced by any of the arguments used by the hon. member for Vancouver East.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Mr. Chairman, I can assure you of this, that hon. members from British Columbia on this side of the house had no intention of taking part in this debate. However it has been more or less forced upon us by the hon. member for Vancouver East.

I did not hear the first part of his speech tonight, and I should like to place on record the reason why I did not hear it. I had the great pleasure and honour today of hearing what in my opinion has been the most distinguished contribution made before members of the House of Commons in the veterans committee since I have been a member of it. It was made by those who are totally blind, those who have lost both limbs, or who were wounded in other ways—amputation cases, totally disabled cases. Because of that, I was not able to be here, and I did not hear all the hon. member had to say. Personally, however, I considered it a great pleasure and honour to listen to those disabled men, many of whom were from Hong Kong, rather than to listen to this great address on adoration of the Japanese. And I believe the Canadian people think as I do.

I want to give the hon. member for Vancouver East credit for his sincerity, because I believe he is sincere. He has been sincere in his arguments on behalf of the Japanese ever since he has been in public life; and for that I give him credit. But I suggest to him he should give us credit for being sincere in our arguments on the other side of the problem, without accusing us of racial hatred.

When I think of those men I saw over there today, some of whom lost both their eyes, others of whom lost both their legs defending us against Japanese, and when I remember that, while I was with those men, an argument was going on in this chamber, only some few feet away, in defence of the Japanese, who did their utmost to deprive us of the liberties we prize so much, I rather wonder.

We from British Columbia have never approached this matter from the racial angle. One reason I am so much interested in it is that the constituency of Fraser Valley is mentioned so often in this connection. I believe some of these farms are in my constituency, and some in that of the hon. member for New Westminster. About five hundred of them were in my riding. I am sorry to say it has not always been members of the C.C.F. who know so little about the Japanese. The only man I know in the House of Commons who knows less than the hon. member for Eglinton about the Japanese is the hon. member for Spadina. Both these hon. members are from Ontario.

It was the hon. member for Eglinton who brought up the hue and cry about selling the farms of the Japanese in the Fraser Valley constituency, and in that of New Westminster. As the hon. member for New Westminster has pointed out, if those prices were taken as of today, yesterday, or even a year ago they might not be considered equitable. But when we consider their run-down condition; when we consider that they were burnt-out, I think they were paid a reasonable rate. And, due to the excellent advocacy of the hon. member for Eglinton and the hon. member for Vancouver East, the people of Canada will pay many millions more.

Let me say this to my hon. friends opposite, through you, Mr. Chairman. I have a friend who worked in Hong Kong for the Canadian National Railways. He was seized and placed in a camp. No, he was not a soldier; he was an employee of the railways. That man was put into a camp, with the result that today his health is completely ruined. He is a physical wreck. Not only was he deprived of his property, his house and his furniture, but his bank account was seized and not one dollar of it has been returned to him. But not a murmur has been heard from the hon. member for Eglinton; not a murmur has been heard from the hon. member for Vancouver East to say that it should have been returned to him by the Japanese government. No, there has been not one murmur from either of them.

I admit that the hon. member for Vancouver East knows the Japanese problem, but the hon. member for Eglinton and the hon. member for Spadina know nothing about it. I defy any one of them to tell me that he is in favour of returning fishing licences to the Japanese of British Columbia. I defy any of them to tell me that—and particularly the hon. members from Saskatchewan who want these Japanese returned to British Columbia. I defy these great saviours of the human race, who believe that there should be no racial discrimination and who, in their own province, have less than 500 Japanese today!

I would speak a word to my hon. friends from Quebec. At the time of the war there were sixty-three Japanese in their province. My good friends from Prince Edward Island and the other maritime provinces did not know a Japanese from a Hindu; they had never seen one; yet they did wish to send them all back to British Columbia.

And let me right now pay a tribute to the Minister of Labour. I disagree with him on many things. It was only the other day that he did not refer to me in a flattering fashion. And I shall disagree with him on more occasions before I leave this house. I say, however, that no other minister has shown more human feelings in dealing with this difficult problem—and dealing so successfully with it—as has the Minister of Labour.

I give the hon. member for Vancouver East credit for sincerity in his belief. I sincerely believe that the most important reason why this legislation should be extended is that it is not for the benefit of the fishermen; it is not for the benefit of the white people of British Columbia; it is for the benefit of the Japanese themselves.

Those of you who do not live in British Columbia do not know the Japanese problem as we know it. I never heard any question raised across the way when I pointed out in this house that we had a large power development in British Columbia which was supplying most of the power for our war industries during the war. Above that power development were located Japanese. After Pearl Harbor they had powder available in their hands to run down and destroy our dams. Not one word came from over there questioning that.

Mr. MacINNIS: Did they use it? Was it not to their credit that they did not use it?

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I tell you the reason why they did not use it. My hon. friend has asked a fair and legitimate question and I am going to tell him why they did not use it. It was because of the challenge by such members as the hon. member for New Westminster, the hon. member for Vancouver North and the hon. member for Fraser Valley. They saw to it that it was not used but we did not have one assistant over there. I do not think you will answer that. I am not giving the government credit for that.

What I do want to impress forcibly upon the committee is the fact that unfortunately the majority of these farms happened to be in the riding of Fraser Valley. An attempt has been made in certain sections of Canada to discredit that riding. This was made by the united or some other service league which was sponsored by a cartoonist paid by the Globe and Mail, and he was supported by the hon. member for Eglinton and the hon. member for Vancouver East. It was said that all these farms were in Fraser Valley.

I know what I am talking about when I say that, in so far as the Fraser Valley is concerned, no doubt the time will come when we as Canadians will assume our fair share of the responsibility for the Japs who are within Canada, but we believe that it would not be to the best interests of the people of the Fraser Valley and especially of the Japanese themselves to have them return at this time.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Mr. Speaker, after listening to the hon. member for New Westminster and the hon. member for Fraser Valley speak on this subject tonight and on previous occasions, I am much happier to be standing with the hon. member for Vancouver East than with the hon. members across the way. I am sure that members of parliament, regardless of where they sit, must admire the stand taken by the hon. member for Vancouver East on this subject as it has been discussed through the years. I should like to refer to the salute given by Alan Morley, columnist in the News-Herald of Vancouver on April 28, 1944. Mr. Morley said:

> But every honest man in British Columbia should stand up and salute Angus MacInnis today. He is the first politician in British Columbia within living memory to stand by an unpopular cause unflinchingly when he knew it would cost him votes and political support.
> For my part, I'll argue against his socialistic fallacies till the air is blue, but I take off my hat to him as a man of honour, and one who is not afraid to stay on the side of decency and humanity when he has everything to lose and nothing to gain by doing so.
> No—I take that back. He has a great deal to lose in the way of popular acclaim and votes at the poll, but he has his own self-respect and the respect of honourable men to gain by sticking to his guns.

I feel sure that when the history of our period is written many will blush with shame when they think that Canada continued to have legislation such as we are discussing tonight when there were a few in the Canadian parliament who felt as did the hon. member for Vancouver East. A year ago there were a number of speeches on this subject. I think the hon. member for Cariboo discussed the question in a rational way. He used some of the evidence that had been used by Bruce Hutchison in the Winnipeg Free Press, a paper that supports the government. Mr. Hutchison wrote a cynical story telling of some Canadian Japanese who had returned to Japan to Christianize the people there. They were reminded by the people in Japan that they had been kicked out of Canada, and the story goes on:

> "Ah, but you do not understand the Christians," the missionaries will explain. "You pagans persecute minorities and hate other races because you believe in it. The Christians do the same thing because they don't believe in it and constantly denounce it. It is no sacrifice for you to behave in this barbarous fashion. But for a true Canadian Christian it is a deep and bitter sacrifice. It means sacrificing all his principles and all the teachings of his religion. Therefore, it is very noble of them. Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his principles for his friend."

Then the hon. member for Spadina took part in the debate. He said:

> Let me prick the conscience of the committee. A hundred and thirty-one Japs served in the Canadian army.

He was referring to Japanese Canadians.

> A hundred and thirty of them were Canadian born; one was a naturalized Jap.

Mr. MITCHELL: What is the hon. member reading from.

Mr. NICHOLSON: From a speech delivered a year ago, to be found on page 2363 of Hansard:

Mr. McILRAITH: Why do not you write one of your own?

Mr. NICHOLSON: This is a much better speech than I could make. The hon. member went on:

> Some of them were wounded, and I believe some of them were decorated. We deny them the right to go back to British Columbia, to go back to a particular zone, though they may have come from that zone. That is going a very long way, and I point out to the committee how serious a matter this is. Certainly we are ahead of the United States with respect to that particular confinement. The most obnoxious racial laws which were ever passed in any country in the world, which were passed in nazi Germany, exempted for a time soldiers who fought on the battle front. Yet in endorsing this order in council we go farther than they ever went. I do not compare my government with them; I do not intend to make that comparison with any other government in this country, but on this Japanese question in all the democratic countries in the world we are now the foremost in racial discrimination.

The hon. member for Fraser Valley spoke this afternoon about being in the company of veterans who had lost their sight or who had lost limbs fighting for democracy. I ask him to tell me if he is proud of a country that denies to Canadian-born Japanese who fought for this country the right to travel freely in Canada? If democracy is worth saving in France and India and Egypt, I think it is worth demonstrating in Canada three years after the war that we really believe in democracy and freedom of speech and freedom of travel.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I protested strenuously against the enlistment of Japanese in the Canadian army, but I will go with my hon. friend and say that any man who served his country should be allowed to travel anywhere in Canada.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I hope the hon. member for Fraser Valley will vote with us when we register our protest.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I do not say all Japs. Will my hon. friend permit me to put it this way? Will I be permitted to vote against the freedom of movement of those who did not come into the war until after Russia had come in?

Mr. NICHOLSON: I think if we are consistent we must not make any distinctions on the basis of nationality, race or colour. People who have been born in this country, people who have spent their lives here should have every liberty, regardless of their colour, race or religion.

There is one other speech to which I should like to refer and I am sorry the hon. member for Stanstead is not here at the moment. I was sorry that he could not get more support when he spoke before. It is significant that in this Canadian parliament there are one or two Progressive Conservatives who are not afraid to stand up and express their views. The hon. member for Stanstead said there were no Japanese in his constituency. He was not concerned about political implications. He said:

> I have no one to reproach me but myself. I stand for the integrity of Canadian citizenship. Today it is the Japanese, tomorrow it may be the Jew; the next day it may be the Irish and the next day somebody else. Citizenship is a very sacred matter. Neither the few nor the many should be permitted to undermine it. For the first time we are being asked to depart from those things which have made us, I was going to say, a free people; for the first time we are asked to depart from the principles which the genius of two great races has evolved and which they have had the courage and the grace till now to apply.

I am not surprised that the hon. member for New Westminster and the hon. member for Fraser Valley should speak as they do. They are consistent. But I am surprised to find the Minister of Justice, who has established a reputation both nationally and internationally for a sense of justice and fair play, continuing for another year these objectionable orders in council. It is significant that the legislation we are now discussing will expire, in any event, by the end of March, 1949. It indicates a guilty conscience on the part of the government that they should select these orders in council and say: even though we might ask for a continuance of the emergency legislation for a longer period, these orders in council will be revoked. The Minister of Justice has represented Canada with distinction at the meeting of the united nations, and I ask him how, in the face of this discrimination, he is able to go there and support article 55 of the charter, which reads:

> With a view to the creation of conditions of stability and well-being which are necessary for peaceful and friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, the united nations shall promote:
> c. universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare has also represented Canada at the united nations, and I find it difficult to understand how he, with his traditions for fair play, can support his government in continuing these objectionable and discriminatory orders in council one day longer than necessary.

Mr. REID: What about Australia?

Mr. NICHOLSON: The Minister of Labour took us to Australia, Russia and the United Kingdom, but he did not take us to Canada in 1948 and tell us why on March 15 of this year the government of this country requires these veterans who fought for Canada—130 of them—to go to the mounted police to get a permit to go to Vancouver.

Mr. MITCHELL: Certain areas are declared out of bounds for soldiers and sailors very often; there is nothing new about that. I do not know whether my hon. friend was in the army, but those of us who have been in the army or navy know that sailors are often told: You cannot go down that street, it is out of bounds.

Mr. BROOKS: Is Vancouver out of bounds for the same reason?

Mr. MITCHELL: It may be.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Is it out of bounds for all veterans, no matter what their racial origin? Is it out of bounds for veterans of German origin, or veterans of Italian origin?

I would say in reply to the hon. member for Fraser Valley that, although we have not a large number of Japanese Canadians in Saskatchewan, we have not closed our doors to them. We are proud to have them. Those who are there are making a valuable contribution to the life of the province.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Why only 300?

Mr. NICHOLSON: A while ago the hon. member said 500.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: It is 487 to be exact.

Mr. NICHOLSON: It is not my fault there are not more there. If more want to come to Saskatchewan to establish themselves there they will be warmly received by our people. This is a free country.

The hon. member for Nanaimo spoke a little more carefully this evening on this question than he did a year ago, but I was surprised that he should advocate continuing this injustice and letting the innocent suffer for another year, rather than righting the wrong now, when we should do so.

The hon. member for New Westminster said that C.C.F. members were elected in

[Mr. Nicholson.]

British Columbia in spite of the attitude taken by the hon. member for Vancouver East. That reflects credit on the people of British Columbia. I am delighted to know that a majority of the citizens there are not so irresponsible in discussing questions of this sort as the hon. member for New Westminster has been every time he has discussed this question in parliament.

Before this debate closes, I hope the Minister of Justice will indicate his support of the motion moved by the hon. member for Moose Jaw.

Mr. ARGUE: Before the motion is put, I should like to say one or two things about the order in council that is now before us. It seems to me that we have been confining our remarks to what has gone on in the past, instead of correcting mistakes and seeing that they will not happen again. I am glad that the government has seen fit to limit the operation of this order in council to April 1, 1949. Whether 500 Japanese for Saskatchewan is a fair quota to the mind of the hon. member for Fraser Valley I do not know, but I can tell him that there are more Japanese Canadians there now than there have been in the past. Some of them are working in the government service and are very well trained and doing a good and efficient job.

The province of Saskatchewan does not discriminate against members of the Japanese race or any other race. It passed a bill of rights in 1947, chapter 35 of the statutes of that year, guaranteeing human rights and fundamental freedoms to all peoples, irrespective of their racial origin. I think it is time the government got around to granting basic human freedoms to Canadian citizens, instead of simply setting up a committee of inquiry. I would ask the Minister of Justice this question, and I ask it because he was one of Canada's chief delegates to the united nations. Does he not think this order in council violates clause 3 of article 1 of the united nations charter?

Mr. ILSLEY: Not as a transition measure, no.

Mr. ARGUE: Then the minister would say that if it were a permanent policy it would violate that particular clause, and I might presume that is one of the reasons why a time limit has been set.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is not the question which is up here; but I certainly would say that, as a transition measure, it is just a matter of fixing the time when these restrictions should come to an end. Is my hon. friend not arguing very much on the question of principle? The principle is decided here.

Mr. ARGUE: I am glad to hear the remarks of the Minister of Justice. I think the best thing for the government to do would be to adopt this amendment, which would remove discrimination.

Mr. ILSLEY: Just a minute. I was talking to somebody else when my hon. friend started his question. Was he talking about his amendment or the measure itself?

Mr. ARGUE: I asked the minister a question in terms of the order in council.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is what I understood him to say. It seemed to me that very good arguments have been advanced for the position that the Japanese who are in various parts of Canada after the transference, which is admitted to have been a good thing for them and a good thing for Canada, should be allowed a little further time to enable them to take root in the various communities before this is brought to an end.

Mr. ARGUE: Then the minister will admit that until Canada complies with clause 3 of article I of the united nations charter—

Mr. ILSLEY: No; my hon. friend is talking childishly, I was going to say.

Mr. ARGUE: I understood the minister to admit that.

Mr. ILSLEY: Not at all.

Mr. FERGUSON: May I ask hon. members not to forget the crocodile tears we shed after the first war with Germany, and not to be too lenient with these people who were our enemies in the last war. I ask them not to forget the atrocities perpetrated on our soldiers and the burdens which were placed on their shoulders, and a burden which they had to carry during the war because of the Japanese. I ask them not to forget the fear that went across this country on account of the Japanese. Let us hear a little more in this country about the great country we own and about the great men who are here, the great Canadians who built this country. Let us hear a little less talk or soap-box oratory with regard to a few Japanese. Let us formulate plans for Canadians in Canada and keep our powder dry, because we may soon have to use it again. Stop trying to breed discontent from coast to coast; stop weeping crocodile tears and stop disparaging people in their own country, people who built up the country. Instead of doing that, put your shoulder to the wheel, assume your burden and show that you are being a good Canadian. We hear too much talk in this house from a certain party advocating freedom of speech, freedom of this and freedom of that for people who recently have come out of a position where they would have cut our throats if it had not been for some members of parliament who represent various constituencies in Vancouver and throughout Canada. It is too bad we have to sit and listen in our time to that kind of stuff.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Mr. Chairman, I stand to support the motion, not the amendment. May I say that I do that in spite of the reasons given by the Minister of Labour. In short, I put it this way: in spite of his speech, I am still in favour of his idea.

When he spoke this afternoon every reason he gave us indicated that the emergency was over. We now have an agreement with Alberta and, as he said, with some other provinces. The way we look at it is this. We have always heard, and I think it is true, that half a loaf is better than no bread. I agree with my hon. friends over here that the sooner we can end this thing, the better. But now for the first time we have a date fixed, with a definite ending. May I say, in compliment to the minister and to his staff, that I prefer to take their word, with all the knowledge they have of what the situation is at the moment, rather than that given by theorists immediately to my left, with no facts at all to support their position. Of course we can understand that. That is the role usually occupied by them. They are just running true to type. Therefore I intend to support the extension of the order, knowing as I do that it is cut down in its dimensions and it has only one particular application.

Mr. Chairman, I hope this world and particularly this country will always have idealists. The world will not get anywhere when we lose men with ideals, particularly men who are perpared to make sacrifices for those ideals. I compliment those on my immediate left, the socialist party, on having an ideal of complete freedom for everyone who has the right to call himself a Canadian citizen. But let us be just a little bit realistic. In 1943, or whenever it was that the order in council was passed, we had this situation. I commend and compliment the government upon their action. There was only one over-riding thought in the minds of everyone of us, and that was the safety of our country and of our government, more particularly the safety of ourselves and of our families. If the government had failed to take that step and events had run the other way I can quite imagine the ruckus that would have been raised by the people to my left on the failure of the government to take common-sense steps at that time. Hindsight is a great thing. Frankly—

Mr. IRVINE: You ought to know; you have lots of it.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): My hon. friend has deteriorated greatly. He beat me in an election in 1921. I telephoned him and congratulated him on doing so, and I did not think such a childish remark would come from him at the present moment. However, if they insist on being children I suppose there is nothing that any of us can do about the matter.

But to continue, and to finish in one sentence, what I was saying is this. When we took that step parliament took it for the safety of the country. Perhaps they are prolonging the agony a little bit, but I say—and it may soon arise in this parliament in connection with another group of people—that when the safety of the state and the nation is at stake we take unusual methods, and I am proud of the unusual method taken by this government and by this parliament in this particular instance. It is true that the Japanese have turned out fine. Who would stand in this house during 1943 when we were in trouble and oppose this motion seriously? At that time our freedom and safety were at stake. This is a poor time now to exercise that hindsight of which the hon. member tells me I have lots. At least I remember 1921. It is a poor time to exercise hindsight and abuse the government. Take the speech this afternoon of the hon. member for Moose Jaw with respect to a few Japanese who are in that constituency. I know nothing about it except what I have seen in the papers. All I have read is that they will not get out, as 99 per cent of the other Japanese have done, and earn their living in a proper way. I know nothing more about it than that.

I do not like these letters from disgruntled people used by a member of this house when he will not put his reputation, and his position as a member, behind what he reads from a letter. I wish to tell you, Mr. Chairman, something further about the Japanese in Alberta. As you know, and no doubt as many other hon. members know, we have quite a few of them in our irrigated area around Brooks, Scandia and Rainier, where I do some shooting. I have been going there to do a little shooting —at least I have been aiming if I have not shot much—and I know that there are several families there who have adapted themselves to the conditions of farming in that area and are making money. I agree with what the Minister of Labour has said, and that is reflected in the balance sheet, showing the amount of wealth they have acquired as compared with the amount they had before. They have made for themselves a position in the community.

I do not want us to forget idealism. Let us stay with it and swear by it. But do let us get rid of a lot of nonsense which is preached here under the veil of idealism.

Mr. MacINNIS: I hope the Minister of Labour and other ministers are duly impressed with the touching faith which the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) has in the correctness of government policies. I imagine we would get finished much more quickly if he could maintain that faith all through the session.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): How many times have I spoken this session?

Mr. MacINNIS: I do not object at all to your speaking. I was merely mentioning your faith in the correctness of government policy. It is so new a phenomenon that it touched me keenly, and I hope it also touched the ministers opposite.

What I rose to do, however, was to make a short reply to the member for Simcoe North (Mr. Ferguson). While I am on my feet, I would point out that not a solitary member who has risen in opposition to this amendment has touched the crux of the situation at all.

Mr. FERGUSON: Speak up. We cannot hear you.

Mr. MacINNIS: That is a new one to me.

Mr. FERGUSON: Lots of things are new to you.

Mr. MacINNIS: It is something new to me that people cannot hear me, because one of my chief worries is to keep from talking too loud. The question before the committee is not what happened at Hong Kong. The people whom we are discussing now had nothing to do with Hong Kong. The question is not what we did in 1942 or what we had to do in 1942. The question is simply this; is there any logical reason for restricting the right, not of Japanese but of Canadian citizens, in this way? My hon. friend the member for Simcoe North says, "Just a few Japanese". It is not a matter of just a few Japanese. It is a question affecting Canadian citizens, and the question before the committee is, can a logical reason be given, a reason that you would accept if it applied to you for restricting your liberty for one year longer than is necessary?

It has already been extended for a year longer than I think necessary; that is, from March, 1947, to March, 1948, and I am satisfied that there is no good purpose to be served by extending it for another year.

Most of the people I see around me are Christians, and consequently they believe in the precept of doing unto others as one would be done by. That being so, how many hon. members can stand up and say that they would not object to having their freedom restricted for a year or even for a day? I would not want to have my freedom restricted for another day, and I do not want to restrict the freedom of anyone else. There is here no practical issue involved that demands it. Therefore, until that practical issue is put before me, all this hocus-pocus of what has happened in the last five or six years does not amount to a hill of beans. It is irrelevant, all of it. What is important is the fundamental rights of Canadian citizens. If you cannot answer that question, just keep your seats.

Mr. McIVOR: This is the first time I have spoken on the Japanese question. I have heard a good many debates on the question, and perhaps one of the finest speeches I have heard was delivered by the former member for Comox-Alberni. I do not think anyone's mind has been changed by the debates in this house since that time, and I would say that the Japanese who have gone out from Vancouver and have been put to work in other places should be considered, and the question asked, whether they want to go back to Vancouver or not.

I said in another place that if you want to make the Japanese who are working on the great lakes sawmills ripping mad, tell them they have to go back to Vancouver. I think we have been long enough on this debate. Let us get on with the business.

Mr. KNOWLES: May I ask the Minister of Justice one question? I am not going to prolong the debate, because the hon. member for Vancouver East has expressed my sentiments. But my question arises from a remark made by the hon. member for Nanaimo as he sat down. He said that he accepted the government's decision to keep this order in council in effect for another year, subject to whatever decision they might make when another year rolled around.

An hon. MEMBER: He did not say that.

Mr. KNOWLES: It does not matter, but I understood him to say something that left a doubt in my mind as to what the decision of the government might be with respect to the question a year from now. My question is: Can we take it as ironclad that order in council P.C. 804 of March 2, 1948, which revokes P.C. 946 as of April 1, 1949, is irrevocable?

Mr. ILSLEY: The order speaks for itself. It is revoked as of April 1, 1949, and the government would be without power to revive it hereafter. The only way in which it can be extended beyond April 1, 1949, is by new legislation.

Mr. KNOWLES: Thank you.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): I cannot let the debate end without thanking the hon. member for Fort William for the kindly reference he made to my predecessor Mr. A. W. Neill, who, I am sure, was one of the very competent authorities on this subject.

Tonight there have been excellent speeches by a number of hon. members. I do not subscribe to the views of the C.C.F. party, but the speeches delivered by the hon. member for Fraser Valley, the hon. member for New Westminster, the hon. member for Calgary West, and the hon. member for Nanaimo expressed my view. The hon. member for Nanaimo comes from a constituency on Vancouver island adjoining mine, and he made a fair statement of the case as to the conditions and the sentiments felt by the people living on the coast of British Columbia. The ridings of Nanaimo and Comox-Alberni contained the greatest number of Japanese while they were concentrated on the coast, and I think the committee realizes that the hon. member for Nanaimo has a fair working knowledge of the difficulties that had to be faced in handling these people before the war and also during the war period.

When the hon. member for Vancouver East discusses a subject I am always impressed with his patent sincerity; but I must say his approach in this case was typical of the approach of his party to any concrete proposal. That approach is always academic.

Mr. MacINNIS: There was nothing academic about what I said tonight.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): It was definitely academic. We have a concrete problem before us, and your party always faces concrete problems in an academic way because you have had very little experience in meeting problems on your own responsibility.

I can only say that one of the most frequent expressions I hear in my riding is, "Thank God we had Humphrey Mitchell handling this problem during the war." I was surprised, to tell the truth, to see the hon. member for Moose Jaw once more undertaking to lead the C.C.F. party in a debate on the Japanese question. I have no reason to believe his knowledge is any greater tonight than it was last year, and at that time I said I did not think he would know a Hottentot from a Japanese. Since then I have seen something in the headlines about some sort of fiasco stirred up in Moose Jaw over a few Japanese who would not leave the excellent accommodation provided by the government. From reading the newspapers it would seem to me that these Japanese were a bunch of martyrs. I quite agree with the hon. member for Calgary West, however, that if these people think they are going to live forever at government expense it is time someone smartened them up. I really do not think the hon. member for Vancouver East or the hon. member for Moose Jaw are doing the Japanese a service by practically encouraging them in the attitude they take.

Mr. THATCHER: I am sure the hon. member wants to be fair. All these Canadians want to do is go home.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): I noticed that the hon. member for Vancouver East complained about these Japanese being kept from the coast. I can understand their position; no one likes to be kept away from any place where he wants to go.

Mr. MacINNIS: I did not say a word about the Japanese being kept away from the coast. I complained about Canadian citizens being refused permission to travel anywhere in this country.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): Well, all right; let us call them Canadians of Japanese origin. It seems to me that hundreds of thousands of Canadian boys were forcibly removed from their homes and sent to Europe for six or seven years, during which time they were definitely in a much more precarious position than the Japanese ever were in this country.

Mr. MacINNIS: But the war is over now.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): The hon. member for Fraser Valley touched upon a vital point. We have heard a great deal of discussion here about the way in which advantage was taken of the Japanese as far as property was concerned; how they were dispossessed of their property, and were not paid a fair price. I believe the hon. member for Fraser Valley had the answer. In 1942 you could not have given anyone in Saskatchewan a farm in the Fraser valley. They did not have enough nerve to go and live there; and it would not have been wise to go there. As far as the Japanese fishing boats on the Pacific coast are concerned, let me tell you they got an inflated war price for those boats. It is true that it was not the price they would get today, but values have almost doubled in all lines since that time. There have been isolated instances where these people have had a bad deal, I know, and that is why I supported the setting up of a committee to deal with these matters. When anyone values this property on the basis of today's values and compares that with the valuation when the Japanese left, in 1942, he is not being fair either to the government or to the taxpayer, to whom, after all, the government must be responsible.

In the interests of these people, these Canadian citizens of Japanese origin if that suits the hon. member for Vancouver East better, it seems to me that it will be better if they are kept away from the coast for another year. I can only tell you what I know of my own people, but I can say they are still bitterly opposed to the Japanese. Time cures many things, and I sincerely hope it will cure this situation also, because I have no desire to see race prejudice of any kind perpetuated in Canada. In closing, however, I wish to express the thanks of my constituents to the Minister of Labour for the excellent job he did during the war and the excellent job he is doing today.

Mr. HLYNKA: I should like to ask the Minister of Justice a question, and his answer will determine the way I vote. Is it desired to extend this order in council for another year for the purpose of defence, or is it simply a transitional measure? If it is a precautionary step which may be necessary for our future defence I will support the extension of the order in council, but if it is only a transitional measure I am afraid I shall have to vote against it.

Amendment negatived on division: yeas, 23; nays, 73.

Mr. ILSLEY: Perhaps we had better take the Department of Fisheries now. We need not necessarily have any discussion on these orders in council, but I want to mention them so that, if there is any desire to do so, they may be discussed. If not, we can pass them over and take up something in which we are interested. There are just two orders in council under this department. One is an order in council enacting the pelagic sealing regulations. These are the subject of a bill already introduced in this parliament, and this order in council will be revoked when the bill becomes law, so that it is of temporary duration. The other is an order in council relating to fishing licences, which terminates on the same date as the order in council I have just mentioned.

Mr. PEARKES: If no objection is taken to the extension of this order in council regarding sealing, it would not commit us to supporting the bill which will be discussed later?

Mr. ILSLEY: Oh, no; no hon. gentleman is committed in regard to the bill by his attitude in respect of this order in council.

Mr. MacINNIS: It is not my intention to say very much in regard to order in council P.C. 251, because the same arguments apply here that applied to P.C. 946.

Since the committee seems to be in favour of equal rights for all Canadians at some time in the future, I imagine they would vote any amendment to this order down as well as the other one. But I should like to draw the attention of the committee to how orders in council, when they are carried on like this, can be misused. The situation today has no relation whatsoever to the wording in the operative section of this order in council, the last paragraph of which reads:

Now therefore His Excellency the Governor General in Council on the recommendation of the Minister of Fisheries under the authority of the War Measures Act, chapter 206, revised statutes of Canada 1927—

And note here:

—for reasons of national defence and security during the period of the war is pleased to order and doth hereby order that no fishing licence authorizing fishing in or off British Columbia as contemplated by the Fisheries Act, chapter 42, 22/23 George V and regulations adopted pursuant thereto shall be issued to persons of Japanese racial origin and also that no such person shall be permitted to serve on fishing vessels.

Here we have an order in council passed for reasons of national defence and for reasons of security during the period of the war, which is now being carried on for more than three years after the war. And for what reason? I have been asking that question all evening: For what reason? What is the reason for restricting the rights of Canadian citizens, three years after the war is ended, by an order in council passed for reasons of national security and national defence during the period of the war?

There are so many lawyers in the house who can make wonderful speeches on practically nothing, I would say to them that here is a fundamental issue.

Mr. WARREN: Do you include yourself?

Mr. MacINNIS: No; I am a modest person and would not think of putting myself on a level with the lawyer spell-binders in the house. But I am posing a fundamental issue in this order which, no doubt, we are going to pass as if it did not affect anyone, and which it does not seem to be worth anyone's time to get up and talk about. Let me point out again that this order in council was passed for "reasons of national defence and security during the period of the war." The war is now over. By the time this order comes to an end on April 1, 1949, the war will have been over for almost four years. I would ask somebody to give me some reasoned explanation for conduct of that kind.

Mr. MITCHELL: The reason is simple. What is the use of giving a person a fishing licence if he cannot go into the protected area where the fishing is done.

Mr. MacINNIS: That is a reason?

Mr. MITCHELL: It is just as simple as that; you do not need a constitutional lawyer to give that reason.

Mr. MacINNIS: Yes; there we have the reason. First of all we have an order in council passed for purposes of defence that restricts the freedom of people, to move about as they wish, to restrict the movement of Canadian citizens of Japanese origin to the Pacific coast of British Columbia. Then the Minister of Labour, with that logic of which only the Minister of Labour is capable, says that, because you have refused Canadian citizens the right to go to British Columbia, there would be no use in giving them a licence to go fishing off the coast of that province. I agree that the explanation is a wonderfully simple one. In fact I am sorry it is so simple.

Mr. MITCHELL: It is so simple—but my hon. friend likes things complicated.

Mr. MacINNIS: Oh, no.

Mr. MITCHELL: Some people make things so complicated they cannot understand them themselves; but they think the other fellow should. This is simple enough. If they cannot get into the protected areas, then they cannot fish in them.

Mr. MacINNIS: I would like the Minister of Labour to see the point.

Mr. MITCHELL: Make it complicated, and I will understand it.

Mr. MacINNIS: I suppose I might as well give up. The minister cannot understand why a person should object to the continuation of an order in council such as P.C. 251 because, forsooth, the government have already passed an order in council which takes away the freedom which could be enjoyed if P.C. 251 was rescinded.

Mr. MITCHELL: You are getting as bad as the lawyers.

Mr. MacINNIS: Well, one thing I am glad of is that I am not as bad as the Minister of Labour. I never heard anything quite as daft as that argument.

I notice that the Minister of Justice, with his usual good sense, has kept his seat and has not tried to explain an order of this kind. I admire him for that. Indeed, I have admired him for years for his integrity in the house and for his insistence upon not doing or saying anything unless he was sure he was right. I am glad tonight he is not departing from that practice.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I agree very largely with what the hon. member has said. The Minister of Labour took time out to prove that the emergency was over, when we were discussing the last item. We supported the order in council. I did so, because I could see it ended there. All these things are passed as emergencies. I quite agree with the hon. member for Vancouver East that some of these days we should know what kind of emergency we are facing, now that the war is over. The technical answer may be that the treaty of peace has not yet been signed. Even so, I intend to support this order in council, because I think we are now beginning to see the end of this picture.

Once again may I say I support it for reasons not yet given by the government; because their reasoning has proved that there is no emergency. Yet in a matter of emergency I hear them say, "We see the end of that emergency." I take their word for it, and I therefore support this order in council.

Mr. MITCHELL: Carried.

Mr. KNOWLES: On division.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: What is the next order?

Mr. ILSLEY: Orders in council of the wartime prices and trade board.

Mr. KNOWLES: I have just a brief word to say in connection with the order in council setting up the wartime prices and trade board, which is P.C. 8528 of November 1, 1941.

What I shall have to say is in reply to what was said this afternoon by the Minister of Justice. He will recall that at that time I placed before the house a motion which would have given the committee power to put another section into this bill making it necessary to keep in existence the wartime prices and trade board machinery for the full year this bill is to be in force. The minister objected to the substance of my proposal, and did so on several counts.

One of the remarks he made was that it was an empty gesture. I did not take the time of the house to reply at that time; indeed I should imagine I did not then have the right to do so. I want to say a word in reply to it now.

In attempting to make clear what he meant by calling my motion an empty gesture, the minister said that even if my proposed amendment to section 4 of the act were accepted, which would thereby prevent the government from revoking the wartime prices and trade board orders in council, it would still be possible for the wartime prices and trade board, under the authority of the order, to revoke all price controls and do away with all price ceilings. What the minister said is quite correct, but I want to point out now that there is another side to the coin.

So long as the order in council itself is in force, in other words so long as the wartime prices and trade board is in existence, not only can it do away with price ceilings that are in existence, but it can reimpose price ceilings when it appears to the government that such reimpositions are necessary. I remind the minister and I remind the committee that that was done last fall in connection with a number of items when the situation seemed to be getting out of hand; it was done also on the price of butter, although at a pretty high level. At any rate the wartime prices and trade board brought back, by orders of the board, price ceilings and mark-up controls which had been done away with.

If the basic order in council setting up the wartime prices and trade board had been revoked by the government the board would not then have been in a position to reimpose those price ceilings. The minister is quite within his rights in objecting to my proposal on other grounds. I know he takes a constitutional position with which I do not agree, because I do not think this can be considered in terms of national emergency. I see it in terms of something that is of concern to the people of Canada as a whole, something over which in my view the federal parliament has control. My colleague, the hon. member for Kindersley, has effectively developed that argument on a number of occasions. I submit that it was not quite like the minister of Justice, and I believe if he would think it through a little further we would not press the point that my proposal this afternoon was without meaning.

The effect of my proposal was that the basic order in council should not be revoked because the Minister of Finance might some day want to go a little farther along the pathway of decontrol which would then get this country into a position where even the government, if it wanted to, could not reimpose price ceilings that might be desirable to the government as well as to the people of Canada.

The house settled the issued with the vote this afternoon, so that I do not propose to take up the time of the committee in trying to move the amendment at this stage. Obviously, if the house would not give permission for the committee to move the amendment, the committee would turn it down now. Perhaps this is the last debate that we shall have on the wartime prices and trade board, and I want to say that in our view the government has failed the people of Canada in its policy of decontrol. In our view the government has wiped out the wonderful record in terms of price control that it established under the direction of the Minister of Justice when he was Minister of Finance during the war, and the government will hear about it yet in the one way that governments hear about things in due course.

In the meantime I want to register once again my protest at the speed with which the government has taken the people of Canada down the pathway of decontrol. I am sorry the house did not see fit this afternoon to pass the motion that I made, so that we might have been in a position to make sure that the wartime prices and trade board would be kept in effect, at least for the lifetime of this bill.

Mr. ILSLEY: My hon. friend has made an ingenious argument in favour of the principle of the amendment he moved this afternoon. As he says, this probably is the last chance. He has tried to argue that there was some merit in the position that he took this afternoon. It is certainly threshing old straw for us to go over and over this again. How would it secure the purpose that my hon. friend apparently is interested in, the compelling of the government to desist from price control? He says that at least it compels the government not to get rid of the board.

The government certainly would not be getting rid of the board unless they were determined not to impose any more controls. Of what avail would it be to keep an empty shell there for a year if the government decided not to use that shell? That is all the amendment of this afternoon would have done. The government would certainly never decide to do away with the board unless they decided to do away with controls. For my hon. friend to have some glimmer of hope that, by forcing them to keep the shell there, some way or another he would influence their conduct, is an illusory thing altogether. That is what I meant by saying that it was an empty gesture.

Mr. KNOWLES: Even a glimmer of hope with respect to the government is illusory.

Mr. ILSLEY: I am talking about the hope that this sort of formal technical move such as the amendment of this afternoon would have any effect upon government action. I explained that all a year ago and I have explained it again now. Any government, this government or any other, would act on a different principle altogether. They would act on the substance of the thing. If they felt the occasion required slower decontrol, they would move more slowly in decontrolling. But they would take abundant caution against getting rid of the machinery that would be necessary for decontrol. I am merely meeting my hon. friend's laboriously built up argument which he has just put forward to justify the technical move he made this afternoon.

I do not feel like letting all these compliments to myself go by at the expense of somebody else. I do not feel like accepting them. I think my hon. friend is completely underestimating the importance of the impact of forces which finally got beyond control. It is open to my hon. friend to argue that we should pour out great sums by way of subsidies as they still do in the United Kingdom and in some other countries. That would and could have kept down the prices of some goods at the expense of the treasury. But, as I said before, I do not think it is a good policy. I am sure it is not a permanent policy and I know it is a very dangerous policy.

As I said in another debate, I think people in positions of authority in other countries are disposed to congratulate the government of Canada on having the courage to disentangle themselves from the jungle of subsidies before it choked them, before it choked the taxpayers and the people of the country. That is the only practical thing to do. To try to control prices along the lines they were being controlled a few years ago under conditions such as existed then is to attain the impossible. By the pouring out of subsidies there could be some transference of purchasing power from certain Canadians to other Canadians but, for the reasons I have given repeatedly, I do not think that is desirable.

Mr. KNOWLES: I agree with the minister that what counts in this matter is the substance rather than any formal proposal put before the house, and it is not my intention to say anything further about the proposal that has been voted down by the house. But I want to say this to the minister. He uses the phrase "threshing old straw" and may feel that he can apply that to the proposals and the arguments that we have put before the house in our fight in this matter over the past two and a half years, but I can tell him that it is not old straw so far as the people of Canada generally are concerned.

Mr. KUHL: How can you speak for all the people of Canada?

Mr. KNOWLES: It is not long since 76 per cent of the people of Canada recorded themselves in a Gallup poll as favouring the continuation of price controls and subsidies. I simply say to the former minister of finance, without embarrassing him by any further compliments, that it was this government's own practice during the war which educated the people of Canada in the possibilities of this means of keeping down the cost of living and of distributing, as the minister has just said, the wealth of the people of this country to a certain extent. We have had so many motions and amendments turned down in this house that members are beginning to treat it as though it were a case of threshing old straw, but it is still a pretty important measure to the people of Canada.

The CHAIRMAN: We will take up the next order.

Mr. MacNICOL: I have a question to ask with reference to P.C. 9029, 21/11/41. A house owner in Toronto who owns two buildings rents one for $45 a month and supplies the heat. The man and wife to whom he rented it have sublet every room in the house but one. The tenant and his wife live in that one room and have sublet all the other rooms to tenants from whom they receive $196 a month. The owner has asked me what means of redress he has. He cannot get any more rent, and the coal he buys to heat the building has advanced in price at least 50 per cent. What can that owner do?

Mr. ILSLEY: There is a board order, 294, section 7(1)(d) which allows an application for an increase of the maximum rent if the $45 is lower than the rental for comparable property in the neighbourhood. Paragraph (f) of the same section allows a ten per cent increase because of subletting.

[Mr. Ilsley.]

Mr. SKEY: Would the minister give the date of that order?

Mr. ILSLEY: October 1, 1943, but there have been many amendments since then.

Mr. MacNICOL: How would this owner get redress? He cannot put the tenants out and he cannot get possession of the property. The tenant is collecting almost four times as much rent from his sub-tenants as the owner of the property receives.

Mr. ILSLEY: Would my hon. friend mind giving the chairman of the board a ring in the morning and putting the case to him and getting a reference to the relative sections?

Mr. MacNICOL: Yes, I will do that. Thank you.

Mr. SKEY: The case that has just been put by the hon. member for Davenport I can assure the minister is one of frequent occurrence in a great many cities in Canada. There are many similar cases which I have had referred to me, in which it is very difficult for the property owner to get anything approaching justice.

But I want to speak tonight particularly of the rooming-house operators. They submitted a brief and representations to the Minister of Finance, and I should like to put some of their representations on record because they will be of interest to the minister and the members. On January 28 they wrote the Minister of Finance and the members of the house, and among other things they said:

> The rentals act fails to benefit either the roomer or the landlord when it is applied to renting furnished rooms.

They acknowledged Canada's housing prices and their own assistance in alleviating that crisis by renting rooms. They refer to the time during the war when the government appealed to people with space in their homes to rent accommodation, and they cite the fact that immediately afterwards tenants were frozen, and the rooming house operator was unable to remove even the small percentage of objectionable tenants. They ask that the rental controls be drastically amended as far as rooming house operators are concerned.

Their main point is this, that while the owner of a property which is used as a rooming-house is permitted an increase of ten per cent in his rent, the rooming-house operators are allowed no comparable compensation in respect of their roomers. At the same time the rooming-house operator is faced with all the current increases in costs, fuel, repairs, service, light and all these other things that go into the running of a home. These expenses have increased substantially in the last two years. They ask respectfully that the regulations be amended to permit them at least a comparable rental increase with that of their own landlords; they ask for some alleviation of the six months' freezing order, which it takes to remove what are, in many cases, obnoxious tenants. They do not ask point-blank that the controls be taken off. They are too conscious of the situation in Canada today to want to produce a bit of bad citizenship such as that; but they do ask that at least they be allowed the same increase in rental that their landlord has been allowed, and some alleviation in the eviction controls which will permit them at least a little control over the type of tenant that they have in their homes. They point out the increase in the cost of all furnishings, supplies and necessities, which are all borne by the rooming-house operators.

I should like to put on the record for the minister the fact that this organization has submitted the names of operators in twelve major cities in Canada. The cities are, Montreal, Winnipeg, Windsor, Quebec, Vancouver, Halifax, Kingston, London, Hamilton, Ottawa, Toronto and Barrie. This organization spreads all through these cities, and if they had had time I know they would have had even more. Let me give some examples of what they are suffering today. In one letter we find that a single woman rented a room. She was married and brought her husband to live in the same accommodation and not even a minor increase in the rental was allowed. In another case a woman has a roomer, and since the advent of this roomer into her house she has found that articles have disappeared, her own articles from her own home and articles of other roomers; yet it takes her six months to get rid of this tenant whom she believes to be obnoxious. The rentals board advise her that she must either give the six months' notice or prefer a charge, and unfortunately she has no proof.

In another case we find a man who served five years in the air force. He took over a rooming house. The rent was $70, with the lighting costing $4.50 a month. He now finds that he has to pay $84 a month rent and $24.90 for his light for two months. The price of his coal has risen from $10.90 a ton to $15.90, and at the same time he can get no increase in rentals from his roomers. Those cases are all authenticated on the files of this organization.

Here is the case of a woman who was mentally deranged. She was placed in a home by the welfare agency of that city. It took the owner of the home six months to remove her from the premises. There are other examples, but I will not quote them all, except to say that this freezing order has had an unfortunate result in so far as accommodation is concerned. It has meant that when rooms have become vacant the owner of the accommodation will not rent them again in a great many cases. Apartments become vacant, and the owners of the apartment are not willing to rent them again, because they have had such trouble with tenants under this freezing order. I made recommendations to the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply when he was in charge of this. I am not going to do so now. I am putting these facts on the record to call it to the attention of the minister. In all seriousness, I say to the minister and to his officials who sit in front of him, that if, in this time of acute housing shortage, you want to do something to help out you should consider these facts that I put before you tonight and do what you can to alleviate the situation in which not only rooming-house operators but owners of a great deal of vacant accommodation in Canada find themselves.

Mr. MANROSS: Are not rooming-houses permitted to increase their rates the same as hotels? The Chateau Laurier has increased its rates 33⅓ per cent. Would not rooming houses have the same privilege?

Mr. ILSLEY: The answer is no, they have not.

Mr. TIMMINS: Since these consolidated orders were passed last year, there was a certain amendment made with respect to the rental order. One of these orders was to the effect that, in respect of residential properties where there was extreme hardship, the owner might apply for relief to a commissioner. In respect of these applications a good number were granted and relief was given to people, having regard to sickness, infirmity and a number of other reasons. However I do not believe that the amendment which was made to the order went far enough, because it left out almost entirely the case of the returned man who had a home of his own and who was not able to get in, who had bought a place since he came back from overseas and wished to get in. Probably he could not show extreme hardship because, under the order, financial matters are not a factor. Could not some consideration be given at this late day now that the war has been over for such a considerable period whereby a returned man who has bought a place and who has not by reason of extreme hardship been able to prove to the commissioner that he should have possession but who, on the other hand, for financial reasons, probably cannot continue the house unless he gets possession of it? Some consideration should be given to that problem now, particularly in the case where the veteran asks for permission to get in his home and shows that just as many people would go into the home which belonged to him as would be vacated by reason of the order to be made in his favour. I see in front of the minister one of his assistants who has had a good deal to do with this matter in the Toronto district for a considerable number of years past. I am sure that he must have some answer to that pressing problem.

Mr. MICHAUD: I should like to ask the minister—

Mr. TIMMINS: Can we deal with this one matter first?

Mr. MAYHEW: There have been set up in Canada about forty different commissions to deal with hardship cases. Where an individual represents that he has a large family and that somebody else is occupying his house with a small family, both parties appear before the commissioner who, in many cases, visits the home and decides to whom the house should go. In other words, the house goes to the one whose hardship is the greater. That would be the same with the returned soldier. If he were actually in greater need of the house than the person occupying it he would get it.

Mr. TIMMINS: That is not a sufficient answer because, if I may say so, it is not quite the fact. So far as extreme hardship is concerned, the commissioners have held—and there is nothing to bind them in the amendment made—that extreme hardship does not take into consideration financial matters, and therefore the veteran who is bothered more by financial considerations than anything else cannot get into his own house. Some consideration should be given that. I have known hundreds of applications granted on the ground of extreme hardship owing to a large number of children, or to the fact that people were living in a garage, or that they were infirm and almost on their death bed when they made their application. In such cases relief was granted. But the veteran who does not receive too much money gets no relief on the ground of extreme hardship.

Mr. KIDD: I wish to bring to the attention of the minister another case that I submitted to the minister of reconstruction in the veterans affairs committee in 1945. It is a disgrace that veterans of the last war are subjected to treatment of the kind meted out to one man in particular whose case I have in mind. He went overseas and served for five years. At the time of his enlistment he was an attendant in a hospital in Ontario—in Kingston as a matter of fact—and was in receipt of $100 a month. He left his wife and four children, the eldest a girl then about fourteen or fifteen. I may say, by the way, that I have also brought this case to the attention of the officials. This man remained overseas for nearly five years. Living in a four-roomed apartment, this family pay the small sum of $15. I mention that for the reason that the quarters were not luxurious. After five years overseas he comes back, his family having played their part. He had assigned pay and separation allowance; they accumulated what they could; his children helped by selling newspapers, and he purchased a piece of property about three years ago. Then he went back to his old position at about $100 a month. This man is not only a tenant but now a landlord. I spoke to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, then minister of reconstruction, and an appeal made to the board was turned down. These veterans deserve some consideration. This man came and saw me personally and his girl is now twenty or twenty-one years of age. They are living in four rooms under conditions to which they should not be subjected, through no fault of their own but through the fault of government controls. I simply wish to put this on the record. If anyone looks up the files he will find that I wrote to the minister with reference to the matter.

Mr. MICHAUD: I should like to ask the minister a few questions. In the first place, I wish to know whether it is contemplated to decontrol further in the case of persons who have purchased houses with the intention of taking possession. I am aware of this order in council which was passed some time in August, where the hardship argument applies; but from the experience I have had in court it does not work out in the way I have heard suggested tonight. It is not a question of either the tenant or the landlord suffering the greater hardship. The landlord has to prove hardship on his own part and to disprove hardship on the part of the tenant. I have had quite a bit of experience in court in this connection and I do not recall a single case where the landlord got anywhere. I could take up the time of the committee in discussing these cases but I will dispense with that. I think that in the near future we should reach the stage where a person who bought a house in 1947 with the intention of occupying it should have the right to possession of that house as if the purchase were prior to July, 1945. I do not believe the hardship argument is of any great value to the landlord. It may apply in one case out of twenty. I have other questions I should like to ask but since it is eleven o'clock, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. BRACKEN: What is the program for tomorrow?

Mr. ILSLEY: The business for tomorrow will be: second reading of the New Westminster harbour commission act; then the measure we have been dealing with today; then continuing the debate on the second reading of Bill No. 135, the Canadian Wheat Board Act; then the resolution to amend the Agricultural Products Act; and, if there is time, committee of ways and means on the excise measures of the Minister of Finance. With regard to the last three items I have given, there may be some variation in the order in which I have given them.

Mr. KNOWLES: This one comes first?

Mr. ILSLEY: After the New Westminster measure.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, March 16, 1948

The house met at three o'clock.

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SPEECH

ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF ADDRESS IN REPLY

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following letter from His Excellency the Governor General, signed by his own hand:

Members of the House of Commons:

I have received with great pleasure the address that you have voted in reply to my speech at the opening of parliament. I thank you sincerely for this address.

Alexander of Tunis.

Government House,
Ottawa,
March 15, 1948.

PRIVATE BILL

FIRST READING—SENATE BILL

Bill No. 146, for the relief of Elizabeth Frances Mary Liddle McClelland.—Mr. Maybank.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INTERIM SUPPLY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Minister of Finance if he is expecting before the Easter recess to ask for interim supply for any portion of the coming fiscal year?

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): I am not quite sure, but I think not.

INCOME TAX

FARMERS—NET WORTH PORTION OF RETURN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. S. ZAPLITNY (Dauphin): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of National Revenue. Is he aware of the widespread opposition in western Canada to the net worth portion of the prairie farmers' income tax form, and of recent resolutions passed by farm organizations recommending that farmers should decline to complete this portion of the form? If so, would the minister consider modifying or withdrawing that portion of the prairie farmers' income tax form?

Hon. J. J. McCANN (Minister of National Revenue): I thank the hon. member for his giving me notice of his question. I am aware of some opposition in western Canada to the net worth portion of the prairie farmers' income tax form. I doubt very much, though, whether resolutions have been passed by farm organizations recommending that farmers should decline to complete this portion of the form. For farm organizations to advise their members to make protests against the form is a different thing entirely from declining to fill them out.

For the hon. member's information, however, I may say that the whole matter of the form is under consideration, and, as I indicated yesterday, a statement will be made in due course.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: The minister seems to doubt my word as to whether such resolutions were passed.

Mr. McCANN: No.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the minister seems to doubt the accuracy of what I said. May I say to him that I have a copy of such a resolution passed by a farm organization in Manitoba.

Mr. McCANN: I am sure the hon. gentleman misunderstood my statement. I said that to counsel farmers to decline to obey the regulations or the law was a different thing from advising them that if they so wished it was within their rights to make protests against the form.

PRAIRIE FARMERS INCOME TAX GUIDE

Mr. J. W. BURTON (Humboldt): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Is the minister aware that many farmers are finding it difficult, if not impossible, to obtain copies of the guide to assist prairie farmers in making out their income tax? If so, will he take steps to see that the situation is remedied?

Hon. J. J. McCANN (Minister of National Revenue): We have no such information as the hon. gentleman has indicated. On the other hand, the first distribution was for 300,000. So eager were farmers to get the guide that we had another reprint made and to date there have been over 700,000 copies distributed. Copies are available at all income tax offices and post offices in all constituencies.

Mr. BURTON: The minister says that he has no such information, but I would tell him that I have several letters on file from farmers who drove fifteen to twenty miles over most difficult roads and then found that they could not get copies of the guide at the post office.

REFUNDABLE PORTION OF INCOME TAX—INTEREST TAXABLE

Mr. E. B. McKAY (Weyburn): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue, a copy of which I have sent to him. Will the refundable portion of income tax now being mailed out by the Department of National Revenue be considered as income for taxation purposes for 1948?

Hon. J. J. McCANN (Minister of National Revenue): The refundable portion is not taxable, but to the extent that there is an interest element, that is taxable.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TRANSPORTATION OF MEMBERS VISITING CONSTITUENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GORDON GRAYDON (Peel): Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister will perhaps move the motion this week for the Easter adjournment, I should like to raise a question. I was going to do it as a question of privilege, but perhaps it is a combination of privilege and question to the government. I should like to refer to a suggestion which I made on December 12 when the pre-Christmas session was in progress. At that time I asked the government to give the matter consideration—and I think a suggestion of this kind perhaps comes more appropriately from a member who lives in central Canada than it would from one residing in a far distant part. This is the suggestion I want to make by way of privilege and question, and I quote from what I said on December 12, as reported on page 221 of Hansard:

A number of hon. members who come from far-away places to attend sessions of parliament have been from time to time most anxious that some means of quick transportation, not at their own expense, should be provided for them, so that they might be permitted to return to their homes from time to time during long parliamentary sessions. I believe people throughout the country would be pleased if some arrangement of that kind could be made.

I offer the suggestion because I come from the central part of Canada and would not be affected by any such arrangement. However, we would like to see justice done in respect of those from farther away.

The Prime Minister—at page 222—was good enough to answer me at that time as follows:

Mr. Speaker, coming also from the central part of Canada, I shall be glad to bring my hon. friend's suggestion to the attention of my colleagues, and see if we cannot arrive at some satisfactory arrangement.

A prominent member on the other side of the house has told me that even with the proposed longer adjournment at Easter he will have less than one and a half days in which to visit his constituents. A closer relationship between member and constituent is better for both member and constituent. The influences of geography ought to be reduced and minimized as much as possible. I think it would be in the interest not only of hon. members but of their constituents if some arrangement could be made by which something approaching the same kind of service as between constituent and member could be made possible in the far away parts as is possible in central Canada. I ask the government to give consideration to this suggestion.

EXPENSES OF MEMBERS TRAVELLING BY AIR

Mr. SOLON E. LOW (Peace River): I should like the Prime Minister, either tomorrow or when he moves the resolution concerning the Easter recess, to make it clear to the members of the house just how far the expenses of hon. members will be taken care of, particularly when part of those expenses apply to air transportation for those who have to travel some distance.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I shall endeavour to meet my hon. friend's wishes in that particular.

UNITED STATES TARIFF

ADDITION OF 25 PER CENT TO VALUE FOR DUTY OF GOODS EXPORTED FROM CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. TIMMINS (Parkdale): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Finance, of which I have given notice. Has the government taken any steps to have relaxed the adverse customs duty of value plus 25 per cent domestic tax now charged against Canadian products entering the United States where such products are in the enumerated list under the excise tax resolution now before the house, and, if so, what steps?

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): A similar question was asked me in committee of the whole on the excise tax resolutions, and my hon. friend will see the answer I gave on page 2131 of Hansard. If the information he wishes is not there he can ask me a supplementary question.

WARTIME HOUSING

QUESTION AS TO NOTICE TO TENANTS TO BUY OR VACATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. D. FULTON (Kamloops): I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply, based upon information I have received from Montreal, Fort William and other parts of Canada concerning tenants of Wartime Housing units now under the administration of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Are any tenants of Wartime Housing in any part of Canada now under notice to buy or vacate their houses? Will the minister make a full statement on the matter, and will he give an assurance that no evictions will take place until the house has had an opportunity to consider his statement?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): I made a statement previously on the subject in reply to a question by the hon. member for Kamloops having to do with housing projects in Montreal and the answer I gave them applies to the question he has just asked. Whenever Wartime Housing undertakes to sell a housing project there is some changing about of tenants in that the purchasers are allowed to choose the houses they desire to buy, but as I said previously, no tenant is left without a house. There may be a matter of a tenant being asked to move to another house in the same area, but in no case is a tenant left without a house.

GOLD MINING INDUSTRY

INQUIRY AS TO FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. ROLAND BEAUDRY (St. James): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Has any financial assistance been given the gold mines in Canada since February 1, 1948? If not, is any contemplated? If any is contemplated, from what date will it apply?

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): No assistance has been given the gold mining industry since the date mentioned. The only assistance contemplated is that provided by Bill No. 7, which is now on the order paper and which I hope will be passed before very long. The proposed assistance will be retroactive to December 1 last.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

QUESTION AS TO BRINGING FORCES UP TO STRENGTH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. ALAN COCKERAM (York South): In view of the reply of the Minister of National Defence to a question asked by the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) in respect to the armed forces, would he tell the house some time in the future what steps are being taken to bring these forces up to strength?

Hon. BROOKE CLAXTON (Minister of National Defence): That is hardly the type of question that can be dealt with briefly in an answer, but I can tell my hon. friend that steps have been taken to obtain recruits by publicity over the radio, in the press and by other means, so as to bring the armed forces of Canada, both active and reserve, up to authorized strength. Good progress is being made, and, in comparison with other countries where similar conditions obtain, the showing is encouraging. Men are being taken in at about the rates we want to have them for the army. Recruit classes in the army are full. We would like to have far more for the navy and air force, and we are ready to take more in most of the reserve units, but altogether reasonably good progress is being made.

HARBOUR COMMISSIONS

NEW WESTMINSTER—REFUNDING OF DEBENTURES, GUARANTEE OF LOANS AND REDEMPTION OF SECURITIES

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 148, respecting the New Westminster Harbour Commissioners and to provide for the refunding of maturing financial obligations.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. GRAYDON: Mr. Chairman, I know that the parliamentary assistant is very anxious to make a lengthy statement to supplement his shorthand report of yesterday and I suppose we should not deny him that privilege.

Mr. R. W. MAYHEW (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Finance): If the hon. member were not more accurate in his other assumptions we would not pay much attention to him because the parliamentary assistant is not at all anxious to make a speech at any time.

Mr. GRAYDON: We are anxious to hear you.

Mr. MAYHEW: However, it might shorten the debate if I made a brief statement. The bill before us is for the refunding of an amount of $700,000 borrowed by the New Westminster harbour commission on April 2, 1928, and due on April 2 of this year; therefore it is necessary that we get the bill passed through both houses before the end of the month. It deals solely with refunding, and does not touch at all the principles of national harbour administration. The government guaranteed this loan, and it is hoped that upon refunding the interest rate will drop from 4¾ per cent to some lower rate. It is also hoped that the capital amount will be payable in Canada. At present it is payable at the option of the debenture holders either in the United States or in Canada. There is considerable to be gained by the refunding of this loan at an early date.

I think that is about all the explanation that is necessary, but I shall be glad to answer questions.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): The parliamentary assistant has partly anticipated the question I was going to ask when he said that it is hoped that the new debentures would be payable only in Canada whereas the present ones are payable at the option of the holders either in the United States or in Canada. Would he say a little more about that? I wish he could use a stronger word than "hope".

Mr. MAYHEW: "Hope" was not strong enough. It will be payable in Canada.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): In Canada only?

Mr. MAYHEW: In Canada only.

Mr. CHURCH: Is this a federal harbour? Does the city of New Westminster appoint some of the commissioners and the federal government others? The government is going to guarantee the substituted securities. That is a wide departure. I would ask the minister to give further information about the harbour commission. How many members are appointed by the city and how many by the government? How much has been spent on the harbour, and how much does the city contribute? How much does the federal government contribute? I know that other harbours are not getting any government guarantee of bonds. The Toronto harbour board consists of five members, three appointed by the city and two by the federal government, and the government representatives are voting city funds because all the money that board spends is advanced by the city. The federal government spends money for Toronto harbour through the federal Minister of Public Works. The set-up of the New Westminster commission seems to be quite different. There are certain harbours known as federal harbours, like Quebec, Montreal and many others. I think it is going pretty far afield to guarantee bonds for city work, for some of it is no doubt city work and some government work. I wish to support anything that is for the good of the country, and if harbour improvements are good for New Westminster they are good for the rest of Canada. What are the powers and functions of this corporation? What are the plans for harbour work and the cost?

Mr. MAYHEW: The hon. member says that he is willing to support anything that is for the good of the country, so I am sure he will support this measure. The New Westminster harbour commission was formed in 1913. It is not under the national harbour board. It has a board of three, two appointed by the dominion government and one by the city of New Westminster. This harbour commission has a very excellent record in that it has paid all its interest and carrying charges up to 1946. It is only three six-months periods behind in interest in all that time, which includes the war period, when there was very little shipping in New Westminster harbour. The dominion government is well represented, two to one, on this board.

Mr. HAZEN: What will be the rate of interest on the new debentures? The parliamentary assistant said the rate would be somewhat lower.

Mr. MAYHEW: I cannot say what the interest rate will be. That will be arranged between now and a later date. The dominion government will have to take up the debentures and refinance in whatever way they think best.

Mr. HAZEN: How many of these debentures are held in the United States?

Mr. MAYHEW: I have no knowledge of how many are held in the United States. From 1928 to the present time is a period of twenty years. That is quite a long time, and these debentures are probably well scattered over the country. No doubt some are in the United States, but I hope that most of them are held in Canada.

Mr. HAZEN: I am speaking of the present time.

Mr. MAYHEW: So am I.

Mr. HAZEN: What will be the total amount of the new issue? It says in the new bill, "an aggregate principal amount not exceeding such amount as is necessary for that purpose".

Mr. MAYHEW: That is exactly the same wording as was used in the old bill. The amount will be $700,000, just sufficient to pay off the present debentures.

Mr. HAZEN: Do I understand the new issue will be $700,000?

Mr. MAYHEW: Yes.

Mr. CASE: Have these bonds always been guaranteed by the government? What was the total amount of the original bond issue in 1928? How much has been paid off? What is its relation to the $700,000 now asked for?

Mr. MAYHEW: When this money was first borrowed it was guaranteed by the dominion government. They have always been guaranteed.

Mr. FRASER: How much will have to be paid in United States funds? Some of this money will have to be paid in United States funds; has the parliamentary assistant any idea what the amount will be?

Mr. MAYHEW: I answered that question a little while ago. I said we had no idea how many of the present bonds are held in the United States. No doubt some are, but they have become pretty well scattered in the twenty year period.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Did I understand the parliamentary assistant to say that the new issue will be $700,000, the same amount as the present one?

Mr. MAYHEW: Yes.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Is the parliamentary assistant sure of that? Does that mean that you are going to pay a rate of interest which will yield that exact amount, or a rate of interest by which these bonds can actually sell at par? Are you committing yourself to that?

Mr. MAYHEW: The maximum amount of indebtedness to which we will be committed will be $700,000.

Mr. FRASER: How are you taking care of the United States funds?—because there will be a certain premium on those funds.

Mr. MAYHEW: No.

Mr. FRASER: The bank charges half of one per cent.

Mr. MAYHEW: Yes. I suppose it will be charged up to the regular expenses of the operation of the New Westminster harbour commission.

Mr. FRASER: They will pay that?

Mr. MAYHEW: They will have to pay that.

Mr. CHURCH: In the case of the Toronto harbour, the city of Toronto guarantees the bonds. It seems to me that the policy which has been decided on in this bill—which is very largely a private bill—the guarantee of bonds for harbour work, is a departure from the old practice. What is the jurisdiction of the Minister of Public Works over the work of this harbour? Is this not a wide departure from the policy of the government in the past regarding these harbours? Some are public harbours; some are harbours for the benefit of the municipality. Fifty per cent has been paid by the city and municipality, and 50 per cent by the government to improve the entrance and exits to some harbours, the deepening of the harbour and so on—a general program. In this case we find the government adopting a new policy, advancing and guaranteeing bonds and securities for the promotion of certain works within this harbour, which does not apply to the other harbours of the country. In the first place this is not one of the federal harbours named in the federal act. I think this is a very wide departure. We should have some idea of the harbour plans proposed; we should know how much money has been spent, and all that kind of thing, by all parties to the commitment.

Mr. CASE: Mr. Chairman, the parliamentary assistant did not entirely answer my question. I understood him to say that the government had always guaranteed the bonds, but I also asked what was the total amount of the original bond issue in 1928.

Mr. MAYHEW: The original amount in 1928 was $700,000. All that has been paid is the interest. At that time the government guaranteed the debentures.

Mr. JACKMAN: How is it intended to pay off these debentures, which I understand, are payable in United States as well as Canadian funds? Is it the intention of the government to provide $700,000 of United States exchange out of its meagre reserves for the payment of these debentures?

Mr. MAYHEW: I am quite sure it will not be necessary to provide for $700,000 United States funds, because all the debentures are not held in the United States. Even if they are held by Canadian citizens they will not be able to cash their bonds in the United States and get their exchange. They might cash them there, but they would have to convert the funds back to the foreign exchange control board, and all they would get would be half of one per cent. Therefore only those residents of the United States who hold debentures would get any benefit out of the exchange position.

Mr. JACKMAN: How many are there?

Mr. MAYHEW: I have already said three times that we do not know how many.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): You should know.

TRANSITIONAL MEASURES ACT, 1947

CONTINUATION OF CERTAIN ORDERS AND REGULATIONS

The house resumed from Monday, March 15, consideration in committee of Bill No. 136, to amend the Continuation of Transitional Measures Act, 1947—Mr. Ilsley—Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

On section 1—Duration of act.

The CHAIRMAN: The committee was considering P.C. 9029, wartime leasehold regulations as amended.

Mr. R. W. MAYHEW (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Finance): Just before the house adjourned at eleven o'clock last evening the minister was asked a number of questions by hon. members on the other side of the house and on this side in connection with rentals generally and particularly about the hardships created for returned soldiers because they were not able to get into their houses. I should like to make a brief statement in that connection.

Rent control is one of the most important controls that we have had, because that one item probably affects the cost of living more than any other single consideration. But it is also one of the most difficult controls to manage, for the reason that there is no general pattern that one can follow. You have to take into consideration the type of house, the character of the people involved, both landlord and tenant, and the city. There is really no definite way in which we can regulate it so as to suit everyone. Therefore there have been and there always will be hardship cases, or cases that must be dealt with outside the regulations.

At first we set up in each district a magistrate with one or two other commissioners to help to regulate rents and to afford a place where the landlord or the tenant might appeal for justice. That was not a perfect plan, but it worked, and it did help to smooth out the regulations considerably. More recently, just last fall, a different type of organization was established, one which I believe did more good than many people give credit for. I refer to the commissioners, of whom a number were set up all over Canada, and they were to deal with the hardship cases only.

You must adopt, not a legal but rather a humane approach to the settlement of differences between landlord and tenant. I found in my own home town when I returned, a number of cases in which landlord and tenant were ready to fight, but after going into the homes and talking things over with them I was successful in a number of cases in getting the differences settled.

The government last fall set up just such a commission. They set up rent-control men and gave them a chance to go and see both landlord and tenant, as well as the type of place in which people were living, and in that way these men knew better how to handle the situation.

Someone said last night that it was not very successful. I assure you that it has not been one hundred per cent successful, but if it cured twenty or twenty-five per cent of the cases, it was in my opinion a success, and it did relieve at least twenty-five per cent of those who made appeal. Their cases have been settled to the satisfaction of both landlord and tenant.

As regards returned soldiers or any others who bought houses and were not able to get into them, such persons invariably bought with the knowledge that the regulation existed before they entered into the deal, and consequently there is little we can do about it. I have spoken to many of them and they argued in this way: Well, probably the rent control was on, but they thought that they could reason with the tenant and so get into their own homes. They were willing to take a chance, and they had this at stake as well, that they were buying the house before the high bulge came in prices, so that they could get the house at a little lower price than if they would have waited for a year or so. That was their reasoning.

There are many returned soldiers who have not been able to get into their own homes and no one regrets that fact more than the members of this house, but there does not seem to be anything that we can do about it.

Last night a number of individual cases were presented to the committee. As part of my duty as parliamentary assistant to the minister I have been listening to these special cases day after day. Hardly a day passes that I have not three or four to deal with, and I should be only too happy if any hon. member would bring such cases to my attention so that we may see what we can do by referring the matter to the rent control people to see if we can get the commission to smooth out the trouble as far as possible.

It is necessary to keep on the control for a time at least, and it is also necessary, for us to do everything we can to alleviate conditions where hardship cases exist.

Mr. TIMMINS: Last night I asked a question about the relief being given to returned soldiers. We have heard the parliamentary assistant's explanation, but it does not go far enough. It is not sufficient to say that the returned soldier bought his place knowing that he might not be able to get into it. The fact is that the fellow was overseas and he came back to Canada expecting that at least he would get a place to live in, and he must do something to help himself. If he cannot rent a place he must buy one. I do not think it is a sufficient answer to say that because he bought the place knowing that he could not move into it immediately he is not entitled to relief.

I believe that deep down, every one of us, without allowing politics to play any part at all in the matter, is of the view that the returned man is entitled to relief now. It is quite some time since the end of the war. Why should not the government fix a deadline at December 31, 1947, or some date prior to that, at any rate some deadline, so that if the returned man had already bought the house and was owner of it at that date he should have relief?

As the parliamentary assistant says, many of them are not able to get into their own houses. If the department knows what the problem is, and there cannot possibly be more than two or three thousand of these cases throughout the country, it is not a sufficient answer to say that we cannot do anything about it. I feel that we should have some assurance from the minister now—we shall be satisfied with an assurance from him, because we know that if the minister gives us an assurance he will deal with the matter—that some steps will be taken to widen the act on behalf of returned men so that some amendment will go forward to the commissioners which will give them an opportunity to deal with the situation on the basis of equity for the returned men.

Mr. MAYHEW: Notwithstanding anything contained in any other order of the board, the landlord of any housing accommodation owned by him prior to January 1, 1947, may make an application to a commissioner for an order permitting the landlord to recover possession in accordance with the law of the province in which such accommodation is situated. I am informed that 8,400 applications have been made under this order, and of that number 2,411 have been granted.

Mr. MICHAUD: Of the number who got relief, 2,411 of the 8,400 applications, how many are from New Brunswick and how many from the county of Restigouche? As far as I know there have been a dozen or so applications in my county and no landlord has had any relief.

Mr. SKEY: It is the same in Toronto.

Mr. FRASER: It is the same all over.

Mr. MICHAUD: Last night I referred to this question of hardship. The first client for whom I appeared was a tenant, a man with a grown-up family who had been occupying the house for years. The landlord happened to be a veteran who had a wife and family, and he was living in a little shack, twelve by twelve or something like that, which had no foundation, running water or toilet. If that is not a case of hardship, I do not know what is. It is about the most extreme case of hardship that could be brought to the attention of the commissioner. But when we came before the commissioner, although he was a tenant—he remarked during the hearing that he was a tenant and a tenant man—I think he was fair just the same. But when he looked at the other side of the picture and a certain paragraph in that order in council was pointed out, it was found that the landlord, in order to succeed, must practically get a place for the tenant. He must establish that there will be no hardship on the tenant, or practically none. I see some of the officials here making signs indicating the negative, but that is the interpretation the commissioner placed on it, and it appeared to be borne out by the text of the order in council. The result was that in my community hardly any landlord received any relief.

In the little villages and hamlets I do not believe there is any necessity for continuing this rental regulation with regard to housing accommodation. It is different in the towns. In the smaller places—and I could cite instances of what has happened—in most cases that have been brought to my attention this regulation serves as a protection to an unreasonable tenant. I know of cases in which houses have been purchased by bona fide landlords with a view to occupation. A middle-aged woman bought a house a couple of years ago with a view to occupying it herself, with her crippled husband. She wrote to me about it nearly a year ago. I told her she had better see a lawyer, and she did. The lawyer advised her to make application to evict the tenant because he was obnoxious. As a matter of fact the tenant had bumped into the corner of the house with his car and had caused damage of a dollar or so. This lawyer advised her that she would have a good case, and they went to court. Before they went to court they called in another lawyer.

Mr. PROBE: The legal firm will soon have the house.

Mr. MICHAUD: The result of it was that her case was dismissed, and properly so. It cost her plenty of money. Incidentally this woman had earned the money by cooking in lumber camps. When this recent regulation was passed she obtained an application form from some justice of the peace, sent it in and a day was set for the hearing. In the meantime she came to me again and asked me to represent her at the hearing, which I agreed to do. I told her to come at two o'clock, and the lady was late. Her watch had stopped. She reached my office about two minutes late. We ran to the place of hearing, which was across the street, and we found that the commissioner had closed the court. The tenant was there with his solicitor at two o'clock, and the case was dismissed.

Mr. KNIGHT: He is a bachelor, I guess.

Mr. MICHAUD: Well, the poor lady burst into tears. The commissioner would not open the court.

Mr. MAYHEW: Don't make us cry here.

Mr. MICHAUD: You don't need to if you don't feel like it, although it is a sad case. On various occasions before, I had been successful in obtaining possession under the section with regard to subdivision. This house happened to be a good-sized one; and the owner had contemplated using one flat herself and allowing her son to use the other. So I said, "Perhaps this is the shortest cut. We might make application for subdivision." In the past I had been successful. When we had an office in Moncton the gentleman in charge there was sympathetic and granted applications almost as a matter of course when there was sufficient floor space to warrant it. Well, it took quite a while, but eventually two gentlemen came from Saint John and I gave them all the information I had on it. It was necessary for them to go and see the place, which is out in the country. They did so, and they wrote back to me saying that they did not think this woman had the means to make the alterations. She could not put toilets in both places because there is no water system in that little country place; consequently her application would be dismissed. That is the situation. Incidentally, one of those gentlemen told me that they had had rather more stringent instructions as to this matter of subdivision. There had been abuses in the past.

That is not the first time these officers who act in a judicial capacity have told us frankly that they have had instructions. A county court judge in my riding, who is fair in every respect, on some occasions humbly expressed the view, "Well, I should like to grant your application but I have received a report from the Saint John office that the government wants this and that, and I do not feel justified in granting it". The objection I am taking is to interference on the part of someone advising these men who sit in a judicial capacity as to what they should or should not do.

As I stated before, I feel that in my community this new order in council has not served any great purpose. Why should it be that a person who bought a house in good faith over a year ago, for personal occupation, cannot get possession? Why can he not get possession as he could before July 25, 1945? The fact that he cannot does not provide more living accommodation for the people as a whole. He wants his house, but if he gets it he will vacate some other place. I know the Minister of Trade and Commerce when the matter came up last year referred to extreme cases in which a move like this would put a family out, or perhaps two families. But there are few such cases in the smaller communities. As I said before, I agree that the rental control should be continued for large cities and towns; and there are some people in my own home town who have expressed in no uncertain terms their appreciation of what has been done in this matter. But I say again that in little country places this regulation serves only to protect unreasonable tenants. I pointed out one case, and I could point out many others where I feel that the rental regulation has worked injustice on certain classes of people. I hope something will be done in the near future to remedy the situation.

Mr. MAYHEW: The hon. gentleman said he wanted to know how many cases there were in New Brunswick. Under this order about which I just spoke, 143 applications were made and 35 have been granted. The hon. member said that rent control should be off in the small places. Our experience is that there is just as great a shortage of houses in the small cities and towns as there is in the large ones. We know there is hardship, but we have to look at the over-all picture. I can assure the committee that our control officers are daily searching to find some way of relieving cases where there is hardship.

Mr. CHURCH: I have not said anything about this control business; but I can tell you this, that controls will never get houses built. I live in a city where the city owns the street railway system, and I doubt very much if any other agency since 1921 has done as much for housing as has the city of Toronto, and particularly with its street car and bus services extending to the outlying districts of the city, urban, suburban and rural.

Following the last war the cheap light and power and transportation development in Toronto led to the building of houses. It is intended by this measure to extend these controls to sixty days after parliament is called, or to the end of March, 1949. That is a political procedure, to tide the government over the next election, no doubt.

I have seen these controls in operation in our city, and I can tell the committee they will not function, so far as the building of houses is concerned. Today those materials which are available are being used for the building of banks, skyscrapers, theatres, and other non-essential buildings. And let me say that the rent courts are the biggest farce I have ever seen. I have had some contact with some of them, and I can tell the committee that when some tenants get into a house they sublet rooms and tear the place to pieces and do three or four times more damage than they pay the owner in rents. Then some of these tenants are profiteering by charging $10, $12 or $14 a week for rooms. The landlord gets a little or nothing out of it. I was head of a city at one time, and I believe I know as much about housing as do a great many others in the committee.

I did not mean to reflect on the hon. member for Parkdale; he is a valuable member, and knows well the conditions in his constituency. He knows, too, how these rent controls have affected all sections of the city of Toronto.

Will this system of controls build houses? I say it will not build a single house. The assessment rolls of Toronto show that before the war more than sixty-six per cent of the people there owned their own homes. Many of those houses had been purchased at high interest rates. Some of the purchasers were soldiers who went to the war, and when they came back they found they could not get into their own houses; they were occupied by tenants who were profiteering at the expense of the soldiers. These were soldiers who gave up their jobs and who went to fight the battles of those who stayed at home. I can assure the committee that if this control system now to be extended for a year would bring about the building of more houses it would be an entirely different matter.

Mind you, I sympathize with the government, with a problem like this on its hands; but I called attention to that problem away back last spring. There was a conference held at Geneva in 1947, beginning on February 7, but we did not hear one word about this austerity program until November 17. If the government would give some encouragement to small builders with materials and labour who would build houses, and if it would give some encouragement or some incentive to commercial landlords who would build commercial buildings or stores and small apartments in the commercial districts, it would be doing something worth while. But nothing of that kind has been done.

Coming down to November 17, we find the government realizing that winter was coming on. When I saw that the government had done nothing between February 7 and November 17, and when I realized that winter was coming on, I asked the government as early as last June about this housing problem. I knew what was going to happen. We were going to be back just where we were after the last war—only this time it would be more serious. The lack of housing today is three times greater than it was at that time.

What did the government do? It announced a new Geneva policy on November 17, and all that kind of thing. It hamstrung small and large business. Will houses be built under this program? I say they will not.

We hear a good deal about the rent courts, and we have seen what they have done right here in Ottawa. Only a short time ago we read about a family who were arraigned in court because they had not looked after their children. How could anyone look after children in the circumstances under which some people are housed? I am not here to justify the actions of those people, but I can say that there are hundreds of people like them in every city of Canada. People are living in hovels and in shacks of all kinds. And these conditions exist while we sit here in the House of Commons even near this district.

This is one of the greatest problems we will ever face in our lives. How can the people stand it. I do not place the blame on any particular government, but it must be realized that the housing situation in this country is deplorable. The birds of the air have somewhere to go, but the poor people can go nowhere. They have no houses—nothing. Public health is at stake.

I am not here to criticize any government —far from it, because this housing situation has existed for a long time. But I will say that the rent courts which have been established are the biggest farce I ever saw in my life. I have had something to do with them, and I have seen some of them in operation. There is no justice in some of them. The sooner we stop calling in county court judges for this kind of work, the better. I am opposed to the policy of using the members of the judiciary for whom I have the greatest respect, and who command the respect of every citizen, for this rent court work. This rental situation is apt to hold them up to contempt and ridicule.

Rentals administrators and county judges are brought here to Ottawa from other places. What are they doing? Do hon. members think they are doing a good job? I fail to see it. Many cases have been heard before them, but I can tell the committee this, that in the experience I have had with this matter I have seen profiteering by tenants, and the landlord has had no chance at all. He is the forgotten man, and in that respect is in the same position as the returned soldier. I know some of those tenants are operating in violation of civic building by-laws. They proceed to build as in industry, and even in the residential district some of them carry on factory operations.

Is it any wonder no one wants to put money into housing? Is it any wonder so many mortgages are being foreclosed, with real estate in a condition of that kind? We cannot expect people or corporations to put money into building small houses, or to relieve the housing situation, both urban and suburban. We cannot expect them to enter into building in a commercial way and build small houses so as to aid new housing and stop profiteering.

[Mr. Church.]

I have never seen the like of it. And when we visit some of these places we see soldiers who suffered in the war living in badly ventilated apartments, small rooms or shacks, some of which are fire traps.

We will never have building unless we eliminate some of the housing controls. If the steel and lumber and concrete and other building materials which have been used in the building of banks, theatres, warehouses and all that kind of thing, had been used for housing purposes, we would have got somewhere.

This is a serious state of affairs, even right here in the city of Ottawa. Some members of parliament are familiar with the situation, one that is common to almost every city of Canada. The government's policy should have been announced last spring. Mr. Truman, across the line, announced that they were going away from controls, but he started it again in September. However, we made no announcement until November 17. This decontrol business was mixed up with Geneva agreements and Hyde Park and other things like that. I can tell you this, that I do not know anyone who wants to go into the building of houses at the present time.

On the island of Montreal proceedings were taken under the Railways Act to relieve the housing situation. A suburban service was inaugurated thirty years ago, and we can see what it has done for Montreal, both in winter and in summer. In Toronto we have not had the same opportunity, although we are entitled to it. I say we should have a steam suburban service which would permit commutation tickets from Toronto to Oakville and Brampton and other outlying points. I know the hon. member for Peel will agree with that. The housing situation was relieved by the action of the T.T.C. in serving the suburbs. Housing with civic services is largely a civic problem. The railway commission was required by law to investigate these matters of a suburban service without any application being made. If we had more help from the railway commission and better service was provided the housing situation would be remedied in York, Peel and Ontario counties as it was remedied after the last war.

I do not want to criticize the government all the time because I know the difficulty the war and reconversion caused in getting materials and labour and all that kind of thing, but the time has come when there should be some revision of these rental boards. They are very largely a farce and as far as I can see there is very little justice. To bring the judiciary into this situation is a retrograde step from the point of view of law and order.

What are we going to do about it? Spring is coming on and something will have to be done. The government wants to turn housing back to the provinces and the municipalities. The first duty of the federal government is to look after the health, wealth, prosperity and happiness of its citizens. Housing should be a federal problem, not a municipal or provincial problem. That is how it is handled in Britain and in the United States where money is advanced to the states and municipalities.

I think it is a large order to extend this to March 31, 1949, or sixty days after the house meets. I fail to see how it is going to help the housing situation. The government of the day should provide assistance to municipalities during the next six months in order to tide things over the following winter. I saw the situation from February 7 until November 17 when nothing was done. Last June I saw this hard winter coming and I suggested that some assistance should be given for milk, bread and coal. That would have been a good thing because we did not know they were going to make a leap in the dark like they did on November 17.

I doubt whether we can do much by legislation. Certainly the government's suggestion to extend these controls to March 31, 1949, is not going to function very well. It is going to lead to more confusion, and lack of building and of private building. Builders will not want to build this spring and it will do considerable harm and prevent the building of small houses by small builders for next winter.

Mr. KNIGHT: Mr. Chairman, this is one of those questions about which much can be said by both sides. It is unfortunate indeed that the interests of the landlord and tenant are diametrically opposed. If the government will not do what we propose, that is, provide more low rental housing units as quickly as possible, then I suppose they can only do the best they can for the greater number of people. I imagine that in this particular instance the greater number of people are the tenants. While my hon. friends to my right have said a great deal about veterans who are landlords, we might point out that a great many tenants are also veterans.

It is a coincidence that just before I came into the chamber I picked up a letter from a veteran, and as some hon. members have been putting personal matters on the record perhaps I might put this one on. This veteran is the owner of a modern house in a good residential district. He purchased the house with the aid of his war service gratuities and re-establishment grant. Under the present legislation he cannot occupy the premises and is forced to live in a house which is far from modern.

Mr. MAYHEW: When did he purchase it?

Mr. KNIGHT: He does not say, and I am afraid that that is the difficulty so far as the regulations are concerned. As I have indicated he lives in a house which is far from modern and which is located seven blocks from a street car, and then he must take a fifteen minute walk to his work. This man had four years service in the second world war. In the letter he gives some personal details which I can leave out, but he underlines this question at the end of this letter: What is being done to remedy this situation? I presume I can write back to him and quote the words of the parliamentary assistant and say, "Nothing."

Mr. SKEY: Mr. Chairman, I should like to give support to the principles put forward by the hon. member for Broadview when he called the government's attention to the situation which exists in the larger cities of Canada. The housing situation is crucial; it is Canada's No. 2 problem. In my opinion it comes closely behind communism; in fact it is creating communism. Dissatisfaction and discontent are being created because of the housing regulations and restrictions and the lack of accommodation.

There is a great principle at stake which I know the Minister of Justice will recognize. The federal government have taken the responsibility of putting on these controls. Any person who has knowledge of the situation agrees that they have resulted in a restriction of housing and a restriction of building, especially for rent. The government have imposed these controls and it is their policy. They have refused to acknowledge the free enterprise system in so far as housing is concerned, and therefore there is only one other course of action they can take and that is to enter into the housing field themselves.

Mr. MAYHEW: I know the hon. gentleman would like to be right. He says that these regulations have affected the building of houses, but I would tell him that no house built since January 1947 is under control in any way, shape or form, either as to the amount of rent paid or the tenancy.

Mr. SKEY: I am glad to have the parliamentary assistant correct me, but the fact remains that there is a great deal of uncertainty in the housing field. The number of houses built since January 1, 1947, is not very large and I would imagine that ninety-eight per cent of the houses in Canada are still under control to some extent.

I was developing the argument that if the government insists upon the continued control of housing and rentals there is only one course open to them if this problem is to be solved. They must either build houses or subsidize those who can build them, namely, the provinces and the municipalities. I repeat that if the government intend to continue housing controls they must subsidize the provinces and the municipalities in their housing program. Their policies have already driven the two central provinces of Ontario and Quebec into the housing field, the two provinces which have been denied, through the government's mistaken policies, the grants in aid which are paid to the other seven provinces. The two central and most populous provinces have been driven into the housing field by the policies of this government, and I say that this government should today start to return to Ontario and Quebec the moneys collected in lieu of grants, so that they can be distributed by the governments of these two provinces through the municipalities, chiefly Montreal, Quebec, Toronto, Hamilton, London, Windsor and Ottawa—

Mr. KIDD: And Kingston.

Mr. SKEY: And Kingston, to be allocated to a municipal housing program. If the government are going to collect these moneys which are due to the provinces they should return them forthwith to those provinces which have been driven into the housing field.

Mr. ILSLEY: Who would have the corporation tax in those provinces under my hon. friend's plan?

Mr. SKEY: The federal government is now collecting a portion of the tax in the event of those two provinces signing an agreement with the dominion, and it is withholding that amount until then. That is one of the reasons for the government's surplus. Isn't there some $180,000,000 involved?

Mr. ILSLEY: My hon. friend surely realizes that under the present plan the corporation tax collected on corporations in provinces other than the two central provinces is 35 per cent, while it is only 30 per cent in the two central provinces.

Mr. SKEY: What would five per cent of the corporation tax amount to in Ontario and Quebec?

Mr. ILSLEY: I could get it. It would be very great.

[Mr. Skey.]

Mr. SKEY: It would not be equal to the amount which would be payable to those provinces under a signed agreement with the federal government, would it?

Mr. ILSLEY: I doubt whether it would be quite as much as that, but it might be more.

Mr. SKEY: I gravely doubt it.

Mr. ILSLEY: It is up to them.

Mr. SKEY: Oh, no; it is up to the federal government to give the provinces taxation rights in certain fields. However, I shall not get into an argument with the minister over that at the moment.

Mr. MAYHEW: Mr. Chairman, what we are considering now is P.C. 9029, wartime leasehold regulations as amended. There will be ample opportunity under the Department of Reconstruction and Supply to discuss on three or four items the question of housing when the minister will be here to answer, and I suggest that we should defer this discussion until then. We would like to see all the lumber go into the building of houses. It would relieve the situation. I can only assure my hon. friend that rent control will be prosecuted with the utmost intensity and justice and sympathy in order to be fair to everybody. I cannot promise more than that and I do not think you can get more out of it.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The point raised by the parliamentary assistant is in order. The committee should deal specifically with the wartime leasehold regulations.

Mr. SKEY: I was endeavouring to develop the point, Mr. Chairman, that these restrictions are aggravating the housing shortage and will continue to do so. I fully acknowledge the difficulty in which the federal government is placed today and the difficulties of both landlords and tenants. Coming from an urban constituency where the problem is very acute, I am perfectly aware of the difficulties, which work hardships on both sides. I am not arguing for just one side, but I am saying that it is the continuation of controls that makes necessary a housing policy sponsored and financed by the federal government. The parliamentary assistant has mentioned the minister of reconstruction. I was just coming to him.

Mr. MAYHEW: Wait until he comes in.

Mr. SKEY: The situation is acute. But I see you are about to rise, Mr. Chairman, and so I will withhold what I had to say on that. I have advocated as strongly as I can that those hundreds of millions of dollars should now be placed in the hands of the governments of Ontario and Quebec to assist in the housing programs into which they have been forced by the continuation of these controls.

I will close by venturing to suggest that even those in the position of tenants today who are enjoying the protection of rent control will be the first to insist on a clear title and absolute freedom when they come to purchase property of their own because they are keenly aware of the situation in which their landlords are placed today. There is nothing to be gained politically by arguing this question, because there are people on both sides to be offended no matter which side you take, but I say it is the greatest problem in Canada today and this government should bend very effort to its solution.

Mr. TIMMINS: A short time ago the parliamentary assistant read from an amending order, I take it, of last year. Would he give us the number and date of that order and tell us whether its provisions were not predicated upon the factor of hardship?

Mr. MAYHEW: The order number is 753, and it was predicated on the basis of hardship.

Mr. TIMMINS: I do not want to be misled. I do not suggest that the parliamentary assistant is endeavouring to mislead the committee but we have not had an answer yet as to whether the minister is willing to consider extending this amending order to make some provision for the veteran on the basis of hardship. I refer to the veteran who has bought and paid for his house before December 31, 1947, and whose hardship consists of not being able to maintain himself and of not being able to hold the house if he cannot get into it himself.

Mr. MAYHEW: If the veteran owned the house before he enlisted he can get possession without difficulty.

Mr. TIMMINS: That is not the point.

Mr. MAYHEW: The other relief is the one I have just read. A further one is that if it is a new house built since January, 1947, he can get into it. If he cannot comply with any of those conditions he is rated as an ordinary citizen. I wish we could do something more about it.

Mr. TIMMINS: I do not want to labour this. The fact of the matter is that the parliamentary assistant says nothing can be done. I think something can be done if the minister is prepared to give some assurance that it will be looked into with the purpose of trying to find hardship that will work out in favour of the veteran who cannot afford not to be in control of his own house. The order is acting against the interests of the men who are not able to help themselves.

Mr. MAYHEW: I can assure the hon. gentleman that if he can offer us a solution to the problem we shall be very happy to consider it; but at the present time there are more returned soldiers than landlords, and often returned soldiers are competing against each other to get into the house. It is a most difficult proposition. I assure the hon. member it is being dealt with as sympathetically and as intensely as we can possibly do. Let anyone give us a solution to the problem and we shall be glad to entertain it.

Mr. HAZEN: I suggest to the minister that he give serious consideration to the remarks which have been made by the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska and by the other hon. members who have protested against this regulation which provides that a man who buys a house for the purpose of getting into it is refused permission to occupy it.

The parliamentary assistant to the minister has said that he can do very little about the matter. He does not say that nothing can be done about it. If I recall aright, the wording of the resolution says that if a person who buys a house under these circumstances wants to get into it, he has to show that he has greater need for that house than the occupant. The onus is on him to show that he has a greater need for it than the occupant. What I fail to understand is this. Why should a man who has bought a house for the purpose of occupying it be obliged to show that he has a greater need for it than the person who is occupying it? Surely it should be sufficient for him to show that as he owns the house he has a need as great as the person who occupies it. If you are bound to continue these regulations, then they might well be modified to the extent I have suggested; the man who owns a house should be allowed to have possession of it if he can show he has as great a need as the person who is in possession. Perhaps some hardship would be created, but I do not think the cost of living would be raised if you did away with this regulation altogether.

The committee was informed this afternoon that there had been only some 8,000 applications all over Canada. These applications must represent most of the people who have suffered from this regulation. In New Brunswick there have been only 143 applications. If all these applications were granted I do not believe the cost of living would be raised to any extent; and I think justice would be done and the principles of law and of free enterprise as we understand them would be lived up to if you would let a man occupy a house when he has bought it and wants to move into it with his family.

I have received quite a number of letters. I hold in my hand a letter which was written me in January. It is from a woman who is badly in need of getting into her house with her family. She says:

> My husband is a veteran with six years' service, four years overseas. When he came home he bought a house, putting every cent he had into it. Now we hear that the controls may be kept on another year.
> We are nearly crazy living in a small four-roomed apartment with three children, who are really suffering because of the way we are living. They can't play, and every time they come in or out the landlord or other tenants scold them. We have to pay $45 per month, and you can imagine what that does to my husband's salary.

He has a small salary. I continue with the letter:

> The rents are very low in the house we bought, hardly more than enough to cover expenses. One of our tenants has told us that they have a home (outside the city) but while they can have a large six-room flat with garage and large yard for $15 per month . . .

While the veteran who owns the house with a small salary, a wife and three children is obliged to pay $45 because he cannot get into his own house. Conditions of that kind are not fair or right and should not be permitted for one minute.

I have received quite a number of complaints also from persons who own houses and rent them. Their complaint is that they are not getting a fair return on the money they have invested. They say they are not getting enough of a return to make necessary improvements to their houses. The regulation should be such as to enable a person to get sufficient from his investment to meet the cost of repairs, taxes, heating and so on, and give him a fair return on his investment.

Mr. MICHAUD: Following the point raised by the hon. member for St. John-Albert may I say I now have the text of this order, and my submission is that the relief granted by it is much more insignificant than was indicated by the hon. member. Not only must the landlord show hardship, but at the hearing, according to subsection 6, the commissioner may require such further information—and I skip some parts that are immaterial and go down to (b) which asks for the circumstances of the tenant and the nature of the real hardship which would be suffered by the tenant and his family if the occupation was allowed. Whenever any application of this nature is made the tenant who refuses to go out will come into court or come before the commissioner and put up a hard luck story. Naturally he will say that he has hunted around the town and the community for the last two or three months and has not been able to find a suitable place. He will say that he has a large family. That constitutes hardship, and it must be taken into consideration by the commissioner. I have a case in mind. A veteran wanted to get into his house. He had two children. The other fellow had six grown-up children. The commissioner said, "You are asking me to put them out. He has six of a family; you have two. What is the advantage of putting out six to give room to two?" When I went into court I thought I had a good case. I heard the interpretation placed on the regulation by a man who was not a legal man, but I thought he interpreted the regulation properly. The landlord must do more than show that he is in hard circumstances. When he goes into court he has a roof over his head, and he wants to throw another person out. Naturally the answer of the court or the judge is this: "You have a place now; you are fairly comfortable. You are asking me to throw this other person out." The other person says that this constitutes hardship, and it is hard enough, it is true—

Mr. TIMMINS: You should have read the regulations first.

Mr. MICHAUD: I say the regulation is practically worthless. I have run across the occasion where the tenant has said, "If you let me stay in until the first of May I will get out". On such occasions the commissioner has made an order, but in most cases where orders have been made it is done by consent such as I have indicated. The tenant has practically agreed to get out at a future date. If the tenant says, "I cannot find a place, I have no place to go", I do not see any justification under the regulation for the commissioner to evict.

Mr. MAYHEW: May I answer the hon. member for St. John-Albert? In the first case, where a man might go and buy a house and get possession of it, you would be letting someone in and turning out a returned soldier. That is probably what would happen in your first case. In your second case, where a man says he is not getting what is fair and reasonable for his house, he can appeal to the board for an adjustment, and a good many thousands of cases have been adjusted.

Mr. HANSELL: It seems to me that the only solution of the rental problem is more houses. There is no other answer to it. I know that the present minister and his assistant are not responsible for building houses, but they are asking parliament to extend their powers of controls over rentals. Can the minister give us some idea as to how long these controls are to continue?

I am not rising to make criticism one way or another. I have no criticisms to make. I do not see what can be done except what is being done. The situation exists as it is, and the government is trying to handle it the best way it can.

An hon. MEMBER: A pretty poor best.

Mr. HANSELL: That may be subject to criticism too. I have letters from tenants making complaints; I have about an equal number from landlords making complaints, and it is difficult to satisfy both. I do not think the case which the hon. member for St. John-Albert brought to the attention of the minister was the strongest he might have made. There are many cases much worse than that. Here is a man with two children and four rooms to live in. I am not taking the side of the tenant, and perhaps he is a pretty fortunate man. I am surprised in one way, and I know it is because of the lack of building materials, that so many four-room homes have been built throughout the country. I believe that if the time ever comes when there is no shortage of housing you will be able to buy four-room houses for a song. That, however, is another matter, and I know I am not entirely within the rules in bringing it up.

Can the minister tell us how many building permits were issued in 1947 as compared with 1946 and 1945? You may think, Mr. Chairman, that is not in order, but that is the only way I can see whereby we can discover what the situation is and when perhaps there will be some relief in the way of lifting of controls. How long will it last? We are asked to grant continued power of control. People do not know whether the controls are to come off or whether they will be left on this year and another year as well. We should have some answer to that question. Is it expected that they will last for another year or another five or ten years? If building has dropped off, then there is some reason for it, and the government is not going to the root of the problem unless it discovers that reason, because the only solution of the problem is more houses.

Mr. MAYHEW: Two questions have been asked. One is, how many permits were issued in 1945, 1946 and 1947? That question should be directed to the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply who will be coming on, I hope, in a few minutes and will be able to give that information. As far as the length of time is concerned, we are asking for the extension of these controls to the end of the fiscal year, that is the end of March, 1949. Whether they are extended beyond that will depend on the will of the house.

Mr. MERRITT: This discussion we have had in the last few hours is like the discussion we had a year ago in this house, and apparently no progress has been made. A year ago we discussed the problem of the veteran owner who could not get into his house because of rental restrictions, and the ministers at that time expressed great sympathy for the veteran. I remember the Minister of Finance saying that it was a very constructive discussion, and I should think many members of the house thought that something might be done about the matter in the intervening time. But apparently nothing has been done at all, and the reasons given by the parliamentary assistant today are precisely the reasons given a year ago.

The unfortunate fact is that we have here a real hardship on these veterans and it is the responsibility of the government. I do not think it is at all satisfactory that a whole year should have passed and that we should be given the same answers now as those we got a year ago.

The hon. member who has just spoken has mentioned one way of relieving the situation, which is to get more houses, and that is the responsibility of the government. As I understand, they have not succeeded in the past year in increasing the number of rental houses which will be available. It has not increased substantially, and I find at page 2234 of Hansard of April 21 of last year that the minister suggested that the only way out was to increase the number of units available.

Last year the hon. member for Eglinton offered to the government another way in which the number of housing units available might be materially increased. He gave it as his opinion, which is a valuable one, since he knows a great deal about housing, that by this means you would bring into the market a considerable amount of rental housing. His suggestion was to amend the regulations with respect to eviction from shared accommodation so as to enable a large number of people in Canada who have accommodation now too large for them to take in tenants, with the assurance that they will be able to evict those tenants if they prove to be unsatisfactory.

According to the present regulation they cannot be evicted except on six months' notice, and it was suggested that if that period were reduced to one month it would open up a great field of available living accommodation which heretofore has not been tapped. The hon. member for Eglinton moved that as an amendment, but the government refused to accept it just as they refused to accept his amendment last year with respect to the veteran home owner.

If we are to go on from year to year without any progress in this matter, surely that second suggestion of the hon. member for Eglinton should be, I was going to say accepted by the government, but certainly gone into very carefully indeed. Perhaps it has been gone into. Perhaps the parliamentary assistant can give us a statement as to why the suggestion has not been taken into consideration and that field opened up so as to relieve the housing shortage.

Mr. MAYHEW: The hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard says that nothing has been done to relieve the situation. I would point out to the committee that last year 78,000 houses were built in Canada. Before the war our normal capacity was in the neighborhood of 32,000. I happen to know that, because I had something to do with the building trades. Our capacity was around about 32,000 houses before the war, but last year we built 78,000 in Canada.

Mr. PROBE: How many couples were married?

Mr. SKEY: One hundred thousand.

Mr. MAYHEW: In October last, in the hon. member's own city of Vancouver, there were 5,500 wartime houses under construction. I think that since that date a further 1,500 have been added to that to have them ready to relieve those housed in the old Vancouver hotel. When Canadians have stepped up their production of housing by nearly three times, I think there must be something or somebody behind that accomplishment, directing it.

Mr. MERRITT: The parliamentary assistant has not yet answered my question. I heard the hon. member for Regina City call out, asking what the net family formations were in that same year. It is my understanding that, on the whole, we are losing ground in providing accommodation for Canadian families. How many of the 78,000 houses, to which the parliamentary assistant referred, were rental houses? I remember distinctly that the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply in the housing debate last year said that his chief worry in connection with housing was that rental units were not being provided. A large number of these 78,000 houses are of no use to people who can only afford to rent. I should like to hear the parliamentary assistant tell the committee what consideration has been given to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Eglinton last year which was to the effect that if you reduce the period of notice which must be given in the case of shared accommodation, you will open up in the cities of Canada a large field of accommodation which has not been tapped so far. What is the answer to that?

Mr. MAYHEW: Thirty-seven per cent of the urban population live in shared accommodation; and unless they are obnoxious, they require the six months' notice. But if they are obnoxious they can be evicted on much shorter notice. They can be evicted under the regulations of the provincial government which provide for short notice and on the grounds of incompatibility.

Mr. MERRITT: Of course that is not an answer to my question. My question is this; what investigation has been made, following the suggestion moved as an amendment by the hon. member for Eglinton last year, to ascertain how much new housing accommodation would be made available by a reduction in the period of eviction from six months to one month.

Mr. ILSLEY: I was in the discussion last year, Mr. Chairman, and I remember the amendment moved by the hon. member for Eglinton. While I have not been engaged in this department since that time, and am not at the present time, I understand that consideration has been given to that suggestion. The suggestion is based upon a theory that you would gain more accommodation than you would lose if you allowed the owner of the house to turn those tenants out on short notice. That is merely a theory, and it is a theory with which those who have studied the matter do not agree. It is not susceptible of proof. On the contrary it is believed that, with the national income what it is, for ten rooms that you would gain by the application of that theory you would lose 100, because the landlords would turn the tenants out and would not let anyone else in; and the fact that they could turn people out suddenly would not cause them to let others in.

Mr. MERRITT: That was not the suggestion made by the hon. member for Eglinton. I have it here and it may be found at page 2250 of Hansard of 1947. I will not read it all. It referred to this question of freeing shared accommodation from eviction control, and the last few words of the amendment are as follows:

. . . where the tenancy thereof is created after the date of coming into force of this act.

So it will be seen that his suggestion would not have freed any present accommodation from the present six months' notice legislation and would not have lost any you now have. His suggestion would have applied only to new shared accommodation being made available because of this suggestion, just in the same way as you have released from control houses coming into occupation after January 1, 1947.

Mr. ILSLEY: The administrative difficulty there is this. Suppose there are five tenants in one house, and one room becomes vacant. Then the tenant who goes into that room can be turned out without notice or with very short notice, while the other tenants in the other four rooms are entitled to their six months' notice. The discrimination that arises there between tenants is regarded as most undesirable.

Mr. MERRITT: I must say that explanation does not satisfy me; because if you apply your new order only to new accommodation and not to old accommodation becoming free, only to a completely new building where you never had shared accommodation before, you would never get the difficulty which the minister suggests. I do not want to take up too much of the time of the committee. I know the hon. member for Weyburn wants to ask a question. But I ask the government to give more consideration to the proposal which was put forward seriously a year ago and which is much more than a theory. Many people believe it would make available a great deal of accommodation.

Mr. ILSLEY: Is anybody building new homes for the purpose of renting rooms?

Mr. MERRITT: No, not new homes.

Mr. ILSLEY: No.

Mr. MERRITT: But old homes where the occupants do not need all the rooms today. That is what we are referring to in the case of shared accommodation.

Mr. McKAY: I think it is generally recognized that, while there is a lack of housing accommodation, there must be some measure of rent control. We have had figures given to us this afternoon to indicate that housing construction is not keeping abreast of the demand for houses in this country. As long as a shortage of housing prevails, we shall have to have some measures passed by this parliament to control the situation. I realize that there are objections to this rent control measure on the part of landlords and also on the part of some tenants. But despite those objections, I fear what might happen if these controls were abolished at this time. If we are to witness with regard to housing accommodation what has happened with respect to rents of some business premises, it would be a serious situation. We might even face the situation where rent would go up to double and treble what they are now, unless there was some measure to control them. This would cause much more hardship than the present regulations are causing either to the tenant or to the landlord. However, it seems to me that some instructions to favour the tenant must have been given to the commissioners. I should like to ask the question whether or not a directive has been issued to the commissioners to give the benefit of the doubt to the tenant rather than the landlord.

When I say that, I do not wish to be misunderstood. I have had a great number of people who own property write to me. These include old folks and veterans; and the letters seem to indicate that, although they have shown great need, the tenant seems to get every consideration and they do not receive any, despite the arguments they may present. Has any directive been issued which seems to favour the tenant, when these cases come up for consideration?

Mr. MAYHEW: I am sure I cannot answer that question with a positive yes or no. I am quite confident, however, that the answer would be, no. However I would have to check that with the rentals controls officers before I could answer definitely.

Mr. McKAY: Would the parliamentary assistant endeavour to give an answer.

Mr. MAYHEW: Yes, I shall endeavour to get a definite answer.

Mr. TIMMINS: To turn to another phase of the regulations for a moment, it is my understanding that the commercial rentals covered by this section ended on March 9. The hon. member for Nanaimo has placed in my hands a communication which brings up a subject with which I think we must deal. This letter has to to with a small company which occupied commercial space for which it paid $25 a month rental. Now, with the rental order off, notice has been served on this business that from this time forward its rental will be $125 a month, or an increase of 500 per cent.

Section 6 of order P.C. 9029 reads, in part, as follows:

> No person on behalf of himself or any other person shall let or offer to let any real property at a rental that is higher than is reasonable and just or shall charge, demand, receive or collect or pay such a rental . . .

I believe I have seen a press release to the effect that, despite the fact that commercial rentals controls were completely and absolutely off, that clause in the rentals order would be invoked against a landlord with commercial accommodation who proceeded to charge rentals which were not reasonable and just. Would the minister explain what the effect of this is and where it leaves tenants who are occupying commercial accommodation at the present time?

Mr. ILSLEY: The Minister of Finance made a statement on this point in the house on March 5, as reported at page 1908 of Hansard. The hon. member may look at that statement himself, but my recollection is that the effect of it was that the section he has just read is to remain. It is open to the tenant in that event to lay an information, if he wishes, or to report the case for investigation and for prosecution, if it is thought that the facts would warrant such proceedings being taken.

Mr. TIMMINS: I cannot clearly understand the mechanics of the order. It is not clear to me how the commercial order can be completely and absolutely out of operation—cancelled, so to speak—and yet this section remain, when it applies to a phase of the rentals order which has been cancelled. That is my first thought.

My second thought is that the tenant gets very little comfort from the fact that a prosecution can be laid because, in the meantime, he may have failed to comply with the demand of his landlord and may have been served with a notice to get out. Under those circumstances he would have to vacate, and it would be small comfort to him to know that the rental should have remained at $25 a month when, as a matter of fact, he is out on the street. It seems to me that if, on behalf of the people of Canada, the Minister of Finance desires to see that no wrong is done, before we have finished with this rentals order some amendment should be made which would cover the matter of protection of a commercial tenant in like circumstances.

Mr. SKEY: I should like to return to a point I brought up last night; that is, if the minister is not going to answer the hon. member for Parkdale.

[Mr. Timmins.]

Mr. ILSLEY: I did not understand that he wanted an answer.

Mr. TIMMINS: The thing seems incongruous in that apparently the section will be wiped out, so far as commercial rentals are concerned. In view of the fact that commercial rentals are no longer under control, does the minister tell the committee that the present rentals order will protect commercial tenants who are being charged exorbitant rentals?

Mr. ILSLEY: It applies to the tenant; it applies to the landlord who is charging a tenant a rental which is greater than could be considered reasonable and just. This matter was dealt with by the Minister of Finance when he said:

> As the government is continuing rental control on housing accommodation, it is necessary that this section remain in effect.
> This section has general application; accordingly, it remains an offence for a landlord to charge a rental for commercial space that is clearly unreasonable and unjust. Should any such case be brought to the attention of the wartime prices and trade board, investigation will be made.

Then he goes on to say that prosecutions cannot be instituted without the leave of the board or of the attorney general of a province. That is found in section 8 of the regulations.

Mr. TIMMINS: Will the minister tell us whether the Minister of Finance intends to implement section 6 any further in favour of a tenant of commercial accommodation who, now that the commercial rentals order is not operative, is left without an anchor, so to speak, so far as protection is concerned? After all, a prosecution would not help that tenant very much.

Mr. ILSLEY: The Minister of Finance said this in answer to a somewhat similar question:

> I believe I can answer that in this way, that if it is clearly established that a rental which is unreasonable and unjust is being charged the board would consider taking a prosecution. It is open under the section for anyone to do it, with the consent of the board or with the consent of a provincial attorney general. I am not prepared to say now to what extent the board should be or would be prepared to undertake the task of prosecutions. What I have said, in effect, is that if cases of that kind are brought to the attention of the board, investigations will be made.

Mr. KNOWLES: Is it a fact that the abolition of commercial rental controls was achieved, not by any change in the order in council before us, but by the change or abolition of a board order?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES: In other words, the answer to the question asked by the hon. member for Parkdale with respect to section 6 is that it is still there as part of the general order in council.

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES: And that means, too, that if the government could be persuaded to bring back a measure of commercial rental control, the board still has the authority to carry it out.

Mr. ILSLEY: The board could put on ceilings, yes.

Mr. SKEY: I should like to refer to the questions I asked last night with regard to the rooming-house operators who submitted a brief to the Minister of Finance in which they asked two things. First, they asked that the increased rentals permitted to property owners be extended to cover rentals charged by rooming-house operators. They contended that they were subject to an increase by their landlords without being able to pass that on to their own tenants. Second, they asked that some relief be given from the six months' freezing order for tenants. I should like to have an answer from the minister.

Mr. MAYHEW: The control on rooming houses came in much later than the regular freezing order. It was thought that the advance which had been permitted to rooming-house operators was sufficient to take care of their requirements and that they were not suffering any financial loss as a result of the order of July, 1943.

Mr. MANROSS: The prices of everything involved in keeping a rooming house have gone up since 1943. I do not see what justice there is in taking hotels out from under the control, permitting hotels to raise their prices and not permitting rooming houses to do likewise. While it is true that rooming houses may be providing a lower type of service than a hotel, there is a similarity in the services provided. A government-owned hotel like the Chateau Laurier, which is operated by the Canadian National, is permitted to raise its rates 33⅓ per cent, while a rooming-house operator must stick to the prices he charged in 1943. Surely these rooming-house operators should be given some percentage of increase, even if it is only a small percentage.

Mr. MAYHEW: House rentals were frozen in 1940, while rooming-house rentals were not frozen until 1943. I think this debate has been most helpful but I hope it will not continue much longer. I assure hon. members that what has been said here will not be lost sight of.

Mr. MANROSS: How is it intended to take off these freezing controls? Will it be done by degrees or suddenly? I think it would be better to do it by degrees.

Mr. SKEY: The minister did not give me an answer with regard to the six months' freezing order for tenants of rooming houses.

Mr. MAYHEW: I thought I answered that before. The six months' regulation is applicable unless the tenant is not desirable, in which case he can be evicted under the laws of the province.

Mr. CARDIFF: There has been a considerable amount of criticism in connection with this housing program and, I think, rightly so. I think everyone will agree that the plan adopted has been absolutely wrong. A landlord who had rented at a low rent found that his rent was frozen at that figure, whereas another landlord might be getting more for the same kind of accommodation. That was all wrong. There should have been an over-all plan whereby rents were brought up to a certain standard. This has caused considerable dissatisfaction. Another cause of dissatisfaction is the fact that a tenant might sublet and obtain more rent than he was paying to the landlord. I think the ones who framed the regulations must take the blame for that.

In certain instances labour is being let out by industry. During the war years many men left the farm to take jobs in war plants and the result was that many farms became idle. Those farms are still idle. When industry is laying off men an effort should be made to find out where they came from. If they came from the farm an effort should be made to persuade them to go back to the farm. We are short of labour in the country. You cannot hold floating labour because, as soon as you have a hard job on your hands, they will leave you. An effort should be made to persuade these fellows to go out to the farm and occupy some of the houses that are vacant in the country. I doubt if there is a mile and a quarter anywhere in the country without two or three vacant houses. If these men could be persuaded to go out there it would relieve the housing shortage in the cities as well as the labour problem in the country.

Mr. ILSLEY: Can we agree to pass the group of orders?

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Is the minister suggesting that we take the group now?

Mr. ILSLEY: It is up to the committee, but if hon. members want to discuss any order I suggest that it be discussed now and that we do not come back to it later. There are eight of these orders.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Would that include P.C. 9870?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I wanted to ask some questions on that. I have not been able to put my hands on a report of the corporation. Am I right in thinking there was a report?

Mr. ILSLEY: There is no report made to parliament by the Commodity Prices Stabilization Corporation. Questions are answered on the estimates.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I should like to know roughly what the corporation has done in the last year as compared with the year before. I am trying to find out the objectives of the corporation and the reasons for continuing it.

Mr. ILSLEY: The purpose of the corporation is to carry on bulk purchasing and to pay subsidies. If the hon. gentleman is asking for anything like a comprehensive report I shall have to give it at eight o'clock or later, because we are not prepared for it now.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Like other hon. members, I do not want to hold up the proceedings unnecessarily, but I think this is a matter of importance.

Mr. ILSLEY: Exhaustive preparations are made to answer questions just like that on the estimates. I thought we were dealing with something a little different, the extending of the authority for the operation of the corporation. However, the hon. gentleman is quite within his rights.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I do not want to get into anything that is too involved, but could the minister give us at eight o'clock a brief statement as to what is contemplated? It does seem to me that we want a prima facie case.

Mr. ILSLEY: I will do so. I want to find out myself.

Mr. KNOWLES: The item in the estimates is reduced by $22,000,000.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Does the committee agree, with that understanding?

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): How far does that take us?

Mr. ILSLEY: Down to Department of Fisheries, unless someone wants to ask questions.

[Mr. Ilsley.]

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I want to ask a question about the Sugar Stabilization Corporation, P.C. 7475—regulations of corporation as amended. I take it that is the stabilization corporation?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Perhaps that will be included in anything that is to be said at eight o'clock. The next one is P.C. 5518—repayment of subsidy order as amended. Will the minister say a word about that at eight o'clock?

Mr. ILSLEY: Might I interrupt to say that when the words "as amended" are used, they mean as amended in last year's bill, not as amended since.

Mr. KNOWLES: Except that the last one has been amended by the deletion of two clauses.

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Then P.C. 34/4433—Government Employees Compensation Act. The minister might say whether there is anything significant in that and what the scope of it is.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is just incidental to the orders.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: If that is agreed, shall we pass on? Carried.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): When you say "Carried", Mr. Chairman, I understood that these were left over until eight o'clock. Does the minister agree?

Mr. ILSLEY: That is right. There are two orders under Department of Justice. They are merely incidental to the other control orders. They are P.C. 4600 and P.C. 6223, at page 2153 of Hansard of March 12. These were all dealt with last year. They are just the same orders, but we would like to have them continued while the other control orders are in existence. They provide for appeals and for notice to attorneys general. They are procedural orders. No exception was taken to them last year.

Mr. LOW: Has there been any volume of appeals?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes. I have not the figures but there has been a great deal of litigation.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I should like to get this clear. I was endeavouring to have the group of orders under wartime prices and trade board carried, on the understanding that the minister would give the information asked for by the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario. With that understanding shall we carry this group?

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I do not want to split hairs, Mr. Chairman, but the sensible thing is not to carry them until we get the information. I do not anticipate any controversy but I think that would be the more sensible course.

Mr. ILSLEY: Let them stand, P.C. 9870 to P.C. 328 inclusive.

Mr. POULIOT: I have a question to ask of the minister about controls in the Department of Justice. Are the defence of Canada regulations still in existence?

Mr. ILSLEY: No.

Mr. POULIOT: They are finished?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes. The other day my hon. friend asked me for certain information and if he would like to have it now I will give it as best I can.

Mr. POULIOT: Surely.

Mr. ILSLEY: He asked three questions about these controls. First, had there been a reduction in the personnel engaged in administering the controls, and if so, how much of a reduction, and had some personnel been transferred to other departments of government? There was another question allied to that.

The main departments engaged in the administration of controls were the war departments now being consolidated or liquidated. We can include or not include the defence departments. During the war the defence departments were carrying on certain types of controls. I do not know whether the type of department contemplated by my hon. friend includes the defence departments, but I will give the figures affecting the war departments now being consolidated or liquidated.

The war peak of personnel in the defence departments, civilian employees, was 68,376, which has been reduced as of December 31, 1947, to 14,492. In national war services the war peak was 2,041. That department has been abolished and therefore has no employees. The war peak in the wartime prices and trade board was 5,726, which was reduced as of December 31, 1947, to 1,129. The war peak in the Department of Reconstruction and Supply was 14,540, and that number has been reduced as of December 31, 1947, to 318.

In addition to the departments I have mentioned, the Department of Labour had a great increase in personnel as a result of war activities, especially when wage control was in operation. The war peak in the Department of Labour was 2,813, which was reduced as of December 31, 1947, to 649. The war peak for the unemployment insurance commission was 10,185, which was reduced as of December 31, 1947, to 7,041.

There is one other department that perhaps should be mentioned. With the great growth in the number of employees in the government service during the war there had to be a corresponding growth in the staff of the comptroller of the treasury, whose officers are distributed through all the departments of government. The war peak of employment there was 9,350, which has been reduced to 4,577 as of December 31, 1947. The hon. gentleman asked what has happened to these people, whether they have just been placed in other departments of government. It is impossible to give any definite answer, or anything in the way of figures in reply to that inquiry. For instance, in the wartime prices and trade board there has been movement both ways. Some of those who left the wartime prices and trade board have obtained positions in other departments, and there has been some movement also from other departments to the staff of the wartime prices and trade board. But I am told that, as nearly as can be estimated, the number of persons in the civil service reached a wartime peak of about 142,000; that is, peaks were reached in the various departments at various times, but the wartime peak was about 142,000, and a comparable figure today is 117,232. That information is the nearest to an answer that I can give to my hon. friend.

When I speak about the civil service I want to make it clear that the figures I have given do not include casual employees paid by the hour, do not include revenue postmasters and do not include crown companies personnel. It has been impossible to get the figures for the crown companies personnel in time to give this answer. It might be possible after considerable investigation; I do not know. When I spoke to my hon. friend the other day he said to do the best I could to get that information for him, and I told him that I would.

Mr. POULIOT: I thank the minister very much for that information. I am sure that he has been labouring to get it, but, as he says himself, it is still vague. During the war there were two kinds of estimates; there were the ordinary estimates which mentioned all departments, and there were also the special votes which mentioned all departments in order to show that each department was contributing in some manner to the war effort. It is the same thing with regard to special orders. There are several orders for each department, departments that would not need any special orders at all. For instance, we have them for the Department of Justice. What is the need for the Department of Justice to have a special order? I do not complain about it on account of what the minister has done himself. He was not then Minister of Justice. But why should the Minister of Justice have anything to do with controls, when the Department of Justice is supposed to be managed under the act concerning the Department of Justice?

At the present time my hon. friend is doing his best to answer my question and I thank him for that. But there is the treasury board; there is the civil service commission, these institutions that are supposed to check the movement of the civil service. If I ask today as a member of parliament, what is the composition of the staff of any department today compared with what it was one year ago, two years ago, three years ago, four years ago, five years ago, there should be an answer ready. How many times did I complain that the civil service commission, that the treasury board did not know how to work. Perhaps they have too much to do; but when it comes to elementary things like that, simple figures that all members of parliament have a right to know, how is it that it is so difficult to get them? There is something wrong somewhere. They do not know how to work. They should be taught what to do.

I remember the time that I presided over the civil service committee. I had to tell these people what to do. They were totally ignorant. And when I showed them a chart I asked them if it was all right. They said, "Yes, it is all right." But I said, "What is the thing that is up at the top? Should it not be down at the bottom?" They said, "Yes, sir." And I said, "The other thing that is in this position on the chart, should it not be somewhere else on the chart?" They said, "Yes, sir." I then said to them, "Do your work properly, or do not come before the committee. I want it to be done right now." They said, "It is impossible, sir; we cannot do it." I said, "How is it when I ask you for elementary information, for essential information, you cannot give it to me? Give it to me tomorrow morning at ten o'clock without fail." They said, "Sir, it is impossible." I said, "Tomorrow afternoon at two o'clock without fail." They said, "Oh, sir, you do not know what an amount of work is involved." Then I said, "This is my last word, the day after tomorrow at ten o'clock without fail." They said, "We will do our best, sir." They came to me and said, "It is not right? Is that not the way it should be done?" They were just children. I will tell the minister that before Mr. Taylor came the wartime prices and trade board was in a completely chaotic condition. It was impossible to deal with them. Those who were running the whole show were trying to show their superiority over members of parliament. They were just stupid asses, and I hope that Mr. Taylor will be able to do something about the other. I wish him well. I hope that he will succeed in doing something with the other people there, and clean the whole house. That is my wish.

Mr. ILSLEY: We now come to the Department of Reconstruction and Supply, P.C. 1609 which has to do with construction materials regulations, as amended.

Mr. TIMMINS: I understand that since last year a new controller has been appointed in respect of priorities or in respect of timber and steel. Is that so? What is the name of the controller? With respect to priorities, I should like to know whether it is necessary at this time to continue them. I am told of a case in Toronto where a wholesale hardware merchant received a large quantity of nails which were needed by some 450 builders in that city. That pile of nails was brought in and divided into two parts. One part went to wartime housing and the other part had to be divided between all the other builders in Toronto who, through their local merchants, were to get a share of the nails.

I have a newspaper clipping which was taken from a veterans' paper, a copy of which was received by us all last fall. I notice the heading reads, "Priorities aid Edmonton vets build homes". One item in respect of that hope which I think concerns the committee, mentions material enroute; two carloads of nails, 4,000 kegs. Four thousand kegs are a lot of nails. I should like the minister to tell the committee how this system of priorities is being worked out at the present time and on what basis these priorities of materials are being given to the builders of Canada.

Mr. HOWE: The application of priorities is not extensive. The proportion of nails going into priority projects is about fifteen per cent. In other words, fifteen per cent of nail production goes to priority projects and eighty-five per cent into free distribution. Priorities apply to low-cost housing and to veteran projects generally. Those are the only priorities that are involved.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Are there any priorities now in connection with steel or lumber used for the construction of such things as bridges, and so on by municipalities?

Mr. HOWE: Yes. There are priorities for steel. All steel is manufactured under allocation. The government approves the rolling schedule for each quarter. The steel requirements are examined and the steel is allocated as fairly as possible among a great number of users. By careful allocation it is possible to give sufficient steel to all manufacturers, so that their needs can be scheduled at a rate that the industry can support. Every pound of steel made in Canada is subject to allocation by the government. As to lumber, there is no allocation. Lumber is in free supply and can be purchased readily. The only control is in respect of exports.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: That applies also to construction timber as well as lumber.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I want to ask a question in regard to the allocation of steel, reverting to the explanation which the minister gave in connection with Bill No. 3 when we were considering that matter. The minister then explained the various projects which came to him, and when he was discussing those I took it that they referred more or less to rather large individual undertakings. What I am not quite clear about is the situation when you come to smaller things. Is there an allotment of steel in connection with small houses; because in modern houses of this type there are now steel beams? How is the allotment made when you come to small undertakings of that kind? Is the housing corporation allotted so much and does it make a sub-allocation, or how is it done?

Mr. HOWE: Perhaps my hon. friend is confusing the import regulations which we were discussing on another occasion with the allocation of domestic steel.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): But would this not cover both.

Mr. HOWE: To an extent. Imports of steel are not controlled in the same way as is the allocation of domestic steel. In other words, if approval is given to a project which requires imports of steel, imports are allowed to come in for that project. But we manufacture about 3,000,000 tons of steel in Canada and that steel is allocated very carefully to a great number of projects. For instance, the automobile industry is allocated so many tons, the shipbuilding industry so many tons a month, each individual shipyard receiving so many tons; the Massey-Harris and other farm implement manufacturing concerns are allocated so much; the car building program is allocated so many tons, and so on. Every pound of steel that can be manufactured is allocated to someone. The small man to whom my hon. friend refers buys through jobbers, who are allocated a certain amount, the jobber's allocation being intended to cover the small user.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): When you have household construction competing with other kinds of construction, and particularly having regard to what we have heard about the dearth of household construction, may I ask whether steel is actually a bottleneck in household construction or not?

Mr. HOWE: The only types of steel that go into household construction are nails and soil pipe.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): And I-beams.

Mr. HOWE: I-beams for low-cost housing are not used to any great extent. For houses that sell at $5,000 or $6,000 there are not many I-beams, but larger houses do use a certain amount of structural steel. For a time, soil pipe was a bottleneck and it is still a difficult item. We could get more soil pipe if we could allocate more pigiron to its manufacture, but we have the situation in balance to an extent that it is not a source of handicap in the building of small homes.

Mr. TIMMINS: I wish to ask the minister a series of short questions. Soil pipe is still under the control of this particular order?

Mr. HOWE: Yes, as it applies to priority building and as it applies to the control of steel. The amount of soil pipe that can be made depends upon the allocation of pigiron to the foundries making soil pipe, so that to that extent the amount of soil pipe made is regulated by the distribution of pigiron. But after the soil pipe is made the only priorities apply to soil pipe for priority projects.

Mr. TIMMINS: So that the only competition is between private builders and priority projects as far as soil pipe is concerned?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. TIMMINS: With respect to bricks, is there any control for the manufacture and distribution of bricks at the present time?

Mr. HOWE: Practically none. If there is a low-cost housing project that requires brick, at times the co-ordinator of controls will requisition from a brickyard the brick required, but that is a trifling item. Generally speaking, there is an ample supply of brick for all purposes and, to the best of my knowledge, no requisitioning is required at the present time.

Mr. TIMMINS: Will the minister explain the situation with respect to priorities in plumbing and heating supplies?

Mr. HOWE: In plumbing supplies, production is up 50 or 60 per cent. It is not a serious item at the moment. Orders are placed by Wartime Housing, and sometimes assistance is given to integrated housing contractors who schedule their requirements to meet the program of building for veterans. But generally speaking, plumbing is in fairly adequate supply. The shortage is not in plumbing fixtures, but in plumbers.

Mr. TIMMINS: Is there not still a considerable shortage in bathtubs? Is it not part of the business of priorities in this order to speed up the manufacture of bathtubs, as was done during the war in certain respects, by allocating a given amount of steel to the concerns manufacturing?

Mr. HOWE: Some two years ago steps were taken to encourage the expansion of manufacturing facilities for bathtubs and the desired production was obtained. I believe the bathtubs made today are about 190 per cent of those made in 1945. Demand and supply are pretty well balanced as far as bathtubs are concerned. There is no bottleneck there that I have heard of.

Mr. TIMMINS: Last year the minister made a statement with respect to the production of nails. I understand from builders that at the present moment nails are in fair supply. The builders are getting by, but they do not know what the situation will be in the month of May when they expect building production, particularly in the residential areas, will be more greatly expanded. Can the minister give a statement as to what we may expect in the way of the production of nails in the months to come?

Mr. HOWE: Production of nails has gone forward rapidly. It is easily 50 per cent over production at the end of the war, but we have really never caught up from the strike situation in 1946. Nails are still in short supply. But as I say, that is not because of any government priority. Government priorities account for about fifteen per cent of total production. We are not far out of balance, but the drop in production of wire rod during the strike has created a vacuum which we have not been able to fill completely.

[Mr. Howe.]

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Can the minister give the committee figures as to what percentage of our production of lumber is allocated for export and how that is broken down for individual producers?

Mr. HOWE: Yes. It is a rather complicated schedule. I will give it to my hon. friend if he is interested.

For eastern Canada, east of the Ontario-Manitoba boundary:

Softwood lumber and sawn softwood railway ties. Exports equivalent to 100 per cent of shipments for Canadian consumption. In other words, the division there is half for domestic, half for export.

Shingles. One car export for each car shipped for Canadian consumption. That is the same thing.

Lath. One car export for each five cars shipped for Canadian consumption. In other words, with regard to lath we permit the export of only one-sixth of our production.

Poles and piling. Pine poles of any length, and cedar poles between 25 feet and 50 feet in length—one car export for each car shipped for Canadian consumption.

No exports are permitted covering the following items: sawlogs, hardwood flooring, sash, doors and other millwork:

In addition to the before-mentioned export regulations, a free export quota of 290 million feet of softwood lumber for shipment to world markets has been allocated to shippers in eastern Canada, the greater portion of which will originate in the maritime provinces and the Gaspe peninsula. I might say that the reason for the free export quota is that rail hauls to market are costly. There are no rail connections in the Gaspe area, and the rail haul from the maritimes is an expensive item. Since there was not a market for the full 50 per cent allocated to the domestic market in the martime provinces, a free export was given to take up the lumber that could not be used locally.

Mr. HACKETT: Has the minister given the figures in connection with softwood ties?

Mr. HOWE: Fifty-fifty.

Mr. HACKETT: What about hardwood ties?

Mr. HOWE: Hardwood ties are on fairly free export. We make special arrangements with regard to hardwood ties. I have not them here. We require the martime provinces to fill the railway market demand in that area, and allow export of the remainder. Export quantity depends on the size of the cut. We find out how many ties the railroads require for a season; we reserve those ties and allow the balance to be exported.

For Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and northern and southern interior of British Columbia:

Softwood lumber and railway switch ties. Exports equivalent to 100 per cent of shipments for Canadian consumption. In other words, half and half.

Cedar poles 25 feet to 50 feet in length. Two cars export for each car shipped for Canadian consumption.

No exports are allowed of lath, hardwood flooring, sash, doors and other millwork.

For the Vancouver forest district, which is the British Columbia coastal area and Vancouver island:

Softwood lumber and railway ties. Sixty per cent of production may be exported.

Poles and piling, cedar poles up to 50 feet in length. Two cars export for each car shipped for Canadian consumption.

Plywood. Fifty per cent of production may be exported.

No exports on the following items are permitted:

"D" clear and better fir and/or hemlock and/or Sitka spruce in excess of 10 per cent of the shipper's total export shipments, but without limitation as to quantity in individual cars.

Mr. HACKETT: Hardwood logs are not restricted at all?

Mr. HOWE: I did not say that.

Mr. HACKETT: What did the minister say?

Mr. HOWE: There is no export permitted of hardwood flooring. I wonder if we are talking about the same thing? I am talking about the British Columbia coastal area.

Mr. HACKETT: We are not talking about the same question.

Mr. HOWE: No, evidently not. As I was saying, no exports of the following items are permitted:

"D" clear and better fir and/or hemlock and/or Sitka spruce in excess of 10 per cent of the shipper's total export shipments, but without limitation as to quantity in individual cars.

"D" and better clear flooring, edge, angle and/or flat grain in species other than cedar.

Doors, sash, millwork, railway car material and fir lath.

A priority reserve of 10 per cent of lumber produced is set up to ensure that adequate supplies are provided in Canada for the following users and end uses:

1. The Canadian railways. Maintenance, repair and new car construction.
2. Governmental projects, both dominion and provincial.
3. Mines.
4. Power projects.
5. Shipyards.
6. The manufacture of doors and millwork of all kinds.
7. The maintenance and repair of saw mills and logging camps, facilities and equipment.

An allocation of 100 million feet of fir, hemlock and balsam logs has been allowed for shipment to the United States during 1948, divided as follows: 17,500,000 feet of Douglas fir; 82,500,000 feet of hemlock and balsam.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Is the basis of allocation to the producers in each area on the same percentage? That is, does each producer in a certain area receive the same percentage allocation for export and domestic sale?

Mr. HOWE: That is right.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: There is no differentiation between the producers in the same area?

Mr. HOWE: That is right.

Mr. HERRIDGE: Did I understand the minister to say that there is one car of poles exported to one car sold internally?

Mr. HOWE: No. In your area it is one car domestic to two cars exported.

The CHAIRMAN: The committee has been considering P.C. 1609, P.C. 245 and P.C. 1997. Shall those orders carry?

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): No. It is six o'clock, Mr. Chairman. However, I just want to ask one more question.

Mr. HOWE: Could we sit for a minute or two longer? Perhaps we might get these items through.

Mr. GILLIS: Certainly. We want an early Easter recess.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Am I correct in saying that steel is not holding back domestic construction? What is the scrap situation? What is the level of our steel production at the moment throughout Canada? Is it in any way retarded by shortage of scrap, and what is the general scrap situation?

Mr. HOWE: The steel situation is not limited by scrap, although scrap is a constant worry. We have an embargo on the export of scrap, and we have a substantial import of scrap from countries such as Cuba, and those countries in the Caribbean area. We brought some of the Pearl Harbor scrap in from Manila. Our steel industry is buying scrap wherever it can be found in the world. But so far shortage of scrap has not limited production. The scrap situation was somewhat relieved by Algoma adopting a duplexing process. In other words, Algoma had an unused Bessemer furnace there, and can make what one might call synthetic scrap from ore, which has taken the Algoma Steel Corporation out of the scrap market and relieved the situation materially. But there is a scrap shortage in Canada as in other countries at the present time.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): There is, I suppose, an enormous amount of metal lying around all over Europe. Is that a practical question, or has any practical means been devised of salvaging and using that metal?

Mr. HOWE: We have not been successful in getting any allocation of that material. I understand that the United Kingdom steel manufacturers are getting a fair amount of scrap from Germany. German cities look like one great mass of twisted structural steel. That scrap is expensive to recover; and France and Belgium are reluctant to let any of it go out of the country. Of course they realize the value of scrap as we do, and they want to save it for their own purposes. England is getting a fair amount out of Germany, and I am not sure whether the Americans are getting some from there, or not. In any event it is not cheap scrap.

Mr. TIMMINS: Will the minister explain to us why it is a necessity to have a steel controller in Canada, as well as the minister's own function as controller and allocator of steel, as Minister of Trade and Commerce, under this new bill we now have before us?

Mr. HOWE: The steel controller's branch is large. It has assumed the responsibility for directing every bit of steel in this country from its primary stage to finished products. If we were not to do so, the production of steel in this country would drop at least 20 per cent. In other words, the government buys steel from Sydney, Nova Scotia, and brings it to Hamilton, where there is surplus finishing capacity. It buys steel from Sault Ste. Marie, and brings it to Hamilton. It moves pigiron into locations where it would not possibly move naturally. It helps to move scrap from impossible locations to keep our steel furnaces going.

We have subsidized the steel industry to the extent of three or four millions of dollars, or perhaps more, and this is all handled under the direction of the steel controller. By careful allocation we have been able to keep steel prices in line. The price of basic steel in Canada is lower than the price of basic steel in Pittsburgh, which is a very favourable condition for our secondary manufacturing industries, and one which could be brought about only by the assistance of the government in making the best possible use of our limited basic steel production.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Six o'clock.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: When the committee rose at six o'clock we were dealing with the orders concerning the Department of Reconstruction and Supply.

Mr. MacNICOL: I am not going to be critical of the minister this evening, because I know he has carried a terrific load, not only in connection with his own work but because of what has been placed on his shoulders by other departments. Perhaps it has been impossible for him to do what one might expect should have been done. I should like to know how the production of houses in Canada compares with production in England. This morning I cut out a clipping which referred to what has been done in England under Mr. Bevan, who apparently has to do with the production of houses. It states that last year they constructed 300,000 new houses. I do not know whether those houses would cost as much as a similar house erected in Canada. I hardly think the house there would be as substantially built, and perhaps the cost would not be as high. The article states that they have completed two-thirds of their 750,000 house program.

I keep asking myself how they can do that when they have to import at least any lumber or flooring or things of that kind which would be required. I ask myself whether we have done all that could have been done here. The minister may tell me that he has, and I am not going to contradict him because I do not know what he has been up against. If we have not done all that we should have done, what has been the bottleneck that has prevented us from achieving our objective? The fact is that there is still a great shortage of houses in this country and, if any country in the world should be able to build houses, it is Canada. I realize that labour is one problem.

I have always had the highest regard for the minister and I had hoped that he would pioneer or suggest some rapid way of building houses. I know that for some time engineers have been developing and promoting steel-core houses which, it is claimed, can be built rapidly. Perhaps the minister would know about that. I should like to have the minister tell us how his program is getting along. If it has been held up, what is the reason? What plans has he now for having hundreds of thousands of new houses built? I presume that many are required.

Mr. HOWE: We have been building houses. We built about 50,000 in 1945; 67,000 in 1946 and about 77,000 in 1947. We have not set our target for 1948 because we are examining the situation to determine how many. Seventy-seven thousand is far more than were ever built in any single year of the history of this country, and the same is true of the 67,000 figure. We have built about 200,000 since the end of the war, and last year we had a carryover, the largest we ever had, of about 45,000 houses in process of construction.

My hon. friend asks how our program compares with that in England. We usually think of England on the terms of four to one. If they have built 300,000, which I may say the available statistics do not indicate they have—I would say the figure is much too high—on a four to one basis we are still a little ahead of them. On a population basis Canada compares favourably with any other country in the world in the number of houses built. Sweden was doing better in the immediate post-war days, but they had a slump last year and our three-year total is much better than theirs.

My hon. friend suggests that we should invent something new in the way of housing, something better and cheaper. Unfortunately we have the psychology of the tenant to consider. In the early days of the war we were ready to produce a prefabricated house of aluminum, a very comfortable house, but people just would not have them in their towns and the people who lived in them did not like them. That has been the history of prefabricated houses that did not follow conventional styles of architecture.

I was interested in a competition that was held in Los Angeles when I was there a year or so ago. One of the large automobile companies was asked to go into the production of aluminum prefabricated houses. They worked out a design which seemed most attractive, a design that seemed to suit California very well indeed. Before starting into production they built three houses. One was the prefabricated house they intended to build; another was a Cape Cod cottage, and the third was a Colonial style house. All three houses cost about the same and had about the same dimensions. The vote in Los Angeles gave 85 votes out of 100 in favour of the Cape Cod cottage. Their vote showed that people like to live in the type of house in which their ancestors lived and in which they were born. That is one of the difficulties of striking out into new and original patterns of houses.

The material situation is no longer the bottleneck; the bottleneck today is skilled mechanics. We have a housing project in Ottawa of about 450 units. The first units are occupied, but I am told that it will be the end of 1948 before sufficient bricklayers and plumbers can be assembled to finish the job. That indicates the shortage of those two trades.

Manpower is the real bottleneck in house-building today, particularly skilled trade. We are making some progress as we are getting a few more mechanics every year. The supply situation is in better shape. We are amending the housing act as we go along to overcome difficulties, financial or otherwise, that arise from higher building costs. We are doing the best we can to attain our objectives, and the fact that we have done so in spite of all obstacles is an indication that the housing section is very active indeed.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Has the minister not been very much disturbed at the cost of these structures, and does he see any real sign of a drop in costs? Even leaving out the fantastic instances one hears of occasionally, it seems to me that the ruling costs on these dwellings impose a burden we never would have thought was proper or possible to be carried, whether by owners or tenants. Does the minister feel that there is any real prospect of costs coming down?

Mr. HOWE: One can only speculate. Costs have been levelling off recently. The additional higher labour cost is off-setting greater efficiency in the assembly of materials, but I would say that costs of the type of housing the government builds should not be greater in 1948 than in 1947. It may be a trifle less.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: We pass to the Department of Transport.

Mr. MAYHEW: Mr. Chairman, before the committee took recess at six o'clock we had agreed to make a statement on the Commodity Prices Stabilization Corporation Limited and on the Canadian Sugar Stabilization Corporation Limited and, with your permission, I am prepared to make them now.

The Commodity Prices Stabilization Corporation Limited was incorporated by letters patent dated December 24, 1941, as a private company under part I of the Companies Act, 1934. All the shares of the company, other than the qualifying shares of the directors, are held by the Minister of Finance.

The function of the corporation was and is to pay subsidies and to engage in bulk purchasing of essential Canadian requirements.

Its present activities are as follows:

1. The only remaining bulk purchasing is the acquisition of Canadian requirements of "off-shore" oils and fats. Oils and fats are still under international allocation through the international emergency food council, and to a very large extent allocations to Canada have to be purchased from or through the governments in the supplying countries.

2. The only subsidies still being paid are those on oils and fats.

3. A large part of the corporation's present activities consists of the liquidation of remaining inventories of antimony and tin, which will soon be completed, and in the checking and closing up of past subsidy accounts. All subsidies paid by the corporation were paid as accountable advances and to most subsidies certain terms and conditions were attached. It is the duty of the corporation to examine the accounts of the recipients of these payments, and in many cases final settlements cannot be concluded until after the close of the last fiscal year of the recipient in which subsidy was paid.

The estimates for the corporation in the fiscal year 1947-48 amounted to forty millions and the estimates tabled for 1948-49 amounted to eighteen millions.

The statement on the Canadian Sugar Stabilization Corporation Limited is very brief. In fact both these statements are necessarily brief because of the lack of time, but if the hon. member wants any further information we shall be glad to get it for him, and there will also be an opportunity on the estimates to get the further information required.

The Canadian Sugar Stabilization Corporation Limited was incorporated in March, 1947, for the purpose of taking over the former functions of the sugar administrator in bulk purchasing of imported cane sugar and Barbados molasses. The Canadian Sugar Stabilization Corporation has acquired or is acquiring Canada's 1948 requirements of imported cane sugar.

The government of Canada has an agreement with the government of the United Kingdom which gives Canada the option of joining with the government of the United Kingdom in purchasing the entire exportable surplus of empire raw cane sugar in 1949.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): The statement on the Commodity Prices Stabilization Corporation Limited which the parliamentary assistant read indicated that it is now largely a liquidation proposition, and yet the estimate for the corporation for the year is a substantial one. That has reference, I suppose, to the fact that fats and oils still have to be purchased in substantial measure from the relevant governments.

Mr. MAYHEW: That is correct.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I was not quite clear as to the statement on the Sugar Stabilization Corporation. Do I understand that we are co-operating with the United Kingdom in buying inside the colonial empire?

Mr. MAYHEW: If the exportable surplus of empire cane sugar is required.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): What effect will that have on the domestic production of non-cane sugar?

Mr. MAYHEW: I do not think it has any bearing on that. It is only an option to purchase what we require. The production of beet sugar will certainly be taken care of by this department before it brings in any cane sugar.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I take it that the Commodity Prices Stabilization Corporation, which was created to meet a temporary situation, will in due course disappear. That being so, what is the full significance of P.C. 34/4433—Government Employees Compensation Act extended to Commodity Prices Stabilization Corporation. Does that mean that up to now these employees have not been eligible for pension?

Mr. MAYHEW: They are temporary employees and are not eligible for pension.

Mr. ILSLEY: It is not a pension act but a compensation act, like the Workmen's Compensation Act.

Mr. JACKMAN: I understand that there is no shortage of sugar at the present time for commercial or domestic use and that no subsidy is being paid. Why is it necessary to carry on the Sugar Stabilization Corporation, and what is the estimate for 1948-49?

Mr. MAYHEW: There is nothing in the estimates for the Sugar Stabilization Corporation.

Mr. JACKMAN: Why are we keeping the order in council, then?

Mr. ILSLEY: We entered into a contract to take part of this empire sugar for the 1948-49 season, and this is the agency which imports sugar.

Mr. JACKMAN: Why did you enter into the contract if there is plenty of sugar in the world? As a country are we favouring bulk purchasing of our essential commodities?

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not think I can give an accurate narrative of this, but I know, when I was in the Department of Finance, we were entering into contracts for two or three years ahead, and we were carefully considering whether it was advisable to do so or not. Apparently this is the last of the contracts and it covers the 1948-49 crop.

Mr. JACKMAN: How many months will elapse before the whole matter is disposed of?

Mr. ILSLEY: One cannot give an estimate of the number of months, but it will not be very long. I do not know exactly what is meant by that. I cannot give any estimate, but it is not—

Mr. JACKMAN: It will not be reviewed for the 1949-50 crop, then? It will expire with the present sugar crop year; is that the understanding?

Mr. ILSLEY: It is not likely, but one cannot say anything about that.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I do not think the question of the hon. member for Rosedale has been answered satisfactorily. I want to go back to what the parliamentary assistant said. My impression was that he spoke about there being the right to purchase, not an actually firm agreement. I think he used the word "optional," or at any rate we had the right to purchase if we wanted to We need to know whether we are bound by the contract or whether it is merely a right that we have to exercise.

Mr. MAYHEW: We cannot give the committee the exact quantities of sugar that will be required, but we have an option to purchase all that we shall need, minus what we grow in Canada. That option is with the British government, and therefore it is thought advisable to keep this corporation intact for that purpose until that necessity no longer exists.

Mr. JACKMAN: The committee is entitled to some information as to what the government's policies are on the purchase of sugar. We get a continual bombardment of pamphlets from our own beet sugar growers. This particular order in council has to do with cane sugar which we refine in this country. I cannot discover whether or not it is to be government policy to purchase sugar in bulk for Canada from Great Britain or from any pool, or whether there is a pool of which the United States is a member and whether Cuba comes into it. We are entirely at sea as to what the policy of the government is. They have the appropriation of their needs, but we do not know how long this will last. They do not know whether they have an option to get cane sugar elsewhere, or under this particular pooling arrangement. We are entitled to a little light if the government wishes to take power unto itself to regulate the sugar business of this country by order in council.

Mr. MAYHEW: We buy what sugar we require. May I say that there is on the order paper, in the name of the hon. member for Eglinton, I think, a question which the minister will be answering in a day or two. The hon. member will likely get a statement much more fully than I can give to the committee at this time.

Mr. MERRITT: As I understand it, so long as this order in council remains in force no private Canadian dealer can import sugar. It must be all imported through this corporation. Is that not correct?

Mr. MAYHEW: That is right.

Mr. MERRITT: Is that a desirable situation now, or is it a necessary situation?

Mr. MAYHEW: The officials consider it is necessary at the present time, or else they would not ask for this. I do not want to go any farther than that.

Mr. MERRITT: I did not hear the answer.

Mr. MAYHEW: It is considered necessary at the present time.

Mr. MERRITT: Can the parliamentary assistant say why it is considered necessary, and if he does not consider it necessary, might it not be unwise unless we are to go into the bulk purchasing of commodities forever to shut off the private trade longer than is necessary?

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I have a supplementary question to ask. We are entitled to know whether it is a matter of policy to continue bulk buying only when it is necessary, or whether it is considered desirable in itself. In the case of fats and oils my understanding is—if I am wrong I should like to be corrected now—that there is a real reason for doing it. It is a transaction between government and government; but nothing has been said here to indicate that it is not advisable to have the trade carried out by private importers.

Mr. MAYHEW: I do not think I can say anything more than that or give any more information. I have not it to give. I have not had the opportunity to discuss it with the minister. I know that he will be making a statement on this very point in the course of a day or two. The matter can be raised then. I would like to leave it at that for the moment. I know it is not satisfactory; I admit it is not.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): May this order in council stand over? I do not think we should pass it without that information.

Mr. ILSLEY: Mr. Chairman, that holds up the whole act. I was hoping we could get this through.

Mr. COCKERAM: Let us have the answer.

Mr. JACKMAN: Perhaps the minister or the parliamentary assistant could give us some information with regard to the Canadian Sugar Stabilization Corporation, not so much on the supply or the procurement side, in respect of which we could get further information on another occasion, but so far as distribution is concerned. Does a manufacturer or a user of sugar in this country have to apply to this board for a licence or some permit in order to get his supply? I have noticed that the sugar administrator has an expensive suite of offices in the Royal Bank building in Montreal. I do not know why he should occupy such offices. Is he not the same gentleman who is president of the Industrial Development Bank? What is the arrangement with regard to the supply and distribution of sugar under this order in council?

Mr. MAYHEW: No licence is required. The corporation bring in the sugar and distribute it to refiners as required, and they load it into their own refineries and pay for the sugar. That is the only operation.

Mr. JACKMAN: The refiners, then, must pay the Sugar Stabilization Corporation for the sugar at a price which is fixed by the corporation itself?

[Mr. Merritt.]

Mr. MAYHEW: By the corporation.

Mr. JACKMAN: Does the parliamentary assistant happen to know whether that price is above or below the world price of sugar?

Mr. MAYHEW: I do not know.

Mr. STEPHENSON: Are we at the present time bound by the agreement to belong to this pool for a certain length of time?

Mr. MAYHEW: It is not a pool. It is just an agreement with the British for the buying of the exportable surplus of cane sugar that is grown in the empire.

Mr. STEPHENSON: Are we bound by this agreement for a certain length of time?

Mr. MAYHEW: We are not bound unless we have entered into contracts. I do not know what they are. There is no long contract in connection with this.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I do not think anyone will suggest that we have been unduly holding up anything. We are ready to facilitate the proceedings, but I certainly do not think we should allow this to go through when the member for Rosedale has asked certain searching and pertinent questions which affect the matter of policy and which have not been answered. I think it would be silly to let the thing go through with the record as it is now.

Mr. ILSLEY: I am sorry I have no further information, and if hon. gentlemen insist we shall have to let it go over until tomorrow. That is all we can do. Perhaps we had better take the transport items before we do that.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Is it the pleasure of the committee to allow these items to stand?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Stand.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The item before the committee, then, under the transport department is P.C. 2245. Shall this item carry?

Mr. ARCHIBALD: I know the minister is busy, but there are a couple of points which I wish to bring up in this connection. Take P.C. 2245, which authorizes the chairman of the board of steamship inspection to relieve any ship from the obligation of complying with peacetime regulations. As the order is outlined, it states that, owing to the exigencies of war and the consequent scarcity of ships, these regulations, which are normally complied with in peacetime, shall be set aside. But the order 133/510, which deals with compensation to seamen whose effects have been damaged, has been wiped out. There you have a situation whereby the shipping companies can still carry on, using hulls that would not normally be considered seaworthy, and yet the order in council dealing with war damage to seamen's effects is withdrawn. It is such acts that cause dissatisfaction in the ranks of organized labour. If these acts were remedied we would hear a great deal less of what is known at the present time as the communist menace in this country. This stirs it up.

Again, No. 4306 provides for permission to Canadian registered ships to clear on a voyage with masters, mates or engineers not holding appropriate certificates, as amended by 8995. These two provisions enable ships that are not normally seaworthy or properly manned to go to sea, thus endangering the lives of the crew.

Two or three weeks ago I asked the Minister of Transport whether they had reconsidered their stand with respect to the establishment of a coastguard in the light of the sinking of the Clarksdale Victory off Queen Charlotte islands. The answer was to the effect that the cost factor weighed heavily upon his mind. Since that day, two events have taken place in the same area, having a relationship to this question.

In the little fishing village of Massett at the north end of Queen Charlotte islands, a few miles away from the spot where the Clarksdale Victory sank, a certain person became ill and it was necessary to rush that person to hospital. A call was put in to Canadian Pacific Air Lines for this purpose and the cost of transportation was $252 for the flight to Prince Rupert. Two weeks later there was another emergency of the same kind and, as it was not possible to get the Canadian Pacific Air Lines, a telephone call was put in for a United States coastguard plane stationed a few miles farther north. They replied that they would be in Prince Rupert within two hours and they came and conveyed the sick person to hospital. They were asked what the charge would be and they replied, "Charge? There is no charge. This is our job".

Here is the point. The best way I can express my opinion is in the words of the hon. member for Temiscouata: I am humiliated as a Canadian. It is all right to get a helping hand from a friend, but when you put the bite on him too often it is too much. It is about time that we in Canada, with our marine history, built up a merchant marine worthy of the country and aided by the necessary protective services. There are more places than the west coast interested in this matter. The people of the maritime provinces are as deeply interested in it as the people of British Columbia, and I say to the Minister of Transport that, instead of having a couple of orders in council dealing with the removal of restrictions on steamship companies, he should pass positive orders for the building up of the marine service.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I have listened with interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Skeena, very little of which had to do with the two orders in council which are on the list of my colleague the Minister of Justice. Evidently they were an excuse for him to make a speech on the necessity of a coastguard service in this country. If my hon. friend wishes to debate that question at the proper time I shall be glad to hear what he has to say, but this is not the proper time under these orders.

However, there are two things that seem to bother him, and I shall deal with them. The first is this. He seemed to object strenuously to one of these orders being revoked, namely P.C. 133/510, having to do with compensation to seamen, war damage to effects. The reason that order in council is being revoked is that it has lapsed. There are no longer any claims under that order in council, and neither are there claims by the dependents of seamen by virtue of the sections of the order. So it was thought expedient to revoke it. Had there been any claims or had all the claims not been paid up under this order, the recommendation would have been made to extend it.

The second matter complained of is the order having to do with the relieving of ships from steamship inspection. My hon. friend says he knows of instances where ships have been allowed to ply in an unseaworthy condition.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: No. I said this allows them to ply the trade routes in a condition that is not seaworthy according to ordinary peacetime standards.

Mr. CHEVRIER: If my hon. friend reads the order in council carefully he will see that the chairman of the steamship inspection board has the right, subject to the approval of the minister, to grant relief from certain parts of part VII of the Canada Shipping Act, having to do with steamship inspection. But it is clearly set out in the order that on no condition shall he grant that permission to proceed to sea if the ship is in an unseaworthy condition. The chairman of the steamship inspection board has repeatedly told me that on no occasion has he exempted a ship from the provisions of this part of the act when he was satisfied that the ship was in an unseaworthy condition. P.C. 4306, the second order, simply relieves the ship from the operations of sections 113 and 114 of the act and sections 132 and 133 in so far as clearances are concerned. Both of these orders in council will be contained in the new amendments to the Canada Shipping Act which I hope to be able to bring down to this house.

Mr. GILLIS: As another deep-sea fisherman, I should like to say a few words on this particular item. I agree with the hon. member for Skeena. We are not so much concerned about the orders that are being retained as we are about the ones that are being wiped out, one of which is P.C. 133/510, with regard to compensation to seamen, war damage to effects and so on. Wartime conditions necessitated the passing of that order. It was presupposed that those sailing ships at that time would be sailing under conditions much more hazardous than and completely different from those which prevailed in peacetime sailing. So the government passed an order to compensate anyone who might run into difficulty because of wartime conditions in shipping. That particular order in council is being wiped out, but the very orders in council which set up the conditions that necessitated the passing of the previous order are being retained.

Despite the fact that the minister says the inspector can do this or that, on the approval of the minister, it is not what the minister says in this house that counts. I have all the respect in the world for him and his word. He is still boring down there at the strait of Canso. He has been telling me that all the time, and I believe him. But the fact of the matter is that, if it comes to a test, it is not what the minister said in Hansard that counts. It is what this order in council says that counts. I think the first order, the order for compensation that I am talking about, should have been retained if the conditions contained in the next two orders which protect and give a good deal of latitude to the shipping companies are to be retained; because the very conditions that you were trying to guard against there from the point of view of compensation are permissible to the shipping companies. Listen to this—and this is P.C. 2245:

> . . . to authorize . . . the chairman of the board of steamship inspection to relieve any ship, or the owner of any ship, from the obligation of complying with any of the provisions of part VII of the Canada Shipping Act . . . excepting therefrom those provisions of the said part and regulations made thereunder relating to radio and telegraph installations on ships. . .

And so on. The matter is entirely in the hands of the inspector of shipping. As the hon. member for Skeena pointed out, it does not make any difference what kind of ship it is. If the inspector says it is quite all right, you can sail. It is no use for someone to protest and say that the minister said in the house, "Well, that does not apply." If it does not apply, it should be wiped out. That particular section of the act which has been set aside afforded protection to the seamen. It guaranteed them that inspectors were obligated to see that certain standards were maintained with regard to ships that left port. All right then.

We come to the next one and it is much worse. Your compensation act was passed because the government visualized and, I think, rightly so, that every ship which could sail would have to be used during the war, that many of them would be in an unseaworthy condition and that sailors would be taking additional risks. So some extraordinary means of compensation was provided. The compensation is now wiped out but the conditions that made it necessary to pass the compensation provision in the first place are retained.

We now come along to P.C. 4306. This one is worse, but it is still being retained. If, as the minister says, these provisions that I have just been quarrelling with are not applicable, then this ought to be taken off the board also; run a stroke through it and say it is not necessary.

Listen to the next one, P.C. 4306, which is to provide for permission to Canadian registered ships to clear on any voyage with masters, mates or engineers not holding appropriate certificates, as amended by P.C. 8995. What does that mean?

Mr. CHEVRIER: It provides for permission to clear on a voyage, not on any voyage.

Mr. GILLIS: There is not any difference. The ship just goes out. That is all.

Mr. MacNICOL: Consider the poor crew.

Mr. GILLIS: If we read that, what does it mean? It means that you are cutting completely your standards for officers and their qualifications, and the guarantee to ordinary seamen that they have competent officers manning that ship when it leaves port. It places in the hands of the shipping companies the privilege and power of discriminating against men who have worked their way up, qualified and, now hold masters' certificates and so forth. That, too, maybe was necessary during the war when there were so many ships at sea, and when personnel was so difficult to obtain. But it is not necessary today, with the maritime service that was built up during the war, and with the large number of men who took naval training and qualified at a good deal of expense and trouble to themselves. Men who hold these qualifications will demand adequate compensation for the services they rendered. So we are retaining here an order in council that enables shipping companies to pick up men out of the rank of the unemployed, men who are forced, perhaps through economic pressure, to take employment on ships of this kind, while, at the same time, you leave on the beaches men who are qualified. If this order in Council is not applicable; if it does not mean that; and if it is the intention of the Department of Transport to use personnel built up during the war, men who are qualified and competent, then this should be removed, and the Canada Shipping Act as applied to the trained personnel should be applicable instead of the wartime regulations.

You are removing now an order in council that made compensation applicable to certain personnel who may have run into conditions brought about by the order in council. Are you making any provision to replace that compensation order in council?

Mr. CHEVRIER: No. I told the hon. member for Skeena a moment ago that that order in council P.C. 133/510 has lapsed. No more claims have been made by virtue of it. Therefore it has used itself up. There is no need for carrying it on.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: For instance, a snag boat, Port Essington, ran into difficulty, and the men lost all their effects. This was a government vessel, and they lost all their clothing. There is no law which says that the government was liable for the clothing they lost. A boat of the Canadian National Railways burned up in Ketchikan, Alaska and, in that case, the railway company was not liable for the effects lost, but they did reimburse the men, out of the goodness of their hearts. Now the seafarers' international union wants to see in the Canada Shipping Act an item covering loss of effects, or an order along that line, which would apply in peacetime, so that if a ship is sunk at sea the men will be compensated for the clothes and personal belongings they had with them.

There is no difference between a boat going down in the middle of the Atlantic in peacetime and one going down in wartime. It is just the same thing. The water is cold.

Mr. GILLIS: I was just about to finish, but I wish to thank the hon. member for Skeena for helping. I do not think the minister's answer was satisfactory. It was to the effect that when there were no more claims the order in council should be allowed to lapse. If there were no more claims, so much the better. But why not leave the order in council there? In case of an emergency there may be claims. And, as the hon. member for Skeena has pointed out, a sailor who loses his effects at sea is just as seriously affected as if he had lost them during wartime. If it is not costing anything, except the fact that it is there against the time when something may occur, then it should have been carried forward; if you are going to carry these others forward.

Is there any intention on the part of the minister or his department to provide something along the lines contained in the terms of the order in council?

Mr. CHEVRIER: The order in council my hon. friend has dealt with is one which was passed under the War Measures Act, and it is explained in the order just what is meant by war damage. Perhaps I had better read it to the hon. member. Paragraph (c) of the regulations defines war damage as—

> Loss (including destruction) and damage caused by, or in repelling, enemy action or by measures taken to avoid the consequences of damage caused by or in repelling enemy action.

My answer was based upon the definition contained in the order in council when I replied to my hon. friend.

Mr. PEARKES: I regret I have not order in council 2245 before me, but I should like to ask the minister a question about it. My interpretation of it is that it is retaining certain easements in the selection of certain officers on ships which were removed during the war because of shortage of personnel.

Mr. CHEVRIER: That is order in council P.C. 4306; it is not P.C. 2245.

Mr. PEARKES: I was talking about P.C. 2245. I know the minister has had communications with radio officers from the Pacific coast. They have made representations to him in order that they may have their positions assured. Does the retention of this order mean that radio officers must be carried as heretofore on ships sailing on the Pacific coast?

Mr. CHEVRIER: The best way I can answer that is by saying that this does not affect the position which existed prior to the passing of the order, in so far as radio telegraphers or officers are concerned; that is, the order excepts radio and radiotelegraphy.

Mr. MacNICOL: Is P.C. 4306 retained because there is still a shortage of qualified men?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Quite so; that is the reason for it. I can also tell my hon. friend it is the intention to carry these two orders into the amendments to the Canada Shipping Act.

While I am on my feet, perhaps I might reply to the objection of the hon. member for Cape Breton South. These two orders in council as they now stand on the list of my colleague are today sections of the merchant shipping act of the United Kingdom. That country saw fit to include the terms of these orders and, in fact, to go farther than one of them, in their act. So that I do not think we make any mistake if we follow the precedent created there.

Mr. MacNICOL: I had in mind the accident which occurred on the St. Lawrence river not far from the minister's own home town. I believe it was a few miles up the river from Cornwall. Although I am not sure of the names of the vessels, I believe they were called the Milverton and the Translake. Those two ships may have had thoroughly qualified officers; I do not know, and I have no reason to say that they did not have. But I do know the waters there are quite narrow. I suppose the channel is less than a quarter of a mile wide, and it struck me at the time that that was a situation in which officers could not be too well qualified.

On the other hand, I have no doubt there are many officers who have not certificates but who are thoroughly qualified to navigate ships in certain waters. My reason for rising was to ask whether there is still a shortage of qualified officers.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Yes, there is.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Are these orders in council agreed to?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Then, under the Department of the Secretary of State we have P.C. 1665 and P.C. 469.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. ILSLEY: Then, Mr. Chairman, there is still certain information we have to get for some hon. members. Therefore I would move that the committee rise, report progress and—

Mr. KNOWLES: Before the minister makes his motion, I wonder if I might ask a question with respect to two orders in council which have been discontinued and which, therefore, were not called today. These two are listed under the Department of Mines and Resources. I notice that the minister of that department is not with us at present but perhaps the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply could answer my question. The orders in council to which I refer were P.C. 7167 and P.C. 7168, having to do with reserves to the crown in the matter of radioactive substances in the Yukon Territory and in the Northwest Territories. The question I should like to ask the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply is this: What is the situation now with respect to radioactive minerals? What kind of controls are exercised over those minerals by the federal government, with respect to exploration and exploitation, as well as production and final ownership?

Mr. HOWE: I am glad my hon. friend has asked that, because it permits me to place on Hansard a statement that I have been intending to put on the record for several days.

Mr. KNOWLES: I want to assure the committee that there is no collusion in this.

Mr. HOWE: It will be recalled that orders in council passed in 1943 reserving title to radioactive minerals on crown lands in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon were extended under the Continuation of Transitional Measures Act, 1947, largely because the question of ownership of ores in the ground was still under discussion in the united nations atomic energy commission and it was felt that no action should be taken here that might embarrass those discussions. Since then, the second report of the united nations commission has been published, and that report does not contemplate ownership of ores in the ground by any international authority which may be established. As I told the house on March 25 last, the policy of the government is that radioactive material be controlled after it has been mined and the atomic energy regulations of Canada provide for this sort of control.

While the orders in council were in effect and until the atomic energy regulations had been passed, it was necessary that mining operations be exclusively in the hands of the government. The whole situation has been reviewed in the light of present circumstances and changed conditions, and the government is now satisfied that it is in the best interests of Canada that restrictions against private prospecting and private development of radioactive minerals should be removed and has accordingly revoked the orders in council which reserved to the crown title in these minerals in the territories.

The policy decided upon is as follows:

The government will purchase through Eldorado Mining and Refining (1944) Limited, or other designated agency, acceptable uranium bearing ores and concentrates on the following basis:

1. A minimum uranium content equivalent to 10 per cent by weight of uranium oxide (U_3O_8) in the ores or concentrates will normally be required.

2. Price will be based upon the uranium content of the ores or concentrates and will be at the minimum rate of $2.75 per pound of contained (U_3O_8) f.o.b. rail and will be guaranteed for a period of five years.

3. This price includes all radioactive elements in the ores or concentrates, but consideration will be given to the commercially recoverable value of non-radioactive constituents by adjustment of price or by the redelivery of the residues containing such constituents.

4. Under special circumstances, consideration may be given to payment of a higher price or to acceptance of ores or concentrates of lower grade.

5. All operations will be carried on subject to the provisions of the atomic energy regulations of Canada.

That constitutes the new policy. As noted, the new policy permits private exploration and private mining and proposes to encourage both by putting on the ores a definite minimum value, which will be the minimum value for the next five years. I might say that I was interested to note that the semi-annual report of the United States atomic energy commission to the Senate and the House of Representatives, which reached me only yesterday, contains the following two paragraphs:

> The commission believes new reserves of source materials can best be developed by competitive private industry, under the stimulus of profits, and the means of accomplishing this are under study.
> In general it will be commission policy to purchase ores for its program from private sources and limit direct government production as far as possible.

It would seem that, although we arrived at the Canadian policy independently, the policy of the United States will follow parallel lines.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: What is before the committee now is Bill No. 136. The minister suggested that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. KNOWLES: This is an important matter. I think the Minister of Justice should not press his motion that we report progress.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. member rose while we were waiting and asked permission to ask a question about some of the orders that had been revoked.

Mr. KNOWLES: And got a staggering answer.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: What is before the committee now is this bill. We have dealt with the bill as far as we can go and the minister has suggested that the committee rise and report progress.

Mr. KNOWLES: On a point of order, technically speaking we are not dealing with any item at all; we are dealing with section 1 of Bill No. 136. The effect of this one-section bill is to amend section 7 of the original act and thus keep the whole of chapter 16 of last year's statutes in effect. Technically speaking, I think any discussion relating to the act that is being extended is in order. The Minister of Justice has moved that we rise and report progress. If he presses that motion and the committee carries it, of course I have no option, but I appeal to the Minister of Justice not to press his motion at this moment.

Mr. ILSLEY: If it is in order to discuss revoked orders, and I must say that up until this moment I thought it was, I am content to have the discussion now rather than later. Perhaps Your Honour could rule as to whether it is in order to discuss revoked orders. I gave the committee a list of the revoked orders and they were put on Hansard to show what had been done last year under the act. We are extending that act and I should think we could discuss revoked orders.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I might mention that the two orders in council which we have discussed were revoked on December 30, 1947. I am sure that hon. members have not had a chance to look at the statement of the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply. It is a most important statement, which indicates a change of government policy, and I think it should be in order to discuss it at this time. In view of the fact that the two orders in council which are mentioned were revoked at the end of December, hon. members should have a chance to discuss them.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: This whole procedure is irregular, and I think everybody understands that. We did agree, by unanimous consent, to discuss these items, and if the committee is willing to carry on this discussion we shall do so. But it would be by unanimous consent, not by any rule that would govern.

Mr. HOWE: I have a suggestion to make. The statement I have made is important and no one has had a chance to examine it. Perhaps we might postpone further discussion on this matter until the committee was again considering this bill.

Mr. KNOWLES: I am quite happy to accept that suggestion if it is understood that a discussion of this statement will be in order when we are in committee again on this bill.

Mr. ILSLEY: There cannot be any understanding such as the hon. member is asking for. You cannot make a bargain that if we agree that a certain thing is in order we shall take it up later when, in fact, it is not an order.

Mr. KNOWLES: I am not trying to drive any kind of bargain. The Chairman has said that this can be done by unanimous consent. I am not bargaining with him on that point. All I am asking is that if it is to be done by unanimous consent, I am quite prepared to have that unanimous consent apply to tomorrow as well as to this evening.

Progress reported.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

PROVISION FOR EMPLOYEES' PENSIONS, MINIMUM PRICE OF WHEAT DELIVERIES, ETC.

The house resumed from Friday, March 12, consideration of the motion of Mr. Howe for the second reading of Bill No. 135, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1935.

Mr. C. C. MILLER (Portage la Prairie): Mr. Speaker, while it is true that on Friday evening I moved the adjournment of this debate I feel that, since I had an opportunity to discuss this subject, first on the resolution, and again on the second reading last Friday, I should not take up too much of the time of the house but should allow other hon. members to have their say. On further reflection I think that, for the time being in any event, I have pretty well concluded my remarks.

Mr. F. E. JAENICKE (Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the bill.

As to the first section of it, which provides for the establishment of a pension fund for the employees of the wheat board, I am of the opinion that the farmers will look with favour upon this proposal, provided, of course, that the funds to be taken out of the moneys of the wheat board are reasonable, and I submit that any such deductions from the wheat board funds should be reasonable. In order to ensure that they shall be reasonable, I would suggest to the government that in committee we should add a subsection to this clause to the effect that the advisory committee of the wheat board should consent to the deductions to be made out of the board's funds. I rather welcome this section because it lends an air of permanency to the wheat board act which it lacks at the present time.

The second section deals with payments to producers. It is under this section that the farmers expect further payments to be made on their 1945, 1946 and 1947 deliveries. It is this part of the bill which is particularly urgent, because the money is so badly needed by the farmers in the west at the present time. I am hoping that these payments will be made as large as possible. In view of the international wheat agreement which has just been concluded and the short supply of food in general, I think the board would be justified in paying out all the moneys which they now hold in trust for the farmers.

I have received numerous letters from farmers in my constituency in connection with these anticipated payments to be made by the wheat board, and I must say that the farmers feel that much more should be paid to them than the rumoured twenty cents. Unless the payment is as generous as possible, there will be great disappointment and great dissatisfaction.

I also think that, when making these payments, the board should send along a brief statement showing the farmer what has happened to his wheat that he delivered to the board. I should like to read part of a letter which I received from a farmer in my constituency, in order to give the house some idea of what the general feeling is among the farmers. He says, in part:

> Sixty-five per cent of the farmers are without seed and feed.

Remember he writes from the northwestern part of my constituency, where he experienced a crop failure last year. He goes on:

> Owing to the bad season thousands of them are walking the streets trying to find a dollar to feed wife and children. Why should the wheat board be allowed to keep this money, and when spring comes farmers have to get down on their knees to managers of chartered banks only to be insulted? The wheat board has to account for three hundred million bushels sold at over $3 a bushel. This is not including what they sold to Britain. There is also a 160,000,000 bushels that the millers subsidized to farmers at 30 cents a bushel. We are asking you to put that before the government and not to accept payment of twenty cents a bushel.

I cannot vouch for the correctness of the figures this farmer gives in his letter, but I am putting the letter before the house to show what the farmers on the prairies are thinking, and to urge upon the government the necessity of making the largest possible payment and submitting to the farmer at the same time a brief statement of what has happened to his wheat.

With respect to the last part of the bill, which concerns the marketing of oats and barley, I am really amused by the arguments advanced in this house that the majority of the farmers of western Canada do not favour the handling of coarse grains by the wheat board or by some grain board. The hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) was undoubtedly the most outspoken proponent on behalf of those who wish to go back to the open market system of marketing grain. While I respect his views, to which he is, of course, entitled, I should like to quote what he said at page 2119 of Hansard:

> So I say that with respect to barley and oats . . . there is no majority demand in western Canada for the passing of this legislation.

Again, at page 2124 of Hansard, he says:

> So we find ourselves in this position. This measure is not seriously asked for by anyone. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture is divided on it; we know that.

The hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Wright), as well as the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) and other members from the west have already refuted these arguments and have shown, especially in connection with the resolutions and representations of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, that this body has for the last three years definitely asked for this legislation and has stood on the side of orderly marketing through a grain board. I shall have a little more to say about that later on so far as my own constituency is concerned.

There has been considerable agitation on behalf of the members of the grain exchange in Winnipeg to return to the open market system, and the tactics employed to persuade the farmer to change his mind about this orderly marketing are the same as the arguments employed by my hon. friend the member for Calgary West.

Major Strange, a public relations officer of the Searle Grain Company, one of the big companies doing business in the west, has been particularly active in this respect. In a letter to the editor of Saturday Night, published in an issue of that periodical on March 6, he proposes to show or prove exactly the same thing that the hon. member from Calgary West tried to show the other day, namely, that there is no majority demand in western Canada for the handling of grain, including wheat, by the wheat board.

In this letter Major Strange says in part:

> The Searle Grain Company has just published the results of a recent poll which reveals that 76·4 per cent of the farmers are now gravely dissatisfied.

Undoubtedly he refers to an organized campaign by the Searle Grain Company, through their local elevator agents, of circulating among the farmers and presenting to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) a petition asking for higher prices of grain. This petition was circulated among farmers in these points where the Searle Grain Company have elevators. The company was good enough to advise me by letter on December 10, 1947, that petitions had been sent in to them from five points within my constituency. To the letter was attached a copy of a letter to the then minister of trade and commerce, in which they enclosed the petitions, and in this letter they wrote as follows:

> So far we have received about half of the replies which we anticipate will come in, and those who are dissatisfied with present prices and wish higher prices represent 79 per cent of the farmers from these points.

I wrote the company asking them to let me have a copy of the petition and also the number of signatures which they had received from the five shipping points in my constituency, and they were good enough to send me a copy of the petition and to advise me of the number of signatures. The petition, it is true, did not ask for a return to the open market, but it was worded in such a manner that its aims could be realized only by returning to the open market system of marketing our grain. The number of signatures in these five shipping points in my constituency were from six to thirty-five and the total was under sixty. This was, of course, a negligible number. I certainly dispute the fact that these represent the opinion of seventy-nine per cent of the farmers from these points.

I may say that in my constituency I have eighty-five shipping points; therefore these five points that sent in these petitions is a very small number indeed. Since last November; yes, even since last October I have received resolutions from wheat pool committees in at least half of these shipping points, urging that the wheat board should be the sole marketing agency for all grains, which means wheat and all coarse grains. The wheat pool membership in my constituency is 7,136, out of a total population of 32,000. I admit that there are some duplications, and some of these members are not active producers any more, but I think I can safely say, after going through my petitions, that ninety per cent of the farmers in my constituency, perhaps more, are members of the wheat pool, and the resolutions which have been sent in to me represent almost the unanimous opinion of these wheat pool members.

Undoubtedly the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) have received copies of these resolutions; in fact, I know they have, and perhaps they have received more than I have. These resolutions, without one exception, ask for the marketing of coarse grains by the wheat board or by some grain board.

I do not wish to repeat the arguments previously made to support my contention. The stand of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture has been mentioned several times. The presentation made by the hon. member for Rosthern of the feeling of the rural municipalities saves me from quoting from the proceedings of their convention which was held in the last week in February. There is no question that this convention—that is the convention of the Saskatchewan association of rural municipalities—is certainly representative of Saskatchewan agriculture. Besides the numerous resolutions, I have received numerous letters from outstanding farmers in my constituency. I should like to quote just one short paragraph from a letter of one who, for decades, has been high in the councils of agriculture. This is what he says:

> With particular reference to feed grains being placed under the wheat board, there is no question that the overwhelming majority of western farmers are in favour of this move. Personally I have yet to meet one farmer since October 21 who is in favour of the futures market for any of their grain.

I should like to place on record the resolution which was passed by the Saskatchewan legislature on March 4 last. This resolution was unanimously adopted by the legislature. A division was called and it was passed unanimously, with no vote against it. The Liberal members and the soldiers' representatives voted with the rest of the members of the legislature in favour of this resolution:

> That this assembly:
> (1) Records its opinion that the removal of marketing controls and the return to the medium of speculative trading in coarse grains has caused uncertainty, hardship and widespread loss to producers of coarse grains and livestock, and that only through the orderly marketing of all grains will producers enjoy the benefits of long-term stable prices, and,

> (2) Urges that the dominion government:
> (a) reimburse all producers who marketed their 1947 coarse grains prior to the decontrol order of October 21, 1947, for their losses out of the speculative profits made on their grain—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I must call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that we have before the house second reading of Bill No. 135, to amend the wheat board act.

Mr. JAENICKE: Mr. Speaker, I submit that I am entirely in order. I am asking that the bill be adopted and that the farmers are asking for the approval of this act which is now under consideration. Surely I am in order. I continue:

> (b) immediately establish a national marketing board with adequate producer representation, to market all grains in an orderly manner, and
> (c) simultaneously and permanently close the Winnipeg grain exchange.

I do not think, Mr. Speaker, there is any argument whatsoever that this move to let the wheat board handle grains exclusively is the wish of the vast majority of the farmers on the prairies. Who else has really anything to say in the matter? Surely it is the farmers' business, and they ask us today that we help them establish orderly marketing which they think is essential for their well-being.

I come to the last part of the amendment which refers to oats and barley. I am sorry that the Minister of Trade and Commerce now talks about necessary complementary legislation as if the proposed section dealing with oats and barley were ultra vires, as the Minister of Agriculture hinted last year it might be. I maintain that the proposed legislation is neither ultra vires, nor does it require complementary legislation on the part of the provinces. No one contends that the act, as it now stands, is ultra vires; and if it is in the powers of parliament to legislate about orderly marketing of wheat in the realm of interprovincial and international trade, why should parliament not have the same powers with respect to oats and barley and any other grain? That is the way the farmer would argue, and, of course, he would be right.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley) was asked last year about the constitutionality of the act as we now have it. This is what he said on February 21, 1947, and it can be found in Hansard of that year at pages 839 and 840:

> The opinion of the law officers of the crown is that the bill as drafted is within the constitutional powers of the dominion parliament. Naturally that is so; otherwise the government would not have introduced it.

The bill is the exercise of the power of the dominion parliament to regulate interprovincial and export trade and commerce in wheat produced in designated areas . . . There may be other constitutional bases upon which the legislation can be set, but the main reliance for constitutionality of the legislation is upon the trade and commerce power in section 91 of the British North America Act . . .

It should be understood that the producer will have the option of selling the wheat which he grows either into interprovincial or export markets through the Canadian wheat board or, alternatively, into local markets in the provinces, which he may do himself, not through the Canadian wheat board.

The quota control is based upon our jurisdiction over elevators and mills designated as for the general advantage of Canada, and over railways.

That concludes the quotation from the Minister of Justice, and I may say with that I fully agree. I have no doubt that this opinion is based upon the law propounded in the reference re the Natural Products Marketing Act, 1934, case. The decision of the Supreme Court of Canada is reported in 1936, 3 D.L.R., 622, and the judgment of the privy council upholding the Supreme Court of Canada is contained in 1937, 1 D.L.R., 691. The result of the decisions was that the act was held to be ultra vires because, in the language of the Chief Justice of Canada, Sir Lyman P. Duff, contained on page 644 of the report:

The powers of regulation vested in the commissions extend to external trade and matters connected therewith and to trade in matters of interprovincial concern, but also to trade which is entirely local and of purely local concern.

In other words, the act was held to be ultra vires because it concerned trade within the province itself, while, of course, this act concerns itself only with interprovincial and external trade. I think it would be well to quote a further paragraph from this famous judgment in order to make it absolutely clear that the wheat board act as it now stands, and as it is proposed to be amended, is fully within the competence of parliament. The chief justice quotes from the Parson's case on page 625:

Construing therefore the words "regulation of trade and commerce" by the various aids to their interpretation above suggested, they would include political arrangements in regard to trade requiring the sanction of parliament, regulation of trade in matters of interprovincial concern, and it may be that they would include general regulations of trade affecting the whole dominion.

And again, on page 626:

Here again there is no suggestion that trade in a particular commodity, in so far as it is external trade or interprovincial trade, is not within the exclusive regulative authority of the dominion.

After reviewing numerous decisions on the powers of parliament on the subject of trade and commerce, the chief justice says this, at page 629:

It would appear to result from these decisions that the regulation of trade and commerce does embrace the regulation of external trade and the regulation of interprovincial trade and such ancillary legislation as may be necessarily incidental to the exercise of such powers.

Mr. HOWE: May I ask my hon. friend a question? I do not think anyone disputes the fact that the federal government has complete control of trade crossing interprovincial boundaries, but will my hon. friend explain how the board can control trade within a single province?

Mr. JAENICKE: That is not proposed in the act. All that is proposed in the legislation that is before us is to have interprovincial and external trade in oats and barley.

Mr. HOWE: But may I point this out. We have no doubt whatever that the present bill is wholly legal and within the competence of the federal parliament to pass, but the point is that a workable marketing system cannot be based upon that bill, unless the marketing authority can also control marketing within a single province.

Mr. JAENICKE: I submit that the wheat board act seems to have worked all right in the last twelve months in regard to wheat; and I further suggest that on the same basis, and under the same provisions as are proposed in this bill, the wheat board will also satisfactorily handle the trade in oats and barley in interprovincial and external trade. The act itself says, in subsection 3, of section 2, that the board is incorporated with the object of marketing in an orderly manner, in interprovincial and export trade, grain grown in Canada, and shall possess certain powers. It does not say wheat, but grain in interprovincial and export trade. This section just quoted is contained in Part II. Part II is not being amended, because it deals with all grain and not just wheat; it is only parts III and IV that deal with wheat, and the section I have quoted is taken from part II. We come to part III, which is to be extended to oats and barley, and again "the board shall undertake the marketing of wheat produced in the designated area in interprovincial and export trade," and all that the amendment will do will be to give the board power to undertake the marketing of oats and barley produced in the designated area in interprovincial and export trade. Again, in the heading of part IV, it is stated distinctly that it just deals with interprovincial and export trade, and all three sections of part IV deal with nothing but interprovincial and export trade. Part IVA, which is to be added, provides that the governor in council may, by regulation, extend the application of part III or of part IV or of both to oats and barley, and the new part IVA therefore will effect only transactions in interprovincial and export trade in those two commodities, oats and barley; and of course it is quite within the jurisdiction of parliament to legislate.

There is one thing which is not quite clear to me. Why should oats and barley transactions be subject to order in council? Why not just say that the board shall undertake the marketing of oats and barley in the designated area in interprovincial and export trade and that parts III and IV shall be made applicable to oats and barley? This is what the farmers want. In fact they want to include all grain. Why leave it to the whim and fancy of the government as to whether or not oats and barley shall be handled by the wheat board?

Another aspect which I do not like, and about which we shall need an explanation, is this. This amending section says that the government may, by order in council, apply or extend the provisions of part III or IV to oats or barley or to both. In my opinion it should say "and". That is, parts III and IV should apply to oats and barley, because it seems to me that both are necessary, one supplementing the other.

Coming back to the constitutional aspect, I wish to repeat that I do not think there is any question of constitutionality involved. If that is so, why all this talk about complementary legislation by the provinces? I am sorry that the hon. member for Rosthern seems to agree with that, that he thinks it should be supported by effective provincial

The act is, in my opinion, intra vires on its own merits, and all this talk about supplementary and complementary legislation by the provinces is already interpreted in the country as being the government's excuse for not enforcing the provisions of this enactment, and that the government has no intention or wish that it should be enforced. I am not saying that; I say that is the rumour. That is the belief which is current in the country at the present time.

Mr. TUCKER: Will the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. JAENICKE: Yes.

[Mr. Jaenicke.]

Mr. TUCKER: Is it not correct that at the last meeting of the pool delegates, a resolution was passed that complementary legislation should be passed to clear up any doubts about jurisdiction?

Mr. JAENICKE: I do not know the exact resolution, but I am informed that they say that if it is necessary it should be passed. The pool delegates might have passed a resolution with respect to the passing of supplementary or complementary legislation in order to make legal transactions within the province. That may be so, and if they did, that is fine. But the idea which is current in the country is that parliament has no power to let the wheat board handle oats and barley in interprovincial and export trade without supplementary legislation.

Mr. HOWE: Does my hon. friend think a workable control of oats and barley can be exercised if the board handles less than twenty per cent of the crop?

Mr. JAENICKE: Yes, I think so.

Mr. HOWE: I do not think so. I would not care to try it.

Mr. TUCKER: Would the hon. member say that when the wheat pool pass such a resolution they are doing it to undermine confidence in the wheat board's competence to handle wheat?

Mr. JAENICKE: I hope not.

Mr. TUCKER: Then why say it about this legislation?

Mr. JAENICKE: It looks like the manoeuvres of 1922 when the farmers of the west, almost with one voice, demanded the wheat board, and the then government, at the insistence of the Progressive party, who spoke for the farmers of the west, passed chapter 14 of the statutes of 1922, being the wheat board act. This at least was openly and clearly subject to complementary provincial legislation, and this is what the act said in section 10:

> The board shall have capacity to receive, have, enjoy, and exercise such further rights as may be conferred up it by the legislature of any province.

And section 19 reads:

> This act shall come into operation as soon as two or more of the provinces have enacted such legislation as the governor in council may consider necessary or adequate to enable the board to have or enjoy such of the powers, rights, and privileges which were passed by the Canadian wheat board of 1919.

Those are the two sections which were contained in that act. The Saskatchewan legislature was called into special session, I believe, and on July 27, 1922, they passed their act giving the board all the powers contemplated by the dominion act, and even more. But to no avail. There was no wheat board. I think Alberta did the same. I do not know what happened in Manitoba. In any event, the dominion government passed the buck at that time.

But what interests me more about this 1922 legislation is this. If the dominion passes a statute which they think should be complemented by provincial legislation to make it effective, why do they not say so in the amendment? If it is the contention of the minister that this amendment requires complementary provincial legislation, then I think some provision should be made in the bill which is now before us similar to what was done in 1922.

I am very much afraid that this talk about complementary legislation by the provinces is just an afterthought which might have occurred to the minister after receiving some representations following the introduction of his resolution. I would be sorry to think that is so, but I can imagine it might be. The minister must be swamped with representations of conflicting interests. Of course, in spite of his great capacity and ability, which we all respect, he is only human. And in that spirit I should like to appeal to him to consider the greatest good for the greatest numbers. The greatest numbers are undoubtedly the farmers who have asked for orderly marketing.

What is contained in this bill is not all that they have asked for. But I ask the minister to forget about complementary legislation, and if some further sections are necessary—as, for instance a clause to make it absolutely clear that the law does not interfere with any transactions completed within one province; and I may say I do not think it needs to include that—let him do it in committee or, if the board is to have larger powers for handling oats and barley, which would require further legislation, although I do not think it is necessary, then let the minister tell us now. I am satisfied that the large majority of the farmers in the designated area want this legislation. Let us quit beating about the bush and give it to them.

Mr. J. S. SINNOTT (Springfield): I wish, Mr. Speaker, to compliment the hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Jaenicke), on his well-prepared speech in regard to this bill.

An hon. MEMBER: And well delivered too.

Mr. SINNOTT: I think he covered the subject fairly well and most of the western farmers are in accord with what he has said. I was in the house last Friday, when the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Miller) spoke. I wish to congratulate him on the marvelous feat he performed. I know he wanted to help the farmers when he rose to speak. He said, as reported at page 2196 of Hansard:

> No matter how loudly the hon. member for Rosthern may talk, there can be no accusation that hon. members on this side of the house are responsible in any way for that delay.

As I said, the hon. member did a remarkable job in holding the house until after eleven o'clock, while his Tory friends were catching the 10.30 p.m. train to Toronto. To prove that fact, I point out that when he had an opportunity to speak tonight, he spoke for only two minutes.

Mr. CASSELMAN: He had only two minutes left.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): An hon. member is allowed only forty minutes at a time.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

An hon. MEMBER: The train does not leave until eleven o'clock.

Mr. SINNOTT: As I say, Mr. Speaker, I do not know why there should be all this quibbling about this legislation; I do not know what it is for. There is a great deal of opposition on the other side of the house. The hon. member for Portage la Prairie said, as reported at page 2197 of Hansard:

> I suggest that the government do not know themselves whether they intend to have the wheat board handle coarse grains this year, next year or ten years from now.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Do you?

Mr. SINNOTT: If there is any sense in wasting time when they have this thought in mind, it is beyond my comprehension.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Turn over the page.

Mr. SINNOTT: I shall possibly have to turn it in order to make a few remarks about one of the members on this side who spoke last Friday, and I refer to the hon. member for Winnipeg South (Mr. Mutch). He said, as reported at page 2192 of Hansard:

> Before this bill goes to second reading, I wish to express my view and the view which I conceive to be that of a good many Canadians on part of this bill before we are required to vote on the principle of it.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Louder, please. We cannot hear you.

Mr. SINNOTT: Then there seems to be a certain group who are alarmed about what the farmers are doing. I think I can say wholeheartedly that I am in agreement with the last speaker who said the farmers can very well look after themselves if they are let alone.

Mr. SINCLAIR: They cannot make enough butter.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Have you still your ticket over there?

Mr. SINNOTT: The hon. member for Winnipeg South says that he had some relatives on the farm and that, while he did not have any physical work on the farm, he knew something about it. He was just a little bit closer than the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith), who said his great-grandmother had a farm out there and that they did very well.

Mr. MUTCH: The difference between the hon. member and me was that I left my fork on the farm.

Mr. SINNOTT: They sold their wheat at fifty cents a bushel. They took it into Calgary and they made sufficient money on wheat to retire on. If that is what the friends of the hon. member for Calgary West have done, I wish them well. But I would ask him if he would want to do the same himself today.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): They have been dead for about twenty years. But outside of that the hon. member is all right. Wish them well.

Mr. SINNOTT: Yes, I know. The hon. member admitted the other night that his hindsight was better than his foresight, which has been borne out.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): What are you reading from?

Mr. SINNOTT: I am reading from a few notes, if you want to know.

An hon. MEMBER: Time.

Mr. SINNOTT: There is plenty of time. Do not worry.

An hon. MEMBER: Louder.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Put it in Hansard.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): You are losing leadership every minute.

Mr. SINNOTT: While under this legislation it is possible to market coarse grains under the wheat board, it does not say that it should be done immediately, but it is giving us the chance to have legislation brought down, whereby, if necessary, the committee can be formed and every angle looked into from the point of view of various parts of the country, represented by the various farm organizations. The hon. member for Calgary West has said that it would be to the disadvantage of the eastern feeders and to the disadvantage of the western farmers to have this board set up. That is not so.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I said it would be to the advantage of the eastern feeders. Let us have something straight.

Mr. SINNOTT: That is not so. If you will sit down we shall get somewhere. While the farmers of western Canada are agreed on this—

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): The hon. member insists upon reading his speech.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): If so, he should read it properly.

Mr. SINNOTT: I could not hear the hon. member's remark, but I believe he said something about my reading my speech. I have a few notes here; but they are nothing like the Eaton's catalogue he was reading from a couple of weeks ago.

As I was saying before, the farmers of western Canada want the government to bring this legislation into effect, whereby they can have a stabilized market for coarse grains, the same as they now have for their wheat.

In holding up this legislation, the way we are—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. SINNOTT: Seeing that we have such applause, I should like to say this, that if the hon. member for Portage la Prairie had stopped speaking on Friday last we would have had this bill through the house now.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): It was the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jutras) did it.

An hon. MEMBER: How about sunflower seed?

Mr. SINNOTT: If this legislation is brought down this year it will be of advantage to the farmers of the west. But, if it is not, we are satisfied it will be brought down in another year. We will not stand by and see the Winnipeg grain exchange play with the grain that the farmers of western Canada have toiled night and day to grow.

I hold in my hand an advertisement paid for by the Winnipeg grain exchange, in which they give the farmers all the answers. They ask: "Are you free to choose when, where and to whom you shall sell your wheat, and at what price?" Then they give the answer: No.

These fellows who operate the grain exchange are doing all right for themselves. If one were to visit some of their houses in Winnipeg, houses of men who never turned a sod in their lives, and who do not know wheat from barley, he might understand why they are kicking. No wonder they complain about this legislation, and are going to great lengths to discourage orderly marketing.

I have some figures here which I believe have not yet been placed before the house, and which show a good many millions of dollars placed in the pockets of the farmers in the past few years. These figures show that in the week ending July 13, 1932, No. 1 northern was selling for fifty-three cents a bushel, and No. 3 northern for forty-eight cents, or a spread of five cents. In the week ended July 23 the spread was 5·9 cents. In the week ended September 16, 1943, the spread was 10⅜ cents, and in the week ending September 23, it was 7·58 cents. Then on September 27, just prior to the board's taking over, the spread was 7⅛ cents.

Since the board has taken over, the spread has remained constantly at five cents. This has represented a considerable saving to the western farmers on the millions of bushels of grain sold.

While the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) has not been on the job very long, it has not taken him long to find out what the farmers need. I commend him for his interest in the matter, and upon offering this amendment. Section 29A is new. This section empowers the governor in council, by regulation, to extend to oats or barley the system now employed in handling wheat. In such case, part III may be brought into effect only at the beginning of a crop year and the pool period is limited to a year. Certain sections specifically applicable to wheat are excluded.

I believe my professional friend the hon. member for Kindersley covered the legal aspect of the matter. If we discontinue quibbling in respect of the legislation, as some hon. members opposite are doing, in the hope that it may not be brought into effect, we would get along faster. I believe if we take a vote on it as soon as possible we shall be able to get away at least a day sooner for the Easter vacation.

Mr. A. L. SMITH (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I need hardly say that I shall not make any attempt to reply to the speech just made by the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Sinnott). The reasons are obvious: I do not know what he said, and I do not know where he stands.

I would correct him in one thing I did hear, however; and I am sure he would not care to leave a wrong impression with Your Honour or with the house. He proceeded to quote me—perhaps I should say he paraphrased what I was supposed to have said—by stating that this would act to the detriment of the western growers and the eastern buyers as well. If he cares to look it up he will find that, obviously, I did not say that.

I turn now to the odd remark made by the hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Jaenicke). I suppose there would be no law business if lawyers did not disagree. For the moment I am not going to argue the constitutional aspect of the matter. Indeed, I am relying on exactly the same case to which he had referred. I shall quote only a few lines from the conclusion of the judgment of Mr. Justice Duff, which apparently the hon. member did not read, or perhaps did not read with his usual care.

This appears in a special edition of the case published by the king's printer in 1937, and contains the text of the act and the judgment of His Lordship Sir Lyman Duff, Chief Justice of Canada, and also the judgment of the privy council. I would read only these few lines from the judgment of Mr. Justice Duff, in closing:

> To summarize: in effect, this statute attempts and indeed, professes to regulate in the province of Canada, by the instrumentality of a commission or commissions appointed under the authority of the statute, trade in individual commodities and classes of commodities.
> The powers of regulation vested in the commissions extend to external trade and matters connected therewith and to trade in matters of interprovincial concern; but also to trade which is entirely local and of purely local concern.
> Regulation of individual trades, or trades in individual commodities in this sweeping fashion, is not competent to the parliament of Canada and such a scheme of regulation is not practicable.

Those are the final and deciding words of His Lordship in that case and, as I say, we are both relying on the same case for the views which we hold.

I want to turn back for a moment and correct a statement in the speech I made on Thursday last. I used a word wrongly and I want to apologize to those to whom it applied. I was interrupted by some hon. member to my left. After I had said that the wheat pools in the west had gone bankrupt, someone interrupted and said that that had happened because they had advanced too much money to the farmers. I then suggested that it was on account of the stupidity of the directors. It was really a mistake in judgment of the directors, and that is what I meant to say.

However, in the excitement of the exchange I used the word "stupidity", which I had no right whatever to use.

I should like to make a second correction. I was interrupted by another hon. gentleman to my left, I think it was the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Wright), when I was speaking of one Aaron Shapiro who came out west and formed our wheat pools. He suggested that they had asked him to come there and I agreed with him. But I was wrong. Aaron Shapiro came to western Canada and was paid for his trip by the Calgary Herald and the Edmonton Journal. The farmers of Alberta and Saskatchewan had nothing whatever to do with the invitation to that man to come to the country. Those newspapers asked him and they paid his expenses and fees.

I am going to say only a word or two about barley and then I shall sit down. This is really a governmental matter and not so much a pool matter. We are well aware of this fact, and I am bringing it out because of the injury that certain policies may do us in the future. There is an embargo on the export of barley to the United States and one can export only under permit. In times gone by, they got a good deal of money from that, because the price of the permit was roughly the difference in the prices prevailing in the two countries. From that they formed an equalization fund which helped in making payments to the grower for the barley so handled.

For some time malting barley sold to maltsters and brewers has commanded a price of $2.50 a bushel—a while ago it was $2—in the middle western United States which are quite close to us. That is the logical market for that product. I know it has become a habit with some people to say that we talk too much about the western farmer and his products. I am anxious to assure the eastern members that we are not down on our knees asking for anything from anybody for the western farmer. We believe he has been the goat in connection with hogs and cattle and everything he grows, whether it be animal or vegetable, ever since these controls came in. As we have so often said, he is still controlled while that which he buys is not controlled.

I give you this simple picture of a bushel of malting barley. It weighs forty-eight pounds and it will make thirty-six pounds of malt. That has been selling for hog feed because, while we had ceilings, there was no distinction in the grades of barley. Everything went at the ceiling price and you got for low-grade barley the same price as you got for malting barley, which, of course, always carries a premium.

[Mr. Smith (Calgary West).]

Mr. GARDINER: May I suggest a correction? Malting barley was marketed directly to the maltsters and a premium was paid on it. It was not marketed in the same way as the other barley.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I realize that that is quite true, but I think the minister will admit with me that unfortunately we had more malting barley in Canada than the maltsters could handle and a great deal of malting barley went to feed hogs. I am glad the minister corrected me, but there is no doubt that a portion of it was used for that purpose.

Mr. GARDINER: I do not want it to be taken for granted that I admit all that has been said. We have a different system of grading malting barley in Canada and our malting barley goes directly to the maltsters. It is true that some barley could have been cleaned to a grade that, had it gone to the United States, it would have been accepted as malting barley.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): The minister also knows that maltsters and brewers in the United States owned malting barley which was in our terminal elevators but they could not get a bushel of it out. So it stayed here and was used for hog feed. I do not think the minister will deny that for a single moment.

My point is that the people who have taken the trouble to grow this high grade barley are entitled, not in a begging way but as a matter of justice, to an advantage for having grown that superior product. What is happening in the middle west United States today is that the maltsters and brewers are conducting an active campaign to have barley grown in their own country for their purposes.

Let us take a bushel of malting barley in Canada. It weighs 48 pounds and it makes thirty-six pounds of malt. The dominion government places a tax of sixteen cents a pound on the malt, so that a return of $5.76 is obtained by way of tax from every bushel of barley which is malted. I am not complaining about that, except to say that, that being so, I think the man who grows the barley from which the government takes $5.76 a bushel is entitled to the price that he can get in the republic to the south.

The danger is that if the campaign being carried on there succeeds and they grow their own barley—they have had to find new sources because of our policy—the future of barley grown for malting purposes in this country will be bleak indeed. With this one observation I shall resume my seat. I do not think I have taken any great length of time. I am not going to argue the position of the Winnipeg grain exchange because I have done that before. I have enjoyed the fun which has been made of my maternal grandfather and my maternal grandmother. They have been wished well but they have been dead for thirty or forty years. I am grateful for the kindly wishes expressed by the C.C.F. It is the only kindness they have shown to anybody since they came here, and these people have been dead for thirty or forty years.

An hon. MEMBER: They were pretty smart.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I am glad you think so. You are even more generous than your companions.

I want to close on a note of sincerity and respect toward everyone. I realize that my hon. friends to my immediate left have a position. They are socialists. They believe in getting control, even ownership of the things which we produce and the methods of distribution. That is another argument, for they have a logical position. I know of no member in this house who professes to be opposed to socialism who has a single leg to stand on if he supports orderly marketing as they call it, but what is actually the compulsory grabbing of the farmer's grain. That is not orderly marketing. That is the beginning of the police state, and I hate the word just as much as anyone else does. But you can only compel by penalties. You can only succeed in bringing compulsory schemes into being by penalties. Some may say we have lots of penalties now; we have the criminal code. Yes, and that is enforced by penalties. The only way you can do this thing is by penalties. What does that mean? It would have to be done by force. The end of socialism can only be the operation of the Canadian economy by force, and those of us who disagree with that principle—I admit again, they may argue for it—have not a leg to stand on in this oats and barley business if we vote in favour of this compulsion.

Mr. F. S. ZAPLITNY (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last we were quite willing to let this bill go to a vote, but the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Miller) spoke until eleven o'clock, and we find ourselves in the position today of having another member of the Progressive Conservative party speaking for the second time on the same subject. So, in spite of the eagerness of this corner of the house to see this bill go through, I have no apology to make for making a few remarks at this time.

I rise mainly to correct the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) on one thing he said. He intimated that the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Wright) had suggested that a certain organizer by the name of Shapiro had been invited by the pool or some farm organization. As a matter of record, the hon. member for Melfort merely asked a question, and his question was: Who invited him? The hon. member for Calgary West replied to that question.

There is a danger that we might lose sight of what is actually involved in the principle of this bill. The principle, as I see it, is whether or not the members of this house believe in stabilization of farm income and in orderly marketing. In spite of all that has been said to my right, when the vote is taken on this measure we shall see where the official opposition stand on this important question. If the hon. member for Calgary West is putting forward the policy of the party to which he belongs it would be logical to see every member of that party vote against this bill. On the other hand, if the policy of that party is as it has been expressed on some occasions by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken), then we might expect something different.

So far as we and the people who have sent us here are concerned, we have no doubt where we stand. I have before me a clipping from one of the weekly papers published in my constituency, the Dauphin Herald, which gives a tabulation of where the farmers of the prairie provinces stand on the wheat contract with Britain. It is dated April 24, 1947, almost a year ago. The poll question submitted was this:

> The 1946 wheat agreement between Canada and Great Britain sacrifices the opportunity to sell at higher prices now for the assurance of stabilized prices for the next four years. Is this a sound principle?

The question did not refer to the details of the British wheat agreement but to the principle of a stabilized market for the future in preference to taking what you can get now and taking a chance on getting next to nothing in the future. The tabulation shows that seventy-nine per cent of the farmers of the prairie provinces replied, yes; they were in favour of that principle without any reservation; seventeen per cent replied, yes, with reservations, and only two per cent were opposed to that principle. I think that answers for all time the question which has arisen in this debate as to where the farmers of the prairie provinces stand on the question of orderly marketing.

Not long ago it was announced in this house and appeared in the press that an international wheat agreement had been reached, under which three of the nations undertook to sell 500 million bushels of wheat a year and thirty-three other nations undertook to buy it at a certain price. It is interesting to note that two of the wheat-producing nations of the world were opposed to entering into this agreement. We hear a great deal these days about the Big Four, the Big Five, and so on, but on that question a sort of Big Four appeared to be emerging. We were told that Soviet Russia and the Argentine were opposed to this international wheat agreement. To complete the Big Four, we have in this country the Winnipeg grain exchange and the Progressive Conservative party.

I believe that we should make our position clear on the principle which is actually involved in this bill. There has been a great deal of talk, much of it coming from the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker), as to the intentions of members on the opposite side of the house in connection with the inclusion of oats and barley. We have made our position clear. In fact, last year one of the members of this group moved to have oats and barley included in the bill itself. I think the hon. member for Rosthern will have some explaining to do when he speaks in Saskatchewan, because in part of his speech he endorsed government policy in regard to the marketing of grain, but in another part he repudiated the whole policy. For example, he was asked in the middle of his speech by the hon. member for Wood Mountain (Mr. Argue) this question: Do you believe in price control? The reply was, No, if you do not control some other matters at the same time. To make sure the matter was sufficiently confused, he added this: Furthermore I do not believe in the attempt to control prices by government edict.

What does that add up to? The hon. member says he does not like price control.

Mr. TUCKER: Why not get on with the bill and leave the hon. member for Rosthern alone.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I would be glad to leave him alone if he would leave us alone.

Mr. TUCKER: I did not take forty minutes in attacking you people.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I am not attacking you. I am simply putting on the record exactly what happened.

Mr. TUCKER: Let us fight the election out in Saskatchewan. It won't be long either, thank goodness.

Mr. FRASER: Are you getting nervous?

Mr. ZAPLITNY: The hon. member for Rosthern said he does not believe in price control unless it is accompanied by control in some other matters. I take it he means he is not in favour of having prices of farm products controlled unless it is accompanied by price control on the articles and commodities the farmer has to buy. If he means that, I agree with him thoroughly. But he went on to say he does not believe in price control by government edict. The only kind of price control we have ever had in this country was by government edict. That is the only type of price control that is possible under the legislation we have at the present time. In other words, the hon. member for Rosthern tells us in one breath that he wants all prices controlled, and in the next breath he says he does not believe in the government doing that, which is, of course quite in line with what the government itself is doing.

Mr. TUCKER: I hope you understand what you are talking about. Nobody else does.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: If the hon. member cannot understand, I am charitable and do not blame him for that. If he means that he is in favour of government policy, that he favours price control of grain without price control of the commodities the farmer has to buy, which is the present government policy, he cannot be in favour of the opposite thing, which is to control the prices of the things the farmer has to buy along with controlling the price of grain. He must be on one side or the other. I want to say that, so far as the hon. member who spoke before me is concerned, he at least stated his position clearly. He said that, so far as he and the hon. members who sit around him are concerned—

Mr. MANROSS: We heard all this.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Those who are chipping in will have a chance to vote on this. The hon. member said that, so far as he and those who sit around him are concerned, they will have nothing to do with a bill of this kind, and he challenged hon. members on the opposite side to stand up and be counted on this bill.

Mr. HOWE: We have not dissolution yet.

Mr. TUCKER: Let us have the vote, then.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: You will get it early enough.

Mr. MANROSS: Friday night.

Mr. TUCKER: We want to get these cheques out.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: We did everything we could last week to expedite the passage of this bill.

Mr. MANROSS: You sure did.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: We sat back on Friday evening and did not say a word, in order to give hon. members a chance to carry this bill. Instead of doing that, they debated the bill until Monday, and now when we are trying to express an opinion they tell us to sit down. When I began my remarks I said I would take only a few minutes. I think we shall now have a chance to see where hon. members stand on the principle of the bill, and whether they believe in orderly marketing and the stabilization in prices or whether they believe in speculation in food products.

Mr. JEAN-FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Temiscouata): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to part of this debate with a considerable amount of attention. The other day I rose to answer the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Wright) who had challenged hon. members to express the view of farmers who are opposed to controls. The farmers of my constituency are opposed to controls, and there are many farmers in the west who are also opposed to controls. I shall answer the hon. member right now by mentioning a letter which I have received from an organization that he perhaps knows, although it is not in his province. It is a letter from the Farmers Protective Association of Fannystelle, Manitoba, and there are many others besides that.

I would ask the hon. member who is so noisy to listen to this. We listened to them with patience. They think there is a small circle of C.C.F. people in the west who know everything about wheat, and they do not realize that the farmers and the consumers of the east are as much interested as anybody else to scrutinize the matter and to give some study to it. I will tell all hon. gentlemen of the C.C.F. group that it is wrong to think they are the only ones who can discuss this matter. We are 245 members here, and I have a right to discuss the matter just as much as these hon. gentlemen. I will tell them that they have the mind of autocrats. They remind me of the horses who have these eye-shades on each side of their head and can see only in the direction in which they are driven. It is the coachman, the driver, who makes them see what he wants them to see. They are exactly in the position of the old horses that we see in the country; they are led by the driver on the coachman's seat, and they see only what he wants them to see. When somebody says there is something alongside the way they deny it; they do not see it because their leader does not want them to see it. I will tell my lady friend that she does not sit in the driver's seat. As a lady, she sits in the back seat and her view of what goes forward is obstructed by the back of the big driver.

Mrs. STRUM: I should like to ask the hon. gentleman a question. How much influence did he have on his party on price control?

Mr. POULIOT: I will admit that my hon. friends of the C.C.F. group have much more influence than any Liberal ever had with the government to maintain controls. It is probably on account of the good looks of my hon. friend that she vamped the government and she used them to get the government to adopt socialist policy.

Mrs. STRUM: I object; that is unparliamentary language.

Mr. POULIOT: It is not unparliamentary and my hon. friend knows it. I have the greatest respect for her.

Mrs. STRUM: It has nothing to do with the question and I resent it.

Mr. POULIOT: If my hon. friend disagrees with me it is her right; but if she comes within the domain of my discussion now I cannot do otherwise than make little jokes with her, although in a very respectful way.

Mr. KNOWLES: Will the hon. gentleman permit a question? Is my memory right that the hon. member has, on previous occasions, told us in the house that it was he who, in September, 1939, sent a telegram to the government asking them to institute price control during the war?

Mr. POULIOT: No, I never asked the government to establish price controls, but I told them that the profiteers were taking advantage of the war to raise prices and I thought the government could do without the instituting of the prices board, but the thing was done that way as were many other things, and I am not responsible for the institution of the prices board, because I am against all price boards. I never asked the government to institute the prices board, but I drew the attention of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) to the fact that profiteers were trying to take advantage of the war to raise the prices on various commodities, and that time I was listened to. If I had been listened to all the time I would not complain today of the socialist policy of the government.

I will tell my hon. friend, the lady member, that I do not want to be unpleasant to her. She knows I have great respect for her, and if at times I tease her a little it is because she has chosen to sit amongst men, but we like her very much, nevertheless.

Now, sir, the government have been misled, misled by the C.C.F. propaganda.

Mr. MANROSS: Blind horses.

Mr. POULIOT: They have been told that it was the desire of the farmers to have such a policy as we have had and as we are going to have. It was not at all the feeling of the members that they were expressing, not at all; they were continuing their propaganda, and nothing is more clear than the speech which was made by the hon. member for Melfort and the letters that he read from the C.C.F. Premier of Saskatchewan. This policy has been forced upon the government by Mr. Douglas, the C.C.F. premier of Saskatchewan, the only C.C.F. premier in Canada, and his satellites in the house who hurrah when I say so. They have every reason to be proud of it. I remember that during the war it was the official leader of the opposition, Mr. Hanson, who was forcing his policy on the government. Now, for the after-war program we have the C.C.F. policy dictated to the government by Mr. Douglas of Saskatchewan. Why should we appease these men? There is no reason for that. There are two different ideologies. There is the ideology of free enterprise and there is the ideology of statism, of controls by the state. There is no question of Liberals, Social Crediters or Conservatives in that. There are those who are for free enterprise and those who are against it. There are those who believe that the government must act through boards and not assume any responsibility. These boards are irresponsible. It is the old principle of socialism which has been promoted by the London school of economics and all its students throughout the world. It is the old story, and I am not surprised at it. Here we have two different ideologies, the ideology of free enterprise and the ideology of socialism, whether it is called C.C.F. or anything else. But I must keep my word. I said I was going to read something that has been sent to me by no less a gentleman than the president of the Farmers Protective Association of Fannystelle, Manitoba, and he is probably not of the C.C.F. I do not know the gentleman, but I notice—

Mr. BURTON: Do you know how many members they have?

Mr. POULIOT: I challenge my hon. friend to continue to laugh at the farmer of Manitoba, because he has been elected on the C.C.F. socialist ticket in his part of the country. These hon. gentlemen are so doctrinaire that they do not admit any discussion, and when we bring a letter from a responsible farmer from the west, on behalf of his organization, they minimize it. They laugh at it. That is not the way to discuss any question. The hon. gentleman is old enough to know—

Mr. BURTON: I am only asking the hon. member to give me information as to how much he knows of that organization and how many members it has.

Mr. POULIOT: I will tell the hon. gentleman one thing, and the more angry he gets, the cooler I shall be. I am not excited and he cannot provoke me. I will tell him one thing.

Mr. BURTON: Tell me how many members there are in that organization.

Mr. POULIOT: I will advise the hon. gentleman to keep cool, not to be excited. For my part, the crowd does not impress me. I am impressed by the argument and the logic of a thing. My hon. friend may be impressed by a long procession, but I am not at all impressed. I am impressed by arguments that appeal to reason.

I have received a letter which I consider worthy to be read in the House of Commons and I will certainly read it. I am in order in reading it, and I will read it even if it hurts the feelings of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BURTON: It does not hurt me at all.

Mr. POULIOT: He is touchy, but there is nothing unparliamentary in the letter I am going to read. It was written by a sound-thinking farmer of Manitoba.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. POULIOT: There they are again. This farmer does not believe as the hon. gentleman does, and therefore "Ha, ha, ha."

Mr. BURTON: Because we are asking you what you know about it.

Mr. POULIOT: It is a good letter and I will read it with all the greater pleasure because it hurts the feelings of the hon. gentleman who is so touchy.

Mr. BURTON: Oh, so cruel!

Mr. POULIOT: The letter reads:

Fannystelle, Manitoba,
March 6, 1948.

Mr. Jean Francois Pouliot,
House of Commons,
Ottawa, Canada.

Dear Sir:

After reading your contribution to the Hansard of February 27, I feel that it is my duty to write to you thanking you for your interest in western agriculture.

Although we have a Canadian Federation of Agriculture and a Canadian wheat board, I cannot see that either of them are in any way interested in our welfare, nor are they in any way obligated to represent our cause, as western agriculture could not claim to have chosen them.

The three prairie provinces have for some years back supplied all of Canada with wheat for domestic milling, at about half price. About seventy million bushels each year.

The monetary loss is a big one, but it is totally eclipsed by the fact that we have had taken from us the right to sell our grain, and we are compelled to hand it over to the government who are permitted to sell it where they wish, for a small price if it suits them, and not always without an eye to political expediency.

They take five years to pay us, and owe us nothing in the meantime.

If it were voluntary, we could call it a gift, but we would have no receipt for the income tax inspector.

We could not describe the Canadian people as being penniless and dependent upon charity.

We can only plead guilty to being a minority group.

These planners of our agricultural destiny like it very much, and now they want our oats and barley.

As they want complementary legislation from the prairie provinces, we should be able to block that, though there are powerful forces at work, whose aim it is to make the state all powerful, and reduce the status of the individual in like proportion.

I hope that you will continue to work toward the goal of getting back, not only our agricultural freedom, but the freedom of everyone who is yet a victim of government controls.

Yours truly,

R. H. Stevens, President,
Farmers Protective Association.

That is not such a bad letter. I challenge my hon. friend to be so jocular now that he has heard that letter.

Mr. BURTON: And I still challenge the hon. gentleman to speak about something he knows something about.

Mr. POULIOT: In the first place, I know the hon. gentleman and will speak about him in a minute and he will be very much embarrassed.

Mr. BURTON: Just go ahead.

Mr. POULIOT: They do not like free enterprise. I do not know how many cousins they have who are interested in the controls in the province of Saskatchewan, how many friends, how many supporters. They put them on the job there to act as tyrants over all the farmers of the west, and it is good for them; they have to take it because it is socialist policy; it must be good for them.

Mr. BURTON: Again you are speaking about something you do not know anything about.

Mr. POULIOT: I have shown my hon. friend that I do know, and if my hon. friend takes that attitude he will be defeated at the next election. The farmers of his constituency will never stand for it. They will never stand for that autocracy.

Mr. KNOWLES: This is where I came in.

Mr. POULIOT: How can any group of decent farmers stand for that autocracy, despotism, dictatorship by one man in one constituency?

An hon. MEMBER: Keep cool.

Mr. POULIOT: I am just as cool as one could be, and I am all the cooler because I see my hon. friend is still excited at the mention of one farmer of the west who does not agree with him. Why does he not travel any more—

Mr. BURTON: I do not mind that at all, but tell us what you know about that organization.

Mr. POULIOT: I will tell him now what our friends the farmers of the east have suffered, as well as the farmers of the west. My hon. friend knows very well that during the war when there were controls it was impossible for the farmers to have barley and oats without purchasing flour at the same time. They had to purchase an equal amount of flour, and there were orders for balanced rations.

An hon. MEMBER: That was private enterprise.

Mr. POULIOT: Just a minute. I know it hurts, but I am not impressed by my hon. friends, and I hope the government will not be impressed by them. I have never been impressed by noise but by sound argument, though it may take a little longer to impress them in that way. I want to make them suffer a little more, but I am coming to the point just the same. I am speaking on behalf of people that I know.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. POULIOT: I thank you, sir, but I can handle my hon. friends fairly well. My hon. friend knows very well that the farmers could not have their orders filled by the grain dealers. When they ordered oats and barley they were given half flour. He knows very well that flour is much more subject to moisture than is grain. If he comes down home with me he will see the warehouses of the storekeepers full of bags of flour which they had to buy when they did not need them.

Mr. BURTON: Was that a government control?

Mr. POULIOT: Exactly.

Mr. BURTON: Did the government force them to do that?

Mr. POULIOT: Yes. It was on account of the subsidies paid for flour. My hon. friend knows that very well.

Mr. BURTON: But it was your private enterprise that forced them to do that.

Mr. POULIOT: My hon. friend knows very well what a failure the controller of feed has been. If he does not know that, I shall have to teach him. It is a thing that I know but which he does not seem to know. If there is anything that I know and he does not know, I shall take advantage of the opportunity to teach him a lesson.

Mr. Douglas is so anxious, as the socialist premier of Saskatchewan, to have this measure enacted to put oats and barley under the control of the wheat board that he is ready to send a representative to Ottawa. He communicated twice; I do not remember whether it was by letter or telegram, but that is of no consequence.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Carrier pigeon.

Mr. POULIOT: He telegraphed or wrote twice to the minister telling him that he was ready to send one of his legal advisers by air to discuss the matter with the government at Ottawa and tell them what they would have to do with regard to oats and barley. This is planned economy. They start with oats and barley and will continue with rye and flaxseed; and then there will be no end. Why not do it as Stalin does right away? I have said many a time that socialism is the forerunner of communism.

Mr. BURTON: No, Liberalism is.

Mr. POULIOT: No.

Mr. BURTON: Surely.

Mr. POULIOT: This is heresy. May I say to the hon. gentleman that, when he says that, he does not know what he is talking about. But now that they have a planned economy, they want to subject all the farmers of Canada to the rule of socialism, the rule of the C.C.F. I remember the time when Mr. Woodsworth and Miss Macphail suggested that the farmers should work eight hours a day. They did not go on with that for very long. I remember the kind of agrarian reform they were preaching, and it was pure socialism. It meant the dispossession of the farmers who owned the lands in order to put them under a scheme that was quite similar to the one which has now been enforced in Russia. Then they changed and made great compromises with the farmers.

We are now discussing this grain business. I get into the closed reserve of the socialists of the west to tell them that they are wrong when they say they speak on behalf of the majority of the farmers of Canada, both from the west and from the east, when they try to impose socialist legislation on the government. I still hope that the minister will leave feed grain aside when he deals with the wheat business. One of my hon. friends the other day said to me, "You find prices high. You want controls on grain." I never wanted controls on grain. We cannot control the price of grain or the price of any other commodity by putting on an embargo when we need that commodity in this country, or by lifting that embargo when prices are too low. I do not object to the farmers selling their wheat at a reasonable price. I have said that before and I repeat it now. But when the coarse grain is harvested in a much smaller quantity than is normal, the department should see to it that the farmers of the east have an opportunity to buy that grain from the producers of the west. Otherwise what I shall do will be to tell the farmers of the east to become independent of the farmers of the west; not to buy their grain from them, but to harvest enough grain to be independent. We are ready to make concessions.

An hon. MEMBER: Do you think they can become independent?

Mr. POULIOT: Surely they can do it. They can do it with regard to oats and barley. My hon. friend knows that very well. We can be independent of the farmers of the west. I do not know how long I shall have the pleasure of seeing the good-looking faces of my hon. friends in front of me in the house, but I will tell them that the farmers of the east are sick of that propaganda. They have had enough of it. The farmers of the east are ready to make concessions. They are ready to pay a fair price, provided that the goods are delivered to them, but they do not want to be the slaves of C.C.F. policy any more than do the farmers of the west.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. POULIOT: Yes.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Is the hon. member in favour of the eastern farmers receiving freight-free feed coming into the east, with the freight paid from the lakehead? Is the hon. member in favour of having freight paid on feed from the lakehead to the east for the eastern farmers?

Mr. POULIOT: Certainly.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: It sounds good, does it not?

Mr. POULIOT: I have no objection to reasonable assistance. But if that subsidy is enforced, and the government is willing to pay that subsidy, then we want to have the goods in the east, and we want to have a different situation from the one we had last fall when all the farmers were complaining that they could not get delivery of the grain.

Mr. BURTON: It was your private enterprise that stopped delivery.

Mr. POULIOT: It was not private enterprise. It was when we had a feed controller who is still there writing his memoirs. My hon. friends are so doctrinaire that they will not agree with me that it is a waste of money to keep that man in his job, especially after the situation for which he was responsible last fall.

I do not consider it a pleasure to rise tonight and to have to argue with hon. members from another province about this matter, which is a vital issue for us at the present time, but which may not be any longer a vital issue for us in the near future, when the farmers of the east are told of the difficulties that we have precisely on account of those controls.

Advice from a friend is much better than a suggestion from a foe. The wounds of those who love are better than the kisses of those who hate. This I dedicate to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) and to the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply (Mr. Howe). And I will ask them both, after the performance that took place tonight, is it possible to say for one moment that the suggested policy of the government has been imposed upon them by the C.C.F. socialist group of Saskatchewan? There is no reply to that.

Mr. BURTON: Your colleague from Rosthern would be interested to hear that.

Mr. POULIOT: Perhaps he was too mild with his opponents.

Mr. LOW: Too frightened of them.

Mr. POULIOT: He is too much of a good-natured fellow. That is why he has been lenient with these policies.

Mr. TUCKER: Perhaps the hon. member will say who caused the Liberal government of 1922 to pass the wheat board legislation. The C.C.F. did not exist then.

Mr. POULIOT: No, the C.C.F. did not exist; but Mr. Woodsworth was a member of the House of Commons at that time. My hon. friend will recall that Mr. Woodsworth was elected in 1921, and he was very powerful in connection with this matter, as well as many others whom I shall not now take time to enumerate.

What I want is a Liberal policy of free enterprise.

Mrs. STRUM: This is a Liberal bill.

Mr. POULIOT: It is a government bill. But I do not say it is a Liberal policy. I am not deceived by false labels, and this is why: knowing the sincerity of both the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply, I urge upon them the necessity to stop the gap of socialism in this measure. We should do that for the good of the farmers of this country, and even for the good of the members from the west who are farmers themselves. They have been led to believe that socialist policies are opportune, that they are timely and that the government should make them their own. There is the correspondence which my hon. friend read the other day. There are all the speeches which have been made.

Tonight I listened with great interest to the excellent speech of the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) who, although he is a lawyer, knows more about farming the west than does any member of the C.C.F. group. He has lived with the farmers and has listened to them.

Mrs. STRUM: Whom do you think we live with? We are farmers.

Mr. POULIOT: I was going to tell my hon. friend that if I were one of her constituents I would say many things to her, with the exception of talking about wheat. I would tell her that she is gifted and that she is doing well as a member of parliament. The only thing I regret in her is her obstinacy at times to admit that she may be wrong. I should like to be a poet to write a few rhymes for the hon. member. However, since I am not so well gifted I must say what I have to say in my poor language. But I mean well. And I hope that before long she will understand that my appeal to her reason has not been made in vain, and that perhaps she will be one who will canvass other members of the C.C.F. groups to drop their insistence upon passing this kind of legislation.

Mr. KNOWLES: I wonder if the hon. member would permit another question before he finishes? I confess it is in relation to the same question I asked twenty minutes ago.

Mr. POULIOT: This is coarse grain.

Mr. KNOWLES: I think the hon. member means that this goes against the grain. Does the hon. member recall what happened on August 29, 1946, as it is reported in Hansard at page 5598, when he read to the house his telegram to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) of August 28, 1939, and the Prime Minister's reply, and boasted that he was "responsible to a certain extent for the creation of the wartime prices and trade board"?

Mr. POULIOT: Well, since the hon. member speaks to me that way, I will tell him what happened. I was not going to say that, because he would think I was boasting. I will tell him that after that answer was sent to me by the Prime Minister I was called with the present Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) to the office of the late Hon. Norman Rogers to form a committee of internal security to decide with him about food and commodity prices. There was no question about wartime prices board here. Is that enough for the hon. member? I would not have said this, if my hon. friend had not given a false interpretation. Besides that, we were each offered $6,000 a year outside our indemnities. And I can tell the hon. member much more than that. I never have been for the wartime prices board, and it was only indirectly that I was responsible for its establishment some time afterwards.

Mr. KNOWLES: That was not the interpretation the hon. member gave when he read the telegram on August 29, 1946.

On motion of Mr. Pouliot the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. BRACKEN: What is the business for tomorrow?

Mr. HOWE: First is the emergency legislation of the Minister of Justice; second, wheat; third, the emergency legislation of the Minister of Finance.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, March 17, 1948

The house met at three o'clock.

WESTERN EUROPEAN UNION

SIGNING AT BRUSSELS OF TREATY OF MUTUAL GUARANTEE

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, members of parliament will have already learned with satisfaction that a treaty of mutual guarantee was signed this morning at Brussels by representatives of the governments of the United Kingdom, France, Belgium, the Netherlands and Luxembourg. This pact represents a partial fulfilment of the idea of a western European union put forward by the United Kingdom foreign secretary on January 22 last. This pact is far more than an alliance of the old kind. It is a partial realization of the idea of collective security by an arrangement made under the charter of the united nations. As such it is a step towards peace, which may well be followed by other similar steps until there is built up an association of all free states which are willing to accept responsibilities of mutual assistance to prevent aggression and preserve peace.

May I read, in this connection, two articles of the western union agreement:

> Article III. The high contracting parties will make every effort in common to lead their people towards a better understanding of the principles which form the basis of their common civilization and to promote cultural exchanges by conventions between themselves or otherwise.
> Article IV. If any high contracting party should be the object of an armed attack in Europe, the other high contracting parties will, in accordance with the provisions of article LI of the charter, afford the party so attacked all the military and other aid and assistance in their power.

Hon. members will, I am sure, also welcome the significant statement made to the congress of the United States at noon today by President Truman in which, referring to the Brussels agreement which had just been signed, he spoke of the determination of the United States to help those five western European nations to protect themselves.

The Canadian government has been closely following recent developments in the international sphere. The peoples of all free countries may be assured that Canada will play her full part in every movement to give substance to the conception of an effective system of collective security by the development of regional pacts under the charter of the united nations.

COMMUNIST AGENTS

ACTIVITIES IN CANADA—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 31

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has just referred to the pact between five European nations guaranteeing mutual aid over a long period of time. I am sure that all members of the house will feel like congratulating those nations upon having reached such an agreement. I am aware, Mr. Speaker, that a statement of this kind by the Prime Minister is not debatable. I think that is unfortunate, because only the other day in this house some members asked for an opportunity to discuss matters relating to external affairs but the government did not find it expedient to allow that discussion. And a day or two ago I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) if he would, before Easter, be moving the house into committee of supply, which would give us an opportunity to discuss external affairs, but no such opportunity has yet been afforded. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 31 to discuss a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely, the menace to the peace of Canada arising from the activities in this country of communist agents—a matter calling for immediate attention at this time because:

(a) Canada is regarded by the communists as of supreme strategic importance in the communist bid for global domination;

(b) Communist agents, some of them under diplomatic immunity, some of them Canadian citizens, have succeeded in corrupting officials of the public service of this country;

(c) Canada is regarded by the communists as a vital source of information respecting the development of the atomic bomb;

(d) Communist agents are boring into the labour organizations of this country with a view to wrecking recognized labour organizations and undermining industrial peace and crippling the productive capacity of the country both in peace and in the event of war;

(e) Recent events in Europe, especially in Czechoslovakia and Finland, can leave no reasonable doubt that the aim of communism is to destroy democracy, wherever it exists, and substitute for it puppet police states.

Mr. SPEAKER: If the hon. gentleman will look at standing order 31 he will see that it reads in part as follows:

> Leave to make a motion for the adjournment of the house (when made for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance) must be asked after the ordinary daily routine of business.

I would suggest that the hon. member wait until we reach that stage.

Mr. BRACKEN: I was advised, Mr. Speaker, that this was the proper time to make the motion, but I am in your hands.

Mr. SPEAKER: After the ordinary daily routine.

[Later:]

Mr. SPEAKER: We have before us a motion moved by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken). Standing order 31(3) reads that the mover—

> —then hands a written statement of the matter proposed to be discussed to Mr. Speaker, who, if he thinks it in order, and of urgent public importance, reads it out and asks whether the member has the leave of the house. If objection is taken, Mr. Speaker requests those members who support the motion to rise in their places and, if more than twenty members rise accordingly, Mr. Speaker calls upon the member who has asked for leave.

Mr. Bracken moves, seconded by Mr. Smith (Calgary West), for leave to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 31 to discuss a definite matter of urgent public importance. Is it the pleasure of the house that the hon. gentleman have leave to proceed?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman will proceed.

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have raised this issue today to emphasize the seriousness of the communist menace to Canada as well as to the world and to give the government the opportunity to tell us what it is doing and what it proposes to do in every department of government having any relationship to this question. I think hon. members on all sides of the house want to do everything that can legitimately be done to stamp out this menace.

Today is March 17, 1948. In addition to being March 17 it is the day on which the President of the United States made a very important statement to congress; it is the day on which in Brussels Mr. Bevin made a very important statement respecting the European five power pact, the matter the Prime Minister mentioned here today; and it is only two days following a similar important statement relating to communism by the Prime Minister of Great Britain.

I want to summarize briefly a part of what Mr. Truman said to congress this morning. We heard it over the air just a few hours ago. I will mention only three things he said bearing on this subject. First, he said it was important speedily to complete the European recovery program as the most telling contribution to peace which congress could make in a time of critical importance; second, he urged the prompt enactment of universal training, because, to use his words, "we have paid a terrible price in the past for unpreparedness"; and third, he urged the immediate enactment of universal training for all men and selective service for the regular forces. And he added these words: "We must be prepared to pay the price of peace or we will pay the price of war". Then he went on to give a long indictment of communism and of the relationship of one great country—Russia —to that doctrine.

At the same time, in another country another statesman dealt with a matter relating to the same question. Mr. Bevin spoke over the air from the Belgium foreign ministry in Brussels, and briefly among other things, this is a part of what he had to say. He said they had agreed upon the creation of a permanent consultative council among five nations for a period of fifty years. Secondly, they had agreed to guarantee mutual assistance to each other against aggression by either a resurgent Germany or any other power. I presume the question of a resurgent Germany was agreed to because France particularly would want an agreement on that. I presume the reference to any other power had to do with Russia, that great power which is moving westward over Europe all too fast for our comfort. Thirdly, he said they had agreed to the mutual exchange of information and assistance in economic and cultural matters.

This very day that we are gathered here President Truman spoke to the American people as I have indicated, and Mr. Bevin spoke to the world indicating how five nations in western Europe had agreed to stand together for half a century to face the future. Only two days ago, on the 15th of this month, the Prime Minister of Great Britain, as reported in the New York Times announced to the House of Commons the cabinet's decision to transfer communists, fellow travellers and fascists in any government work vital to the national security. I do not know what he means by "transferring them", but at least it is an effort on the part of the British government to do something to face up to the communist menace.

I have mentioned the president of the great nation to the south of us; I have mentioned Bevin and the council of five western European nations; I have mentioned what Premier Attlee of Britain had to say.

What is being said in our own country with respect to this matter? I am sure I do not need to say to hon. members what has been said for some time now. One paper at least has taken the lead in dealing with it. I am referring to the Windsor Star. It has carried dispatches for some time now showing the extent to which this revolutionary cult of international communism is growing in Canada. These dispatches are now being copied, carried and favourably commented upon by many other metropolitan papers in Canada. I will take only a minute to indicate the content of some of them.

This is what the Windsor Star of March 8 carried: "Communist threat grows. Canadian fifth column waits." In a later issue we find the following: "Time to strike. Revolutionary cult of international communism in Canada has gained widespread and dangerous power." I shall make no more than a very brief comment on the content of these statements.

On March 10 the following appeared: "Loyal Canadians duped to aid Red fifth column." In comment a little farther down the article the following appears:

> Public apathy is the most valuable asset the communist conspirators have. More desirable for their treacherous purposes than soap-box orators or drawing-room radicals are the plain people who shrug their shoulders by the hundreds of thousands and say to one another, half believing and half wishful: "It can't happen here."

I shall mention only one or two other comments. In the issue of March 11 the following appears: "Red hierarchy traced from Moscow to here." Then this comment follows:

> It is a diabolically ingenious machine of which each separate tiny part is a complete whole, able to function by itself.

In the issue of March 12 the following appears: "Labour battles threat of Red rule or ruin." I shall not take the time to elaborate on any of these. Another one is as follows: "Loopholes in law admit Europe's Red saboteurs."

The defence against the communist threat is, as I said, being taken up by other metropolitan papers across Canada. Among others, the Winnipeg Free Press, and I am told the Calgary Herald and nearly all the leading metropolitan papers, are taking up this question and pointing out its seriousness.

In my motion I referred to four or five reasons why we should give this matter some consideration in this house. Let me refer to these specifically for a moment.

I have said that Canada is regarded by communists as of great strategic importance in the communist bid for global domination. Today Canada and the United States are giving a great deal of attention to our arctic defences of this continent. What does that mean? It must mean, if it means anything, that we regard that territory as a possible future cockpit of a major world conflagration. I mention that only to emphasize the importance of this question.

Secondly, I said that communist agents, some of them under diplomatic immunity, some of them Canadian citizens, have succeeded in corrupting officials of the public service of this country. We all know the sordid tale of what took place in this country within the last two or three years, and I do not need to repeat it here. But have we any reason to believe that these efforts have been discontinued? The answer is that we obviously have not. The evidence of infiltration generally is clearer today that it has ever been before.

I pointed out, again, that Canada is regarded by the communists as a vital source of information respecting the development of the atomic bomb. One needs only to mention two names out of many, one of them a British scientist working in this country, another a Canadian scientist working here, both having to do with the atomic bomb. Today they are both in the penitentiary.

I said they were working on the atomic bomb and they were both convicted of unlawfully giving information to a foreign nation with respect to that secret bomb. I have no doubt that steps have been taken to try to see that communists and their fellow travellers are not closely associated with the atomic energy enterprise in Canada, but none of us doubt that communists are making every effort to find out what they can and to transmit it to another country that would like to have it.

I said further that communist agents are boring into the labour organizations of this country with a view to wrecking recognized labour unions and undermining industrial peace, crippling the productive capacity of the country not only in peacetime but particularly in the event of war. Perhaps that is the most dangerous thing that is facing the internal peace of Canada, a danger that is facing the whole future of this country, the infiltration of communists into the organized labour groups of the country.

At this time I wish to compliment organized labour on their efforts to date to purge themselves of communist agents. And I wish to say to the government, to this house and to the Canadian people that organized labour needs every assistance it can get from the parliament of Canada in its efforts to save itself and to save us from this kind of infiltration.

Then I referred to what has happened recently in Czechoslovakia and what is happening at this very moment in Finland, two nations in the way of the western movement of communism in Europe. Czechoslovakia has been scuttled from within. The methods of Hitler are seen to be here again right before our eyes. Finland is in a situation somewhat similar to that in which Czechoslovakia found itself a few weeks ago. While the technique in the instance of Finland is a little different, the objective is the same. And it looks as if the end will be the same. Finland is now engaged in so-called negotiations with the fear of military occupation at her elbow, the fear of military occupation by a large power predetermining every move of that little nation.

I now wish to say something about communism itself. Communism is the most widely discussed topic in the world today. For the vast majority it has a vague shapelessness which inspires some with panic and permits others to hold it in blind adoration. If we are successfully to control it we must understand its true nature and purposes.

Communism, in my judgment, is just a blood brother of nazism and fascism. Under all three the individual has no rights against the state and no purpose on earth but to serve the state. Communism is essentially nihilistic; it is a creed of destruction. It was conceived in hatred, it is being nurtured in violence. It has been brought to maturity in Russia where it is being used as a weapon of world conquest.

I have not referred to any nation critically in this connection. I have referred to communism wherever it is found. I wish, however, to quote the views of two men who have had exceptional opportunity to understand it. They mention a foreign nation by name and I pass it on as their view. One of them, whose position is made clear, is the American ambassador to Poland from 1944 to 1947, A. B. Lane. He saw communism at work and his opinion was stated as follows:

> There will be no turning back on the part of Stalin. On the contrary, he will proceed on his policy, which was also that of Hitler, of seizing control, state by state, until he obtains world domination or until he meets the effective resistance of a stronger power.

The other view, by one of the great workers for world peace, Sir Norman Angell, winner of the Nobel peace prize, warns us about the alternatives in these words:

> If we in the west adopt a policy of indefinite retreat before Russian power, we must face now just what that involves . . . When it is on top of us, it will have attained a momentum too great to stop. A policy which, adopted early could have prevented war, fails of prevention when adopted late.

Let me now make one comment on the matter I referred to a moment ago, namely the fifth column aspect. We must not forget that the communists, together with their brothers the nazis, have developed a new weapon, the fifth column. That is the most hateful of weapons; it is one which drives the people of a nation against themselves, splits countries in two, sets brother against brother, and produces something of the condition we have seen in parts of Europe.

I wish to make two or three other observations in closing. What is it our responsibility now to do? Without going into details I suggest, first that this nation, in association with other nations must be strong—strong economically and collectively—so strong collectively that no other nation will dare to attack us. That is the immediate responsibility of those who would guard against this danger. That is the primary purpose of the main principles of the united nations.

Second—and this applies particularly at home—we must serve better here than communism can serve anywhere. What is the defence against the attack of communism at home, the infiltration of our labour organizations and every other device that is being used? The best defence at home is for us in this parliament and those in provincial legislatures and in municipal councils to see that our communities are served better than communism can serve their people. Faith in our capacity to do that may have been wavering in recent years. I suggest that it is time we had a new and revitalized faith in that respect. I have confidence, and I am sure everybody in this house has it too, that we can serve society better than communism can. Let us stand up and demonstrate that fact so that communism cannot grow in Canada and so that it cannot expand in Europe.

Third, today we must help other nations to re-establish themselves after the tremendous sacrifices they have made in war. Particularly is this the case with respect to our customers in western Europe. We have every moral, economic and political reason for giving to the extent of our capacity to help our customers and others over there to re-establish themselves. Otherwise they cannot resist the pressure that is now upon them.

I have mentioned that we must be strong, that we must serve better and that we must help our customers to re-establish themselves. Fourth, we must help other nations to help themselves. The great nation beside us has been left with the responsibility of accepting the economic leadership of the world; I refer to the United States of America. It is our responsibility to associate ourselves with that great nation on this continent and accept our share of the moral and economic leadership of the world. That responsibility has fallen to this continent through no particular credit to ourselves, but perhaps partly as a result of accident or as a result of geography, as well as the result of war. But here in Canada we are beside the strongest economic unit in the world—I am referring to the United States. We are a sister nation, smaller, but similar in many ways, believing in many of the same things and having many of the same advantages. We too must carry our share of the responsibility, as I said by sharing in giving moral and economic leadership to the world beside this great nation I have referred to—the United States. This nation cannot feed the rest of the world and cannot bring prosperity to every section of the world by giving to them. But the United States of America, this country and others who think in the same way can give leadership to other nations to help themselves in the future.

I have only one other thing to say, Mr. Speaker. As I said in my opening remarks, I raised this question to re-emphasize the seriousness of the menace we are facing in this country and throughout the world, and to ask the government, either now or on an early occasion, to state what it is doing in every department that has any relation to this question, and what it proposes to do. I think that the government and this parliament owe that to the Canadian people. I think the government owes it to the Canadian people to say what it is doing and what it proposes to do to stamp out this threat to Christian democracy. That is what it is. The struggle today is between two ideologies—communism on the one hand and Christian or other democracies on the other. Communism is the major threat in the world today.

In this connection I have a suggestion to make to the government. We all know that the government want to get through some of the measures that are now before us. On behalf of this party I should like to assure the government that, with regard to all these matters which are pressing today, we will help them to see they get through before next Wednesday or Thursday. That does not mean to say that we shall not talk about them as we go along, because that is our job. That is what we must do and that is what we have no choice but to do. Some of these measures we recognize must be put through. That is not so perhaps with all of them. But with respect to those considered to be essential to pass before the Easter holidays, we shall help the government to see that they are passed. But I seriously suggest that the government ought to provide one day or at least part of a day for the discussion of foreign affairs, and particularly of this question.

Let me say this, Mr. Speaker. I have raised this question today in no sense of narrow partisanship. This question and these times are too serious for that. I wish to say just one sentence in closing. It is with respect to the position of this party regarding communism. I can do it most briefly in these words. This party is in favour of, and will give its wholehearted support to, the government's taking every step possible within its legislative competence, to halt the march of communism in this country.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I should like to be the first, Mr. Speaker, to thank my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) for the promise he has just made that he and his party will do all in their power to assist the government in helping to defeat the menace of communism. There is no menace in the world that is greater. I think I have stated that repeatedly before. There is no comparable menace in the world. We all must face it in common, with all the strength, resource and power it is possible for us to muster. I am quite sure that when other hon. gentlemen speak for the other parties opposite they will be equally prepared to give the government the assurance that has just come from the leader of the opposition.

As the house will have noted, I have taken no exception whatever to my hon. friend having brought up this question as he has. But I do take exception to his having said, or implied, that he was bringing it up at this moment because the government had denied to hon. gentlemen opposite the right to discuss external affairs before this time of the session. For my part I think my hon. friend brought the question up at this moment because of the exceptional interest aroused as a result of the statement which was made this morning by the president of the United States.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is perhaps fortunate, because of the President's statement, that he has brought it up at this time. Naturally the question will be receiving more attention in various parts of the world today as a result of that address. But may I point out, as I have more than once before, that in arranging the business and the order of business of this session I did confer with hon. gentlemen opposite. I recently made a statement in this house as to what we as hon. members were agreed as the best procedure to adopt in order to get through the business as rapidly as possible. I need not go over what we were agreed upon in regard to giving the emergency measures and the debate on the address first consideration. When I was seeking to carry out that arrangement in planning the business of the house from day to day, I was not imposing my will on this house. I was seeking to carry out what had been agreed to by the house itself and by members of all parties. If external affairs has not been reached before this time it is because we have not yet completed the program upon which we had agreed. Hon. members know, or at least the leaders of the parties opposite know, that only a day or two ago I discussed with the leaders quite frankly the matter of the remainder of the business to be dealt with before the Easter recess, and I informed the house of the result of the conference we had and the agreement we had reached. At the time of that conference, there was no suggestion that external affairs should be given precedence between now and the Easter recess. I think it was felt by all that external affairs questions would come up very soon after the Easter recess and that we would have, not a sudden debate on a great question, sprung without any notice whatever, but an opportunity for a full discussion in this house, perhaps running for days.

Now I say to my hon. friend that the government has been given no notice of his intention to bring up this question at this time. He asks what has been done in this direction and in that. Had I had any previous knowledge that such was desired I could, for example, have brought him today data answering some of the questions he asked, particularly in relation to what steps have been taken over the past year or two to make certain that the public service was not being infiltrated by those holding communist views. I could have made a statement at some length on that matter, but at this moment I am not going to attempt to go into details of that kind.

May I just remind this house, and Canada itself, that, after all, ours was the first government in the world to expose the activities of communists in the public service, and I may add I was the first to stand up in this parliament and indicate how appallingly dangerous the possibilities were. I did not confine what I had to say to parliament here. I made it a point to visit the United States personally and to confer on this danger with the highest authorities in that country; I made it a point to visit Britain and confer with the highest authorities in the United Kingdom. In both countries I disclosed what we had discovered in Canada with respect to communist infiltration into the public service, and the dangers to which it was likely to lead and to methods that were being employed. And at this moment I do not forget that my colleague, the then Minister of Justice, the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. St. Laurent), was taken pretty severely to task because it was alleged that, in authorizing the steps necessary, he was interfering with individual liberty. He took the only possible immediate steps it was effective to take at that time. I do not forget, either, that we on this side have since heard more about our alleged interference with individual rights and human liberties than about almost anything else, because of the action we took to suppress communism.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Well, I listened respectfully to the leader of the opposition. I hope hon. gentlemen opposite will listen equally respectfully to me.

Mr. HOMUTH: Stick to the facts.

Mr. CASSELMAN: He was non-political.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am not going to trouble doing so at the present time, but I have no doubt there will be those who will be interested enough to look up Hansard. I would suggest that anyone who is interested in seeing which political party in this country has taken the most active means and measures to suppress communism, should look through the Hansard of this parliament and see what has been said in the debates here with respect to interference with the liberty of the individual.

Mr. ROWE: Look through the ballot boxes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I would rather hope that, on a subject such as this, we might all find ourselves in such complete agreement that no difference of view would be expressed. In order to indicate how completely I am in accord with the statements of the leader of the opposition upon communism as a menace—I do not say I take the literal words, but their general trend—I intend to read the paragraphs he has read and indicate the extent to which I agree with them. The first was:

> Canada is regarded by the communists as of supreme strategic importance in the communist bid for global domination.

I do not know what country the communists regard as most important. I am inclined to think that, at the moment, their minds are more upon the countries of Europe and some of the countries of Asia than upon any countries in the western hemisphere. Nevertheless I do believe that anyone who had regard to future world development would look upon Canada as one of the most enviable portions on the whole globe. The next statement was:

> Communist agents, some of them under diplomatic immunity, some of them Canadian citizens, have succeeded in corrupting officials of the public service of this country.

My hon. friend has referred to the trials that have taken place in the last two years. May I ask, was it at the instance of hon. gentlemen opposite or was it at the instance of this government that those people were brought to trial? I am pointing out that it was this government that fearlessly took the necessary steps to bring to trial those in the public service who had lent themselves to corrupt influence.

Mr. HOMUTH: Who hired them?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It seems perfectly clear to me that some hon. gentlemen opposite are thinking more of the political effect of their remarks than they are of the seriousness of the subject being discussed at the present time. May I say that any individual or any party which thinks it is going to make political capital in dealing lightly with this question of communism is making a very grave mistake indeed. The people of Canada realize how serious this question is, and they expect all parties and all persons in Canada to unite and do their utmost to defeat the ends of the communists. The next statement is:

> Canada is regarded by the communists as a vital source of information respecting the development of the atomic bomb.

Where did my hon. friend get that information? It came as a result of an inquiry made at the instance of this government, and made in the only manner which could have been effective in dealing with a question of this kind. Yet I recall vividly how bitterly this government was attacked because some of our mounted police undertook to keep within certain restrictions those who were about to be examined in connection with betraying secrets with respect to the atomic bomb and other information.

Mr. HOMUTH: Let us have some more politics.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend the leader of the opposition has spoken about a scientist who was imprisoned in Britain as a result of having revealed atomic secrets. It was this government that acquainted the government of Britain with the activities of that gentleman. It was the government of this country that had him followed across the Atlantic, so that there would be no possibility of his escaping the consequences of his actions.

An hon. MEMBER: Why not?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend says, "Why not?" Of course we should have done it. What I am taking exception to is my hon. friend interrupting me as if I were saying something which everyone should not be pleased to recognize as the truth. I come to the next statement by the leader of the opposition:

> Communist agents are boring into the labour organizations of this country with a view to wrecking recognized labour organizations and undermining industrial peace and crippling the productive capacity of the country both in peace and in the event of war.

We as a government have within the last few days received delegations of labour organizations, the Dominion Trades and Labour Congress, the Canadian Congress of Labour, and the railroad brotherhoods. In the representations which were made by those organizations to our government there was nothing but words of appreciation with respect to what the government had done and was doing to co-operate with those organizations in helping to prevent communism from developing within their ranks. I should add that exactly the same position was taken by a delegation representative of the Catholic syndicates.

I do not believe that the extent to which the communists have bored into labour organizations is as great as some people in this country think. There may be here and there individual organizations, in fact I believe there are, of which a considerable number of communists may be members, but it is not always the easiest thing, by looking at a man, or seeing him in a particular employ, to discover whether he is a communist working with a view to destroying industry or whether he is a citizen who is doing his best to earn a livelihood. It is very easy to condemn wholesale men who are working in industry, but it is another thing to interfere with, as we have been hearing right along, the liberty of an individual in an attempt to arrest and bring someone to trial simply because he is alleged to be of communistic persuasion.

The Minister of Labour (Mr. Mitchell) has been most fortunate in having had right along the active and helpful co-operation of the leaders of organized labour in Canada in furthering the government's effort to suppress the communist movement. I agree that Canada owes a great measure of thanks to the leaders of labour organizations in our country for the part they are actively taking in seeking to suppress any development of communism. No one knows better than members of the labour organizations themselves what the full effect of communism would be if that movement ever made any headway in their midst. It has been one of the privileges of the government to give, in this particular, to leaders of organizations that are furthering organization in a legitimate way as much assistance as they are able to give.

May I point out that in dealing with a problem such as communism one does not always make the most effective progress by publishing from the housetops everything that is being done. I think we have been successful in combatting communist tendencies in Canada in a large part because we have gone quietly about discovering where those forces were at work and, instead of advertising to the world what we are doing in all directions, have sought to gain our objective by quiet and effective means. My hon. friend said:

> Recent events in Europe, especially in Czechoslovakia and Finland, can leave no reasonable doubt that the aim of communism is to destroy democracy, wherever it exists, and substitute for it puppet police states.

Concerning Czechoslovakia we have all been saying that. That is the view which is held in all free countries. While Czechoslovakia has suffered in the manner she has so suddenly and unexpectedly it may well be that the disaster to that country may prove a beacon light which will guide the free nations to her deliverance as well as to the deliverance of other nations held in thrall by communism.

My hon. friend said that he wanted to give the house his views in regard to communism and to state how strong they were. As he read his views, and I say this to him most kindly, it seemed to me that he was reading from a speech which I made on January 20 of this year, in which I gave to the public of Canada my views on communism on an occasion which I believed would best serve to attract attention. If there is anyone here in this country who has expressed himself more strongly than I have about communism and the necessity of combating communism at every possible turn, I should be happy to be told that person's name.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I say it is unfortunate that a debate of the importance of this one should rise in the manner in which it has risen. I think most of us who would wish to take part in this discussion would have liked to have a little time in which to read what President Truman said today and also what has occurred at Brussels and the speeches which have been made as well as the statements which have been issued. I am not blaming the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken), nor am I going to blame the government. I am simply blaming the manner in which we conduct the business of this house. I think long ago we should have got farther ahead with the business of the house. I am not blaming any party; we are all responsible. We should have got ahead with business and it seems to me that from time to time, because of the grave conditions which face the world, we should have an opportunity in this house to discuss international affairs. I do not think those opportunities need be frequent, but from time to time we should have a chance to evaluate the international situation.

I speak as one who, throughout his public life, has been an opponent of communism. I think all those who know me know that I have never compromised with the communist party. As long as I am in the position in which I am today, there will be no compromise with those who wish to overthrow the government by force and to undermine our democratic institutions, whether those people come from what is sometimes called the extreme left or indeed from the extreme right. We face a danger, not only from the extreme left but from the extreme right.

I only wish that I could say to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) this afternoon that what he has said with regard to the attitude, not of himself perhaps but of the party which he leads, has been as open as the record of the movement with which I am associated. I have before me the article written by Tim Buck which appeared in the communist or Labour Progressive publication National Affairs Monthly, the February issue. In that article he recommends that the Labour Progressive party should try to infiltrate into my own party, to undermine its leadership and to use it as a vehicle. I am going to say that no opportunity will be given to the Labour Progressive party to infiltrate into this party or to undermine it in any way.

All who have watched the international situation in the last month surely realize now that you cannot co-operate as democrats with a party that is anti-democratic, lest it destroy you in the end.

Mr. KUHL: They are all opposed to private enterprise.

Mr. COLDWELL: Let us leave that out this afternoon. I may say to my hon. friend that I am prepared to discuss private enterprise with him. I am prepared, if necessary, to quote from the statement made a few weeks ago by the state department of the United States. The state department told the United States people in its report on Europe "that western European socialism is one of the strongest bulwarks against communism." That, my friend, is a statement from the state department of the most powerful capitalist government in the world, and my hon. friend's interruption indicates that he does not know very much of what he is talking about.

I am going to say to my hon. friends opposite that I think they are guilty to a large extent for the degree to which communism has developed in this country in the last few years. I have in my hand this article by Tim Buck, from which I want to read one paragraph. He is defending the association which they promoted with the Liberal party in 1945, and this is what he says:

> I think, however, that we must once and for all agree that the Liberal labour coalition which grew up in the fight on the plebiscite, around the fight for a "yes" vote, around the fight of the trade union movement for production, and against the Tory attempt to take over and replace the King government, was fundamentally correct.
> Some comrades raised the question as though there were a principle involved, as though, well, now we can get back to communism, to Marxism; we strayed by allying ourselves with the capitalists. In "Left Wing Communism"—

I wonder how many members of the house have read the works of Lenin or Marx. If they had they would be under no illusions but would understand precisely the pattern of things as they have happened in Europe. It is laid down in the left wing communism of Lenin. Tim Buck goes on:

> Lenin points out quite categorically how the Bolsheviks allied themselves with the liberals and right-wing social democrats and left-wing social democrats and cadets, and were correct in doing so, to secure the immediate objectives. And Stalin on that question pointed out that anybody who claims that they must never ally themselves with sections of the capitalist class is not a Marxist and does not understand Marxism. There was nothing non-Marxist in our alliance.

That is, their alliance with the Liberal party.

> It was a class alliance that saved Socialism and defeated fascism. It would not have been defeated without it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I ask my hon. friend a question? In his reading from a statement by Tim Buck, does he take Tim Buck's utterances at their face value? Does he attach importance to them?

Mr. COLDWELL: I do not take Mr. Buck's statement at its face value. I would not take anything at its face value. I want evidence to show that it is true. Hon. gentlemen on all sides of this house know, if I may mention one particular by-election, the Grey North by-election, that the advertising of prominent speakers of the communist party who were to speak on behalf of the Liberal party in that by-election was paid for, according to the advertisement itself, by the Liberal association. Moreover, in other areas in Canada I know from my personal observations, that hon. gentlemen opposite were receiving the support of the communist party.

Mr. MITCHELL: Were these speakers my hon. friend refers to advertised as communists?

Mr. KNOWLES: I will go upstairs and get the advertisement.

Mr. COLDWELL: That was one of the big factors in the deception. They were not advertised as communists.

Mr. MITCHELL: I would just say this—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. COLDWELL: I do not mind a question but my hon. friend will have an opportunity to make a speech later.

Mr. MITCHELL: If the defenders of liberty will keep quiet I would ask my hon. friend, were they advertised as trade unionists or as communists?

Mr. COLDWELL: I will read the heading: "Union Leaders Coast to Coast Support McNaughton." Everybody knew who these speakers were. Here they are: Harold Pritchett; Jack Shaw; Nigel Morgan; George Harris; C. S. Jackson; Pat Sullivan, at that time communist president of the Canadian Seamen's Union and others. Everybody knows who these gentlemen were. They were the leading lights of the communist party and they were there masquerading as union leaders. The advertisement says at the bottom "Published by the authority of the Grey North Liberal Association."

I am not doing this merely to score a debating point off the Liberal party, but because the movement with which I am associated in this country has taken a great deal of misrepresentation from members of the Liberal party and I want to set the record right. We have never co-operated with the communist party in this way, and as long as I occupy this seat we never shall.

Coming to the question before us, the leader of the Progressive Conservative party asks for an investigation into the civil service and he referred to Mr. Attlee's action. I quite agree that persons who cannot be regarded as loyal to this country should not be in positions of trust where they can betray the interests of this country at a given time. But I do not believe that because a man holds particular views, though he be a communist, he should be denied the right to make a living. I like the statement made by the Prime Minister of Great Britain, who said: We are going to remove from positions of trust people whom we cannot trust. We are going to remove them from certain positions in the civil service but we shall do so in some manner which will enable us to give those people some position where they can continue to make a living.

I do not think in our country we should try to penalize people on account of their views. We have right to see to it that we do not have people in positions where they can betray the country should the opportunity arise.

I think the Benelux treaty today, judging from the statements I have seen, is a step in the right direction. Primarily it is a step for the rehabilitation of western Europe economically, and I am one of those who believe that if western Europe be rehabilitated economically we shall have gone a long, long way towards maintaining peace and defeating the onward march of communism, because communism thrives on poverty, misery and want. We can all shout hysterically in this chamber about the menace of communism, but unless we remove these factors which, among the distressed masses of the people, bring about communism we shall not succeed in meeting the menace.

Let me say this to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley), I know of nothing that will promote communism and subversive activity to a greater extent than the denial to the working class of this country of the right to organize into unions of their choice. When I picked up the newspaper this morning and read of the legislation that had been passed in one of our own Canadian provinces, in Prince Edward Island, outlawing not only international unions but national unions, I said to myself, there is something that will promote discontent and will play right into the hands of those who say that, when the time comes, the capitalist governments will destroy the legitimate working class unions of the country.

Mr. ROWE: Was that a Liberal government?

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes, it is a Liberal government. I would say to the Minister of Justice that if there has been one act passed in recent years that should be looked into with a view to reservation at least, or the exercise of the power of disallowance, it is this one. It is a much more menacing measure than some of the things that were disallowed in Alberta. I say it is a measure which should be considered by the government with a view to protecting the rights of men and women in that province as Canadians in the exercise of their civil rights.

I do not think action, as is sometimes suggested to prevent the spread of communism, can be effective unless we remove the causes of social and economic injustice. There are two spots in the world today where international affairs are pointed up. One is the failure of the governments to solve the problem of Palestine, and bloodshed on the 15th of May may well come about and Palestine may set the world aflame. I hope that the government of Canada will use every means in its power to persuade all the great powers, including Britain, to consider how best the situation can be handled when the 15th of May arrives. After all, these powers are all members of the united nations, and, while I am not asking for any direct approach to these nations, we are represented on the security council and our representative there can make the necessary pleas to the great powers to reconsider the position and see to it that bloodshed in that area is prevented, because bloodshed there may mean bloodshed over a much wider area. Then, of course, the jolt we had recently in Czechoslovakia has been mentioned in the house. I want to read not what I said, although I said substantially the same thing, but what the national executive of the party I represent said on the Czechoslovakian situation. It said this:

> Czechoslovakia offers the latest example of communist ruthlessness and contempt for democratic principles and methods.
> The Czech people had for centuries carried on a struggle for democratic self-government. After world war I they established a republic whose institutions and social progress were a model of democratic advance. During world war II, Czechoslovakia turned voluntarily toward the Soviet Union in its foreign policy. An all-inclusive Czech government had been formed and all parties kept loyally to a pro-Soviet external policy and to an internal policy of socialization and land reform. In short, in the new Czechoslovakia, Russia had a firm friend and the domestic communists a dominant influence. Yet these things did not save Czechoslovakia.
> Communist methods are the same everywhere. They are utterly irreconciliable with the aims, program and methods of the C.C.F. Our sympathy goes out to all Czech democrats, whose plight strengthens our determination to oppose communism. Whatever their line at any particular time, the communist goal always remains the same: the destruction of democracy and, with it, of the democratic socialist movements.
> We emphasize however, that the only effective way to combat communism is by the establishment of social and economic justice in our own countries.

Mr. LaCROIX: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes.

Mr. LaCROIX: Does the hon. member not think, if the communist party had been outlawed in Czechoslovakia, it would not have attained power?

Mr. COLDWELL: No, I do not think so. I think, as a matter of fact—

Mr. LaCROIX: If they had been outlawed at the beginning?

Mr. COLDWELL: As a matter of fact, I think the outlawing of political movements throughout history has shown that these movements gain strength through sympathy. I am not one of those who believe that by persecution and outlawing and suppression you can kill a movement.

Mr. LaCROIX: They would never have attained political power.

Mr. COLDWELL: It is like a germ. You expose a germ to the full rays of sunlight and it dies. I prefer to know where my opponent is rather than have him working underground, in the dark like a mole.

Mr. FOURNIER (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): I think we should remember the beginning of Christianity.

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes.

Mr. FOURNIER (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): They were outlawed at that time.

Mr. COLDWELL: Perhaps the persecutors of the early Christians and the outlawry of those who carried the gospel throughout the world did much to promote the gospel across the world. I do not think that outlawry would in any way remove the causes which make communism grow.

As I say, I would have liked to discuss this problem at greater length. I have tried to make the position clear—

Mr. TUCKER: Will the hon. member permit a question? Does he not think the government of Czechoslovakia did the very best they could to remove the causes that lead to communism, but they did not succeed there?

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes, they did. I think no little nation in the world did more in the time at its disposal to remove the causes which would promote communism than Czechoslovakia did. Let me point out that Czechoslovakia had just emerged from war. After all, it is less than three years since Czechoslovakia was liberated; and do not forget that her boundaries were adjacent to the great communist state, the Soviet union. Unquestionably, there was pressure from without as well as a well organized movement from within. One other tragedy was this, of course. During the early years of the war when Czechoslovakia was invaded by Hitler the communist party was there. It was not averse to Hitler. Indeed the communists of the world were co-operating with Hitler, and the leaders of the socialist democratic movement like Benes, Masaryk and Doctor Nemec who was here as our minister, leading socialist democrats, all fled; but the communists remained, because at that time, as in France and in other countries, they were co-operating with Hitler, because of the Stalin-Hitler pact. The leaders of the social democrats had all gone into exile or to death; the communist leaders remained and organized. There is no doubt that once Russia was attacked and was in the war, all the communist leaders in the country who were left behind were there to conduct the leadership of the underground against Hitler as soon as Russia was in the war, and the result was that they placed themselves in the position of leadership and strengthened their party. I do not want to enter into an argument with my hon. friend—

Mr. TUCKER: What has my hon. friend to say to the statement of the Labour government of Great Britain that communism in a democratic country cannot get into power without the support of socialists?

Mr. COLDWELL: As a matter of fact, that is not the only statement of the Labour party in Great Britain. Here is part of the statement:

> The issues before us no longer permit of any prevarication. Socialism is meaningless without democracy. Democracy cannot live without freedom of speech, press and organization, without the right to protection against arbitrary arrest, the right of appeal to a non-political judiciary.
> Any attempt to achieve socialism by means which deny democracy and human rights, particularly by the operation of an all-powerful secret police, must lead inevitably to a dictatorship indistinguishable in its impact on the common man from fascism as it existed in Italy and in Germany, and as it still exists in Spain.
> Czechoslovakia is an acid test of sincerity. Those who seek to condone this crime show that they are false to the principle of democratic socialism for which the Labour party stands.

Mr. TUCKER: That is not the statement to which I refer. The statement I refer to is the one that in Czechoslovakia, without the support of left wing socialism, no communist government could arrive in power.

An hon. MEMBER: You are quoting Tim Buck.

Mr. TUCKER: I am not quoting Tim Buck.

Mr. COLDWELL: The hon. gentleman is right. There is a sentence earlier in the statement which, taken out of its context, would mean exactly what my hon. friend says:

> But Czechoslovakia teaches us something more. Communists cannot achieve their aims without support from a minority within the camp of democratic socialism.

Mr. TUCKER: Exactly.

Mr. COLDWELL: I do not deny that, and I say I agree with what the Labour party says, that Czechoslovakia is the acid test of sincerity; and those who seek to condone this crime show that they are false to the principle of democratic socialism for which the Labour party stands.

Mr. TUCKER: May I ask another question? Can the hon. gentleman be sure that a minority does not exist in his own party today—

Mr. COLDWELL: May I say this to my hon. friend, that we can be sure of nothing in this world. Can the hon. gentleman be sure that, sitting all around him, in various places opposite, there are not hon. gentlemen who were elected and given their majority by communist support in their constituencies?

Mr. TUCKER: Mr. Speaker, we do not believe the same fundamental principles of complete socialization of everything.

Mr. COLDWELL: The hon. gentleman can make a speech if he wants to. I think he will agree with me that at no time have I endeavoured to fight a provincial election in this chamber. I suggest to the hon. gentleman that the place to do that is in the Saskatchewan legislature.

Mr. TUCKER: This is more than a provincial matter.

Mr. GARDINER: Might I ask a question?

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: Did the hon. member ever know Eric Bee?

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: Did Eric Bee travel with the hon. gentleman through Saskatchewan in a campaign?

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: And was not Eric Bee afterwards proven to be a communist?

Mr. COLDWELL: Afterwards.

Mr. GARDINER: He was afterwards proven to be a communist. In other words, you do not even know sometimes that your travelling companion is a communist. That is one method of infiltration.

Mr. COLDWELL: Perhaps my hon. friend, since he asks me a personal question, will acknowledge this, that one of the little books which I read in support of communism the hon. gentleman himself lent to me in 1931 or 1932, "Soviet Primer". Perhaps the hon. gentleman remembers that.

Mr. GARDINER: I do not remember having lent my hon. friend a book on communism, but I have read books on communism, and that is one of the reasons why I do not agree with it.

Mr. COLDWELL: The same here. I have been driven by a lot of people across the country and I have had very good drivers who turned out to be pretty good Tories, I have had good drivers who turned out to be good Liberals, and in this case I had a driver who afterwards turned out to be a communist. I do not think we should penalize people in our own country, our own citizens, for their political views. As far as I am concerned, I have never allowed a man's politics to interfere with my personal friendship, and I do not intend to do so, whether he is a communist or not. The Minister of Agriculture would probably know that another old friend of mine was a communist, and let me say this of that old man, who dropped dead some years ago. He was a communist and I detested his philosophy; but, do you know, I never in my life met or was associated with a man who exercised Christian principles to a greater extent than my old communist friend. He would give the last penny he had, or his shirt from his back, to anyone in distress. I do not think the fact that I knew a man of his description, who was a communist, should blacken me, any more than I drove with a man who was a communist.

Mr. GARDINER: Any more than the man who happened to turn out to be a communist afterwards addressed a meeting on behalf of a Liberal candidate in a by-election.

Mr. COLDWELL: Now, Mr. Speaker, I have spoken too long. I have said some of the things I wanted to say, and if a debate on international affairs comes up I hope we shall have an opportunity to stick to international affairs and not merely debate political issues of this sort.

Mr. SOLON E. LOW (Peace River): I feel that I should take a few minutes to make a declaration of faith on behalf of the Social Credit group, especially, sir, because the resolution brought up by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) is at this time so very important to the people of Canada.

I too would like to have had some time for preparation. I shall have to speak entirely extemporaneously, but I hope I shall be able to add at least a few things to the debate on the positive side.

Let me say at the outset, Mr. Speaker, that I should like to have seen in this house some weeks ago a full dress debate on external affairs. I do not believe that an occasion of this kind could possibly substitute for such a debate. This is a good opportunity, however, to discuss the dangers that Canada faces from the creeping paralysis of communism, which seems to be engulfing all of Europe and much of Asia, and which seems also to have some of its roots well established in our own land.

I want it definitely understood from the outset that as a Social Crediter, from the time I became interested in public affairs I have denounced communism. I have constantly and consistently opposed communism not only by what I have said but, I hope, also by the way I have acted. I believe in and advocate policies which are diametrically opposed to the principles of communism. I shall continue to do so as long as I have breath, Mr. Speaker, because I believe that those policies of Karl Marx which were spawned in the cesspools of Europe are evil things and must not be allowed to be transplanted into fertile soil in Canada. There is no room for an imported evil thing like that in our country.

I believe that anybody who takes the trouble to examine the records will find that the Canadian Social Crediter, the little newspaper which has been published weekly now for a good many years, has consistently, week in and week out, exposed communism and the program of the communist international for world domination. Years ago, before any activity was noticeable in other parties in this country, our little newspaper was pounding this thing out. Not only that, but the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Jaques), on practically every occasion on which he could get the ear of this house, has denounced communism and has warned the Canadian people against it. Moreover, he has shown in many instances the ways in which communism has hoped to install itself as the ruling force, not only in Europe but in this country as well. Week in and week out he has given of his knowledge and understanding of this whole matter. Sometimes he has been heaped with opprobrium because of his work in this regard, but I honour him for his determination to do everything he possibly can to counter this evil thing. Social Crediters have consistently advocated policies which, if they had been introduced into Canada, would have left little if any fertile soil for the growth of this international thing, this totalitarian form of dictatorship.

At this stage I should like to pay tribute to that courageous and dynamic newspaper, the Windsor Star, for what it has been doing during the past two weeks to expose the whole communist plot. I think it is rendering a signal service to Canada and is helping to ensure the security of the Canadian people. There is only one way by which we can warn the people against the evils of communism, and that is by getting over to them the truth about it and then by comparing with it what we have been able to accomplish under a private-enterprise free society. The Windsor Star is doing a great job. I have no idea as to just how accurate some of the things are which the author of the articles in the paper has said, but from my own knowledge much that he has said about the whole communist plot is founded on fact.

There are certain organizations in Canada which must bear some of the responsibility—how much, I am not prepared to say, but some at any rate—for the condition in which Canada finds herself today. I shall not give names, but I will say this: It was unfortunate that in a wave of hysteria there were organized in Canada, back about 1943, a number of organizations which have since proved to be nothing but communist fronts. Social Credit warned the people of Canada against those communist fronts right from the beginning. Unfortunately those organizations numbered among their members university professors and public men of every description. By their activities they lent aid and assistance and gave comfort to this terrible thing which now is creeping and spreading its limbs and branches over the whole world.

There are certain other organizations which must bear some of the responsibility for the situation. If Canada is in danger today, as certainly she is, then I must say that the party of my hon. friend the leader of the C.C.F. must bear some of the responsibility. I was happy to hear his declaration of faith today; and I believe that he is sincere and in earnest in declaring to the world that so far as he is concerned communism will not get into his party—I think he used the words "infiltrate itself" into his party. The trouble is that the C.C.F. have constantly advocated policies in this country which are nothing but marxism.

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): Nuts.

Mr. LOW: "Nuts" if you like. The hon. member for Winnipeg North certainly knows all about nuts. He is one of the people who has advocated friendship for Russia and a softening of the attitude towards communists. So the hon. member for Winnipeg North has nothing to say.

[Mr. Low.]

Mr. COLDWELL: Has the hon. member for Peace River forgotten the Edmonton by-election in 1938, when the premier and the leading communist celebrated the victory of Mr. Orville Kennedy?

Mr. LOW: That, of course, is not at all founded upon facts.

Mr. COLDWELL: Oh yes, it is.

Mr. LOW: My hon. friend does not know the first thing about it.

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes, he does.

Mr. LOW: No, he does not. They certainly did not do that.

Mr. COLDWELL: They spoke together.

Mr. LOW: I am putting forward the thesis that the party of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar must share a good deal of the responsibility for the spread of communism in this country.

Mr. COLDWELL: Don't be ridiculous.

Mr. LOW: I hope I shall not be ridiculous at all, but I am just placing before the house some of the things which I think my hon. friend will have to admit as facts. I do not wish to cast a reflection on any hon. member in this house. But in order to show what I am getting at, I must read an extract from the Edmonton Journal of June 27, 1945, just after the election of 1945, that involves a member of his own party. Before I read, however, I should like to say this. Nobody can say whether his party contains people who are communists. Nobody can say that he can vouch for every person within his group. There is not one of us who can say that no communism will insinuate himself into his party. It is a thing which it is impossible to say with certainty. But it would be quite possible to say that if any communism shows its head in our party, we will mighty soon take action towards getting it out; and that is the position that I take.

Mr. LaCROIX: That is what we have in Quebec.

Mr. WRIGHT: A louse never attaches itself to anything that is not alive.

Mr. LOW: That is true; and let me say to my hon. friend from Saskatchewan that even a louse clings to the flesh on which it feeds.

Mr. WRIGHT: We realize that.

Mr. LOW: These are serious things, Mr. Speaker. These things must be carefully weighed while we are talking about communism and the dangers of communism as far as Canada is concerned. It is easy for us to say that we will have nothing to do with communism; but I will say that it is no mere accident that the communist party has declared that it is going to support C.C.F. candidates, whether they want that support or not. That is not an accident, and I will show you why. It may be thoughtlessness on the part of some members of the C.C.F. party when they say things like this, but it is just such thoughtlessness that undermines the faith of the people and spreads confusion and chaos.

Speaking at a banquet in the Corona hotel in the city of Edmonton on June 26, 1945, the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Irvine) who had just been elected, is reported as having said this:

> The C.C.F. party in the recent federal election lost a great "weapon" when it failed to capitalize on the popularity Russia achieved in five years of war, Mr. Irvine said. We should have made it clear to Canadians that Russia, a socialist country, is our type.
> Our political opponents could hardly say that Stalin is a nazi. But for some reason we dissociated ourselves from the type of socialism they have in Russia.

Well, Mr. Speaker, that is perfectly clear; and it is patent now that when the danger begins to show itself the party which had played around with communism feels that for political reasons it has to get up and denounce communism. Not only that; those parties and those organizations in this country that have advocated policies which are contained in the principles outlined in that book, the Communist Manifesto, must bear a share, and a great share, of the responsibility for the softening of the people to communist principles in this land. When anyone who goes about engendering class strife, trying to set off one class against another, whether it be labour against the industrialists or whether it be labour and farmer against the rest of us, it must be realized that the idea emanated from the classless society idea of Karl Marx and Engels. That sort of thing has been preached in this country until a good many people believe it. Anyone who votes for centralization at every possible opportunity promotes the idea that the only way we can get security in this country is to centralize everything in the hands of a few bureaucrats; so you cannot blame the people for falling into error in their thinking when such policies are constantly advocated and when the opposite idea of decentralization is scorned and held up to ridicule as the reason so many people have to suffer.

Let us go on. This idea of government ownership, government monopoly, is a Marxian principle. How in the world can we now protest against communist beliefs when that sort of thing has been preached so assiduously in this land for the last twenty years? The idea of the redistribution of poverty, levelling everybody down, has been preached far and wide, and has been given as one of the means by which, in due course, this country will be able to have security, and that this is the only way it can be brought about. How in the name of common sense can we expect people to do other than look with some favour and sympathy upon communism and upon Russia in the face of such propaganda?

Mr. ARCHIBALD: Don't you have government ownership in Alberta?

Mr. LOW: No, we have not.

Mr. MATTHEWS (Kootenay East): Is the hon. member repudiating the government-owned telephone system in Alberta?

Mr. LOW: No. We have government ownership in Alberta only in connection with services which definitely lend themselves to government ownership.

I say, Mr. Speaker, it is not by accident, by any means, that the L.P.P. in this country have decided the only way they can get into power is through the C.C.F. party.

There is one other thing I believe should be said at this time. Canada has been pursuing policies which have put us in a position of great danger should a communist coup ever develop in this land. For example, it seems we have done our utmost to centralize the control of communications. Take our radio, for example. How easy it would be to cripple communications, simply because of the degree of centralization we have attained in this country. Some of us, realizing that several years ago, warned the people and advocated decentralization as a security measure. Let me point out that when Field Marshal Montgomery was here the government held a state dinner for him at the country club. Speaking at that dinner the field marshal mentioned, among five important things Canada would have to do if we were to be strong, the matter of decentralization. It is true he only developed one phase of it, that is military decentralization, but he certainly indicated that the decentralization of various things would have to be accomplished if we were to make Canada safe and secure. I say that anything which tends to centralize the control of vital things in Canada in the hands of a few people becomes a great danger when there is the possibility of a general strike or of a communist coup.

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): If the hon. member will permit a question, does he agree with the president of the Saskatchewan social credit league that communist and fascist activities are carried on within the Social Credit party?

Mr. LOW: I did not even know he had said such a thing.

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): He said so, in a broadcast.

Mr. LOW: I would have to make certain he did say it before I answered the question.

I was saying that anything which tends to centralize the control of vital things in the hands of a few becomes a danger in times of crisis. Today in Canada we are centralizing the control of food in the hands of a single board. We are taking step after step in that direction, and I say that becomes a very dangerous thing in case of crisis involving a communist coup. It seems to me we ought to begin, just as soon as we possibly can, the opposite course and try to decentralize controls, and place back in the hands of the people to the greatest extent possible the control of those vital things which in time of crisis might be used by enemies of the free way of life to lead us into the clutches of these totalitarians who wish—there is no question about it—to get us in their grasp. It seems to me the government ought to forsake some of the policies they have been following and turn to policies of decentralization.

I want to assure the Prime Minister and his government of every support this party can possibly extend in meeting whatever may develop along the line we have been discussing. We want to help the government to clean house. We think there should be a house cleaning. We think the government must be making efforts right now; I am quite sure they are, and I commend them for whatever they have done and are doing. The Prime Minister did not hear any discouraging remarks or adverse criticisms from this party at the time Mr. Gouzenko made his revelations. We supported him throughout, because we knew he had to take unusual means to deal with a very dangerous situation. And we are prepared to go further and support the government in anything they feel they must do to secure Canada and make it impossible for communism to get a hold here. Only we say go ahead!

There are a number of positive things that can be done, I throw out these suggestions which may be of help. It seems to me that instead of being afraid to look at communist literature we should call upon the departments of education in the various provinces to take the communist manifesto and, by whatever means may be in their power, make known to the people what it contains. It is only through lack of knowledge of the truth that the people fall into error. I want to see the people of Canada thoroughly familiar with what this book contains. Not only that, but side by side with the principles set out in the communist manifesto I would like to see made known to the Canadian people just how far Canada has gone in giving the people the results that Marx and Engels declared a hundred years ago they would give the people, and how it has been done without seriously lessening the freedom of Canadians, and under a system of private enterprise.

I believe we have the greatest country on the face of the earth. I believe that Canada is capable of yielding the finest standard of living to its people of any country in the world. I go further and say that if the Canadian people really know what communism means, and if they know at the same time what we have accomplished through private enterprise and what yet might be accomplished through the application of scientific principles of finance under our democratic way of life, there will not be much danger from communism. The best way to fight communism is to make our democracy yield results which spread happiness and contentment amongst our people.

I submit that in our citizenship we ought to attempt to develop a dynamic faith in democratic institutions. I pay tribute to what was said here a short while ago by the hon. member for Athabaska (Mr. Dechene). I think everyone ought to be careful to guard his tongue and see to it that he does not undermine the people's faith in democratic institutions and democratic processes. I say without fear of successful contradiction that until Canadians develop a dynamic faith in their way of life, a faith in Canadian democracy that is as dynamic as the faith which communists have in Russia, we cannot hope to combat communism.

I think we should make more of our citizenship. We should inculcate into our people, especially into our youngsters in the schools, pride rather than apology for our way of living. I am afraid that too often propagandists play up the wrong side of the picture. We are all guilty of that more or less, and I hope we will come to our senses and stop it. The only way to develop pride in anything is to become aware of the fine things in it. It seems to me that it is high time all of us put aside any prejudices we may have and combined our efforts in helping our people to attain that pride in Canada, that pride in Canadian citizenship, that pride in our way of life, which will tide us over any kind of crisis that may come.

I would have liked to say something about our external policy as it relates to this whole matter of communism. At the first opportunity I am going to discuss questions that are of interest to me, particularly those with which I had something to do when at the united nations assembly last fall. I should like to throw out one suggestion. In dealing with problems at the united nations or in connection with our external relations I think it is dangerous in the extreme for the Canadian delegates to take a stand on any problem that may require unusual means of implementation, before they have decided how the solution they decide upon is to be implemented.

I am not going to discuss the merits of the Palestine partition at the moment; I shall refer to that at another time. But I am quite certain that Canada made a mistake. I believe that the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs now believes that we made a mistake. I have in my hand a clipping from the Ottawa Journal of March 3 to which I should like to refer briefly to support my belief. Mr. L. B. Pearson speaking at the united nations said:

> We feel, in short, that the commission is not now in a position to carry out its mandate in Korea.

Then a little further on he says:

> The ones who will, of course, suffer most from this policy of the USSR are those who least deserve it, the Korean people. I hope that nothing I have said will be interpreted as suggesting that my government is not anxious to see a free, united and democratic Korea brought into being at the earliest possible date.
> My government strongly supports that objective and feels that the policy of the USSR in preventing its realization is to be condemned. We do feel, however, that it would be unwise to seek to associate the united nations with an effort to achieve this desirable objective, by asking its commission in Korea to do things that it has not, under its terms of reference, the power to do.

If what Mr. Pearson says is good for Korea it should have been good for Palestine. We must not be led or pushed by any pressure into making decisions that we just have not the power to implement. I am afraid that perhaps we have let ourselves in for some criticism through having done that already.

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think I should say a few words on this motion because I am at the head of the Department of Justice. Attorneys general and ministers of justice in various democratic countries of the world are peculiarly interested in communism. They are peculiarly interested in it because it is a menace to established law and order. Perhaps the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) is to be commended for having brought up this matter, but I think it would have been better if there had been some notice so that we on the government benches could have been prepared to deal with it more completely.

Mr. BRACKEN: May I just say I understood, and I think others understood, that we had asked for an opportunity to discuss this matter, and while I do not criticize the government, the opportunity was not presented.

Mr. ILSLEY: We had no notice of this motion until we got into the house this afternoon, and therefore were not prepared to deal with it in as complete detail as we otherwise would have been.

One fact which the debate has brought out is that there is not much, if any, division among members of the house in their views with regard to communism. All parties deplore its inroads, and while there may be some difference of opinion as to what steps should be taken, that is whether it should be outlawed, all hon. members feel that it is a menace to our parliamentary institutions, to our civil liberties and to what we call our way of life. It is important that the people of Canada be awake to what is going on in the world and to what is going on in Canada. I have here a recent book which has received favourable reports. It is entitled, "World Communism Today" and is written by Martin Ebon. In the first chapter he gives a rapid review of the development of the strategy of communism since 1920 when the third international was formed.

According to this writer, we are now in what he calls the seventh strategy. The first strategy was from 1918 to 1920. During that time the communists were advocating world revolution. They believed that world revolution was imminent, that their society was the form of society which would be established very shortly the world over. But events did not materialize in the way expected by them, and so a second strategy was adopted between 1921 and 1927. This was a retreat from revolutionary activity to agitation. The strategy followed during that period was agitation instead of armed revolt.

The third strategy was from 1928 to 1934. This strategy centred on Russia. Russia was regarded as the important state, the state which must be developed as the mother of communism, the country which must succeed, which must be put on her feet if communism was to make inroads in other countries. Therefore revolutionary extremism was promoted in the world at large as a protection for Russia. That was the third strategy.

The fourth strategy was from 1935 to 1938. That was the period of the united front when the communist party joined with other parties, socialists and other parties in various countries; for instance, the Blum government in France.

The fifth strategy was from 1939 to 1940. That, of course, was the period when the agreement was made between Stalin and Hitler. The communists the world over then began to denounce the allies as vehemently as they had previously denounced the nazis. They made a very sharp turn in 1939 and caused their followers everywhere great difficulties, but they carried them with them pretty well during that period from 1939 to 1940 and early in 1941. If Canadians as a whole would really acquaint themselves with what communists said and taught and advocated in Canada in that period they would be appalled, because they would realize that fundamentally persons who are true communists have no loyalty at all to this country as Canada. That was abundantly proved in the period of the fifth strategy. That is the period of the war which they described as the imperialist war against Germany.

Then, when Russia was invaded in 1941 the period of the sixth strategy set in, when another sharp turn was made, and communists in countries such as Canada and elsewhere joined with the governments of these countries in prosecuting the war and doing the best they could to help defeat Germany and helping Russia indirectly to win the war.

Then in 1945 or 1946 the period of the seventh strategy set in, which is the period we are in today. It is different from any of the others. It is a period of national revolutions rather than a world revolution—national revolutions brought about in a peculiarly subtle and insidious manner. The technique is familiar to everyone in this house. The communists, often very experienced and extremely able, many having received training in Moscow, and then coming back to their own countries for which they had fought bravely during the period of the sixth strategy when they were seeking to promote the victory of Russia—these communists by one way or another get into governments and, if possible, get control of the department which has charge of the police and the department in charge of the radio, and sometimes the Department of Justice, sometimes the Department of Defence, but most of all the Department of the Interior, as it is called in most countries, the department that controls the police. From then on there is a gradual disintegration of the government. The police take charge; if they can, the communists get control of the radio as well, and before very long the government breaks down and becomes a communist government. Then the leaders of the other parties are imprisoned, often tried, sometimes executed. Other parties are outlawed. Just about that time an election is held, and when the election is held the communists are elected overwhelmingly.

This is the period of the seventh strategy, the period of national revolutions brought about in this insidious way. Parallel with this attempt to get control of governments there is a skilful infiltration into the trade unions, which in Canada is a more important factor than the other. In Canada we have today no communists in this house. We have no communist party here. The communist party in the legislatures and in municipal councils is very weak. The Labour Progressive party does not amount to much as a political party in Canada. It is not strong and does not carry its elections. But proportionately they are very much stronger, I am afraid, in some of the trade unions in Canada; and I would say, without trying to cause any undue alarm, without saying anything that would cause panic or anything of that kind, that the situation at present in Canada is such that Canadians would do well to examine all the facts and be alert to this matter, and be alert to it every day, and see that it does not spread very much further. We are acquainted with the communist mentality. It is a sort of fanaticism they have for Marx and Lenin and their other prophets. In their eyes the end justifies the means and ordinary rules of morality do not apply. They are quite ready to join civil liberties associations and any other kind of association and to advocate freedom of thought and freedom of speech and freedom of action and freedom of religion until that time when they will suppress all those very freedoms themselves. And the people of Canada should realize that.

Mr. ROWE: If the minister would permit a question, does he think anyone who has been a member of the communist party should be employed in the civil service of Canada?

Mr. ILSLEY: Mr. Speaker, my answer is, no, I do not think so. I certainly do not believe anyone who is a member of the communist party of Canada should belong to the civil service of Canada. But the hon. gentleman's question was, should anyone who has been a member of the communist party be employed in the civil service? There might be a case of genuine conversion among these people. I do not know that I would go to the length of saying there could not be, but I do say that no communist should be allowed to serve in the civil service of Canada. In that respect I would go farther than the Labour government in Great Britain has gone, because I understand they have simply made a declaration that communists should not occupy positions of trust in the government service. I do not believe that goes far enough.

Mr. ROWE: I am glad to hear the minister say that. Just one more question. I am not, of course, endeavouring to insinuate that the government are hiring any communists; I do not believe they are, but does the minister not think it would be wise to have an investigation of the whole civil service of Canada to see if there are any in the civil service who are communists?

Mr. ILSLEY: The government has been very alert about that. We have avoided answering questions about it. Not many questions indeed are asked. It is not an easy thing to explain or to deal with. A general investigation would be a most difficult thing. In the United States they have run into terrific difficulties in trying to assess the political beliefs of people in the civil service and to deal with them in accordance with their beliefs. It is a most difficult problem. It is easy to talk about making criminals of them, or putting sections in the criminal code to deal with them. But the government has decided that the situation is such that there are sections of the Immigration Act which can be applied to prevent this influx of communist labour leaders from the United States who cannot work there because of the Taft-Hartley Act. We have decided that that influx can be stopped and will be stopped under our Immigration Act. We have decided also to do everything we can to protect our civil service against any infiltration of this sort.

Mr. COCKERAM: Is any action being taken to get these communists from across the line out of this country?

Mr. ILSLEY: The answer is yes. Let me proceed. I want to deal with the divisions of importance of the address of the leader of the opposition. He made certain suggestions. He said we should see that we serve society better than the communists can serve society. I wholly agree with that remark; and all the statutes, all the information that we have, indicate that by any comparisons which have been made our standard of living is higher, the return per capita for the same amount of labour is very much greater and our system does work better than any known communistic system works. But that does not excuse parties; it does not excuse governments; it does not excuse parliament from keeping continually before them as the primary objective of their activities the welfare of the masses of the people, and that must, of course, at all times be done. I think the leader of the opposition expressed it very well when he said that we must serve communities better or serve society better than any rival system. We think we are doing that. I am confident myself that we are doing that very much better; but the leader of the opposition is thoroughly sound on that, that the welfare of the masses, the welfare of society, the sort of things that improve the lot of the rank and file, and so on, should remain right to the fore in the objectives and the programs of governments. That was the first suggestion. It was a general and perhaps an obvious one; nevertheless it is one with which we thoroughly agree.

Another suggestion was that we should associate ourselves with the United States of America and accept our share of the moral and economic leadership of the world. Well, I agree with that. We have done so to such an extent that we are criticized by some on the ground that we have too many people abroad, at the united nations and at the food and agricultural organization, and at these various specialized agencies of the united nations, and so on. But certainly this country has co-operated to the full not only with the United States of America but with the United Kingdom and with other countries that are interested in the rehabilitation of the world.

Another suggestion was that we should help other nations to re-establish themselves; that we should see that our customers are put back on their feet. I was glad to hear my hon. friend say that because he has not been very consistent on that. I remember about a year ago that he went on the radio and spoke about export credits. He said something like this: we are lending to people in other countries money with which to buy our own goods. And we have been under very strong criticism because of the money we have lent to other countries.

In the United States of America they have at the present time what started as the Marshall plan. Last June, at Harvard university the United States secretary of state made a speech in which he indicated the willingness of the United States of America to help other countries that were willing to help themselves, and that has developed into what is now called the European recovery plan. It has passed the United States senate and is, I believe, before the house of representatives. It proposes the expenditure of $5,300 million in the next twelve months for the assistance of sixteen European countries, these countries having first made and prepared a plan of self-help among themselves. So far as Canada is concerned, we were, I was about to say, pioneers in this program of assisting or promoting European recovery. During the war, in spite of considerable criticism, we foresaw that developments might be something along the line of what they have been; that is, that after the war, there would be a terrific shortage of purchasing power on the part of the countries that were engaged in the war. We adopted the policy of mutual aid, and this policy of mutual aid was considerably greater per capita for Canada than the similar lend-lease aid of the United States of America. Then, since the war we paid our share of UNRRA, which was very great. It was on a per capita basis proportionate to that of the United States of America. After the end of UNRRA, we have paid some money for post-UNRRA relief; but our last program, our extension of credits to the United Kingdom and to other European countries, has been very great.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: And cancellation of debt.

Mr. ILSLEY: And the cancellation of debt of the United Kingdom for the British commonwealth air training plan. A while ago the ambassador of Canada to Washington made a speech in the United States in which he pointed out that the credits authorized since the end of the war have in Canada amounted to something over $1,750 million. They have not all been used yet. I think the amount used is something like $1,500 million, but the credits authorized for the United Kingdom and these other European countries is something over $1,750 million, and that is considerably more per capita than the credits that have been authorized by the United States of America, if considered with relation to national income, or if considered with relation to the population of the United States. As a matter of fact, in his column not very long ago Mr. Walter Lippmann had this to say. I happen to have it here:

> Man for man, family for family, taxpayer for taxpayer, the Canadians have borne a heavier part of the burden of European reconstruction than we have. Though the Canadian population is only one-twelfth as large as the American, though the Canadian national income is only one-eighteenth as large as ours, the Canadian contribution to European reconstruction is one-fifth as large as ours.

Of course this country has a continuing interest in seeing that these countries in Europe have their prosperity and purchasing power restored; but apart from economic grounds altogether, we have this other interest, which is that if a condition is allowed to develop which leads to revolution and chaos in these countries, then we have the spread of communism over a very much greater area of the world's surface. We then are driven to measures of some kind to prevent it from coming any farther. If it eventually succeeded, our liberties, our laws, those freedoms to which we are attached and which we prize so highly are gone, and consequently we have the greatest interest in seeing that European recovery is promoted. Therefore I again agree with the leader of the opposition in that section of his address.

Some parts of this debate this afternoon have taken a political turn. I do not want to add to that. Canada has made considerable contribution to the exposure of the methods of the communists, and in that way, I think, to the combatting of communism. In the book to which I referred this passage will be found at page 273:

> The report of the "royal commission to investigate the facts relating to and the circumstances surrounding the communication, by public officials and other persons in position of trust of secret and confidential information to agents of a foreign power" was published in Ottawa on June 27, 1946. It is the most thorough official document relating to communist activities to appear since the announcement of the comintern's dissolution. The report and the testimony of Igor Gouzenko suggest that communist parties elsewhere may be employed for similar purposes.

The steps that were taken, which in my judgment were necessary, even though they were extraordinary, if those who were guilty were to be convicted, were strongly criticized. They were strongly criticized in this house and I could refer to the debates, but I should like to say this. I think my predecessor as minister of justice, the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. St. Laurent), is to be complimented upon the courageous and competent way in which he made provision for that extraordinary situation, because we rendered this country a great service by bringing out these facts. No other country did a thing of a similar kind and, as the situation is developing, we have rendered the country and the world a great service by the steps which the Secretary of State for External Affairs took on that occasion.

Mr. GREEN: May I ask the minister a question? Does he consider that the laws of the country as they stand at present are sufficient to enable the government to deal with the menace of communism within Canada?

Mr. ILSLEY: Well, the question as to whether there should be any amendments is a difficult problem. I do not know that I should like to deliver a final judgment on that and give it as a final opinion. If the hon. member has any specific change in mind—

Mr. GREEN: No. I am asking this question. Does the minister consider that our present laws are sufficient to enable us to deal with the situation?

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not know that I should like to answer that question finally. So far as criminal prosecutions are concerned, the sedition sections are the only ones I know about. But communism can be combatted in other ways than by criminal proceedings, and it is a great question as to how far one should go along criminal lines in assessing a man's beliefs and subjecting him to criminal penalties for reasons of that kind.

Mr. A. L. SMITH (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I feel I must say something about this problem, particularly since I have seconded the motion before the house. I have enjoyed very much the discussion to which I have listened this afternoon. Like the Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley), I think perhaps politics might have been left out of it, but that, of course, was begun by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King).

My general criticism of the discussion is this. To me it sounded somewhat like a discussion between academicians rather than a discussion by people who have a real problem to deal with at the present time.

Let us take one aspect, and I refer to paragraph (d) of the motion. That is the one dealing with infiltration into labour unions, the effecting of disorganization of peaceful relations, and disorganization of the production of industry both in peace and in the event of war.

How serious is this? I go to the Pacific coast. There we have two large labour organizations, and, practically speaking, only two. They are the people engaged in logging, the people engaged in mill and mine, and the smelter workers. The first one is headed by a man by the name of Pritchett. He frankly admits he is a communist. He is an officer of that organization and of the communist organization. The other is headed by a man named Harvey Murphy. At least, that is the name he goes by. I know him personally; I do not know Mr. Pritchett. So we find there that the chief officers of these two major organizations are avowed communists, and they make no bones at all about it.

I am going to say this about the city in which I live. There we have what is known as the trades and labour council, which is a central body having to do with all labour organizations in that city. On that executive are some splendid men, one named Gordon Cushing, who is secretary and who is also an alderman in the city of Calgary, elected a short time ago. No finer man exists. As vice-president we have a man named Longworth, an avowed communist, his wife being secretary of one of the unions; and the assistant secretary of the trades and labour council, a man named Yore Daniels, admits that he belongs to that organization.

Here in central Canada, take your electrical workers and you will find that the Canadian boss is a man named Jackson, who was interned during the war and released after the attack upon Russia. I want to be realistic about this. I want to make it plain that I am not suggesting for a moment that the individuals in these organizations are, by and large, communists. They are not. But we have these people who have risen to these positions of authority and who, from these positions, are constantly promoting disorganization in industry and will continue to do so unless something stronger is done about the matter than we have done up to the present time.

It is not my business; it is not within my province to tell this government what it should do, but I am going to point out one thing to the Minister of Justice and I am sure he will agree with it. It is this. I suggest that anybody in Canada, if he is a Canadian citizen, who avows a higher loyalty to some other country shall immediately lose that Canadian citizenship, I say, further, with respect to those persons who came from elsewhere and who have now accepted Canadian citizenship, that if they profess a higher loyalty to some country other than Canada, then—and we have the legislative competence to do this—such persons should not only lose their Canadian citizenship but be deported to the countries from which they came. Let them there carry on their activities, which were largely taught them there.

Everybody who reads knows of a school in Moscow with a constant enrolment, a revolving enrolment of 10,000 people who are being taught today. Today we have in this country men like Buck. His name has been mentioned half a dozen times. He is a revolutionist and nothing else. Yet he is permitted to go around, in the name of freedom of speech. I give way to no one as a supporter of freedom of speech and freedom of assembly. But this country has recently been at war. We then gave up certain privileges of citizenship because it was for the good of the whole body politic, the whole people of this country. I say it is straining the phrase "freedom of speech" to allow people to go around advocating the overthrow of the institutions of this country by other than democratic means. That is not freedom of speech; that is license. I think it is criminal now under the appropriate section of the criminal code with respect to sedition. But if we can strengthen our position in that way, I think we should do so. I realize the difficulty of getting into people's minds, as was pointed out by the Minister of Justice. I appreciate that difficulty fully. But when this thing is going on, as it has been going on, we should be in a position to treat these people for what they are; we should be able to treat them, not as politicians but as criminals; because that is what they are. I go farther and say this. Here we have the communist party now named the Labour Progressive party. They admit that. I am not making any accusations that have not been frankly admitted by these people themselves. I think it is about time that we, whether Social Credit, C.C.F., Liberals or Progressive Conservatives, ceased to regard them as a political party and started to regard them as a subversive outfit of some sort, which is really what they are. There is no question about that.

For example, I have here a letter which to me is offensive in appearance. It is signed by William Kashtan, administrative secretary of the Labour Progressive party. It is dated March 15. I shall not go into its contents to any extent. He wrote to me because I had asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. St. Laurent) about the barring of certain people coming into this country every day. He encloses a copy of a letter from Mr. Norman Robertson who is our commissioner in London, which is dated last November and in which he tells Mr. Pollitt that there is nothing in the Immigration Act which can possibly keep him home. I shall not bother about that. But I wish to comment on the nerve of anybody who would have a letterhead like that, with a red top and bottom. That is not accidental. That is the red flag being waved right in our faces. I have not answered that letter; and, needless to say, I do not intend to do so. Where do we go from here?

I agree with all the things that are said to the effect that we must show people that this is a better system than the one which they are being propagandized about. Even these displaced persons who have come over here recently are getting it up in the woods, as the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) has said. We know this is spreading all over. What is the position and what must, it seems to me, be the position of every member of this House of Commons? It is to say to the government in the language which, I think, was so well used by my leader—and I take a little bit of credit for the fact that he showed it to me before we came into the House of Commons—as follows:

> This party is in favour of, and will give its wholehearted support to, the government's taking every step possible within its legislative competence to halt the march of communism in this country.

Surely that must be the attitude of every member in this house; that is, if we believe the danger of communism is real. How many hon. members in this house who went home last week end did not have someone speak to him about this business of communism? I doubt if there is a single man who went home who did not have that brought up to him. It is not enough to say that our country is a democratic country. I think it is. I do not think there is any question about that at all. Perhaps some of us have been failing in not making that sufficiently known. It seems to me that is one job which politicians have in their home constituencies. But we as individuals can never catch up with the lying propaganda which is being circulated. Those who know anything about the laws of libel know that, no matter how many apologies are published in the newspaper, they will never catch up with the libel and, so to speak, write it off. So this thing is going on at the present time. I want to give the Minister of Justice credit for something he said a moment ago. Having been many years ago in the business of prosecuting people of this type, I realize fully that the minister in his position, cannot give us all the facts. To do so, of course, would immediately give warning about certain individuals and perhaps ruin all the efforts which are now being made by the authorities to keep up with this thing and stamp it out. I realize that fully. But I say our laws should be simplified and made much plainer, so that our mounted police—if that be the body which is used; and I do not know whether or not it is—whoever the enforcement authorities may be, may act accordingly. The laws should be simplified and made much plainer, so that people bearing allegiance to another country may be convicted of that offence and also may be convicted much more simply of propagating this propaganda of which I am speaking.

I have here an editorial which is illuminating. It was in a local paper. I want to assure the members of the C.C.F. party, who no doubt have read it, that I accept in its entirety the statement made by the leader of that party to the effect that he is not permitting and will never permit the communists to associate with his party. I accept that statement in its entirety, but I read this editorial because it is of interest. It is headed "A kiss of death." I shall not read the first part, inasmuch as I obtained this for the purpose of reading a statement made by this man Buck, who said as follows:

> If we want to find a lever to move politics in Canada, then we have to admit that the way to get them into motion is along that channel —the C.C.F.
>
> . . . We are not here proposing a propaganda campaign. We are proposing to elect the C.C.F. and to elect the C.C.F. we will have to do those things which will elect their candidates. There will be plenty of constituencies where they will red-bait, and we will have to just volunteer to canvass for them, be election workers and mobilize that section of the labour movement which is under our leadership; because what we need most of all this year . . . is a C.C.F. victory.
>
> . . . If we elect a C.C.F. government in Ottawa it is quite obvious that the whole perspective for Canada will be changed. Certainly then our road ahead will be through the social democratic regime.
> . . . After we have elected a C.C.F. government and are faced with the question of how to work further to develop socialist consciousness in the majority of the working class, we can truly say that the party that did this is a Marxist party, the party of socialist Canada.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, I am not suggesting that anyone in the C.C.F. has made any such arrangement or has approved anything of the kind.

Mr. THATCHER: We do not want their support at all.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I agree, and I am trying to say just that. I believe every word the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) said in connection with it, and I cannot go farther than that. I read that, however, because I think it was the seventh strategy in Ebon's book, which the Minister of Justice just read. This is not an open thing. The communist party is not seeking great numbers of members. I do not know how many in this house took time, I think it was two years ago, to read what, I believe, is easily the finest thing in short form I have ever read on this question. It was a pamphlet of eight or ten pages written by an economist named Jackson, whom I do not know but who at one time was a professor at the University of Toronto.

Mr. MITCHELL: Gilbert Jackson.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): That is the name, but I do not know much about him. He was speaking at a meeting of insurance companies in Chicago, and the subject of his address was, "Let us celebrate the first one hundred years of Karl Marx," which end this year, 1948. He said something which interested me very much; it was that their scheme is not to seek great numbers but to have a hard core of highly disciplined people, along with the hangers on, the fellow travellers and that sort of thing on the outside. That is why, as the Minister of Justice indicated in his quotation from Ebon a moment ago, they first want to get hold of the department of the interior, because in European countries that department usually has charge of the state police.

We saw it happen the other day. The pattern is not new. We have watched it march across western Europe. We have bragged—and I use the word respectfully—about the position we have reached in connection with trade. Speaking in this house last year, the then Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. MacKinnon) told us that we were now the third of the big three in international trade. I am sorry the Minister of Justice mentioned these gifts and unpaid loans a moment ago. I do not want to be political, but I remember that the then Minister of Trade and Commerce told us how wonderful our trade was, and then the other day the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) came along and told us we were not going to get paid for it anyway. But we shall leave that out of the picture and let the two ministers reconcile those statements. However, I do say we have achieved a position in world trade, and along with that must go, cannot fail to go, leadership in world affairs.

What is the right thing at the moment? The right thing at this moment is the elections in Italy, which are to take place very soon. When you find His Holiness the Pope for the first time from that high office asking people to vote a certain way, I for one conclude that things there are very serious indeed when he has broken precedent in that way. Do not misunderstand me; I am glad he made the statement, but things must have come to a pretty sad pass over there. If Italy goes, there go Greece and Turkey, outflanked; and bordering as Italy does on France, what is the situation there? In the northern countries, Sweden and the others, they are worrying today. They see Finland going, and the Scandinavian countries think probably they are next.

My thought is this. Here we have Canada, successful in trade, ever growing, with a happy and contented population. If we could have sent from this Canadian House of Commons a message to those beleaguered countries—because they are beleaguered, just as though rows of swords were around them and cannon were pointing at them—saying, "We will stand by you; we will clean our own house as an example of what may be done in a free, democratic country", then indeed would we have done something real for world stability and world peace.

Mr. DANIEL McIVOR (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I do not know how long you will give me, but I think I can take five minutes. My first words are of congratulation to the men who have occupied the position of Minister of Justice of Canada. As I listened to the minister today I felt that the government of this country, as far as legislation and enforcement are concerned, is in fine hands.

Any man who is elected as a member of this house to represent a constituency should have the cure for anything which may tend to destroy our Canadian civilization. I would say that you, Mr. Speaker, give us that cure every day during the prayer, when you say, "They Kingdom come". The reason I do not support communism is that it leaves God out; and any nation or any movement that leaves God out is sure to come to naught. Look at Germany today. Where is she, and why? Because she crucified those who believed in God and drove out those who believed in the Christian faith. I know this is true. I spoke to a young man whom I knew to be a communist, because I think we should speak to them personally. I said, "What church do you go to?" He replied, "I have no use for that —" and I am not going to give it the name he used. He had hold of a little man by the hand. In sheer pity I said to him, "If ever you need a friend, and you will need one before you are through, I hope you will find him in me". Today that young man is in northern Ontario as an organizer for that which the Windsor Star is hitting so hard; and I join with the hon. member who commended that newspaper on the work it is trying to do.

Throughout the length and breadth of Canada we have churches, Protestant and Roman Catholic, which have the cure for communism. That cure can be heard any Sunday. Oh, I do not mean by singing hymns, saying prayers, giving in the collection or sermonizing. It is the principle that is practised every day. If that principle is practised every day it will do what the great St. Patrick did for Ireland; it will revolutionize the country and send its missionaries across to convert Scotland into the bargain.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Tomorrow we shall follow the program that had been set for today. First will be the Transitional Measures Act of the Minister of Justice; next, wheat; third, the Minister of Finance dealing with the excise taxes. Possibly tomorrow we might answer the questions that have been passed over today.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, March 18, 1948

The house met at three o'clock.

POSTAL SERVICE

MAIL CONTRACTS—SUPPLEMENTAL PAYMENTS ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. ERNEST BERTRAND (Postmaster General) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to amend the Supplemental Payments Act to provide that no supplemental payments shall be authorized under the act after the thirty-first day of March, 1949.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

HONG KONG

REFERENCE OF DOCUMENTS TO JOINT COMMITTEE ON PRINTING

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That the documents tabled on March 10, 1948, relating to the inquiry made pursuant to order in council P.C. 1160, of February 12, 1942, into the dispatch of the Canadian expeditionary force to the crown colony of Hong Kong, be referred to the joint committee on printing for report under standing order 64.

Motion agreed to.

WARTIME HOUSING—EAST YORK TOWNSHIP

Mr. McGREGOR:

1. Does the amount of $6,338.91, as shown in sessional paper 38P of July 9, 1947 (question 10), include the cost of services from street line to house for water, sewer and sidewalk for all of the 197 houses built in East York township, county of York, by Wartime Housing Limited?

2. What money has been spent on this project since July 9, 1947?

3. What is the present administrative cost per month on this project?

Mr. McILRAITH:

1. No. In addition to the $16,388.91* there have been additional expenditures of $2,558.58 on account of these items bringing the total cost for all 197 houses to $18,947.49.

2. $24,847.20 made up as follows:

Sewer and water services, etc., as above answer to question No. 1	$ 2,558 58
Grading and landscaping	7,531 34
Building contract	14,757 28
Total	$24,847 20

3. This is one of several projects administered by the Toronto district rental office of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. No separate cost accounting system is maintained with respect to administrative costs of individual projects under any one rental office.

*See supplementary return, sessional paper 98C of March 9, 1948. This amount should read $16,388.91, instead of $6,388.91.

POSTAL SERVICE—LOSS IN HANDLING NEWSPAPERS

Mr. NICHOLSON:

What has been the estimated loss for each of the past five years sustained by the Post Office Department as a result of handling newspapers?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): It is not possible to give the estimated loss for each year as during the war years statistics were not taken which would provide the information desired. Based on cost ascertainment figures for the fiscal year ended 31st March 1947, however, it is estimated that the loss sustained by the post office department in handling newspapers and periodicals mailed by publishers is approximately $7,200,000 per annum.

WARTIME HOUSING

Mr. McGREGOR:

1. How many houses have been constructed by Wartime Housing Limited to December 31, 1947?

2. Of these how many are (a) four rooms; (b) five rooms; (c) six rooms; (d) more than six rooms?

3. What was the total cost of all these houses?

4. What was the average overall cost of the (a) four-room houses; (b) five-room houses; (c) six-room houses; (d) more than six-room houses?

5. Did the average overall cost of these houses include the cost of administration?

6. What was the total cost of the administration of Wartime Housing Limited including architects' fees, to December 31, 1947?

Mr. McILRAITH:

1. Number of houses built by Wartime Housing Limited to 31st December, 1947, is 30,841. Houses purchased in the process of land acquisition and which were remodelled for occupancy, 294.

At December 31, 1947, there are under construction or under contract but not completed, 5,354.

2. Of these 30,841 houses completed as of December 31, 1947

(a) four-room houses	17,116
(b) five-room houses	6,370
(c) six-room houses	7,340
(d) over six-room houses	nil
special types built for veterans under special contracts	15
Total	30,841

3. Total cost of all houses completed and under construction to 31st December, 1947, is $123,055,595.49.

4. As building costs vary considerably in different localities and from year to year, no records have been maintained as to average costs of any type of house. Definite costs can be established for any type of house, at any location.

5. If available, average over-all cost would only include charges strictly applicable to construction.

6. The administration of Wartime Housing Limited ceased as at 31st December, 1946. On January 2, 1947, the administration passed to the management of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

At 31st December, 1946, the total cost of administration of all wartime housing properties including operation of houses, staff houses and commissionaries, maintenance, community service, head office expenses, architects' fees, legal expenses and all other expenses was $20,640,569.15.

SUGAR BEETS—PRICE TO CANADIAN PRODUCER

Mr. DIEFENBAKER:

Why does the Canadian sugar beet producer not receive a price equal to that paid on purchases made by the government sugar agency to cane growers in British West Indies, Cuba, Fiji and Santo Domingo?

Mr. BELZILE: The British Ministry of Food acts as agent for the Canadian sugar administration in purchases of cane sugar from abroad. These purchases are made from time to time, in consultation with the Canadian authority, whenever, in the judgment of the buyer, prices are considered to be favourable. While the laid down cost of supplies for delivery in 1948 cannot yet be determined, depending as it does upon such variable factors as shipping costs, the average may exceed the existing ceiling price by a small amount. Since these purchases were made, however, the price of sugar on world markets has declined so that the Canadian ceiling does not depress domestic prices below the prices at which cane sugar could be laid down in Canada at the present time.

POST OFFICE BUILDINGS

Mr. BOIVIN:

1. Has the government of Canada built any new post offices since 1940?

2. Has the said government made any additions to existing post offices?

3. If so, in what localities?

PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE—SASKATCHEWAN AND ALBERTA

Mr. McKAY:

1. How many government employees are required to administer the Prairie Farm Assistance Act in (a) Canada; (b) Saskatchewan; (c) Alberta?

2. What have been the administrative costs of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act for each of the years 1945, 1946, 1947?

3. What has been the expenditure under the act in (a) Canada; (b) Saskatchewan; (c) Alberta, in each of the years 1945, 1946, 1947?

Mr. GARDINER:

(The Prairie Farm Assistance Act is applicable only to the three prairie provinces and the Peace River block in British Columbia.)

For 1947-48:

1. (a) 411; (b) 249; (c) 117.

2. 1945-46 (fiscal year), $357,529.94; 1946-47 (fiscal year) $332,494.91; 1947-48 (April 1/47-Feb. 24/48) $422,552.46.

A. V. ROE CANADA LIMITED—GRANTS OR SUBSIDIES

Mr. MacINNIS:

1. Does the A. V. Roe, Canada Limited receive a money grant or subsidy from the federal government?

2. If so, for what purpose?

3. In determining the amount of the grant or subsidy, was any amount included for wage increases?

4. In making the grant, did the government stipulate that there would be no wage increases at A. V. Roe, Canada Limited this year?

Mr. McILRAITH:

1. No; however, by the terms of an agreement entered into in accordance with order in council P.C. 4436, dated October 31, 1947, the government agreed to contribute toward the cost of design, development and construction of two prototype model C-102 (jet) transport aircraft. Upon completion by A. V. Roe Canada Limited of the two prototype aircraft, the government may take delivery thereof upon payment to the contractor of all reasonable and proper costs incurred in such construction, in excess of contributions made.

2. See 1 above.

3. No. Contributions are made on the basis of a percentage of the company's overall expenditures on the project.

4. The company's labour costs under the contract are governed by labour conditions attached to and forming part thereof, which stipulate that the contractor shall pay "such wages as are generally accepted as current from time to time during the continuance of the contract for competent workmen in the district".

INCOME TAX—NATIONAL CHARITIES DEDUCTIBLE

Mr. DIEFENBAKER:

What major national charities are considered as deductible from income for income tax purposes?

Mr. WINTERS: There is no master list presently available of the numerous charitable organizations in Canada. Each income tax district has its own which is constantly changing since some of the organizations recognized are purely temporary. It is practically impossible to compile or keep up to date a list of the charitable organizations to which donations are deductible under the terms and provisions of subsections (1)(j) and (1)(jj) of section (5) of the Income War Tax Act. The following national organizations appear amongst the major charities recognized under this section:

1. Canadian Red Cross Society.
2. Canadian Paraplegic Association.
3. The Canadian Legion of the British Empire Service League.
4. Canadian Appeal for Children; United Nations Appeal for Children.
5. War Amputations of Canada.
6. Canadian National Institute for the Blind.
7. Victorian Order of Nurses.
8. Canadian Tuberculosis Association.
9. Salvation Army.
10. Boy Scouts Association.

Religious institutions, public hospitals, schools and universities.

It might be stated that in general exemptions extend and apply to all donations made to organizations in Canada whose sole objects and purposes are the relief of poverty or the advancement of religion or education.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE MARRIAGE OF THEIR MAJESTIES

Mr. CHURCH:

1. Will the government give consideration to passing a resolution of both houses of parliament and a presentation, congratulating the king and queen on the attainment of their silver anniversary on the twenty-fifth year of their marriage, on April 26 next?

2. Will a proclamation be issued as to it by the government asking for some notice of it throughout Canada?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Both these matters are receiving consideration.

HEALTH EDUCATION CONFERENCE

Mr. GOURD (Chapleau):

1. On what date or dates was the last health education conference held in Ottawa, and by whom was it convened?

2. Will other conferences be held?

Mr. MAYBANK:

1. The second dominion-provincial health education conference was held in Ottawa on March 3-5, 1948. It was convened by the Minister of National Health and Welfare on the recommendation of the Dominion Council of Health.

2. The Dominion Council of Health has recommended that such conferences be held annually.

FRENCH CANADIANS IN THE CIVIL SERVICE

Mr. GAGNON:

1. Since 1945, has the government entrusted some members of this house with an inquiry into the position of French Canadians in the civil service, both as to their number and their rank?

2. If so, what are the names of the said members?

3. Has a report of their activities been submitted to the government?

4. If not, for what reason?

5. If so, when will such report be published?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING:

1. Yes.

2. Honourable Joseph Jean.

3. Oral reports to cabinet from time to time.

4. See No. 3.

5. No decision taken by the cabinet yet.

NARCOTIC DRUGS—PROSECUTIONS

Mr. NIXON:

How many narcotic cases, under the jurisdiction of the Department of National Health and Welfare are now before the Canadian courts?

Mr. MAYBANK: There are usually about sixty to seventy narcotic cases before the Canadian courts. Many of these go to assizes or for speedy trial before a county court judge. A considerable number reach the courts of appeal and on occasion one or two go to the Supreme Court of Canada. One especially valuable privilege accorded the division of narcotic control by the Department of Justice is that narcotic cases at Halifax, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Calgary, Edmonton and Vancouver are conducted by specially authorized senior counsel. In order that they may be completely familiar with all aspects of the narcotic work such counsel are kept fully advised by the division of narcotic control of changing conditions, new regulations, etc.

WAR ASSETS—MEDICAL EQUIPMENT AND SUPPLIES

Mr. FRASER:

1. Has the war assets corporation any medical equipment, or medical supplies, stored in Canada?

2. If so (a) are these supplies and equipment to be offered to the profession; (b) where are these supplies and equipment stored; (c) what is the value of same?

Mr. McILRAITH:

1. Yes.

2. (a) No, medical equipment and supplies are not offered to the profession but are offered through the medical supplies and equipment trade channels.

(b) In varying amounts in practically all War Assets Corporation warehouses in Canada.

(c) The value of this medical equipment or supplies is indeterminate, inasmuch as it is disposed of on a bid basis.

INCOME TAX—FARMERS

Mr. BENTLEY:

1. By provinces how many farmers filed income tax returns in the years 1945, 1946 and 1947?

2. By provinces, how many farmers paid income tax in the years 1945, 1946 and 1947?

3. By provinces, what were the total amounts of income taxes paid by farmers?

4. By provinces, how many farmers were investigated by officers of the income tax division?

Mr. WINTERS:

1. Province	Fiscal years 1944-45	1945-46	1946-47
Prince Edward Island	489	624	1,322

IMMIGRATION—CHILDREN OF CHINESE DOMICILED IN CANADA

Mr. SHAW:

Are foster children of Chinese Canadians domiciled in Canada, regarded as admissible persons under the Immigration Act?

Mr. McILRAITH: No.

HEALTH AND WELFARE—LABORATORY OF HYGIENE

Mr. BLACK (Chateauguay-Huntingdon):

Is there any duplication of work carried out by the laboratory of hygiene as compared with the work carried out by provincial public health laboratories?

Mr. MAYBANK: No. The laboratory of hygiene provides special service to the provincial laboratories. The provincial laboratories conduct certain routine diagnostic tests on specimens which, though primarily a responsibility of the federal government, would be difficult if not impossible to ship to the laboratory of hygiene.

RAILWAY FREIGHT RATES—ONTARIO AND QUEBEC

Mr. BOIVIN:

1. What are the freight rates on the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific Railways, between Ottawa and Toronto, Ottawa and Quebec, Ottawa and Timiskaming, Ottawa and Muskoka?

2. What is the distance, in miles, between Ottawa and the four other cities on each of these railways, respectively?

Mr. CHEVRIER:

HEALTH AND WELFARE—CHILDREN AND MOTHERS —FILMS FOR EDUCATIONAL PURPOSES

Mr. STUART (Charlotte):

What films, or film strips, have been released for educational work and for child and maternal health in the Department of National Health and Welfare?

Mr. MAYBANK: The following health education films and filmstrips, having a bearing on child and maternal health, have been prepared for the Department of National Health and Welfare by the national film board of Canada:

Films:

"Mother and Her Child"—based on the book "The Canadian Mother and Child" covers both the prenatal and postnatal phases and the care and development of the child up to one year of age.

"Know Your Baby"—illustrates proved methods of psychological care of the new-born infant.

"The Feeling of Rejection"—the first of a proposed series of films on mental mechanisms, designed to illustrate the development of personality factors which often lead to emotional difficulties and physical distress.

"Small Fry"—illustrates the provisions being made for the welfare of Canada's children, pointing out improvements in education, diet and environment.

"Something to Chew On"—a film for parents showing the correct method of caring for children's teeth.

"Stanley Takes a Trip"—shows in entertaining cartoon fashion the foods required by a normal growing boy.

Filmstrips:

"Nine to Get Ready"—covers the essential points in prenatal care to ensure the best possible start in life for babies.

"Introducing Baby"—gives detailed information on the care of mother and child from the time the baby is born until the weaning period.

"Internal Triangle"—a cartoon filmstrip describing the adventures of two teen-age girls with Canada's food rules.

"Peppo"—demonstrates how a family can spend the family allowance wisely to provide healthy diet essential to growing children.

"Rural School Lunches"—a filmstrip providing practical suggestions for the use of teachers and mothers of rural school children.

In addition the following films and filmstrips are being completed and will be released shortly:

"Invisible Armour"—a film on immunization —which will show the general principles of immunization and the need for proper protection in the first year and pre-school age, and will point out the responsibility of the individual in protecting not only his own family but the community as a whole;

A film on feeding problems, for parents of pre-school children;

"Why We Eat"—a series of filmstrips, which will cover the general aspects of nutrition and deal specifically with each one of the food groups—vegetables, milk, fruits, cereals and bread, and meats.

HEALTH AND WELFARE—CIVIL SERVICE HEALTH DIVISION

Mr. BRUNELLE:

1. What are the objects of the civil service health division, Department of National Health and Welfare?

2. To what extent have such objects been carried out in the development of the said division, up to the present?

Mr. MAYBANK:

1. The prevention and control of disease among government employees; the provision of an advisory and diagnostic service to individual employees as well as to government departments; and the provision of emergency medical and surgical care.

2. In so far as the civil service population of Ottawa is concerned the division is now organized and equipped by virtue of its health centre and health units to carry out the three primary objectives referred to in answer 1 above. Pending the establishment of branch centres in cities where large concentrations of civil servants are employed, these objectives have not as yet been achieved.

HEALTH AND WELFARE—VENEREAL DISEASE CONTROL

Mr. BRADETTE:

What steps have been taken by the venereal disease control division, Department of National Health and Welfare, to assist provinces in educating the public?

Mr. MAYBANK:

1. Early in 1947 the federal division of venereal disease control purchased 22 automatic filmstrip projectors at a cost of approximately $75 each. These were distributed to the provinces for display purposes. A general venereal disease educational filmstrip titled: "Protection Against V.D." was prepared in both English and French by the division and distributed among the provinces for use in the projectors. At present, two further filmstrips, one on syphilis and one on gonorrhoea, are in process of preparation. These are being designed along general public educational lines and will be in colour.

[Mr. Maybank.]

2. A booklet (3,000 copies) dealing with the use of "Bal" as an anti-arsenical drug was prepared and distributed to the members of the medical profession.

3. 15,000 blotters titled: "Break the Chain of Infection" were produced for distribution among members of the medical profession. This blotter stressed the importance of reporting contacts.

4. 10,000 reprints of an article in Maclean's magazine by Michael Gardiner titled: "Our shameful V.D. record" were purchased and distributed to the provinces.

5. 5,000 reprints of an article in the Canadian Home Journal by H. Cecil Rhodes titled: "What's the score on V.D.?" were purchased and distributed to the provinces.

6. 10,000 reprints of the article in the Nursing Journal by Pearl Stiver titled, "They, too, are our patients", were purchased and distributed.

7. The venereal disease platform presentation chart, for use by lecturers, was produced and distributed to the provinces. Nearly a thousand of these were printed, in both English and French, durably bound, each consisting of 30 individual coloured charts, 18″ x 30″.

8. Now being printed is a 65-page book titled: "Venereal disease—what you should know" which will have a dual function. It will serve as a guide for those using the V.D. platform presentation charts, and will be used as a comprehensive informational brochure for general lay education on the subject of V.D. The book carries a reproduction of the 30 charts on the lefthand pages with explanatory textual material on the opposite page. The initial printing order is for 12,000 English and 3,000 French copies.

9. Now being printed is a series of six blotters dealing with various aspects of venereal disease educational material for lay distribution. These blotters are multicoloured and artistically designed to convey information with pictorial effectiveness. Each is aimed at a specific group: e.g., those contemplating marriage, teen-agers, expectant mothers, etc. The initial order is for 300,000 to be distributed to the provinces for use in their venereal disease control program.

10. Approximately 6,000 venereal disease posters, for public display purposes, have been distributed to the provinces. These stress the importance of early treatment and pre-natal tests, warn against promiscuity, point out the dangers of neglect, etc.

11. Miscellaneous pieces of venereal disease literature running into many thousands of copies (in addition to the particular projects listed above) were distributed through the department's information services division.

12. Many thousand textbooks, pamphlets, etc. were obtained for the provinces directly from publishers by the federal division of venereal disease control.

Note 1: The above covers 1947 only. Two films "16 to 22" and "Very Dangerous" were adapted for general distribution in 1946.

Note 2: Most of the material produced for the provinces is sent out stamped with the provincial V.D. control department imprints, advising the public where they may obtain further information and advice.

PROVINCE OF QUEBEC ACT RESPECTING COMMUNISTIC PROPAGANDA

Mr. BENTLEY:

1. Has the government taken any action towards submitting the Quebec padlock law to the Supreme Court of Canada?

2. If not, will some action be taken in the near future?

Mr. ILSLEY:

1. No action has been taken by the government towards submitting to the Supreme Court of Canada the "Act respecting Communistic Propaganda" enacted by the legislature of Quebec in 1937.

2. No action is contemplated at this time.

BLINDNESS—RESTORATION OF SIGHT BY MEDICAL METHODS

Mr. TREMBLAY:

1. To what extent can the Department of National Health and Welfare control blindness?

2. Is the said department taking any steps to inform the public that medical methods can restore adequate sight to a considerable number of blind persons?

Mr. MAYBANK:

1. Under the British North America Act responsibility in health matters is mainly that of the provincial and local governments, with the exception of the care of members of the armed services, veterans (under certain circumstances), Indians and Eskimos, immigrants upon their first arrival in Canada, and lepers. The Department of National Health and Welfare does not issue regulations designed to control and prevent blindness and the department cannot at present control blindness except by means of an educational campaign designed to inform the public of the causes and treatment of blindness and the medical means which can be taken to control and prevent blindness.

2. The department informs the public by radio, by films and by various publications of methods to be used in the prevention and treatment of eye trouble and blindness.

The blindness control division has prepared two booklets, "Save Your Eyes" and "Eyestrain, its cause and treatment". These are being widely distributed through the provinces in French and English. The blindness control division shared in the cost of two educational films concerning the eyes. These are being shown on the national film board circuits and they have attracted large and appreciative audiences. The latest film had been seen by 121,629 persons by September, 1947. The blindness control division also supplied the minister with medical information which he incorporated in a radio address given on September 13, 1947, entitled "Clear vision for Canadians".

The blindness control division is engaged in research into the causes of blindness and its prevention and in the preparation of further publications of general interest to the public on eye conditions. A booklet is now in course of preparation, for free distribution, on the subject of preventable blindness.

The blindness control division is keeping in touch with the methods used in the control and treatment of blindness in other countries.

Funds have been voted by the dominion government to be used on a 75-25 per cent basis, in agreement with the provinces, to conduct a treatment scheme to determine whether an appreciable number of blind can be removed from the pension rolls by operation and medical treatment. This project has been endorsed twice by the deputy ministers of health as members of the dominion council of health. To date only the province of New Brunswick has passed an order in council providing for participation in this scheme, although lists of suitable cases are in the hands of the other provincial authorities.

Mr. CHURCH:

1. What provision has been made by the government for the proper observance of Good Friday, March 26 next?
2. What is the program of the C.B.C. and government radio stations for such a day as this, and what is their policy to be accordingly?

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): Return tabled.

[Mr. Maybank.]

TORONTO HARBOUR COMMISSION

Mr. CHURCH:

1. What sums of money have been voted for Toronto harbour, by years from 1935 to 1947 inclusive?
2. What moneys do the Toronto harbour commission spend there (a) federal money; (b) civic (harbour) money?

BARLEY

Mr. ZAPLITNY:

1. In the year 1947, how many bushels of barley were shipped from western Canada to the eastern provinces on which freight from the lakehead east was paid by the Canadian government?
2. How many bushels of this quantity were malting barley?
3. How many bushels of this malting barley were received by breweries in eastern Canada?
4. Was the freight on this barley paid by the government from the lakehead east?

DOLLAR-A-YEAR MEN EMPLOYED DURING THE WAR

Mr. HANSELL:

How many dollar-a-year men were employed by the government during the war years and how many of these men were paid their salaries of $1 per year as such irrespective of expenses in carrying out their duties?

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Mr. DANIEL:

1. How many divisions are there of the Department of External Affairs?
2. What are the responsibilities and functions of each such division?
3. Who is the chief of each such division?
4. What is the salary of each such chief?
5. How many employees are there in each such division?
6. What is the total annual payroll of each such division?

Mr. HARRIS (Grey-Bruce): Return tabled.

CIVIL SERVICE—APPOINTMENTS WITHOUT EXAMINATION—SALARY INCREASES

Mr. DORION:

1. How many civil servants were appointed by order in council during the year 1947, without being compelled to pass a civil service examination?
2. How many civil servants have been given a salary increase by order in council during the year 1947?
3. How many of such employees are being paid a remuneration of (a) more than $10,000 a year; (b) $8,000 to $10,000 a year; (c) $6,000 to $8,000 a year; (d) $4,000 to $6,000 a year; (e) $2,000 to $4,000 a year; (f) of less than $2,000 a year?

SUBSIDIES, SUBVENTIONS AND DRAWBACKS

Mr. ARGUE:

1. On what commodities and services were subsidies, subventions, or drawbacks, paid in 1947?

2. What was the value of each?

3. What companies, if any, received payments in excess of $50,000, and what amount was paid to each of those companies?

LOSSES IN MARKETING OF WHEAT—FREIGHT ASSISTANCE ON GRAIN

Mr. WINKLER:

1. By years, since 1935, what losses incurred in marketing of wheat have been paid out of the federal treasury?

2. By years, since 1935, what amount has been paid in freight assistance on grain in Canada?

CARBERRY, MAN., AIRPORT

Mr. LENNARD:

1. Are there any goods stored at the airport at Carberry, Manitoba?

2. If so, what goods and what amount?

3. Have any of such been declared surplus?

4. If not, when will they be so declared?

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): Return tabled.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

MINISTERS OF THE CROWN—TRAVELLING EXPENSES

Mr. HODGSON:

For a statement showing the total amount of travelling expenses paid to each minister of the crown, his private secretary, assistant private secretary or any official attached to the personal staff of such minister during the fiscal years ended March 31, 1946 and 1947?

IMMIGRATION—REFUGEE DOCTORS

Mr. SHAW:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, and other documents exchanged between the immigration branch, Department of Mines and Resources, and any official thereof, and the Canadian medical association, medical licensing bodies, or any official thereof, since January 1, 1945, respecting (a) the admission to Canada of refugee doctors; (b) certification of refugee doctors who enter Canada under classification other than medical?

INCOME TAX

FARMERS—NET WORTH PORTION OF RETURN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. W. BURTON (Humboldt): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of National Revenue. Has he recently received a communication from the United Farmers of Canada, Saskatchewan section, protesting the net worth statement of the new income tax form? If so, what is the intention of the department in connection with this objectionable feature?

Hon. J. J. McCANN (Minister of National Revenue): At the moment I have no knowledge of having received a communication. As I said a day or two ago, a statement will be issued shortly with reference to the new income tax form.

WESTERN EUROPEAN UNION

INQUIRY AS TO PARTICIPATION OF CANADA, UNITED STATES, BRITISH COMMONWEALTH AND OTHER NATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GORDON GRAYDON (Peel): Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement made at the opening of the session yesterday by the Prime Minister relating to the treaty of mutual guarantee which was signed yesterday morning at Brussels, and which had to do with the governments of the United Kingdom, France, Belgium, the Netherlands and Luxembourg, is the Prime Minister at liberty to inform the house whether it is intended to extend the regional agreement to take in Canada, the United States, the British commonwealth, and other nations whose relationships are friendly?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I have no authoritative information that I can give to the house.

RAILWAYS

ACCIDENTS RESULTING FROM MOUNTAIN SLIDES NEAR KAMLOOPS, BRITISH COLUMBIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. D. FULTON (Kamloops): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport, notice of which I sent to him. Is the minister in a position to make a statement on investigations into the railway accidents which have recently occurred near Kamloops, B. C., and can he make a report as to what steps are being taken and what additional safety devices, if any, are being installed to reduce the danger of such accidents in future?

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport): The hon. gentleman refers, I take it, to accidents on railways caused by mountain slides in British Columbia in the vicinity of Kamloops during the past year—on the Canadian Pacific Railway near Chase, on the Canadian National Railways near Ashcroft, and also on the Canadian National Railways below Lytton.

The question is divided into two parts. First, what steps are being taken to install safety devices? The board of transport commissioners have under study the question of safety devices commonly known as "slide detector fences", with a view to ascertaining their practicability and efficiency. The director of engineering of the board is now in western Canada making further study of this problem. One of the railways has installed a short section of slide detector fence near Field, British Columbia, as a test.

The second part of the question is, are any available. The answer is given in the following terms. The equipment used in installations of this kind is equipment commonly used in railway signal protection. This equipment is available. There is no standard slide detector fence. The physical features of the ground at each location must be separately considered and a design made to meet each situation.

ANSWER TO QUESTION AS TO REFRIGERATOR CARS ON TRACK AT BORDEN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport): Perhaps I might answer a question which was asked on Monday by the hon. member for Kings (Mr. Grant). I have had the answer in my hand for two days but have not had an opportunity of giving it to the house. The question had to do with empty refrigerator cars which apparently were at Borden without motive power for their use. I find that on Tuesday the 16th—the report is dated that day—there were seventy-five refrigerator cars on hand at Borden which would be moved on that day. The general situation on Prince Edward Island is very good at the moment, as there is a total of 258 refrigerator cars on the island either being loaded or awaiting placement.

UNITED KINGDOM

QUESTION AS TO REDUCTION OF PURCHASES FROM NON-DOLLAR COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Finance, of which I gave him oral notice. It is based on an item in the Globe and Mail of this date, dated from London, Canadian Press, and the headline is: "Ask slash in United Kingdom buying from Canada." I read very briefly from the text:

Britain's purchases from non-dollar countries must be increased and her present rate of spending—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to indicate the basis on which the question is being asked.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): My question is this—

Mr. SPEAKER: I must ask the hon. member to abide by the rules.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): My question is this: Is this reference to the cutting down of British spending in Canada not a serious threat to a vital part of Canada's foreign trade? If so, what steps is the government taking to meet it?

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): I saw the Canadian Press dispatch referred to, appearing in the Montreal Gazette, and reporting a statement which appears to have been made by Mr. Strachey in a press conference in London yesterday. Replying to my hon. friend's question, as he knows, Great Britain is purchasing quantities of foodstuffs from Canada under contract, and I have no reason to believe that these contracts will not be carried out.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a supplementary question. Am I correct in thinking that the contracts to which he referred in his answer expire at the end of this month? If so, will he not agree that his answer was not an answer but a brushoff?

Mr. ABBOTT: My hon. friend is inaccurate in his understanding of the contracts. They do not expire at the end of this month.

FINANCIAL ARRANGEMENTS FOR PURCHASE OF AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. ARGUE (Wood Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the Prime Minister. In view of the reports in last night's press that the United Kingdom last week drew the final $9,000,000 of its $45,000,000 Canadian credit, will the Prime Minister indicate whether new financial arrangements are being made for the purchase of agricultural products for the balance of this month and for the next quarter?

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): The Prime Minister has asked me to answer the question. No new financial arrangements have been made. I have already answered the second part of the question in stating, in reply to the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario, that I had no reason to believe the United Kingdom will not carry out contracts which it has entered into for the purchase of food in this country. Concerning financial arrangements, it might be appropriate for me to indicate that Canada has extended already financial assistance greater than that of any other country to assist in the purchase of needed foodstuffs.

BEEF CATTLE—EMBARGO ON EXPORTS TO THE UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. EARL ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the statement appearing in the press this morning to the effect that Great Britain is likely to curtail exports from other than soft currency countries, will the minister consider lifting the embargo on beef cattle going into the United States?

Right Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): The Minister of Finance has already answered the first part of the question twice in the negative, so I do not think that it would be possible to answer the second part, basing the answer on the first part of the statement.

Mr. ROWE: In other words, a negative policy.

RADIO BROADCASTING

INTERFERENCE BY ELECTROTHERAPEUTIC EQUIPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. STANLEY KNOWLES (Winnipeg North Centre): May I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce? Has the government given consideration to the request of the Canadian hospital council for a change in the regulations respecting radio interference by electrotherapeutic equipment, for the reasons so well put on March 2 by the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Blair)? If so, what is the result of such consideration?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I received notice of this question just as I was coming into the house. I have not had time to obtain the answer, but I will give it tomorrow.

WHEAT BOARD ACT

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN FEDERAL GOVERNMENT AND PROVINCIAL PREMIERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. WILLIAM BRYCE (Selkirk): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Will the minister table the correspondence between the government and the provincial premiers regarding Bill No. 135, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, and particularly the questionnaire from the government of the province of Manitoba with respect to legislation on this matter?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): It has been the practice of this government not to table correspondence with a provincial government except with the permission of the provincial government duly obtained. I am sorry to say that the Saskatchewan government does not seem to follow that practice, since hon. gentlemen opposite have read to me a considerable file of correspondence released by the government of Saskatchewan. Notwithstanding that, the practice of the federal government will be continued.

Mr. COLDWELL: May I ask a supplementary question? Will the minister endeavour to secure permission from the provinces to table the correspondence?

Mr. HOWE: I received one letter from the Premier of Manitoba this morning. I noticed it in going through my mail. I have not had time to read that letter as yet. I assume that the letter calls for a reply, and I may say that after the correspondence is completed, I will ask the Premier of Manitoba, as a matter of courtesy, whether he wishes me to table the correspondence.

Mr. COLDWELL: That is good.

CATTLE

TUBERCULOSIS TESTING—SHORTAGE OF STAFF IN HEALTH OF ANIMALS BRANCH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. CHARLTON (Brant): In view of the present serious situation with regard to tuberculosis testing of cattle throughout Canada, brought about by a serious shortage of personnel in the health of animals branch, is the government taking adequate steps to remedy this situation?

Right Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): I thought I was conferring a favour on my hon. friend when I suggested the other day discussing the question with him and the deputy. I have not yet had the opportunity of meeting the two of them.

HOUSING

REPRESENTATIONS OF CANADIAN FEDERATION OF MAYORS AND MUNICIPALITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. M. NICHOLSON (Mackenzie): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply. Has the minister acted on the proposal submitted to him at his request by the Canadian federation of mayors and municipalities on September 19, 1947, entitled "Outline for national low rent housing legislation"? If so, has a meeting been held of dominion-provincial and municipal authorities?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): A brief was submitted by mayors in September, at which time I met with their delegation. The brief contains a proposal for a public housing program under which the dominion would advance to provinces or municipalities the full cost of construction at 2⅞ per cent for thirty-five years. It also proposes that the dominion establish a national rent reduction fund so that rents can be lowered to a non-economic level. Like so many representations we receive, the proposal is that the dominion bear the whole cost, that the provinces and municipalities have no financial interest, but that the projects be owned and operated by a municipal housing authority or the municipality itself. Such a proposal does not appeal to me, and I cannot support it.

The brief suggests investigation into types and use of building materials, with which we are in sympathy, and work is proceeding.

The brief concludes by suggesting 100 per cent loans up to $5,000 at 3½ per cent under the terms of the National Housing Act with a guarantee to the lending institution of 25 per cent of the amount of the loan. I question whether the lending institutions would make National Housing Act loans at a 3½ per cent rate. Furthermore, I am against promoting home ownership unless the home owner has an equity.

The hon. member asks whether there has been a meeting with the provinces and municipalities. The answer is, no.

COMMUNIST PAPER "COMBAT"

INQUIRY WITH RESPECT TO DISTRIBUTION IN PROVINCE OF QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. EARL ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): In view of the fact that the communist paper Combat has been prohibited and banned in the province of Quebec, can the Minister of Justice say whether any steps have been taken to prevent its distribution in Quebec from its printing establishment in the city of Toronto?

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Justice): Not by the dominion government, no.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

DECOMMISSIONING OF CRUISER "UGANDA"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. R. PEARKES (Nanaimo): I wish to address a question to the Minister of National Defence, notice of which I have given to him. Has the cruiser H.M.C.S. Uganda been placed with the reserve fleet because there are insufficient men available to man her as a unit with the active force?

Hon. BROOKE CLAXTON (Minister of National Defence): It was never the intention to keep both H.M.C.S. Uganda and H.M.C.S. Ontario in commission under the present authorized ceiling. The decommissioning of the cruiser H.M.C.S. Uganda was made according to plans announced by me in the house on June 9, 1947, in reply to a question asked by the then hon. member for Yale. She was decommissioned at the end of July of that year when H.M.C.S. Ontario was put into full commission.

Mr. ADAMSON: May I ask a supplementary question? Have we a cruiser on the active list now? If so, what is that cruiser?

Mr. CLAXTON: H.M.C.S. Ontario.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SALARY INCREASES TO EMPLOYEES—QUESTION AS TO RETROACTIVITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. STANLEY KNOWLES (Winnipeg North Centre): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Is it the case that treasury board regulations or any other provision will prevent employees on the government payroll from receiving increases retroactive to last October if those increases are not put into effect before March 31, the end of the fiscal year? Will the government make sure that its proposed increases for employees of the House of Commons are brought into effect before the end of this month?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that he put his question on the order paper.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR OPPORTUNITY TO DISCUSS EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Cariboo): I should like to ask a question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, of which I have not given him notice. When may the house expect an opportunity for a proper discussion of international affairs?

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Secretary of State for External Affairs cannot himself arrange the business of this house. The Prime Minister has already declared that an opportunity will be given to discuss external affairs as soon as it is possible to go into committee of supply, and that the estimates of the Department of External Affairs will be the first estimates to be called. I would expect that on the first item of those estimates there would be an opportunity for full discussion of the whole international situation.

PUBLIC WORKS

FLOODING OF ETOBICOKE CREEK—REQUEST FOR REMEDIAL MEASURES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. RODNEY ADAMSON (York West): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Public Works concerning a matter about which I spoke to him yesterday and about which I today had a letter from his secretary. In view of the serious flooding of Etobicoke creek and the loss of life which might be occasioned thereby, will the minister give immediate consideration to granting the application of the Department of Highways of Ontario to proceed with remedial works on this river?

Hon. ALPHONSE FOURNIER (Minister of Public Works): We are looking into this question to see if it comes under the jurisdiction of the federal government. To date we have not received an answer to that question. If it is under federal jurisdiction we will certainly attend to the works. If not, I believe the province will have to take care of the matter.

Mr. GRAYDON: I suggest to the minister that when the answer to the question which the hon. member for York West has asked is brought down he keep in mind the fact that serious damage was done by flooding the day before yesterday in the town of Brampton. I should not like to have that town left out of consideration.

TRANSITIONAL MEASURES ACT, 1947

CONTINUATION OF CERTAIN ORDERS AND REGULATIONS

The house resumed from Tuesday, March 16, consideration in committee of Bill No. 136, to amend the Continuation of Transitional Measures Act, 1947—Mr. Ilsley—Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

Mr. R. W. MAYHEW (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Finance): I should like to enlarge upon the brief statement I made in the house on the evening of March 16, with regard to the Canadian Sugar Stabilization Corporation Limited, and to reply to some of the questions asked by the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario and the hon. member for Rosedale.

The Canadian Sugar Stabilization Corporation Limited, as I said on that evening, was incorporated as a crown company in March, 1947, to take over the duties and responsibilities which previously had been vested in the sugar administrator of the wartime prices and trade board. I stated that the corporation had acquired or is acquiring Canada's 1948 requirements of imported cane sugar. I was asked if bulk buying was desirable in peace or was continued only when necessary. It is the policy of the board, under the direction of the government, to withdraw from bulk purchasing as soon as it ceases to be necessary in the public interest. In October 1939 an agreement was entered into with the government of the United Kingdom on a plan of co-ordinating the purchasing of sugar for the duration of the war and for such period thereafter as might be considered necessary to permit of return to normal trading. This agreement was eventually embodied in an exchange of notes in September 1940. In the autumn of 1945 the United Kingdom intimated that they proposed, in the interests of maximum production and an orderly return to normal trade, to guarantee the purchase of all empire cane sugar to the end of 1949, and inquired whether Canada would wish to participate in these purchase arrangements. After full and careful discussion we agreed to participate up to our import requirements, with the proviso that we could withdraw at any time preceding the opening of the new crop year if we felt the proposed prices were too high.

Our present position is that we are in this arrangement for 1948, and that we have the right to withdraw from the 1949 crop at any time prior to December, 1948, if we feel that the proposed price for 1949 is too high. It was then and still is our view that our average price for 1947, 1948 and 1949 under this agreement would be below the average free market price for those years. The world sugar supply, up to and including the 1948 crops, was allocated through the international emergency food council. The 1948 crops are not under international allocation. We agreed with the United Kingdom, however, early in the summer of 1947 that we would buy our 1948 requirements of non-empire sugars from the United Kingdom ministry of food, paying their actual average costs.

We are informed that the highest price paid for 1948 sugar by the United Kingdom under these arrangements is $5 per hundred pounds, and the lowest price is $3.75. The agreed price for the 1948 empire cane sugar is $4.75. The average price for all sugar purchased appears likely to be about $4.81. The market quotations for sugar for the 1948 crop have been as high as $5.25 and as low as $3.65. The present open market price is about $4.15. All these prices are f.o.b. West Indies islands. The duty on empire sugar is 29 cents per hundred pounds and on foreign sugar $1.29 per hundred pounds. It is estimated that about 50 per cent of the 1948 imports will come from empire sources and 50 per cent from non-empire sources. The continuance of the Canadian sugar stabilization corporation is necessary to give effect to these arrangements relating to sugar, at least until the 1948 purchase program is completed. The corporation's present selling price to refineries is on the basis of $5.94 per hundred pounds of raw sugar of 96 degree polarization. The refiners' maximum price for refined sugar is $7.89 net per hundred pounds f.o.b. Montreal.

Then I thought the committee would be interested in these figures, which I am able to give. The estimated sugar requirements for Canada for the year is 600,000 tons, of which 250,000 tons is estimated to come from empire sources, 150,000 tons from Santo Domingo, about 100,000 tons from other foreign sources, principally Cuba, and about 100,000 tons from our own domestic sugar beet producers.

Mr. JACKMAN: I believe this raises the question whether or not this committee is in favour of bulk buying. Sufficient information has not been adduced to the committee to convince one that we are much better off by reason of this contract with Great Britain than we would be if we stood on our own feet and bought sugar where that could be done to the best advantage. For example, the present price of sugar is $4.15 per hundred pounds, while I understood the parliamentary assistant to say that at the present time we are paying an average price of about $4.81. These controls may seem good from certain points of view, but it is surprising how they may have repercussions which are not expected. Last October or November, for instance, I was in Regina and went through a warehouse where I saw carton after carton of American biscuits. Right across the road from this warehouse was the plant of a Canadian biscuit manufacturer. The thing seemed so peculiar that I asked the reason for it. I found that the wholesaler could not get enough Canadian biscuits because at that time I understood we were on a sugar ration or sugar quota; so we were using our valuable United States dollars to import biscuits which, because of their sugar content, we did not have in Canada, though right next door to this warehouse was a biscuit manufacturer.

I do not profess to know all the ramifications of the sugar business, or of the biscuit business for that matter, but when you see a situation like that you immediately come to the conclusion that those who impose controls upon us little know just how far their controlling goes. Here we faced a situation where the most vital thing in our economy was the preservation of United States exchange. The United States had no sugar quota; it dealt in a free market in sugar, apparently, though I understand it left the empire countries to Great Britain. The United States had all the sugar they wanted; they had it for export in manufactured form, giving employment to her own people, while we were losing the small balance of exchange we had.

I do not understand why we in Canada have been kept on a quota longer than the United States. It may have something to do with the empire agreements, but I think it should be explained to the committee. I believe we would all be interested in learning what were the real advantages; whether or not the advantages outweigh the disadvantages of getting back to free enterprise and the purchase of sugar in the cheapest market we can find.

Just in passing, I happened to notice on the order paper today a question which was not answered. It was sent in by the hon. member for Lake Centre, who asked why we paid more for imported cane sugar than we paid our own growers of sugar beets. I think that question should be answered; it is part and parcel of this whole matter.

Mr. KNOWLES: There is another matter I wish to speak about.

Mr. JACKMAN: Is there no answer to what I have just said? I do not think the government has made out any case at all for the continuance of this contract.

Mr. ILSLEY: It is made for 1948.

Mr. MAYHEW: The contract is made for 1948.

Mr. JACKMAN: When was it made?

Mr. MAYHEW: In 1947. At the time it was made it looked like a good deal, and it may yet turn out to be even better than it looks at the present time. Sugar is bound to fluctuate from time to time; and I would suggest to the hon. gentleman and the committee that from the general appearance of things it might be advisable to continue the arrangement for a time. But I can assure hon. members that it is the intention to do away with this just as soon as possible, and it is possible that it may be done away with before the 1949 agreement comes into effect.

Mr. JACKMAN: If the agreement for 1948 was made in 1947, when in 1947 was it made? I should like to know when we shall consider the 1949 contract. It may be that it is almost due for consideration now, and the opinion of the committee may be useful.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Perhaps I may be permitted to reinforce the question which has been asked. As the hon. member for Rosedale has said, today we have just been given a statement that the government considered it desirable to do this; I do not think we have been given any reason. This seems to me to leave the matter in an unsatisfactory position. I shall not press the point unduly, but inasmuch as the parliamentary assistant has stated virtually that this is the last year—or am I putting too much into what he says?—are we astute to get as much sugar as we can from sources other than dollar countries? We still seem to be buying a great deal there, a procedure which seems undesirable if it can be avoided.

Mr. MAYHEW: Our present position is that we have entered into these arrangements for 1948, and we have a right to withdraw from the 1949 crop at any time prior to December 1948. Unless there be a development of some things we cannot now foresee, it looks to me as though we would be in a position to get out of this by the end of the coming fall.

Mr. JACKMAN: It is not a question only of whether we are in a position to withdraw. My colleague asked whether it was the present intention of the government to withdraw.

Mr. MAYHEW: I can assure the committee that it is the desire to get out of these arrangements as soon as possible. But it would be impossible to give the committee a definite date on which that will be done.

Mr. ISNOR: I should like to ask a question supplementary to that of the hon. member for Rosedale. What was the determining factor which entered into the making of the contract? Was it a matter of quantity, or of price? While I realize that the factor of quantity may have been important during the war, I am more concerned about the trade relations which could be established between this country and some other producing countries. In years gone by we enjoyed a happy trade relationship with both Cuba and Santo Domingo. I should like to see these trade relations revived as soon as possible.

Mr. MAYHEW: Both factors were considered—regard for a stable price and continuity of supply. Then, I believe I did give the figures when I pointed out that we will be purchasing about 150,000 tons from Santo Domingo and about 100,000 tons from other foreign sources, chiefly Cuba.

Mr. FRASER: Was the price fixed when the contract was given, or is it a price based upon the market?

Mr. MAYHEW: For the empire sugar the British fix the price and we agree. For the non-empire sugar it will be the average price paid.

Mr. FRASER: Is the average price lower than the British contract price?

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Chairman, before the question is answered let me say that I am impressed by the distinction drawn between empire and non-empire sugars. Non-empire sugar is imported direct from Cuba, while empire sugar must cross the ocean twice, both eastward and westward, before we get it. That is why it is so expensive.

Why should there be a sugar trust in London? Why should we be obliged to buy that sugar from London when we could have it direct from the West Indies? Not only that, but I renew the suggestion I have made before, that we are entitled to have part of the British empire. Why do we not have the West Indies? Everything has been given to everyone else; but when it comes to Canada we are too proud either to accept or to ask for anything. This is an example of one of the necessities coming from a tropical climate. In Canada we have no tropical temperatures and, while we have beet sugar, we do not have cane sugar. If the West Indies were transferred to Canada we would have cheaper sugar and would be able to import it direct. Why should there be so much red tape in trade? That red tape is paid for by the consumer. Is there anyone who loves the empire so much that he will be content to pay more dearly for his sugar? Where does the money go? It goes for maritime freight, and to the owners of the bottoms which carry the sugar both ways across the ocean. It is a fine trip for the sugar, and I am wondering if salt water improves its quality. I am told that if a keg of beer is put on a sailing vessel during the summer and permitted to remain there while the vessel is on a long voyage, it gives a certain gusto to the beer. I wonder if the same applies to sugar?

This is the kind of trade I denounce, not because it is trade within the empire but because it is nonsensical. Not only that, but we have to pay for it. The empire imports which we take are paid for from the advances we make to them. Could anything be sillier? That kind of trade cannot be justified. I was right when I denounced it two years ago this spring; and I am right again today when I suggest the government should be bold enough to tell the British government that it is time for Canada to have some of the crumbs from the British empire.

We are entitled to have the West Indies. I wonder if the government does not dare to ask for them from Great Britain because of the possibility of some objection from the United States. What business is it of the United States to interfere with our dealings with the old country? It is none of their business; it is our own. We are not an enemy country; rather we are a friendly country. There is no great wall of China between the United States and Canada—and how many times have I heard that repeated!

I suggest that we should have sensible, practical and realistic trade with all parts of the world. As I have said, we do not have a tropical climate in Canada; therefore let us have a part of the empire which is in a tropical zone. We might have visits from English warships at times, if we were to own the West Indies. Nevertheless we are entitled to have them, after all the sacrifice in men, money and food, and sacrifices of all descriptions, we have made for the empire.

I may be called an isolationist when I suggest that, but I am not an isolationist. I follow the practice of practical English businessmen and the example of the English bulldog who tries to get all he can for his country. That is laudable. Why should we not follow that example? Why are we so subservient? When we import sugar why should we pay freight on a double crossing of the ocean? That has to be paid for by the Canadian consumer, who has a heavy enough burden to bear already. I know very well that the matter will not be taken into consideration now, but I am throwing out suggestions in order that members of parliament will have an opportunity to think about them and to realize that Canada is entitled to her share of the British empire before it goes somewhere else. Already Palestine has gone; Egypt has gone. Let us at least save the West Indies for Canada. They will be much better off with us than with any other country in the world.

Mr. ISNOR: If the hon. member for Temiscouata is sound in his argument in regard to freight rates, I suggest to the minister and his officials that they give serious thought to basing the price on an Atlantic coast port where raw sugar is landed instead of on Montreal. As it is now, it looks to me as though once again central Canada is being given protection. The price is based on Montreal, in central Canada. We pay the freight on the raw product to Montreal to be refined there and then shipped to other parts of Canada. I say the price should be based on the Atlantic coast port where the sugar is landed. I am glad to see the Minister of Trade and Commerce here. This is an opportunity for him and other members of the cabinet to give encouragement to Nova Scotia and the maritimes by insisting that the Acadia Sugar Refinery be reopened for the refining of sugar, thus producing sugar on the Atlantic coast more cheaply and bringing down the cost to the consumers throughout the whole dominion.

[Mr. Pouliot.]

Mr. POULIOT: If I may be permitted one word more, according to correspondence which I receive from people living in the West Indies and from what I hear from friends who go there, the public feeling in the West Indies is that it should join up with Canada. A large proportion of the population in Trinidad, Jamaica and the other islands wish to do so, and if the question were put to a vote they would join up with Canada at once.

Mr. MAYHEW: The hon. member for Temiscouata is quite wrong in saying that the sugar crosses the ocean twice. It comes direct from the islands to Canada. As a matter of fact we are paying for empire sugar approximately $4.75 and for foreign sugar $4.87. The British have purchased all the exportable surplus on the islands and they are selling it to us at their cost. Landed in Saint John, New Brunswick, it is two cents per hundredweight less than when landed in Montreal. Sugar prices are based on Saint John, Montreal and Vancouver, at the same price.

Mr. ISNOR: Why not include Halifax? I have nothing against Saint John, but for years we had the Acadia Sugar Refinery operating. During the war it was closed down because, we were told, of a shortage of fuel oil. I think that this is an opportunity for the government to step into the picture and once again have the Acadia Sugar Refinery at Woodside resume operations, which would also provide badly needed employment in that part of the country and once again make Woodside, a suburb of Dartmouth, a prosperous community.

Mr. ILSLEY: The hon. member for Halifax will appreciate that it was not by action of the dominion government that that refinery was closed down. I do not know exactly what he is suggesting now. Is it that we quote a low price for raw sugar at a place where there is not a refinery?

Mr. ISNOR: No. I go beyond that. I say that here is an opportunity for the Minister of Trade and Commerce and other members of the cabinet, including the highly-respected minister representing Nova Scotia, to help the maritimes by taking action which will result in the re-opening of the Acadia Sugar Refinery at Woodside. It was closed down during the war because of a shortage of fuel oil, or at all events that was the reason given at the time—that it was a war casualty. Of course it may have been just another manoeuvre on the part of the promotors to centralize the refining of sugar. In any case I am asking the government to take action which will result in the re-opening of the Acadia Sugar Refinery.

Mr. KNOWLES: May I ask the hon. member and the minister a question? Does it not follow that he is really asking the government to open up and operate that refinery as a government proposition?

Mr. ISNOR: No; you cannot put me in that position.

Mr. KNOWLES: You are putting yourself there.

Mr. ISNOR: No. If I see a man who needs help, who needs a meal, for instance, I am glad to help him, as I am sure my hon. friend would. The government is perhaps in a position to assist those who formerly operated the Acadia Sugar Refinery.

Mr. ILSLEY: This is not my department, but I could not imagine the government refusing to give a Halifax buyer of raw sugar as low a price as the Saint John buyer. It is based on the West Indies price, plus freight, and the freight is less to Saint John than to Montreal. If there is a refinery in Halifax the freight to that port would be less than to Montreal.

Mr. ISNOR: The only price quoted by the parliamentary assistant in his first statement, before I had spoken, was based on Montreal. I still feel that the government could do something.

Mr. ILSLEY: We could certainly do that.

An hon. MEMBER: A by-election?

Mr. ISNOR: I very seldom think of politics.

Mr. MILLER: May I ask the parliamentary assistant why the Minister of Finance persists in refusing to grant the request of the sugar beet growers to have the price of sugar produced from beets equalized with that of sugar produced from cane? At present there is a spread of 19 cents on the average, from $7.89 to $8.08. The sugar beet growers have consistently asked that the government pay the same price for sugar from sugar beets as for sugar from imported cane. The government maintain that they are not subsidizing sugar, or that they will not subsidize sugar producers in this country, but if they are subsidizing, as they really are, cane sugar importations to the extent of 19 cents a hundred I do not see why the sugar beet growers do not get the same consideration, the same price f.o.b. at Montreal. It has never been satisfactorily explained to the sugar beet growers so far as I know, and I should like to have an answer.

Mr. MAYHEW: I am advised that traditionally beet sugar has been lower than cane sugar, but some time ago beet sugar was raised to the same price as cane sugar. If Montreal is the base, then the price in the sugar factory in Winnipeg would be that price plus the freight; therefore the beet sugar growers in Manitoba would get the Montreal price plus the freight from Montreal to Winnipeg.

Mr. MILLER: Perhaps you can say that in one way, but is it not a fact that the cane sugar people are getting another 19 cents a hundred? You may be paying it out of your $21,000,000 stabilization fund, but actually the cane sugar people are getting 19 cents a hundred more at Montreal than the sugar beet growers; that is, on the basis f.o.b. Montreal. It does not matter where the money comes from; the cane sugar producers are getting the benefit, to the extent of 19 cents a hundred, over the sugar beet growers.

Mr. POULIOT: Just a word on the information given by the parliamentary assistant; he said that the non-British sugar was more expensive than the British sugar; that there was a difference of 12 cents. That may be so, but he knows very well that there are fluctuations in the price of such commodities. Today the difference is on one side; tomorrow it may be on the other side. But taking into account these fluctuations, it is more than evident that it would be to the benefit of Canada to have the West Indies as part of Canada. They are nearer to Nova Scotia than the part of the country in which I live. Everybody would be satisfied to have the West Indies as part of Canada. If that came about we could get sugar, molasses, bananas, rum and all the products of tropical countries from these islands, and it would come from our own country to the great satisfaction of all.

Another thing I notice is that these are dealings between governments. If I am not mistaken these purchases are made between governments. I wonder whether that is so.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Mr. POULIOT: Just a minute. I have asked a question. I wonder whether the commercial exchanges are between representatives of both governments, both exporters. I should like to know whether, when we buy empire sugar, it is bought through the British government or from private firms in these countries.

Mr. MAYHEW: The British government actually purchases the sugar and we are buying it at their cost. Our cheques actually are paid to the growers, not to the British government. That probably answers the hon. gentleman's question. If I understood the hon. member aright he said that empire sugar was costing more than foreign sugar. That is not so. The reverse is true.

Mr. POULIOT: I understand, and I admit what my hon. friend has said.

Mr. MAYHEW: We do not know what the fluctuation is going to be, and the contract is for only 1948. What might happen in 1949 is something else.

Mr. POULIOT: In the first part of my remarks I said that empire sugar was more expensive, and in the second part I took into account what my hon. friend has said. I notice that there is a difference of 12 cents, and that non-empire sugar is more expensive; but I was under the impression that both governments were dealing together in the purchase of that sugar. That would be pure socialism, and the cost would not have been the same at all concerning the purchase of non-empire sugar. I am glad that my hon. friend has said that the British government was making the arrangement but that payment was made directly to the producers. I congratulate them, and I warn them to be very careful in their dealings with Mr. Strachey, because he does not keep his word very often.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I want to add a word. I think we cannot pretend that the explanation which has been given as to why this was done takes us very far. The statement has been made that it was thought wise to do so. One wonders whether it has just been continued without anyone standing off and criticizing it. I am looking at it in a detached way to consider whether the time has not come to get away from bulk buying; nevertheless I am not disposed to follow the matter further, but I should like to say this. I hope very earnestly that it will not be necessary to continue it beyond this year. There has been considerable indication from the parliamentary assistant that it may not go further, although he has not bound himself. If it comes up again we of this party will certainly be very critical, and we shall try to resist any further extension of it.

Mr. MILLER: I should like an answer to my question.

Mr. MAYHEW: I think possibly a paragraph in the minister's letter of February 12 will answer the hon. member for Portage la Prairie. It is as follows:

> May I also refer to an earlier paragraph of my November 3 announcement in which I said that "if there is any significant and sustained decline in world market prices it is the intention of the government to reduce Canadian prices on refined sugar accordingly." While I do not think that the decline has yet been sufficiently significant or sustained to justify such action, cane sugar has recently been on offer at prices significantly below the average price at which we purchased our 1948 supplies. I do not think therefore that beet sugar prices are depressed below what they would be if sugar control were to be removed immediately.

May I just say a word to the committee. There will be full opportunity to discuss this item when the estimates of the Department of Finance are before the house. At that time the officials of the sugar board will be here and the details will be arranged in such a way that all these questions can be answered fully. I just wonder whether the amount of information we have given so far should have been given when we are in the midst of a deal. I wonder whether any businessman would be expected to do what we have done in the committee today. We are in the midst of the deal and we have given information which I, as one who has been accustomed to bargaining a little bit, doubt whether I would wish to give in a deal as important as this. We are not trying to cover up anything. I think the people are entitled to everything. The questions that were asked on Tuesday were justified. The answers given were short; but we did not have time to prepare for it. I ask hon. members to let this debate end here and then be prepared to come with their questions in an orderly fashion when we have everything before us so that they can be answered.

Mr. MILLER: I can see the parliamentary assistant's point but our difficulty is that the sugar beet growers, and the sugar beet company in Manitoba anyway, feel that if the government would meet the request of the sugar beet growers and equalize prices, cutting out the 19 cent disparity, it would increase acreage. It would be of advantage to Canada and would help the dollar situation if sugar beet acreage were increased. If however we wait until the particular item to which the parliamentary assistant has referred is brought down, it will be too late even then, if nothing is done about it before that time, to encourage an increase in acreage which should be sown in 1948. That is why I would like to have the parliamentary assistant discuss it with the Minister of Finance. Perhaps the minister could even yet adjust what the sugar beet growers claim is a great injustice.

Mr. MAYHEW: The matter will be discussed with the ministry.

Mr. POULIOT: I wish to say a word of appreciation of the Minister of Finance and the parliamentary assistant for their willingness to answer so many questions on so many different subjects. These matters are delicate and difficult and they do their best to inform the house. I am sure everyone has appreciated the way in which they have dealt with the questions that have been submitted to them. The answers were mostly satisfactory to members.

Mr. McKAY: May I ask the parliamentary assistant to answer the question I asked on Tuesday, which he deferred to a later day? The question had reference to whether or not a directive had been issued to the rental commissioners to favour the tenant rather than the owner of property. He said he would give the answer some time later. I am concerned about the answer because I have received many letters from veterans and old folks who own homes and are unable to obtain occupancy.

Mr. MAYHEW: There has been no directive issued by the board along the lines suggested.

Mr. McKAY: There hasn't been any?

Mr. MAYHEW: No.

Mr. KNOWLES: I wonder if we might revert to the discussion of the other evening on the two orders in council listed under the Department of Mines and Resources, 7167 and 7168. The other night I asked a question about these orders in council and the Minister of Trade and Commerce was good enough to make an immediate reply which took the form of an announcement as to the change that had been made in government policy with regard to this matter. Incidentally I have to point out that one of the difficulties in connection with this kind of legislation is this. When we passed the bill a year ago it carried forward a number of orders in council. Some of these we were opposed to and yet they have been carried forward another year, while other orders in council like these we were in favour of, and had hoped would be continued, have been revoked in the meantime.

Mr. HOWE: May I interrupt to say that when the two orders in council referred to were extended last year I gave notice that it would be only a matter of a short time until they would no longer be required. At that time I expressed the government's viewpoint that minerals in the ground should not be subject to control.

Mr. KNOWLES: I can confirm that the minister gave that indication when the matter was up last year, but I still press the view that these orders in council should have been continued, or that the provisions brought into effect by these orders should have been made effective by permanent statute. It is obvious to all of us that we are at a very early stage in this whole matter of radioactive minerals and atomic energy. It seems to me, in view of the losses that the Canadian people have sustained in the past from the alienation of raw materials and natural resources, we should go rather slowly in this new field of atomic energy.

I remember the Minister of Trade and Commerce telling us on another occasion that he did not want to see a repetition of the experiences that this country suffered in the matter of railroading. He did not want to see those experiences repeated in air transportation. We take the same position with respect to radioactive minerals and atomic energy.

I say as briefly and as pointedly as I can that we disagree with the minister. We feel that these minerals should have been reserved to the crown, at least until the world knows a little more about this subject. It is interesting to note the sort of publicity that has been given to this announcement and the items that have been in the news in the last day or two. This morning's radio carried the news that gold miners were now turning their attention to uranium rather than to gold. Maybe we shall not have to go ahead with Bill No. 7, in which the hon. member for York West and others are so interested, now that this guaranteed price has been fixed for uranium concentrates, with the understanding that the government will buy all the uranium concentrates of a certain specification that are produced.

In view of the fact that we do not yet know how fully these minerals will be used either for war or for peace, I suggest that we are opening the door to a new phase of profiteering, and I feel very strongly that this alienation of yet another natural resource should not have been permitted by the federal government. I realize that the present policy—

Mr. HOWE: What resource is being alienated? I would point out that any and all uranium mined in this country must be sold to the federal government.

Mr. KNOWLES: I am coming to that immediately. Radioactive minerals in the ground, by the orders in council that have been revoked, were reserved to the crown even while in the ground. Now the government has moved to the position that private interests may go in and explore and exploit and develop these minerals, though the minister points out that the government maintains its control in this field by buying all the uranium that is produced.

That is the position at the present time, but I ask hon. members to note that it is a change from what it was before, and I also ask hon. members to note the quotation which the minister gave the other night from a memorandum he had just received with regard to the position in the United States. On page 2285 of Hansard will be found this quotation with reference to the policy of the atomic energy commission in the United States:

> In general it will be commission policy to purchase ores for its program from private sources and limit direct government production as far as possible.

I have not before me the details of the United States program, either as at the present time or for the future, but that sentence suggets to me that the commission in the United States thinks in terms of private interests having stockpiles of this material from which the United States atomic energy commission will purchase supplies for its program. The minister said the other night that although arrived at independently, this government and the United States government were following somewhat parallel lines. I should not be surprised if before long the minister announced a further change of policy that permits this sort of thing, namely, the stockpiling of these materials by private interests. The very fact that the government purchases uranium from private interests means that there is a stage at which private interests own this material. It is obvious to all of us that there is no way of telling what the value of these materials will be. I think it is a little too soon for action of this kind to have been taken. In fact I would hope that we might move in the direction that this sort of action would never have to be taken. But at least in the present situation I regret that the government has taken this stand.

I do not think I shall say anything more at this moment, but will merely ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. The statement he made the other night related, I take it, to these two orders in council that have been revoked. They referred only to the radioactive minerals in the Yukon and in the Northwest Territories. That is natural because those are the only parts of Canada in which the natural resources belong to the crown in the right of the federal government. Can the minister tell us what the situation is in the rest of Canada? I refer to the provinces. I realize that that matter is not under his jurisdiction, but it is one of general interest. Can the minister tell us what the situation is in the various provinces?

Mr. GREEN: Before the minister answers that question, Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask a question of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. How does he suggest that the prospecting for these precious metals be carried out? Does he really believe that the government can prospect for minerals and find them in just as many cases as individual Canadians can?

Mr. KNOWLES: Individual Canadians can do the prospecting, but they can do it now, just as they did while these orders in council were in effect, under the direction of the government and with the full knowledge that those minerals belong to the government. We have had this sort of discussion a good many times before, and hon. members to my right need not think that what we are saying is any criticism of the rights of individual mining prospectors. They are Canadians; they are workers like a good many more, and deserve their chance to make a decent living. The thing that bothers me is that it is not the individual prospector who makes a mint of money out of mining; it is organizations like Eldorado before it became a crown corporation, Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company, and so on. Frankly I have no confidence in organizations of that kind when it comes to a subject which is so tremendous in its energy potential and its wealth-producing potential, not to mention its relation to the problem of war.

Mr. GREEN: My hon. friend has not answered my question. Does he really believe that these minerals can be found best by employees of any government, whether dominion or provincial? Or does he believe they can be found best by companies, let us say, or individuals whose business is prospecting?

Mr. KNOWLES: In reply to that question I would say that most of the prospecting that is done today is done with all kinds of help that comes from governments, both federal and provincial. If it were not for all the assistance to mining, such as geodetic surveying and all the rest of it, that is afforded through the expenditure of public money, the prospectors would have a tough time of it.

Mr. GREEN: I am afraid the hon. member does not know much about mining.

Mr. SKEY: Does the minister expect to increase the amount of uranium ore found in Canada by this recent lifting of the government restriction?

Mr. HOWE: To answer to the first question first, the federal government, as my hon. friend has said, owns the ore only in the Northwest Territories. The provinces own the natural resources within their boundaries. When the ban on prospecting for uranium was imposed by the federal government, each province was communicated with and asked to put into effect a similar prohibition in the provinces. I think seven of the provinces did that and two did not. I leave it to my hon. friend to guess which two did not.

Mr. KNOWLES: There is no difficulty there.

Mr. HOWE: As soon as it was felt that it was no longer necessary for the crown to control uranium, the provinces were notified accordingly; and I think all the provinces except Saskatchewan have taken parallel action with the dominion in lifting the prohibition against prospecting. To reply to the question asked by the hon. member for Trinity, yes, we think that opening up uranium prospecting will increase the known reserves of uranium. As hon. gentlemen know, there are in this country a good many million miles of suitable territory to be explored. The federal government for these three years have had a number of parties out—I think some twenty or twenty-two—and certain discoveries have been made. The value of the discoveries cannot be determined until they are opened up. We think that with all the prospectors who are looking for other minerals but are also on the lookout for uranium and those who may be sent out to look primarily for uranium, there will be further discoveries.

Mr. SKEY: Has the status of Eldorado changed as a result of your orders?

Mr. HOWE: No. Eldorado is a mining property at Great Bear lake. They are operating a refinery at Port Hope. They are also opening up one or two prospects that have been discovered in the last year or two. But Eldorado is most active and we are hoping its activities will be stepped up as the result of the new regulation.

Mr. SKEY: Has the minister ever tabled the report of the investigation into Eldorado?

Mr. HOWE: I do not know of any investigation into Eldorado.

Mr. SKEY: It was brought up by way of question last year and the year before. I have reference to the report of the Glassco commission.

Mr. HOWE: That was an interdepartmental report. It will not be tabled.

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): I disagree with the government's policy in this respect. I think it is wrong. But unfortunately the whole situation concerning this valuable mineral and what we derive from it is shrouded in secrecy, and perhaps with good reason. Today, however, I intend to ask the minister some questions and I hope to get an answer to most of them. None of them will affect security matters at all. The right hon. gentleman, in this statement of his the other day, either said too much or too little; but he has left a great many x's in the equation and I should like to hear the answers to them.

In the first place I should like to lay a background for what I have to say by quoting from the official United States report on atomic energy, with which the minister is well acquainted. The author in his preface states:

> The ultimate responsibility for our nation's policy rests on its citizens and they can discharge such responsibilities wisely only if they are informed.

I shall go right to the end and quote words from this book which I think every member of parliament should read. They are found at page 135:

> We find ourselves with an explosive which is far from completely perfected. Yet the future possibilities of such explosives are appalling, and their effects on future wars and international affairs are of fundamental importance. Here is a new tool for mankind, a tool of unimaginable destructive power. Its development raises many questions that must be answered in the near future. Because of the restrictions of military security there has been no chance for the congress or the people to debate such questions.

Such, of course, is obviously true in Canada as well, to some extent.

> They have been seriously considered by all concerned and vigorously debated among the scientists, and the conclusions reached have been passed along to the highest authorities. These questions are not technical questions; they are political and social questions, and the answers given to them may affect all mankind for generations.

We may have to bring up some of these questions in this house, in the hope of getting answers. The report goes on:

In thinking about them the men on the project have been thinking as citizens of the United States vitally interested in the welfare of the human race.

Again we could substitute "Canada" for "the United States".

It has been their duty and that of the responsible high government officials who were informed to look beyond the limits of the present war and its weapons to the ultimate implications of these discoveries. This was a heavy responsibility. In a free country like ours such questions should be debated by the people and decisions must be made by the people through their representatives.

We now have an opportunity, though brief, to discuss some of the fundamental issues contained in the statement made by the minister the other day. The policy of the government is avowedly to permit private exploration for and mining of radioactive materials. As I say, I disagree with that policy just now, because I do not agree with those who see in this new substance, fissionable material, a way to open up suddenly vast resources of energy and potential wealth for the people of the nations. We may not see that in our lifetime; but I am convinced of this, that as far as the nations of the world are concerned, the real value of atomic energy today lies in its power to destroy, to kill and to obliterate. This means we have to consider the policy of the government from that point of view; and that policy is to permit, to some extent, so-called private enterprise—I suppose because the government considers it more efficient—to profit out of this material which is so extraordinarily dangerous when it reaches the end stage.

I should like to have seen the government continue its policy of maintaining title, in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, to these radioactive materials; and I should like to see the government continue the agreement with the provinces, as far as possible. I believe the provinces should be asked to work in co-operation with the federal government, so that when such radioactive minerals are found in the provinces they can be exploited in conjunction with the federal government for the benefit of all.

Mr. CASE: If the hon. member will permit a question, is he prepared to see the provinces and the dominion spend the taxpayers' money on the exploration and development of such deposits?

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): It is already being spent. We have spent thousands and probably hundreds of thousands of dollars in that way. I have no objection to that, because this material is one of the most vital things in the world today. We have to look at it from that aspect, and from no other. In his statement at page 2284 of Hansard, the minister said:

The government will purchase . . . acceptable uranium bearing ores . . .

Here begins my list of questions. The minister said such ores must have a minimum uranium content equivalent to ten per cent by weight of uranium oxide. What will be the position with respect to ores containing only five per cent of uranium oxide, say, or seven and a half per cent, or eight per cent, or nine per cent? Does the government intend to purchase all such ores, or will it leave the ores with a lesser uranium oxide content in the hands of those doing the mining? If so, what will be the consequences of that policy from the point of view of stock-piling, with which I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre dealt cogently?

That is one question. On the next I admit my ignorance and would be glad to be guided by the minister. What about the question of thorium? The Prime Minister told us in this house some two years ago that thorium was a basic necessity for the manufacture of atomic bombs; yet there is no mention of it here at all. I should like the minister to say something about that.

Then in the statement by the minister we are told that a minimum rate of $2.75 a pound will be paid for this ore. The question which immediately arises in my mind is this. Is $2.75 a pound an excessive price to pay, or is it a reasonable price? We can be certain that the price is not too low, but I should like to know whether the price of $2.75 a pound gives a reasonable return to those who are producing this ore. Who determined that price? On what basis was it determined? Was it done by the department itself, or was it done by the government in conjunction with the corporations which will mine this substance? That is another matter I should like to know something about.

There is something else we must remember. In 1939 an agreement was entered into between the Eldorado company and Union Minière du Haut Katanga, which was the Belgian company working in the Congo. These two companies were in the field to develop radium, and they had come to the conclusion that if they carried on production at the rate then in effect the price would have to be dropped. So they entered into this agreement, under which the Belgian company was to get sixty per cent of the market and the Canadian company, forty per cent. As an annual mining review stated, they did this because the developed potential exceeded absorption capacity. Radium is one of the most vital materials we know of for the preservation of health, for the prevention of disease and, through that prevention, the preservation of life; yet no matter how great the need among the peoples of the world, these two companies decided at that time to restrict production. The reason for that may have been, in the words of the United States statement which was quoted by the minister, "under the stimulus of profits," but I regret very much to see the stimulus of profits used in such a way. What guarantee is there that this sort of agreement will not be entered into in future? The minister has stated that he looks with approval upon United States policy; but then United States policies have not the complete support of United States scientists and public men. Here I should like to quote part of a study made for a seminar in government administration and public policy at Harvard University, by Mr. Richard Dyer McCann, who is a lecturer there. He said:

> Government operation is only partly envisaged in the atomic energy act of 1946. The "declaration of policy" in the act calls for "strengthening free competition in private enterprise" as well as a number of other objectives like increasing the standard of living, promoting world peace, and so on. The accompanying committee report stated that "wherever possible, the committee endeavours to reconcile government monopoly of fissionable material with our traditionable free enterprise system."
> Some observers say that under Republican tutelage, atomic energy will be completely "returned" to private enterprise.

That is the hope of many in the United States today. It may even be the aspiration of some in Canada; but as far as I am concerned, it is our responsibility in this party to see that, as far as we can avoid it, that does not become Canada's policy, and I hope it does not. The effects of such a policy can be seen in a later quotation from the same article:

> General Electric now has responsibility for a huge new research laboratory at Schenectady and has taken over from duPont the Hanford works in Washington—by far the most important of the three production plants.

That is one of the largest plants erected by the United States government for the manufacture of fissionable material.

> Thus General Electric becomes the primary wholesaler of atomic power. Can it be doubted that General Electric expects to have things to say about the placement of secondary power plants in the United States? Can it be doubted therefore, that decisions about production policy of the united nations atomic energy commission —and of any future ADA—are of considerable importance to General Electric? May it not be assumed that we are witnessing the conscious or unconscious growth of new, top-level lobbying interests, economic in character, international in scope?

I should like to be reassured by the minister that this will not be the policy of the federal government, namely, to turn this tremendous power for good and evil into private hands. While here again the facts are quite obscure, we know there were many suspicious, let us say, of what was happening in connection with certain officers of the Eldorado Mining Company some years ago.

How does the government intend, by a system of controls, to see to it that there are no illicit operations in the selling of uranium oxide? How will the government police this operation without, to some extent, leading to that police state which we all deplore? Would it not be better, in the long run, to take over complete ownership of these materials now, rather than be compelled to do so later if, unhappily, we find ourselves in another war?

It may seem to be the easier and more facile way out of the difficulty to have control now; but I think, in the long run, the problem will become much more complicated. I do not think we are doing a service to Canadians by allowing this stimulus of profit to decide how much ore will be produced. I assume we need the maximum amount of ore which can be produced in this country for defence if for no other reason. Yet today we leave its production entirely to the stimulus of profit.

I do not share the easy optimism of those who, as I said before, believe that, through atomic energy, a new world is just around the corner. On the other hand I am inclined to share the pessimism of those who know what an atomic war would mean to the people of the world. And it is because I fear that eventuality that I should like to see entire control of all fissionable material and by-products, from their original source, in the hands of the federal government.

On December 17, 1945, as reported at page 3703 of Hansard, when discussing the atomic energy declaration the Prime Minister said:

> If we are agreed on the ultimate necessity of some measure of world government to maintain world security, we should, by every means in our power, support and strengthen every agency of international co-operation and understanding which can help to make the world community a reality.

I think that, in this small action of the government, it has denied the words of the Prime Minister. Had the government been alive to the moral responsibility which it had to the people of Canada and of the world, it would have said to the united nations, "We are willing to transfer to any international organization the plant which we have in Canada for the production of fissionable materials, and also to surrender to that international organization the areas in which there are quantities of uranium oxide." There, at least, would have been a gesture of some value to a world which is becoming almost paralyzed with fear. It would have been the type of moral leadership which is badly needed; but the government is falling down on it. It may be suggested from the Social Credit group that this would be a surrender of sovereignty. Of course it is. We cannot expect to live any longer as a sovereign nation; and in any event I doubt very much whether this sovereignty we boast of is a reality or is indeed a myth.

Here again I quote from the Prime Minister from the same page in Hansard:

> The more deeply one ponders the problems with which our world is confronted in the light —"the terrible light," as Mr. Attlee said—of the implications of the development of atomic energy, the harder it is to see a solution in anything short of some surrender of national sovereignty.

Of course that is the answer in the long run. But I think the government has made an egregious blunder in carrying out its policy. Perhaps time will tell whether I am right or wrong. But in the meantime, at least I wish to register my opposition to this policy, and to hope that the minister will be able to answer some of the questions I have raised.

Mr. HOWE: The first question, I think, was as to the significance of the ten per cent content. That refers entirely to the degree of concentration of the ore which is offered for delivery. Eldorado ore is very low grade. It runs less than one per cent, and is concentrated to about thirty per cent. The government has specified ten per cent as the degree of concentration which it will expect before it can accept delivery. Otherwise it has no significance.

Then, so far as thorium is concerned, may I point out that thorium is covered by atomic energy control. There is no known deposit of thorium in Canada. It is known mostly in tropical countries. The greatest supply is in India and the next is in Brazil.

As to the price of $2.75 a pound, it is felt that a price should be stated which would govern for a considerable length of time, so that prospectors would be encouraged, and would have some method of assessing the value of any discoveries they made. The price of $2.75 was worked out from the experience of Eldorado as a reasonable price for that purpose.

Then, my hon. friend has referred to prewar agreements between Eldorado—that is the privately owned Eldorado—and the Belgian company. I would ask him to remember that the entry of the Canadian company into the field of the production of radium cut the price of radium in two. I think there was for a time a selling agreement between the two countries, but certainly there was no selling agreement after the government acquired the company, and there will be none in the future.

Mr. COLDWELL: Has General McNaughton been consulted regarding this policy? I have before me recommendations and reports presented with respect to the proposed atomic energy commission. I notice that General McNaughton is quite specific in his reports which dealt with the agency's functions in relation to the location and the mining of ores. There was one section which impressed me when I read it some time ago, and I looked it up only a few minutes ago. I might say that this paper was prepared by General Andrew G. L. McNaughton of Canada, group leader; Professor Jacques Errera of Belgium; Captain Alvaro Alberto of Brazil; Doctor Bertrand Goldschmidt of France; and Doctor John E. Vance of the United States.

This section struck me as significant:

> Security requires international control and allocation of the quantities and locations of uranium and thorium separated from their deposit, time and place of processing and the size, use, and disposition of stocks. Without such comprehensive control of source materials there would be a serious risk of diversion or of the accumulation of stocks with a view to subsequent diversion or seizure. The policies governing this control must be specified in the convention. To administer them the agency must be given control of the source materials promptly after their separation from the deposits.
> Therefore, agency ownership must apply to all uranium and thorium from the time of removal.

Reading the various reports made at the time by different persons—and this is mainly General McNaughton's summary—it struck me that, no matter how small the amount of uranium there might be in a concentrate, there would be danger of leakage if this were in the hands of private companies. I should like to see the government responsible for this all the way through.

Perhaps the minister could tell us whether what he proposes is satisfactory to our representative on the atomic energy commission of the united nations.

Mr. HOWE: The two orders in council were revoked on recommendation of General McNaughton, who was at that time chairman of the atomic energy board. Since that time, General McNaughton has assumed other duties and has resigned as president and member of the board. His place has been taken by Doctor Mackenzie of the national research council. But General McNaughton was chairman at the time this was rescinded.

If my hon. friend will read General McNaughton's statement again he will notice that it recommends control of uranium from the time it is taken out of the ground. That is the purpose of the regulations, as first drawn, of the atomic energy commission. I explained a year ago, when the orders in council were extended, that it was the view of Canada that any attempt to control uranium in the ground was not useful, and that turned out to be the view of the atomic energy commission in New York. We are working in complete conformity with the findings of the commission, and we believe that the regulations—I have a copy of them here and I have no doubt my hon. friend has seen them—provide wholly adequate machinery for the control of uranium which is extracted from the ground.

Mr. ADAMSON: I understand that this new move by the government comes as a result of consultation with a committee and others who are experts in the Canadian mining field and in atomic energy. I think the government has taken a wise and sensible step; in fact, almost the only step it could have taken under the circumstances. It has acted on the best technical and expert opinion available.

The problem before us in Canada is to see that all possible deposits of radioactive material are discovered and then developed. Whether we would like it or not, the fact remains that the government—and this goes for any government in a democracy—is not competent to discover and develop any ore deposit. One of the big problems of the geological survey is, as they put it, not to find a mine, because that is not their function. Their function is to make the geology so well known that the individual prospector, who has found well over ninety per cent of all the known mineral deposits in Canada today, will be able to discover and subsequently develop mineral deposits in this country. Incidentally when the Eldorado Mining and Smelting Company was taken over and the government's policy made known at that time I advocated that the prospecting for and development of fissionable materials up to certainly the preliminary concentrate stage should be in the hands of those best able, in fact the only people able to discover and develop them, namely the individual prospector and the mining corporation. I am glad to see that the government has eventually come to that conclusion.

One of the things that this new move does is to put the Geiger counter into the kit of most prospectors. Today our knowledge of the fissionable materials in Canada is superficial. The discovery of the Eldorado deposit was in many ways a fluke. Gilbert LaBine at the time was looking for gold. The original Eldorado company was a gold mining company which had failed in operating a mine in Manitoba, I think it was; and it was only through Gilbert LaBine having a peculiar knowledge, a sort of sixth sense, which enabled him to detect a certain coloured stain on the ice of Great Bear lake that the Eldorado deposit was discovered. So it may be said that in many ways it was a fluke. If there are other deposits of uranium in Canada they are not known, and to prohibit the looking for these deposits and their development by individuals who are fortunate enough to discover them is not likely to lead to the discovery and development of more uranium deposits. It is essential that if there are other uranium deposits in Canada everything should be done to discover and develop them.

I think the government has taken the only sensible step in the circumstances. Whether the price is sufficient, no one in the house is competent to say. It would be difficult to say what the costs of concentrating U_3O_8 would be, and the government has set a price which is probably in the nature of a target price per pound. I hope that this will be considered a flexible price which may be varied to make possible and profitable the discovery of uranium or any other fissionable materials. There is, in my opinion and in the opinion I think of the atomic energy commission, no danger in having these deposits discovered or in producing the concentrates of uranium so long as the end product continues to be controlled, and I understand from the committee in the United States that there is no idea that the end product shall in any way be released from the most stringent control by the federal authority.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): Mr. Chairman, I join with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the hon. member for Winnipeg North in protesting against the five-point program which the government announced on March 16. Had I not been perfectly sure on other grounds that I was right in protesting against this policy, after listening to the Tory member to my right I am convinced I am right because we see that the government's policy is acceptable to him.

The development of atomic energy is still in its infancy. The success in breaking the atom so that it could be used for destructive purposes was heralded throughout the world as a discovery of equal importance to that of fire. Here we see a government right after the war, with the possibilities either of destruction or of peacetime use of that energy, ready to throw it into the hands of private enterprise where it will be promoted or retarded at the whim of such private enterprise. I take exception to that very principle because, for the good of the people of this country and for the good of the peoples throughout the world, I think we should undertake to develop atomic energy to its fullest. I cannot go so far as the hon. member for Winnipeg North and say that the peacetime uses of atomic energy may not come in our generation. I have read articles by well-known world scientists who hold the view that we may be able to use atomic energy in ten years. If we would go all-out and make an effort to use that energy for the welfare of the people we could find many uses for it in the matter of a few years.

Reference has already been made to the use of radioactive materials in determining certain functions in plant growth, and also in the field of medicine and surgery, where it is used to great advantage today. Therefore I want to register my great concern that this material be turned over to public enterprise to promote the development of it to the greatest extent possible. I should like to ask the minister whether the government has underwritten the production of all ore-bearing uranium oxide to the extent of $2.75 a pound. Will he tell the committee whether or not this is a low figure, and what is the possibility of a higher figure being paid? If a higher figure is paid in some instances, just how high is the government prepared to go? Here we have an instance of private companies going into exploratory work. They could very easily form a monopoly and hold back the production, thereby building up a sort of demand for it if the government should need it, and then request higher prices.

In conclusion may I say I feel that the government should reverse its program. Rather than attach our public development, or the development of these atomic uranium deposits to the skirts of the United States government, let us have our own policy and go all-out on public development.

[Mr. McCullough (Assiniboia).]

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Has the government any assurance that any claims staked by the private companies in developments of this kind will be developed? Is there any way in which the government is assured that the companies will not stake claims and then sit down on the job and keep other people from developing them?

Mr. HOWE: No, there is no such assurance, except that it is very expensive to keep claims under control. My hon. friend knows that a certain amount of development work is required to keep title to a claim alive.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Is there any regulation providing that anything that is produced in these mines must be delivered to the government immediately, or is there an opportunity for stock-piling?

Mr. HOWE: It must be delivered immediately.

Mr. POULIOT: It seems to be the time to give some expression on this matter which is very important. We must consider it seriously. The minister holds Jupiter's thunder in his hand. What I appreciate of the minister is his serenity; he has not the sombre looks of General McNaughton. I would prefer to have the picture of the minister to one of General McNaughton, because the minister understands that atomic energy is most powerful, but he is not always making depressing speeches, undertaker's speeches, like some that we hear all the time. Life is sad, anybody might die suddenly; it is very sad, but that is the story.

Mr. COLDWELL: Particularly with the atomic bomb.

Mr. POULIOT: An atomic bomb may explode and kill many people. Until this happens, why should everybody have a sombre look? Every time the atomic bomb is mentioned, why not think of the happy possibilities of the whole thing?

An hon. MEMBER: Of being blown to bits.

Mr. POULIOT: My hon. friend is not serious. I suggest that the matter should be treated seriously, but not in the spirit of an undertaker. Besides that, I will point out to you, Mr. Chairman, that the minister is a qualified engineer. The hon. member for York West is also a qualified engineer. I am not, and the other hon. members who have spoken on it are not engineers. What do they know about the formula of the atomic bomb? They know nothing about it. They have seen pictures in the press and in illustrated periodicals the same as everybody else; they have seen the big cloud of smoke, and afterwards they have seen the ravages of destruction. That is all they know about the atomic bomb.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: That is enough.

Mr. POULIOT: When we see a small part of atomic energy providing the power to move a big ship or a locomotive or an aeroplane or anything of that sort, then we shall have every reason to rejoice. During and before the last war, what did we hear about poison gas? Poison gas was invented before the first war. It was used in the first war. It happened that mustard gas killed some people in some cities of Europe between the two wars, but when the second war started there was an implicit agreement between the belligerent parties not to use poison gas, and it was not used by anybody.

Who knows about the use of atomic energy during a future war? In the first place, shall we have a future war? Why should we always have panicky speeches about a future war? We are not sure about it, and even if we have it will atomic energy be used by all the belligerent countries? We are not sure about it. Therefore we should have a better philosophy of life and, considering the power of atomic energy and realizing it, we should not always be afraid of it, because it may be a benefit to mankind, most people are hoping. Consequently, why should we worry unduly and make depressing and panicky speeches about the atomic bomb?

I have something else to say. I find it very pleasant that the present Minister of Trade and Commerce is the member of the cabinet who has atomic energy under his jurisdiction to a large extent. He knows a lot about it; he has contributed more than anybody else to the development of that energy, and I am sure that his earnest wish is that it may be used for the benefit of mankind at the earliest possible opportunity.

Mr. McKAY: All of us recognize that the second report of the united nations commission on atomic energy does not envisage control of radioactive ores by any international authority, but I cannot accept the government's view that it is a wise policy to permit the mining of uranium-bearing ores by mining interests which have no other interest in the matter than that of making fortunes for a few people.

I am not interested in profits for a few shareholders of such companies that may be interested in the production of these ores, but I am concerned about the potential economic value of such mineral-producing concentrates to the general public. The Minister of Trade and Commerce will say that the government still have control of uranium because they are the sole purchasing agents. I am sure the minister is quite satisfied that the purchase of concentrates by the government will give the federal authorities far from complete control over such mining development. This sort of control would not eliminate such possibilities as smuggling to other countries where higher prices might be paid than those offered in Canada.

Uranium can be of great economic value in the production of energy. I think that has been indicated in this house by men who should have some reasonable knowledge of that particular subject. It seems to me that if profits are to be made out of a rare mineral of this kind the people of Canada should be the beneficiaries from this great natural resource and it should be the heritage of all Canadians and not of just a few. I saw today a news item in a reputable paper, the Christian Science Monitor, from which I wish to quote some words spoken by so outstanding a physicist, Doctor Lyle B. Borst. This gentleman, I may say, was in charge of developing the Hanford plutonium plant in Washington during the war and is now directing the building of a nuclear reactor at Brookhaven national laboratory in Upton, Long Island, New York. He said:

> The industrial applications of atomic energy will be legion but will certainly not be immediate. There are too many problems to be solved in the meantime. But development of atomic power is one of the most direct and foreseeable future industries.

He says there are certain definite applications such as mobile power for ships, submarines and planes and probably a practical application of atomic power in many other fields. I suggest that in the development of atomic energy for power purposes there are unlimited possibilities. It may take five years, ten years or even a generation, but there seems to be little doubt that the energy from this source will be used in Canada some day, and certainly it will be used elsewhere. Because of this definite trend, which is, we know in its scientific value quite important, I feel that the government should control every avenue of its development. While a minimum price has been set for ores and concentrates, there does not appear to be any indication that a maximum has been placed on the price which may be paid.

This country has had some experience in the past in the alienation of natural resources to private interests, and it has not always made for better living standards among our people. Electrical energy has been one of these resources which have been exploited. It has been developed in many cases by private interests and later purchased by municipal or state bodies in order to protect the people from exploitation.

Private interests may develop uranium deposits along similar lines, but what guarantee is there that a monopoly may not shut out the small producer and then hold up the state when these ores are needed for vital economic development?

There the minister makes a reference to very special circumstances in which consideration might be given to the payment of a higher price by the government. I wonder what these very special circumstances would be. Would that possibly envisage the probability of war? We hope that will never occur, but if a war did occur we know that the atomic bomb would certainly come in for definite use. And if a war comes, it does not seem to me a very safe prospect to hand over the production of uranium, which is so important in the production of atomic energy, to private enterprise.

I think we should seriously object now, as we certainly should during a war period, to the paying of higher prices for an essential ore just to make it possible for shareholders to make profits when the nation is, in all probability, fighting for its life.

No one has any right to profit from war. We had an experience in the last war when profiteers were oblivious of everything else. Apart from war, however, which we all hope will never come, our quarrel with this situation should be definitely on the basis of the great economic value of this mineral, and because of that I feel that it should remain in the hands of the people. I therefore strenuously oppose the revocation of these orders, making it possible for private enterprise to get control of so important a commodity.

Mr. GREEN: May I ask the minister a question? Is there any indication that atomic energy will be usable to replace such commodities as coal and oil, of which Canada is in such short supply at the moment?

Mr. HOWE: We all know that the fission of uranium does release a tremendous amount of energy. Ways and means of using that energy are being studied at the moment, but it is too early to say positively what its economic uses may be. In the United Kingdom it has been announced in the House of Commons that plans are under way to utilize the heat transferred from fission as a means of heating, but here we are not far enough advanced to make an announcement of the kind.

[Mr. McKay.]

Mr. GREEN: We have not made as great progress along that line as the United Kingdom?

Mr. HOWE: I would not say. I do not know what progress they have made. They have made an announcement, and I would not be prepared to say that atomic energy would compete with either coal or electrical power from an economic point of view. The economics of the United Kingdom are somewhat different from those of Canada in that regard.

Mr. PROBE: I am definitely in agreement with other speakers of our group. I have opposed the rather casual way in which the Minister of Trade and Commerce treats the subject. I am getting used to the casualness with which he can dispose of economic empires in this country, doing it with a simple shrug of the shoulders or a wave of the hand. I happened to be sitting in this chamber about two and a half years ago, in August, 1945, when the Prime Minister of Canada made a statement during the meeting of provincial premiers, which startled, I am sure, all those within the sound of his voice. He made a pronouncement, which was startling to all the world, with respect to the first destructive action upon humanity that had been recorded so far as the material about which we are now speaking is concerned.

For that reason, or at least because of the impressions left with me and the feeling that we have not had a sufficiently broad statement from the minister as regards the military protection we are to have in connection with letting everyone who will, or who can afford to do so, dabble in this material under the limited protection the government is giving us, the people of Canada, I must protest against what looks to me like the selling of another important military commodity. I am not concerned at the moment about the details of economic development. I know nothing about it, and I know nothing about any phase of this work except that we are again selling or allowing to be given away something which belongs to the people of Canada. Yesterday a motion was moved to adjourn the House of Commons to discuss what was a matter of great import to all the Canadian people. Today with a shrug of the shoulders we are to give away something that would protect us.

I wish to ask a concrete question of the minister. I want to know just how much money has thus far been spent by the government of Canada for the purchase of property, equities in properties, mines or anything that is connected with uranium oxide or other radioactive materials that were purchased by the government before, during, or since the war. Then I want to know how much has been spent by the government for development since the acquisition of these properties. Then, what additional has been spent by way of assisting prospectors to find the materials? I might say that I am not opposed to an individual or a group of small individuals prospecting and finding materials for sale to the government, as was mentioned by the minister. But I certainly fear the cartel or larger corporation which, by stock manipulation and otherwise, will squeeze out the small man who finds the materials which have the value that these radioactive substances appear to have. I fear that then somebody in a swivel-chair will dictate policies to the Canadian people with respect to price and everything else. Would the minister give us some idea of how much Canadian money has been thrown around in this manner?

Mr. HOWE: I know of no Canadian money that has been thrown around. Canadian money has been carefully invested.

Mr. PROBE: That is better still.

Mr. HOWE: Great precautions have been taken. I think there is on record in this house about all the information I can give in the matter of government policy. The hon. member asks how much has been paid to encourage prospectors. All afternoon I have been trying to say that for several years we have been forbidding prospectors to look for uranium.

Mr. PROBE: Then the amount is nil. That is fine.

Mr. HOWE: Well, it is nil. My hon. friends in the C.C.F. group seem to imagine great fortunes coming out of the search for uranium. I have no such fear.

Mr. PROBE: There are great fortunes coming out of the search for everything, under certain conditions; I do not mean for the individual who does the searching.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. HOWE: I have never learned that there are many wealthy prospectors for gold, although there are a great many persistent gentlemen who have been following that vocation for a good many years. I sincerely hope that we can get the same calibre of prospectors interested in the search for uranium. Just as the government sets the price of $35 an ounce for gold, we have set a price $2.75 a pound for U_3O_8, we believe that the compensation is relatively about the same. By that offer we hope to lead to prospecting which will discover new sources of wealth for Canada.

Mr. PROBE: Surely the minister is not making the statement that that goes to the prospectors.

Mr. HOWE: It may be said that we have tremendous wealth in our Northwest Territories. It may be there, but it is not of much value until we find it.

Mr. PROBE: Agreed.

Mr. HOWE: The purpose of government policy is to lead in the direction of discovery of important deposits of uranium. At the moment we know of only one. We think there are others. We have found prospects which may be valuable when we open them up. We do not know. But we hope that over the years—and in not too many years—we shall find other important deposits of uranium in Canada. It is with that objective that the present regulations are framed.

Mr. KNOWLES: May I ask the minister just one administrative question? These orders in council that have been revoked were listed as being under the Department of Mines and Resources. Do we understand now that everything in connection with radioactive materials and the development of atomic energy is under the minister's department, so far as the government is concerned? By that I mean under the Department of Reconstruction and Supply.

Mr. HOWE: It is all under the direction of the atomic energy control board.

Mr. KNOWLES: Is there any division of the department or any controller that has anything to do with the matter?

Mr. HOWE: Except the atomic energy control board, which has the control of fissionable material.

Mr. KNOWLES: And the atomic energy control board comes under the direction of and is responsible to the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply?

Mr. HOWE: It is responsible to parliament. Parliament framed the act. It reports to parliament through the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply, yes.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

PROVISION FOR EMPLOYEES' PENSIONS, MINIMUM PRICE OF WHEAT DELIVERIES, ETC.

The house resumed from Tuesday, March 16, consideration of the motion of Mr. Howe for the second reading of Bill No. 135, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1935.

Mr. JEAN FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Temiscouata): I wish to conclude, Mr. Speaker, what I was saying the other night about this bill. It seems to be a socialist measure, and there are no half-ways with respect to free enterprise and socialism. A measure cannot be half socialist and half free enterprise. It must be either socialist or free enterprise, and this is why I again urge the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) to consider the desire of the farmers of Canada not to have oats and barley under the wheat board but to leave them to be dealt with by free enterprise.

The suggestion has been made by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture that these grains be handled by the wheat board. Some people are impressed by the word "co-operative". In a committee of this house we have seen what was done by a co-operative in the west; but I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that in my constituency there are co-operatives of farmers who buy their grain from private dealers instead of from the Coopérative Federée, and the price they pay is five or ten cents less than they would have to pay the co-operative. Whether that is because the co-operative is not well administered, or what is wrong, I am not in a position to say; but if one compares the prices of the private merchants with those of the co-operative it will be seen that the prices of the private grain dealers are lower. This is why some co-operatives in my constituency are dealing with private merchants instead of with the Coopérative Federée.

Mr. KNIGHT: May I ask a question?

Mr. POULIOT: I have only five minutes remaining, but I will answer the question.

Mr. KNIGHT: Does the particular co-operative of which the hon. gentleman speaks pay dividends?

Mr. POULIOT: I am not in a position to answer that question, but I tell my hon. friend that I had representations from this organization asking that they should not be required to pay taxes. The local merchants must pay taxes, but the Coopérative Federée is reluctant to do so, and I had some correspondence with them about the matter last year. I am not at all opposed to co-operatives. It is all right for the farmers to join together. But farmers are intelligent; they know where to buy, and very often they buy from local merchants instead of from an organization like that. This is my experience; this is what I learn from the farmers of my constituency.

In conclusion, once more I wish to tell my hon. friends of the Social Credit group that I do not want to offend anyone. I do not believe in their doctrine, but I know they are very good members of the house and they have the right to their views just as everyone here has a right to his views. In this matter I believe we should be sufficiently open-minded to consider what is best for the people concerned. I have tried to be the interpreter of the feelings of most of the farmers of my constituency in this respect. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, and hon. members of this house that if they consider the matter objectively they will realize that free enterprise has been the salvation of the farmer as well as of all other individuals. It is the best system. So I make a last appeal to those who sponsor this bill, and ask them not to bring coarse grains under the wheat board.

Mr. RALPH MAYBANK (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I do not suppose I shall take even until six o'clock, even though only fifteen minutes remain. I only wish to record my position with respect to this measure. As I see it, three principles are involved in this bill. The first is the establishment of a pension plan for those concerned with the operation of the wheat board. With respect to that, I think probably it will be unanimously accepted, and certainly I am in favour of it. The second principle dealt with by this legislation involves an increase in the payments to farmers for deliveries of wheat. Again I should think this would be accepted unanimously, and certainly I am in favour of this principle as it is expressed in the bill.

The third feature, however, with which I cannot agree, makes it possible to institute a state monopoly in nearly all grains produced in Canada. In that regard I wish to say only that I am opposed to this socialist principle. I do not follow the hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) in most of his statements, but I agree with his opposition to the introduction of this state monopoly. I realize, of course, that this bill does not actually institute a monopoly. It does make that possible, however; and because I know that if it were introducing a monopoly I would have to oppose it, I believe I should declare myself now as holding this view.

I do not know that such an expression of opinion makes very much difference, but it seems to me that I owe it to myself and to my constituents to make this statement. I was not elected here to bring about the institution of socialism. On the contrary, I was elected in opposition to such an idea; and until my electorate decides to have another sort of representation, or that it wants socialism, I feel that, in order to be true to the people who elected me, I have to oppose any measure which carries out the principle of state monopoly.

When it comes to voting I feel in a sort of quandary, and I imagine all hon. members who have similar views will feel as I do. I am strongly in favour of the provision for an additional payment to the farmer. I am also in favour of the pension provisions contained in the bill. I am in opposition to the third principle, as I have indicated. I believe that probably the bill should be supported and sent to committee, and that is the way I expect to vote. I do so on the understanding that in committee the bill will be divided into two parts and will come back to the house in two pieces, so that the provisions with respect to pensions and increased payments may be dealt with on the one hand, and the matter of state control considered by itself on the other.

I have spoken in this way only because I feel it is a person's duty to make his views known at some time. I have kept my remarks as brief as possible, because I believe it is a duty to the house to allow hon. members to get on with this legislation which, clearly, has majority support in the house.

While I have kept my word in saying that I did not think I would speak until six o'clock —and I observe I have not—I believe I have placed before the house briefly my views on the subject, and I thank hon. members for listening. With that I conclude.

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, before the measure is passed or voted upon, I wish to take a few minutes of the time of the house to summarize our position with respect to the various features of this bill.

The measure before us is one to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act. This bill has four distinctly different features. Some of these we support. One we could support, with one variation in it; and the fourth we find ourselves unable to support.

The first feature of the bill is that which provides a pension fund for the officers and employees of the board. The second gives power to the board to pay to wheat farmers a part of their own money which the government has been holding back from them. The third feature of the bill gives the wheat board the same powers to handle wheat products that it now has in respect of wheat. I presume those wheat products include flour, bran, shorts and the like.

The fourth feature of the bill is one which would force farmers who grow oats and barley to sell those crops only through the wheat board, and thus to accept prices fixed by a government-appointed board, and administered by the same government-appointed board.

With respect to the second and third of these features, as I said a minute ago, we are in agreement. In the matter of pensions to officers and employees I may say that we agree in principle, but we differ as to the manner of assessment of costs for the half of that scheme not borne by the employees. Then, with respect to the fourth feature, namely the one which compels farmers to market through one board, and denies them the right to sell in any other way, we are opposed. We are opposed because, as I said, it forces them to sell to only one board. We are opposed because, in our judgment, by our forcing them to sell in that way they will be forced to accept a price lower than they might otherwise receive.

I wish to discuss each of these four features as briefly as I can. As to the general question of the desirability of pensions for public servants, I believe there is general agreement as to principle. But as to who should pay a part of the cost of that service, there is a good deal of difference of opinion as to where the assessment should be placed. The question before us is not one as to whether it is desirable that the employees of a public institution such as this should qualify for pension. Rather, the pertinent question is this: Who is to pay the cost of those pensions? These are costs which may run into scores, perhaps hundreds of thousands of dollars in the years ahead.

The bill proposes that half the cost of the pension scheme shall be borne by the officers and employees themselves. With respect to that feature, I imagine that there will be substantially unanimous support, as there will be to the general question of providing pensions. If other public or semi-public bodies such as this are to have pensions provided to their employees, there is no reason why this one should not. The question is: Who should be assessed with that part of the cost which is not borne by the employees themselves? That question raises a basic point, namely, as to whether this is a farmers' board charged with responsibility and accepting the responsibility for marketing the farmers' wheat to the best advantage, or whether it is a government board charged with the responsibility of being used for something other than that purpose.

If this is a farmers' board charged primarily with the marketing of farmers' crops, farmers' wheat, to the best advantage, then this half of the cost should be assessed against those doing business with the board, namely the farmers of Canada.

Your Honour, I see it is six o'clock.

Mr. HOWE: If I may be permitted a word before six o'clock, I am sorry to say I have an engagement of long standing for this evening. It is my first offence this year, and I hope hon. members will bear with me. It is the wish of the government that at eight o'clock the house resume discussion of the emergency legislation of the Minister of Finance, with respect to excise tax, and to continue this debate tomorrow.

On motion of Mr. Bracken the debate was adjourned.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Mr. Speaker, at six o'clock the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) had not finished his speech and just after six o'clock some of us attempted to make an arrangement, off the record, so that he would have an opportunity to conclude his remarks. He cannot be here at eight o'clock this evening because he has an appointment, but whatever the government leader decides will be satisfactory provided that the leader of the opposition can conclude his remarks.

Mr. GARDINER: Mr. Speaker, it was arranged before dinner by representatives of the different groups that we would continue the debate on the second reading of Bill No. 135, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, until the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bryce) had made his speech and that then the debate would be adjourned. If that is agreeable to the house, the hon. member for Selkirk might proceed now.

Mr. KNOWLES: Is it understood that the right of the leader of the opposition to resume his speech later is protected, or just what is the arrangement?

Mr. GARDINER: I understood from the hon. member for Souris that the leader of the opposition is prepared to continue in committee with what he has to say, and the arrangement was that the hon. member for Selkirk would resume the debate tonight and that when he had finished the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. McIlraith) would adjourn the debate.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): If it is the government's desire I presume that the leader of the opposition will finish his remarks in committee, but in all fairness I suggest that when the hon. member for Selkirk has finished his remarks one of our members should be allowed to adjourn the debate.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I should point out to the house that the leader of the opposition has already spoken and that if the debate continues now he would not be allowed under the rules to speak a second time on second reading.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I would hope that there would be unanimous consent to allowing the leader of the opposition to finish his speech.

Mr. KNOWLES: There will be so far as we are concerned.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Just so that the record will be clear, I understand that it is the unanimous desire of the house that the leader of the opposition be allowed to continue his speech after the hon. member for Selkirk has spoken.

Mr. ABBOTT: Agreed.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

PROVISION FOR EMPLOYEES' PENSIONS, MINIMUM PRICE OF WHEAT DELIVERIES, ETC.

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Howe for the second reading of Bill No. 135, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1935.

Mr. WILLIAM BRYCE (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to prolong this debate, because I am just as anxious as anyone else in the house to see these cheques go out to the farmers, and therefore I shall be brief.

Let me say at the outset that I do not see why these cheques cannot go out before the bill is passed. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) can impose taxes and make arrangements for collecting them before a bill for that purpose is passed, so that in an emergency like this, when the farmers are waiting anxiously for this money, I do not see why the cheques could not be sent out now and the bill be passed later.

The second part of the bill has to do with pensions for the employees of the wheat board. I have sat in my seat and listened to criticism of that proposal by different members. But the wheat board is really the farmer in business; I personally have always been in favour of a man having some security for his old age, and I do not see how the farmers can take any exception to pensions being provided for the employees of the board. If we employ people to do our business it is only right that we should pay them and treat them fairly. But I should not like to see the minister have the whole say in this matter. I should like to see half a dozen farmers on the advisory committee of the wheat board have some say as to pensions, in order that the interests of the farmer may be safeguarded and the pensions paid in a fair way. The Canadian National Railways has its pension fund and the Canadian wheat board is, in many ways, a similar institution, so that I do not think we can take any exception to providing pensions for the employees of the wheat board.

The third part of the bill, which would bring in barley or oats, is the most contentious part of the bill. Many members object to it and some members are in favour of it. Personally, not only am I in favour of it but I do not think it goes far enough. I cannot understand some of the objections that have been made against the wheat board. My good friend the hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot), who is not in his place at the moment, has condemned the wheat board over the distribution of feeds, something with which the wheat board has absolutely nothing to do. I have been the guest of the hon. member for Temiscouata before and have an invitation to go back again, and I intend to go back and try, by reasoned argument, to show him how the wheat board will be an advantage not only to the west but to the east as well.

The hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) and the hon. member for Winnipeg South (Mr. Maybank) were clear-cut in what they had to say. They have no use for the wheat board. They prefer a speculative system.

My good friends the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Miller) did not commit themselves. I have read over their speeches and I see that they want whatever method will give to the farmer the greatest advantage. I think that sums up their position fairly, but really I cannot understand two hon. members who have been raised on the prairies not being able to make up their minds as to which method will be best for the farmer. I gave them credit for more intelligence and for being able to come to a decision as to which method would be best for the farmer.

Most hon. gentlemen who have spoken against the wheat board have been lawyers. They have pointed out how the farmer will lose his independence if we adopt the wheat board. I cannot understand how a lawyer should take that position, because lawyers belong to the strongest union in the world. They are dictated to by the bar association. They are told what they shall do and what they shall not do. When it comes to the farmer organizing for himself and trying to do something better than he has ever done before, what happens? It is said that you are taking away the farmer's independence. That argument will not hold water. The farmer has organized to protect himself. He is doing only what other people have done, and why it should be wrong in his case I cannot understand. If the farmers vote by a majority that they want to market their grain in that way, then it should be logical for them to do it in that way. When it is pointed out that by having a wheat board, we are taking away liberty of the farmer, I can only point out what the lawyers' union would do. If a lawyer breaks any of the rules of the bar association they will unfrock or ungown him; I do not know what they call it. They will deprive him of his living. But no farm organization has ever tried to deprive anybody of his living. The farm organizations have tried to raise the standard of living of the farmer, and we should not endeavour to throw cold water on the wheat board. The wheat board is not everything I should like to see, but it is something better than we had before, and I hope we shall have more of it in the future.

The hon. member for Winnipeg South (Mr. Mutch) talked about the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. He can correct me if I am wrong, but I think he said forty per cent of the farmers belonged to it. I want to assure the hon. member that the last survey showed that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture have over fifty-five per cent of the farmers of Canada on their books.

Mr. MUTCH: I am sure the hon. gentleman would not want to misquote me. I think he will find that I said I doubted whether the Canadian council of agriculture and other farm organizations spoke for forty per cent of the farmers. There are live locals and there are others. If you look at some of the protests I think you will find the names of many local directors of the local pool.

Mr. BRYCE: I can assure my hon. friend that he can speak for the dead ones if he wishes, but I am speaking for the live ones. I have authentic information to show that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture speaks for fifty-five per cent of the farmers of Canada today, both east and west.

Mr. MUTCH: You can assure me but you will not convince me.

Mr. BRYCE: I do not know whether my hon. friend asked me a question or not. I have never pitted my strength against a lawyer yet, because I know I would be beaten.

Mr. MUTCH: On a point of privilege, I have been accused of being a lawyer many times, and I have resented and repudiated it. I am not a lawyer.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): On a point of privilege, I want it known that there are lawyers, members of bar associations, and then there are barber shop and barrack-room lawyers here to whom we are listening all the time.

Mr. BRYCE: I did not think I was insulting my hon. friend tonight. I have always respected the lawyers. I may get into difficulties some day and may need to use a lawyer. Therefore I do not want to be too hard on them.

It has been said that professional men get to the top of these farm organizations as leaders. I want to correct that misapprehension. I am one of the men who have climbed to the top of the Manitoba federation. I did not do that in one year. I started in the local organization and went to the district organization, then to the provincial and right up to the top. You do not do that unless you have the confidence of the people whom you represent. To say that they are just figureheads or professional leaders is not true. I do not want hon. gentlemen to believe that, because it is not true. You have to climb that ladder and have the support of the farmers who send you there before you can go that distance.

I regret that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) has not seen fit to include rye in this bill; it should have been included. Speculators in rye raised the price to $4.05 a bushel. Until last year the miller paid 64¼ cents a bushel for his rye, and the speculator was paid out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada. Somebody may say to me, "Well, the farmer got his share of that". I am going to ask, what percentage did he get? He did not get the percentage that the speculators got. As most hon. members know, I am against the speculators market. I do not think it is the right and proper way for the farmers to sell grain. It might have been all right in 1903 but not today.

Three groups are interested in the speculative market. There are the farmers, the millers and the grain handling firms. You must have the speculators to buy hedges. The speculative market cannot operate unless you have the speculator to come in. Have hon. members considered who the speculator is? A survey was made on the Chicago board of trade of the people who were carrying on speculation to keep the farmers' price going up and down, to take up the hedges. When the government looked to see who was trading in wheat on the Chicago board of trade one day last fall they found, amongst the 3,287 speculators, six clergymen, twenty-four students, six butlers and maids, 308 housewives, 846 farmers, 181 barbers, butchers and bakers and even 44 unemployed.

Mr. ABBOTT: No lawyers?

Mr. BRYCE: The minister does not want me to tell him about the lawyers; I shall let them go this time. I know a great many commissions have sat in my province—I think there have been about eighteen altogether—to look into the marketing of grain and inquire into the futures market. All of them have either approved or condoned the futures market or the futures trade. The fact that so many inquiries have been held in such a short space of time is definite proof that the speculative grain market has failed to give the farmers satisfaction. Can hon. members imagine what would happen if other people had to depend on speculation in a market like that for their bread and butter?

May I quote what I heard another man say, and I have tried to copy it as correctly as I could. Speaking of the results that would follow if everybody were in a speculative market, not only the farmer but everybody else, he states that the effect would be something like this:

> Let us suppose that other classes of people in Manitoba obtained their financial rewards under a speculative system. The results would perhaps be something like this: We would read in the morning's paper that with few exceptions, the market is weak all along the line today. May carpenters were quoted steady to 25 cents off. The market for July plumbers lacked serious support and reacted to a persistent try by short sellers by dropping 30 cents below yesterday's average. Or we might read that weakness was most pronounced in the barber's pit, where the price of December haircuts dropped 30 cents, while plain shaves for December delivery decreased five points to 15½ cents. Or we might read that the only strong point in the labour market was in stenographers, where a squeeze put the price up to $25 a week. Or let us suppose that our Manitoba farmers were to read in the morning paper that May tractors showed a decline of $75 from yesterday's final quotations, or that January refrigerators dropped $40, or spot seed drills were steady at $8 below yesterday's closing. Or it may be that we would read that an unusually large crop of doctors graduated from Canadian universities, and as a result the cost of appendix operations dropped $10 in the medical exchange this morning.

All this may be considered amusing, but such are the conditions under which the farmer is expected to market his produce by those who champion the speculative system in normal times. Many farmers believe what the late President Roosevelt said:

Over-production, under-production and speculation are three evil sisters. Over-production and under-production are about as good for speculators as overindulgence or undernourishment is to the medical profession.

I had the pleasure of being at Lake Success when that great little fighter, the late Mayor LaGuardia, spoke at the food conference. The leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) was there and so was the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin), when that gentleman spoke and condemned speculation. And, by the way, I may say that when I was at the united nations I paid my own expenses. I do not want anyone to get the idea that somebody else paid them.

Mr. MacNICOL: You deserve credit for that.

Mr. BRYCE: Here is what the late Mayor LaGuardia said:

"You cannot have both stability in prices and security for the farmer as well as fluctuation in prices. It is no use saying that we are not going to interfere with free exchange and free sales. If you want what is needed," Mr. LaGuardia warned, "you will interfere, and you will put every gambling grain exchange out of business in Chicago, Winnipeg, in Liverpool or wherever it exists."

There were fifty-four nations represented around that table that morning. Nobody spoke against that statement, and Canada was represented there. If we disagreed with that statement, our representatives should have stood up and condemned it and declared that we wanted a speculative market. No one advocates that any other producer of goods should sell his produce on a speculative market, because he would be at the mercy of the speculator. I am sure no one would expect the Cockshutt Plow Company, Massey-Harris, or any of the other manufacturers to sell their goods on a speculative market, and I do not think the farmer should be expected to do so.

While there has been rumblings in the west and grumbling about the price paid for wheat, and dissatisfaction in more ways than one, the idea of a central agency to handle grain has had the approval of most of the western farmers. I think that has been pretty definitely agreed to, that the farmer in the west wants orderly marketing through a grain board or a cereal board, call it what you like. But if we are ever to build up that ever-normal granary to provide for drought years or grasshopper years, we must get away from speculative marketing and get down to orderly marketing through a wheat board or some organization similar to that.

On motion of Mr. McIlraith the debate was adjourned.

WAYS AND MEANS

EXCISE TAX ACT AMENDMENT

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Excise Tax Act and to provide:

1. Effective on and after November 18, 1947, an excise tax of 25 per cent is imposed on the following goods:

(a) The following electrical appliances: waffle irons; roasters; kettles; chafing dishes; juice extractors; coffee makers; toasters of all kinds; portable humidifiers; curling irons or tongs, hair dryers; permanent waving machines and spacers or clamps; rods and heaters therefor; razors and shavers; garbage disposal units;

(b) The following electrical appliances when adapted to household use: food or drink mixers; food choppers and grinders; irons and ironers; vacuum cleaners and attachments therefor; floor waxers and polishers;

(c) Electric or gas refrigerators or freezing equipment, and coils, condensing or compressor units, cabinets, boxes, evaporators and expansion valves therefor; all the foregoing when adapted to household or apartment use or when for use in places of entertainment, amusement or recreation, including rinks, auditoria, halls and clubs;

(d) Firearms except for military or police purposes;

(e) Outboard motors;

(f) Motorcycles, and all other two- or three-wheeled motor-driven vehicles including motors for attachment to bicycles but not including vehicles specially designed for carrying goods or for use by invalids;

(g) Projectors for slides, films or pictures designed for industrial or professional photographers' use;

(h) Toilet articles of all kinds (including combs, mirrors and brushes other than tooth brushes or shaving brushes the duty paid value or the Canadian manufacturer's selling price of which combs, mirrors and brushes is more than twenty-five cents each) and which items do not already come within any other item in schedule one of the said act.

2. That on and after November 18, 1947, the rate of excise tax on automobiles adapted or adaptable for passenger use with seating capacity for not more than ten persons each, imported into or manufactured or produced in Canada be increased from ten per cent to the following rates, namely, on automobiles valued at $1,200 or less, 25 per cent over $1,200 but not more than $2,000, 25 per cent on $1,200 plus 50 per cent on the amount in excess of $1,200; over $2,000, 25 per cent on $1,200 plus 50 per cent on $800 plus 75 per cent on the amount in excess of $2,000.

3. That on and after November 18, 1947, the rate of excise tax on phonographs, record-playing devices, radio broadcast receiving sets and tubes therefor, be increased from ten per cent to twenty-five per cent.

4. That on and after November 18, 1947, the rate of excise tax on cameras, photographic films and plates, projectors for slides, films or pictures, except those designed exclusively for industrial or professional photographers' use, be increased from ten per cent to twenty-five per cent.

5. That on and after November 18, 1947, electricity and gas used in dwellings be exempt from consumption or sales tax; and

6. That on and after November 18, 1947, the excise tax of one per cent per pound on sugar, grape sugar, glucose, sugar syrup, corn syrup, etc., be repealed.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): When we last had this resolution before us I had pointed out to the minister that in his opening speech he had said that the main purpose of the new taxes is to save United States dollar exchange. Other reasons were given, but I suggested to the minister that we should not be asked to vote on this resolution until we had some estimate—and after all, some months have elapsed now since it came into effect—of the amount of United States exchange which is, in fact, being saved. I suggested, as best I could, a certain method which the minister might follow, and I am bound to say he did not think much of it. I also suggested to him that no doubt his officials would have a better method of doing it, and I hope that tonight he will be able to give us some figures. I might remind the minister that there were three or four reasons given for the passage of the bill, to be founded on the resolution, but this was the first and most important, and I suggest that some figures should now be given the committee.

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): Following the discussion we had some days ago when this matter was before the committee, I discussed it again with the officials. I am sure one cannot give in dollars and cents the saving of United States exchange which might result from the imposition of deterring taxes of this kind. Of course the initial saving in articles that are subject to the tax will come as a result of the operation of schedule III of the import restriction bill. There will be an incidental saving, and an incidental saving only if the tax will then slow down the consumption of the articles which are being manufactured in Canada and which are already subject to some control, shall we say, by the operation of schedule III.

I do not suppose one can yet say that there is any backing up of sales of, let us say, automobiles. In the case of automobiles, schedule III, through the foreign exchange control board order in council, has been in operation for a matter of only two or three weeks. Therefore I again say that I do not see how, at this stage, I could possibly be expected to express in terms of dollars and cents what the saving would be. There is the second effect, as my hon. friend appreciates, which is desired, and that is the general slowing down of consumption in Canada in order to create again this over-all current account surplus of which I have spoken. I have asked my officials if they can give even a rough estimate of what effect this might have had expressed in terms of dollars and cents, and they tell me it is impossible to do so. I may have misunderstood what my hon. friend wanted. If I have, perhaps he will try to show me where I have misunderstood him.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I will try. In the first place, I have a feeling as this goes on, that however much we may have disliked certain features of Bill No. 3, the embargo, nevertheless it has teeth in it and it can act. In connection with that we obtained, although with some difficulty, figures from the Minister of Trade and Commerce as to what the government thought it might achieve in the way of money.

Mr. ABBOTT: The minister said what it would do in the future.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Yes. I appreciate that this is different. But nevertheless I still suggest that these figures could be obtained. First of all, I am surprised if this is being brought forward with no estimated figures of any kind. I wonder if the minister really wants to go so far as to state that. In the second place, I suggest that, while the embargo has been in effect for only a few weeks, this tax has already been in effect for a few months—actually since November last. Surely the saving which will be effected by this is, in effect, the saving by reason of the slowing up, as the minister said a moment ago, of the manufacture of Canadian goods into which United States parts go. Are we in agreement on that?

Mr. ABBOTT: I think that is accurate. I would hope that the imposition of this fairly stiff tax of 25 per cent on a line of semi-luxury articles, shall we call them, would have the effect of getting people to slow down in their purchases. That is the intention. If this objective is not achieved, the tax will of course, have failed. But it will at least have this effect, that if people spend their money on these things, they will not have it to spend on something else and force the prices of those things up.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): The minister is now bringing in what I call his deflationary argument.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is all right.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I think we want to stick to one thing at a time and that, when we are trying to assess one reason, we should not go off to another. I am not underestimating the difficulties, but I am saying and repeating, perhaps a little tiresomely, that I do not think we should be asked to go it blind in this thing. There should be some estimate. We happen to be in the position that the thing has already been in operation for three months. I now come back to my suggestion. My suggestion is that it is perfectly feasible to find the sales which were taking place in the classes of goods before November 17 and the sales which were taking place after that date, when the tax came into effect. I am not suggesting that is a perfect test. I know there are certain qualifications in that which the minister will want to make and which I might make for him. But I still suggest that these figures would give us some prima facie evidence as to whether or not any definite effect is being produced. Suppose it is found actually that the consumption of these things in Canada has been greater since November. The minister might say he expects to find them greater because of the cutting off of United States goods. I appreciate that.

Mr. ABBOTT: May I say—

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): May I finish?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I suggest that this is a figure which could be obtained. I cannot think there is any difficulty in getting that because, after all, I understand the department from month to month, through its agents, visits the various companies and examines the taxation records; therefore they know the consumption, production and sale of the articles in question. The producers can equally well give the figures before November 17. Therefore I do not think the figure is an impossible one to get.

Mr. ABBOTT: It may not be absolutely impossible. I cannot say that it is. But the officials tell me that they cannot obtain or cannot yet give an accurate estimate of what the result is. On the question of cars and radios may I say this. I have had numerous discussions with representative groups of car manufacturers and radio manufacturers, because they are two of the larger groups. The car manufacturers do not claim that the tax has yet slowed down the consumption of cars. They tell me that they think it will. Whether they are right or wrong, I do not know. The same thing applies to the radio people. No one has contended to me that the sale of radios has yet been diminished. But the radio manufacturers who come in tell me that they are most apprehensive as to what the result will be in the near future. I tell them that I hate to say it but I am glad to hear that, because that is the sort of thing I am trying to accomplish with this tax. I wish I could give my hon. friend the figures. I think he will bear me out when I say that I am the last man who ever tries to keep figures from this house. If the information is available, I want to give it. But I have not been able to get from the officials, or they are not prepared to give me, an estimate which they believe can give any accurate indication of what the effect of this new tax has been on sales. I put on Hansard a week or so ago the total tax collections on this group, and I gave the estimated increased tax. Those are the only figures that the officials tell me they can give. To try to pull out of that what the sales would have been had the tax not been on, is something which the national revenue department tell me they cannot do.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I suggest that the minister has really not said that these figures cannot be obtained. Rather what he has said is that he does not think the thing has gone on long enough yet to achieve the hoped-for result. He says he hopes that will come later. That is a perfectly legitimate hope. I say again that I realize the difficulty of the question I am asking; nevertheless I do not believe that it is impossible for these figures to be obtained.

I still suggest that these figures should be obtained so that we are not asked to vote on something absolutely blind, as we are now being asked to do.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am a little bit lost in this. I really would like to give my hon. friend the information for which he asks. Perhaps the officials could go into the figures and estimate what tax would have been collected had there been no increase and try to translate that into the number of units, and that could be applied to radios and automobiles. But this tax covers a much wider field than that. Suppose my hon. friend had that information. I do not wish to be offensive, but what good would it do him? What conclusion could he draw from it? After two or three months' operation, and with stocks in hand, I do not see what useful information that would give him.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): It seems to me that it is reasonable for me to say this: Suppose these figures are obtained and that they show that up to the present there is no sign of any saving in United States exchange at all.

Mr. ABBOTT: But we cannot tell whether it has saved United States exchange or not.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I am not so sure. I am not under-estimating the difficulties, and I do not intend to persist in this unduly; but I still do not think the minister has told me that the figures cannot be obtained. What the minister has said is that he thinks that, when the figures are obtained, they will not show anything that will be enlightening. Maybe not. Maybe I shall have to admit that.

Mr. ABBOTT: I will tell my hon. friend this. I think the sales of radios, since this tax went into effect, have been just as great as they were before. I make that assertion. I do not know whether it is true but possibly it is the case. I am sure that the sales of domestically produced automobiles have been just as great. The purchasing power in this country is such, and the demand for automobiles at the moment is such, that people will buy them whether or not there is an extra 25 per cent tax. But one cannot judge the ultimate results of this on the initial one, two or three months' operations, and I do not believe any figures one would give as to tax receipts for the first two or three months would prove anything at all. I could give those figures; I gave them before.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Not exactly the ones I am asking for. It seems to me that what the minister is saying is not that we cannot have those figures, but that he thinks they will not be any good to us if we get them. Coming back to what I said before, I would say that if the figures on automobiles and radios prove what he suggested a moment ago, namely, that there has been no reduction, I will frankly concede to the minister that this does not necessarily mean the tax is no good; but equally I say it does not prove the tax is good. In other words, surely the minister cannot ask us to vote for something without some further indication than just a kind of reasoning on general principles.

Mr. ABBOTT: Well, Mr. Chairman, the minister and the government proceed on the assumption that the imposition of a tax will have the effect which is generally accepted among economists and those who know something about fiscal methods; that is, that it will slow down consumption of the article which is taxed. Perhaps the wealth and spending power of this country are such that this tax will not have that effect. Perhaps the tax is inadequate; perhaps we should have made it 50 per cent or 75 per cent. I do not think so. I can only be assertive, but I believe the tax will accomplish the results, or will help to accomplish the results we are trying to achieve. If it should not, then, of course, it would have been useless to impose it, but I do not think we can determine that at this stage of the game.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Then let me ask just one other question. I repeat that the reason I am being persistent in this is that I think you have already in your hands one weapon which is effective, and I have very great doubts as to whether this new weapon is effective. Also I have no doubt whatever that it is offensive to a large number of people.

There is another consideration which enters in here, and in this connection there should be a figure which can be obtained. That is, even if this slowing down process does occur, then coming back to our test in connection with United States exchange, all you are saving is the lowered amount of United States parts that go into these articles; that is to say, the lowered amount of United States parts that are used. Some of these things have a trifling amount of United States parts, and some have none at all. That is the other figure for which I asked the other night which, if it were found, I think might show that, as far as the saving of United States exchange is concerned, this measure is trivial.

Mr. ABBOTT: Surely I do not have to go into my reduction of consumption thesis again and point out that if we are to continue to ship goods abroad on credit, somehow or another we must reduce our domestic consumption and create again this over-all current account surplus we have lost. The fiscal method is one way of doing that. My criticism of this tax, if I were speaking from the point of view of economics and were sitting across the way, would be that it does not cover a wide enough field; that it should cover more; that it should not be restricted to electrical equipment, cars and so on, but that we should go into a wider field. That might be a valid criticism; but when my hon. friend says it will not accomplish the results expected he is being assertive, and I can only be assertive and say I hope it will.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): The minister is now changing to another argument. It may be a good argument, but I want to bring him back—

Mr. ABBOTT: I know what I said in my opening remarks, but I am not tied to that as the only reason for which this tax is being imposed.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): No, you are not tied to it.

Mr. ABBOTT: No one will contend that.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): No. I have said there are several other reasons, but I think it proper to say the minister pointed out that this was the main reason. If the main reason turns out to be valid, then we are entitled to doubt the other reasons as well. I want to see what validity there is in this main reason, first of all. It may turn out that it is not the main reason at all; that there are other, better reasons; but I submit that we are entitled to find out if this main reason is a real reason.

Mr. ABBOTT: I can answer my hon. friend only by saying I think it is too soon for us to judge. In putting this forward, the government believes it will accomplish these results. The initial results of the over-all program have been good. Perhaps six months from now we shall be in a better position to see whether it is really doing what we hope it will. I wish I could give my hon. friend the figures he would like to have, but I do not seem able to do so. I cannot help that.

Mr. THATCHER: I will ask the minister perhaps a little easier question, if the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario has finished. If we are able to cut the consumption of these things at home, I understand from the minister that we shall send the surplus to the United States, if possible, to try and get United States dollars?

Mr. ABBOTT: Not necessarily.

Mr. THATCHER: I believe the Minister of Trade and Commerce said that. But my understanding is that the United States customs authorities intend to take this 25 per cent into account when they put on their tariff.

Mr. ABBOTT: We dealt with that the other evening; but we are not shipping cars back to the United States.

Mr. THATCHER: It is not just cars I am thinking about. I have in mind refrigerators and all the other things.

Mr. ABBOTT: If we cut down the consumption of refrigerators and other articles which contain metal, we can sell the metal in its original form for dollars in the United States or anywhere else. That is one way whereby we can get United States exchange. Instead of using labour in Canada to convert the metal into things our own people consume, we shall sell the raw materials. We can sell all the copper, all the nickel, all the aluminum and so on, we produce; and we can sell it for hard currency.

Mr. THATCHER: Does the minister say none of the things in this schedule are being exported to the United States?

Mr. ABBOTT: We have pretty well taken out of the schedule those articles in which we have an export market in the United States. As I explained on earlier occasions, that was one reason we took out such things as hot plates, because some of our manufacturers have built up a market for those articles in the United States. The same is true of golf clubs. One may ask why we would take golf clubs out of the list. We found that some of our manufacturers had developed a profitable export market in the United States. The same thing applies to golf balls. That is why we took these sporting goods out of the schedule, because there were these export opportunities in the United States. But we do not and cannot export refrigerators to the United States; at least we never have done so. We have never exported cars to the United States. I do not know about radios.

Mr. THATCHER: Did the minister make representations to the United States authorities?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes. If my hon. friend will look at page 2131 of Hansard he will see the explanation I gave the other evening in reply to the hon. member for Kindersley. We made representations. Under the Geneva agreements the United States have undertaken to change their practice so that a tax of this kind would not be included for duty purposes. But that requires legislative action by congress, and until the legislative action has been taken, the United States customs authorities are obliged to include the tax. My hon. friend will find that information in Hansard as I have indicated; an hon. member from Toronto asked me the same question.

Mr. CASE: The farther we go, the more confusing this becomes. I have listened to the explanations given by the minister, and he has not yet put us in possession of any facts or figures to prove that this is right. In other words, it would appear that so far it has been a bit of guesswork, much the same as the last two budgets which have been presented to this house. Each made a forecast which was out by millions upon millions of dollars. It seems to me that, irrespective of what the minister says, the object of this is to raise more revenue; in any event that seems to be one of the results.

Mr. ABBOTT: We took off some taxes at the same time.

Mr. CASE: Let me say this, and I say it with great respect for the minister because he did give an explanation. I remind you, Mr. Chairman, that there are two schools of thought. One school believes this could have been done by leaving our dollar devalued and having the 90-cent dollar or the 81-cent dollar, or whatever it might be. The minister has explained that; and I suppose the same people are advising him now who advised him then.

Another explanation the minister gave was that, because of the trend toward inflation in the United States, he felt it was necessary to bring our dollar on a par with the United States dollar. May I ask this: Can the minister tell me why he would place our dollar on a par with the United States dollar, where it would buy a dollar's worth of United States goods and by the same token on November 17 reverse the position and say that the Canadian dollar was worth only seventy-five cents?

Mr. ABBOTT: I would love to debate this question of devaluation with the hon. member for Grey North, and I have already made several statements on it. However it is not strictly relevant to the committee's discussion of this ways and means resolution, and I think I must reserve that discussion to some other time.

[Mr. Abbott.]

Mr. CASE: All I am trying to get at is this. You have now devalued the Canadian dollar in the home market by the imposition of this excise tax. You are saying, "For numerous goods your dollar will buy only seventy-five cents worth; and the other twenty-five cents goes to the government."

Mr. ABBOTT: I will answer my hon. friend. We are exercising selective devaluation, not across-the-board devaluation.

Mr. CASE: Selective devaluation is resting in the hands of a group of bureaucrats. We have very little to say about directing their course. That same group are advising the minister, and they have got into effect this measure which has already been said to be unconstitutional. And you are going to depend upon the government's majority sitting behind you to pass it.

Mr. BENTLEY: I should like to ask the minister a plain question, one which is not quite so complicated as some of the others which have been asked. As I have come up to these buildings in the last few days I have seen some small cards in the windows of stores where magazines are sold. These cards read, "Back on Canadian newsstands, True Romances and True Story". How does that help us save United States dollars?

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not think it does. I imagine that the enterprising publishers of these delightful publications have arranged to put them out in Canada. I am only guessing, but I think that must be so. They are certainly prohibited, so far as entry into Canada is concerned.

Mr. BENTLEY: Still prohibited.

Mr. ABBOTT: They must be printing them here.

The CHAIRMAN: I must remind hon. members that we are dealing with the Excise Tax Act. Magazines do not come into this discussion; they do not come within the act, at all.

Mr. BENTLEY: I shall not ask the question again.

Mr. QUELCH: There is one question I wish to ask the minister. I have heard him say on many occasions that one of the reasons for putting on this excise tax is the fact that we are exporting on credit. I should like to ask him if he is absolutely certain that we are.

Mr. ABBOTT: I did not put it that way.

Mr. QUELCH: It means the same thing. We both mean the same thing. I should like to ask him if he is quite satisfied that we are actually exporting on credit. I ask that because I heard the Minister of Agriculture say that these are not really loans, but rather that they are gifts which will never be repaid. Are we exporting on credit or are we actually making gifts of these goods?

Mr. ABBOTT: I answered that the other day in reply to a question by the hon. member for Kamloops. I said that these credits are being made under the terms of a contract which calls for repayment. As Minister of Finance, I expect that contract to be carried out. Of course, under existing conditions it would perhaps be unreasonably optimistic to expect all of this loan to be met at maturity. And there will unquestionably or probably be some loss. We set by each year in our accounts out of current revenue the amount of $25,000,000, I believe it is, in a reserve to take care of loss on inactive assets; just as businessmen would do. I cannot give my hon. friend any other answer.

Mr. QUELCH: All right. The minister expects at some future day that a large number of these loans will be repaid.

Mr. ABBOTT: I would hope so, yes.

Mr. QUELCH: So that all we need to do is to ask the people to defer their spending until a future day, or until such time as these nations pay for what they receive. Then these goods will be available for the people to buy. That being so, would it not be satisfactory for the government, as the hon. member for Peace River suggested, to float a loan to buy food for these countries, such loan to be subscribed from the savings of the people? I am not suggesting that the government should borrow from the banks, because that would mean an expansion. But would it not be possible for the government to borrow the savings of the people and in that way reduce the demand for goods, so as to make those goods available for other countries? Then, when those nations repay the loan the government will be able to repay the loan made from the people, and the people will have money with which to buy goods.

Mr. ABBOTT: That would be effective only if the floating of such a loan and subscriptions to it by the people resulted in effective reduction in consumption in this country; if the people, as a result of having put their money into these loans, and having no other money to use for the purchase of commodities, would be unable to or would voluntarily refrain from purchasing consumption or capital goods in this country or importing them from the United States. Otherwise we could float loans until we were blue in the face without helping our balance of payments position.

No one understands better than my hon. friend that the crux of this balance of payments difficulty is this, that we have ceased to have in this country an over-all current account surplus. In other words, we are consuming just about as much as we are producing.

Mr. JACKMAN: That is not the crux of it.

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes.

Mr. QUELCH: The minister has been putting forward to the people, or it was put to them at one time, that it was necessary for them to buy bonds in order to curtail spending. It seems to me that if the government were to carry on the same program, explaining to the people the necessity for helping foreign nations by supplying goods, and by asking the people in the lower income brackets to buy bonds for that purpose, it would not have to float loans with the people in the high-income brackets. Then the minister would agree that it would have the effect he desires, and probably it would do it more effectively than the excise tax.

Mr. ABBOTT: It is possible. The people bought these bonds during wartime, and rightly so, under wartime conditions. But now the war is over and a great many people naturally want to go out and buy new refrigerators, new radios, new washing machines and all the rest of it. That is a very natural thing to do. But unfortunately we are not yet in a position, because of these world difficulties, to which I have referred, where the people can fully gratify those wishes; that is, if we are to continue to play our part in helping in the recovery of the devastated countries.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I wish to ask one or two questions. The first one deals with what has just been discussed by the hon. member for Acadia. It is this: Did I understand the Minister of Finance correctly a minute ago when he said, as I thought, that he figured these loans would be paid, although not altogether on their due date. Did I understand him to say that?

Mr. ABBOTT: I have said twice that they are made under terms which call for repayment, and I expect them to be repaid. It would perhaps be unreasonably optimistic to expect they would all be repaid. That is what I have said. And the portion that would not be repaid would be small. I have no reason to think, for instance, that the United Kingdom would not live up to its obligations. She has always done so in the past. I expect she will continue to do so.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I am sure she will, if she can. The point I make is this. Apparently the Minister of Finance takes the position directly opposite to that of the Minister of Agriculture, who told us in this chamber within the past three weeks that everybody knew that a great portion of these loans would never be repaid. Apparently those views have to be reconciled one way or another.

Mr. ABBOTT: It is a matter of opinion.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I turn to the second question; and it is amazing to see me as an economist at the present time. But I do know these simple things.

Mr. ABBOTT: Probably better than the rest of us.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): The minister told us a few minutes ago that it was a well known law of economics that the higher the price, the less purchases were made; with which law I am in entire agreement. I think he will also agree that, having regard to articles in the luxury class of goods, those luxury goods would be purchased largely by people with plenty of money, and that the law would not apply, for example, as it would in respect of food and clothing. It ceases to have the same effect when you go up that stairway. That would, I think, be a correct statement.

Mr. ABBOTT: As a general statement I think that is all right.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): My general statement is just the same as the minister's, so that I think he will agree with me. We cannot get much closer than that. The suggestion I make to the minister is this, that he will at least admit that, in the four months' experience he has had with this excise tax, he sees no evidence that there is a saving from it in United States dollars or that there is not. Is that the position now?

Mr. ABBOTT: To be strictly accurate, we have been saving United States dollars. We have reversed a loss of $70 million by a gain last month of $13 million. How much of that is due to the tax, how much to direct controls, and how much to a number of other factors, I cannot say nor can anyone else, but it appears that the program is doing what it was intended to do. That is all I can say.

[Mr. Abbott.]

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): That is not what I asked. It is fairly easy, you know, if you take it gently. All I ask the minister to admit is this. Aside from what he has just said, at the present time he has no evidence that this excise tax in these four months has saved United States dollars.

Mr. ABBOTT: And I never shall have evidence, because this is only one part of a three-pronged program, and I shall never be able to pin the gain on any one facet.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Then, as a part of this austerity program the minister admits that he will never know whether this excise tax has succeeded or not. That is the statement he has just made.

Mr. ABBOTT: I shall have pretty good evidence when I see the exchange saving each month.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Maybe you will, but a moment ago you said you would not.

Mr. KNIGHT: This subject is becoming somewhat technical and I do not feel competent to attack it on that level. I have been wondering what the housewives in the gallery and in the country think about this particular tax. I was thinking of it rather from the point of view of the family man. When the minister said he was well aware that he had not become a national hero through the imposition of this tax, I think he was making an understatement.

Mr. ABBOTT: I never thought it was a popularity gaining move, and I said so.

Mr. KNIGHT: This new excise tax does not bring much comfort to the already harassed consumer. I do not think I am competent to enter into a discussion of the constitutionality of the tax, although at school I did learn that a principle of British parliamentary procedure was that there would be no taxation without the consent of the people taxed; and I find it difficult to accept the only defence the minister could give for the imposition of this tax in his announcement over the radio on November 17, that the tax would be effective on the morning of the 18th or thereabouts, was that it was necessary, and that he hoped to get the consent of parliament to the imposition of the tax, which later on he told us is not a tax until it is passed by parliament. In the meantime, as has been pointed out by the various speakers, the tax has been collected, as most heads of families are very well aware. Incidentally the minister has not yet obtained the consent of this house to the tax.

and I am wondering what would happen in case the house withheld its consent, because I am not one of those who believe that refunds would be made on the basis of purchase slips because many of these purchase slips carry no record of the purchase. So far as I am concerned, I think the government's action was inexcusable, particularly for a government based upon a party which has always loudly proclaimed that taxation is the function of parliament and that the will of parliament is supreme.

There are two matters which I am advancing in the form of questions. I take it that the first main reason for this particular tax is to reduce in this country the purchase of goods we import from abroad or goods made up of parts imported from other countries. Many householders have been waiting for years to purchase these household goods which are now taxed heavily. They were urged during the war to purchase bonds to keep purchasing power out of the hands of the people; and now, when purchasing power comes into their hands and they thought they would have an opportunity to buy that refrigerator, they find they cannot do so because of this tax.

My question is this: If it were necessary to cut down the imports from the United States in order to conserve United States exchange, and it may have been, why would it not have been feasible or practicable for the minister by some method to see to it that Canadian manufacturers would not take advantage of that situation? Could there not have been a ceiling? There have been ceilings before. They were abandoned only a short time ago. Could a ceiling not have been reimposed on this particular type of goods so that people who, in perfect good faith, had co-operated with the government in the purchase of bonds, people in the small income brackets, would have been able to buy these goods which the minute the tax was imposed they found they could not buy because there was a competitive sellers' market in which the people in the low-income brackets could not compete. These goods were not available to people in the low-income brackets once this tax was imposed. That is my first question, whether it would not have been practicable to impose a ceiling on these things, and, if not, why, so that people in the low-income brackets could have obtained some of these goods and not have had to compete with people with more money.

My second question is this. I take it that one of the remedies for this situation would be the tremendously increased production of Canadian goods. I would ask the minister, and the government through him, why it was that a great amount of machinery for the manufacture of goods which had come into the possession of the country was scrapped or sold for a very small percentage of its value when, if the government is genuine in its belief that more goods are necessary in this country, such machinery could have been used for the production of these goods which, for years, the public had wanted and done without.

Mr. ABBOTT: First, as to the imposition of ceilings, that would have meant, in the view of the government, the resumption of practically over-all price control and the resumption of rationing, and it was felt that this was not feasible.

As to increasing production by additional machinery, there is no lack of production in Canada today because of a lack of machinery. Every bit of machinery is being utilized. One of the reasons we have lost a good deal of United States dollars has been the heavy imports of machinery from the United States. Not only are all the existing production facilities of the country being utilized but they are being rapidly expanded. I said, when discussing this matter the other evening, that possibly production could be increased in this country by increased efficiency and the working of longer hours and so on, but by and large we are working at nearly full employment now, and I question whether, with the existing manpower, the existing hours of labour and the existing techinques, the productive capacity of this country could be greatly expanded. Many of our essential production processes depend upon the importation of essential materials from the United States. That would have involved still further expenditures of United States dollars.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I believe that, as the questioning goes on and the facts come out in connection with this matter it becomes less desirable. We were told definitely at the beginning that this was a measure to conserve that portion of import commodities in those commodities which are taxed and which may come from the United States. That was given as the chief reason by the minister on several occasions. Then, after some persistent questioning from this side of the house, another interesting factor came out, and was disturbing too, namely that the minister told us later another reason was that the government was anxious to preserve the market for United States businessmen who had been selling these commodities in Canada until the time that this matter came up. That was a revealing piece of information and one which—

Mr. ABBOTT: It did not come out after questioning. I pointed that out in my radio speech as an essential provision.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: We can be forgiven for not remembering—

Mr. ABBOTT: It did not result from any cross-examination by my hon. friend or anyone else.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: We can be forgiven for not remembering what the minister said over the radio, because it is such a long time ago; it is almost history; but it has come out now, and I am sure that the Canadian people—

Mr. ABBOTT: I take objection to the "now." It was announced at the same time that the program was announced.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: That is fine. I am sure that the Canadian businessman engaged in the selling of these commodities or the manufacturer who is engaged in manufacturing them will not thank the minister for that.

Mr. ABBOTT: You are not asking for protection, are you?

Mr. ZAPLITNY: No; you are giving the United States businessmen protection. If anyone is to get protection, then certainly our citizens are the first ones entitled to it.

Another thing that has come out—I will not say "now," because apparently the minister does not like that expression—through the questions which have been fired back and forth is that this policy is designed so as to discourage the buying of commodities in Canada, regardless of whether they have any United States import content in them or not. The minister has told us that. I believe it came out after questioning. What it adds up to is simply this. The government apparently believes that, by taxing the Canadian people 25 per cent on these articles, they will release that amount of purchasing power which would have gone into these articles, for the purpose of purchasing something else. I believe the minister will agree with that, because he has said on several occasions if they do not spend their money on these articles, then they will have that money to spend on something else, which he hopes will be essentials such as the things that go into production and even capital goods and so on. If that is the case, then the government must admit that they made a terrible blunder when they started decontrolling about a year ago.

It will be remembered that the first things that were decontrolled in this country—and all we have to do is look up the records—were what were called luxury goods. In other words, when the time for reconversion was on its way in this country, when there was an opportunity to direct the economy toward the production of essential commodities, what did the government do? They took price control off these commodities which were non-essential; they took controls off luxury commodities—

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. We are not now dealing with decontrol.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this is pertinent, because what the minister is attempting to do by placing this tax on these commodities is to discourage the consumption of what he calls semi-luxury goods. If you discourage the consumption of these goods it also means you discourage the production of them, because there would be no object in producing them if nobody will buy them. I imagine that the government was—

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. We have had quite a lengthy debate on these controls.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Mr. Chairman, you will note that I am not debating the merits of price control as such. At the moment I am only pointing out that, had the government used the power of price control which they still had in their hands—

Mr. ABBOTT: They would not have to do this.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: —at the present time, then they would not have to use this excise tax to the same extent that they are now using it. I believe that is a sound argument. What is more, they would have protected the consumer in the lower income brackets to a greater extent than is now done. What has happened now is that, by decontrolling first of all the so-called luxury articles in this country, the government gave an impetus to the production of these non-essentials. Then, having found that there were too many of them on the market and people spending their money on so-called semi-luxury doodads the government says, "We will not only stop you from buying luxury goods, but we will stop you from buying semi-luxury goods as well by asking you to pay 25 per cent more."

What are some of these so-called semi-luxury goods? We could have a debate on what is a necessity and what is not because, when I look down the list, I find, for example, a rather small article, but a very necessary one, particularly so when I look around here, because we are practically all men. I find that shaving brushes are not taxed, but razors and shavers are. There will be some pretty grizzly looking characters around here in a year or so, because no one can shave with a shaving brush, you must have a razor along with it.

Mr. REID: That will be the new look for men.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Our beards will be down to our knees.

Mr. ABBOTT: Shaving brushes are not taxed.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: No, but razors and shavers are.

Mr. ABBOTT: Because there was an export market for these goods.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: You can lather up your face and go out; you cannot shave.

Mr. ABBOTT: You can, unless you use an electric razor. My hon. friend may use these expensive electric razors. I use the old-fashioned Gillette. There are no taxes on those.

Mr. GREEN: You are a real Tory.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Seriously though, there are in this list commodities which cannot be called luxury goods. It cannot be argued that these articles are luxury items for all the people. For example, let us take automobiles. There are thousands of people in this country who depend for their livelihood on owning and driving an automobile. Go into the field of salesmanship. There are a lot of people who work in the civil service, for example, who have travelling jobs; they are people who earn their living by owning and operating a car. Had the minister placed a tax on cars which are priced at from $2,000 upward, it might not have been so bad because then you could say that anyone who makes a living by owning and operating an automobile will not buy a Cadillac or a Buick or any one of these expensive cars; he will be satisfied with a cheaper model. But no, the tax starts from $1,200, which means that there is not an automobile on the market today which you can buy without paying the excise tax. This means that there will be thousands of people across this country who will find it 25 per cent harder to make a living than before.

We find that articles for household use such as refrigerators and all kinds of electrical appliances are taxed so that people who are trying to buy them in the western provinces, where unfortunately our electrification schemes have not gone forward as fast as they have in some other parts of the country on account of the depression we had there, are finding it exceedingly difficult. Today those provinces are attempting to start rural electrification schemes and they run smack into these taxes. They find that the people for whom they are planning this electrification are beginning to become lukewarm over the matter and are not enthusiastic because the price of the goods they have to buy has gone up 25 per cent. The difficulty of the government is—and I say this sincerely—they are attempting to get the effect or the result of a planned economy without doing any planning. They are attempting to get out of the so-called free enterprise system the same result as they would get out of a planned economy. but they have refused to do that supplementary or complementary part, which is to have a planned economy in the first place; I do not know what this committee can do except to register its protest. If the government were to be fair with this committee they would separate from this list the last two parts of the resolution, paragraphs 5 and 6, which have to do with the taking off of the tax. That part could be taken separately, in a separate bill if necessary, and the committee could decide on the merits of this tax alone. I do not think it is wise to attempt to confuse the public and parliament by proposing in the same debate to tax the people 25 per cent or more, at the same time pointing to another part of the resolution and saying, "Oh, we are taking the tax off electricity and sugar". If we are to have a taxation scheme let us make our decision and deal with that by itself and deal with the other aspect separately. If it were put in that way, and if private members opposite were given a free vote, I am confident that the resolution would not carry.

Mr. CASE: It seems to me that we talk in millions so often in this house that it is difficult to get a genuine appreciation of just how this affects the ordinary citizen. During the war we had compulsory savings and there was the sale of something which was popular, namely war savings certificates for $4. This year that little savings certificate will be due and will be worth $5. I wonder if it has occurred to the Minister of Finance, when he thinks about this, that people who have been saving in this way over a period of years would like now to buy some of the luxuries and even the necessities for which they have been waiting so long a time to acquire—a refrigerator, an automobile or something else that might appeal to them. Has it occurred to the minister that his 25 per cent excise tax will take every cent that the little war savings certificate earned? People have invested their money in war savings certificates in the last seven and a half years, and now they will find that the dollar they have earned on every four dollars they invested will be taken from them when they attempt to spend their money for something which is necessary in their homes.

Mr. MOORE: In view of the minister's statement that the purpose of the tax is to restrict consumption, how long does he expect it will be necessary to enforce this legislation?

Mr. ABBOTT: I cannot make any forecast as to the length of time it will last. That will depend upon how our balance of payments position works out. The reserves today, while improving, are far below what they should be and far below what I should like them to be. I cannot say how long it will be necessary to continue these restrictive measures; but, as I have said on numerous occasions, I do not wish to keep them on a day or an hour longer than is necessary.

Mr. THATCHER: May I ask the minister this question? If the Marshall plan in the United States goes through in the next few weeks, can he give any undertaking that the taxes will be taken off?

Mr. ABBOTT: I cannot give any undertaking. Of course that is an important factor, as it is bound to be, in helping to restore our balance of payments position.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I wish to ask a question which I think will simplify matters not only for myself but for the rest of Canada. In my opinion the whole system of taxation is wrong, but can the minister tell me when the 25 per cent tax will be taken off cars? I want to buy one.

Mr. ABBOTT: I want to buy one too, so that I am in the same boat as the hon. member for Fraser Valley. I am driving a 1939 model at the moment.

Mr. GREEN: These excise taxes, as we all know, are part of the exchange conservation program. I would ask the minister, in all seriousness, just how much his program would be affected if they were dropped for the present at least and further consideration given to measures of this type. Then, whatever might be decided upon could be brought down at the time of the budget. The minister must realize that there is great opposition to this tax across the country.

Mr. ABBOTT: There is, of course, opposition to every tax.

Mr. GREEN: But in my time I have never known a tax that was so much disliked as this particular one, and frankly, I believe that is the feeling among many private members on the government side. There are features of the tax which are most unfortunate; perhaps the minister and his advisers do not realize all the implications.

I should like to know now what damage would be done if the tax proposals were dropped and whatever steps the minister might decide to take were taken in the budget. The government has power under Bill No. 3 to deal with the whole question. I am quite sure that the excise taxes are only a minor part of the program and I cannot see that much harm would be done if the government withdrew these proposals. I believe there was great merit in the argument that the tax is unconstitutional and that, in any event, it was imposed in a way that should not have been followed, when the minister announced it over the radio rather than to the house as he announces ordinary taxation measures in a budget.

The minister himself has said repeatedly that he does not want the money. He is not interested in the amount of money that is taken in as a result of the tax. In his article in New Liberty on January 31 of this year we find this statement with reference to the excise taxes:

> The revenue isn't important; the less raised the better, for that will indicate that the tax has had the desired effect of persuading Canadians to postpone buying until some later time when the country as a whole can afford the U.S. dollars involved.

It is only a matter of a few weeks now until the budget is brought down. The very fact that these excise taxes were announced has already had some effect, I should think, on purchases, and has partly accomplished the minister's objective, and I should like to know how seriously his plan would be endangered if these taxes were dropped at this time.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is a pure matter of opinion, as my hon. friend realizes. He would have one opinion and I another. I believe these taxes are having and will continue to have a real effect in deterring consumption of these particular articles, and I would not be prepared to consider dropping them now and considering their reimposition in the regular budget.

Mr. GREEN: Will the minister say why he has imposed the supertaxes on automobiles? They run to 25 per cent in some cases, 50 per cent in others and then 75 per cent in addition to the taxes already levied on cars. Why were there such terrifically stiff taxes imposed on automobiles?

Mr. ABBOTT: In the case of the lower priced automobiles, that is of the Ford and Chevrolet class, the additional tax was 15 per cent, and that, I am told, will affect cars in that range to the extent of $130. When you get to the more expensive models, the Buicks, the Lincolns, the Cadillacs and so on, where there is a limited quota, the tax is steeply progressive and it goes up fast. It was intended to be a real deterrent to the purchase of these cars.

Mr. GREEN: Is the automobile situation not covered now by the quotas which have been imposed since the austerity program was announced?

Mr. ABBOTT: Not entirely. I tried to deal with that in answering the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario. Quotas have been in effect for two or three weeks now, but they apply not only to imported cars but to importation of parts, and under existing conditions we would like to see a slowing down of the purchase of domestically produced cars as well. I do not think the quotas can entirely accomplish that purpose.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I wish to ask a question supplementary to that asked by the hon. member for Vancouver South. I was asked from over on the right here this question: "If you are not a lawyer, why get into this?" That is the trouble in this house. There are too many lawyers or so-called lawyers. I want to get a little further explanation with respect to the Chevrolet or the Ford; and I am not trying to give a boost to those makes; I am thinking of the lower priced cars. I understand that 90 per cent of the content of those cars is produced in Canada. Am I correct?

Mr. ABBOTT: It is not quite as high as that. I think the highest domestic content is with respect to the Ford—and I am speaking from memory—and that it is something of the order of 70 or 75 per cent.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: The minister says it is 75 per cent. I regret that this government, although not as much as previous governments, has permitted this condition to exist, and that we have not all-over production here.

Mr. ABBOTT: Some cars are made here but some are imported.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: They should not have been. If this and other governments had been on their toes, there would have been 100 per cent production in Canada. I cannot understand this situation with respect to low-priced cars. I can understand it with respect to Cadillacs—perhaps I should not mention the names, but I am thinking of the expensive cars—but I cannot understand it with respect to the lower priced cars, which are not now a luxury but are rather a necessity of life as much as an electric water pump or a milking machine is on the farm. Automobiles are as much a necessity of life for a salesman or a businessman. I cannot see this idea of putting on this 25 per cent tax at this time.

Mr. ABBOTT: It is only an extra 15 per cent.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: It is an extra 15 per cent. But it is now 25 per cent.

Mr. THATCHER: Will you vote against it?

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: The hon. member for Moose Jaw is getting away from those fifteen Japs he has.

An hon. MEMBER: That is a slick comeback.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I could come back with a better one for you.

An hon. MEMBER: Keep coming.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: What I should like to know is this. I am informed by the largest General Motors dealer in my province that in British Columbia in 1940 a Chevrolet standard sedan sold for $1,380, I think it was. Today the same car sells for $2,000. I am also informed—whether I am correctly informed or not I do not know—that the tax on that car, imposed by federal authorities, as a result of the new taxation, with sales tax on it, is $600.

Mr. ABBOTT: No. It would not be that much.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Well, that is what I am informed. I want to be corrected in this if I am wrong, or if my informants are wrong I want to be corrected. I cannot understand why a car which is essential for farmers' purposes should bear this excessive tax, and I am speaking of these lower priced cars. We believe that you are prohibiting the manufacture of them in Canada rather than encouraging it. I should like particularly to be informed if I am wrongly informed. If I am wrong in my figures I should like to be corrected. I am informed that the present tax on a Chevrolet standard car in Vancouver is $600.

Mr. ABBOTT: I could not verify that figure. But the added tax, as a result of the proposed additional 15 per cent here, is, I am told, about $180; it is $150 to $180. I thought it was $130 but, depending on the model, it is between $150 and $180.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Is that additional?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is additional tax. There was the existing tax, the sales tax and so on, and that is on the wholesale price of the car; it may have gone up; I do not know. But the additional tax, the additional 15 per cent as a result of this proposed tax, is of the order of $150 to $180 on a standard type Chevrolet or Ford, so I am informed.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I should like to ask one more question in case I do not understand the matter correctly. I think the minister definitely stated the figure, but in case he has not I will ask this question. The average amount on a car retailing at $2,000 is what? What is the average production in Canada? What did the minister say?

Mr. ABBOTT: I am told with respect to the Ford—I do not know about the Chevrolet —that the Canadian content is about 75 per cent.

Mr. FRASER: I should like to ask this question following up what the hon. member for Fraser Valley has said. That $180 is tax on the car of 25 per cent, which also—

Mr. ABBOTT: No; that is additional.

Mr. FRASER: I know; that is additional tax. But that additional tax also is a tax on the sales tax—

Mr. ABBOTT: No.

Mr. FRASER: —because sales tax is added first, and then this is on top of that.

Mr. ABBOTT: No. The tax is on the wholesale price of the car. To the wholesale price of the car is added the sales tax and excise tax. The additional excise tax on this type of standard model that I am referring to, as a result of this measure, will be of the order of $150 to $180.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: May I ask one question more? Is that tax placed on the wholesale price?

Mr. ABBOTT: On the wholesale price, at the wholesale level; at the factory.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: To the manufacturer?

Mr. ABBOTT: To the dealer.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Not the ordinary retail dealer, but it is on the manufacturer's price?

[Mr. Abbott.]

Mr. ABBOTT: At the factory, yes.

Mr. PROBE: I wanted to ask one or two questions of the minister before eleven o'clock. But before doing so I want just to tell him, through you, Mr. Chairman, that he is not the most popular Minister of Finance that my constituency has known; and it is my duty here to register a strong protest on behalf of my riding against this amendment of the excise tax in so far as the 25 per cent portion is concerned. I think all our people have expressed, where they have taken the time to do so, some appreciation of the fact that the electricity and gas tax for dwellings is now cut off and that the sugar tax has been abolished.

Mr. ABBOTT: One or two have been, yes.

Mr. PROBE: But you do not get those letters quite as frequently as the others.

Mr. ABBOTT: Tea and coffee too.

Mr. PROBE: In our province we have a number of Liberals who have been talking for some time with torrents of eloquence about a two per cent sales tax levied on certain things by my own provincial government, the government of Saskatchewan.

Mr. THATCHER: It is three per cent in British Columbia.

Mr. PROBE: The Liberals argued with great eloquence that this two per cent tax in Saskatchewan on certain sales should be repealed—a tax which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre reminds me the Liberals themselves put on some years ago. Yet they weep a form of crocodile tears in my province that the C.C.F. are not taking that limited source of revenue off. Here we have an argument which the Minister of Finance puts forward with equal eloquence as to why there should be a 25 per cent excise tax on many commodities that are considered by people in my section of the country as essential. That is all with respect to registering the protest.

I should now like to ask a question or two briefly, if I may. Will the minister assure the committee that this list which we have in the mimeographed sheets, as amended by the third mimeographed sheet—

Mr. ABBOTT: It is printed in Hansard now.

Mr. PROBE: —and printed in Hansard represents now the complete list of articles involved under the revised 25 per cent excise list? The minister nods his head.

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes; the list printed in Hansard is a consolidation of the amendments.

Mr. PROBE: The reason I ask is, of course, that there must have been some changes of which I was not aware. I have a protest with respect to curling stones, for example, which I intended to present to the minister, but he assures me that the 25 per cent excise tax does not apply on those.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is right; the sporting goods group were taken out. The remaining items were of such minor importance that we decided to eliminate the whole group.

Mr. PROBE: Very good.

The other matter is in connection with a clause on page 2 of the sheet I have before me. I refer to section 4, which reads:

> That on and after November 18, 1947, the rate of excise tax on cameras, photographic films and plates, projectors for slides, films or pictures, except those designed exclusively for industrial or professional photographers' use, be increased from 10 per cent to 25 per cent.

I should like to know if that clause calls for a 25 per cent excise tax, regardless of the size of projector used. That is the first point. Second, whether or not there is a rebate in the case of educational institutions; whether they can get a refund of the 25 per cent excise tax where the projectors are used for educational purposes. I ask the second question because I understand that a change is to be announced next Monday, March 22, with respect to projectors, and I should like that clarified. If it is only a rumour it should be denied. What is the exact position of educational institutions with respect to the 25 per cent excise tax on these items, and would the minister indicate what size projectors are concerned?

Mr. ABBOTT: I am told that projectors of all types are to be taxable at the increased rate, irrespective of who may be the user.

Mr. PROBE: There is no refund, then, for educational institutions?

Mr. ABBOTT: I am told not.

Mr. PROBE: That, I think, imposes an undue hardship, because educational institutions are increasingly becoming users of these items for school purposes. As I understand it, in this country there is only one assembly plant for this form of equipment; there is not a manufacturing plant, and they cannot meet the demand. This just increases the difficulty.

Mr. ABBOTT: We shall have to look into that.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I want to come back to the point we were on arlier in the evening. I hope that the minister feels more tolerant towards me now than he did then; I know I feel more tolerant toward him. I want to reiterate that, whether or not he thinks the figures I am asking for are significant, namely the difference in sales before and after November 17, and the United States content, I am going to ask him to let us have those figures when we get into committee after second reading of the bill; and I will say no more about the matter this evening.

Mr. ABBOTT: I will urge the officials again to get whatever figures they can, and I will ask them to study my hon. friend's remarks in Hansard. I know I am rather stupid in this thing, but I found it rather hard to see exactly what my hon. friend wanted. However, I will study his remarks carefully and will ask the officials to do the same; and if we can get figures of that kind—and I should think we could get some, at any rate—I will see that they are made available when we are in committee after second reading.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I just want to certify to the minister, not on my own authority but on that of my deskmate, that he thinks my questions are not wholly unreasonable.

Mr. ABBOTT: They are never that, I am sure.

Mr. MICHAUD: I should like to ask the minister what car is sold now by the manufacturer for $1,200 or less. I understand there is none. There is an increase of 15 per cent, from 10 per cent to 25 per cent, on cars selling by the manufacturer at $1,200 or less, but once you get over $1,200, the excise tax is 50 per cent.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am told that at the factory cars are still sold at $1,200. Of course freight and all the rest of the charges have to be added.

Mr. MICHAUD: I should like to know what cars they are. Twenty-five per cent of $1,200 is $300. Then there is the eight per cent sales tax, which amounts to $96, making a total of $1,596.

Mr. ABBOTT: There is also freight and handling.

Mr. MICHAUD: Where does the difference come in? We are being fleeced somewhere.

Mr. ABBOTT: The retailer makes a profit.

Mr. MICHAUD: I should like to know what cars are sold by the manufacturer at $1,200.

Mr. ABBOTT: Ford and Chevrolet.

Mr. JACKMAN: Did the minister say earlier this evening whether representations had been made to the government of the United States to change their basis of assessing customs duty so that the excise tax would not form part of the base?

Mr. ABBOTT: I answered that first in reply to a question of the hon. member for Kindersley. The other afternoon the hon. member for Parkdale asked the same question. I referred him to the page of Hansard which contained my answer to the hon. member for Kindersley. This afternoon the hon. member for Moose Jaw asked the same question, and I gave the answer again. Representations were made to the United States authorities objecting to the inclusion of the 25 per cent tax as part of the value for duty purposes, asserting that under the provisions of the Geneva agreements it was not to be so included. Those representations were sympathetically received. It was conceded that the Geneva agreements would exclude it; but it was pointed out that, before this could be done, legislative action was required by the United States congress, which it has not yet taken. In the meantime, under the existing United States law, it must be added to the import value for duty purposes. That, of course, created a difficult situation for our manufacturers who were exporting that class of goods, which was one of the reasons a number of articles were taken out of the list.

Mr. JACKMAN: It is expected that if the United States congress takes the action the minister has requested we shall again have the various articles which have been removed from this excise tax placed back under it?

Mr. ABBOTT: Well, that will have to be looked at when the contingency arises.

Mr. JACKMAN: The reason you took them off the list will have been gone, and I presume the status quo would be resumed.

Mr. ABBOTT: That may well be.

Mr. JACKMAN: The minister has said a valid criticism which could come from this side—and I agree with him, but I have not taken very much of his time in this debate, so I have not brought it up—is that if we are to decrease consumption in Canada so that we may have more goods for export, the excise tax as outlined here should be applied to a much wider range of goods. If the government is serious about this matter and is really trying to decrease consumption, an argument which has come up rather late in this debate, why has it not followed its own criticism, if you like, and made the excise tax apply to a much wider range of goods? As the situation is now, the classes of goods to which the excise tax applies are not very large, and I doubt very much if there will be a decrease in the over-all spending of our people. If they cannot get these particular articles, many of which have little or no United States content, they will spend their money on other articles, so that the net result will rather fly in the face of the argument the minister put up, namely, that the purpose of this excise tax is to decrease over-all consumption in Canada, so that once again we shall have more for export and attain an over-all export surplus instead of breaking about even, as was the case last year. Therefore I should like to ask the minister why, believing as he does and suggesting to us that one valid line of criticism is that they have not gone far enough, the administration lacks the courage to make this measure completely effective.

Mr. ABBOTT: We thought we would perhaps start out slowly and see what results were achieved as part of the over-all program. Of course it may be necessary, if we have to take further steps to protect our balance of payments position, to impose other taxes or further restrictions. I cannot give that assurance. I hope it will not be, but we felt that this was as far as we should go at this time.

Mr. MERRITT: We have had evidence tonight that this is an improper tax. However, before the question is put I should like to revert to the fact that this is an illegal and unconstitutional tax. The amendment should not carry under any circumstances. This tax cannot be levied against the Canadian people because, I submit, parliament cannot overlook the constitutional question herein involved. That question goes to the root of everything which we in Canada believe.

It is all very well to talk about the incidence of the tax, and everything of that kind; but, in the end, we come back to this question: Is the House of Commons to pass for a government—for the executive—a tax measure which was laid on the Canadian people when the house was not in session, and which the Minister of Finance, who is responsible for the tax, now presents to the house as something legal? Are we to create a precedent which will last at least until we have the courage to undo it; are we to sit in silence and let such a tax go through?

That is the question which is posed for members of the government party. Will their loyalty to their party be such that they have no loyalty to the constitution? That is the question they must ask themselves before they vote upon the amendment; or upon the bill if, unfortunately, we should reach that stage.

The minister has maintained, as one of his defences, that no tax was laid. I wonder if he still maintains that position. He does not answer; perhaps he cannot answer. But if he does not answer I must assume that he still maintains his position that no tax was laid.

First of all, I would bring to the attention of the committee the minister's own words in his radio speech of November 17 where, after referring to the purpose of the tax and the articles upon which it was to be placed—and the tax reduction; I wish to give him all credit —he said this:

> Now that the government's proposals have been announced we propose to follow the usual budgetary practice of asking parliament to make them effective from the time of announcement, and taxes at the new rates will therefore be collected on all sales by manufacturers and on imports beginning tomorrow morning.

The words I wish to draw to the attention of the committee, particularly of private members who sit on the government side—because all my remarks tonight are directed to them —are these:

> Taxes at the new rates will therefore be collected on all sales by manufacturers and on imports beginning tomorrow morning.

I ask any hon. member who understands the English language whether the words, "will therefore be collected," are the wording of an order, or, as the minister has tried to say, if they are the wording of a warning or invitation to pay a tax, although there is no legal compulsion to pay it. I say that to any ordinary citizen of Canada the words, "will therefore be collected," have one meaning, and one meaning only—an order to pay to the executive government of this country. In my view they would be quite sufficient to establish that this tax was imposed.

I am afraid the minister will have to put his newspaper down—

Mr. ABBOTT: So far, it was just a repetition of what my hon. friend so ably said the other night. I thought I might catch up with the newspaper.

Mr. MacINNIS: It is a rehash, anyway.

Mr. MERRITT: The hon. member for Vancouver East says it is a rehash. Does he believe that this point is unimportant?

Mr. MacINNIS: No, I did not say that at all.

Mr. MERRITT: All right. The question I wish to ask the minister is this. The hon. member for Lake Centre read to the minister the memorandum circular issued over the signature of the deputy minister of customs and excise. I ask the minister if that memorandum circular went out at the minister's direction or with his knowledge and consent.

Mr. ABBOTT: It did not go out at my direction, and I cannot say if it went out with my knowledge. I presume I may have known something about it, but the Department of National Revenue sent it out. It was not my department.

Mr. MERRITT: I want to read to the minister again the wording of that circular. It states:

> Until further instructed take all customs and excise entries presented on and after eighteenth instant subject to amendment. Notify outports by wire: The following are the provisions of the special resolutions affecting the Excise Tax Act and the customs tariff, to be introduced in parliament at the coming session. Please note particularly that these resolutions are effective today.

The minister says he has no personal knowledge of the wording of this document. I can understand he would not have. Does the minister say that those last words, "please note particularly that these resolutions are effective today", are necessary for the direction of a public official carrying out the policy announced by the minister?

Mr. ABBOTT: I suppose if the circular had been technically correct it would say, "are to be effective as from today". They were drawn, I assume, by departmental officials; they were not drawn by me. I do not recollect having seen them at all before they went out.

Mr. MERRITT: Will the minister agree with me that a customs officer, an excise officer or any person charged with the responsibility of collecting taxes under the Excise Tax Act could, under his duty, do anything other than collect the tax after receiving a document of that kind?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes; and, as I have said before, if any importer or any purchaser felt that parliament would not accept the tax, he could have refused to pay to the customs officer, and the customs officer could not have collected in court. That is the legal position. It has been that way all along. No one has ever disputed it.

Mr. MERRITT: I shall come to that later, because I do not want to have any doubt of any kind with respect to it. At the present time I am only interested in asking a question of the minister, and I should like to have it clearly answered. It is simply this: Could any officer of the customs and excise branch, after receiving that circular, do other than perform his duty of collecting the excise tax in respect of these particular taxes announced in the resolution?

Mr. ABBOTT: Of course every customs officer would request purchasers to pay; of course they would. That was the purpose of the circular.

Mr. MERRITT: On this point as to whether or not the tax is imposed, one thing that disappoints me in connection with the minister's action, unconstitutional as it was, is that it was not even new. This question of sending out letters like this was thought of in the reign of one of the Richards, I believe it was. They were known then as benevolences. Reading from Maitland's "History of the Constitution" at page 260, I find this:

> A more serious step was now necessary if money was to be obtained. The king had recourse to benevolences. Letters were written to the sheriffs directing them to call upon persons of ability for contributions.

I thought it might interest any hon. member who has any doubt of the constitutionality of this measure to know that exactly the same procedure was adopted long ago by executive power and that letters were sent to the sheriffs exactly as letters were sent in this case, calling for the collection of money. The minister does not want to call it imposing a tax. He says it was an invitation to pay in advance. I want to ask the minister this question. Does he agree that if this resolution and the bill to be founded upon it were passed by the house, not only the taxes he is proposing but the other provisions of the Excise Tax Act, its general provisions, would also come into effect as and from November 18?

Mr. ABBOTT: I take it that the only effect of the bill to be introduced in the specific case we are discussing will be to increase certain taxes by a certain percentage and impose certain others and that the bill will take the form of an amendment to the Excise Tax Act.

Mr. MERRITT: And of course all the general sections of the Excise Tax Act respecting enforcement will come into force as and from November 18. Is that not correct?

Mr. ABBOTT: They are in force now. They have been in force.

Mr. MERRITT: But I mean with respect to the new tax. Is that not correct?

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not know that I quite follow my hon. friend.

Mr. MERRITT: The enforcement provisions which are now contained in the Excise Tax Act will come into force with respect to the new taxes immediately upon parliament adopting the amendment?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is right, and if somebody had not paid the tax you could use the enforcement provisions to make him pay.

Mr. MERRITT: Then, with that situation, how is it possible for the minister longer to maintain to the committee that he did not impose a tax as and from November 18? He says that nobody need pay the tax if it is illegal, that they could refuse to pay it. But they refuse to pay it under a penalty, and the penalty is not merely the payment of the new tax but something much more severe than that. I have before me the 1947 amendment to the Special War Revenue Act, section 106 of which reads:

> Every person who is required by . . . this act to pay or to collect taxes shall make each month a true return of his taxable sales for the last preceding month, containing such information and in such form as may be required by regulations.

And the date of filing and of payment of the tax is prescribed and penalties are provided for default in payment of the tax.

Then sections 108, 111, 112, and 118, all provide for penalties. They do not simply provide that one of these brave manufacturers who defies the minister shall pay just the tax imposed, once parliament imposes them, and then go scot-free. They provide that he shall go to jail, if you please, for failure to pay the tax, even though his failure took place before this parliament approved the tax. So that there is no use in anyone blinding himself to the fact that the tax was actually imposed.

I wish to refer to one more section of the Excise Tax Act. Many questions have been directed to the minister, particularly by the hon. member for Moose Jaw, respecting the difficult situation in which the minister must find himself because of the collection of taxes by manufacturers on articles which have been released from the tax, and the difficulties that these manufacturers or the retailers ahead of them would have in getting the money back into the hands of those who had paid a higher price because of the tax. The minister said: That is their problem; let them work it out for themselves. Those were almost his exact words.

I call attention to another section of the Excise Tax Act, and I want to show the committee, and, if I may say so, the minister and the government for, after all, the whole cabinet had some responsibility for this austerity program and, therefore, for the tax, some of the dangers that he runs into by acting in an unconstitutional manner. If he will look at section 119 of the Excise Tax Act he will find that it reads as follows:

> Everyone liable under this act to pay to His Majesty any of the taxes hereby imposed, or to collect the same on His Majesty's behalf, who collects, under colour of this act—

Note those words: "under colour of this act."

> —any sum of money in excess of such sum as he is hereby required to pay to His Majesty, shall pay to His Majesty all moneys so collected, and shall in addition be liable to a penalty not exceeding five hundred dollars.

In other words, everyone of these manufacturers who has collected the tax from the retailers ahead of them, under colour of this act and under colour of the minister's action, is not only liable to pay to the retailer the tax which was exacted from him but liable also to a penalty of $500 because of his action in collecting that tax. I imagine that this is one very good reason why it is so important to adhere to the constitution.

I now come to some of the excuses which the minister has made for his action, which I say, and there is no doubt about it at all, was unconstitutional. He said, first, that it was absolutely essential that this tax be imposed on November 17 in order to prevent anyone from taking speculative advantage of the restrictive program. But speculative advantage was placed in the hands of the people by the minister himself when he imposed this tax. If he had not imposed this tax a lot of these commodities would not have gone up in price by 25 per cent and the moneys would not have been collected from consumers in the country and from retailers.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. MERRITT: I am coming to the hon. gentlemen on the government side of the house who called "carried". But first another reason which the minister gave was this, at page 2031 of Hansard, and the hon. gentlemen who called "carried" might listen to this:

> . . . but the public assumes that parliament will pass these taxes and make them effective, as the government has asked.

I want to say to the hon. members who called "carried" that the minister is wrong. The public never assumed that parliament would pass the taxes for which the government has asked. The public does not yet assume that this is a house of rubber-stamps. The minister was wrong when he thought parliament would approve so easily. The minister meant that his own supporters would do the approving. The minister felt—

Mr. ABBOTT: That is the majority of parliament.

Mr. MERRITT: —that the cabinet had such control over its own supporters that even his unconstitutional acts would be approved by hon. gentlemen who sit opposite and who call "carried". I think the hon. member for Halton who spoke the other day and attempted to pass some ridicule on the hon. member for Lake Centre for citing some mediaeval cases, and other hon. members on the government side might be interested in this little passage from Maitland who seemed to have foreseen everything that the government is trying to do today. After referring to the fight by parliament against this kind of imposition of taxes, Maitland says this:

> Under the Tudors the danger is of a different kind—it is not so much that the king will tax without parliamentary consent, but that parliament will consent to just whatever the king wants and will condone his illegal acts.

Have we a Tudor parliament here tonight? Are the hon. members opposite—

An hon. MEMBER: Carried.

Mr. MERRITT: —back in the sixteenth century? They call "carried"; therefore I imagine they are Tudor members, but I am just going to put this on the record for their benefit, so that they may know what they are doing when they vote on this amendment.

Mr. SINNOTT: Since when did you become a legal adviser?

Mr. MERRITT: I have a few questions I wish to ask the minister.

Mr. SINNOTT: Since when did you become a teacher?

Mr. MERRITT: I understand that the minister maintains that this is constitutional practice. That is correct is it not?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes.

Mr. MERRITT: He said at page 1542 of Hansard:

> It is exactly the same procedure as is followed when the budget is brought down save that we anticipated the calling of parliament by some ten days or two weeks.

That is to be the new constitutional procedure. You can do ten days or two weeks before parliament sits what you can do when parliament is in session, and I should like to ask the minister this question. What are the limits of this doctrine he proposes; because, do not forget, the minister says he will do it again. He said tonight that it may be necessary to take further steps of this kind. Will the minister define the limits of this constitutional practice? It is constitutional if he does it in two weeks or ten days before parliament sits and calls parliament. Is it constitutional for a month, or is it constitutional for a year before parliament sits? I should like an answer to that question.

Mr. ABBOTT: That, of course, is a matter of opinion. We have not a written constitution in matters of that kind. I think I have explained this thing pretty carefully. At the time this announcement was made parliament had been called. I gave the reasons why, in the emergency which I said existed at that time, this should be done. I am not going to attempt, nor do I think anyone should attempt to put any time limit on that sort of thing. I suppose, in theory, it might be a month or it might be three months. I do not know that there is any written provision anywhere, in Britain or anywhere else, which covers these things, none whatever.

Mr. MERRITT: Yes, there is. It has been read to the minister.

Mr. ABBOTT: Then my hon. friend has done better than others.

Mr. MERRITT: It was read to the minister the other night. The written principle is contained in the Bill of Rights in the reign of William and Mary, and it followed upon precisely the—

Mr. ABBOTT: What does it mean?

Mr. MERRITT: —action that the minister has taken. It was because King James II imposed taxes two months before parliament met that that provision was contained in the Bill of Rights; and the provision in the Bill of Rights is, of course, that no taxation shall be laid upon the people without the consent of parliament. It is in writing and it is the very formula embedded in our constitution. The minister now says he does not know; it may be one, two or three months.

Mr. ABBOTT: But no taxation is imposed except with the consent of parliament. How often does that have to be reiterated? No one has ever challenged that proposition.

Mr. MERRITT: The minister now says it can be done, as I understand it, three months before parliament is called.

Mr. ABBOTT: I did not say three months at all. My hon. friend was asking what the limit would be after announcement. I said that no one could say what it would be. I have given it time and again; the committee is thoroughly familiar with it, and the people of this country are thoroughly familiar with the circumstances under which this announcement was made. I have nothing I can add to that. My hon. friend has a perfect right to go on and elaborate his constitutional argument. I listened to him with interest; but let him develop his own argument; do not keep on interrupting by asking me to put a time limit on this, that, or the other thing.

Mr. MERRITT: We are in committee. One of the purposes of being in committee is to ask questions, and I am going to continue to ask my questions. As I understand it, the minister now says that he does not know that there is any time limit—

Mr. SINNOTT: That is one way to learn.

Mr. MERRITT: —within which he must call parliament together.

Mr. ABBOTT: I will answer any questions of fact that my hon. friend wants to put to me, and these are the only questions that he is entitled to put to me.

Mr. MERRITT: The question I am asking is a question of fact, I think, Mr. Chairman. I am asking him to define the limits of the constitutional principle that he propounds. If that is not a question of fact it is a question of such great importance to the committee that I do not care whether it is a question of fact or not.

Mr. ABBOTT: I answered that. My hon. friend can read the answer in Hansard tomorrow.

Mr. MERRITT: As I understood the minister's answer, it was not limited to two weeks or ten days, and he cannot give a limit—

Mr. ABBOTT: Of course I cannot, neither can anyone else.

Mr. MERRITT: —because, of course, there is no such constitutional principle; that is why.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is pure assertion.

Mr. MERRITT: If the time limit cannot be defined, in whose hands lies the decision as to what that time limit shall be? Does it lie in the hands of the Minister of Finance, or does it lie in the hands of the cabinet as a whole? Answer that question.

Mr. ABBOTT: Obviously that decision has to be taken by the government on its responsibility as a government. I cannot conceive of any government announcing the imposition of such a tax when parliament had not been called. That is my own personal view. I would not do it myself and I doubt whether any other minister of finance would do it. I have said time and again that I considered a procedure of this kind could be followed only in the most exceptional circumstances, which I considered, and which the government considered, existed in the middle of November. With all the will in the world I cannot elaborate any further on that. So far as I am concerned, I would not consider that such an announcement should be made until parliament had at least been summoned.

Mr. MERRITT: The minister now says that parliament must be summoned.

Mr. ABBOTT: I said it should be.

Mr. MERRITT: Upon the announcement of the taxes.

Mr. ABBOTT: I said, in my opinion it should be.

Mr. MERRITT: Apparently not that it must be.

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not think there is any provision anywhere which requires it to be summoned.

Mr. KNOWLES: Is there any provision which permits you to do it otherwise?

Mr. MERRITT: It has always been my understanding that this country did have a constitution. Perhaps it has not. It is starting to look very much, from the action of the "carried, carried" boys, as if this country has not much of a constitution.

Mr. ABBOTT: My hon. friend knows that the British constitution is not a written constitution.

Mr. KNOWLES: On that point, the minister has said before tonight that in Britain there is no written statute covering this point. I ask him again to consider the argument made by my colleague, the hon. member for Kindersley, who drew the minister's attention to the matter. The hon. member for Kindersley drew the minister's attention to the provisional collection of taxes act passed in the third year of George V, chapter 3, which is a written statute to cover and makes valid the collection of taxes that had been announced and not yet passed.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is a statutory provision. It is not a constitutional provision but an ordinary statutory provision of the parliament at Westminster which may or may not have been necessary.

Mr. KNOWLES: But that is the way in which the constitution at Westminster has been built up.

Mr. ABBOTT: No. For heaven's sake, let us not get into an argument on the British constitution. My legal friends will agree, I think, that it is recognized that the British constitution is an unwritten constitution. There is what my hon. friend refers to as the Bill of Rights, which is a statute, but the British constitution and constitutional practice are not incorporated in a written constitution as in the case of the United States. Our constitution is, in part contained in the British North America Act, and we follow British constitutional practice in parliamentary matters.

Mr. KNOWLES: That is my point. If in Britain they found it necessary, under their unwritten constitution, to pass such an act as the one to which I have referred, I submit that, since we are following British practice, we should have done the same.

Mr. ABBOTT: The effect of that act would be that they could sue for those taxes the moment notice of them was given in parliament, but we cannot do that and we have never been able to do it. There is no law which enables the crown to sue for a recovery of taxes until the appropriate bill is passed by this house.

Mr. KNOWLES: Then they are not legally in effect.

Mr. ABBOTT: The argument applies with equal force to that practice, with this exception, as I have said before, that this was announced two weeks before parliament was actually in session.

Mr. MERRITT: Tonight I have read sections to show that, should parliament approve them, not only can these taxes be sued for, but penalties, by fine or imprisonment, may be imposed.

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not agree with my hon. friend. I know those sections and they apply to other things. We shall never get anywhere if we enter into that argument tonight.

Mr. MERRITT: I am not, from now on, taking the minister's statement on points of law as a very high authority. I will simply say that the sections I have read were the enforcement sections of the excise act, and if they would not apply to these taxes they would not apply to any taxes.

I wish to come to another statement the minister made, because I am trying to define the limits of this new constitutional principle so that we can refer to them if this house should be so neglectful of its duties as to pass this resolution. I think that now, while our constitution is still intact, we can sound out what new limits will be put upon it, and that is why I have asked my question. The minister said this was different from what was known as an ordinary budget leak, because it was a public statement made at once to all the people and was not a statement dished out to one newspaperman or to a few people without the general public being made aware of it. That seems to me to be a statement that what is unconstitutional, if issued under the blanket or piecemeal or to a few people, is made constitutional by open announcement. I do not think I will ask the minister a question now. I will simply state to him that he cannot find any such principle either in the constitution or in reason, for a statement made in public is no better than a statement made in private if there is no foundation for either. You might as well say that an act committed at midday on a public highway is not a crime, whereas, if committed at night in a back alley, it is illegal. I leave that point there and ask the members of the committee to test this new constitutional principle by that statement.

Mr. CLEAVER: Before the hon. member leaves the point he has made, would he mind answering a question?

Mr. MERRITT: No, I would not mind at all.

Mr. CLEAVER: Do I understand that the hon. member is arguing that a tax can be imposed and has been imposed other than by parliament?

Mr. MERRITT: I will answer the question if the hon. member will sit down. Of course I am arguing that a tax has been imposed in effect, but that it cannot be imposed in law and that this house and the hon. member for Halton, who has questioned me now, cannot give approval to the de facto collection of an illegal tax. Is that clear?

Mr. CLEAVER: May I ask a supplementary question?

Mr. MERRITT: Certainly.

Mr. CLEAVER: We are agreed then, because I have always argued that only parliament can impose a tax. I take it that hon. members agree—

Mr. FRASER: Why don't you tell the minister that?

Mr. CLEAVER: The supplementary question is on the other point. I understood the hon. member to argue that a tax had been imposed.

An hon. MEMBER: It has been, certainly.

[Mr. Merritt.]

Mr. CLEAVER: His immediate answer to me is that it has not been imposed because parliament has not yet imposed it. Are we in agreement so far?

Mr. MERRITT: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. CLEAVER: My supplementary question is this. Does the hon. member argue that, if parliament does not pass this measure, all of this tax which has been voluntarily paid could not be collected?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. CLEAVER: If I paid 25 per cent in anticipation of parliament passing retroactive taxation, does the hon. member argue that I could not collect back the 25 per cent which I gratuitously paid?

Mr. JACKMAN: We discussed that the other night. Where were you?

Mr. CLEAVER: Will the hon. member answer the question?

Mr. MERRITT: We are in committee, and I do not mind the hon. member asking a question, but he attempted to paraphrase what I said. He made a very ungainly attempt and misquoted what I said; then he proceeded to ask a question which I have answered many times. If the hon. member wants it once more, it is simply this. A tax has been imposed in fact and people have paid the tax in fact. If we allow this kind of procedure to go on, and if the hon. member votes for this resolution, parliament will be giving approval to the principle that a tax imposed in fact, but not in law, by the executive authority of the country, while parliament is not in session, will nevertheless be made the law ex post facto in future. It will put in the power of the cabinet of Canada the ability to lay any tax on the Canadian people at any time and make it good afterwards by a "Tudor" following in parliament. The hon. member can make a speech afterwards—

Mr. CLEAVER: Would the hon. member be good enough to answer the question?

Mr. ABBOTT: Don't embarrass him. He cannot answer.

Mr. FRASER: He has embarrassed himself.

Mr. MERRITT: There is one further thing I should like to say. The "hear, hear" boys and the "question, question" boys can listen to this one with some interest, I should think. If they think this is just an academic question—

An hon. MEMBER: It is an economic question.

Mr. MERRITT:—or something that does not go to the root of our way of life and our whole democratic procedure, they can listen. At page 2036 of Hansard the minister said he would do this again, he said he will do it next time by press release.

Mr. ABBOTT: I said that was facetious. My hon. friend knows that.

Mr. MERRITT: I know he said it was facetious.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): The minister is too facetious about the whole matter.

Mr. MERRITT: I will ask the Minister of Finance this question. Does he say he will never do it again?

Mr. ABBOTT: No. I will answer that question. It is a perfectly fair one. Under similar circumstances, I would recommend and do exactly what I did this time.

Mr. JACKMAN: Then you do not get this through.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): When is the minister serious and when is he not?

Mr. ABBOTT: I will get it through all right.

Mr. MERRITT: Perhaps this shows the importance of what I am talking about tonight. The minister says that under similar circumstances he would do it again.

Mr. ABBOTT: Of course.

Mr. MERRITT: He said, too, that this is not a tax for revenue but, as I understand it, that this is a way of using the fiscal method of directing the economy of Canada. Think of that, hon. gentlemen opposite!

Mr. ABBOTT: My hon. friend talks about paraphrasing people's language. I never used the phrase "directing the economy of Canada." I would ask the hon. member to quote what I said and not to twist it.

Mr. MERRITT: The minister said, "fiscal method of reducing consumption."

Mr. ABBOTT: That is accurate.

Mr. MERRITT: If that is not directing the economy of Canada, I do not know what it is.

Mr. ABBOTT: Just say what I said; do not paraphrase it, because it may not be too accurate.

Mr. MERRITT: We are now in the position that the minister would do it again under similar circumstances. He will use the tax to cause people to change their habits. It is not only to raise a revenue which was all that King Charles I was trying to do; this is to change the method of living of the Canadian people. That puts more responsibility on hon. members opposite.

Mr. ABBOTT: I did not use the phrase "change the method of living."

Mr. JACKMAN: That is what you are doing.

Mr. MERRITT: That is what you are trying to do. I just want to conclude, and I do not intend to say anything more about this matter.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MERRITT: Hon. members opposite may laugh all they want to, but I do not think it will do them a great deal of credit.

Mr. HARTT: We are falling asleep.

Mr. MERRITT: I shall not be much longer but I want to say what I have to say.

Mr. HARTT: That is encouraging.

Mr. McILRAITH: The hon. member should do it in the forty minutes allotted.

Mr. MERRITT: You see, Mr. Chairman, there is another aspirant for cabinet rank calling out.

Mr. HARTT: What a brainstorm!

Mr. ABBOTT: What a wit!

Mr. MERRITT: Since the war, we have had what is known as the emergency doctrine. Some hon. members on this side of the house have questioned the emergency doctrine.

Mr. MacINNIS: And voted for it.

Mr. MERRITT: All right; and voted for it, if you like. But one of them at least has voted against it, and the hon. member for Vancouver East knows that.

Mr. MacINNIS: What is one among so many?

Mr. MERRITT: The emergency doctrine was that in times of national emergency, such as of war or the post-war period, the dominion could invade the constitutional fields reserved by the British North America Act for the provinces. That was the doctrine which has been enunciated in this house and upon which this government has acted. That, of course, is one of doubtful constitutionality, although there is a great deal of law on it that I will not discuss. But I never thought—and I do not think any members of this house thought either—that the emergency doctrine should be carried so far that not only does it allow this parliament to invade the fields reserved to the provinces but now, in this measure and by this expression of emergency, the minister is saying that it allows the cabinet and the executive to invade the jurisdiction of parliament itself. That shows you, Mr. Chairman, the danger of letting these small constitutional breaches creep in. They get bigger; they grow wider; and the first thing you know, you have no constitution at all. As I said the other night, the Lord knows that we in this country, in these times ahead, have need of constitutional rectitude of the highest order. In my view, our constitution, which has been built up over the years and has met every emergency in every British country before this time, is so flexible and so free that there is nothing the government needs to do that it cannot do within the four corners of the constitution.

Finally, just before I sit down I wish to read to hon. members one paragraph from a speech made by Lord Chatham in 1775 with regard to the American War of Independence. Of course that whole war, that breaking off of the thirteen colonies, was nothing more than a revolution against the breach of the right of the people not to be taxed without their consent. This is what was said by Lord Chatham in that year:

> This resistance to your arbitrary system of taxation might have been foreseen; it was obvious from the nature of things, and of mankind; and above all, from the Whiggish spirit flourishing in that country. The spirit which now resists your taxation in America, is the same which formerly opposed loans, benevolences, and ship-money in England: the same spirit which called all England on its legs, and by the Bill of Rights vindicated the English constitution; the same spirit which established the great, fundamental, essential maxim of your liberties, that no subject of England shall be taxed but by his own consent.

Think of those words, all hon. members who are going to vote on this resolution. Will a breach of this principle not get you all on your feet? Will you not vindicate your spirit? Will you sit here, like a Tudor parliament, and vote against your consciences in blind obedience to the will of the executive authority of this country?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MERRITT: That is the issue which is before us.

Mr. CLEAVER: I asked the hon. member who has just taken his seat a question, and I thought it was a reasonable one. I did not ask it in order to cause him annoyance. I asked it to see if it were not possible that we could reach agreement at least as to what we were discussing in this debate. He characterized my question as a clumsy or ungainly one, thus obviously showing his annoyance at the question. Then he went on to make a long-winded answer, which did everything but answer the question I asked.

Mr. MERRITT: Ask it again.

Mr. CLEAVER: If there is anybody in doubt as to which utterance was ungainly, I would even suggest to my hon. friend that he read his answer. I will not call it ungainly, but I will say it is not an answer at all. It wandered all over the question but did not answer it.

Mr. JACKMAN: The answer was too direct to suit you.

Mr. CLEAVER: My question was simply this. We all agree that only parliament can impose these taxes. I ask the hon. member this question. If I pay this tax in advance and this parliament does not pass the measure, does not impose the tax, could I get a refund of the amount paid, by legal procedure?

Mr. MANROSS: Hire a lawyer.

Mr. CLEAVER: The hon. member is a lawyer, and I should like an answer to that question. I am not asking for an answer from any of the others who are making so much noise.

Mr. MERRITT: I will answer the hon. member. As a matter of fact, in the case cited by the hon. member for Kindersley, Bowles vs. The Bank of England, this kind of tax was held unconstitutional and in direct defiance of the Bill of Rights by an English court. In his judgment the learned judge doubted whether there was any process of law which would enable a person so taxed to recover what he had paid. If the hon. member wants an answer to the question the best I can do is quote the only authority I know, which indicates doubt whether there is any process which would enable any person to recover his tax.

Mr. CLEAVER: I read the authority to which my hon. friend referred, a quite recent case, with judgment given in 1913, I believe; and my understanding of that authority—I shall read it again, of course—is that there was a distinct ruling by the court that no tax was imposed until parliament passed the taxation measure. I contend that my hon. friends across the way fail to distinguish between the imposition of a tax and the notification that parliament will be asked to impose a tax. I add that the extent to which the public and business generally in this country have responded to the minister's announcement, and have paid and collected this tax, is an indication of what? It is an indication of the confidence business in this country has in an announcement by a minister of this government. If they had no confidence in the ability of the minister to have parliament implement that announcement by the actual imposition of the tax, then the business life of this country would have rebelled, if they had felt safe in doing so. They would have said, "We will not collect the tax. It is not imposed yet, and it never will be imposed". We all agree that only parliament can impose it, but who can show me anything unconstitutional in parliament making a tax retroactive? My hon. friends are driven to argue that the parliament of Canada cannot impose a tax retroactively, if they are to support all these arguments we have heard tonight.

Mr. MERRITT: I see the Secretary of State for External Affairs in the chamber. He was formerly the Minister of Justice and, as everyone knows, is a distinguished lawyer. The Minister of Justice is not here at the moment, nor is the Prime Minister. I think the committee is entitled to hear from both those right hon. gentlemen on this point, but I wonder if the Secretary of State for External Affairs would say whether, in his opinion, the procedure followed of announcing and collecting the tax, while parliament was not in session, is in keeping with the Canadian constitution.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for Vancouver East.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Answer.

Mr. MacINNIS: The Secretary of State for External Affairs will have plenty of time to answer if he wishes. I just rose to take issue with the reason given by the hon. member for Halton as to why this tax is being paid. Surely the reason is not that the people have confidence in the government and consequently have paid the tax. As I see it, the reason I and everyone else pay the tax is that if you do not pay it you do not get the goods. It is the same as when you are held up on a street corner on a dark night, when you meet a man and he says, "Hands up". You put your hands up. That is just what happened on November 17. The Minister of Finance said he was imposing a tax, and there was nothing phony about that. There was nothing fictitious about it either. He imposed the tax and the collectors of the Minister of National Revenue collected it. It had nothing to do with whether or not the person paying the tax had confidence in the government. For instance, the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario might want to bring in some goods from the United States. He definitely does not have confidence in the government; he has said so. Nevertheless he would have to pay the tax. So that we might as well get away from this phony talk and agree that the minister or the cabinet has imposed the tax in the hope that parliament will approve it. I imagine the minister realized that he had sufficient support in the house that the tax would be imposed.

I am going to leave the constitutionality of the matter to the lawyers, but we should accept the fact that the government is imposing and collecting the tax without the consent of parliament. So let us get away from all this talk that we are not imposing the tax. Of course we are; and when I say "we" I mean the government. And let me repeat that the people are paying the tax, not because they have faith or confidence in this government, but because they cannot carry on their business unless they pay it.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I had no intention of speaking further, but after listening to the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard; after realizing that apparently this matter is regarded as a joke by a good many people on the other side of the house, since I regard it as a serious matter I determined to say a few words about it. Speaking as one Mac to another, it was refreshing to hear a little wave of common sense after all this talk. The hon. member for Vancouver East made it clear when a tax is a tax, and got away from all this hair-splitting that there is no tax and that you do not need to pay the tax, when here we have an instruction which has gone out to every customs inspector, and when instances have been given in this house where goods could not be brought in without the tax being paid. So is it not time we stopped talking about there being no tax? Let me say this: We have had a lot of talk in here about a long word called "constitutionality. I want to talk about a very short word called "law." This tax—and it was a tax, and intended to be a tax, and collected as a tax, and accepted by the people of Canada as a tax—was a lawless tax.

In the house yesterday we were in general agreement, everyone was talking about a group of people in this country who believe in lawlessness, who are going to try to practise lawlessness and to destroy our dearest privileges and our way of life. What do we find here? We find, first of all, and for no valid reason at all—because no reason has been given; the reasons given, or supposed to be given by the hon. member for Halton the other night were frivolous in the highest degree —we have lawlessness.

Let me read the words used in this House of Commons some years ago by the present Prime Minister; and then see if members opposite will laugh that off, as they tried to laugh off what was said earlier in the evening. This is what the Prime Minister said, speaking in the House of Commons in 1931, as reported at page 4413 of Hansard for that year:

> The fundamental tradition in all that pertains to responsible government is that the people's representatives in the House of Commons must exercise control over taxation and that that right must never be taken away from them.

An hon. MEMBER: What is the matter with that?

Mr. ABBOTT: Of course.

An hon. MEMBER: We all agree with that.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): You all agree with it, in words; but in action, it was not done.

The minister said tonight; he has been frank tonight in saying that he does not know how far back you can go before parliament is summoned. In this instance it was three weeks. He has been frank enough to say that he does not think three weeks is the limit. I think he said it might be three months. I do not see why, on the same reasoning, it should not be six months.

I am surprised and disturbed that hon. gentlemen opposite, whom I respect, do not seem even willing to look at this question. They seem to be ready to put it aside and to deal with it as if there were no substance involved in it. If you can impose a tax of this kind—and it is a tax—then the people of Canada had money taken out of their pockets for three weeks, and without any authority at all. The analogy between that and the budget speech in parliament has been exploded here, and I need not explode it again. But what I want to say is this: We are coming to a situation where parliament is being asked to validate this action. I hope, whatever other action is taken with regard to this measure, whatever other defects are found in it, that it will be refused passage; but, if it is passed, then I hope this House of Commons will insist—and like the hon. member behind me I appeal to hon. gentlemen opposite that it be made retroactive only to December 5 last, when parliament met. If this House of Commons validates it from December 5 back to November 17, then all I can say is that they are condoning an act of lawlessness.

[Mr. Macdonnell (Muskoka-Ontario).]

An hon. MEMBER: Rubber-stamp.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Yes, the expression "rubber-stamp" is used. But I am stating it is lawlessness, and it is lawlessness. There has been an expression used by the minister; and with all my respect for him I have been grieved more than I can say that the minister seems to have considered this as a kind of joke. I am not holding the minister to the words he used, but he said he would do it the next time by press release. I think the minister was a little perturbed at having said it, and afterwards, when he was pressed on the question, he was at pains to say that he was joking.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have to listen to so much in the course of the discussion that perhaps it is understandable that I become a little facetious at times.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I complain that the minister should consider as facetious something which is important. There is nothing facetious about it.

And one final reason, one final comment: We have been given one main reason in the fact that this great emergency arose and that parliament could not have been assembled in time to deal with it. What was the reason? The reason given the other night by the hon. member for Halton was the same reason, I think, that the Prime Minister gave in the house before Christmas, namely, that we could not show our hand and show our difficulty until trade treaties were passed. I think they were signed a day or two before November 17. Anyway, it was just before that.

Mr. CLEAVER: And you call that a facetious reason?

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I say that is a sharp reason. If we were holding it back so as not to give an account of what we intended to do, and so as to try to get other people to enter into agreements and then take them by surprise later on, then all I can say is that that is the kind of thing which, in business life, would be regarded as sharp practice and, indeed, I think I would be safe in saying that it would be sufficient to set aside an agreement entered into. Even if we did accept this reason, what earthly reason was there that parliament should not have been called some weeks before November 17 when the minister made his speech? The notice did not need to give chapter and verse for everything to be done; and if the notice had said that we would deal with a shortage of United States exchange, it would not have been telling anyone any secret. The world knew we were short of it by that time. So I say that the reason was utterly invalid, and that for no emergency the government has committed this act of lawlessness and now asks us to rubber-stamp it and to put it through.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Eleven o'clock.

Mr. ADAMSON: Mr. Chairman, I wish to read one paragraph into the record.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Eleven o'clock.

Mr. ADAMSON: I believe it is important, with regard to the tax.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Eleven o'clock.

Mr. ADAMSON: The minister and several members have said they did not know how these taxes have affected certain of the industries. I have figures here to show how they have affected the radio receiver industry, and I think they are important.

Mr. GREEN: Eleven o'clock.

Mr. ADAMSON: One paragraph states:

As an indication of how drastically these measures have effected the production and sales of our member companies, their production and sales of radio receivers in November, 1947, were 103,329 and 102,300 respectively. In December, production dropped to 71,000 and sales to 86,573. In January, 1948, sales dropped to 39,608 receivers and production to 48,811.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Eleven o'clock.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. ST. LAURENT: There is on the order paper a resolution standing in the name of the Minister of Veterans Affairs for the introduction of a bill to deal with the War Veterans Allowance Act. That has not yet been advanced to the stage of government orders, and the minister could not do more with it tomorrow than to advance it one stage. I understand, however, there is a desire that the bill be introduced and referred to the committee on veterans affairs. If there were unanimous consent that could be dealt with tomorrow, and it would be the first order.

If there is not unanimous consent, the first item—

Mr. GREEN: The minister means that the whole thing should be allowed to go to the committee on veterans affairs without any discussion? We cannot give any such undertaking as that.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Then it will have to follow its regular procedure. The minister will advance it one stage, so that it will be under government orders. The first item will be second reading of Bill No. 135, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act; following that, the resolution respecting the Agricultural Products Act, and then we shall go into committee of ways and means on the resolution we have been discussing this evening.

Mr. KNOWLES: Might I have one point made clear with respect to the wheat board act? Is it the intention after second reading, if that is reached tomorrow, to go into committee on the bill tomorrow?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: The intention is to go into committee of the whole on the bill, as is usual after second reading.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, March 19, 1948

The house met at three o'clock.

PRIVILEGE

MR. ZAPLITNY—REFERENCE TO NEWS ITEM IN WINNIPEG "CITIZEN" OF MARCH 17

Mr. F. S. ZAPLITNY (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. My question arises out of a news item appearing in the Winnipeg Citizen of March 17, reporting on the debate which took place in this house on the wheat bill. In the item the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Sinnott) is quoted as saying:

If the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (C.C.F., Miller) had stopped speaking on Friday last, we would have had this bill through the house now, he commented.

The hon. member for Portage la Prairie, to my best knowledge and belief—and I should know, being chairman of the Manitoba C.C.F.—is not a member of the C.C.F.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Hear, hear; I will vouch for that.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: There may be an attempt at infiltration there, but it has not been successful.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Not a particle; don't alarm yourself.

MR. SMITH—SALE OF INTEREST OF IMPERIAL OIL IN INTERNATIONAL PETROLEUM

Mr. A. L. SMITH (Calgary West): On a question of privilege, I wish to call the attention of the house to an announcement in today's papers; I am sure it will please every hon. member. Imperial Oil have sold their interest in International Petroleum which operates in South America for $80,000,000. The money is to be spent in Alberta for oil development. We can now look forward to the day when Canada will be independent of all foreign sources for its oil supplies. I think the Minister of Finance will also be pleased about these United States dollars.

Mr. MacKINNON: And the Minister of Fisheries.

IMPORT RESTRICTIONS

LETTER FROM MR. HOWE TO MR. ABBOTT IN RESPECT TO CERTAIN GOODS AND EQUIPMENT

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I desire to lay on the table copy of a letter from myself to the Minister of Finance recommending that certain goods and equipment be placed on the list of restricted items for import.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. K. FRASER (Peterborough West): Earlier this afternoon the Minister of Trade and Commerce tabled a letter that he said he had written to the Minister of Finance in respect to extra import bans which he thought should be put on. Will that letter be published in Hansard, or can the minister give a list of the goods now?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): It will be published in the newspapers. It has not been customary to put communications of that kind on Hansard. I suppose it could be done if the house wishes it.

Mr. FRASER: I think members of the house should have it instead of having to go to the newspapers for it.

Mr. MacINNIS: Referring to the question raised by the hon. member for Peterborough West, may I suggest to the Minister of Trade and Commerce that he ask the consent of the house to have the paper which he tabled appear on Hansard? It is an important paper. Such documents are usually read in the house before being tabled. I think the house would be glad to give consent.

Mr. HOWE: As my hon. friend knows, the Minister of Trade and Commerce is in an extraordinary position in trying to carry out the dollar saving policy with no legislation. He has been in that position for several months. This letter is simply one to the Minister of Finance recommending a certain course of action. All I can say is that a press release will issue this afternoon giving the full particulars. I see no purpose in burdening Hansard with a letter of that kind.

Mr. FRASER: May I ask the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply and Trade and Commerce if he will not table the letter to which reference has already been made?

An hon. MEMBER: It is too late.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. FRASER: Just a minute. I believe the house should know—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon. member has already put his question.

Mr. FRASER: I should like to put it in a different way. I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if he is asking that this be done under the foreign exchange control board, or just how is it to be done?

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Under nails.

Mr. FRASER: We are still short of nails.

Mr. HOWE: The letter is tabled. The Minister of Finance will invoke the foreign exchange control board as being the only avenue open to him as long as opposition members hold up passage of his legislation.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): If the minister will not put the letter on Hansard as requested, will he not give us some reason other than the entirely inaccurate one he gave a moment ago?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. HOWE: The customary method, Mr. Speaker, of informing members of the House of Commons about the contents of a document is to lay that document on the table of the House of Commons. That I have done.

INCOME TAX

FARMERS—STATEMENT ON NET WORTH PORTION OF RETURN

Hon. J. J. McCANN (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, some days ago I promised to make a statement with reference to farmers' income tax returns, and I am now ready to implement that promise. Further consideration has been given to the matter concerning the net worth statement set out in the 1947 T.1 prairie farmers and farmers' income tax returns.

I cannot emphasize too strongly that it is in the farmer's own interest as a citizen and taxpayer to provide accurate and complete information of his activities so that he can be dealt with in the same way as every other taxpayer in the country.

[Mr. Howe.]

The department has placed in the hands of the farmer guide books which should prove of great value in maintaining proper information as to the operation of his farming business, and therefore should be of great help to him in completing his tax return. It will be beneficial to the farmer if he will carefully read the book and the form and attempt to complete it in its entirety.

It has been the experience of the department that many farmers reporting income do not maintain book-keeping records of their affairs. Our assessors have found in innumerable instances that, to determine the taxable income of the average farmer, it has been necessary to prepare, with the farmer's assistance, of course, a statement of the farmer's net worth and therefrom to calculate or estimate the taxable income.

To assist the farmer and to facilitate the assessing, the 1947 form was evolved, and included with it on page 5 is a statement of net worth. It was proposed that the farmer would complete this statement at the time he completed the return and that the department's assessors would then be in a position to proceed to the determination of the taxable income expeditiously and, in a great many cases, without further reference to the farmer.

It is now represented that this statement of net worth is too complex and that the average farmer will find it impossible to complete it without assistance. It would be impossible, except at a great cost, to build up the staff of the department to enable officials to call on every farmer in Canada for the purpose of assisting in the preparation of income tax returns.

The department therefore has decided that (a) those farmers who report their income for 1947 on a cash basis need not complete the farmer's net worth statement section of the return. There may be individual cases where, after the filing of the return, the department will require from a farmer, as from any other taxpayer, in order to make a proper assessment of his income, a statement of assets and liabilities of his business, or other additional information which, in such cases, will be requested in the usual manner. (b) Those farmers who report 1947 incomes on an accrual basis must attach to the return a statement of assets and liabilities, as heretofore, or complete the appropriate parts of the net worth statement attached to the return.

Objections have been raised with reference to net worth statement for fishermen. The adjustment of this matter is being given consideration.

Mr. ISNOR: Can the Minister of National Revenue make a further statement about the fishermen? He said the matter was being given consideration.

Mr. McCANN: I will do so at a later date.

Mr. HARKNESS: May I ask a question of the minister? What will be the situation of farmers who have already on a cash basis turned in their income tax returns with this net worth statement filled out? Will they be required to continue to do that in future years?

Mr. McCANN: That is a matter which will have to be given further consideration and determined from year to year.

Mr. HARKNESS: Why?

Mr. CASTLEDEN: In view of the minister's statement in respect to farm income tax, what arrangements have been made to give publicity to the department's decision as to net worth statement on farm income tax forms? This is March 19.

Mr. McCANN: That is a departmental affair which has already been arranged, and full publicity will be given the matter.

Mr. TUSTIN: I understood the Minister of National Revenue in his statement to refer to "prairie farmers and farmers". Was he then referring to the eastern farmers as well as the farmers of the west?

Mr. McCANN: It covers all the farmers of Canada. The reference to prairie farmers and other farmers had relation to the two types of guide and account books.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: The farmers who work and those who do not.

Mr. TUSTIN: Then I also understood the minister to say assessors were sent out from his department who, with the assistance of the farmers, made up these statements so the farmers could be assessed for income tax. How many years do they go back in arriving at those statements?

Mr. McCANN: That depends entirely on the individual case.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

EASTER RECESS—MEMBERS TRAVELLING EXPENSES —INTERIM SUPPLY

On the order, "Government notices of motion":

That when this house adjourns on Wednesday, March 24th instant, it stand adjourned until Tuesday the 30th instant.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I indicated earlier in the week that I would have something further to say about this resolution today. As hon. members know, the government is hoping that we shall get through on Wednesday afternoon. In some respects the house has not made quite the progress this week that we had hoped it might make; in other respects we have done perhaps even better than we had expected. I think I should allow the motion to stand until Tuesday. By that time it will be possible to know definitely whether we can afford to adjourn on Wednesday afternoon. I may say that if it appears reasonably certain that we can complete by Wednesday afternoon such essential business as I shall now indicate, the motion will be amended so as to read that when the house adjourns on Wednesday, March 24, it shall stand adjourned until Monday, April 5.

The Minister of Finance has authorized me to say that provision will be made in the supplementary estimates for members' travelling expenses to and from their homes, as has been provided for other short recesses during the past few years. Those who find it more convenient to travel by air will be entitled to do so.

I wish now to indicate what remains to be covered between now and the close of Wednesday afternoon if we are to adjourn at that time. If we are not through by Wednesday at six o'clock we shall have to sit, I think, on Wednesday night and possibly also on Thursday. There are amendments to the wheat act. That will be the first item taken up this afternoon. Then there is the Agricultural Products Act which has to go through different stages; then amendments to the emergency tax legislation, covering amendments to the Excise Tax Act and the Customs Act, including the imposition of new taxes and the removal of the old ones.

These have all been mentioned before. I am not certain that I said anything definite about supply. The Minister of Finance did make some reference thereto. There are some supplementary estimates to be brought down for the present fiscal year with the resulting supply bill, and then there will be an interim supply bill.

In regard to the supplementary estimates, I would say that so far as discussion on these is concerned the government will expect naturally that there will be some debate, but there will not likely be an item in the supplementaries that will not be paralleled by what appears in the general estimates, under which discussion on parallel items could take place later on. I think that covers all I have to say at the moment.

Mr. BRACKEN: May I ask whether the Minister of Finance has decided to deal with interim supply before the Easter holidays?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes. I have given further consideration to the matter which was raised by my hon. friend the other day and after discussing it with the officials I have come to the conclusion that since we are to adjourn presumably until April 5 it would be embarrassing if we did not have the usual vote of interim supply for the commencement of the new fiscal year on April 1. Therefore it will be my intention, on Tuesday perhaps, to bring in the usual interim supply bill. I shall perhaps discuss with the leaders, first, the question of how much should be asked for, and so on, and endeavour to arrange to have it put through expeditiously, if that meets with the wishes of the house.

Mr. BRACKEN: If I may do so, I wish to assure the Minister of Finance that on the matter of interim supply there will be no delay whatever. We recognize that money has to be available and I am sure that after the Prime Minister's statement today with respect to one feature of the Easter holidays, there will be a disposition on the part of some to hurry up the business in the next three or four days.

May I take this opportunity to make one suggestion. The measures which it is essential to pass in the next three or four days are measures which, I believe, everyone in this house wishes to see disposed of. Might I suggest to the government that one item that might be left until the last is the discussion of the excise tax. The government may not be disposed to see it that way, but certain of the other items, I gather, have to be disposed of. With respect to that one item, I suggest that it be left until the last. I make that suggestion with respect.

Mr. ABBOTT: If I may answer my hon. friend, on the Excise Tax Act we have had quite a long discussion in the committee stage and I feel, Mr. Speaker, that it is a measure which I must press forward before we adjourn.

WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCES

PROVISION FOR NEGLECTED OR DEPENDENT CHILDREN, INCREASED PERMISSIBLE INCOMES, ETC.

Hon. MILTON F. GREGG (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved:

That it is expedient to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act to extend the provisions thereof to a neglected child or children of a deceased veteran and to a veteran with a dependent child or children in special circumstances; to allow for increased permissible incomes and to provide supplementary allowances. Provision is also made to increase the annual salary for members of the war veterans' allowance board.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

MOHAWK AIRPORT

QUESTION OF DEMOLITION OPERATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GORDON GRAYDON (Peel): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the hon. member for Hastings South (Mr. Stokes), who has been called home this afternoon on important public business, I wish to ask a question of the Minister of National Defence. I have been unable to give him notice, so perhaps he will take this as notice of the question. Information has come to the hon. member that this week a wrecking crew began to demolish the Mohawk airport near Deseronto in his constituency. In view of the fact that this was built as a permanent camp, and further in view of the present international situation, will the minister investigate the matter to see if it is possible to reverse the government's policy in this regard?

Hon. BROOKE CLAXTON (Minister of National Defence): I shall be glad to look into it.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

INQUIRY AS TO INCREASE IN PAY AND ALLOWANCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. B. McKAY (Weyburn): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance, a copy of which I have forwarded to his office. When can the house expect an announcement of the pay and allowances increase for the uniformed and plain-clothes members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police?

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Justice): The matter to which the hon. member refers has not yet gone before council for its decision. I expect to place it before council early next week. After that an announcement will be made, but following the practice as to announcements with regard to increases in the civil service, I expect it will be given to the press in the form of a press release rather than taking up the time of the house with it.

CRIMINAL CODE

REQUEST FOR EARLY INTRODUCTION OF AMENDMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Will it be possible for him to bring in at an early day first reading of the bill to amend the criminal code? I notice that the Ontario legislature may be adjourning in a day or so, and there are several legal bills before it. In the Quebec legislature a bill has been introduced by their attorney general to appoint six additional superior court judges for that province, as well as other legal bills. Will the minister not have time between now and the Easter recess to introduce and have read for the first time the bill to amend the criminal code?

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Justice): It is not my expectation that it will be possible to introduce the criminal code amendments until some time in April.

UNITED NATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO NATIONAL COMMISSION IN RELATION TO UNESCO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. DONALD M. FLEMING (Eglinton): I wished to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, but as he is not in his seat I might ask his parliamentary assistant to take note of it and bring it to his attention. When does the government intend to appoint and set up the national commission in relation to the united nations educational, scientific and cultural organization under the legislation that was passed two years ago?

Mr. W. E. HARRIS (Parliamentary Assistant to the Secretary of State for External Affairs): I shall be glad to draw that question to the attention of the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

LUMBER

SHIPMENTS THROUGH CHURCHILL—NEGOTIATIONS WITH BRITISH TIMBER BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. KNIGHT (Saskatoon City): I wish to direct to the Minister of Trade and Commerce a question of which he has received a copy. Are negotiations proceeding between the British timber board and the Canadian government with a view to making arrangements to facilitate the purchase by Britain of lumber now being prepared for shipment through the port of Churchill?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I know of no such negotiations. I have not been advised that anyone desires to sell lumber to the British timber controller from that area. In any event the British timber controller makes his own arrangements for purchasing timber from Canada, the government acting only to facilitate his purchases.

NATIONAL REVENUE

INQUIRY WITH RESPECT TO ALLEGED COMMUNIST ADVISERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. PATRICK H. ASHBY (Edmonton East): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Is he aware that he is being advised by communists and is actually using the methods advocated in the communist manifesto in order to establish a totalitarian state in Canada?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. ASHBY: I should like the minister to answer the question.

Hon. J. J. McCANN (Minister of National Revenue): I have not been aware of any such advice, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. gentleman can produce anything which will convince me that I am getting that type of advice, I shall be glad to have it.

STRAIT OF CANSO

INVITATION TO MINISTER TO VISIT CAPE BRETON ISLAND TO DISCUSS PROJECT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. CLARENCE GILLIS (Cape Breton South): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. I did not send him notice of it because the answer would not require much research. Has the minister received an invitation to visit Cape Breton Island during the Easter recess for the purpose of discussing the Canso project? If so, is it his intention to accept that invitation?

Mr. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport): I have received no such invitation, Mr. Speaker, although I saw something about it in the press. When I receive the invitation I shall be glad to give it consideration.

Mr. GILLIS: I am giving the minister one now, and I should be glad to go with him.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SALARY INCREASES TO EMPLOYEES—QUESTION AS TO RETROACTIVITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. STANLEY KNOWLES (Winnipeg North Centre): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Will there be an announcement soon regarding pay increases retroactive to last October for employees of the House of Commons?

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): I think there will be an announcement fairly soon with respect to the position of salaries of employees of the House of Commons. I am not prepared to say to what, if any, date it will be retroactive. But there is nothing in the regulations which prevents it from being made retroactive to any date that may be appropriate.

CHARLOTTETOWN HARBOUR

MARINE SLIP—INQUIRY AS TO LOCATION AND TYPE OF CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. CHESTER S. McLURE (Queens): In view of the press information that dominion engineers, borings branch, Department of Transport, have been in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, determining a suitable location for the construction of a marine slip—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order paper.

Mr. McLURE: My question is this.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would ask the hon. member to put his question, and not to give information to the house.

Mr. McLURE: My question is this. When will the Minister of Transport be able to give the house a definite decision regarding the type of slip to be constructed and when will construction of it begin?

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I could not hear the hon. member's question. I will read it in Hansard and give him an answer later.

Mr. McLURE: I will read my question again. I desire to ask the minister—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that he has asked his question, which will appear in Hansard, and the minister has said he will take note of it and answer on a later occasion.

[Mr. Gillis.]

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

PROVISION FOR EMPLOYEES' PENSIONS, MINIMUM PRICE OF WHEAT DELIVERIES, ETC.

The house resumed from Thursday, March 18, consideration of the motion of Mr. Howe for the second reading of Bill No. 135, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1935.

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, when the house rose at six o'clock yesterday it was not expected that this matter would be further dealt with that day. After we left the chamber—and I wish to compliment the government and the house on the plans that were made—provision was made to permit the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bryce) to make his remarks. I believe the leader of the house at that time is to be commended for making it possible for the hon. member, who could not be here today, to make his speech. I understand further that some provision was made to permit me to continue today the remarks I had commenced before six o'clock yesterday, and I want to thank the hon. members responsible for the provision they then made. I do not expect that my remarks today will take more than fifteen minutes, and as far as I am aware this will be the last contribution from this side of the house at this stage of this measure.

When we rose at six o'clock yesterday I was in the midst of discussing the four main features of this bill: first, the pension plan; second, a further payment to the farmers of their own money; third, the proposed power for the board to handle wheat products as well as wheat; and fourth, the compulsory requirement that farmers must sell their oats and barley to the wheat board and no one else.

I had pointed out that we supported the principle of pensions for the employees, but that we were opposed to making the farmers pay half the cost. I had stated that we favoured the government paying the farmers a large part of the farmers' money, which has been withheld from them. I suggest now that when added to the initial payment of $1.35 the total, if possible, should be equal to the present parity price of wheat, which today is about $1.80. Even though the amount on hand is large there may not be enough to bring the payments up to that amount, but if there is not enough the payment should be as large as possible, approaching as nearly as possible the figure I have mentioned.

I had indicated that the expansion of the measure to provide that the board shall handle wheat products as well as wheat was not a very great expansion, and that it had some measure of merit but also that there was some opposition. I suggest that when we get into committee the minister elaborate that point further.

I had indicated also that we are opposed to compelling the owners of oats and barley to sell those products only to the wheat board, thus denying them the right to sell anywhere else if they wish to do so.

In expanding upon these points separately I stated with respect to the pensions proposal that we favoured it in principle; that we saw no reason to object to the employees paying half the cost of their pensions, but that as long as the board is being used for the purposes of the government we were opposed to the farmers being forced to pay half the cost of those pensions. I stated that the imposition upon the farmers of the burden of half the cost of this pension scheme raised a basic question, namely whether this was a farmers' board or a government board. If it is a farmers' board the farmers might reasonably be expected to bear half the cost of the pensions. If on the other hand it is a government board the government itself should bear that expense, and it should not be a charge upon the farmers.

The important question before us, therefore, is: whose servant is the wheat board? Is it the servant of the farmers who are compelled to use it, or is it the servant of the government which appoints it and on occasion dictates to it? When the original act was passed in 1935 it was very clear that the wheat board was to sell the farmers' wheat to the best advantage to the farmer in the way of the total price received, the stability of the prices paid the farmer, and the orderly marketing of the product. It was then clearly a board not only designed to function but allowed to function primarily in the interests of the farmers; but it is very clear now that under the present policies of this government the wheat board is a government board. It was not only appointed by the government; it is dictated to by the government and is being used by the government for its purposes, not primarily in the interests of the farmers but primarily for the purposes of the government. In carrying out these purposes the government has not hesitated to sell the farmers' product on occasion at less than it might have been sold for. As far as oats and barley are concerned, I predict that the board will be selling them at less than they could be sold for if the board is given a monopoly in the handling of these products. Under these conditions we say the government, not the farmers, should pay that portion of the cost of the pension scheme which is not paid by the employees themselves.

The second feature of this bill gives the board power to pay back to the farmers at least a part of their own money. It carries out in part, after much delay, what we have urged from the beginning in this matter. From the beginning we favoured a larger initial payment than $1.35 per bushel. But that was not done. From the beginning we favoured paying participation certificates at the end of each year. That was not done. We are opposed to the government holding back large sums of the farmers' money. But the government has held them back. The government is now said to have in its possession some $230 million of the farmers' money.

The government, after long delay, now plans to give back part of this money that it is holding back. It does not tell us exactly how much. It says it will be an increase in the initial payment. The name does not matter much; the payment is what counts. We are in agreement with the proposed increased payment, whatever its amount. I suggest that with the proposed international wheat agreement in prospect, the figure commonly reported of twenty cents a bushel is not enough. It is not nearly a parity price. We favour the payment of as large an amount as is possible at this time.

As I said a minute ago, the farmers should have an amount that approximates the present parity of $1.80. I am aware that because of our British contract—because of having sold two-thirds of the crop at low prices, probably there is not enough money there to reach that figure at this time. In those circumstances I suggest that a payment out large enough to reach as nearly as possible that figure should be made.

The third feature of the measure is that which proposes to give the board power to handle wheat products as well as wheat. Since the act as it now stands gives the board complete power over wheat, it is no great departure to give it the same powers over wheat products. However there have been some protests against this feature. We see both advantages and disadvantages in it. The board got along without it up until now. As I said a minute ago, we ask the government when in committee to give us more information to justify its position with respect to this aspect of the bill.

The fourth feature of the bill—and this is the one which has provided the most contention in the house—is that which would force farmers who grow oats and barley for sale to sell their products only to the wheat board, and to accept for it prices fixed by that board on the dictation of the government. We favour the wheat board being given power to handle oats and barley to the extent that farmers wish them to do so. But we are opposed to forcing farmers to sell to what has now become a government monopoly, if the farmers do not wish to sell to that institution.

We are opposed to this section of the bill because it compels farmers to sell to the wheat board, and denies them the right to sell anywhere else. We are opposed to this feature of the bill because we feel it means lower prices to farmers who produce oats and barley for sale.

As I have said, the purpose of the original act in 1935 was to market the farmers' wheat to the best advantage as regards total price stability of payments and orderly marketing. But the government is now using it as a national agency to serve another purpose. It is using it as a price control mechanism more than as an agricultural marketing board. And for that purpose it has sold in the past, and no doubt will sell in the future farmers' products at less than those farmers could get for their products if sold by themselves.

Instead of a price supporting agency, as it was originally intended to be, the government is using the wheat board as a price depressing agency in its plans to regulate price controls or price levels in this country. This is a complete perversion of the original conception of the wheat board act, and on that ground we are therefore opposed to this feature of the measure.

A second and related objection to this compulsory aspect of marketing oats and barley is that farmers are forced to sell to a government board at government fixed prices; they are forced to sell to a board administered by government appointees for the purposes of the government, a board which may not sell the farmers' products for the best prices obtainable. This means a substitution—and I shall use a word which I do not use in any offensive sense at all—this means a substitution of political prices in the place of market prices. And when I refer to political prices I mean prices fixed by a board appointed by the government.

If that practice is carried to its logical conclusion it means the suppression by the government of the normal economic laws of buying and selling. In my judgment, such a policy if continued long enough can have only one end, namely disaster to the wheat board and damage to the prestige of the co-operatives of this country. The policy of political prices for oats and barley will be just another nail in the coffin of the wheat board. It is this kind of policy that leads to the beginning of the end of that board as a marketing organization for farmers.

It has been suggested in this house that the government does not intend or expect to place oats and barley under the sole jurisdiction of the wheat board. It has been suggested that this is but a political move to influence the Saskatchewan provincial election, a political lifeline to the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) in his fight against the Premier of Saskatchewan. It has been suggested that this measure is a bit of political strategy brought forward to serve the purposes of a provincial election, rather than to serve the needs of agriculture.

I am not making that charge, Mr. Speaker, but I do wish to say that to the extent that such a suggestion is true this bill is a crude and cruel hoax on an important producing group in this country, those who produce oats and barley for sale. If the government is serious in pressing forward this feature of the bill, then I wish to say that we are against it because we are convinced that it will not serve the best interests of those it affects. If the government is not serious in this matter, then there is all the more reason to vote against it, because farmers should not be deceived by the government's pretending that it may do something, and then not doing it.

To summarize briefly what I have tried to say in these few minutes: We strongly favour the payment out to the farmers of their own money. We see some merit in other features of the bill, but we are opposed to that section of it which forces farmers to sell their oats and barley to a board which may, on the government's dictation, sell their products at less than they can be sold for elsewhere.

Mr. SPEAKER: When the minister speaks he will close the debate.

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this is the first occasion since I entered the House of Commons in 1935 that I have ever spoken on the subject of wheat. Perhaps I should follow the example of the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) and give my credentials for doing so.

It seems to be accepted in the house that any member representing a seat between Whitemouth, Manitoba, and the Rocky mountains, is automatically an expert on wheat marketing. I come from Port Arthur, so perhaps I have to justify my position.

May I say that I came to western Canada in 1913 as engineer in charge of construction of terminal elevators for the board of grain commissioners. From 1913 to 1935 I spent my time in the company of wheat men. During the intervening years I discussed very little except the marketing of wheat and grain. I have been retained by every farm organization in western Canada that has an investment in terminal elevators, including the early co-operatives and the western wheat pools. I have been retained by considerably more than fifty per cent of the private terminal elevator interests of Canada. I have had clients who traded on every major wheat market in the world. Therefore I suggest that if I am not qualified to speak about wheat, I have been collecting fees from clients for a great many years under false pretenses.

I should like for a moment to touch on the subject of pensions for the employees of the wheat board. I cannot believe that there is serious opposition to this measure, or any substance to the suggestion that the salaries of the employees should be paid by the board, and pensions out of the consolidated funds of Canada. We all know that pensions are equivalent to salaries. The proposed pension plan will be about equivalent to a seven per cent increase in the salaries of the employees of the wheat board. The number of employees to be covered by the pension plan is 457. The total number of employees is 686, but of those 229 cannot be included in the scheme because some are under age, some have been employed for periods of less than one year, and some have reached the retirement age. The cost to the board, based on paying one-half of the 14 per cent required for the plan, will amount to $78,400 per year.

It has been suggested that the farmers of Canada will object to having this money paid from the funds of the wheat board. May I say that every farmers' co-operative has a pension plan and the pensions are paid for, as are the salaries of the employees, from the funds of the farmers who own the co-operatives. Practically every grain firm on the Winnipeg grain exchange has a pension plan for its employees. I presume that the revenue of those firms is derived from the wheat farmers just as the revenues of the wheat board are derived from handling the wheat of the farmers.

It was suggested during the debate that the wheat board is overstaffed and overpaid. I find no evidence of that in examining the position of the wheat board. I believe it is a compact organization with a hard-working staff. I know that the salaries, at least of the senior employees, are less than many of those employees received from the private firms that employed them previously. I suggest that the viewpoint of the farmer is being misrepresented by statements that he would object to the payment of these pensions. I have found that the farmer is as fair an employer as is any other employer in this country, and I speak with some experience. The farmer expects to pay a fair price for efficient service, and in this case I believe he will be glad to see the employees of the wheat board protected by a pension plan.

Then we come to the matter of the increase in the initial payment. There has been a good deal of criticism about the method of marketing wheat and the price received by the farmer. Various controversial statements about marketing have been made. It seems to me that this criticism overlooks entirely the situation of trading in wheat in the world today. Practically all wheat, in fact I think I can say all wheat, is sold from government to government. In other words, state marketing is practically universal at the present time.

Several speakers have mentioned a world price for wheat. I suggest that there is no such thing. There are no international exchanges doing business today as there were in pre-war days. In pre-war days there was a definite world price for wheat. If one market was out of line, another market would sell wheat into it until prices were equalized. Where are the markets today? The Winnipeg grain exchange, one of the great pre-war markets, is closed to wheat trading. The Bolsa in Buenos Aires is closed to wheat trading. The Baltic in London is closed to wheat trading. The Liverpool corn exchange is closed. The markets of Europe are all closed, as are the markets of Australia. Where in the world can a world price for wheat be found when there is no world trading in wheat?

I was interested in looking up the prices being charged in state marketing on a given date. Argentina was selling wheat to various countries at prices ranging up to $5 per bushel. Australia was selling wheat under a one year contract to the United Kingdom at $2.72 per bushel and to India at $2.98 per bushel. Chicago May futures closed on that date at $2.45½. Canada's class 2 price on that day stood at $2.75. Those prices represent the major world trading today, and where in that collection can you find a world price?

It will be said that the United States markets are still open. They are the only markets in the world that I know of that are trading in wheat today. But I would point out that there is a difference between trading in international wheat and trading in domestic wheat. Canadian wheat cannot be shipped into United States markets because present customs tariffs provide for an entry of only 800,000 bushels of wheat per annum from Canada into the United States. Sales abroad are not made from United States markets. The only wheat that the United States is shipping is wheat bought by a government agency and shipped by that government agency. The Chicago price is a domestic price. We all know that speculation on that market grew to such an extent that it became a national scandal. The President of the United States denounced it, and the Secretary of Agriculture denounced it. The names of traders on the exchange were published. They numbered more than 3,000 large and small traders who were buying and selling wheat that they never had owned and never expected to own.

However, the Chicago market price is arrived at freely by buyer and seller and Canada has used it as a guide for its No. 2 wheat price. The No. 2 price is the United States price corrected for the higher protein value of Canadian wheat. The price arrived at in that way can hardly be called a world price, and I hope hon. members will not continue to refer to it as a world price. It is nothing more than the Chicago price corrected for protein content.

Mr. BENTLEY: Those who listen to Major Strange still call it the world price.

Mr. HOWE: Some of your colleagues have done the same thing. The leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) used the expression "political prices" in place of market prices, and he also mentioned sales in the interests of the farmer. What are the interests of the farmer? The interests of the farmer are to have a sure market, a stable market and a price that is fair. It is easy to find spot markets that will offer higher prices. Starving people, if they have money at all, are not in position to question the price that may be charged for the food they must have. That is why Argentina is able to sell its wheat up to $5 per bushel.

However, Canada has a special responsibility in a time like this. We are far and away the largest wheat exporting country in the world. We have a particular responsibility to our largest customer, the United Kingdom. Over the years the United Kingdom has been the country upon which Canada has depended to buy a large part of our exportable surplus of wheat. When war broke out Canada assumed the responsibility of seeing that the United Kingdom was supplied with wheat from this country. For a time it was sent as a gift, and later it was sent as mutual aid. The government felt that it was the continuing responsibility of Canada to see that Britain was supplied with wheat during the reconstruction period and at a price which Britain could consider reasonable. Therefore a four-year contract was made. That contract was submitted to the House of Commons, and I would remind hon. gentlemen that every member of the House of Commons voted in favour of ratifying that contract. It is well to keep that in mind when that contract is being discussed in this house. It is every hon. member's contract as well as the government's contract.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Would the minister mind saying on what occasion it was ratified in the house?

Mr. HOWE: It was ratified only last year.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): In what form?

Mr. HOWE: Also ratified at the time it was signed.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Only it was not.

Mr. HOWE: I remember the vote, and I remember that the then member for Parkdale was the only member of the House of Commons who voted against it. I remember that he resigned from his party a few days afterwards and went back to Toronto. That is my recollection.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): On a point of order, that agreement to my knowledge has never been submitted to this house and ratified as such.

Mr. FLEMING: And another thing, the agreement was not signed until after the hon. member for Parkdale had resigned his seat in the house. Let the minister stick to the facts.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. HOWE: I believe that that contract has worked out decidedly in the best interests of the farmers of western Canada. Today Canada has a place firmly established in the British loaf of bread. Today we are supplying 60 per cent of the wheat that goes into the British loaf. I remember that after a rather unpleasant difference with the United Kingdom in 1930 the position of Canada in the British loaf dropped as low as 20 per cent. I believe that Britain feels that Canada has treated her fairly in setting the current price for wheat. The price for the 1948-49 crop has been agreed on at $2 a bushel, and it is interesting to note that the three great exporting countries of the world, meeting in Washington a few weeks ago. decided that the importing countries thought $2 was a fair maximum price for wheat to continue over the next five-year period.

It has been suggested in this house that the farmer is the only producer in Canada who has not been getting the last cent out of his product that could be obtained. That suggestion is entirely unrealistic. Let me discuss prices of one or two other basic products. Let us take newsprint as an example, the second largest export commodity in Canada. Newsprint is very like wheat in that it is produced from the natural products of Canada and it is largely sold in the world markets. I asked our export department to give me their opinion of the world price of newsprint over the last three or four years, and I was told that it ranged somewhere between $200 and $300 a ton. I know that I have had a good many callers from overseas and from the United States to ask for an allocation, saying that they were willing to pay up to $300 a ton for newsprint.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Will the minister permit a question? How does he arrive at a world price for newsprint?

Mr. HOWE: The price at which newsprint was being sold from other than Canadian sources, and the price that Canada could have obtained for newsprint, also the so-called grey market price in the United States.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): The reason that prompted me to ask the question is this. I do not understand how you can say that there is a world market for newsprint when you say there is no world market for wheat.

Mr. HOWE: There is a world market for wheat but no world price for wheat. I am giving the opinion of my officers as to what newsprint could have been sold for had the Canadian producers agreed to go out for the last cent they could get out of the newsprint.

What is the history up to the beginning of this year? No producer in Canada had ever charged more than $90 a ton for his newsprint. So far as I know there has never been a ton of newsprint shipped to the grey market or shipped to an unofficial market. The newsprint industry has believed it is wise to ship newsprint to their traditional customers and to price that newsprint at prices which the customer could afford to pay. The record indicates rather remarkable restraint. I think that the businessmen who operate our newsprint industry are able, wise and far-seeing. I have heard my hon. friends of the C.C.F. party refer to these same men as greedy monopolists. However, that has been the policy of these men. They have believed that it was better to protect a sure market and a continuing market for their newsprint, better to keep their customers solvent, and to keep relations good rather than to go after the last immediate dollar that they could get for that product. That is one analogy with the farmers' position. I would point out also that the newsprint manufacturers have always quoted a lower price to Canadian customers than they have quoted to their foreign customers.

Let us take another analogy. Let us take lumber. When the controls of lumber were lifted there were three prices for lumber. I am taking west coast lumber as an example. The Canadian price was $29 a thousand; the price to the United Kingdom was $60 a thousand and the price to the United States and to other spot markets was $87 a thousand. There again the lumber producer was protecting his domestic market because of ceiling prices, but hon. members will notice that he was also protecting his United Kingdom market by quoting prices that were only about two-thirds of world prices for lumber. Therefore let it not be said again that the farmer has been placed in a special position through the policy of selling his product to a continuing customer at a reasonable price, and a price that that customer would not consider a hold-up.

Reference was made to extending the control of wheat to wheat products. This is necessary to insure that all wheat used in domestic consumption returns to the five-year pool the full current price. Any system which permitted the miller to pay less than full current prices would mean that the amounts available to go to increase initial payment from the five-year pool would be short to that extent. I hardly think it is necessary to dwell on that point.

We come now to the section bringing the marketing of oats and barley under the control of the wheat board. I made a lengthy statement setting out the government's views of this section when I introduced the resolution preceding the bill. The government fully appreciates the difficulty of the course that is opening up in this direction, but it does feel that at the moment there is an overwhelming demand from the farmers of this country that the marketing of oats and barley be placed under the board. The government may be wrong in this, but I see no indication of it.

The hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) suggested that the Alberta wheat pool did not favour this course, and I am placing this telegram from Ben Plumer, president of the pool, on Hansard because the telegram requests that I do so. It reads as follows:

Apparently as a result of certain discussions which took place at the annual meeting of Canadian Federation of Agriculture held in Brockville the latter part of January respecting the marketing of coarse grains the Winnipeg Free Press has persistently inferred in a series of editorial comments in their column as well as in certain news dispatches originating with their Ottawa correspondent that the Alberta wheat pool in some way has dissociated itself from other farm organizations in their demands on the federal government that the marketing of coarse grain be taken over by a government body. We also understand from press dispatches of earlier this week that the member for West Calgary, Mr. A. L. Smith, in his speech to the House of Commons in opposition to all coarse grains being marketed by the Canadian wheat board for a government body, indicated that our association was not favourable to coarse grains being handled in this manner. It is not quite true in the discussions at Brockville that our representatives expressed doubt as to the advisability of pressing the federal government to have the marketing of coarse grains handled by the Canadian wheat board in view of their present heavy responsibilities in respect to the marketing of wheat, flax and oil seeds and suggested a separate coarse grains board as an alternative. In accordance with our position as already outlined to you by our manager, Mr. R. D. Purdy, in a personal interview with you when in Ottawa some days ago, this will confirm that the Alberta wheat pool has consistently supported over the past several years, in conjunction with other farm organizations, the principle that all coarse grains should be marketed through a government board. We would ask that you arrange for this message to be read into Hansard as a means of definitely clearing up any doubt that our association has at all times consistently supported the principle that the marketing of all coarse grains should be placed under a federal government board and any statements or suggestions to the contrary are not in accordance with the facts.

Ben S. Plumer, Chairman,
Alberta Wheat Pool.

I have a somewhat similar wire from Roy C. Marler, president of the Alberta federation of agriculture, which I am not going to take the time to read.

I think that covers the remarks I have to make. It has been stated to me that I would have as much of this day to discuss wheat as seemed necessary for the purpose, but that if the bill failed to pass today it would have to hold over until after the Easter recess. That would mean more than two weeks' delay in getting out the cheques the farmers need to pay for their seeding expense. Therefore I hope that we can press this measure through and send it on its way before eleven o'clock this evening.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Howe) for second reading of the bill which was agreed to on the following division:

(Text):

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): In the debate on the resolution, Mr. Speaker, in response to a motion from the C.C.F. party that the bill be divided and the coarse grains section sent to a committee—

Mr. COLDWELL: It did not come from the C.C.F.

Mr. WRIGHT: On a question of privilege—

Mr. HOWE: I am simply making a statement as I said I would at this time. I said that after the second reading of the bill, before the Speaker had left the chair, I would move to take the power in committee to divide the bill in order to report one section and to send another section to a committee.

The purpose of that offer was to expedite the passage of the bill. I might point out that some eight days have elapsed since then, and every section of the bill has been thoroughly debated. The objective of saving time has not been achieved, and I see no purpose at the moment in putting this motion. However, having said I would do so I am willing to move it, but it is obvious, I think, that the motion will be voted down.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): The minister distinctly made the statement that he would adopt this procedure to divide the bill and refer section 5 to the agriculture committee.

Mr. HOWE: I move, Mr. Speaker, that it be an instruction to the committee of the whole that they have power to divide Bill No. 135 into two bills, in order that one may deal separately with oats and barley.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. SPEAKER: Mr. Howe moves, seconded by Mr. Gardiner—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. SPEAKER: —seconded by Mr. McIlraith, that it be an instruction to the committee of the whole that they have power to divide Bill No. 135 into two bills, in order that one may deal separately with oats and barley.

Mr. DONALD M. FLEMING (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, in view of the fact that the house has just defeated a government motion—

[Mr. Speaker.]

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. FLEMING: —is it the intention of the government—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. FLEMING: —to take the honourable course of resigning—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. FLEMING: —or are they going to attempt to cling to power with the help of the C.C.F. coalition?

Mr. MARQUIS: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Dorion). Had I voted, I would have given a serious vote.

Mr. MALONEY: Mr. Speaker, had I voted, I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. HOWE moved that the house resolve itself into committee of the whole on the said bill.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

On section 1—Pension fund.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I want to get in early on this because I have a matter which I think is urgent and I am going to ask the minister to give it consideration as soon as he can. I have obtained information in various places with respect to the surplus of coarse grains or feed grains at present in Canada.

Mr. KNOWLES: On a point of order, we are now in committee on clause 1 of the bill which has to do with pension matters.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): It was not called.

Mr. KNOWLES: I beg your pardon, it was. My point of order is this: If my hon. friend's remarks are to be with respect to the pension fund, I submit that they are in order; if they are general, I doubt it.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for Calgary West had just started to make his statement and I do not know what he intended to say. If he is dealing with the pension fund, he would be in order; if he is not dealing with the pension fund, then, of course, he would not be in order at this time.

Mr. JAENICKE: I think the minister made a very fair statement a few moments ago in connection with the farmer's attitude with respect to this pension fund. I do not believe the farmers will object to anything reasonable.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I had the floor.

The CHAIRMAN: If the hon. member was dealing with the pension fund he would be in order.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I did not hear Your Honour. I was not dealing with the pension fund and I am quite content to wait. However I had in mind an urgent matter which would come under this bill and I thought I should raise it now. I gladly give up the floor to the hon. member.

Mr. JAENICKE: I was dealing with the pension fund and I had said that I thought the minister made a very fair statement of the farmer's position. As I said during the debate on the second reading, I think in order to safeguard his position the farmer should have something to say about the matter. There is an advisory committee of the wheat board, and I was wondering whether or not the minister would consider an amendment to this section which would make the pension plan subject to the recommendation of that advisory committee. I do not wish to move any amendment at this stage, because I hope perhaps the minister will do so, but my suggestion is that after the word "may" in the first line there be added the words "on the recommendation of the advisory committee." Would the minister consider inserting that?

Mr. HOWE: I am of the opinion that the advisory committee has already approved the plan which has been submitted to the government for consideration. I have no objection to the amendment but I am inclined to think it is unnecessary.

Mr. JAENICKE: I am glad to know that, but I think the farmer would be more satisfied if the advisory committee had to be consulted about this pension scheme.

Mr. HOWE: It is unusual to have an amendment of that kind. Would it be satisfactory to my hon. friend if he had my assurance that the government will consult the advisory committee before adopting any plan?

Mr. JAENICKE: Yes, I believe so.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Payment to producers.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): On several occasions the minister in charge of this bill and the Minister of Agriculture have stated that there is no such thing as a world price for wheat today. The Minister of Trade and Commerce pointed that out this afternoon. Some time ago, during another debate, I put on the record a clause from the United Kingdom-Canada wheat agreement. This clause will be found on page 658 of Hansard and reads:

> In determining the actual price in the last two years regard will be had to the extent to which the agreed price for the first two years falls below the world price for that period. Our farmers are therefore protected from crippling losses should there be a world slump in wheat prices. This is the commercial advantage which Canada secures.

A year ago the then minister of trade and commerce gave all credit to the Minister of Agriculture for having negotiated this agreement and being partly responsible for its drafting. Perhaps the Minister of Agriculture would take advantage of this opportunity to tell us what is meant by the words "world price" in the United Kingdom-Canada wheat agreement. I am wondering why those words were inserted in that agreement for the protection of the farmer when there is no such thing as a world price today?

Mr. GARDINER: I dealt with that matter before the Christmas recess and gave an explanation. The term "world price" as used there is, as we explained a few moments ago, based on the United States price, the Chicago price. In the real sense of the term it is the domestic United States price, but it was the only price that was established on any market in the world. What the minister said a few moments ago is perfectly true; there is no world price in the generally accepted meaning of the term.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Is it fair to assume that in negotiating the price for wheat in 1948 and 1949 the United States price will be the one used in the negotiations so far as the Canadian officials are concerned?

Mr. GARDINER: It is fair to assume that consideration will be given to the relationship of the United States price with the price obtained from Britain.

Mr. FAIR: There seems to have been considerable dissension about the phrase "world price". I would be quite satisfied to use the words "class 2 wheat price" instead of world price. That term would be better understood by the farmers of the prairie provinces. If they can get the price being obtained for class 2 wheat I do not think there will be any further dissension.

In closing the debate a few moments ago, the Minister of Trade and Commerce said that Canada has a special responsibility. I think we all agree with the minister in that respect, but we do not agree that that responsibility should be borne only by the wheat growers of the prairie provinces. That has been our objection since the British wheat agreement was made. I repeat that we have no objection to the low price being paid by the people of Britain for this wheat, but we do insist that that is a responsibility of all the people of Canada, not one for the farmers alone.

Dealing further with the $2 maximum price for the next five-year period, I am not prepared to agree that that is just because we have not before us the terms of the agreement. I hope to have something more to say about this. When the minister made the announcement he said that that maximum price would hold good, regardless of the cost of production. While the price of wheat is controlled, while there is a maximum price on wheat, other things should not be allowed to go uncontrolled. It may be just one more bad deal being foisted on the farmers of this country. When we get to the coarse grains I hope to have a little more to say, but I wanted to say this much in connection with the wheat question.

Mr. ARGUE: Since this section makes provision for the governor in council to increase the initial price of wheat; since the farmers are very much concerned as to what that initial price will be, and since the government has not yet stated what the increase will be, is the minister prepared to state at this time what initial increase in price will be made?

Mr. HOWE: My hon. friend is aware that it is not possible to make any increase in price until this particular bill is enacted into law. As soon as it is possible to increase the price, I shall lose no time in announcing what the increased price will be.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I suppose the minister would not even suggest what the price may be. I am sure it will not develop into any great argument at this time. It would be helpful if we had an idea what the contribution will be before the bill is enacted into law. I cannot see any harm in the minister making the announcement now. So far as we are concerned we are not going to hold the measure up. It will go through today, and probably this afternoon. It will be helpful to the people who will be receiving the payments if they have an idea what they are to receive.

Mr. HOWE: This bill has still to be considered in another place. I should not like to announce the payment until I am sure the payment can be made. I hope to be able to announce the payment before parliament adjourns for the Easter recess.

Mr. FULTON: I want to take this opportunity to ask for further information in reply to a question which I put on the order paper and which was passed as an order for return to which I received a reply on March 17. The question concerned the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Department of Agriculture. I submit that virtually no effort is being made to answer the question. It concerns partly the price paid to the farmer for his wheat shipped to Britain under the British contract, and therefore I am in order in discussing it at this time. The information I was asking for was the difference in the prices which were received by Canadian farmers as a result of their shipment of wheat to Britain, and the prices which would have been received had the same quantity of wheat been sold at class 2 prices quoted by the wheat board.

Mr. HOWE: Before my hon. friend goes any farther, may I ask him this? Has he any evidence that any considerable part of the total crop of Canada could be sold at class 2 prices?

Mr. FULTON: The point raised by the minister would, of course, involve a considerable debate. The information I asked for was a matter of fact. What is the difference between the price which was received under the contract and the price which would have been received had the same amount of wheat been sold at class 2 prices.

The other question is a debatable one, whether the class 2 price or the world price would have prevailed. That, I say, is a debatable point; nevertheless the argument is altogether without sense unless we know what the difference would have been.

Mr. HOWE: I think the argument is without sense—period.

Mr. FULTON: Maybe the minister does think that, but there are many people who do not, and what they want is an intelligent basis of fact upon which to base their argument. What I am asking for is this: is it not possible to let the committee know the total amount paid for the wheat so far sold under the British contract at the contract price, and that, of course, includes the flour which, in some measure, represents wheat? Second, what would have been received if the same quantities had been sold at class 2 prices? The information I am given here is simply the contract price. I can read the contract. I do not know how much has been sold, how much of it is flour, and the price at which it is sold. It is certainly possible for the Department of Trade and Commerce to give me the total figures asked for.

Mr. HOWE: Has my hon. friend read his answer through? He is given the total sales each year, the prices at which they were sold and the average price of class 2 wheat for the corresponding period. Can he not add up and subtract? Is that too much trouble? Do we have to do that for him? The information he asks for is there.

Mr. FULTON: It is easy enough to be sharp about these things, but the information I have asked for is not there. I will read the question. Perhaps the minister should read the question before he reads the answer. If he reads the question he will find that my question has not been answered. Question 2 was:

What are the total payments (a) made by the British government?

Surely that is clear enough. I continue:

(b) Received by Canadian farmers, for the respective amounts supplied.

The answer to question 2 was as follows:

(a) For the crop year 1945-46, the United Kingdom government paid Canada for the wheat and flour supplied on the basis of $1.55 per bushel for One Northern wheat in store Fort William-Port Arthur, Vancouver and Churchill, plus certain allowances for carrying and shipping costs.

I do not know what these allowances are. It is arguable that I could multiply the price by the number of bushels and get the total; but I do not know what the allowances for shipping and carrying costs are, nor do I know what the bushel equivalent of a pound of flour is. The prices here are given as so much per pound of flour.

Mr. HOWE: Then the hon. member's extensive education has been neglected if he cannot find out that.

Mr. FULTON: The minister told us this afternoon what a great expert he is in all these matters. We know he is a great expert. Some of us do not hold ourselves up to be quite as expert as the minister.

Mr. HOWE: Any good dictionary will tell you what you are after.

Mr. FULTON: The minister has a number of officials paid by the people of Canada. I am simply asking that these officials furnish the information in reply to the questions I have asked. I am not asking the minister who is so much more expert than I am to do this. He has told me how dull I am—

Mr. GARDINER: There is a 72 per cent extraction.

Mr. FULTON: I have asked for the total payment made by the British government and received by Canadian farmers for the respective amounts supplied.

Mr. TUCKER: On a point of order, I suggest that the hon. member is seeking to debate a question on this particular section which he has had answered. That question is out of order on this section.

Mr. FULTON: On a point of order, I submit that I am in order because this section deals with payments made to farmers.

Mr. TUCKER: That is money paid to farmers, money held on hand.

Mr. FULTON: The answer is, as I have said, that the information is not given in reply to the question I asked, and I am simply raising the matter now and asking that the answer be given in committee before this bill is passed, so that those of us who are not experts, as the minister is, may have the basic information on which to base an argument. The same general question will arise in other sections of the bill, and I would ask that that question be answered. What I want is an answer to parts 2 and 4 of my question.

Mr. MILLER: I do not intend to ask many questions, but there is one point I should like the minister to clear up. I think he can do it quickly and easily on this section relating to the question of price. As I understand it, the minister will have the amount of the increase fixed after the bill is through parliament; is that right?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. MILLER: Am I right also in presuming that the price will cover the whole five years, that it will be the initial payment for the whole five years? Will the minister still have power to change it to a higher figure if the government wish to pay another amount?

Mr. HOWE: Yes; the government can increase the initial payment; it cannot lower it. It is the initial payment to cover the whole period.

Mr. MILLER: Every time it is changed it will be retroactive, or it will cover the whole five-year pool period.

Mr. HOWE: That is correct.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I am really on the right section this time, although that is not what I intended to speak about a moment ago. I want to ask the minister a simple question so that I can get clear in my mind the real operation of this act. Remember, we had a debate as to whether the 1945-46 crop should be included in the bill, and at that time many farmers wanted it excluded. Am I right in thinking that, as a result of that money having been kept at that time, they have done better than they would have done if they had been paid their money? It is all one pool, is it not?

Mr. HOWE: If this bill carries, when the cheques are issued for this participation the farmer will be better off in his 1945 crop than he would have been if he had taken the participation for that year only.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): That was what I thought. The next thing is this. Let us assume that a man grew a crop say last year when the price was good—I mean, as compared with other years—and he has done that only one year. Where does he stand? He gets his initial payment. How much does he share in—only one year? Obviously, he cannot participate in others unless he sells wheat to the pool. I gather that to be the situation. I am concerned as to what position he is in.

Mr. HOWE: He gets the number of bushels he delivers at the five-year price, whatever that may turn out to be.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): In other words, the amount you will announce, which will be added to the present payment. To whom does that go? Does it go to all persons in the pool?

Mr. HOWE: It goes to the man who delivers wheat. Every grower in the pool gets it.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Let us say a man had only the 1945-46 crop. In 1948 further payments will be made. Will he share in the building up of the pool to its 1947 position?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): He carries on?

Mr. HOWE: Yes. This is a five-year pool. If my hon. friend is familiar with the working of a one-year pool, he knows that every man who puts in wheat gets the pool price per bushel; and extending that for five years the position is the same, except that the period is five years instead of one.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): It is the same as the Irish sweepstake, but you make only one drawing. I have a letter from a veteran, who has grown his first crop. It is the only one he has grown, and he was concerned as to what his position was, because a certain amount of the money to which he is entitled was held back for this pool business. Let us assume that something happens to him and he is not in business next year. What is his position?

[Mr. Smith (Calgary West).]

Mr. HOWE: His estate will collect.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I did not suggest that he was dead. I said, suppose he is not in the business of growing grain. The minister says his estate will collect. What will the estate get?

Mr. HOWE: He will get his participation in the pool, and if he dies his estate will get it. If he has turned in wheat to the pool the amount he will get will be the number of bushels he has turned in, multiplied by the price. Deliveries may cover a part of each year or may cover only one year. He will get the number of bushels he turned in, multiplied by the total average price for the pool.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): In short, what happens is this. In 1947 he put in a certain number of bushels and so he shares when the final payment is made. He shares in the grain put in from 1945-46 up to the end of the pool, whatever that may be. Does he share on the same basis as the man who put in his bushels in 1945-46 when the grain was much cheaper?

Mr. HOWE: Just the same.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): All right. Then the man in the position I am speaking of gets the short end of it, does he not?

Mr. HOWE: How many such fly-by-night farmers are there that you know of?

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): According to some speeches I have heard, all farmers are fly-by-night, although they do not fly quite as fast as the minister did a few moments ago. I am grateful to the minister, as I always am, for clearing things up for me, but the position is this. The man who sells in a good year, or two years, in this five-year pool takes the short end of it against the fellow who continued from the beginning.

Mr. HOWE: He might not.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Well, if the grain goes down—

Mr. TUCKER: It might go up.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Yes, it might go up; but the fellow in 1945-46 gets it too if it goes up. So that the hon. member's remark does not add a great deal to the subject.

Section agreed to.

On section 3—Trading in wheat or wheat products.

Mr. BRADSHAW: Under the new act, I understand, there is a change in the placing of wheat products under the control of the board. I wish to read a telegram I received from the Great Star milling company in the county of Perth:

Understand bill 135 is under consideration and section 27 giving the wheat board control over wheat and wheat products. If board control wheat products this will mean the milling industry will be subject to complete control of board. This is giving a board powers that only the government itself should assume and then only in times of emergency. Strongly urge utmost opposition to including wheat products or grain products in this bill.

On the basis of this telegram I should like to ask a question. Are all wheat products or milling products strictly under the control of the board?

Mr. HOWE: If this section passes, all products of grain crossing a provincial boundary will be subject to the control of the board. The reason for that is that it touches on the point raised by the hon. member for Calgary West. This is a five-year pool. The price next year, we know, will be high and there may be a temptation for certain farmers to by-pass the pool and deliver to mills, instead of waiting to get the participation in the pool, taking immediate cash, in an amount which may be higher than the final result of the pool. That miller will probably have an advantage over millers who buy wheat from the wheat board, and the pool would not be getting all the revenue that is coming to it. The wheat board tell me that this provision is necessary at the present stage of the pool, and therefore I am asking the House of Commons to pass it.

Mr. BRADSHAW: That applies only outside the province.

Mr. HOWE: Crossing provincial boundaries, yes.

Mr. FRASER: I have a wire from the manager of the Quaker Oats Company of Peterborough regarding the same matter.

Mr. HOWE: I have dozens from millers. It is a round-robin wire.

Mr. FRASER: They object to the board taking absolute control of their industry, because that is what is happening. It is socializing the whole milling industry, putting it under state control. They also object, of course, as the hon. member has said, to restrictions in interprovincial shipments. I should like to read this wire:

Have wired both Howe and Gardiner objecting to bill 135 which may be taken up again today. This bill in effect would place milling industry under complete control of wheat board and government and believe that it would completely prohibit interprovincial shipments by millers except by permission of the board and give board powers greatly disproportionate to the purpose it is trying to effect. Milling industry already working under severe handicaps and believe it would be discriminatory and not in the national policy to put industry under complete government control as is outlined in bill 135.

During the last few years the milling industry has been under a great handicap.

Mr. HOWE: What is the handicap?

Mr. FRASER: In their shipments, and everything else.

Mr. HOWE: How were their earnings?

Mr. HARKNESS: Will the minister tell us what the term "wheat products" includes? Does it include shredded wheat and other breakfast foods made from wheat, or just flour and the ordinary mill foods?

Mr. HOWE: Any products that the governor in council may name. I hardly think they will get down to shredded wheat. I may say that if any flour mill will continue the practice they have followed for several years and buy their wheat at the wheat board price, these regulations will not affect them in any way. My hon. friend says that the millers have been discriminated against and are under a severe handicap. I just suggest that the government has been putting wheat in their mills at a standard price, selling their products in foreign markets and giving them a good margin. I think the hardship they have suffered will be reflected in their earnings over that period.

Mr. HARKNESS: In addition to that, can the minister tell us what is permitted under the regulations? Section 27 states that, "except as permitted under the regulations, no person other than the board shall ship these products," and so on. What is permitted under the regulations? The reason I ask this question is that I can see considerable difficulty arising in the matter of farmers attempting to buy mill feeds such as bran, shorts and so on, particularly those who are close to the border of one province and who may ordinarily secure their supply in the next province. Can the minister tell us just what is permitted under those regulations and how the thing is to be worked out with regard to farmers and other people purchasing mill feeds?

Mr. HOWE: The regulations are not as yet drawn, and it is difficult to say what will be in them. I can assure my hon. friend that if the mills buy their wheat at wheat board prices, which they have been doing for years, and buy from the wheat board, which they should properly do, they will have nothing to fear from this section.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Why bother, then?

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I want to ask the minister one simple question. I am much impressed, as I hear him talk, as to the position of the milling and other industries. He says that the government will do this and the government will do that, and that as long as these people will do what they are told, they will be well off. Perhaps they will. Would I be wrong in calling this a highly socialistic measure?

Mr. HOWE: State marketing is socialism, yes, if you like. But it is hard to be different in a world that at the moment is following state marketing for reasons which I think are largely beyond their control. There are currency problems, credit problems and a number of factors, which are driving countries to state marketing at the present time.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I think there are such factors, just as the minister says. But a good deal depends, in the last analysis, on what we want to do right here in our own hearts. I understand that the minister has agreed that this is a highly socialistic measure.

Mr. HARKNESS: A moment ago the minister said no regulations had been drawn. In this section 27, paragraph (b) and the following ones "wheat or wheat products" are the words used. It is always "wheat or wheat products". The regulations are in existence under which wheat has been handled. I would ask the minister whether those same regulations are the ones which it is proposed to enforce here or whether a completely new set of regulations will be drawn up as far as flour, mill feeds and so on are concerned.

Mr. HOWE: I imagine that the new regulations will define what wheat products will be covered by the regulations.

Mr. HARKNESS: Surely some plans have been made as to what those regulations will be. The minister cannot be entirely without any knowledge of what the regulations will be, and how they will differ from the regulations now in force as far as wheat itself is concerned. If there is to be any difference, I do not think we should give the government a blank cheque to make any regulations they like in order to handle these things afterwards. We should have some knowledge here as to what those regulations are, what the government will be able to do under them, how they will affect the ordinary people and the ordinary millers. From what the minister has stated so far, we have no idea how the thing will affect the people most concerned, and I think those are matters on which we should get information before we pass the section.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the section carry?

Mr. ROSS (Souris): No. After all, we are not living under a dictatorship yet, surely.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Or are we? Surely the minister can make some statement as to what will be included here and give us some idea as to what will be provided.

Mr. HOWE: The purpose of the section is to make sure that every farmer delivers his wheat into the pool. If he will do that—

Mr. ROSS (Souris): That is provided for now.

Mr. HOWE: Yes, that is provided for; but this is to make sure that there is no side-tracking, that no cut-price arrangements are made. If the farmer will deliver to the pool, and if the miller will buy wheat through legitimate channels, there will be no control whatsoever over the by-products. But if there is evidence that any mill is buying wheat outside the pool, or not through normal channels, then the regulations will be applied. The extent to which the regulations will cover wheat products will be the extent that the board may determine from time to time as necessary to achieve the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. MILLER: Will the minister undertake that such will be the wording of the regulation? It is only for the purpose of controlling illegitimate marketing?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. MILLER: That will be the wording in the regulations?

Mr. HOWE: I do not know what the wording will be. But the wording will say what can be done. I can assure my hon. friend, however, that if there is no side-tracking of the proper channels, the owner of the wheat and the miller will not be adversely affected.

Mr. MILLER: The minister will agree that if the wording is general, it would bar a farmer, if he lives right on the border of Saskatchewan, from coming into Manitoba and buying shorts, bran and that sort of thing, would it not?

Mr. HOWE: No, it would not bar the farmer from buying anything. If it is flour, bran or shorts made from wheat purchased by a mill through legitimate channels, there will be nothing to bar the farmer anywhere from buying those by-products.

Mr. MILLER: How will the farmer know?

Mr. HOWE: The penalty will not be against the farmer; it will be against the miller.

Mr. CHARLTON: I wish the minister would make quite clear just how this bill will affect the eastern soft wheat grower? Can he explain that?

Mr. HOWE: What is that?

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): He does not know about soft wheat.

Mr. HOWE: Soft wheat is not pooled.

Mr. CHARLTON: All the hard wheat is in the designated area west of the great lakes. What happens with regard to the eastern wheat grower?

Mr. HOWE: He is outside the designated area.

Mr. CHARLTON: What about wheat products?

Mr. HOWE: They will not be affected. As I understand it the eastern wheat can be sold to the miller under any condition the grower may determine.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): The minister had better think that one over.

Mr. CHARLTON: In other words, we can sell our wheat where we like, when we like, and buy what products we like—that is, the products of eastern wheat—within the province?

Mr. HOWE: That is what you are doing now.

Mr. CHARLTON: This has no effect on eastern wheat?

Mr. HOWE: No, I would not think so.

Mr. CHARLTON: I should like a definite statement on that from the minister. Surely we can have it.

Mr. HOWE: It will not affect the eastern grower.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the section carry?

Mr. CHARLTON: No, Mr. Chairman; the minister's statement is that it will not affect the eastern wheat grower—

Mr. HOWE: It will not affect the eastern wheat grower, no.

Mr. CHARLTON: —as long as the wheat by-products are from the eastern wheat that we grow. It is only with regard to the by-products of western wheat that we shall be affected. Is that true?

Mr. HOWE: I should think so, yes.

Mr. FRASER: What would happen to a blended product of soft and hard wheat?

Mr. CHARLTON: Just a minute, Mr. Chairman. Surely the minister can answer the question I asked a little bit more thoroughly than that.

Mr. HOWE: Wheat grown east of the great lakes is not wheat grown in the designated area.

Mr. CHARLTON: I understand that.

Mr. HOWE: Therefore this bill does not touch it. Can the hon. member understand that?

Mr. CHARLTON: Yes, I can understand that; but can the minister explain how we are to tell the difference between bran made from eastern wheat and bran made from western wheat, to be sure of it?

Mr. HOWE: You are talking about the wheat grower.

Mr. CHARLTON: I am talking about the by-products.

Mr. HOWE: You are shifting ground now. You asked how it would affect the wheat grower; did you or did you not? If necessary, we will send for Hansard.

Mr. CHARLTON: We also have feeders along with growers.

Mr. HOWE: Let us talk about the feeders separately.

Mr. CHARLTON: I am asking a question about feeders, too.

Mr. HOWE: The position of the feeder will depend upon whether the mill with which he deals has bought western wheat through official channels. If it is an eastern mill its wheat is pretty sure to come through those channels, because I do not see how it could get wheat from the west except through the board. The mill which might be inclined to go astray would be a mill in one of the western provinces, we will say, which could buy wheat from nearby farmers at cut prices and disturb the pool arrangements.

Mr. CHARLTON: Then just how is the price to be set on western wheat?

Mr. HOWE: Now you are getting into still another category, are you not? Government policy in that connection will be announced in due course.

Mr. CHARLTON: Then I come back to the previous question. What would be the penalty imposed upon a farmer who bought bran, shorts, middlings, or whatever by-product it might be, thinking it was a by-product of eastern wheat, when it turned out to be a by-product of western wheat? Would any penalty be imposed upon him if he bought that by-product unknowingly?

Mr. HOWE: I can give my hon. friend the greatest assurance in the world that no farmer buying bran and shorts will be fined for doing so. The penalty will not be against the farmer. Perhaps my hon. friend will be satisfied with that.

Mr. BRADSHAW: Take an Ontario miller buying Ontario wheat. Can he ship the by-products of that wheat outside the province?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. BRADSHAW: Supposing he makes bran or other by-products, can he ship them outside the province?

Mr. HOWE: Certainly.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Why this discrimination against the western miller? He has hard wheat, but very often he must have soft wheat, too. An example I know of, and I am sure the Minister of Agriculture would know of it also, is a big mill at Medicine Hat, which at times may have to go out and get soft wheat for blending purposes because, by itself, the hard wheat does not make the right kind of bread. As a matter of fact, I understand that all millers need some soft wheat at times. What is the position of that mill? Is it in any different position from that of an eastern mill if, in fact, it bought the soft wheat in Ontario and shipped it west?

Mr. HOWE: No.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): All right then. Is this the answer, that you do not control by-products made anywhere from soft wheat?

Mr. HOWE: We control by-products of wheat grown in the designated area, and the designated area is the three western provinces. If my hon. friend will keep that in mind it will narrow his argument a little.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Then let us go on with that. In this designated area we will say these by-products are not made solely from grain grown in the designated area, but from wheat blended with soft wheat shipped from Ontario. Does the government intend that the board shall have control of the products, the mixtures such as flour and other things, coming from that blended wheat?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Then you are controlling the by-products of grain grown in a non-designated area, are you not?

Mr. HOWE: Only because we must.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Then the answer is, I gather, that you are?

Mr. HOWE: No. The answer is that we are not controlling the by-products of grain grown in the designated area. If in doing so we incidentally control mixtures containing by-products of grain grown in some other area, that is just too bad; but the positive statement is that we are controlling all products of wheat grown in the designated area.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Plus an unknown quantity?

Mr. HOWE: Perhaps so. I have never heard of it. Will my hon. friend tell me if he has ever heard of a mill in Medicine Hat importing wheat from Ontario and mixing it with western wheat?

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): No, I never did.

Mr. HOWE: And you never will.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Well, I said I had not and you say I never will. I admit I am not capable of seeing as far into the future as you are, but I can see just as far into the ground as you can, and anything that is normal I can do just as well as you can. Then I want to ask if I heard the right hon. gentleman correctly a moment ago and if he said this; I want to be corrected immediately if I am wrong. I understood the minister to say they could not have these regulations until somebody knew—I suppose it is the wheat board—what wheat products they wanted to control. Did I hear the minister correctly?

Mr. HOWE: That is right.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Then I suppose the situation is this. Today we in this House of Commons are asked to pass a bill dealing with the products of grain grown on farms; the government are asking us to pass this bill, not knowing what those articles are. I am sure that what I have said is quite logical in view of the last answer given by the minister.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. FRASER: I want to ask a question.

An hon. MEMBER: What do you know about wheat?

Mr. FRASER: Not a great deal, but I want to ask one question. The minister said this would include all wheat products. Would that also include bread or biscuits or cake? Should the bill not specify raw wheat products? Some of the boards which have been set up in the past under bills of this kind have later been found to control almost everything under the sun.

Mr. HOWE: This paragraph is concerned with the price of wheat. It would be the purpose of the board to control only such products as will enable it to ensure that the wheat going into those products is bought through legitimate channels. That is all.

Mr. HARKNESS: The minister has told us he cannot say what those products will be. I think he must be able to give us at least some of them. He must know now that certain products will be brought under this control, and I wonder if he could tell us those so that we would have at least some idea where we are going in connection with this bill. At the present time I for one am coming more and more to the conclusion that the minister does not know what he wants the bill for or what he intends to do with it. If that is the situation I see very little use in adopting these amendments, unless the government has some definite use to make of them or some definite value in mind for them. Otherwise what is the use of passing the bill?

Mr. HOWE: I can give my hon. friend the assurance he requires. The regulations will certainly include flour.

Mr. HARKNESS: Will they include anything in addition to flour? Is flour the only thing you know they will include?

Mr. HOWE: I would not say that.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Then why not tell us the others?

Mr. HOWE: I do not know.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I am going to make an admission. I do not know anything at all about wheat; I am not like the minister.

Mr. HOWE: Then you can speak freely.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I may not be in such a different class from some others who have talked quite a lot about it. But it seems to me that the question asked by the hon. member for Calgary East is very reasonable. Why will the minister not tell us now the products that will be covered by these regulations? Why is that to be a secret, one day to be given out to the press, while we cannot have it?

Mr. HOWE: I have given the one product I know will be included; that is flour. Conceivably it may be necessary to include other by-products in order to achieve the objective I have stated; that is, to make sure the wheat going into the flour is bought through legitimate channels. I would think probably if flour is controlled, that would be all the control necessary. But it may develop otherwise. If it develops otherwise, I should not like to be bound by any statement I make here.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): What about bran and shorts?

Mr. HOWE: I do not know whether it is necessary to control bran and shorts or not.

Section agreed to.

Section 4 agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN: Section 5?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

The CHAIRMAN: Does the title carry?

Mr. ROSS (Souris): What about section 5; is that carried?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): No, it is not carried.

The CHAIRMAN: Speak up.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I want to ask one question at least on section 5.

The CHAIRMAN: Then section 5 is not carried.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I do not suppose the bill can be divided at this point. But, in respect of oats and barley, I cannot for the life of me understand this House of Commons, in view of the statement by the Minister of Trade and Commerce to the effect that the handling of oats and barley is unconstitutional. He argued that himself in the resolution stage of the measure. Other people who should know have pointed out that enabling legislation from every province in Canada would be required before this could be made operative. That would apply not only to the three prairie provinces which produce oats and barley. I understand from those trained in the law—and they should know—that the same type of legislation would be required from other provinces where this oats or barley may be traded. This would mean that each of the nine provinces in Canada would require that legislation.

I thought I had protested this as strongly as I could. The minister introduced the legislation and argued, himself, that it was unconstitutional until such legislation was provided. The Minister of Justice certainly felt that it was unconstitutional, and said on repeated occasions that the law officers of the crown had advised that it was unconstitutional.

Why in the world would a government introduce a measure like that, knowing that it is unconstitutional at this time, and without referring it to the standing committee on agriculture and colonization for at least some study?

We do not want to appear as foolish as that in the eyes of the people of this country, or to people of other countries. That does not seem to make common sense at all, in the matter of legislation.

Mr. HOWE: I can assure the hon. member that the bill as it is drafted today is quite constitutional. There is a limitation on the power that the government can exercise under the bill. But so far as power to control products crossing provincial boundaries, or exported beyond the country is concerned, there is no doubt in the world that the federal government has that power.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): About what percentage of this will be exported?

Mr. HOWE: A small percentage. That is why I have said, in introducing the resolution, that a workable system of marketing cannot be founded on this bill alone. We have gone as far as we can go. We are passing enabling legislation which, so far as this measure goes, will permit us to do all we legally can do. In saying that, I repeat that our powers are not sufficient, and this bill is not sufficient to organize a compulsory pool on wheat and barley that would succeed. What others do is the responsibility of others.

It may be that we shall have sufficient legislation passed in those proper jurisdictions to enable the pool to be worked out. If that is so, the government has done its part, and will be ready to act. We will make sure that others have taken the necessary steps to permit the operation of the pool within their jurisdictions. We will also make sure that both sellers and buyers, so far as they are organized farmers, are also satisfied that the combined legislation will permit a workable arrangement, and that a pattern for operating the pool can be worked out satisfactorily to both.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I want to know if the minister does not think this enabling legislation will be required from all the provinces in Canada for the marketing of oats and barley. It is not limited to the three prairie provinces in which those products will be produced. Will it not be required in other provinces where a great deal will be marketed and fed?

Mr. HOWE: I cannot say as to that. I know it will be required in the three prairie provinces. Whether it will be required in other provinces depends upon the objective of the farm organizations which are pressing for this legislation. I think it is more for them to say whether, in order to make the plan workable, legislation would be required, possibly in Ontario. But it is their program; and it is their responsibility to determine what their objective is, and what legislation is required to give them their objective.

Mr. MILLER: Will this government take the initiative or, if this legislation is passed, will it just sit back and await developments? Will it take the initiative to see whether or not coarse grains are brought under the wheat board?

Mr. HOWE: This government has already taken the initiative. This is the first legislation of this type passed by any government covering the pooling of barley and oats. The government is doing its share; it is doing all it can do. It is not now going to dragoon other governments into doing what they need to do. We shall assume that the reasons which led us to do what we are doing will lead other governments to do what they require to do. If it does not have that effect we shall assume that we were mistaken in thinking we have that unanimity of farm opinion behind the bill which seems to have been indicated.

Mr. MILLER: After the passing of this measure, your initiative will be still-born; is that right?

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Is it not probable that the same enabling legislation would be required in this instance as was required for the natural products marketing legislation, which was declared ultra vires? There is little difference in the two, is there?

Mr. HOWE: Enabling legislation is ultra vires; it has been declared that complementary legislation is not ultra vires.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Conjoint.

Mr. WRIGHT: The question I was about to ask was along the same lines as that which has just been asked. Is it the opinion of the minister and the government that the same type of complementary legislation will be necessary in the three prairie provinces for the successful operation of the bill?

Mr. HOWE: Yes; undoubtedly, to make the bill effective there must be conjoint legislation in the three prairie provinces.

Mr. WRIGHT: Last year we moved an amendment to include oats and barley under the wheat board. At this time we would, in the ordinary course, have moved that all grains be placed under the act, when we were placing oats and barley under it. However, due to the length of discussion which has taken place, and the necessity for getting this bill through, we are not going to move that amendment, although our people still agree that all grain should be included under this measure.

Mr. HOWE: If I might reply to the hon. member, I have no objection to including flax in the amendment. I am quite willing to offer an amendment; indeed I have one prepared to that effect, and I am willing to offer it to the committee. I am not pressing it, but I am willing to do so.

Mr. WRIGHT: Why not rye?

Mr. HOWE: Rye is in a different position. As my hon. friend knows, rye is planted in the fall, and anything we do now would not interfere with the rye crop for next spring. It is in the ground now.

Rye has had a dizzy market career. On March 8 last the cash price of 2-CW rye was $3.98 a bushel. The May quotation was $3.86; the July was $3.21¾, and October, $1.88.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): What about today? It is quite a bit over that today.

Mr. HOWE: Perhaps so. But if anyone thinks this government is going to run a pool on rye with that sort of dizzy market history, he is much mistaken.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I am not asking for it.

Mr. WRIGHT: I think the committee would like to see flax included in the bill; at least we in this part of the house would. We would also like to have seen rye included. We do not want to start a long discussion but, if possible, we would like to see flax included.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I can assure my hon. friend that we shall have a long discussion at this late date if he tries to get things added to the bill, or to alter it by the addition of another kind of grain. I want to make one thing plain, and I hope I am not repeating what I have said. I have no doubt at all that the resolution required will come back from the Saskatchewan government so fast that you will not even be able to catch it on the first bounce. This is part of state control which my hon. friends to the left honestly believe in and support.

But I think you will have difficulty with some of the others. The minister has not answered this; but I think, having regard to property and civil rights, that if you need conjoint or complementary or enabling legislation in the provinces where the grain is grown and where it is bought, you will also need it in those places where it is sold. Western coarse grains are sold today in Ontario, Quebec, the maritime provinces and British Columbia.

When I first rose today the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre raised a point of order before I had said anything. I had not mentioned any subject at all, but he apparently was reading my mind. Had I continued I would have been out of order, but I was not when he spoke because I had just said, "good morning."

Mr. KNOWLES: You said oats and barley.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I should like to speak to the minister about oats and barley. I have received a lot of correspondence lately with respect to this matter, including a file which the Minister of Finance knows all about, because I have been sent copies of the correspondence that was exchanged with him. I am not going to read it, first, because it is too long and, second, because the last letter contains a reference to myself. With my usual modesty I just could not have that become public property.

It is a fact that today in Canada we have a large surplus of oats and barley. If anyone is interested I have all the figures here of what is at the head of the lakes and at the lake ports. In various parts of the country there will be new grains of this type coming on to the markets everywhere. It is said that at the present time there are bids in the market from the United States, Eire, Belgium, the Scandinavian countries and Holland, with payment in United States dollars and at prices higher than can be got for the grains in this country. In short they say that this is a matter, possibly of great urgency; that unless this surplus which amounts to—I shall put it very low—30,000,000 bushels is taken care of, unless it is channeled off for useful purposes, it will lie there against what is at present maintained west of the lakes. It is contended that immediately navigation opens there will be trouble, to say nothing of what will take place when the new crop comes on.

I am taking this opportunity of saying to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who has been known to act quickly in times gone by—it is one of his most admirable qualities among many—that this matter should be looked into immediately. If the information I have been given is correct, it indicates a serious condition in western Canada. I am not going to say any more than that. I am sure, from the various sources of information which I have and which I think are accurate, that this is a matter which needs correcting. The minister can, by one swift move, eliminate this top-heavy thing which is rolling around on top of our market. He can do that by loosening up on export permits. We do not need to put ourselves in danger, but in this correspondence there are a number of letters from Ontario and Quebec cancelling orders. In fact today feed is just not moving. That is an unusual condition at this time of the year. Everyone seems to be saying that he is well stocked up.

I am merely asking the minister to look into this matter because it seems to those of us who are amateurs, who have not his knowledge from the various sources of information he has, that this is a serious condition. There is a possibility that I am overstating it, but I am quite sure I am not to any great degree. If what I have said is correct, I think it is something the minister might well look into in the course of the next few days.

Mr. HOWE: The matter is being looked into at the present time. The Minister of Finance wishes to make a statement before six o'clock, and I would move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I should like to ask the minister when the wheat board report will be available and whether he could table it before the 1946-47 crop year ends? Also, will it be referred to the standing committee on agriculture?

Mr. HOWE: I have received the report in typewritten form, but I have not tabled it because I was told the printed copies would be available in a few days.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Will it be referred to the standing committee?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. MILLER: May I suggest that the minister reconsider his statement regarding wheat products and designated areas because, if you look at part IV of the act, you will see that there is no restriction or designated area for the products covered by part IV. I do not say the minister is in error, but he may be in saying that, by this amendment, wheat products must originate in a designated area.

Mr. HOWE: I think my hon. friend will agree that the purpose of the act is simply to see that wheat which should properly go into the pool is delivered to the pool rather than being short-circuited to nearby grist mills.

Mr. MILLER: Will the minister reconsider that statement?

Mr. GARDINER: On a point of order, the question was raised a few moments ago by the minister that we were prepared to stop the committee at two minutes to six in order to allow the Minister of Finance to bring down some estimates which he desired to get before the house. It was understood that rather than interrupt the passing of the section and the report of the bill we would carry on for a few moments. It was agreed that we go on and finish this and forget the clock for a minute or two.

The CHAIRMAN: I understood that hon. members agreed to carry the section before six o'clock.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. GRAYDON: I think some hon. members agreed to separate the bill, did they not?

The CHAIRMAN: Shall section 5 carry?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Progress reported.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES 1947-48

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting supplementary estimates for the financial year ending March 31, 1948, was presented by Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance), read by Mr. Speaker to the house and referred to the committee of supply.

Mr. BRACKEN: Can the minister say when the estimates will be brought forward?

Mr. ABBOTT: I cannot say, Mr. Speaker. I had in mind Tuesday. I do not see how we can do it before then. We are proceeding with the wheat bill this evening. I understand that we shall proceed with the tax resolutions on Monday, but we shall proceed with this just as soon as we can dispose of the other emergency resolutions.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight oclock.

PRIVILEGE

MR. COLDWELL—REFERENCE TO REMARKS IN DEBATE ON MARCH 12

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to rise to a matter of privilege if Your Honour will permit me to do so, in order to make a correction in last week's debate on insurance. I do so for the purpose of setting the record straight. There was a good deal of questioning as to what the Saskatchewan benefits really were, and I have here a very short paragraph which I desire to read in order to complete the record and ensure that no misunderstandings were left in the matter. It will take only a minute.

I have a letter from the minister of social welfare, Hon. O. W. Valleau, of Saskatchewan, which reads in part as follows:

Public liability and property damage insurance of $5,000 injury to one person in one accident, $10,000 injury to two or more persons in one accident, and $1,000 property damage. This is what is known as standard liability and property damage insurance, and is the type required under the liability laws in force I believe in British Columbia, Alberta, Manitoba, Ontario as well as some thirty-eight states in the United States. The insurance on all cars when they are outside of the province of Saskatchewan will be standard in every particular, but on cars inside the province the property damage of $1,000 will be subject to a deductible of $100. This is to bring it in line with our collision insurance and also to relieve us of the administrative task of being involved in every accident on 170,000 to 180,000 vehicles where the damage is less than $100 in extent, no changes being made in the rates which, as you will recall, were $4.50 for cars under 111-inch wheel base, and $6.00 for those over, with varying rates for trucks, buses, et cetera.

I simply wish to put that question right. The other benefits regarding hospitalization, medical attention or funeral benefits and so on are as I stated them last week.

PRIVATE BILLS

BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY OF CANADA

The house resumed from Friday, March 5, consideration of the motion of Mr. Rinfret for the second reading of Bill No. 8, respecting the Bell Telephone Company of Canada.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, when we were discussing this bill on Friday two weeks ago we were considering the application of the Bell Telephone Company for an increase in its capital stock by the sum of $350 million up to $500 million, and I was saying that in the absence of a great deal of information, this is a remarkably large amount for any company to receive under one bill at one time from this parliament. Had the amount for which the company is asking been much smaller, I could have understood why the application was before parliament at this particular time. But when we realize that, as I believe, this practically equals the assets of the company itself —they are not very much in excess of $350 million, and indeed they may be a little less— and when we consider that in all the years prior to 1929 the company managed to get along very well on $75,000,000, being authorized to increase its capitalization by another $75,000,000 in 1929, it seems that we are being asked to swallow a great deal when we are asked to support a bill for this huge increase in capitalization.

Let me say again that I am in agreement with the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Church), and I know that other members in the house, in various quarters, are of the same view, that these huge public utilities should be publicly owned. Whatever our differences of opinion may be on private enterprise, I believe there is a considerable body of opinion in all parts for the public ownership of public utilities in order that they may be properly regulated with a view to giving proper rates and service to the community.

Moreover, the Bell Telephone Company is a very important company in our own country, for this company owns more telephone lines in the country, and has a larger number of subscribers than all the rest of the telephone companies in the country including the three publicly owned telephone systems in the prairie provinces. These three are owned, of course, by the provincial governments, and as I said on a former occasion they give excellent service, and incidentally encounter many more hazards and difficulties than a telephone system which is serving more or less congested areas. Yet they are able to make substantial returns to the provinces and at the same time, as I shall show in a moment, give the users of those telephone systems cheaper rates than are provided in this part of the country by the Bell Telephone Company.

I should point out, too, that the Bell Telephone Company is controlled by a large corporation in the United States. It is, I believe, controlled in part by the American Telephone and Telegraph Company and therefore may be considered to be a subsidiary of that great organization. My hon. friend opposite who is piloting the bill shakes his head, but that is what I have been informed. If I am wrong, I have no doubt he will correct me and I shall accept the correction. I give him an opportunity now to do so.

Mr. RINFRET: I have already indicated to the house that the American Telephone and Telegraph Company owns only 14·8 per cent of the stock.

Mr. COLDWELL: But very often, when there is a large corporation owning a minority of the stock, the stock is widely diffused; and in this particular case, under a clause in the bill before us, it is proposed to split the shares four ways and diffuse them more widely. If, therefore, you have concentrated ownership of even ten per cent or less there is effective control of a corporation, and the American Telephone and Telegraph Company is the largest shareholder in the Bell Telephone Company, holding over 14 per cent of its stock.

The Bell Telephone Company of Canada has sixteen subsidiary companies in this country and besides owning telephone exchanges, trunk lines and urban and rural telephone systems, it owns, I believe, or controls companies that are engaged in the manufacture of telephone equipment, radios and a number of other pieces of equipment that are common to the telephone industry.

I was looking up the debate which took place in 1928 and 1929, when a similar request for a much smaller amount was before the house, and I noted carefully some of the representations that were made by the province of Ontario officially at that time, and the manner in which one subsidiary, the Northern Electric Company, figured in the discussion. While this company is limited, in the amount of dividends it may pay, to eight per cent,—

Mr. RINFRET: It is $8.

Mr. COLDWELL: That is, $8 on $100 a share, which is eight per cent according to my calculation.

Mr. RINFRET: Selling at $160.

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes. They are selling at $162, but the actual value of each share is $100. If people are prepared to pay $162 for something that has a face value of $100 that, of course, is their business and I have no quarrel with them. But may I say that if that is the case, and if this capital stock of $350 million were issued, the public then would pay considerably more than $350 million for the stock, if it sells at $162 or less or more as the case may be.

[Mr. Coldwell.]

I wish to say something about the rates. I looked up the rates in my own province, and I took the recent telephone directory for the city of Saskatoon which the hon. member for Saskatoon City (Mr. Knight) brought with him when the house assembled in January. I did not have the recent one from Regina. Here is what I find. We will take the person to person call. The minimum time the Bell Telephone Company charges for is three minutes. In Saskatchewan you can have, for less money, a two-minute conversation and there is no additional charge for a person to person call. So I will take the person to person call in each case. For three minutes the telephone rate from Ottawa to Montreal is $1, but there is a federal tax of fifteen cents on the call. I have that bill in my hand.

Mr. MITCHELL: What time of the day is that?

Mr. COLDWELL: That is the daytime rate. That makes it $1.15. From Regina to Saskatoon, which is a much greater distance and over a much less congested territory where there are not nearly as many subscribers, the daytime rate for three minutes is $1.05, but that includes the federal tax. For two minutes from Regina to Saskatoon the daytime rate is seventy cents, including the federal tax. What about the night rate?

Mr. ISNOR: What about the overtime? What about the time beyond three minutes?

Mr. COLDWELL: It is paid for proportionately. From Regina to Saskatoon the night rate for three minutes is seventy-one cents, including tax; from Ottawa to Montreal it is seventy cents, and in addition there is the federal tax, which is eleven cents. We will take the rent of the telephone. In most instances today, probably the cradle telephone is used. My Saskatchewan friends tell me that the rate is a little more than it was when I lived in Regina a few years ago. At that time we paid $28 a year for a cradle telephone. Today my Saskatchewan friends tell me that the rental of a cradle telephone is $30 a year. In this city —again I have my own bill—for a cradle telephone the charge is $3.45 a month. If hon. gentlemen work that out for twelve months, at $3.45 a month, I think they will find that it comes to $41.40 a year, or $11.40 more than is paid in Saskatchewan for the same type of telephone.

Mr. HOWE: Might I be permitted to ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes.

Mr. HOWE: Is it not a fact that a telephone in Ottawa has a great many more free connections than a telephone in Regina?

Mr. COLDWELL: Many more which?

Mr. HOWE: Free connections; that is, it is connected with a great many more people.

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes.

Mr. HOWE: That is an important element in the cost of telephones.

Mr. COLDWELL: Well, I would say that the more people who are using the telephone system, the cheaper the rate should be.

Mr. RINFRET: It is the other way around.

Mr. HOWE: Yes, it is the other way around.

Mr. COLDWELL: No. I do not think it should be the other way around.

Mr. HOWE: Yes, it is.

Mr. COLDWELL: I will get you another rate.

Mr. MITCHELL: Get the figures for Saskatchewan.

Mr. COLDWELL: The Minister of Labour (Mr. Mitchell) said two weeks ago, "What are the British rates?" I may say that I did not catch the word "rates" when he mentioned British rates.

Mr. MITCHELL: I should have said, what about the British service?

Mr. COLDWELL: British service or British rate.

Mr. MITCHELL: Awful.

Mr. COLDWELL: Well, I do not know about the British service being awful. As a matter of fact, until recent years telephones were almost unnecessary in Great Britain. When I was a boy at school in the city of Exeter, forty miles from where I lived, and to which I used to go every morning by train, I know that if my parents wanted me to bring something home from the city in the evening—I used to leave at seven o'clock in the morning before my mother was up—she could write me a note and it would be delivered to me before noon. I could do my shopping in my noon-hour and take home what she wanted on the evening train, getting home at six o'clock in the evening. Everyone who has lived in Great Britain knows that the telegraph took the place of the telephone to a large extent, because you could telegraph very quickly and very cheaply indeed—and you still can—because, may I say, the telegraph is owned by the post office in Great Britain. I believe the telephone system is too. But until quite recently telephones were not used extensively.

Mr. HOWE: There is a reason for that.

Mr. COLDWELL: I remember that in 1924, when I was over there, I wanted to telephone home to my wife, and I found that she was one of half a dozen people in quite a large town who had telephones in their own homes, because the rates were prohibitive then. The rates have come down because there are more telephones. What I was going to say was this. The last time I was in Britain, in 1944, I discovered that I could call anyone from John o'Groats to Land's End after seven o'clock at night for one shilling; that is twenty cents. You could call anyone who had a telephone anywhere in the United Kingdom for twenty cents. That rather discounts the idea that in a congested area the rates should be higher, because in the city of London—

Mr. HOWE: Oh, no. May I point out to my hon. friend that it is a well-known fact that all the connections that have to go on the switchboard to serve a big community make the service vastly more expensive in a big centre. He will find that if he traces the rate structure from one end of the United States to the other or from one end of Canada to the other.

Mr. COLDWELL: All I can say is this. I am not as well versed in this matter as is the Minister of Trade and Commerce. On a matter of this sort I usually take his word for it. But it seems strange to me that where you have a large city, with a large number of automatic telephone connections and a large number of users who are paying a high rental per telephone, you cannot supply the service more cheaply than you can in a smaller community where in many instances the telephone exchange is operated manually. Maybe I am wrong, but I cannot understand it.

Mr. RINFRET: That is a fact.

Mr. COLDWELL: I know that some people argue that way. But I remember the old story about the post office; how it was said before we got penny postage that because many people would use the facilities, it would never pay at a low rate.

Mr. IRVINE: May I ask a question? I should like the hon. member to explain this, if he can. If a telephone system in a congested area is more expensive, how is it that telephone companies pass by all the rural community areas and pay attention to the cities?

Mr. COLDWELL: That is a very good question.

Mr. IRVINE: Certainly it is a good question.

Mr. COLDWELL: It points up the argument that we are having; because after all—

Mr. RINFRET: That is what happens in Saskatchewan.

Mr. COLDWELL: In the western provinces of Canada—

Mr. SPEAKER: May I direct the attention of hon. members to the fact that we are on the motion for second reading, and under the rules an hon. member may speak only once. If hon. gentlemen have questions to put, I suggest that they wait until we have reached the committee stage.

Mr. COLDWELL: Very well, Mr. Speaker. I was going on to say that this points up the fact that, because it was not thought to be a profitable venture, the Bell Telephone Company did not enter the telephone business in the western provinces. There are now many telephone users there; and I think it is an open secret that in one or two of the provinces approaches have been made in recent years for the acquisition of the provincial telephone systems.

Mr. RINFRET: Not by the Bell company.

Mr. COLDWELL: Then by private interests; I will put it that way. But I do not consider it likely; in fact I am sure it is quite unlikely, that the people of the prairie provinces, who own their own telephone systems, will relinquish them under any circumstances. One of the features of this bill to which I am thoroughly opposed is, as I said last week, that portion the purpose of which, so they say, is to clarify the powers of the company under its original act of incorporation with regard to the use of the latest and most improved means and inventions, including radio and wireless telephone and television, in furnishing communication service, and to make clear the company's position with regard to the use and operation of radio and wireless telephone in furnishing service to mobile stations and to remote communities where the construction of wire facilities may be impracticable, and in interconnecting its wire facilities with radio links. The section contains a declaration that the company has always had the right, under its original charter to do these things, which I believe to be wrong.

Mr. W. A. McMASTER (High Park): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate because a great increase in capital is being asked for by the Bell Telephone Company. I have no quarrel with that company. I have been acquainted and connected with all its personnel in the city of Toronto, and I have found them to be fine, outstanding men. The employees must live up to certain standards. The executives take part in every worthy work in that city. I know they engage in a great deal of research work, and are all the time trying to find out what the necessities of the future will be as far as telephones are concerned. In that way they acquire a great deal of knowledge which they have always placed at the disposal, free of charge, of any worthy cause or any municipal or other body. Therefore I say I have only the kindliest feelings toward the Bell Telephone Company.

Nor do I intend to complain particularly about their rates as far as the city of Toronto is concerned. I think those rates are very fair. That may not be entirely true as far as the suburbs of Toronto are concerned, and I think that is where the main objection comes from. The city of Toronto covers a very large area, and from time to time the telephone company has extended its basic area to include not only the city itself but the township of York, with some 85,000 people, and the township of East York, with another 45,000. So that from time to time, perhaps as a result of a little pressure from the municipalities, the basic area has been extended. In the last few years the suburbs have grown tremendously; and many people in those districts which have been built up during the war and since are complaining of the higher rates they have to pay, and urging that they should be included with those who enjoy the basic rate. That is, of course, a matter which can be threshed out before the board of transport commissioners.

However I do object to the Bell Telephone Company coming here at this time and asking for an increase of $350,000,000 in their capital. That is a sizeable amount and, as far as I can see, it has not been justified by anything presented by the hon. member for Outremont (Mr. Rinfret) in sponsoring this bill. The hon. member gave the house information which I have read. I have read, as well, the financial statement of the company for 1946, to which I shall refer a little later. I say I do not see any justification at all for this application. When this company was incorporated in 1880 it was given powers about as extensive as it could think of at that time, though those powers may not be so extensive now as the company would wish, because of new inventions which have come along. At that time the company started with a capitalization of $500,000. Some time later this was increased to $50,000,000, and eventually, in 1927, the company was allowed to increase its capital to $150,000,000.

As far as I can learn, as late as 1945 the company had used only $35,000,000 of this increased capital. In other words, in 1945 the issued capital of the telephone company was only $85,000,000, and, after all, in 1945 they were serving a very large number of people. We must remember that this company operates only in Ontario and Quebec; and from the remarks of the hon. member sponsoring the bill we have learned that there are about 1,300,000 telephones in use. Even allowing for the fact that there are a great many business telephones, the number of other users cannot be increased very greatly unless the company goes into outside districts; and here again I want to corroborate to some extent what was said by the last speaker. I do not think the Bell Telephone Company is anxious to go outside the cities and larger centres of population. In other places there is a municipal, township or county telephone system which provides service for the local people, with perhaps as many as twenty-two on a line, and the Bell Telephone provides a long distance connection with that line. These people are quite satisfied; they get their telephone service quite reasonably, and have the benefit of long distance calls through the Bell Telephone Company and their own connections through their own little company.

I said that up to 1945 only $85,000,000 of the authorized capital of the company had been used. In 1946 this was increased to $86,000,000, and at the end of 1946 it stood at $104,000,000. The sponsor of this bill says that, in the last year or a little more, it has gone up to about $134,000,000. In other words, during the past four years the capital of the company has been increased by $50,000,000 and, as the sponsor says, this has been used to bring about certain improvements and extensions, and to give service to those who could not obtain it previously.

But that is not all the money available to the company. According to the Canada Gazette of very recent date the company has issued notice that it will apply to execute a mortgage bond which will give it another $35,000,000. I do not suppose all this money will become available to the company, because, as I understand these statements, there is a balance of $7,500,000 of a five per cent loan which, I believe, has never been paid off, and probably that will be paid out of this amount. But even so they will have $27,500,000 from this bond issue. They will also have all their free assets. I must admit that their assets are not entirely free, that they consist largely of fixed assets, but still they have some investments. For instance, they have investment securities amounting to $21,000,000, as well as other securities amounting to another few million dollars. So it is only fair to say that at this moment they have some $40,000,000 with which to go ahead; and that again is a considerable sum of money.

As I have said, the capital issued amounts to $136,000,000 but they have a depreciation reserve of $99,000,000, which ordinarily would be available for maintenance, repairs, improvements and so on. I am afraid, however, that this reserve has probably been used in connection with the fixed assets, to provide new telephones and equipment. But it is in fact there, and it is a nice, sizeable sum of money available to the stockholders, though they cannot use it at the present time.

I say that the amount of money for which they are asking cannot be justified in any way. The hon. member for Outremont who is sponsoring the bill spoke about what has been done in the last two years. I believe he pointed out that between August 1, 1945, and December 1, 1947, the company had installed a total of 293,000 telephones at a cost of $89,300,000. If that is so, those installations must have cost $305 each. Another 89,000 telephones are required, and they should not cost much more, if any, than the $35,000,000 or $40,000,000 the company has available at the present time.

I do not think anyone is so naive as to doubt that if a depression, however small, were to come, a good many telephones would be taken out, and would be available for use somewhere else. As a matter of fact, I believe the business of the Bell Telephone Company is as good an index as can be found of business conditions across the country, because one of the first things a person does if he is in difficulty is to get along without any telephone.

I am not suggesting that one should have to do without telephone service. It is a necessary service; and not just to keep the members of families talking to one another, but so that a businessman may keep in touch with his business, and so that doctors and other people may keep in contact with those for whom they are acting.

I do not want the people of Toronto to have to pay higher rentals for their telephones. The company has got along in the past. It is my belief that, the larger a city becomes, the more the telephone rates should be reduced, because the service is contained in a small area. All that is required under the automatic system is to get more automatic equipment. I know it has happened—in my own experience only once—that when one tried to get a party on a certain exchange he could not do so because the connection was engaged as a result of too many people talking through that exchange. Up to the present time, however, that has happened only once in my experience, and I use the telephone frequently.

If $350 million in stock is issued at a rate of eight per cent it will mean an additional $28,000,000 per year to charge against the service. If that were divided among 1,500,000 subscribers it would mean about $18.65 a year per individual telephone. And, remember this, that you have only a limited number of new subscribers to whom telephone service may be extended and in the number of subscribers above I am adding on 200,000 to the telephones which are now in use. I feel certain that, if this great expenditure is permitted the cost to owner and user is bound to be increased.

Is it necessary for the Bell Telephone Company to sell more stock? Let me say that while they have been a satisfactory company, so far as their business methods are concerned, yet in one sense they are the greatest monopoly one could possibly imagine. There can be two railway companies; there can be two street railway systems; there can be two gas companies—two of almost anything else. But there cannot be two telephone systems operating in the same area, because, in my younger days, I lived in a town where there were two systems, and the result was that one had to have both installations. For satisfaction, you have to have telephone connections with all other telephone users.

In this instance, therefore, the Bell Telephone Company has the greatest of all monopolies. Perhaps its only justification for its existence lies in the fact that, like the gas company in Toronto, this telephone company has operated well, and at least to my satisfaction. I know nothing bad about it.

But, after all, they have a monopoly. They are really trustees for the people. If it became a question of whether the Bell Telephone Company should operate privately, or under government control, at the present time I would choose the private company, on account of the manner in which it has operated. But, after all, they are operating their company to make money, and they must be stopped. No, I shall say they must be controlled, not stopped, because human nature is too strong to resist making more money, if there is an opportunity to do so.

I do not think this parliament of Canada, at this particular time of all times, should consent to such a large increase in capital. It would tie the hands of succeeding parliaments, and we do not know what lies in the future.

[Mr. McMaster.]

I do not believe we have any right to make that commitment. It may be said that this matter will go before the board of transport commissioners. That, of course, is a fact. But, after all, we are the body who are responsible to the people. We are the governing body responsible for this matter, although we have not had a great deal of opportunity lately to carry out our wishes in a democratic way. I still think, however, that at this particular time we cannot give up rights which we have, nor can we abuse the trust the people have placed in us.

May I say a word about television. I believe television is a reality of the future, and something which may be of importance to the people. I do not know how it will develop, nor do I know who will produce it. I do not think, however, that the Bell Telephone Company should use funds made available for the operation of the telephone system for purposes of developing television.

I cannot think of anyone who wants television badly. Certainly I do not; I have no great desire to see the person to whom I am talking. It might be all right, but if it is to cost a hundred million dollars or a hundred and fifty million dollars, we can quite well do without it. I suggest that if television is to come in, and if the Bell Telephone Company is interested in it, then it should operate through a subsidiary, and the money the people pay in for a telephone service should be used for that service alone.

If the stock is offered on the market it cannot very well be offered at $100 a share. I believe the average price obtained from new stock issued over the years has been considerably higher than that, running up to $130 or $140. At present I believe it is being sold to employees of the company at $145.

There are many of the original shareholders who still own their own stock. The sponsor of the bill has said that the American telephone company owns fourteen per cent of the stock; I thought it was more, but I suppose it is a fact that, as the stock increases in amount their percentage decreases. That is quite right. I believe a short time ago it was as high as twenty per cent, but as stock is sold their percentage increases. The American telephone company are still holding stock that they bought at $100 a share. So that in any event, where stock is sold at more than its par value it means that they get the benefit to that extent. I should think that after sixty-seven years, since the original stock was sold, they could well do without getting any increase in the value of their stock by new stock being offered to the public at less than market value.

I am strongly opposed to section 3 of the bill, which splits the present stock in four parts. I know the Bell Telephone Company do not want it, and it is to their credit that they do not. I can recall when one large organization in Toronto divided its stock into a four-to-one split. The stock went up in a bull market to such an extent that the one-fourth share sold for as much as the old original share. I cannot conceive of anyone wanting to buy a share of stock who cannot pay $100 for it. I think it is our duty to see that this stock is not cut up. I think it is just a stock selling proposition.

I am glad to see that the company has clarified to some extent the situation in connection with stock bequeathed by wills, and I believe that a transfer office has been opened in Toronto in addition to the office in Montreal. If that is not true, I think it should be done. It is not fair that people who own stock in a company which is at least one-half an Ontario company should have to go to Montreal in another province to have stock transferred.

I think the Bell Telephone Company should modify their bill. If all this stock is issued it will mean that they have a capitalization equal to that of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. If they get in all this money they will actually have more money than the Ontario Hydro Electric system has now or will have when recent developments are completed. They are really asking for something that no one can foresee they will ever need. I do not think they have a right to come here and ask us to vote to approve their request.

Mr. H. G. ARCHIBALD (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to bring out a few points in this debate. From what I can learn, the company has $20,000,000 left and it wants $350,000,000 more. I like speaking in those terms, because in the past I was always in the nickel and dime class. Seemingly we are now dealing in astronomical figures. With this $350 million this company could absorb all the remaining privately or publicly owned telephone systems in Canada and become a monopoly. Perhaps the greatest weakness in the system of free enterprise is the constant tendency to go into monopoly. I would think that hon. members on the Liberal side would be quite sensitive about this and try to protect the people from this form of economy.

When monopolies such as this grow to such an extent they wipe out the small businessman and become what we term a soulless and heartless machine. During the war the army built a telephone line between Prince Rupert and Jasper for its own use. After the war that was taken over by the public works department. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation pipe in a few programs over that line, but not all. If they piped in all their programs the Department of Public Works would charge so much that they could not afford it. The public works department said that they were giving a figure which was comparable with what a privately owned company would charge, and when they said that they were talking about only one company, and this is it.

Another interesting feature is that, while all the programs of the C.B.C. are constantly going over that wire, they charge only for those which are broadcast. I assume that the rest are run down the sewer, simply piped to one side. That is what you are up against when you try to get something for people in outlying parts of the world. You are met with the statement, "This is what private industry would charge." I submit that private industry as represented by this company dominates the whole picture in Canada today.

I suppose if one were to look at it from a cynical point of view or a non-constructive point of view he would let such bills as this run their course, so that the thing would become so transparent to the people that they would solve their problem by putting in a socialist government. Actually the people of Canada are becoming only too aware of such companies as this, and it is such things that are causing a political awakening of the people.

Mr. HOWARD C. GREEN (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, there are two features that have given me some concern in connection with this bill, and I should like to draw them to the attention of the hon. member for Outremont (Mr. Rinfret) who is sponsoring the bill. The first has to do with the question of rates. In the press of February 26 there appeared a dispatch from Montreal headed, "Hints of increase in telephone rates", which read as follows:

> Frederick Johnson, president of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada, told the annual meeting today that the company "cannot live forever within its present rates for service."

We had some experience in the house last year in connection with a bill brought in by the British Columbia Telephone Company. At that time I asked the sponsor, the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid), the intentions of the company with regard to rates. I should like to quote from page 2718 of Hansard of May 2, 1947, just to show the house what was said at that time. I asked the hon. member:

In this case, where there is a big increase in capital—

At that time we thought it was quite a big increase, but it was only from $11,000,000 to $25,000,000, which was small change compared with the increase asked for in the present bill.

—I think it is essential that some protection should be given to telephone users of British Columbia. I understand that the hon. member has been authorized to give assurance to the effect that the company has no present intention of applying for an increase of rates and will not make any such application unless compelled to do so by extensive changes in conditions.

Mr. Reid: That is my definite understanding.

Mr. Green: That assurance is clearly worded and contains a statement to the effect that an application will not be made unless the company is compelled to do so and then only by reason of extensive changes in conditions. If the hon. member for New Westminster is prepared to give that assurance on behalf of the British Columbia Telephone Company I for one shall have no objection to the bill passing.

Mr. Reid: I am authorized to do so, and it is my definite understanding.

I should like to know whether the hon. member for Outremont can give the same assurance on behalf of the Bell Telephone Company. It is important that we know whether or not the company intends, once this bill goes through, to apply for an increase in rates which, of course, will affect thousands and thousands of people and is a very important factor.

The second feature which has given me some concern is the amount of the increase requested, from $150 million to $500 million. By an amendment in 1882 the works of this company were declared to be for the general advantage of Canada. I suggest to hon. members that this parliament is responsible for, and should keep in touch with, what is done by the company. For that reason it is important that the company should have to come back to the house every so often. That is one reason why it should not be given an increase that is too large; the result might be that it would not come back here for twenty or thirty years; therefore I do ask the sponsor to give consideration to agreeing to have the amount of increase cut; I do not say to what figure, but I think the company is asking for too much. Last year the British Columbia Telephone Company increased its capital from $11,000,000 to $25,000,000, as I have said; or slightly more than double. Perhaps some such provision would be satisfactory to the Bell Telephone Company.

[Mr. Green.]

In speaking on second reading of the bill, the hon. member for Outremont explained that during the next five years it was planned to spend about $362 million. That information will be found at page 1701 of Hansard. Then, on page 1702 he explained that only about half of that amount would be raised by sale of capital. He said the rest of it would be obtained from borrowings and from other available resources of the company. Therefore, to provide for this capital expenditure in the next five years the company obviously does not need to have its capital increased by $350 million.

I would point out that the company has been coming back to the house in years gone by. Perhaps the hon. member for Outremont will correct me if I make a mistake in any of the dates. My understanding is that the company was incorporated in 1880, at which time it was given the power to do certain things. The maximum capital allowed was $1,000,000. In 1884 that was increased to $2,000,000; in 1892 to $5,000,000; in 1902 to $10,000,000; in 1906 to $30,000,000; in 1920 to $75,000,000; in 1929 to $150 million, and in 1948 we have the request for an increase from $150 million to $500 million.

I hope that the hon. member for Outremont will be able to make some statement to the house on these two points; first, as to whether assurance can be given with regard to an application for an increase in rates; second, whether the company would be satisfied to have a smaller increase at the present time. His answer to these two suggestions might make a material difference in the vote of quite a few hon. members.

Mr. CLARENCE GILLIS (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green) struck the nail on the head when he suggested that, in the event of this house permitting the capital expansion requested by this bill, it might place the company in a position where it might not come back to this house again in the next twenty-five or thirty years. I suggest also that the hon. member for Outremont (Mr. Rinfret) should be able to answer the questions definitely, before the bill passes as to whether or not the company would be satisfied with a smaller expansion than it is requesting at the present time.

My main objection to this type of bill is that it creates in the company a virtual monopoly in that field. I am also mindful of the fact that during this war the army, navy and air force created the greatest communication system that this country has ever seen or ever will see, and I should like to know what happened to it. Where has it gone? Perhaps a lot of the money the Bell Telephone Company are requesting in the way of expansion of capital will be used to buy from War Assets a complete communication system built by the people of Canada, which has completely gone out of the picture.

I should like to ask a number of questions and have them answered before I would be prepared to say that this bill should pass. For example, the par value of the shares is being changed from $100 to $25. There is no time now to go into that particular angle of the matter, but I am familiar with amalgamations, the change of share values and the manipulations of a few, who own a lot of shares, in gobbling up the little people who have a small number of shares in companies of this kind.

Bills of this type asking for such a large capital expansion are bad legislation. It requires a lot of serious consideration by hon. members before it is allowed to pass. Are you getting anxious, Mr. Speaker, that we are approaching nine o'clock?

Mr. SPEAKER: The hour reserved for private bills having expired, the house will now revert to the business at six o'clock.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

PROVISION FOR EMPLOYEES' PENSIONS, MINIMUM PRICE OF WHEAT DELIVERIES, ETC.

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. 135, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1935—Mr. Howe—Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: The committee is considering section 5, extension of parts III and IV to oats and barley.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Before the measure carries, I wish to say just a word or two. When the resolution preceding this measure was introduced on February 27 I moved an amendment as set forth on page 1681 of Hansard, which, if carried, would mean three bills instead of one and would have dealt separately with, first, the payment of pensions; second, increase in minimum prices to the producers and, third, control of interprovincial movement of wheat products and extension of the present system to oats and barley. The hon. member for Swift Current presented a strong argument in support of my argument, as set out on page 1687 of Hansard. The Minister of Agriculture, as reported at page 1716 of Hansard said he believed my amendment was out of order. Then, on March 11, at page 2113 of Hansard, the Speaker ruled my amendment out of order. I appealed his ruling, and the hon. member for Swift Current, along with all other members of the C.C.F., voted to sustain the Speaker's ruling. As set forth on page 2128 of Hansard, the hon. member for Yorkton suggested moving an amendment to divide the bill. The Minister of Trade and Commerce then rose and said that at the proper stage, when we were discussing the bill in committee, he would undertake to separate the part concerning coarse grains and have that part sent to the agriculture committee for discussion. Today at the proper stage the Minister of Trade and Commerce—

Mr. HOWE: I think what I said should be correctly quoted. I am sure my hon. friend will not mind my correcting him. This is what I said, as reported at page 2129 of Hansard.

> It may shorten debate if I say that at the proper stage when we are discussing the bill in committee, I will agree to separate the part concerning coarse grains and have that part sent to the agriculture committee for discussion, provided that such discussion will make it possible to expedite the remainder of the bill, which should be non-contentious.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: It did not hasten the bill.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I understood that the minister was speaking on behalf of the government and it was an undertaking that the bill would be divided. At any rate, today at the appropriate stage, the Minister of Trade and Commerce moved the appropriate motion to divide the bill. The Prime Minister, who had just voted for the passage of the second reading of the bill, then left the chamber, and on the motion of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to divide the bill, the hon. member for Yorkton, along with all other members of the C.C.F., voted with some of the cabinet ministers, I believe, including the Minister of Agriculture and supporters of the government, to defeat that motion which I considered an undertaking that the government would carry through.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: On condition that it would facilitate the bill.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): We were double-crossed by the members of the C.C.F. and the government. The minister himself has argued that the measure at present is unconstitutional, and he admits that enabling legislation must be passed by all the provinces in Canada before the board can handle oats or barley, as suggested in this measure.

I have certainly never witnessed anything like this in the matter of legislation. We are opposed to such tricky legislation as is introduced at the present time. I wish again to point out, as I have done at every opportunity, that the increase in the initial price should have been set out in the bill, but the government have refused to do that. I cannot understand yet why the minister refuses to tell us what price they have in mind putting into the regulation after the passage of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. I think the hon. member is getting beyond clause 5.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I have one other thing to say. This legislation was referred to in the speech from the throne last December, and when I was discussing that I referred to it and asked the responsible ministers at that time to see that this legislation would be introduced early in the session and that it would be referred to the committee on agriculture where it could be properly studied and dealt with at that time. That is quite a while ago, and I still think it was an undertaking on behalf of the government to divide the bill and should have been carried out. I feel we were double-crossed, and I am sure many other people in the country will also feel the same. With that, I wish again to register our disapproval of this measure as it is at this time.

Mr. BENTLEY: We take exception to one or two of the remarks made by the hon. member. They cannot go unchallenged. We double-crossed no one, and we have no working agreement with anyone on which to double-cross anybody. On February 27 when the bill was introduced and that is nearly a month ago, and there was still a month before the Easter recess, we felt that the position we took in support of the amendment was such that possibly it would facilitate the passage of the bill, and we were extremely anxious that this money should go to the farmers who so sorely need it and who own the money and will have to have it this spring.

We lay on the government the responsibility for the delay in not bringing that legislation back again until, I believe, March 11 or 12. But no matter where the responsibility lies for that, and whatever the causes of it were, the fact remains that two weeks have been lost, and we were in a position where we would not stand by and see any delay take place, which we could prevent, in having the money go forward.

There is nothing in the bill that is obnoxious to us. That is obvious. Other members may not like what we like, but there is nothing in the bill obnoxious to us. In principle, we agree with it. There are some things not in it which we should like to see there. The situation on February 27, nearly a month ago, with at least a month between then and Easter, made the position different from what it is at the present time. Consequently, as I say, when the government did not bring in the legislation until two weeks later we considered it imperative on our part here to change our position in order to facilitate the passage of the bill. We will do so, and we will do our best to see that this bill goes right through every stage tonight.

So far as that is concerned, the position is as I have stated it. I want again to declare that we double-crossed no one. I had made no commitment, nor had any member of the C.C.F. made any commitment to the Progressive Conservatives that we would support their amendment. At the time, as I mentioned before, and for the reasons I mentioned, we felt we could justifiably support it. We could not do so two weeks later. When it comes to the question of a vote on their amendment, His Honour the Speaker had ruled that the amendment was out of order.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I stated that.

Mr. BENTLEY: That is right; the hon. member did. But I want to make it clear. I did not vote and no one in this party voted on the subject matter of the legislation before the house. We always try to vote on the Speaker's rulings according to our belief as to whether he is right or wrong. If we think he is wrong we vote against the ruling; if we think he is right we vote for it. In this instance we believed he was right in his ruling. That was the information we gathered from a reading of the rules.

I want to ask the hon. member for Souris whether he himself honestly believes that the Speaker's ruling was wrong. We took that position and continue to take it, and there was no other position we could take than the one we took. And it had nothing to do with the subject matter of the legislation which occasioned the amendment which the Progressive Conservatives brought forward, and which was declared out of order.

I do not desire to prolong the discussion. I do not wish to provoke a further debate because we want this to go through. But I want our position to be clear. I wish to say this also, that when it comes to a question of getting something which we believe is necessary for the citizens of our constituencies and for the people of Canada generally, we are prepared to facilitate it to the best of our ability, and we have consistently done so. But the two weeks' interval made us take a different position in the middle of March from the position we took at the end of February.

The CHAIRMAN: I think I should point out to hon. members that the rules provide that no member may reflect upon a vote of the house. If there is to be further discussion I shall state my position. I think the hon. member will agree with me that the discussion is out of order. The word "double-cross" is, I am inclined to think, unparliamentary. I think it means to deceive, and it is an improper word to use.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Perfectly true even if unparliamentary.

The CHAIRMAN: I will say nothing further because the discussion on this point is ended. Shall clause 5 carry?

Mr. CASTLEDEN: In the light of the insinuation made by the hon. member for Souris, which I cannot allow to go by—

The CHAIRMAN: Order. After the hon. member for Souris had made his statement I allowed the hon. member for Swift Current to reply. As I have said, that discussion was out of order and I do not think I should allow any further discussion on that point.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Souris used the word "double-cross"—

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: —and he referred to myself. You have ruled that word out of order. If the word is unparliamentary, then I would ask that it be withdrawn; otherwise, surely I have the right to defend myself against an imputation made with respect to me personally and other members of this group.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Withdraw.

The CHAIRMAN: I would request that the hon. member withdraw the word.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I defer to your ruling, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN: In my opinion, the word "double-cross" is unparliamentary and I would ask the hon. member to withdraw it.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): If so, I withdraw the word. We feel that we were certainly sold down the river.

Mr. GRAYDON: A rose by any other name would smell as sweet.

Mr. CASE: I think we have now arrived at the place where we are dealing with a part that concerns us. May I say to the minister that if this will stimulate production, then I am all for it, because I am convinced that before many months go by we shall want all the production of which Canada is capable. The trouble I have discovered in most of these regulations, bills and restrictions is that they have a tendency to dampen enthusiasm, curtail production and cause people to vie for an opportunity to market their goods in a more restricted market. In other words, we are legislating for an economy of scarcity in a land of plenty. That is the warning I sound.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. May I remind hon. members that we are on clause 5.

Mr. MILLER: Will the minister permit an unorthodox question? Does he now know how much additional he will pay out on this initial payment? Does he know the amount of the initial payment he will pay now or what he will increase the initial payment by now?

Mr. HOWE: I have arrived at a conclusion with regard to the payment that I shall recommend to my colleagues. Whether that is the payment the government will decide upon, remains to be seen.

Mr. MILLER: Can the minister not recommend it to parliament and let us pass on it?

Mr. FLEMING: There is one aspect of this matter which I think deserves attention, though I do not intend to delay the committee long.

An hon. MEMBER: Another long speech.

Mr. FLEMING: This particular section should never have been included in the same bill with other matters which are included in it. If the government had taken the proper course from the outset, and if their principal purpose had really been to expedite payment to the farmers, they could have had such a measure through the house long ago. But they have delayed that measure. Their tactics are responsible for the fact that the measure has not been passed hitherto. The government and the government alone are responsible for cluttering up this measure with a number of schemes of their own which should never have been introduced into it. Their attempt to bedevil this measure by bringing in all kinds of extraneous matters is responsible for the fact that the farmers have not received their payments before this. That is where the responsibility lies.

It does not help matters one bit for the Minister of Trade and Commerce to do as he did this afternoon, and commit a breach of faith with this house—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Now, now!

Mr. FLEMING: —in regard to the undertaking he gave to the house some days ago in this matter. This question was put squarely to him; and his undertaking, if one can speak of an undertaking on the part of the government after the hair-splitting done on that subject by the Minister of Finance a couple of weeks ago—

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. ABBOTT: The hon. member cannot resist speaking on every subject. He is an expert on everything.

Mr. TUCKER: Why do you not follow your leader and let this go through?

Mr. FLEMING: I was referring to what might have been called an undertaking on the part of the Minister of Trade and Commerce if we had not had that other experience with his colleague. Here are his words at page 2129 of Hansard. They are perfectly plain words that the minister uttered. When the Minister of Trade and Commerce uses words of this kind and says, in effect, that the bill ought to be split and that he is quite prepared to have it split, it must be apparent that it should have been split right from the beginning and should not have been brought before the house in the form in which it was.

Mr. GRAYDON: He was splitting hairs instead of splitting the bill.

Mr. FLEMING: Here is what the minister said, as reported at page 2129 of Hansard:

> It may shorten debate if I say that at the proper stage when we are discussing the bill in committee, I will agree to separate the part concerning coarse grains and have that part sent to the agriculture committee for discussion, provided that such discussion will make it possible to expedite the remainder of the bill, which should be non-contentious. I am quite willing to do that.

Then, farther down the page he puts it on the basis of an offer to the house.

Mr. McILRAITH: Go ahead and read the rest of it.

Mr. FLEMING: He says:

> I think the offer I have made is a good one, and I hope hon. members will feel disposed to expedite the bill so that the money can be paid out and so that a pension plan can be made effective.

Mr. GRAYDON: It gets worse as it goes on.

Mr. FLEMING: The house took him at his word, Mr. Chairman, and you will find that debate on that resolution ceased forthwith.

[Mr. Fleming.]

Mr. GARDINER: We are not taking your word now.

Mr. McILRAITH: Read it all.

Mr. FLEMING: What happened? Was this undertaking fulfilled? Well, what kind of fulfilment was it?

Mr. McILRAITH: What kind of reading of Hansard was it tonight?

Mr. FLEMING: When the Minister of Trade and Commerce rose this afternoon he did not say, I gave this undertaking on a condition which has not been fulfilled; therefore I feel released from my undertaking. He did not say that at all. What he did say was this.

Mr. TUCKER: Order.

Mr. FLEMING: He said, well, I am going to go through the form of carrying out my undertaking, but I serve notice on all government members in this house that they ought to vote my motion down. The Minister of Trade and Commerce on March 11 was either speaking for the government or was making a statement which the house was led to believe was made on behalf of the government. In either case, what I say to you, Mr. Chairman, is that the Minister of Trade and Commerce broke faith with the house this afternoon. It is about time that this house realized, and the house made the government understand, that the only basis upon which democratic institutions can be carried on and the only basis upon which they will command public respect at a time like this, when democratic institutions are being assailed in every quarter of the globe, is this: statements made in the House of Commons must be backed up by good faith; when a statement is made by a minister of the government, in language as plain as this, in unmistakable language, and the house takes that language at its face value and keeps faith with the minister, the minister and the government which he represents should be required to keep faith with the house. What we saw this afternoon is, in my opinion, if I may say so—

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

An hon. MEMBER: It was a free vote.

The CHAIRMAN: The Minister of Trade and Commerce has not himself seen fit to object to the charge that he broke faith with the house. In my opinion, that is unparliamentary language; and even if the minister himself does not object to it, I am forced to do so. I would ask the hon. member not to use that kind of language.

Mr. HOWE: I took it whence it came, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. FLEMING: I said something about the importance of good faith in undertakings or statements to the house by ministers of the crown. These statements should be given with the full weight of good faith behind them. Recently in the house we had a distinction drawn by the Minister of Finance between a statement and an undertaking. A statement is said to be different from an undertaking. In other words, if it is simply a statement without being couched in the word "undertaking", then the ministers apparently feel free to be relieved of it at their whim. I hope this house will make it clear to the ministers one day soon that it will not be trifled with, and will insist upon the most punctilious performance on the part of ministers of statements made to the house. We shall be satisfied with nothing less than complete good faith on the part of ministers, and I hope a change in that respect will soon come.

Mr. GARDINER: I rather think we are all out of order, but I think I should be permitted to say something in reference to what has just been stated. As a matter of fact, I think the Minister of Trade and Commerce today went very much farther than he undertook to go when the statement was made. The proposal at that time was that if, by doing so, we could advance the discussion of this measure, he was prepared to move that we instruct the committee to divide this legislation. That proposal in the first instance came from the C.C.F.; and immediately after it was made, members of the official opposition rose in their places and protested, making statements which were interpreted by the house to be in opposition to the proposals made by the minister. As a result of those statements, three members of the C.C.F. group rose one after another and withdrew their support of the suggestion they themselves had previously made that the bill be divided and the oats and barley section be referred to the committee on agriculture.

At that time I rose in my place and tried to suggest to the official opposition that they should accept the proposal of the minister. At no time did they accept it. They went right on discussing the question, and continued to discuss it for, I think, about two days. Then, when the matter came back to the house the discussion was continued, so that I think the minister would have been quite justified in saying today he was under no obligation whatever to go farther with the proposal which was made a few days ago, or what has come to be a few weeks ago. However he took the position that, since some objection was raised by the official opposition to that suggestion, he would make the motion he had suggested he would make. That motion was moved; the house was given an opportunity to divide on it; it did divide, and the result of the division was a denial of the suggestion made, not by the official opposition but in the first instance by the C.C.F. group, and never at any time assented to by the official opposition. So that I say the minister went very much farther than he undertook to go originally. The house divided and, in the light of all the circumstances, I think came to the only reasonable decision it could reach.

AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR CONTINUANCE IN FORCE UNTIL MARCH 31, 1949

Right Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to amend the Agricultural Products Act by providing that the act shall be continued in force until the thirty-first day of March, nineteen hundred and forty-nine.

Mr. BRACKEN: Would the minister prefer to make his statement now or in committee?

Mr. GARDINER: I think it would expedite matters if we had our discussion in committee. This is the same bill that we dealt with before the Christmas recess, during the present session. At that time we considered it at some length. I presume hon. members will desire to ask some questions with respect to the agreements entered into since that time, and I think that could be done to much better advantage when we can discuss matters back and forth across the floor. So I suggest that it be done in committee rather than on second reading.

Mr. BRACKEN: We are quite agreeable to the course suggested by the minister. I suggest that when we get into committee the minister give us what information he can, particularly in regard to the details of the contracts already entered into with Great Britain.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Golding in the chair.

Mr. BRACKEN: Is the minister not going to make a statement?

Mr. GARDINER: When this measure was before the house before the Christmas recess we were discussing the possibility of entering into agreements with Great Britain concerning some of our most important farm products. At that time the house was most anxious to have the terms of those agreements and some facts based upon the discussions then taking place. I found it impossible to give that information at the time, so that this evening I should like to place on record the main facts with regard to some of the most important of those agreements, more particularly those concerning the four products which have been most under discussion, bacon, beef, eggs and cheese, and possibly some of the less important products as well.

With regard to bacon, what was known as the seventh agreement with Britain applied to the period from January 1, 1947, to December 31, 1947. The maximum quantity contracted for was 350,000,000 pounds, and the contract provided that not less than 265,000,000 pounds be delivered. We anticipated that we would exceed the 265,000,000 pounds by about seven or eight million pounds, but following the strike in the packing plants across the country it was found impossible to reach the total we had hoped. The actual amount shipped under this agreement, down to February 29, 1948, which included Wiltshire side which had been placed in storage prior to the end of the year, was 225,893,000 pounds, to the value of $62,174,527.

On January 1 we entered into the new agreement, which is known as the eighth agreement in relation to bacon. The minimum quantity contracted for was 195,000,000 pounds. The percentage of Wiltshire sides specified is 75 per cent. The price per 100 pounds, A grade. f.a.s. Canadian seaboard is $36. The actual quantity shipped from January 1, 1948, to February 29, 1948, was 23,725,882 pounds, to the value of $8,525,317. I can give some of the facts later in answer to questions, if desired, but I do not think it is necessary for me to review with the committee the other pork products such as pork offals, hog casings and different products of that kind which make up the pork products which come under this contract. But the prices were raised in each of them in proportion to the rise in the price of bacon.

The next contract has to do with beef.

Mr. WRIGHT: When did that contract expire?

Mr. GARDINER: On December 31, 1948, the contract as drawn expires. But the understanding is given, by letter, that the contract will be drawn for 1949 covering the calendar year and will have in it a floor price not less than the 1946 price.

Mr. ARGUE: What was the 1946 price?

Mr. GARDINER: I do not recall at the present time exactly what it was, but there have been two increases since that time. The 1947 price was increased from 1946, and there is a 1948 increase.

Mr. TUSTIN: Did I understand the minister to say it was $36 a hundred, or $36 a hundredweight.

Mr. GARDINER: It is $36 a hundred.

Then, with regard to beef, the third agreement was entered into on January 1, 1947, to December 31, 1947. The minimum quantity contracted for was 120,000,000 pounds. The price per 100 pounds f.o.b. Canadian seaboard, choice quality red, was $24.25; good quality blue, $23.25, and medium quality, $21.10. The actual quantity shipped from January 1, 1948, to February 29, 1948, inclusive, was 39,414,000 pounds, carcass weight, valued at $7,650,940.

The fourth agreement was entered into on January 1, 1948, to December 31, 1948, and the same terms as in the bacon contracts are agreed to with regard to 1949 as to payment. The minimum quantity contracted for was 50,000,000 pounds. The price per 100 pounds f.o.b. Canadian seaboard, choice quality red, $27.50; good quality blue, $26.50, and medium quality, $23.10. The actual quantity shipped, January 1, 1948, to February 29, 1948, inclusive —I must say I have not the exact figure; I shall get it later. I notice that the figures are not filled in here.

Then we have beef offals, the same as pork offals, which are also covered. Then we have Canadian canned meat also covered under the agreement. Mutton and lamb are covered under a special agreement but for smaller quantities.

We also have an agreement with regard to oxtails. Then, under the dairy products we have cheese agreements—

Mr. BRACKEN: What is the amount of the contract for last year? What was the amount you undertook to deliver last year?

Mr. GARDINER: We undertook a year ago to deliver 120,000,000 pounds of beef.

Then in respect to cheese, the eighth agreement was on April 1, 1947, to March 31, 1948. The quantity contracted for was 125,000,000 pounds. The price per pound, first grade, twenty-five cents f.o.b. factory or grading station shipping point. Actual quantity shipped from April 1, 1947, to February 29, 1948 inclusive was 56,439,324 pounds, valued at $14,565,060.

The ninth agreement on cheese becomes effective April 1, 1948, and continues to March 31, 1949. The quantity contracted for is 50,000,000 pounds. The price per pound is thirty cents f.o.b. factory or grading station shipping point. Of course there is none shipped under that contract up to the present time. April 1 is the first date upon which shipments will be made.

Then there are contracts with regard to evaporated milk which cover 600,000 cases with an increased price, and roller dried skim milk for 8,000 pounds at increased prices.

A most important contract for a considerable amount of farm produce is that for eggs. The seventh agreement of February 1, 1947, to January 31, 1948, shows a quantity contracted for of 83,000,000 dozen. The price per dozen grade A large eggs, Montreal basis, was forty-one cents for spring eggs, and the price raised to 42·5 cents effective May 5, 1947, to compensate for rising feed costs. The price was 47·75 cents for fall eggs, and it rose to 50·57 effective May 5, 1947, to compensate for rising feed costs. The actual quantity shipped was 56,690,670 dozen in shell from February 1, 1947, to February 29, 1948 inclusive. The value was $26,230,313. Then, 13,519,968 pounds of dried eggs for the same dates, valued at $11,885,770; and of frozen eggs 4,994,615 pounds for the same dates valued at $1,552,700. When those quantities are totalled up they amount to a little in excess of the quantity we had undertaken to deliver, namely 83,000,000 dozen.

The eighth agreement February 1, 1948, to January 31, 1949, showed a quantity contracted for of 80,000,000 dozen. The price per dozen grade A large eggs Montreal basis was 47·50 cents for spring fresh eggs and 54·25 cents for fall fresh eggs. Storage eggs were 52·75 cents; dried, 99 cents per pound; frozen, 35 cents per pound. The actual quantity shipped was 414,120 dozen shell, spring export 1948, February 1, to February 29, 1948; value, $193,090.

These are some of the facts with regard to agreements which have been entered into. I may add that the contracts with Great Britain are for quantities which we estimated could be sent to Great Britain this year.

In so far as bacon and beef are concerned up to date we have greatly exceeded the quantities we had estimated at the beginning of the year. I should like to say, however, that it is probably too early to suggest that that production will keep up throughout the year. We estimate that the production of hogs will be higher down to the middle of August than we had anticipated, and that there will probably be some drop off as compared with the production estimate from that period until the end of the year. But we do anticipate that we shall be able to fill this contract in quantity as it is now drawn during the present year.

So far as beef is concerned, deliveries there again have been higher in January and the early part of February than anyone anticipated. I should like to say in that connection that this was probably somewhat due to the fact that barley prices ran to quite a high level in January. There was a much heavier marketing of cattle during the month of January than anyone anticipated. The result of this was that cattle prices went down about one cent. Those prices have been coming back recently, and the run of cattle is not as high as it was in January. For that reason there is not as much grain being fed in Canada. I think the farmers anticipated that if prices ran along about where they were in the latter part of the year, and as we anticipated they would through that period, they would feed these cattle through until the end of April, as was their practice. But this year when prices went up to over $1.30 a bushel for barley in January, there were heavy shipments of cattle to market. Those heavy shipments placed more beef in the hands of the meat board to be shipped to Britain than was anticipated, but it is expected that, as we come toward spring when those cattle would have been normally delivered, the deliveries will be down as compared with previous estimates. The one may just about balance against the other. In other words, our deliveries down to about the end of April may not be greatly in excess of what was anticipated at the beginning of the year.

In stating that I draw the attention of the committee to the fact that that has something to do with the figures given today by the hon. member for Calgary West with regard to the increase in grain holdings in Canada at the present time. That grain is not now being fed to cattle that have already been slaughtered. There are results from that which I do not wish to discuss on this particular bill at this particular time. No doubt there will be a time during the session when we can discuss that matter.

Mr. CARDIFF: Can the minister tell the committee how the amount of bacon exported to Britain from January 1, 1948, to the end of February compares with the amount that was exported in the same period of 1947?

Mr. GARDINER: Very much higher. I do not think the proper term to use is "the amount exported", because Wiltshire sides go into the vat for curing and when they are once there they are on their way. If we look at the situation from that point of view about 48 per cent—I am speaking from memory—more Wiltshire sides went into the cure in January of this year than a year ago. There was about 25 per cent more beef delivered to the meat board for delivery to Great Britain in January than there was a year ago. Those deliveries remained high through the greater part of February, although I have not the exact percentages.

Mr. REID: How do egg shipments this year compare with those of last year? Are they going up?

Mr. GARDINER: I just read the actual shipments for 1947 into the record. There were 750,000 more marketed for export in January, 1948, than in the same month of 1947.

Mr. BRACKEN: Mr. Speaker, we on this side have no intention of delaying the discussion on this measure at this stage, but I wish to take a few minutes to state our position. I might say that the hon. member for Kamloops will be leaving and will not be able to contribute to the debate at a later stage; therefore he intends to take some part in the discussion tonight.

As the minister has stated, he is asking for the continuation for another year of the Agricultural Products Act. This act was passed in March of last year and was to be effective for one year or until the end of December if we met again in 1947, as we did. It was extended again in December, 1947, to be in effect until the end of March of this year, and now the minister is asking leave to introduce a bill to provide for its extension for another year.

It will be remembered that the original act gave the minister the power to take the farmers' crops and sell them at prices to be fixed in contracts with Great Britain. Some prices were already fixed, but others were to be fixed by the government. Under this amendment the minister is seeking the power to continue to make such agreements. As he says, this bill will continue the powers which he considers necessary to carry out the present agreements.

Some days ago we asked the minister to table the agreements. Later he gave some of us copies, but I do not believe the agreements were tabled because, as he said, they were not signed. I suggest that the minister indicate, before we pass this stage, why agreements which were made in December are not signed by March, three months later?

Our general position on this measure is well known. We are opposed to it in principle. We are opposed to it because it is a complete negation of the form of marketing act which we favour and which the organized producers from one end of this country to the other are seeking. We favour an act based on the principle of provincially sponsored marketing boards operated by the organized farmers themselves.

The minister indicates and, of course, we all know that it is necessary to pass whatever legislation we are going to have within the next few days. Our opposition to this bill is one thing. It is well known. We do not propose to try to kill the bill by a long debate. We are, therefore, disposed not to delay it any longer at this time if I may speak for those associated with me, except for one address by the hon. member for Kamloops.

As I said, we favour marketing legislation of the nature I have outlined. We favour legislation which gives the producers themselves more say in the fixing of the prices of their products than is allowed them under this kind of legislation. We are opposed to the type of legislation which puts all price fixing powers in the hands of the government. We favour legislation of the nature of the Natural Products Marketing Act.

Mr. WRIGHT: I should like to say just a few words. We supported the extension of this act the last time and we intend to support its extension at this time. However we are doubtful whether this is the proper method to adopt, to extend the act from one year to another. We doubt whether that will fulfil the purpose of the act, which is to carry out the contracts we have and to encourage further contracts with Great Britain in connection with basic agricultural products.

It seems to this group that if this act were permanent, if we did not have to renew it from year to year, it would give much more permanency to our contracts with Great Britain and increase our ability to make future contracts with that country. We would much prefer to see a permanent Agricultural Products Act in Canada which would give permanency to long-term contracts and provide for the orderly marketing of our agricultural products.

Mr. FULTON: The leader of the opposition has outlined our position with respect to this measure, so that I shall confine my remarks to as short a space as possible. With other members of this party I am opposed to this bill, to its principle and to every stage of its proceedings, because, unlike the hon. member who has just taken his seat, I feel that the longer the Agricultural Products Act remains on the statute books in its present form, the more confused becomes the situation with respect to the marketing of agricultural products in Canada, and particularly the more difficult it becomes to get the type of marketing legislation that we wish to have, and which the farmers themselves wish to have, namely, enabling legislation giving control over the marketing of their produce to producer boards.

Since our position is so well known, and since we have opposed this measure on each occasion it has been before the house—it has been before the house twice, once in its original form and once in the form of a temporary extension; we opposed it on both these occasions—it is not necessary to go in detail into the reasons why we are opposed to it. My remarks can be kept to a very brief compass.

I want to say at the outset, in outlining the reasons why we are opposed to it, that the first is the unwarranted assumption that the necessity of this particular legislation is based on a continuing emergency. We have slipped into the habit, it seems, of accepting government statements that there is a continuing emergency, while no longer requiring them to prove that as a fact. I feel, in passing, that it might be more realistic for the government to say that it is necessary in view of some impending emergency, and for them to direct their attention to the future, instead of making this unwarranted assumption that there is an emergency continuing from the past. If they did that there might be a basis in logic and reason for calling this emergency legislation. But since it is based on the so-called continuing emergency, I find no reason to agree with that view.

Second, the administration of the particular marketing policy of the government under this act has been such as to inflict serious losses on the farmers, and for that reason as well I am opposed to its continuation. The practice has been to force the farmers to carry the burden of national policy as represented in the contracts with the United Kingdom, under which Canada provides food at low prices to the people of that country. The result has been that the farmers alone have suffered the loss, instead of that loss being spread over the whole economy of Canada; while at the same time the effect of these contracts and the embargoes on exports to the United States, all tied up in this policy, has been to freeze prices in Canada and to impose further losses on our agricultural producers.

The third reason why I cannot support the continuation of this act is that there is in it no proper provision to give a voice to the producers in the regulation of their own affairs. That can be seen by a study of the bill in general; but, without reading it, I refer particularly to section 5, a brief study of which proves conclusively that the governor in council, the Minister of Agriculture, is the one who determines every aspect of prices, amounts produced, amounts sold, every aspect of our production and marketing, taking control away altogether from the farmers who do the work, grow the produce, and who are anxious to have legislation enabling them to regulate their own marketing.

What we need, what we demand, is a marketing act giving an opportunity to the producers to control their own production and their own sales, giving recognition to producer boards which are already established, and encouraging the establishment of other producer boards. This has been the cornerstone of the Progressive Conservative platform with regard to agricultural matters ever since this party has existed, and it has had a tremendous impetus, of course, since the leadership was taken over by the present leader of the opposition. This is a policy which reflects the view of organized agriculture; but in this particular case it is fair to say that, although we are frequently accused of being reactionary and behind the times, yet in this case—and it is not confined to this case—the policy of this party has preceded the expressed view of agricultural producers, of organized agriculture in this country, because in 1935 this party actually introduced such legislation, which, while perhaps not perfect in all its terms, did contain the principle which we have continued to advocate.

I should like to indicate briefly why, although we do not find in this legislation the kind of marketing proposals we advocate, we go farther and oppose the present act and ask that it be discontinued. We wish it eliminated so that a producers' marketing act may be substituted in its place. Last year, when the bill was first introduced the then hon. member for Yale outlined the position which we took with respect to this matter. In order to abbreviate my remarks, I think I cannot do better than quote two or three passages of what he had to say at that time. I am reading from Hansard of March 14, 1947, at page 1371:

> We are not in accord with the principle involved in this bill. We do not consider it right that the farmer who produces the product should have no say in its disposition or in the price he shall receive for it, and in that regard we are on all fours with the representations made by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture a fortnight ago today.

He was referring to a meeting which had been held in Ottawa in March, 1947. He continued, further down the page:

The main reason why I am so strongly in favour of recognition of the boards at present in existence under the provincial marketing acts is that they are producer boards. The basis of those nine acts is just this, that in any stipulated area, if there be a majority of producers of certain commodities who desire to form themselves into a board, they may receive permission to do so. They elect their board, and that board carries out the control and the regulating of the marketing of the crops in an orderly fashion for the benefit of the producer, the benefit of the consumer and the benefit of trade, and it is only reasonable to my mind in a matter of this kind that the government should recognize the fact that such boards are in existence and that they are efficient.

The then hon. member for Yale accordingly moved on behalf of the official opposition an amendment to the bill, embodying our attitude with respect to marketing legislation. The amendment read as follows:

That the said bill be not now read the second time, but that it be resolved that an Agricultural Products Act should be based on the principle that producer boards, set up under provincial marketing acts, where such boards exist or as they may from time to time come into existence, be used for the purposes of such Agricultural Products Act, instead of commodity boards established by the minister under section four of the said bill.

This particular type of marketing legislation which was desired and which was contemplated in the amendment, which we desire to see in place of this act, affects most particularly a commodity grown in the province of British Columbia. I refer, of course, to apples. The uncertainty with respect to the future of the marketing of apples arises particularly through the loss of the British preference and through the lowering of tariffs against United States apples under the Geneva trade agreements. I have had consultations with representatives of apple growers, and they tell me that they are particularly concerned with regard to the marketing of their crop in the coming year. They have virtually no hope of getting into the British market; they are uncertain as to the competition which may come from the United States, and they are afraid that chaotic conditions of marketing in Canada may follow from the lack of overseas markets and the lack of effective powers in their own boards adequately to regulate marketing in Canada.

[Mr. Fulton.]

That is why they feel particularly that the time has now come that we should no longer delay the enactment of enabling legislation to give producer boards power to control and to regulate their own marketing within this country.

On this point I wish to make a brief reference to the loss of the British market and to emphasize why it is important that we in Canada should have marketing legislation of the type to which I refer. Officials who appeared before the senate committee to discuss the Geneva agreement and elimination of the British preference on apples have said that the reason why Canadian negotiators were willing to give up that preference was that the British market was very much less attractive now than it used to be. Their statement can be found in volume 2 of the proceedings of the standing committee of the senate on Canadian trade relations. If that were the case, and if the British market were actually less attractive than it was, then there might be good reason why we in Canada should look elsewhere for a market for apples.

I got in touch with the British food commission to check up on figures as to United Kingdom apple production, and I find that the figures they have do not substantiate the statement that the British apple market is less attractive to Canadian producers than it was before. It is true that, owing to the shortage of dollars, the British are not at the moment buying apples, but the officials referred to above went further and said that Great Britain has tremendously increased domestic production of apples, so that in the long range view the United Kingdom market is not as attractive to Canadian producers.

The figures given by the British food mission on British apple production do not bear out this contention. The number of apple-producing trees in Great Britain and Northern Ireland—I obtained the figures for the years before the war and after the war—is in each year approximately the same. Before the war they had 14,506,000 producing trees in 1938-39, and 15,245,000 in 1939-40; after the war in 1946-47, they had 14,799,000. Before the war, in 1938-39, the total consumption in the United Kingdom was 444,200 tons; after the war it was 451,300 tons. Domestic production for the years before and the first year after the war were:

	Tons
1936-37	345,300
1937-38	156,400
1938-39	86,400
1939-40	453,000
1946-47 (post-war year)	360,500

So that there is no increase in domestic production, nor is there an increase in the plantings of domestic trees, and therefore the figures do not bear out the statement made that the United Kingdom apple market is a less attractive market in the long run for Canadian producers.

That being the case, it is, I think, most regrettable that the Canadian apple producer has been faced with this reduction in the United Kingdom preference on apples, and of course it has confronted him with uncertainty as to the marketing of his crop in the future. Moreover, as I have said, it drives home the fact and makes more important than ever the necessity of introducing in Canada marketing legislation which will give the producer the responsibility and the opportunity of regulating the marketing of his own produce in an orderly fashion.

Last year, when the matter was being discussed, the minister indicated—I think it is fair to say he so indicated—general agreement with the principles put forward by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture on behalf of organized agriculture, but he said the time was not yet ripe to introduce the type of marketing legislation for which they were asking.

Here we are asked to renew the same act for another year, and no amendments have been made; there has been no progress toward the introduction of producer marketing legislation.

In closing, I wish to ask a number of questions and I hope the minister can give some answers to them before the resolution passes the committee. First, when may we expect to have the type of marketing legislation which the Canadian Federation of Agriculture have been pressing for, which they pressed for last year, and which I have been discussing tonight? Second, what commodity boards have actually been established under the Agricultural Products Act as it exists at present, and with what provision for adequate producer representation? These are the words incorporated in the act, and I would be interested to know what producer representation has been provided for on the government commodity boards.

Another question is this. Would the minister give details of payments into and out of the agricultural products account since its creation under this act?

Finally, could he give the committee a rough estimate of the proportion of the total Canadian production which is going to Great Britain under the continuing contracts in connection with beef, eggs, cheese and bacon in particular. Could the minister give an estimate of the proportion of total Canadian production represented in the supplies we have agreed to send over under these contracts?

Mr. QUELCH: We support the idea of a commodity board because we believe in long-term international agreements. If you are to have such agreements you must have commodity boards, and we believe that such agreements are essential to Canadian agricultural production at a high level. But there is a question I would ask the minister. I believe the various farm organizations have asked the government to continue the Agricultural Prices Support Act as a permanent measure. Since that measure really underwrites the provisions of this measure, is it the intention of the government to make it a permanent measure? I understand that it is merely a transitional one at the present time.

Mr. GARDINER: The present measure has no terminating date in it at all. The only way in which it can be terminated is by the house. There is no period defined as a transitional period. It may continue right on. So far as legislation can be permanent, it is permanent.

Mr. QUELCH: But in the 1947 Canada Year Book it is stated that it is merely a transitional measure from war to peace and will therefore terminate shortly.

Mr. GARDINER: I am not responsible for what is in the Canada Year Book, but when the legislation was put on the statute books it was stated definitely that we were not prepared to limit the number of years to which it applied. It will be recalled that when I discussed the legislation I said that the term did run for eighteen or twenty years at the end of the first war.

Mr. QUELCH: I am glad to have the assurance.

Mr. McKAY: I have a few words to say on the measure. I shall be brief because I do not wish to delay the passage of it. First, I think it is generally recognized that agriculture is so interdependent on other parts of our economy that the general welfare of all Canadians has a distinct effect upon the well-being of this industry. In the last five or six years, as a result of the war economy, Canadians had reasonably full employment and good incomes. As a result of this condition, the consumption of agricultural products in Canada was the highest in history. More milk, butter, cheese, eggs and meat were consumed than ever before.

Second, the prosperity of agriculture in this country is also dependent on international good will. This is very true, since a good deal of Canadian agricultural produce enters world trade. Throughout the world today there is great need of agricultural products. The farmer could capitalize on that need by demands of excessive prices for his produce, but he prefers stabilized prices which are fair to farmer and consumer alike. He favours organized and orderly production and marketing in order that the production of farm products may be maintained to meet the world's needs.

Without that production the world will face malnutrition and, in some cases, virtual starvation. The production problem is closely related to the problem of distribution. In order to assist in the distribution of agricultural products, international commodity agreements are essential, especially in so far as the staple products are concerned, since these are always in demand on the international market. These staples include such commodities as wheat, bacon, cheese, beef, eggs and several others. I understand that this resolution has to do with the marketing of those agricultural products other than wheat.

The resolution before the house provides for the extension of the Agricultural Products Act until March 31, 1949. I have been informed that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, in its presentation to the federal government at as recent a date as February 26, advocated floor prices for agricultural products and establishment of the Agricultural Prices Support Act as permanent legislation, with development, of course, of a fair statistical index which would indicate when support for agricultural prices is needed. I commend that program at this time to the government. I should like to suggest to the government that the Agricultural Products Act be retained until such time as federal marketing legislation is enacted. I feel that such legislation would be most acceptable to the farmer of Canada, especially if the farmer has some voice in the board that is set up under such legislation. The farmer would then know that his product will not be subject to the price fluctuations which, in the past, have been his unfortunate experience. The farmer is too often faced with insecurity, which is the natural result of speculative marketing of any kind. Most farmers have faced economic dilemmas because of the failure of governments to solve the marketing problem which often confronts the selling of agricultural produce. Mr. Henry Morgenthau, Junior, secretary of the United States treasury under the Roosevelt administration, puts it aptly in the following words:

> Of all the economic dilemmas which periodically confront us, the farmer's dilemma is one of the most terrible and, at the same time, one of the toughest to solve. When the farmer does not grow enough to satisfy the demand, prices rise, he makes a good living—and millions of people do not have enough to eat. When he raises too much, the bottom falls out of the market, he cannot keep up the payments on his mortgage, and his crops wither in the fields. The problem of the agricultural surplus is a tragic irony in the very centre of our economic system.

The extension of the Agricultural Products Act will help to solve this all too frequent economic dilemma; at least it will do that temporarily. I feel that much can yet be done to improve the lot of our producers. The government should now be considering federal marketing legislation to replace the act now before this house when it is discontinued one year from this date.

Mr. HERRIDGE: I rise to express my support of this measure. I shall not take up the time of the committee for long because I think unnecessary repetition is frightfully boring. In view of the representations of the agricultural organizations in this country, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, I think the time has come for this government to introduce federal marketing legislation. Experience justifies that act. We have the experience with provincial boards. Limited as they are through federal legislation, they have brought a measure of improvement to the agricultural producer. We have the experience through the War Measures Act in which the activities of various provincial boards were co-ordinated. I will say that the War Measures Act would not have functioned so efficiently had it not been for the provincial boards operating in various sections of the country.

We in Canada are falling sadly behind other countries with respect to agricultural marketing legislation. We have only to read the history of marketing boards and their development in Great Britain to realize that milk boards, potato boards, bacon boards and so on, are performing a necessary function. Those boards have been developed because of the necessity for them. Those boards were not introduced in the first instance, when they were originated in 1931, by a socialist government but by a Conservative government of Great Britain. I hope that this is the last time the minister will introduce a measure of this type into this house.

Before concluding, I wish to say that as far as I could hear I understood that the Progressive Conservative party oppose this type of legislation. If they do, I would suggest that if their campaigners in the coming by-election in Yale tell the fruit growers of that constituency that such is their position, their vote will drop considerably.

Mr. FULTON: I have just done that. We want producers marketing legislation, not government compulsion. Would the minister answer the question I asked in regard to how many commodity boards have been established under this legislation?

Mr. GARDINER: I am just looking that up in Hansard. The question was answered for the hon. member for Brant. The hon. member has the answers on his desk. I have not them at the moment.

Mr. FULTON: That was in answer to a question on the order paper?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, or an order for return.

Mr. FULTON: What about the other question? Has the minister the information before him as to the proportion of the production of each of the commodities which is sent to Great Britain under the contracts?

Mr. GARDINER: There is about 22 per cent of the eggs. While I have not the exact figures here, the commodities generally, outside of cheese and wheat, run from 20 to 25 per cent.

Mr. FULTON: Does that apply to beef?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes. That is taking meat as a whole. I cannot give the exact figures for each one. I could get them. I just have the general position in my mind. With regard to wheat, of course it is about 70 per cent of our wheat; 70 to 80 per cent, depending on the size of the crop. Of our cheese, it is about 70 per cent that goes to Britain. The bacon runs higher than the figures given. They run up probably over 30 per cent, between 30 and 50 per cent, in different years.

Mr. FULTON: Then has the minister before him information as to the payments into and out of the agricultural products account under this act? That account was set up and it was provided that all the moneys received under the contract should be paid into the account and all the moneys paid to the farmers for commodities delivered under the contracts should be paid out of it.

Mr. GARDINER: I have not the total, but the amount paid in would be whatever was necessary to cover the amounts we wanted to pay out. The act provides that up to $200 million may be paid into the account in a year, but the amount paid into it in any particular year up to the present would be a very small proportion of it. It would be only amounts having to do with the marketing of potatoes and the marketing of apples last year.

Mr. FULTON: The minister says the account is limited to $200 million. I refer to section 8, which says that all expenditures shall be paid out of the agricultural products account, and any moneys received shall be credited to that account. I was wondering what the totals would be, because I take that to mean all moneys received under these food contracts.

Mr. GARDINER: No, that has had nothing to do with the food contracts up to date; it has not been utilized in that connection. I presume the hon. member is speaking of the Agricultural Prices Support Act?

Mr. FULTON: No, I am speaking of the agricultural products account established under section 8 of this Agricultural Products Act.

Mr. GARDINER: That would be the total of the amounts I read into the record a few moments ago, showing what we had received from Britain for the different commodities. I read those figures into the record to begin with.

Mr. WRIGHT: If this act expires on March 31, 1949, and we still have contracts with Great Britain, will it not be necessary to renew the act again at that time?

Mr. GARDINER: Last year we gave an undertaking to the house that we would not extend either this act or that dealt with by the Minister of Justice the other day for more than one year at a time, that we would come back once a year and give an accounting if we wanted them extended farther. I would presume it may be necessary to extend this for another year.

Mr. ARGUE: The answer of the minister points up the fact that the government has no permanent policy in regard to an agricultural products marketing act. The stand of this group is clear. We want a permanent policy for the marketing of all agricultural products along the line of that provided for wheat, and oats and barley, if that ever goes through. On March 14 of last year, both the hon. member for Humboldt and the hon. member for Melfort moved the same amendment at different stages, and both were ruled out of order. Those amendments clearly state the position of the C.C.F. party. They read:

That this bill be not now read a second time but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this house the government should give consideration to the redrafting of this bill to make provision for:

(a) A dominion marketing board to have control over the orderly marketing of any farm product in interprovincial trade within Canada and in export trade;

(b) Authority to confer on any existing local marketing board or agency established under law of a province, power to administer any scheme of the dominion marketing board in respect of interprovincial trade and export trade;

(c) The establishment where any provincial local marketing board or agency does not exist, of local marketing boards to administer any scheme of the dominion marketing board in respect of interprovincial trade and export trade, providing the establishment of such a board is favoured by a majority of the producers in the area concerned, the membership of such a board to consist of producers of the regulated product in the area to which this scheme relates.

While members of this group have advocated permanent, adequate legislation, nevertheless we are willing to have this measure pass, though it be quite inadequate, because certainly it is better to have this measure for one year than to have no measure at all. I thought the hon. member for Middlesex West gave the Minister of Agriculture some good advice last year, and I hope he is still giving the same advice now that he has become his parliamentary assistant. On March 17, at page 1441 of Hansard, the hon. member for Middlesex West said:

I as a farmer, and representing farmers, am here tonight from western Ontario in this great old province of ours, to support this Bill No. 25. I feel that the minister is too modest in bringing down this legislation and making it operative for only one year. I think it should extend for two or three years instead of one.

I hope the hon. gentleman still thinks so; I hope he is still giving that advice to the minister, and I hope the minister will listen to him and bring in a proper agricultural products marketing act. It seems to me that one of the reasons we do not have proper production in the agricultural products with which we are dealing this evening is that the government has not gone to the farmers and told them it would implement adequate legislation to guarantee the farmers decent prices year in and year out. No one knows when the government may decide that the transitional period is at an end; therefore no one can tell, the farmers cannot tell, how long this legislation will remain in effect.

I am glad the minister has signed new contracts with Britain for this year, but I think we should be clear as to what those contracts amount to as compared with the contracts of last year. The bacon contract last year was for 350,000,000 pounds. I was unable to take down the figures given by the minister, but at page 220 of Hansard for this session it was estimated that Canada would supply in 1947 about 250,000,000 pounds, or 100,000,000 pounds short. This year the minister has signed a contract providing for a minimum of 195,000,000 pounds of bacon, or just a little more than half the 1947 contract. The contract last year for beef was for 120,000,000 pounds, while this year's contract is for 45,000,000 pounds, or less than forty per cent of the contract last year. The cheese contract for 1947 was for 125,000,000 pounds. The contract for this year is for only 50,000,000 pounds, or a drop of sixty per cent. Speaking in this house in 1946, the minister said there was a contract for 1948 calling for the delivery of some 400,000,000 pounds of bacon. Now, largely as a result of government policies which have brought about a drastic reduction in the production of bacon, the government comes along with a contract for only 195,000,000 pounds. Speaking in this house in 1946, the minister said, as reported at page 4779 of Hansard:

Under the contract entered into we have agreed to a reduction in the quantity that we are required to deliver to at least 350 million pounds. In 1948 we have agreed to attempt to deliver 400 million pounds. In other words we believe that we can increase deliveries in 1948 over the deliveries in 1947 and therefore we have entered into a contract under which we agree to deliver a greater quantity in 1948 than in 1947.

And again:

We have attempted to avoid giving wrong information to the British as to what food would be supplied or could be supplied from year to year. Then we have written into the contracts the highest quantities that we felt sure we could deliver to the British.

The Minister of Agriculture certainly missed his guess in 1946.

Mr. GARDINER: The Canadian people are eating more than 30 per cent more.

Mr. ARGUE: I am glad they are. But the minister guessed wrong in 1946. And if he does not guess any more correctly this year, perhaps even the 1948 contracts, which are only a small part of the 1947 ones, will be no more accurate.

I would suggest to him that if he wishes production from the farmers he should do what his parliamentary assistant said last year he should do, namely, bring in a more permanent form for an adequate agricultural products marketing act. Then, if he will see that the prices the farmers receive for these particular commodities bear a fair relationship at all times to the cost of feeds going into the production of those commodities, the farmers will come through with the production.

Late in 1947 we were given the financial agreement for the first three months with Great Britain to provide for payments under these contracts. The amount of that financial agreement was $145 million. Great Britain was to pay Canada $100 million in United States funds, and $45,000,000 was to come from the loan. According to a recent press dispatch last week Great Britain used its final $9,000,000 of the $45,000,000 credit set up for her for the first three months of 1948. I would ask the minister what financial arrangements are being made for the payment for products shipped from now until the end of March and for products shipped to Great Britain after the end of March, and if he can assure the committee that financial arrangements will be made to implement, even throughout 1948, contracts which have already been agreed upon as to both quantity and price.

Mr. GARDINER: In answer to the hon. member's first question, let me say the British have definitely undertaken to take quantities of food which are stipulated in the contracts at prices stipulated in the contracts. I have enough worries without worrying about where they will find the money. They will be worrying about that. They will find the money.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): The question asked by the hon. member for Wood Mountain has put a question in my mind. Would the minister give for the last three or four years the amounts of bacon shipped to Great Britain and also the amounts supplied to Great Britain from other sources? He will realize the import of my question. It is to show whether other people are getting a larger share of the bacon market and whether we are getting a smaller share. It seems to me that for the future that is important.

Mr. GARDINER: The quantities of bacon shipped to the United Kingdom for the last five years are as follows:

	Hundredweight
1943	5,603,093
1944	6,923,103
1945	4,460,693
1946	2,850,291
1947	2,320,014

In 1948, deliveries are higher thus far than in 1947.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): What other bacon supplies has Britain received during those years, and from what countries?

Mr. GARDINER: I have here a table which shows the quantities of food Great Britain has received from Canada, and the percentages these quantities represent of the total of food supplies. The figures are as follows:

	Cwts.	Per cent of total United Kingdom imports
	1947	1947	1938
Wheat	67,785,527	81·9	28·3
Wheat flour	13,218,766	75·9	47·6

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): The minister has given us a comparison of 1947 with 1938. I should like to have a comparison with 1943 or 1944 if he has the figures there.

Mr. GARDINER: I have not those, no.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Why was 1938 taken?

Mr. GARDINER: That was the last complete year before the war, and the comparison shows our position now in the British market in the first complete year of the loan.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Will the minister put the 1945 figures on the record later?

Mr. GARDINER: They could be, yes.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Could the minister state what has been happening to the bacon market? He tells us that the percentage in 1947 was 74 per cent, which, of course, is much higher than before the war. Has he any figures in his mind which would indicate what is likely to be the continuing position? In other words, what are the prospects?

Mr. GARDINER: Of course the figures for 1943 and 1944 were the highest that we have had. They were very much higher than anything we might hope to be able to reach or maintain. That is due entirely to the fact that we had a greatly increased production of feed grain brought about by paying so much per acre to get it. We fed that feed grain in 1943 and 1944 together with the increased crops of those years. We never hope to get back to that position unless we are again under a condition of war when we would be practically the only exporter to Great Britain as we were during that period. Our aim this year, as was stated a few moments ago by the hon. member for Wood Mountain, is to reach the 1945 production. On some of these commodities we have not been able to do that, but I would point out that the exports do not give the complete picture.

The gross income figures of farmers for 1947 have just been published, and the amount as compared with the 1946 gross income is $2,002,195,000 as compared with $1,769,632,000 for 1946. In other words, there was an enormous increase in the return to farmers in 1947 as compared with 1946.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Have you the quantities?

Mr. GARDINER: No. I have the total cash returns for the different products, but it would take quite a long time to read them. They are all published in a sheet that is distributed to anyone who desires to have it.

Mr. ARGUE: Has the minister the net income figures for 1947?

Mr. GARDINER: No, but I can get them.

Mr. ARGUE: They are really more important than the gross.

Mr. GARDINER: The net income figures will be just as much higher in 1947 over 1946 as are those figures I have given. That has been the proportionate general trend right through the years. The year 1946 was the highest we ever had down to that time.

[Mr. Macdonnell (Muskoka-Ontario).]

I can give the figures for the provinces in millions of dollars for 1947 as against 1946. They are:

	1947 (millions)	1946 (millions)
Prince Edward Island	19·0	17·2
Nova Scotia	33·1	34·2
New Brunswick	38·3	35·9
Quebec	295·8	251·9
Ontario	546·3	472·9
Manitoba	185·9	170·8
Saskatchewan	434·1	399·2
Alberta	345·5	285·0
British Columbia	92·7	85·6
Total	1,990·6	1,752·7

In every province but one there is an increase, but Nova Scotia is down $1,000,000.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): I should like to make some observations which, to my mind, will help not only the farmer in this country in his production but will be of general benefit to the whole industry, particularly in connection with the export of bacon to the United Kingdom. As the minister well knows, during the last two or three decades there has been a movement, probably led by Denmark, to reduce the weights of Wiltshire sides that are finding a market in the United Kingdom. The observation which I wish to make, speaking from experience—I think this will be borne out by hon. members—is this. The last ten pounds put on the hog before it is slaughtered are the easiest and cheapest ten pounds to put on. In view of that well-known fact the farmer makes his profit there. On the last ten pounds he makes a substantial profit. Has our policy been to encourage the British market to take a product a little heavier in weight, or are we still being led into a market which demands an even lighter weight or more lean and not so much fat? That has been the trend during the last thirty years. Has it started to turn the other way? If it has it should be encouraged to keep on in that way. If that were done the Canadian producer would find himself in a much more profitable position. It would increase our poundage for export with the same number of head of livestock; and as far as dietetics are concerned, in the judgment of many people who have studied this, it would be better for the people who are consuming the product if we reverse the trend a little. Has the minister's department made any study of that, and is he in a position to say that we are now down to the lightest possible weight, or are we able to increase the rate by four, five or six pounds? Even four, five or six pounds would be greatly to the benefit of the farmers of Canada; it would also benefit the consumers. What is the policy of the department in that regard?

Mr. GARDINER: The general policy is about the same as it was prior to the war; that is, we are encouraging the light, lean bacon hog, the long, light, lean bacon hog. We have increased the weight. During the war the weight went up somewhere between twenty and thirty pounds per live hog. That has been maintained; we have not changed that.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): Did the minister say, between twenty and forty pounds?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes. We allowed hogs to grade as selects, A's, at that weight. That happened about the middle of the war, along about 1942 or 1943, and we still maintain those weights.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): Not as high as forty pounds?

Mr. GARDINER: An average of about twenty. I say from twenty to forty pounds, somewhere in those ranges, depending on how they were finished. They can go up from twenty to forty pounds.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): If the average is twenty pounds, how could they go up to forty pounds?

Mr. GARDINER: The hon. member had better read the regulations and he will find that the weight is not set at even figures; but a man can get A's at a range that runs from about 200 to 240 pounds.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): Not forty.

Mr. GARDINER: In these weights. I am getting them, and I suppose you are, too.

Mr. CARDIFF: Would that not depend on the kind of hog that the weight was on?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes. It has to be the long, lean Yorkshire hog.

Mr. CHARLTON: I have some more remarks to make at a later stage of the bill, but there is one thing I should like to ask now. I have been following closely the figures that the minister was giving a while ago. I have my return in front of me now. I do not think the figures quite jibe with the wording in this return, and I am just wondering which ones are correct. For bacon, cheese and beef the 1947 figures are preliminary. Between now and Monday could the minister get these figures up to date? They should be available for 1947.

Mr. GARDINER: They may be.

Mr. CHARLTON: Can the minister do that?

Mr. GARDINER: If they are available.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): The minister will remember about the 1945 figures. He is going to give those.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Gardiner thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 171, to amend the Agricultural Products Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Monday we shall take up, first of all, the resolution on the excise taxes, and when it is disposed of we shall proceed with the second reading and the committee stage of the bill which just received first reading. If any time remains after these are disposed of, the Minister of Veterans Affairs will go on with his resolution for leave to introduce a bill to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, March 22, 1948

The house met at three o'clock.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BENTLEY—DISTRIBUTION OF APPLES TO MEMBERS

Mr. T. J. BENTLEY (Swift Current): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I find on my desk an apple under which there is a card bearing the following words:

> You have tried the rest;
> Now try the best.

I want to point out that the best apples come from Annapolis Valley, Nova Scotia.

Mr. A. E. ROBINSON (Bruce): I rise to a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, affecting not only every member of the house but the nation as well. It is national in scope. We have before us some wonderful apples with the compliments of the member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid). I take exception to one line that appears on the card accompanying these apples, and that is that they come from Canada's premier province. I think it is well understood that Bruce county is the leading county of the best province.

Mr. REID: May I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that you pay no attention to the jealousy exhibited today. So far as apples are concerned, hon. members have the best before them.

Mr. MAYBANK: Mr. Speaker, when I get an apple for nothing I believe everything that is on the card.

MR. D. G. ROSS—NATIONAL HOCKEY LEAGUE—TORONTO MAPLE LEAFS

Mr. DOUGLAS G. ROSS (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I was wondering if the Prime Minister recognized the fact that another layer of gold had been placed on our maple leaf by the Toronto Maple Leafs and the Montreal Canadiens. I want to bring to the attention of the house the fact that "Elmer Lach des Canadiens de Montréal a gagné le titre de meilleur compteur de la ligue nationale" and also that Turk Broda from the Toronto Maple Leafs won the goalkeeper trophy. My question of privilege is this: Some people think that Turk Broda, Connie Smythe and Sylvanus Apps are foreigners. I wish to correct that and tell you that in spite of the fact that Syl Apps has been reported by the papers as coming from Paris, France, it is Paris, Ontario. Turk Broda, Connie Smythe and Sylvanus Apps are all Canadians and Progressive Conservatives.

MR. MCCULLOUGH—REFERENCE TO LETTER RECEIVED ON MARCH 21

Mr. E. G. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. Yesterday I received from the office of Doctor Beauchesne a letter enclosing a second one to Saint Peter, addressed to heaven. My point is that I am not Saint Peter and my address is not heaven.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Never will be.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): I want the house to understand that no discourtesy was meant by the Clerk of the House in choosing to send the letter to me rather than to some other member. I intend to send the letter to the Prime Minister in the belief that he may be the person to whom it was meant to be forwarded.

MR. MAYBANK—WHEAT BOARD ACT—REFERENCE TO MOTION FOR INSTRUCTION TO COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Mr. RALPH MAYBANK (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. In Votes and Proceedings, and I have no doubt in Hansard as well, my name is left off the list of those who voted for the motion of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) that it be an instruction to the committee of the whole that they have power to divide Bill No. 135 into two bills. I did vote for that motion, and the fact is not recorded.

Mr. GORDON GRAYDON (Peel): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege which affects every member of this house and which is both serious and far-reaching. On Friday last the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) made an important motion arising out of a previous government undertaking he had given to this house with relation to the government's wheat measure. As he moved it another cabinet minister declined to be its seconder. When the vote was taken only two out of a cabinet of eighteen supported the government motion. My question of privilege is this: Cabinet solidarity is a keystone in the very arch of responsible democratic government. Through it the people of Canada have the right to believe that they have assurance that when a member of the government says a thing is going to be done, then in fact it will be done—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member should not make a statement. I would ask him to state the question of privilege.

Mr. GRAYDON: I am now stating the question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, and I think I should have the right to proceed with it. Cabinet solidarity is a keystone in the very arch of responsible democratic government. Through it the people of Canada have the right to believe that they have assurance that when a member of the government says a thing is going to be done, it in fact will be done, and that nothing short of the defeat of the government and its consequent resignation will prevent that government promise from being carried out. That democratic guarantee was thrown to the winds by cabinet action last Friday, and I want to protest that action with every bit of vigour and earnestness at my command.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. GRAYDON: This kind of thing—

An hon. MEMBER: He has made his speech.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would point out to the hon. member that he has stated his question of privilege and he should be satisfied.

Mr. GRAYDON: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: It is against the rules that a member should use a question of privilege to criticize one side or the other.

Mr. GRAYDON: It is not a question of criticizing one side or the other. This would apply to any government no matter what it may be. I wish to conclude by saying that this kind of thing, if continued, will go far to shake the parliamentary foundations of our way of life—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. GRAYDON: —when that way of life is being seriously challenged by other forces whose avowed object is to destroy it.

[Mr. Graydon.]

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. GRAYDON: I am not at all concerned with those political disc jockeys over there.

UNITED NATIONS

TEMPORARY COMMISSION ON KOREA—ACTION OF CANADIAN DELEGATE

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I am now in a position to supplement the information I gave on March 10 regarding recent developments in the work of the united nations temporary commission on Korea and the position taken by the Canadian representative, Doctor Patterson.

We have now received a full report from Doctor Patterson on what happened. It appears that as the March 1 anniversary of the 1919 declaration of Korean independence drew near there developed a strong undercurrent of demand among the Korean people for some announcement concerning their future to be made on that date. Accordingly members of the united nations commission then in Seoul discussed and agreed among themselves, and cleared by telephone with the commission chairman, Mr. Menon, then in New York, that the acting chairman, Mr. Liu, should make a public statement on March 1, saying that the commission would accept the advice of the interim committee to observe elections in south Korea. General Hodge proclaimed the date of elections for May 9 after Mr. Liu had made this public statement. Doctor Patterson, who was in Tokyo at the time, was not consulted, although he had left his telephone number with the principal secretary of the commission on his departure from Seoul, with the request that he be called should any important matter arise; nor was a regular commission meeting called in order to discuss the matter. Accordingly, at the next regular meeting of the commission Doctor Patterson, under instructions, drew attention to the irregularity of the procedure by which this important decision was reached. He pointed out that if the commission were to proceed in this manner its impartiality and authority as a properly constituted united nations commission would be undermined. As a result of this intervention the commission re-examined the whole position very carefully in several days of private discussions and at the end decided that there should be a formal vote to record the position taken by each member.

On March 12 the commission formally decided "to observe elections announced by the commanding general of the American forces to be held on May 9, 1948, provided that it has ascertained that the elections will be held in a free atmosphere where democratic rights of freedom of speech, press and assembly will be recognized and respected". The vote in favour of this resolution was 4 to 2, with Canada and Australia against, and Syria and France abstaining. In voting on this resolution the commission in effect recognized the validity of Doctor Patterson's objections to the irregularity of the earlier informal agreement to observe elections. I think that the importance which the Canadian representatives on the interim committee of the general assembly and the united nations temporary commission on Korea have attached to united nations bodies observing proper constitutional procedures has made a valuable contribution to the work of the united nations.

The reports in the press that Doctor Patterson had walked out of the commission were incorrect and misleading, both to the Korean people and to persons abroad. When the commission decided to observe elections in that part of Korea accessible to it, Doctor Patterson cabled us for further instructions. Pending the receipt of these instructions Doctor Patterson, as was only right and proper, informed his colleagues on the commission that he would not be able to take an active part in the work of the commission until he had received further instructions from Ottawa. He has continued to attend the meetings of the commission, nevertheless.

Doctor Patterson has presented the views of the government on the commission faithfully and well under difficult circumstances. His experience and knowledge of the Far East have enabled him to give us sound and helpful reports on the background of developments in Korea.

The government has decided that it will not be necessary to recall Doctor Patterson for consultation, because he has been able to send us a very full account of what happened. Instructions have been sent to Doctor Patterson authorizing him to continue to serve with the commission, because the commission conceives its duties to be to observe, consult and advise Koreans and the United States military government authorities regarding the conduct of these elections; but the responsibility for running the elections rests with the United States military government authorities and any action towards the establishment of a government in Korea following the elections will not be on the strength of the resolution of the general assembly but on the legal position of the occupying military authorities. Further, the chairman of the Korean commission has drawn attention to the fact that the commission has the authority to withdraw at any time if it is not satisfied that it can perform a useful function in remaining in Korea to observe the manner in which the elections are to be held.

Mr. GRAYDON: Do I take it from the minister's statement that the elections will be held under the auspices of the United States occupying forces rather than under any organ of the united nations? Is that the point?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: The proclamation fixing the date for the elections and the legal basis on which the elections are being held are the acts of the military authorities and not as we first understood, namely, that an attempt would be made to have it appear that they were being held under authority derived from the resolution of the general assembly which provided for an election for the whole of Korea and not for only one part thereof.

INVESTMENT AND CONSTRUCTION

PRIVATE AND PUBLIC INVESTMENT—PRODUCTION OF BASIC AND BUILDING MATERIALS—OUTLOOK FOR 1948

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I desire to lay on the table two documents. The first is entitled "Private and Public Investment in Canada, Outlook 1948", and the second deals with "Production of Basic and Building Materials in Canada, Outlook 1948". They were prepared by the economic research branch of my department. The French text of these two papers will be available as soon as the translation and printing are completed.

The first paper is a forecast of the likely volume of investment based on returns from some 13,000 business establishments and institutions and information supplied by governments, federal, provincial and municipal. The outstanding feature of the report is the fact that it indicates for 1948 a capital program of $2·8 billion, the highest in Canada's history. If realized, this will be about 17 per cent in excess of the $2·4 billion spent in 1947, although somewhat less than 5 per cent more in volume. The program involves an anticipated $1·6 billion on new construction and $1·2 billion on new machinery and equipment, representing increases of 21 and 12 per cent respectively over 1947 levels.

The second paper, based on production plans of Canadian business, indicates that output of eight out of nine basic materials is expected to be maintained during 1948 at the high levels achieved in last year, while in the ninth, coal, an increase in volume of 15 per cent is anticipated. Production of thirty types of building materials show further improvements for 1948, with increases of over 20 per cent indicated for bathtubs, steel pipe and fittings, gypsum plaster, gypsum lathe, rock wool batts and construction tile. Smaller increases are expected for all other items except for two, where decreases are anticipated.

Mr. LOCKHART: Are they unit increases or just value increases?

Mr. HOWE: Unit increases.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT

PROVISION FOR INCREASE IN SALARY OF CHIEF ELECTORAL OFFICER

Hon. COLIN GIBSON (Secretary of State) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Dominion Elections Act, 1938, to make provision inter alia for an increase of salary to the chief electoral officer.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN POSITION WITH RESPECT TO PALESTINE PARTITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): In view of the statement by the United States with respect to the partitioning of Palestine, can the Secretary of State for External Affairs inform the house what attitude Canada is taking under the changed circumstances? The minister may not be prepared to make a statement today, but I think it should be made as soon as possible.

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs): All I can say is that with the advisers of the department I have been giving very careful consideration to the developments which have taken place. I have prepared recommendations to be submitted to my colleagues, but until they have been considered by them there is nothing more I could state to the house as a decision.

RETURN OF TRIESTE TO ITALY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GORDON GRAYDON (Peel): I take it the government has been made officially aware of the joint announcement of declaration by the United States, Great Britain and France proposing to the Soviet Union that the free territory of Trieste be returned to Italy. If so, is it the intention of the government to support the objectives set out in this declaration?

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The government has been informed that on Saturday the governments of the United States, the United Kingdom and France issued a statement the first part of which said:

> The governments of the United States, the United Kingdom and France have proposed to the governments of the Soviet Union and Italy that those governments join in an additional protocol to the treaty of peace with Italy which would place the free territory of Trieste once more under Italian sovereignty.

This has been communicated to us, and so far the Canadian government has made no comment.

FLAXSEED

QUESTION AS TO ANNOUNCEMENT OF PRICE FOR 1948

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. ROSS (Souris): In reply to my question on March 9 of this year, at page 2006 of Hansard, the Minister of Trade and Commerce said:

> I think I can promise that a price for flax will be set at least as soon as the house authorizes the government to pay the participation certificates on the present wheat contract.

Will the minister now say what is to be the price of flaxseed for the 1948 crop? The farmers are becoming anxious.

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I shall endeavour to announce it tomorrow.

SOCIAL SECURITY

OLD AGE PENSION PLAN AND NATIONAL HEALTH INSURANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. STANLEY KNOWLES (Winnipeg North Centre): In view of further press reports concerning a contributory old age pension plan and national health insurance, will the government consider laying its tentative proposals either before the house in the form of a white paper or before a committee of the house, so that action in connection with these and other items in an over-all security program might be expedited?

Hon. PAUL MARTIN (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The hon. gentleman asked me a question some weeks ago which, though not entirely the same, was the same in part. I have nothing further to add to what I said at that time.

Mr. KNOWLES: That is still nothing.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY ON OLD AGE PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. O. PROBE (Regina City): I should like to direct the following question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Does the federal government accept the principle that it is now responsible for one hundred per cent payment of all old age pensions at the age of seventy, based on a means test; or does it adhere to the principle that it will pay seventy-five per cent of old age pensions authorized in each province by that province—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. PROBE: —or has it a policy of a base pension—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. PROBE: —to which it contributes a fixed proportion—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I would call the attention of hon. members to the fact that there is a rule providing that when the Speaker rises the hon. member who has the floor should resume his seat. The excuse of hon. members is that they do not hear the Speaker. If they would follow another rule, which states that an hon. member should address himself to the Chair, they would see and hear the Speaker when he rises. In this case I believe the hon. gentleman should observe the rule which says that when a question is lengthy it should be placed on the order paper.

COMBINES ACT

INQUIRY AS TO PROSECUTION OF DENTAL FIRMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. DIEFENBAKER (Lake Centre): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice in connection with the withdrawal from the jury on Thursday last of the charges against eighteen dental firms in connection with restraint of trade proceedings under the Combines Act. The question is, who was responsible for the failure of the crown to prove obvious, necessary and salient facts to such an extent that the judge said there was no case to go to the jury?

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I regard the hon. gentleman's question as quite improperly expressed. I regard it as making a statement to the house of what he alleges to be facts but what I do not admit to be facts. I will give an answer to his question tomorrow, but I will take the opportunity to restate his question.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: It is a costly debacle.

Mr. COLDWELL: I should like to ask a supplementary question. Is this decision appealable? If so, is the government going to appeal it?

Mr. ILSLEY: I have not had an opportunity to go into the matter of deciding whether it will be appealed or not. But I was informally given to understand that it is appealable.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS

ACQUISITION OF GUARANTEED SECURITIES—INVESTMENT OF CANADIAN FUNDS FROM SALE OF U.S. DOLLARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a further appeal to the Minister of Finance following one or two I previously made to get an answer to a question I asked some weeks ago. It was passed as an order for return on February 11. I asked the minister for his assistance, which he said he would give. The question has to do with investments by the Bank of Canada. I am beginning to wonder—and I do not suggest that the Minister of Finance has anything to do with it—that the answer is being withheld.

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think that is an unfair inference for my hon. friend to draw. I made inquiries immediately after his question the other day, and was told that the information would be ready within a few days. This involves a return from different departments, and does not involve only the Bank of Canada. This matter has to do with the investment of all government funds. I hope it will be ready today or tomorrow. I thought it would be ready today. This question has considerable detail in it and will be put in just as soon as the information is available to the department of the Under-Secretary of State.

GRANTS TO PROVINCES FOR EDUCATIONAL PURPOSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. RONALD MOORE (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Secretary of State. Some time ago I asked a question on the order paper as to what grants had been allotted by the government for educational purposes to the provincial governments, other than Manitoba. This question was passed as an order for return on February 25. Can the minister say when I might expect an answer?

[Mr. Ilsley.]

Hon. COLIN GIBSON (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I cannot say when the answer will be ready. I shall make inquiries and let the hon. member know when it will be available.

RAIN MAKING

EXPERIMENTS CONDUCTED BY BRANCH OF GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. MAX CAMPBELL (The Battlefords): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply. Is the national research council or the meteorological service conducting experiments in rain making, and if so, will the minister keep the house informed as to results obtained?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): The national research council has been conducting laboratory tests in the use of dry ice for rain making, if one wishes to call it that, for a considerable length of time. It is the intention during the next summer season to conduct aerial tests on a large scale.

Mr. MANROSS: I wonder if the minister would consider experimenting somewhere other than western Ontario.

RAILWAYS

REFRIGERATOR CARS FOR POTATO SHIPMENTS FROM PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. CHESTER S. McLURE (Queens): I should like to ask a very important question of the Minister of Transport. Has the minister received information by letters and telegrams from shippers and farmers with respect to the great shortage of refrigerator cars for potato shipments from Prince Edward Island?

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport): I do not know that there is any urgency in the question the hon. member has put. I have no recollection of having received information to that effect. But I will tell him that less than a week ago I made a statement in the house that there were more than 250 reefer cars on Prince Edward Island at that time. The position today is that there are approximately a thousand cars more shipped than were shipped out of Prince Edward Island at the same time last year.

Mr. McLURE: I have this supplementary question. I hold in my hand a copy of two letters—

Mr. HOWE: That is not a question.

Mr. McLURE: —addressed to the Minister of Transport. If he has not the information they could be put on the record.

RADIO BROADCASTING

INTERFERENCE BY ELECTROTHERAPEUTIC EQUIPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday last the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) asked a question with respect to the regulations concerning radio interference by electrotherapeutic equipment.

The answer to the first part of the question is, yes. Consideration has been given to the request of the Canadian hospital council. The answer to the second part of the question is that the regulations in question were passed by order in council on January 22, 1941, to be effective on February 8, 1941. The application of these, in so far as electrotherapeutic equipment is concerned, was postponed nearly seven years to January 1, 1948, owing to a shortage of supply of material and equipment. The question of a further postponement has now undoubtedly been raised by reason of action in the United States where a five-year period of grace has been given. It will be noted that the similar period of grace in Canada has been seven years. There is an outstanding difference, however, in the interference caused by this equipment in the two countries. In the United States a large part of transmitting equipment is very high powered and is not affected to as great an extent as in Canada, where the greater part is of a much lower power.

Interference by the operation of this equipment is a serious matter in radio communications in Canada unless adequate means are employed to control the radiation. Safety radio services, such as aids to air and marine navigation, police and fire department radio, are frequently blotted out by radiation from diathermy machines at distances of hundreds of miles. A further period of grace in this matter of suppressing this type of interference would delay the proper development of these and other high frequency services.

While it is proposed therefore to enforce the regulations effective January 1, 1948, I would point out that the inspectors of the radio branch of the Department of Transport have done nothing to disrupt existing operations where interference is not being encountered. However, where interference is found, operators of this type of equipment will be required to install the necessary shielding if the equipment is to continue to be operated.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Has the report the minister has just made anything to do with the difference in cycles between Ontario and other parts of Canada? The minister shakes his head. I should like to know whether he says yes or no.

Mr. HOWE: The answer is no.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Then I have another question. Why is it that we find a different situation in the United States from that which we have in Canada?

Mr. HOWE: I gave that information in the statement I have just given. If the hon. member will consult Hansard he will find that the question is fully answered.

[Later:]

Mr. J. H. HARRIS (Danforth): I should like to put a question to the minister who a moment ago answered an inquiry with regard to radio, but I do not know just how to address him. I might call him the minister in toto, or the Minister of Trade and Commerce or of everything.

Mr. HOWE: Is this a question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): With regard to members of the medical fraternity in small towns who are operating electrotherapeutic machines which are causing radio interference, will the minister give them time to replace the machines which are banned by this order? Most of these machines come from the United States, and there is quite a shortage of them at the present time. To issue an ultimatum against their use because of radio interference would put many practitioners throughout Canada out of business.

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Full consideration has been given to the situation, and I am told that no action is being taken which will interfere with the work of hospitals provided that the management of the hospitals give full consideration to the requirements of the department.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): I was not referring to hospitals but to individual operators in clinics in small country towns throughout Canada.

UNITED NATIONS

NATIONAL COMMISSION IN RELATION TO UNESCO

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on the 19th instant the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) asked the following question:

When does the government intend to appoint and set up the national commission in relation to the united nations educational, scientific and cultural organization under the legislation that was passed two years ago?

May I point out that there is no specific reference to the establishment of a commission in the legislation that was passed approving the constitution of the educational, scientific and cultural organization. But there is in that constitution a clause as follows:

Each member state shall make such arrangements as suit its particular conditions for the purpose of associating its principal bodies interested in educational, scientific and cultural matters with the work of the organization, preferably by the formation of a national commission broadly representative of the government and such bodies.

It will be noted from this paragraph that the establishment of a national commission is not mandatory in any way. Unfortunately, for quite a considerable time now there have been problems which, without in any way detracting from the importance of UNESCO, have appeared to the department to be entitled to priority, and have prevented full consideration being given to the appointment of this commission. In the meantime the department is providing the channel of communication between UNESCO and the various educational, scientific and cultural bodies co-operating with the government and with organizations in this country.

Mr. COLDWELL: Can the minister say when we are likely to get a report on the consideration being given to the matter?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I should like to be able to say that it would be very soon. I hope there will not always be problems which appear to be of greater immediate urgency than the formation of this commission. I hope it will not always be so. I am not in position to say to the hon. member how soon it will be possible to divert our attention from these other more immediately urgent problems.

Mr. FLEMING: Would the minister be good enough to make one or two points clear?

[Mr. Harris (Danforth).]

It is not quite clear from his answer whether the government has decided to set up or not to set up at some time or other the commission.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: The government has not decided not to set up or to set up at some time or other the commission.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Apropos of what has just been said by the minister of external affairs, I should like to ask if the government has decided to be undecided.

WAYS AND MEANS

EXCISE TAX ACT AMENDMENT

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Golding in the chair.

1. Effective on and after November 18, 1947, an excise tax of 25 per cent is imposed on the following goods:

(a) The following electrical appliances: waffle irons; roasters; kettles; chafing dishes; juice extractors; coffee makers; toasters of all kinds; portable humidifiers; curling irons or tongs, hair dryers; permanent waving machines and spacers or clamps; rods and heaters therefor; razors and shavers; garbage disposal units;

(b) The following electrical appliances when adapted to household use: food or drink mixers; food choppers and grinders; irons and ironers; vacuum cleaners and attachments therefor; floor waxers and polishers;

(c) Electric or gas refrigerators or freezing equipment, and coils, condensing or compressor units, cabinets, boxes, evaporators and expansion valves therefor; all the foregoing when adapted to household or apartment use or when for use in places of entertainment, amusement or recreation, including rinks, auditoria, halls and clubs;

(d) Firearms except for military or police purposes;

(e) Outboard motors;

(f) Motorcycles, and all other two- or three-wheeled motor-driven vehicles including motors for attachment to bicycles but not including vehicles specially designed for carrying goods or for use by invalids;

(g) Projectors for slides, films or pictures designed for industrial or professional photographers' use;

(h) Toilet articles of all kinds (including combs, mirrors and brushes other than tooth brushes or shaving brushes the duty paid value or the Canadian manufacturer's selling price of which combs, mirrors and brushes is more than twenty-five cents each) and which items do not already come within any other item in schedule one of the said act.

2. That on and after November 18, 1947, the rate of excise tax on automobiles adapted or adaptable for passenger use with seating capacity for not more than ten persons each, imported into or manufactured or produced in Canada be increased from ten per cent to the following rates, namely, on automobiles valued at $1,200 or less, 25 per cent over $1,200 but not more than $2,000, 25 per cent on $1,200 plus

3. That on and after November 18, 1947, the rate of excise tax on phonographs, record-playing devices, radio broadcast receiving sets and tubes therefor, be increased from ten per cent to twenty-five per cent.

4. That on and after November 18, 1947, the rate of excise tax on cameras, photographic films and plates, projectors for slides, films or pictures, except those designed exclusively for industrial or professional photographers' use, be increased from ten per cent to twenty-five per cent.

5. That on and after November 18, 1947, electricity and gas used in dwellings be exempt from consumption or sales tax; and

6. That on and after November 18, 1947, the excise tax of one cent per pound on sugar, grape sugar, glucose, sugar syrup, corn syrup, etc., be repealed.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I want to be quite clear as to what we are talking about. My understanding is that the amendment moved on February 23 merely changes the articles to which clause 1 of the resolution applies.

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): That is correct.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I have no objection to that.

Mr. ABBOTT: The amendment has the effect of removing from the resolution as originally tabled certain articles and rearranging the lettering of the various subheadings.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Its effect is to take out certain taxable articles?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is it precisely.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. ABBOTT: The hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario asked me to get some additional information as to the sale of articles which are subject either to the new tax or to additional taxation, and suggested that I might be able to give that to him when we were in committee on the bill. I had hoped that I would have that information today, but the deputy minister of customs and excise expects to have some information tomorrow. The committee will appreciate that the departmental records do not indicate sales in a particular month; they indicate revenue collections in a particular month only. Over a long period of time no doubt they would be an accurate reflection of sales but over a short period of time they might be quite misleading because there would be arrears of taxes coming in which might go back as far as two or three months. As a result of inquiries of the manufacturers themselves who pay these taxes we hope to have tomorrow up-to-date data as to sales. This has necessitated going to the manufacturers and asking for sales reports. There are comparatively few of them so they are obtainable. I should say that this relates particularly to the two large items of automobiles and radios. In the case of the smaller items like miscellaneous electrical equipment it will not be practicable to get sales figures.

Mr. McKAY: Has the minister any further statement to make with regard to lifting the excise tax on gas refrigerators?

Mr. ABBOTT: There is no excise tax on kerosene refrigerators, although there may be on gas refrigerators. We have been giving consideration to establishing a quota under the other bill for the importation of kerosene refrigerators which are not made in this country. I have not given consideration as yet to removing the tax on gas refrigerators. There is no tax imposed on the Servel kerosene type of refrigerator.

Mr. McKAY: Has consideration been given to lifting the quota?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is under active consideration now, but I am not in position to make a statement about it.

Mr. COLDWELL: I am glad to know that this is under consideration. Many people in rural districts have been wanting to get these for many years. Rural people are entitled to some consideration, particularly when they are deprived of so many of the modern conveniences enjoyed in the cities.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have written a number of letters to my hon. friend, to other hon. members and to the public, stating that consideration is being given to the matter, but I am not yet in position to state what quota if any we can establish.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Is the 25 per cent excise tax on refrigerators applicable to those purchased by community hospitals?

Mr. ABBOTT: The excise tax is applicable to refrigerators adapted to household use. Perhaps I had better just check on that. If the refrigerator was the type purchased by an institution it would not be subject to the tax which is imposed solely on the type of refrigerator adapted for household use. I should think that in many of these hospitals they would buy the commercial type of refrigerator.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I have had correspondence with distributors throughout Manitoba, and I will cite one case, that of a new hospital built by the community which purchased one of these refrigerators for its kitchen, and the wholesaler allowed a deduction of both the excise and the sales tax because it was for use in a hospital. The hospital decided it wanted another refrigerator for another floor to take care of its food, but in this case the wholesaler told them that the tax could be deducted only where the article was sold to a government-owned institution. This hospital is run in co-operation with the Manitoba government.

Mr. ABBOTT: Provincial governments are not taxed under this measure. If my hon. friend will give me the facts I shall be glad to look into this particular case.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I shall be glad to send them to the minister, because there does seem to be a misunderstanding.

Mr. ABBOTT: I shall look into it.

Mr. TIMMINS: Why are toilet articles costing more than twenty-five cents taken out of the schedule?

Mr. ABBOTT: It is the other way round; toilet articles costing more than twenty-five cents are left in and are subject to tax. The exclusion was for this reason. It was found that the imposition of the tax on lower priced articles, particularly brushes and combs, created a completely distorted price range. It threw the thing out of line. The manufacturers and distributors of that type of article convinced me and my officials that the tax would create a completely distorted price picture. What we were attempting to get at was the higher priced fancy articles sold as gifts.

Mr. MANROSS: The minister's explanation seems hardly consistent. He objects to putting a 25 per cent tax on an article that sells for twenty-five cents, yet he put a tax of 40 per cent on something that sold for a nickel.

Mr. ABBOTT: Soft drinks?

Mr. MANROSS: Right.

Mr. TIMMINS: The minister says that this tax was imposed for a number of reasons, and I should like to repeat the reasons he has given. First, he says the tax was not put on for taxation revenue primarily, but if there were some tax revenue, that would be welcome. Secondly, in an article in New Liberty a while ago he said that this tax, along with other taxes, was to plug a leak, the leak being, I suppose, the United States funds disappearing from our hands. Next he said it was to induce people to postpone buying; in other words to restrict buying. At another time he said it was to discourage imports from the United States, and finally he said it was to withdraw purchasing power.

Turning now to toilet articles which cost more than 25 cents, dresser ware, and so forth, the minister knows there has grown up in this country over a period of forty years a plastics industry. Some firms do nothing but manufacture and sell plastics, marketing them not only in Canada but in South Africa, India and other parts of the world. For the life of me I cannot see how any one of the explanations for this tax given by the minister in any way helps our economy, whereas the tax most certainly bludgeons this particular industry out of existence. The industry uses probably only eleven per cent of United States content. Most of its component parts are obtained in Canada. That was not so a few years ago, but it is so now. The chemicals, bristles, and so forth, that go into the manufacture of these articles are made in Canada. I ask the minister if eleven per cent of United States content is of sufficient importance to murder this industry which has been functioning in Canada for forty years. The minister has already learned from one or two of these firms how serious the situation is.

On the other hand, under the exchange conservation bill, the Minister of Trade and Commerce has the say as to what goods may be imported and what United States content they may have, and his idea may be entirely different from that of the finance minister Surely trade and commerce is the lifeblood of this country. I suggest to the minister that this is not the proper way of handling our business.

One more thing. The minister suggested that this was a temporary measure. I suppose therefore it was drawn up in a hurry. Yet the fact of the matter is that the very day after the tax was announced on the evening of November 17, the tax officials throughout the country were on November 18 making inspections and visitations in respect of this tax. That is what I call snooping; it is the gestapo method. I would like the minister to explain why these things go on when business is the lifeblood of our country.

To come back to my question, does the minister think that a United States content of eleven per cent is of sufficient importance to justify his putting this industry out of business?

Mr. ABBOTT: I gave a good deal of consideration to the brush industry, and I do not believe that the imposition of this tax is going to put them out of business by any means. Their volume will probably be reduced. I would hope that it will be reduced, because that is the purpose of the tax, but from the information I have, it is not going to ruin the business, as my hon. friend has suggested. It is true that eleven per cent is not particularly high; still it is an appreciable United States content. There is this other point, that we are trying to effect not too drastic but a certain reduction in consumption in Canada all along the line, particularly of less essential articles. One cannot reduce the consumption of food and essential clothing, but if we are to continue to play our part and export partly on credit we must create again what we had up to a little over a year ago, a surplus of production over consumption.

Mr. TIMMINS: What difference does it make whether the toilet articles are made out of plastics or ebony or some other wood? Surely one particular group should not be singled out.

Mr. ABBOTT: Rightly or wrongly the toilet articles group has been singled out since 1933 for this type of tax. In wartime that was considerably expanded and that continues. Personally I look forward to the day when we can get rid of this type of tax. It is not the type of tax that I personally like to keep permanently in the tax structure. I would prefer a simpler structure but under conditions like the present, when we are attempting to use the fiscal weapon as a means of restricting consumption this is a line in which it can be legitimately employed.

Mr. TIMMINS: As I understand, toothbrushes have been taken out completely.

Mr. ABBOTT: Right at the outset. It is a very low priced article.

Mr. TIMMINS: What is the difference between toothbrushes and hairbrushes so far as one's ordinary personal necessities are concerned? Why should toothbrushes go free and not hairbrushes? The minister needs a hairbrush and so do I. Fortunately we still have some hair. Why differentiate? Here is a man making toothbrushes, and another making hairbrushes. Some firms make toothbrushes and hardly anything else, while some other firms make hairbrushes. Why should there be a discrimination?

Mr. ABBOTT: One facetious answer might be, I suppose, that a good many more people have teeth than hair. At any rate, toothbrushes were eliminated in the first place because they are in the low-price bracket. They are a real necessity, and therefore they were eliminated at the very outset. When I discussed the question with the industry it was pointed out how difficult it would be from the standpoint of low-priced brushes and toilet articles, and we took toothbrushes out. The hairbrush comes close to being a necessity for most people, but on the other hand, in that field, the price range is so great, and there are so many fancy sets, silver-backed brushes and so on, that this was considered a fit subject for a temporary tax of this kind.

Mr. TIMMINS: Now that the minister is in this price range, would he consider two or three articles selling for $16 as articles commanding a high price and deserving a tax of this kind? Would such articles not come within the low range?

Mr. ABBOTT: Sixteen dollars? I would not pay so much for a hairbrush.

Mr. TIMMINS: I mean a set.

Mr. ABBOTT: I suppose people could buy hairbrushes individually.

Mr. TIMMINS: Why should the minister want to interfere in business to that extent? We are getting down to pretty fine points when the government can interfere in business to that extent.

Mr. ABBOTT: I honestly do not think the matter is so serious. I do not know about other members but I have not bought a hairbrush for years. I had a set given me by my wife a good many years ago, with initials on them, and I have not had to buy hairbrushes for years. I am inclined to think the supply is good and that people could hold off for a while. On the other hand, one has to buy combs more often. They are fragile.

Mr. TIMMINS: I am serious about this because, after all, when one comes to an industry which is at the point of life and death, the matter is quite serious. It is more serious than the minister makes out, whether the industry should or should not be taxed when it does not come within any of the five categories which the minister has set out from time to time as comprising the things which should be taxed for the purpose of saving United States dollars. I cannot see why a tax should be put on these things. After all, our own industry comes first. If we have firms that have been in business for forty years, building themselves up, their position should be considered. Anyone who knows anything about plastics knows that the industry hardly existed at the time of the first war, but it has grown little by little and we are shipping to other parts of the world. We ought to give serious consideration to taking goods of this kind out of the purview of the act. I repeat, our own industry comes first and when it ceases to do so we have made a mockery of ourselves in this sort of legislation.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: The other day, replying to a question, the Minister of Finance said that the reason certain household articles such as refrigerators were taxable while similar articles for industrial or business use were not—

Mr. ABBOTT: Industrial or commercial production.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Those which enter into production or the making of one's living, I understand, are in general exempt. I understood that to be the answer.

Mr. ABBOTT: Not necessarily in all cases. That is the general principle followed.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: It is a principle that might be extended to other articles. There are two items mentioned here, firearms and outboard motors, which in a large number of cases in the northern parts of Canada are used in the production of goods or as a means of making a living. There are occupations such as trapping, prospecting, fishing and so on in connection with which these articles are purchased, and they are bought not as luxuries or for sporting purposes but for the purpose of enabling the purchaser to make a living. In such cases would the minister consider exempting them?

Mr. ABBOTT: We gave careful consideration to those two items, because in northern Canada the outboard motor is a part of the trapper's equipment, and the same applies to a lesser degree to firearms. However, we came to the conclusion that it would not be practicable to do that because the tax is put on at the wholesale level. Those two articles go out through jobbers, as do others, and administratively it would have been almost impossible to handle them. One would have had to have individual applications and it would not have been possible. On balance we came to the conclusion that the outboard motor, even when used for that purpose, would have to be subject to the tax.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: If that applies to these two items, does it not also apply to the articles mentioned in the previous paragraph, that is to say gas refrigerators? If the tax applies at the wholesale level or the manufacturer's level in the cases that have been referred to, I suggest that it applies in the same way all the way through. I do not see how you apply that in one case and not in another.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am told that that type of refrigerator is a clearly identifiable type of product made for trade purposes and not for household use.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: It goes into a great deal of detail. If what the minister says is true for that type of equipment it should be true for the other, and there should be some way of making an arrangement whereby people who buy these articles for purposes of production or as a means of making a living should be relieved of the tax. Administratively it would not be impossible. It might be slightly inconvenient but when you consider the inconvenience to which the public is put at the present time, I suggest that the government should share a little of it.

Mr. ABBOTT: The matter was given careful consideration and it was felt not to be practicable. The reasoning my hon. friend puts forward would apply with force to the low-priced automobile, which is used in a great many cases by doctors and others for professional purposes.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Going further down the list we find certain photographic supplies, slides, films, projectors and so on designed for industrial or professional photographer's use. There is another example where that type of equipment may be necessary for a person to make his livelihood and there is a possibility of creating a distinction between that which goes into professional use or industrial use and that which may be bought for sporting purposes. Sporting cameras and the cameras used by the public generally are different from those used by photographers in their trade.

Mr. ABBOTT: One of the principal reasons in this case for including these items is the fact that they have an exceedingly high import content, and we are anxious to discourage such imports as much as possible; and yet you cannot put under licence or quota the import of that sort of thing. It was not felt practicable to do it.

Mr. ROBINSON (Bruce): A small industry in Port Elgin known as Keystone, but which we consider one of our large industries, will be hit heavily by this measure. Will the minister keep in mind the fact that a great number of people depend on that industry in Port Elgin for their livelihood? At various times there is talk in the house about decentralization. Here is an excellent opportunity to practise decentralization in concrete form, by keeping such an industry as this functioning.

Its products consist mostly of brushes. I called it a small industry but I am probably wrong, because at one time it was recognized as one of the largest industries in the British commonwealth of nations. I understand that briefs have been presented to the minister which describe the situation better than I am able to do. This company manufactures low-priced as well as high-priced articles. Would it not be wise for the minister to consider raising the ante and getting it up a little higher? If you go out and buy a shaving brush, you do not get it in the 25 cent list. You might get for a dollar a shaving brush that would give you some satisfaction. The list of articles covered by this 25 per cent excise tax is such that it will hit the chap in the lower income brackets. If we could raise the ante a little it would not hit him as heavily. Another thing I should like to point out is that all the articles this concern produces are essential for health purposes. Once more I would ask the minister to consider raising the ante up from 25 cents to whatever he thinks would be worthy of consideration.

Mr. FRASER: I want to follow up what was said by the hon. member for Dauphin regarding outboard motors. These should be free of excise tax to those who will use them for professional purposes, such as guides, trappers and resort hotel owners. I am especially interested in this matter because of the fact that in my riding the outboard motors for the whole of Canada are made.

Mr. ABBOTT: Very fine motors too.

Mr. FRASER: Yes, they are fine motors.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have one.

Mr. FRASER: I am afraid that what will happen is that a United States tourist coming into Canada will bring his motor over here instead of buying it in Canada; and in many cases he will never take that motor back to the United States but will leave it here. I do not think the government has any way at all of checking on whether he leaves it here or not. I know that last year a United States citizen who had one of the best outboard engines in the world—it cost him over $340—lost it in one of the northern lakes in twenty-five feet of water. This year he is coming over with a motor to replace it. In October of last year there were imported into Canada from the United States over 2,000 outboard motors on which no tax will be paid. How many were brought in in November I do not know. I understand that in 1946 the total import was only about 900. Those outboard motors were brought in last year in an off season. These taxes—you might call them austerity program taxes or luxury taxes—are hindering business. We have another firm in Peterborough who are the largest manufacturers of clocks and watches in the British empire. At the present time they are turning out over 6,900 complete units per day. Those articles are subject to a 25 per cent tax—not under this resolution, but it is a tax that is hindering business. It is hindering the export business the same as this tax on outboard motors is hindering our export trade.

Mr. ABBOTT: The tax on clocks and watches, of course, is not proposed under this resolution.

Mr. FRASER: No. I mentioned that it does not come under this resolution; but it is hindering export trade the same as this tax is hindering the export trade of outboard motors today and will continue to do so. I am afraid that it will also have an adverse effect on labour. In fact it has had that effect already; lay-offs have taken place in these various firms. Consideration should be given to the suggestion of the hon. member for Dauphin that guides, resort owners and others who want outboard motors for professional use should be given them without taxes. All these motors are sold with a guarantee, the same as electrical appliances are sold. Every dealer has the name of the purchaser, and it would be a simple matter to have the dealer return the tax to him.

Mr. TIMMINS: At page 2043 of Hansard the minister is reported as stating that our United States dollar position had improved until at that particular time there was a reserve of approximately $527 million. Does that improvement reflect any repayment of loans that Canada had made or the repayment of any gold or anything of the kind?

Mr. ABBOTT: None whatever. It is strictly on current account.

Mr. TIMMINS: I should like to go back to this matter of dresserware. In his radio speech on November 17 the minister referred to a temporary restrictive program. I should like to read that paragraph, which is as follows:

> This means that we must develop a temporary restrictive program to meet the immediate emergency. This short-run emergency program consisting of measures designed to restrict our use of United States dollars includes sweeping restrictions on imports and on pleasure travel and the imposition of special excise taxes for the purpose of restricting the purchase of many of the durable kinds of consumer goods which are either imported or contain a significant import content.

The minister made it quite clear that this was temporary. The immediate effect of his saying that it was temporary was that, the next day and the day after, people who had given orders for dresserware immediately returned their goods to the manufacturer or wrote to the manufacturer cancelling their orders. That happened to a great number of people in the brush industry and in the dresserware industry. Still the measure is temporary. What is happening now is this. These goods have probably a seasonal sale. Orders are taken during the year and some time in the fall delivery is made. This year orders are not being placed. In other words it may be the minister's wish that there shall not be any sale of these goods, that there shall not be any manufacturing of these goods, and that there shall not be any money made in this industry but that some other industry shall get the benefit of that business. The fact of the matter is that because the minister says this is of a temporary nature this industry is stifled. I would like the minister to tell the house just how temporary this measure is and, further, just what is the explanation of the words "significant import content." Does that mean five per cent, ten per cent or what?

Mr. ABBOTT: As to the time question, Mr. Chairman, I cannot assume the role of a prophet in this matter. This phase of our dollar conservation program will be gotten rid of just as quickly as we can, consistent with the restoration of our reserves to what we believe is a safe level. As to the use of the word "significant", I have already dealt with the various reasons which prompted the use of this fiscal weapon. The United States content was one of those reasons. Perhaps I did not stress some of the others as much as I should have in my radio speech, but on several occasions during the course of this debate in committee I have emphasized the necessity of reducing the consumption even of articles which had almost no United States content.

Mr. TIMMINS: Then may I stop the minister there for a moment?

Mr. ABBOTT: Others may hold that this is wrong.

Mr. TIMMINS: What would be the benefit to Canada of putting a tax on an article which had almost no United States content?

Mr. ABBOTT: I must repeat that one of the objects of this program is to reduce the over-all Canadian consumption of all articles to a point where we are again producing more than we are consuming. We were in that position in 1946, when total Canadian production was two or three hundred million dollars in excess of what we were consuming and importing. In 1947 we caught right up with it, however, and consumed and imported just about what we produced. In other words, in order to continue to export four or five hundred million dollars worth of goods abroad we had to live on our fat; we had to dig into our reserves. Now our reserves have reached the point where we cannot do that, and we have to create again an over-all current account surplus if we are to continue to export on credit.

Mr. TIMMINS: But can we afford to dissipate what we have in the way of production in order to bring about this over-all picture the minister speaks of?

Mr. ABBOTT: It is not a question of dissipating what we have in the way of production. What we must do is consume a little less ourselves in order that we may lend it or give it to others who need it. The United States is in the fortunate position of having a large over-all current account surplus which enables it to export substantial quantities of goods to other countries on credit. We had that surplus up to the end of 1946. We do not have it now, and that is because our people are using up domestic consumption and imported articles at a rate which just about balances our total production. We do not want to slow down very much, but we have to pull in our belts just a little bit and, as I have said before, live within our own means and within the means of our customers.

Mr. TIMMINS: Then will the minister consider dropping this excise tax before he drops the conservation measure?

Mr. ABBOTT: I think it would be very improper for me to say which of these measures we should take off first. For what it may be worth, though, I can indicate that I would think this is one of the measures I would want to get rid of first.

Mr. ROBINSON (Bruce): I am sure the minister would not want to carry his austerity program to such a point that he would have us stop buying brushes necessary for personal hygiene. Would he consider raising the price ranges so the tax would apply only to brushes costing more than a certain figure? This would permit people in the lower income brackets to continue to buy these brushes.

If the minister would not consider this point would he tell us his reasons for not considering it?

Mr. LOCKHART: I want to associate myself with the remarks of the hon. member for Bruce. This has been the subject of a very great deal of criticism on the part of the man who wants to buy an article selling for perhaps $1 or $1.25. They indicate that prices have gone up to a certain extent as it is, and when you add this tax you add very materially to the cost of standard articles which I think the minister will agree are necessities rather than the luxury items he is trying to suggest.

Mr. ABBOTT: Hon. members will realize that I have had exactly the same representations they have received, and from the same sources. I listened to them as sympathetically as I could and went into the matter very carefully. I came to the conclusion that this tax should continue; that it was not going to ruin these particular types of business, as has been suggested. I came to the conclusion that in the very low ranges, this five, ten and fifteen cent stuff, it was quite improper that there should be any tax because it was impracticable. But it must be remembered that there has always been a tax on these articles when sold in sets, and now the tax is simply being extended to the articles when they are sold individually as brush, comb and mirror. For years these articles have been taxed when sold in sets.

Mr. JACKMAN: I believe the government should still give consideration to this excise tax. It depends entirely upon whose business is being ruined, upon whose ox is being gored, as the old saying goes, as to whether or not the tax seems reasonable. I was interested to see the minister and the government switch over from the argument that this excise tax was put on because if this were not done it would give an advantage to our own manufacturers as against our former sources of supply, namely across the border. Apparently that did not take any too well with the Canadian public, so the minister developed the argument, I think somewhat late in the debate, that it was necessary for the Canadian people to tighten their belts in order to restore the over-all surplus position which we had some years ago but which we lost last year.

I cannot believe, Mr. Chairman, that the government is serious, that it is sincere, that it is not endeavouring really to fool the members of this committee when it says the excise tax is placed on this very limited number of articles for the sole reason of causing Canadian consumption to decrease.

Mr. ABBOTT: I never said that was the sole purpose. It is one of several purposes.

Mr. JACKMAN: That is quite right, Mr. Chairman; the minister did not ascribe it all to that one purpose alone. He pretty well switched over from one of the original reasons for the imposition of the excise tax, because he admitted that he did not need the money, but said the tax was put on to keep the Canadian market open to the American exporter who formerly supplied it. Later in his argument, however, he developed the theory that Canadians had to consume less in order to create once more this over-all export surplus. Does any member of this committee think that because the people have to pay greater prices for a very limited number of articles, as set forth in the resolution, they will not spend on certain other things the money which would have gone for these articles? Probably the range of articles still open to them would be as one hundred is to one; that is, one is made more difficult to purchase because of the excise tax but ninety-nine other articles may still be purchased with that money. So I cannot believe the minister is serious when he says one of the reasons for the excise tax is to have Canadians consume less and thus have more to export. If he were serious about this matter surely he would do something to curtail the sale of goods generally. One knows that in recent months there has been a tremendous increase in instalment selling. There has been borrowing against life insurance policies for the first time in a good many years. People generally are finding that times are not as easy for them in many ways, and they are now using credit. If the government is sincere about limiting purchases by our Canadian people —and I do not think it is as necessary as the minister makes it—then there certainly are means which are a hundred times more effective than the specious argument he brings forward to justify this excise tax.

Canada, fortunately, has a good many small businesses. Many of them are producing lines which are not set forth in the list of goods in the resolution now before us. As some of my colleagues mentioned a minute ago, some of these businesses are going to be hard hit. Surely there are ways and means of accomplishing the minister's objective without making it so difficult for some of our smaller industries, some of which are almost the whole support of the towns in which they have their factories.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I wish to make one or two comments following what has been said by the hon. member for Rosedale. May I recall to the minister some of his remarks made earlier in the debate when he explained, as I recall it, reasons for making some of the changes made under section 1. He spoke of cases where he had found undue distress on businesses and where he thought there should be changes. One of the illustrations he gave was where the taxes were going to be used as a basis of calculation of duty by United States customs, and it was going to cut off Canadian export to the United States.

Coming back now more particularly to the distress cases, it seems to me we are still left with certain distress cases which have been dealt with and certain others which have not. I take it that as soon as this measure is passed this whole thing is crystallized and nothing more can be done. We will be left with those cases which have been brought up this afternoon, and no doubt others which have not been regarded as sufficiently distressful. I shall not labour the matter further; but with all deference, I say to the minister that although I know he cannot admit it, I really believe nothing but sinful pride, which I am sure all governments have, would prevent him from throwing the whole thing out the window.

I am sure this matter cannot be regarded as a saver of United States exchange. I doubt if the minister would say that. And when he comes to the other reason, the reason the hon. member for Rosedale has given, that of cutting down expenditures, while I accept that as a general argument, to apply it for all the articles selected for taxation in this measure seems largely to destroy the argument. I wish it were possible for the minister to leave this measure until he gets further evidence. I believe that whereas Bill No. 3 will produce certain results, this measure is just a frost and will produce nothing but trouble.

Mr. ABBOTT: We have considered all the cases in which real distress circumstances have been urged. I believe that businesses which might be seriously affected or practically put out of business have been taken care of. Perhaps the outstanding example is the piano business. It is not a large business in Canada, but for reasons which the committee will realize, a heavy tax like that would have serious effects. The other example was the small pleasure boats business. Those are the two outstanding cases.

In the bill which is to be founded on the resolution there is a provision that these taxes can be relaxed individually. It was felt that would be a desirable power to take in the bill, because of the reason for which the tax is being imposed. There should be that degree of flexibility. In other words the tax can be removed without waiting for a formal amendment to the act.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): That is both good and bad.

Mr. ROBINSON (Bruce): I asked a question which the minister did not answer, and which I shall have to ask again. From the point of view of health of those in lower income brackets, would the minister consider raising the exemption in the matter of prices on different articles? If he does not wish to, would he give the reason why?

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not think the health of anyone will suffer because of the imposition of this tax. Toothbrushes are exempt. Lower price combs and brushes are exempt. I do not know that anyone will be deterred from purchasing a nailbrush or any of these other brushes which he may require for health or hygienic reasons because of the imposition of the tax—at least, I would not think so. If I felt the health of the people of the country was going to suffer as a result of the tax, I do not believe I would put it on. But I do not believe their health will suffer.

Mr. TIMMINS: I wish to get back to that same point. There should be no tax on a comb up to twenty-five cents. Yet there may be a tax on a toothbrush which sells for fifty cents. That is quite apart from the hairbrush or the shaving brush which would sell for about $4. Why should there be a tax on these?

Mr. ABBOTT: Those things sell at five, ten or fifteen cents.

Mr. TIMMINS: Up to fifty cents.

Mr. ABBOTT: But this is under twenty-five cents. Representations were made to me by those who sold in gross lots. I have forgotten the details, because it was as least two months since they were here. But I listened to their representations and had those representations studied by officials of the department. I came to the conclusion that it was not commercially or practically sound to impose a 25 per cent tax on that type of goods—aside from soft drinks, of course—and that the minimum should start at twenty-five cents.

Mr. TIMMINS: But toothbrushes cost 50 cents.

Mr. ABBOTT: They are exempt altogether. They are not taxed at all.

Mr. KNOWLES: The question is on the first resolution as amended?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES: Not all six at once—just the first one.

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes, the first one.

Mr. KNOWLES: Will you put the yeas and nays, please?

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: On the first?

Mr. KNOWLES: Will you put the yeas and nays, please?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. GRAYDON: You do not carry it as easily as that.

Mr. FRASER: Don't wait too long.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has asked for the yeas and nays on the first resolution. All those in favour will say "yea".

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yea.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Those opposed will say "nay".

Some hon. MEMBERS: Nay.

Mr. ABBOTT: On division.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: In my opinion the yeas have it.

Resolution negatived: Yeas, 39; nays, 43.

Mr. KNOWLES: The resolution is lost.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The resolution is lost.

Clause 2 of the resolution as amended.

Mr. KNOWLES: What is the amendment to clause 2?

Mr. ABBOTT: There is no amendment to clause 2. I think I will move that we rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. GRAYDON: Vote on that.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have a word or two to say on this clause.

Mr. COLDWELL: What is the motion now before the committee?

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Clause 2.

Mr. COLDWELL: I understood the minister to move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am afraid I was a little precipitate. I was looking at the top of the resolution and I see it is one resolution, so under those circumstances I think the resolution must be put as a whole and we cannot put it in its individual sections. I had not glanced at it; I assumed that we were dealing with them one by one, but I see that in its terms it provides, as the ordinary budget resolution in ways and means provides:

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Excise Tax Act and to provide:

That is the resolution before the committee of ways and means, and there is only one resolution before the committee.

Mr. KNOWLES: On a point of order—

Mr. ABBOTT: I am really speaking on a point of order. This is a resolution which has to be introduced by a minister of the crown and I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that the only resolution which the committee can vote on is the resolution which is before the committee, and which includes six sections. I am sorry if I misled the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre when he asked, "Which are we voting on?" I frankly confess that I thought there were several resolutions, but I see there is only one.

Mr. KNOWLES: On a point of order, when there was proposed an amendment to the resolution which we have just defeated it was proposed as an amendment to resolution No. 1. I would also point out that it is "budget resolutions", in the plural; the budget resolutions to which the minister referred are always in the plural. The bill which is based on the budget resolutions is based on several resolutions. I suggest also that it is out of order to reflect on a vote of the committee. This committee has voted down resolution 1, and I submit that it is up to the government to find out what it is going to do.

Mr. ABBOTT: My hon. friend is not correct. It was moved that the resolution to amend the Excise Tax Act now before the house be amended as follows, and then were set out seven or eight sections. But there is only one resolution before the committee. In the case of the budget there are several resolutions. The budget procedure is, first, to offer a resolution that the house go into committee of ways and means to consider certain resolutions. That is the resolution on which there is a recorded vote of the house with the Speaker in the chair. It is then the government resolutions are considered one by one. I must confess that with my limited experience in the house I do not recall a standing vote on a budget resolution.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Oh, yes.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have to take exception to that. First, there is a resolution to go into committee of ways and means and then, when the appropriate bill is before the house it may have been voted down, but I do not recall.

Mr. GRAYDON: On a point of order, we have been following parliamentary procedure under the guidance of a competent and experienced chairman. The chairman has put to the vote of the committee the first resolution. We have voted upon that and those who have been supporting in committee the Minister of Finance suffered a defeat. That resolution has been voted down. The next thing that happened was the calling of the second resolution by the minister. No objection was taken before the vote. Then the minister moved that the committee rise and report progress. That motion is not debatable, although the minister was about to proceed to debate it. If the Chair is about to put the motion that this committee rise and report progress, that is a different matter, but certainly the minister cannot now—

Mr. ABBOTT: I said I think I perhaps should move; I did not put a formal motion.

Mr. GRAYDON: Perhaps my hearing was not as good as it normally is, but it is usually quite good and my understanding was that the minister was moving that motion. In any event it is too late now for the minister to cure the defeat; it cannot be done. He cannot reverse that position. I think the minister is now strictly out of order, because, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has said, he cannot reflect upon a previous vote of this committee or of the house.

Mr. KNOWLES: On a point of order, I submit, Mr. Chairman, that you should not permit this discussion. After the vote was taken you ruled that resolution No. 1 was lost. You proceeded to call for a vote on resolution No. 2. At that point the Minister of Finance made his motion that the committee rise and report progress. I submit that you should put to the committee either resolution No. 2 or the minister's motion to rise and report progress and that you should not permit us to discuss any further resolution No. 1 which has been voted down.

[Mr. Abbott.]

Mr. ABBOTT: I may have misled the committee, but in answer to a perfectly proper question by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre who asked, "Are there two resolutions here?" I said, "Yes." I spoke too quickly, because there is only one resolution before the committee. Nothing can cure that. There was only one resolution moved—I have forgotten now by whom, perhaps by myself or one of my colleagues. That is the resolution before the committee. There was an amendment to that resolution which carried earlier in the present sitting. The amendment to the resolution carried and the resolution now before the committee is the resolution as amended. I am merely making the point that the only resolution which it is competent for the committee to consider is the resolution which was regularly moved by one of my colleagues some three, four or five weeks ago.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): That is the one which was lost.

Mr. ABBOTT: It was not put; that is the point I am making; it was only one section.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, my point is simply that you have declared the resolution lost. Certainly you cannot make two bites of a cherry. Once you have made your declaration, that is final. Apparently the minister wants to do what the Minister of Trade and Commerce did on Friday evening—cut through the rules of parliament, cut through the proprieties of our procedure, cut through the rules of our constitutional government. I suggest that you have ruled, and that is final.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: If I may say a word for myself, my idea was not to put this only as one resolution. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre rose and requested that No. 1 be put. There was no objection raised. My personal opinion was that it should be put that way.

Mr. ABBOTT: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre asked if they were separate resolutions, and I said yes. But I was mistaken. There is only one resolution before the committee.

Mr. GRAYDON: Is there one law in parliament for the government and one law for the rest of us?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. GRAYDON: The reason I ask is this. We are being defeated here regularly on many questions and we have to take it, but now when the government are defeated on this question they are trying to find some other way of winning. We want to play according to the parliamentary rules. We abide by them and we ask the government to do the same.

Mr. KNOWLES: Further on the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I contend, as has been suggested on this side of the house, that we have before us six separate resolutions, and I refuse to budge from that position. But even if the position taken by the minister is correct, that this is just one resolution, I point out that it is certainly a complicated resolution and Bourinot's Parliamentary Procedure, fourth edition, at page 298 says:

As respects what are known as "complicated questions," they may always be divided into distinct parts . . .

You say, Mr. Chairman, that that is what I requested, a division into distinct parts, and certainly there was no objection to that. So it can be taken either way, and we are right. Either we have six separate resolutions and we are adopting them seriatim, or it is one complicated question which I asked to be divided into six parts, and no one objected; you, sir, put the question either on the first part of it or on the first resolution. Whichever way it goes, I submit that it has been defeated, and I submit that you said in the clearest language "The motion is lost".

Mr. ABBOTT: What is your ruling, Mr. Chairman? I take the stand that there is only one resolution.

Mr. COLDWELL: The Chairman has already ruled.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I suggest that we rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again. It is for the committee to decide. If you want the yeas and nays on that—

Mr. GRAYDON: They have lots of members opposite in now.

Mr. COLDWELL: The minister does not seem to wish to move the motion you suggested, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have raised the point that there is before the committee only one resolution on which we can vote, and I am taking the position that that is the motion which must be put. I do not know whether you have ruled, sir, on that or not.

Mr. KNOWLES: He said the motion was lost.

Mr. ABBOTT: Admittedly if we can vote on subsection 1 of this resolution the vote was against the passing of that subsection at that time; there is no doubt about that. But my point of order is that the resolution should be put as it was moved. I was mistaken when I said there was more than one resolution. There is not.

Mr. FERGUSON: The Liberal party's attitude is "heads we win, tails you lose".

Mr. COLDWELL: My hon. friend the member for Winnipeg North Centre has pointed out that this is a complicated resolution, if it is a resolution in the singular. If hon. members will look at it they will see that it is a complicated resolution containing many different things, and its very form, if it is a resolution, would suggest that it is more than one resolution. If you look at the way in which it is drafted there are, in my opinion, six different resolutions. Each one begins this way:

Effective on and after November 18, 1947, an excise tax of 25 per cent is imposed on the following goods.

Then No. 2 begins:

2. That on and after November 18, 1947, the rate of excise tax on automobiles . . .

No. 3 begins:

3. That on and after November 18, 1947, the rate of excise tax on phonographs . . .

No. 4 begins:

4. That on and after November 18, 1947, the rate of excise tax on cameras . . .

And so on for the whole six resolutions. I would say that there are six distinct and separate resolutions forming amendments to the act.

Mr. ABBOTT: The initial words of the resolution are:

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Excise Tax Act and to provide . . .

Mr. COLDWELL: A measure.

Mr. ABBOTT: No. To provide what follows.

Mr. COLDWELL: It says that it is expedient to introduce a measure, and whether that one measure is six or five or four resolutions, as the house may decide, all the resolutions will be incorporated in that measure. We have not that measure before us. We have the resolutions which will comprise that measure when it is introduced.

Mr. ABBOTT: The purpose of tax resolutions, as the committee knows, is to inform the house as to the nature of the amendments which it is intended to introduce to the taxing statutes or with regard to a new taxing statute. The taxing statute to be amended here happens to be the Excise Tax Act, and the resolution which I proposed seeks to amend the Excise Tax Act in certain respects set out here. But I suggest that there is only one resolution.

Mr. COLDWELL: But we decided to discuss it in six different parts and the first part was voted down.

Mr. ABBOTT: We have not only discussed it in six different parts, but we have covered the whole field and a lot more besides. We have discussed the automobile tax and the excise tax and all these other taxes.

Mr. KNOWLES: On the point of order which is now spinning out, it seems to me that there is a clear point on which the chairman should rule. Is it not true that I requested a vote on No. 1, whether it is the first part of a resolution, whether it is clause 1, or whether it is a resolution standing on its own feet? Is it not true that a vote was taken on the first resolution or on that first clause or whichever you call it? And is it not also true, Mr. Chairman, that you clearly said it was lost? In the light of that, is this discussion not out of order?

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Those in favour of No. 2 will say "yea".

Mr. ABBOTT: What are we voting on?

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: On No. 2.

Mr. ABBOTT: May I have a ruling on the point of order, Mr. Chairman? I raised the point of order that the only vote which can be taken in this committee is a vote on the resolution as moved, which covers other amendments to the Excise Tax Act as well as those contained in paragraph 1.

Mr. KNOWLES: Mr. Chairman, I submit that it is out of order to ask you to rule on that. That point of order could have been raised only when I asked for the vote. The minister has absolutely no right to reflect upon a vote of this house and to ask now whether it was in order for us to take that vote.

Mr. ABBOTT: It was a vote in committee.

Mr. KNOWLES: The committee is governed by the same rules as the house.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I think we should vote on resolution 2. Those in favour will please say "yea".

Mr. CASE: We have had no explanation of No. 2.

[Mr. Abbott.]

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: No. 2 reads:

2. That on and after November 18, 1947, the rate of excise tax on automobiles adapted or adaptable for passenger use with seating capacity for not more than ten persons each, imported into or manufactured or produced in Canada . . .

And so forth. Those in favour of No. 2 will say "yea".

Mr. ABBOTT: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, you may rule me out of order; you may say I am wrong, but I am making the point of order that we cannot vote on these sections independently, that there is only one resolution.

An hon. MEMBER: We have already voted.

Mr. TIMMINS: You have already put No. 2, Mr. Chairman. That ends No. 1 altogether.

Mr. GRAYDON: No. 2 has been called, so it is too late now. May I begin the discussion with respect to No. 2 and ask the minister if he will explain the purport of No. 2 resolution, so that we may have an opportunity of going on with the discussion in connection with it.

Mr. ABBOTT: Mr. Chairman, may I have your ruling as to whether we should vote on this resolution as put—

Mr. GRAYDON: Mr. Chairman, I respectfully suggest that we are on No. 2 and that we should now proceed with that discussion.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: If I have to make a ruling I shall have to rule that No. 1 has been voted on.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: We will call No. 2. Those in favour of No. 2 will say "yea".

Mr. GRAYDON: We have a right to discuss No. 2, Mr. Chairman, and I have entered upon the discussion of it by asking the minister to explain the purport of it.

Mr. ABBOTT: Do I understand your ruling to be this, Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. ABBOTT: I want to know. Do I understand your ruling to be that the resolution cannot be put as a whole and that we should now vote on No. 2, and, if that is carried or rejected, go on to No. 3? Is that your ruling?

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Yes.

Mr. ABBOTT: With the greatest respect, I must appeal your ruling, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order—

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: An appeal has been taken and I must report it.

Mr. BOUCHER: May I point out that the appeal was not taken until you had already called item 2. That being the case, we are through with the first item.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: There has been an appeal against my ruling and the appeal must be reported.

Mr. COLDWELL: Mr. Chairman, this ruling was appealed long after you had made your ruling, and as I understand the procedure of this house—

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. I must ask the hon. member and all hon. members to have no further discussion until this appeal is decided on.

Mr. COLDWELL: I am discussing the appeal; my point is that an appeal must be made at the time the ruling is given, and the ruling was given several times before the appeal was made. The appeal is out of order.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I would ask hon. members not to discuss the matter further.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: We have rights in this house.

Mr. KNOWLES: On a question of privilege—

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I want to say this, sir. When you made your ruling there was no question raised by the Minister of Finance in regard to the regularity of that ruling until he found out that he had lost; and then, having lost, he said, "Well, when I played that time, when I participated, and I lost, I was really just playing." I suggest, sir, that you have made your ruling. You went on to part 2, and to return now is to deny to parliament its rights and privileges.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The appeal against my ruling is in order and I would ask hon. members not to carry on further discussion. The appeal is against my ruling.

Mr. KNOWLES: Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of privilege. I submit that what is before the house is not a ruling at all. What is before the house is your statement as to the result of the vote, and a matter like that is not subject to appeal.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. member is quite in error. I ruled that this vote was in order. The Minister of Finance takes exception to that and he has appealed against my ruling.

Mr. COLDWELL: On a question of privilege, may I point out that not only did the Minister of Finance fail to challenge your ruling at the proper time, but you called and we began to discuss No. 2.

Mr. ABBOTT: I cannot agree with that.

Mr. GRAYDON: I take it we are going on with No. 2. I have already initiated the discussion and I should like to make some remarks in connection with it.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. I should not have to point out to the hon. member that the minister has appealed against my ruling and that we have to have that reported to the Speaker. I have to report that to the Speaker.

Mr. GRAYDON: Mr. Chairman, we should not have to have it pointed out to us either that, after the whole thing is decided, the minister can take his time as to when he wants to appeal on a thing of this kind. He should appeal at once or let it go.

Mr. ABBOTT: It was not a case of taking his time—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. ABBOTT: I was discussing the point and reiterating my point of order, and frankly I did not think, Mr. Chairman, that you had given a formal ruling on my point of order until I asked you what it was.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. ABBOTT: In fairness that is the case.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and the chairman of the committee made the following report:

The chairman ruled that the vote in the committee of ways and means on the first section of the resolution under consideration was in order. From that ruling Mr. Abbott appealed.

Mr. SPEAKER: Those in favour of confirming the chairman's ruling will please say "yea."

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yea.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I will not sit down.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: It is a well known rule that when the question is put for a division no member is allowed to speak.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: Those in favour of the ruling will please say "yea."

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yea.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Mr. Speaker, I challenge the correctness of the report that has been given to you.

Mr. SPEAKER: Those against will please say "nay."

Som hon. MEMBERS: Nay.

Mr. SPEAKER: In my opinion the "nays" have it. Call in the members.

The question before the house is an appeal from the ruling of the chairman of the committee of ways and means. The chairman ruled that the vote in the committee of ways and means on the first section of the resolution under consideration was in order. From that ruling Mr. Abbott appealed.

The house divided on the question: Shall the ruling of the chairman be confirmed? And the question was decided in the negative on the following division:

Mr. COCKERAM: Before you announce your ruling, Mr. Speaker, through a slip of the tongue, led by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley), you asked those who followed him to confirm the chairman's ruling.

Mr. SPEAKER: I declare the chairman's ruling not confirmed.

Mr. CARDIFF: I was paired. Had I voted, I would have voted to confirm the chairman's ruling.

Mr. MARQUIS: I was paired with the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Dorion). Had I voted, I would have voted against confirming the chairman's ruling.

Mr. ABBOTT: I was paired with the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Hackett). Had I voted, I would have voted against sustaining the chairman's ruling.

Mr. PROBE: I was paired with the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Marier). Had I voted I would have voted to confirm the chairman's ruling.

Mr. GARIEPY: I was paired with the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton (Mr. Hatfield). Had I voted, I would have voted against confirming the chairman's ruling.

Mr. BRACKEN: Out of courtesy to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), in his absence I did not vote. Had I voted, I would have voted to sustain the chairman's ruling.

Mr. LESAGE: I was paired with the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton).

Mr. MILLER: Out of courtesy to the Minister of Mines and Resources (Mr. Glen) I did not vote. Had I voted, I would have voted to sustain the chairman's ruling.

Mr. MALONEY: I was paired. Had I voted, I would have voted against the chairman's ruling.

(Translation):

Mr. GAGNON: I was paired with the hon. member for Parry Sound (Mr. McDonald). Had I voted, I would have voted for the ruling of the chairman.

(Text):

And the house having resumed in committee:

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the resolution as amended carry?

Mr. KNOWLES: No. I take it that you are now putting to the committee the entire six-point resolution, in the light of the vote that has just been taken?

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: That is right.

Mr. KNOWLES: That being so, I move in amendment, seconded by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Nicholson):

That clause 1 of the proposed resolution as amended and clauses 2, 3 and 4 be deleted from the proposed resolution.

Mr. COLDWELL: Before the amendment is put, I think a word should be said as to why it has been moved. These particular clauses are objectionable to us and, I think, to many other members of the opposition, because they impose a burden very largely upon people who cannot afford that burden at the present time.

After all, many of the appliances included in these four clauses are now the normal equipment of an ordinary household. They cannot be regarded as luxuries. In many parts of the country, including rural areas being electrified, these appliances are necessary for the benefit of health of the people living in such communities.

It is true that there may be some argument about some of the articles in these clauses. In the main, however, I would point out that they are articles of necessity. I am particularly interested in No. 4, because it deals with projectors required for the visual education of the people, a factor which becomes more and more apparent as days go by.

Therefore I support the amendment just moved. I believe that it is in order, and that we should vote for it.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Chairman, before the question is put, I wish to state my position regarding this kind of taxation. How many times have I complained about financial advisers of the government, without receiving any support at all? I am not surprised to hear complaints about this legislation. How many times, when I have asked that the deputy minister of finance be fired, have I been rebuked? I have been rebuked each time. Unless he is fired, and unless that great expert on taxation, Hector So-and-so, is fired, and unless the minister changes his staff, we shall always have difficulty with regard to taxation.

Mr. KUHL: The government is responsible.

Mr. POULIOT: The members are responsible, because they do not support me when I ask that these men be fired. The hon. member, the tallest of all of us, is ready to support them. Why does he not come with me and say, "Pouliot, you are right on this. Those men should be fired." Then we shall have sensible representation, which would be in accordance with the British North America Act.

Mr. KUHL: I am not supporting them.

Mr. POULIOT: The hon. member is antagonistic toward this legislation; but, on the other hand, he is ready to swallow what is said by the experts who have suggested it to the government. He is illogical. I have established many times—perhaps a thousand times—that the hon. member has been illogical. I cannot understand why he was elected in his constituency.

I make the urgent request to the Minister of Finance to get rid of all the nonentities in his department, starting with his deputy minister. I may be rebuked by him today, but I shall repeat my request immediately afterwards. I refer to that man who has been the downfall of a respectable and reputable institution in the United States, who was put in a key position by Bennett, and who is not qualified to be adviser to the Minister of Finance. Throw all the Tories out of the Department of Finance; we want more Liberals there, to have a liberal policy in taxation.

At the request of the hon. member for Quebec South, who was organizer of the Liberal party in 1935 in Quebec, I made a list of the taxation imposed by Bennett each year, and it was used as propaganda during the election. Here is a copy of that leaflet which was distributed through the country. I was responsible for it. And if any member will take the trouble to read Hansard of 1935 he will see that list of taxation which I computed and put on record.

The Prime Minister said in February of 1935, "We have understood the necessity for reducing taxation." And then, I see in the pamphlet, "To reduce the burden of taxation, vote Liberal." I prepared that conscientiously, because I wanted taxation to be reduced.

Now we have more taxation. I do not put the blame upon the minister. He is a likeable chap, but he suffers from the bad companionship of those wizards in the Department of Finance. Let us get rid of them. Who in this committee will say I am wrong when I denounce them?

I am sorry we have come to this amount of taxation.

Mr. GILLIS: Would the hon. member put that list on record again?

Mr. POULIOT: It is already on Hansard. If the hon. member will follow the example set by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and begin to read my speeches, he will find many good things in them.

It is past history, of course; but it is there. Let me say this to hon. members: They complain about taxation now, but when gifts to all countries of the world and the financing of the British empire were the subject of debate in the house, they were all for it. No one was against it. There were only a few of us who protested against that nefarious financial policy.

Let me repeat what I said about the deputy minister of finance—and I am extremely glad he is not here today. He used to come here to adorn the House of Commons by his presence; but he is not here today, and it is a good thing he is not. He should not be in the department, either. Why? Because by his crazy investments he caused the downfall of the Strauss Corporation, a reputable institution in New York. He was the treasurer of the Strauss Investment Corporation. He made crazy investments; he had a bad background, but he was taken in because he flattered the vanity of the late Lord Bennett. He told Mr. Bennett that he should receive honorary degrees from all the universities on the North American continent. We have to stand for it, and the poor man, the underdog, has to pay taxes on account of it.

Let us get rid of these people. Let us get rid of Clark. Let us get rid of Towers. Let us get rid of Rasminsky. Let us get rid of Donald Gordon. Let us get rid of all these fake wizards, and then we shall have sensible taxation and the people of this country will be able to carry on without too much difficulty.

I am sorry to have been obliged to say this, but I suffered much when I thought of it and when I thought of the poor people who are suffering because of the stupidity of these so-called wizards who would not be tolerated as advisers in any other government. I am fed up with them.

Mr. MacINNIS: I should think the Minister of Finance would say something in protection of his financial advisers. Either there is some foundation for what the hon. member for Temiscouata has said or the minister does not consider it worth a reply.

Mr. ABBOTT: My hon. friend got to his feet so quickly that I did not have a chance. I shall have something to say.

Mr. MacINNIS: The chairman was on his feet before I rose, so that the minister has no excuse. I insist that the hon. member for Temiscouata is engaging in idle talk. Even if the minister has stupid advisers, he is not compelled to take their advice. He must always assume responsibility in this house. Anything that is brought here we understand comes from the minister. He takes the responsibility, and for that reason I do not believe either the committee or the advisers of the minister should have to take the sort of thing that they have to take daily from the hon. member for Temiscouata.

While I am on my feet, I think I should say something about this resolution, particularly about paragraph (c) of resolution 1 which deals with electrical or gas refrigerators. I am satisfied that not only on this side but on the government side and throughout the country there is tremendous opposition against the tax on these articles. If this amendment does not carry I suggest to the minister that, even at this late date, he should undertake to remove this item from the resolution. I have received a great number of letters—I suppose other hon. members have as well—protesting against these excise taxes in general, but nearly every letter received from business firms and individuals emphasized this particular item. I suggest again that, if this amendment does not carry, the minister remove this item from the resolution.

Mr. ABBOTT: The hon. member for Vancouver East has said that I should defend the officials of my department. I think my attitude with respect to attacks in this house on civil servants is pretty well known. I have had occasion to voice it a number of times. I know that the hon. member for Temiscouata holds very strong views about the civil service. I know that he holds strong views about the ones he has mentioned today, and he has voiced those views before. There is nothing I can add other than to say that I have complete confidence in my officials and I do not agree in any respect with what he said concerning their ability.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I wish to say a word in support of this suggested amendment and I want to expand somewhat the remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver East. There are a great many people across this country who have protested with respect to paragraph (c) of resolution 1. I do not think I can do better than to read a portion of a letter I received in today's mail. It is true that I referred to refrigerators some time ago in this debate, but I should like to quote from this letter as follows:

> Regarding the new 25 per cent excise as it applies to electric refrigerators. This tax is in my mind one of the most ridiculous things that we as appliance dealers have had to contend with.
> I make this protest, first as an appliance dealer serving a rural area of over 5,000 people and secondly as president of the Manitoba radio and appliance dealers' association, representing over 300 radio and appliance dealers in this province.
>
> There is no doubt about it that an electric refrigerator is no longer a luxury. The high cost of perishable foods such as meat, milk, butter and eggs makes it imperative that the average income group has a safe and sure method of food preservation. This tax is not affecting the higher income bracket family. The young veteran and his family who are trying to set up a new home and make his re-establishment credit go as far as possible is the one that is taking the beating.
>
> If the tax was imposed to depress the sale of major electrical appliances it is certainly not doing it as far as the farming areas are concerned. A few dollars tax is not going to stop the people in the farm areas from having the conveniences that they have been waiting so many years for. As I suggested above, the tax is not achieving its purpose and at the same time is creating many hardships. The component parts of refrigerators that have to be imported from the United States represent a very small portion of the finished product. The saving in United States dollars from this source must be small.
>
> There is a good deal of confusion as to the collecting of the tax inasmuch as it applies to hospitals and public institutions. I am enclosing a copy of a letter which we wrote to the Canadian Westinghouse Company Limited and which is self-explanatory. I would appreciate it very much if you would take this matter up with the department of customs and excise and get a clear cut ruling on the matter of rebate of the 25 per cent excise tax when an article is purchased for use in a community owned hospital.
>
> Our national organization of radio and appliance dealers is exerting a great deal of pressure on the government to have this tax taken off refrigerators. Any assistance you can give us in the house will be much appreciated.
>
> Mr. Abbott has made the statement to our committee in the east that it is politically impossible for him to retract now. This seems like a pretty weak excuse.

Mr. ABBOTT: I did not make any such statement.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): That is what he has been informed. That is the situation today. I think that letter is based upon the real facts which exist in this country. People with average incomes are finding it difficult to purchase some of the essentials of life for members of their families, especially when there are young children. A refrigerator is an essential article. It is necessary to preserve food and there is nothing luxurious about it. It is one of the most essential articles required by families in the low and average income groups. Why the government should undertake to impose such a tax at this time on people in the low-income group is certainly more than I or any of these people on low incomes can understand. The government are distinctly wrong, and if the amendment should fail to carry I appeal to the minister and the government as strongly as I can to exempt refrigerators from this tax.

Mr. MANROSS: I wish to say a word about this tax on refrigerators. The minister told us that one of the purposes of this tax was to curtail consumption. It was suggested by the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario and the hon. member for Moose Jaw that production and consumption could have been curtailed by rationing United States dollars to these manufacturers just as was done with the automobile industry. The minister replied to the effect that there was a lot of domestic material content in these refrigerators, such as copper and steel, which would be available for export if not used in the manufacture of refrigerators. But the refrigerator manufacturers in Canada, I would point out, have established the Canadian content over a period of years and drawbacks are provided for exports, so that the department knows exactly how much of United States content there would be in each model of refrigerator the manufacturer makes. Furthermore, the manufacturer would not use any more copper or steel, because what they import from the United States is the heart, which consists of the compressor and thermostatic expansion valve. You cannot build a refrigerator without these component parts, and that is what they are bringing in from the United States. So that if dollars were rationed on the basis of past imports they could build only as many refrigerators as they bring in component parts for.

Another thing about curtailing consumption is that you are curtailing consumption of the wrong people. The rich people are not concerned about paying $25 or $38 more for a refrigerator if they want one. They buy the more expensive models, ten or eleven cubic feet, and they cannot get them now. What this tax is doing is penalizing the veterans and the young couples who are starting up housekeeping and need a refrigerator. This tax makes them pay 25 per cent more for it. The minister said: They will save their money in the meantime and buy a refrigerator when the tax comes off. But they cannot save their money, because they have to have that refrigerator this summer. Many veterans' homes have no cellars and many ice companies will not take on any more customers. There was a shortage of ice last year and, no doubt, will be again this year, because the natural ice went out before the ice companies had finished their cut. I do not believe the tax will do anything to curtail the consumption of the rich people, but it does hit the veteran and the newly married couple. Furthermore, it puts members on both sides of the house, particularly on the government side, in an embarrassing position. I hope the government will not get the support of its members for this tax, but, if it does, what will that member say to the veteran whom he is taxing 25 per cent more on his refrigerator? The veteran will be getting literature from his branch of the legion showing that his member voted for this tax.

If we vote for this tax we are breaking our pledge to the boys who went overseas and fought overseas. It is like saying to them: You were over there fighting for us and we gave you a nice brochure saying for $13.42 a month you get all this and a nice sum of money when these goods were tax-free; but now you are through school, have a wartime house perhaps, the war is over, and you can pay the tax just like anybody else, and so the veteran is hooked for the 25 per cent tax that he should not be asked to pay. For these reasons I am supporting the amendment.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have had an opportunity of considering the amendment moved by the hon. member for Lake Centre, and I must take the position, Mr. Chairman, that it is not in order. I have had occasion to raise a similar point before on amendments moved in committee of ways and means. For your consideration, sir, I cite May's Parliamentary Practice, thirteenth edition, where at page 544 I find this:

> Proposals for the variation or modification of taxation can therefore be made in the committee: but these proposals must be grafted upon the financial scheme submitted by the government, and must not affect the balance of ways and means voted for the service of the year. Amendments, therefore, can be proposed to substitute another tax, of equivalent amount, for that proposed by the government, as, for instance, a proposal to substitute probate and legacy duty on real property as an alternative for an inhabited house duty; the necessity of new taxation, to that extent, being already declared on behalf of the crown.

I submit that the amendment would affect the balance of ways and means and, therefore, is out of order when submitted by a private member.

Mr. KNOWLES: I wish to speak to the point of order and perhaps, Mr. Chairman, you would recognize that it is six o'clock.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. MANROSS: I was almost through when the committee rose at six o'clock. Discussing the curtailment of consumption and referring to electric refrigeration, I had said that if this had been put on the dollar basis it would have effected the end aimed at just as effectively as by means of the 25 per cent tax. We have been argued out of that position. Nevertheless the department has apparently decided to put manufacturers of electrical refrigeration on the dollar quota basis. That is the way in which it proposes to work. If that is to be done in order to cut down production and consumption, I see no necessity for the 25 per cent tax for this purpose, in view of the fact that it deprives those who most need it of consumption in this form.

Mr. KNOWLES: Mr. Chairman, just before the committee rose at six o'clock the Minister of Finance had raised a point of order with respect to the amendment which I had moved a little earlier. I may remind the committee that my amendment was a very simple one. It merely asked that clauses 1, 2, 3 and 4 of what is now perforce regarded as one resolution be deleted. The Minister of Finance, as I say, raised a point of order with respect to this amendment. I intend to answer the argument put forth by the Minister of Finance on his own ground, namely, by quoting from May and other authorities; but before I do so, may I point out to the committee and to you yourself, sir, the utterly impossible position in which the government is putting this house by the course now being pursued by the Minister of Finance.

This afternoon we took the position that we had before us six separate resolutions. On the basis of that position we contended that we had the right to vote on those six separate resolutions as six separate propositions; in other words, that we had the right to accept some and reject others. The minister argued against that position, after resolution No. 1 had been defeated on a free vote, and contended that what we had was not six separate resolutions but just one resolution. I immediately did what seemed to be the only course left to us, by moving the amendment now before the committee.

The minister now contends that my amendment to delete the clauses we object to is out of order. In other words, it is a case of the government saying that the opposition simply cannot have an opportunity to vote on these individual propositions either one way or the other.

I contend that the government has a pretty serious responsibility resting on it by following this course and by raising points of order of this kind. I felt, however, from the attitude of the Minister of Finance, and from things I thought I heard him say, although he did not rise from his seat to say them when I moved my amendment, that he was satisfied with this procedure. It seemed to me he felt that here was a chance to vote on the question whether or not we accept or reject the first four parts of his resolution. We are told now that we cannot have that opportunity, that we have either to take as a whole or to reject as a whole these six different propositions.

I submit that such a procedure is entirely contrary to the spirit of the citation which I read this afternoon from Bourinot, and which is in the other authorities as well, namely, that it is always proper to ask for a division of a complicated question into its distinctive and constituent parts. Therefore I am sorry, in the name of parliamentary democracy, that the minister has taken this position, in view of the place in which it puts the opposition in this free parliament.

But, Mr. Chairman, the minister has chosen to cite from page 544 of May, thirteenth edition, reading part of the paragraph, and contending, on the basis of a part of that paragraph, that my amendment is out of order. The part he read from page 544 was as follows:

> Proposals for the variation or modification of taxation can therefore be made in the committee; but these proposals must be grafted upon the financial scheme submitted by the government, and must not affect the balance of ways and means voted for the service of the year.

I forget whether he read the rest of the paragraph or not.

Mr. ABBOTT: I went right on.

Mr. KNOWLES: Fine; I shall do the same. However, after that I wish to come back and point out the part he failed to read. It goes on:

> Amendments, therefore, can be proposed to substitute another tax, of equivalent amount, for that proposed by the government, as, for instance, a proposal to substitute probate and legacy duty on real property as an alternative for an inhabited house duty; the necessity of new taxation to that extent, being already declared on behalf of the crown.

Now I point out that in that same paragraph there is this first sentence which the minister neglected to read:

> Though it is the function of the committee of ways and means to impose rather than to repeal taxes, examples of the repeal of taxation effected in this committee are to be found upon the journals.

There is a footnote at the bottom of the page, which gives a list of a number of cases where the repeal of taxes has been effected in the committee of the whole.

Now, Mr. Chairman, and this is the crucial part of my argument, it seems to me that the feature about the citation which the minister quoted and which has not been noted is this. The paragraph as a whole is dealing with two separate things. In the first sentence it deals with the right to repeal certain taxes, the right to get rid of certain taxes altogether. That is a very brief sentence without any provisory qualification added to it. In the second place this paragraph deals, not with repealing or wiping out a tax altogether, but with varying or modifying a tax that has been proposed by the government; and the part of the paragraph which the minister read says that when you try to do that, and only when you try to do that, you must stay within the general framework of the government's balance of ways and means. The paragraph goes on to give the reason why the committee must do that. This must be done so as to carry out the general instruction that any money measure must in the first instance have had the recommendation of the crown.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that that citation which the minister read, and which has often been brought out in this house as a reason why the opposition cannot move any amendment in committee of ways and means, has been completely misinterpreted. It is not a citation which says that no changes can be made in committee of ways and means. It simply says that if you are trying to vary or modify a tax proposal, you must stay within the general framework of the government's proposal. Again I say that paragraph deals with two things. It deals with what you must do if you are seeking to vary or modify a government tax proposal, but it also permits the complete repeal of a tax proposed by the government, and to this permission no proviso is attached. The Minister of Finance read from only one page in May, thirteenth edition. May I ask him to turn to certain other pages. I ask him to turn to page 560 of the same volume, which reads:

> Proposals to reduce a burthen upon the people may be made in the house or in committee, no special form of procedure being prescribed for such a motion . . .

The paragraph goes on to say that this may also be done in connection with the introduction of bills which are strictly confined to the reduction of a tax or charge upon the people. Then the paragraph continues:

> It follows that amendments for the reduction of such charges, as taxes, rates, salaries, tolls and penalties, can be moved when a bill is considered upon report—

Perhaps I had better go on. I referred to the minister's not reading the whole of a paragraph. This had better be put on the record too. The paragraph continues:

> —and this has been permitted even when, by indirect effect, an amendment created a certain amount of charge. For instance, it was held allowable, upon this stage, to strike out an exemption from a tax, which had been agreed to by the committee on the bill; and also to omit a clause imposing a charge upon the ratepayers, although the omission of the clause left other parties, already liable by law, still chargeable with certain expenses.

[Mr. Knowles.]

So in that paragraph on page 560, the tone of which is clearly set out in the first sentence, that it is always competent for a committee to reduce a burden upon the people, is a specific list of things which it is possible to repeal; taxes, rates, salaries, tolls and penalties. What we are seeking to do in this amendment is not to vary or modify a tax, as is set out in the citation quoted by the Minister of Finance. We are seeking to get rid of one altogether. If hon. members will turn again to page 519 of May, thirteenth edition, pages 518 and 519, they will find this interesting paragraph. This paragraph follows a section that has dealt with the necessity of having the royal recommendation in connection with any bill that will involve the expenditure of money or the imposition of a burden. Note this paragraph:

> It follows, as a matter of course,—

And this is fundamental to British parliamentary practice having to do with the imposition of taxes.

> —that a motion to alleviate the burthens upon the people is not within the scope of the standing orders relating to the imposition of charges upon the people.

In other words, a motion to alleviate a burden is not governed by the standing orders that have to do with expenditures and taxes, which require the royal recommendation. The paragraph continues:

> A bill for diminishing or repealing a tax or other public burthen, unless the imposition of a new tax is proposed by way of substitution, is introduced without the royal recommendation or preliminary committee stage.

That again is very clear. I pick up now another book, and this time it is Bourinot, fourth edition, in which there is a long list of things that can and cannot be done in committee of the whole with respect to taxes. Finally, at the end of the paragraph that appears on pages 431 and 432 there is this clear-cut sentence:

> A proposition for the repeal of a duty is in order, and cases will be found where a proposed duty has been struck out in committee.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that that citation fits exactly the terms of my amendment. My amendment is a proposition to strike out in committee a proposed duty. I have left that one to the last because it is so clear; but actually in terms of the theory of parliamentary procedure I feel that the citations I have quoted from May are more to the point, and I hope that they will have cleared up this confusion about the citation which the Minister of Finance read. Clearly that citation would apply if my amendment were an attempt to modify or vary a tax imposed by the government. If I were seeking to do that, I would either have to show that I had the governor general's approval, or I would have to show that it was within the framework of the government's balance of ways and means. But that is not what I am seeking to do. I am not trying to modify or vary a tax at all. I am asking this committee to exercise the fundamental right that has adhered to parliament down through the ages, and that is to relieve a burden placed upon the people. I am asking that certain items of taxation be struck out altogether, and I submit that my amendment is clearly in order.

Mr. ABBOTT: I congratulate my hon. friend on the able and clear way in which he has presented so convincingly a completely fallacious proposition. If he were a member of my own profession, I would be inclined to make him an offer. This resolution which contains six subsections—four of which ask authority to impose taxes and two of which ask authority to take taxes off—must, I submit, be treated as a whole. The last two paragraphs, which the proposed amendment would leave in, remove the sales tax on electricity and gas used in dwellings and remove the excise tax of one cent a pound on sugar and similar products. The effect of the taxes which are removed would, it is estimated, be something of the order of $21,000,000 for a full year. It has not been possible to estimate the yield of the taxes which it is proposed should be put on. But I suggest that if you eliminate the proposed new taxes and leave in the taxes which it is proposed should be removed, it clearly affects, to use May's terminology, the balance of ways and means voted for the service for the year. I do not think that can be successfully contradicted. This point of order has been made before in connection with budget resolutions and, according to my recollection, has been sustained, and I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that it is well taken.

Mr. KNOWLES: I shall not say anything about the introductory sentence which the Minister of Finance has just now used lest I get myself into trouble. But I am satisfied that many members of the committee will admit that the argument I put forward was by no means fallacious. It was too strong for the minister to answer.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is fair enough.

Mr. GRAYDON: It sounded that way.

Mr. KNOWLES: I point out that the minister has completely failed to meet the point I was making, namely, that the proviso he keeps coming back to relates, as May clearly points out, only to an attempt to vary a particular tax. That same paragraph makes it clear that the committee has the right to do other things, such as get rid of a tax altogether. I am now going to read the whole of the paragraph from which I quoted in Bourinot, on pages 431 and 432. This paragraph includes more than the subject with which we are dealing, but I think it well to read it all to get a bird's-eye view of this whole proposition.

> All the authorities go to show that, when the government have formally submitted to the house the question for the revision of customs and excise duties—

Which is what we have before us now.

> —it is competent for a member "to propose in committee to substitute another tax of equivalent amount for that proposed by ministers, the necessity of new taxation to a given extent being declared on behalf of the crown."

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. KNOWLES: That is one thing that can be done. Changes can be made within the framework of the scheme that has been approved by the crown.

> It is also competent for any member to propose another scheme of taxation for the same purpose, as a substitute for the government plan. But it is not regular to propose a new and distinct tax, which is not a mere increase or diminution of a duty upon an article already recommended by the government for taxation, though it is the function of this committee to impose rather than to repeal taxes.

Then comes the last sentence; and the reason I have read the whole paragraph is to get it clearly in the mind of the committee that this rule sets out several different propositions.

> A proposition for the repeal of a duty is in order, and cases will be found where a proposed duty has been struck out in committee.

My whole argument turns on this, Mr Chairman, that there are at least two different things set out by these rules which it is competent for the committee of the whole to do. One is to make variations or modifications. When the committee tries to do that it has to follow the proviso or qualification the minister has quoted. The other is to strike out a tax altogether; and when the committee seeks to strike out a tax, neither in May nor in Bourinot is there any such proviso or qualification as that quoted by the minister. The minister is trying to take a qualification that applies to one procedure and attach it to another. I submit that not only is that an invalid way of arguing, but that we have had a little too much of it in this house.

Mr. POULIOT: I enjoy very much listening to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre; that is why I did not rise earlier to call him to order. The situation is obvious. When the resolution was before the committee, Mr. Chairman, you decided that it should be considered paragraph by paragraph. Then an appeal was taken to the Chair. The ruling of the Chair was that the resolution should be taken as a whole, and that ruling has been supported by a majority of the house. Therefore the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is just a criticism of the ruling of the Chair. As a result it is clearly out of order. It is a defiance of the ruling of the Chair. Mr. Speaker gave his ruling and declared that the resolution should be considered as a whole, not according to its several parts. That ruling was given support by a majority of the house. Then, after all that, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre tries to educate us as to what should have been done. It is done. It is like arguing about spilled milk. It is finished. How can he come before you and ask that you act in the opposite way to the decision of the Chair? I cannot conceive it. For me the thing is as clear as crystal water. There is no doubt about it; and when the hon. gentleman thinks the matter over he will realize that. What has Bourinot to do with it? What has May to do with it?

Mr. KNOWLES: Ask the Minister of Finance.

Mr. POULIOT: There is a paramount principle that the majority rules, and the majority has decided to sustain the ruling of Mr. Speaker. Therefore the house is bound by that, and we cannot resort to this committee to change it. The committee has to act in accordance with the orders it receives from the house; and the ruling of Mr. Speaker, supported by the house, binds the committee now. I repeat, therefore, that the amendment of the hon. gentleman is absolutely out of order.

Mr. IRVINE: The chairman's ruling was voted down, you know.

Mr. POULIOT: I mean the Speaker's ruling.

Mr. KNOWLES: The Speaker did not rule at all.

Mr. POULIOT: The Speaker's ruling was supported.

Mr. MacINNIS: Evidently the hon. member was not in the house when the vote took place; otherwise with his usual acuteness he would have known what happened. The chairman gave a ruling; the Minister of Finance appealed that ruling, and my hon. friends on the government side voted against sustaining the chairman's ruling. Consequently we now have what the Minister of Finance wanted; we have one motion instead of six, and that motion is amendable.

Mr. MacNICOL: Now that the whole resolution is back before the Chair—

Mr. ABBOTT: And an amendment.

Mr. MacNICOL: I am not speaking to the amendment—

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: There is a point of order before the Chair and I should like to give my ruling now, because I do not think there is any point in further discussing it. At the outset of his speech the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre referred to the minister as wanting certain things, but I should like to remind him that the house itself decided that this should be submitted as one resolution. In regard to the other points the hon. gentleman raised, I think I should read Beauchesne, third edition, page 182, citation 500:

> Though it is the function of the committee of ways and means to impose rather than to repeal taxes, examples of the repeal of taxation effected in this committee are to be found upon the journals.

And I should like hon. members to notice this:

> Proposals for the variation or modification of taxation can therefore be made in the committee; but these proposals must be grafted upon the financial scheme submitted by the government, and must not affect the balance of ways and means voted for the service of the year. Amendments, therefore, can be proposed to substitute another tax, of equivalent amount, for that proposed by the government, as, for instance, a proposal to substitute probate and legacy duty on real property as an alternative for an inhabited house duty, the necessity of new taxation, to that extent, being already declared on behalf of the crown.

I followed the hon. member very closely. In his amendment he certainly does not propose any way of raising any tax of any sort. In view of citation 500 to which I have referred, I rule that the point of order raised by the minister is a proper one, and that the amendment is out of order.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): It seems to me that what is suggested here is nothing more or less than what is done every day when we are dealing with estimates. The amendment offered by the hon. member is not a substitution of another tax. It is not a suggestion of any increase. In fact, according to the minister, this is not a tax.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order; the ruling is not debatable. I have listened to the arguments for and against. Every hon. member who wished to do so had an opportunity to present his argument, if he believed the amendment was in order. I have given my ruling, and I believe it is a correct one because it has been given many times. I would hope, therefore, that the committee would not waste any further time on it and would deal with the resolution. Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. MacNICOL: Mr. Chairman, since the resolution has not yet carried, and since it is all before the committee, there are one or two observations I should like to make. My first remarks will be about paragraph (b) of section 1, and then I shall speak about section 2. I would refer, first, to electrical items, and then to motorcars.

A few days ago there was a discussion in the house as to how the Minister of Finance could return excise taxes once they had been paid in. Today I received a letter from the Canadian Association of Radio and Appliance Dealers, which might be of some assistance to the minister in connection with the returning of the tax, if later on it were decided to have that done.

This letter is addressed to myself and reads thus:

> We notice in the press that the 25 per cent excise tax on electrical appliances is being discussed in the house and, particularly, the feasibility of returning the tax moneys already collected to the consumers.
> The Canadian Association of Radio and Appliance Dealers has discussed this matter with many of its members and with other branches of the electrical industry, and we stand ready to assist the government in carrying out a reversal of the procedure by which this tax was collected.

I might say that this association is using good judgment in offering to assist the government. The letter continues:

> For example, for guarantee purposes our members are forced to record the name and address of each electric refrigerator purchaser (they have a five-year guarantee). Therefore, there would be no problem in having cheques mailed to each of these purchasers for the amount of the tax. In addition, this association is prepared to go further and by national coverage in the press invite consumers to apply to their retailer for the rebate.
> This association stands ready to facilitate the removal of this tax which in the eyes of the young couples and veterans who enter our stores seems to be an unnecessary burden.

I thought perhaps the minister would like to have this letter on Hansard. If he decides to return the tax later on, then he will know this association is ready to assist his department.

I agree with all that has been said by hon. members on this side of the house, although I am not so sure about those on the other side. I have no doubt there are just as many hon. members on the other side who would like to speak about the tax on radios and electrical appliances. But of course party followers just cannot do that.

Mr. GRAYDON: Might we have a little bit of order over there? It is not fair to the hon. member who is speaking.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. MacNICOL: I know how hard it is to keep from talking. However it does not bother me at all; I can go ahead and say what I have to say.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. I would ask hon. members to refrain from talking when an hon. member is trying to make himself heard.

Mr. MacNICOL: I had just said that I am sure there are as many members on the government side as there are on this side who would like to comment about these taxes. I am sure the minister has had many conferences with his followers; but it is difficult for a government supporter to speak as freely as we on this side can speak. We are not tied down as are members on the government side of the house. I was on that side myself for five years, and it used to irk me to sit over there and say nothing, and not be invited to say anything.

I had just said that I agree with what has been said on this side of the house about the tax on refrigerators and other electrical appliances. It is going to be a great burden.

I should like to ask if the minister surveyed other ways in which he could have conserved all the money he required to conserve. I have in my mind just one item; and I believe I may make reference to it without being out of order. Last year we imported coal to a value of almost $150 million, and paid United States railroads about $75,000,000 to haul that coal to our border. That made a total of $225 million in United States money we could have conserved if we could have purchased that coal in Canada. I am not going to say we could have purchased all of it, but certainly we could have purchased a large part of it.

I have often wondered why ministers of finance—and I am not asking only the present one—have not been able to tell us why they are not allowed to arrange things so that Canadians can use their own products. Had we used our coal, we would have saved a great amount of these iniquitous taxes. Perhaps that is not the right word to use; but they are iniquitous so far as the people who have to pay them are concerned. And it would have saved the minister a good deal of trouble in these troublesome times.

Then, may I say that motorcars are no longer luxuries to workingmen. For years governments have been encouraging working men to live outside the cities and to buy perhaps five acres or one acre of land. These workers have been encouraged to live within ten or fifteen miles of the cities, and thousands of them have accepted that suggestion. In those days there was no trouble about securing motorcars.

Look at the position they are in today. When I go home a multitude of workingmen come to see me and ask me how in the world they can buy new cars. Their cars are worn out, and they cannot pay the 25 per cent excise tax. They ask me what they are going to do, and state that they have been put out of the cities and they do not know how they will get to the cities to do their work.

The same applies to rural schoolteachers who live in towns throughout Ontario and drive out to the rural schools from those towns. I had one come to see me when I was home on the last occasion. He was wondering how he was going to buy a car, in view of the 25 per cent tax.

The same applies to the ordinary clergyman who has two or three field charges. I have had communications from them asking how they are going to buy cars and pay the extra 25 per cent tax. So I say that no longer can a motorcar be considered a luxury to anyone who has to make a living. Certainly they are not luxuries to the workingmen. They use motorcars because of necessity. I do not know whether it is too late to have the minister change his mind, but I for one believe that something should be done to help the ordinary man. I am not speaking about the rich man because he will buy a motorcar, no matter what it costs. I know many people have bought new cars at exorbitant prices and a 25 per cent tax means nothing to them. But to the ordinary everyday worker who perhaps has to go into the city to carry on his job or, if he lives in the city, has to go from one end to the other, a motorcar is not a luxury; it is an absolute necessity.

I have not taken much of the time of the committee when I could have taken up a lot. What is the use? These taxes are all in operation, but the amount of correspondence I have received and the number of people who have come to see me made me feel that I should speak. Having given this information to the government, I feel that I have done my duty and cannot do anything more.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): I hesitated to take part in this debate until I had an opportunity of listening to the accumulated wisdom of the members of the various oppositions and also the explanations that the minister has given. I feel that it is easy for an opposition to oppose a tax. In opposing this measure I do not want to be put in the position where I am opposing a tax because it is a tax and I know it will be unpopular with the people. I have supported many tax measures which the government has brought into this house and which I assume were quite unpopular. However I feel that this tax is in a particular category as far as unpopularity is concerned.

I am not going into the constitutional argument that has been advanced to the committee, because there are plenty of lawyers to take up that phase of the matter. However it does appear to me that the minister's explanation of the way in which this tax was brought in was unworthy of the brilliant talents which it is acknowledged the minister has. When the C.C.F. moved to throw out all the taxes it appeared to me to be a gesture that anyone in opposition could well afford to take. But I do not think the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre does justice to his responsibility as a member.

Despite what the hon. member for Davenport has just said about the necessity of a workman having a motorcar, I feel that the present taxes on motorcars are not particularly onerous. Anyone who can afford to pay $1,700 or $1,800 for a new car can afford to pay an additional $130. That payment will not make it impossible for him to carry on his job. I am quite sure we all feel that the government is justified in trying to keep out of the country these high-priced cars that, as a matter of fact, some of our hon. friends drive.

Hon. members in this house know the minister very well and I think we all have a great deal of confidence in him. I do not think the public of Canada have had the same opportunity to know him. With the constitutional crisis that has occurred in the democratic world as we know it, I am afraid that the public might be a little concerned about this departure from regular parliamentary practice in the introduction of these excise tax proposals.

Perhaps I may be forgiven for offering a word of advice. It seems to me that we in the house would have been glad to accept the minister's explanation of the urgent necessity that prompted him to bring in these taxes. If he had come before us and said, "I realize that this was an unconstitutional way of doing this and I regret the urgent necessity that made it necessary for me to bring them in"; I think if he had thrown himself on the generosity of the house all members would have been glad to give him a hand in support of his proposals.

I come now to the actual items of taxation. I know the minister is opposed to dirt just as much as he is opposed to sin. I think vacuum cleaners could well be left off and refrigerators also. If the minister made one or two minor concessions of that kind I am sure they would represent only a small reduction in revenue. I think if he came before us and proposed a 50 per cent excise tax on some of these items we would probably be glad to support him. Some of these things are definitely luxuries.

He put a 25 per cent impost at the manufacturers' level, but a 50 per cent tax at the same level would be just equal to the present luxury tax at the retail level on jewelry and that sort of thing. There are many things which would be more of a luxury than the wedding ring which many men have to buy. Those of you who are married know that is a necessary item, and yet we have been willing to pay a 25 per cent tax at the retail level. As I said, I think the tax on motorcars is all right. I was in Windsor the other day and they assured me that they had enough orders to keep them going for the next two years. I do not feel that this tax will be very harmful as far as that is concerned.

In closing, there is just one thing I want to say and this is not advice to the minister, it is advice to the government. The government is very conscious of the fact that they will be fighting two by-elections in British Columbia within the next couple of months. As I said last time I spoke, we are particularly sensitive about the fact that we have no cabinet representation. It has been pretty well assumed in Canada that at long last British Columbia, for the first time since confederation, is to have the ministry of fisheries.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: The hon. member for New Westminster.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): The present incumbent of that position is a close personal friend of mine, a man of great personal charm. However I feel that his particular talents could be used by the government to better advantage in some other ministry, and I think he would be the first one to concede that point. I suggest that if the minister is going to put over these excise tax proposals with the voters of British Columbia, the best thing to do would be to have the Prime Minister appoint the hon. member for New Westminster as Minister of Fisheries. It would be one of the most popular moves the government has ever made, and I am quite sure the people of British Columbia would show their appreciation at the polls.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Mr. Chairman, we have heard quite a lot about this resolution. We are getting near the time when we hope to adjourn for a space and no doubt there is much to be said for letting this go, though still unconvincing to the minds of many hon. members on both sides of the house. But the more I hear about it, the more it seems to me that the evils and difficulties attendant on it are set forth, and the less there is that satisfies me that it should be passed.

For a few minutes tonight I am going to look back and trace briefly the history of this resolution. Let us see what was originally stated to be the purpose, and let us see if that purpose seems to have been changed a great deal in mid-career. Finally, and much more important, let us see whether there is any likelihood of its achieving the purpose for which it was originally put forward, or indeed any other purpose.

I should like to turn back to what the Minister of Finance said in his broadcast in the middle of November last. After dealing with the embargo measure which we have already passed as Bill No. 3, he went on to say:

> Import restrictions alone will not be enough to keep down our use of goods which contain a high proportion of parts or materials from the United States.

I pause there a moment to point out that apparently there has been a very considerable change so far as that is concerned, because we now have goods on this list which have only a trifling proportion of United States parts. He went on:

> Many of these goods are produced on a large scale in Canada and we cannot properly limit and ration the imported parts and materials.

Incidentally no explanation has ever been given to my satisfaction why that is so. Incidentally, again, may I say it seems to me there is a considerable argument for using Bill

No. 3, which is now law, instead of this jumble of provisions which seems to begin nowhere and to end nowhere. He continued:

I am therefore proposing to use the same fiscal devices as we used during the war to restrict purchases of this type of goods.

I want to read a little more, and I ask the members particularly to notice what I shall read now to see whether it does not appear that there has been a considerable departure in outlook from the intention then set forth. I am not criticizing that. I am only saying it would look as if the bill is very different from what was in the mind of the Minister of Finance at that time. He went on:

The government will ask parliament to place an excise tax of 25 per cent on a wide range of these durable consumer goods, the purchase of which—

Note this:

—can normally be postponed by the average family if necessary and most of which are of a less essential character.

Listening to the debate this afternoon, it did not seem to me that many of the taxes come within that class at all. He went on:

This tax will apply to sporting goods, outboard motors, pleasure launches, firearms, oil burners, motor cycles, musical instruments, cameras, radios, phonographs and to most types of electrical home appliances.

That is what the minister said in November last. I now come to what he said in December last, and I read briefly from his speech on December 16. First of all I want to read this extract, in which, speaking of the special excise taxes, he says:

Their first and primary purpose is to discourage the sort of expenditure which adds to our imports from the United States.

I want to emphasize that. This was a measure originally put forward for the saving of United States exchange. It is unfortunate that the minister has had difficulty in getting the figures. We have not yet got them, but I do not believe it will be a very bad guess to say that those figures will show a very trifling saving in United States exchange. I say that for this reason. The minister felt at the outset that no figures at all could be got; but when I persisted, perhaps somewhat unduly, he was good enough to say he would get the figures. I must not say too much by way of anticipation; but I do not believe I would be wrong if I said that the minister will prove right to this extent, that when those figures are produced they will be of the nature which he himself prophesied, that they will not show any substantial saving so far. If they do not, it will not be surprising because, after all, bear in mind that the only direct saving of United States exchange has to come through a lessening of consumption of goods made in Canada which have United States components. There is precious little evidence yet of much falling off in the consumption of Canadian goods. Moreover we know that many of these goods have only a trifling amount of United States parts in them, some much less than ten per cent, some an even more trivial percentage. So I think we shall find that there is no evidence yet of any substantial saving in United States exchange.

I pass on to the minister's second reason, and always bear in mind that this reason was put forward in November and again in December as a measure for saving United States exchange. But evidently he felt that that would not be a sufficient reason, and there were several others. I now come to the second reason, and I think this is a complicated and difficult one. It seems to me to have two or three parts inconsistent with each other. I will read very briefly:

A second reason for these taxes was to limit so far as practicable the degree of discrimination against regular suppliers in the United States and their dealer organizations in Canada.

In other words, as under Bill No. 3, a great many goods were to be excluded from Canada either wholly or largely, because, as the minister says, it was felt desirable to ease the situation for those United States exporters who would be cut off from this market. That may be a laudable objective; but along with that the minister goes on to point out, and this is one of the means of arriving at his objective, that we must also prevent Canadian manufacturers of these goods from deriving too much benefit from the fact that United States goods are kept out of the market. That perhaps has something to be said for it; but the means taken are, I suggest, rather odd, and bear in mind that this has precious little to do except indirectly with United States exchange. The means taken is to put on this tax. The minister says this tax is put on so that Canadian manufacturers who otherwise, according to him, would have jacked up their prices by reason of the absence of United States goods will not be able to do so, or at any rate so that the first 25 per cent of such a rise in price will be by way of this tax which the government will get, and therefore the minister suggests that Canadian manufacturers will be prevented from deriving this very unfair profit. I hope myself that Canadian manufacturers would have done nothing of the kind. There is nothing to suggest that competition might not have kept the prices down. In any event, the point I wish to make is this. In order to reach this questionable and quite illusory benefit, who is made to suffer? The Canadian taxpayer because he has this 25 per cent tax put on him.

Again let me point out where we are in the matter of having United States exchange. We have come to the point where the minister, in order to do what he deems to be fair to United States exporters who are shut out of our markets, puts on this tax.

Another point arises there which I think it is desirable to remember, and this leaves me so much unconvinced about this whole measure. As soon as you press the minister as to any one of his reasons, he immediately flits off to another reason, and the reason the minister has to do that is, I suggest, that this whole measure is a confused jumble. I said a moment ago it starts nowhere and ends nowhere. It is a hodgepodge of inconsistent and sometimes conflicting reasons.

The minister also brings the tax argument in here. If the price is going to go up, let us get it by way of tax, he says. I want to point out that this measure comes right back on the taxpayers and on a class of taxpayers who are very ill able to bear it. The minister I think recognizes that. I have no doubt that he is receiving very strong appeals from taxpayers, and that brings me to another argument.

The minister says: Oh, but we have to have an over-all surplus in Canada if we are to export goods abroad, and therefore we have to cut down consumption in Canada. Well, that may also be a very proper objective, but what I object to about this measure is this: Why does he select the people who are paying this tax to be the only people who are to be affected in this way? If we are to cut down consumption in Canada, why not do so in a very much more general manner? There is no justification whatever that I can see for dealing with the matter in this way.

We now come to the minister's fourth reason, and that is taxation. The minister finds himself in some difficulty because, on the one hand, he does not want us to regard this as a taxation measure, but on the other hand he suggests that the taxation will not be unacceptable after all; and in answer to the people who say that he has a huge surplus, he points out quite properly—I wish he would do so oftener—"Oh, yes, we have a large surplus this year, but we have been making large advances to overseas countries, as I have already indicated; and, on a cash basis, including those outlays, our income is only moderately in excess of our outlay." In other words, we have, first of all, the argument about saving United States exchange, which I believe will prove to be trivial in the extreme and utterly unwarranted. We have that as a reason for this measure—

Mr. HOWE: Nevertheless we have balanced outgo and income.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): You have been given such wide powers that you will be able to do it all. Isn't that the idea?

Mr. HOWE: You are complaining about what you demanded last summer that we should do.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I am only complaining about the way you did it. You will see what happens now.

Mr. HOWE: We have done it. That is the important thing.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I have referred to the combined provision for protecting the United States manufacturer from the effect of what will be done to him by the Minister of Trade and Commerce; the Minister of Finance apparently feels sorry for what the Minister of Trade and Commerce will do to the United States manufacturer, and so he takes a whack at the Canadian manufacturer. But as a matter of fact, the person at whom he is finally really taking the whack is the Canadian taxpayer, and that is what I think is so unwise and unwarranted in this bill.

Put it this way. Why put a 25 per cent tax on this small group of people who happen to be affected by these taxes, rather than a much smaller tax, if the minister feels it necessary, on the whole of the larger group? The minister said, and I rather respected him for saying it, that probably he had not gone far enough, that probably the austerity measures had not gone far enough. Well, we can all agree that the mess they got us into by the decision of June, 1946, is a serious one. We can all agree that drastic steps have to be taken.

There is a fifth argument the minister used. That fifth argument was that, while these prices were going up and while the tax would have to be added to what the people would pay, still it was useful as a deflationary measure, because it would help to mop up extra purchasing power which existed and in that way help to bring a cure. I see the minister's point there, but I feel that the people who are being subjected to this tax, if it were explained to them that they were being made the sacrifice in order to help to cure the mistakes of the administration in expanding our means of payment far beyond what they should be expanded—if the people who are paying this tax were told that, I think they would be greatly surprised indeed.

I submit that this measure has been changed in various ways from the position in which it stood at the beginning. The minister has told us frankly that many changes had to be made, because they found that great distress was being caused in certain quarters, and those changes had been embodied in an amendment. It is quite true that has been done, and in the course of it certain other changes have been made which the minister has found it hard to explain. As a matter of fact, the hon. member for Fraser Valley took him on the other evening by reason of the fact that there are certain articles on which the tax is left when used for domestic purposes but on which it is not paid if those articles are used in a business.

That shows how this thing has to be chopped and changed so that the original basis has in many ways disappeared, and therefore we can doubt very much whether the minister is satisfied with it, or whether even he believes it is likely to do what it sets out to do.

Therefore, even at this late date, having regard to the evident fact that the government is quite uncertain as to what is wise or unwise in this; having regard incidentally to what the minister told us today, that they are still so uncertain as to whether the tax is imposed on the right people that they will retain in the bill the power to relieve certain other categories; having regard to all that, it seems to me it is very proper, even at this stage, for us to ask the minister to reconsider the whole situation.

We have a measure which it is stated is devised to save United States exchange. When you argue on that basis they go off on to several other bases. When the United States exchange argument will not hold good we have an argument about cutting down expenditures, which I have tried to indicate is wrongly dealt with in this bill. If the government are going to cut down expenditures, do not select merely this group of taxpayers, but do it in a more general way. And, so far as the United States exchange is concerned, let us remember that the government stubbornly refuse to take one of the remedies which we have advocated and which we think they will have to take one day, and that is to deal with the Canadian dollar and its value in a realistic manner. That would help the United States exchange situation.

For all these reasons, I still hope the government will see fit to withdraw a measure which is so unpopular, and, what is more important, so unwise.

[Mr. Macdonnell (Muskoka-Ontario).]

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I rise tonight to explain my vote as I did a year ago in connection with the veterans affairs, and I sincerely hope I shall not have to explain my vote in connection with veterans affairs this year, because, if I have to explain it, it will not be satisfactory to the government.

In this connection, I spoke against the tax on frigidaires the other day. I spoke against taxation on what I call the poor man's automobile. I still think the Minister of Finance is wrong, and I still think he should take advice from some members of his own party in particular and, if not from them, at any rate from the House of Commons rather than from some of his officials concerning these taxation measures.

I had occasion to remark the other day, although this may not be agreed with by some people, that the hon. member for Comox-Alberni had made the best speech, in my opinion, so far as veterans affairs are concerned; I still think the hon. member from Comox-Alberni has made the best speech in connection with this bill, and he made it tonight with respect to the amendment.

I enjoy listening to the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario, when I can hear him, and I appreciate his knowledge of subjects such as this. Unfortunately, however, he still thinks he is speaking to a little board in one of those vested-interests small committee rooms on Bay street, Toronto, because we cannot hear what he says.

I do not think the government is right in its taxation of frigidaires, nor do I think it is right in its idea of taxing lower priced automobiles. I have not had the privilege of owning a Cadillac, like some of my lumber friends. I think the government is wrong in its taxation of lower priced automobiles and it is particularly wrong in taxing such things as electric irons. The minister cannot justify to me the taxation of an electric iron, which is a necessity to the veteran's wife in this modern day and age. He cannot justify to me the taxation of kerosene or gasoline frigidaires for the use of the farmer's wife, living many miles away from electrical power.

Mr. ABBOTT: There is no taxation on kerosene refrigerators.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Unfortunately some of us in the far districts cannot always pick and choose. We must take what we can get. I suggest that if the minister had consulted some of the members of the House of Commons instead of some of the so-called advisers here he would not have committed the error in this respect.

I want to explain my vote in this connection. I believe that this so-called austerity program is in the best interests of the people of Canada as a whole. Whether we like it or not, we are in this position with regard to our foreign exchange. I am not as optimistic as are some hon. members from Ontario with regard to future prospects for gold. I believe this is the best program we could develop. Therefore I intend to support the government and I shall oppose the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, who would always move an amendment about anything, even the weather. I am quite prepared to go before the people of my riding and justify my stand. I disagree with the policy of my friend, the hon. member for one of the suburbs of Winnipeg. I disagree with the policy of the minister and of the government in connection with frigidaires, particularly country frigidaires; I disagree with their policy with regard to low-priced cars; I disagree with their policy with regard to electric irons. But I have yet to hear from the other side of the house one suggestion as to how we could better meet the emergency situation in which we find ourselves at the present time. While I believe that the minister's policy has its faults and its mistakes, I believe it is the best policy we have with which to meet the situation.

Mr. KUHL: This afternoon when the hon. member for Temiscouata was criticizing the government for the policy involved in this particular measure, he made some reference to consistency and logic with particular reference to myself. I rather resented his remarks with respect to me, because I have always prided myself on being consistent and logical in what I say. If the hon. gentleman has any criticism to make of anything I have said in the past on economics or on the British North America Act, I suggest that he take the text of my remarks and indicate in what respect I have been inconsistent and illogical. I believe that the shoe is on the other foot. I think the hon. gentleman is the one who is illogical and inconsistent. On the one hand, he criticizes his party and the government for taxation policy and, on the other hand he does not suggest any alternative. Yet he has the audacity and the effrontery to ridicule and scoff at suggestions which emanate from this group. Furthermore, he indicates his inconsistency most definitely by voting opposite to the way in which he talks, when it comes to a vote. So, when it comes to a matter of consistency, I suggest that the hon. gentleman resort to a little introspection.

I think the only members of this house who have spoken logically on the principle involved in this particular bill and similar bills are the members of the Social Credit group. We have heard much criticism on the part of certain hon. gentlemen in the Liberal party; we have also heard a great deal of it from the Conservatives and from the C.C.F. But if they were in the seats of the mighty, what policy would they pursue? What would be their source of funds? What would be their method of attempting to achieve the results which the government alleges it is attempting to achieve? With regard to the Conservative party, I cannot imagine their using any different policies whatsoever from those which the government is using. They have not indicated that they have any other policy. If they are to reduce taxation in some respects, they must raise money by other means. Thus far they have not subscribed to the Social Credit way of doing it, and they have not any of their own. So I think they are certainly guilty of inconsistency as well.

I think the same reasoning can be applied to our C.C.F. friends. They moved an amendment this afternoon in an attempt to abolish at least one section of this measure, in order to reduce taxes which are being levied or which might be levied. But on the other hand, if they were in office and were managing the government, what would they use as a source of funds? How would they derive their revenue? So far as I am able to observe from listening to their statements, they would resort to taxation. They have not suggested any alternative. So whether, under their administration, they raise the money through this particular means or not, they would still have to resort to taxation. In advocating the policies which they have advocated, I cannot see how they can consider themselves to be consistent.

Therefore that leaves only the members of the Social Credit group who, in my opinion, have spoken consistently on this. All through the years we have advocated drastic reductions of taxation, even to the point of total elimination of dominion taxation. But we have not left it there. We have indicated an alternative for the raising of money.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: What is your alternative?

Mr. KUHL: I think the hon. gentleman knows it just as well as any of us who have made any remarks on the subject.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I should like to hear it again.

Mr. KUHL: If the hon. member really wants to know, I will suggest to him that the government, which has the supreme prerogative over money, is not obliged to raise any money by taxation. It has at its disposal the power to create and issue all the money it needs.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. KUHL: All right, Mr. Chairman. I do not intend to launch into a discussion of money theories. I was just answering a question which the hon. gentleman put to me. But I repeat that I and my associates in the Social Credit group are definitely opposed to this measure. We stand for a drastic reduction of taxation, and we have indicated an alternative.

There is one aspect of the present situation which I think has not received the attention it should have received, namely, the positive side rather than the negative. The minister, his supporters and others have suggested that the objective of this measure is to curtail consumption. Why place so much emphasis on the curtailing of consumption? Why not look at it positively and consider whether we cannot do something more about stimulating production? That is an aspect which, according to my observation, has not received much emphasis during the course of this debate. I feel certain that one means of stimulating much production in this country is to reduce taxation. I am sure that every hon. member has heard farmers, workers and businessmen in general say that they would be glad to produce a little more but for taxation. What do we invariably hear? The farmer says, "Why should I raise my production when, as a consequence, I do nothing but pay more taxes?" The worker says the same thing, namely, "Why should I work overtime, bring my income up into the next bracket and penalize myself by so doing?" All the way through the whole economy we find that, as a result of taxation, there is a certain amount of discouragement of production.

Therefore I suggest that we place a little more emphasis on the positive side of our program and see whether we cannot do something by way of stimulating production, and thus provide ourselves with more goods with which to take care of the needs abroad and of ourselves. I think the best way to do that would be to remove those elements of our economic life which discourage production, one of which, in my opinion, is taxation. So I suggest that the policy involved in this resolution can do nothing but discourage still further the production of very much needed goods in this country. Therefore I, together with my associates, will oppose it; and I personally think the whole thing should be consigned to the nether regions.

Mr. McIVOR: I have a question to ask, Mr. Chairman, but I did not know whether I should put it in another form. We have been discussing this matter since before Christmas, and there has been a great deal of repetition. Even today the minister said more than once, "Again I say"; "I repeat", and so on. I know in the British house there is a way of dealing with this situation; and I am going to ask you, Mr. Chairman, if we have anything in our parliamentary laws or our procedure which will permit us to close off this debate and get on with other business.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Mr. Chairman—

Mr. McIVOR: I think I should have an answer to my question.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): One reason my hon. friend does not get an answer to his question is that under our rules he cannot question the Chair, and that seems to deal with that matter. I am going to take only three or four minutes, which I am sure will please my old friend the hon. member for Fort William.

Mr. McIVOR: Thank you.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): My hon. friend was a much better soccer football player than parliamentarian. He never won a game playing football, so that will give the committee an idea of my estimate of his ability as a parliamentarian.

I am opposed to this resolution, Mr. Chairman, and I want to tell you why. When I listened to the minister on the evening of November 17 I could understand a good many things he said; but when he came to the matter of this excise tax I got lost. I have studied everything he has said since then and everything anyone else has said in connection with this proposal, and this idea struck me. I think it is elementary that if this excise tax merely raises the price of Canadian goods, that is inflation. If it fails and purchases do not continue, that means unemployment. I submit, sir, that today I am in exactly the same position. This thing can go in one of two ways, the one toward inflation and the other toward unemployment. Those of us who live in or have knowledge of the smaller places in Canada know the small businesses which have been wrecked by this measure, and in such cases it has meant unemployment.

I confess that in listening to the minister I heard two things with which I would be in agreement. One was that we could save United States exchange by an embargo on United States goods. The other was that to the extent we could supplant United States goods by the increased manufacture of similar goods in Canada, to that extent also we would save United States exchange. But if this tax means that we are to decrease that manufacture, then it goes straight against one of the things which the minister spoke of and which he had in mind at that time.

The other evening I asked the minister a few questions. I intend to paraphrase them this evening, if I may. I hope I may do so correctly, but if I fail in that I hope I may be immediately interrupted. The minister said he did not know now, after four months of the operation of the tax, whether or not it was in fact saving United States exchange. Then I asked when he would know, and he went farther and said he was in doubt that he would ever know, because his scheme was three-pronged and he was unable to separate the prongs. As you know, Mr. Chairman, there is a very well known instrument used on a farm, an instrument which is also three-pronged. The minister does not know whether he has a sheaf of oats on one prong and perhaps some rather less valuable product on the other. His whole attitude was that he could not tell whether or not this measure was in fact helping the scheme for saving United States dollars.

Therefore, sir—and I close with this—I take the position that I was right in my impression when I listened to the minister on November 17, that internally it meant inflation in one way, if people bought the goods, but that in the other direction it meant unemployment if it raised prices so high that people could not buy them. I still abide by that view; and now, having come here and heard the minister tell me he did not know whether or not this was helping to save United States exchange and that he did not think he ever would know, speaking for the people of this country who are paying these inflated prices, or who cannot buy because they are unable to pay the prices, I am opposed to this measure and will so vote.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I think it very appropriate, Mr. Chairman, that we should have heard this evening from a learned counsel who, through his early association with sports, acquired a great deal of common sense. I should like to draw to your attention the fact that "Sport" Smith and his brother played for the Thistles many years ago, and in his younger days "Sport" was the finest hockey player I knew. Anyone who is interested in sports is bound to acquire a wide range of knowledge—

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): All right, Mr. Chairman; I will get to the excise tax. On the other hand, my hon. friend the Minister of Finance over there never had the advantage of taking part in these sports, so that he was not in the same fortunate position. I say this though I am very fond of him and we are all very proud of him. It is too bad he has these strange ideas.

I now have one or two things to say about this.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. I am sure hon. members would like to get through with this matter tonight.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Yes, Mr. Chairman; I would like to get through with it as soon as possible, but it is very difficult when you have to deal with a fellow with such low intelligence as the hon. member for Cartier over there.

Mr. HARTT: Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. HARTT: On a question of privilege; I can answer you in your own kind. I ask the hon. member to withdraw that statement.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I would hope the hon. member would withdraw that statement.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I do not see anything to withdraw. But if the House of Commons thinks I am wrong in saying that, even though I meant it, I will withdraw it. So there you are.

Mr. HARTT: If he were sober he would not say that.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): One reason I got to my feet tonight to say something was this, that it brings me back to radio broadcasting in Canada. The other night I listened to the radio where it was pointed out that there were two sides to this problem. There were some who thought we should devalue the dollar, and others who believed that the austerity program should not be continued. But the whole truth of the matter was not set out. That is what I am getting at.

We are not getting anywhere at the present time.

Mr. GRANT: Indeed we are not.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): It has been said that these steps have been taken to save $27,000,000, but we are not told another factor which is worth considering. That is, that before we had this austerity program and before the dollar was revalued we had something like $280 million in United States funds coming into Canada. What happened? Well, the Imperial Oil Company has sold International Petroleum, and we now have $80,000,000 in United States funds coming in here. That is an interesting point.

The other point which we were not told was that when we revalued our dollar it cost $20,000,000 more in dividends. The minister shakes his head, but I tell him that it just cost us $20,000,000 more.

Mr. ABBOTT: I was not questioning the hon. member's figures. But I was going to say that we are on a resolution dealing with taxation, and I thought perhaps we should stick to it.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I shall come back to it in a second, but I must repeat that it cost us $20,000,000 more in United States funds. What is the minister doing? He is doing exactly what I said he would do. He wants to reduce production in Canada. That means unemployment. That is all I have to say.

Mr. KNOWLES: My remarks on this occasion will be brief.

An hon. MEMBER: Six times today.

Mr. KNOWLES: It would not have been necessary if what I moved before had been accepted. We in this group have stated our opposition to these proposed taxes, categorically. We sought to have a vote on the separate clauses before the committee. The house ruled that there are not six separate clauses, but that there is only one resolution before us. And as you, sir, have pointed out to me, that decision of the house must be accepted.

Following that, I moved an amendment to the motion then before the committee, suggesting that certain clauses of the one resolution be deleted. You, sir, ruled that amendment out of order, and at that time quoted from citation 500 in Beauchesne, third edition, on the ground that it deleted certain taxes without proposing any alternative.

I rise now to move another amendment which clearly meets the specifications you, sir, laid down when you ruled my last amendment out of order. At that time you quoted citation 500 from Beauchesne, third edition; and, incidentally, that is the same paragraph which the Minister of Finance and I were quoting from May, thirteenth edition, at pages 543 and 544. The sentence you emphasized was the following:

> Amendments, therefore, can be proposed to substitute another tax, of equivalent amount, for that proposed by the government, as, for instance, a proposal to substitute probate and legacy duty on real property as an alternative for an inhabited house duty, the necessity of new taxation, to that extent, being already declared on behalf of the crown.

I was interested a moment ago in the comment made by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni when he said he shared our opposition to these excise taxes but that he objected to what he called our irresponsibility in failing to propose an alternative. My amendment will meet that situation. It expresses clearly our opposition to the taxes, and it also expresses the sort of thing we feel should be done to keep the ways and means in balance.

I expect that some of my hon. friends in the house will not like the substance of the amendment, but even they will agree that it is clearly in order. Before moving it, there is one other comment I should like to make in reply to what was said by the hon. member for Temiscouata. When he spoke a while ago he said I was challenging the decision of the house. I did no such thing. I accepted, perforce—and I believe I used that very word—the decision of the house that we have before us one motion in various parts. That motion, as the hon. member for Temiscouata knows, is amendable.

Citation 335 in Beauchesne, third edition, reads:

> A motion may be amended: (a) by leaving out certain words; (b) by leaving out certain words in order to insert other words; (c) by inserting or adding other words.

The amendment I shall move is in line with part (b) of the citation I have just read.

I therefore move, seconded by my deskmate, the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Nicholson):

> That clause 1 of the proposed resolution as amended and clauses 2, 3 and 4 be deleted therefrom, and that the following be substituted therefor:
>
> "That it is expedient to introduce a measure to impose taxation upon excess profits to the extent necessary to maintain the balance of ways and means."

Amendment negatived: yeas, 19; nays, 81.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. TIMMINS: In the original resolution there was included a tax on electric or gas refrigerators and also a tax on electric stoves. I should like to ask the minister why he relaxed the tax on electric stoves on December 8. There must have been some basic reason why the tax was taken off electric stoves. The fact of the matter is that the people who buy electric stoves are the people who buy electric refrigerators. To my mind there is discrimination in favour of one industry and against another when you leave a tax on one article and take it off the other. That is one incongruity.

The second incongruity seems to be in connection with one of the answers the minister gave me this afternoon in which he said that the tax was put on, as I understood him, so as not to permit production to rise in the Dominion of Canada upon goods with United States content, produced for export, beyond the confines of Canada. If it is the purpose of the resolution to block in a sense the production of too large an amount of goods in the country, that seems to be completely at variance with the remarks of the minister of external affairs at Winnipeg on January 23 last when he said that the purpose of the government was to create a genuine exportable surplus large enough to enable us to play our part in the recovery of Europe without having to resort to crippling import restrictions. To my mind the exposition of the matter given by the minister of external affairs and the exposition of this resolution given by the Minister of Finance do not jibe.

There is one other matter I wanted to bring to the minister's attention. The minister said on March 18, as reported on page 2373 of Hansard:

I have had numerous discussions with representative groups of car manufacturers, and radio manufacturers, because they are two of the larger groups. The car manufacturers do not claim that the tax has yet slowed down the consumption of cars. They tell me that they think it will. Whether they are right or wrong, I do not know. The same thing applies to the radio people. No one has contended to me that the sale of radios has yet been diminished.

I am sure all hon. members have received a memorandum from the radio manufacturers' association of Canada under date of March 5 last. I presume the minister has already read this release, but I should like to call his attention to section 6 on page 3 where it says:

In November, 1947, the last month prior to the effect of the new 25 per cent excise tax, the member companies of our association produced 103,000 radio receivers (not including export production) and reported sales for the same month totalling 102,000 radios. Substantial sales drops were noted in December and in January, 1948, the same companies sold only 39,000 radio receivers—a 62 per cent drop from November. This also represents a drop of over 40 per cent from the sales by the same companies in January of 1947.

Final figures for February sales and production are not yet available but indications are that still further drops have occurred and already there have been drastic cutbacks in factory production and employment.

I should like hon. members to note those last few words, "drastic cutbacks in factory production and employment." We shall have a vote on this matter pretty soon. The minister said a short time ago that he did not know of any drop in sales of radios, but here are figures given by responsible people.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am delighted to hear that the tax is doing what it was intended to do, but I do not believe that that is possible.

Mr. TIMMINS: There was a drastic drop of 62 per cent from November. I want to ask the minister whether the intention of this tax is to put the radio industry out of business or whether he ought not to regulate, first and foremost, a situation which could be alleviated in quite a different way from the manner in which he is doing it. I should like to quote a clipping from the Wall Street Journal, as follows:

The more one thinks of it the proposals to deflate buying and stop prices going up by increasing taxation are very dangerous ones. If the government increases taxation, it will spend the money it gets. It inflates its own costs with the avowed object of deflating others.

That is the very thing we are doing with this resolution. The minister must know by now that this is the most unpopular tax that has been before this house in a long time. It is not only unpopular in the house; it is unpopular in the country. I think, as a matter of fact, he is going to stifle the exportation of those products which we have been trying to build up production on, for a long while in this country. If he does not know it, then somebody should tell him right now, while we are dealing with this matter, that there has been a sloughing off of production and a sloughing off of buying in this country. In my opinion this will be considered one of the worst taxes we have had for a long time.

Mr. SINNOTT: I am reluctant to rise at this late stage, but I feel I would be remiss in my duty if I did not say a few words at this time. While I believe the measure itself has every indication of proving its value, there are some things in it with which I do not agree. I always believe that you can catch more flies with honey than you can with salt or pepper.

I want to make a personal appeal to the minister tonight with regard to refrigerators. If the minister would say to the committee that refrigerators were being taken off the list everyone in the house would let this bill go through.

A refrigerator is essential in the modern home. I know the minister has one and I know all the men who drew up the bill have refrigerators. Wherever electric power has been developed throughout the country, wherever it has been put through rural constituencies, wherever power is available, the people want refrigerators. They have been saving their money for a long time, expecting that their chance would come to get a refrigerator. They now find this tax imposed, which will make them pay $100 more for a refrigerator. That will not stop them from getting one because it is a necessity, but it is a mean tax and the people resent it terribly. A refrigerator, by keeping meat, butter, eggs and other provisions fresh, enables people to cut their living costs by ten per cent. I have made a personal appeal to the minister and he has promised to take the tax off as soon as possible. That is as far as he would go, but I hope that "as soon as possible" will come sooner than he anticipates.

Mrs. STRUM: Tonight I picked up a menu in the Chateau Laurier, a Canadian National hotel, and I found printed on it a notice "Excise tax 25 per cent."

Mr. ABBOTT: You must have been in the grill.

An hon. MEMBER: Dancing.

Mrs. STRUM: No, I was not dancing. I want to know by what authority meals are being taxed?

Mr. ABBOTT: That was the amusement tax imposed by my predecessor during the war in public eating places where there is music and dancing for guests' entertainment. In the dining room upstairs at the Chateau Laurier you do not pay the tax, but in the grill, where there is a delightful orchestra, you do. It is a form of amusement tax.

Mrs. STRUM: You should require a notice to be placed on the door outside: "If you eat here, you do it at your peril because there is a 25 per cent tax on meals."

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I should like to make one last appeal to the Minister of Finance. Unfortunately we on this side of the house cannot make personal appeals to the minister, so I shall not attempt that.

[Mr. Sinnott.]

Mr. ABBOTT: Why not? Some people do. I have no restrictions on personal appeals.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: This is a resolution which affects the public as a whole and is not the personal hobby of the Minister of Finance. It was introduced on behalf of the government, and so any appeals made in the house with respect to it should be made to the house.

I wish to make an appeal in relation to the second paragraph which deals with the taxation of automobiles. The hon. member for Fraser Valley this evening hit on something very sound when he said that the automobiles in the first category shown in the schedule, running from $1,200 to $2000—I take it that that is the manufacturer's price, because you cannot get a new car retail for anything like $1,200—

An hon. MEMBER: What kind of car do you drive?

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I do not drive any car but I am hoping to get one some time. Automobiles in that price range, from $1,200 to $2,000, are definitely what the hon. member for Fraser Valley termed the poor man's car. They are the cars the average person uses to carry on his livelihood. They are used by a substantial sector of our population, by professional people living in rural areas who have to travel long distances to carry on their livelihood, by preachers in the various churches who have to minister to outlying districts, by the small-town doctors and commercial travellers, by many schoolteachers who do not live where they teach. There is a very large proportion of our population who need an automobile to make their living. The minister has stated that commodities which are necessary for the earning of a livelihood or the production of other goods should not, as a general principle, be subject to the tax, and I think this is the time when an appeal should be made because, once the bill has been introduced, we know how difficult it is to have any of its details changed. Before the bill is introduced I think the minister should definitely give consideration to removing the excise tax from that class of automobile from $1,200 up to $2,000, which the person of average means uses, not for his own pleasure, but to make his livelihood.

We of this party have done everything we could to wipe out those sections of the resolution with which we disagree. At times we have had to resort to amendments but have not been successful in carrying them. The moment we were asked to state an alternative by the hon. member for Jasper-Edson, we even obliged in that respect. We proposed an alternative and that was the reinstatement of the excess profits tax. I was glad that the Social Credit group voted with us and showed their consistency on that point. I was sorry to see our friends of the Progressive Conservative party did not see fit to vote for that amendment. It appears that they do not mind asking for a removal of the tax, but when it comes to taxing excess profits they can no longer go with the C.C.F., but from then on are with the government.

As I say, we have done all we could in this group. We have offered the government an alternative and a very practical one, because the excess profits tax would have fallen on people whom it could hurt the least, on those who are making more than regular profits.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. Excess profits are beyond the scope of this resolution.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: If that is your ruling, Mr. Chairman, I am very happy to bow to it.

Mr. POULIOT: I have two or three questions to ask the minister. An embargo has been put on certain United States products. A certain amount of customs duties was collected on these products in the year before the embargo was imposed. Can the minister tell the committee what amount of duty was collected on all these items now forbidden entry to Canada, during the year before the imposition of the embargo?

Mr. ABBOTT: That question came up under Bill No. 3, and I gave some information then as to importations in the previous year of the articles which are prohibited. I have not that information here on this bill, because this tax does not apply to those goods.

Mr. POULIOT: I understand that, since the government is being deprived of a certain amount of customs revenue on United States products which can no longer enter Canada, a 25 per cent excise tax was imposed on Canadian products as compensation for that loss of customs duty on United States goods.

Mr. ABBOTT: That was not the intention in putting it on. It was, as I have said, to deter the consumption of goods for a variety of reasons which have been discussed here a number of times. One of the principal reasons is to deter the consumption of goods which have an appreciable United States content.

Mr. POULIOT: This is my last word. I do not very well understand the imposition of this tax, but I will warn the minister again, and I will tell him that, while I am not opposed to all the officials of his department, I am opposed to some of them. I have not much support in the house when I complain in this regard, but it will be necessary before the next Liberal convention to have a spring cleaning among the top ranking officials of the Department of Finance, and I say that in all friendliness to the minister and to everyone in the government. It is time we had real Liberal policies, and we shall have them only when we get rid of some of the officials who were put there by the late Conservative administration.

Mr. JACKMAN: Exactly what is the situation now in regard to kerosene refrigerators? Were they taken off this list where the excise tax is and put in one of the other schedules?

Mr. ABBOTT: They were never included.

Mr. JACKMAN: We can still get kerosene refrigerators?

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not know whether kerosene refrigerators are made in this country. I do not think they are, although it is possible that some manufacturers may be able to produce them. I do not think they are made here. At present, importation is prohibited, but I have promised to give consideration to the setting up of a quota for that type of refrigerator under the other bill, Bill No. 3, because such a refrigerator is used primarily in rural areas where other refrigerators are not available.

Mr. JACKMAN: The case of kerosene refrigerators is very much the same as the case of motorcars. When one looks at the situation in regard to motorcars, one wonders that the government do not take a different attitude, particularly in view of all that they have said in connection with this proposed legislation. For a while, motorcars were like kerosene refrigerators, banned completely; but since November last the minister has finally arrived at a quota for motorcars. As I understand it, and if I do not have it correctly I hope the minister will let me know, there is a certain amount of United States exchange allowed to be used for the importation of motorcars. Am I right in that, that a certain amount of United States exchange is allowed for the importation of motorcars and parts?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is correct.

Mr. JACKMAN: Now that the government has settled the amount of United States exchange which shall be allotted for imported motorcars or parts, why does it still insist upon putting an excise tax on motorcars, ranging in the lower priced vehicles from 25 per cent to 75 per cent in the higher? The minister has said that the purpose of the legislation is not to gather revenue for the crown, because it has already more revenue than it knows what to do with. The purpose is to save exchange. But here we have the government allocating exactly and precisely how much United States exchange shall be allowed for the importation of motorcars, so that whether people want to buy far more than would otherwise be available, they cannot in Canada because there is only so much United States exchange.

I have not heard explained to the committee just why the government still insists on using the excise tax, because it seems to me it has already made a restriction, when it saw fit, by allowing just so many United States dollars to be used for the importation of United States motorcars and parts. The result of the present regulations is that those who have the longest purses will be able to get motorcars, while those who cannot afford to pay these extraordinary taxes, the money not being needed by the government, will have to do without any kind of vehicle.

It does seem indeed that such a form of legislation, such a spirit behind legislation, is entirely wrong, because there are still many people who were overseas, who did not have a chance to get a motorcar, and now that they are finding their place in the business world, they would like to enjoy some of the facilities which the average Canadian citizen enjoys, but they find they are up against a 25 per cent tax as a minimum. I can see no reason for it and, as far as I know, the government has not advanced any satisfactory reason, because it has said that there is only so much exchange for the purpose of bringing in motorcars, and when that is exhausted you cannot bring in any more.

We find, therefore, that there will be a certain amount of unemployment created, even in the subsidiary motorcar industries, and that brings me to the larger field of these excise taxes and their effect on employment. There is hardly a town, hardly a hamlet in this country that has not suffered by reason of the excise taxes which the government has put on, and the sad part about these excise taxes, and the unemployment they create, is that in the great majority of cases the firms involved were new firms made up of veterans. These young men cannot now obtain the substance of their business, so that they have to close up; or if they take the word of the Minister of Trade and Commerce they may look upon these restrictions as of a temporary nature until such time as the government is able to bring its United States exchange account into better balance, and they may go to their banks and endeavour to get enough working capital to keep their shows going, hoping that each passing month may see the end of their troubles. As a matter of fact, those of us who are here and who have looked at the problem realize that the time is most indefinite, and when the minister mentions months he may have meant years. So that these young men who have started up business might as well have folded up and let their staffs go.

In one case a group of veterans from the navy and the air force had already 115 people employed. They were importing radios and other household electrical machines from the United States, and they found they were absolutely without any further source of supply when these bans became effective last November. They have had to go out of business, throwing out of employment nearly 100 people. Some are keeping on in the hope that they will eventually, in not too long a time, be able to start up in business again.

In the same city I am thinking of, another company that is severely affected by the ban on the importation of fresh vegetables and fruits had to let 250 people go because there is no volume now to be handled; when the summer crops of our own vegetables and fruits come in there will not be the men to handle the produce, and the cost of merchandising will go up substantially. All of these are strong reasons against the passing of these resolutions. As a matter of fact when one considers the taxes on motorcars alone, it must be realized that even on the cheapest four-door sedan car the excise tax is $268.05, and the sales tax on top of that is $85.78, or a total tax—without even the duty or any of the various other things included—on the cheapest four-door car in the country of no less than $353.83. To my mind that is a shocking burden to put upon the young man, particularly the veteran, who wants to get a new car. Most of the population were perhaps fairly well supplied before and, like the minister himself, may have the pleasure of driving a 1939 model, as I think he mentioned to the house the other night.

I feel that these excise taxes were put on for no other reason than to satisfy the feelings or the prospective feelings. I might even have called them, of the United States administration. We were careful, because of our requirements of vital products of the United States, not to offend them in any possible way. We have put on these heavy excise taxes and have caused unemployment and an increase in the cost of living in our own country. As a matter of fact, it would be interesting to know, and I think before we close this debate, we should hear from the Minister of Finance in this regard, just what progress he is making with the United States government in regard to tariff regulations. I understand that, since we put on these excise taxes, the United States administration, when it comes to the payment of customs tariff, assess their customs rate against the Canadian price plus the excise taxes in Canada. This, of course, makes it prohibitive for the Canadian manufacturer to export to United States markets. We have already found that there has been a certain amount of tinkering or changing of the schedules, because the minister realizes that we just cannot put out of business many manufacturing concerns in Canada who would be able to export to the United States were it not for the fact that we have these excise taxes on here, and that United States officials, for tariff purposes, assess their duty against the Canadian price plus our excise tax.

We have seen what the administration here have done when they run into circumstances like that. They have withdrawn certain articles like golf clubs—and I think the minister mentioned one or two others the other evening—from the list of articles which would be subject to the excise tax. I think we should know about this. We have always looked upon our neighbours to the south as friendly and co-operative, and we hope that they are living in the spirit of Geneva just as we in this country are not only living in that spirit but are going farther and are extremely careful not to do anything to offend our neighbours to the south. I think we should have a clearance from that country, so that what little export we were doing in certain lines would not be completely obliterated because we now have a domestic excise tax. The minister should give some indication as to what progress has been made in Washington in that regard before we are asked to make any decision on this vital matter.

It has always been of great concern to me that neither the Minister of Finance nor the Minister of Trade and Commerce, so far as this committee has learned, has made any strenuous effort to increase the export of Canadian products to the United States. Certainly one would have felt that last June or July, when they saw the situation getting so desperate with regard to United States exchange, before they contemplated measures such as we have before us today they would have thought of alternative measures, and in particular would have endeavoured—both of them, I should have thought—to go to the United States to see if the United States government would not make it possible for that country to use about one-half of one per cent of its total national income for increased imports from this country. Then our whole problem of United States exchange would have disappeared. But we have had no indication whatsoever in regard to that.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. JACKMAN: Quite so. I think I am in order.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. member should deal with the resolution.

Mr. JACKMAN: I have the resolution before me. The resolution is that the excise tax be placed on certain articles set out in the schedule. The whole purpose of that resolution is in order to raise United States exchange or to prevent the use of United States exchange by Canadians. So I am suggesting that both ministers, in place of going to the United States just to borrow some money and to humiliate our country, might have done something in order to see if the people of the United States would not have taken more Canadian products; because, while they talk about full employment—and I think that is an expression they have used in this debate on a number of occasions—full employment is not necessarily the same as full production. If one has working everybody who could reasonably be expected to work, it is still possible to get more modern machinery. That is one of the things the manufacturers and industrialists of this country have been doing in the last two or three years. When we get more modern machines, we can turn out more goods and men are released to do other things. There are plenty of opportunities for them in a great variety of fields as the present time. Therefore I feel that the government have not handled this question in a way which was constructive but, on the other hand, have endeavoured to put Canadians out of employment. It made little difference to the government on whom they put these taxes, as long as they were not affected themselves. But if it were their ox that was gored, they would soon realize what the feeling is across the country from one end to the other. There is not a town or hamlet in which there is not a number of firms, particularly younger firms, which have not been disastrously affected by the excise taxes which are now before this committee.

Mr. MOORE: I should like to ask the Minister of Finance one question in connection with automobiles.

Mr. McIVOR: Just one question?

Mr. MOORE: Yes. In the Financial Post an article appeared recently which stated that one British automobile manufacturer could supply the total quota that Great Britain was allowed for manufactured cars. Since several British plants have been re-tooled to produce cars which would meet Canadian conditions better than they have in the past, will the minister consider increasing the British quota?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is under the other measure. That is under Bill No. 3, which we have already passed. I am not familiar with the quota situation with regard to British cars, but that comes under import restrictions which are imposed under the measure the house has already passed.

Mr. FLEMING: At this stage of the debate it would be presumptuous on my part to do anything that might appear to sound like offering advice to the minister. I know it would be rejected. But even at this stage I wish to offer the minister what seem to me sound reasons why, particularly in the light of things that have happened today and things that have been said this evening, he should withdraw this measure. The minister smiles. I want to assure him that in what I have to say tonight I am going to deal seriously with points he has raised in this debate, because I think they ought to be seriously answered. I am going to direct my remarks this evening, and they will be brief, to the minister in the hope that he will listen to reason even at this stage; that he will forget about matters of saving face and sit down deliberately and think about this measure in the light of statements that have come from his own side of the house tonight.

It is quite apparent that if hon. members on the other side were free to speak their minds on this matter it would arouse on the government side of the house such a tide of opposition to this measure that the minister would be compelled to withdraw it or face defeat upon it.

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): How do you know that?

Mr. FLEMING: In answer to my hon. friend the Postmaster General, I think enough members on the other side of the house have spoken tonight on this measure in rebellious terms to make it quite clear that they do not stand alone on this matter, that they are simply the more courageous of those who entertain rebellious feelings concerning this measure. Theirs are not simply voices crying in the wilderness, from the other side of the chamber. I for one am convinced, Mr. Chairman, that they do speak for many of the members sitting to your right in this chamber.

An hon. MEMBER: Speak for yourself.

Mr. FLEMING: I will speak for myself, and I will also speak my mind concerning the remarks of some who have spoken tonight. Surely this afternoon the minister had proof abundant of the utter unpopularity of this measure with his own supporters in this house; and he certainly has abundant proof of the unpopularity—yes, the unacceptability—of this measure throughout the country.

I said I would deal seriously with some points the minister has advanced in support of his measure. I do not propose to repeat what I said in this house recently on the constitutional aspects. At the conclusion of those remarks a week or so ago I was challenged by the hon. member for Halton, who in effect said that because I had confined myself to the constitutional, or rather the unconstitutional, aspects of the measure, therefore apparently I did not have any other objections to it. I assure you, Mr. Chairman, that I have an abundance of objections to this measure, any one of which, if placed before people who are free to express their minds, would be sufficient to condemn the measure.

First, what are the grounds on which the minister relies to justify an unconstitutional measure which seeks to increase the load under which the round-shouldered taxpayers of this country are groaning today? In the first place he says it will help the United States dollar situation. In the course of this debate the minister has had an abundance of opportunity to prove to this committee where and how any saving of United States dollars will be made, and he has utterly and completely failed to do so. It is not without significance that the minister had not one figure to bring before the committee as to the estimated saving of United States dollars. If, as the minister professed it to be, that was a principal objective of this measure, then certainly common sense and even the most elementary requirements of this House of Commons would have dictated that he must have some estimate of the saving in United States dollars to put before the committee in justification of this sweeping measure. We have debated this matter; we have asked questions and repeated them, and we still have to hear from the minister one word concerning the estimated saving of United States dollars. Think of it. Here we are, four months and more since the minister made his radio announcement on November 17; and even at this late date he has no estimate of the saving of United States dollars this measure is said to be capable of bringing about. When will he get it? If ever there was a fine example of blundering on the part of a government, it is this. The minister says it will save United States dollars. Four months later he has not even an estimate of the quantity of United States dollars that will be saved. Can one imagine any more complete condemnation of this measure than that fact alone? Not one item of proof is brought before us that this will save a single United States dollar; but as a parliament we are asked to penalize the Canadian consumer and the Canadian producer, to take a jump in the dark because the Minister of Finance, without the slightest element of proof, says that somehow this measure will save United States dollars. If this House of Commons has not taken leave of its senses it will not heap these penalties upon the Canadian consumer and the Canadian producer, without some proof of benefit with respect to the saving of United States dollars beyond what we have heard so far.

So much for that argument. The next point advanced by the minister in his speech in this house on December 16, as reported at page 336 of Hansard, in effect was this: We do not want to do any harm to United States producers; we want to preserve a market for them here in Canada. These were his words:

> But by imposing these excise taxes we are doing something to protect the legitimate longer-range interests of these businesses.

What are these businesses? These are the United States producers and their dealer organizations here. He went on:

> While the Canadian manufacturers are temporarily relieved of competition from the United States, their unexpected advantage is being at least partly offset by the effects of the special taxes. Without these taxes, prices of many of the articles affected could have risen a good deal, to the benefit of the manufacturers and distributors.
> As a result of the taxes, it is the public treasury that benefits.

To me that is the most transparent exposure of the iniquity of this measure. The minister seeks to justify it on the ground that, while he is denying the Canadian consumer the things that consumer wants and has had hitherto, he will not permit the Canadian producer to step into the breach and fill the requirements of the Canadian consumer. "No", he says; "we will keep the Canadian producer out of the field. Why? Well, we do not want to hurt the United States producer. Therefore we will keep both the Canadian and the United States producer out of this field. The Canadian consumer can do without, or he can submit to the penalty of an additional 25 per cent impost. But we will give no benefit to the Canadian producer; we will treat the Canadian producer and the United States producer on a footing of equality in this respect." That is proof enough to me, Mr. Chairman, that this measure is worthy only of the condemnation of this house.

Then, as a third argument, and a sort of merry-go-round argument it is, the minister says: "Oh, we will use this fiscal method. We will drain off purchasing power by this added tax. We will slow down consumption." Let us analyse that argument. I call it an audacious argument. If that argument is sound in this particular, then surely it is sound in other particulars as well. So the minister is putting before the committee the argument that it is good government policy in times like these to soak the taxpayer, to make him pay money to the federal treasury so that he will not have money left to spend on the goods he needs. If that is a sound argument as applied to goods within the range enumerated in this resolution, then if this committee chooses to give its imprimatur to that argument we may be very sure the minister will take fresh courage and be prepared to apply this argument to other goods as well. Where do you stop with an argument like that? I say to the minister that measures of this kind, applied to a range of goods which include many downright necessities, are inflationary. The minister has not confined himself, in the enumeration before us, to those articles which are clearly of the luxury class. Far from it. Just look at some of them, and then let any hon. member say that these are not necessities for many Canadians.

Think of them! Irons! The minister says that the Canadian housewife can do without electric irons because they are not a necessity. "Go and heat your iron on a woodstove"—apparently that is the argument of the minister. He says to the Canadian housewife, "You do not need an electric iron. An electric iron is not a necessity for you."

Then, who will say that razors are not a necessity? Is the minister proclaiming a new fashion in Canada?

Mr. ABBOTT: Electric razors are not a necessity.

Mr. FLEMING: I should have thought electric razors were a necessity for some people.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have never used one, myself.

Mr. MITCHELL: The hon. member does not need a razor.

Mr. FLEMING: I cannot hear some of the remarks from hon. members over there. Let the minister rise in his place and say that electric toasters are not a necessity in Canada. How many Canadian housewives in areas where there is any electric current available are prepared to agree with the minister when he says that electric toasters are luxuries the housewife can do without? Let the minister stand up on a public platform in Canada and tell the housewives of Canada that electric toasters are luxuries they must do without. Let him have the courage to tell them that. He is saying to the Canadian housewife, "Just you buy an electric toaster, and I will levy a 25 per cent tax against you." And when that is done he tells us it is done in the name of draining off surplus purchasing power! Whose purchasing power is he draining off? Is it the purchasing power of the wealthy? No, it is not the wealthy who are suffering from this tax. If we have had any discriminatory measures before this House of Commons at the present session—and we certainly have had a number of them—this piece of legislation is the most discriminatory of them all. It is the rankest kind of discrimination against the people of small means.

Does the minister mean to tell me that the housewife who wishes to have a cheap electric toaster—not an expensive automatic toaster, but just a cheap electric toaster—is to be called upon by this government to pay a 25 per cent impost upon it. And he tells this to us in the name of directing the Canadian economy along paths which are in keeping with the government plan.

If the government is prepared to admit that it is embarking upon an era of planned economy, then here is apparently the first long step in the process. For my part, I do not want any of this government's planning of the affairs of the people of Canada, when the minister conceives it to be government policy, and a necessity on the part of the government, to say to the housewife who is already having a hard enough time to make ends meet, "If you want to buy a new toaster, even a cheap one to replace your broken toaster, I am going to charge you an additional 25 per cent tax on it, because I think it is good for you and also for the Canadian economy."

[Mr. Fleming.]

That is what the minister is saying to the housewife today. He says he knows better than the housewife how her dollar ought to be spent. And he says this is not an inflationary measure. What is it that causes inflation? Surely it is a situation wherein the supply of goods is not adequate to take up the purchasing power. How is the minister to justify this tax as an anti-inflationary measure? He puts these things beyond the reach of people who need them, people of small means.

These taxes are not confined to expensive articles. These are taxes which are applied to all articles of the kind, regardless of how dear or how cheap they may be. And to me, that is a complete exposure of the fallacy of the minister's argument in support of what he calls his fiscal policy.

The last argument the minister has dared to advance in support of this iniquitous measure is that the government can very well do with the revenue. Is it not amazing talk coming from this government which, for many months past, has been busy cheering itself and shouting from the housetops about the great surplus it has been rolling up this year? How did this surplus come about? Well, we shall have something to say about that at the proper time, as to whether it is a genuine surplus or not. But let us take it on the basis upon which the government has put it forward. It is boasting about having a surplus of three-quarters of a billion dollars in the first eight or nine months of the fiscal year. The minister says, in the face of that, "We can do with the revenue from this measure".

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. I suggest that the hon. member confine his remarks to this measure.

Mr. FLEMING: I say most emphatically I am dealing with this measure. I am answering the argument put forward by the Minister of Finance in support of this very measure, when he said he could very well do with the revenue from it. We will find his words at page—

Mr. MITCHELL: I would suggest that the hon. member speak louder and address the Chair.

Mr. FLEMING: Mr. Chairman, I will speak as loudly as it is necessary in order to be heard in this chamber. I shall continue to address you, sir, and I suggest to the minister who has just spoken that for once he make a serious endeavour to abide by the rules of the house which call upon a member to rise in his place and ask permission to ask a question, and not to blurt out these interpolations as he is doing. It has got to the point where no one takes his observations in the middle of a speech seriously any more.

Here is what the minister said. At page 336 of Hansard, dealing with this measure, along with other measures, he said, "At the same time, additional revenue will not be unwelcome." At a time like this, when the rank and file of the Canadian people are having a difficult time to meet the rising costs of living, and when they are having a difficult time to meet their tax burden, and at a time when the minister has been boasting from the housetops about his unprecedented budget surplus, how has he the temerity, I say, to come before the House of Commons of Canada to seek to justify an additional impost upon the ground that he can do with the additional revenue that it promises? Any minister of finance at a time like this who seriously puts before the House of Commons that argument, in purported justification of a demand for an additional impost upon the Canadian people, has forfeited any right to be taken seriously in the House of Commons in what he says.

Indirect taxes, again! We on this side of the house have been fighting against this crushing load of indirect taxes. This is the kind of tax which bears so heavily upon the consumer. This is the kind of tax which bears relatively so much more heavily upon the man of small means than upon the man of larger means. We fought that fight last year. We are going on fighting that battle over again for the small man in this country, against the attempt by this government to heap the load upon him. The small man may not see these hidden taxes which bear so heavily upon him. Here we have a government which has already this year taken out of the pockets of the Canadian people more than a billion dollars in indirect taxation. They like to do it, because they think the Canadian taxpayer does not realize how much he is paying in these hidden taxes. The money is coming out of their pockets just the same; and the Minister of Finance thinks that somehow these taxes will be so hidden in the price of the commodities the consumer has to buy that he will not notice the tax, and that he will not have any way of voicing his true opinion and his resentment against these additional levies.

The government policy, if you can say that this government has a policy at all, is just so shot through with contradiction that it is utterly impossible to rationalize what the government is doing. It is talking in one breath about the cost of living; we are hearing a great deal about how important it is that people should keep down prices, but here this government, by the most deliberate and barefaced act, is seeking to increase those prices, not by five per cent or ten per cent but by 25 per cent. It is a shocking demonstration of duplicity on the part of the government, a contradiction in every term. The government is contradicting itself. In one breath the government is talking about the desirability of keeping down the cost of living, and then the government turns around and, by its next act, adds to the cost of living with these iniquitous and exorbitant imposts.

We have been hearing something about inventory profits, profits that come about by reason of the advances in prices. Just a few days ago the Minister of Finance told this house in committee that he was aware that inventory profits had been taken by retailers on goods on their shelves which were within the classes enumerated in this resolution, even though the tax had not been paid upon them. Let this be known to the Canadian people throughout the length and breadth of Canada! He said he would not blame them for doing so. He said he would not blame the retailer for advancing the prices of articles on his shelves in these classes of goods by the 25 per cent, even though they had not paid the tax. He said he would not blame them, that it was all right to take an inventory mark-up in that way.

Do you realize, Mr. Chairman, what that means? The dominion Minister of Finance is saying to the Canadian retailer, "All right; go ahead; charge up your 25 per cent on the cost of these articles as you sell them over the counter to the consumer. It is all right; you have not paid the tax on them, but we are taxing some fellow farther back and by and by, some months from now, you may be getting some of these tax-paid goods on your shelves; but it is all right; put on your mark-up now." That is the very government which has been deprecating mark-ups by retailers in other respects, but approves them as long as they are related to this government's iniquitous tax.

Mr. ABBOTT: It has been standard practice ever since confederation.

Mr. FLEMING: The minister says it has been standard practice. I say to him that is the old story. Every time I pick up Hansard following my having said anything I find Hansard larded up with the interjections of the minister.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is the first interjection I have made in thirty minutes.

Mr. FLEMING: He puts his interjections on Hansard in contravention to the rules of the house. When I pick up Hansard the next day I find his quips on Hansard. He should either follow the rules of the house or just let us have a free-for-all discussion without regard to the rules of the house. It is just not fair for some to be compelled to follow the rules of the house, while the Minister of Finance regards himself as standing above all the rules of the house.

Let it be known that the Minister of Finance has condoned a 25 per cent mark-up on goods of the classes enumerated in this resolution as long as they were on the shelves of the retailer before the enactment of these taxes which were imposed by a radio announcement on November 17, whether the tax had been paid or not. The minister says it is standard practice. He knows it has been done. He was apparently aware that it would be done. He apparently approved it. I say to him that would cause any responsible minister to hesitate before imposing such an iniquitous tax, if he knew it would occasion inventory profits of 25 per cent.

Mr. BAKER: Is the hon. member trying to talk this out? We would like to know whether he is trying to delay the legislation or not?

Mr. FLEMING: I know the hon. member and I think his question is quite unworthy of any hon. member in this house.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. FLEMING: I think he knows me well enough to know that I am perfectly serious in what I am doing. I shall certainly finish before eleven o'clock. If there are a few more interruptions I am quite prepared to answer them, but those who make the interruptions or cause them to be made must take full responsibility for the length of time consumed in making necessary answers.

You require no further proof of the utter irresponsibility of a measure of this kind, the utter iniquity of the imposition of a tax imposed over the radio than the fact that the minister has changed these most illegal taxes. Taxes have been removed from some of the original classes, just because the minister has waved his hand and said, "They are off." Then he says to the people, "You can get the taxes back." How are the people who paid these taxes or who paid the inventory mark-up to get them back? How many purchasers will be able to go back to the retailers and give proof of having paid this 25 per cent? It might be all right in the case of a small store with a small clientele, but it would be quite impossible in the case of large stores. People do not keep track of these things. They did not know that they would have an opportunity of going back and collecting this 25 per cent tax. They did not know that the minister would change his mind and see in part the folly of his ways. I wish he had seen it completely. The whole thing has just thrown Canadian business into a turmoil so far as the classes of goods enumerated in this resolution are concerned. This is my final word.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. FLEMING: If hon. members opposite knew how they encourage me, perhaps they would not be quite so vociferous.

Mr. MITCHELL: Only ten minutes more.

Mr. FLEMING: My final word to the Minister of Finance is this. He may feel that there is a question of personal prestige or face involved in his standing subbornly on this tax. I wish to assure him as one who, I think, is giving him better counsel than a lot of people around him, that he will be a bigger man in the eyes of the Canadian people if he comes forward now and admits his mistake and withdraws this tax. The minister knows that such withdrawal would be received with acclaim throughout the length and breadth of Canada.

If the minister persists stubbornly in the imposition of this tax, this tax which has been conceived in illegality, which has been levied illegally, which has been exacted at the expense of the constitution and extorted from the people of Canada, then I tell him that this government and the minister will be sorry for it one day. The best advice that anyone can give to the Minister of Finance today is that he forget about questions of personal prestige or political face and stand up courageously and manfully, and withdraw this resolution.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. Unfortunately when I was speaking a little earlier in the day I did not have my hearing aid with me. I appreciate the fact that there are many members on both sides who speak so that I cannot hear them. I said something to the hon. member for Cartier. I said to him that I was speaking in a way that he probably would not understand what I was saying because of average intelligence and so on. You drew my attention to the fact that I should not have said that. He drew my attention to the fact that I should not have said that. I do not think I should have said that. On the other hand, I do not think the hon. member for Cartier is a gentleman. He said something which I do not think any member of the house should say.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. The hon. member will have to withdraw that remark. It is not in order to call another member not a gentleman.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I do not think he was.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. member will withdraw that remark.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): No, I do not think I should withdraw it. It is my own thought and I expressed it.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I must ask the hon. member to withdraw.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): If the chairman thinks that the hon. member is a gentleman, I withdraw my remark, but I cannot help having my own opinion. On the other hand, Mr. Chairman, I think you should call the hon. gentleman to order for saying that I would not have said what I did if I had been sober. I leave it to the house that I made a fairly good speech and that I could not have made the argument I did if I was tight or drunk. Therefore I ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw his remark.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Withdraw.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I think the hon. member for Cartier should also withdraw the statement he made.

Mr. HARTT: Mr. Chairman, on your ruling I take the word of the hon. gentleman and withdraw.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Mr. Chairman, I am sure that you will have noticed the great anxiety shown by my hon. friends on the other side of the house in the last few minutes to come to a vote. This afternoon they had an opportunity to be here to vote, and they did not show very much desire to be here and vote. Having regard to what occurred this afternoon, I do not think it is out of place at this time to discuss in general this resolution and to put to the minister some questions that still remain unanswered.

I have not taken part in this discussion, but one matter I did want to bring to the attention of the minister has to do in general with the excise tax. I refer particularly to the excise tax on tobacco and, in particular, to tobacco that will be exported within the next few months to Europe and the continent under the Marshall plan.

Mr. ABBOTT: There is no reference to that in this resolution.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: No, but I intend to ask that it be included. The situation today in so far as the tobacco industry is concerned is that in 1947 in this country 98,146 acres of tobacco were grown, with a total production of 90,360,000 pounds. On that tobacco there is, of course, a very great excise tax. I am not rising for the purpose of taking up any extra time but I want to bring this to the attention of the minister. I recently visited in that part of Ontario where the tobacco industry has advanced by leaps and bounds within the last few years. My understanding is that this year there is a possibility that there will be a production over and above what will be consumed in Canada or be exported. Having regard to the fact that, under the Marshall plan when it comes into existence, purchases will be made in Canada for export to Europe and that one of the things greatly desired in Europe is cigarettes, my suggestion with a view to increasing production in this country is that the minister should make provision whereby, in so far as exports of tobacco are concerned under the Marshall plan to Europe and generally to other parts of the world where the plan will be applied, the government of Canada remove the excise tax from such exports. That would give encouragement to the production of tobacco in this country.

Mr. ABBOTT: There is no excise tax on exported tobacco.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I appreciate that, but I am speaking of cigarettes produced in Canada and exported in that manner.

Mr. ABBOTT: There is no tax imposed on that.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I have the authority right here before me when the minister says there is no tax.

An hon. MEMBER: Eleven o'clock. You made it.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: That remark of my hon. friend is entirely unwarranted. I would not have expected it from him, but I know that at this time of night remarks are sometimes made that we would not make at other times.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Just before I leave the chair, may I recall that the hon. member for Fort William asked a question this afternoon in regard to the rules in the British house, and I think I should tell him what the rule is there. It will be found in Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, paragraph 287, which reads:

> Mr. Speaker, or the chairman, after having called the attention of the house, or of the committee, to the conduct of a member who persists in irrelevance, or tedious repetition either of his own argument, or of arguments used by other members in the debate, may direct him to discontinue his speech.

That is standing order 19 of the British House of Commons.

Resolution stands.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. BRACKEN: What will be the business tomorrow?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: It is the intention of the government to carry on with this resolution and with the other stages of the measure just as expeditiously as the rules of the house permit. If, in spite of what took place today, that should be accomplished before the end of the day tomorrow, the next measure to be taken will be the resolution of the Minister of Finance to remove the tax on tea and coffee. That resolution was dealt with and progress reported on December 19, as appears at page 536 of Hansard. If and when that is disposed of we shall proceed with the second reading of Bill No. 171, to amend the Agricultural Products Act, and after that with interim supply and supplementary estimates.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, March 23, 1948

The house met at three o'clock.

FLAXSEED

ANNOUNCEMENT OF PRICE FOR 1948-49 CROP YEAR

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I wish to make an announcement concerning the 1948 crop of flaxseed. The government has been advised that to meet our domestic requirements we can do with a somewhat smaller acreage of flaxseed than was sown last year. There are some definite signs of easing in the world situation on oil bearing seeds and distinct possibilities that we will no longer have the serious shortage that we have been facing for the past several years. With this changing situation in mind, it has been decided that the Canadian wheat board will be instructed to support prices of $4 per bushel for the top grades of flaxseed, basis delivered at Montreal or basis in store at Fort William/Port Arthur for the 1948-49 crop year commencing next August 1, should the market drop to that level. On the same date, the wartime prices and trade board ceiling of $5 per bushel will be removed, thus permitting buyer and seller to trade freely at prices above the support levels. In any event, the producers sowing flaxseed this year will be sure of a price not less than $4 per bushel for top grades.

FLOOD CONDITIONS

QUESTION AS TO FEDERAL RESPONSIBILITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. T. RICHARD (Ottawa East): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. It has to do with the flooding in the Rideau river district. In view of the fact that the government now owns the riverfront from Rideau falls to Hog's Back will the minister state (1) what assistance has been offered in the past to the adjoining municipalities to prevent floods; and (2) whether his officers have studied the responsibility of the dominion government to assist in the prevention of floods on the Rideau river, and its liability therein, especially in the case of an emergency?

Hon. ALPHONSE FOURNIER (Minister of Public Works): I will take this question as a notice and will give full answer tomorrow. I shall have to look over the files to see if this is a case under the jurisdiction of the federal government.

Mr. COLDWELL: I should like to ask a supplementary question. In view of the widespread damage from floods, will the minister give consideration to trying to enter into some form of co-operation with the provincial governments with a view to taking effective steps for flood control, inasmuch as we have some responsibility for navigable waters?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): It is admitted that the federal government has no jurisdiction in these cases. There is only one statute which gives us jurisdiction, and that is the Navigable Waters Protection Act. We are ready to consider any situation, but at this time I would not want to commit the government to any obligation in this respect.

Mr. COLDWELL: I simply asked for co-operation.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I should like to ask a supplementary question in view of what the minister has just said. The federal government has rights with respect to navigation through the placing of dams across rivers. I do not think it can escape its responsibility for flooding caused by dams put in these rivers by its authority.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Whenever floods are caused by federal works, there is a responsibility. But in the instance cited this afternoon it is not established that any works which the federal government has constructed are the cause of these floods.

Mr. GRAYDON: May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Public Works? Will he be kind enough, when he makes a statement tomorrow with respect to flood responsibilities of the federal government, to include in the report a statement regarding the situation in connection with the Etobicoke river?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We have looked into that question with respect to the condition at Etobicoke river and other places, and there is absolutely no federal jurisdiction in connection with them. That is the information that comes from my department. I understand it is exclusively a matter of provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. GRAYDON: The Grand river, which would be in a somewhat similar situation to that of the Etobicoke, is the precedent upon which the people in my part of the country are basing their claim.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The scheme in connection with the Grand river was entered into by the federal government, the provincial government and the local municipalities during the depression years. During those years moneys were spent by the federal government to relieve unemployment, and we did enter into an agreement with the province of Ontario and with the municipalities and made an expenditure of over one million dollars. This scheme is being continued from the point of view of surveys for future works, but no similar agreement was signed or entered into by the federal government with regard to the Etobicoke and their problems. I understand that application was made some time ago by these municipalities to the province, but to my knowledge actually nothing has reached the Department of Public Works.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

QUESTION AS TO DELAY IN PAYMENT OF BENEFITS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. K. FRASER (Peterborough West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. As municipal welfare departments are receiving many applications each day for public assistance from unemployed persons during the time that these persons are waiting to receive their first cheque from the unemployment insurance commission, and as the minister knows this welfare is charged one hundred per cent to the municipality, this is the question: Will consideration be given by the commission to shortening the delay in the payment of the first cheque to a waiting period of six days instead of the present waiting period of nine days, during which time no payment is made of unemployment insurance benefits?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon. member should not make a speech.

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): The hon. member need not finish it. I can answer the question.

Mr. FRASER: I have another question. Has the dominion government considered increasing these unemployment insurance benefits owing to the increased cost of living?

[Mr. Fournier (Hull).]

Mr. MITCHELL: The hon. member has stated the position correctly. Of course, the responsibility for unemployment relief is that of the municipalities and the provinces. At the moment amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act are being studied by my department and an announcement of government policy will be made in the usual manner.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ESTABLISHMENT OF CANADIAN RANGERS AS CORPS OF CANADIAN ARMY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. HOWARD C. GREEN (Vancouver South): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Press dispatches of the last day or two indicate that militia ranger units are to be established in northern Canada. Will the minister make a statement with regard to this proposal and indicate whether or not that will include northern British Columbia?

Hon. BROOKE CLAXTON (Minister of National Defence): I should like to have had time to get full information for the hon. member. Speaking from memory I can say that last April when I was in Vancouver I announced the formation of the Canadian rangers as a corps of the Canadian army, to be organized on the general pattern of the Pacific coast rangers during the second world war. The intention is that this corps shall be organized in companies in areas where there are no reserve army units, particularly in the north and along the coasts of Canada. The purpose will be to act as guides, to make available local knowledge, to assist in search and rescue work, and to report any activities that should not be going on in consequence of action by an enemy, or the like. These men in the Canadian rangers will be issued a rifle, bayonet, belt, and some ammunition, and they will have training in their companies in line with the kind of work they are intended to do. In this way it is hoped to supplement the work which the reserve army units do in the more organized centres of population.

R.C.A.F.—PRESS REPORT AS TO FIGHTER STRENGTH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. B. McKAY (Weyburn): I wish to address a question to the Minister of National Defence, a copy of which I sent to his office. In view of the large expenditure of public money on the R.C.A.F. would the minister state whether or not the article which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen on March 20 last is a statement of fact, namely "Not one fighter ready for action—Canada woefully weak on land and in the air should war come again."

Hon. BROOKE CLAXTON (Minister of National Defence): The statement as quoted by the hon. member is not in accordance with the facts.

BUILDING OF HIGHWAY FROM BORDER TO CHURCHILL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. RONALD MOORE (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of National Defence. Can the minister state whether recent reports in the press that an all-weather highway is to be constructed from the United States border to Churchill, Manitoba, are correct? If so, is the road to be built by the Canadian government, the United States government or jointly by both.

Hon. BROOKE CLAXTON (Minister of National Defence): I have no knowledge of any such road. I should think it might be a matter for the provincial government.

THE BUDGET

INQUIRY AS TO PROBABLE DATE OF PRESENTATION —REVISED INCOME TAX ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Can the Minister of Finance give us any indication as to the date on which the budget will be brought down, and also when he proposes to introduce the revised Income Tax Act and get under way in that matter?

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): I am afraid I cannot give any indication as to when the budget will be brought down. My time so far has been taken up with other matters, with which the house is familiar, and I have not been able to give the consideration to budget matters that I should like to have given to them. I am hoping, however, that I shall soon be able to turn to that important phase of my activities.

On the question as to when the revised Income Tax Act will be brought in, I cannot say definitely. I had tentatively thought of bringing it in after the presentation of the budget, either incorporating in it the budget provisions, if that is desirable, or otherwise, but I am not in a position yet to say definitely when I can bring it in.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): With regard to the Income Tax Act, does the minister think that if it is brought down as late as that, having regard to the complexities and the difficulties involved, it will be possible to pass it during the present session?

Mr. ABBOTT: I would hope so. We are still receiving some important representations in connection with it and are doing a good deal of work considering those representations and considering what changes if any should be made.

Mr. FLEMING: May I ask the Minister of Finance a supplementary question as to the matter of procedure in connection with the new Income Tax Act? Has the minister considered referring the bill to one of the standing committees of the house—for instance, to the committee on banking and commerce—so that representations of interested organizations can be made with regard to it?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes, the question of doing that is still under consideration. No decision has been made.

IMMIGRATION

PRESS REPORT AS TO APPLICATION FOR AUTHORITY TO BRING IN BRITISH SEAMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. DANIEL McIVOR (Fort William): I would like to ask the Minister of Labour if there is anything in the report which I have noticed published in the press that Captain R. Scott Misener, of Port Colborne, who is head of two shipping companies, has applied for authority to bring five hundred British seamen into Canada. I have information which indicates that there are quite a number of Canadian seamen now unemployed.

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): The dominion authorities have no knowledge whatsoever of an application—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MITCHELL: Just a minute.

Mr. GRAYDON: Kindly address the Chair.

Mr. MITCHELL: What kind of meat do they raise these fellows on?

An hon. MEMBER: Raw meat.

Mr. MITCHELL: The dominion government has no knowledge of an application by Captain Scott Misener for the admission of five hundred British seamen. But it should be pointed out and clearly understood that there is perfect freedom for people from the British isles to enter Canada provided they comply with the usual regulations. In addition, I would say to my hon. friend that, as he well knows, this is a seasonal industry and

I would assume that unemployment among seamen will clear up as soon as the ice disappears from the lakes and transportation is resumed in the normal way.

WAR ASSETS

DISPOSAL OF BUILDINGS AT PRINCE RUPERT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. G. ARCHIBALD (Skeena): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, of which I have given notice. If the agreement which Mr. Kenneth Meek made regarding the American built installations at Prince Rupert is not fulfilled by March 31, will the government agree to consult with civic bodies as to their disposal?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): If the present option is not exercised, the property will be disposed of following the usual practice of War Assets Corporation.

WHEAT

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON INCREASE IN INITIAL PAYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. J. BENTLEY (Swift Current): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I have not sent notice, because he does not need notice for this question. In view of the fact that Bill No. 135 has been passed, is the minister prepared to make a statement to the house as to what the increase in the initial payment on wheat will be?

Mr. POULIOT: It has not passed yet.

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): To the best of my knowledge and belief it is far from passed.

Mr. BENTLEY: What was the answer?

Mr. HOWE: To the best of my knowledge and belief the bill in question is far from having the approval of parliament.

COMBINES ACT

STATEMENT AS TO PROSECUTION OF DENTAL FIRMS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker I undertook yesterday, in response to a question by the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker), to give the house a statement today respecting the circumstances surrounding the recent dismissal by a Toronto court of the crown's case against members of an alleged combine in the dental supplies trade. Since the matter is still open to appeal and thus is or shortly may be sub judice, hon. members will not expect me to make any extended comment on the case at this time.

Following a report by the commissioner of the Combines Investigation Act, I referred the matter for prosecution to Mr. D. L. McCarthy, K.C., of Toronto, whom all members will recognize as one of the outstanding barristers of the dominion. He was ably assisted by two experienced Toronto counsel, Messrs. Peter Wright and D. A. Keith.

A charge was laid at Toronto against eighteen dental supply companies for conspiracy in undue restraint of trade. The trial began on February 23 and ended on March 18. The crown's case was based on more than five hundred documents seized under search warrant from the possession of the accused companies. No evidence was submitted by the defence, and after argument lasting almost three days the learned trial judge, the Honourable Mr. Justice Barlow, upheld the defence motion for a directed verdict and directed the jury to enter a verdict of not guilty.

Acquittal was not based on the information contained in the documents found in the possession of the accused companies, but followed the judge's ruling that the documents had not been sufficiently authenticated by the fact of possession, as claimed by the crown. According to the ruling, the crown should have proved specifically that the companies actually existed during the period of the charge, that the persons purportedly acting on behalf of them actually had authority to act, and that signatures of persons signing letters should have been proved by other evidence.

The eminent counsel acting for the crown proceeded with full confidence in the merits of the case disclosed by the documents and in the manner in which they were proved. Withdrawal of the case from the jury resulted not from inadvertence or unintentional omission on the part of crown counsel, but from a basic difference of opinion as to the rules of evidence to be applied.

In view of the importance of the matter and its possible implications affecting future cases under the Combines Investigation Act, I have asked Mr. McCarthy for a special report. Until I have received and considered it, I shall not be in a position to indicate what may be done by way of appeal or otherwise.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: May I ask this supplementary question: After the crown's case had been concluded, is it not a fact that counsel asked to have the case reopened, as is usual when technical proof is not forthcoming, in order to advance certain further proof to meet the objection raised?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: And did not the judge refuse?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: What reason did he give for refusing such an obviously just request?

Mr. ILSLEY: I have read the report of that part of the argument, and the reasons are there given by the judge. I would not however undertake to recapitulate them for the benefit of the house.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): May I ask this question arising out of the same subject matter—

Mr. GILLIS: Legal jargon.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Did I understand the minister to say that they simply put these documents in, having produced them from the crown's custody, without an effort to prove the signatures?

Mr. ILSLEY: I was so informed, but I have not read the long transcript of evidence. I am informed that crown counsel based their case upon this proposition, that the documents were sufficiently authenticated by the fact of possession.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Is it not also a fact that they failed to prove that these were incorporated companies?

OLD AGE PENSIONS

PENSIONS FOR THE BLIND—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. O. PROBE (Regina City): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. What is the present policy of the federal government in regard to sharing of costs with provinces in respect of old age pensions and pensions for the blind? How does the minister reconcile this policy with the proposals made to the provinces in August 1945?

Hon. PAUL MARTIN (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The hon. member has merely to look at the Old Age Pensions Act, which sets out the government's administrative policy. The government, unless it changes the act, cannot have a policy beyond the direction contained in the statute itself. The statute is quite clear, and I am sure the hon. member is familiar with it. I cannot add anything further at the moment.

Mr. PROBE: Would the minister comment on the second portion of my question? How does he reconcile the policy of the federal government with the proposals made to the provinces in August 1945?

Mr. MARTIN: There is no occasion for reconciliation.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REFERENCES TO REMARKS IN DEBATE ON MARCH 22

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JEAN FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Temiscouata): Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a matter of personal explanation? At page 2480 of Hansard for yesterday I am reported accurately as having stated that Your Honour had given a ruling and that your ruling had been supported by the house. I could not believe that you had not rendered a ruling, nor could I believe that if you had rendered one it would have been reversed by the house—which shows that truth and likelihood are two different things.

Mr. DANIEL McIVOR (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. Yesterday I had the presumption to ask the chairman a question in connection with a ruling and he courteously answered me at the close of the sitting after he had had time to consider it. The hon. member for Calgary West thought that I was out of order and that as I had not got an answer at the time I would not get one. He said:

> My hon. friend was a much better soccer football player than parliamentarian. He never won a game playing football, so that will give the committee an idea of my estimate of his ability as a parliamentarian.

For six years Wesley college never beat us, so I could not always have been on the losing team. I should also like to say that I did not seek his estimate of my ability as a parliamentarian and it has no more weight than the false impression it might make. I just take it as a gush of uncontrolled gas from Calgary West.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. McIVOR: I forgive him and I thank him for the slam.

Mr. A. L. SMITH (Calgary West): On a question of privilege. May I say with respect to my old and honoured friend that my remarks were meant to be facetious. If I have offended him in any way, either reasonably or unreasonably, I hope he will accept my apology, which I now tender to him.

MOHAWK AIRPORT

QUESTION OF DEMOLITION OPERATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. STOKES (Hastings South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of National Defence. Is he now in a position to answer the question asked on Friday last with respect to the Mohawk airport?

Hon. BROOKE CLAXTON (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the airfield in question had been declared surplus some time ago, and steps were being taken for its disposal. However several weeks ago I issued instructions that all similar steps for the disposal of naval, military and air properties which had been declared surplus should be suspended while the matter was being reconsidered. That is the situation today with regard to this property.

SASKATCHEWAN RIVER

INQUIRY AS TO CONSTRUCTION OF BRIDGE AT OR NEAR SASKATCHEWAN LANDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. MacNICOL (Davenport): May I ask the Minister of Public Works if the government through his department has given consent to the construction of either a low level or a high level bridge across the South Saskatchewan river at or near Saskatchewan Landing? If consent has been given for the construction of a low level bridge, is provision being made to safeguard future navigation of the river?

Hon. ALPHONSE FOURNIER (Minister of Public Works): Some time ago the government of the province of Saskatchewan applied for approval of a site for the construction of a bridge on the Saskatchewan river. This approval is required under the Navigable Waters Protection Act. The application was sent to our engineer in Saskatchewan and we have not received a report as yet. He was instructed to look into all the phases of 'his contemplated construction. I understand that if a low level bridge were built and later a dam were erected below the bridge which would raise the level of the river and perhaps cause damage to the bridge, the government might be responsible for such damages. Our engineer is looking into all phases and implications of this application and when we receive his report we will make a decision.

Mr. MacNICOL: Consent has not yet been given?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Oh, no.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

TRADE UNION BILL INTRODUCED IN P.E.I. LEGISLATURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): I should like to ask the Minister of Justice if he has received a copy of Bill 31 of the Prince Edward Island legislature, an act to amend the trade union act?

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Justice): I have not received it from the Prince Edward Island authorities but I received it from a delegation which informed me that it is a copy of the bill that was passed.

Mr. COLDWELL: Is the minister giving consideration to advising the lieutenant governor to reserve the bill or disallow it?

Mr. ILSLEY: It is not the intention of the government to take that very unusual course with respect to this bill.

WAYS AND MEANS

EXCISE TAX ACT AMENDMENT

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Golding in the chair.

1. Effective on and after November 18, 1947, an excise tax of 25 per cent is imposed on the following goods:

(a) The following electrical appliances: waffle irons; roasters; kettles; chafing dishes; juice extractors; coffee makers; toasters of all kinds; portable humidifiers; curling irons or tongs, hair dryers; permanent waving machines and spacers or clamps; rods and heaters therefor; razors and shavers; garbage disposal units;

(b) The following electrical appliances when adapted to household use: food or drink mixers; food choppers and grinders; irons and ironers; vacuum cleaners and attachments therefor; floor waxers and polishers;

(c) Electric or gas refrigerators or freezing equipment, and coils, condensing or compressor units, cabinets, boxes, evaporators and expansion valves therefor; all the foregoing when adapted to household or apartment use or when for use in places of entertainment, amusement or recreation, including rinks, auditoria, halls and clubs;

(d) Firearms except for military or police purposes;

(e) Outboard motors;

(f) Motorcycles, and all other two- or three-wheeled motor-driven vehicles including motors for attachment to bicycles but not including vehicles specially designed for carrying goods or for use by invalids;

(g) Projectors for slides, films or pictures designed for industrial or professional photographers' use;

(h) Toilet articles of all kinds (including combs, mirrors and brushes other than tooth brushes or shaving brushes the duty paid value or the Canadian manufacturer's selling price of which combs, mirrors and brushes is more than twenty-five cents each) and which items do not already come within any other item in schedule one of the said act.

2. That on and after November 18, 1947, the rate of excise tax on automobiles adapted or adaptable for passenger use with seating capacity for not more than ten persons each, imported into or manufactured or produced in Canada be increased from ten per cent to the following rates, namely, on automobiles valued at $1,200 or less, 25 per cent over $1,200 but not more than $2,000, 25 per cent on 1,200 plus 50 per cent on the amount in excess of $1,200; over $2,000, 25 per cent on $1,200 plus 50 per cent on $800 plus 75 per cent on the amount in excess of $2,000.

3. That on and after November 18, 1947, the rate of excise tax on phonographs, record-playing devices, radio broadcast receiving sets and tubes therefor, be increased from ten per cent to twenty-five per cent.

4. That on and after November 18, 1947, the rate of excise tax on cameras, photographic films and plates, projectors for slides, films or pictures, except those designed exclusively for industrial or professional photographers' use, be increased from ten per cent to twenty-five per cent.

5. That on and after November 18, 1947, electricity and gas used in dwellings be exempt from consumption or sales tax; and

6. That on and after November 18, 1947, the excise tax of one cent per pound on sugar, grape sugar, glucose, sugar syrup, corn syrup, etc., be repealed.

Mr. JACKMAN: I asked the minister yesterday if he would explain the government's reason for the imposition of excise taxes on motor cars, particularly in view of the fact that the government has set up a quota on United States exchange to be used for importations.

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): In the course of this protracted debate I have given that answer at least once, and perhaps more than once. In any event it is this: I do not feel that the direct import control under schedule III of the other bill will prove completely effective in controlling the output of motor cars in this country. I should like to see the domestic consumption of these cars further reduced. For that reason the tax is being imposed both on domestically produced motor cars and on the limited quantity which are being imported under quota.

Mr. JACKMAN: Am I to understand that the government is imposing the excise tax on motor cars, not as a means of saving or conserving United States exchange but for some sumptuary purpose that has not yet been explained to the committee? In other words, the minister admits that the excise tax on motor cars is not in any way a measure specifically designed to effect the conservation of United States exchange.

Mr. ABBOTT: I said that I do not believe the direct controls can be as completely effective as I would like to see them. Every reduction in the consumption of motor cars in Canada, whether domestically produced or not, does effect a saving in United States exchange, because every car contains a substantial United States content. In any event it contains steel which under present conditions is to all intents and purposes one hundred per cent United States content.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Chairman, I have just a word to say about this kind of legislation. I disagree with it but I will still give the minister the benefit of the doubt. However, this is the last time.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): The minister was going to give us certain information today?

Mr. ABBOTT: I undertook to give the information my hon. friend asked for in committee after second reading. I have some of it here now, although I have not had time as yet to look at it with the officials. It was obtained just this morning. We had to get in touch with the different producers. We are indebted to the manufacturers of automobiles and radios for this information. The departmental records show only the tax collected, and not the sales. In the case of motor cars the figures have been obtained from the three major automobile manufacturers.

I suppose these figures can be taken as indicative. They are all we have to date:

	1946	1947
August	$3,509,165	$9,628,833
September	3,769,068	14,050,530
October	6,267,877	14,596,409
November (1-17)	4,257,074 (estimated)	7,633,296 (actual)
November (18-30)	3,255,602 (estimated)	7,332,123 (actual)
December	6,748,604	14,584,093
	1947	1948
January	$7,965,121	$10,888,913
	1947	1948
February	$9,301,563	$8,970,820

On radios, using the same basis, August, September, October, November and December, 1946, and January and February, 1947, as contrasted with the corresponding months in 1947 and 1948, the figures are as follows:

	1946	1947
August	$ 613,712	$ 828,272
September	499,983	1,168,588
October	737,628	1,404,145
November	909,065	1,705,132
December	1,441,144	1,990,074
	1947	1948
January	1,086,779	786,742
February	987,049	713,239

Those are the only figures I have been able to get so far. They show, as my hon. friend will see when he studies them, a marked downward consumption in January and February, both in automobiles and in radios.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Those are the sales figures?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes, as obtained from the manufacturer.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Has the minister attempted to get a figure showing what those sales figures mean in terms of United States exchange?

Mr. ABBOTT: I have not attempted to translate them into terms of United States dollars. I do not know that I could. These items contain a substantial United States content. In automobiles it varies between different cars. In the Ford car the Canadian content is about the highest, approximately 75 per cent. Steel is one of the big items. Some of it under normal circumstances might be considered as Canadian content, but under existing conditions we have to import large quantities of steel.

Mr. JAENICKE: Are the figures just quoted domestic sales, export sales, or both?

Mr. ABBOTT: Domestic sales only.

Mr. JAENICKE: Has the minister any figures on the export sales?

Mr. ABBOTT: I was not asked for them and have not got them here. The manufacturers were good enough to supply these figures on fairly short notice. I have no doubt the export figures could be obtained.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): It would seem to me, and I imagine the minister will agree, there is nothing in the figures given to indicate any substantial saving in United States dollars.

Mr. ABBOTT: On the contrary, I would say they are a clear indication that we are making substantial savings of United States exchange.

[Mr. Abbott.]

Mr. FERGUSON: Can the minister give us an idea of the approximate value of the steel that goes into an automobile?

Mr. ABBOTT: I am not enough of an expert to be able to do that.

Mr. FERGUSON: Approximately only.

Mr. ABBOTT: I could not hazard a guess.

Mr. FERGUSON: The raw steel that goes into the manufacture of an automobile would be worth from two to three hundred dollars, and you are imposing on the already overburdened taxpayer who purchases a necessity like an automobile a tax that is almost as much as the cost of the United States steel that goes into it. It was ill-conceived to bring the Canadian dollar to par with the United States dollar, and now in order to straighten out the mess brought about by the government's action Canadians must do without an automobile or pay in taxation almost the equivalent cost of the United States steel that goes into that car. Some method should be devised of permitting Canadians to buy cars which are a dire necessity in business throughout Canada. It should not be necessary to load more taxes on the already overburdened taxpayer to straighten out the mess into which the government has brought this country.

Mr. BROOKS: I want to ask a question with reference to projectors for slides. I do not know whether it has come up before.

Mr. ABBOTT: It has, yes.

Mr. BROOKS: Is the minister considering excepting the equipment used by schools for educational purposes? I received a letter on this matter this morning.

Mr. ABBOTT: It has been considered and rejected. I suppose everything can be reconsidered. If anything were done I think it would have to be done in the form of a remission of the tax. I cannot give any undertaking now. I have had representations myself and I know that a number of the members have. These articles contain a very high United States content.

Mr. BROOKS: Eighty to ninety per cent of them are used for educational purposes.

Mr. ABBOTT: I know, but I think for the time being the schools are reasonably well equipped.

Mr. COLDWELL: The schools during the last two or three years have put on an intensive campaign for visual education. I believe such a campaign has been carried on in my hon. friend's province of New Brunswick. I have not received any letters from New Brunswick on the subject, but I am interested in it because of my former profession. I believe they want between one and five hundred projectors to complete the campaign that they carried out during the past year; and in my own province of Saskatchewan a great deal of emphasis has been placed upon visual education. Many more projectors are needed than ever before. Because of the advantages of visual education this is something to which the minister should give consideration. Many things can be cut out that are regarded as luxuries, but this is a necessity in modern education.

Mr. ABBOTT: As I indicated yesterday, the bill as introduced will contain a provision directing that any article may be taken out from under its operation. If the trend which is still continuing in our United States dollar position continues, I would hope that I could give early consideration to eliminating an article of this kind. I would not want to give a formal undertaking now, but I shall give it consideration.

Mr. MANROSS: Has the minister any figures to show the amount of tax that is being removed by items 5 and 6?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes, I have them. The total, including the two items on which we are taking the customs duty off, tea and coffee, amount in a full year to about $21,000,000.

Mr. MANROSS: This is not the tea and coffee item.

Mr. ABBOTT: I can give my hon. friend the figures: sugar, approximately $13,000,000; gas and electricity, $6,000,000, a total of $19,000,000 on these two items.

Mr. MANROSS: Is there any figure to compare with that in regard to the amount of average tax on the first four items?

Mr. ABBOTT: No; as I have indicated two or three times before in answering questions, you cannot make an accurate estimate as to what the collection would be under these taxes, because we hoped that it would reduce sales.

Mr. STEPHENSON: I have not yet made any statement on this matter, and I do not want to repeat any argument that has been made already, but on behalf of my constituents I should like to say that they object to this unjustified tax. Some of the articles that were taxed have been taken from the list. I refer particularly to electric stoves. I understand that the people who bought stoves can demand a rebate of the 25 per cent tax which they have paid. Has the government given any directive under which the customer is authorized to take action to demand a rebate, or is it to be left to the person who bought the article to demand a rebate from the retailer? Is the customer left in the position of carrying on a dogfight with the retailer in order to get the rebate, and will the retailer be able to say that there is no government order forcing him to give a rebate? Is the government going to make a statement that these people are justified in claiming a rebate?

Mr. ABBOTT: I have made that statement in the house with respect to other articles. Electric stoves were taken out from under the operation of the resolution at a very early stage, and the officials of the Department of National Revenue tell me that no tax has been paid with respect to electric stoves. If any individual has paid a retailer a price for a stove which includes the tax figure he is entitled to a rebate, since no tax has been paid to the Department of National Revenue on electric stoves.

Mr. STEPHENSON: Is that a government order? I think these people are entitled to demand a refund of the tax that has been paid.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is a matter of law.

Mr. WEBB: The term "desired results" has been used here on many occasions. What were the desired results of cutting down the possible purchasing power or the sales of automobiles? In other words, is the desired result to cut down the purchase by fifty per cent, or twenty per cent?

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not want to put a label on any particular percentage. For instance in October 1946 the sales of motorcars from these three manufacturers that I mentioned were about $6,000,000. In the same month of 1947 they jumped to $14,500,000. That is a pretty big jump. Perhaps I should not expect that it would go back to as low a figure as 1946; I do not know. Frankly I would be pleased from the point of view of conserving United States dollars if that were possible.

Mr. WEBB: Suppose we obtain the so-called desired results and roll back more than expected, would that not in the long run create unemployment in a very high degree?

Mr. ABBOTT: Of course, if it were carried on too long; but I am reasonably hopeful that this program will not be necessary for too long, and that it will be possible progressively to relax it. But it is too early yet to say. It is less than five months since the program was announced. The results to date, as I have said before, have been most encouraging—let me say frankly, more encouraging than I have dared to hope, but I do not want to attach too much importance to that. In matters of this kind I am inclined to be essentially conservative. I have to be shown that it is a permanent trend before I will be too optimistic about it.

Mr. WEBB: There seems to be a certain fear across the country that if this tax were dropped in the course of the next month or two it would create a great deal of confusion and dissatisfaction on the part of people who have already purchased automobiles. Therefore the only way to do it would be to reduce the tax gradually.

Mr. ABBOTT: I know my hon. friend is too experienced a parliamentarian to expect me to make budget forecasts in the house.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. KNOWLES: On division.

Resolution agreed to on division.

Resolution reported.

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance) moved that the resolution be read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. BRACKEN: On division.

Resolution read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Abbott thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 172, to amend the Excise Tax Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

WAYS AND MEANS

CUSTOMS TARIFF

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Golding in the chair.

That the customs tariff be amended to provide:

1. That on and after November 18, 1947, the duty on coffee, green imported direct from the country of growth and production or purchased in bond in the United Kingdom (imposed under tariff item 28) be, in the case of the intermediate tariff, reduced from a rate of three cents per pound to two cents per pound; and

2. That on and after November 18, 1947, the duty on tea, imported direct from the country of growth and production, or purchased in bond in the United Kingdom or in any British possession (imposed under tariff item 28a) of four cents per pound in the case of the British preferential tariff be removed and in the case of the intermediate tariff be reduced from a rate of eight cents per pound to two cents per pound.

[Mr. Abbott.]

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): Mr. Chairman, the effect of this resolution is to reduce from three cents to two cents a pound the customs tariff on coffee imported under the intermediate tariff. In recent years this has represented the larger part of our coffee imports. The other part of the resolution reduces the tariff on tea from four cents a pound to free entry in the case of tea entering under the British preferential tariff and from eight cents a pound to two cents a pound in the case of intermediate tariff. Most tea comes in under the British preferential tariff.

Mr. MANROSS: What section is that?

Mr. ABBOTT: That amends the customs tariff.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I have a question on the significance of the words used in paragraph 1: the duty is removed "on coffee, green imported direct from the country of growth and production or purchased in bond in the United Kingdom." Does that cover practically all the coffee that comes into the country?

Mr. ABBOTT: I have not my tariff expert here; I telephoned and asked him to come. The fact is, as I have explained, that it reduces from three cents a pound to two cents a pound the customs tariff on coffee imported under the intermediate tariff. I am told that in recent years the larger part of our coffee imports come in under the intermediate tariff.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Is there some reason that it is done on some and not on all?

Mr. ABBOTT: I have not the commissioner of tariff here; I am sorry. I am told that this really represents the coffee that we are importing.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I am not suggesting that it is vital.

Mr. ABBOTT: I might get the information. When we are in committee on the bill I will have that information and give it to my hon. friend.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): That is fine.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am sorry I have not the information here, but I did not expect that we would make such rapid progress.

Resolution reported.

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance) moved that the resolution be read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. BRACKEN: On division.

Resolution read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Abbott thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 173, to amend the Customs Tariff.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR CONTINUANCE IN FORCE UNTIL MARCH 31, 1949

Hon. ERNEST BERTRAND (for the Minister of Agriculture) moved the second reading of Bill No. 171, to amend the Agricultural Products Act.

Mr. J. A. CHARLTON (Brant): This amendment to the Agricultural Products Act is to extend the bill for one year. I want to take this opportunity of voicing my disapproval once more of the principle of the bill. Our position has been stated clearly on previous occasions by my leader and also by the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton). My exception to the principle of this bill is based on the fact that it is a price control measure, purely under government control and that it is not what it is supposed to be, namely a marketing bill. I say that because of the minister's own statement. He has admitted that to this house, and also on various occasions when speaking outside of the house. I would even go so far as to say that this bill could be used for political purposes to the disadvantage of many farmers across the country.

I want to say a word about the effect on farmers of this type of government control. I want to make it quite clear that the farmers of this country have never asked for all the traffic would bear for their produce, and that they are satisfied to support a measure of stability for the benefit of both producer and consumer. As a result of this bill, the farmers of Canada have been subsidizing not only the consumers of Canada but the consumers of the United Kingdom. They are not satisfied with the present one-way street method or this lopsided method which the government has taken unto itself. To prove that statement I just want to quote a couple of paragraphs from the resolutions passed by the Canadian federation of agriculture at Brockville. The first, which deals with ceiling prices, is as follows:

Protesting emphatically against the manifest injustice of the recently announced policy of the federal government in singling out major agricultural products for the reimposition of ceiling prices without the reintroduction of a general policy of price control.

The next one is from the statement of the dairy farmers of Canada and is as follows:

If price controls are to be imposed on food products of which they are the primary producers, dairy farmers insist that controls be placed on all factors entering into their costs.

I say that the government has maintained on various occasions that the Agricultural Prices Support Act of 1944 was meant for this purpose, but it is not permanent legislation. The past experience of the potato growers, particularly in the eastern provinces of the dominion, has not made for good feeling on the part of these growers through the operation and administration of this act. In the first place the act was not put into effect until practically the end of the potato marketing season. By that time the potatoes had shrunk to quite a large extent, they had sprouted and needed a good deal of sorting before they were made available to this board that was buying them. The farmers felt that the price was not sufficient to take care of all the work they were forced to do in order to market them. I maintain that it is the uncertainty in the minds of the farmers across the dominion that is causing considerably lowered production, along with the effect of the income tax. After the farmers during all the war years had made an all-out effort to produce large quantities of food, and were successful in their objective, subsidizing the consumers of this country and of Great Britain, the government now comes along and says, "We are going to extract from you in income tax every nickel that we can." That greater production was largely brought about by overtime work. The farmer could not hope to produce the large quantities which were produced during the war in an eight-hour day and a five-day week. Is he going to continue to work that overtime in order to produce, with his markets as uncertain as they are today? I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that he is not; and production figures have shown definitely that he will not do so.

I wish to put on Hansard certain figures from sessional paper 164A, dated March 8, but before doing so I would be glad to give the minister an opportunity to answer the question I asked on Friday night, because I think it would be only fair to do this.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would remind the hon. member that we are on the second reading of the bill.

Mr. CHARLTON: Very well, Mr. Speaker. I will put the figures on Hansard.

Mr. GARDINER: The question was as to why there was some difference between the figures which were supplied, and the answers given, and the figures which I was using the other evening. Well, the figures asked for in the return are a statement of figures on shipments, and of course shipments at a given time are not the same as what goes into the vats for delivery. The figures, either with regard to quantity or with regard to price, would not be the same based on one as compared with the other of these.

Mr. CHARLTON: Probably the minister misunderstood the question. In the case of bacon, my figures are preliminary figures for 1947. Surely these should be completed.

Mr. GARDINER: Are those the figures given in the return brought down in the house?

Mr. CHARLTON: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: They will be the correct answer to the question that was asked, but the question that was asked may not be the question I was discussing the other night when I was giving certain figures.

Mr. CHARLTON: I will quote the figures that are in this return, and I will point out that they are preliminary figures for 1947. They are not complete. I will give the last three years. In the case of cheese, the contract for 1945-46 was 125,000,000 pounds and the quantity supplied was 126,687,236 pounds. In 1946-47 the contract was for 125,000,000 pounds and the quantity supplied was 92,104,624 pounds. In 1947-48 the contract figure was 125,000,000 pounds and the amount supplied was 56,104,066. That is, the 1947-48 figure was only 44 per cent of the amount sent to Great Britain in 1945-46.

Next I will take bacon. I will give the four main items. In bacon, in 1944-45, the contract was 900,000,000 pounds and the amount supplied was 1,109,133,764. In 1946 the contract or agreement had dropped to 450,000,000 pounds and the amount supplied was 272,890,924 pounds. In 1947—this is a preliminary figure—the contract was 350,000,000 pounds and the amount supplied was 214,744,554, or 19 per cent of that quantity which was shipped in 1944-45.

I come now to the figures for beef. In 1944-45 the agreement was 100,000,000 pounds and the amount shipped was 315,524,494 pounds. In 1946 the contract was 60,000,000 pounds and the amount shipped was 119,208,538 pounds. In 1947—this is a preliminary figure—the contract was 120,000,000 pounds and the amount shipped was 26,155,173 pounds, or eight per cent of that amount which was shipped in 1944-45. Production figures for those three are considerably less than the figures of 1944-45.

In regard to eggs, the amount has been steadily increasing ever since the contracts were initiated.

Mr. GARDINER: It is marked preliminary here, and the figure is 26,000,000, but the last figure I have is 39,000,000 odd.

Mr. CHARLTON: That is on beef?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. CHARLTON: That, as I said, would change, and I wanted to be fair in stating the figures. That is why I offered the minister an opportunity of answering the question before undertaking to put the figures on. But even with 39,000,000 pounds, it is a great deal less than either the year 1946 or the year 1947.

I have here a copy of the Economic Annalist, February issue. In a short paragraph on page 22 it is stated:

> There has been a general decline in the total amount of meat produced from the record level of 1944, and it is estimated that 1948 production will be slightly below that of 1947. The quantity of pork products available for export is expected to decline in 1948. As a result, the quantity of bacon contracted for in 1948 with the United Kingdom has been revised downward to 195,000,000 pounds, and the price increased to $36 from the 1947 price of $29 per hundred pounds for grade A, Wiltshire sides.

That only bears out what I said regarding the lowering of production of three out of four of the agreements we have to supply Great Britain. Now what is the future of the hog producers of Canada? The only stipulation is that the price of 1949 shall not go below the 1946 figure. What is the 1946 figure? What was the price in 1946? It was $22.75 up until April 1 and it was raised to $25 on that day. Which of these two figures will be the 1946 minimum which is expected to be the contract price for 1949? That is the thing the farmers are asking today, and that is the thing that is keeping them from increasing the production of hogs. There is an uncertainty as regards the price, and uncertainty as regards the policy of this government. The lowering of production of all these products across Canada will mean that ultimately the consumer will have to pay higher prices for the food he buys. That will be the result indirectly, because when you lower production you will undoubtedly increase the cost to the consumer. So that by their policies this government has greatly decreased production, which will mean ultimately that the consumer will pay more.

Another thing to which I would refer is this. Why are these contracts not available to the public? The minister said the other day it was because the contracts were not signed. After three months these contracts are still not signed by the contracting parties, and yet Mr. Taggart at a meeting of the Ontario hog producers in Toronto stated "firm as to quantity" when he was asked a question about bacon contracts. From that statement that the contract was firm as to quantity, I can only deduce he implies that the contract was not firm as to price. Under ordinary circumstances a businessman would not think that a contract which was not signed by both contracting parties was worth very much.

I hold in my hand a Canadian Press release reporting a statement by Mr. Strachey in England about these contracts. After seeing this statement I question just how much can be taken from the statement made in Toronto. I will quote from this press clipping taken from the Globe and Mail of March 18, 1948. It is headed "Asks slash in U.K. buying from Canada." The text, dated at London, March 17, is as follows:

Britain's purchases from non-dollar countries must be increased and her present rate of spending on Canadian food cannot be continued, Food Minister John Strachey said today.

No complete cut-off in Canadian purchases was proposed as this would mean "disaster" to both countries, he said at a press conference.

He made these points:

1. Canada now is the only source of dollar foods bought by Britain and "remarkable progress" has been made in obtaining food supplies from sterling and soft currency areas.

2. While Britain's dependence on dollar sources of food has been reduced, "we cannot, in the new circumstances, afford even so much."

Harold Wilson, president of the board of trade, told the Overseas Empire Correspondents' Association that even with the increased exports being directed to Canada, Britain would not be able to pay for all her minimum needs of Canadian goods. The question of a "new line of Canadian credit" would have to be considered.

And farther on:

"The most important single thing the food ministry can do in the nation's life and death struggle to balance its payments is to switch the buying of our food back from dollar to non-dollar sources" Strachey said . . .

In Europe, Strachey said, "A whole series of negotiations for food have been undertaken in the past nine months and treaties under which we shall buy slowly but steadily increasing quantities of food have been concluded with Denmark, Poland, Holland, Italy, Hungary, Portugal, France, Spain, Iceland and Eire."

Mr. GARDINER: Read the last sentence.

Mr. CHARLTON: That is the last sentence.

Mr. GARDINER: Then the hon. member had better get another clipping.

Mr. CHARLTON: If the minister can produce another I should like to hear it, because this one is not very encouraging.

Mr. GARDINER: Take it out of the Gazette; it is better.

Mr. CHARLTON: The minister may read that when he makes his reply. I want to go back to January 1947. The minister has made statements in the house, perhaps somewhat boastfully, that the marketing of hogs has improved considerably in the first two months of 1948. Let me say to him there is a reason for that. In January 1947, an artificially high price was paid by the packers for hogs in Canada which, rightly or wrongly, gave many farmers the impression that hog prices were going to stay at that abnormally high figure. Many of them did go into hogs at that time, and kept their sows instead of marketing them. They bred those sows, and of course last fall, when price controls went off feeds, many of the sows went back on the market. However there were others of them which did farrow, and the pigs which were farrowed are now coming on the market. I believe that is the reason for the great increase in hog marketings at the present time.

I have here statistics from the livestock survey of December 1, 1947. They show that the fall pig crop of 1947 was nine per cent less than that of 1946. The number of sows bred to farrow from December 1 to the month of May, 1948, was 67 per cent of those in the same period in the previous year. So that indications are that that increase in marketings at this stage of the year would not hold for more than probably a month at the outside.

Last year the minister said that the decrease was due to the scarcity of grain. Let me at this time quote from the quarterly review on Canadian coarse grains, the issue for February, 1948. I wonder what the minister will use as an excuse this year. This is what I find in this publication:

Visible supplies of both oats and barley at February 19 are both in excess of the commercial supply position on the same date a year ago. Oats supplies at 30·2 million bushels exceed last year's figure by nearly a million bushels while barley stocks at 32·1 million are more than 11 million bushels greater than last year . . . Stocks of oats and barley located at eastern lake ports were reported on February 19 this year at 7·8 and 5·3 million bushels respectively. Last year only 3·4 million bushels of oats and 1·1 million bushels of barley were at eastern lake ports. Lakehead stocks of barley at 11·5 million bushels are also up 6 million bushels while lakehead oats stocks at 9·5 million bushels are nearly a million bushels greater than a year ago.

May I point out further that the hog-barley ratio as shown in this same review is placed at 17·1, the same as it was in January 1946. However this is many points below the high of 21·4 of February 1947. So that the hog-barley ratio does not show there would be a considerable increase in the production of pork.

Where do we go from here? It is my view, which can be verified, that the farmers of this country want enabling federal legislation so that producer boards operating in the provinces can have control of their own handling and marketing of produce. They would require legislation similar to that passed in 1934 by the Bennett government, legislation which was then known as the Natural Products Marketing Act. May I quote the following resolution on this point from the Canadian federation of agriculture:

Dominion marketing legislation:

Whereas the organized farmers of Canada, through the provincial and Canadian federations of agriculture, have on many occasions since the court decision that the 1934 marketing act was ultra vires, requested the dominion government to enact comprehensive marketing legislation that would enable farmers to market their products in an orderly manner;

And whereas the government has not seen fit to pass such legislation and has not as yet given any logical reason why this request of the farmers should not be granted,

And whereas eight of the nine provinces of Canada have shown by their actions in passing provincial marketing legislation that, in their opinion, such legislation is necessary and in the public interest;

Therefore be it resolved:

1. That the Canadian Federation of Agriculture again puts on record its belief that dominion marketing legislation, to supplement the provincial acts, is urgently necessary if the farmers of Canada are to be placed in a position equal to that of other elements in the community.

2. That, once more, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture requests the dominion government to introduce at the next session of parliament comprehensive marketing legislation that will make it possible for groups of farmers to control the marketing of their own products rather than be at the mercy of speculative interests.

3. That failing assurances that such legislation will be introduced, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture demands to know the reasons why the government of Canada, by its lack of action in this important matter, is apparently of the opinion that the farmers of Canada should be kept permanently in an inferior position as compared with other elements of society, and that such reasons be published for the information of all Canadian farmers.

[Mr. Charlton.]

I think that is sufficient proof that the Canadian farmers do want that type of legislation.

I just want to say a word about the C.C.F. stand on this measure. They have given much lip service to that particular type of legislation, but on the other hand they seem to be satisfied with the legislation that is being passed today. In lieu of the marketing legislation which the farmers of this country do want I suggest that instead of having the price of hogs for the 1949 contract not set until probably the end of December 1948, a minimum and maximum price should be set two years in advance and reviewed each year. The farmers would then know one year in advance what their prices would be. There would be a minimum and maximum price, not just a question mark. No continuity of supply can be expected either by this government or by Great Britain if the farmers of this country do not know more about what their price is going to be in the future than they do today.

Right Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have only a word or two to say before the discussion goes further. First I should like to say that when we get into committee I will answer the questions asked the other evening. I have the information which was asked for by the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. Macdonnell) and other hon. members. I think the place to put that on the record is in committee.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Is the minister closing the debate?

Mr. GARDINER: No, I have not spoken on the motion; the motion was moved by the Acting Minister of Agriculture when I was out of the house.

I should like to call attention to what was left out of the statement read a few moments ago. I was mistaken in saying it was the last sentence in the article; it is not the last sentence, but it is part of the sentence which was read. It said:

It must not be thought that we can yet do without our remaining food imports from Canada, or that we can go on purchasing them and the very large quantities of non-food products such as cotton, tobacco, petrol, non-ferrous metals and the like which we must have from the dollar countries, without some further dollar help such as we have to receive under the Marshall plan.

Mr. CHARLTON: Hope to receive.

Mr. GARDINER: It says "have" here. This is a Conservative paper and it may be a little wrong in the printing. There is one point I want to emphasize, and I am sure

hon. members on both sides of the house will agree that it is necessary to emphasize it. There is no doubt that all the quantities that have been contracted for are going to be taken by the British this year, and there is no doubt that they are going to pay for them. That is all arranged for; the decisions are all made in connection with it. One does not need to say anything more than that, and I cannot understand, when it has been repeated over and over again, why members of the opposition still try to leave the impression that that is not true. It is absolutely true; there is no doubt about it whatsoever.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I should like to ask the minister one question. I want to be quite clear about it, that there is no desire on this side to misrepresent him. I understood, and I want to be set right if I am wrong, that the contracts were made but that the method and means of paying for the products which the minister has referred to had been settled only to the end of March. Was not that what we were given to understand at about the turn of the year?

Mr. GARDINER: The statement which was put out at the time the contracts were entered into was to the effect that the financial arrangements were finally concluded, not only with regard to food products but with regard to other products, some of which have been named in this article in the press. The financial arrangements were completed down to the end of March. It was felt that by the end of March in all probability the Marshall plan would be operating. However, the British food contracts were not subject to that condition at all. The food contracts are hard and fast contracts for so much money at so much per unit. As I said the other day, the problem of arranging the means by which they are to make payment was a matter for parties other than the Minister of Agriculture to worry about.

The situation is that there is no question whatsoever that the British have enough dollars that they themselves could pay many times over the amounts required for the food they are getting from Canada and still have a considerable carryover of United States dollars at the end of the year. That carryover may not be as great as they would desire to have, but there has never been any question about their having enough dollars to pay for food. From time to time they do discuss with us the extent to which we would agree to assist them in meeting their obligations and the extent to which they would agree to assisting us in meeting ours.

For example, we delivered far more bacon and far more beef under the contract in January and February than the contract called for, but the British took that beef and bacon. There had to be negotiations with them as to how the financing was to be handled within the terms of the contract, but they handled it. When they run into difficulties they come back to us and discuss the question. What I want to impress upon the house and particularly upon the farmers is that that contract is an absolutely closed contract, both with regard to price and with regard to quantities.

Mr. CHARLTON: It is not signed?

Mr. GARDINER: I have got past the time when I feel it is necessary to have a British signature in order to know that a contract is going to be carried out. The British have undertaken to do it by letter, and the signing of the contract is only a matter of form. They have agreed to the terms, to the prices and quantities, and if the British government make a contract, they will carry it out. That has been our experience with them. I know that just as soon as they can get past the details of considering it in their own departments the contract will be signed by them. It has been signed by us and sent over and it will be signed by them and sent back. But whether it is ever signed, they have committed themselves to the terms by letter and I know they will carry out those terms. What I wanted to do was to impress that upon the house and not let a statement go out on this occasion to indicate that there is any doubt whatsoever about it.

If I were free to do so I could state what happened no later than this morning in connection with this matter. I am not free to say that, but I can say that what did happen this morning makes it absolutely certain, if it were not certain before, that this food will all be paid for throughout the year. I think that is as far as one needs to go in order to assure the farmers that there is no doubt whatsoever that this food will be taken in the quantities spoken of and paid for at the prices in the contract right through to the end of the year. That is all I wish to say at this time.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): May I ask a question?

Mr. NICHOLSON: I wonder if we might not get into committee so that the rest of us would be permitted to ask questions of the minister? He has spoken three times already.

Mr. GARDINER: I just answered questions; I have not spoken three times.

Mr. G. J. TUSTIN (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take up much of the time of the house on this bill because I think my words on the same bill last year will be well remembered. I opposed the bill at that time and I oppose it now. My grounds for so doing are that this is not a marketing bill, that it is a bill which gives the government authority to enter into agreements with other governments for farm products other than wheat. It also controls the price paid to the farmer for those products, and the price for the products shipped abroad acts as a price ceiling on the products that remain in Canada.

I intend to touch on one product only but possibly the most important product we send abroad, and that is cheese. Last year the government of Canada contracted to sell to the United Kingdom over 125 million pounds of cheese. As my colleague the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Charlton) has pointed out, that contract was only about 40 per cent fulfilled, and as I look over the records so far this year I find that cheese production in 1948 is down about 40 per cent from the corresponding months in 1947.

At the meeting of the Ontario Cheese Producers' Association in Toronto about ten days ago the president of that organization in presenting his report made what I consider to be a most amazing statement. I realize, of course, that when negotiations were taking place in Ottawa between this government and the government of the United Kingdom with regard to food contracts, representatives of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture were invited to sit in, and the amazing thing to me is that the presidents of the cheese producers' associations in Ontario and Quebec, which produce about 80 per cent of all the cheese produced in Canada, received no invitation to sit in and discuss this important product. I have before me the remarks of the president of the Ontario Cheese Producers' Association. He said:

> Cheese even now is being sold at less than cost. If our costs continue to advance as they have done, government subsidies will not be enough. Prices must be increased.

The new contract calls for thirty cents a pound for cheese. Within the last few years there has been a great transformation in the manufacture of cheese. Before the war a cheesemaker would produce from ten to eleven pounds of cheese out of 100 pounds of milk, but today, on account of a change in the quality of the cheese, only 8½ pounds of cheese on the average is produced from 100 pounds of milk. Of course, the farmer has had to stand that loss. In other words, there are at least two pounds of cheese less produced today out of 100 pounds of milk than was the case before the war, the reason being that we now make a hard dry cheese.

I should like to figure out for the Minister of Agriculture the return which the farmer gets from his milk that goes into the production of cheese. Out of 100 pounds of milk he produces 8½ pounds of cheese at thirty cents, or a total of $2.55. Deduct costs of hauling and manufacturing, which amount to fifteen or twenty cents per 100 pounds of milk, and the farmer is left with a net of $2.35 to $2.40 per 100 pounds for his milk.

I must not neglect to say that the federal government gives a premium on quality cheese, amounting on the average to about ten cents per 100 pounds of milk. So that the farmer who is producing milk for cheese during the coming season will get somewhere in the neighbourhood of $2.50 per 100 pounds for his milk. According to investigations which have been held, the cost of producing 100 pounds of milk has been shown to be in the neighbourhood of $3.69. Consequently, on every 100 pounds of milk that is produced for cheese the farmer will lose more than $1.

Mr. BROOKS: Would the hon. member state what a quart of milk weighs?

Mr. TUSTIN: A quart of milk weighs 2½ pounds. As I said before, this bill empowers the government to take agricultural products by compulsion. Just before the end of the session last year I asked the Minister of Agriculture if the government had any intention of requisitioning cheese during the past season and he replied that the government did not contemplate doing so, but within the next two weeks a requisition went forward to every cheese factory in Ontario and Quebec advising the cheese manufacturers that all cheese in the factories must be sent to the agricultural products board to help fill our United Kingdom contract. Again I ask the minister because the question is very pertinent. Is it the intention of the government to requisition cheese this year? If so, I urge the minister to make the announcement in the very near future.

During the past year, Mr. Speaker, this bill was not a success in any shape or form, for the simple reason that practically none of our contracts with the United Kingdom was filled or nearly filled. If we take the minister's own figures on beef, for instance, he said that we had shipped only 40 million pounds, whereas the contract called for 120 million pounds. The same situation occurred with bacon. Again I ask the minister, why did he single out for discrimination the farmer who produces milk for the manufacture of cheese and make him ship by compulsion to the agricultural products board every pound of cheese that was produced from the time the requisition went into effect? Why was the dairy producer, the farmer who produces milk for the manufacture of cheese, singled out as the only one to come under compulsion? Did the minister use compulsion to get bacon for the British contract? No. Did he use compulsion to get beef for the British contract? No. Did he use compulsion to get eggs for the British contract? No. Did he use compulsion to get powdered milk for the British contract? No. Yet, in the face of that, he did single out the farmer who produces cheese, the most important product of all the products that we are shipping to our neighbours across the sea. I do not want to take up more time, but I want to repeat that if it is the intention of the government to requisition cheese this year they should make it known at a very early day.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. SPEAKER: Those in favour please say "yea."

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yea.

Mr. SPEAKER: Those against it please say "nay".

Some hon. MEMBERS: Nay.

Mr. SPEAKER: In my opinion the "yeas" have it. Call in the members.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Gardiner) which was agreed to on the following division:

(Text):

Bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

On section 1—Expiration of act.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I had not intended to say anything at all on this measure other than to ask a question or two, because I have made my position clear in past sessions. But hon. members to my left seemed to be eager to take a long time in recording this this vote today. Therefore I intend to make a few observations with regard to this measure. First of all, I should like to remind the committee that in any democratic country which has turned to socialism the standard of living of the people has always been decreased. When we were discussing this measure a year ago we tried to move a number of amendments. After the principle of the Natural Products Marketing Act was passed, the government refused to accept any of those amendments. The two speakers from this party who today so well set out our position have pretty well proven the fact that this measure has not been, and is not working satisfactorily for the producers of this country. I have before me the Economic Annalist, a publication put out by the statistical bureau of the Department of Agriculture. It says that there has been a general decline in total meat production from the record level of 1944, and that the quantity of pork products available for export is expected to decline throughout 1948. Then the Weekly Live Stock Market Review of March 12, 1948, states that exports of dairy cattle to the United States from January 1 to date—slightly over two months—has been 10,411 as compared with 5,433 in the corresponding period of last year. That is still going on to a greater degree than ever. It has been well said that we have today a far greater quantity of oats and barley in store in Canada than we had one year ago. We have a surplus of feed today; yet meat production is going down steadily, according to government records themselves. In the same issue of the Economic Annalist to which I referred a moment ago, at page 9, there is set out the situation at the present time with respect to the prairie farmers, as follows:

> Although the prairie farmer is financially better off now than he was in 1941, there is still room for improvement. Only 52 per cent of all farms reported owning one or more tractors; only 20 per cent reported having one or more trucks; and about 14 per cent reported possessing grain combines. The small proportion of farmers—four per cent—reporting ownership or possession of electric motors pointedly emphasizes the lack of such equipment.
> Farmers have said that they want more machinery. Their farm buildings need to be repaired, repainted or rebuilt. Farm homes lack the many facilities essential to the well-being of the modern farm family. The exigencies of hazardous weather and crop failures have not been solved. Soil conservation is still a big problem. The prairie economy is still subject to the vagaries of the international market. The prosperity of the farmer on the prairies is still dependent upon a high and stable level of employment and income in Canada.

It goes on to say that at the present time there is a great deal of room for improvement. As regards the other side of the picture, I have here a letter I have received from a man who attended a large meeting, some 1,200 farmers, at Bismarck, North Dakota, and I should like to quote the following from it:

> One glance at that audience of 1,200 farmers showed, without any further evidence, the difference in the prosperity between those farmers in North Dakota and our own farmers on these prairies. Our farmers are getting by without any question, that is, they are not going into debt but the prices they have received in the last four or five years have not permitted them to equip their farms with modern labour-saving machinery as they should have done, and have not enabled them to pay off fully their indebtedness and mortgages, and to put something by to tide them over for hard times. Over and over again farmers in North Dakota told me that a man seemed to feel and think quite differently if his debts were paid and he had a few dollars in the bank, compared to his state of mind when he was still in debt and had no reserves.

I know from my own practical experience that this is so, because I have taken occasion many times to visit North Dakota; and I can say that throughout the war years, and at the present time as well, our neighbours across the line in that state, compared with us in Manitoba, have had far better returns. They have had from two or three times more than we have. I have argued on many occasions that the general standard of living is higher across the line than it is in Canada and that the authorities in this country should endeavour to raise the living standards of the Canadian people.

I wish to say something on a matter that I have dealt with at every session since I have been here, following the year 1942, and that is the cattle embargo. I do not know how long we shall have to wait until that is lifted, but I know that the situation as pointed out in the Farm Ranch Review is far from satisfactory. I should like to quote the following from this publication. They are seriously asking for the exemption of pure breds from the live stock embargo. They say:

> During the last two years an average of $8,000,000 worth of dairy stock have been exported annually to the United States. We are not arguing against this.

It goes on:

> Why not, then, encourage western farmers to devote their attention to purebred beef production by opening the American market to them? Why not make the same concession to the best beef raisers that is made to the best dairy stock raisers? They have rightly been given a chance to develop an American market. But the same opportunity being denied purebred beef producers.
>
> The argument that this would denude the Canadian table of meat cannot be made to this suggestion. It would result, on the basis of the D.B.S. figures, to a resolution of 14 per cent in the Canadian meat supply.
> How about it, Mr. Gardiner?

I emphasize the seriousness of this matter to the minister and to the government, and I would urge that the embargo be lifted as soon as possible in the interests of the producers of this country. As was ably pointed out by the hon. member for Brant, there has never been a time in the history of the country when our farm producers were so full of fear for the future as they are today. I cannot say whether there is a sound basis for that fear, but certainly the farmers and farm organizations have never been so fearful of their economic future as they are at the present time, and that statement is applicable throughout the country. They are certainly disappointed that they have not had greater access to the markets of the world. All this tends to make a peasantry of the future agricultural population of Canada as compared with the democracies throughout the world.

I could have taken up a good deal more time discussing this subject because there are some questions that I should like to have answered. I know, however, that the minister is eager to get the measure through this afternoon, and knowing the reasons behind that desire I will not take any more time just now. I simply wish to make our position and my own position as well quite clear to the committee, but I may have one or two other questions to ask before six o'clock.

Mr. SINNOTT: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has placed on the record part of a letter without giving the name of the writer. Will he please put on Hansard the man's name?

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the minister reading letters and he was never asked to disclose the name. Without consulting the writer, I would not do it. I would not mind showing the letter to the hon. member.

Mr. SINNOTT: Have the letter struck out.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I take full responsibility for the statements made in the letter.

An hon. MEMBER: The hon. member might have written it himself.

Mr. GARDINER: Mr. Chairman, might I give the answers to questions asked the other day? A question was asked about the total production of specified farm products in Canada.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Mr. Chairman, did I understand the hon. member to say I might have written the letter myself?

Mr. GRAYDON: He had better withdraw that.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I have the letter here and I vouch for the contents of it. I would ask the hon. member to withdraw that statement.

Mr. SINNOTT: The hon. member says he did not write it himself.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Withdraw.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member has accepted the word of the hon. member for Souris that the letter was written by someone and that he takes the responsibility for it.

Mr. GARDINER: I do not know that I can name the hon. member who asked these different questions, but to save time I will give the answers, as answers to questions asked the other day when we were discussing the resolution. I was asked for the total production of specified farm products in Canada, exports to the United Kingdom, and exports as a percentage of total production. Without reading the answer, I should like if I may to put it on Hansard:

Total Production of Specified Farm Products in Canada, Exports to the United Kingdom, and Exports as a percent of Total Production, 1946 and 1947

N.B. These estimates do not consider carry-over stocks.

The hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario asked me for the percentage of total food supplies that were shipped to the United Kingdom for 1945 in relation to the other two years I quoted the other evening, and I should like to put that on the record:

[Mr. Gardiner.]

I believe it was the hon. member for Kamloops who asked for the names of the members of different boards and committees. The commodity boards that have been appointed under the Agricultural Products Act are commodity boards set up originally under the War Measures Act. These boards are being retained to facilitate the filing of food contracts and the filling of food contracts. The personnel is as follows:

L. W. Pearsall, chairman; S. E. Todd, F. H. Auld, W. E. Tummon, J. A. Proulx, F. F. Baird, secretary manager.

As members from Ontario will know, Mr. Tummon was president of the hog producers' association. The dairy products board is as follows:

J. F. Singleton, chairman; John Freeman, J. F. Desmarais, H. A. Derby, secretary.

Then the special products board:

A. M. Shaw, chairman; R. S. Hamer, W. F. Bull, R. W. Neely, secretary.

Then, advisory to those boards are the following:

H. H. Hannam, president, Canadian Federation of Agriculture, Ottawa, chairman; J. B. Munro, deputy minister of agriculture for British Columbia, Victoria; E. J. Chambers, president, associated growers of British Columbia, Vernon, British Columbia; O. S. Longman, deputy minister of agriculture for Alberta, Edmonton, Alberta; L. E. Pharris, director of the A.F.U. and A.F.A., Magrath, Alberta; M. E. Hartnett, deputy minister of agriculture for Saskatchewan, Regina, Saskatchewan; Geo. Wright, president of U.F.C., and president of Saskatchewan federation of agriculture, Borden, Saskatchewan; W. J. Parker, president, Manitoba Pool Elevators Limited, Winnipeg, Manitoba; F. W. Downing, manager, Canadian Live Stock Co-Operative (Western) Ltd., St. Boniface, Manitoba; C. D. Graham, deputy minster of agriculture for Ontario, Toronto, Ontario; B. B. Warnica, vice-president, Ontario beef cattle producers association, Barrie, Ontario; J. A. Marion, president, Quebec chamber of agriculture, Montreal, Quebec; Henri Dubord, Department of Agriculture, Quebec, P.Q.; J. K. King, deputy minister of agriculture for New Brunswick, Fredericton, New Brunswick; Harry Crandlemire, director of New Brunswick potato growers council, Gordonsville, New Brunswick; F. W. Walsh, deputy minister of agriculture for Nova Scotia, Halifax, Nova Scotia; W. R. Shaw, deputy minister of agriculture for Prince Edward Island, Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island.

Perhaps I should indicate the manner in which these appointments were made. Nine were named by the provinces, and the others were named by the federation of agriculture. They are appointed on the recommendation of the federation of agriculture and of the different provinces.

Then, the following is the cattle producers advisory committee of the wartime prices and trade board:

Newton G. Bennett, R.R. 3, Bury, Quebec; Stewart A. Brown, Sheddon, Ontario; Leslie Cameron, Ashcroft, British Columbia; Allan McAllister, Portage la Prairie, Manitoba; W. McGregor, R.R. 4, Brandon, Manitoba; Alex M. MacMillan, Juniata, Saskatchewan; Walter Oulton, R.R. 1, Windsor, Nova Scotia; George G. Ross, Aden, Alberta; H. L. Taggart, Olds, Alberta; Burton B. Warnica, R.R. 4, Barrie, Ontario; David M. Wiley, Maple Creek, Saskatchewan.

Those are the members of the advisory committees and of the boards. I believe I have answered the questions asked the other day.

Mr. MOORE: May I register my support of the measure, because I believe it involves a principle of agricultural marketing which in future will work to the great advantage of agriculture.

May I at the outset disagree with one statement made by the hon. member for Souris, when he insisted that any democratic country which had turned to socialism had reduced its standard of living. I do not think that can be regarded as actual truth.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): What countries would you mention?

Mr. MOORE: I would give as an example the great commonwealth of Australia. If we go back to the early days of Australia, at the time of its first settlement, we find that private enterprise absolutely refused to help out, with the result that the government had to take over so as to establish those things which would give the people of Australia a reasonable standard of living. That is really how state enterprise began in Australia—because private enterprise would have nothing to do with the building of Australian industry or agriculture.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I do not think statistics prove that.

Mr. MOORE: It is not a matter of statistics; it is a statement of fact that can be substantiated in the parliamentary library, if one cares to read a number of books written with respect to the development of Australia. Those books have been prepared by noted Australian economists.

There is one other point so far as marketing is concerned which I believe will be to the great advantage of western agriculture. I know my Progressive Conservative friends will be interested in this, because the situation with which I wish to deal began during a time when that party was in office in Canada. It will be recalled that in the 1930's prices of Canadian agricultural products fell to an all-time low.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Throughout the world.

Mr. MOORE: True, all over the world. But do not forget this, that it hit western agriculture particularly hard, because the government of that day followed a monetary policy which tied our money to the United States, despite the fact that the market for western agricultural commodities was in Great Britain. Canadian agriculture had to bear the loss on exchange.

For instance, in 1932 the price of Canadian wheat fell to nineteen cents a bushel, but the price of Australian wheat, because they had followed a different monetary policy, sold for around sixty cents a bushel. Those facts are to be found in the Commonwealth Year Book of Australia and our own Canada Year Book for the years I have mentioned.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Does the hon. member know how many bushels of wheat were required at that time to buy farm implements in Canada?

Mr. MOORE: I have not the figures before me.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Has he figures to show the purchasing value?

Mr. MOORE: I am just showing prices of farm commodities and the relation of those prices to the cost of living in Canada. In Australia at that time the same situation existed, but the farmers of that country received a higher income for their commodities than did the farmers of Canada, due to the different monetary policy followed over there.

That is where advantage will be gained by the farmers of Canada if we stick to the present legislation for the marketing of agricultural products. If in future we must suffer a loss on exchange through selling our goods in a market with a different monetary value, we shall be able to call upon the government to take the loss on exchange, such moneys to be taken out of the consolidated revenue fund, instead of agriculture being made to bear the whole loss.

The Conservative government of the 1930's made the farmers bear the whole loss on that exchange difference. Had it followed the policy of Australia, the farmers of western and of eastern Canada would not have suffered to the same extent. Surely this is a most important point.

Mr. FERGUSON: Is the hon. member aware of the fact that in the 1930's, at the time of the conditions under the Conservative government to which the hon. member has referred, in the United States they were burning wheat? I know that from my own observation in Kansas and Missouri. They could not sell their cattle, hogs and wheat.

Mr. MOORE: That has nothing to do with exchange.

Mr. FERGUSON: Nothing to do with what you want to put over; no doubt about that.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I should like to ask a question. I recognize the urgency of getting this measure through, but I believe one or two questions should be asked. I understand that in the act there is a provision whereby a floor price is to be determined. Is the minister prepared to tell us the formula by which the floor price in respect of a given commodity—cheese, for example—is determined when the government begins to support the price?

Then, when the minister gives this formula will he tell us how it is being applied in respect of the price of cheese, which was discussed this afternoon, and in respect of beef prices for which the beef producers and feeders of western Canada are at the present time being called upon to sell their beef? I think those questions ought to be answered now.

Mr. GARDINER: The question with regard to cheese was how the floor price was determined. The floor price is set by the price at which we are prepared to buy cheese to send to Great Britain. That is, the dairy board purchases cheese at twenty-five cents under the old contract and at thirty cents under the new contract, basis Montreal and basis the plant. The cheese is purchased at that price and we undertake to buy all cheese that is delivered. So far as cheese is concerned, there is no great difficulty in determining what the floor should be. The cheese is purchased at the price set in the contract and sent to Britain.

With the ceiling off cheese, it can be sold on the Canadian market at a higher price. With regard to what was said a few moments ago, I should like to say that it was not the intention of the government at this time last year to requisition cheese. However we began to requisition cheese around July 1. I am not in position to state at the moment that there will be no requisitioning of cheese this year. We would rather not have to requisition cheese, but last year, when a quantity of cheese had been purchased by dealers sufficient to supply the Canadian market, we requisitioned what was left. Obviously the difference between beef and cheese is that cheese is a cured product which continues to get better for two or three years after it is made, while beef is an entirely different kind of product. If we permitted anyone to buy all the cheese off the market this year he could store it and perhaps get a better price for it next year or the year after. He might lose on his speculation, but last year, when all the cheese was being bought and there was very little being turned in for export, after enough had been taken to supply this market we felt that the remainder ought to be taken at the guaranteed price and sent overseas.

We have no grading system in connection with beef cattle under which the beef is as carefully graded as cheese. Then, again, it is not the same kind of product. The floor price is set by the price in the British contract for beef. Taking into consideration the experiences over a long period of time, we can judge fairly closely as to what price cattle ought to be on the different markets across Canada; that is, what best steers ought to be and what lower grades of steers ought to be. The markets are checked daily in order to make certain that the price is at least as high as the floor price. We are not concerned with how much higher than the floor it goes, but we do keep a check all the time to see that it does not go below the floor. The floor is established in that way.

The same practice is followed in connection with hogs and bacon. We know the relationship between A hogs and bacon and B hogs and bacon. We check all markets to see that the floor price under hogs is maintained. We do not raise any complaint if the price is higher than the floor, but if it gets down close to the floor price we draw the attention of those who are operating on the market to the fact that they are drawing close to the floor and we insist on their not going below the floor. As I have said on one or two occasions before, the only record we have of prices going below what would be justified by the floor prices was during some of the strikes that occurred in the plants during the years these contracts have been in existence.

Mr. BLACKMORE: In arriving at its decision, does the government not make any allowance for the cost of production in determining the floor price? Does it depend only on what can be got from Britain in setting the price for beef or pork or cheese?

Mr. GARDINER: That is not the price for beef or pork. The cheese price is definitely set. That is the price we offer for it. There is nothing to prevent anyone in Canada from selling at what he can get because there is no ceiling. We have a standing offer in all plants that we will buy at the floor price everything that is delivered. That establishes the floor.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I should like to ask a question with regard to the embargo on beef cattle going to the United States. This may not be a proper question to ask the minister, but could the minister tell us what has to occur before this embargo will be amended? Must prices in the United States and Canada become parallel? If that is not likely to happen for some time, I think serious consideration should be given to the request of the beef producers that they should receive the same concession in the United States market that is given to producers of dairy cattle. Dairy cattle are actually being exported to the United States. I know there are many dairy producers in the country who get their dairy cattle in pretty good shape. We are not complaining at all and that market should not be cut off, but they are getting a lot more than the cattle are worth in this country. I think the same concession should be granted to producers of purebred beef cattle. That would have a tendency to develop better bred cattle.

Mr. GARDINER: I was not aware that purebred breeding stock could not be shipped to the United States. I think it can. If it cannot, the matter certainly ought to be inquired into.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): As breeding animals?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, on the same terms as those on which the dairy stock is shipped in. There is something in what the hon. member for Souris says. I will check into it and see what the exact position is. As the hon. member for Souris said, the question of opening up the United States market is not a matter which comes under my department.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): But you have something to say about it.

Mr. GARDINER: That has been under the prices board since 1942 and any recommendations to the government in connection with it come from the prices board. Of course I have some say as a member of the government and, being from the Department of Agriculture, perhaps I say more than anyone else. However the responsibility is with the prices board and, through the prices board, the Department of Finance.

Suggestions have been made as to when it could be properly opened under the policy that we are following, which is a policy of more or less control over food products. We have been following that policy on food products since about 1941. Since we have tended to hold down prices to our farmers below what they could have obtained in the United States, previously on all of them and recently on some, we realize that the time will come when it will be necessary for us to hold up prices here rather than tend to allow them to go down as fast as they may go down in the United States. A few days ago the price of hogs was a little lower on many United States markets than it was in Canada. You could not gain anything by shipping to the United States. If hogs go lower in the United States our contract should have the effect of holding prices up here and our surplus should go where the price is higher rather than to the United States. But if anything should happen to our contract in the next year or two which would make it impossible to sell in Britain at prices as good as in the United States, we should still have some protection for farmers' prices here under the Agricultural Prices Support Act for whatever period of time was determined by the government of the day in order to assure that prices would not go to the bottom.

Beef is still higher in the United States than in Canada. Up to the time the strike started in the United States beef had gone down there about ten cents a pound from the high level while our price had remained approximately the same. Our price went down one cent, while their price went down ten cents, and if theirs had gone down six or seven cents more it would have been the same as our own.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Still higher on some brands.

Mr. GARDINER: It would have been higher on the top grade beef but we have not much of that type of beef. Theirs is corn-fed beef and commands a higher price.

Should that time come that I have spoken of, there should be a tendency to open the United States market. I cannot give the exact date because many considerations enter into the matter. We could not do it now, no matter what conditions are, because there is a strike on in the plants on the other side, and if we attempted to deliver cattle they could not get into the plants over there. If we slaughtered them here and shipped the beef over there we would probably have strikes in our own plants. So that under present conditions it is not possible to consider sending beef or cattle over there.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): That is a temporary situation.

Mr. GARDINER: We hope so, but temporary situations sometimes stretch out longer than we think.

Mr. CHARLTON: I challenge the minister's statement that our beef is not of as high a grade as United States beef. I think our red brand is as good as any produced in the United States.

Mr. GARDINER: That is all right until you try to sell it.

Mr. BLACKMORE: The situation in my constituency with respect to feeding beef has been very bad, and the people who are producing beef will suffer a serious loss this year. It will deter people from feeding beef next year to anything like the degree they should otherwise do. If we want beef in Canada, and I take it that we do, there is only one way to get it, and that is by retaining the confidence of the people who produce the beef. It is just as simple as that. The people in my constituency, so far as I know, have so completely lost confidence in government policy today that they hardly have courage to enter into stock-feeding at all, and the experience of the feed lots adds a sort of climax to it all. If anything can be done by the minister or by those over whom he can exercise influence, I certainly urge upon him that in the interests of the beef situation in Canada he take measures to alleviate the situation out there.

Mr. GARDINER: I should like to say a word or two on the question raised because it has been brought up two or three times, and I think hon. members should understand the position. Everyone who knows the situation in the Lethbridge area sympathizes with those who are running feed lots. The feed lot idea was introduced some years ago to deal with a situation which then existed. In the fall of the year, in September and October, cattle were taken off the grass in great numbers and found their way into the Calgary and Winnipeg markets in such large numbers that they could not be taken care of by the packing houses, so a number of men in Alberta were encouraged to go into the feed lot business, and they bought these cattle either from the farmers or at the Calgary yards and took them to the feed lots and fed them until the spring. That spread the delivery of the cattle over two periods, the fall and the spring, and so helped the farmers in general. That was in a period when there was not a market for all the cattle that were coming on the Winnipeg and Calgary markets in the fall, and when duties were high on shipments to the United States, so there was nothing to be gained thereby. These men running the feed lots bought the cattle at a price one and a half to two cents lower than the price would be in the spring. That was no great help to the farmer generally, because 90 per cent of the farmers are producing not more than twenty head of cattle, and many not more than five or six head. The cattle brought in during the fall were sold at a low price, because there was no ready market for them and these feed lots took them and fed them through until the spring.
