Then the war came. Since we have been in the war there has been a market for these cattle every day of the year, and there is no necessity for the farmers taking one and a half to two cents less in the fall in order that somebody may feed them through the winter and make a profit in the spring. From 1942 down to the present the feed lots have been having a really difficult problem. It may be argued that probably somebody ought to be doing something to help, as the opportunity comes, but it should not be the farmer who can now sell his cattle at the market price. He should not take less for them in the fall than he can get for them. I do not know just how we can deal with that problem. It concerns a very small proportion of our beef. Nevertheless these men got into the business through the policy established in Alberta and agreed upon by everybody at that time, but I do not think it should be done by trying to assure them a price one and a half to two cents lower than the market price in the fall so that they can feed them through until the spring. We will give more study to the question and see if there is any way of dealing with the problem.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Even now could the minister not do something to help these people by allowing them to send their beef across the line? If it is only a localized problem, perhaps they could be given a special opportunity to ship their beef across the line. I do not see any reason why the excellent facilities for producing beef in that area should be destroyed. About 40,000 beef are being fed there, and that is no small consideration in any nation. We have every facility there for feeding, an abundance of hay and a territory abounding in feed. Every opportunity is there for producing beef. Why should we destroy those facilities?

There is just one thing the minister did not mention in his statement which was otherwise quite clear. These beef producers take feeder cattle that are not priced as high as the cattle which are more or less finished and which the packers are ready to buy. There is need in this country for somebody to take feeder cattle and support the price by feeding them in the feed lots. It is just because of the need of having support for feeder cattle that this matter becomes of such importance to the range man who is producing beef out on the hills. If he does not have feeders to buy his semi-finished feeder cattle in the fall he will have to accept a reduced price for his cattle, and it is of importance to the farmer who, as the minister said, produces only five or six cattle that the feeder be there to support prices. The minister agrees with that, I am sure, and so I plead with him that something be done to prevent this excellent facility from being destroyed.

We are in an irrigated area; we are in an area which produces a great deal of sugar. In the production of that sugar there is a great deal of by-products of the sugar factories. Among these are beet pulp and beet molasses, which are exceedingly valuable for feeding. Because the producers are in an irrigated area, they must have crop rotation. Because of that, there is a great deal of hay produced. Hay production is an important industry for a great many people in that area. In addition to that they require the fertilization which comes naturally from feeding stock. All these elements are found in that area. Provision should be made for their use for the benefit of Canada.

If the beef feeder goes out of the picture; if the stock feeder generally in the wintertime goes out of the picture, a serious disadvantage will be created there for a number of people besides the range producer of beef. Once more may I urge that the minister do something about this matter because it is now quite serious. It is costing these men in the neighbourhood of seventy cents a day to feed a steer. That means it is costing them about thirty-five cents a pound to put on the weight now. If they have to go on for a number of days producing beef at thirty-five cents a pound, as they are at present, and they have to sell that beef at 16½ cents or 16¾ cents, then the loss they will sustain will be serious.

Mr. CHARLTON: Can the minister tell us which of these 1946 prices will be the floor price for 1949, the guaranteed price, $22.75 or $25? The floor price for the bacon contracts in 1949 is supposed to be not less than the 1946 price. In 1946 there were two prices. Which one of these are you going to take?

Mr. GARDINER: The one at the end of the year covered the contract.

Mr. CHARLTON: The $25 price?

Mr. GARDINER: I am not sure; I would have to check back. There was a period when we changed over from the end of October to the end of December. The hog year ran from November 1 to the end of October for a certain period, and then it changed over from the end of October to the end of December. The prices that would be guaranteed for that would, I presume, be the one for the ten months' period, if it was the year in which the change was made.

Mr. CHARLTON: But the change was made in 1946.

Mr. GARDINER: That would be the contract price for 1946.

Mr. CHARLTON: That is $25.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. CHARLTON: When does the minister expect to be able to tell the committee what the price is likely to be for 1949? Could these prices not be arranged earlier in the season and not wait until December before the price is changed?

Mr. GARDINER: It is almost impossible. There are so many problems these days, and they change so rapidly, that I am afraid you would not be able to get the British to sit down and consider them until toward the end of the season, but they put this guarantee under it in so far as we are concerned in order to encourage production here to assure that the bottom will not fall out of it, as people say.

Mr. CHARLTON: The floor price as set is $25 now. I am afraid it will not work too well.

Mr. CARDIFF: May I go back to the feedlot cattle? I do not think the minister intended to leave the impression with the committee that the cattle which had been fed on these feed lots are any different. I know nothing about the west, but I do not think there can be so much difference in the way we do things in Canada. These cattle are worth two cents more in the spring than in the fall. They go out finished in the spring and they come in as feeder cattle in the fall. While there may be a market for them in the fall at these times more than there was some time ago, yet these cattle are worth two cents more in the spring than in the fall, whether in the west or in the east.

Mr. GARDINER: The cattle that are thin in the fall are fattened in the spring. As I know feeders, most of them like to get the animal pretty fleshy in the fall.

Bill reported.

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): This afternoon we have done what we could to help the minister expedite the passage of this measure. We understood that he had to leave tonight and for that reason some of the discussion on the bill has been shortened. I spoke on the resolution, said nothing on second reading of this bill. I want now to take two or three minutes to outline our position. I do not want to ask the minister to wait to listen to it now, and I have no expectation that it will take long at eight o'clock.

Mr. GARDINER: If it will take only a short time, why not do it now?

Mr. BRACKEN: I did not want to ask the minister to wait to listen to me.

In view of the short discussion we have had here, I think I should take two or three minutes to state our position. It was made very clear in the resolution stage of this measure. These are the words I used. Our general position on this measure is known. We are opposed to it in principle; we are opposed to it because it is a complete negation of the form of farm marketing act which we favour, and which our producers are seeking from one end of this country to the other. We favour an act based on the principle of provincially sponsored marketing boards operated by the organized farmers themselves. We favour legislation which gives the producers themselves more say in the fixing of the prices of their products than is allowed in this measure.

The government's program with respect to agricultural prices is expressed effectively in two measures, the Canadian Wheat Board Act under which the wheat contract with Britain is administered, and this Agricultural Products Act under which these contracts with Britain for beef, bacon and cheese and eggs and so on are made and administered. I stated briefly our position with respect to the former act a few days ago. I can state as briefly our position with respect to this one now in words somewhat similar.

The purpose of the original Natural Products Marketing Act, 1934, was to market the farmers' crops to the best advantage as regards total price, stability of payments and orderly marketing. But the government is now following a policy to serve another end. It is using this measure as a price control mechanism more than as an agricultural marketing board; and for that purpose it has sold in the past, and no doubt will sell in the future, farmers' products at less than those farmers could get for their products if sold by themselves. Instead of a price supporting agency, as the original Natural Products Marketing Act was intended to be, and was, the government is using the present measure as a price depressing agency in its plans to regulate price controls or price levels in this country. That is a complete perversion of the original conception of the Natural Products Marketing Act. On that ground we opposed this measure in the resolution stage and for the same reasons we oppose it at this time.

Mr. GARDINER moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. ROSS (Souris): On division.

Bill read the third time and concurred in.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

SUPPLY

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, there is a matter I should like to raise because it is one of some importance to both our own country and others. With your permission I shall introduce what I intend to say by reading a Canadian Press dispatch from Sydney, Australia, under date of March 8, 1948:

The recent decision to close the Canadian national film board offices in Sydney and Melbourne is regarded by film societies throughout Australia as a serious setback to the cultural development of the country.

Almost daily, educational authorities are writing letters to leading newspapers expressing appreciation of the work done by the board since the offices were opened and deploring the severance of a valuable link between Canada and Australia.

Typical of the letters is one from C. N. M. Richmond, president of the Canberra film centre, in today's Sydney Morning Herald. Richmond stressed his disappointment that the board was closing its offices and continued: "In the past two years nearly one third of all films on the programs of the Canberra film centre have been Canadian film board productions and this high proportion is no accident, for the admirable quality of most films from this source now is generally acknowledged.

But there is a further point that the Canadian film board has developed a tradition which had already helped our own national film board—through the work of men like Ralph Foster and Stanley Hawes—so that apart from the film supply we can ill afford to lose Miss Helen Watson and her office as a direct link with the outstanding film work of our sister dominion."

Richmond concludes with the query: "Is it too late for the Canadian film board to think again and leave at least its Sydney office intact?"

The dispatch says:

Miss Watson closes the Australian offices March 31.

Then it goes on to say this:

It is estimated that almost one million five hundred thousand Australians saw Canadian documentary and non-theatrical films last year. The board's library of more than 300 film subjects was screened 16,400 times in Australia during the year.

In Ottawa Ross McLean, federal government film commissioner, said the national film board had been obliged to indicate the closing of its office in Australia "on the grounds of economy".

"But other ways to make Canadian films available in Australia are being studied," he concluded.

This is not the whole story. We look at the estimates and find that they have been cut by $202,000—

Mr. ABBOTT: By approximately ten per cent.

Mr. COLDWELL: —which is approximately ten per cent. But may I remind the minister that a cut of ten per cent for an organization of this description, with the increase in the price of supplies, means a loss of considerably more than ten per cent to the work of the national film board. As I understand it, the other offices of the film board in the United States and in the United Kingdom, if they are not closed down, will be cut down and their activities greatly restricted. As I say, the estimates which have been tabled in the house recently indicate a sharp cut—for that is what it amounts to—in the film board estimates. I believe that this will not only lead to a curtailment of the excellent overseas work that is being done but also a curtailment of the work in the domestic field. Those of us who come from rural districts in Canada know well how splendidly the national film board has been serving the rural communities; and, after all, those communities are entitled to consideration from this house. I do not like the description that is sometimes applied to some of these films, when they are called movies. These days movies have a connotation that is sometimes not flattering. The national film board products are something more than movies. They are educational films building up good will among all our people all across this country and across the world. From my observation I say that this organization has done a great deal in building up a varied, efficient and interesting rural life and in assisting our educational institutions in those areas. Last year's cut, for there was a cut last year—

Mr. ABBOTT: A negligible cut.

Mr. COLDWELL: —reduced the circuits; or something reduced the circuits. I see that the minister shakes his head.

Mr. ABBOTT: A negligible cut.

Mr. COLDWELL: But the costs went up; and as I say, with the higher costs, even a negligible cut in the estimates means more than a negligible cut in the work. In any event, last year's cut reduced the circuits from eighty-five to sixty-seven, and we are told that these are economy measures. There are places where we can economize, but there are others where it is false economy to cut and I believe that this is one of them. The curtailment of the national film board's activities at home and abroad is, I believe, a penny-wise, pound-foolish policy. Relentless cutting is never wholly an economy measure, because we sometimes cut and find that, instead of economizing, we are less efficient; and that is not economy. The Department of National Revenue is, of course, responsible for the film board's activities. It seems to me that the estimates indicate that the cut is an arbitrary one without very much consideration as to what the consequences will be. The argument that is used, namely, that the development of the film board was an abnormal outgrowth of wartime activity, I do not think can be properly substantiated. Indeed, had there been no war, it seems to me that these services would have been developed. Now, when we need to unify our people in peacetime I am of the opinion that the film board's activities should continue to be developed and should enjoy a natural growth from the point at which we are now, not from the point at which we were before the war. I should not like to think it is the intention of the government or of the minister in charge consciously to cripple the potentialities for good of the national film board. But if the government intends to cut down or to eliminate the activities of the national film board, I think it is a matter that should be discussed in the house and the government should frankly tell us exactly what its attitude is.

This is one of several matters upon which this house has been negligent. We have never made a proper appraisal of the work of the national film board. We have never had an objective assessment of its activities as we have, for example, of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and when it has been raised in the house from time to time it has been kicked around something like a political football.

For years, for example, my hon. friend the member for Peterborough West (Mr. Fraser) has criticized the film board. I wonder if the hon. member has done what some of the rest of us have done—visited the film board, seen what it is doing, and looked over the work that is being done under terrific difficulties in the seven scattered buildings in this city.

Mr. FRASER: Twelve.

Mr. COLDWELL: Has the hon. member visited those twelve buildings?

Mr. GRAYDON: You have six more to see, then.

Mr. KNOWLES: Seven from twelve is five.

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes, five. The hon. member said that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Fournier) should take note of the condition of some of these buildings in which the film board employees are doing the best they can. The conditions are really a disgrace to the government of Canada; for example, the conditions under which some of the people are working on what is called the island. Those conditions are unbelievable; and if a private organization were using such buildings and keeping employees engaged in them under similar conditions, the government of Ontario, under the factory act or a measure of that kind, would step in and compel the employer to put the place in proper condition to be occupied.

Mr. MacNICOL: Not even a good factory.

Mr. COLDWELL: I suggest that before hon. members make a criticism of the work of an institution, whether it be one of our own institutions or any other, at least some careful inquiry should be made into what is being there carried on. I understand that the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) has visited the film board buildings in this city. Apparently he is unavoidably absent tonight. I am sorry he is not here, because I should like to have heard what the hon. gentleman has to say. I should like to hear the hon. member who sits to my immediate right, the member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol), who has taken a considerable interest in what the film board employees are doing. I believe he could speak with some authority on the achievements of the board.

As I said a few moments ago, recently I took a look around to see under what conditions the film board employees were operating in this city, and apart from the utterly appalling conditions in which those employees are compelled to work, I think the board is something in which all Canadians can take considerable pride. I believe they are doing a splendid job. I have before me an editorial from the Moving Picture Digest dated March 13, 1948. This magazine normally speaks for private enterprise and, therefore, would not be considered to be particularly interested in a government institution of this kind; but what does this moving picture digest say? Under the title, "Why publicly spank the baby?" it reminds us that the film board is a creature of this parliament and it asks why the baby must always be subjected to public spankings. It refers to "Canada Carries On," which many of us have seen in the theatres week by week, as being a first class production, as indeed it is recognized to be by film authorities in the United States and elsewhere. It praises the film board's record and concludes with this statement:

> An investigation, by competent men, to save operation costs is a reasonable business consideration, but why not investigate, get the facts, get the figures before we blast and publicly spank our baby?

Mr. REID: And the costs too.

Mr. COLDWELL: And the costs as well.

Mr. REID: I have been there.

Mr. COLDWELL: That is what I mean. Let us investigate before we come to a decision condemning something which I think is doing a good job for Canada.

In my investigation of what the national film board was doing I found that there is very careful treasury control of all the expenditures undertaken by the film board and its staff—an internal audit, treasury board audit —and if there is a treasury audit, our experience in this house must indicate that the treasury is pretty tight when it comes to the expenditure of public money.

The film board was first established early in 1939 as an agency to correlate all government film activities. There were a number of activities before that time; but this was the first time they were correlated under one board, and its purpose was and is to provide films interpreting Canada on much broader films than travelling industrial productions could possibly do such as heretofore have made up the bulk of the government's film programs.

May I emphasize, contrary to what is sometimes said, that the national film board was not a wartime creation? Today the national film board remains on a broader scale and I think the reasons are obvious why it should function on a broader scale. Over the last nine years, Canada's own demands created all kinds of services which the film board had to undertake; hence the expansion of the capacities and functions of the organization as the times demanded. Under wartime conditions, as we all know, and as I have said before, Canada developed a documentary film organization that is first class. I was going to say unsurpassed, but it is first class and has often been compared with the excellent documentary films that are produced in the United Kingdom. Let me suggest that, before we agree to the drastic cutting of estimates for this organization, we should measure the film board's achievements, and we should measure them by the yardstick of merit.

Some people say, of course, that it has expanded its activities. So it has. But in my opinion the expansion of those activities is something to be commended and not deplored, and if merit is to be the standard of judgment, then I say that we shall find that the organization ranks high.

I should say, in addition, that the documentary films of the board are regarded in other countries as models to be followed; and, as we learn and know, inquiries regarding these documentary films flow in constantly from all over the world—Mexico, South Africa, Australia, Sweden, the British isles and elsewhere. And as I have indicated, by press dispatch, the threatened closing of the office in Australia is causing considerable consternation.

Mr. REID: Among whom?

Mr. COLDWELL: Among people who are interested in educational films in Australia. We know the pattern of the national film board has been followed very closely by the Australian government itself. A Canadian, a member of the national film board staff, was the first commissioner of the Australian film organization.

On March 10 there were tabled and distributed to hon. members facts concerning this organization's activities. I hope they will be studied by all hon. members. Anyone looking them over will find that every year thousands of prints go out from the film board for domestic and foreign use. Some are, of course, sold to commercial concerns, and they bring in some small revenue. However I was there the other day and saw their library and, of photographs alone, I am told they have approximately 80,000 negatives of various types, other than the actual war types. These are all indexed and contain a full history of our country during the time the national film board has operated.

In addition to those supplied to commercial organizations, thousands of others are rented for use by various non-commercial bodies. The figures which are given in the report—and they are quite impressive—did not include prints of newsreel stories, of which sixteen were released by major newsreel companies in the United States for world distribution, reaching audiences estimated at more than 70,000,000. That is one kind of release which reaches an audience of 70,000,000 people, advertising our country and interpreting various phases of Canadian life abroad. Today Canada has the largest non-theatrical showings of any country in the world; and this, it seems to me, suggests that the use of films should be encouraged as an effective means of increasing the free flow of information, not only in our country but throughout the world.

And may I ask, Mr. Speaker, if there ever was a time in the world's history when that free flow of information was needed more badly then it is at the present time? If one picks up this evening's paper he will read of the discussions going on now at Geneva regarding the free flow of information.

Here we have an organization which is giving information all across the world about our country, interpreting us to them and them to us. The appalling ignorance of one country about another leads to all kinds of misunderstandings. If we knew more about each other I am convinced that the preservation of peace would not be nearly as difficult as it is now. The iron curtain which keeps us from knowing what is going on behind it, and keeps the people behind it from knowing what we are doing is one of the greatest dangers in the world today. Anything that tends to bring information to people across the world is a most valuable asset to any country. If the people of Russia and those of the western world were able to learn more about each other's problems I am convinced we would find it easier to reach satisfactory understandings.

But while this lack of understanding is greatly to be deplored, in my view even more deplorable is the ignorance of free peoples about one another. Any of us who have travelled know perfectly well how appallingly ignorant people in other countries are about Canada. I am sure that every Canadian serviceman—I have heard them say so and, having visited the old land several times, I can confirm it—was shocked at the lack of knowledge about Canada to be found in the British isles.

Mr. REID: They are still ignorant of this country.

Mr. COLDWELL: And exactly the same thing would apply here, perhaps in various parts of the country. Certainly in the United States there is appalling ignorance of Canada, and perhaps among some of our own people just as great a degree of ignorance of the United States.

That ignorance extends to all peoples everywhere. Anything that can break down that barrier and bring about better information and better understanding should be supported. As has been said so often in the house, today we face the threat of a new tyranny. In the final analysis, the only way to overcome that tyranny is more information, more education and more understanding among the common people of the world; for the common people do not want misunderstanding; they do not want war. The common people are the ones who suffer most when war comes.

I think it is wrong, then, to reduce these estimates. It is wrong to cut out services we have rendered to our sister communities of the British commonwealth and to Great Britain. Today in many countries—in Australia, for example—there is a paper shortage. The same applies in Great Britain, with the result that if you wish to interpret your life and conditions to that other country you cannot do so on paper. Then, if you wish to use some other medium, certainly one of the best available is films, because perhaps we learn more through the eye than we do in any other way.

I would like to see Canada set up a UNESCO commission in our own country, and make available all the facilities for proper representation at its conferences. But at the present time we are cutting out one of the chief instruments of education and information at our disposal.

True, perhaps we must economize. But let us economize in places where we can do so and not exercise a false economy. Let me illustrate in this way. Last year's exhibition allotment of the Department of Trade and Commerce for the commonwealth exhibition in Sydney, Australia, cost the country $10,000. That was for only a short time. Many people would walk by it casually, as we do at exhibitions, but only a fraction of them would really look at what was demonstrated there. Now we propose to cut out the office of the film board at Sydney, Australia, which performs all the functions I outlined at the beginning of my observations. The salaries in the Australian film board offices were $7,500. The total outlay for the office was a little over $10,000. The job done by the film board in Australia was done for 365 days of the year, and was carried out into the most remote places of our sister dominion. Just as they go into the remote places of our sister dominion, so do film board films go into the remote places in our own country, and bring education and entertainment to our own people.

Mr. REID: Do any films come from Australia? Do they reciprocate?

Mr. COLDWELL: We happen to be ahead of them in this matter. However, I have no doubt that under the leadership of a Canadian, who was on the film board, they will be producing documentary films we shall have an opportunity to enjoy.

Mr. BENTLEY: During the war they had some.

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes, during the war they had. I was going to say that one of the most interesting full-length films made recently, one which I believe received an award, is an Australian film the title of which now escapes me, but which, I believe, shows the driving of the herds across the great continent of Australia. I say that the expansion, which has been quite fast, should not be retarded; that we should give every encouragement to this group of people who are doing such an excellent job.

Mr. REID: Of course there is bound to be a limit.

Mr. COLDWELL: If the hon. member for New Westminster who keeps interrupting me will just be patient he can say whatever he wants to say later on. I know there must be a limit.

Mr. REID: You remember that when I am speaking and do not interrupt me.

Mr. COLDWELL: I do not interrupt the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman has been interrupting me almost continuously. I am quite willing to answer a question, and if an hon. gentleman who does not agree with me will rise in his place and ask a question I will sit down and then get up and answer it, but I object to having a running fire of interruptions with hon. members sitting in their seats.

Mr. REID: I will watch you when you are speaking and you will not get away with it next time.

Mr. COLDWELL: Instead of cutting down, I say that we should be expanding the service by intelligent degrees. It is senseless to cut down arbitrarily the work of this organization as the estimate implies will be done. I want to make two pleas to the government. First, the cut should be reconsidered and I think there is enough evidence to show that it should be reconsidered. Second, an opportunity should be provided for fuller consideration of the work of this organization than has been provided heretofore. I think hon. members have a right to ask the film board authorities to appear before a parliamentary committee so that they can get all the facts. The hon. member for New Westminster or the hon. member for Peterborough West—

Mr. REID: Leave me out.

Mr. COLDWELL: —who has indicated that money has been wastefully used and that this organization is not worthwhile—

Mr. FRASER: I should like to correct the hon. gentleman. I have not at any time said that the film board was not worthwhile.

Mr. COLDWELL: I am glad to hear that. I misunderstood the purport of the hon. gentleman's questions. That would give him an opportunity to inquire into all the features which he thinks should be inquired into and it would give the rest of us an understanding of what this organization is doing. Just as we set up a committee to inquire into the work of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, so we should set up a committee to inquire into the work of the national film board. If that is done we should all be in a better position to form a considered judgment. I suggest that two things be done: that the present cut in the estimates should be reconsidered and that, after we come back following the Easter recess, there should be set up a committee before which the officers of the film board could appear and which would give us an opportunity of inquiring into all the phases of the work of this organization.

Mr. G. K. FRASER (Peterborough West): Mr. Speaker, I know that you are not anxious to sit in the chair much longer, that you want to get down to this other work, but I do not believe it would be fair if I did not have an opportunity to say a few words. I am pleased that the hon. gentleman has brought up this matter this evening, although if I had had an opportunity to go up to my office I might have been better prepared to reply. The hon. member started off by mentioning the fact that the Sydney, Australia, office had been closed.

As I understand the purpose of the setting up of the film board in 1939, it was that it would buy or make films for the different departments of the government and for educational purposes. I have a brief here outlining the whole set-up but I have not had a chance to go through it since the hon. member began to speak. I believe I am right in saying that the Department of Trade and Commerce was to distribute these films in the different countries, not the national film board. The film board was only to produce the films for the different departments. The Department of Trade and Commerce, having a full understanding of the different countries, could pick out the proper pictures to be distributed in those countries through its trade offices.

Mention was made in the article read by the hon. member that the Australian film board was sorry that the national film board was closing its office in Australia. No doubt that is true. I do not blame the Australian film board for feeling that way because, by the national film board being in Australia, the Australian film board was saved thousands and thousands of dollars in distribution costs. There is no doubt of that. Not only did we supply them with films made by the film board, I have no doubt that we supplied them with other films made by commercial firms. I hope that most of the films distributed in Australia were made by commercial firms and I will tell you why in a few moments.

I feel as the hon. member does, and as I think every hon. member does, that every agency of government should be used to build up good will in other countries. I have preached that in the house on many occasions. I even suggested that the former minister of trade and commerce should take a trip to South and Central America. He did.

Mr. ROSS (Hamilton East): Oh, oh.

Mr. FRASER: The hon. member for Hamilton East laughs. He evidently feels that the minister's trip was of no use, but I feel that it was of some use. The hon. member is a Liberal member and, of course, you could not expect anything else.

Mr. BENTLEY: He is not even an independent.

Mr. FRASER: No, he is not even an independent. The hon. member who has just taken his seat said that he had visited the film board. I have visited it on different occasions right from 1940. I did not wait until the last couple of years to visit it. On Saturday morning I was over at 71 Bank street on an invitation from the film board to see some films they were showing. They sent out invitations to a program starting at eleven o'clock and running until twelve thirty. I got a special invitation from the secretary of the film board, and I suppose I was the only one who did. However I was going anyhow. I have spoken to some of our own members and none of them got it. Two other members and another party went with me. There were four Progressive Conservatives and two Liberals in a theatre seating fifty people. The film board showed, first of all, what they call "Eyewitness—First Shots of Chalk River". That was a fairly good picture, but of course they could not show very much of the Chalk River plant.

Then they showed "Trade Mission to South Africa". That included a picture of the former minister of trade and commerce—

Mr. ROSS (Hamilton East): Good.

Mr. FRASER: I believe even the hon. member for Hamilton East could take a better picture than was made by the member of the national film board who took that picture. It looked to me as if it had been taken by the rankest amateur. It was really a poor picture. The person who took it had evidently very little knowledge of taking pictures in southern countries. A person going into a southern country where the light is extremely strong must find out from people who are taking pictures there just how the lighting should be, what filters to use and how they should be used. That picture was an absolute flop. What it cost the taxpayers I do not know.

They had another picture "Great Lakes". It was supposed to be in colour. It was on colour film.

Mr. BROWN: A good picture too.

Mr. FRASER: That shows that the hon. gentleman does not know a good picture from a bad one. It showed a picture of Windsor, and I will acknowledge that some of the shots were good but the picture as a whole was extremely poor. The colour picture was taken when the light was very strong. I think it was taken at noon because the shadows showed straight up and down. Those who are taking colour pictures, unless they know exactly what filters to use, should take them in the morning before the sun is too strong, or in the evening just when the sun is setting, to get the best results.

Mr. GRAYDON: No excuse for not getting a good picture of a beautiful city like Windsor.

Mr. FRASER: They also showed a film "Farm Homes Beautiful". That is a picture, Mr. Speaker, that is really worthwhile. The photography in it was not up to what it should be, not as good as it would have been if taken by a commercial firm, but it was such an improvement on the other pictures that it really looked good to me. It is a picture that I feel should be shown in the rural sections of Canada, instead of some of those other pictures they are sending out. They sent out a picture in my district on "Soil", to a section of the country which can grow only rock, where there is no farming at all. Even a member of the federation of agriculture said about that picture, "I was absolutely disgusted when they threw it on the screen."

On Saturday they showed another picture "West Wind", in the Canadian Artists series —Tom Thomson—filmed in Algonquin park. I am not prejudiced; that is an Ontario picture. It was really an excellent picture; but it was taken, not by the national film board, but by Crawley Films. The colour in it just stood out. You could see it was in perfect colour. Every detail in it was perfect, not like the other pictures, blurred and hard on your eyes, but a real picture that you could look at a second time, a picture you would be proud of.

The hon. member mentioned the buildings the film board occupies. He said seven buildings. There are twelve, ten of them rented buildings and two owned by the government. I have a return which shows that is a fact. I do not want to say anything against the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann), who looks after the national film board, and who signed this return, so it must be true. I will acknowledge that practically every government building needs cleaning and repairing. I think the minister who is in charge of public works will acknowledge that too, and I hope that as soon as times are better and building materials a little cheaper, and men available to do the work, the necessary cleaning and repairs will be done to these government buildings. But personally I feel that veterans homes must come first. I hope we shall do as much for them as possible and leave this other work until later. It is not only here in Ottawa where government buildings need repair but in practically every city in Canada. If you travel in the United States you will find the same conditions there. The hon. member who mentioned seven buildings may have got that figure from an editorial in one of the papers which mentioned seven buildings and incidentally tried to pan me. At the present time the film board is spending over one and a half million dollars on salaries out of a budget of about $2,200,000, and on top of that there are travelling expenses; I have not those expenses here, but they are in Hansard and show over $300,000.

Last year I was invited to visit the film board and I would have gone but at the time committees of the house were sitting and the house was also sitting in the morning, I believe. I tried five telephones to get hold of this party to tell him I would prefer having the appointment moved forward, but I could not raise anybody until a quarter to ten o'clock. I did not try all the 132 telephones which the film board has; I tried only five.

I do not want anybody to believe or think I am not in favour of films for educational purposes, and films to advertise Canada in every part of the world. The proper films can do a wonderful job, but those films must be distributed in other countries, not by the film board, which does not know a thing about distributing films to the right people in foreign countries, but by the trade and commerce department, which knows every angle of the business and knows what the people want.

There is no better medium of education than films of the right kind. The children love them and so do the children who have grown up to the age of you and me; but we love good pictures, not some of these fuzzy pictures that the film board puts out. I know that in rural districts films have done an excellent job. They have done an excellent job in agriculture; but, Mr. Speaker, do you think they can do a decent job with agriculture if they do not have a little direction from the Minister of Agriculture and his department? The federation of agriculture have also asked for motion pictures. With the proper films, agriculture in Canada will improve and find out the different ways and means of doing its job. It is an excellent way to show the farmers of the country the proper way to look after their soil, their crops, and insect control, and the more pictures we have of that kind the better, but we must have people taking these pictures who understand how to take them and what kind of pictures to take.

I understand that in the United States the government of that country have all their films made and processed by commercial companies. I might be wrong in that, but I do not think I am, as I have had a great number of letters from people who are in the film business, despite the paper read by the hon. member, saying, "Go to it; you are on the right track." The first week after I spoke in the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne—that was February 25—I had 216 letters from photographers throughout Canada saying that they were having unfair competition from the national film board in their photographic business. As taxpayers, they felt that they should not be taxed to pay for unfair competition in their own line of business.

Last year the national film board got out a catalogue, "Canada 1947-48". It is a wonderful catalogue; it has beautiful pictures in it; they are Canadian subjects. These pictures are sold right across Canada in competition with their own photographers. That is one department of the national film board which should be closed down.

The film board asked the architectural association—I think that is the proper name for it—to send in all their photographs of public buildings and to be sure to have them copyrighted so that the national film board would have all right to them; and even the photographers who took them would not have any say as to where they went or get any benefit from them.

During the last week I have had a number of telephone calls; I have also had people come in to see me, and I heard something that almost makes me wonder what this country of ours is coming to. I believe there is a place around Ottawa called Fairy lake park; I am not sure that that is the proper name for it. A gentleman was there taking some pictures, and he was plump and plainly told by the national film board man who was there with a camera that he had no business taking pictures on that property because it belonged to the federal government. I have also had commercial photographers tell me that they have been told to keep off the grounds in front of this building because it was government property and that they were not to take pictures there; that it was the right and the sole right of the national film board to take pictures on federal property. I can hardly believe that, but these men are, I know, responsible men and I feel quite sure that they would not say anything that was not true.

I hold in my hand a return which shows the most outlandish picture I have seen in a long time. It is a Christmas card; it has "N.F.B." on one corner and "O.N.F." on the other. Inside the cover it says, "The film commissioner and staff of the national film board wish you a merry Christmas and a happy New Year." That is paid for by the taxpayers of Canada.

Mr. KNOWLES: The initials to which the hon. member refers probably means the national film board in French.

Mr. FRASER: That may be so; my French is not as good this year as it was last year. I have enough material here, Mr. Speaker, to talk on the national film board until two o'clock in the morning—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Don't bother.

Mr. FRASER: —and I think I could give you something new every minute. I do not know who gave permission to the national film board to come here on March 16 and take a still picture, to set their camera over on the other side and take a picture across this way.

[Mr. Fraser.]

They took a picture of the Hansard reporters; but over on this side, standing away to the left of me—

An hon. MEMBER: Where all the smart people are.

Mr. FRASER: An hon. member says, "Where all the smart people are". He is perfectly right. It was the messengers of the House of Commons and other members of the staff of the house who sat there while that picture was being taken. I agree with him that they are very smart and pleasant fellows with whom to deal. I like all the messengers here, but I do not think a picture of that kind should be taken in the House of Commons with a set-up of that kind. I do not think it is right, because what they will have to do is either to blur out the faces of the messengers and the staff or put the heads of some members of parliament on their bodies—

An hon. MEMBER: That will weaken the messengers.

Mr. FRASER: I want to say again, as I said to the hon. member who spoke before me, I have never said at any time that the national film board should be done away with. I have said that the national film board should have a clean-up. The national film board should do what it was set up to do in 1939 when it had a budget of only $80,000. I have always said that the national film board could do good work if it had the proper guidance.

An hon. member says that the treasury board checks all the vouchers and things. That may be so, Mr. Speaker, but what do the treasury board know about films? They know figures, yes; they know what a dollar is, yes; but they do not know the workings of the national film board; and when a voucher comes through, if it is signed by an officer of the film board it will be approved and passed. Despite what any editorial says, or what anyone else might say, the sooner the national film board has a mopping-up, a clean-up and proper direction, the better for this Canada of ours, and the better trade relations we shall have with the other countries because they will appreciate good pictures after the bad national film board pictures they have been having.

FARMERS' INCOME TAX

Mr. H. R. ARGUE (Wood Mountain): I rise at this time, Mr. Speaker, to bring before the house a matter which I think is now of the utmost importance to the farmers of Canada, namely, the farmers' income tax. Protests are coming in from western Canada by the hundreds. Never before have I received as many letters from my constituency on any single subject as I am now receiving with respect to farmers' income tax. The farmers feel so strongly on this particular matter that many protest meetings are being held. These meetings are spontaneous; they are not organized by any person touring the country. The farmers in a given locality feel that they have a just complaint and they meet together in considerable numbers to send their protests to members of parliament and to the government. Just recently a large meeting was held in the city of Swift Current, during bad weather, at which 148 farmers attended and as a result of which protests were sent to the members of parliament and to the government. The hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Bentley) and other members of this party go along with me in protesting the type of income tax form and the method used in making the farmers comply with it. In one town of my constituency the farmers have formed a farmers' income tax association; two hundred farmers around one small prairie town have formed themselves into an income tax association. Another town has farmers who are organizing a widespread campaign to send in petitions against the present income tax form.

Mr. HARRIS (Grey-Bruce): Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. ARGUE: Yes.

Mr. HARRIS (Grey-Bruce): Is the hon. member seriously contending now that the announcement made by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann) last Friday is not satisfactory?

Mr. ARGUE: Yes, I contend that. I shall come to that particular point a little later on.

The records show, Mr. Speaker, that in the past the farmers of western Canada have more than paid their share of the income taxes which have been paid by farmers from one end of Canada to the other. Just a few days ago Chester A. Bloom, writing in the Free Press, gave the figures with regard to income tax paid in 1945-46 by farmers in the various provinces. In that year the farmers in Quebec paid total income taxes of $59,900; the farmers in Ontario paid a little over $1,000,000 in taxes; the farmers in Saskatchewan paid more than $2,500,000; the farmers in Manitoba paid more than $1,800,000, and the farmers in Alberta paid more than $1,100,000.

Mr. LESAGE: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. ARGUE: Yes.

Mr. LESAGE: Did the hon. member consider the fact that the income of the western farmer is much higher than the average income of the farmer in the province of Quebec?

Mrs. STRUM: So are their expenses.

Mr. ARGUE: That is perhaps a point, but I think the hon. member should also know the number of farmers in the provinces. For example, in 1945 Ontario had 175,749 farmers; Quebec, 151,850; Saskatchewan, 138,370. There are a great many more farmers in Ontario and Quebec than there are in Saskatchewan.

Mr. LESAGE: Does the hon. member contend that it is a question of the number of farmers or is it not a question of the amount of income of the individual farmer?

Mr. ARGUE: I think it is a question of both.

Mr. LESAGE: I do not think so.

Mr. ARGUE: I think it is a question of both. I do not think the hon. member will contend that in Quebec, for example, every farmer who should have paid income tax has, in fact, done so.

An hon. MEMBER: Oh, yes, they have.

Mr. ARGUE: No, he does contend that; and I do not contend that for Saskatchewan.

Mr. LESAGE: I imagine so.

Mr. ARGUE: All I am trying to point out is that the farmers of Saskatchewan have paid what I consider to be a reasonable share of the income tax paid by farmers in Canada as a whole. More than that, there is a concerted drive on in western Canada at the present time to get farmers to file returns whether they have filed them before or not. Most farmers find it impossible to keep an adequate set of accounts. Certainly they cannot remember all the expenses they had, for example, in 1944. Therefore, when they are making returns now they must pretty much guess at the figures. More than that, I think the government is requiring a good deal of unnecessary work and worry over the filing of these returns on the part of many farmers who certainly will not be paying any income tax at all; for in my opinion a farmer on a small farm cannot, over a period of three years, earn sufficient income to warrant his paying any tax.

One of the major complaints of farmers in respect of income tax is that, during the whole of the nineteen-thirties, their debts accumulated drastically, but it was not until 1943 that prices of farm products improved to any extent. Moreover, in 1942 there was a rigid quota against wheat, also in 1943. Then in 1944 farmers had an opportunity to market much of their 1942 and 1943 crops along with their 1944 crop. No consideration has been given to the fact that within one year a farmer marketed parts at least of three crops. Moreover, if a farmer paid $1 to reduce his indebtedness, that $1 was subject to income tax. It was considered income for taxation purposes. So the farmers feel that they are not being given fair and just treatment. Today in many instances they find that they have replaced a debt owed to a mortgage company by a debt owed to the federal Department of National Revenue. I shall quote part of a letter which was sent to me. I picked out this one at random from those I received, and I think it fairly well states the position of the farmers of western Canada in this regard. It reads in part as follows:

> For years the loan companies bled us white and just when we are getting on our feet after ten years of drought, the government steps in to put us back where we were before. What I would like to know is, what right has the government to hold this money indefinitely—

Meaning the wheat board participation certificates.

> —without paying us interest; yet if the farmer owes them back income tax, they hook him for a 5 per cent penalty?

That is a good question that has not been answered. The farmers are being forced to pay a good deal of income tax at the present time; still the government says it wants livestock production. Farmers are not producing livestock because they find it is of little benefit, since a good part of the income they make from extra work producing livestock goes not to themselves but to the federal income tax department.

The government got out what it called a simplified form, and along with that form went a book of instructions. I think it is good that farmers were given this book of instructions. It will be of some benefit to them, and certainly items whereby farmers can write down their various receipts and expenditures are a good thing. But it seems to me that a good part of the introductory portion of the farmers' income tax guide is devoted to propaganda.

There is one question: "What are the things Canadians get through their government? What are we paying for?" The answer is this: "We are paying for the after-cost of our part in the winning of two world wars, which, had we lost, would have plunged us into the terrors, the deprivations, the serfdom and the hopelessness which afflict the majority of the people in the world today."

The farmers' income tax guide goes on to say: "We are paying for social services." This is what the money is going for: old age pensions, and family allowances in particular, but also health services and many other benefits.

I do not know who gets health services from the federal government when he is ill. I do not know if this was written in the hope that health services would be provided by the federal government, but certainly I do not think it is a statement of fact to say that the federal government is spending money for health services. The simplified form makes it necessary, I believe, for the farmer to hire an accountant to keep his books throughout the year and then hire a lawyer to fill in the income tax form at the end of the year. And the government, in forcing all farmers, whether they are liable or not, to file forms is creating some employment. It is creating jobs for the lawyers and the real estate agents and what have you. But in my opinion it involves a lot of wasted time and a lot of money spent by the farmers, many of whom should not, in my opinion, come within the income tax regulations at all.

The minister announced that some changes were made in regard to the net worth section of the farmers' simplified form. I do not think the announcement meets the situation. On March 19, as reported at page 2400 of Hansard, the minister said:

> The department therefore has decided that (a) those farmers who report their income for 1947 on a cash basis need not complete the farmer's net worth statement section of the return. There may be individual cases where, after the filing of the return, the department will require from a farmer, as from any other taxpayer, in order to make a proper assessment of his income, a statement of assets and liabilities of his business, or other additional information which, in such cases, will be requested in the usual manner.

I wonder if the information will include the part of the net worth section which calls for the farmer to disclose the amount of cash he has on his person or on the farm. I do not know and the minister did not say. Then, to conclude the quotation:

> (b) Those farmers who report 1947 incomes on an accrual basis must attach to the return a statement of assets and liabilities, as heretofore, or complete the appropriate parts of the net worth statement attached to the return.

Any bona fide farmer in western Canada will file his income tax return on an accrual basis. He is given an opportunity to spread his income over a period of three years, so that he will report his income for taxation purposes on an accrual basis and, if he does that, then he must submit a net worth statement attached to the return. The minister did not state whether that net worth statement which must be attached to the return is the same type and has the same parts in it as the net worth section of the 1947 income tax form. If it is, then there is no real change, because of the minister's announcement, for the reason that every man who is in the business of farming will want his income spread over a period of three years.

One of the reasons the farmer will want that done is that he suffers crop failures every now and then. If I do not miss my guess he will still have to sell his oats, barley and flax on the grain exchange, and these prices will vary a great deal. The farmer's income will fluctuate greatly because of the operation of the grain exchange and because of recurring crop failures; therefore every farmer almost will want to file his income tax return on an accrual basis, and when he does that he must submit the net worth statement.

I contend, therefore, that the minister's announcement has not cleared up the situation in that respect at all. The farmers are asking that their income tax be spread, not over a period of three years only but over a period of five years. Farming is very hazardous. It is particularly hazardous in the prairie provinces. The farmer may get a forty-bushel crop one year and no crop at all for another two years, and because of that the farmers believe that the only fair thing is to have their income tax spread over a period of five years, a moving average for five years, which would be in effect a ten-year average.

They also feel that the present-day exemptions are far too low. They feel that the exemption of a single man to the extent of $750 and a married couple to the extent of $1,500 is ridiculously low. No young man can hope to pay for a farm when, if he earns more than $750, he must pay income tax. The farmers believe that their income tax exemptions should be increased to at least $1,200 for the single man and $2,400 for the married couple.

The farmers are also asking that the principle of the basic herd be extended. Page 17 of the farmers' guide for income tax poses this question: "What is a basic herd and how is it established?" The answer given is this: "Briefly, a basic herd is a capital asset consisting of cattle which have been purchased out of capital or are a replacement of them." The farmers would like the principle of the basic herd applied to all types of livestock found on the farm and not applied only to cattle as at this moment.

I have some figures as to the size of farms in Saskatchewan. I think any hon. member who is familiar with farming in that province will agree that a man who has a half-section of land, or 320 acres, over a period of three years just cannot earn enough to get into the income tax bracket. I do not think any useful purpose is served by asking half-section farmers, or smaller, to file income tax returns. Certainly the government will not get any substantial amount of income tax from these farmers. It will create a lot of trouble for them, and they will have to go to a good deal of expense to have the income tax forms filed.

In Saskatchewan in 1946 there were 75,000 farms of 479 acres or less. That is just under three-quarters of a section. The average farmer has one-quarter of a section of land, or two-quarters or three-quarters or more. So that of the 75,000 farmers, I am sure that more than 70,000 have a half-section of land or less. In that province in 1946 there were only 125,000 farmers, so that 60 per cent of the farmers are, I am sure, farming a half-section of land or less.

Therefore I contend that the government should not ask farmers who are farming that size of farm unit to file income tax returns, because certainly they will not be liable to pay income tax; and by being asked to file income tax returns, they are being asked to go to unnecessary expense.

There are many ways in which present income tax laws should be changed as they affect farmers. The Alberta Farmers' Union and the United Farmers of Canada, Saskatchewan section, have submitted briefs to the government in this respect. They go into a great deal of detail as to the many ways in which farmers' income tax regulations and forms should be changed.

In closing, I should like to outline the nine steps which I consider are most important to correct the present inequities in the income tax regulations as applied to farmers. They are:

1. Exemptions should be raised to $1,200 for single and $2,400 for married persons.

2. Payment of arrears of interest and principal due before 1940 should be allowed as deductions for income tax purposes.

3. The present three-year average should be replaced by a five-year moving average.

4. There should be simplification of income tax forms and complete abolition of the present net worth section.

5. Farmers proving investment in land and machinery to a value of less than $10,000 should be exempt from having to file income tax returns, because a farmer with only a $10,000 investment cannot over a period of three years make sufficient money to have to pay income tax.

6. In case of dispersal sales of livestock a number of animals equivalent to those owned on January 1, 1941, should be considered a capital asset, and not subject to income tax; this to apply to horses, sheep, hogs and poultry, as well as cattle. This is the basic herds clause.

7. Allowance for labour of farm families in connection with production on the farm should be made.

8. There should be establishment of a board of arbitration in each province to hear income tax appeals. There is no board in the various provinces now to which the farmers can take their assessments and obtain rulings.

9. Uniformity of interpretation and administration of the Income Tax Act. It should not be left to the discretion of district inspectors to vary the provisions of the act.

I believe if these changes were made the farmers of Canada, particularly those of western Canada who are willing and anxious to pay their share of income tax, would be in a position to file their returns in a simplified manner, and the government would be able to assess those returns in a more just fashion. It would correct the grave injustices which prevail at the present time.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. T. J. BENTLEY (Swift Current): Mr. Speaker, it is not carried yet. I regret having to detain the house for a short time; but I would be remiss in my duty if I failed to take part in this discussion, instituted by the hon. member for Wood Mountain (Mr. Argue).

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): You will be brief, though.

Mr. BENTLEY: I shall be as brief as I can. I have received so many submissions from people at home complaining about this matter that I feel I must place the weight of their complaints before the house.

When the hon. member for Wood Mountain was speaking, some questions were asked from the other side as to whether he was being fair in pointing out that more pressure was being put upon western farmers for the purpose of collecting income tax from them than is being placed on people in other parts of Canada.

I have here a return given to me by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann) in reply to a question I had asked which, I believe, gives some information along that line. According to the 1946 census, there were, in round figures, 270,000 farmers in the three prairie provinces, while in the other provinces there were 436,000, making a total in Canada of about 705,000. To investigate the farmers of the west, there were 126 inspectors for the 270,000.

An hon. MEMBER: What year?

Mr. BENTLEY: Up to February 19, 1948. To investigate and inspect the 436,000 farmers in other parts of Canada there were only eighty-eight inspectors. It might be argued that there is more income made in the west, but I am doubtful as to the truth of that suggestion. The figures I have do not indicate a great deal of difference.

For instance, the Canada Year Book for 1947 gives the 1945 figure, the latest available, of $857,000,000 total farm cash income in the three prairie provinces, whereas in the rest of Canada it was $828,000,000. There is not a great deal of difference in the amount of cash income of the farmers. Nevertheless, in the west there are more inspectors trying to get money from the farmers than there are endeavouring to extract money from farmers in other parts of Canada.

Only a week ago last Friday a meeting was held in my city of Swift Current. Immediately after that meeting I received a wire dated at Swift Current, March 13, stating that a mass meeting had been held in Swift Current that afternoon respecting income tax forms, and stating, "In spite of roads, snow blocked, had 152 in attendance; resolution passed without one dissenting vote." They say they will mail me a copy, which they have done.

I have the minutes of that meeting here. I do not wish to delay the house so that, unless someone forces it, I shall not read these minutes. I have documentary evidence to prove every statement I make and, if requested, I shall take the time of the house to put it on the record, where it cannot be refuted. If the house is willing to take my word for it I shall read only one or two extracts from the proceedings of this meeting. I want to point out that the meeting was comprised of farmers who happened to be in town during a bad stretch of weather when the roads were blocked and when no motor traffic could move outside the city limits. It was called on two days' notice; and only those who could come in by train or had horse transportation, something not plentiful in such a highly mechanized country, were able to get in. They had to hold the meeting in a small hall because we have no civic centre. The skating rink is in use in the wintertime, and that is the place generally used for large meetings. This small hall was crowded with 152 people and there were many more outside who could not take part in the meeting. I might add that everything was quite informal. The letter is addressed to me as "Dear Tom," and they refer to the chairman as "Jim". I quote from the letter:

The meeting was very ably handled by Jim Wightman in the chair and in his opening remarks he prevailed upon those present to forget their party affiliations during this meeting as it was a matter affecting all farmers regardless of their politics, and this in effect was quite evident during the entire meeting as during the lengthy discussion on the resolution members of all political groups were heard from without any mention of party feelings, as all were unanimously in accord with the matter as presented in resolution and preamble.

The resolution was signed by the farmers who were at the meeting. Here again the material is open to inspection by anybody, unless hon. members want me to take forty minutes to read it into the record. There are pages and pages of signatures of reeves, councillors, chairmen of school boards and so on from various municipalities.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): No dead men?

Mr. BENTLEY: No dead men. I know them all personally and they are very much alive. I imagine that they were extremely alive at that meeting, because I know the temper of some of them.

An hon. MEMBER: No Liberals there?

Mr. BENTLEY: Yes, there were Liberals there. The resolution was distributed throughout the country. I have received numerous letters from farmers in all parts of the constituency, and a lot of signed cards such as the one I have here. These were sent to me as a more simplified way of expressing their opinions.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): Who printed those cards?

Mr. BENTLEY: They were done on typewriters by people who had to do it with one finger, the same as I have to when I have not a stenographer.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): I was wondering whether it was something like the arms to China.

Mr. BENTLEY: Not at all. These are honest farmers. They work hard to earn their living. They do not mind paying their way. The resolution on this card reads:

Whereas the prairie farmers' income tax forms are objectionable for the following reasons:

The form is impracticable, as it is impossible from the books kept by the majority of farmers for them to be completed with any degree of accuracy as the form contains too many details which are unknown by the taxpayer.

It is impossible for a farmer to give even a very rough estimate of feed fed to livestock on the farm; therefore the inventory is impracticable.

Page five—net worth statement of the 1947 income tax form be deleted for the following reasons:

(1) Too much of the farmers' personal business is involved which has no connection with income.

(2) The prairie farmer is being singled out and obliged to answer personal questions not required from any other type of business.

Therefore be it resolved:

That the 1947 income tax form for prairie farmers be immediately recalled and that a more simplified form be submitted, and that the new form shall not contain the net worth statement.

Some were inclined to be a little humorous when tackling this thing, and in a letter to one of the Saskatchewan papers one fellow suggested the following:

If Doctor McCann gets away with this form the next one may be worse, for instance the following may be added:

Beer used and consumed on farm during year.....

Empty bottles returned (state value).....

Bottles picked up along the road (give separately).....

Empty bottles under the granary at end of year.....

Where space insufficient add supplementary sheet.

Total.....

These men are earnest about their dislike of this form and in this regard I should like to quote from a letter from one farmer who says:

Assets such as livestock can die at any time. Sometimes we hold grain for sale, but have to feed it if the weather goes against us or if we have other feeds spoil, etc. Cattle can drop in price so if we figure a steer at $100 now in our assets, he may only be worth $50 by the end of the year.

That is the sort of complaint I am receiving. I want to recommend to the government that, instead of sending out assessors, the government should recognize that there is a difficulty. People in Ottawa cannot make up a form for farmers to fill out when they know so little about the matter. If the government want to give the farmer an opportunity to be as honest as he wants to be they should set up some kind of continuing commission or body, call it a royal commission, an investigating body, a study body or whatever name you want to give it. This body could examine all phases of farm operations, all the things that take place on a farm to make income and all expenses of operation of a farm in all its infinite varieties across Canada. Then that body would be able to recommend the type of form which the farmer could fill in, with some feeling that he was doing justice to himself and paying his fair share.

I offer that suggestion in all earnestness and honesty to the government. I believe the government should accept that suggestion. There is no single member of the government, and I include the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) with his vast knowledge and tremendous ability, who is able at the present time to assess the difficulty of farmers in all parts of Canada in making up income tax forms.

I want to point out again that the people whom I have quoted, the people who attended this meeting, are responsible men. Many of them are reeves, councillors and members of public school boards and other local governing bodies. They are not dumbbells; they are able men. Many of them are entrusted with the expenditure of money raised in the form of local taxes. They know something about spending money for public needs. But they are not trained book-keepers or accountants and they cannot follow the various book-keeping intricacies required by some of these forms. But give them an opportunity to do this in a simplified way and you will find that they are quite capable of accounting for their income and expenses and paying their honest share of the nation's revenue.

Mr. J. H. FERGUSON (Simcoe North): I am sure that visitors must have nothing but the greatest sympathy for members of parliament who have certainly earned their Easter recess after listening to the leader of the C.C.F. (Mr. Coldwell) tonight advocating that half-baked Hollywood mechanics should turn out crack pictures. In my opinion we should put the members of the film board to making a living where they might show some signs of doing something useful. Other speakers of the C.C.F. party have advocated lower taxation and tax exemption for the farmers.

Mr. BENTLEY: That was never mentioned.

Mr. FERGUSON: You have spoken for forty minutes and said less than I will say in five. I say, bring these men down from Saskatchewan who need a special book to make up their accounts and let them see what the government is spending on what the C.C.F. advocates, a glorified Hollywood here in Ottawa, and they will soon put a stop to spending this money on pictures and then will have less taxes to pay.

Motion (Mr. Abbott) agreed to and the house went into committee of supply, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

[Mr. Bentley.]

FURTHER SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, 1947-48

Mr. BRACKEN: Before we proceed with the consideration of the supplementary estimates, would the minister take a moment to tell us the total amount of the main estimates voted last year, together with the total of the supplementaries now before us? If he will answer that, I want then to make two or three brief observations.

Mr. ABBOTT: The summary contained in the estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1949, which were tabled a week or two ago, shows that the total previously voted was $2,116,967,853.74, to which must be added the total of the further supplementaries now before the committee, which total $79,809,337.98, or a grand total of $2,196,777,191.72.

Mr. BRACKEN: Mr. Chairman, about a week from today we shall come to the end of this fiscal year. As the minister has stated, the main estimates for this year amounted, in round figures, to $2,116,000,000, and the further supplementaries for the year amount to roughly $80,000,000, or a grand total of approximately $2,200,000,000. I am sure that every member wants the house to adjourn for Easter by tomorrow night if possible. But we have before us these supplementaries to pass. They include I do not know how many items. I can assure the minister that from this corner of the house there will be no unnecessary delay in considering these supplementaries. There are some very large items being put before us within a week of the end of the fiscal year. We shall want a simple statement explaining why at this stage of the fiscal year $80,000,000 more is required, and why in certain items there is a very large increase asked. I might mention some of them.

Item 564 shows $200,000 required for health of animals. I have no doubt there will be an easy explanation of that item. Item 570 requires $250,000 for Prairie Farm Assistance Act administration. What we want to know in connection with these larger items is the total of the main estimate voted, and why this additional amount is necessary, just one week before the close of the fiscal year. Item 572 is for $6,500,000, "To authorize and provide for payment of subsidies on oats and barley used as feed for livestock—" listen to this—"under such regulations as may be approved by the governor in council". I suggest that that item ought not to be passed unless the government can tell us what regulations it is going to bring into effect with respect to that huge amount of money near the end of the fiscal year. I suggest, with all respect, that we should not be asked to pass a lump sum like that without knowing what these regulations are which the government may bring into effect after we have gone home.

Let me mention two or three other items. Item 582, under the heading "special", is for $31,500,000 "To provide such amount as is necessary for payment to Canadian wheat board to reimburse that board" for certain items. We shall want to be satisfied about the reason for these larger items.

Here is another one, item 588, $5,000,000 for "government's contribution to unemployment insurance fund". Why could a closer estimate not have been made of the requirements when the main estimates were brought down. How does it come about that within a week of the end of the fiscal year we are asked to provide these additional huge amounts?

One can pick out other items for $100,000, $198,000, $225,000, $250,000. I need not go over them all. Here are two others, items 638 and 639 under the heading "special", $548,000 for the Canadian Commercial Corporation and three-quarters of a million dollars for the Canadian wheat board, to reimburse the board for certain expenses incurred.

Item 649 under the heading "railway service" asks for $1,099,529.39, "additional amount in excess of the sum of $3,042,000 already appropriated, to authorize and provide for the payment from time to time during the fiscal year, 1947-48, to the Canadian National Railway Company", and so forth. I shall not go further on these points now.

I simply say to the minister that in the few hours remaining before we adjourn for Easter we want the responsible ministers to give us a brief but clear explanation of these larger items and a justification for the additional amounts now being asked for. If a satisfactory explanation is given I think we shall all want to help the government get these supplementaries through as expeditiously as possible.

Mr. ABBOTT: I hope that my hon. friend and other members will ask for any explanations they want as we reach the larger items. My hon. friend mentioned item 572 for $6,500,000. That is the item to provide for the payments of the subsidy on oats and barley to eastern feeders, which was paid after the end of the current crop year, namely, July 31, until the subsidy was discontinued on October 23, I think it was. The payment was made in the first instance, in order that they should not have to wait for their money, out of the vote of the Commodity Prices Stabilization Corporation, a subsidy vote, and this vote is to reimburse the payment. We were under substantial pressure from all sides of the house, may I say, to continue that subsidy, but I just give this explanation. This $6,500,000 item represents moneys which have already been paid out of the Commodity Prices Stabilization Corporation vote, as we were entitled to do, and this is a vote to reimburse it.

Mr. BRACKEN: Is the minister saying that this is only a book-keeping item?

Mr. ABBOTT: In effect that is the case. It is in order to reimburse the C.P.S.C. for the amount which we paid out, so that the farmers would not have to wait for their money.

Mr. BRACKEN: Then the amount the minister refers to was appropriated in the main estimates last year.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is correct, and the language of the item is as follows, "In accordance with regulations that may be approved by the governor in council." That is standard language which has been used in this item since the estimate has been included. The main items and these supplementaries all total some $79,000,000, of which items $31,500,000 is to provide for deficits on certain accounts of the Canadian wheat board, and I shall be glad to give particulars of these when we come to them. It is also to provide an additional amount required for the government's contribution of $5,000,000 to the unemployment insurance fund; Canadian National Railways deficit for the calendar year 1947, $15,885,000; additional amounts for subsidies on feed grains, including freight assistance, $10,550,000—

Mr. BRACKEN: What is the number of that item?

Mr. ABBOTT: It is a composite of two or three amounts. It includes the $6,500,000 to which I have been referring, and an additional $4,050,000 which is vote 664, and additional payments to or for veterans and their dependents, $5,827,000. This aggregates, as I have said, $68,762,000 out of a total of $79,000,000, leaving approximately $10,000,000 for the other items.

Civil service commission—

573. Salaries and contingencies of the commission—further amount required, $51,000.

Mr. COCKERAM: I notice there is an increase of $51,000, which is a small amount, but in view of the fact that the total number of employees of the civil service is down by thirty thousand this year, why should there be this increase to the commission?

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): The amount of $51,000 is made up of four items: printing and stationery; cost of holding examinations; advertising; telephone, telegrams and postage. I may say that when the estimate was made early in the year every effort was made to keep it down to the amount that was asked for, and during the year these additional amounts have been incurred and are required before the end of the current fiscal year.

Mr. COCKERAM: How is that made up?

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): At the present time the civil service commission is holding accounts amounting to $23,913. These are accounts that are held outstanding. In addition we have outstanding commitments amounting to $18,086 that will be coming in before the end of the year. It is considered that, with the additional appropriation of $42,000, the commission may be able to take care of the accounts now being held, together with our commitments and our March requirements and the cost of holding examinations an additional amount of $1,300; advertising, $5,200, and telephones, telegrams and postage, $2,500.

Mr. KNOWLES: It is all in the book.

Item agreed to.

External Affairs—Canadian contributions to international or commonwealth organizations—

574. Canada's contribution to the inter-allied reparations agency, $37,750.

Mr. BRACKEN: Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell us what the total appropriation for each of these items was in the main estimates? I notice that the proposed increase is a quarter of a million dollars, or to be exact, $246,446. Can the minister tell us the total in the main estimates for each of these items?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: The first item is $37,750. There is nothing in the main estimates for this. This amount is required to cover the Canadian government contribution to the inter-allied reparations agency budget for the calendar year 1948. This payment is required to be made at the beginning of the year and is for the calendar year, 1948. Canada's share of the budget is 3·5 per cent, amounting in Canadian currency to $37,496.27. This is a new item.

The next one is $4,500. This is to enable the Canadian government to pay its contribution of 1948 to the inter-American committee on social security. That is also for the calendar year 1948.

[Mr. Cockeram.]

Mr. BRACKEN: Is this the first item of this kind?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: There were payments made in previous years for the calendar year, but this is the first contribution for the 1948 calendar year.

Mr. BRACKEN: Perhaps the minister will say now if there was a similar item in the main estimates.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I have not the main estimates here. No; in 1946 there was a contribution for the budget. There was no assessment made for the 1947 calendar year. It is one of the agencies of the I.L.O., and Canada's contribution was assessed for 1948 at $4,411.77.

Mr. BRACKEN: That will be our total?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: That will be our total for the 1948 calendar year.

The next one is $9,021. That is the balance of the Canadian government contribution to the international civil aviation organization for the fiscal year 1947-48. At the time the original estimates were submitted the budget for this organization had not been approved. It was estimated that our contribution would be $125,000. When the budget was submitted and approved by the international labour organization the amount assessed against Canada was $134,021, and this is the difference between what we had thought it might be and what it actually turned out to be. The larger amount, $176,500 is explained in this way. At the time the original estimates were submitted, no information was available as to the amount of Canada's contribution to the international labour organization. We are now informed that the total international labour organization's budget for the calendar year 1948 amounts to $4,425,930, United States dollars. Of 784 units making up the total contributions, thirty-five are assessed against Canada.

Mr. BRACKEN: Making a total cost of—

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Making a total of $176,434.50, Canadian funds.

Mr. BRACKEN: That is our total contribution?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: That is our total contribution for the calendar year 1948.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I understood the minister to say a moment ago that when the estimates were made up early in the year there was nothing available to indicate what the budget was or what our share of the budget of the I.L.O. was. I am not quite sure which the minister said. It surprised me because had we not been subscribing to the I.L.O. for many years?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: We have; but each year there is a budget made up and approved by the organization. There was no budget for the 1948 calendar year available when the main estimates were brought down, and this contribution is payable at the beginning of the year. When the budget is approved the number of units is not changed; the amount is determined as 35/784 of the total budget.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): What was our contribution last year?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I have not the figure of what the assessment was.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Do we scrutinize in any way the full budget?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: We do. This year we gave special instructions to our representatives at the I.L.O. to scrutinize these, especially the type of budget which was to provide for the travelling expenses of the officers of the I.L.O. We submitted that some of the travelling expenses of these officers looked to us to be rather high. There were visits of inspection paid by these officers to branches in various parts of the world. We had our representatives scrutinize these accounts and the budget was finally established at this amount of $4,425,000.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Can the minister let us have, perhaps tomorrow, the amount of last year's subscription?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Yes, I will get that.

May I just finish the answer to the question asked by the leader of the opposition. There is another item of $875. That is Canada's assessment for membership in the international commission on air navigation. Subscription is from July 1, 1947, to December 31, 1947. Funds had previously been voted to cover the cost of Canada's subscription to the above commission for the years 1941 to June 30, 1947. The international commission on air navigation was established by the convention relating to the regulation of aerial navigation drawn up in Paris in 1919 and was placed under the direction of the league of nations. The functions of this organization were taken over by the international civil aviation organization, and this is the final payment of the assessment to the international commission on air navigation which is now replaced by the other permanent civil aviation international body.

The last item of $17,800 is required to cover the balance of Canada's contribution to the united nations budget for 1947. The 1947 budget for the united nations was established at $27,740,000. United States currency, equivalent to $27,878,700, Canadian. Canada's contribution was based on 3·2 per cent of the budget. Under vote 51 the amount of $895,000 was voted to cover this payment. A further supplementary budget was brought down by the united nations fifth committee in November, 1947, for the amount of $550,947, United States currency. Canada's proportion of that supplementary budget which was brought down last November at the united nations assembly is $17,718.46.

Mr. BRACKEN: I thank the minister for the information he has given us with respect to these six items under his department. I have two other questions now, one of which he can perhaps answer immediately and the other he may not be able to answer at once. The total of these six items in the supplementary estimates comes to $246,000. Can the minister say what Canada's total contribution to all these international organizations amounts to for a year, let us say for the fiscal year in which we now find ourselves? If the minister cannot do that at the moment, I would request that at a suitable time tomorrow he let us know what that total amounts to. Then I think the committee would welcome a brief statement by the minister indicating to what degree and in what manner, if any, we have any say with respect to the total cost of these various international organizations, some three per cent of which, speaking generally, we are expected to pay. When the minister can give answers to those two questions, I should like him to do so.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I will have a statement made up of the total contributions to these international organizations, perhaps in two chapters: one, the united nations and the agencies of the united nations, and the other, such agencies as have a budget separate from that of the united nations.

Mr. BRACKEN: I think that division would be all right but what I am concerned with is the total contribution of the Canadian parliament to all the international organizations to which we contribute.

Mr. TIMMINS: Will the minister give us some idea as to what this large item of $176,500 consists of?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: It is thirty-five units out of 784—

Mr. TIMMINS: I did not mean in figures. What part does it play in the economy of Canada?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Canada has been a member of the I.L.O. since 1919. I think a number of people feel that this organization has served a useful purpose in the world economy. It has provided a large number of conventions for the better protection of the working man in industry. I think it is usually regarded as having served a useful function in the world economy since 1919; and it has continued, notwithstanding the organization of the united nations. It may be—and I am not personally satisfied on that point—that there is now some duplication between the functions of the economic and social council of the united nations, and the I.L.O. That question is being examined, because I think there is room for serious study as to whether there is not overlapping. That study is being made because it is felt that, if these international organizations are to continue to get the support of their respective members, we must be able to satisfy ourselves that they are not duplicating each other's work. When the main estimates are being considered I think I shall be able to give some report of the results of the investigation that we have asked to be made in order to satisfy ourselves that there is no duplication of effort or expenses.

Mr. HAZEN: Can the minister tell us how many paid employees there are in the international labour organizations.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: That information can be obtained. I will make a note of the question and, if there is no other opportunity, I will have the information when we are considering the estimates of the department.

Mr. COCKERAM: Does this item of $176,500 include the cost of delegates from Canada to the convention, or where shall we find that item in the estimates? What was the cost in 1947 of Canadian delegates going to the international labour organization meetings; I have reference to last year's meetings?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Last year's meetings of the I.L.O.?

Mr. COCKERAM: Yes.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Only a portion is absorbed by the organization itself. There are portions that are provided out of another vote of the Department of External Affairs. I will have a statement prepared to show what the total expense is, what portion comes out of the budget of the I.L.O., and what portion is an additional contribution by the Canadian government to the travelling expenses of the delegates.

Mr. SKEY: Can the minister say how the executive members of the I.L.O. are appointed?

[Mr. St. Laurent.]

Can he say whether from time to time we have on that executive representatives who are appointees of the Canadian government?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Yes, we have. There are certain full-time paid officials. When they become paid officials they become international civil servants and are not supposed to represent any country, but the council or the thing that takes the place of a board of directors is a representative body on which we from time to time have representatives and to which we exercise by our vote the right of selection.

Mr. CHARLTON: Is there any contribution to the international federation of agricultural producers?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I would have to inquire. There is a contribution to the food and agricultural association, the F.A.O., and this may be an agency of it. I would have to inquire whether there is a relationship there.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall items 574 to 579 inclusive carry?

Items agreed to.

Department of finance—

580. General—to provide for the expenses of the comptroller of the treasury's office—further amount required, $50,000.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I notice that this is an additional amount for printing and stationery. Can the minister give us an explanation?

Mr. ABBOTT: This is for an increase in the cost of stationery and supplies, in particular such items as cheques and envelopes. In the distribution of the family allowance cheques in 1946-47 the cheques cost $1.85 a thousand and now it is $2.45 a thousand. The increase is related to the increased cost of paper.

Mr. KNOWLES: Another casualty in the path of decontrol.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): What is the total of the original estimate?

Mr ABBOTT: The main estimate for 1947-48 was $8,652,153 and the expenditures in the previous year, $7,519,098, while in the current year, 1947-48, to February 29, or a month short of the end of the fiscal year, it will be $7,901,970.

Item agreed to.

581. To provide, subject to the approval of the treasury board, for salaries, reclassifications and increases—further amount required, $1,000,000.

Mr. KNOWLES: I wish to direct two questions to the minister under this item. First of all, may I call attention to the fact that for the past number of months there have been several announcements concerning increases in the salaries of civil servants. My first question, therefore, is this: Have all such announcements been made, or are there others yet to be given?

Mr. ABBOTT: There are others yet to be given; a few more.

Mr. KNOWLES: And they will come along soon?

Mr. ABBOTT: I hope so.

Mr. MacNICOL: Will the others that are yet to be given include the stenographic staff? I refer to those who have been in the service for more than ten years?

Mr. ABBOTT: The Speaker will be making a statement before the recess.

Mr. KNOWLES: I have another question under this item. It relates to superannuated civil servants. As the minister knows, strong representations were made about this matter during the whole of last year, following representations in previous years, and last summer the minister promised that definite consideration would be given to the matter. Unfortunately, that consideration resulted in an announcement which the minister made on January 23 of this year, in which he said that the government had decided not to do anything in the way of a cost of living bonus or other supplement for superannuated civil servants. The minister suggested, in answer to a question on the orders of the day on January 27, 1948, that that statement was final. Since that time, as the minister knows, there have been still further representations to the government by various branches of the association of superannuated civil servants and by others interested in the plight that faces these people. May I ask the minister whether, despite his answer on January 27, that the previous statement was final, further consideration has been given the question?

Mr. ABBOTT: Representations have been received, as the hon. gentleman has indicated, but there is no change in the decision taken by the government.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Under this head I should like to ask the minister a question in connection with a meeting of the treasury board that took place on November 27, 1947. This item has to do with the provision "subject to approval of the treasury board" for salaries, reclassification and increases. On November 27, Mr. W. D. Lowe was appointed to the position of director of purchases in the Department of Trade and Commerce and, as a result of a meeting of the treasury board, an order in council provided for the appointment as follows:

> The board recommend that—
>
> 1. The following new class be approved:
> Director of Purchasing, Trade and Commerce > Compensation:
> Annual: $10,000.
>
> 2. Under the provisions of section 59 of the Civil Service Act, the above class be exempt from section 12(2) of the act in so far as the establishment of a salary range is concerned.
>
> 3. That organization of the Department of Trade and Commerce be changed by the creation of a permanent position of director of purchasing, trade and commerce.
>
> 4. Under the provisions of section 59 of the Civil Service Act, the above position be exempt from section 20 of the act in order to provide for the permanent appointment of W. D. Lowe without competition, such exemption to apply to the appointment of Mr. Lowe only.

I should like to know from the minister what justification there is for making provision for appointments such as this outside the civil service commission. Men devote their lives to the civil service and at the end of years of service they find themselves in the position of not obtaining a salary of $10,000 a year. Furthermore, in this particular case, I should like to know whether or not the veterans preference was observed and, if not, why; because I feel that the committee has a right to protest against appointments being made in this way, excepting appointments from the provisions of the Civil Service Act. The result of following this course is simply that it denies the building up of a civil service desirous, by its own efforts, of promoting the public good to the end that promotion shall come to those who, after years of service, have contributed of their best. What representations were made to the treasury board in order to secure an order in council excepting this appointment from the civil service commission, and also how generally is this course being followed?

Mr. HOWE: Perhaps I might answer this question since I am more familiar with the appointment than the Minister of Finance. Mr. Lowe, prior to the war, was on the purchasing staff of the Canadian National Railways, being one of their senior men. He was borrowed by the Department of Munitions and Supply. He was first borrowed by the defence purchasing board from the railway to fill a key post in the purchasing department.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: What was his salary with the Canadian National Railways?

Mr. HOWE: I do not remember, but it was substantial, perhaps seven or eight thousand a year. This was in 1939. During the war years he was one of the key men in the purchasing department of the Department of Munitions and Supply, in charge of the purchase of general supplies. I suppose in that capacity he purchased goods to a value of something over two billions of dollars on his own direct responsibility. When it was decided that the purchasing for the armed services would be transferred from the Department of Munitions and Supply—or the Department of Reconstruction and Supply, as it was then—to a continuing department, the functions were transferred to the Department of Trade and Commerce.

That department needed a man with experience and capacity to purchase on a scale required for the continuing services. Mr. Lowe seemed to be the obvious man. I might say that purchasing agents who are given the responsibility for purchasing on that scale are not to be picked off on street corners, and are not to be confused with those who ordinarily buy a few hundred thousand dollars worth a year.

Purchasing for the armed services, even in peacetime, runs at a rate of a great many millions of dollars a year. It includes a variety of materials, the purchasing of which requires special knowledge. A purchasing agent must know sources of materials; he must know where they can be obtained. They are not obtained off the shelf; usually they must be manufactured to order. Mr. Lowe had that experience. He happened to be unique in that position. He was known as a man of great skill and much integrity, and he was appointed on the merit system because he was the best man available for the job, by any standards.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: He was not appointed on the merit system, if I may be allowed to say so.

Mr. HOWE: What is the merit system? Tell me how to appoint them, then.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I realize that very few can tell the minister anything today. But I will tell you this—

Mr. HOWE: It so happens I did not appoint Mr. Lowe to his present job.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: No; I do not know why the minister becomes so much annoyed.

[Mr. Howe.]

Mr. ABBOTT: He was appointed on the recommendation of the civil service commission.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: He was appointed on the recommendation, according to order in council—certified to be a true copy of a minute of treasury board—

Mr. ABBOTT: He was appointed by order in council on the recommendation of the civil service commission.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: There is nothing to show any order in council.

Mr. ABBOTT: Whether there is anything to show it or not, that is the case.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: There was no advertising of the position. And it is against that kind of thing, that arbitrary conduct to get around the provisions of the Civil Service Act, and the rights of veterans who are entitled to preference, that I am protesting.

I am going to ask the minister, now that he is so clear on it, in how many cases within the last six months has there been departure by order in council in this regard from the provisions of the preference to be granted to veterans.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have no idea, but of course it is recognized practice, and has been for years, that in the case of a senior appointment it is made by order in council, but in almost any case, and I know of several of them, on the recommendation of the civil service commission. And the Civil Service Act makes special provision for it.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I will say no more than this, that under this government it is true that within the last few years provision under which veterans are entitled has been regularly circumvented, and it is against that kind of thing I protest.

Mr. ABBOTT: My colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce has pointed out that Mr. Lowe rendered distinguished service to this country during the war years and in a war department, in a vital post, and if any case is one in which the question of veterans preference should not be brought out, let me say that the case of Mr. Lowe is one of those cases.

Mr. KNOWLES: I should like to say one further word to the minister about the matter of superannuated civil servants we were speaking about a minute ago. I appreciate the fact that the Minister of Finance and the government generally have a great many problems with which they have to deal. Some of them concern matters of high policy and a large number of people. That being the case they feel they have to reach some finality in connection with some of the matters which come before them. I take it that that is the basis upon which they have tried to settle this question of superannuated civil servants. But I implore the minister once again tonight not to close the door on the appeals that these people are making to him.

I note from information given in Hansard on February 11 that, not including widows and dependents, there are 786 retired civil servants, people who have served the government of this country, who are receiving pensions of less than $30 a month. Of that number, 274 are receiving pensions of less than $20 a month.

Those numbers, in terms of political weight in the country, are not great. But to each one of those persons the problem of keeping alive on those amounts is as great as any of the tremendous problems facing the government.

I am not asking the minister for a further statement tonight, because anything else he would say tonight would be of the same finality he expressed when he spoke earlier. I do, however, express the hope that he will not close the door on the appeals still being made to him by and on behalf of these faithful federal civil servants.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I have one further question.

An hon. MEMBER: Carried.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): No; just a minute. I want to understand something further about this million dollars. How many classes of employees does it affect? Is it a general sum going over all the civil service?

Mr. ABBOTT: It is a general vote. The committee will realize that preparation of the estimates is begun sixteen or seventeen months before. They are tabled in the house fourteen months before the end of the fiscal year. It is necessary to put in certain blanket items to cover such things as increased salaries which may arise from reclassifications, and so on, during the year.

In the main estimates for the current year there was a blanket item of $500,000. In the further supplementary estimates tabled in June or July there was put in an additional amount of $5,000,000, which makes a total of $5,500,000. This sum of $1,000,000 is an additional amount to take care of further amounts which have been authorized.

I am glad this point has been brought up, because it illustrates the large amounts which are involved in these constant increases in salaries, pensions and one thing and another. At the start of the year you make your estimates on a certain basis and there are changes. That involves increased votes. This is an example of that sort of thing.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I am not criticizing that.

Mr. ABBOTT: I understand.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I know there is a feeling that we want to get away, and we may not have the proper time to get figures in order to understand this satisfactorily. What we should have here—and I cannot ask for it now—is a good deal of detail showing not only the increases but the adjustments and probably a considerable amount of further information.

Mr. ABBOTT: There is no item in the supplementary estimates which cannot be fully discussed on the main estimates. I referred to an item of $5,000,000 which was discussed when the further supplementary estimates were brought down. I gave a good deal of information at that time. When that item is being discussed in the main estimates again, I can give the fullest breakdown as to detail. However, I understand we are proceeding tonight in accordance with standard practice, that the final estimates the Minister of Finance brings in represent amounts for which it had been necessary to make commitments up to the end of the fiscal year, over and above the estimates originally tabled. For obvious reasons they have to be brought in at the very end and it is not possible, as a rule, to give them the detailed scrutiny one gives to the main estimates themselves.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I think it is standard practice, but not all standard practice is good practice.

Mr. ABBOTT: That may be so. But I would have been glad to reach this earlier, may I say.

Mr. CASE: Could the minister say what increase there has been in personnel of staff in the department?

Mr. ABBOTT: I have not that information here. The present over-all picture in the civil service is relatively static, although there have been some reductions in the last month or two.

Mr. CASE: There have been some reductions in the number?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes.

Mr. CASE: This was to represent an increase in salaries?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is right. We have been increasing salaries right and left.

Mr. BRACKEN: Would the minister give us an answer tomorrow to two questions, the number of civil servants at the present time and the total salaries paid?

Mr. ABBOTT: I think I could give the total number, but the total salaries would be scattered through the different departments. I may be able to get that by tomorrow, but if I cannot I hope my hon. friend will not hold me to that.

Mr. BRACKEN: I thought it would be readily available. If it is not, perhaps we can have it at some other time.

Mr. STEPHENSON: How many employees are in the employ of the government in 1948 and what are the salaries paid?

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not know whether that can be got by tomorrow, but it can be obtained because it is public record. My hon. friend could get it by putting a question on the order paper.

Mr. MacNICOL: Have the amounts of these supplementary estimates that pertain to last year's program been spent?

Mr. ABBOTT: I think it is a fair statement to say that they have been committed. That is the function of supplementary estimates.

Mr. FRASER: The minister said that the number of employees could be obtained by putting a question on the order paper. I put a question on February 25 with regard to the number of men and women in each department. This is March 23 and I have not yet had an answer.

Mr. ABBOTT: It will be forthcoming. There is quite a lot of work involved.

Item agreed to.

Special—

582. To provide such amount as is necessary for payment to the Canadian wheat board to reimburse that board in respect of deficits incurred by it in respect of its accounts specified below:

Crown wheat account—P.C. 7942 of October 12, 1943 and P.C. 1116 of February 20, 1945.

1943 barley equalization fund—P.C. 4450 of June 1, 1943 and P.C. 8898 of November 18, 1943.

1944 oats equalization fund—P.C. 5998 of July 31,1944.

1945 oats and barley equalization funds—P.C. 2550 of April 12, 1945 and P.C. 6238 of September 25, 1945.

1946 barley equalization fund—P.C. 3222 of July 30, 1946 and P.C. 1292 of April 3, 1947.

[Mr. Abbott.]

1944 crop acount, flax division—P.C. 1350 of March 6, 1944.

1945 crop account, flax division—P.C. 2550 of April 12, 1945.

1945, 1944 and 1943 crop rapeseed and sunflower seeds accounts—P.C. 859 of February 9, 1945, P.C. 4131 of June 1, 1944 and P.C. 2894 of April 9, 1943.

1946 crop rapeseed and sunflower seed account—P.C. 3222 of July 30, 1946.

1946 Ontario wheat payments account—P.C. 3212 of July 30, 1946.

the amount payable in respect of the said deficits to be the amount thereof on July 31, 1947, together with interest on such amount at three per cent from that day to the day of payment and not to exceed $31,500,000.

Mr. WRIGHT: This item totalling $31,500,000 refers to certain orders in council. Could the minister give us a breakdown of those figures?

Mr. ABBOTT: I shall be very glad to do that. The figures are:

Crown wheat account	$5,627,481.45
1943 barley equalization fund	539.48
1944 oats equalization fund	4,417.88
1945 oats and barley equalization funds	14,884,537.66
1946 barley equalization fund	6,736,526.97
1944 crop account, flax division	1,048,883.31
1945 crop account, flax division	2,588,504.98
1945, 1944 and 1943 crop rapeseed and sunflower seeds accounts	88,047.06
1946 crop rapeseed and sunflower seed account	79,166.02
1946 Ontario wheat payments account	315,245.40
	$31,373,350.21

Mr. CASE: Why would it not be possible to have all those figures in the column showing the total amount? We have just heard them read and they must have been ready.

Mr. ABBOTT: The figures are only approximate. The figure which is being voted is just a round figure. I am informed that the statements have not yet been audited and there may be some slight variations when the auditors have completed their check.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Are the figures which the minister has just read virtually subsidies? They do not represent a deficit in trading account. How are they arrived at?

Mr. ABBOTT: These items are to reimburse the Canadian wheat board for losses suffered by the board during various crop years, where it can be shown either that the particular account has been closed out and the loss finally established, or that the eventual loss will be larger than the loss shown at the end of the crop year. Probably a good illustration is the crown wheat account. This was the account established in September, 1943 when the government closed the Winnipeg wheat market and took over, in the name of His Majesty, all the wheat then in commercial storage at a price of approximately $1.23 a bushel, basis No. 1 northern in store Fort William/Port Arthur. The account was replenished at a later date by purchases from the board's own wheat account. In general, the losses represent handling and storage charges.

Mr. TIMMINS: That was a small one.

Mr. ABBOTT: That was several million dollars. I am advised that that has been reimbursed to the extent of over $25,000,000, and this represents the balance.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): The minister says that the amounts are mostly handling and storage charges, but I am not clear as to just how they came to be public charges.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am informed that this wheat was sold virtually at cost and, as I said, this represents handling and storage charges. In a sense, as my hon. friend says, it may be a subsidy to someone. It represents a loss which the Canadian wheat board took in handling this wheat.

Mr. WRIGHT: I would point out to the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario that it was a subsidy to the people who bought the grain, not to the producers of the grain.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I am just anxious to find out what it is.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): I should like to make an observation in two or three sentences. In my opinion it is confusing to mix up in this special item or in any estimate two distinct lines of activity in Canada's economic production. Here we have wheat, barley, oats, and then you switch into another line of activity altogether, namely, flax, which is a product that produces oil. The production of oil from sunflower seed and rapeseed, and even from flax seed will be of some magnitude. It will be something that will engage the attention of this house in the future. As oil production from the Pacific islands and Africa increases by leaps and bounds, it will come into direct competition with oil from sunflower seed and rapeseed and flax. I would suggest that in presenting these estimates in the days to come the wheat board be asked to separate these two lines of activity. There is a tremendous industry that is almost being subsidized in Canada, which at least gets a heavy depreciation allowance. I refer to the pressing out of oils. In the days to come, let us have those two items separate.

Mr. ABBOTT: I doubt if there will be items of this kind recurring. They all arise out of wartime activities authorized by order in council. They do not cover the ordinary operations of the wheat board. In this case the board is acting as the agent of the government in implementing various phases of government policy; but the main function of the wheat board, as the committee knows, is to act as marketing agent for the producers of wheat. Here they acted in a special capacity as agents for the government of Canada in carrying out special policies relating to the crown wheat account, the oats and barley equalization funds and other items. But the losses, if any, or the moneys which have been expended had to be taken care of out of public moneys, and not out of the proceeds of the sale of current crops of wheat.

Mr. CASE: These items go back to 1943. Why have deficits been allowed to accumulate so long? You are paying four per cent interest, which is more than was paid on victory bonds and many other government loans.

Mr. ABBOTT: The interest rate is three per cent.

Mr. CHARLTON: What is the need for so much haste in paying these accounts now? Why were they not paid previously? There is a $5,000,000 item at three per cent for 1943, crown wheat account. The oats equalization fund goes back to 1944. Why have these accounts been allowed to run on?

Mr. ABBOTT: We have paid something each year; and this is a final clean up, a series of adjusting items in these various accounts. Take, for instance, the crown wheat account. The deficit on the operations as of July 31, 1947, was over $31,000,000, on account of which there had been paid through different years, $25,861,000. There have been adjustments over the years, and this is a clean-up item. These were very large operations.

Mr. CHARLTON: All the more reason why we should not be asked to pass them in a very few minutes when they have been allowed to run on now for five years.

Mr. ABBOTT: We have been making payments on these accounts each year, and I am now trying to have them cleaned up.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): Is the treasury board quite satisfied?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes, and the final payment is subject to audit. That is why we are putting in a round figure slightly in excess of the statements furnished to us by the board.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): As the minister has stated, this represents a clean-up. We cannot deal with these items intelligently in ten minutes. If we have any duty at all it is a far greater duty than just to pass these accounts sight unseen. They are in a very different category from many of these other items.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have a great deal of information I am quite ready to give and to answer any questions hon. members may ask. Let us spend the next fifteen minutes in discussing this item.

Mr. JACKMAN: In my ignorance I must ask this question. To whom is the money owed?

Mr. ABBOTT: It is owed to the Canadian wheat board, which has been acting in this case as agent for the government of Canada.

Mr. JACKMAN: To whom in turn does the Canadian wheat board owe the money, and how did the Canadian wheat board come to have $31,000,000 on hand?

Mr. ABBOTT: Either out of surplus moneys which the board had on hand or from bank loans which it made.

Mr. TIMMINS: They must be bank loans if you are paying interest on them. To whom are you paying interest?

Mr. ABBOTT: We are paying interest to the farmer on the money which he has outstanding.

Mr. CHARLTON: The farmer has not been getting any interest on the money owed to him. What is the amount which the wheat board owes to the farmers of this country? The government is paying this money to the wheat board at three per cent, which is more than the farmers have got on their money.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am informed that this money benefits the farmer because it goes into the general fund of the wheat board. The amounts which are paid in cover the amounts which the board has disbursed, plus interest at three per cent from the time of disbursement. If this money is not paid the farmer could not get it.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: If on the same type of transaction the wheat board had made a profit of several million dollars, would it come back to the government or go into the wheat board fund?

Mr. ABBOTT: It would depend. In the oats and barley equalization fund it would have gone to the benefit of the farmer. But in this case the payments which were made to the farmers at the time of delivery exceeded the amounts which were collected out of the export permits, and the government or the taxpayers made up the difference. If the transaction had resulted in a profit there would have been a distribution to the farmers. It was a case of "heads I win, tails you lose", so far as the farmer is concerned.

Mr. CARDIFF: Is this why the farmers were not paid a more substantial initial payment? Was it because the government wanted to use the farmers' money for something else?

Mr. ABBOTT: This has no relation to the initial payment. The farmer gets everything coming to him, plus three per cent. His only quarrel could be whether the three per cent was high enough, and I would think it was.

Mr. TIMMINS: Why do these items come in the supplementaries? Why were they not dealt with in the main estimates?

Mr. ABBOTT: The reason was to get as close as possible to the year to which it relates.

Mr. LOCKHART: What are the main details of these items, so that we may get the over-all picture?

Mr. ABBOTT: I gave the details a few moments ago.

Mr. LOCKHART: The minister referred to the oats and barley equalization figures.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have already dealt with the crown wheat account. So far as the oats and barley equalization funds are concerned, there are four accounts here: barley for 1943; oats for 1944; oats and barley for 1945, and barley for 1946. All these losses arose because the advance equalization payments made to farmers at time of delivery in those years exceeded the amounts collected by the board out of equalization fees on exports. Equalization fees represented the difference between domestic ceiling prices and prices prevailing in export markets. In some years, of course, the funds showed a surplus which was or will be distributed to growers.

Mr. TIMMINS: That means that we sold the oats and barley for less than we paid the farmers.

Mr. ABBOTT: No. The farmer sold at the price ceiling, and received an advance equalization fee. That equalization fee was an estimate of what would be realized out of the oats and barley exported to the United States or elsewhere. When the oats and barley were exported the wheat board or the government made a charge for the export permit representing, broadly speaking, the difference between the domestic ceiling and the price received in the export market. The proceeds of these export permits were put into this equalization fund, and if the total exceeded the advance equalization fees paid to the farmers, there was a distribution made. It it was less, the farmer got his advance payment anyway, and we did not try to recover from him.

Mr. BURTON: Had the wheat board, acting as agent for the government, sold more of the grain on the export market or charged the domestic consumers accordingly, you would not have had that loss. Because of these actions, the people who bought from the wheat board got the grain at that much lower price.

Mr. COCKERAM: The minister is to give us some information on the flax?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes, 1944-45; the price realized by the board from the sales of flaxseed fell short of the price paid to the farmers at the time of delivery.

Mr. COCKERAM: By how much?

Mr. ABBOTT: By the figure I gave; it is in Hansard.

Mr. COCKERAM: That is for the two periods, 1944 and 1945?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is a clean-up item, but I shall give the breakdown of it. The deficit on operations—this is the 1944 crop and the flax division—as at the 31st July, 1947, was $4,197,805.44. The amount which had already been paid to the board by the dominion and voted was $3,169,616.91, leaving a balance of $1,028,188.53, the vote that we are asking for in this supplementary vote.

Mr. COCKERAM: In 1945—

Mr. BURTON: Will the minister inform some of the hon. members who seem to be concerned that it was the policy of the government to sell flaxseed at this price?

Mr. ABBOTT: I should be glad to do that. It is not my department. Perhaps that question might be addressed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I have to find the money for it.

Mr. BURTON: Inform the hon. members that it was the policy of the government to provide linseed oil and so forth from the flax to the consumers of Canada at prices below what it could have commanded elsewhere.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is perfectly right. The same principles applied to rapeseed and sunflower seed. The prices realized by the board on the sales of these seeds fell short of the price paid to the farmers at the time of delivery. As the hon. member for Humboldt has pointed out, it was all pursuant to the maintenance of ceiling prices in Canada.

Mr. COCKERAM: Will the minister give me the 1945 flaxseed figures?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes. Deficit on operations to the 31st July, 1947, $2,537,433.04; due to the Canadian wheat board that amount, plus the interest.

Mr. ROWE: In view of the fact that there was a loss of $6,500,000 on barley, was the fullest advantage taken that could be taken of the prices of malting barley in the United States?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes.

Mr. ROWE: What price?

Mr. ABBOTT: I have not that information here; the going price, at the time the malting barley was sent down there.

Item agreed to.

Justice—Office of the commissioner of penitentiaries—pensions and other benefits—

584. To provide for a compassionate allowance to Mrs. Olevia Sullivan, widow of George Sullivan, deputy warden, Kingston penitentiary, equal to one-half of the gratuity to which deputy warden Sullivan would have been entitled had he chosen to resign, $6,234.38.

Mr. COCKERAM: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. ABBOTT: This is an item of the Minister of Justice. He is not here. Perhaps I can get the information. The language of the item is fairly self-explanatory. I have some data on it here. This is an item which was approved in November, 1947, by the treasury board for inclusion in the 1947-1948 supplementary estimates. The circumstances are these. Deputy Warden Sullivan died suddenly on the 9th of March, 1941. He had reached the age of sixty-five on April 23, 1940. He was exempted from the provisions of P.C. 1/1561 for a period of one year. The reason for extension was the acute shortage of experienced officers at Kingston. He had completed over forty-six years service. Had he retired at age sixty-five, he would have received a gratuity of $12,112.50 and had he retired immediately prior to his death, the amount would have been $12,568.75. There are similar previous cases of officers who died in service and in which cases one-half of the allowable gratuity was paid. I do not know whether my hon. friend wants the precedents; but there are a number of them.

Mr. COCKERAM: These people are not on the pension fund.

Mr. ABBOTT: No; this is a case where there was a gratuity available. It was one of those unfortunate cases where, by reason of the shortage which existed at the time, and he having continued in service, he got less than he would have received had he left the service and taken his cash gratuity.

Mr. JACKMAN: Is it a lump sum or an annual payment?

Mr. ABBOTT: A lump sum.

Item agreed to.

Labour—Annuities Act—

585. Administration—further amount required, $59,000.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): One of the items in this amount of $59,000 is commission to agents. That is under the Annuities Act, apparently. Is that substantial increase due to additional business done?

Mr. MITCHELL: It is due to extension of the business.

Mr. COCKERAM: What was the increase in the business?

Mr. MITCHELL: I have not the figures in front of me. I can give approximately the total amount of business at the moment; it is about $3,250,000.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): What is the commission?

Mr. MITCHELL: It is a graduated scale I could not give that figure. When the main estimates come down I will give it.

Mr. JACKMAN: The harder you work, the less you get.

Mr. MITCHELL: That may be true.

Mr. CASE: Is the annuities branch now considered to be on a sound actuarial basis?

Mr. MITCHELL: I would say so, yes.

Mr. CASE: The item asks for a further amount for administration. You are asking parliament to vote that. Will the branch need assistance, then?

Mr. MITCHELL: I think it is generally understood that the government carries the administration of the branch, and this is to pay for the administration.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Abbott.]

Mr. MANROSS: Item 586 asks for $1. If you will explain that we shall call it eleven o'clock.

Progress reported.

Resolutions reported, read the second time and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. BRACKEN: Will the minister tell us what the business will be tomorrow.

Mr. ABBOTT: We shall take, first, second reading of the two excise tax bills and the amendment to the Customs Tariff Act. I hope to proceed with these through committee and perhaps give them third reading. Then we shall take up interim supply and I hope complete consideration of these supplementary estimates which will be followed then by the supply bill.

Mr. BRACKEN: Have the bills been distributed?

Mr. ABBOTT: They will be tomorrow.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

[The following items were passed in committee of supply]:

FURTHER SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES FOR THE FISCAL YEAR ENDING MARCH 31, 1948

Civil service commission—

573. Salaries and contingencies of the commission—further amount required, $51,000.

External affairs—Canadian contributions to international or commonwealth organizations—

574. Canada's contribution to the inter-allied reparations agency, $37,750.

575. Canada's contribution to the inter-American committee on social security, $4,500.

576. Canada's contribution to the international civil aviation organization—further amount required, $9,021.

577. Canada's contribution to the international labour organization, $176,500.

578. Canada's contribution to the international commission on air navigation, $875.

579. Grant to the united nations organization for 1947—further amount required, $17,800.

Finance—General—

580. To provide for the expenses of the Comptroller of the Treasury's office—further amount required, $50,000.

581. To provide, subject to the approval of the treasury board, for salaries, reclassifications and increases—further amount required, $1,000,000.

Special—

582. To provide such amount as is necessary for payment to the Canadian wheat board to reimburse that board in respect of deficits incurred by it in respect of its accounts specified below:

Crown wheat account—P.C. 7942 of October 12, 1943 and P.C. 1116 of February 20, 1945.

1943 barley equalization fund—P.C. 4450 of June 1, 1943 and P.C. 8898 of November 18, 1943.

1944 oats equalization fund—P.C. 5998 of July 31, 1944.

1945 oats and barley equalization funds—P.C. 2550 of April 12, 1945 and P.C. 6238 of September 25, 1945.

1946 barley equalization fund—P.C. 3222 of July 30, 1946 and P.C. 1292 of April 3, 1947.

1944 crop account, flax division—P.C. 1350 of March 6, 1944.

1945 crop account, flax division—P.C. 2550 of April 12, 1945.

1945, 1944 and 1943 crop rapeseed and sunflower seeds accounts—P.C. 859 of February 9, 1945, P.C. 4131 of June 1, 1944 and P.C. 2894 of April 9, 1943.

1946 crop rapeseed and sunflower seed account—P.C. 3222 of July 30, 1946.

1946 Ontario wheat payments account—P.C. 3212 of July 30, 1946.

the amount payable in respect of the said deficits to be the amount thereof on July 31, 1947, together with interest on such amount at three per cent from that day to the day of payment and not to exceed $31,500,000.

Justice—office of the commissioner of penitentiaries—pensions and other benefits—

584. To provide for a compassionate allowance to Mrs. Olevia Sullivan, widow of George Sullivan, deputy warden, Kingston penitentiary, equal to one-half of the gratuity to which deputy warden Sullivan would have been entitled had he chosen to resign, $6,234.38.

Labour—Annuities Act—

585. Administration—further amount required, $59,000.

586. To provide authorization for refund, out of the government annuities fund, of the amounts of overpayment of premiums received under annuity contracts 68181 and 88825 plus interest at the rate of 1½ per cent to the date of such refund, $1.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, March 24, 1948

The house met at three o'clock.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

Second report of special committee on veterans affairs.—Mr. Tucker.

OATS

EQUALIZATION PAYMENT ON GRAIN MARKETED FROM AUGUST 1, 1946, TO JULY 31, 1947

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I desire to announce that an equalization payment of 3·623 cents per bushel will be made to western producers who marketed oats in the period from August 1, 1946, to July 31, 1947. The total payment will amount to $3,762,031.39 and will be made on 103,837,466 bushels. During the entire crop year an amount of $10,971,544.46 was collected in equalization fees. It will be remembered that an advance equalization payment of 10 cents per bushel, amounting to $7,227,341.55, was made on oats deliveries from August 1, 1946, to March 17, 1947, when the maximum price was increased and no further advance equalization payments made. As soon as the cheques can be written they will be sent to the handling companies, who will distribute them to the producers.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce a question, because I did not hear precisely what he said with respect to oats and barley. I have tried to get a copy of his statement, but it has gone to Hansard and so I must ask for the information. The minister spoke of three cents odd on oats. Do I understand that that is to come from the equalization fund or from funds to be voted by the parliament of Canada? The equalization fund, as I understand it, arises from permits granted on oats and barley.

Mr. HOWE: The money comes from the equalization fund. Hon. members will recall that at the beginning of the crop year 1946-47 an equalization fee of ten cents was paid on all purchases. Later in the year the price was adjusted, and accordingly that equalization fee was dropped. But there remained an equalization fund equivalent to some three and a half cents a bushel applying to the total deliveries of the crop. It is that sum that is being paid out at this time.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

STATEMENT ON STRENGTH AND RECRUITING OF ARMED FORCES

Hon. BROOKE CLAXTON (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in view of its importance in the national interest I feel that hon. members will wish me to make a statement on the strength and recruiting for the active (or permanent) and reserve forces.

The authorized strength of the three services of the active forces is 42,145 officers and men. At the end of February the strength was 34,276, which is more than three times as large as at the outbreak of war in 1939. This number represents 80 per cent of the strength at present authorized. It is interesting to note that the proportion of regulars on strength compared with the target for March 31, 1949, is the same in Canada as in the United Kingdom. Unlike other countries which still have men who were enlisted for the duration of hostilities or who were called up for a limited period, all Canadian forces are permanent or regular.

It may be pointed out that in Canada as in other countries there has been a tendency since the war to use civilians for work which was previously performed by service personnel but which is obviously of a civilian character. This includes cooks, mess orderlies, clerks, certain mechanics, firefighters and other occupations of a civilian character at permanent establishments. Other civilians are engaged at prevailing rates in the dockyards at Esquimalt and Halifax in constructing married quarters and in general maintenance work.

The present strength of the army reserve forces is 33,369, with 1,829 C.O.T.C., making a total of 35,198. In the naval reserve there are 2,112, with 1,033 in the university naval training division, making 3,145. The air force auxiliary with 722 men is beginning to set up squadrons as ground crews and planes become available.

The total figures for the navy and army reserves and air force auxiliary are about the same as they were up to the period immediately before the war. But now there are also more than a million men and women in Canada who have had military service in the second world war, including a higher proportion of trained air crew than in any other country.

Last September a campaign to obtain recruits was set under way across Canada and has since been continued. This campaign included distribution of information, radio and newspaper publicity, exhibitions and parades.

The recruiting campaign has shown good results. During the year 1947 there were 31,688 approaches for active service in the three forces, resulting in 9,240 enlistments. The largest cause of rejection was the high educational standard required for the three services.

The standard has been junior matriculation or its equivalent. This was considered desirable because of the highly technical nature of work in the forces, particularly as a major part of the role of the active forces is related to administration and training. The active forces will serve as a nucleus about which to build a very much larger force should the need arise.

The problem of educational standards is serious. It has been estimated that each year about 6,500 physically fit boys reach 17½, who have junior matriculation and who do not go on to senior matriculation or the universities. To fill up our ranks with boys of this standard would take virtually all the boys having these qualifications—even then we would not have enough. As it has turned out, we have been getting a very fair proportion. But steps are now being taken to reduce or adjust the educational standards so as to broaden the field; at the same time we shall increase facilities for in-service general education so as to achieve by one means or the other the standards that are necessary.

As to the flow of recruits, this year up to the 15th March, we have obtained a total of 1,625 recruits, of which approximately half are for the army alone. The flow into the army is at the rate required to keep the recruit schools full and to complete the authorized establishment by the time planned. The flow into the navy and air force is less than we require.

Parents and young men should realize that joining our navy, army and air force gives an opportunity for (1) service to Canada; (2) a career with good rates of pay and conditions of service; (3) continuing education and developing trade and other skills; and (4) an excellent pension at a relatively early age.

I am convinced that young men will come forward to fill up the ranks of the active forces.

We also want all the men we can get for the reserve navy and army and the auxiliary air force. The reserve forces are a major part of Canada's defence forces. In the event of an emergency the reserves would again constitute the framework for the organization of larger active forces. Reserve force training is service of real national importance which should appeal to all young Canadians who are physically fit and are willing to offer their services for part-time training.

Attention should also be called to the remarkable opportunities for training as officers offered in the Canadian service colleges at Royal Roads and R.M.C., Kingston. This year there will be a number of vacancies for boys having senior matriculation or its equivalent. Application should be made by the twenty-second of May. Pay received for summer training should cover the whole cost of education for the second and subsequent years. By this means and through the university officers training plans, it is believed that we will have a large force of highly qualified officers with standards never excelled in this or any other country.

There is no necessity of pointing out today that either from the short or the long term point of view, active and reserve forces of the character which I have described are needed so that we can be ready to meet any emergency and maintain the existence of our country and the freedom of our people, so that we shall continue to say what kind of life we want to lead.

I hope that this effort to fill up our ranks will have the support of all parties, of all veterans of the two wars, and of the country as a whole.

Mr. COCKERAM: The Minister of National Defence in his statement said that a time limit had been planned for the recruiting campaign. When does that time limit expire?

Mr. CLAXTON: I do not know what the hon. member has in mind because I did not make such a statement. With respect to recruitment for the army, the estimates are planned on the basis that it will be brought up to strength by March 31, 1949. I have not the dates for the navy and air force, but they are approximately the same.

PRIVATE BILLS

FIRST READINGS—SENATE BILLS

Bill No. 174, to incorporate The Canadian Association of Optometrists.—Mr. Winters.

Bill No. 175, for the relief of Winifred Audrey Meyer Holton.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 176, for the relief of Chester Adam Hart.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 177, for the relief of Marie Marguerite Cecile Gagnon Lescadres.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 178, for the relief of Samuel Reinhardt Lewis.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 179, for the relief of Ersilia Pace Imonti.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 180, for the relief of Helen Rose Noel Steele.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 181, for the relief of Edith Saltzman Rashkovan.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 182, for the relief of Ida Malfara Romanelli.—Mr. Maybank.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SALARY INCREASES TO EMPLOYEES—ACTION FOLLOWING EASTER ADJOURNMENT

Mr. SPEAKER: I should like to make a statement to the house. Before the Easter adjournment it is considered desirable to reassure the staff of the house that revisions in salary rates for those classes which have not already been revised are under consideration now by the commissioners of internal economy, and it is expected that a resolution will be introduced within a few days after the Easter adjournment implementing the decision now under consideration.

The revisions so made will be dated back to October 1 in the same way as those already made by the civil service commission.

ARRANGEMENT WITH RESPECT TO EASTER ADJOURNMENT

On the order, "Government notices of motion":

That when this house adjourns on Wednesday, March 24th instant, it stand adjourned until Tuesday the 30th instant.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, may I say just a word on this motion. I think the motion had better be held until we see what progress is made this afternoon. If by any chance the house should not have concluded its discussion at six o'clock I shall move before that time that the house be not adjourned at six. That may or may not receive the approval of the house, but I imagine most hon. members are anxious to conclude today the measures we have been discussing.

Hon. members will understand that where assent to bills is required, arrangements have to be made with the other chamber in advance, also with the deputy of the governor general for his presence in the other chamber at a definite time. For that reason, if we are to conclude today, some little time will be required after we have finished our proceedings, to complete the final arrangements for assent to bills in the other chamber. If we do not conclude today, the house will sit tomorrow in the regular way.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): May I say a word to the Prime Minister?—and I would not raise this question at the moment if it were not likely that this will be the last sitting before the Easter recess. In view of the reported vital change in Bill 135 by a committee of the other place, what does the government propose to do to ensure that we get this measure through before we adjourn for Easter? This is a most important matter to western Canada.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am sure that no one can say at the moment what is the position in the other house of the particular measure to which my hon. friend has referred. After we know what progress has been made there, I can perhaps give a definite reply.

Mr. COLDWELL: We shall not adjourn until we do know.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We want to get that measure through.

Mr. KNOWLES: It might be a good time for senate reform.

Mr. BRACKEN: I suggest that if the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) reconsidered his proposal and divided the bill, we might get one part through both houses.

Mr. HOWE: We will get it all through.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

MINE, MILL AND SMELTER WORKERS—ENTRY OF CERTAIN OFFICIALS INTO CANADA

Mr. HAZEN:

1. Have the following officials of the International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers entered Canada in the past three months: Reid Robinson, Harvey Wildman, Rudy Hansen, Henry Horowitz, George Knott?
2. If so, under what conditions did they enter?
3. How long are permits granted to persons of non-Canadian citizenship for temporary work?
4. What are the conditions imposed for entry of persons under this category?

Mr. MacKINNON:

1. and 2. Reid Robinson entered Canada on the 24th day of January, 1948, and departed on the 2nd day of February, 1948, as accredited representative of the International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers. He entered again on March 4, 1948. Recently he has been taken into custody for examination by a board of inquiry under the provisions of the Immigration Act.

Harlow (Harvey) Wildman entered Canada on the 3rd day of June, 1947, as accredited representative of the International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers. Within the last few days Mr. Wildman has informed the department that his union has assigned him to other work in the United States.

Rudy Hansen entered Canada on July 19, 1947, as accredited representative of the International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers.

Henry Horowitz entered Canada November 26, 1947, as a newspaper representative destined to R. Carlin, Kirkland Lake, Ontario.

George Knott entered Canada November 26, 1947, as accredited representative of the International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, destined to R. Carlin, Kirkland Lake, Ont. He has since applied for a permanent landing. This application will be considered by a board of inquiry.

3. There is no fixed period. Such persons are admitted for the temporary exercise of their respective callings.

4. They are admissible if they do not come within the prohibited classes provided by the Immigration Act. No special conditions are imposed.

HOUSING—RENTAL APPEALS

Mr. WHITE (Middlesex East):

1. How many rental appeals in respect of homes, housing and domestic establishments have been heard and adjudicated upon, by provinces, in each year and to date since the inception of rent control?

2. How many were heard before county and district court judges?

3. How many, by provinces, have been determined in favour of (a) the landlord; (b) the tenant?

4. In how many such appeals, by provinces, was there an application for (a) increase of rental; (b) decrease of rental?

5. Of such appeals mentioned in question 3, by provinces, were (a) increases of rental granted; (b) decreases of rental granted?

Mr. ABBOTT: One of my parliamentary assistants spoke to the hon. member and he has agreed to drop this question.

Mr. SPEAKER: Dropped.

Mr. WHITE (Middlesex East): I am not going to drop it; I revised it and it is back on the order paper.

Mr. ABBOTT: Dropped for rewording.

Question dropped.

GRANBY, QUE., MUNITIONS PLANT

Mr. BOIVIN:

1. What was the total cost of the plant built and equipped by the government of Canada about 1940, at Granby, province of Quebec, and used during the war for the manufacture of munitions?

2. For what amount was it sold?

[Mr. MacKinnon.]

Mr. McILRAITH:

1. The total cost of the plant fully equipped, including machinery, installation costs, ground improvements, fencing, etc., amounted to $387,274.41.

2. This question is answered in two parts—(a) and (b), covering the land, buildings and equipment only:—

(a) By order in council P.C. 7363, December 8, 1945, the land and shells of buildings (excluding all heating equipment, outside piping, pipe lines, piles and equipment, transformers, electrical panel boxes and coal) sold to the city of Granby for $12,500.

At time of sale the city of Granby was using such buildings as were suitable for the purpose of emergency shelter and yard.

(b) Equipment: Regarding the sale of equipment, we are unable to supply dollar values as all movables from the lots and buildings were transferred to warehouses from which locations such equipment would be sold.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE CONTROL—CANADIANS TAKING UP RESIDENCE IN U.S.

Mr. HAZEN:

1. How many persons left Canada in 1947, and went to the United States, with the intention of permanently residing there?

2. What was the total amount of Canadian currency and securities these people were permitted to take with them, or convert into United States currency?

3. How many of these people were permitted to convert into United States funds (a) over $50,000 Canadian currency; (b) $40,000 to $50,000 Canadian currency; (c) $30,000 to $40,000 Canadian currency; (d) $20,000 to $30,000 Canadian currency; (e) $10,000 to $20,000 Canadian currency; (f) $5,000 to $10,000 Canadian currency?

Mr. ABBOTT: Under the Foreign Exchange Control Act and regulations, a resident of Canada desiring to leave Canada permanently and transfer his assets from Canada is required to apply to the foreign exchange control board for change of status from a "resident" to a "non-resident" for foreign exchange control purposes. Information is not available as to persons applying for change of status to take up permanent residence in the United States as distinct from other United States dollar area countries although the large majority of applications are by persons desiring to take up permanent residence in the United States.

No permit from the board was required by a resident leaving Canada with not more than $150 (including not more than $100 in U.S. funds) up until May 1947, and $25 (including not more than $10 in U.S. funds) since that time. The information available does not include residents who may have left Canada for permanent residence in the United States or elsewhere who took with them not more than these amounts during the periods indicated but did not make application for change of status.

In addition, a family group is normally dealt with under one application for change of status and no record has been kept of the number of individuals covered by such applications.

Subject to the foregoing, the replies to the questions are as follows:

1. Number of applications approved for change of status for persons leaving Canada to take up permanent residence in United States dollar area countries—19,315.

2. The total amount of Canadian dollars and securities declared in the applications referred to in the answer to question No. 1 and authorized to be transferred from Canada was $46,305,464. Information is not available as to the amount of Canadian dollars and securities which were actually transferred from Canada.

United States dollars are not provided out of Canada's reserves at the official rate of exchange for transfers of capital from Canada by persons leaving Canada to take up permanent residence elsewhere, except for a small amount per applicant to meet travelling and initial expenses. The amount of United States dollars made available by the board for this latter purpose was $6,565,689. The balance was authorized for transfer from Canada only in the form of Canadian domestic securities or in Canadian dollars which the owner, upon becoming a non-resident, could convert into United States dollars in the unofficial market in the United States.

3. No applicant for change of status was permitted to convert $5,000 or more into United States funds in Canada at the official rate of exchange.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—RED DEER OFFICE

Mr. SHAW:

1. During 1947 how many unemployed persons registered at the national employment service office, Red Deer, Alberta?
2. How many applications for benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act were received by the Red Deer office during 1947?
3. Of the applicants, how many were granted unemployment insurance benefits?
4. Of those refused such benefits, how many appealed the decision?
5. Of these appeals, how many decisions were reversed by the court of referees?
6. In how many cases were the decisions of the court of referees appealed?
7. Did the umpire in any instance reverse the decision of the court of referees?

Mr. COTE (Verdun):

1. 1,857.
2. 572 initial claims; 53 renewal claims.
3. 515.
4. 25.
5. Nil.
6. (a) By insurance officer—nil; (b) By claimant—one.
7. No.

Note: In these figures it is possible quite a number are "repeaters", but we have no way of determining how many.

NATIONAL REVENUE—CUSTOMS AND EXCISE OFFICE, LONDON, ONT.

Mr. MANROSS:

1. What was total number of employees in Department of Customs and Excise in London in each year 1942, 1943, 1944, 1945, 1946 and 1947?
2. What was total payroll in each of these years?
3. What was total amount of customs and excise taxes collected at London in these years?
4. What is total number of employees now?

Mr. WINTERS:

1.

Fiscal year	Number of Employees
1941-42	33
1942-43	32
1943-44	28
1944-45	30
1945-46	32
1946-47	35

2.

Fiscal year	Total Payroll
1941-42	$65,542.00
1942-43	67,353.21
1943-44	63,658.05
1944-45	64,290.29
1945-46	68,827.72
1946-47	76,562.46

3.

Fiscal year	Total Revenue
1941-42	$11,376,569.78
1942-43	14,783,111.03
1943-44	13,800,861.31
1944-45	13,134,488.96
1945-46	13,545,189.17
1946-47	14,942,829.95

4. As of March 17, 1948—36.

MOTOR VEHICLES—FEDERAL TAX

Mr. CRUICKSHANK:

1. What was the cost of a standard Chevrolet sedan in Vancouver on March 13, 1940, and what was the total federal tax collected as of that date?

2. What was the cost of a standard Chevrolet sedan in Vancouver on March 13, 1948, and what was the total federal tax collected as of that date, 1948?

Mr. WINTERS:

1. The department has no information as to the cost of the car in question; on March 13, 1940, the federal tax on automobiles was: fifty dollars—five per cent.

Excise tax—Automobiles adapted or adaptable to passenger use: (a) valued at not more than six hundred and fifty dollars—free; (b) valued at more than six hundred and fifty dollars, on the amount in excess of six hundred and fifty dollars—five per cent.

Provided that the tax collected under paragraph (b) above shall in no case exceed two hundred and fifty dollars per automobile.

Sales tax—Eight per cent.

Both the foregoing taxes apply on the Canadian manufacturer's sale price, or on the duty paid value if imported.

2. The department has no information as to the cost of the car in question; on March 13, 1948, the federal tax on automobiles was:

Excise tax—(a) Automobiles adapted or adaptable for passenger use, with seating capacity for not more than ten persons each, valued at twelve hundred dollars or less—twenty-five per cent.

Over twelve hundred dollars but not more than two thousand dollars—twenty-five per cent on twelve hundred dollars plus fifty per cent on the amount in excess of twelve hundred dollars;

Over two thousand dollars—twenty-five per cent on twelve hundred dollars plus fifty per cent on eight hundred dollars plus seventy-five per cent on the amount in excess of two thousand dollars.

Sales tax—Eight per cent.

Both the foregoing taxes apply on the Canadian manufacturer's sale price, or on the duty paid value if imported.

SICK MARINERS' DUES

Mr. LESAGE:

1. What Canadian seamen and fishermen, if any, are covered by part V of the Canada Shipping Act, administered by the Department of National Health and Welfare?

2. Do the sick mariners' dues paid by coasting, government and fishing vessels of Canadian registry meet the cost of treatment of their crews? If not, what is the deficit?

3. Do sick mariners' dues paid by foreign-going vessels meet the cost of treatment of their crews?

[Mr. Cruickshank.]

Mr. MARTIN:

1. Canadian seamen and fishermen who are members of the crews of vessels of Canadian registry that pay sick mariners' dues under part V of the Canada Shipping Act.

2. Sick mariners' dues paid by coasting, government and fishing vessels of Canadian registry have never met the cost of treatment of their crews. The deficits for each of the past five years are as follows:

1942	$41.056.07
1943	44,524.35
1944	50.036.07
1945	77,854.57
1946	63,588.69

3. Sick mariners' dues paid by foreign-going vessels more than met the cost of treatment of their crews until 1941. From 1942 on, there has been a yearly deficit as follows:

1942	$32,199.06
1943	33,538.65
1944	67,740.27
1945	2,802.44
1946	87,959.08

FILM BOARD—EMPLOYEES PAID IN U.S. FUNDS

Mr. FRASER:

1. How many employees of the national film board were paid in United States funds during the year 1947?

2. How many employees were paid in United States funds during January, 1948?

3. How many of these employees are Canadian citizens?

4. Are any of these employees paid in United States funds, stationed in Canada?

Mr. WINTERS:

1. 11.

2. 6.

3. 1947, 3; 1948, nil.

4. No.

CANADIAN ARTHRITIS AND RHEUMATISM SOCIETY

Mr. BENTLEY:

1. Is the government making a grant of money to the newly formed Canadian arthritis and rheumatism society?

2. If so, how much?

Mr. MARTIN:

1. No.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare has promised whole-hearted support and co-operation to this society when, in the future, it has demonstrated its ability to act as the national co-ordinating agency, for which purpose it was set up.

Since the society is still in the early organizational stage it can readily be appreciated that budgetary and other financial plans are still to be formulated and put forward by the society.

2. See answer to No. 1 above.

EMPLOYMENT OF DR. NOBLE

Mr. BENTLEY:

1. Is Dr. Noble, a veterinary surgeon, employed by the dominion government in the province of Saskatchewan?

2. If so, since when; at what salary, and at what allowance for expenses?

Mr. McCUBBIN:

1. Yes.

2. March 17, 1941.

Dr. Noble is employed by the Department of Agriculture in a dual capacity on a part time basis as required. When employed as a stallion inspector he is paid $10 per day, plus living and travelling expenses. When engaged as a veterinary inspector he is paid $15 per day, paying his own living and travelling expenses.

EXPORTS AND IMPORTS—VARIOUS COUNTRIES

Mr. TIMMINS:

What value of commodities did Canada export to and import from each of the following countries in the respective years 1946 and 1947: Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Burma, Ceylon, Chile, China, Colombia, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, French Union, Great Britain and Ireland, India, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Pakistan, South Africa, Southern Rhodesia, Sweden, Syro-Lebanese customs union?

Mr. McILRAITH:

Country	Exports		Imports
	1946	1947	1946	1947
	$	$	$	$
Argentina	14,038,528	31,697,126	14,372,213	17,961,099
Australia	38,193,663	60,294,201	19,753,939	14,222,472
Belgium	63,626,096	52,748,555	4,428,864	10,120,449
Brazil	24,601,962	31,659,949	14,018,295	13,887,719
Burma	442,440	822,518	1,000	2,857
Ceylon	2,139,770	4,078,598	3,745,337	11,652,580
Chile	3,564,804	4,391,797	424,265	338,791
China	42,915,143	34,984,364	2,321,239	2,303,781
Colombia	8,930,005	9,950,044	9,708,416	9,196,741
Cuba	5,269,891	7,501,550	13,227,720	23,751,450
Czechoslovakia	9,870,930	13,779,027	964,115	3,644,843
France	74,380,394	81,058,035	4,609,849	8,755,394
French Possessions	11,841,713	9,026,030	509,496	324,049
Great Britain and Ireland	597,506,175	751,198,395	201,433,220	189,369,855
India	49,045,795	42,946,957	27,877,376	42,249,805
Luxembourg	Included in Belgium.
Netherlands	33,883,373	55,939,827	2,496,988	3,529,508
New Zealand	16,110,123	37,385,675	11,955,536	10,831,369
Norway	19,266,569	20,319,773	835,595	4,998,641
Pakistan	Included in India.
South Africa	68,632,865	67,138,413	7,891,625	4,256,346
Southern Rhodesia	3,284,237	7,369,278	93,044	180,987
Sweden	9,132,653	17,461,181	3,681,277	3,184,486
Syria	227,507	2,546,225	70,566	29,750

Note: Imports from Great Britain and Ireland include Canadian goods returned, mainly military equipment, valued at $60,092,099 in 1946 and $839,000 in 1947.

SALE OF GOLD ON FREE MARKET

Mr. CAOUETTE:

What steps, if any, have been taken by the government to allow the gold mining companies of Canada to sell their gold on the free markets?

Mr. ABBOTT: None. The government's policy in this connection was stated in the House of Commons on July 17, 1947.

VAL D'OR, QUE., POST OFFICE BUILDING

Mr. CAOUETTE:

1. Have any steps been taken for the construction of a post office building in Val d'Or?

2. If so, when will the work start?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): 1 and 2. Steps are being taken towards the acquisition of a site for proposed public building at Val d'Or, for which an item is included in the main estimates of this department 1948-49. When funds are provided for the construction of a building, immediate steps will be taken towards the preparation of plans and specifications.

BANK OF CANADA—L. RASMINSKY

Mr. CAOUETTE:

1. Is Mr. L. Rasminsky, executive assistant to the Governor of the Bank of Canada, a Canadian by birth?

2. If not, what is the country of his origin?

Mr. ABBOTT:

1. Yes.

2. Answered by No. 1.

OLD AGE PENSIONS

Mr. REID:

What amounts are at present being paid old age pensioners in each province (a) total amount paid each recipient; (b) amount contributed by the dominion government; (c) additional amount or amounts paid by each provincial government?

Mr. MARTIN:

(a) The maximum amount which an old age pensioner or a blind pensioner may receive per month from pension and provincial supplemental allowance in each province is as follows:

Prince Edward Island	$30
Nova Scotia ...	35
New Brunswick.	30
Quebec	30
Ontario	40
Manitoba	30
Saskatchewan .	30	($35 from Apr. 1, 1948)
Alberta	35	($37 from Apr. 1, 1948)
British Columbia	40

(b) The maximum contribution by the dominion to the amount paid a pensioner in any province is $22.50 (75 per cent of $30) per month.

(c) Supplemental monthly allowances paid by the provinces are as follows.

Nova Scotia—up to $5.
Ontario—up to $10.
Saskatchewan—from Apr. 1, 1948—up to $5.
Alberta—$5 (from Apr. 1, 1948—$7).
British Columbia—$10.

FILM BOARD—EMPLOYEES NOT CANADIAN CITIZENS

Mr. FRASER:

1. Are all employees of the national film board Canadian citizens?

2. If not, how many are (a) citizens of Canada; (b) not citizens of Canada?

3. What are the names of all employees of the national film board who are not citizens of Canada, and where are these people employed?

[Mr. Fournier (Hull).]

Mr. WINTERS:

1. No.

2. (a) 567; (b) 26.

3.

Name	Location
Apuzzo, A. (U.S. citizen),	U.S.
Bobet; J. (French citizen),	Canada.
Carter, M. (U.S. citizen),	U.S.
Cunliffe, B. (British subject),	Canada.
Donohue, V. (British subject),	Australia.
Dowling, M. (British subject),	Australia.
Gilg, T. (Swiss subject),	Canada.
Glunz, R. (U.S. citizen),	Canada.
Golightly, J. (British subject),	England.
Hacche, A. (British subject),	Canada.
Hager, M. (U.S. citizen),	U.S.
Jenner, H. (British subject),	England.
Leigh, M. (British subject),	England.
Murray, R. (U.S. citizen),	U.S.
Randall, H. (U.S. citizen),	Canada.
Rose, R. (U.S. citizen),	Canada.
Schachtel, M. (British subject),	Canada.
Schmidt, A. (U.S. citizen),	U.S.
Slater, C. (British subject),	England.
Swift, M. (British subject),	England.
Troke, H. (British subject),	Canada.
Waite, A. (British subject),	Canada.
Webster, P. (British subject),	Canada.
Wilson, A. (British subject),	Canada.
Mitchell, P. (British subject),	U.S.
Nieto, J. (Mexican subject),	Mexico.

CANADIAN ARMY OFFICERS OF RANK OF MAJOR-GENERAL AND ABOVE

Mr. FULTON:

1. How many officers of the rank of major-general and above are presently serving in the Canadian army (Active)?

2. What was the maximum number of officers of the rank of major-general and above serving at any one time with the Canadian Active Service Force during the war 1939-1945?

3. During the period when this maximum number of officers of the rank of major-general and above was serving, what was the largest number of troops (all ranks) on active service?

Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. Nine.

2. Forty-one.

3. 489,683.

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS—BOOKLET "CANADIAN NEWSPAPER REPORTS"

Mr. FRASER:

1. What was the total cost to the government for the printing of the booklet "Canadian Newspaper Reports" dated February 25, 1948?

2. How many of these booklets were printed for administrator of the Farm Improvement Loans Act?

Mr. ABBOTT:

1. $409.

2. 5,000.

NAVAL SERVICE OFFICERS OF RANK OF REAR ADMIRAL AND ABOVE

Mr. FULTON:

1. How many officers of the rank of rear admiral and above are presently serving in the Royal Canadian Navy (Active)?
2. What was the maximum number of officers of the rank of rear admiral and above serving at any one time with the Royal Canadian Navy during the war 1939-1945?
3. During the period when this maximum number of officers of the rank of rear admiral and above was serving, what was the largest number of naval personnel (all ranks) on active service?

Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. Four.
2. Six.
3. 92,880.

AIR FORCE OFFICERS OF RANK OF AIR VICE-MARSHAL AND ABOVE

Mr. FULTON:

1. How many officers of the rank of air vice-marshal and above are presently serving in the Royal Canadian Air Force (Active)?
2. What was the maximum number of officers of the rank of air vice-marshal and above serving at any one time with the Royal Canadian Air Force during the war 1939-45?
3. During the period when this maximum number of officers of the rank of air vice-marshal and above was serving, what was the largest number of personnel (all ranks) on active service?

Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. Nine.
2. Twenty-five.
3. 212,378.

FEDERAL GRANTS TO MUNICIPALITIES FOR MUNICIPAL SERVICES

Mr. CHURCH:

1. What action is the government taking towards granting some form of aid to municipalities (besides Ottawa) for similar municipal services rendered free to federal authority by Canada's municipalities?
2. What action has been taken since the debate last session on this matter, if any?

Mr. ABBOTT: 1 and 2. This matter is receiving the active consideration of the government and an announcement will be made in due course.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—ROUYN, QUE., OFFICE

Mr. CAOUETTE:

1. Who is in charge of the unemployment insurance office in Rouyn, Quebec?
2. What salary does he receive yearly?

Mr. COTE (Verdun):

1. Mr. G. J. Primeau.
2. $3,000.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

CIVIL SERVICE—APPOINTMENTS BY EXAMINATION

Mr. HARKNESS:

1. How many (a) permanent; (b) temporary appointments to the civil service have been made for the calendar years 1945, 1946, 1947?
2. How many of these were based on the results of a competitive civil service examination?
3. In how many of the above cases was the examination (a) written; (b) oral; (c) written and oral?
4. In the case of the appointments without civil service examinations, what is the basis and method by which they were made?
5. How many of the persons appointed as in (a) possess the veterans' preference?
6. In the case of the appointments without civil service commission examination, how many of the appointees possess the veterans' preference?

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): Return tabled.

IMPORTS OF ARGENTINE CORNED BEEF

Mr. HARKNESS:

1. How much Argentine corned beef was imported into Canada in the years 1946 and 1947: (a) in 14-oz. tins; (b) in total?
2. Was this Argentine meat paid for in American dollars? If not, how was it paid?
3. What was the price per 14-oz. tin paid for this beef by the importer?
4. What is the retail price at which the 14-oz. tins are being sold in Calgary and Edmonton?

SELECTIVE SERVICE AND EMPLOYMENT OFFICE—HEADQUARTERS IN LONDON, ONT.

Mr. MANROSS:

1. What rent did the national selective service and national employment office pay for their headquarters in London in 1944, 1945, 1946 and 1947?
2. How many employees did they have in 1944, 1945, 1946 and 1947?
3. What was their total payroll in 1944, 1945, 1946 and 1947?
4. What does their total staff number now?

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): Return tabled.

WARTIME PRICES AND TRADE BOARD—LONDON, ONT.

Mr. MANROSS:

1. When did wartime prices and trade board move into dominion public building at London, Ontario?
2. What rents have been paid annually since?
3. What was total number of employees in each year, 1944, 1945, 1946 and 1947?
4. What was total payroll in each year, 1944, 1945, 1946 and 1947?
5. What is total number of employees now?

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): Return tabled.

NATIONAL REVENUE—INCOME TAX DIVISION, LONDON, ONT.

Mr. MANROSS:

1. When did the income tax division move into the Victory building in London, Ontario?

2. What rents have been paid annually since?

3. What was the total number of employees in London in 1944, 1945, 1946 and 1947?

4. What was total payroll in 1944, 1945, 1946 and 1947?

5. What is total number of employees now?

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): Return tabled.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—GARVEY BUILDING, LONDON, ONT.

Mr. MANROSS:

1. What did the government pay for the Garvey building, King street, London, now occupied by Department of Veterans Affairs?

2. What was (a) the date of purchase; (b) total cost of alterations; (c) cost of office and other equipment?

3. How many employees were in this building in 1944, 1945, 1946 and 1947?

4. What was their total payroll in 1944, 1945, 1946 and 1947?

5. What is total number of employees now?

VETERANS AFFAIRS—ROBINSON LITTLE BUILDING, LONDON, ONT.

Mr. MANROSS:

1. What rent did the Department of Veterans Affairs pay for the Robinson Little building on Richmond street, London, in 1944, 1945, 1946 and 1947?

2. How many employees did they have in 1944, 1945, 1946 and 1947?

3. What was their total payroll in 1944, 1945, 1946 and 1947?

4. What were their other expenses in 1944, 1945, 1946 and 1947?

5. What does their total staff number now?

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): Return tabled.

OLD CUSTOMS HOUSE BUILDING, LONDON, ONT.

Mr. MANROSS:

1. What government department is now using the old customs house in London, at the corner of Queens avenue and Richmond street?

2. What annual rent do they pay for it?

3. How many employees were there in the building in each year, 1942, 1943, 1944, 1945, 1946 and 1947?

4. What was the total payroll in each of these years?

5. How many employees are there now?

6. When does the government expect to be through with this building?

7. Is it for sale?

[Mr. Gibson (Hamilton West).]

FEDERAL EXPENDITURES FOR EDUCATIONAL PURPOSES

Mr. PROBE:

Since the appointment of royal commission on industrial training and technical education, 1910, what yearly expenditures have been made from federal money, by provinces, for (1) agricultural education; (2) industrial education; (3) academic education (elementary or secondary school); (4) university grants or scholarships; (5) veteran education; (6) training of unemployed or civilian handicapped; (7) national research council; (8) foreign scholarships to Canadian students; (9) vocational school and/or university equipment or buildings; (10) visual education; (11) libraries; (12) physical education; (13) any other educational purposes (specify)?

QUAKER ROAD HOUSING ENTERPRISE, WELLAND COUNTY

Mr. LOCKHART:

1. In connection with the houses made available to veterans in what is known as the Quaker Road enterprise, in Welland county, Ontario, what water supply is available to the veterans?

2. What was the total cost of the present water system installed?

3. Is the supply considered sufficient for the future?

4. What water rates are paid by the veterans occupying these houses?

PAYMENTS FOR LEGAL SERVICES

Mr. CAOUETTE:

1. What amounts, if any, were received from the different departments or offices of the federal government by the following lawyers since January, 1940, to date: Right Hon. Louis S. St. Laurent, Quebec, Quebec; Henri Drouin, Amos, Abitibi, Quebec; Jean Louis Baillargeon, Val d'Or, Quebec; Lucien Cliche, Val d'Or, Quebec; Paul Cuddihy, Rouyn, Quebec; Leo Bureau, Rouyn, Quebec; Léopold Larouche, Rouyn, Quebec; Camille Beaubien, Rouyn, Quebec; Arthur Lefebvre, Rouyn, Quebec; Gérard Cournoyer, Sorel, Quebec?

2. For what services were they paid?

IMMIGRATION AGREEMENTS—EMPLOYMENT IN MINES

Mr. CAOUETTE:

1. Is the government a party to an agreement with immigrants now entering Canada for employment in this country?

2. If so, what are the terms of such agreement?

3. For what period are they guaranteed work by the government?

4. Does the government reimburse mining companies for a part of the salaries or wages paid to immigrants employed in the mines of northwestern Quebec? If so, what amount or in what proportion?

5. Do the immigrants employed in the mines of northwestern Quebec pay the same rate of income tax as the Canadian miners? If not, for what reason?

6. For what period are mining companies bound to keep immigrants in their employ?

7. Are mining companies obliged to employ the said immigrants?

DOMINION CROWN CORPORATIONS

Mr. CAMPBELL:

1. What are the names of all dominion crown corporations, including those set up during the war?

2. What was the amount of capital expenditure advanced by the dominion government to each of the crown corporations?

3. Do these same crown corporations pay or have they paid interest and depreciation to the dominion government?

4. Do the crown companies have a board of directors, or if not, to whom are they responsible?

CIVIL SERVICE—EMPLOYEES IN SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. McKAY:

1. How many federal civil service employees are there in the province of Saskatchewan?

2. How many federal civil servants in the province of Saskatchewan are receiving salaries (a) less than $1,000; (b) $1,000-$1,200; (c) $1,200-$1,400; (d) $1,400-$1,600; (e) $1,600-$1,800; (f) $1,800-$2,000; (g) over $2,000?

MOTION FOR PAPERS

ARROWHEAD, B.C., WHARF

Mr. FULTON:

For a copy of any report or recommendation made by the chief engineer to the Minister of Public Works concerning the repair, alteration or moving of the wharf at Arrowhead, B.C.

TAXATION

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT TO VACATE AMUSEMENT AND PARI-MUTUEL TAX FIELDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GORDON GRAYDON (Peel): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the introduction yesterday in the Ontario legislature of a measure imposing a provincial amusement tax for hospital purposes, to become effective upon the implementation of this government's commitment to vacate the amusement tax field, will the minister indicate when that will be done?

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): I can add nothing to what I said in a letter to the Premier of Nova Scotia, I think in April of 1947, when I stated that in view of the special interest which the provinces have in amusement and pari-mutuel tax fields, among other fields, the dominion government would vacate these fields as soon as circumstances will permit.

Mr. GRAYDON: Would the minister indicate when he expects it will be possible to do so?

Mr. ABBOTT: Obviously not. That would be indicating what might be in the budget.

Mr. GRAYDON: It is going to be in the budget?

LABOUR CONDITIONS

DEEPSEA SHIPOWNERS AND DECK, ENGINEER AND WIRELESS OPERATORS—UNION PROPOSALS FOR ARBITRATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour if he has anything to add to the statement he made in the house on March 15 in regard to the seamen's strike. Can the minister say what is the attitude of the shipowners to the union's proposals made to him for arbitration?

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): In reply to the hon. member for Vancouver East, and also in reply to an inquiry from the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Isnor), I might say that this dispute is a long standing one. I have had a commissioner, Mr. Justice McNiven of Regina, on this matter for three months. He was able to make arrangements for an agreement between the shipowners and the Canadian seamen's union, but it was not possible to come to an agreement with the executive officers, engineers and wireless operators. The result was that a strike ensued of the executive officers, engineers and wireless operators. Yesterday my deputy received from the men's organization the following telegram, copy of which had been sent to the shipping federation of Canada and the shipowners' association (deepsea) of British Columbia:

Following telegram addressed to Mr. MacNamara by board of management Canadian merchant guild Vancouver dated March 23 is submitted herewith for your consideration: "Foreign-going deck officers of the Canadian merchant service guild agreeable to signing articles and immediate sailing of ships on basis of immediate implementation of full McNiven report on the understanding that the points at difference between both the owners and the guild namely, hourly overtime and pro rata leave be settled through a three-man arbitration board whose decision shall be final and binding. Further, that no person or articles shall be penalized under the provisions of the Canada Shipping Act nor shall any member of the guild be discriminated against by the shipowners. Please advise if this proposal acceptable to shipowners."

The immediate situation is that I am awaiting a reply to that questionnaire. Last week I met a group of shipowners from Montreal but no conclusive arrangements were made to terminate the dispute. I can go no further than that at the moment.

UNITED NATIONS

TRUSTEESHIP PROPOSAL IN PALESTINE PROBLEM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. SOLON E. LOW (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I desire to direct a question to the minister of external affairs, of which perhaps the Prime Minister or the parliamentary assistant might take note with a view to giving an answer before we adjourn today.

I refer to dispatches from New York indicating that the United States delegation to the united nations is asking for a special session of the assembly to consider a trusteeship proposal for settlement of the Palestine problem. My question has two parts. First, will Canada's representative on the security council support the request for such a special session of the general assembly? Second, is General McNaughton's reported statement today to be interpreted to mean that Canada does not favour the trusteeship proposal as an alternative to partition?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might answer that question. I do not think the house should be given the information the hon. member has asked for, in advance of receipt officially by the government of statements that may be made at New York by our representatives. I do not think we should undertake to say what our representatives will say there.

HOUSING

INQUIRY WITH RESPECT TO CURRIE BARRACKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. L. SMITH (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask a question. I do not know whether it should be addressed to the Minister of National Defence, the Minister of Veterans Affairs or the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply. I received this telegram only a moment ago. It is marked 2.20 p.m. It is short; perhaps I might read it:

> Newspaper reports indicate that 135 houses at Currie barracks for Department of National Defence have been let to Bird Construction without calling for bids. We strongly protest this on the grounds that our own contractors and subcontractors should have a chance to figure on this job.

Would the minister state what the situation is so that I may be in a position to reply to the telegram?

FLOOD CONDITIONS

QUESTION AS TO FEDERAL RESPONSIBILITY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. ALPHONSE FOURNIER (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Ottawa East (Mr. Richard) put the following question:

> In view of the fact that the government now owns the riverfront from Rideau falls to Hog's Back will the minister state (1) what assistance has been offered in the past to the adjoining municipalities to prevent floods;—

The answer to that is none, in cases where the federal government has no control, jurisdiction nor responsibility. His second question was:

> (2) whether his officers have studied the responsibilities of the dominion government to assist in the prevention of floods on the Rideau river, and its liabilities therein, especially in the case of an emergency?

The answer is that the Rideau river channel from Rideau falls to Hog's Back is not navigable and is therefore under the control of the province and not the dominion. It is not considered that the dominion has any responsibility or liability, as the problem in its two phases, that is, in emergency or in final solution, is one of municipal control. It is one for the province and municipality to attend to.

Mr. RICHARD (Ottawa East): If I may ask a supplementary question, is the minister taking into consideration the fact that the government not only owns the riverfront but thousands of dollars worth of valuable residential property which it might protect if the provincial government does not act?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I consulted my officials on that problem and I was told that if the properties all belong to the federal government and the damages were suffered by the federal government and not by private owners, we should attend to the properties belonging to the federal government.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): If the minister will permit a supplementary question, when he says this river is not navigable does he mean that you cannot get a boat up the river, or is he using the word in its legal sense? Practically all streams are navigable. Does the minister mean that legally this river is not navigable?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I understand there are rapids on the river and that it is not navigable. I do not want to go into the legal question of whether it is a navigable stream. Judgments in the past have established quite definitely the meaning of navigable rivers.

WHEAT

INQUIRY AS TO PARTICIPATION PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. As this is probably the last day before the Easter recess, would he state the amount of the wheat participation payments and when the payments will be made?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The leader of my hon. friend's party mentioned an amendment to the wheat board act in another place. I said that I would make a statement after the wheat board bill had passed. I am afraid I cannot do so at this time.

EXCISE TAX ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 172, to amend the Excise Tax Act.

Mr. J. M. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I know there are some people in this house who believe that this bill has been quite adequately discussed in committee, and I do not propose to take very much time. I had that opinion when I came into the chamber; and since the threat of the Prime Minister, though delivered as the Minister of Labour would say "in a kindly way," I feel still more strongly that I should be brief, and I shall be brief. Nevertheless I feel that it is desirable on the second reading of this bill to state why we in this party regard it as a bill which we should oppose, as we have opposed it, to the end.

We regard it as ill-conceived, arbitrary, illegal and destructive.

In one respect, Mr. Speaker, I think this bill might be described as almost unique. Often on previous occasions when we have opposed government bills I have felt that I was able, in some measure at any rate, to understand the reasons which moved the government to the passing of the bill, but I confess that here I am in a complete fog. I cannot understand what moves the government to pass this bill. There is an old saying that the heart has its reasons which reason cannot tell, and I can only assume that the government also have reasons which reason cannot tell, and I propose to leave it at that; but I should like to ask the house to recall very briefly the background which has led us into what seems to me to be a sea of troubles.

The house will remember that this bill is designed to assist in meeting—very inadequately, I think—certain troubles which arose from a most unwise decision of the government in July, 1946, a decision to which they have adhered with what I suggest is unhappy obstinacy. The result of that, as you will recall, Mr. Speaker, was that in a year over a billion dollars of our gold and United States exchange cataracted away. Were there no warnings given the government? Yes, there were warnings given constantly during the session of 1947 and again during the summer after the session had ended. But unfortunately inaction was persisted in constantly until in the middle of November an announcement was made over the air by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) imposing this tax. This imposition was illegal. In order to try to escape the illegality the minister has had to resort to hair-splitting which, I am sure, was very disagreeable to him. He has had to say that there was no tax, and there was only an indication that parliament would be asked to pass a tax, and that the people need not pay the tax. I am not going to labour the point, Mr. Speaker; I am just going to say it is playing with words—playing with words to say there was no tax when every customs official had been told to act under the notice which had been given; it is playing with words to say there is no tax when people had goods coming from the United States in customs warehouses and could not get them until they paid the tax. As a matter of fact the truth is that it was announced as a tax, intended as a tax, collected from the Canadian people as a tax, and if it was not a tax all I can say is that a great fraud was practised on the Canadian people.

I have just one other remark to make on this question of the lawlessness of this tax, and that is to recall to the memories of hon. gentlemen the fact that when the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Merritt) asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. St. Laurent), an eminent lawyer, whether he considered the tax legal, the hon. member remained glued to his chair.

I have said that the tax, in spite of all the months of delay, was, so far as we could see, passed in a hasty and ill-considered manner. The reason I say that is that it was no sooner passed than it was found necessary to begin to make changes in it. The minister frankly told us the changes were made because they found cases of distress. Well, Mr. Speaker, what I want to say to you is that they are going to find more cases of distress and they are going to have to make more changes. Incidentally I understand that in the bill the right is reserved to make still further changes; and while I am on this point I would make the suggestion that this measure will in the end prove to be a ridiculous measure because it will fail in what is intended and I believe the government will be under pressure to make more and more changes.

But I want to make a further point. Notwithstanding the fact that changes have been made to lessen distress—and I am not going into details—there is plenty of distress now. There is plenty of anger and disappointment. There are people whose businesses are being ruined, and they will very properly ask why it is that they were victimized in this way.

If I have given anything approximately fair as a description of the situation which we have at the present time—let me interject here to say what has already been said, that in Bill 3, however much one may object to certain features of it, there were effective powers retained; but in this bill I believe the whole thing is ill-conceived and will not be effective. I now come back to what I was about to say. If I have given anything approximately fair as a description of the confusion, the distress and the difficulty which are being caused by this bill, you will agree with me, Mr. Speaker, and the house will agree, that valid reasons are necessary, strong and overwhelming reasons that the bill is necessary; and I shall look now for a moment at the reasons.

The first reason given, the reason which I think we all thought was the overwhelming one when we got into the debate, was the saving of United States exchange. As to that I wish to make two observations. It is clear that not only was no figure in the minds of the administration when this tax was announced as to what might be saved in that way—there was an estimate with regard to Bill 3, but apparently no estimate here at all, according to the Minister of Finance. Second, though this bill has now been in effect for four months there are still no figures of the slightest value. In answer to the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) the minister said the other night—I paraphrase his words—that he had no figures now and doubted if he ever would have any figures which would show him exactly the effect of this bill. At my request he did produce certain figures which he was good enough to give us yesterday, but after examining these my feeling is that the savings effected are trivial, and it will take a lifetime of the trickle savings of United States exchange which we would make in that way to begin to recover the billion dollars which cataracted away in the early months of 1947.

It is not surprising that a measure of this kind, conceived in iniquity, should have a very dishonourable life—and it certainly has had a dishonourable life so far. It was defeated in committee—

An hon. MEMBER: Has it any parents?

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): And what happened? We then saw really a very shabby spectacle. It was defeated in committee, and I assumed that with the power of its brute majority the government could have found a way within the rules, when it came back to the house, to summon up its—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. Under the rules the hon. member has no right to refer to what has been settled by a vote of the house.

Mr. KNOWLES: The Prime Minister did it.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I thought in doing that, Mr. Speaker, I was following a distinguished precedent, but I bow to your ruling. I shall just say this—

Mr. KNOWLES: The Prime Minister did it on February 10.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I shall just say that I regretted, as I think everyone in the house did, that that ruling which we had all heard and which had been made, I venture to say, with the approval of the government, was then overturned by the vote of the government.

I said, Mr. Speaker, that I would be brief, and I have finished. I just want to say that for these reasons and for other reasons which have been given in this house, we believe not only that this bill is a bad bill but that it does not make sense. I am not going to refer to the other reasons. The United States exchange reason was supposed to be the great one. I submit that it is trivial; that there is no evidence that it will have the slightest effect. All the evidence we have is that its effect will be trivial. The other reasons I shall not pause to enumerate, except to say that I think each of them was weaker than the last. They were obviously conjured up in order to support the weakness of the first one. I did not envy the Minister of Finance his task, but it seemed to me as soon as we tried to pin him down to one reason he flitted off to another. I think that was the only thing he could do because each was so weak that he tried to get strength from the others, but I think this strength was a very unhappy evidence of weakness and no strength at all.

I now wish to move in amendment, seconded by the hon. member for Calgary West:

That the word "now" be omitted and the words "this day six months" added at the end of the question.

Mr. F. E. JAENICKE (Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, we in this group have carefully considered the provisions of this bill and its general effect, and after due consideration and deliberation we have come to the conclusion that we must oppose the second reading of the measure.

There are several reasons why we feel that this bill is not in the interests of the Canadian people, and these reasons may be summarized as follows:

First, the tax is not necessary for revenue purposes, and it is inflationary.

Second, the tax is an unnecessary burden on the vast majority of the Canadian people.

Third, there is so far no evidence that the tax will have the expected result of conserving United States currency by reducing the consumption of United States goods or of domestic goods with United States content, or by creating an over-all current account surplus.

And lastly, in voting for this bill we would condone a serious breach by the government of our constitution.

With respect to the first objection I have mentioned, namely, that the tax is not necessary for revenue purposes, I do not think that it needs further argument, since the minister himself has admitted as much. It has not been introduced for that purpose, and especially is it not required for that purpose because of the rumoured budget surplus which is said to be something around $700 million.

The second reason for opposing the bill is that it places an additional unnecessary burden upon the people, and I think that is particularly true of the young people who are just starting out in life. And when we talk about young people, we necessarily have in our minds our veterans who have come back to us and who wish to establish their homes and take their places in this great Canadian family of ours. Their re-establishment is hard enough as it is, with their rent so high, the cost of building materials and other necessities being what it is, and this only makes it harder for them by putting an additional burden upon their shoulders, a burden which I consider absolutely unnecessary.

In view of the representations we have heard from different members from all sides, even the government side, and the evidence to which we listened while the bill was in resolution stage in committee, very few articles subject to the tax or duty can be considered luxuries. Most of them are necessities, and I think it is altogether wrong to levy an indirect tax upon such articles. It seems to me it is always the common man, the little man with little means, who bears the heavy burden of indirect taxation, and on general principles we in this group are against any increase in indirect taxation.

We must of course consider, and we in this group have considered that there are sections in the bill referring to the repeal of other taxes. We have fully considered this and have come to the conclusion that the new taxes to be imposed are much greater than the relief which will be afforded by the repeal of these taxes as provided in the last few sections of the bill.

On page 2131 of Hansard the minister gives figures and indicates that there has been collected close to $6,000,000 in the last three and a half months since the taxes have been imposed. On these figures we must expect that the new tax is imposed by the measure will be considerably greater than the relief which is afforded by the repeal of the tax on sugar and electric current, et cetera.

Our third reason for opposing the bill is that there is no evidence that the measure will have the expected result of conserving United States dollars. The minister explained that there were two principal reasons for the measures: first, reducing the consumption of United States made goods or articles with high United States content, and second, the creating of an over-all current account surplus.

I do not think that the bill will accomplish that purpose, and there was evidence in the committee to that effect. I think I have listened diligently to all the discussion that took place in committee, and to say the least, any evidence that was produced was most unsatisfactory, contradictory and unconvincing.

Take the case of automobiles. The minister quoted figures yesterday that did not seem to me to give any evidence of success in reducing the consumption of United States made goods or goods with high United States content. On the contrary, I rather take the word of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Gibson), who spoke on Monday and who told us that he had been in Windsor and had talked to some manufacturers. He said at page 2483 of Hansard:

I was in Windsor the other day and they assured me that they had enough orders to keep them going for the next two years.

That was certainly evidence, coming from that side of the house, that it was not successful as far as automobiles are concerned.

Mr. ABBOTT: They might be export orders.

Mr. JAENICKE: That may be true, but even the figures the minister gave yesterday certainly showed that the reduction in the month of January or February was a very small reduction of a very few hundred thousand dollars as against seven or eight millions. On the other hand, the member for Parkdale (Mr. Timmins) quoted on Monday, at page 2491, from a memorandum of the radio manufacturers, showing a considerable drop, and the memorandum quoted ends with this paragraph:

> Final figures for February sales and production are not yet available, but indications are that still further drops have occurred, and already there have been drastic cut-backs in factory production and employment.

I emphasize the word "production". To that argument the minister said, and again I quote, from page 2491:

> I am delighted to hear that the tax is doing what it is intended to, but I do not believe that is possible.

I fail to see how the minister's delight is compatible with his idea of an over-all current account surplus.

On page 2131 of Hansard, on March 11, the minister said, in answer to a question I put to him:

> The secondary purpose, if I may so describe it, is to reduce the consumption of articles in this country which for the time being we can do without. I think I explained yesterday afternoon that if we are to continue to export to the war devastated countries of Europe, we must reduce consumption in this country, whether the things we consume are of United States content or not. In other words we must create what I refer to, and what the economists refer to, as an over-all current account surplus.

From that argument I understand the minister to say, and I think I am right, that we must reduce consumption but not that we must reduce production. As a matter of fact he was emphatic, at another time in the committee, that we must reduce consumption and also increase production. I suggest that the figures he quoted with respect to radio sales and the memorandum of the radio manufacturers from which I quoted a moment ago and which appears in yesterday's Hansard, indicate that not only consumption but also production is going down, which I thought the minister was trying to avoid because of his endeavour to create this over-all current account surplus. Taking a bird's-eye view of all we have heard in committee and in explanation of the necessity for this bill, I fail to see that the minister has established that this taxation measure will conserve American dollars.

Now I come to the fourth objection I quoted, that is the objection in connection with the legal and constitutional aspect. I had intended at the end of my speech to introduce an amendment but will have to refrain from doing so because of the amendment just introduced by the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. Macdonnell). We were going to propose this amendment:

> That in the opinion of the house the action of the government in arranging by ministerial announcement for the collection of taxes, of which parliament had not yet been advised and which parliament has not yet imposed, is contrary to established parliamentary practice and without constitutional authority.

As I say, I shall not be able to introduce that amendment now, but I should like to say just a few words as to the legal and constitutional aspect.

I spoke on this matter a few weeks ago and shall not repeat what I said then, but I must emphasize again that the action of the government in collecting this tax since last November is entirely illegal and unconstitutional. I will say that the prerogatives of parliament were crucified. I know, of course, that if parliament passes this bill the tax will be made retroactive to November 18 and the crucified body will be resurrected; but, Mr. Speaker, the ugly nail holes will still be there.

The case I quoted in committee a few weeks ago, Bowles v. the Bank of England, only concerned itself with an ordinary budget resolution introduced while the house was in session. This is something altogether different. The minister does not contend that his announcement was a budget resolution. It strikes me that new taxes, yes and even increases in taxes already in existence, are always imposed by way of the budget, at least in British parliaments; and I have been unable to find a case where a measure has been brought in to raise taxes apart from the budget. The budget represents the general financial program of the government for the year. We have always had budgets. They are a development in our constitutional practice. Reading the historic background of the development of the committee of supply and the committee of ways and means, I find that the function of the committee of ways and means is to find the revenue required for the expenditures voted by the committee of supply. In fact in the early period of constitutional government taxes which were to be imposed as recommended by the committee were always earmarked for certain expenditures. Then we had the gradual development of the general budget and the elimination of the special appropriation; but the fundamental principle, the inherent principle is still present even in our modern budget, namely no taxation without need. In other words the people are not to be taxed unless the money is needed for some expenditure for their general benefit or the benefit of the state. This became clear to me on Monday in listening to the citation and quotation of the authorities on the points of order raised at that time, and after I had an opportunity of studying some of those authorities. Therefore I believe the situation which confronts us is unique. In addition to offending against the legal principle laid down in Bowles v. the Bank of England, the action of the government in collecting the tax since November has disregarded the principle that there should be no taxation unless there is need of it.

I would urgently plead with the government that these things should not happen again, and that at this session a bill should be introduced similar to the bill introduced in Great Britain in 1913 so they could act in case of emergency, and also to make budget resolutions legal whenever the budget is introduced. In these times of unrest and fear, Mr. Speaker, particularly fear that the concepts of a foreign ideology are making inroads upon our democratic institutions, we refuse to be parties to a measure which contains that apparent lighthearted and gross disregard of the prerogatives of parliament.

Mr. A. L. SMITH (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I assure the house that I realize many of us would like to be in places other than this, and therefore I shall not detain hon. members for more than a very few minutes. I have seconded this amendment, and I think I owe it to the house and to myself to tell you why I have done so. I want to compliment the hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Jaenicke) on what in my judgment was his best effort since I have been in this House of Commons. Some of his others have been very good, but I believe this was his best. The natural eloquence which is his I always find very effective, but in listening to him, it did occur to me that he might have used another cross—that is, the cross of gold, upon which William Jennings Bryan refused to see the American people crucified.

All I intend to do today is recite chronologically, I hope, a few facts in connection with this whole matter, and then ask the members of this house if they can find it within their conscience to do what I am going to suggest the government is asking us to do here. We all know we have a dollar crisis. The fact that we knew it months before any action was taken is of no consequence now—I mean in the realities of the situation. The real facts are before us. We all knew there were two ways of dealing with it. One was by embargoes, by the rationing of the influx of goods, and so on. The other was by replacing those imports with things we might produce or process or make in this, our own country. But then we had an additional reason, which is this very excise tax with which we are dealing. I do not say the government is going out of its way to introduce bills in a new form, but this resolution contains four sections imposing taxation and two sections releasing the people from taxation. Accepting everything the hon. member for Kindersley says, that we have in fact no need of money from this peculiar tax, then obviously all of us would be in favour of the releases which are made in the bill. So we find ourselves in this position in this house, as we do so often. We have a bill brought forward containing some things we think are good, and also containing some things we think are bad. Hon. members must make up their minds—not definitely on one thing, but to balance one against the other. And so while I do not like that which is bad, yet I do not want to oppose that which is good. I am frank to admit that many times my mind has been a hodgepodge in endeavouring to decide, or to direct my own thoughts, as to which portion of a piece of legislation overbalanced the other portion.

It seems to me that something can be done in the house about that. This legislation is the kind I have described. Then what happens? Measures had to be taken—at least so the government thought—and had to be taken quickly. What was done by the advisers of the minister, about whom the hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) becomes so eloquent almost weekly? In a state of fog they went into a grab-bag and came out with this excise tax in their hands. That is not said with any desire to be unduly harsh; I believe it is said truthfully, because no satisfactory reason has yet been given by the minister or by anyone associated with him for having taken this action.

May I say I admire the minister's astuteness, and that of his advisers, in looking for reasons. But this cold fact remains, that after four months of operation of this tax—and at the moment I am not concerned about the argument as to whether or not it is a tax—after four months of operation those responsible for the measure are unable to tell us whether or not it has assisted us in seeking our objective. They state further, and state it frankly—and in passing may I commend the minister for his frankness—that they do not know that they ever will know—

Mr. ABBOTT: I am sure my hon. friend wishes to be fair. What I said was that it could not be measured in terms of dollars. One cannot tell how many goods would otherwise have been sold if we had not imposed the tax.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I accept completely the statement made by the minister. But what he did say was that he never would know in terms of savings in United States dollars the extent to which this may have been an assistance. Is that more nearly accurate?

Mr. ABBOTT: I think so.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): That is what I intended to say. Now, what is our position? Here we are, members of this House of Commons, supposed at least to be intelligent. We are going to vote upon a measure which at its inception was unconstitutional, and which has been collecting taxes for four months completely without authority. Accepting the minister's last answer to me, our position is that we do not know whether or to what extent we may be helping our position.

Mr. ABBOTT: We know our dollar situation is improving, though.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): The minister says our situation is improving. Again he gets out his three-pronged fork; I hope he has something better on the other two prongs than he has on this one.

I repeat—and I want everyone to know what we are doing—that we are being asked to vote upon a measure which was unconstitutional in the beginning, to vote for the imposition of a tax over a period of four months, a tax which had no basis in law or regulation under law. We are asked to vote for a measure we do not know; nor is there any evidence to support the thought that it is helping us in our dollar position.

In other words, to use the language used by the minister in the beginning, we entered upon an experiment. That experiment has lasted four months. If we approve this measure it will last indefinitely. Yet it will continue to be nothing but an experiment. That is obvious from the answers the minister has given.

So here we sit—I was going to say 244 of us, but I might have been a little bit out in my calculation if I had said that, on this beautiful spring afternoon. In any event, here we sit, those of us who are in this House of Commons—and to do what? To vote for something born in a fog, something which lived in a test tube—

Mr. ABBOTT: The hon. member should have paused; they were ready for applause.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): —carried on as an experiment in a test tube. But the doctors, chemists and others now do not even know what they put into the test tube in the beginning. Yet we are asked to vote for legislation under those circumstances.

Mr. KNOWLES: And after it was defeated the other day.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Yes, after it was defeated the other day, although if possible I wish to avoid anything which might be considered harsh. Why are we asked to vote on this measure? This is a tax which in the case of each of us bears heavily upon people we know and know well. Let any member look at his correspondence. Let us see what the people who are writing to us are saying. It is bearing very heavily upon them.

The luxury argument went out the window days ago. There is nothing to it, absolutely nothing left to that argument. But people who require necessities are paying 25 per cent more than they otherwise would.

Mr. ABBOTT: And paying less for sugar, too.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I did not hear the minister's interjection.

Mr. GRAYDON: You put the sugar in to catch the flies.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): We pay a cent less for coffee; but the fact that occasionally the government gives a cent here and a cent there does not excuse them for socking the people 25 per cent on this particular job.

That is exactly the spot that we as members are in. There is no justification even in one's imagination—and, sir, one needs imagination if he votes for this measure—certainly no reasons have been advanced in its favour. Here we sit in this, the House of Commons of the Dominion of Canada, voting completely in the air, not knowing where we are going, except to say that we are voting for the continuation of an experiment which has almost died of old age. It is four months old now, but we are trying to revive it, bring it back to life and give it the use that it neither had nor deserved.

Mr. SOLON E. LOW (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I shall be a man of very few words. I do not like the tax. My constituents do not like the tax. The people throughout Canada do not like the tax, and they have not asked for it. Indeed a great majority of them have protested strongly against the imposition of it. Therefore I have no alternative but to voice the dissatisfaction of the Canadian people with whom I have to deal and whom I represent.

I agree with every single thing said on this side of the house today. Furthermore I say to the minister and the government that when I spoke a few days ago on this very same measure I contended that the government had not investigated the alternatives within their power which would bring up production. Once again I say that because of its failure to investigate what can be done by calling upon the people to increase production and to take care of the export trade which we need to balance our dollar position, I have no alternative but to oppose the measure.

During the war with nearly 2,000,000 people out of production we produced almost at the same level as our production today. Those 2,000,000 people are back in Canada and ready to go to work. You cannot tell me that that increased number of people could not bring up our production in desired lines away beyond what is being produced today if the government called seriously for that increased production. I charge that the government has gone ahead bullheadedly, determined to put this thing through for some unknown purpose and for some reason that they certainly have not divulged to us here. I must protest in the name of my people and I shall support the amendment.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Macdonnell, Muskoka-Ontario) which was negatived on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Aylesworth
Barrett
Bentley
Blackmore
Blair
Boucher
Bracken
Bradshaw
Bryce
Burton
Cardiff
Case
Casselman
Castleden
Charlton
Cockeram
Coldwell
Coyle
Daniel
Fraser
Gillis
Graydon
Hatfield
Hlynka
Hodgson
Irvine
Jackman
Jaenicke
Knowles
Kuhl
Lennard
Lockhart
Low
McCuaig
McCullough (Assiniboia)
Macdonnell (Muskoka-Ontario)
MacInnis
McKay
McLure
McMaster
Manross
Merritt
Moore
Probe
Quelch
Skey
Smith (Calgary West)
Stephenson
Stokes
Strum, Mrs.
Timmins
Townley-Smith
Webb
White (Hastings-Peterborough)
White (Middlesex East)
Wright
Zaplitny—57

NAYS

Messrs:

Arsenault
Beaudoin
Beaudry
Benidickson
Bertrand (Laurier)
Bertrand (Prescott)
Black (Chateauguay-Huntingdon)
Blanchette
Boivin
Bonnier
Bourget
Bradette
Brown
Chevrier
Claxton
Cloutier
Coté (St. Johns-Iberville-Napierville)
Coté (Verdun)
Dechene
Denis
Dion (Lake St. John-Roberval)
Dionne (Beauce)
Douglas
Eudes
Fontaine
Fournier (Hull)
Fournier (Maisonneuve-Rosemont)
Gariépy
Gauthier (Portneuf)
Gibson (Hamilton West)
Gingues
Gladstone
Golding
Gour (Russell)
Gourd (Chapleau)
Grant
Gregg
Hallé
Harris (Grey-Bruce)
Healy
Howe
Jutras
King, Mackenzie
Lafontaine
Langlois
Lapointe
Little
McCann
McCubbin
Macdonald (Brantford City)
McIlraith
McIvor
Martin
Matthews (Brandon)
Michaud
Mitchell
Nixon
Parent
Reid
Richard (Gloucester)
Richard (Ottawa East)
Robinson (Simcoe East)
Ross (Hamilton East)
Sinnott
Smith (York North)
Tremblay
Tucker
Viau
Warren
Weir
Winkler—71

(Translation):

Mr. HEON: Mr. Speaker, I am paired for the whole session with the hon. member for Joliette-l'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Lapalme). Had I voted, I would have voted for the amendment.

(Text):

Mr. JEAN: I was paired with the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Homuth). Had I voted, I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. MacNICOL: I was paired with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. St. Laurent). Had I voted, I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. HAZEN: I was paired with the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare (Mr. Baker). Had I voted, I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I was paired with the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Gauthier). Had I voted, I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. MENARY: I was paired with the hon. member for Cape Breton North-Victoria (Mr. MacLean). Had I voted, I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. ABBOTT: I was paired with the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Hackett). Had I voted, I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. FERGUSON: I was paired with the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Isnor). Had I voted, I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. DROPE: I was paired with the hon. member for Northumberland, N.B. (Mr. Maloney). Had I voted, I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. CLEAVER: I was paired. Had I voted, I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): I was paired with the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Dickey). Had I voted, I would have voted for the amendment.

Main motion (Mr. Abbott) agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

Sections 1 to 4 inclusive carried on division.

Bill reported on division.

Mr. ABBOTT moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the bill before us is a bill confirming the tax which was imposed by radio on November 17 last—imposed illegally, imposed unconstitutionally and imposed without precedent in any British parliamentary institution. The tax it imposes is unfair, unjust, inequitable and, as someone has said, not needed. The last mentioned point has been emphasized by the minister who introduced the bill. The bill taxes articles which are essential in our way of living; it is discriminatory and it hits unfairly the low-income groups of this country.

On the basis of the government's own arguments, they have not satisfied the house that this measure is an essential one or that it in any way accomplishes the purpose of the government in attempting to save United States dollars. Yet in the first section, this Bill No. 172 imposes an excise tax of 25 per cent on a long list of goods needed by the ordinary people of this country. In these circumstances I wish to move, seconded by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Graydon):

That the said bill be not now read the third time but that the same be referred back to the committee of the whole for the purpose of reconsidering section one thereof.

Mr. GORDON GRAYDON (Peel): I desire to say just a word in connection with this amendment, namely what has been so well said by others in the house and what no doubt has been entertained in the thoughts of hon. gentlemen opposite as well but unexpressed. As the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) said, this bill was conceived under strange circumstances and under circumstances that we in this house hope will never be the circumstances surrounding the conception of any legislation again in this house. We cannot ever afford to repeat what has been done with respect to this measure which is now up for third reading. Not only was it illegal in its conception—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. GRAYDON: That is all right. If the zoo will only keep quiet over there we shall go on with this measure.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. GRAYDON: Not only was it illegal in its conception, illegal in its pronouncement to the Canadian people but illegality has been piled upon illegality. The motion which has just been moved by the leader of the opposition asking for reconsideration by the committee of the whole of the particular section which he has mentioned gives this house an opportunity to reconsider the illegal and wholly unconstitutional infringement of the rights of the house, because this particular part of the bill was voted upon by the committee of the house and was defeated, and in that way the government forces were defeated. Mr. Speaker, you are going to suggest that I am reflecting upon the previous vote of this house; but I am going to say to you, sir, that there cannot be one rule for me and another rule for the Minister of Finance.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. GRAYDON: I want to say to you, sir—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon member must resume his seat. I must say to the hon member that the rules apply to everyone, and even to himself. It is against the rules to refer to a matter which has already been settled by a vote.

Mr. GRAYDON: That being the case, Mr. Speaker, I am going to accept your ruling as I normally would. Since you have made that ruling, it only emphasizes the impossible position of the Minister of Finance in connection with the previous vote, because when he rose after that vote had been completed he reflected upon it, and when that irregularity was continued it only piled injustice upon injustice in this house and I resent it.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. GRAYDON: I resent it, and I am going to protest with all the vigour I have in my power.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I must call the attention of the hon. member, who has some experience, to the fact that he more than anybody else should be one of the first to abide by the rules of the house. It is a rule which is known by every hon. member that when the Speaker rises the hon. member who has the floor should resume his seat. I would ask the hon. member to abide by the rules and when the Speaker rises, to resume his seat and not to refer to a matter which has already been settled by a vote. Moreover, as he knows, the house is supposed to ignore what has happened in a committee of the house unless a report from the committee is before it.

Mr. GRAYDON: What you have said now is perhaps the most concise and clear spanking that the Minister of Finance has ever had from the Speaker, because what you have said is only too true. I was wishing to see whether or not I would be dealt with in connection with a reflection on this vote in the same way as the Minister of Finance was dealt with by this house in connection with the other one.

Mr. ABBOTT: You are putting on a good show.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would suggest to the hon. member who is an old parliamentarian that he knows the rules quite well and that the Speaker has no spanking to give to any member of the House of Commons. I want to repeat that if he wants to argue against the government, or against any party in the house, it is his privilege, but I will not stand for anybody bringing the Speaker into the debate.

Mr. GRAYDON: Mr. Speaker, I am not attempting to bring Your Honour into the debate. I am trying to ensure at this late hour that in this House of Commons we shall never have to suffer the injustice that in any event we think we suffered with respect to the Monday vote.

I want to conclude with these words. On many occasions people have said that governments and others have soaked the rich. Mr. Speaker, this is an example of where the government has departed from all these previous principles and under the third reading of this bill it seeks to soak the poor instead. I resent it and I protest; I am glad that we shall have an opportunity of voting on this measure going back to the committee for reconsideration because this particular part of the bill has already been rejected by the House of Commons, and I hope we reject it again.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): I am going to say very few words. There are times when the House of Commons has to stand by fundamental principles. I believe that this is one of these times. As has been so well said by hon. members on this side of the house and particularly by my hon. friend and colleague, the member for Kindersley (Mr. Jaenicke), we regard the action of the government in attempting to impose these taxes as being illegal from every historical point of view. Right from the early days of the Stuarts when taxation without the consent of parliament was stubbornly resisted by our forebears it has been a fundamental principle that until the taxes have been approved by parliament they shall not be imposed. There has been a variation of that in recent years, so that when the budget comes down the taxes immediately go into effect; but, as the hon. member for Kindersley pointed out, even that was challenged in the mother of parliaments, and challenged successfully, with the result that the parliament at Westminster enacted a special measure to legalize budget impositions under these circumstances.

I agree with those who have said that this is unprecedented in Canadian history. I know of no precedent for the imposition of these taxes. The government does not require the money, with the large surplus it has; and, as my hon. friend who has taken his seat has said, this does impose an additional burden on the poor, on those least able to bear it in many instances. Of course it is not wholly on the poor, but it is to a large degree, and consequently I think the leader of the opposition is perfectly right in moving for the reference back of this particular clause, not because we believe it can be carried, but because I think parliament should make an effective and dramatic protest against what has been done. For that reason we are supporting the reference back.

Mr. ABBOTT: I presume I close the debate, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. MEMBER: No; the leader of the opposition does.

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): I have only a word to say. I had hoped that it would not be necessary for me to participate at this stage, because, in my experience in the house, this debate has hit an all-time high for repetition of various points made. Every important point made has been repeated at least ten times, and in most cases by the same speakers.

I congratulate the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. Macdonnell) on his genius for repetition and his attempt to convince by repetition. I also congratulate him on his mastery of the art of argument by assertion.

I have nothing more to add. I have already answered several times all the points raised. I do not intend to repeat them now. I only wish to refer to a point made by both the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) and the leader of the C.C.F. (Mr. Coldwell), that this is taxation of the poor.

Mr. COLDWELL: As well as the well-to-do.

Mr. ABBOTT: No one has emphasized the fact that under this measure a cent tax is being removed from sugar, which everyone uses, the tax is being removed from tea and coffee, which almost everyone uses, the tax is being removed from the domestic use of electricity and gas, which everyone uses, and that the aggregate of these is estimated to be $21,000,000 a year. A tax is being imposed on a good many things which not everyone uses, or which not everyone needs to buy while this taxation is in effect.

I will not take any more time to emphasize that point, and I emphasize it only because no one, in criticizing the tax, has seen fit to bring it out.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Bracken) which was negatived on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Aylesworth
Barrett
Bentley
Blackmore
Blair
Boucher
Bracken
Bradshaw
Bryce
Burton
Cardiff
Case
Casselman
Castleden
Charlton
Cockeram
Coldwell
Coyle
Daniel
Fraser
Graydon
Hlynka
Hodgson
Irvine
Jackman
Jaenicke
Knowles
Kuhl
Lennard
Lockhart
McCuaig
McCullough (Assiniboia)
Macdonnell (Muskoka-Ontario)
MacInnis
McKay
McLure
McMaster
Manross
Merritt
Moore
Probe
Quelch
Skey
Smith (Calgary West)
Stephenson
Stokes
Strum, Mrs.
Timmins
Townley-Smith
Webb
White (Hastings-Peterborough)
White (Middlesex East)
Wright
Zaplitny—54.

NAYS

Messrs:

Arsenault
Beaudoin
Beaudry
Benidickson
Bertrand (Laurier)
Bertrand (Prescott)
Black (Chateauguay-Huntingdon)
Blanchette
Boivin
Bonnier
Bourget
Bradette
Brown
Chevrier
Claxton
Cloutier
Coté (St. Johns-Iberville-Napierville)
Coté (Verdun)
Dechene
Denis
Dion (Lake St. John-Roberval)
Dionne (Beauce)
Douglas
Eudes
Fontaine
Fournier (Hull)
Fournier (Maisonneuve-Rosemont)
Gariépy
Gauthier (Portneuf)
Gibson (Hamilton West)
Gingues
Gladstone
Golding
Gour (Russell)
Gourd (Chapleau)
Grant
Gregg
Hallé
Harris (Grey-Bruce)
Healy
Howe
Jutras
King, Mackenzie
Lafontaine
Langlois
Lapointe
Little
McCann
McCubbin
Macdonald (Brantford City)
McIlraith
McIvor
Martin
Matthews (Brandon)
Michaud
Mitchell
Nixon
Parent
Reid
Richard (Gloucester)
Richard (Ottawa East)
Robinson (Simcoe East)
Ross (Hamilton East)
Sinnott
Smith (York North)
Tremblay
Tucker
Viau
Warren
Weir
Winkler—71.

Mr. JEAN: I was paired. Had I voted, I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. ABBOTT: I was paired with the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Hackett). Had I voted, I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. CLEAVER: I was paired with the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Johnston). Had I voted, I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. MacNICOL: I was paired with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. St. Laurent). Had I voted, I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. FERGUSON: I was paired with the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Isnor). Had I voted, I would have voted in favour of the amendment.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I was paired with the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Gauthier). Had I voted, I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. DROPE: I was paired with the hon. member for Northumberland, N.B. (Mr. Maloney). Had I voted, I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. MENARY: I was paired with the hon. member for Cape Breton North-Victoria (Mr. MacLean). Had I voted, I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): I was paired with the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Dickey). Had I voted, I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON (Bruce): I did not vote, but had I voted, I would have voted for the amendment.

(Translation):

Mr. HEON: I was paired with the hon. member for Joliette-l'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Lapalme). Had I voted, I would have voted for the amendment.

(Text):

Mr. SPEAKER: Is the house ready for the main motion?

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Before you put the main motion, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) has never attempted to answer the constitutional question in connection with this matter, and I think, before this bill passes, he should tell the house what constitutional authority there is for the imposition of taxes when parliament is not sitting and without the consent of parliament.

As I said a few moments ago, I regard that as a fundamental principle of our constitutional procedure, a fundamental principle of the historic development of the imposition of taxes by parliament; and I believe that in what has been done by the government in this particular we have a violation of all parliamentary procedure in connection with taxation. So, in order to put ourselves on record I am going to move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis):

That Bill No. 172 be not now read a third time, but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this house the action of the government in arranging by ministerial announcement for the collection of taxes, of which parliament had not yet been advised and which parliament has not yet imposed, is contrary to established parliamentary practice and without constitutional authority.

Might I suggest to the government that in order to obviate any constitutional difficulty in future the government consider bringing in a bill similar to the act introduced into the British House of Commons and passed in 1913, known as the "provisional collection of taxes act". That legislation was brought in to obviate the constitutional malpractices which had grown up there and with which we are now faced in our own parliament. I suggest that as a parliament we should not tolerate this violation of the historic procedures in connection with the imposition of taxes upon His Majesty's subjects, without making the most emphatic protest of which we are capable. We have made that protest this afternoon; and while perhaps this amendment may delay the house to some extent, I believe it is worthwhile in order to bring home to the government and the country the need, particularly in these days when our democratic institutions are being called into question and when parliamentary procedures in many countries have passed out, to have this democratic country stand behind fundamental principles of parliamentary government, which the action of the present government has violated in this particular.

Mr. NORMAN J. M. LOCKHART (Lincoln): I should like to add just a word before the amendment is put, to say that I shall certainly support it. I happened to be perhaps one of the few in this house a few years back who acted in the dual capacity of mayor of my city as well as representative of my constituency in the House of Commons. On frequent occasions municipal councils take for their guidance the procedure in the House of Commons at Ottawa. I shall preserve the Hansard of this session; I shall preserve the words of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) and of those who have supported him in this illegal action; and I shall return to my fair city and warn the municipal council that never again can they follow the procedure they have followed through the years heretofore, as precedents on which illegal action may be taken as it has been by this government. This action will go down in history. And so I raise my voice in protest before this measure becomes law. I want to remind the house that municipal councils and those having lesser authority than the House of Commons have always taken this house as their precedent.

Having said that, I now propose to support the amendment so ably presented by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar.

Mr. SPEAKER: The amendment before the house is moved by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) and seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis)—

That Bill No. 172 be not now read a third time, but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this house the action of the government in arranging by ministerial announcement for the collection of taxes, of which parliament had not yet been advised and which parliament has not yet imposed, is contrary to established parliamentary practice and without constitutional authority.

I would call the attention of the hon. member—

Mr. KNOWLES: If Your Honour is going to give a ruling, would you permit an hon. member to speak?

Mr. COLDWELL: On a point of order; if you propose to give a ruling on this, will you hear discussion on a point of order before the ruling is given? In looking up previous copies of Hansard, I find that that was the custom of the house.

Mr. SPEAKER: At different times hon. members in the house have drawn the attention of the Speaker to the fact that it is very unfortunate that they cannot discuss Speakers' rulings. It is a ruling of the house that Speakers' rulings are not debatable.

Mr. COLDWELL: That is right.

Mr. SPEAKER: If I permit hon. members to enter into a discussion before I give my ruling, I wonder what they are going to discuss, since they do not know what my ruling will be.

Mr. COLDWELL: That—

Mr. SPEAKER: One moment. If the hon. member would like to call my attention to the fact that on account of such precedent or on account of such standing order he believes his amendment is in order, I will hear him with pleasure. But I would remind the house that it is not the duty of the Speaker to listen for about an hour to argument in favour of or against the amendment, and that when I feel I have been enlightened sufficiently I shall give my ruling.

[Mr. Lockhart.]

Mr. COLDWELL: When I saw Your Honour rise with the book of rules in your hand I anticipated that you were about to give a ruling, although a point of order had not been raised. Therefore I ask that, before your ruling is given, an opportunity be afforded to those of us who believe that this amendment is in order, to discuss the point of order which we believe was in your mind.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. COLDWELL: Because—

Mr. SPEAKER: If the hon. member would permit me, actually we have before the house an amendment.

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes.

Mr. SPEAKER: To the third reading of a bill.

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes, that is right.

Mr. SPEAKER: And the hon. member wants to rise to speak to a point of order. There is no point of order. Then, if he wishes to speak I have reason to believe he wishes to speak on his amendment.

Mr. COLDWELL: No.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have a ruling to give on the amendment.

Mr. COLDWELL: May I—

Mr. SPEAKER: He cannot rise on a point of order because there is no point of order.

Mr. COLDWELL: I have already spoken on the amendment, and have therefore exhausted my right. I anticipated that you were about to rule.

Mr. KNOWLES: May I speak to the amendment?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. KNOWLES: I have asked Your Honour if I might speak to the amendment. The chorus of "No's" across the way would seem to indicate that I am not entitled to do so.

Mr. CASSELMAN: That is only the steamroller.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member may speak on the amendment, because it is his privilege to speak on the amendment. If it is accepted he will be able to speak to it. If it is refused there will be no amendment before the house.

I would call the attention of hon. members to citation 710 in Beauchesne, third edition, which states:

The question for the third reading is put immediately after the report from the committee of the whole. All amendments which may be moved on a second reading of a bill may be moved on the third reading with the restriction that they cannot deal with any matter which is not contained in the bill.

Then there is a reference to May, page 421. The citation continues:

On the second reading of a bill, an amendment may be moved expressing opinions as to any circumstances connected with its introduction or prosecution, or seeking further information in relation to the bill by committees or commissioners, the production of papers or other evidence, or the opinion of judges.

And I emphasize these words:

This cannot be done on the third reading because it is not directly connected with any provision of the bill. The question for the third reading may be negatived, but as previously stated (in reference to the second reading) such a vote is not fatal to the bill.

Mr. KNOWLES: Before you rule, would you permit an hon. member to speak?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. KNOWLES: I am not asking to debate the ruling. I am asking to speak before your ruling.

Mr. SPEAKER: Under that citation I am obliged to declare the amendment out of order.

Mr. COLDWELL: Since no opportunity was given to discuss the possibility of a ruling I must respectfully appeal that ruling.

Mr. KNOWLES: We have asked a dozen times.

Mr. CHEVRIER: You did not ask at the opportune time.

Mr. KNOWLES: Where have you been?

Mr. SPEAKER: Those in favour of sustaining the Speaker's ruling will say "Yea".

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yea.

Mr. SPEAKER: Those opposed will say "Nay".

Some hon. MEMBERS: Nay.

Mr. SPEAKER: In my opinion the "Yeas" have it.

Mr. CASSELMAN: On division.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. SPEAKER: Call in the members.

Mr. Speaker put the question as follows:

Mr. Coldwell moved, seconded by Mr. MacInnis:

"That Bill No. 172 be not now read a third time, but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this house the action of the government in arranging by ministerial announcement for the collection of taxes, of which parliament had not yet been advised and which parliament has not yet imposed, is contrary to established parliamentary practice and without constitutional authority."

I declared that amendment out of order and I based my ruling on citation 710 Beauchesne, third edition, which reads as follows:

"The question for the third reading is put immediately after the report from the committee of the whole. All amendments which may be moved on a second reading of a bill may be moved on the third reading with the restriction that they cannot deal with any matter which is not contained in the bill. On the second reading of a bill, an amendment may be moved expressing opinions as to any circumstances connected with its introduction or prosecution, or seeking further information in relation to the bill by committees or commissioners, the production of papers or other evidence, or the opinion of judges. This cannot be done on the third reading because it is not directly connected with any provision of the bill."

Following my ruling, Mr. Coldwell appealed.

The house divided on the question: Shall the Speaker's decision be sustained? And the decision of the chair was sustained on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Arsenault
Beaudoin
Beaudry
Benidickson
Bertrand (Laurier)
Bertrand (Prescott)
Black (Chateauguay-Huntingdon)
Blanchette
Boivin
Bonnier
Bourget
Bradette
Brown
Chevrier
Claxton
Cloutier
Coté (St. Johns-Iberville-Napierville)
Coté (Verdun)
Dechene
Dion (Lake St. John-Roberval)
Dionne (Beauce)
Douglas
Eudes
Fontaine
Fournier (Hull)
Fournier (Maisonneuve-Rosemont)
Gariépy
Gauthier (Portneuf)
Gibson (Hamilton West)
Gingues
Gladstone
Golding
Gour (Russell)
Gourd (Chapleau)
Grant
Gregg
Hallé
Harris (Grey-Bruce)
Healy
Howe
Jutras
King, Mackenzie
Lafontaine
Langlois
Lapointe
Little
McCann
McCubbin
Macdonald (Brantford City)
McIlraith
McIvor
Martin
Matthews (Brandon)
Michaud
Mitchell
Nixon
Parent
Reid
Richard (Gloucester)
Richard (Ottawa East)

Robinson (Simcoe East)	Tremblay
Ross (Hamilton East)	Tucker
Sinnott	Viau
Smith (York North)	Warren
	Weir
	Winkler—70

NAYS

Messrs:

Aylesworth	Lockhart
Barrett	Low
Bentley	McCuaig
Blackmore	Macdonnell (Muskoka-Ontario)
Blair	MacInnis
Boucher	McKay
Bracken	McLure
Bradshaw	McMaster
Bryce	Manross
Burton	Merritt
Cardiff	Moore
Case	Probe
Casselman	Quelch
Castleden	Skey
Charlton	Smith (Calgary West)
Cockeram	Stephenson
Coldwell	Stokes
Coyle	Strum, Mrs.
Daniel	Timmins
Fraser	Townley-Smith
Gillis	Webb
Graydon	White (Hastings-Peterborough)
Hlynka	White (Middlesex East)
Hodgson	Wright
Jackman	Zaplitny—54
Jaenicke
Knowles
Kuhl
Lennard

(Translation):

Mr. HEON: I was paired with the hon. member for Joliette-l'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Lapalme). Had I voted, I would have voted —with all due respect to you, Mr. Speaker— against your ruling.

(Text):

Mr. MacNICOL: I was paired with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. St. Laurent). Had I voted, I would have voted against Your Honour's ruling.

Mr. FERGUSON: I was paired with the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Isnor). Had I voted, I would have voted against Your Honour's ruling.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I was paired with the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Gauthier). Had I voted, I would have voted against Your Honour's ruling.

Mr. MENARY: I was paired with the hon. member for Cape Breton North-Victoria (Mr. MacLean). Had I voted, I would have voted against Your Honour's ruling.

Mr. DROPE: I was paired with the hon. member for Northumberland, N.B. (Mr. Maloney). Had I voted, I would have voted against Your Honour's ruling.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. CLEAVER: I was paired. Had I voted I would have voted to sustain Your Honour's ruling.

Main motion (Mr. Abbott) agreed to, bill read the third time, on division, and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker, before you call the next order, I move, seconded by Mr. Abbott, that the house be not adjourned at six o'clock. That is in accordance with what I proposed earlier this afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 173, to amend the Customs Tariff.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2—Date of coming into force.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): There was one bit of information the minister was going to give.

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes; my hon. friend asked about the reduction in the tariff on coffee. Tariff item 28 covers coffee, green, imported direct from the country of growth and production, or purchased in bond in the United Kingdom. Since 1936 this coffee has been duty-free under the British preferential tariff, with an intermediate tariff rate of three cents per pound and a general tariff rate of five cents per pound. At Geneva the most-favoured-nation rate on this item was reduced from three cents to two cents per pound, and the concession was brought into effect on November 18, 1947, instead of on January 1, 1948, when the other tariff reductions made at Geneva became effective.

The imports under tariff item 28 amounted to 46,000,000 pounds, valued at $4,110,000 in 1939, and to 50,400,000 pounds valued at $13,104,000 in 1947.

Tariff item 29, the item covering green coffee, n.o.p., is not covered by this bill. This item carried a rate of 2¼ cents per pound plus 7½ per cent ad valorem under the British preferential tariff, a rate of three cents per pound plus 10 per cent ad valorem under the intermediate tariff, and a rate of five cents per pound plus ten per cent ad valorem under the general tariff. At Geneva tariff items 28 and 29 were combined, and the rate on all green coffee was made free under the British preferential tariff, with a most-favoured-nation rate of two cents per pound.

I am informed that practically all the green coffee imported into Canada comes under tariff item 28, the item covered by this bill.

Section agreed to, bill reported, read the third time and passed.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Motion agreed to, and the house went into committee, Mr. Golding in the chair.

Mr. ABBOTT moved:

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $179,134,768.66, being one-sixth of the amount of each of the several items to be voted, as set forth in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1949, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, and in addition thereto the sum of $2,965,800.33 being one-third of the amount of items 43, 67 and 447, the sum of $1,462,158.50, being one-sixth of the amount of items 151, 154, 155 and 206, and the sum of $2,037,567.83, being one-twelfth of the amount of items 5, 15, 19, 36, 40, 46, 54, 174, 180, 184, 185, 186, 196, 198, 208, 209, 210, 211, 445, 449 and 452 of the said estimates be granted to His Majesty on account for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1949.

He said: Mr. Chairman, I have had an opportunity of discussing this matter with the leaders of the three opposition parties. The form of the bill which will be based on this resolution is exactly the same as that of the bill passed last year and in previous years.

The general proportion of one-sixth for all services is intended to provide for all necessary ordinary requirements to the end of May.

The additional proportions requested for certain special items are necessary, due to the seasonal and sessional nature of the services affected, such as certain agricultural services, the sessional expenses of the Senate and the House of Commons, seasonal expenses of the Department of Mines and Resources and other services involving total commitments coming for payment in the first few months of the year.

I am asking an additional one-third of three special items. The first is an item of $6,000,000 odd for freight assistance on western feed grains. That vote will expire on July 31, the end of the crop year. So that in effect I am asking for two months supply on that. The second special item is general post-UNRRA relief, which is a revote, and the payment of which will fall due within the next month or six weeks. The final special item in this category is the item relating to trade and commerce exhibitions. It relates to the international trade fair at Toronto and other exhibitions where an unusually large amount of the particular vote will be required in the first month or two of the fiscal year.

The passing of the bill will, of course, not prejudice the rights and privileges of hon. members to criticize and discuss any item in the estimates which will come up for consideration from time to time throughout the remainder of the session, and the usual undertaking is hereby given that such rights and privileges will be respected and will not be curtailed or restricted in any way as a result of this measure.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): However much repetition there is.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

INTERIM SUPPLY

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of ways and means.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Golding in the chair.

Mr. ABBOTT: Mr. Chairman, I desire to move the following resolution covering the amounts dealt with a few moments ago in committee of supply:

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1949, the following sums be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada, namely:

1. The sum of $179,134,768.66, being one-sixth of the amount of each of the items as set forth in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1949, and

2. The additional sum of $2,965,800.33 being one-third of the amount of items 43, 67 and 447, the sum of $1,462,158.50 being one-sixth of the amount of items 151, 154, 155 and 296, and the sum of $2,037,567.83 being one-twelfth of the amount of items, 5, 15, 19, 36, 40, 46, 54, 174, 180, 184, 185, 186, 196, 198, 208, 209, 210, 211, 445, 449 and 452 of the said estimates, as set forth in the resolution concurred in this day in the committee of supply.

Mr. CASE: Is this the resolution on which the minister gave the undertaking that we would have the right to refer to and criticize any items in the main estimates that are being dealt with?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes; it refers not only to the resolution but to any items included in the schedules to the bill.

Mr. GRAYDON: It gives us the right to vote against the bill.

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes.

Motion agreed to.

Resolutions reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Abbott thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 183, for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1949.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. ABBOTT moved the second reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Golding in the chair.

Mr. CASE: Have we copies of the bill?

Mr. ABBOTT: We never do that.

Mr. CASE: We just vote blind.

Sections 1 to 6 inclusive agreed to.

Mr. BRACKEN: Are these sections all parts of one resolution, or are they separate sections?

Mr. ABBOTT: Separate sections of the bill. I sent a copy of the bill to my hon. friend.

Mr. BRACKEN: Is the minister quite sure they are all separate sections?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes.

Section 7 agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. ABBOTT moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): Before the bill is given third reading I should like to ask a question. What is the total of the main estimates for the coming fiscal year?

Mr. ABBOTT: I have them right here. The total of the main estimates for the present year to be voted, including statutory items, of course, is $1,985,146,060.84.

Mr. BRACKEN: The minister asked for one-sixth of the main estimates?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes.

Mr. BRACKEN: In certain instances one-third additional—

[Mr. Case.]

Mr. ABBOTT: In the three instances I gave.

Mr. BRACKEN: And in certain other instances one-sixth more to be added?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is right.

Mr. BRACKEN: And in certain others one-twelfth more to be added?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes.

Mr. BRACKEN: The total comes to $180 million odd.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is correct.

Mr. BRACKEN: The minister says that the total is nearly $2,000 million, one-sixth of which is some $300 million. We are not voting the statutory items?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is correct.

Mr. BRACKEN: I wish to ask one other question. The minister pointed out that later on we would be free to discuss any items now passed without any curtailment of our privileges. Assuming that the money is all spent, when we come to discuss the items what advantage will there be in discussion? Can we then have the government go back and collect the money it has spent because of our generosity today?

Mr. ABBOTT: We have heard a good deal about the constitution. I am not quite sure how that works out in this case. For obvious reasons, interim supply is voted each year to the extent of one-sixth of the items in the estimates. If the house rejects any item of ordinary estimates I am not quite sure how the matter is resolved.

Mr. BRACKEN: It is not a question of rejecting it, but after the money is spent what good will it do to talk about it?

Mr. ABBOTT: What is being voted is a relatively small proportion, and if the vote were reduced to one-half it would still be adequate to cover what had already been spent. In no case is authority being asked for more than half, and only in exceptional cases where expenditure has to be made early in the year. There is no principle involved.

Mr. BOUCHER: How long has the custom of asking for interim supply prevailed? Am I right in assuming that it started at the outbreak of the war and is being continued, or has it been going on for years?

Mr. ABBOTT: My understanding is that it has been going on for as long as parliaments have been voting supply. Obviously, when you estimate twelve months in advance and take some little time to vote, some provision has to be made to carry on the essential services of the country, and it is done by means of interim supply.

Mr. IRVINE: If, when we come to the main estimates, these items are not carried, it will be the business of the C.C.F. The minister need not worry.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): We ought to be grateful to the minister for coming and asking us at all and not simply taking it.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Golding in the chair.

SECRETARY OF STATE

629. Citizenship registration branch—further amount required, $1,220.

Mr. KNOWLES: Could we have an indication of the order in which these items are to be taken up?

Hon. COLIN GIBSON (Secretary of State): I have asked for permission to have my items considered early because I have an engagement tonight.

Mr. CASE: Am I to understand that we will take 588 later?

Mr. MITCHELL: Yes.

Mr. SKEY: Under this item would the minister consider issuing certificates of citizenship to members of parliament?

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): The certificate will be issued to any member who files application and pays the required fee. If he is a veteran there is no fee. This money is required for the microfilming of old naturalization certificates so that we may secure much-needed space by doing away with bulky files.

Mr. GRAYDON: Has any Canadian citizenship been revoked so far because of subversive or communistic activities on the part of any citizen?

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): Not on those accounts, and I do not think that under the act there is provision for it.

Mr. GRAYDON: Is it the intention of the government to amend the act to make that possible?

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): Any policy of the government in that respect will be announced in due course.

Mr. KNOWLES: The act will have to be amended by parliament.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Having regard to the opinion expressed by the Minister of Agriculture about certificates of citizenship, can the Secretary of State tell us whether he has taken out one?

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): Yes, I have one, and so have my family certificates.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): No, but the Minister of Agriculture.

Item agreed to.

631. Canada Temperance Act—further amount required, $1,500.

Mr. TIMMINS: Is this for legal services?

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): The total amount of accounts received and taxed by Justice has already exceeded the amount in the main estimates by nearly $900. The amount expended to date is $4,500, unpaid accounts on hand $887, and estimated further accounts amount to $612, which leaves a further amount required of $1,500.

Mr. TIMMINS: This is administration in respect of the Canada Temperance Act?

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): Yes. The accounts come into my department and are taxed by the Justice department.

Mr. CARDIFF: If this act does not work any better in other parts of Canada than it has in the county of Huron, I object to any more money being spent on it.

Mr. CASE: Does any of this money result from references to the privy council for legal fees or anything of the kind?

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): It is purely for the Canada Temperance Act.

Item agreed to.

Patent and Copyright Office—

632. Administration division—further amount required, $200.

Mr. GRAYDON: Last year the government increased by $1,500 the fees for obtaining patents so as to take care of printing costs. What progress has been made in connection with the printing of these patents as authorized?

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): I am glad to say that the patent office has been able to get into a new building. We have more commodious quarters. The question of printing patents is being taken up between the king's printer and the commissioner of patents, and very good progress will be made on that work.

Mr. TIMMINS: Has the increase been adopted in fees in respect to patents?

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): Yes. They were adopted last year.

Item agreed to.

Public Printing and Stationery—

616. Printing and binding office publications for sale and distribution to departments and the public—further amount required, $50,000.

Mr. BOUCHER: Can the minister give us an idea of the regulation with respect to the printing of various pamphlets, especially as regards numbers? Recently some pamphlets were printed for the Department of Agriculture which were desired in my own riding. I made application for some and was told I was allowed only twenty-five, that the rest were being sent out by the department itself to a list of people. Frankly, if we are going to vote money each year for the printing of publications of this kind and a member of the House of Commons who desires some for distribution within his own riding is limited to twenty-five or fifty copies, I think this item should be reduced to $1, because I resent that sort of treatment.

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): This $50,000 is for the printing of publications for which payment will be received; but when the payment is made it will go to the Receiver General of Canada. Last year we received something like $100,000 from the government and $144,000 from the sale of publications, so the profit was nearly $44,000.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): What was the original amount to which this $50,000 now is to be added?

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): The amount in the main estimates was $60,000, and there was a further amount of $65,000 in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Then if I added those figures correctly the amount originally voted was $125,000, and now you ask for almost fifty per cent more. That does not seem to me like estimating at all; it seems just like guessing, unless there has been a drastic change in the situation.

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): As my hon. friend says, this is an estimate only. This item covers orders received by the printing department from various government departments. The printing department does the printing and supplies the publications, which are put up for sale. The printing department cannot know a year in advance what orders will be received from other government departments.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I do not want to press the point, but I would have thought that year in and year out the thing would average, and there would be a fairly normal figure. If that is not so, there is nothing more to be said about it.

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): Last year the amount expended was $99,999.97, or practically $100,000. This year there has been a good deal more printing.

Item agreed to.

LABOUR

Unemployment Insurance Act, 1940—

588. Government's contribution to unemployment insurance fund—further amount required, $5,000,000.

Mr. MacINNIS: Before this item passes I want to say a few words in connection with a situation that has developed since the end of the war, when we have had more unemployment than we had during the war years. In most cases the municipal and provincial governments look after unemployables, but neither the municipalities nor provinces nor the dominion government make provision for employable persons who are unemployed. That is the case with persons who have not qualified for unemployment insurance, and those who have exhausted their benefits under that legislation.

In the proposals made by the dominion government to the provinces in 1945 the dominion agreed to take care of that class of unemployed person. Last winter—and perhaps the situation is still not as good—the number of unemployed was larger than at any time since this act came into effect. A great many persons, young men in particular, found themselves unemployed without having sufficient contributions under the act to entitle them to the benefits of the act. I have a letter from which I should like to quote in order to show how people feel about this situation; and while I am on this point I would suggest to the Minister of Labour that perhaps a better public relations job could be done in connection with unemployment insurance than is done. In 1940 when the act was passed there was considerable opposition to it among workers, but I found that when I spoke to them and explained to them the purposes of the act and its limitations, it was accepted as something worth while. I am convinced that much of the criticism of the act is due to a lack of understanding of it and a lack of appreciation of its limitations.

The writer of this letter is a father whose son, seventeen years of age is unemployed. Most hon. members of this house with boys of that age have them at school, but this young fellow was working and had contributed to the unemployment insurance fund for 171 days. He needs 180 days in order to be eligible for benefits. Another young lad referred to in this letter, not a son of the writer, had contributed 178 days. He was two days short of the required number of contributions, and was not eligible when he became unemployed. I am not suggesting that the act should be stretched even for a day to meet cases of this kind.

Mr. MITCHELL: Might I ask my hon. friend, for my own information, what city that was in?

Mr. MacINNIS: This was in Swift Current. I have written this man, and I should be very glad to show the minister my letter if he would care to see it. This man feels, and I think rightly so, that something should be done to assist these young fellows when they are not eligible for unemployment insurance. Referring to the boys he says:

> They cannot get work, so what is left for them to do. Nothing but loiter around pool halls and walk the street, or join the army or some other branch of the services.

Then he uses language I will not repeat in this house, and goes on:

> I spent five years and eight months in the army, and now I am beginning to wonder what it was all for. I thought we were going to have a better Canada for our sons and daughters, but it looks pretty grim now for our boys and girls. They don't want something for nothing. They want work and a chance to make a living, but at present it looks as if the soup kitchens will have to come back unless those boys and girls can get at least 180 days' work a year.

My suggestion to the minister and the government is that as quickly as possible they revive the proposals made to the provinces in 1945, and call a conference of the provinces in order to have those proposals discussed, and if possible accepted and thus extend protection to young men, and old men as well who cannot qualify for unemployment insurance.

I want the minister to understand that I am not at the moment finding fault with the administration of the act. Those who are charged with its administration must administer it according to its provisions. If they once begin departing from that they will get into trouble, because there will be no line as to where they should stop.

But there is something that must be done here. Let us consider these two young boys of seventeen or eighteen years of age. In this formative period of their lives they find themselves at loose ends, without any protection from society. It is a serious situation for them. It may be only for a short time, but on the other hand it may be for a considerable time.

During the past few weeks we have heard a good deal about the dangers of communism. I would be the last one to say that it is not dangerous. But we should remember that communism grew out of bad social conditions and the suppression of a people's just aspirations. We are not going to put an end to communism or eliminate it by suppression at this stage. We will eliminate it and prevent its growth only if we can convince the people of this country that their welfare is our consideration at all times. I suggest to the minister that as soon as possible he try to convince his colleagues in the cabinet, if indeed they are not already convinced, that here is a situation that should be remedied, and without delay.

Mr. MacNICOL: It is not often that a minister or any of his officials receives a word of praise. I am pleased to be able to accord that praise today. I refer to the administration of the department's offices on Spadina avenue, Toronto, where I have had occasion to go to observe—not for myself, may I say—what has been going on. So far as I could see, from the manager down, the officials there are trying to do their best to alleviate the troubles with which they come in contact daily. That is not an easy task to carry out without difficulty, but I believe they are taking care of the situation as best they can.

Any time I have had occasion to make inquiries in that branch in Toronto I have been accorded the utmost courtesy—and they did not know I was a member of parliament. Many people go to that office daily and have been treated with the courtesy which is their right and due. So far as I can see they are waited on promptly, just as I saw this kind of work done in England. I congratulate the departmental officers in the Spadina avenue office in Toronto upon the way they are carrying on their job.

Mr. SKEY: Mr. Chairman, I should like to endorse much of what was said by the hon. member for Vancouver East, who has drawn attention to conditions in connection with the operation of the act about which the minister and his deputies will probably want to know, and about which perhaps they will wish to effect remedies when possible.

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): I do not wish to interrupt the hon. member, but perhaps I might be permitted to say that consideration is being given to amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act. Perhaps rather than discuss details at this time it would be better to do that when the bill is before the house.

Mr. SKEY: I thank the minister for his reference. I believe he has already made a similar statement in the house. However, very briefly I should like to mention one or two points which have come to my attention so that the minister and his officials may give them consideration when they are considering the amendments.

The first is consideration of conditions under which contributions can be returned to those declared permanently ineligible in some way or another for receipt of benefit when they become unemployed.

The second is with regard to young women who marry and, we hope, permanently withdraw from the business world. It seems to me that these girls never have an opportunity of deriving benefit from the many contributions they make, and that the act should take that fact into consideration.

The third recommendation is that the minister and his officials should consider seriously the addition of a clause which would permit the collection of unemployment insurance by those who have to withdraw from the labour market because of illness arising through no fault of their own. I realize that they are covered by workmen's compensation legislation, but I think there should be a sickness clause added to the unemployment insurance measure.

Can the minister give the house the total reserves now on hand in the fund?

Mr. MITCHELL: They amount to $440,829,668.79.

Mr. SKEY: What was the amount in 1939, before the war?

Mr. MITCHELL: There was no such act before the war.

Mr. SKEY: You were in the red?

Mr. MITCHELL: No, there was no Unemployment Insurance Act then. However I could give the hon. member figures for a later year, because I believe that is what he wants. In 1942 the amount was $43,964,246.68. I observe in passing that this big fund is an indication of the employment situation in the dominion. As I said to a labour delegation not long ago, I hope it gets bigger and bigger, because the bigger the fund, the less unemployment there is in Canada.

Mr. SKEY: I should like to complete my remarks by telling a story which I believe the minister will appreciate. I know of a British company which put in a combination scheme for its employees, and when putting in the scheme an actuarial mistake was made. Now the total amount in the pension fund is greater than the whole capitalization of the company concerned. The directors are so tied up that they cannot touch the fund and no one can do anything about it. Those poor working men, for a period of about 150 years, have been paying into the fund and no one in the firm has received a benefit comparable to the contributions made. I would hate to see that happen here.

Mr. MITCHELL: You cannot laugh it off as easily as that, by telling a story. In 1920, I believe it was, the British fund was insolvent. The government of that day had to pour millions upon millions of pounds into it, and for obvious reasons. I hope I shall never live to see the day when we will have conditions such as we had in the thirties, but if we should ever reach that unfortunate situation, $400,000,000 would be only chicken feed.

Mr. COCKERAM: Last night I asked about annuities.

Mr. MITCHELL: I have that information.

Mr. COCKERAM: I am wondering why an increase of $5,000,000 is necessary at this time, in view of the fact that that is almost sixty per cent of the amount voted for the whole of last year. This amount seems large, coming as it does at the end of the financial year.

Mr. MITCHELL: As I have said, employment conditions are so good at the present time that there has been what I suppose might be described as a slight miscalculation. I think it is fair to say that this is the biggest business in Canada. We have 3,125,000 clients at the present time, and that is big business. Hundreds of thousands of people pass through the offices every year. The government's contribution is 20 per cent of the amount contributed by the employer and the employee. During the period April 1947 to January 1948 the contributions to the fund by employers and employees through the sale of unemployment stamps and by means of bulk payments—some firms paid in that way—and other means, totalled $64,163,074.33. The government's contribution of 20 per cent of those contributions amounted to $12,832,614.87. An amount of $3,457.58 was paid on account of 1946 in 1947-48. That makes a total of $12,836,072.45. The amount of $12,500,000 which was voted last year lasted only until January of this year. The government was indebted to the fund as of yesterday in the amount of $3,900,000 and it is estimated that $1,100,000 will be necessary to meet our obligations to the fund between now and the end of March.

My hon. friends may think that that is a lot of money to spend between March 24 and March 31, the end of the financial year, but the fact is that many contributions for March are made in April. It is estimated that to take care of the government's contribution in that regard we will require this additional amount.

Yesterday when my supplementary estimates for the annuities branch were before the committee I said in reply to a question by the hon. member for York South that the extra amount required was due to increase in business and that the increase would be $3,250,000 for this fiscal year over the previous fiscal year. I thought perhaps the committee would be interested in the total figures showing the business which is being done by the annuities branch. For the last fiscal year ending March 31, 1947 the receipts were $72,009,764, a gain of about $25,000,000 over the preceding year, the total receipts in which amounted to $46,954,536. In the fiscal year ending March 31, 1945 the receipts totalled $33,076,436; for the year ending March 31, 1944 receipts totalled $26,600,097.75; for the year ending March 31, 1943 receipts totalled $20,415,365. In 1947 there were 194,623 individual contracts and certificates issued. This included 612 group contracts.

The hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario asked me about the commissions paid to annuities representatives. The following is the scale:

1. For immediate annuities and single payment deferred annuities commission is one per cent of premium.

2. For deferred annual payment annuities the scale is graduated according to when payment is to be completed.

3. There is a maximum commission payable for an annuity or annuities on the life of one person of $50.

4. In the case of retirement annuity plans, rates applicable to individual annuities apply but only up to a maximum of $400.

5. If a representative's commissions for the current month exceed $300, they are subject to a reduction of 50 per cent of the excess.

If commissions thus calculated exceed $500 they are subject to a reduction of 75 per cent of the excess.

Item agreed to.

NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

National health branch—

608. Medical services—Indians and Eskimos—further amount required, $500,000.

Mr. COCKERAM: Will the minister explain this item?

Hon. PAUL MARTIN (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Owing to the increased cost of hospitalization and medical care the amount of $2,000,000 already provided for special professional services will be inadequate this year. As my hon. friend knows, hospital costs are mounting and the cost of everything has gone up tremendously. We have a program that will require this extra amount which was not provided in the original estimate.

Mr. COCKERAM: How many doctors are included in this scheme?

Mr. MARTIN: There are about 700 part time doctors and about 60 or 70 permanent doctors. We have doctors in communities where there are Indians who render medical service and professional attendance; their fees are up and hospital costs are up. As a matter of fact we have not been able to meet the demands made upon us by hospitals in many parts of Canada with regard to payments.

Mr. BRACKEN: What is the amount for this item for the next fiscal year?

Mr. MARTIN: Approximately $7,187,530.

Mr. DROPE: Have the fees charged by part time medical officers been raised?

Mr. MARTIN: In some areas, yes.

Mr. DROPE: How much?

Mr. MARTIN: It depends upon the area. There is no uniform basis covering the whole country.

Mr. DROPE: I take it that there is no standard system, that each case is worked out individually.

Mr. MARTIN: We work out each case in the light of conditions in the locality, just as we do with hospitalization.

Item agreed to.

POST OFFICE

613. Railway mail service—further amount required, $470,000.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): What is the total amount paid for railway mail service and what percentage does this additional amount bear to the total?

Hon. ERNEST BERTRAND (Postmaster General): Last year postal gifts which were sent to England showed a large increase. During the month of November they were up 42 per cent, mostly Christmas gifts being sent to England, but the average increase for the other eleven months in the year was 16 per cent. In 1946 it cost for the full year $443,000; in 1945, $376,000, and in 1944, $411,000. The rate of increase in expenditure for the other eleven months of 1947-48 was slightly over 16 per cent compared with the same period in 1946-47.

The provision made in the main estimates in 1947-48 was $2,385,000. We were short in our estimate by $470,000, which is the amount now being asked for. We did not think our Canadians would be sending so many gifts to England, and we had to transfer an allotment of $130,000. That meant that the total expenditure last year was $2,985,000. The provision in the main estimates for 1948-49 is $2,765,000, and if our Canadians are just as generous in sending gifts abroad this year as they were last, we shall be short again.

Mr. BOUCHER: The minister's figures include the whole cost of giving the service, but do not include the revenue. I presume that when he spoke of a loss he meant the cost.

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): That is right.

Item agreed to.

614. Air and land mail services—further amount required, $150,000.

Mr. COCKERAM: Does the same explanation apply to this item?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): As the hon. gentleman knows, we have been paying supplements on the rural mail contracts. These supplements and other expenditure exceeded our estimate by $150,000. The main estimates for 1947-48 amounted to $10,750,000. That was expended, plus further supplementary estimates of $400,000, and the amount now applied for, $150,000, is the amount we are short. The estimate for 1948-49 is $11,980,000.

Mr. COCKERAM: The minister said the expenditure was $10,000,000 odd. I see by vote 313 that the estimate last year was $17,488,000. What is the explanation of that discrepancy?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): The figure my hon. friend has quoted was for air and land mail services, but the vote now before us is for ordinary land conveyance, including rural mail delivery.

[Mr. Macdonnell (Muskoka-Ontario).]

Mr. COCKERAM: The wording of the item in the main estimates is exactly the same as the wording in 614, "air and land mail services".

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): The wording is the same, but I am dealing now with mail by land, not by air.

Mr. COCKERAM: We are up in the air on this.

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): We shall be when the main estimates pass.

Mr. CHARLTON: Was there not a surplus in the Post Office department last year?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): Yes, a surplus of about $8,000,000, but it goes to the receiver general. If we had a surplus of $35,000,000 it would go to the receiver general. All we can spend is what is appropriated by parliament.

Item agreed to.

PUBLIC WORKS

617. Ottawa—maintenance and operation of dominion public buildings and grounds including rents, repairs, furniture, heating, etc.—further amount required, $225,000.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): What was the original estimate which is now being increased by $225,000? I want to get an idea of the percentage of errors.

Hon. ALPHONSE FOURNIER (Minister of Public Works): Less than five per cent. Last year the estimate was $5,753,382. We under-estimated by $225,000.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): What does that cover?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Light and power, $40,000; furniture $50,000; materials and supplies, $135,000.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Is that just for public buildings in Ottawa?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Yes.

618. Maintenance and operation of dominion public buildings and grounds, other than at Ottawa, including rents, repairs, furniture, heating, etc.—further amount required, $250,000.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): What is the explanation of this?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The total vote for 1947-48 was $7,122,209. We under-estimated by $250,000, which comprises materials and supplies, $100,000, and furniture and fittings, $150,000.

Item agreed to.

Construction, repairs and improvements—harbours and rivers—Ontario—

624. Thames river — redredging — further amount required, $15,200.

Mr. MacNICOL: I presume this is for dredging at the mouth of the Thames river. Have the departmental engineers ever considered following the program of the engineers who look after the mouth of the Mississippi, of constructing a channel so that the water will run away faster and take the sediment out to deeper water? The mouth of the Thames river, as I have seen it in the springtime, is loaded with sediment which is dissipated and makes sand bars across the mouth of the river so that when a flood comes down the river the flow of water is blocked by the sand bars. Have the engineers ever considered constructing a channel right out into the lake?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I could not give a definite answer. These works were started last year with an estimate of $45,000. We found as the work proceeded that that amount was not sufficient to open the channel. It is difficult to make an accurate estimate of the cost of works of this kind. Often our engineers will report as the work proceeds that they will not be able to complete it with the amount at their disposal. I will take serious note of what the hon. gentleman has just said and ask my officials for a report.

Mr. MacNICOL: There have been some serious floods on the Thames river, and one of the causes of these floods is that the water cannot get away fast enough once it gets down to the level land around Chatham. It cannot get away to the lake, and particularly at the lake the flow of the water laden with sediment at the mouth of the river into the lake has created sand bars. Floods are becoming very serious in western Ontario. This government will have to combine with the provincial government and other bodies to eliminate the floods on this river. One of these springs the city of Chatham will be seriously damaged, as was the city of Dayton on the Miami river a few years ago. It is a big problem. I should like the minister to consult with his engineers on this question and assist in eliminating floods by allowing the water of the Thames river to get away more freely.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): This natural bridge is caused by these floods. The expenditure of these moneys is justified to try to alleviate the condition, because this sand bar is formed by the spring floods coming down. We have not devised a means yet to eliminate it. As I said a moment ago, I shall certainly refer the remarks of the hon. gentleman to the engineers to see if they can find a way to stop these floods.

Item agreed to.

General—

628. Miscellaneous works not otherwise provided for, not more than $5,000 to be expended upon any one work—further amount required, $11,950.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Is that a work of art?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): No. We just passed the national gallery. These are miscellaneous works.

Item agreed to.

LEGISLATION

House of Commons—

592. General administration—estimates of the Clerk—further amount required, $108,000.

Mr. KNOWLES: There were certain questions I planned to ask at this time, but I was glad to hear Mr. Speaker answer some of them at three o'clock this afternoon. My questions had to do with what progress is being made in the matter of salary increases for employees of the House of Commons, and also whether these increases might be made retroactive to the same date that applied in the case of civil servants. I am sure the Speaker noted how pleased the house was with the announcement he made at three o'clock that increases would be forthcoming shortly and that they would be made retroactive to October 1 last. May I ask His Honour the Speaker at this time if he can say whether the matters now under consideration include a pension plan for sessional stenographers, assuming that they meet certain conditions?

Mr. SPEAKER: I am very glad to take this occasion to call the attention of the house to the fact that the Speaker is not only the hon. gentleman who from the Chair has from time to time called the hon. member to order and has to decide whether an amendment is in order or not—

Mr. TIMMINS: Can we talk back to the hon. gentleman now?

Mr. SPEAKER: As the hon. member knows, he is at the same time something like the manager of a big office building or a hotel. He is responsible for the restaurant; he is responsible for the cafeteria; he is responsible for giving hon. members efficient and pleasant stenographers and messengers and good service. I may say that in that respect he is as much interested as anybody—I would say more than anybody—in trying to do everything possible to recognize the good service given by all the employees of the House of Commons. I believe hon. members will give me credit for having tried, since I have been Speaker of the house, to do everything possible to help these people. Last year we considered what we could do to guarantee a position to everybody who is working in this house and to increase their salaries as the salaries of other people working in the government have been increased, to try to be agreeable and to help. Hon. members should not forget—and it is very important—that contrary to the rules in other departments of the administration of the country, the employees of the House of Commons are not responsible to the government nor to the administration of the country; they are responsible to the house. Therefore it is the privilege of the house to employ all the employees that we need for good service in the house, and I believe we should do everything possible to keep that privilege.

I hope that hon. members will understand the explanation that I am giving them. I understand that some hon. members believed from my pronunciation that I am just back from England or that I am living in Toronto, but unfortunately even if my English is not too good I hope that my words will be perfectly understood. The positions of all employees of the house are being considered at the present time by the internal economy commission of the house. A report will be made and tabled in the house. As I said this afternoon in my statement, it is the intention of the government to introduce in the house as soon as possible after Easter a resolution and a bill founded on that resolution in order that those who are entitled to be appointed permanently will be appointed permanently; salaries will be decided for such and such a job, and I have every reason to believe that all the employees will be perfectly satisfied.

Mr. RICHARD (Ottawa East): As one who has taken a special interest in all of the employees of the House of Commons, together with my colleague from Ottawa West, I must say that I am rising at this time particularly to congratulate our Speaker on the special attention he has given in the past two years to the staff and to the service in this house. I have confidence that his intentions are good in the case of employees of this house, and that their fate could not be in better hands. I am sure that justice will be done to any claims which may be made on behalf of employees of the house.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. KNOWLES: I am sure we are all grateful for the statement that Mr. Speaker has made on this occasion. There are one or two comments I wish to make. His Honour indicated, and I think rightly, that the employees of the House of Commons are in a different category from the employees of the government, and I think it is correct to say that both the members of the House of Commons and the employees themselves want it to remain that way. His Honour referred to this as a privilege, and correctly so. I simply make the obvious remark that privileges carry with them responsibilities and that of course is the reason we are all interested—that is why Mr. Speaker is interested—in meeting our responsibilities to these people.

The Speaker referred to the comparison between employees of the House of Commons and the employees of the government generally. It is true that there have been increases in salaries for many classifications of civil servants, and I hope this will be done for all employees of the House of Commons. I hope that consideration will be given to some of those who have been here a long time and have not had increases for quite a number of years. Some times it happens that an employee's salary in terms of daily wage does not look too bad, but when it is realized that he has been on that same rate per day for a good many years and the cost of living keeps going up, he feels it is unfair to him if he does not get some increase as well.

I was glad to note what the Speaker said, that consideration was being given to all employees. I hoped he would be able to answer my question about stenographers in relation to pension plans. Did his reference to making some members permanent cover that phase of the matter?

Mr. SPEAKER: I do not wish to make any commitment. After all, I am chairman of the committee which is known as the internal economy commission, and it has to approve a report which will be tabled in the house, but I may say to my hon. friend that I have always been an employer throughout my life, as I am at the present time in this House of Commons, and thank God, I understand the problems of employees, just as I understand, as a father, the problems of my children. I assure him that I will do everything possible, as I have done in the past, to give justice to these people and to give them security. They will receive what they deserve.

I am very sorry that, as the hon. member knows, we were so busy with committees and the business of the house that we could not settle the matter before Easter. I should very much have liked to make a declaration, for the benefit of the employees of the house, that such a decision has been reached before the Easter recess. Unfortunately that could not be done, but I assure my hon. friend that something will be done to their satisfaction. Moreover, it will be retroactive, so that they will not lose anything.

Mr. KNOWLES: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. HOWE: We all love the employees of the house. Sit down.

Mr. KNOWLES: What did the hon. member say?

Mr. HOWE: We all love the employees of the house.

Mr. KNOWLES: What was the rest of the remark?

Mr. HOWE: You have spoken three times.

The CHAIRMAN: The member for Winnipeg North Centre has the floor.

Mr. KNOWLES: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Another question I wish to direct to Mr. Speaker arises out of his reference to his responsibility for what he called a hotel—namely this building—with a good many activities included. One problem that does face this parliament right now, a problem which will become more acute after the next election, when there are ten more members, is that of office space for the members. This is a problem that has been brought to the Speaker's attention many times. Can he tell the committee now whether any progress has been made in securing additional office space for members, so that some of the crowded conditions experienced at the present time may be relieved, and so that there may be room for the ten additional members after the next election?

Mr. SPEAKER: I wish my hon. friend understood French. May I say this to him: "Une jolie fille ne peut donner que ce qu'elle a". That means that a nice girl can only offer what she has. Many members on both sides of the house have asked me for a private office. I should like very much to accommodate them if the space were available in this building. Unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, we need more accommodation for the requirements of the House of Commons.

Mr. TIMMINS: On behalf of the backbenchers, and I occupy the bench farthest back on this side, may I say something with respect to the acoustics of the chamber, now that we have Mr. Speaker himself in the benches. I cannot always hear what is going on for more than five minutes at a time, and it is disconcerting, when one is trying to listen to debates, to have those who occupy the front rank discussing matters of importance back and forth at the beginning of the day when the rest of us cannot hear what is being said. On behalf of the backbenchers, may I say that we would appreciate it if something could be done and done soon, so that all of us in the house, even if we are comparatively new and unimportant, shall feel that we have some part in what is going on.

Mr. GRAYDON: May I intervene with reference to those who find employment in the House of Commons and the parliament buildings. I should not like word to go out that because some members are speaking a little more than others about the good points of those who work here, we have not all just as keen and as effective an interest in the welfare of these people. I think that goes for everyone in the house. We have received the most courteous and efficient service as members. I have been here now for almost thirteen years and I must confess that we owe a great debt of gratitude to those who have served us in one capacity or another on the staff of the House of Commons and in these parliament buildings. I want to say that Mr. Speaker will have the sympathetic support of those who sit in this part of the house, as I am sure he will receive the support of those in other parts, in giving these people a square deal. I need not say more to indicate that we are unanimous on this matter, as far as the membership of the House of Commons is concerned.

Mr. McIVOR: I just want to say that we on this side of the house are just as much interested as anyone else in seeing that the staff of the House of Commons, particularly the stenographers, get a square deal. I take this opportunity of thanking the Speaker and those responsible for those employees getting paid during the holiday, and I hope he will give favourable consideration to the granting of pensions to those who have given long service.

Item agreed to.

Progress reported.

Mr. SPEAKER: Mr. Chairman, before you proceed with another department, I should like to read a message I have received from government house.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following message:

Ottawa, March 24, 1948

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Right Honourable Thibaudeau Rinfret, Chief Justice of Canada, acting as deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, 24th March, at 8.30 p.m., for the purpose of giving the royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
J. F. Delaute,
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General.

SUPPLY

The house again in committee of supply.

DEPARTMENT OF MINES AND RESOURCES

Mines and geology branch—

597. Yukon coal development, $100,000.

Mr. MacNICOL: Before the hon. member for Yukon left for his holiday, I was pleased to hear him laud the fine support he had been given by the Minister of Reconstruction and those associated with him in inducing the government to support the development of coal in the Yukon. The hon. member said it was good coal and that it would be of great help to the Yukon, to Whitehorse, Dawson and the other communities, so I should like the minister to tell us whether the development has already commenced, and if so what tonnage has been developed? I want to express my own appreciation of his support in promoting the development of coal in the Yukon.

Hon. J. A. MacKINNON (Acting Minister of Mines and Resources): As acting minister, on behalf of my colleague who unfortunately is ill, I might say that, due to the depletion of readily accessible supplies of wood fuel, an urgent demand has arisen in the Yukon Territory for coal for domestic fuel, mining operations, shipping, et cetera. In 1947 certain mining interests in possession of a coal mine at Tantalus Butte undertook to re-equip the mine, bring it into production, and operate it to meet the needs of the Yukon, if the government would lend funds not exceeding $300,000 to assist in developing and operating the colliery, the loan to be on a repayment basis of $2 per ton of coal sold or used, and to carry interest at 3½ per cent per annum. Authority was granted to the Department of Mines and Resources to enter into an appropriate agreement. Funds were made available by the Department of Reconstruction and Supply, subject to reimbursement by a supplementary estimate. The mine is being re-equipped and developed and some production has already been secured. It is anticipated that $100,000 will be expended in the current fiscal year.

Mr. MacNICOL: That ought to help the development of the whole Yukon because, as the minister said, the amount of timber now available is almost negligible and the cost of what is there is excessive. It runs in my mind that when I was in Dawson they were paying as much as $30 a cord for wood for which I would not pay a dollar. So, if this mine can be brought into development it will mean a great deal, and I am glad to hear the minister say that some coal is being turned out.

Item agreed to.

Lands, parks and forests branch—

599. Administration of the Migratory Birds Convention Act—further amount required, $900.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Could the acting minister tell us whether any representations have been received recently from game and fish associations across Canada, asking for the revision of the Migratory Birds Convention Act?

Mr. MacKINNON: I am afraid I cannot give the hon. member that information at the moment. I was notified only today that I would be acting minister of the department, but I will get the information and give it to the hon. member.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: That is quite satisfactory.

Item agreed to.

Lands, parks and forests branch—

600. Forest and wildlife conservation—further amount required, $29,938.

Mr. COCKERAM: I suppose the same situation applies in connection with this item? Can the minister say why this expenditure is required?

Mr. MacKINNON: This additional amount is required to cover costs resulting from forest fires during June, August and September in Highlands national park, Cape Breton.

Item agreed to.

Indian Affairs branch—

604. Welfare of Indians—further amount required, $100,000.

Mrs. STRUM: I should like to know what this represents.

Mr. MacKINNON: This is the estimated amount required to provide the minimum assistance to Indians to prevent suffering. Because of price increases, the cost of food supplies which were contracted for last year is much greater than was estimated. Indians in northern Canada are having a poor fur catch for the second year in succession. Rabbits, a source of food, are scarce. Because of these circumstances and the increased cost of living, the department has had to give financial help.

Mrs. STRUM: Then this applies to the ration position, does it?

Mr. MacKINNON: Yes.

Mrs. STRUM: Then is the minister contemplating the payment of old age pensions this year?

Mr. MacKINNON: I could not say. I will have to inform the hon. member later.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

636. Exhibitions, including authority to refund from revenue deposits received for contracts for space at the Canadian international trade fair, further amount required, $90,000.

Mr. COCKERAM: Will the minister tell us about this item?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): An appropriation of $550,000 has been made in the main estimates for a trade fair in Toronto. Every nation of the world will be represented by its products—

Mr. GRAYDON: Every one?

Mr. HOWE: You would be surprised at some of the countries which will be there in full force. The amount of $550,000 was provided for the next fiscal year, but it was found that a portion of the money will be required this year to make alterations in the buildings. Therefore the sum of $90,000 is being moved ahead from the appropriation of next year into this year's vote. That is why it is here.

Mr. TIMMINS: We do not expect to make revenue from the fair, do we?

Mr. HOWE: No, but we expect we shall break even.

Item agreed to.

Canadian government travel bureau—

637. To assist in promoting the tourist business in Canada—further amount required, $175,000.

Mr. MacNICOL: Each of the nine provinces is spending large sums of money, and properly so, in the promotion of the tourist business, one of our best businesses. I have been wondering whether what is done in the provinces overlaps that done by the dominion. Is there any duplication?

Mr. HOWE: The purpose of the dominion travel bureau was to co-ordinate and supplement the work of the provinces. In my opinion that is what is being done. This amount of $175,000 was for a special drive put on for winter business this winter, in advertising skiing resorts and winter holiday opportunities in Canada. I believe the effort was reasonably effective. The resorts had a good winter.

Mr. MacNICOL: What is the total amount of money spent by the federal government and the nine provinces?

Mr. HOWE: It would run into probably $4,000,000 or $5,000,000; and in my opinion that is not too much. I think we should spend more rather than less money in advertising the travel possibilities of Canada.

Mr. FRASER: Does the minister not think the government should have some plans for the trans-Canada highway, in order to attract tourists here, because at the present time we have not proper roads through Canada. They have to travel too much in the United States.

Mr. HOWE: All things in their time. At the present time manpower in Canada is being used to the full in other ways. As soon as we have surplus manpower we shall certainly undertake that.

Mr. FRASER: I am suggesting that the government should now have a plan, with the different provinces, in deciding where the highway will go. Then, when we have plenty of manpower and materials, let the road be built. But that plan should be drawn up now.

Mr. HOWE: I think there is a lot in what you say.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I suggest to the minister that when we come to the estimates after the Easter recess we should have an answer to the question asked by the hon. member for Davenport, as to what is being done by other agencies spending money in Canada.

Mr. HOWE: I shall be glad to have that information when the main estimates are under consideration, and when the officers of the branch will be with me.

Mr. CARDIFF: I understand that practically all this money is spent on advertising.

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. MacNICOL: I will not detain the house much longer, but we know the minister had much to do with the construction of the Shipshaw project, which is in this country the greatest power plant we have. I have been wondering if by some method the tourist bureau could advertise that project, and bring the facts associated with it to the attention of the people of the United States. Recently, when I was at Boulder dam I was told by an engineer there that Boulder dam is gradually becoming the greatest tourist attraction in the United States. I looked at it and said to myself, "Yes, it is a great tourist attraction; but Shipshaw is a great attraction, too." By what means or method can we bring Shipshaw to the attention of the tourist public? It would mean much to that part of Canada.

Mr. HOWE: I believe I can say that all the transportation facilities into the Saguenay are booked up fully for the next summer season. I believe it is a mere matter of transportation, to make the Saguenay more readily accessible to tourists.

Mr. GRAYDON: Has the Canadian travel bureau moved from its former quarters to more commodious ones, or is it still in the same place?

Mr. HOWE: It is still in the old supreme court building. I believe those quarters are reasonably satisfactory.

Mr. FRASER: Some weeks ago I asked a question regarding customs regulations. I said I believed that many citizens of the United States felt they would not be able to come to Canada during the coming season because of customs regulations. They have the feeling that those regulations have been changed. I suggest that the publicity bureau should do everything possible to tell United States tourists that the regulations concerning their entry into Canada are exactly the same as they always have been.

Mr. HOWE: We are doing everything we can in that direction, even to the extent of getting out a film on the subject.

Mr. FRASER: I sincerely hope it is not got out by the national film board, and that some commercial company does it. Otherwise it would not be done properly.

Item agreed to.

Special—

638. Canadian Commercial Corporation—To reimburse the Canadian Commercial Corporation for expenses incurred in purchasing materials, supplies and equipment, etc., on behalf of the Department of National Defence under chapter 51, statutes of 1947, and approval of the amount of $80,000 paid from national defence appropriation for this purpose in the year 1946-47, $548,000.

Mr. BOUCHER: Is this total expense incurred by the Canadian Commercial Corporation in purchasing for the Department of National Defence? What are the total estimated expenditures on such purchases, so that we may know to what extent they have been acting this year in purchasing for the Department of National Defence?

Mr. HOWE: The amount of $548,000 shown here is the total expense of operating the Canadian Commercial Corporation for the last twelve months. The reason it appears as a special supplementary is that it had been the intention of the government that each department would pay the corporation for the services performed for that department, as in the case with private firms. The Canadian Commercial Corporation purchases for foreign governments. In that case a fee is charged the government for the work performed by the corporation.

But the policy was reversed, and it was decided that, so far as the Department of National Defence is concerned, instead of charging that department a fee for making purchases for it, the cost of purchasing for that department would be borne by the Department of Trade and Commerce under an estimate as indicated here.

Mr. BOUCHER: Under what authority was the expense incurred?

Mr. HOWE: The Canadian Commercial Corporation was organized to purchase for the government. It was authorized by order in council to purchase for the armed services. It took over that responsibility from the Department of Reconstruction and Supply.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): As an agent?

Mr. BOUCHER: I understand that it was done as an agent for the Department of National Defence.

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. BOUCHER: I do not see how it has the authority to incur this expense and to ask the House of Commons to vote this amount. I feel it should have authority other than that of an agent if it is to do that.

Mr. HOWE: The Department of Trade and Commerce can have an agent that works free, if it wishes, so far as I know. That is the situation here. It is just a matter of government policy. It is felt that, as the management of the Canadian Commercial Corporation is a responsibility of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Minister of Trade and Commerce should pay its bills rather than have it charge a fee to other departments of government for which it performs services. The policy may be right or wrong, but that is the policy.

Mr. BOUCHER: There is one difficulty that I see in the whole idea of the Canadian Commercial Corporation. If things are to be done in this way it will be impossible for the members of this house or the country at large to know just what the Canadian Commercial Corporation is costing the Canadian people, to know just how expenditures are allocated. In other words, it will be almost impossible for a member of this house to get any definite information as to the activities, expenditures and operating expenses of the Canadian Commercial Corporation. Certainly, if we charge each department a fee for what the Canadian Commercial Corporation does, certainly if they get certain moneys from the Department of National Defence; if they get moneys from foreign governments, it will be impossible for the members of this house and the country at large to know anything about the financial success, failure or efficiency of this corporation.

Mr. HOWE: I just pointed out that the Canadian Commercial Corporation does not collect fees from other departments of the government for services performed for those departments. The Canadian Commercial Corporation is a crown company and an audited statement will be presented to parliament in the usual form. All the information that my hon. friend desires can be obtained from the report of the corporation.

Mr. TIMMINS: Is this collection of public funds in addition to those appropriated with respect to national defence?

Mr. HOWE: Yes. These costs were formerly charged to the Department of National Defence; they are now being paid direct by the Department of Trade and Commerce and the expenditures of the Department of National Defence will be reduced accordingly.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): If I understood the minister correctly, what has really happened is that, instead of the Canadian Commercial Corporation acting as agents, as the minister said was originally contemplated, in fact it is now acting as principal; is that correct?

Mr. HOWE: No, it is not correct at all. It acts as agent of the Department of National Defence; it buys what the Department of National Defence instructs it to buy. In other words, it is an agent but instead of adding a fee to each purchase, as is the case when it purchases for a foreign government, it performs that service at no cost to the department.

Mr. BOUCHER: Can the minister give us any reason why the Department of Trade and Commerce should be charged for work actually done for the Department of National Defence? Why should the charge not be made against the department for which the work is done? It seems to me that it would be just good accounting to charge disbursements or expenses to the department for which the service is rendered.

Mr. HOWE: I may say that the view expressed by my hon. friend was my own view; but, after looking into the matter, the treasury board instructed that, since the Minister of Trade and Commerce was responsible for the management of the Canadian Commercial Corporation, it preferred that all expenses of the corporation relating to departments of government should be paid for by the Department of Trade and Commerce. If you ask me why, I cannot tell you; I am simply saying that those are the instructions which were received.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I should like to make a suggestion which I will not express at the moment. If I understood correctly what the minister said, the original basis has been altered. Whether that is within the terms of the original legislation, I do not know. I suggest that when the item covering the Canadian Commercial Corporation comes up this question might be brought up again and in the interim the minister might look into the matter.

Item agreed to.

639. Canadian wheat board—To reimburse the Canadian wheat board for expenses incurred from August 1, 1944 to July 31, 1947, in regulating deliveries of grain, allocation of railway cars and administration of regulations relating to maximum prices of grain, $733,249.81.

Mr. CARDIFF: Can the minister tell us exactly what these expenditures are for?

Mr. HOWE: This represents certain expenses incurred by the Canadian wheat board in performing services not related to the selling of wheat but to the rationing of elevator space, to the administration of the grain regulations, to the allocation of railway cars and other services performed on the instructions of the dominion government and for which the dominion government pays the wheat board direct.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Now that the wheat board act amendment has been passed by both houses, I should like to ask the minister if he is prepared to inform the house and the country within the next few days what the participation payments will be?

Mr. HOWE: Not having a quorum of my colleagues here, I am afraid that I could not get them to confirm anything I might say. I shall endeavour to put out a press statement not later than tomorrow afternoon.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE

Customs and excise divisions—

609. General administration—further amount required, $10,000.

Mr. FRASER: I should like to ask the minister what has been done in connection with the Hamilton office and what was the cause of the whole thing.

Hon. J. J. McCANN (Minister of National Revenue): There was fraudulent action on the part of some employees who were dismissed.

Mr. FRASER: Were there other irregularities in that office? Were there other things in the office?

Mr. McCANN: I do not know what the hon. member is referring to when he says "other things."

Mr. FRASER: Were there not other causes besides fraudulent reports?

Mr. McCANN: There were irregularities and fraudulent practices on behalf of seven employees who have been dismissed.

Item agreed to.

611. Ports, outports and preventive stations, including pay for overtime of officers notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, and temporary buildings and rentals — further amount required, $198,000.

Mr. BOUCHER: Could the minister explain this rather large item?

Mr. McCANN: The $3,000 in other paylist items is to meet the government's contributions to unemployment insurance. The $2,000 in the living allowance item is to provide living allowances to additional examiners at Whitehorse, Yukon Territory, and a new man at Tulsequah, British Columbia. The amount of $25,000 for uniforms is due to the necessity of providing uniform clothing for additional staff at border offices and to meet the increased cost of material and manufacturers' costs.

[Mr. Howe.]

The additional $15,000 in the printing and stationery item is due to insufficient funds being provided in the main estimates to cover increased printing requirements made necessary by additional forms required to implement the exchange conservation program. The amount of $25,000 in travelling expenses is to meet the expenses for increased travelling and the increased cost of meals and hotel accommodation. The amount of $8,000 in telegrams and telephones is to cover the cost of additional installations in Montreal and Toronto and to provide funds to meet increased service rates by several telephone companies.

The amount of $35,000 for cartage is to cover the rising costs in contracting for the transportation of imported goods to the examining warehouse for appraisal and the increase in the number of packages requiring examination. The additional amount of $5,000 required for postage is due to the increased volume of mail being dispatched, on which postage is required and the more general use of air mail services. The $5,000 advance in express and freight is due to increased shipments in office supplies to ports, outports and preventive stations. The amount of $1,200, is to provide funds for a 25 per cent advance in rentals allowed by government with respect to commercial properties; $4,500 to provide for higher costs of material and labour in regard to repairs and upkeep of buildings; $43,300 to meet the purchase cost of necessary properties together with the increased costs of material and labour in connection with the construction of buildings, improvements, et cetera; $1,000 is required to meet cost of equipment renewed or replaced and $25,000 for the purchase of five prefabricated units for the temporary housing of customs officers at the new international terminal at Blackpool, Quebec, on the new boulevard highway between Montreal and New York city.

Mr. COCKERAM: The minister said that the uniforms will cost $25,000 in addition to the $75,000 already spent. How many extra men are being taken on at the border?

Mr. McCANN: All told, because of the new regulations, we have taken on approximately 240 men and women.

Mr. FRASER: What provision has been made to look after Peterborough this year? Last year the taxation division put in a little office for a short time. What is to be done this year? Has the minister any information on that?

Mr. McCANN: No. Is my hon. friend speaking on item 612?

Mr. FRASER: Yes, the taxation division. I know of some people who went into the temporary taxation office in Peterborough last year and had income tax papers checked, and then about two months ago they received word that they owed extra money. I do not know if that was the fault of the staff, the regulations, or what it was. I think Peterborough should have a permanent taxation office, with the proper facilities for checking papers. The office they did have was very poor and was understaffed. It was occupied for only a short time and, being understaffed, the officials there were rushed off their feet. There should be provision made for a year-round office in Peterborough. It is seventy-five miles to the nearest office at Belleville.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

640. Departmental administration — further amount required to provide for an additional deputy minister for the Department of Transport to be appointed by the governor in council and to be called the deputy minister of transport for air services, to hold office during pleasure, and to have and exercise such powers, duties and functions with respect to the air services branch of the said department as may be specified by the Minister of Transport—amount required for 1947-48, $2,000.

Mr. MOORE: A serious educational problem confronts the village of Churchill in northern Manitoba. It has been brought about because of a property situation in Churchill which is peculiar in our Canadian economy. Ninety-nine per cent of the $3,300,000 of property in Churchill is administered by some department of the federal government. The total amount of property taxable for school purposes is only $38,000, and the revenue obtainable from that small amount of taxable property is not sufficient to operate a school at Churchill. It is true there is a public school there now which looks after the needs of thirty-five students, but in addition there are forty students who cannot get into the school and for whom no educational facilities are provided. The situation has been brought to the attention of the department of education of the Manitoba government, which takes the stand that, since there is no taxable property there, they cannot increase the provincial grant to the school at that point. I have talked with the deputy minister of education of Manitoba and he takes the stand that I am giving to the committee. The people in Churchill are anxious that something be done at the earliest possible moment to provide a suitable school to take care of the educational needs of the pupils at that point, and I submit that they have a very good case for assistance from the federal government. The deputy minister of educa- That is another reason, I submit, why there province the Department of Justice makes an annual grant of $2,550 to the federal district of Stony Mountain for school purposes. I submit therefore that the federal government should recognize the request of the community of Churchill, because most of the property there is federally owned.

The other day a return was brought down, showing the grants made by the federal government for educational purposes, for vocational training, and the grants to the various provinces totalled $225,000 a year. That is another reason, I submit, why there should be federal aid for the public school at Churchill. The community of Churchill is not by any means destitute. The people there are hard working and they are willing and anxious to pay their fair share of educational costs, but because of the peculiar property situation that exists in that community, it is very difficult for them to have a school constructed at that point out of funds raised from local taxation.

There is another point I want to bring out. Five miles out of Churchill there is an army barracks, where quite a number of members of the armed forces live with their wives and families. The federal government immediately recognized the needs of the army and built a school at the barracks to take care of the children. I am not quarreling with that at all. I think the school was necessary, and it was a good thing that the government went ahead and built one, but I say that the people of Churchill are entitled to the same consideration and steps should immediately be taken by some department of the federal government to set aside funds for the construction of a school at Churchill before another term passes. The time for education for young people is limited indeed, and it would be a disgrace if the children living in that area were to lose one more term of school because of inaction either by the federal or the provincial government.

Item agreed to.

Maritime Freight Rates Act—

649. Additional amount in excess of the sum of $3,042,000 already appropriated, to authorize and provide for the payment from time to time during the fiscal year 1947-48 to the Canadian National Railway Company of the difference (estimated by the Canadian National Railway Company and certified by the auditors of the said company to the Minister of Transport, as and when required by the said minister) occurring on account of the application of the Maritime Freight Rates Act, between the tariff tolls and the normal tolls (upon the same basis as set out in section 9 of the said act with respect to companies therein referred to) on all traffic moved during the calendar year 1947 under the tariffs approved on the eastern lines (as referred to in section 2 of the said act) of the Canadian National Railways—further amount required, $1,099,529.39.

Mr. HAZEN: Is the minister in a position to tell us when the transport commission will deliver judgment in the application of the railways for an increase in rates?

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport): I am afraid I could not answer that question. It is a matter for the chairman of the board of transport commissioners. The board is a court, and when it is ready to hand down judgment I presume it will issue a press release giving details. I am not in a position to say when that will be, whether it will be soon or in the distant future.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Cannot you use any moral suasion?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Would the hon. gentleman like to see the judgment handed down?

Item agreed to.

GOVERNMENT OWNED ENTERPRISES

Deficits—Transport—

660. Additional amount in excess of the sum of $707,000 already appropriated, to provide for the payment during the fiscal year 1947-48 to the Canadian National Railway Company (hereinafter called the national company) upon application approved by the Minister of Transport, made from time to time by the national company to the Minister of Finance, and to be applied by the national company in payment of the deficit (certified by the auditors of the national company) in the operation of the Prince Edward Island car ferry and terminals arising in the calendar year 1947—further amount required, $224,855.96.

Mr. McLURE: I take objection to the language of this vote. It says, "government owned enterprises". Then it refers to "deficits, transport". These deficits are charged up to the Prince Edward Island ferry service. I brought this matter up in the committee on railways, and they said they would see that the matter was given its proper name. Instead of a deficit it should be a service, because the government owes this service to the province. It should not appear in the public accounts as a deficit. May I give as an example the deficits on the canals in Quebec and Ontario. They run to over $4,000,000. That amount does not appear in the public accounts as a deficit; it appears as a government service to these provinces. Under the terms under which we entered confederation in 1873 this service was guaranteed to us. It now appears as a deficit against our province. It is not a deficit.

Another thing about this vote is that it runs to the year ending March, 1948, and amounts in all to $931,855.96 but no breakdown is given. We have never any details of one cent of the amount that appears in the vote. There must be some bookkeeping service on this, and this committee should know the items that caused this deficit, as they call it, or as a service, as it should be called. When the main estimates come down I hope that we shall have a breakdown of this $931,000, so that we may know what it is, and then we shall be able to find out what the earnings are, and if the government still insist on calling it a deficit we shall know how that deficit comes about. It should not be called a deficit, because it is a government service.

Mr. CHEVRIER: May I say to the hon. gentleman the reason there are no details is that this matter is submitted to the committee on railways and shipping where a full opportunity is given of discussing the details.

With respect to the first part of his statement concerning the objection to the manner in which it is described, may I say this is an accounting matter with the Canadian National Railways, and they have decided to set it up in this way. I drew the hon. member's representations of last year to their attention and they were considered, but the accountants of the railway have come to the conclusion that this is the proper way in which to do it.

Mr. McLURE: With regard to the amount of this account, surely the Minister of Transport is not going to pay this bill unless he has an account of it.

Mr. CHEVRIER: That is right.

Mr. McLURE: Where does the deficit come from?

Mr. CHEVRIER: We do not pay this bill until it is certified by the accountants of the Canadian National Railways. They have certified that this is a further amount required for the fiscal year 1947-48.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

Air service—radio division—

652. Issue of radio receiving licences—(transport department only)—further amount required, $344,000.

Mr. JACKMAN: I presume the fees which are collected and taken in constitute the gross amount, and any costs of collecting are deducted from the amount.

Mr. HOWE: Yes, that is right. The change arose out of the change in the act last year. My hon. friend will perhaps recall that the radio committee recommended to the house, and the house approved, a new method by which, instead of the cost of collecting fees being charged back to the revenue of the corporation, the house decided that the corporation should have the gross amount collected, and that the cost of collection would be paid from the consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. JACKMAN: The amount was not set up in the original estimates?

Mr. HOWE: It was too late; it was after the estimates were passed.

Mr. JACKMAN: This is the whole amount?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Item agreed to.

GOVERNMENT OWNED ENTERPRISES

Deficits—Transport—

661. Amount required to provide for the payment during the fiscal year 1947-48 to the Canadian National Railway Company (hereinafter called the national company) upon applications approved by the Minister of Transport, made from time to time by the national company, to the Minister of Finance and to be applied by the national company in payment of the deficit (certified by the auditors of the national company) arising in the calendar year 1947, but not including amounts charged to proprietor's equity of the national railway system as defined in chapter twenty-two of the statutes of Canada, 1937:

Canadian National Railways, exclusive of eastern lines, $5,280,432.77; eastern lines, $10,604,761.51, $15,885,194.28.

Mr. COLDWELL: Before this item is carried, may I just pass a few remarks on this deficit of the Canadian National Railways. Those of us who were here in the depression years know perfectly well that from year to year we were faced with very large deficits. It has always seemed to me to be unfair to saddle the railway with at least a great deal of this deficit. Those of us who know the history of the Canadian National Railways realize that the railways which now comprise the Canadian National were taken over at a value which was not warranted at the time and that they are now loaded down with a capitalization upon which they cannot possibly meet all the obligations that they have to meet in various ways. I suggest again to the committee, as I did in the years before the war, and as other hon. members have suggested, that we should reconsider the capitalization of the Canadian National Railways and remove from that railway a great deal of the deadweight which it carries and which should never have been carried by the railway. If I may put it in this way, it was an error on the part of parliament and the government of Canada, and until we have removed that tremendous burden from the railway it will never be able to make a comparable showing. May I say that it has a depressing effect on the whole of the staff of the railway? They seem to say, Well, we have such an impossible burden; what can we do? If we want efficiency from the employees of the railway we have to give them a chance to be able to show the people of Canada that they are rendering good service and that the railway is not placing an impossible burden on the people of the country. I plead with the government once again to reconsider this whole matter, and when the time comes, to come forward with a recommendation to relieve the railway of a tremendous burden which it should not be called upon to carry.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am glad my hon. friend brought that point out, because it is one which is receiving careful consideration. Hon. members will remember that when the Minister of Trade and Commerce was Minister of Transport he did bring in a measure having to do with the recapitalization of the Canadian National Railways. Various forms of recapitalization have been suggested, but the government have not yet reached any decision. I can assure my hon. friend that the matter has been given some attention. There is no unanimity in the house on that point. It is a very debatable point. I see the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario looking at me very carefully. I am sure he has very strong views on this, too.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I will express my own views.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I have heard them expressed to me on previous occasions in the house. All I can say is that the matter is receiving consideration.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Since the minister has referred to it, I think I had better express my own view. I agree with the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar that for an operating staff constantly to carry a deficit is a very depressing thing, but I would ask the minister whether there has not been a great deal of relief given by way of writing off certain indebtedness to the Canadian National Railways. I would also make this point. My feeling at the moment is that at a time of high operating volume the real reason the railway has a deficit is that there has been a huge rise in its costs without a corresponding rise in its rates. That is the $64 question, I know.

Mr. CHEVRIER: My hon. friend is right. There is no doubt that the reason for the increase is higher wages, increased cost of materials and so forth, even though there was an increased volume of traffic.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I am merely pointing out that what is happening today is distinctly different from the thirties to which the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar referred. At that time the deficit was due to a lamentable falling off in business.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Is my hon. friend in favour of recapitalization?

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): The minister will remember that I asked what had been done. My impression is that a lot has been done. I would not wish to express an opinion on recapitalization until I knew more about the rise in costs and something of the important decision which we are to have on freight rates.

Mr. JACKMAN: The item is large and has too much significance in the economy of this country to be passed over so lightly.

I remember at the time of the 1940 election one of the main questions in my riding was the C.N.R. deficit, which has now fallen into insignificance, but nevertheless is important in principle. Would the minister be good enough to tell the committee what the $15,000,000 appropriation covers by way of deficit? I understood that the railway has always earned its operating charges even during the worst years of the depression. The wording of item 661 is, "to be applied by the national company in payment of the deficit (certified by the auditors of the national company) arising in the calendar year, 1947, but not including amounts charged to proprietor's equity of the national railway system as defined in chapter twenty-two of the statutes of Canada, 1937." I assume that the railway has earned all operating charges and has earned—or has it?—interest on bonds held by the public, but has not earned interest on the bonds held by the government.

Mr. CHEVRIER: It is government loans.

Mr. JACKMAN: I do not recollect the exact form of their accounts at the moment. What does the $15,000,000 really go for?

Mr. CHEVRIER: This matter is always discussed at length in the committee on railways and shipping, but the $15,000,000 arises when operating revenues are placed against operating expenses, and then, when the miscellaneous items are taken off there is net income available for payment of interest to the extent of upwards of $27,000,000. Interest on funded debt and government loans more than equals the net income available for the payment of interest. The interest on funded debt is $23,000,000 and interest on government loans $20,000,000, which accounts for the $15,000,000 deficit.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I notice that the deficit is divided into two parts, one dealing with eastern lines, $10,000,000, and the other dealing with other than eastern lines. Can the minister designate what comprises the eastern lines and what are the other lines?

Mr. CHEVRIER: The eastern lines are those extending from a point at Diamond Junction in the province of Quebec, including all the eastern part of Quebec, and the provinces of Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Is there any substantial difference in the rates charged between the eastern lines and the other lines?

Mr. CHEVRIER: The Maritime Freight Rates Act provides for a 20 per cent reduction in the eastern line territory.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: It seems strange that the deficit in the eastern lines is twice as much as that on the other lines. Would one of the reasons be that the lower freight rate brings less revenue?

Mr. CHEVRIER: That is not the only reason. There are many other reasons. The volume of freight is higher in the other section than in the eastern end.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: But that could be a contributory reason?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Yes.

Mr. JACKMAN: I think it should be said that there was a substantial write-off of C.N.R. capitalization some years ago, in the neighbourhood of $800 million, which offset any surplus and unnecessary capitalization the C.N.R. might have. One thing that the war has proved is that Canada needs a second railway. It is absolutely essential. The Minister of Reconstruction and Supply would agree, I think, that the country needs this railway; it has a useful function to perform, and will be needed not only in wartime but in ordinary times. It is a good, well-managed, serviceable railway, by no means a white elephant, and should be able to earn charges under any proper system of rate making. What is the status of the application for higher freight rates at the present time? Does the minister not think that the method of being granted higher freight rates is rather antiquated if it takes so long? It is over a year since this city was inundated by high-priced lawyers for provinces, railways, the government and others. We should have that streamlined a bit. It should be pointed out also, in answer to the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, as my colleague has said, that there has been no increase in rates since the 1930's.

Mr. COLDWELL: Are you in favour of an increase in rates?

Mr. JACKMAN: I do not know of anything else in the economy that has not gone up in view of the fact that wages and supplies have increased substantially. I am not in favour of an increase in rates if the railways can maintain adequate service for the people, but I should think the managers of the railways would have to be nothing less than wizards to maintain adequate service with 1948 wages and material costs and 1930 freight rates.

An hon. MEMBER: What about calling in six per cent bonds for a change?

Mr. QUELCH: What percentage of the capital stock is held in Canada?

Mr. CHEVRIER: The capital stock of the Canadian National is all held in Canada.

Mr. QUELCH: None held in Britain?

Mr. CHEVRIER: None.

Mr. COLDWELL: I do not want to enter into a discussion of freight rates, but what we have to bear in mind is that this country is largely bound together by bands of steel. Our railways are a vital part of confederation and, under ordinary business freight rate conditions, freight rates from many parts of Canada to the coast are prohibitive. It is part of the obligation of maintaining a united Canada to subsidize, if you will, the carrying of freight over long distances in this country. When you think of the distance between Ontario and western Canada, and across the mountains to the coast, and again from Quebec right through to Prince Edward Island, literally thousands of miles of non-revenue producing railway, you realize that a freight rate structure comparable with that of the United States with which we compete is an impossibility in this country. And if we boosted freight rates to do all that the hon. member for Rosedale would ask us to do, I think it would kill the competitive spirit of Canadians in the remote parts of Canada in the marketing of their produce across the seas.

Item agreed to.

Deficits—Transport—

662. To hereby authorize and provide for payment during the fiscal year 1947-48 to Trans-Canada Air Lines to be applied by Trans-Canada Air Lines in payment of the deficit (certified by the auditor of Trans-Canada Air Lines to the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply as and when required by the said minister) resulting from the operations of Trans-Canada Air Lines during the calendar year 1947, less the surplus accruing from the operations of the Trans-Canada Air Lines (Atlantic) Limited, during 1947, and less the accumulated surplus of the Trans-Canada Air Lines as at December 31, 1946:

Trans-Canada Air Lines deficit, calendar year 1947, $1,761,042.84.

Less: Surplus Trans-Canada Air Lines (Atlantic) Limited, year 1947, $136,303.31.

Less: Accumulated surplus Trans-Canada Air Lines as at December 31, 1946, $255,061,23. $1,369,678.30.

Mr. PROBE: This item is to provide for additional sums for Trans-Canada Air Lines and it is under the Department of Transport. I thought the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply was in charge of Trans-Canada Air Lines. Has that been changed? Is it no longer a condition that the Department of Transport is in sole charge of Trans-Canada Air Lines?

Mr. CHEVRIER: The position has not changed. This item is still a division of the Department of Transport which has, by virtue of the Transfer of Duties Act, been under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Reconstruction.

Mr. PROBE: I notice there is indicated here, in the accumulated deficit we are asked to provide for under 662, a deficit on account of Trans-Canada Air Lines itself of $1,761,000 odd for the calendar year 1947, and at the same time, while the Canadian end of Trans-Canada Air Lines has a large deficit, Trans-Canada Air Lines (Atlantic), which I presume is our overseas service of T.C.A., has a reasonable surplus of $136,000. The net deficit, based upon the operations of the Canadian portion of T.C.A. combined with the oceanic or overseas portion, amounts to something like $1,624,000 for 1947. At the end of the previous year there was an accumulated surplus, apparently on domestic operations. of some $255,000, which is being applied to the deficit of $1,624,000, leaving the house to provide some $1,369,000. Would the Minister of Transport explain why, as between 1946 and 1947, we suddenly go from an operational surplus of about a quarter of a million dollars to a deficit, on the domestic operations of this line, of roughly a million and three-quarters? Has traffic fallen off, or what are the changed conditions that brought about this deficit in the domestic operations of Trans-Canada Air Lines?

Mr. HOWE: My hon. friend is quite mistaken when he says we suddenly plunged from a surplus last year to a loss this year. We had a substantial loss last year. This is a very big subject, and I do not know that we ought to examine the accounts of Trans-Canada Air Lines just now, when we shall be doing it all over again in committee within the next two or three weeks.

Mr. PROBE: I am quite agreeable to a short statement from the minister.

Mr. HOWE: The history of Trans-Canada Air Lines shows surpluses as follows:

1940	$539,000
1941	302,000
1942	494,000
1943	147,000
1944	7,000
1945	32,000

In 1946 there was a loss of $1,629,000, which was met out of the accumulated surplus of previous years, leaving a surplus of $255,000 at the end of 1946. This year there was a loss of about $1,700,000 on the domestic air lines and a small profit on the transatlantic operations; and the net loss was sufficient to take up the balance of the earned surplus of previous years and require a deficit vote, the first this parliament has ever been called upon to provide. The reason is the increased costs associated with the change-over of equipment, together with the unusual amount of pilot training. These have created costs which the line has not been able to meet from earnings.

I might add that, coupled with those circumstances, was a very bad spring in 1947. If my hon. friend is familiar with air line operations he will know that every air line in the world had a heavy deficit for the first half of 1947. A series of crashes, bad weather and other circumstances brought about that situation. It is hoped that the tailspin is pretty well over, and this year we hope to come out with a decent operating statement. A number of circumstances added together have brought about the deficits of the last two years. I hope my hon. friend is not going to pursue the matter, because we could carry this on until midnight and still I would not have told him the whole story.

Mr. PROBE: No. I wish T.C.A. exceedingly well, but of course I am puzzled to find a domestic deficit while there is a surplus on our overseas operations. Surely the change-over of equipment took place in both connections; at least there was the acquisition of these North Star planes for the overseas service, which I presume would amount to the same thing. Pursuing that just a bit further, however, I should like to know if there is a difference in the rates per passenger mile as between T.C.A. domestic and overseas operations. Is there a different rate of mail subsidy? Is there a different rate charged for express service as between domestic and overseas operations, which in the one case might make it appear that there is an unfavourable operating ratio and in the other perhaps create a surplus? Would the Minister of Trade and Commerce comment briefly on that point? I do not want a long explanation.

Mr. HOWE: Yes, there is a decided difference. The rate on domestic lines is about six cents a mile, while the rate overseas is about twelve cents a mile, or perhaps more. One reason for that is the very large tonnage of gasoline that has to be carried in order to take the plane over three thousand miles; but that is common to all air lines. The rates charged by Trans-Canada Air Lines are comparable with those on land lines to the south, and the rates charged across the Atlantic are comparable with those of competing services.

Mr. PROBE: When the minister says six cents and twelve cents, what is he talking about? Are those passenger rates, mail rates or express rates?

Mr. HOWE: Passenger fares.

Mr. PROBE: What about the mail rates?

Mr. HOWE: They are in about the same proportion.

Mr. FRASER: Is the cost of planes included in this deficit?

Mr. HOWE: The cost of purchasing planes is a capital expenditure. The cost of amortizing the planes is an operating cost.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I have one personal complaint to make. Last summer the minister undertook that he would put the seats in these planes further apart, and he has not done so.

Mr. HOWE: If my hon. friend will try our transatlantic planes, which will shortly be in domestic service, he will see the difference.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

National harbours board—

663. To provide for payment to the national harbours board of the amount hereinafter set forth, to be applied in payment of the deficit (exclusive of interest on dominion government advances and depreciation on capital structure) arising in the calendar year 1947 in the operation of the Quebec harbour, $70,481.14.

Mr. McKAY: Would the minister tell us whether or not there are any other harbours showing a deficit and why Quebec harbour, which is under the harbours board is the only one in this list?

Mr. CHEVRIER: The deficit in Quebec harbour was not anticipated when the main estimates were in preparation. I have a lengthy statement here which I can place on Hansard if the gentleman wishes.

Mr. McKAY: That is not necessary.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The deficit is voted separately because, when the main estimates were prepared, it was not anticipated that there would be an over-all deficit in the Quebec harbour, but it has turned out that there is a deficit of $70,481.

Mr. McKAY: It is not included in the other list?

Mr. CHEVRIER: No.

Mr. IRVINE: There are many questions I should like to ask on these transport items. I presume there will be a more opportune time later to do so. Am I right?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Unquestionably there will be an opportunity on the main estimates.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

653. War veterans allowance board—administration—further amount required, $5,500.

Mr. LENNARD: What is this additional amount for?

Hon. MILTON F. GREGG (Minister of Veterans Affairs): This item covers an underestimate in connection with the expense of investigating cases in the field.

Item agreed to.

656. Widows' allowances—world war I—further amount required, $100,000.

Mr. LENNARD: Are these items to provide moneys for the additional rates of pension that may be authorized shortly?

Mr. GREGG: If the hon. member will turn to item 669 he will notice that the amount there is for world war II, and that in item 654 the amount is for world war I. That makes $4,000,000, altogether. It was estimated that the bill now before the parliamentary committee would reflect an increase of $12,000,000. This amount is for the six months since October 1; and the other $2,000,000 of the $6,000,000 is from the main estimates of last year.

Mr. GRAYDON: I should like to ask one question with respect to item 655, which has to do with war veterans allowances. Representations are made to me from time to time —and I fancy they are made to other hon. members—seeking an interpretation respecting the earning power of veterans receiving war veterans allowances, so that they will not be tied down quite so closely in respect of the amount of money they can earn outside their allowances.

Veterans of world war I, particularly, have a strong claim on parliament because of their age, and I think there should not be too much by way of restrictions placed upon the amount they are permitted to earn outside their veterans allowances. I am sure the minister must know of a great many cases of that kind. Now that so many years have gone by, I suggest that we should not be too close in our limitations as they affect these older veterans who, in most instances, have had a pretty difficult time. I hope the leniency the government may have by way of discretion will be afforded these men in a way which would meet the wishes of many veterans throughout the country.

Mr. GREGG: If, as and when the bill in resolution stage on the order paper dealing with veterans allowances should come into force, provision is made therein in connection with war veterans allowances in a manner similar to that having to do with pensions. I cannot comment upon that bill until it is before the house, but I can assure hon. members that the point just made has been borne in mind.

Mr. MacINNIS: Many representations are made to me in connection with war veterans allowances. I appreciate that the matter is now or shortly will be before the veterans affairs committee and before the house. We can deal with these matters at that time. I would suggest to the minister, however, that any veteran of world war I who is in receipt or who may be in receipt of war veterans allowance should be paid it without any means test whatsoever. The mere fact that he is eligible for war veterans allowance is in itself sufficient proof that he has very little income. Not only should there not be any means test, but for his own welfare he should be encouraged to add as much as possible to his income. It would be good for him, and it will be good for the country.

Mr. LENNARD: When the war veterans allowance legislation does come before the house I would strongly urge that consideration be given to imperial veterans who have resided in this country continuously for twenty years. Their case has a great deal of merit, and I feel that they should be given every consideration before the committee on veterans affairs. I know they have made some advances by way of presenting a brief to the chairman—perhaps not to the minister. I should hope that at the proper time their case would be given full consideration.

Mr. KNOWLES: May I add one sentence? I hope consideration is also being given to including service in England in world war I as service in a theatre of war.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Before this item passes, may I say that up to the present time I believe altogether too much attention has been given to the monetary aspect of our treatment of our returned soldiers. I believe the time has come when the country, the government and the House of Commons as a whole should look upon veterans as assets of Canada, and look upon their case in terms of giving them a living. Up to the present time the whole attitude appears to have been that of giving them an existence. The more meagre and stingy that existence, the better we were satisfied.

This principle is entirely wrong. It must be borne in mind that each of the boys who returned from overseas is a possible father of a Canadian family. We are doing a great deal to increase the population of this country. I can think of no finer blood to go into the future of Canada than the blood of those who went to fight for this country.

I want to see each and every one of those men placed in a position in which, in comfort, he could have and support a family in Canada. If we have that attitude we shall do away with many of the contemptible and disgraceful rules which restrict and hamper and discourage our boys and their wives at every turn. If the general purport of my remarks is taken and applied throughout the whole range of the treatment of veterans in this country, before long we shall find our veterans happy.

At the beginning of the war we used to say that we wanted to ensure to Canadians that no one who went into any of the services would be any worse off because of his going in, and no one who did not go into the services would be any better off because he did not go.

Many hon. members who were in the house in those days will recall distinctly that such was the purport of the remarks of responsible ministers in the house. We have now gone a long way from the path indicated by that general attitude. I wager that those poor chaps who sat on the floor of the house the other day are far worse off than they would have been if they had not gone. And the worst of it is that, in accordance with the rules being laid down by the government, I see no means whereby those boys can ever have made up to them the losses they sustained because they went into the services.

Item agreed to.

Payments to or for veterans and dependents—

659. To authorize payment under the Veterans Insurance Act to Joan Snow, widow of the late Frank Rennie Snow, of the benefits to which she would have been entitled under that act had his application for insurance thereunder been formally approved, by the superintendent of veterans insurance, before his death, $1.

Mr. LENNARD: Would the minister explain this vote of $1?

Mr. GREGG: This is to correct a technicality in connection with an application in Winnipeg concerning a veteran's applicant for war veterans insurance. The premium had been paid, but the application had not been finally signed as approved. Meantime the man died. I am told by my legal advisers that this is a means of making it possible to deal with that insurance in the ordinary way under the insurance act.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Administration service—

563. Publicity and extension division—further amount required, $825.

Mr. LENNARD: As an hon. member stated this afternoon, some of these necessary bulletins are in short supply and I am wondering if this amount is sufficient. Should not more be voted to permit the reprinting of some of these bulletins?

Mr. ROBERT McCUBBIN (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Agriculture): This is only in connection with the royal winter fair.

Item agreed to.

Production service—

564. Health of animals—compensation for animals slaughtered—further amount required, $200,000.

Mr. GRAYDON: I should like to have the privilege of addressing a question for the first time to the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Agriculture. I shall not be very long because I know that the pressure of business calls for brevity. There exists in the health of animals branch a situation which is reaching a dangerous and critical stage for many breeders of cattle, particularly for those who export the kind of cattle that are permitted to leave this country. I am told that the veterinary service in the health of animals branch is undermanned at the present time to the extent of nearly 100 qualified veterinarians. There is a gradual decrease in the number through superannuation and for other reasons, and very few are being taken on to replace them.

This situation has become particularly critical for the T.B. tested areas, of which the county of Peel is one. In order to give hon. members some idea of the extent of the export business, this one county exported about $1,500,000 worth of cattle in 1947. Our T.B. tested time expires in June of this year. We export to South America and other countries. I do not know when I have had as many representations from agricultural districts as I have had on this particular point. There are countries which normally want to find reasons for not allowing our cattle to come in and they may find in this particular situation a reason for keeping them out. When the time expires in June in that particular area, then, of course, the danger signal is out.

I should like to ask the parliamentary assistant to convey to his minister, to his deputy and to those in charge of this branch the concern which most of us in these areas have and ask him to see if something cannot be done to provide the veterinary staff which is so necessary to keep these areas T.B. tested.

The Ontario veterinary college under Doctor MacNabb is doing a magnificent job, but I understand that very few of the graduates this year will enter government service in the federal field. I am told also that we will be lucky if we do not lose at least 60 per cent of the graduates to the United States and other places. The situation is so urgent that I do not make any apology for bringing it to the attention of the committee at this time. I have not exaggerated when I say that the situation is critical and dangerous, and it calls for the immediate attention of the government by way of remedy and rectification.

Mr. BRYCE: I quite agree with what the hon. member for Peel has said, but I am going to refrain from dealing with that matter at this time. I should like to know if the additional $200,000 is to cover animals slaughtered out of T.B. free areas or animals slaughtered to go into the domestic beef trade.

Mr. McCUBBIN: I will answer the last question first. This is for animals in T.B. tested areas. I want to thank the hon. member for Peel for his kindly words and tell him that every effort will be made by the department to see that additional veterinarians are available. We will try to make things so attractive in Canada that they will stay here and do the work which is so necessary throughout the length and breadth of the country, particularly in western Ontario.

Mr. CARDIFF: The county of Huron was voted a restricted area before the war, but during the war that type of work was set aside. We are now waiting our turn and I believe we are either third or fourth on the list. We have heard nothing as yet and I should like to know if there has been any improvement in the number of veterinarians in the department?

Mr. McCUBBIN: There is some improvement, but not much. There are a good many young men in the Ontario veterinary college who will graduate before long and I hope and trust that a lot of them will stay in Canada and help those counties which wish to be T.B. tested.

Mr. BOUCHER: What is the department doing to induce these young men to stay in Canada?

Mr. McCUBBIN: Canada is still the best country in the world.

Item agreed to.

Production service—

567. Grants to fairs and exhibitions, as detailed in the estimates—further amount required, $4,481.

Mr. McLURE: What is this amount for?

Mr. McCUBBIN: Twenty-four hundred and eighty-one dollars is for the Regina winter fair which found that they needed more than they had asked for. The other $2,000 is divided into four amounts of $500 among Amherst, Sherbrooke, the central Canadian exhibition in Ottawa and the Vancouver exhibition.

Mr. HAZEN: How is it that the Regina fair gets so much more than the other fairs?

Mr. McCUBBIN: It is the classification, of course.

Mr. HAZEN: Amherst, Nova Scotia, gets only $500, while Regina gets $2,481.

Mr. McCUBBIN: Amherst got much more than that. This is $500 extra.

Item agreed to.

Marketing service—

568. Subsidies for cold storage warehouses under the Cold Storage Act, and grants, in the amounts detailed in the estimates—further amount required, $16,567.72.

Mr. LENNARD: Do I understand that this amount of $16,567.72 is detailed in the main estimates?

Mr. McCUBBIN: Yes.

Mr. LENNARD: And no grants will be made for cold storage plants of which the details are not in the main estimates?

Mr. McCUBBIN: I think that is right. This amount is for three cold storage plants, all in British Columbia.

Item agreed to.

Special—

570. Prairie Farm Assistance Act administration—further amount required, $250,000.

Mr. BRACKEN: Where is this money spent? What province receives the biggest share of this $250,000?

Mr. McCUBBIN: I am not in a position to say which. There was a crop deterioration in midsummer that was not looked for when the main estimates were brought down, and sufficient money was not provided in the main estimates. This additional amount had to be spent.

Mr. BRACKEN: Does the parliamentary assistant think that any of this is to be spent in Saskatchewan?

Mr. McCUBBIN: I am not in a position to say.

Mr. GRAYDON: It would be a fair guess.

Mr. BRACKEN: I do not think we should pass this item until we hear where the money is to be spent.

Mr. McCUBBIN: It is to be spent in the three prairie provinces, wherever it is needed.

Mr. BRACKEN: I think it will be needed in Saskatchewan this summer.

Mr. MacNICOL: I see an item of $122,000 for travelling expenses under Prairie Farm Assistance Act administration. That seems an outrageous amount of money to spend on travelling around Saskatchewan. There might be some travelling done in Manitoba and a little in British Columbia, but how in the world can any group of men spend $122,000 in travelling expenses? This is an extra amount too.

Mr. McCUBBIN: I admit that the amount is large, but there were a great many applications, and the investigation of each and every one of them involves a lot of travelling.

Mr. MacNICOL: I guess that is as good an answer as any.

Mr. McKAY: What is the total estimated for administration of the act up until March 31?

Mr. McCUBBIN: For administration, $333,000.

Mr. CHARLTON: There is an item of $500,000 in the main estimates for 1948-49 for Prairie Farm Assistance Act administration. What was the 1946 expenditure?

[Mr. Lennard.]

Mr. McCUBBIN: I have not that information before me, but I should be glad to get it for the hon. member.

Mr. COCKERAM: Does the parliamentary assistant not think that an increase of 66⅔ per cent over the estimate presented last year is out of line with the estimates as a whole?

Mr. McCUBBIN: The conditions required it. A great many districts in the west had a poor crop and a great deal of investigational work had to be done.

Mr. COCKERAM: It has nothing to do with the election that is coming off in Saskatchewan, has it?

Mr. McCUBBIN: Not a thing.

Item agreed to.

Special—

571. To reclaim and to prevent the flooding of valuable agricultural lands in the valley of the Lillooet river, near Pemberton, B.C.—further amount required, $50,000.

Mr. WHITE (Middlesex East): A year ago when this item came up I mentioned this expenditure in British Columbia. Considerable damage had been done by flooding in other parts of Canada at that time, but no help was forthcoming from the federal treasury. This year, in western Ontario particularly, the flood damage has been greater than usual, and I noticed by yesterday's Free Press that the provincial government more or less says that this is a problem for the municipalities. Damage from flooding is becoming so serious that it is more than a municipal problem, and I think this expenditure in British Columbia should be discontinued or the policy be extended right across this country. How long is this assistance to be continued for British Columbia?

Mr. McCUBBIN: That is a very fair question. The day may be coming when consideration will have to be given to damage by floods not only in British Columbia but throughout the length and breadth of Canada.

Item agreed to.

Special—

572. To authorize and provide for payment of subsidies on oats and barley used as feed for livestock under such regulations as may be approved by the governor in council—further amount required, $6,500,000.

Mr. CHARLTON: Some explanation should be given of this $6,000,000 item.

Mr. McCUBBIN: The Minister of Finance explained it last night in reply to a question by the leader of the opposition. The main estimates provided up to July 31 only, and from August 1 to October 23 an additional amount was required for subsidies.

Mr. COCKERAM: Is it all cleaned up now?

Mr. McCUBBIN: I understand that it is.

Item agreed to.

Demobilization and reconversion—Agricultural supplies board—

664. Feeds administrator, including freight assistance on western feed grains—further amount required, $4,050,000.

Mr. COCKERAM: May we have an explanation of this $4,000,000 item?

Mr. McCUBBIN: This is freight assistance on western grain moved to eastern Canada. When the main estimates were brought down we did not realize that there would be such a poor crop in eastern Canada, and more grain was brought down than we thought would be brought down. Therefore an additional amount had to be put in the supplementary estimates for the paying of the freight.

Mr. COCKERAM: Why is this under demobilization and reconversion? It is not a demobilization and reconversion expense at all.

Mr. McCUBBIN: All these subsidies and freight assistance items are temporary votes and were put in the reconversion vote.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

The CHAIRMAN: Order. We are not on a particular item. We are reverting to the Department of External Affairs in order that certain answers may be given to questions asked last night.

Mr. W. E. HARRIS (Parliamentary Assistant to the Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yesterday the leader of the opposition asked a few questions of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and I should like to give the answers now. I shall take only a few moments of the committee's time. The total contributions to international organizations which have been paid or will be paid for the fiscal year 1947-48 amount to $11,919,541.49. This total includes a contribution of $5,467,921.12 to the international refugee organization and a payment of $5,000,000 to the international children's emergency fund which was made out of the vote for post-UNRRA relief. I have had prepared a statement showing the various organizations and the amounts included in the main estimates and the supplementary estimates, the amounts already paid and to be paid, and I should like permission to put it on Hansard. I have already given a copy to the leader of the opposition.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. HARRIS (Grey-Bruce): The table follows:

—	Main Estimates 1947-48	Supplementary Estimates June 1947	Supplementary estimates March 1948	Amount paid	Amount to be paid	Total payments in fiscal year
	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.
United Nations	895,000 00	.....	17,800 00	882,792 00	17,718 46	900,510 46
Inter. Civil Aviation Organ.	125,000 00	.....	9,021 00	125,000 00	9,021 00	134,021 00
Food and Agr. Organ	96,000 00	.....	.....	95,475 00	.....	95,475 00
United Nations Educ., Scientific and Cultural Organ	.....	57,600 00	.....	57,526 20	.....	57,526 20
International Labour Organ.	.....	.....	176,500 00	.....	176,434 50	176,434 50
International Refugee Organ.	.....	5,468,000 00	.....	2,733,960 56	2,733,960 56	5,467,921 12
Inter. Children's Emergency Fund	.....	5,000,000 00*	.....	5,000,000 00	.....	5,000,000 00
Totals for U.N. and Subsidiary Bodies	1,116,000 00	10,525,600 00	203,321 00	8,894,753 76	2,937,134 52	11,831,888 28
International Red Cross	20,000 00	.....	.....	20,000 00	.....	20,000 00
Imp. Economic Comm.	14,500 00	.....	.....	14,220 80	.....	14,220 80
Imp. Shipping Comm.	1,300 00	.....	.....	1,292 80	.....	1,292 80
Inter. Wheat Council	2,600 00
Commonwealth Communications Council	.....	8,100 00	.....	4,040 00	.....	4,040 00
Comite Inter. Tech. d'E. Jur. Aeriens	.....	325 00	.....	303 97	.....	303 97
Intergovern. Comm. on Refugees	.....	2,200 00	.....	2,181 60	.....	2,181 60
Inter Allied Reparations Agency	.....	.....	37,750 00	.....	37,496 27	37,496 27
Int. Amer. Committee on Social Security	.....	.....	4,500 00	.....	4,433 83	4,433 83
Int. Commission on Air Navigation	.....	.....	875 00	.....	872 64	872 64
U.N. War Crimes Comm.	.....	2,850 00	.....	.....	2,811 30	2,811 30
Sub-totals	38,400 00	13,475 00	43,125 00	42,039 17	45,614 04	87,653 21
Grand Totals	1,154,400 00	10,539,075 00	246,446 00	8,936,792 93	2,982,748 56	11,919,541 49

* Paid out of Vote of $20,000,000 for Post U.N.N.R.A. Relief.

The hon. member for York South asked a question with respect to the international labour organization. The government pays the travelling and other expenses of the government, employer and employee delegates to the general conference of the international labour organization held once a year and the government representatives to the meetings of the governing body which are held three and sometimes four times a year, as well as the government representative to regional conferences or committees. The I.L.O. pays the expenses of employer and employee delegates to committee meetings. Expenses since April 1, 1947 to March 24 of this year have amounted to $30,320.90. This amount is paid by the Department of Labour.

The hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario asked what our contribution to the international labour organization had been in the fiscal year 1946-47. The contribution was $169,904.34.

Mr. COCKERAM: Is that $30,320.90 which the Department of Labour paid in addition to the $176,520?

Mr. HARRIS (Grey-Bruce): Yes.

Mr. COCKERAM: How many people attended the last conference last year?

Mr. HARRIS (Grey-Bruce): I am unable to tell the hon. member that. I can give him this information. So far this fiscal year one general conference has been held in Geneva, three meetings of the governing bodies and four industrial committee meetings.

Mr. CHARLTON: The parliamentary assistant has not answered the question I asked last night regarding the international federation of agricultural producers.

Mr. HARRIS (Grey-Bruce): We have searched our records and we cannot find an organization by the name the hon. member used. If he will give us better information we shall hunt for it.

Mr. HAZEN: Last night I asked how many paid employees were in the international labour organization. Has the hon. member these figures?

Mr. HARRIS (Grey-Bruce): My information is that there are 486, but that is the war establishment. All the appointments may not be filled.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Demobilization and reconversion—Agricultural supplies board—

664. Feeds administrator, including freight assistance on western feed grains—further amount required, $4,050,000.

[Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce).]

Mr. BRACKEN: I should like to revert to this item for a moment. It has to do with freight assistance on western feed grains. The details given on page 19 of the supplementary estimates read as follows:

Freight assistance on western feed grains, $2,050,000.
Subsidy on wheat used as feed for livestock, $2,000,000.

The items we are now passing are for the present fiscal year which will end in a few days. I would like to ask a question with respect to the subsidy on wheat used as feed for livestock. Is that subsidy being continued? With respect to the other item, that policy is in effect now and the minister may not wish to say what the policy is to be in the long run. Provision has been made to continue it in effect for how long?

Mr. ABBOTT: I am afraid I am not in a position to answer that. Perhaps the parliamentary assistant to the minister can do so. This vote is to cover the administration of the feed grain assistance policy to March 31, 1948, and of the $4,050,000, which is provided here, $2,050,000 is to cover the freight assistance on western feed grains and $2,000,000, the subsidy on wheat used as feed for livestock. I am afraid I cannot answer offhand the question as to whether the policy is to be continued or not.

Mr. COCKERAM: That is in addition to the $18,000,000 already provided?

Mr. ABBOTT: When the amount of $18,000,000 for freight assistance and then $2,000,000 for subsidy payments were submitted in the main estimates it was understood that the policy under which these expenditures were made would expire on July 1, 1947; but, as I have said, the feed grain assistance policy was extended to March 31, 1948.

Resolutions reported, read the second time and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

SUPPLY BILL

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of ways and means.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

Mr. ABBOTT moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1948, the following sum be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada, namely:

The sum of $79,809,337.98 being the amount of each of the items set forth in the further supplementary estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1948, as set forth in the resolution concurred in this day in the committee of supply.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Abbott thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 184, for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1948.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second times, considered in committee, reported and read the third time.

Mr. SPEAKER: Mr. Abbott moves that the bill be now passed and that the title be as on the order paper.

Mr. BRACKEN: Is it not contrary to the rules to pass more than one stage at one sitting?

Mr. ABBOTT: By unanimous consent, of course. I am assuming that was given.

Mr. SPEAKER: The present motion is not debatable.

Motion agreed to.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE CONSERVATION

PROHIBITION OF CERTAIN IMPORTS, AND PROVISION FOR IMPORT QUOTAS AND PERMITS

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the senate to Bill No. 3, respecting emergency measures for the conservation of Canadian foreign exchange resources.

He said: The amendments are simple. There were two articles, biscuits not sweetened, and biscuits sweetened, which were removed from the prohibited list and put on the quota list, and biscuits sweetened or unsweetened, valued at less than twenty cents per pound, were put in the second schedule.

Mr. COLDWELL: And match sticks?

Mr. ABBOTT: And vegetables fresh, in the natural state, or cut or shredded, were added to the first schedule to prohibit air-transported vegetables from being flown in from the United States.

Motion agreed to, amendments read the second time and concurred in.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ADJOURNMENT FOR EASTER RECESS

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): If the house, Mr. Speaker, will revert to "government notices of motions", I should like to move in amended form the motion that appears in my name, that when this house adjourns on Wednesday, March 24, instant, it stand adjourned until Tuesday, the 30th instant. That motion is to be amended to read "Monday, April 5 next" instead of "Tuesday, the 30th instant". Perhaps the Minister of Finance would move that amendment.

Mr. ABBOTT: I so move.

Mr. SPEAKER: Mr. Mackenzie King moves that when this house adjourns on Wednesday, March 24 instant, it stand adjourned until Tuesday the 30th instant, to which Mr. Abbott moves in amendment that the words "Tuesday the 30th instant" be deleted and the words "Monday, April 5 next" be substituted therefor. The question is on the amendment. Shall the amendment carry?

Amendment agreed to.

Motion as amended agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): That concludes the business. No doubt hon. members will wish to know the proposed order of business immediately after the Easter adjournment. In considering the matter, the government thought it would be advisable to bring forward as soon as possible measures pertaining to the appointment of committees or measures likely to be referred to a special or standing committee. There is a resolution on the order paper in regard to the appointment of a joint committee of both houses of parliament to consider the question of human rights and fundamental freedoms. I assume it would be the wish of hon. members to have that committee appointed forthwith. There is the resolution with respect to the introduction of a bill regarding the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act. It appears as Item No. 9 on today's order paper. That bill of the Minister of Labour is to be referred to a committee. It is therefore advisable it should be introduced at a very early stage after recess. Item No. 20 on today's order paper is a resolution relating to an amendment to the War Veterans Allowance Act to extend the provisions of that act to a neglected child or children, et cetera. The bill founded on that resolution will, I assume, go to the committee on veterans affairs. There is also a resolution in the name of the Secretary of State for the introduction of the measure to amend the Dominion Elections Act to make provision inter alia for an increase in salary of the chief electoral officer. That bill, I assume, will also be referred to a committee.

There is the measure respecting gold, No. 7 on the order paper today:

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of the Minister of Finance for the second reading of Bill No. 7, respecting emergency payments to assist in meeting the increased cost of production of gold.

It was understood, I think, that this measure would be taken up immediately after the measures we have dealt with today. It might be regarded as the first measure to be taken up after the Easter recess. The others I have mentioned might be brought forward in the order most convenient to hon. members.

What I have said will serve as an indication of the measures that may occupy the first few days of the session after the Easter recess. It is understood that when discussion begins on the estimates, the first to be considered will be those of the Department of External Affairs.

Mr. BRACKEN: Would the Prime Minister call the committee on printing as soon as we resume on April 5? I understand that committee wants to meet in order to provide for the printing of the evidence of the Hong Kong inquiry.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: A day or two after I proposed the motion, the chairman of that committee informed me that he was arranging to have the committee meet at once. He found, however, it would be more convenient to hon. members on the committee if the committee met after the Easter recess. I understand that has been arranged.

Mr. MacNICOL: Since apparently we have reached the end of today's proceedings, in the absence of the Minister of Mines and Resources (Mr. Glen) I should like to draw the attention of the Prime Minister to the fact that on April 5 the Essex county tourist association is inaugurating Canada's first national wildlife week, which, as the right hon. gentleman knows, was instituted to commemorate the great work done by the late Jack Miner. They are holding a dinner in Windsor that day and, as the Prime Minister knows, they were very anxious to have him address that meeting. However, since he had made other arrangements and was unable to accept the invitation—

Mr. FERGUSON: Oh, go on; sit down.

Mr. MacNICOL: Thanks very much. As the Prime Minister knows, the Minister of National Health and Welfare will be the speaker on that occasion. Since this will be the first time we have had a national wildlife week in Canada, I thought it would be only fitting for the government to make some announcement that this is going to take place, and that the dinner is being held in Windsor to inaugurate that week.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It will be a pleasure to have that done. I shall see that something along the lines my hon. friend has mentioned is announced. I am only sorry, as I know the minister of health also is, that my hon. friend himself is not to be the chief speaker at the dinner. He should be, for he was the one who introduced the measure in this house.

Now, Mr. Speaker I suggest that the sitting be suspended until word comes from the other house that the deputy of His Excellency is ready to receive us.

Mr. KNOWLES: While we are on the business of the house, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. He will recall that some days ago I brought up the matter of the motion of December 8, which still governs the business of the house. I need not go into all the points we raised at that time; I am sure the Prime Minister will remember them quite well. He then indicated that when this point had been reached, that is the Easter recess, and we had dealt with certain measures which were indicated as being of an emergency character, the government would give consideration to bringing in some other motion to govern the business of the house from now on, and at least make more convenient our procedure from day to day.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes. It is the intention of the government to do exactly as I said and have a motion brought in on one of the opening days after the recess.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): With respect to the business of the house, I want to ask the Prime Minister when the committee in regard to rules is going to operate. After the farce we have seen here in the past week, I think it is time that committee met, and it should be the first business of this house to see that it does meet.

Mr. ABBOTT: I suggest that it bring in a rule against repetitious debates in committee, too.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I did not say that, but why not have it done?

Mr. ABBOTT: My hon. friend's party have been the worst offenders.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I do not know anyone who needs it more than the minister does.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have not been repetitious.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As my hon. friend will recall, I brought on the motion for the establishment of that committee some weeks ago. It has been left to the members of the committee themselves to decide when they should meet. His Honour the Speaker stated, I believe, that a meeting would take place during the recess or immediately after.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I assume that the committee has a chairman. The matter was raised by the hon. member for Peel within the last week, and we now see the absolute necessity of doing something to avoid all the nonsense we have been through during the past ten days.

Mr. SPEAKER: I can assure the hon. member for Calgary West, as I assured the hon. member for Peel, that I am anxious to have the committee meet, and it is my intention to call a meeting right after the Easter recess. I have just received information that it will be about half an hour before we are invited to proceed to the other chamber, so I would suggest that this sitting be suspended.

At 9.10 p.m. the sitting was suspended.

At 9.20 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Right Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, the house went up to the Senate.

And having returned.

Mr. SPEAKER informed the house that the deputy of His Excellency the Governor General had been pleased to give in His Majesty's name the royal assent to the following bills:

An Act to amend the Farm Improvement Loans Act, 1944.

An Act to incorporate National General Insurance Company.

An Act respecting the Trust and Loan Company of Canada.

An Act respecting the Eastern Trust Company.

An Act respecting the New Westminster Harbour Commissioners and to provide for the refunding of maturing financial obligations.

An Act to amend the Continuation of Transitional Measures Act, 1947.

An Act to amend the Agricultural Products Act.

An Act to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1935.

An Act to amend the Excise Tax Act.

An Act to amend the Customs Tariff.

An Act respecting emergency measures for the conservation of Canadian foreign exchange resources.

An Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st of March, 1949.

An Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st of March, 1948.

Mr. MacKINNON moved the adjournment of the house.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 9.40 p.m. until Monday, April 5 at 3 p.m.

The following items were passed in committee of supply:

FURTHER SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, 1947-1948

Department of Agriculture

Administration service—

563. Publicity and extension division—further amount required, $825.

Production service—

564. Health of animals—compensation for animals slaughtered—further amount required, $200,000.

565. Live stock and poultry—further amount required, $20,000.

566. Plant products—seeds, feeds, fertilizers, insecticides and fungicides control—further amount required, $5,000.

567. Grants to fairs and exhibitions, as detailed in the estimates—further amount required, $4,481.

Marketing service—

568. Subsidies for cold storage warehouses under the Cold Storage Act, and grants, in the amounts detailed in the estimates—further amount required, $16,567.72.

569. Live stock and live stock products—further amount required, $25,000.

Special—

570. Prairie Farm Assistance Act administration—further amount required, $250,000.

571. To reclaim and to prevent the flooding of valuable agricultural lands in the valley of the Lillooet river, near Pemberton, B.C.—further amount required, $50,000.

572. To authorize and provide for payment of subsidies on oats and barley used as feed for live stock under such regulations as may be approved by the Governor in Council—further amount required, $6,500,000.

Unemployment Insurance Act, 1940—

588. Government's contribution to unemployment insurance fund—further amount required, $5,000,000.

589. To provide that, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act or the Civil Service Superannuation Act, the appointments of

J. E. Neish as employment adviser, grade 3 and of L. J. Ricks as employment and claims officer, grade 4, of the unemployment insurance commission, shall be deemed to have been made in accordance with the provisions of section 11 D of the Civil Service Superannuation Act which shall apply thereto, and that each of such persons shall be deemed to have been on leave of absence from the unemployment insurance commission while on active service with His Majesty's armed forces effective August 1, 1941, $1.

Legislation

The Senate—

590. General administration—further amount required, $9,500.

591. To provide, notwithstanding anything contained in the Senate and House of Commons Act, for the payment to each member of the senate who attended the first part of the present session which commenced on December 5, 1947, and ended on December 19, 1947, of an amount representing the actual transportation and living expenses of such member while on the journey between Ottawa and his place of residence after the Christmas adjournment of parliament on December 19, 1947, and on the return journey from his place of residence to Ottawa at the end of the recess which commenced on that date, or at any other one time during the present session, $5,000.

House of Commons—

592. General administration—estimates of the clerk—further amount required, $108,000.

593. Estimates of the Sergeant-at-Arms—further amount required, $20,000.

594. To provide, notwithstanding anything contained in the Senate and House of Commons Act, for the payment to each member of the House of Commons who attended the first part of the present session which commenced on December 5, 1947, and ended on December 19, 1947, of an amount representing the actual transportation and living expenses of such member while on the journey between Ottawa and his place of residence after the Christmas adjournment of parliament on December 19, 1947, and on the return journey from his place of residence to Ottawa at the end of the recess which commenced on that date, or at any other one time during the present session, $12,000.

General—

595. Printing of parliament, including salaries of staff of the joint distribution office—further amount required, $70,000.

Mines and Resources

Mines and geology branch—Bureau of mines—

596. Explosives Act—further amount required, $833.33.

597. Yukon coal development, $100,000.

Lands, parks and forests branch—National parks bureau—

598. National parks and historic sites services—further amount required, $30,000.

599. Administration of the Migratory Birds Convention Act—further amount required, $900.

600. Forest and wildlife conservation—further amount required, $29,938.

Surveys and Engineering Branch—Dominion Water and Power Bureau—

601. To provide for the refund of water-power rentals paid by the Calgary Power Company and deposited to the consolidated revenue fund which, in accordance with the terms of the Alberta Natural Resources Transfer (Amendment) Act 1945, is payable in part to the Indians of the Stony Indian reserve and in part to the province of Alberta, $1,733.76.

Indians Affairs Branch—

602. Branch administration—further amount required, $4,107.41.

603. Indian agencies—further amount required, $20,000.

Welfare and training—

604. Welfare of Indians—further amount required, $100,000.

605. Indian education—further amount required, $14,000.

National Defence

Pensions and other benefits—

606. To authorize the governor in council to grant a pension, effective April 1, 1947, to the widow and children of the late Paymaster Commander Francis R. W. Nixon, in accordance with the terms of the Militia Pension Act, including for purposes of such pension his service in the R.C.N. under the age of eighteen years and notwithstanding the payment of a gratuity to the widow under the said act, $1,287.55.

National Health and Welfare

National Health branch—

607. Opium and narcotic drugs—further amount required, $10,000.

608. Medical services—Indians and Eskimos—further amount required, $500,000.

National Revenue

Customs and Excise divisions—

609. General administration—further amount required, $10,000.

610. Inspection, investigation and audit services—further amount required, $23,500.

611. Ports, outports and preventive stations, including pay for overtime of officers notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, and temporary buildings and rentals — further amount required, $198,000.

Taxation division—

612. District offices—further amount required, $317,000.

Post Office

613. Railway mail service—further amount required, $470,000.

614. Air and land mail services—further amount required, $150,000.

Public Printing and Stationery

615. Printing, binding and distributing the annual statutes—further amount required, $15,000.

616. Printing and binding official publications for sale and distribution to departments and the public—further amount required, $50,000.

Public Works Department

Architectural branch—

617. Ottawa—maintenance and operation of dominion public buildings and grounds, including rents, repairs, furniture, heating, etc.—further amount required, $225,000.

618. Maintenance and operation of dominion public buildings and grounds, other than at Ottawa, including rents, repairs, furniture, heating, etc.—further amount required, $250,000.

Construction, repairs and improvements of public buildings—Quebec—

619. Dominion public buildings—improvements and repairs—further amount required, $50,000.

Ontario—

620. Dominion public buildings—improvements and repairs—further amount required, $25,000.

Engineering branch—Maintenance and operation of graving docks, locks and dams, etc.—

621. Kingston graving dock, $8,500.

622. Locks and dams—further amount required, $106,000.

Construction, repairs and improvements—harbours and rivers—Quebec—

623. St. Ignace de Loyola—reconstruction of pier, $20,000.

Ontario—

624. Thames river — redredging — further amount required, $15,200.

Whitby—towards repairs to harbour works—further amount required, $50,000.

Saskatchewan, Alberta and Northwest Territories—

625. Bell Rock (Fort Smith), N.W.T.—wharf, $5,000.

British Columbia and Yukon—

626. Columbia river—protection work—further amount required, $13,000.

General—

627. National gallery of Canada—further amount required, $1,120.

628. Miscellaneous works not otherwise provided for, not more than $5,000 to be expended upon any one work—further amount required, $11,950.

Secretary of State

629. Citizenship registration branch—further amount required, $1,220.

630. Trade marks branch—further amount required, $2,000.

631. Canada Temperance Act—further amount required, $1,500.

Patent and copyright office—

632. Administration division—further amount required, $200.

633. Copyright and industrial designs division—further amount required, $2,800.

634. Contribution to the international office for the protection of industrial property, international copyright union office and union for the protection of literary and artistic works—further amount required, $1,600.

Trade and Commerce

Standards division—

635. Electricity and gas inspection services, including administration of the Electricity and Fluid Exportation Act—further amount required, $4,500.

636. Exhibitions, including authority to refund from revenue deposits received for contracts for space at the Canadian international trade fair—further amount required, $90,000.

Canadian Government Travel Bureau—

637. To assist in promoting the tourist business in Canada—further amount required, $175,000.

Special—

638. Canadian Commercial Corporation—to reimburse the Canadian Commercial Corporation for expenses incurred in purchasing materials, supplies and equipment, etc., on behalf of the Department of National Defence under chapter 51, statutes of 1947, and approval of the amount of $80,000 paid from national defence appropriation for this purpose in the year 1946-47, $548,000.

639. Canadian Wheat Board—to reimburse the Canadian Wheat Board for expenses incurred from August 1, 1944, to July 31, 1947, in regulating deliveries of grain, allocation of railway cars and administration of regulations relating to maximum prices of grain, $733,249.81.

Department of Transport

640. Departmental administration — further amount required to provide for an additional deputy minister for the Department of Transport to be appointed by the Governor in Council and to be called the Deputy Minister of Transport for Air Services, to hold office during pleasure, and to have and exercise such powers, duties and functions with respect to the air services branch of the said department as may be specified by the Minister of Transport—amount required for 1947-48, $2,000.

Marine service—

641. Marine service administration—further amount required, $15,000.

642. Marine service steamers, including icebreakers—maintenance, operation and repairs—further amount required, $174,500.

643. To provide for Canada's share of the cost of the North Atlantic ice patrol—further amount required, $17,230.

644. Administration of pilotage, including authority for temporary recoverable advances to certain pilotage districts—further amount required, $9,000.

645. Miscellaneous services relating to navigation and shipping—further amount required, $9,000.

646. To provide towards the construction of a lighthouse supply and buoy vessel for the east coast—capital, $11,500.

Canadian Maritime Commission—

Mail subsidies and steamship subventions (formerly under the Department of Trade and Commerce).

Western local services—

647. Prince Rupert, B.C., and Queen Charlotte islands, service between—further amount required, $162,320.

Vancouver and northern ports of British Columbia, service between—further amount required, $187,680.

Eastern local services—

648. Halifax, Sherbrooke, Spry Bay and Tor Bay, service between—further amount required, $4,700.

Quebec, Natashquan and Harrington, service between—further amount required, $155,000.

Quebec or Montreal and Gaspe, calling at way ports, service between—further amount required, $48,000.

Railway service—Maritime Freight Rates Act—

649. Additional amount in excess of the sum of $3,042,000 already appropriated, to authorize and provide for the payment from time to time during the fiscal year 1947-48 to the Canadian National Railway Company of the difference (estimated by the Canadian National Railway Company and certified by the auditors of the said company to the Minister of Transport, as and when required by the said Minister) occurring on account of the application of the Maritime Freight Rates Act, between the tariff tolls and the normal tolls (upon the same basis as set out in section 9 of the said act with respect to companies therein referred to) on all traffic moved during the calendar year 1947 under the tariffs approved on the eastern lines (as referred to in section 2 of the said act) of the Canadian National Railways—further amount required, $1,099,529.39.

650. Additional amount in excess of the sum of $800,000 already appropriated, to authorize and provide for the payment from time to time during the fiscal year 1947-48 of the difference (estimated by the board of transport commissioners for Canada and certified by the said board to the Minister of Transport, as and when required by the said minister) occurring on account of the application of the Maritime Freight Rates Act, between the tariff tolls and the normal tolls (referred to in section 9 of the said act) on all traffic moved during the calendar year 1947 under the tariffs approved by the following companies: Canada and Gulf Terminal Railway; Canadian Pacific Railway, including Fredericton and Grand Lake Coal and Railway Company and New Brunswick Coal and Railway Company; Cumberland Railway and Coal Company; Dominion Atlantic Railway; Maritime Coal, Railway and Power Company; Sydney and Louisburg Railway; Temiscouata Railway Company—further amount required, $200,000.

Pensions and other benefits—

651. To provide, notwithstanding anything contained in the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act or any other act or law, for payment out of the consolidated revenue fund to the widow of the late Pierre Trudelle, formerly clerk of the Department of Marine at Quebec, of contributions, without interest, made by the late Pierre Trudelle to the civil service superannuation fund, $790.03.

Air service—

(Control and supervision vested in the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply by order in council P.C. 529 of 10th February, 1948).

Radio division—

652. Issue of radio receiving licences—(transport department only)—further amount required, $344,000.

Veterans Affairs Department

653. War veterans' allowance board—administration—further amount required, $5,500.

Payments to or for veterans and dependents—

654. War pensions—world war I—further amount required, $2,000,000.

655. War veterans allowances—world war I—further amount required, $1,600,000.

656. Widows allowances—world war I—further amount required, $100,000.

657. Allowances—orphaned children—world war I—further amount required, $1,000.

658. To authorize, subject to the approval of the governor in council and in lieu of any compensation to which his dependents may be entitled under the Government Employees' Compensation Act, 1947, payment of pensions to the dependents of the late Doctor Murray R. Bowie under the pension act in the same manner and subject to similar terms and conditions as if Doctor Bowie had been killed on duty while serving in world war II as an officer holding the rank of major in His Majesty's Canadian forces and to provide for the immediate payment of $1,000 to the widow of Doctor Murray R. Bowie, $1,000.

659. To authorize payment under the Veterans Insurance Act to Joan Snow, widow of the late Frank Rennie Snow, of the benefits to which she would have been entitled under that act had his application for insurance thereunder been formally approved, by the superintendent of veterans insurance, before his death, $1.

Government Owned Enterprises

Deficits—Transport—

660. Additional amount in excess of the sum of $707,000 already appropriated, to provide for the payment during the fiscal year 1947-48 to the Canadian National Railway Company (hereinafter called the national company) upon application approved by the Minister of Transport, made from time to time by the national company to the Minister of Finance, and to be applied by the national company in payment of the deficit (certified by the auditors of the national company) in the operation of the Prince Edward Island car ferry and terminals arising in the calendar year 1947—further amount required, $224,855.96.

611. Amount required to provide for the payment during the fiscal year 1947-48 to the Canadian National Railway Company (hereinafter called the national company) upon applications approved by the Minister of Transport, made from time to time by the national company, to the Minister of Finance and to be applied by the national company in payment of the deficit (certified by the auditors of the national company) arising in the calendar year 1947, but not including amounts charged to proprietor's equity of the national railway system as defined in chapter twenty-two of the Statutes of Canada, 1937:

Canadian National Railways, exclusive of eastern lines, $5,280,432.77; eastern lines, $10,604,761.51, $15,885,194.28.

662. To hereby authorize and provide for payment during the fiscal year 1947-48 to Trans-Canada Air Lines to be applied by Trans-Canada Air Lines in payment of the deficit (certified by the auditor of Trans-Canada Air Lines to the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply as and when required by the said minister) resulting from the operations of Trans-Canada Air Lines during the calendar year 1947, less the surplus accruing from the operations of the Trans-Canada Air Lines (Atlantic) Limited, during 1947, and less the accumulated surplus of the Trans-Canada Air Lines as at December 31, 1946:

Trans-Canada Air Lines deficit, calendar year 1947, $1,761,042.84.

Less: Surplus Trans-Canada Air Lines (Atlantic) Limited, year 1947, $136,303.31.

Less: Accumulated surplus Trans-Canada Air Lines as at December 31, 1946, $255,061.23, $1,369,678.30.

National harbours board—

663. To provide for payment to the national harbours board, of the amount hereinafter set forth, to be applied in payment of the deficit (exclusive of interest on dominion government advances and depreciation on capital structures) arising in the calendar year 1947 in the operation of the Quebec harbour, $70,481.14.

Demobilization and Reconversion

Agriculture—Agricultural supplies board—

664. Feeds administrator, including freight assistance on western feed grains—further amount required, $4,050,000.

Public Works

Architectural branch—

665. Vancouver—Construction of temporary office building for Department of Veterans Affairs—To complete payments on contract, $18,098.

Transport

Railway and Steamship service—

666. To provide for payment of the claim submitted by the Danish War Risk Cargo Insurance Institute of Copenhagen, Denmark, in respect of certain portions of the Danish consigned cargo laden in the M.S. Europa at the time of her seizure in prize in April, 1940, $195,416.77.

Canadian Maritime Commission—

667. Steamship subsidies stabilization fund (formerly under the Department of Trade and Commerce)—further amount required, $30,000.

Air service—

(Control and supervision vested in the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply by order in council P.C. 529 of February 10, 1948.)

Civil aviation division—

668. To hereby authorize contribution of an amount not exceeding $780,000 to the State of Michigan, U.S.A., Department of Aeronautics, towards the construction and development of airways facilities at Houghton and Grand Marais, Michigan, U.S.A., for use of Canadian aircraft and costs of operation and maintenance of such facilities to March 31, 1948, as certified to by the Controller of Civil Aviation, and approved by the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply, less $721,049.85 already paid under authority of vote 628, airways and airports, capital, construction and improvements, demobilization and reconversion appropriation, 1946-47, $58,950.15.

Veterans Affairs

669. Pensions—world war II, and pensions granted under the authority of the civilian government employees (war) compensation order P.C. 45/8848 of 22nd November, 1944, which shall be subject to the Pension Act—further amount required, $2,000,000.

670. War veterans allowance board—allowances to dual service veterans (world war I and world war II); to veterans, world war II only, and North West Rebellion, 1885—further amount required, $125,000.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, April 5, 1948

The house met at three o'clock

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RETURN OF TRIESTE TO ITALY

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to answer a question put on March 22 by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Graydon) as to the intention of the government with respect to objectives set out in the joint statement on Trieste issued on Saturday, March 20, by the governments of the United States, the United Kingdom and France. The first part of this declaration reads as follows:

> The governments of the United States, United Kingdom and France have proposed to the governments of the Soviet Union and Italy that those governments join in agreement on an additional protocol to the treaty of peace with Italy which would place the free territory of Trieste once more under Italian sovereignty.

In his address before the plenary session of the Paris conference on August 2, 1946, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) said:

> Our concern as a nation is to see that, as far as we can help to make them so, the peace treaties will be based upon broad and enduring principles of justice and equity. Canada seeks no territory, no reparations, no special concessions of any kind, but we do seek to build a lasting peace.

On October 8, 1946, the head of the Canadian delegation, the Hon. Brooke Claxton, speaking before the plenary conference, stated with reference to the statute of Trieste:

> The compromise for which the large majority of the commission eventually voted followed the lines laid down by the council of foreign ministers. The Canadian delegation supported the creation of the free territory of Trieste in the hope that it will possess genuine independence under the authority of the united nations. This hope, however, is based upon the belief that in the last resort Yugoslavia, which was in the forefront in the war against the axis forces, will find it possible to play a leading role in supporting a pacific and progressive solution of this most difficult aspect of the Italian settlement.

This hope has not been realized. In reply to the question of the hon. member for Peel, therefore, I wish to state that it is the intention of the Canadian government to support the proposal of the governments of the United States, the United Kingdom, and France to return the free territory of Trieste to Italy by revision of the peace treaty with Italy.

Mr. GRAYDON: Does that mean that the resolution standing on the order paper in the name of the Secretary of State for External Affairs as the second order under government notices of motion will have to be amended with respect to Italy?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: No. It is our intention to proceed with this resolution, and, if there is a protocol to the Italian peace treaty, to bring it forward in proper time for approval by the house.

VOCATIONAL TRAINING

CONSOLIDATION INTO ONE AGREEMENT OF SEVERAL TYPES OF TRAINING

Mr. PAUL E. COTE (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table copy of order in council P.C. 1146, passed on March 25, 1948 under the provisions of the Vocational Training Co-ordination Act, 1942. This order in council provides for the consolidation into one agreement of several types of training being carried on under financial arrangements between the dominion and provincial governments. The types of training are: training of veterans, training of unemployed workers, youth training and student aid, training of foremen and supervisors. The new agreement will run for two years from April 1, 1948, whereby the dominion government will pay dollar for dollar the cost of training all except war veterans. The entire cost of the training of war veterans is to be borne by the dominion government.

FREIGHT RATES

INCREASES ORDERED BY TRANSPORT BOARD—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 31

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, before we proceed with the business of the house I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis), to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 31 for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely, the proposed increases in freight rates authorized by the board of transport commissioners, which rates it is understood are to be posted by the railroads concerned on April 8, thus creating a situation demanding urgent consideration by this house with a view to making clear the need for immediate action by the government.

Mr. SPEAKER: Has the hon. member leave of the house?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

And leave having been granted:

Mr. COLDWELL: Mr. Speaker, on March 30, the board of transport commissioners brought down its decision on the application of the railways for permission to increase their rates by thirty per cent. It will be recalled that they also asked that on coal a flat rate or sliding scale of rates of increase be permitted. According to the judgment of the board, the railway companies are authorized to publish and file tariff schedules in accordance with the board's findings on not less than three days' notice. The minimum charge for single less than carload shipments between any two stations will be one hundred pounds at first class rate, but not less than seventy-five cents. Then they go on to say that the recognized differentials via rail, water and rail routes are to be preserved as far as may be practicable, even though certain rates via differential routes may be lower or higher than would otherwise prevail if such rates were subjected to the increase authorized. As hon. members no doubt know from reading the judgment issued by the board, the increase authorized is a flat increase across the board of 21 per cent, together with an increase of 25 cents a ton on coal.

There are of course certain exceptions to this increase which the board has listed, namely, rates affected by the Crowsnest Pass agreement, the rates on the movement of grain, feeds and so on east and west, and the rates which are affected by our relations with the United States and the transportation systems of the two countries.

The proposed increase in freight rates I take it is a matter of vital concern to every part of Canada. It is of particular concern to certain parts of Canada, namely, the maritime provinces, the Pacific coast province of British Columbia and the provinces that we call the prairie provinces. This is a flat increase in rates of 21 per cent across the board—in other words, a horizontal increase, as it was sometimes termed in the discussions before the board of transport commissioners. I think it should be noted that all the interests in the regions to which I have referred, whether governmental, commercial, agricultural, or otherwise are united in opposition to this increase in freight rates.

I would draw the attention of the house to the fact that the implications of these increases are a matter of grave concern to this house and to the country at the present time, because they come in one of the most inflationary periods in modern Canadian economic history.

[Mr. Coldwell.]

According to the dominion bureau of statistics the cost of living index is now 150·8 as compared with 100 as the pre-war level. That is indeed a most substantial increase, and one which has occurred largely within the last twelve or fifteen months. In our opinion this will further aggravate the difficulties that many of our people find in meeting the cost of living on the fixed income or salary or wage which they have been receiving for the past number of years. To those people in the more distant parts of Canada who live on such incomes the impact will be the greatest, just as will the impact be the greatest in every respect on those who live farthest away from this part of Canada which we usually describe as central Canada.

The provinces that are most concerned with the export of primary commodities will feel the effect the most. These are the provinces, like my own province of Saskatchewan, where there is very little manufacturing, where they export the bulk of what they produce and where they have to buy nearly all the things they need for the production of that which they export. The same thing applies in parts of British Columbia, in parts of Alberta and Manitoba and in the maritime provinces. These areas are likely to be the most hard hit by the decision of the board.

The freight rates in these regions have always been unusually high in relation to their total production. Into the cost of their production go the costs of the machines and supplies they must purchase, and in the main those costs, as I shall show in a few moments, have to be met by the producer himself. They cannot be passed on to the public.

I wish to point out to the house, and particularly to the government, that a horizontal or across-the-board increase is particularly discriminatory and prejudicial; it does not affect all parts of Canada in the same way and to the same extent. Where, because of competition by water or by road, railway rates are kept down, the 21 per cent increase is obviously less in dollars than it is in regions where the rates are higher because there is not that effective competition. The dollar increases will be larger in British Columbia and in the maritime provinces and on the prairies than they will be in central Canada where this competition does exist.

When we read the story of confederation we realize that this nation as we now know it was largely made possible by the undertaking given at that time by the government and the fathers of confederation that a transcontinental railway line would be built to the Pacific coast, and it was largely on the basis of those bands of steel that British Columbia joined confederation. We are linked, then, by those bands of steel, and while the board of transport commissioners could not consider what one may term the political implications in the sense in which I have just noted them, while they apparently felt they had to consider the question purely on the ground of economics, this house and this government are in my opinion obligated to take the wider and the broader view of the conditions under which confederation was established in Canada.

We are linked by those bands of steel. Let us not forget that British Columbians could sell much of their produce and purchase many of their commodities to far greater advantage in the Pacific coast states to the south of the line if those bands of steel ran north and south; that the maritime provinces would benefit enormously through being able to trade with the states on the Atlantic coast of the United States, and that the prairie provinces, my own region, would be in a much more advantageous position if the railways ran north and south, thus enabling them to dispose of their goods south of the 49th parallel in Minneapolis and other great cities in the south, and in addition were able to buy their machinery from the United States. But our forefathers decided that we should not link Canada to the United States but build up in this country an independent nation, and we have built up that independent nation along certain lines. One of the bonds that link us together in this country is the bond of railways, those bands of steel to which I have referred. Our forefathers determined to build up an independent Canada, and because of that I submit to the government and to the house that considerations other than those of cold railroad economics must enter into a question of this kind and of this magnitude.

I have said that the substantial increases in the rates are bound to make increases necessary in certain price levels. We had a demonstration of that in 1920 when an increase of some 40 per cent was granted to the railways. As I recall the judgment of the board in 1920 I must say that there is one satisfactory feature about the judgment which the board of transport commissioners gave the other day, and that is that there is to be no interference with the Crowsnest rates. We have read the record of the debates of 1920 and recall the controversy that arose then with respect to what are called the Crowsnest rates, and I am glad that we are not faced with that situation again today. But those increases in railway rates were brought about and were followed by a recession, and together they made our whole position, particularly in the parts of Canada to which I have specifically referred, much more difficult than it might otherwise have been.

I would point out to the house that this judgment of the board is particularly inopportune. Last Saturday the President of the United States signed the European recovery program measure, popularly known as the Marshall plan. We expect that Canada will be called upon to participate in the sending of greater supplies of food and other commodities to Europe under that plan, and of course it will be to our economic advantage to provide those goods. But without effective price controls or subsidies, which have been removed in our country, with an increased demand for our goods without comparable increases in production—and those are not possible to the extent that will be required, because as the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mitchell) loves to tell us from time to time, we have virtually a condition of full employment now and we cannot increase our productivity to a very large extent — with a greater demand for our goods from without the country and the maintenance of purchasing power within the country, there is danger of still greater pressure on the price level, and the 21 per cent increase in freight rates authorized by the board of transport commissioners is bound to make that inflationary pressure greater than it otherwise would have been.

We have also to bear in mind that freight rates enter into the price level at many points. They enter into it when the primary commodity which is to be fabricated or processed leaves the farm or other point of origin and goes to the processing point. Secondly, when the fabricated goods leave the processing point and go to the wholesaler, the 21 per cent freight rate increase is again effective, and when the article goes from the wholesaler to the retailer the same thing applies. Each one of these intermediaries figures his profit on his entire outlay, which includes freight; consequently the increase in freight rates when the commodity reaches the ultimate consumer has been pyramided many times over what it was at the primary point, and the increase in freight rates becomes far more than 21 per cent on that primary article when it ultimately reaches the consumer. And so I say that the freight rate increase will enter into almost every aspect of our price level.

I said a few moments ago that certain competitive carriers exist in certain parts of Canada. They exist in the province of Ontario, and when it was announced that railway freight rates were to be increased by 21 per cent the truckers met and decided to increase their rates by 15 or 20 per cent—I believe it was 20 per cent—still retaining a competitive position; but because of the increased railway freight rates they are able to increase their own rates very substantially. All this—increased cost of production, the increased cost of living, increased transportation rates—is bound to be reflected in an increased demand for wages. In many lines of work wages in this country are not high. Sometimes it is claimed that the men working on the railways are receiving relatively high wages. But today trains of a hundred cars are operated by the same crew of five as trains of forty cars forty years ago; and so the amount of wages spread over the longer and heavier train is not much more than the wages spread over the smaller train of forty cars.

In any event the demand for increased wages will follow the increased cost of living, and we shall be in that inevitable spiral; because wages never catch up with rising prices, and there is unrest when men cannot make both ends meet. Therefore I say that at a time when every effort should be made to reduce living costs and the cost of production, prices will increase and the granting of this increase of 21 per cent to the railroads is a bad example to other industries. We ask other industries to reduce their prices, and at the same time one of the very factors entering into production, the railroads, are permitted a substantial increase in their freight rates. That is why I say it is a bad example to set to other industries.

As usual, in a country like this, freight rates enter into almost every aspect of our commercial relationships. At a time when we need houses for our people, when there is a shortage of dwellings for Canadians, when we need to ship lumber, cement, steel and other commodities that enter into the building of houses from one end of the country to the other, we are permitting an increase of 21 per cent on this heavy freight. The result will be more and more difficult in financing the building of houses and in the purchase of homes by those who need them. Altogether the effect, of course, will ultimately be to increase prices and to restrict purchasing power, because when prices rise, individuals have less to spend on things other than their basic needs.

While I do not think there is any immediate prospect of a depression, particularly with the demands that are likely to be made on the Canadian economy in the next year or two, yet we do have a condition of high prices, and inflation inevitably is followed by deflation and depression.

[Mr. Coldwell.]

In thinking of the farming community of this country we have to bear in mind that the prices of farm commodities are controlled. As a matter of fact, price ceilings are in effect on several farming commodities, on butter particularly at the present time, and under the new wheat agreement negotiated by the thirty-six countries a ceiling of $2 is set, with a sliding scale downward over the next few years, an agreement which I believe has been made in order to stabilize farm prices, and I think therefore worth while. Nevertheless it has placed a ceiling on the goods the farmer produces, while he will have to meet the increased cost of production that will arise because of the increased costs of machines and of the commodities he must buy from outside the areas in which he lives. As a matter of fact that is usually the case with the farmer, because he is one of the producers who cannot pass his costs on to someone else. Usually his prices are pretty well fixed one way or the other, and he has to bear any increase in the cost of production, which is unjust.

I said a moment ago—and I want to emphasize it—that the new rates do not affect grain, and I do not want to leave the impression that they do. The price of wheat has been stabilized by an international agreement, and the increased cost of the farmers' machines will have to be borne by himself. May I also say, Mr. Speaker, that at a time when the demands for supplies from North America, and particularly from Canada, are more intense from Europe, naturally there will be an increasing demand for access to the American market, and under the circumstances that is a very legitimate demand. Altogether it seems to me that what this decision has done is to complicate very seriously the situation for Canada, in relation to both our domestic needs and our export demands.

I said the rates are lower in central Canada because of the competitive water and truck haulage. An increase of 21 per cent means less to the people of central Canada than to the people of the maritimes, of British Columbia and of the prairie provinces, but it is still a serious factor in this part of the country, and I do not want to minimize the seriousness of it by the comparison I have just made. The increase of 25 cents a ton in freight on coal, for example, is a serious factor in central Canada, because central Canada is an area which uses vast quantities of coal for industrial purposes and for domestic heating, and every increase in freight always costs much more than the amount of the increase in freight when the commodity reaches the ultimate consumer. Even if the increase is only 25 cents a ton, it is bound to be reflected in many ways in central Canada itself. Coal is vital to central Canadian industry; coal is vital in domestic heating in this province and in the neighbouring province where there are no coal deposits.

Apart from these economic considerations the government must consider the political effect of this increase on our regional relationships, to which I have already referred, and ultimately on our international relationships; because if the primary producing areas of Canada are hardest hit and the cost of production increases then their competitive position in world markets is made more difficult. Just at the moment one would not expect that to be a factor, but the day will come when the competitive position of various Canadian primary products will decide the abundance or otherwise of our exports overseas.

A short time ago I read some statistics compiled with regard to the improvements in European farm and productive conditions, and I was particularly struck by the enormous acreage that the Russians seeded last fall in addition to the 1946 fall seedings. I think some seven million additional acres were seeded. Reference was also made to the fact that they are breaking a lot of new land and are going to seed some twenty million acres of fallow land this spring. Bear this in mind: the Russian people accept a much lower standard of living than we do, and the result is that food, which may become a political factor, may also become a matter of economic concern to countries like Canada which experienced the effects of the dumping of cheap wheat on the market back in the early thirties. We should consider how it may affect us again.

Consequently, these freight rates, while grain and so on are excluded, will affect everything that enters into the cost of production of grain. Everything entering into that cost will be affected by the new freight rates which have been authorized by the board of transport commissioners. I say therefore that in view of present world conditions the government should give some consideration to the political implications of the board's judgment. We should endeavour to maintain our associations, both economic and political, with the countries of western Europe and with the United Kingdom, and these associations may depend in no small measure, in a few years' time, upon our ability to sell basic commodities at prices which can be paid by the people overseas and at the same time provide our own people with a reasonable and decent standard of living. But the increase in the freight rates will make it difficult to do either or both of these things.

As I have indicated, the board of transport commissioners could not consider many of the factors I have put before the house this afternoon, but this parliament should and must consider them, and the government should and must do so now. The board, though, admitted that the representations made by some of those who appeared before it were correct. Incidentally, last week the new balance sheet of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company confirmed the statements that were made before the board, that the Canadian Pacific had presented a really pessimistic estimate of its receipts for 1947. Again, that is a factor which the government should take into consideration.

The department of immigration at the present time, from the point of view both of developing our country and, what I think is at the moment even more important, of giving refuge to those who have suffered on account of the war, is bringing to the country many new settlers, some of whom will go into the more remote areas of Canada; and transportation costs will tend, as they have always done, to restrict settlement of those more distant parts.

For example, the district represented by my hon. friend the member for Peace River (Mr. Low) contains enormous quantities of good land yet to be settled. There are various parts of British Columbia, and some parts of Saskatchewan and indeed other sections of our country, which, at a time when we are bringing people into Canada for ultimate settlement, are looking for such settlers; but this freight rate increase will make it more difficult to settle these people economically because of the transportation costs to and from the more remote areas of the things they need or produce.

Then, too, we have to give some attention to the livestock industry. This action will certainly retard expansion in the livestock industry of Canada. It will make hog and dairy production less remunerative because the farmer cannot pass on his increased costs; and already, as has been noted in this house by various hon. members, and admitted by the Minister of Agriculture himself, there has been a serious decline in our hog population in the prairie provinces. At the moment we are suffering severe shortages in some lines of dairy produce, particularly butter. You can see the consequences of this threatened increase if you consider one or two examples of the effect that will be produced.

I have here a bill for the shipment of thirty-nine head of cattle from a Saskatchewan point to the Toronto market. This Saskatchewan point is near Moose Jaw. It is a little place called Crane Valley. The present rate from Crane Valley is $1.09 per 100 pounds. The actual weight of the carload of steers was 21,430 pounds. In the amount I am going to put before the house there was no charge for stopovers and sometimes there are substantial charges for stopovers for various reasons. As I say, the freight charge was $1.09. That amounted to $233.59. Together with the care of the car, and feed en route, the total charge by the railway—and I am advised that it is on that total charge that they can make the increased freight rate—was $238.34. If we take 21 per cent of $238.34, which is the increase to be allowed, we find it amounts to $50.05, which the farmer will have to pay.

It may be said of course that the prices of cattle are relatively high, though they are certainly not as high as they are in the United States, and not as high perhaps as warranted by the present situation, but they are very much higher than I can remember them years ago. I can remember when animals were shipped, not to Toronto from a Saskatchewan point, but to Winnipeg from Saskatchewan points, and the farmers received bills for the freight because the cattle did not pay the freight. In fact, I believe I have such a bill in my files upstairs at the present time. Today of course the prices of cattle compared with those of the time of which I speak are relatively high; and if, as will inevitably happen some time, we have drastic reductions in the price level of these animals, then an increase of $50.05 on a carload of cattle, which is substantial at the present time, will be crippling in the future.

These are factors that should be considered by the government when they are coming to a decision in regard to this matter. Of course, I could give other examples equally striking but I do not propose to weary the house with them. The one I have mentioned will suffice. That one, however, could be multiplied many times in respect of other commodities from the maritime provinces, from British Columbia, and other types of goods from the prairie provinces.

Let me point out that the areas to which I have referred, and particularly perhaps the prairie provinces, have always been penalized by the operations of the tariff policies of various governments. Almost everything we have to buy in order to produce and to live in western Canada has been imported, if not from the United States, with a high tariff, then from eastern Canada, where the manufacturer has taken advantage of the tariff and added on the tariff toll to the cost of his commodity.

Mr. HOMUTH: Oh, no.

Mr. COLDWELL: The hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Homuth) objects to that statement, but all you have to do is to price an automobile in ordinary times in this country and in the United States and you will find that the tariff is in the price of the automobile that one buys in Canada whether the car is made in Canada or not. Take radios for example. I gave a good example here before Christmas of a little radio which I knew cost $96 in the United States and which I found in one of the large jewelry stores in this city priced at $197 plus tax.

Mr. KNOWLES: What tax?

Mr. COLDWELL: The excise tax.

Mr. KNOWLES: It was not on then.

Mr. COLDWELL: The tax was being collected illegally, but unfortunately, in spite of the majority vote against it on this side of the house, the house subsequently validated the illegal collection of that tax. That will be for ever held against the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) and the government.

Mr. ABBOTT: A previous debate.

Mr. COLDWELL: We have been penalized by the tariff, and now we are to be penalized by a further increase in freight rates. I should like to suggest that we should not leave the matter there but rather that the government consider an alternative policy. If we are, as we contend, living in a country which has been built up largely upon railway facilities, then the people who live in distant parts of it should not be penalized because they live there. Consideration should be given to the equalization of freight rates across this country, thus recognizing that the railways are indeed a vital factor in the preservation of confederation. If the railways, as is contended, are unable to provide adequate services and to pay proper wages to their staffs with their present revenues, it seems to me that there arises the question of a national transportation policy for this country, that that national transportation policy should be presented to the house by the government, which should take responsibility for recommending it, and that the house should consider it and either modify it or adopt it as the case may be. There should be no regional injustices in order to finance the railways or to keep in operation any part of the Canadian economy. In our opinion an extension of government regulation of competing transportation agencies is overdue. I know that one of the factors in the demand for increased freight rates is that much of the profitable freight and passenger traffic is now being carried by buses and trucks. It seems to me that whether the buses or trucks are owned and operated by private companies—and I am not going into that aspect of it this afternoon; let us leave that out—or whether they are operated by governments, we should consider how they can best be integrated into the whole transportation system so that they may feed rather than destroy the great lines of railway upon which this country depends for its existence.

I note that the board of transport commissioners admit that railway freight rates —and I shall be just one minute longer, if I may conclude, Mr. Speaker—should be just and reasonable. I say that they have always been unjust, unreasonable and discriminatory as far as certain parts of this country are concerned, namely, the maritimes, British Columbia, and the prairie provinces. This freight increase makes them more unjustified, more unreasonable and more discriminatory. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I want to urge upon the government that they take immediate action—not consideration but action—to prevent the increase in rates until a thorough investigation has been made, having regard not only to the economic factors upon which the board delivered judgment but also to the broader political considerations to which I have referred this afternoon, and to present an alternative policy to this house for its consideration.

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): It was only to be expected, Mr. Speaker, that the freight rate question would arise in the house after the decision of the board of transport commissioners became known. I listened with a great deal of attention to the remarks made by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell), and while I agree with everything he said, I would point out that, as a result of this decision, no province has been harder hit than British Columbia. I can say this also because I am one of the few members in the house who had the responsibility some years ago of appearing before the board of transport commissioners in an appeal with regard to freight rates on grain, and who also had the privilege of appearing before the privy council—which, by the way, is the government —in an appeal against an adverse decision made by the then board of railway commissioners on the same question.

It is not generally recognized—and I am not saying this in a derogatory sense, but rather as a result of experience—that the board of transport commissioners are not doing the job which they were set up to do in the first place. They were set up to protect the public from the railways; they are now protecting the railways from the public. I say that in all sincerity. This decision which they have made cannot be taken lightly by the government, and I shall make one or two proposals before I sit down. But there are other matters that I want to deal with before making the proposals which I have in mind.

First of all, may I say that I am sorry I came down to the house without my file on freight rates, which I have been keeping since 1934. For sixty years British Columbia has been fighting what is known as the mountain differential in freight rates. They have spent considerable sums of money in appearing before the board of transport commissioners. Here is one thing I found when I appeared before them. It did not matter what argument you placed before the board of transport commissioners, they always came back with this answer: this matter of the differential in freight rates was decided many years ago and we cannot change that decision. The board of transport commissioners are not interested in trade. They are not interested in the development of trade. That is not their job; at least they say it is not their job. But when it comes to an application for an increase of freight rates and passenger fares, this fact should stand out. No real expert from the railways has yet been able to tell the board of transport commissioners just what it costs to haul passengers or to haul a ton of freight. The evidence of the C.P.R. is on record when they had their experts before the board, and not one of them could give the information. It was I believe impossible to tell. Therefore the railways went about their job of putting the charges on the public to the extent, in the words of the old statement, of what the traffic would bear. The differential into British Columbia has been paid for many times over by the people of that province. As was pointed out by the leader of the C.C.F. (Mr. Coldwell), when we entered confederation it was understood that we would have a railway on equal terms with the other provinces of Canada. When the C.P.R. went into our province, acting contrary to better judgment and deciding against the route chosen by the government of that day, they picked the highest grade for a railway into the province. We have been victimized right from the beginning, from the time the railway came into the province until the present time. I know that there may be members from Ontario who will get up and say it is wrong for us to contend that we in British Columbia are paying more for freight than they are. But may I point this out to the house. It is strange and significant that in the appeals by the various provinces before the board of transport commissioners, Ontario and Quebec were not represented. I ask the people of this country and I ask the government to make inquiries why those two provinces did not appear before the board and make representations.

Mr. KNOWLES: They never come to anything.

Mr. REID: I am not going to say anything about stories that have been told us as to the reasons they want to acquiesce, namely that they have a compact with the freight lines or something else. But in a great national question, when we hear members from the province of Ontario denying that they do not discriminate against other provinces, then certainly it is very strange that on this national question there was no representation from either Ontario or Quebec.

Mr. HOMUTH: What is your government doing?

Mr. REID: Our provincial government at least has done more than Mr. Drew, because they have already protested. I will wait to hear the protest from Ontario. That at least is something.

Mr. HOMUTH: I am asking about the government at Ottawa. What are they doing?

Mr. REID: We will ask them, too.

Mr. HOMUTH: You ought to.

Mr. REID: I am on my feet now to ask that very question.

Mr. HOMUTH: But you will not get an answer.

Mr. REID: Well I have done more than you; at least I am protesting, while all you are doing is to interrupt. Just let me proceed with my argument. If this is going to be a debate between you and me, then I will accept it. I thought, however, this was above that kind of thing; if it is not, I will abide by any rules you like to put into effect. I believe that before I have finished I shall prove what I say about the benefits received by the two central provinces—especially Ontario—as against British Columbia.

When the Canadian Pacific railway built into British Columbia they were paid well over $100 million and given twenty miles of land on each side of the tracks through the province. The people and the government of that day reckoned that we had paid the C.P.R. for coming through the mountains. There still are people who think that when you go to British Columbia you go over the mountains and then drop down. As a matter of fact the Canadian National railways has through British Columbia the lowest grade for the whole of Canada. It has a grade of not more than ·7 per cent on its low level water route. What does the board of transport commissioners do about the low grade of the C.N.R. as compared with the high grade of the C.P.R.? The C.N.R. could haul passengers from Ottawa to British Columbia—Vancouver or New Westminster—twelve hours ahead of the C.P.R.

An hon. MEMBER: More than that.

Mr. REID: Well, twelve hours, anyway; I am conservative when I say that.

Mr. COLDWELL: That is good enough.

Mr. REID: But are they permitted to do it?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. REID: Are they permitted to meet the developments of trucking and transport by air? No, they are not. The board of transport commissioners says: We will not allow the C.N.R. to do it because if you did, it would hurt the C.P.R. Hence I say to the house that the board of transport commissioners is not doing its duty because it is protecting the railways against the best interests of the people of Canada.

Mr. KNOWLES: They are protecting private enterprise.

Mr. REID: British Columbia thought it was going to get justice when the Canadian National Railways came into that province. For sixty years we have fought the battle. Before any national increase was allowed in freight rates, the differential to the Pacific coast should have been removed. There should have been equalization before any increase was put into effect.

True, we are getting a kind of sop when grain is left out of the picture—and, although I am not sure of it, I believe coal is also out.

Mr. COLDWELL: Twenty-five cents a ton.

Mr. REID: I know grain is out of it, and I am pleased. But what about all the other commodities? What about the hauling of apples, for instance? What about the rates on the produce we buy in other provinces? As I said, I have not my file with me at the present time, and as a result I have not the latest figures. On other occasions, however, I have quoted from those records and figures to show that back in 1938, before the war, British Columbia, whilst selling on an export market, bought something like $78,000,000 worth of goods from the two central provinces, while those two provinces bought goods to the value of $12,500,000 from British Columbia.

In the light of those figures one would think that we would have an equalization of freight rates into British Columbia. But our manufacturers and our other people, when they attempt to ship the same kind of goods back east, have to pay up to 200 per cent more over the same mileage than do the people in the east when they are shipping those products into British Columbia.

I have here one or two newspaper clippings, and while I shall not weary the house by placing all the details on the record to show the discriminatory rates, I shall mention one or two of them. Let us consider, for instance, items such as bleaching powder and liquid wax, the latter of which comes from Brantford, Ontario. Liquid wax in cans shipped from Brantford to Winnipeg carries a commodity rate of $1.38½ per hundred pounds on the all-rail route and $1.28½ by the great lakes. On the same goods shipped from Vancouver the rate is not $1.28½ but $1.71. Is there any reason why a commodity going east should pay that much more than the same commodity coming west? It is as if a passenger who steps on a train at the Pacific coast were required to pay a higher fare to come to Ottawa than if he were going from Ottawa to the Pacific coast.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): He should pay more to get out there.

Mr. REID: And if any hon. member from Ontario disputes these figures, let him try to correct them if he can. I note in this list mention is made of the town of Chilliwack. From Chilliwack to Winnipeg the rate is $1.26½, whereas if a shipment is made from Sherbrooke to Winnipeg, the same distance, the rate is $1.14. Coffee shipped from Vancouver to Winnipeg would carry a rate of $1.54, whereas if shipped from Montreal to Winnipeg the rate would be 96½ cents.

One could go on down the list item after item to show this discrimination. It matters little what we have to purchase in British Columbia; the fact is that we have to pay from thirty to two hundred per cent more on the goods we buy from Ontario and Quebec than we should be called upon to pay.

There is something else entering into the picture of freight rates which is not generally understood, and that is that sometimes rates are made in the United States. There is in existence an organization known as the Canadian Freight Association, with headquarters in Chicago. In 1941 one of the local manufacturers in Vancouver wanted to manufacture an article in that city and ship it to eastern Canada. But strange as it may seem, when an appeal was placed before the Canadian Freight Association, which, I understand, is an association of railway interests of Canada and the United States, an adverse decision was given. This association meets and decides rates. The rate was decided by the Canadian Freight Association in the city of Chicago. Representatives of the two countries meet and I suppose they see to it that the Canadian rate does not go too low in case it might draw traffic away from the United States. It is a serious matter for the people of this country, especially at a time like this when they are called upon to pay an increase of 21 per cent over what they have been paying.

I know the railways are having difficult times these days, but I think this is partly due to the antiquated system under which they are operating. I may be wrong, but I know that if one travels on the Great Northern Railway he may leave the city of Vancouver and be in Toronto almost one day sooner than he would if he travelled by either of the Canadian lines. That railway is operating so efficiently that it is meeting the competition of air travel, and the cost is no greater. This is a condition to which we should give serious thought.

I want to repeat—because I think it should be said again—that the Canadian National Railways have been held down by the Canadian Pacific both in the matter of freights and in the matter of passengers. I do not know particularly about the prairie provinces, but I do know that in and out of British Columbia the Canadian National Railways can haul two to three times the passenger or freight cars hauled by the Canadian Pacific, owing to the fact that on the C.P.R. there is at some points a grade of 2·5 per cent whereas on the C.N.R. they have a low level water route stretching right from the coast to the prairies of not over ·7 per cent.

On a number of occasions I have informed the British Columbia government that it is useless to appeal to the board of transport commissioners for a reversal of their judgments. Therefore we must come to the real appeal board, to the foot of the throne, to the crown, in order to present our case. I am pleading as hard as I can and as sincerely as I can that the government do not allow this increase to be put into effect until the whole matter of freight rates is reviewed by some body other than the board of transport commissioners. The board of transport commissioners are so hedged in with past decisions they have made that you might just as well stay home. Unless you want to see the capital city of Ottawa you will be just wasting time and money to come down here.

I think I mentioned a little while ago that the Canadian Pacific had obtained an additional concession in British Columbia through being granted an injunction against the operation of trucks in the national parks. Truck transportation in the national parks has therefore been eliminated, and the people in the interior are still called upon to pay high freight rates with the mountain differential, whereas if this injunction had not been granted freight by trucks could be operated to the prairie provinces.

I could mention many cases, but I shall refer to only one or two to show how their decisions and their attitude have restricted trade. A few years ago a certain manufacturer wanted the right to operate his trucks in bond from Vancouver to Calgary. As hon. members know, there is no national highway through to the prairie. He had a contract to deliver five tons of fresh fish which he was going to freight from Vancouver to Calgary. He told me that he could land that fish in Calgary three hours ahead of the railway express and then bring back to the province grain which he could carry at rates cheaper than those charged by the railways. But they would not allow him to send his trucks through in bond.

I say without fear of successful contradiction that our whole attitude to railway freight rates and to the railways is wrong. Many hon. members have advocated the construction of a highway from one end of the country to the other, and in my opinion the reason we do not have such a highway is that the railways fear it and have blocked progress. Something has to be done.

I know that losses by the railways have to be taken care of, but it is also a fact that there is much duplication of railway lines. I think it was the late Sir Edward Beatty who said that at least $60,000,000 to $75,000,000 could be saved if the railroads could get together to eliminate the duplication of lines in certain districts. It might well be under a new set-up they could haul all the freight into British Columbia over the Canadian National and all passengers over the Canadian Pacific. I am not sure, but I feel quite certain that if we had only the Canadian National running into British Columbia we would not be paying the high rates we are called upon to pay today.

I am going to conclude my remarks by strongly appealing to the government, and in all sincerity, to step in on behalf of the people of Canada and not permit this decision to be put into effect. I submit that the whole freight rate structure of Canada, particularly that of British Columbia, is antiquated and out of date under modern conditions. It is just something which has been set up to make the public pay.

An hon. MEMBER: What the traffic will bear.

Mr. REID: All the traffic will bear, as one hon. member says. I think that expresses it very well. I appeal to the government to consider this decision seriously in the light of what we consider to be the needs of the present situation.

Mr. KARL HOMUTH (Waterloo South): Mr. Speaker, I had no intention of taking part in this debate until I listened to hon. members attacking the provinces of Ontario and Quebec with regard to the decision on freight rates. The provinces of Ontario and Quebec have nothing to do with freight rates; those rates are set by the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada. If those two provinces saw fit not to appear before the transport board with regard to freight rates, that was their own business. The other seven provinces did appear and tens of thousands of dollars were spent by governments on experts and legal counsel in order that the case might be placed before the transport board. This having been done, the board finally rendered a decision.

I listened attentively this afternoon to the leader of the C.C.F. (Mr. Coldwell). I was not sure as he went along whether he was or was not opposed to the increase.

Mr. COLDWELL: That was obvious.

Mr. HOMUTH: Just wait until I am through. I was not sure whether he was opposed to the increase, but as he concluded his speech I realized that he was opposed to it. What is the actual situation? Like any other business or industry in this country, no matter how small or how large, the railways were faced with increased costs during the war and it was impossible for them to renovate their roadbeds and cars and other equipment. They have to do that now. Anyone who travels on the railways knows very well how much they are in need of new equipment. I think every Canadian will say that no transportation system in the world did a better job during the war than our railways. They carried on with only one major disaster during those years.

The board has made its decision. Differentials in freight rates are a matter of government policy; they are something for the government itself to decide. If the government is prepared to pay subsidies, or whatever you may call it, on freight moving east or west from the central provinces, that is a matter of government policy. Surely we should not condemn the railroads or the board of transport commissioners because of the decision that has been made.

I thought that after the motion had been made this afternoon the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) or some other responsible minister of the crown would have made a statement as to the government policy with respect to this decision. So far we have not heard that.

The hon. member who has just sat down made a speech taking to task the province of Ontario and the province of Quebec and telling us of the sorry plight of British Columbia in the matter of freight rates. We heard cheers from the members from the maritimes and the western provinces when the leader of the C.C.F. was speaking. I wonder why they did not bring to bear upon the government itself some of the arguments which they use in this house and ask the government to see to it that a policy is adopted which will bring freight rates more into line with national conditions.

Mr. REID: Because we are outnumbered.

Mr. HOMUTH: My hon. friend says "because we are outnumbered". It seems peculiar that a group of men representing the west and the maritimes in this house have not sufficient influence within their own party to get it to adopt a policy that is good for the whole nation. Nevertheless that is the situation.

Under the Railway Act there is an appeal against the rates where discrimination can be shown.

An hon. MEMBER: Then what happens?

Mr. HOMUTH: I have found some very favourable decisions given even where rail and water transport competed. In the summer months, when we had water transportation on the inland lakes, I have found the board favourably inclined to seeing that moderate rates were set, even when there was no competition from the railways. My hon. friend said that if only the Canadian National ran to British Columbia the situation would be different altogether. Surely he realizes that where you have competition you have lower rates. In all my experience, and I have had considerable experience with railways and steamship companies, I have found that where only one line runs into a town or village the rate is higher because there is no competition. My hon. friend must mean by his argument that if the National line ran into British Columbia it would see to it that it got—

Mr. REID: We would have had that, but the board of transport commissioners would not grant it.

Mr. HOMUTH: Let me say that the board of transport commissioners is a creature of the government which my hon. friend supports, and if there is dissatisfaction with the board there is only one thing for the government to do.

Mr. CHEVRIER: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the board of transport commissioners is not a creature of the government, as my hon. friend knows, but a creature of parliament, which is an entirely different thing. While I am on my feet perhaps he will allow me to say, as I did not want to interrupt him when he referred to government policy concerning equalization, that under the Railway Act equalization of tolls and facilities is a matter for the board of transport commissioners to decide. I am not denying the responsibility of the government upon appeal, but I say to my hon. friend that that is the situation under the act.

Mr. HOMUTH: I appreciate what my hon. friend says, but he might as well say that the budget itself is a creature of parliament; nevertheless it embodies the policy of the government. If I were sitting on the government benches and had any authority, and if the board of transport commissioners in my opinion were not acting in the general welfare of this country, I would fire them and appoint a board that would so act, and my hon. friend knows that only too well.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I know no such thing.

Mr. HOMUTH: It is all very well to say that the board is a creature of parliament, but if this government wanted to change the board tomorrow and brought in a bill for the purpose, every member of the house knows that it would go through and there would be a new board.

Mr. CHEVRIER: And who would object to that more than my hon. friend?

Mr. HOMUTH: Certainly I would. But if I were on the government side I would not. Let us be frank about these things. If I were sitting with the government I would certainly see that the policies I believed in were carried out, and if the board of transport commissioners were not carrying out the policy of the government, I would change the board. Let the government bring in a policy that will satisfy every member from the east and from the west.

I listened very carefully to the leader of the C.C.F. this afternoon and I heard his reference to buses and trucks. I was in the Ontario legislature for a number of years at a time when motor vehicle traffic was starting to build up in this province from 173,000 licences until today there are some 1,200,000 licences in the province. At that time the railways were dead to the issue. They were not paying much attention to the bus and truck competition, but finally they realized it was a factor. The leader of the C.C.F. said that we should work out a transportation policy in this country that would integrate the bus and truck traffic with the railways. In other words it was a mild way of saying that we should nationalize or socialize the whole bus, truck and railway business in this country. That of course would be their policy if they came into power.

I believe that the question of the differential and the question of the equalization of freight rates must be the responsibility of the government, and the government must accept that responsibility. I do not see how the government can go against the board of transport commissioners which has said that there must be a 21 per cent increase in freight rates. I do not see how the government can say to the railways: You are not going to have that increase. The question has been under investigation for over a year. The greatest legal minds in the country appeared before the board for the railways, and against them were arrayed the best legal minds the government could get to refute their arguments. Having heard the evidence and the argument the board decided that there must be a 21 per cent increase in freight rates. In view of that fact I do not see how the government can say to the railways: You are not going to have that increase. But, on the other hand, if the government as a result of this increase decides that there must be a new policy of equalization if there is discrimination as between the east and west and the central provinces, that is a matter of government policy.

This afternoon the leader of the C.C.F. put his party on record as being opposed to increased freight rates. He said that the railways were the bond that bound together the provinces of this dominion. That might have been the case at one time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. ISNOR: Why not now?

Mr. HOMUTH: Certain promises were made at confederation to provide railway communication between the provinces, and that was done. But we have grown up since then, and today there are much stronger bonds than those bands of steel of which the leader of the C.C.F. spoke. They are the bonds of Canadian nationhood, which have been welded time and time again in the last thirty years, when men and women from every province banded together and went out to fight for the safety of this country. Those are much stronger than bands of steel to bind this country together. I would hate to think that it was only because of economic conditions that we as provinces were banded together into one nation.

Mr. MUTCH: Not on this issue.

Mr. HOMUTH: I come from the province of Ontario and I believe that to build up a nation we must be prepared to give and take. There cannot be any east and there cannot be any west; there cannot be any Quebec and there cannot be any Ontario. We have to be willing to give and take, to give more and take less. If we all adopt that attitude we will get along much better.

An hon. MEMBER: Why do you not practise it?

Mr. HOMUTH: I say to my hon. friend that I have practised it all my political life, which is more than my political friend can say.

This afternoon the leader of the C.C.F. party rose in his place and condemned the increase in freight rates. I remember an occasion some three or four years ago when a few of us, members of all parties in the house, were gathered together. A by-election had been held that day. It looked as though the C.C.F. candidate might be elected, but he was defeated. On the same day a labour organization met in the city of Montreal and passed a resolution stating that they would endorse the C.C.F. as the political arm of labour. A certain C.C.F. member who was sitting with the group said, "Well, we lost the by-election, but look at the tremendous victory we have won. We now have the C.C.L. and the C.I.O. unions of this country adopting the C.C.F. as the political arm of labour." All down through the last few years we have found that the heads of the C.I.O. and the C.C.L. unions have come out and tried to turn the members of their unions into a political field that is foreign to most of them. They have tried to make them vote for C.C.F. candidates. They are forgetting all their trade union principles and are paying more attention to the political arm of labour than to the injustices under which the trade union members may be suffering. Today the political arm of the C.I.O. and the C.C.L. is more important to the leaders of these organizations than fighting for the rights of the men who belong to the unions. Today in this house we have the leader of the C.C.F. party condemning the increase in freight rates, and his great political pal, who he hopes will be able to send many more C.C.F. members to the House of Commons and to the various legislatures of Canada, Mr. Mosher, says that the increase in rates is not enough; that it should be a great deal more. I realize that politics makes strange bedfellows, but this combination is about the strangest that I have ever seen. It was surprising to me today to hear the leader of the C.C.F. party condemn the decision of the board of transport commissioners at a time when the men who form a great part of the labour unions, and whom the leaders are trying to have pledge their support to the C.C.F., are demanding higher wages and are saying that the only way they can get them is to have the railways increase their earnings.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we are in this position. The board of transport commissioners have made a decision. The decision has been made as the result of careful consideration on their part and, I would say, as the result of the argument of the best legal minds in this country and the advice of the best chartered accountants. The case was ably presented to the board of transport commissioners. If the decision of the board means discrimination, if it means unfairness in rates, then it comes back on the lap of the government, and the government must accept the responsibility of bringing down such a policy as will rectify any discriminations there may be. Let us deal with this thing not from a political angle but in a realistic way. Let us realize that our two great railways are two of the most important parts of our whole economy. They have done a wonderful job down through the years, and will do a greater job in the future. Surely we should not stand in this house and condemn them today. Rather we should condemn the lack of policy of the government, if there is such a thing as discrimination, as some of my hon. friends opposite from the east and the west have said.

Mr. KNOWLES: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. HOMUTH: Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES: My hon. friend was correct when he said that the leader of this group opposed this increase. Will the hon. member state whether he is in favour of or opposed to the 21 per cent increase?

Mr. HOMUTH: I will say this to my hon. friend, and I have always maintained the same policy. No industry, no business in this country, can adequately pay its employees what they should get unless it has the earnings with which to do it.

Mr. KNOWLES: Is the answer yes or no?

Mr. HOMUTH: Have you stopped beating your wife?

Mr. KNOWLES: Apparently you have not.

Mr. HOMUTH: In closing I say this—

Mr. KNOWLES: Without an answer.

Mr. HOMUTH: I appeal to the government to handle this matter in such a way that we can face the future with a reasonable assurance that there will be no discrimination as between various parts of the country. I appeal to the government to give us a railway policy which will help build up this country as we hope to see it built up.

Mr. ANTHONY HLYNKA (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, speaking for this group in the house on March 10, 1947, as recorded at page 1229 of Hansard, I said that in the matter of freight rates the Social Crediters stated their position clearly in the Alberta brief on dominion-provincial relations entitled "The case for Alberta," published in 1938. I pointed out at that time that in view of the existing discrimination in the freight rate structure against the western provinces, and particularly against the province of Alberta, we advocated a downward revision of freight rate structure for western Canada rather than any increase. I also said that we realized the fact that it was in the best interests of Canada to have an efficient and smooth running railway service; and if it could be shown that the railways need additional revenue to operate efficiently we would not oppose any justifiable adjustment, but definitely not at the expense of the prairie provinces or of any other one section of Canada. I can only emphasize the point that the load should be borne equally by the entire nation; but to determine the financial position of the railways the house should be supplied with accurate figures as to the earnings and operating costs of the railways in order that the members may be in a position to consider this question intelligently. Failing this, Social Crediters have no other choice than to oppose any upward revision of freight rates and to continue pressing for a downward revision of freight rates for the prairie provinces, and for a fair equalization of freight rates for the entire country.

I do not intend to argue at this time the effect which the increase in freight-cost will have on the cost of living in Canada. Suffice it to say that $70,000,000 additional freight-cost will be imposed on the Canadian people in addition to the already high cost of living in this country.

I notice that the spokesmen for the railway companies have stated that they will perhaps need and ask for further increases as time goes by, and several of them have asked what would happen if the railways were to go bankrupt. I do not think any reasonable, responsible Canadian would want to see our railways bankrupt. We believe that, should the railways require additional revenue, they should have it. But as I have pointed out, we cannot support discrimination such as has been practised in the past.

In the Montreal Gazette of April 1, 1948, there appeared an editorial which placed before the Canadian people views which in my opinion should be corrected. The editorial stated:

> One of the most important features of this week's judgment of the transport board on railway freight rates was that it upheld the railways' insistence on an inclusive, uniform percentage increase applying equally to all areas of the country and all rates embraced by the decision. Both by inference and by stated conclusions, the judgment unequivocally rejected the vehement, often stormy demands for special favours that would lift or reduce the burden of any increase for the prairie province and the maritimes. The board is to be commended for thus firmly resisting the considerable pressures, political and otherwise, brought to bear upon it to discriminate between different geographic regions and economic categories of the country as a whole. The award upholds the sound principle that the rate increases finally found necessary shall be spread evenly across the general rate structure and borne pro rata by all classes and areas of the national community.

That statement is an interesting one but it is totally misleading. Let me quote two sentences from an article written by the Hon. Stuart Garson, Premier of Manitoba, which appeared in the Edmonton Journal on November 22, 1947:

> In the current freight rates hearings before the transport board of Canada, exhibit 131 filed by the Canadian Pacific Railway, shows that in the ten years from 1936 to 1945 inclusive, 65·8 per cent of the operating profits of the Canadian Pacific Railway were made in western Canada. Unfortunately, no comparable figures are available from the Canadian National Railways.

In the light of that statement, I ask you, Mr. Speaker, is there no discrimination, as the Montreal Gazette states? Not only that, but let me point out something else. The population of Canada in 1941 was 11,506,655. The western provinces of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba had a population of 3,239,766, and the rest of Canada, the larger part of Canada, or what we in the western provinces usually call eastern Canada, had a population of 8,266,889.

Now 3,239,766 people in the four western provinces contributed to the profit of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, in the ten years mentioned by Mr. Garson, 65·8 per cent, while 8,266,889 people contributed, in the same ten year period, only 34·2 per cent of the operating profit of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. That is the point; that is the pivot on which our argument is based. I want to repeat it because it is the strongest argument and one which cannot be refuted, an argument which totally disproves any contention that western Canada is not being discriminated against—and, of course, the maritime provinces. The fact that 3,239,766 people contribute 65·8 per cent to the operating profit of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, while 8,266,889 people contribute only 34·2 per cent is an argument that cannot be brushed aside. Let someone answer it.

Let me point out further that the standard rate for first-class freight east of Fort William and Port Arthur is fifty-eight cents for 100 pounds for 100 miles. West of Fort William the first-class rate is sixty-five cents for the same weight and distance. Moreover, discrimination is also practised in applying the process known as "tapering", by which standard rates per mile are reduced on long hauls. On a 500 mile haul in the eastern division this reduction amounts to 25 per cent on the mileage rate for short hauls, while in the west the reduction is only 11·4 per cent; yet long hauls are more common in western Canada than in eastern Canada.

Here are some other important and striking examples of discrimination. Take lumber. A carload of lumber shipped from a Quebec lumber centre, Mont Laurier to Glencoe, Ontario, a distance of 643 miles, pays twenty-three cents per 100 pounds. On the other hand, a carload shipped from Vancouver to Calgary, also a distance of 643 miles, pays fifty cents per hundredweight. Again, let us take freight charges from Okanagan Landing to Calgary, a distance of 358 miles. The cost is $1.04 per hundredweight, while for practically the same distance, from Hamilton to Vaudreuil, 355 miles, the cost is sixty-five cents per hundredweight. Then from Okanagan Landing to Red Deer, 453 miles, the rate is $1.41 per hundredweight, and from Hamilton to Isbister, a distance of 453 miles, the rate is 91½ cents per hundredweight.

On a carload of domestic grain the rate per 100 miles is 7½ cents per hundredweight in the east, fifteen cents on the prairies and seventeen cents in British Columbia. Then again it costs forty-nine cents per hundredweight to ship grain from Streamstown, Alberta, to Vancouver, a distance of 995 miles; while it costs only twenty cents to ship it from Fort William to Montreal exactly the same distance.

Let me give one or two other examples. A carload of flannelette blankets intended for Vancouver may be sent under a special "cotton goods" rate of $1.75 per hundredweight. A similar carload sent to Edmonton is put in an entirely different classification at $4.53¼ per hundredweight.

An hon. MEMBER: From where?

Mr. HLYNKA: From the east; from Montreal.

The town of Holden, Alberta, is only sixty miles from Edmonton, but it is cheaper to ship eastern goods there via Vancouver than it is to bill them through Edmonton.

Some of these examples I have cited are absolute proof that our freight rate structure as it has existed for many years is out of date and, as the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) has stated, should be overhauled. I want to point out that the board of transport commissioners sat on this case for 174 sitting days. If the decision which they handed down is the best they could do in 174 sitting days, I do not know what they would hatch if they continued sitting much longer. We must realize that the time has arrived for Canada to organize her freight rate structure on a sound, scientific basis. This discrimination which has been practised for so long, by placing as much burden on the western provinces as they can possibly bear, has run its limit. I might say, Mr. Speaker, that members and the people in western Canada are not against the central provinces. We are not blaming the central provinces, but we certainly place the responsibility for the freight structure on the doorstep of the government.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) mentioned that the board of transport commissioners was named or set up by this parliament. That is true. But it is also true that the government has the power to overrule any decision of the board; the minister knows that. Surely the time has come for us to realize that the people in western Canada should not be asked to continue bearing the burden they bore during the thirties and of course, since then, with regard to freight rates. Why should three million people pay into the treasury of the railway company by way of freight rates twice as much as eight million pay? There is no justifiable reason for it.

It is pointed out in the press that because the C.P.R. had a deficit of $33,737 for the month of February, the position of the C.P.R. was shaky and therefore western Canada and the maritimes must stand the burden. Let me say this. If I know the people of western Canada at all, this time it will not be sufficient for hon. members to rise in their places and speak for fifteen or twenty minutes or forty minutes and then mail out a number of copies of Hansard to their key men and say, "You see, we tried our best, but the government did not do anything about it; they let the board of transport commissioners put it through." That will not be enough this time. My view is that any member from the three western provinces, regardless of the party he represents, or from the maritimes—

Mr. KNOWLES: The four western provinces.

Mr. HLYNKA: Yes, from the four western provinces or the maritimes—if he allows this thing to go through, has no business to go back to those people and ask for support, because he is not representing their interests as well as he should.

Mr. BLACKMORE: He has no business to stay in parliament, even.

Mr. HLYNKA: The hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Homuth) stated that the railways needed money to replace their equipment. He also pointed out that the railways rendered a great service to Canada during the war years. That is all true. I do not think anyone in a reasonable frame of mind would deny that. But that does not mean that we in western Canada should have to fork out some more cash to contribute an even greater proportion than before in order to help out the railways. I feel that, as I have already pointed out, the time has come for this government to find ways and means of arriving at some scientific solution to this problem. Surely it is not fair for us to carry this burden any longer.

I notice some headings in papers published in western Canada, and I just want to make a brief reference to this. One of them goes on to say, "West provinces get concession." How do you like that? Then they go on to say, "The prairie provinces received a substantial concession in Tuesday's freight rate judgment." A substantial concession!

Another newspaper goes on to state:

> Western farmers naturally will be pleased with the concession on western grain movements made by the board of transport commissioners . . .

It is almost tragic. Why make or print statements of that sort when we know that the primary producer—that is, the farmer—is the only one who pays freight on the things he buys and on the things he sells? He pays double, and he is the only one who does that. If hon. members try to find examples of this in the secondary industries, they will not be able to do so. Those industries do not pay freight both ways; not at all. But the farmer must pay it. Then the headlines are put in the paper—to mislead the farmer, to leave that sweet taste with him after he has been given a pill of the rise of 21 per cent in freight rates —that the farmer "has been granted a concession." I say, let us be fair and let us be grown up. I would appeal to hon. members on all sides of the house to take this matter under consideration and solve the problem properly.

I do not object to the leader of the C.C.F. (Mr. Coldwell) bringing this matter to the attention of the house this afternoon. I feel, however, that a question of this kind requires more study on the part of members wishing to take part in debate. Judging from the debate thus far, I would conclude that other members and the leader of the C.C.F. have spoken more effectively on other subjects. Hon. members on all sides of the house would have gained much had they known this matter was to be discussed today, and had they had an opportunity to prepare the material they wished to place before parliament and to place it on Hansard, so that the people might read what was said and learn something more about this question.

Mr. KNOWLES: Is the hon. member aware of the fact that the leader of this group did notify each of the other parties in the house this morning that it was his intention to raise the matter of freight rates this afternoon?

Mr. HLYNKA: To give notification this morning that a motion would be made this afternoon does not give anyone much time to study the subject matter.

Mr. BRYCE: You are doing all right.

Mr. HLYNKA: I thank the hon. member for saying that I am doing well. At the same time I feel that this matter requires more study and that we should have access to at least a synopsis of the material placed before the board of transport commissioners. We have not had an opportunity to study any of that material. All we have is a number of clippings from newspapers and briefs sent to us from various provinces. I have one here from Alberta.

Mr. PROBE: Meantime the freight rates go up.

Mr. HLYNKA: I am not blaming any particular group. I am sure hon. members will agree, however, that this matter should have been introduced in a different way so that hon. members might have had an opportunity to prepare themselves to discuss it properly.

Mr. CLARENCE GILLIS (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. member who has just taken his seat when he states things are moving so rapidly today that it is difficult for hon. members or the public generally to follow what is taking place. We have got away from the horse-and-buggy stage and are trying to develop a streamlined society. Therefore we have to keep on our toes all the time; that is all there is to it.

However, the subject matter before us this afternoon is not new. The fact of the matter is that freight rates have been discussed in the press for the last two or three years, and we have been told repeatedly that the railways were seeking an increase of 30 per cent in freight rates. I think no apology is necessary for having introduced the subject this afternoon. My recollection is that before the Easter adjournment the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) stated that the first order of business would be the discussion of a bill to subsidize gold production. I believe the discussion this afternoon is much more to the point than would be a discussion having for its purpose the subsidizing of a metal dug in Canada and buried in the United States. Surely this discussion is more timely.

I should like to say only a few words for the benefit of the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Homuth). I know what I shall say is out of order, but no more so than what he said. The hon. member was allowed to place his observations on record and to accuse the leader of the C.C.F. of being more interested in the Canadian Congress of Labour and the C.I.O. than in matters affecting the people generally.

Just for a start, let me point out to the hon. member that there is in Canada no such organization as the C.I.O. It is an American organization which has in the Canadian Congress of Labour its counterpart in Canada. It is not a union; rather it is a body having for its purpose the co-ordinating of industrial unionists in Canada and the United States, and the handling of their legislative problems. After many years of experience of going cap in hand to governments, unions very wisely decided that it was about time to send some of their own men into the lawmaking bodies so that they might help to make laws which might be in keeping with their own ideas. And so, just as the manufacturers' association, the chambers of commerce, the National Steel Company of Canada, DOSCO and others have selected Liberal and Tory parties as their political agents—and contribute to their campaign funds—so the labouring men of Canada, through that industrial organization, in convention and after discussion, decided that they, too, would select a political party.

The hon. member for Waterloo South does not like that; but let me tell him that the selection was made without any solicitation on our part. He tried to show conflict between the statement by Mr. Mosher, head of the Canadian Congress of Labour, to the effect that the increase in freight rates was not great enough, and the statement by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) in the house that an increase in freight rates at this time was unwarranted.

Surely that should not surprise the hon. member for Waterloo South. I understand that at one time he sat as a labour member in the Ontario legislature. He should know that Mr. Mosher, as head of the railway unions, is the sales agent of the labourers and employees of Canadian railways. As such it is his job to sell that labour power at the highest possible figure. And in this House of Commons the leader of the C.C.F., as leader of a socialist party in Canada the objective of which is a new order of society in this country, is doing his job to fight for the changes in the mechanics of society which would make it unnecessary to do those things such as we are now doing under this present scheme of increasing freight rates.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am glad the hon. member smiled when he referred to a new order with reference to the C.C.F.

Mr. GILLIS: And I want to pass this into the ears of my Tory friends, that so long as the mechanics of society are as they are today this is the procedure which will have to be taken. It cannot be done in any other way than it is being done today, so long as you stick to this capitalist system of so-called free enterprise. And what you are ranting and raving against today in the light of this increased schedule of freight rates, and the hardship it will create among people throughout Canada, is the very thing for which the people of this country voted when they voted to retain a system of free enterprise, represented by either Liberal or Tory candidates. They are getting what they asked for.

Let me say a further word about communism—because the hon. member also injected that into the debate. I do not care whether it is the Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley) or the hon. member for Waterloo South who rises in his place in the house and tries to create the impression that the democratic socialist party of Canada is exactly the same as the communist party of Russia; if either does it, then he is doing this country a great disservice.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The Minister of Justice did not say that.

Mr. GILLIS: And he is doing exactly what was done in Europe. He sowed seeds of suspicion and confusion, until such time as that Mr. Bolsheviki he is so afraid of came in and took things over, because they arose out of the confusion created by men who should have had better sense.

Let me say further to the hon. member for Waterloo South that the only countries in Europe which stood up to Hitler and which have not capitulated to this totalitarian machine of Russia are the countries where there were well developed social democratic parties based upon trade unions and co-operatives.

An hon. MEMBER: Nonsense.

Mr. GILLIS: The people there were welded together politically and economically, and there was no vacuum into which that machine could creep so as to destroy the structure of society. Those Scandinavian countries stood up, as did Great Britain, New Zealand and Australia. And if that development does not take place in this country, despite all this talk about democracy—at least the way it has been talked about from those sources to whom I am directing this little bit of advice—you are apt to wind up behind the eight ball and get the very sort of thing you are afraid of.

Let us get back to this business of freight rates and the Canadian National Railways. My contention is that there are two pertinent points in connection with this whole matter that should be made clear. In so far as the maritimes are concerned I believe that this increase of 21 per cent across the board has destroyed the effect of the Maritime Freight Rates Act.

Mr. CHEVRIER: It has not.

Mr. GILLIS: I am glad to hear the minister say that, but I have in my hand the judgment rendered by the board of transport commissioners in the application of the railway association of Canada on behalf of its member railway companies for authority to make a general increase in tolls and freight rates. I have read this over, and I am going to call the attention of the minister to a part that strikes me particularly, to be found on page

69. This deals with the Maritime Freight Rates Act and it quotes section 8 of the act which reads:

The purpose of this act is to give certain statutory advantages in rates to persons and industries in the three provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, and in addition upon the lines in the province of Quebec mentioned in section two, together hereinafter called "select territory," accordingly the board shall not approve nor allow any tariffs which may destroy or prejudicially affect such advantages in favour of persons or industries located elsewhere than in such select territory.

When I read that over I came to the conclusion that that practically wipes out any advantage the maritimes may have because of the Maritime Freight Rates Act. The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar and others have stated that neither the province of Quebec nor the province of Ontario was represented at this hearing because they were not interested. My impression is that the 21 per cent increase in freight rates which will be applied both east and west will not be applied in central Canada, because the competition from trucking companies is so great and the hauls so short in those provinces that if the increase is applied it will simply mean driving business to the trucking companies. I hear a rumour to the effect that the trucking companies are going to jack up their rates by 20 per cent but I do not know how true it is.

In view of the fact that our principal exports are coal and steel, this increase imposes an additional burden in marketing our products in central Canada. I shall go into this further later on. In addition, a large percentage of what we eat and wear in eastern Canada comes from the central provinces. We did have some advantages under the Maritime Freight Rates Act, but in my reading of that small section of the report those advantages are wiped out. I think that is also the opinion of the maritime transportation commission as set out in their representations to the government.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I hope my hon. friend is not arguing that the 20 per cent subsidy paid by the federal government has been wiped out?

Mr. GILLIS: Certainly it has.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I must say definitely that it has not.

Mr. GILLIS: When you speak afterwards you can try to prove that to me, but I am reading now from your report.

Mr. CHEVRIER: You are not reading my report; you are reading the report of the chairman of the board of transport commissioners.

[Mr. Gillis.]

Mr. GILLIS: That is right. I do not blame the minister for wanting to get away from it. The other fellow does not have to run an election.

Secondly, I do not believe that this board had any authority or right to proceed with this hearing or to make that report, and I shall read from the report in order to justify my contention. The board of transport commissioners merely acted in this matter as the agents of the railroads. I quote from page 70 as follows:

Mr. Burchell, one of the counsel for the maritime provinces, contended that the applicant railways had failed to adduce any evidence to show that there has been an increase in the cost of railway operation in Canada between the first day of July, 1927, and the present time and that the board was, therefore, without jurisdiction or authority to permit any increase in freight rates which would include the "select territory" until satisfactory evidence has been furnished of such increased cost. And that this omission on the part of the applicants could only be remedied by a further substantive application on their part for the purpose, and upon due notice to the respondents.

Mr. Cross, a member of the board said:

I must agree with the argument of counsel for the maritimes that the applicants, it may be through inadvertence, did not furnish us with specific evidence, or in any event sufficient evidence, of increased cost of railway operation in Canada over the cost prevailing on July the first, 1927.

According to this report, the board of transport commissioners went ahead and appointed Mr. John C. Lessard—

Mr. CHEVRIER: Would the hon. gentleman read the other three paragraphs?

Mr. GILLIS: Yes. They read:

To require the applicant railways to proceed by way of substantive application, as suggested by counsel for the maritimes, would involve much delay in disposing of the most important question before us. This further delay should, I think, be avoided if it can be fairly done.

The board has, I think, power to investigate and ascertain the facts itself and to make a finding based upon the results of such investigation, and we have proceeded accordingly.

The board instructed Mr. John C. Lessard, its then director of the bureau of transportation economics, to investigate and ascertain the facts, as to whether the cost of railway operation in Canada has increased since July 1, 1927, and if so, to what extent, and to report thereon to the board. These instructions were carried out and Mr. Lessard reported to the board.

My contention is that, in view of the fact that the Canadian National Railways had been contending for at least two or three years that they required an increase in rates, it was reasonable to expect that they would have had their case prepared and in the hands of the board of transport commissioners rather than the board setting themselves up as a body to investigate the costs of the Canadian National Railways. The board sent in one man and upon that one man's evidence they permit an increase of 21 per cent in the freight rates across this country.

I think it was an absolutely stupid thing to do. I do not think the board of transport commissioners had any right to set themselves up as the agents of the Canadian National Railways in order to gather evidence which should have been placed in their hands by an organization which in my opinion has sufficient economic divisions, research facilities and all that kind of thing to have prepared a report to be placed in the hands of the board.

Mr. CHEVRIER: They have that authority under section 3 of the act.

Mr. GILLIS: This thing was done absolutely wrongly, and it is a serious matter for the people of this country.

Where does the question of provincial rights come in? I understand that seven provinces are opposed to this increase in freight rates. I know that three maritime provinces, working through the maritime transportation commission, have made or are making representations to the government asking for a stay of execution, and I mean execution literally, because this increase is execution so far as the maritime provinces are concerned. It is the final kick in the face for these displaced provinces which will put them on their back. Seven provinces I understand, apart from Ontario and Quebec, have made or are making representations to the government asking that the application of this judgment be withheld for at least thirty days to give them a chance to appeal. I understand that the rates become operative on April 8. Let us take a look at this question of appeal. In order to appeal you must first get permission from the board of transport commissioners—

Mr. CHEVRIER: Better read the act.

Mr. GILLIS: —or you must get the permission of the supreme court itself. Far be it from me to suggest that the board could influence the judiciary of this country. I will not suggest that at all, nor would I suggest that the judiciary might in some cases be political appointees. I think the cards are stacked against the people of this country getting redress along the lines of an appeal. I would ask the minister when he replies to tell the house if he or the cabinet intend to consider the matter of withholding the application of these new rates for at least thirty days in order to give the seven provinces who are dissatisfied with the judgment the opportunity of making an appeal.

What does this increase in freight rates mean to the cost of living? In the maritime provinces it means a lot more than the average member here realizes. For instance, to start with, there is a flat increase of twenty-five cents a ton on coal, whether on long or short hauls. In reality that amounts to a flat increase of fifty cents a ton on most of the coal of the maritime provinces. Take the coal shipped over the Sydney and Louisburg railway. That is a company-owned road, and it comes under the Maritime Freight Rates Act. The company will haul coal from Sydney to Louisburg or from Glace Bay to Sydney and there is a twenty-five cent increase per ton on coal going that distance. Then the coal is transferred to the Canadian National Railways, where an additional twenty-five cents a ton has to be paid. So on practically 85 per cent of the production of coal in the maritime provinces there is a flat increase, not of twenty-five cents, but of fifty cents a ton. In Cumberland county, on the Cumberland railway, and on the Sydney and Louisburg railway—and most of the coal is produced in this area—the two rates will apply. I notice that Mr. Ralston, one of the counsel for the maritimes, made a very strong argument on this point; but all the satisfaction he got, according to the report, was: Oh, there are incidentals like that which will have to be taken care of as we go along. But in the meantime the rates are applied and once they are applied they have the habit of sticking. The time to cure the thing is before the rates are applied. But even assuming that the increased rate was only twenty-five cents a ton on coal, if the minister acquiesces, if he agrees with the board's judgment—

Mr. CHEVRIER: I did not quite follow what my hon. friend said. Did I understand him to say that I was acquiescing?

Mr. GILLIS: You can read it in Hansard. If my hon. friend acquiesces—

Mr. CHEVRIER: My hon. friend should not place in the mouth of an hon. member words that he has not used. If I have anything to state on this question I will state it in due course. The hon. gentleman has no right, if he wants to be fair, to place those words in my mouth.

Mr. GILLIS: I was not placing any words in the minister's mouth. He was not listening. I do not blame him for being sensitive. There were a lot of ifs and ands and buts in what I said. I said if the minister acquiesces, if he agrees with this increase of twenty-five cents a ton on coal, even if it were only twenty-five cents but on most of Nova Scotia coal it will be fifty cents, he is acquiescing in an increase in the fuel bill of the Canadian people of over $200,000,000 a year in freight charges alone.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am afraid my hon. friend misconstrues this whole picture. The minister neither acquiesces nor refuses. An application is made to the board and it deals with it. My hon. friend is dealing with the judgment of the board now. I wish he would not continually say "if the minister consents, such and such a thing will happen".

Mr. GILLIS: What I am trying to do is to have the minister prepare some pretty good notes so that he will be in a position to make a clear and definite statement to the house when he speaks. I am trying to draw information out of him. I want to know what the cabinet thinks about this thing, because the cabinet is now the only body with power to prevent this rate from becoming operative pending a hearing before the courts of the country. That is why I am addressing the minister. He presides over the department that has jurisdiction over the board; he is a member of the cabinet, and if we can make him see how serious this thing is the chances are that he will appeal to his colleagues from Ontario and Quebec and say: The maritimes have got a bad kicking around already and this increase is a bad kick in the nose to them, so perhaps we had better let up and stagger this thing, transfer some portion of the burden to the central part of the country.

The minister will agree that the maritime transportation commission is headed by capable people. I do not think anyone would consider that body as being political in any way, shape or form. It represents some seventy boards of trade. I have met some of them. I do not know what their politics are and I do not care. I have always believed that they were interested in the part of the country in which they live and that they were continually trying to improve conditions there. They feel very strongly about this increase. Here is a long press statement giving the views of the commission. I presume the minister has read it. I shall not take time to read it, but it points out that this freight increase will add to the cost of living tremendously because there are sections of Nova Scotia where 80 per cent of what the people eat is imported, dragged all the way from the central part of Canada, and this additional freight rate will not only add to the cost of living but hamper the marketing of Nova Scotia's basic materials. The only things we send out of the province are steel to be fabricated, and our coal, which we are trying to get back into the Quebec market which we lost during the war.

As I said, the maritime transportation commission feel very strongly about this increase and they have written much stronger stuff in the press than what I am saying here this afternoon. They say also that the increase in the freight rates, rather than encouraging subsidiary industry which is so badly needed in the maritimes, will back it further and further away. It means a continuation of unemployment; perhaps it means creating more unemployment. The last government figures showed that today 27,000 people are unemployed in the maritimes, and there is not a chance in the world for them to get a job. There was some work for them under the displaced persons program which the federal government operated. Under that program they assisted the people from the maritimes to go to central Canada. Today they have been displaced by the displaced persons whom the government is bringing in from Europe. Our people have to stay at home today and there is no relief and no work. The displaced persons are coming in. I have had complaints about that. They are taking the work that our people ordinarily would be exported to take. I know that is not a nice way to put it, but it is an actual fact. The freight rate increase further aggravates that situation so far as the maritimes are concerned.

I do not think the 21 per cent increase is the answer. I noticed in a press report that in the month of February alone the deficit on the Canadian National Railways amounted to $730,000. If that is true; if that is the monthly deficit on the Canadian National Railways the 21 per cent increase is not the answer. It will bring in only $70,000,000 a year on the basis of the present traffic. If the Canadian National Railways are accumulating a deficit of $730,000 monthly they will still be in the hole. The increase granted is not the answer. One needs to ask, is the railway inefficient? Is it obsolete? Surely, something is wrong with it and it needs to be overhauled. We cannot continue to pile on the backs of the consumers of this country a load of taxation in the form of an increased cost of living—and it is taxation, no matter how you look at it—for the maintenance of obsolete equipment. If there was an answer in this increase I would say, yes, perhaps it is all right; but there is no answer there. The institution is still uneconomic.

As the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar said, the bonds that hold us together from coast to coast are these bands of steel. They are pretty shaky so far as the maritimes are concerned. I wonder whether the minister has ever taken a ride from Moncton to Sydney.

Take a ride down there some time, but take a belt and a life preserver with you, because you will need the belt when you go around the curves and you may need the life preserver on the strait of Canso. That is a pretty shaky stretch of road. I have never seen the service worse in the last thirty years than it has been in the last year or two. From Truro east, at least, it is terrible. The equipment is obsolete. They have no engines. I came up one night and the train was only five hours late. Why was she late? Well, she was late because she had to stop at Antigonish and leave the passengers on the train while she went away about fifteen miles looking for a car of salt.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The hon. member is certainly roaming around the country, from Social Credit to the C.C.F., from equipment on the eastern division to—

Mr. GILLIS: What are we talking about? Are we not talking about the Canadian National Railways? Are we not talking about an increase of 21 per cent? I am trying to tell the house that it is not an increase in freight rates that we want. What we want is an examination to find out whether or not the operation is an economic one. I am not prepared to say in the house that I will vote an increase of 21 per cent in the freight rates, which I know means an increase in everything that is dragged down to the maritimes, for the purpose of maintaining that kind of machine. There is something the matter with an organization that is going in the hole $730,000 a month, and it needs to be overhauled to see what is wrong with it. Pumping money into that kind of thing is not the answer.

There are two things I want the minister to answer when he rises to speak. First, is it the intention of the government to increase the subventions on maritime coal to offset the proposed increase in the award of the board of transport commissioners?

Mr. CHEVRIER: My hon. friend will have to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce that question.

Mr. GILLIS: Yes, I have already sent him notice.

Mr. CHEVRIER: He is in charge of the responsibility for subventions on coal.

Mr. GILLIS: Thank you. Since you are in the cabinet I thought you might know something about it. I intend to ask that question when we get to the orders of the day, but it has now been answered.

My second question is, has the cabinet considered, or will it consider the appeal made by the seven provinces of Canada which are opposed to this increase that there be a stay of execution for thirty days to give each of these provinces an opportunity of appealing to the courts of the country against this proposed increase? I shall be obliged if the minister gives us that information.

Mr. GORDON B. ISNOR (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to deal with the evidence as prepared and presented by the legal representatives of the various provinces, nor do I feel what I shall say will have any effect on the decision of the board of transport commissioners. However, since the west, through the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid), has spoken on behalf of British Columbia, I thought I should add my voice from the east with regard to the reaction of the people of that section of the country.

Like other hon. members, I have just returned from my constituency. When this decision was made known I was in Halifax. I hope that the motion which was introduced today by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) and the remarks of the various hon. members, who have presented their views from various angles, will have some effect on the board of transport commissioners. If not, I hope and I believe that it will have some effect on the government in making them realize that this action is not one which is well received in other than the two central provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

I think the point has been well taken by other hon. members that there was really no reason for Ontario and Quebec to present an argument against this increase. We all know that the industrial activity of our country is centred in these two provinces, and largely in Ontario. The same is true of our population. Quebec has a population of 3,331,882, while Ontario has a population of 3,787,655, or a total of 7,119,537 in these two provinces out of 11,500,000 people. The figures I have quoted are taken from the 1941 census. Very largely the same proportion exists today. Therefore I say I am not approaching this problem from the point of view of a legal argument, or as to whether the railways were justified in asking for an increase of 30 per cent.

As a businessman I recognize what has been said by the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Homuth), that unless you have sufficient revenues you cannot operate successfully. That is recognized, but I do say that is a problem which the government must face if they are to carry out the very foundation of confederation. Using the same words that have already been used twice before, I believe that we should have something stronger than steel rails connecting east and west, and I agree with those who say that the whole economy of our nation is founded upon the individual economy of every province. You cannot have a prosperous central Canada, Ontario and Quebec, at the expense of other sections of the country. I do not say that in any unkind spirit with reference to the progressive and aggressive manner in which Ontario has gone about its industrial activities. I say it rather to point out that there are, in the extreme east and in the extreme west, disabilities that must be overcome.

I do not propose to deal with the political issue introduced by the hon. member for Waterloo South, nor shall I discuss the reply made by the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis). All hon. members know my position with respect to free enterprise and competition. In this regard I differ from some hon. members, because I believe that competition will bring about greater efficiency and, in consequence of that increased efficiency, greater economy.

The Canadian National Railways are a publicly owned railway system and, because of the large returns secured in 1947, the people of the maritime provinces find it a little difficult to understand why this large increase was found necessary. A Canadian Press dispatch from Ottawa on April 4 stated:

> Canadian rails move largest peace freight.
>
> Canadian railways last year carried the highest volume of freight ever moved in peacetime, the bureau of statistics reported. The railways moved 152,705,000 tons of goods in 1947. The total was exceeded only in two wartime years, 1943 and 1944, when 152,942,000 tons and 154,845,000 tons were transported. A gain of 14,000,000 tons was reported over 1946.

Then they refer to the freight which was carried. The largest increase was in grains, ores, petroleum, lumber, iron, steel, building materials, automobiles and newsprint. If you consider the freight carried you will find that the great proportion of it originates in central Canada. As regards automobiles, we are all aware, of course, of the large amount of freight which is carried by the railways from the automobile districts. Declines were shown in the movement of hay, straw, apples, cattle, sheep, wool, coal, coke and fresh fish, and these are products which come from the maritime provinces.

You will see why we in the maritimes are concerned about this increase. I do not propose to discuss the various royal commissions which have looked into the economy of the country, particularly as related to the maritimes; but we do know that from time to time, without exception, before every royal commission that has investigated this subject the question of transportation from east to west has been a very live issue. Later on I shall read from one or two of the recommendations and findings, but it is generally accepted that there has been and is a disability, so far as transportation is concerned, from the point of view of the maritime provinces.

My approach to the consideration of this question is from the point of view of the promise that was made to us at the time of confederation. There is no question that we were given to understand, at the time of confederation in 1867, that we would have a line of communication whereby we would be able to trade with other parts of the country, and the reason advanced then was that it would improve the economic position of the east, and also promote settlement in the west. It did precisely that, so far as the west is concerned, because it resulted in carrying people to the west and to central Canada, and it was only natural that, with the large increase of population they had, they should gradually become an industrial centre.

With that background I feel justified in making this statement, and I do not as a rule use harsh terms. I say that there was a grave violation, if not of the terms of the confederation, at least of its spirit.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Hear, hear.

Mr. ISNOR: I repeat that there was a violation of the spirit of confederation, and that conviction is shared by people in the maritime provinces. I cannot speak for all the maritimes but I can speak, I believe, for many sections of Nova Scotia. During the Easter recess I came in contact with people in many parts of the province and without exception they were bemoaning the fact that this was one more burden added to our part of the country.

Mr. HAZEN: And New Brunswick too.

Mr. ISNOR: I said I could not speak for all the maritimes but I am sure the hon. member can speak for his section. I think, therefore, I can say that the people in the maritime provinces generally feel that this is one more burden added to the cost of living, as the hon. member for Cape Breton South has pointed out; and the same is true for British Columbia, the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank) says.

I doubt very much whether I can offer a solution. Those with greater knowledge than I have have studied the question and the board of transport commissioners decided that a 21 per cent increase was necessary. They based their finding, I believe, purely on revenue and expenditures. I feel quite sure that the board of transport commissioners in carrying out their duties viewed the whole picture as it was put before them, studied all the evidence, and based their findings upon revenue and operating expenses. I do not believe the factors brought out by the hon. member for Cape Breton South or even by my friend Mr. Burchell of Halifax were so important except from the legal angle. We cannot help realizing that there has been a large increase in cost. All one has to do is to look at one of the older reports and at one of the recent reports and he will see at once that there have been increased expenditures across the board in supplies, salaries and everything else. That is not so important from my point of view. From my point of view, what is important is the question of trade connections which must be maintained throughout all parts of Canada, and that is a matter which, I suggest to the minister, and through him to the cabinet, should be given serious consideration.

In the construction of trans-Canada railway lines east and west, I believe the fathers of confederation had that in mind. It was not merely a question of carrying passengers but the effect which the construction of railways would have on every part of the country. I think we should bear that in mind. I do not know just what solution can be offered. As a rule I do not believe in subsidies.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Why not? Tell us why you do not believe in subsidies.

Mr. ISNOR: If the hon. member will be good enough—

Mr. BLACKMORE: I do not insist, but really, after all, it is a matter that ought to be dealt with with some intelligence and I expect the hon. member to have that intelligence.

Mr. ISNOR: If the hon. member had followed my words he would know I said that as a rule I do not believe in subsidies because I do not believe in artificially building up any industry. I might say for his benefit that we have that to a certain extent in central Canada. We have that through the tariffs. That is the artificial building up of an industry. I believe somewhat the same principle applies with regard to subsidies.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Oh, no.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I should just like to ask this simple question. It is a simple one, but we must face it. What device has the hon. member to suggest as a means of offsetting, in respect of the maritimes and the western provinces, the effect of these tariffs?

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I will answer that later.

Mr. ISNOR: I thank the hon. member for his question, Mr. Speaker. No doubt he, with his usual wisdom, will be able to throw some light on his own question at some future time.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I am quite ready to do that.

Mr. ISNOR: If I may proceed, I should like to do so. I say that if something is not done in the form of subsidies, then our whole railway structure must have a thorough overhauling. Perhaps this is far-fetched, but we are able to deal with postal matters from a central point. We are able to give a rate whereby no particular section is penalized except in the case of the east and west with regard to air-mail service. Therefore I say it might be possible for the board of transport commissioners or the government itself to consider whether the whole railway structure should not be revamped so as to bring it more in line with a service to the country such as that given by the postal department. I know that thought is a little bit new to the hon. member who asked the question, but it is worthy of consideration. As he usually gives these matters study, I would suggest that he spend this evening and perhaps some time tomorrow in thinking it over. Perhaps he may be able to enlarge on my thought, and maybe the government will accept our joint suggestion that they revamp the railway structure with that thought in mind.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, I have no prepared speech. I have always wanted the C.P.R. to go into Halifax because I felt that with competition there would be great efficiency and better service, and perhaps it would stir up the C.N.R. so that they would not have those bumpy roadways referred to by the hon. member for Cape Breton South. He is either right or wrong. He must either agree with me that competition is a good thing, or he must put up with public ownership and take the bumps over the bad roads which we have in our end of the country.

Mr. KNOWLES: Ask the hon. member for New Westminster for his views.

Mr. ISNOR: What I say applies to each and every member who wishes to develop the subject. I feel that the hon. member for Cape Breton South was just a little bit off the track when he said what would happen. If we had only one railway and they decided to put a 30 per cent increase into effect, they would simply put it into effect, and that is all there would be to it. That would be the type of public ownership which he would advocate. Instead of that, we heard not only one or two railways but representatives from all the railways in Canada who wished to appear before the board, representatives from the provinces and individual citizens. As a result of that there was an award not of 30 per cent but of 21 per cent. This does not go into effect until April 8. I am going to offer some further evidence and perhaps some kindly advice in such a way that I am hopeful that it will not go into effect on that date.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. ISNOR: Mr. Speaker, when the house rose at six o'clock I had already placed before hon. members my views with respect to the increased freight rates announced by the board of transport commissioners. I had almost concluded my remarks, with the exception of summing up. It will be recalled that I had covered briefly the background of our transportation system from confederation in 1867 to today. I do not propose to go over that ground again, or to do more than briefly refer to one or two of the recommendations which may have been made. I had also given the reasons for the linking up of the provinces as outlined on more than one occasion by those who appeared and presented briefs before the various commissions which have been held to consider this question.

I had referred to royal commissions held from time to time which dealt with the disabilities of different sections of Canada and which had emphasized particularly those of Nova Scotia. I emphasized that not only should questions of revenues and expenditures be considered, but that trade and equality in all sections of the country—not in any particular one alone—should be taken into consideration.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Would the hon. member speak more loudly? He has friends down here.

Mr. ISNOR: You are a long way off.

Mr. BLACKMORE: We are supporters of yours.

[Mr. Isnor.]

Mr. ISNOR: I am pleased to know that; the hon. member has always been most kind when I have taken part in debates.

I referred to the fact that not only was settlement in the west promoted by the building of the railways, but that also activities in the east had been stimulated. Railway connections with the prairies gave a tremendous degree of assistance to the industrialization of Ontario and Quebec, and to the coal and steel industries of Nova Scotia as well as to lumbering in British Columbia. The railways in effect reduced the vast size of our country to one of reasonable proportions.

I had drawn attention to recommendations made in 1926 to the royal commission which dealt particularly with disabilities affecting Nova Scotia. May I quote briefly from the economic inquiry of 1934, which closes with this passage:

It was partly for this reason that, in 1926, the royal commission on maritime claims was appointed. In its report the commission makes the following statement:

"We have come very definitely to the conclusion that the rate structure as it has been altered since 1912 has placed upon the trade and commerce of the maritime provinces (a) a burden which, as we have read the pronouncements and obligations undertaken at confederation, it was never intended it should bear; and (b) a burden which is, in effect, responsible in very considerable measure for depressing abnormally in the maritimes today, business enterprise which had originated and developed before 1912 on the basis and faith of the rate structure as it then stood."

Thus we see that the claim of the maritime provinces, and in this instance more particularly that of Nova Scotia, was recognized. And it is because of that recognition we are fearful today of the effect this increased freight rate will have upon the economy of our section of the country.

Another brief prepared by the late Norman McL. Rogers and presented to the royal commission on the disabilities of Nova Scotia within the Canadian confederation stated as follows, in reference to the handicap under which the province of Nova Scotia was operating:

This handicap, arising in part from the interrelation of tariff policy and freight rates, appears to have been recognized by the royal commission on maritime claims in 1926, although the phraseology used by the commissioners would seem to suggest that it was recognized more particularly in relation to producers of the maritime provinces who wished to market their goods in central Canada. In section 2 of the report of the royal commission, the following references may be quoted as bearing upon this question:

"In addition, the case which the maritime provinces have already submitted to the railway commission also raises the question of handicaps arising from the geographical position of their natural products and their distance, generally, from the central markets."

I have every reason to believe that the reference to "central markets" is a reference to the markets of Ontario and Quebec, to which I referred on more than one occasion this afternoon. Then, to continue with the quotation:

"We are far from suggesting that there should be interference on the part of the railway commission with the business judgment of the railway companies, or that there should be any confusion between trade development that can reasonably be expected from the railway rate structure, and trade development that must be a matter for public or government responsibility quite apart from rate structure."

I pause there to repeat to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) the two words "government responsibility" as they appear in this report.

I felt I was justified in bringing this matter before the government today in the hope that not only would it consider the revenues and expenditures of the railway systems as placed before the board of transport commissioners at board hearings, but rather that it would deal with the matter from the point of view of the effect it would have upon all sections of Canada, and particularly, of course, upon Nova Scotia and Halifax, which I have the honour to represent.

In closing, may I place greater emphasis upon what I said this afternoon. Our transportation system is the means of linking the economic activities, developments and progress of our country. It must not be considered from the point of view of revenues and expenditures only; but matters of trade, and the effect which certain procedures may have on our trade expansion in every section of Canada, and not only the central section, must be considered.

I made reference this afternoon to the effect the change in rate is having on the extreme western section of our country, and in this I have supported the thought expressed by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid). I say again that the same effect is being felt in the maritimes. Apart from the financial and legal aspects of the case as presented by seven out of the nine provinces, I submit that the spirit in which we entered confederation should ever be kept before us if we are to have a united, contented and satisfied nation.

I opened my remarks this afternoon by saying that I did not know what effect any remarks of mine would have in delaying the bringing into effect of the increases on April 8, but I felt that at least I was doing my duty in placing the views which I held, and which I believed were held not alone in my native province of Nova Scotia but from the information given me by hon. members from other provinces, throughout the whole eastern maritimes. I ask the Minister of Transport and, through him, the government to give serious thought to the suggestions I offered this afternoon with a view to either holding up this increase or formulating some plan to offset the ill effects which I believe will be felt in the extreme sections of our country.

Mr. McIVOR: Does the hon. member believe that any increase in freight rates will affect the high cost of living? If so, does he not believe that that argument alone should cause the government to consider these freight rates?

Mr. ISNOR: The hon. member has asked me, not one question but two. I think I would be quite satisfied with the answer he has supplied. I know the hon. member's intentions are good. There is no question in my mind that overhead, operating expenses and carrying charges are bound to be reflected in the cost of goods. If the cost of goods is increased, naturally the consumer will have to pay more.

Mr. P. C. BLACK (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, this is a subject which is important to all Canada and particularly important to the maritime provinces. I arrived back from Nova Scotia only an hour before the house convened this afternoon. I did not know this subject was coming up and I did not have an opportunity to make any preparation. However, I feel that I should express my views. I am particularly pleased to be associated with the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) and the senior hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Isnor) speaking after each other and joining forces in giving the viewpoint of our part of Canada.

I do not think this important matter should be discussed under these conditions. We should have had some notice. As far as I am concerned, I have not had an opportunity to get a copy of the finding of the board of transport commissioners. I think every hon. member is entitled to have had a printed copy so that he can examine it and not have to rely upon casual references in the press. Before we were called upon to discuss this matter we should have had a pronouncement of policy by the government. The minister may say what he likes but the government cannot divorce themselves from responsibility in the subject we are now discussing, as the board of transport commissioners is appointed by and responsible to them.

As far as the maritimes are concerned, this is not a political matter. It is certainly not a political issue in Nova Scotia; it concerns our economic existence. We have certain transportation rights which have been recognized by commissions that have studied the matter. We have had to fight for those rights, but our rights were recognized to some extent when the Duncan report was brought down and we were given a concession of 20 per cent by the freight rates act of 1927.

The Duncan commission was appointed in 1926 at the instance of the then provincial government of Nova Scotia. There is nothing that gives me more satisfaction than my connection with the appointment of the Duncan commission and the presentation of our case to that commission. The commission was headed by Sir Andrew Rae Duncan who was brought to this country in the first instance by the province of Nova Scotia to deal with a number of difficult coal questions. He was afterwards reappointed by the federal government of that day headed by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King). He had associated with him Doctor Macmillan, who was a member of the last parliament. I have every admiration for him and I do not think he has been given due credit for the part he played in bringing down the Duncan commission report. There was also Judge Wallace, an outstanding Nova Scotian who has since passed away. They brought down their findings in 1926.

We had been denied transportation rights and excessive costs had been imposed upon industry and production in the maritime provinces. The commission also brought in findings recommending the payment of increased financial subsidies. As we set out in the order in council appointing the commission, it was set up at the instance of the government of Nova Scotia, headed by Hon. Mr. Rhodes. The late Hon. Gordon Harrington did most effective work in this connection.

Since the report of the board of transport commissioners was brought down a few days ago the Premier of Nova Scotia has taken a strong stand. I should like to read a few paragraphs from a report which appeared in the Halifax Herald of April 3, as follows:

Premier Angus L. Macdonald is looking to the federal cabinet to prevent the 21 per cent rise in freight rates which would have cost Nova Scotians approximately $4,000,000 a year but, if Ottawa does not act, he said, the maritimes and the four western provinces should join in an appeal from the granted increase.

He made his views known in the provincial legislature yesterday, warning that "the cost of living in all parts of the country, and particularly in the maritimes and the western provinces, will rise if the increases," set out in the decision of the board of transport commissioners, went into effect.

"I believe that the government of Canada should act to prevent the proposed increases coming into force. If the governor in council (federal cabinet) does not intervene, then all the interested provinces should join in an appeal from the board's decision," he declared.

No language could be stronger than that in pointing out the responsibility of this government with respect to the finding of the board of transport commissioners. Again I say the government should make some statement as to their policy before we should be called upon to discuss it.

At the time of the "maritime rights" agitation in 1923, 1924, 1925, 1926, and 1927, the Halifax Herald, operated by the Hon. Senator Dennis, was most active in pressing the claims of our province, and it has been consistent all through the years. After the recent judgment of the board of transport commissioners, the Halifax Herald had a front page editorial from which I should like to quote a few paragraphs. It said:

It is set out in the Maritime Freight Rates Act, 1927, that the Duncan commission of 1926 "made certain recommendations respecting transportation and freight rates, for the purpose of removing a burden imposed upon the trade and commerce of such provinces since 1912, which, the commission finds, in view of the pronouncements and obligations undertaken at confederation, it was never intended such commerce should bear."

The editorial continues:

And in giving effect to the recommendations of the Duncan commission, government and parliament wrote this into the Maritime Freight Rates Act as one of its most vital provisions.

It goes on to quote from the act passed by this parliament:

The purpose of this act is to give certain statutory advantages to persons and industries in the three provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, and in addition upon the lines in the province of Quebec mentioned in section two (together hereinafter called "select territory"), accordingly the board shall not approve nor allow any tariffs which may destroy or prejudicially affect such advantages in favour of persons or industries located elsewhere than in such select territory.

No words could be plainer than that. The editorial continues:

The Maritime Freight Rates Act not only established statutory rates as a measure of justice to the maritimes—to remove a burden "it was never intended such commerce should bear" —but gave specific directions to the board of railway commissioners (now the board of transport commissioners) that the position established by the act should not be disturbed.

In granting the freight increases just announced, did the board of transport commissioners take into account the spirit and letter of the Maritime Freight Rates Act? Did the commissioners have before them constantly those words of the act which state clearly that they "shall not approve nor allow any tariffs which may destroy or prejudicially affect such advantages (to the maritimes) in favour of persons or industries located elsewhere than in such select territory"?

I shall not quote further. I would point out that the Premier of New Brunswick and the Premier of Prince Edward Island have also taken a strong stand along with the Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Premier of Nova Scotia, against these increased freight rates. The Halifax Herald, the Halifax Chronicle, the Sydney Post-Record, the Amherst News, and all the weekly papers in the province of Nova Scotia are equally outspoken.

The hon. member for Cape Breton South this afternoon pointed out the unfairness of the increased charge on coal. That is a particular hardship in my county of Cumberland. All the coal is transported over two railways and if each makes an additional charge of twenty-five cents a ton for carrying this coal, it will almost double the freight on the short hauls. The coal industry in the province of Nova Scotia appears to be suffering at many points. The costs are already so high that the ordinary householder has difficulty in paying his fuel bills as compared with a few years ago. All the steps that have been taken seem to have been prejudicial to the coal industry of Nova Scotia.

Under the Geneva trade treaty, which we have not yet discussed in the house, the duty on coal entering Canada from the United States is to be materially reduced. That duty was increased at the time of the coal subventions for two purposes: first, to give the maritime provinces and Alberta, a better opportunity to compete with imported coal; second, to provide extra revenue to pay the subventions. We have heard in this house and in the country about the cost imposed on the taxpayers of Canada for subsidies. Well, this particular subsidy was met by the increased duty on coal coming in from the United States. But that increase is now being wiped out under the Geneva treaty being presented by the government. We were not consulted about that; the coal industry was not consulted; I do not think the hon. member for Cape Breton South representing a coal county was consulted, and I know that I was not consulted, but I represent an important coal area. Every step that is being taken with respect to coal appears to be prejudicial to the interests of our province.

The maritime provinces, particularly Nova Scotia, have taken this question of freight rates very seriously from the beginning. They were represented by able counsel at the hearings of the board of transport commissioners, by the Hon. Colonel J. L. Ralston, Mr. Charles Burchell, K.C., Mr. Rand Matheson, secretary or manager of the maritime transportation commission, acting for all the maritime provinces. If the freight rates are to be increased locally and on all that we ship to or buy from the rest of Canada it will impose an almost intolerable burden on the people of the maritime provinces.

I came up here on the train yesterday with one of the heads of the stove industry in the maritime provinces. They are producing stoves there and shipping them all over Canada, to South Africa and to other parts of the world. Some of the steel plates and materials they use come from central Canada, and this freight rate increase will make it more difficult for our stove industry to compete in central Canada and elsewhere. Under this new freight rate tariff the maritime provinces have to pay both coming and going. No new industries have been established there during the war with post-war potentialities and none have been established since, although strong efforts, which I hope will be successful, are being put forward at the present time to induce some industries to settle in the maritime provinces.

I spoke on the budget last year and it is of interest to quote a paragraph from my remarks of that day, May 20 of last year. I said:

> Nova Scotia must indeed have great wealth as well as great thrift, or it would not have the capacity to purchase the long list of articles and commodities from central Canada totalling many millions of dollars every year with a minimum of reciprocation. The heads of industry and bankers marvel at our purchases of motor cars, trucks, tires, batteries, farm machinery, cement, electric motors, tobacco, sugar, flour, radios, medicines, tools, jewelry and a hundred and one articles, and still we are able to educate our boys and girls so that they may be enticed away from home to take places at the top all over Canada. We are now told that there is to be a big increase in freight rates on our purchases and sales. We in the maritimes threw in our lot with Quebec and Ontario and, if they are to supply us with our necessities such as motor cars, trucks, cement, farm machinery, electric motors and such articles, I think we have the right to have them delivered to us freight paid at the lowest factory prices.

These remarks were made almost a year ago, and they were referred to in an earlier debate this session by the hon. member for Queens, Prince Edward Island (Mr. McLure), when he said there should be what he called a "stamp freight" rate for our provinces, so that if we are to be dependent upon motorcars and this long list of articles produced in central Canada, we should have them delivered to us at the lowest factory prices. That was also pointed out by a speaker today. We seem to suffer on all sides and on all occasions. I was interested to read a Canadian Press dispatch from London which had to do with farm implements. I pointed out in my remarks a year ago that all our farm machinery in Nova Scotia is imported from central Canada and we pay the freight. This is the press dispatch:

Massey-Harris Plans Factory in Scotland. London, Nov. 22—(C.P.)—The London Evening Standard said today that the Massey-Harris Company plans to open another factory in Britain and is negotiating "with the government for a site at Kilmarnock (Ayrshire), a development area."

The newspaper said the plant will turn out machinery for the government's £25,000,000 ($100,000,000) peanuts production scheme for Africa "but there will also be more machines for the home farmer."

James Duncan, president of the company, who flew to Canada from London tonight, told a press conference last Monday that he was studying plans for expansion of the company's manufacturing activities in the United Kingdom.

How is it that in the maritime provinces we have to buy every dollar's worth of farm machinery from central Canada? We never hear of these people coming down to the maritime provinces and building a subsidiary factory there. They go to other places in order to get their markets and an outlet for their production, but they do not come to the maritime provinces. They take it for granted that they will get that market anyway and we are going to pay the bill. It is a marvel to me, our bankers and everybody else in the maritime provinces that we are able to pay for the importations from the rest of Canada and keep reasonably prosperous.

There are other matters to which I could refer. Take cement. All the raw materials to produce cement are found in the maritime provinces, but we have to import our entire requirements from central Canada and pay freight. We have to send our hard-earned money away, and our labour have to go also in order to produce the material, part of which comes back to the maritimes provinces. The Canada Cement Company is a strong industry and produces a good product. We have no complaint against that company. Its manager was a barefoot boy who came from my county of Cumberland. His name is J. D. Johnson. When he was in his teens he applied to a local lumberman for a job in the woods in the winter. The lumberman said, "No, I cannot take you, you are too young. You will have to get a letter from your father." He got permission from his father. He came out of the woods in the spring with forty odd dollars and reported to Mr. Livingstone who had hired him. Mr. Livingstone asked him what he was going to do with the money. He said, "I hear that Montreal is a big place and there is lots of work there. I am going to Montreal." He went to Montreal. He is now head of that great industry, and on boards of banks, other industry and philanthropic institutions. He was raised from good stock by the sea and the hills of Nova Scotia as were many other successful men.

I might refer to the Hon. Doctor Charles Eaton, who has taken perhaps the most prominent part of any statesman in the world in recent months with regard to the united nations and the Marshall plan. Cyrus S. Eaton was also brought up near where Mr. Johnson was. He went off to central Canada, and then went to the United States. Now he is one of the great financiers, philanthropists and industrialists of this continent, one of the great men of the United States. Another companion was Doctor David Stuart from the same surroundings, who went to New York and became one of the greatest surgeons in the United States.

I am wandering from my subject, Mr. Speaker, but I just want to point out that conditions such as those under which we have existed in Nova Scotia compel us to contribute at every turn. We have been contributing from the time of confederation. As pointed out by the senior hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Isnor), confederation would never have been put into effect if we had not been promised the Intercolonial railway and cheap transportation to connect with central Canada. According to the spirit of confederation, we are entitled to the most favourable transportation, but we are being penalized.

Transportation is stifling our activities in the maritime provinces. The railroad from Truro to Sydney has been before this house on many occasions. I have spoken of it several times. The condition of that road would not be tolerated in any other part of Canada.

We have been trying for sixty years or longer to have the Chignecto canal built, which would be a great transportation project and encourage industry and production. If it had been located in central Canada it would have been built years ago.

Perhaps I should not say this, and there may be some in the maritime provinces who would object to my making this suggestion, but I would be willing to give preference to building the Canso bridge or causeway in order to give modern transportation by highway and by rail from the great industrial and mining sections of Cape Breton to the main part of Nova Scotia and to the rest of Canada.

I do not think there is very much more I need say. I know there are other hon. members who want to speak. I know my seatmate, the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Brooks) wants to speak; but I think hon. members ought to allow time for the minister to make some pronouncement on government policy before the house rises. Hon. members should stop the discussion at whatever time the minister requests in order that he may tell us the stand of the government with respect to the finding of the board of transport commissioners.

Again I point out that there is not a subject of greater importance to the maritime provinces. We have some special rights, and the producers and industrialists are apprehensive of the effect upon our future if this increased freight rate is put into force.

Mr. LESLIE A. MUTCH (Winnipeg South): The subject of this discussion, Mr. Speaker, is perhaps, I would say certainly, the most important of the subjects which are likely to be discussed by this house in the remaining weeks or months of this session. To my mind, it is a shocking commentary on what happens to public business when you find such an important question as this treated with the lightness, if I may say so, with which this discussion seems to be treated, not by those who are here and who have expressed their views, but in the casual sort of attitude of the house as a whole.

This is a question which in my opinion should not have come before the house by this method. While I give full credit to the hon. gentleman who introduced it, in order to get it before us and to get it before us promptly, I would have felt better about the situation if the seriousness of the issues at stake had been recognized by the government itself and if some facility had been given for a free and full discussion of the matter.

A year ago when some members from the west rose and by one device or another, almost by subterfuge, managed to introduce the question of the then impending rise in freight rates, we were told quite properly that the matter was sub judice and that we could not properly discuss it at that time. Some of our western members said publicly, and more of us said privately, that that kind of treatment, not only by the government but by the house as a whole, was not good enough for an issue which was of primary importance to at least seven of the provinces of the dominion. I shall be perfectly frank in saying I regret very much that it has not been until now that the opportunity has come, and that it has come suddenly after the announcement which was made during a time when the members of the house were away and presumably otherwise occupied. I regret that we have had so little opportunity to read, study and digest the awful implications of what is threatened in the implementation of the report of the commission.

This is an example of what happens when the ordinary functions and responsibilities of government are delegated to boards and commissions comprised of experts or nominees of governments themselves. I have had some previous experience with boards and commissions and this experience strengthens my opinion in that respect.

This is not to be interpreted as an attack on the board. My remarks should certainly not be taken in that way. I am not sufficiently familiar with either the facts or the individuals themselves to lay such a stricture against them at this stage, but I do say that this is the sort of mess we get into when we leave matters of policy, which gravely affect the welfare of the country as a whole, and our relationships with each other in the provinces, to non-elected bodies.

I think I speak for the people of Manitoba when I say that we believe no case was made for an increase in freight rates at the present time. That is not to say that all of us believe or hold that the railways do not under the present circumstances need more money. I believe they do. My limited knowledge of the operations of the railroads and my general knowledge of other business would lead me to think they probably do. The thing that concerns me most gravely with respect to this question is that we are drifting on, continuing a practice which has prevailed throughout the years, some fifty or sixty years, and we are meeting a recurring situation by methods which in the past have only succeeded in aggravating it.

At the present time, in the limited time there is before us, I think we should take first the short view. We are faced with a situation which is urgent and imminent, and I would say to the government of the day that the first thing to do is to make sure that this award of 21 per cent is not implemented until such time as there has been the fullest opportunity for appeal. When we were told that the matter was sub judice and that we could not talk about our grievances with respect to freight rates a year ago, before the award was made, it certainly is a bit out of order and off colour for the railways to be collecting the award before there is an opportunity to appeal it and while it is still under consideration.

There is a second point in connection with the short view which I would emphasize, and it is this. As far as the prairie provinces are concerned, this 21 per cent increase is a direct charge on the farmers of the prairies at a time when they are hampered in their attempts to offset and to meet it by being under a series of prohibitions and controls which make the levy most onerous at the present time. I do not care whether you call these controls agreements or export embargoes, or what the device is by which you limit the amount the producer can get for that which he has to sell, or when his markets are restricted in which he is able to sell that which he produces. That, by whatever name you call it, is in effect a control. Therefore, if it should be that this cause is finally lost; if the protests of the seven provinces are not to be heeded and there is to be this added burden, this aggravation of what some of us in the western part of Canada are coming to regard as a second-class citizenship; if that is to be the case, then I urge, with all the earnestness I can command, that this increase be not imposed until such time as those in western agriculture are freely able to sell those things which they produce for what they can get for them in whatever markets they may seek.

There is a long view. I said at the beginning that in my view a clear case was made out against the need of relieving the financial situation of the railroads by the imposition of higher freight rates now. I do not suppose there is in the business world anywhere today anything quite so haphazard, unscientific and un-understandable as are the current schedules of freight rates. I have had the experience in committees of this house of having highly placed officers of the railways admit that freight tariffs have simply grown like Topsy and that they are complicated, unscientific and unwieldy.

I venture to say that there are not more than half a dozen lawyers in the Dominion of Canada who are qualified to interpret with authority the rate structure of either railroad. I doubt very much whether there are half a dozen. I have some knowledge of the business world, and people in our part of the country who are in business are frequent and continuous users of freight transportation. Any firm that is doing business to any considerable extent and is shipping is simply crazy if it does not retain, as in fact it does retain at substantial salaries, men whose job it is to keep in touch with the freight rate structures and to find out how they can do business and what it will cost them to do business. There are classifications and cross-classifications. I have looked at them. The last volume I saw was a thick one, the so-called revised edition by one railroad. No one person on earth knew what was in it. The railroads themselves maintain, at every major shipping point in this country, men whose job it is to pass on these rates and classifications. All credit to the railways for that. The instructions which these men have are that they shall see to it that the shipper gets the best deal under the freight rates which are available to him and to make helpful suggestions. Because of the fact that they are as complicated as they are, that is the situation.

I have not dealt for the moment with the regional discriminations, with the horse-trading and the dealing which has taken place over the years with respect to local areas. Rates are purchased by concessions made at the time but which it seems we are to continue to pay forever. I think what we would be better advised to do is to suspend the operation of these increases until such a time as we have something more nearly approaching a free economy in western Canada for our farmers and importers generally; and the government, through its own agencies or through the board of transport commissioners, could begin now, at this late date, to see what is equitable in the matter of freight rates in this country. If we do not do so, what will happen?

Someone has spoken today about the steel rails that bind the country together. Someone else said that there is a much more important element than steel rails that holds us together. Railways made possible our first communications, and the presumption was that because we have been able to travel up and down on the railways, we now all love each other and have a common bond in our citizenship. Actually the type of thing which has been going on since the early development of the west, the discrimination against our areas by the railways —even by the railway which is the creature, the servant and the property of the people themselves—as a result of the rulings of the board, has done very little to consolidate the people of Canada. The railways have done more in the opposite direction by this type of discrimination, this type of charging all that the traffic will bear, where you can get it; not because the people are easy-going, have more money than those elsewhere, are stupid or anything like that, but because of dire necessity, because they must have certain things and because there is no other way of getting them; and for that which you must have, you pay what you must pay in order to get it. This has been the situation.

We know perfectly well where the burden of the 21 per cent increase in freight rates will fall. It will fall not on those who are best able to pay it but on those who are least able.

My complaint is not that once more we of the west and indeed those in the maritimes—we of the seven provinces, shall I say, who have expressed a willingness to get together and to make some contribution to the building up of nationhood and the consolidation of good feeling in this country—are to be left without those benefits which we desire because two of the stronger provinces refuse to co-operate. That is understandable on the basis perhaps of thoughtful though misguided selfishness. However, I am a little bit at a loss to understand why in a situation like this, these same two provinces have adopted in this matter the role of the Levite. Not being themselves affected, they have passed by on the other side instead of taking advantage of the opportunity to help the weaker provinces to win some consideration for themselves.

I have a shrewd suspicion, Mr. Speaker, that for the moment, in appealing to these provinces, I am pleading a lost cause. Sir, I would not want to go back to my home city, to my home province or to western Canada generally, and have it said of me that I had been unable or unwilling to rise in my place in this house and give voice to the resentment which I feel with regard to the timing, the method and the result of the investigation generally. I think it is tremendously important, even though we lose out, that as an evidence of good faith the government should exercise that authority which it undoubtedly has to delay the implementing of these new rates until the least of the provinces shall have had a full opportunity to present the views of their people in the one place where they can go in these matters, namely to the federal government. If necessary, and if they desire it, failing satisfaction there, there should be delay until they have had an opportunity of seeking satisfaction in the courts themselves. I think this delay, in all fairness and in all justice, should be made.

I come back once again to that other thought to which I gave voice.

Failing successful appeal, if it is decided that this impost must go on, then so far as this government is concerned, I urge that they meet the situation which they cannot escape seeing, by freeing western agriculture from the shackles which are on it and give the west every opportunity to pay the extra tariff imposed upon them.

Mr. J. G. DIEFENBAKER (Lake Centre): I listened, Mr. Speaker, with interest to what my friend the hon. member for Winnipeg South (Mr. Mutch) had to say regarding this matter; but I thought he weakened his case when, in pursuance of his argument for certain changes to be made, he stated that he believed he was pleading a lost cause.

Mr. MUTCH: The difference between "feared" and "believed".

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I do not mind whether the word used was "feared" that he was pleading a lost cause or whether it was the one I used. There is nothing that damages one's plea more or detracts more from it than to believe that the arguments one is advancing will fall on deaf ears. That is not the view, though, of all western Liberal members. The hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) made a speech the other day.

An hon. MEMBER: Oh, no.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Yes, as reported in the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix of April 3. I will read it in part, because he believes that there is hope. The heading of the article is, "Tucker thinks west will get fair deal on freight rates". Then he goes on to say this:

> "I think the west will get a fair deal out of the freight rate situation under proper representation," Walter Tucker, provincial Liberal leader told . . . a meeting here Friday evening.

I commend those words to the hon. member for Winnipeg South. The hon. member went on, as reported in this article:

> He described the ruling by the board of transport commissioners as "just an advisory ruling."
>
> He said he had argued in caucus for a "bridge" in rates between the head of the lakes and Winnipeg as an aid to the west. "We certainly shouldn't pay all the cost of this stretch," he added.

Then he used these significant words, which I bring to the attention of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier):

> We are best represented by our members at Ottawa. But there are only four of us from the west; two from Alberta and two from Saskatchewan. How I could have used the support of fifteen or twenty Liberal members in my talks before the caucus.

That indicates, sir, that this matter was up for discussion; and the difficulty under which the hon. member for Rosthern operated was that he did not have sufficient support from western Canada to bring before the government the representations of the west.

Mr. COLDWELL: What did maritime and British Columbia Liberals do?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: And then he said this; and it is significant in explanation of why he is not getting the support of eastern members in his representations in caucus in this connection. He used these words:

> Eastern members were objecting to these tactics—

That is, to C.C.F. tactics.

—and were becoming increasingly opposed to extending benefits to western Canada as a result.

I do not know how the hon. member for Winnipeg South will be able to reconcile his arguments of this evening with the representations by the hon. member for Rosthern when speaking in Saskatoon the other night.

Mr. MUTCH: He is younger than I am.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: But, one thing, if the Minister of Transport in caucus did not have representations made to him, except by these four—and no more—he today has representations not only from representatives from Saskatchewan and Manitoba, but also from British Columbia and the maritime provinces as well.

Mr. BLACKMORE: And do not forget Alberta.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Yes, and from Alberta; and well made by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Hlynka). The minister now has representations from all the provinces affected by this discriminatory rate structure. And, after all, I should have thought that by this time the minister would have removed the veil and allowed us in the House of Commons to have some idea as to what the government's stand in this matter is. The responsibility is not that of the board of transport commissioners. That responsibility rests on the government, and on no other. I am going to refer to the act, for no amount of casuistry can get away from this fact, that the government must assume the responsibility. If it had appointed a committee of parliament, it might wait until the committee reported before doing anything. If it had appointed a royal commission it could have said, "After all, this is merely a recommendation." But it appointed the board of transport commissioners, under law, and the matter was submitted to that board.

I shall now refer to the relative sections. First, the board is composed of six members, holding office during good behaviour for the period of ten years from the date of appointment, but may be removed at any time by the governor in council upon address of the Senate and the House of Commons.

Mr. KNOWLES: Is what they have done "good behaviour"?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Then we come on to decisions of the board, where it is stated that decisions of the board are final, unless they are reviewed, rescinded, altered or varied by the board itself, which may rehear any application before coming to a final decision. However, where there is no rehearing, we find that section 52 of the Railway Act states:

The governor in council may at any time, in his discretion either upon petition of any party, person or company interested, or of his own motion, and without any petition or application vary or rescind any order, decision, rule or regulation of the board, whether such order or decision is made inter partes or otherwise, and whether such regulation is general or limited in its scope and application; and any order which the governor in council may make with respect thereto shall be binding upon the board and upon all parties.

Not only have there been representations made by various provinces, but I understand that representations have been made by various parties affected. So that the responsibility rests—and I repeat this—upon the governor in council or, in other words, upon the cabinet.

There is provision for appeal; but the facts in this case, if I understand them correctly, permit of no appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada. The act states:

An appeal shall lie from the board to the Supreme Court of Canada upon a question of jurisdiction, upon leave therefor being obtained from a judge of the said court—

And again:

An appeal shall also lie from the board to such court upon any question which in the opinion of the board is a question of law, or a question of jurisdiction, or both . . .

There is no question here either of law or of jurisdiction. My recollection is—and I speak subject to correction by the minister—that the question of jurisdiction was raised at one time during the proceedings before the board, and that an application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada on the ground of jurisdiction was in fact dismissed.

So that however much the minister may endeavour to evade responsibility, the responsibility for what will take place under this recommendation, or advisory recommendation if you will, will rest upon the government which, alone, will be responsible for permitting this recommendation to be carried into effect.

The baby is on the government's doorstep. It cannot in any way divest itself of its responsibility. Surely by this time, after the arguments advanced here today, the minister is or should be in a position to let the house and the country know the course the government intends to follow.

I am not going to enter into any argument as to the advantage of private enterprise over socialism, although that was brought into debate today. One of these times it will have to be answered. I want to get down to the meat of this situation, as I see it. Members from the maritimes—at least those who are interested—have set forth their view that there is discrimination. By reason of the mountain differential there is discrimination in British Columbia. There is discrimination on the prairies where the effective rates in the three prairie provinces are above the average level of Ontario and Quebec to the extent of some 14 per cent. That discrimination, under the 21 per cent across-the-board increase in freight rates will be increased until it will amount, over all, to 16·94 per cent. In other words, by this over-all increase the prairie provinces are being penalized by an additional 2·94 per cent over what they are paying today.

The hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Pearkes), who has just arrived this evening, has certain representations to make with respect to British Columbia. However, by reason of the fact that the list of speakers is complete, he finds himself unable to make those representations on this occasion and has authorized me to place some facts before the house on his behalf. I do so, accepting those representations as being proper in every respect and as being the representations he would have made respecting the situation in British Columbia.

The Vancouver Daily Province of April 1 points out that, according to an estimate made by A. K. Lloyd, president and general manager of B.C. Tree Fruits Limited, the 21 per cent rail freight boost may cost British Columbia's fruit industry $1,000,000 a year. By this 21 per cent increase across the board the mountain differential is made even worse than it is today. The situation today is that one and a quarter miles in the mountains equals one mile elsewhere, and a 21 per cent increase on the one-quarter mile will mean an increase in the discrimination against British Columbia, a discrimination that will affect practically all the products produced in that province. The hon. member also handed me, and I now place it before the house, a telegram which he received from the Okanagan and main line associated boards of trade. The telegram is dated April 3 from Enderby, B.C., and reads:

General Pearkes, M.P.,
Ottawa, Ont.

Strongly urge dominion government notify board transport commissioners that any attempt to increase rates on British Columbia traffic before existing discriminatory mountain differential removed will be appealed to highest authority.

I point out again that the only authority to whom an appeal can be made is to the governor in council the government of Canada. There is no appeal to the supreme court or any other judicial body except on a question of law or on a question of jurisdiction, and the latter matter has already been determined.

I now return to the prairie provinces and their views. We in the prairie provinces, without regard to party considerations, view any increase across the board as an intensification of the freight rates discrimination that has existed over the years and against which successive governments in the various provinces have objected. I feel that the effect of the board's decision will be to perpetuate the blight of discrimination against the prairies, against British Columbia and against the maritimes.

We in the prairie provinces and those who live in the maritime provinces have much in common in this regard. Discriminatory freight rates have had the result of relegating some provinces to the position of second-class provinces in the economic set-up of this dominion. Discriminatory freight rates have devitalized the potentialities of industrial expansion in the prairie provinces and in the maritimes.

During the war we on the prairies were penalized. During that period we were denied any real participation in the billions of dollars that were advanced by the government for the development of war industries, not because of a lack of natural resources but because of the discriminatory nature of our freight rates and because we could not interest the government in decentralizing industry. This is a matter of great moment at this time when we find ourselves in the midst of world turmoil.

I believe the time has come, not to have an across-the-board increase in freight rates which will merely continue if not perpetuate the unfairness under which these various provinces suffer today, but to have a scientific revamping of the freight rate structure. Instead of doing that, the board has recommended the easy way, it has simply added an annex to an already dilapidated structure. During the course of his remarks the hon. member for Winnipeg South pointed out that he did not think there were more than six men in the dominion who understood the structure of freight rate differentials.

An hon. MEMBER: He said six lawyers.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: He said six lawyers; after all, he was taking the best men in Canada when he referred to the legal profession. That is true. We have a board of transport commissioners, and I suggest to the minister that, having regard to what this increase in freight rates will do at this time to interfere with the economy of the country, he should apply the veto on the part of this government to the immediate operation of these recommendations and place the board of transport commissioners in a position where, with the necessary scientific ability they have available, they can revamp our freight rates structure, to the end that one of the most serious disadvantages under which some of the provinces in confederation are operating will be removed once and for all.

When the discrimination is removed there can be no objections to such increases as are necessary to assure a fair and proper return to the railroad companies. No one wants a condition of affairs where deficits will continue. Having regard to the situation in which our country is today, I am sure that no one desires to see continued this discrimination which has done more to put east against the west and to separate our country than any other single thing.

I suggest to the minister that the responsibility rests with him. He will never have a united federation; he will never build the type of Canada that we want to see built, where every part of the country is developed according to the resources it possesses, until this unfairness is removed. He will never build the kind of Canada that will assure the destiny that Canada should achieve by having some of the provinces placed in the position where, through the years, they will continue to be "have not" provinces industrially. The minister has the opportunity to do that which over the years many successive ministers of railways have realized should be done but have never had an opportunity of doing or have never had the vision to do. They never had the opportunity to do what the hon. gentleman who now holds the portfolio can do for Canada as a whole.

This is not a party matter. If this matter were allowed to come to a vote removed from all the trammels of party consideration; if each and every member voted not on the basis of voting non-confidence in the government but on the basis of the views he held, you would be surprised, Mr. Speaker, by the result. This afternoon when the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) spoke a most unusual thing occurred; there was applause from the government side of the house for many of the arguments which he advanced. That applause could not have been missed by the Minister of Transport. That applause represented an expression of the inward ideas of hon. members across this dominion who, without regard to any consideration, unselfishly want to see Canada developed as a unit rather than to be Balkanized industrially by reason of a differential that denies equality as between British Columbia and Ontario, that denies equality as between Saskatchewan, Alberta, Manitoba and Quebec, that denies equality as between the maritimes and central Canada. Those inequalities are inequities and those inequities are doing more to separate this country and, in the event of war, to make it defenceless by reason of the centralization of industry in central Canada. These inequalities and inequities would be removed if the minister would either place the matter in the hands of the transport commissioners, with all the thousands and thousands of pages of evidence that they have before them and knowing the facts as they do, or set up a commission to take additional evidence with a view to removing this discrimination, for, as long as it continues, this country can never hope to achieve that development she should have, having regard to the resources she possesses.

Mr. G. A. CRUICKSHANK (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief because I am optimistic enough, after hearing the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker), to believe that the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. Macdonnell) will fall into line, though I cannot conceive of a member from Toronto falling in line with the west in this matter.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I am not from Toronto.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: That is all right. I should like to hear the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario say that he agrees with us in the west on the mountain differential, and I will gladly forgo my time if he will give that assurance.

Mr. CASSELMAN: Get your own minister up.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: He will get up in good time, and fortunately the minister in charge will for many years belong to this side of the house.

I wish to compliment the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) on his speech this afternoon. I believe that he spoke on behalf of all of us, and in my opinion in all the years I have been in this house I never heard him make a better speech. I am glad to say that he kept partisan politics entirely out of it. I am sure that he spoke for every member from the maritimes and certainly for every member from British Columbia, irrespective of party.

I am sorry that on this side of the house we have not had the support we should like to have had from the members from the maritimes, which are affected almost as much as British Columbia.

In my opinion the most effective part of the speech of the hon. member for Lake Centre was when he spoke of unity. At the present time we are trying to attain unity in international affairs, but we shall never have unity in international affairs if we cannot secure unity within Canada; and as long as the maritimes and the west are treated as we are now being treated, we shall never have unity within Canada. I believe, with the hon. member for Winnipeg South (Mr. Mutch), that this question should not have had to originate with the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, but that the government itself should have found ways and means of bringing the matter before parliament because it is one of the most important matters that could come before us. If a motion were introduced I believe that we could find sufficient members on this side of the house to carry it if we had the support of the official opposition, which I doubt very much except for a few members. I am frank to admit that I do not think we would have the support of the members from Ontario and Quebec on this side of the house.

An hon. MEMBER: Sure.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: An hon. member says "sure", but no member from Ontario or Quebec has yet risen in this debate to say one word on behalf of either the maritimes or the west.

Every farmer in my riding is being penalized by this increased freight rate. Every poultryman is being penalized two cents a dozen on eggs. The berry growers are penalized on some 15,000,000 pounds of fruit which they will ship this year. The previous speaker mentioned wires that he had received. I received more than that; as well as the same wire, I had two long distance telephone calls from people knowing perhaps that we could present their case more effectively on this side of the house as we are about to elect a new member from the fruit-growing district.

Mr. MacINNIS: You cannot do so unless you change your policy.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: We believe that we are going to change the policy. I have always been a sort of modest member who has refrained from saying what he thinks, but I can assure the government that if some of my legal friends, the hon. member for Lake Centre or some other member of his profession can show me how a motion can be introduced that will present this issue straight to the house, at least three British Columbia members will vote in favour of the motion, even if it should be a want of confidence motion, because we believe that the very future of our province is at stake in this matter. We believe, not in appeals such as the hon. member for Lake Centre suggested, but that parliament should be supreme in this matter. I do not know much about the rules. I never break them myself; I know that my hon. friend the member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) is an expert on the rules and that he sometimes calls me to order, but I believe that on this question we are in agreement. I want to impress on the government, and it will continue to be impressed on the government by the private members from British Columbia both in public and in private, that no longer are we going to stand to be sacrificed for the benefit of Ontario and Quebec, nor do I believe that the people in the maritimes will continue to be sacrificed in this way. We want unity within Canada; but unity means one thing, unity in all parts of Canada, and the only way you can have unity is by equality of treatment.

I want to impress on the minister, who I believe is both capable and fair-minded, the necessity of a change of apparent government policy on this question, for without a change you cannot maintain unity within Canada or deal out justice to all parts of this country. I am for once disappointed that we have not heard on this question from the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) who usually speaks every three minutes on every third question, but I notice a great silence today from Ontario and Quebec on this subject. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that all parties in British Columbia are unanimous on this question and that we shall fight to the last ditch to see that we get a square deal.

Mr. A. J. BROOKS (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I feel somewhat diffident in following the able speech of the modest member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank), with most though not all of whose remarks I agree. He stated, however, that the British Columbia members have not received much support from the maritime provinces.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I said on this side of the house.

Mr. BROOKS: I beg the hon. member's pardon, because I was going to point out that the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis), the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Isnor) and my seatmate the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Black) have already spoken in support of his stand. They presented very strong arguments, indeed most of the arguments which I was going to use myself. But as no one from New Brunswick has spoken I should like to indicate to the house that in my province we feel keenly about this freight rate increase. One has only to read the newspapers of the last week or to talk with men from different parts of the province to realize how strong the feeling is.

Freight rates have always been an acute problem in the maritime provinces. It has been said in fact that the freight rate means life or death to maritime industry. This has been so in the past and we feel that it applies also to the future. Over a long period of years we have lost industries in the maritimes because of high freight rates, and as the hon. member for Cumberland pointed out this evening, we have also lost many thousands of our people. Our people have to go where they can find work, where there is industry, and if industry leaves any part of the country the people have to leave too. That has been the result in our province ever since confederation.

It is not necessary for me to go into the history of freight rates in the maritime provinces because they were dealt with this afternoon. Our people have always been conscious of our difficulties before and ever since we joined confederation. One of the reasons our province came into confederation was the promise that freight rates would be one of the main considerations. We were not in confederation very long until we began to realize that the freight rate structure of this country was against these little provinces down by the sea, and we began at once to lose our industry and also our people to the central parts of Canada.

In 1925 there was formed in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island what was known as the maritime transportation commission. This commission received the support of the governments of the three maritime provinces. It also received the support of all the businessmen in the three provinces. The idea of this maritime transportation commission, was, among other things, to keep careful watch on the freight rate situation in these provinces. Out of the idea of this maritime transportation commission eventually developed the Duncan commission which made certain recommendations for our provinces with relation to freight rates, which recommendations were not carried out to their full extent, with the result that we continued to lose industry and our people, even though under the Maritime Freight Rates Act we had a 20 per cent benefit over the other parts of Canada with the exception of the west.

What does this increase of 21 per cent mean now? Mr. Rand Matheson, who was the manager of the maritime transportation commission, has estimated that it will mean between $7,000,000 and $8,000,000 to the people of these three provinces; that is, that it will cost our fishermen, our farmers, our people in industry and our lumbermen an extra amount of between $7,000,000 and $8,000,000. It will cost the whole of Canada something like $70,000,000. We have not one-tenth of the population in the maritime provinces. It is estimated that there are about thirteen million people in Canada today. In the maritime provinces we have less than one million people, and if we were to pay on the basis of our population we would contribute only one-thirteenth of this amount of $70,000,000; but, according to the estimate of Mr. Matheson, and he is a keen authority on railway matters, we are contributing one-seventh of the amount, which, in itself, is inequitable. This will increase the cost to the farmers. Someone pointed out this afternoon that it will mean a great increase in the cost of the machinery we have to buy from central Canada. It will mean an increase in the cost of the fertilizer which the farmer uses. In New Brunswick we use something like 60,000 tons of fertilizer a year. It will mean an increase in the cost of practically everything that goes into the farming industry. It will mean an increase in the cost of feed grains which we have to use in our dairy and hog industry.

Take an industry like the Atlantic Sugar Refinery in the city of Saint John. A few days ago the senior hon. member for Halifax was bewailing the fact, and rightly so, that during the last few years the sugar refinery in the city of Halifax had moved to the city of Montreal. What will happen to an industry like the Atlantic Sugar Refinery in Saint John with these increased freight rates? We know what has happened in the past. It will mean only a few years until this industry is closed up and moves to some other part of Canada. That is what we in New Brunswick and in the maritime provinces generally have had to put up with for years, and it seems to be the logical result of the increase in freight rates.

I could go on and mention other industries. The hon. member for Cumberland mentioned the stove and furnace industry, which is in my own province in the town of Sackville. It employs quite a number of people. These people have to bring a lot of their products for the manufacture of their stoves from central Canada. This cannot go on forever. If the freight rates are to be increased they will have to move nearer to the great centres of population in this dominion. And so it goes on, first one industry and then another. The main reason why we lose these industries in our province is the freight rates.

I read an article the other day in which the Premier of Prince Edward Island said that the potato industry in Prince Edward Island would be very hard hit. As a matter of fact, I think it was the deputy minister of agriculture of Prince Edward Island who made this statement:

> The "very existence" of Prince Edward Island farmers was threatened by the 21 per cent increase in freight rates granted the railways by the board of transport commissioners' ruling this week, a resolution adopted at the annual meeting of the P.E.I. Potato Growers' Association declared. The resolution urged that the case for the maritimes be reviewed.

What is true of Prince Edward Island with reference to potatoes would be also true in the province of Nova Scotia with reference to apples, I believe, and in the province of New Brunswick as well. Under the British empire trade agreements, Nova Scotia sold its apples to England. That province had a splendid market there. That market is being lost to the apple growers of Nova Scotia, with the result that they will have to seek a market in central Canada and in other parts of Canada, and this increase in freight rates will be a severe blow to the apple growers of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

I could go on and quote case after case, but I do not think it is necessary because of what has been said this afternoon and evening. I would point out that if all sections of Canada were equally prosperous, if we were as prosperous in the maritimes as are the people in Ontario and Quebec, we would have no objection to bearing our share of this freight rate increase, and there would be no argument against it. We in the maritime provinces have not been as prosperous as the people in other parts of Canada; we have not been as prosperous for the very reasons that I have been pointing out, and one of the main ones has been the increase in freight rates. For instance, our farmers in the maritime provinces and in New Brunswick particularly received an average salary last year of about $800. The average salary for the whole of Canada was about $1,700. Thus our people received one-half of what the farmers throughout Canada received. The same thing applies to other industries as well. That is the point I am trying to make. If our people were as prosperous as are the people in parts of central Canada, then we would have no objection to bearing our just portion of the burden.

I think it was very well put this afternoon that this is not a matter for a commission to decide. This is a very broad question. It is a question which affects the very life of this dominion of ours; it affects the unity of our people, and it is something which the government of this country must decide. The decision must not be left with any commission.

I should like to call attention to what the Premier of New Brunswick said in this connection a short time ago. It is as follows:

> McNair urges joint action
>
> Suggests Ottawa delay operation of freight boost.

In the course of his remarks he had this to say:

> It was clearly intended under the Maritime Freight Rates Act that the maritime provinces should be placed in a position to do business with the other provinces of Canada. Any movement or action which has the effect of disrupting this position is most disturbing.

Then further:

> I am strongly of the opinion that the federal government should intervene to ensure that at least thirty days' notice be given by the railways before putting into effect the rates permitted under the recent decision.

He thinks there should not be any hurry in this matter but that there should be time for careful consideration. The Premier of Nova Scotia, the Hon. Angus Macdonald, said:

> The new rates recommended by the board run contrary to the spirit of the Maritime Freight Rates Act, and, in my judgment, the board has failed to deal adequately with the arguments made by maritime counsel on this point.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would point out to the government that these men whom I have quoted this evening, the Premier of New Brunswick, the Premier of Nova Scotia and the Premier of Prince Edward Island, are all very strong supporters of the present administration at Ottawa. If it were some years ago when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) said, "Not a five cent piece to a Tory province", we might understand the attitude the government has taken. But here we have three premiers who are very strong supporters of this present administration, and each of them has stated definitely that this is a problem which the federal government should solve and which, in justice to the people of their provinces, must receive immediate attention.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, this is a difficult debate in which to take part, largely because all the debating is on one side. Although I presume there is a different point of view on the question, there appears to be no one to give expression to that point of view. I merely rise—and it is almost inevitable at this stage of the debate—to emphasize some of the points that have already been made. It is difficult at this stage to make any new points. Before I go on with what I have to say, I wish to refer to a point raised by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Hlynka) and also by the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Black); that is, that it is too bad that the debate came up in the way it did, namely, on a motion to adjourn the house on a matter of urgent public importance.

I too regret that the debate had to come up in that way. Unfortunately in this house we have not reached the stage where a member can rise in his place and ask the government to set aside a certain time for debating an important question. That is the procedure at Westminster. There they have a standing order similar to our standing order 31; but as regards any question of importance arising, the leader of the opposition or a private member, either on the government side or on the opposition side of the house, can rise and ask that a day be set aside for discussing the question, and invariably that is done.

The leader of this party could not in the natural order of things have given more notice than he did. As a matter of fact we did a very unusual thing. We not only notified the Speaker, which we are not obliged to do under the rule, but we notified the government's chief whip and the leaders of the other parties as well, because we appreciated that this was a matter of which they should have some notice and that it was not in any sense a political matter. That is the reason the question has come up in this way.

As I understand the freight rates question as it affects British Columbia, it is a matter of the fairness of the rates; and may I say by the way that in this matter I can speak both as a maritimer and as a member from British Columbia. Like so many others, I had to leave the maritimes in order to make my livelihood somewhere else, and I therefore know their difficulties there. As I understand the question in British Columbia, it is not that we are opposed to an increase in freight rates if that increase is necessary, but we object to the fact that the decision made at this time perpetuates freight rates which we have considered for years to be inequitable. That is the point.

[Mr. Brooks.]

I have lived for forty years in British Columbia; in every year during that time that province has been fighting at Ottawa for a better break in the matter of freight rates and we have not got it yet. Not only that; but this order, if it stands as it is now, will make the situation worse than it was before. Not that the present discrimination will be increased by 21 per cent, but it will be more than it was before. That is the position as we see it in British Columbia.

It has been mentioned that the railways were represented by, I was going to say some of the best lawyers in Canada, but I will say some of the cleverest lawyers. One of them made the statement in argument that the inquiry into freight rates was concerned with revenue for the railways. He said that the board of transport commissioners was limited to the fixing of just and reasonable rates, and he said further that:

> . . . just and reasonable rates referred to in the statute are rates that must be just and reasonable to the railways to whom they are to be paid, and that unremunerative rates are unjust and unreasonable.

I maintain there is more involved here than simply revenue for the railways. That, of course, is important because, without the necessary revenue, they cannot carry on and serve the country, but there is more than that involved. The railways in Canada were built in order to develop the various parts of this far-flung country and to knit the provinces together and that is where in my opinion the government comes in. Even if the board of transport commissioners is restricted to dealing solely with the question of revenue for the railways, without regard to whether the collection of that revenue is equitable or not, the government is bound to take notice of that, and that is what I suggest to the minister and to the government that they must do.

Let me say again that, as I understand the position of the people of British Columbia, they are not opposed to an increase in freight rates as such. They are opposed to the maintenance of an inequitable freight structure. I have in my hand, and I was going to read it to the house, a copy of the wire that was read by the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) when he spoke on behalf of the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Pearkes). That wire makes it quite clear that until the discriminatory mountain differential is removed, British Columbia will not be satisfied. We believe that since freight rates in our province are much higher than average, we should not be asked to pay higher rates until the rates have been increased in those areas which have for many years enjoyed the relatively lower rates. I submit that is not an unreasonable position to take. I imagine it is pretty much the position that the people of the maritimes take as well. But if we continue the present discrimination, we are helping to create an imbalance in the economy of Canada, and we are certainly not helping to create that unity which must exist in this country if we are to be prosperous, happy and free. I was indeed glad to hear so many of those who spoke in this debate refer to the fact that in order to have unity we must have equality. We cannot have unity when certain sections of the country feel they are being discriminated against for the benefit of other sections. That being the case, if we want unity let us see to it that all sections of this country have the same consideration and the same opportunities.

I am glad tonight to be able to associate myself with those other members from British Columbia who have opposed the decision made by the board of transport commissioners. I hope the government will not allow the decision to go into effect without having an opportunity for a review.

Mr. W. CHESTER S. McLURE (Queens): Having listened in this debate, Mr. Speaker, to all those who have spoken, representing most of the provinces of Canada, I thought, since I was the only Tory member from Prince Edward Island, I might be allowed an opportunity of saying a few words.

This question of transportation is one in which I have always been interested from the point of view of our own province. I have endeavoured to show the discrimination with reference to freight rates by all governments against our province as a province. But that is not quite the question with which we are dealing tonight.

To begin with, I might say that I did not approve the manner in which this debate was introduced into the house, but I approved the manner suggested by the hon. member for Winnipeg South (Mr. Mutch). However, that is past and the last speaker has given the reason why the debate was so introduced. It does not give the members of this house the fullest opportunity to discuss the greatest question that has arisen in parliament for many years, namely, the freight rate increase which was announced a short time ago.

When this freight rate increase of 21 per cent was announced, with other entanglements, it rocked the maritime provinces and nearly shook them clear of the Dominion of Canada. It also rocked the western provinces to the same extent. The central provinces, owing to their great wealth and their centralization of great factories, have nothing much to say with regard to it, because both the maritimes and the western provinces are paying the shot and the central provinces are enjoying the benefits.

There is one thing I want to mention—and it may not be quite in order—along the lines of what has been said by those who have spoken, and it is this. The board of transport commissioners had no authority that I can see, although I am not a lawyer, to make this increase without due consideration having been given and information having been received in this way. I believe this matter should have been discussed on the floor of the house before it ever went to the board of transport commissioners. They are not all-powerful. For instance, over a year ago I took objection to the board of transport commissioners and protested their going into our province and setting freight rates over which they have no jurisdiction whatever. I am glad to say that, after they went there, they themselves found out that they did not have the jurisdiction to submit to us freight rates that we should have to pay. I feel assured that the government should not have given this board of transport commissioners the authority to go over this country and set freight rates; I feel they are not getting the true picture of what we should have with reference to freight rates.

Of course there are two sides to this question. Two great railways are connected with it; in fact, two of the greatest railway systems in the world, the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific. However, these two companies are somewhat different. One is practically a government-owned railway and the other one is what we might call a private enterprise. Notwithstanding that, we have these two companies now to share and share alike in the decision of the board of transport commissioners; that is, each of them is entitled to put on this new rate for its own benefit. The Canadian National is a railway that Canadians are proud of. It was built, like the Canadian Pacific, for one purpose, namely, the development of Canada. The Canadian National is giving us excellent service, generally speaking, across Canada. If we are demanding still greater service from this railway, and also service in other directions throughout the country, if it cannot make revenue and operating expenses balance, there is only one solution. If we demand that the railway maintain the service at the highest possible level without the raising of rates, then the government must pay the deficit.

However, in the matter of freight rates, as in ordinary passenger transportation, there is the matter of differences of equipment. I was about to say with regard to the maritime provinces—and I would speak particularly about Prince Edward Island—that we lack the transportation system enjoyed by the other provinces. However we are gaining somewhat, and had hoped we would be linked up with the rest of Canada, and have de luxe trains such as have been provided by the Canadian National across the country.

How does the increase in freight rates affect Prince Edward Island? As an agricultural province, it will cast a heavier burden on Prince Edward Island than on any province. Freight rates will be increased on our exports as well as on our imports. We are exporters and importers. We have no great factories or industries. Our people must live by the soil and the fisheries. We have only two industries of any great importance. As some hon. members have said tonight, it can be well imagined that an increase in freight rates on our exports will almost cripple the farmers of Prince Edward Island.

Someone has placed on record figures showing estimates concerning these increases. Estimates have been made as to what it will cost Prince Edward Island farmers and fishermen—particularly the farmers—in the export of their goods. The amount has been set down at $1,500,000 to $2,000,000 as the amount the new increase will cost, if it goes into effect. However, while we are all talking against the increase in freight rates, and endeavouring to persuade the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) and the government that the increases ought not to be put into effect, I am positive that neither the minister nor the government would dare to put them into effect at the present time. They must be given consideration. From one end of Canada to the other, with the possible exception of the central provinces, a cry has been raised against them.

In face of that, and in face of the arguments submitted from time to time not only in the house, but when the investigation was taking place before the commission at different points across Canada, I feel that these increases will not be put into effect. All these things must have a bearing on the action the government will take. I certainly hope I am right when I say that it will not dare to impose these increases on the maritimes and the western provinces.

A few days ago I mentioned discriminations against those situated in geographically extreme locations. I mentioned, for instance, the freight rates we in the maritimes and those in the west have to pay on automobiles, trucks and farm machinery, none of which are manufactured in the maritime provinces. If this increase were added, for an ordinary car brought from Oshawa, instead of paying $86 we would have to pay at least $100, and up as high as $165 to bring to Prince Edward Island a car that a farmer may wish to buy. I endeavoured the other day to show the discrimination in this instance; and the same could be said about all farm implements. The situation is that a farmer living near Oshawa will receive support from that factory, when he produces food for the men employed there, and their families. When that farmer buys a car he pays the factory price. We in Prince Edward Island also support the factories, but we get no direct results from the sale of produce, because those commodities are supplied by the local farmers. Yet, when we attempt to support that factory by buying an automobile or a truck we are discriminated against and penalized to the extent of from $100 to $165. This should be placed on the stamp rate, and there should be some equalization whereby a man living next door to a factory would not be in a position to buy his car one nickel cheaper than a man living in Prince Edward Island or in the west.

Some of the largest merchants have taken up this matter, and have equalized freight rates throughout Canada on the articles they manufacture. The matter of freight rates brings us to many other matters which, in the interests of our own provinces, we could discuss. I know, however, that the hour is late and that before the Minister of Transport speaks there are other hon. members who wish to make their contribution to the debate. I trust the minister will give the matter such consideration that those of us in the east will not have our hopes so terribly blasted, as they were when the 21 per cent increase was announced.

The hon. member for Royal (Mr. Brooks) referred to Prince Edward Island's voicing its opinion against these increases. It is not necessary for me to repeat what has been said by representatives from other provinces. The resolution passed by Prince Edward Island is already in the hands of the minister, and it is not necessary for me to repeat it at this time.

Let me say I am sure the government will give this matter its honest consideration, because it is entirely in the government's hands. We should not have to be ruled by the board; the government must take the responsibility for this increase in freight rates.

Mr. F. D. SHAW (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, there are a few things I should like to say at this time. I believe it was fortunate that I happened to be in Alberta, in my own constituency, at the time the freight rate increase was announced. Thus I was able to secure a clear and concise picture of the reaction of many people in that part of Canada.

It will be noted, if one examines the press releases of March 30, that the board of transport commissioners authorized the railway companies to make a general advance in freight rates to the extent of 21 per cent, with certain exceptions. Those exceptions relate to grain and flour. Then we read that there was to be a flat increase of twenty-five cents a ton on coal and coke. We also find reference made to minimum charges for certain less than carload shipments between any two stations. We find further reference to recognized differentials by way of rail, water and so forth and the indication that those differentials are to be preserved.

While I do not desire to tie my remarks specifically to Alberta, I feel I am justified in taking that province as a typical example, possibly the most outstanding example of the discrimination which exists under the prevailing freight rate structure. As anyone who examines the facts will realize, Alberta suffers the highest freight rate charges on goods exported from that province and pays the highest rates on goods coming in from any other part of Canada. Alberta stands at the apex of the freight rate structure, and I sometimes think that from that lofty position we are able, not only to have a better appreciation of our problem but to look down and note the problems confronting the maritime provinces, the other prairie provinces and British Columbia.

I think it is well to bear in mind that the prevailing freight rate structure in Canada, particularly in western Canada, was designed at a time when traffic was considerably less than it is at the present time and when the population of the west was quite sparse. I had always believed that freight rates or freight costs depended, at least in part, upon the volume of business available. However, we discover in western Canada that as the volume of business increased, as it multiplied many times over, there was no freight rate reduction commensurate with the greatly increased volume of business.

One could briefly list the disadvantages suffered by my own province under four or five different heads. We know that in Alberta as between two points, let us say 100 miles apart, we pay a much higher rate than is paid between two points in Ontario an equal number of miles apart. This afternoon the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Homuth) seemed to take exception to the suggestion that the provinces in central Canada must, in some measure at least, bear the responsibility for this situation. I should like to say to the hon. member that feeling definitely exists in western Canada. I am saying that when one examines all the evidence he cannot avoid being convinced that the condition is approved by the provinces of central Canada.

I realize that from a political point of view the government must have its eyes on the provinces of central Canada. In fact I would go so far as to say that if a condition arose where the government had to make a choice as between the wishes of western Canada and the wishes of central Canada, its vote would be in favour of central Canada. It is an established fact that more than half the members in the Canadian House of Commons come from those two provinces.

We find that goods manufactured or produced at one point within the province of Alberta and transported to another point bear a substantially higher rate than goods produced, let us say, at one point in Ontario and transported to another point within that same province where they are consumed. We find also that we suffer unfavourably from the point of view of distribution of goods within our province which are produced outside the province and brought into the province for consumption.

The particular situation which arises has already been referred to this evening. Goods which are manufactured in Ontario and shipped to Calgary or Edmonton bear a considerably higher freight charge than the same goods shipped to Vancouver. As an illustration, goods produced at Hamilton are shipped to Vancouver and then back to Calgary and sold more cheaply than they could be sold in the city of Vancouver.

Mr. LOW: Shipped back by local freight.

Mr. SHAW: Shipped back by local freight. I recall accompanying a merchant from my own town to Calgary. He was desirous of procuring a special type of grate for a furnace. We were told in Calgary that the only place the grate could be procured was in Vancouver. We pointed out that that seemed rather queer when the grate was manufactured in Hamilton. We were then told that it was found more profitable to establish a warehouse in Vancouver, ship the goods there to be stored, and then ship them by local freight to be sold in Alberta as they were required. Naturally such a situation creates a great deal of consternation among the consuming public of my province. It has already been pointed out that the kind of differential which creates that situation has caused Albertans to condemn the freight rate structure as it applies there.

We know what has happened in the past with regard to Alberta grain which went either to Winnipeg or to Vancouver. We know there is an eastern section of the province of Alberta where we reach the extreme apex of the freight rate structure. We realize less for the grain we produce there than is realized in any other part of Canada. This is due once again to the excessive freight charges which are imposed. Reference was also made to the situation west of Fort William where we find the breaking point at the head of the lakes and the constructive mileage principle which was introduced between Fort William and Winnipeg. This must be altered.

I have jotted down hastily a number of articles and I have indicated the increased freight dollars which we must pay as compared with the dollars paid by the consumer in Ontario. The previous speaker referred to automobiles. We find that for a Chrysler product produced in Windsor we have to pay $169 more than the consumer in Ontario. That is for a lower priced automobile, if there is such a thing left. In the medium priced field we find the difference running as high as $200. For a light delivery truck we pay $150 more per unit, and for a two-ton truck we pay as high as $227 more than the Ontario consumer.

On electric ranges we pay approximately $7 more, while refrigerators run from $6.25 to $12.75 more. Someone may suggest that that is not a very large sum, but when you multiply it by the number of such commodities consumed within our province you discover that the result is a large sum. In the case of the lowly washing machine we pay approximately $5 more.

As we have constantly emphasized, Mr. Farmer is penalized because he pays approximately $18 more for his binder than does the farmer in Ontario. His mower runs approximately $13 more, his ten-foot drill $10 or $15 more, his cream separator $23.50 more, his wagon $15 to $20 more. His 16 to 26-horsepower tractor $112 more; his power churn, which is used in the dairy industry in my province, $165 more than is paid by the Ontario farmer. I mention one other item, the bottle washing machine, which is also used in the dairy industry. It runs $130 more per unit than is paid in the province of Ontario. All these increases represent freight charges.

Let us take a few comparable figures of freight charges over comparable distances between central and western Canada. I find on making a comparison of the rates on first-class traffic, on standard mileage, for fifty miles we pay approximately three per cent more in Alberta; on the average 100-mile haul, 4·6 per cent more; on the 200-mile haul, 11·2 per cent more; on the 300-mile haul, 11·7 per cent more; on the 400-mile haul, 12 per cent more; on the 500-mile haul, 13·6 per cent more. If you apply those percentages to the actual freight moved in the course of a twelve-month period over those areas you will find that we are penalized extensively.

I have also a comparison of eastern and western ton-mile rates which are extremely illuminating. On grain we pay 13 per cent more per ton-mile than in central Canada; on flour and milk products the rate is equal; on lumber and squared timber, 31·1 per cent more per ton mile; on wood for fuel, 12·5 per cent more; on anthracite coal, 51·6 per cent more; on bituminous coal, 36·6 per cent more; on ores of various types, 30 per cent more; on livestock it is equal, also on dressed meats; on raw cotton, 5·3 per cent more; on other revenue billing, 15 per cent more.

The lumber situation has been referred to. Once again I have taken some comparable mileages in central Canada, and I find that on a carload of lumber hauled approximately 642 miles in Alberta we pay 85·1 per cent more. Lumber hauled in Alberta over a distance of 720 miles costs us 75 per cent more per car in freight; on 765 miles, 83 per cent more, and on 818 miles, 71·4 per cent more.

Here are a few more interesting figures. I do not care particularly to quote figures, but if they are given some consideration it will open the eyes of some of those who believe and say that we are crying with probably no justification.

A carload of lumber leaving the city of Edmonton and going to prairie points—I emphasize that, to prairie points—as compared with carloads of lumber moved within the two central provinces of Canada makes an interesting comparison. If we haul a car of lumber 244 miles on the prairies out of Edmonton we will pay 28·5 per cent more than they pay in the central provinces; on 294 miles, 23 per cent more; on 370 miles, 33·3 per cent more; on 425 miles, 20 per cent more; on 501 miles, 38·3 per cent more, and so on. I have other figures but I shall not give them.

The hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank) referred to fresh fruits and indicated that the growers of his province stand to lose hundreds of thousands if not a million dollars a year. Here are a few interesting figures. Let us take fresh fruit produced in his own area in British Columbia and shipped to our own province, as contrasted with fruits produced in the Hamilton area of this province and shipped to points in western Ontario or to any part of Ontario. On a haul of 301 miles we pay 38 per cent more than they pay in the province of Ontario; on a haul of 355 miles we pay as high as 60 per cent more; on a haul of 453 miles we pay 54 per cent more, and on a haul of 556 miles we pay 15·5 per cent more. You can imagine what the addition of 21 per cent to any of these figures which I have quoted will do to us and to business generally in western Canada. I repeat what I said before. I think the hon. member for Fraser Valley was quite right in voicing the alarm he did voice a few moments ago.

Let us now look at a few general commodities which are used on the farm or in the home from day to day. Take shipments of commodities from eastern Canada to Vancouver and shipments of commodities from eastern Canada to Calgary or Edmonton in the province of Alberta. On soap alone we pay in freight in Calgary and Edmonton 98 per cent more than the consumer in the city of Vancouver; on twine, 79·6 per cent more; on wire, 164 per cent more than if that wire were shipped right through to the city of Vancouver; on calcium phosphate, 212·6 per cent more; on drugs and medicines, 102·3 per cent more; on lead, 164 per cent more; on boots and shoes, 51·8 per cent more; on linoleum and oil cloth, 58·4 per cent more; on wire rods, 138·6 per cent more; on window shades, 51·1 per cent more; on glass, 46·6 per cent more; on drygoods, 66·6 per cent more. I would emphasize that that is the increased rate per ton mile; it is important that I mention that.

There is a peculiar case which I have often mentioned. We have a condensery in my city of Red Deer. It produces the best canned or condensed milk produced anywhere in Canada. If we desire to ship that milk to Vancouver it has to compete with milk from Tillsonburg, Ontario, which is laid down in Vancouver much cheaper than we can lay down our Red Deer milk in Vancouver, purely because of the freight rate structure that prevails. If that is not a most discriminatory position I should like to have it explained. Is it any wonder, Mr. Speaker, when we examine some of these figures that we hear more and more talk about the secession of the western provinces? In fact the talk is becoming in some instances extremely outspoken. I mentioned a moment ago that when these people look toward eastern Canada and attach a certain part of the responsibility to these two central provinces they may do so because of certain newspaper propaganda which circulated about the year 1907.

I think I quoted this once before but it might be well to put it on the record again. As I emphasized at that time, some people think this is the attitude which still prevails here, and until it is proven that this is not the attitude, possibly we shall continue to believe that it is. This is from a newspaper of 1907:

> The marvel of our west is its productiveness, the inrush of population, most of all the consuming capacity, the consuming possibility of that population for manufactured goods of all kinds. The farmers of the west do not haggle over prices, they have the money to buy all kinds of things, and with their rapidly increasing numbers they can support an immense population in some other portion of the dominion better suited for industrial and manufacturing purposes.

Then the editorial goes on to indicate that the central provinces are the parts of Canada particularly adapted to profit from this large increase in population on the prairies. The people of western Canada—I presume the same is true of the maritime provinces also—are becoming a bit sick of the support which they are being constantly called upon to render to industry in central Canada. What central Canada will discover before too long is, I am quite sure, that the west will become highly industrialized, and then I presume it will not take them very long to tell central Canada just where they can go. The trend is in that direction, and unless some of these inequalities, inequities and disturbing conditions which prevail are removed that situation will develop just as surely as I stand here.

I for one am not questioning at the moment the necessity of the railroads for increased revenue. I prefer to leave that situation to the experts who are in possession of all the facts. However, I would be very much surprised if the government of Canada did not give careful consideration to one or two things which happened at the time of the application for an increase in freight rates. The first was that the Canadian Pacific made some extremely pessimistic estimates with respect to their operations, extremely pessimistic guesses, should I say. These estimates were not in any sense borne out by their own figures which later came to light. Let me say, secondly, if we are to adopt as a policy within this country that when demand starts falling off industry is to be permitted to jack its prices up, then I say you are guaranteeing to us one of the most disastrous depressions ever inflicted upon the Canadian people.

We hear government officials talking about production or competition lowering rates. I would like to see them give some encouragement to the carrying into effect of that bit of philosophy. No doubt the board of transport commissioners did what they were called upon to do. They examined the dollar position of the railroads; they examined the assertion that the railroads required additional revenues in order to carry on, and they recommended accordingly. I am not going to criticize the board of transport commissioners, but I say this: certainly, before they were ever called upon to authorize any increase in freight rates the government should have taken action to correct and remove the anomalies that existed within our present freight rate set-up.

I do not know why the government wait before doing a thing of that kind. They are now faced with a situation of this kind and they find themselves right up to their necks in hot water, squirming in every direction. I agree thoroughly with what has been said here today by speakers from every side of the house, that we should first establish an equalization of rates within this country in order that one part shall not be called upon to bear an unfair burden.

The government may wonder why this announcement caused such consternation. I hope they are conscious of some facts. I imagine the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) knows what it did out west, because I understand that he has been out there recently. This increase of $70,000,000 in the cost of living at a time when our cost of living index shows that the cost of living is higher than it ever was in the history of Canada since the index was first established, coming on top of such things as the coarse grain policy of last fall, the farmers' income tax forms, the excise taxes and so forth and so on, just seemed to bring everything to a head. I do not know, but it seems to me that this government have the uncanny faculty of doing things that bring condemnation down upon their heads; because if one looks back over the past four or five months he must conclude that, had they deliberately set about to do things to annoy the Canadian public they could not have been more successful than they have been. I am not going to say it was deliberate, because an election cannot be too far away; therefore I can hardly believe it would be deliberate. I would rather say they did the best they could, and it is simply that they were not equal to the task. That is about the only conclusion I can possibly come to.

I have been asked how long I am going to speak. I should speak until I have said what I started out to say, regardless of how long it takes. However, I am practically through. I speak for all of us over here, when I say that we join with those who demand that the government set aside, at least for the time being, the application of the 21 per cent increase, and that during the interim they set about to do what I am convinced they believe in their own hearts should be done, namely, a revision of the whole Canadian freight rate structure. Only thus can you have a Canada that is prepared to talk in terms of Canada, and not a Canada parts of which are looking elsewhere for, I should not say relief, but at least for encouragement. I beseech the government to give consideration to what has been said here today and to take appropriate action forthwith.

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my remarks this evening must of necessity be extremely brief, for reasons which I shall give in a moment. In the first place, I think I should thank the hon. members who have taken part in this debate, because I have no doubt that the house has benefited from the remarks which have been made from this side and from the other side of the house.

I would have welcomed very much the opportunity to participate in this debate at greater length than I am about to do. I would also have welcomed the opportunity to discuss some of the suggestions which have been made by hon. members this evening. In the first place, I think perhaps there may be some doubt as to whether or not this whole debate was in order. The matter of the freight rate question is, to my mind, still in the pending stage. However, if I had risen and taken that view there would have been a great deal of objection from the other side of the house and perhaps from this side as well. In any event I do not think it would have been well regarded in the country as a whole; therefore, for that reason, I withheld taking any technical objection to the motion made by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar.

There has been a tendency in this debate today to confuse two issues, the one which was the increase recommended by the board of transport commissioners and the other which was the equalization of the rates; or, to use the expression mentioned at various times in the debate, a discrimination in the rates across Canada.

I have listened carefully to the debate and have come to the conclusion that there has been a tendency to confuse those two issues. Those two issues are, I think, quite separate one from the other. The board in this case was dealing with one specific matter, namely an application, not by the government of Canada but by the railways, through the railway association of Canada representing some twenty railways, to the board of transport commissioners for an increase in freight rates.

Mr. COLDWELL: Does the hon. gentleman not think a 21 per cent increase across the board is discriminatory?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I will deal with that as I go along. The point I am making is that these two matters must of necessity be separate. They are not joined in this issue. They may have been joined in this debate. That has been the tendency today, but they were not the subject of consideration in the application of the railway association. I do not think there is any doubt about that. If anyone reads the judgment carefully he can come to no other conclusion than that the board had not before it an application to consider or investigate or make a survey of the equalization of rates from one part of the country to the other.

An hon. MEMBER: Do they have to be asked?

Mr. CHEVRIER: An application must be made, and if my hon. friend looks at the judgment, particularly on page 81 and page 82, he will see where the chief commissioner deals with that point.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I have just a few moments left.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: None of the provinces asked that it be considered?

Mr. CHEVRIER: No, just the very opposite happened. Counsel for British Columbia, counsel for Manitoba, and counsel for Alberta stated that the application which was being considered was not one having to do with the equalization of rates or having to do with discrimination, if I may use an expression that has been used this evening, but that they intended at a later date to make application for that purpose.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I do not think that is correct.

Mr. HAZEN: Counsel for the maritimes said it was not to be horizontal.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Counsel for British Columbia stated, at page 106 of the judgment:

> This is not an application for the removal of the mountain differential by British Columbia. Our role is quite clear; we say there should be no increase in rates while the present inequality under which our people have been suffering remains.

Mr. COLDWELL: There is a charge of discrimination right there.

Mr. CHEVRIER:

> Removal of the mountain differential is something which must be brought up by a substantive application which, when our preparations are complete, I propose to launch.

Counsel for Alberta stated:

> We are not here now petitioning for the removal of the mountain differential nor to be relieved from discrimination which results from transcontinental rates.

Counsel for Manitoba stated:

> We have heard considerable evidence on this question of mountain differential; and aside from the argument, I do not think that this board has before it at the present time evidence upon which any finding could be made. That I submit would have to be a matter of investigation.

I bring that to the attention of the house not because I do not regard with a great deal of sympathy what has been said by various members in connection with that very matter, but I did want to say simply this, that the two are distinct and separate matters, one not necessarily relying upon the other, although one may affect the other, as has been clearly stated this evening.

My hon. friend the member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) stated that he did not object—I think I am paraphrasing his words—to an increase in freight rates as such, but that he objected to the inequalities which exist across the country. I do not wish to enter into a discussion of this and I said so at the outset; nor do I wish to be drawn into a discussion, for this reason, that there has been launched an intention to appeal by the maritime provinces, and I think, if it has not already been done, by the other provinces, save Ontario and Quebec. They have petitioned the governor in council that they intend to appeal the decision of the board, and I am afraid that anything I would say would be prejudging the case. I think, therefore, the house will understand that under the circumstances the best thing for me, or for that matter anyone speaking on behalf of the government, to do is simply to state that that petition, or that intention to appeal, has been launched. That being so, the petition will be dealt with when it is formally brought to the attention of the government. It will be carefully considered in the light of what has been said with reference to the increase as well as with reference to equalization.

Mr. COLDWELL: Will there be a stay in the increase of rates until the petition is received?

Mr. CHEVRIER: All I can tell my hon. friend in answer to that question is this—and I am sure he will agree with me that I could not say any more—that the application has not come formally before the government. Until it does come formally, I cannot make any statement as to whether that will be done or not. All I can tell him is that when it does come formally before the government it will be examined carefully in the light of the application itself and the petition, as well as in the light of the discussion which has taken place this evening.

Mr. LOW: Is it within the power of the government to stay the application of the new rates?

Mr. CHEVRIER: If my hon. friend looks at section 52 of the Railway Act he will find the procedure with respect to appeal clearly set out therein. A decision will in due course be reached and I am sure it will be announced later.

Mr. SHAW: May I ask one question? Will the one lodging the appeal be notified when the appeal is being heard by the government; and will that province, or whoever the applicant may be, be granted an opportunity of appearing before the government or a committee of the cabinet? I know of one case where that was not done and the decision was rendered without the applicant knowing anything about it.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I know the case to which the hon. gentleman refers. If I am not mistaken, he refers to a case where a railway line had been abandoned in a certain part of Canada.

Mr. SHAW: I lodged the appeal.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Well, the procedure there is not the same as in the present case. If the hon. member will look at section 52 of the Railway Act referred to this evening by several hon. members he will find the procedure set out therein.

Mr. F. S. ZAPLITNY (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the members of this house and those who read the debates will feel disappointed in the kind of reply we have received from the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier). Surely, in a matter admittedly as important as this, in fact so important that a fairly substantial number of the members who normally support the government have risen in their places and taken an opposite stand, the minister should have given the house more than he did in his brief and cursory statement. The chief point he raised was his contention that the question of discrimination was not part and parcel of the whole question of a general increase. He made out that because the application itself did not mention that, or did not make direct reference to the differentials or the discrimination, therefore the board could not take that into consideration. I do not know on what legal grounds he makes that sort of plea.

Mr. CHEVRIER: No. My hon. friend is misquoting me. I did not make that statement. What I did say was that counsel for the various provinces made the statement, and I quoted their words.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I would assume that the reason the minister quoted the words of counsel which suited him—and incidentally he did not quote the words of all the counsel who were there—was that he wished to make that sort of argument. I do not know of any other reason he would have.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am sure the hon. gentleman does not want to be unfair to me.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: No.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I was replying to a question that had been asked me.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I believe the question was put directly to the minister while he was speaking, as to whether he did not think there was a connection between the two matters. If I understood him correctly, his opinion was that the question of discrimination or differentials would have to go by itself in a separate application before the board, before it could be properly considered. That, of course, is only an incidental. I am sure the minister must have a copy of the submissions of the Manitoba government in this matter. If he will turn to page 59 he will find that there is a summary of the previous decisions of the board. It goes back as far as 1914, and goes on to 1916, 1918, 1920, 1922 and 1927. In practically every case the decision by the board involved the question of differentials as to different parts of the country. For example, in 1917 there was an increase in the passenger and freight tolls, in what was called the 15 per cent case.

> . . . there was a further recognition of the disparity between the east and the west—

I am quoting now from the submission.

> —and in that case the western rates were raised 10 per cent only, whereas the general bulk of eastern rates were raised 15 per cent.

That in itself is an admission that the board was quite competent to take into consideration all the factors that go into the making of freight rates. Surely in the evidence that was given before the board of transport commissioners there were plenty of arguments to show that there was discrimination and that there was need for an overhaul of the system of freight rates in itself. I believe the board was quite competent to make that recommendation or that change. But the question that is still left hanging in the air is this: What is the government going to do in this matter on its own responsibility?

Many of us were anxious all during the session last year, and in the session so far this year, to say something in the house about this question, but we were prevented from doing so by the rules of the house inasmuch as the matter was then before the board, and it was ruled that it was of the same nature as being before the courts. We felt that at the first opportunity which presented itself we would get from the Minister of Transport, who, after all, is most closely connected with this matter, a full explanation of all the factors which went into the making of this decision. I believe the house is entitled to that sort of statement, and the country is certainly anxious to have it. All one has to do is to look through the headlines of the newspapers across Canada, since the decision was rendered, and he will see that the people of Canada are anxious to know the basis on which that decision was arrived at; if the government—which, after all, has the final responsibility—is in favour of the decision made; and if not, what is it going to do about the matter? Yet all we get from the minister today is a brief and sketchy statement saying that in his opinion there are two matters involved, and that we must not confuse them.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I gave the hon. gentleman the reasons why I could not at this stage make any comment other than that which I made.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: If the minister gave any valid reason as to why no comment could be made, it certainly missed me; because this debate has been going on all afternoon and statements of various kinds have been made from all parts of the house. If it is within the rules and within the rights of the members on this side of the house and of all private members on the other side of the house to make arguments and submissions either to justify the increase or to take the opposite stand—as we in this group have taken—then surely it is also within the competence of the minister. Surely he has just as many privileges in this house as has any other member and he should not feel backward or bashful. He is generally not bashful in this house, but on this occasion he appears to shy away from the question and try to leave it hanging in the air.

Time will not permit me, Mr. Speaker, to say all the things I wanted to say in the first place, because it is now almost eleven o'clock. I only wish to say that I concur most heartily with what the leader of this group said; and I believe he has performed a public service to this country in raising the question today. I am disappointed, and I am sure the house generally is too, that the minister did not rise to the occasion to justify the action taken by the board.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Tomorrow we shall deal with the matters we intended to deal with today, the first being the second reading of Bill No. 7, to provide for assistance to the gold mines; then, after that, the resolution for the introduction of a bill to amend the Industrial Relations Act, in order to try to get that bill to the industrial relations committee for consideration. After that we shall take the resolution for the introduction of a bill to modify the War Veterans Allowance Act because that also is required to go to a committee for consideration, namely the committee on veterans affairs. When those two matters have been disposed of, we shall take up the resolution standing in the name of the Prime Minister, to appoint a joint committee of both houses of parliament on human rights.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, April 6, 1948

The house met at three o'clock.

PRIVILEGE

THE PRIME MINISTER—PRESS REPORT OF SPEECH OF MR. PEARKES IN VANCOUVER

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege concerning a matter which is in the nature of a reflection upon myself as an hon. member of this house and as Prime Minister and which I think might well be resented as an indignity against the house itself. I refer to a report of a speech that was made by the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Pearkes) which appears in the Vancouver Daily Province of Wednesday, March 31, 1948. The heading is, "Pearkes claims Mackenzie ousted over pensions". The article is by Gordon McCallum and it reads:

A Canadian war hero member of parliament charged Tuesday night that Right Honourable Ian Mackenzie was ousted from the cabinet because he rowed with Prime Minister King over the size of veterans pensions.

Major-General G. R. Pearkes, V.C., Conservative member of parliament for Nanaimo, told a Vancouver Centre Conservative nomination meeting: "Your member fought to get a better increase in pensions than the Prime Minister would authorize. His reward was, 'Thank you. Now get out. You will go to the senate. I will get my former private secretary in your place.' I will defy anyone to contradict that this is what happened."

I say to the hon. member for Nanaimo that I contradict his statement wholly and completely; there is not one word of truth in it from beginning to end. The circumstances under which Mr. Mackenzie tendered his resignation and which led to my recommending His Excellency to appoint him to the senate appear in an exchange of correspondence that took place between us and which is published in Hansard of Monday, January 26, 1948.

At no time have I had a word of difference with the former minister of veterans affairs over any questions relating to pensions for returned soldiers. Indeed I think the former minister will say that he had not a stronger supporter than myself in all the legislation which he brought forward during the time he was in office to improve the condition of the war veterans.

As for the selection of the Liberal candidate in the constituency, I let it be known publicly that I wished to have nothing whatever to do directly or indirectly with directing the choice by the Liberal convention of the candidate who was to contest that riding. I did not seek to influence, nor did I influence either directly or indirectly, the choice of the convention when it selected Mr. Campney as the candidate.

PRIVATE BILLS

REFERENCE OF PETITION TO COMMITTEE ON STANDING ORDERS

Mr. MAURICE HARTT (Cartier) moved:

That the petition for divorce of Lillian Helena Gross Page, presented on April 5, 1948, together with the report made thereon by the clerk of petitions, be referred to the standing committee on standing orders for such recommendations as may be deemed advisable.

Mr. HOMUTH: It is too late; it is out of order.

Motion agreed to.

FIRST READINGS—SENATE BILLS

Bill No. 185, for the relief of Francis Clyde Peachey.—Mr. Boucher.

Bill No. 186, for the relief of Harriet Dodd McLachlan Cummings.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 187, for the relief of Phyllis Smith Curtis.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 188, for the relief of Jacqueline Louise Waddington Skinner.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 189, for the relief of George Malouf.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 190, for the relief of Sonja Anna Margaret van der Walde Brown.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 191, for the relief of Richard Edward Welsh.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 192 for the relief of Violet Maude Mitchell.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 193, for the relief of Elsie Williams Lodge.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 194, for the relief of Joseph Albert Aldee Leveillee.—Mr. Maybank.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED FIXING OF DAY FOR DEBATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GORDON GRAYDON (Peel): Mr. Speaker, I note that the Prime Minister is back after what seemed to be not just an ordinary holiday but very much like a busman's holiday, judging from what we read in the press. I do not see how he could have had much leisure on such a trip. In view of the fact that he had discussions with the President of the United States and perhaps with officials at Washington, I would ask the Prime Minister if he is now ready to fix a definite day next week for the discussion of external affairs in the House of Commons.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend will remember that I did say that we would take up external affairs as the first department to be considered under estimates, and that the estimates would be taken up next week. I hope that one or two departments might be brought in by an item being called this week, so that we may proceed either on Monday or Tuesday of next week with the discussion of external affairs.

BY-ELECTIONS

INQUIRY AS TO VANCOUVER CENTRE AND ONTARIO CONSTITUENCIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GORDON GRAYDON (Peel): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister a few moments ago brought up the question of the Vancouver South by-election.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Has the hon. member for Vancouver South resigned?

Mr. GRAYDON: May I ask the Prime Minister why the by-elections in Vancouver Centre and Ontario were not announced at the same time as the Yale by-election?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): It was thought more advisable to announce Yale first.

Mr. GRAYDON: May I suggest to the Prime Minister that from the information I have the situation is getting worse for the government every day these by-elections are postponed.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: May I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister? Has the hon. member for Vancouver South been kicked out or has he resigned?

[Mr. Homuth.]

WHEAT

QUESTION AS TO PROCLAMATION OF WHEAT BOARD ACT AMENDMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. J. BENTLEY (Swift Current): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if Bill No. 135, dealing with amendments to the wheat board act, has been proclaimed in whole? If not, why not, and when can the house expect the proclamation?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, no proclamation is required.

Mr. BENTLEY: May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce or the Minister of Agriculture? In view of the statement that Bill No. 135 has not been proclaimed, has the government taken any steps to bring oats and barley under the operation of the wheat board?

Mr. HOWE: The bill provides that the government may by order in council bring marketing of barley and oats under the wheat board in any year beginning August 1. There seems to be ample time between now and then to take whatever steps may be considered appropriate.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

INQUIRY AS TO SETTING UP OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): May I ask the Prime Minister if the government will give consideration to setting up a special committee of inquiry into the operations of the national film board?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The government will be pleased to give consideration to the matter and I will give my hon. friend the result of that consideration in a day or two.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

DEEPSEA SHIPOWNERS AND DECK, ENGINEER AND WIRELESS OPERATORS—UNION PROPOSALS FOR ARBITRATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Labour. He said in reply to a question I asked him on March 24, regarding the union proposals for arbitration in the seamen's strike, that he was awaiting a reply from the shipowners. Can the minister now tell the house what is the attitude of the shipowners to the arbitration proposal?

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): My hon. friend is in error in referring to it as the seamen's strike. It is a strike of the deck, engineer and wireless officers. I have a statement on the position at the moment which I shall now give to the house.

In reply to the question of the hon. member for Vancouver East, members will recall that all issues in dispute between the two federations representing deepsea shipowners on the east and west coasts and the three unions representing the licensed deck, engineer and wireless officers of their Canadian-registered ships were fully considered by Mr. Justice D. A. McNiven, of Regina, acting as an industrial disputes inquiry commissioner.

In spite of his patient and painstaking efforts, the commissioner was unable to secure a settlement of the dispute and submitted his report to the Minister of Labour on January 22.

The recommendations made by the commissioner were used as the basis of further direct negotiations, which took place between the parties at Vancouver during February. These direct negotiations broke down early in March, at which time the shipowners announced that they were putting into immediate effect all of the recommendations of Mr. Justice McNiven except two, which involved the payment of an overtime allowance to radio officers and the deck and engineer officers' security watch abroad. The officers' unions held out for the adoption of all of the commissioners' recommendations, together with overtime pay on an hourly rather than a lump sum basis, "pro rata" leave in connection with annual vacations with pay, and other concessions.

A strike was called on March 3 upon all ocean-going dry cargo vessels touching Canadian ports, and up to date about thirty-two vessels have been immobilized.

Subsequently, both sides to the dispute sought the assistance of the Department of Labour and everything possible has been done to bring the parties into agreement. Various arbitration proposals were put forward from union sources, and on March 25 the Minister of Labour formally suggested to the shipping operators that they authorize him to approach the unions with an offer of an immediate return to work by the officers conditional upon acceptance of the employers' Vancouver offer of March 1, together with arbitration of the questions of hourly overtime pay and pro rata leave. This was done in the belief that the suggestion was capable of bringing about an early settlement, and that it was not unreasonable since it was felt that the two points on which arbitration was proposed were rather minor ones.

On March 31 the two federations of shipowners informed the Minister of Labour that they were now prepared to accept the recommendations of Mr. Justice McNiven in their entirety providing the ships' officers now on strike did likewise and returned to work forthwith, and provided that the provisions of the commissioners' recommendations should remain in effect until January 31, 1949. The owners were not prepared to arbitrate any issues not recommended for adoption by the commissioner.

With regard to a suggestion by the unions that all officers should be reinstated without discrimination and that those on articles should not be penalized under the provisions of the Canada Shipping Act, the operators maintained that they should not be asked to condone what they described as the illegal actions of officers who had broken their articles of agreement.

I should add here that one of the twenty-six companies involved in the dispute, the Federal Commerce and Navigation Company Limited, with the assistance of the department reached an agreement with its employees which has been endorsed by the unions concerned, and I had word from the company this morning that its "ships sailed over the week-end".

This single settlement provides that all of Mr. Justice McNiven's recommendations will be implemented; that final and binding arbitration will take place on the questions of hourly overtime pay and pro rata leave; and that so far as the Federal Commerce and Navigation Company can influence the matter, there shall be no penalization of officers under the Canada Shipping Act, and the company will not discriminate against its employees for having engaged in strike action.

Assurances have been received from two of the officers' unions, namely, the Canadian Merchant Service Guild and the National Association of Marine Engineers, that if the east and west coast shipowners will agree to the same terms as the Federal Commerce and Navigation Company, the strike will be terminated immediately.

The latest word from the shipowners' federations, received on Saturday, is that they are not prepared to go beyond their offer of March 31, and that they consider their "final position" to be in the long-term public interest. They also submitted that their willingness now to accept in full the recommendations of the commissioner absolved them from any suggestion of being unreasonable or arbitrary in refusing to accept arbitration of other issues which were fully considered by Mr. Justice McNiven and which, if conceded, might endanger the competitive position of Canada's merchant marine.

The principal recommendations contained in the commissioner's report were that:—

1. The basic wages of officers holding certificates should be increased by from $20 to $25 per month—and, in the case of deck and engineer officers who have completed certain periods of continuous and satisfactory service with the same company, increases up to $35 per month should be granted.

2. Stipulated lump-sum amounts of overtime pay should be paid to deck, engineer and radio officers as compensation for all work performed in addition to watch-keeping duties.

3. Longer vacations with pay should be granted.

4. Compensation should be made for loss of personal effects in the event of marine disaster.

5. Allowances should be made for deck and engineer officers' security watches abroad.

6. Concessions as to wages and annual leave should be made retroactive to October 15, 1947.

7. No concessions should be granted in respect of union security beyond the existing recognition of the unions concerned as sole bargaining agents for licensed officers, coupled with the preferential hiring of union members.

INQUIRY AS TO LABOUR CODE

Mr. KARL HOMUTH (Waterloo South): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour this question. How soon can we get the labour code before our committee? It is most important, particularly in view of the fact that some of the provinces—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. HOMUTH: —some of the provinces—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. HOMUTH: Oh, nuts to you.

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): May I say this to my honourable and genial friend: if the opposition had made shorter speeches and less repetition it would have been before the committee long before this.

[Mr. Mitchell.]

PARLIAMENT HILL

REGULATION OF SPEED OF MOTOR VEHICLES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. KARL HOMUTH (Waterloo South): I want to make a suggestion to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Fournier). I suggest that something be done with regard to the speed of the cars that are operating around the parliament buildings. Many of the vehicles are departmental trucks. We are very fortunate that we have not had some disaster because of the speed at which they operate. The Minister of Public Works ought to take this suggestion into consideration and slow them down.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Mr. HOMUTH: Well, now, don't get impatient. I have had a lot of patience with some of you people.

BUTTER

SALES IN DRUG STORES AND JEWELRY STORES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. CLARENCE GILLIS (Cape Breton South): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance arising out of press dispatches to the effect that drug stores and jewelry stores in the city of Montreal were offering a pound of butter as a premium on any purchase of luxury goods over $7. Has this matter been drawn to the minister's attention? If so, has an investigation been made, and is the minister in a position to inform the house as to whether there is any truth in these dispatches?

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): The matter was brought to my attention. The wartime prices and trade board are making an investigation, and I am also told that the matter has been considered by the prices committee. On March 31, I think, the chairman of the prices board issued a statement to the effect that this practice was viewed with disfavour; that if it became widespread some positive action would have to be taken by the board to prevent it. My present information is that it has occurred in only two instances, a drug store and a jewelry store, and that a limited quantity of butter was involved. The investigation is proceeding, and if it is found that there is any infraction of ceiling prices, appropriate action will be taken.

Mr. GRAYDON: Where in the world do the stores get the butter?

Mr. ABBOTT: They buy it from the wholesaler.

IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY AS TO MISSING FORMS FROM RECORDS OF CANADIAN-EUROPEAN IMMIGRATION TEAMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. W. SKEY (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question has to do with immigration. I suppose it should be addressed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce in the absence of the Minister of Mines and Resources.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: To the Minister of Fisheries.

Mr. SKEY: It has to do with the application for admission to Canada of relatives of Canadian citizens and residents. My question is this: will the minister investigate and advise the house regarding the present situation, which seems to be that a number of papers and approval forms are missing from the records of the Canadian-European immigration teams?

Hon. J. A. MacKINNON (Acting Minister of Mines and Resources): If the hon. member will give me more definite and particular information it would assist in the inquiries that I should be glad to make.

REQUEST FOR AUGMENTATION OF STAFF OF INSPECTORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. DONALD M. FLEMING (Eglinton): May I direct a question to the Acting Minister of Mines and Resources concerning an immigration matter? Will the minister give immediate consideration to the augmentation of the staff of immigration inspectors at places on the frontier where trains are entering Canada with immigrants from abroad, so that the delays which are now occurring at the borders, as the present inspectors complete their work on the trains, may be obviated? On Sunday morning I was on a train that was held up for two hours at the border while the existing staff was trying to carry on work that should have been done by a staff three times its size.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: You are making a speech. You should have given a talk on freight rates yesterday.

Hon. J. A. MacKINNON (Acting Minister of Mines and Resources): The matter has been discussed with the officials of the department and the discussions are continuing.

POTATOES

REQUEST FOR MARKET FOR SURPLUS IN WINNIPEG DISTRICT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. WILLIAM BRYCE (Selkirk): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce or to the Minister of Agriculture. What steps, if any, are being taken to find a market for the 300 carloads of surplus potatoes produced in the greater Winnipeg district?

Right Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): I have no information on the matter. I will get whatever information there is and answer the question later.

BUDGET

INQUIRY AS TO PROBABLE DAY OF PRESENTATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance two questions. First is it possible for him yet to give any indication as to when the budget will be brought down?

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): I am not yet in a position to make any definite statement as to when the budget will be brought down.

INCOME TAX

INQUIRY AS TO SENDING OF BILL TO COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Has the Minister of Finance made up his mind yet whether the new income tax bill can be referred to the committee as promptly as possible—if necessary, even before the budget comes down?

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): I am not in a position to say whether the new income tax bill will be referred to a standing committee or whether it can be considered in committee of the whole. I may add that we have received, as I said before, a great many representations and written submissions in connection with the income tax bill from representative groups such as chartered accountants, members of the Canadian Manufacturers Association and others, and it may well be that the field has been so fully covered it will not be necessary to submit it to a special committee.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I am sure the minister will remember that it is almost two years since his predecessor assured the house that this new income tax bill would be dealt with within a year.

Mr. ABBOTT: It will be dealt with this year.

HARBOURS

GODERICH, ONT.—RELIEF IN RESPECT TO DAMAGE BY FLOOD WATERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. E. CARDIFF (Huron North): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Due to the fact that much damage has been done to the harbour at Goderich by flood waters, has the minister or his department given consideration to granting immediate relief for the damage done?

Hon. ALPHONSE FOURNIER (Minister of Public Works): Immediately the damages occurred at Goderich officials of the department were sent out to make inquiries, and I am informed that they will start repairs to the piers as soon as the level of the water has gone down. I received no notice of this question, but I shall give further information to the hon. member later.

OSHAWA, ONT.—QUESTION AS TO DREDGING

Mr. A. L. SMITH (Calgary West): May I ask the Minister of Public Works a question? Has he yet learned from the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) of an undertaking given by him in Oshawa a few days ago to dredge the harbour there? It is in the county of Ontario.

Hon. ALPHONSE FOURNIER (Minister of Public Works): There are so many requests for dredging of harbours throughout the country that the minister may have told me of this instance. He has asked for many similar works and I cannot recall them all.

Mr. KNOWLES: After all, he is the minister in charge of by-elections.

MARSHALL PLAN

INQUIRY AS TO CANADIAN PARTICIPATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GORDON GRAYDON (Peel): On two different occasions earlier in the session the leader of the opposition directed a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs asking that some statement be made with respect to Canada's participation in the Marshall European recovery plan. Because of the developments in the United States I should be very glad if the Secretary of State for External Affairs—or the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who, according to the press, appears to have something to do with the matter now—would give the house some statement in respect to the possibility of our participating therein.

[Mr. Abbott.]

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I am not sure that I understand exactly the purport of the hon. member's question. There can be no further aid extended to foreign countries without legislation in parliament, and no such legislation has yet been prepared. If any is to be brought before parliament of course it will be announced in due course.

If the hon. member's question has to do with what prospects there may be of purchases in Canada out of the amount that is reserved or earmarked for so-called offshore purchases, that is something about which I would not be in a position to make an estimate.

Mr. GRAYDON: I understood from the press that a move has been made either by the United States government or by this government to have a conference between the officials or the ministries of the two countries with regard to the Marshall plan, and that is what I had in mind at the moment.

GOLD MINING

EMERGENCY PAYMENTS TO ASSIST IN MEETING INCREASED COST OF PRODUCTION

The house resumed from Friday, December 19, 1947, consideration of the motion of Mr. Abbott for the second reading of Bill No. 7, respecting emergency payments to assist in meeting increased cost of production of gold.

Mr. ALAN COCKERAM (York South): Mr. Speaker, in the radio broadcast made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) on November 17 he announced a policy of bonusing the gold mines in order to assist them in the difficult days through which they were passing, and in that broadcast the amount of $7 was the figure which it was proposed at that time to give by way of bonus to the mines. Owing to objections of officials at Washington, however, this was changed and a new scheme of bonusing was brought down, as contained in this bill.

The gold mining industry as a whole is opposed to being bonused, for the simple reason that it makes them the creature of the government and possibly allows the government in days to come to interfere with the management and with the manner in which the business is to be carried on.

The bonus that is now being considered in this bill is in my opinion of some help to the industry but it is not of any great assistance. Most of the mining companies have already passed this bonus on to their labour, for from January 1 the increase in wages in Ontario and Quebec has more than absorbed the total amount of the bonus payable under this bill.

Many discussions have taken place regarding the state of the gold mining industry and it was only during the last session when this matter was before the house that I brought certain aspects of the situation to the attention of the Minister of Finance, and I remember that on one occasion he stated that I was talking for Bay Street. However, I was glad that in November the government had come to realize that the industry was in a very unsatisfactory condition and that it was necessary for the government to give it some assistance.

Some of the gold mining companies have suggested various plans, one of which was of course the free marketing of gold. I am not going to talk about that today. My only point is that there may be some place in the world where some or all of our gold can be sold at a price higher than $35 and the proceeds from these sales converted into United States dollars, and the excess paid to the producer.

The troubles of the industry started in 1946 on the day when parity was brought about by the government in arbitrarily placing the Canadian dollar on a parity with that of the United States. I have said before that the industry did not want this bonus. It was not their idea but the idea of the government, and the industry feels that this bonus is being given at this time to make up in some small degree for the placing of our money on a parity with that of the United States.

I think at this time I should say something about the industry itself. Many people, and especially members to my left, seem to think that only a few wealthy shareholders of producing gold mines are the ones who will benefit by any bill such as that which is before us at this time. In this connection it might be pointed out that there are from 250,000 to 300,000 registered shareholders of Canadian mines, and one has only to look at the shareholders list to see the size of the blocks of shares. One company of which I have some knowledge has approximately 8,000 shareholders of whom there are only a few hundred having more than 500 shares of stock, the majority of the shareholders holding less than 100 or 200 shares.

I bring this question up now because I am of the opinion that this bill is quite necessary at this time so that the industry may at least get some help from the government to carry them on the road to recovery. Probably few members, and few people in this country, have a knowledge of the broad effect of our gold mines on the Canadian economy. It is too early to give many figures for the year 1947, but I have one or two figures here with regard to purchases and expenditures of some of the Canadian mines. I would take as an example the Sigma mines operating in the Bourlamaque area of the province of Quebec. Last year they made purchases from 353 individual suppliers in 96 different municipalities. The Noranda mines during the year 1947 paid for operating supplies $12,420,000, for freight and transportation $1,150,000 and for hydro power $1,012,000. Approximately 96 per cent of the total expenditures of Noranda and its subsidiaries was spent in Canada, and these orders were distributed to 1,200 firms, providing employment for men and women living in 140 Canadian towns and cities.

Two of the corporation's comparatively small subsidiaries accounted for approximately $600,000 worth of supplies, which included such items as metal products, equipment, explosives, lumber and timber, reagents and chemicals, electrical equipment and supplies, air operated equipment and parts, pipe and fittings, fuel, petroleum products, rubber products, paints, and a great variety of other items.

It may interest hon. members of the house to know some of the communities which benefited from these purchases. The principal communities in Ontario, for instance, were Amherstburg, Baden, Belleville, Blind River, Bowmanville, Brampton, Brockville, Cobalt, Cooksville, Dundas, Eganville, Fort Erie, Galt, Gananoque, Niagara Falls, Peterborough, and many others. In Quebec the purchases were made at such places as Beloeil, Joliette, Sorel, Lachine, La Tuque, Montreal, Rock Island, and Shawinigan Falls.

I have given these figures to show what this industry means not only to the people who work in the mines but to those who work in the factories that supply the necessary tools and equipment to keep the mines going. Then on top of that, with the millions of dollars paid out in wages, there is the great purchasing power built up by the workers for such things as clothes, furniture and other household effects that have to be purchased by the people living in the mining districts. On top of that the government received a great deal of the money from the dividends paid, and the government receives large sums in taxes on the profits of the operating companies. I have given these figures to show that this industry must get some support from the government.

There are only two or three ways in which they can help. We realize that. A great deal has been said about it in this house. The mines' trouble started from the day our money was put at parity. I am one of those who believe that if the industry is to get back on its feet one of these days some consideration must be given to allowing our money to get to the place where it properly belongs, namely, the price that people are willing to pay for it. We can also receive help by an increase in the depletion allowance and by decreasing costs. I think the majority of us who are in the business today are hopeful that costs will come down, but they will not do so in the immediate future. If the mining industry is to survive, costs must be brought down or we must get an increase in the price we receive for our gold production. We know that the Canadian government alone cannot bring about an increase in the price of gold. We saw what happened even at a time when they wished to pay $7 an ounce; there was interference by Washington.

The minister has had many interviews with people interested in the industry, and he has some idea of what is at the back of their minds in respect to this bill. There are one or two sections in it to which they have asked that some further consideration be given. One of them is in respect to the commencement date, which is to be from December 1. The industry thinks that date should start from January 1, because of the fact that for the majority of the mines their fiscal year closes on December 31.

With regard to another section of the bill, I should like to read a resolution that was passed at a meeting of gold producers, at which were represented the companies which produce 86 per cent of the gold in Canada. The resolution, which dealt with section 3, subsection (b), read as follows:

> Therefore be it resolved that immediate representation be made to the dominion government that clause 3 (b) of the said Bill 7, together with any other clauses having similar application, be amended to provide for the application of subclause (a)—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. May I suggest to the hon. member that if he wishes to deal with the sections of the bill, he can do so when we are in committee.

Mr. COCKERAM: I will do as you request, Mr. Speaker. The minister has some knowledge of the section to which I refer. In view of the fact that the mining companies as a whole have always passed on to the men working for them the bonus that is now before the house, it seems to me that the help which this bill was intended to give, in order to produce a greater amount of gold, has been pretty well shot. When we are dealing with the sections of the bill I will have something further to say on the matter.

One question which is causing a great deal of concern is the matter of the regulations under this bill. As is well known to the minister and the officials of the Department of Mines and Resources, during the war and subsequent thereto the mines have had to forgo the extensive development which ordinarily they would have carried on. Before the United States came into the war the mines produced double their normal production of gold for the benefit of the country, and their development suffered because they were unable to carry it on. Since the end of the war the mines had hoped that they would be able to catch up on development, but it will be a long time before the mines catch up with the development that was allowed to stand during the war.

In connection with the regulations, I suggest to the minister that he consider discussing this matter with some of the operating mines to make sure that the regulations which are brought into effect will not be too arduous. We are glad to see that the government has at last come around to the point of realizing that the industry must be supported, because for every one man operating in the mine, as has been said before in this house, ten people outside are dependent on him.

I do not propose to say anything else at this time, Mr. Speaker, but when the bill reaches the committee stage I shall have something further to say.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): This is a most interesting proposal, Mr. Speaker, made by the government with respect to an industry in Canada. The hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. Cockeram) seemed to say at the outset of his remarks that while this bill might help the gold mining industry, it was really not as useful as he expected it might be. Yesterday we had a very interesting discussion on freight rates and how they affect the economy of our country. Today we are discussing the subsidizing of an industry which, were it not for the strange circumstances in which the world finds itself, could not be justified by any stretch of the imagination. However, I suppose the need for foreign exchange and the value of new gold in obtaining that foreign exchange is the plea advanced for the development and expansion of this industry. It is a strange reflection on human society, I think, that we should have a large number of efficient and valuable men engaged in extracting from mother earth a mineral which, as soon as it is taken from one hole, is placed in another, apparently to remain there. I saw in a newspaper a day or so ago a statement that the accumulation of gold in the United States, I suppose mainly at Fort Knox, now amounts to something like $22,000 million.

Mr. ABBOTT: It is $22·7 billion.

Mr. COLDWELL: Apparently the United States is anxious to get gold, and as long as it is prepared to pay $35 an ounce it provides us with some needed foreign exchange. Having said that, however, I think this can be justified only if we accept certain considerations which should be fundamental to the granting of any subsidy of this kind, namely that the subsidy should not be used for the profit of the owners of the mines but should be granted only if we have not merely an understanding but a definite undertaking that the men engaged in the mining industry are paid decent and sufficient wages and work and live under decent and proper conditions. Those, I think, should be fundamental considerations in anything we do, because after all, in spite of what my hon. friend says, we are doing something very material for this industry.

May I say to the minister I have been told that when the representatives of the unions discussed this matter on one occasion with one of the ministers, I believe the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe), he was willing to accept the suggestion that some sixty per cent of the grants made by the government under a measure such as this should be used for the improvement of conditions of labour and of health, and the rates of pay of the men engaged in the industry. I say I have been told that; perhaps when the minister speaks a little later he will say whether or not that information is correct. In any case if this house is going to bonus this industry we should see to it that those who actually produce the wealth—the men who go into the bowels of the earth and risk their health, and indeed in some instances their lives, in the mining of gold—are adequately protected and adequately remunerated. I know conditions are very much better now than they were a few years ago, at least in the Ontario mines. I am not sure about the mines in some of the other provinces, for example the province of Quebec, where recently we have read of the reappearance of the scourge of silicosis. In any event, whatever we do in matters of this kind should be done with the distinct understanding, and, as I said, on the distinct undertaking, that a proper proportion of whatever aid is given shall be used for the improvement of conditions among those who risk life and limb and health in the mining of gold.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): How would you work that out? I am interested.

Mr. COLDWELL: Some of my friends on the Progressive Conservative side laugh when that question is asked.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I did not laugh. I asked the question in all seriousness.

Mr. COLDWELL: No, you did not laugh, but I saw the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Jackman) laugh.

Mr. JACKMAN: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I resent these imputations.

Mr. COLDWELL: Then don't laugh.

Mr. JACKMAN: I will laugh if I want to. I am not laughing at you, particularly. I understand the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) very well, and I have no objection to engaging in parliamentary debate with him at any time at all. But for the hon. member to make such insinuating assertions is entirely out of order, and as a member of this house, Mr. Speaker, I ask you to protect me from any such imputations. I, together with my colleague, am interested in learning exactly how my hon. friend would work out this particular proposal, and I am listening intently to what he is saying.

Mr. COLDWELL: I do not profess to have expert knowledge of everything involved in matters that come before this house. I do believe, however, as I think every intelligent individual should believe, that to every problem there is a solution. At the moment I would not be prepared to place an ill-considered proposal before this house in connection with a matter of this kind. I have considered this question, however, and I believe that in drawing up the legislation or the regulations under the legislation it should be possible to achieve the objective I have in mind. I have sufficient confidence in the members of the legal staff of the House of Commons and the advisers to the government to say that in my opinion the problem is not insuperable, but that it can be solved if the minds of these gentlemen are directed to its solution. So I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that this should be a fundamental consideration in the giving of any aid to the mining industry.

Now I want to look for a moment at the statement made by the minister on December 19 last. I know I must not quote from a previous debate, as the minister reminded me yesterday.

Mr. ABBOTT: That was during the resolution stage of the same debate.

Mr. COLDWELL: I was going to say that the statement I wish to quote was made by the minister during the resolution stage of this debate, so I do not think I shall violate the rules in referring to it. We are told that the first step in the calculation is to take half the amount by which a mine's cost of producing an ounce of gold in the year of payment exceeds $18 per ounce. I take it that if the cost of producing an ounce of gold is $28 the increase would be $10, and it would be half of that, under the conditions which follow, that would be the amount involved, in other words $5.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is so.

Mr. COLDWELL: Then the minister went on, at page 532 of Hansard:

Having obtained this basic rate of assistance in the case of the particular mine, it is applied to the amount by which production in the current year exceeds two-thirds of production in the base year, which is the twelve months' period ending June 30, 1947.

That is to say, one-third of the production in the succeeding year is then the amount by which the base year is exceeded?

Mr. ABBOTT: If the production in the succeeding year were exactly the same as in the base year.

Mr. COLDWELL: Then you take one-half of that third and reach the figure required for the calculation; is that right?

Mr. ABBOTT: The $5 my hon. friend gave a moment ago would be one multiplier, and if production were exactly the same, one-third of that production would be the other.

Mr. COLDWELL: Then the minister went on:

In the case of new mines, the payment as described above will be paid on the entire production in the first year, and in the two succeeding years on the amount by which current production exceeds two-thirds of the first year's production.

I wanted to look particularly at the very wide interpretation given the expression "cost of production". The minister had this to say:

In the new bill, "cost of production" of gold from a mine during any period is defined as "the costs incurred by the operator of the mine in, and properly attributable to, the production of gold produced from the mine during that period, and includes—

The inclusions are indeed inclusive.

—mining, milling, smelting, refining, transportation and administrative costs so incurred and so attributable, and includes such amounts in respect of depreciation, amortization of production of expenses, and costs of exploration and development in the mine as may be determined in accordance with the regulations, but does not include any amount in respect of depletion or off-property exploration and development, or, subject to the regulations, any amount not allowable as an expense or deduction in determining income from the mine for the purposes of the Income War Tax Act.

I think hon. members will agree that in this bill the cost of production is given a very wide interpretation. I should like the minister to correct me if I am wrong, but it seems to me that one of the dangers in these calculations is that instead of achieving what the government wants to achieve, that is, an increase in the production of gold, undue attention may be given by a mining corporation to development work in anticipation of future production and future profits.

Mr. ABBOTT: It would have to be in the mine.

Mr. COLDWELL: It has to be in the mine.

Mr. ABBOTT: No off-property exploration.

Mr. COLDWELL: That is what I understood. Does the minister think that this measure safeguards the country sufficiently against underground operations which would not produce the immediate results that are desirable but which might be undertaken in anticipation of a future rise in the price of gold, and therefore the country would be paying for development and expansion work upon which a corporation at some later date might reap $40 or $50 per ounce for gold instead of the $35 per ounce we now have?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes. I do not think the incentive would be great enough to do that.

Mr. COLDWELL: I am glad to have the minister's assurance on that, because it was a point that was bothering me to some extent.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): What did the minister say?

Mr. COLDWELL: He said that the work must be done in the mine, and that what I have suggested could not be done because it would not fall within the definition which I read a few moments ago.

Mr. ABBOTT: I went further and said that I did not think the incentive would be great enough to justify doing exploration work and adding costs.

Mr. COLDWELL: That is a little different. The minister says he does not think the incentive would be great enough, but I take it that the possibility is there, even if the incentive may not be there.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Do you mind if I ask a question? Surely in all mining operations you must lay out development ahead of you; you are not objecting to that?

Mr. COLDWELL: No, I am not suggesting that.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): What you are referring to is their going off some other place and starting to exploit it?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is prohibited.

Mr. SPEAKER: May I call the attention of the house to the fact that the debate is on the motion for second reading and an hon. member is permitted to speak only once. If an hon. member wishes to discuss the details of the bill or to get information with regard to the bill I suggest that he wait until we are in committee.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I interrupted to ask a question. I was simply seeking information and I am not inclined to like being spanked. My intentions were good.

Mr. COLDWELL: I will take the responsibility, because I gave the hon. gentleman permission to ask a question when I sat down. I realize that we are both violating the rules.

Mr. ABBOTT: I was at fault too.

Mr. COLDWELL: Your Honour was quite right to call it to our attention. Now we have that point cleared up. There may be pressure—and I do not mean just pressure from interests; I mean pressure because of need for foreign exchange—to do something of this sort. But to my mind it is a strange thing that governments can provide legislation, can provide bonuses, can provide subsidies for powerful mining interests, and yet cannot pay the same kind of subsidies when it comes to providing milk for the children of Canada. That is the thing that puzzles me about legislation such as this.

I think this bill should be gone into most carefully in committee. I suggest to the minister that some of the wealthy and remunerative mines which do not require this may receive benefits under the bill which are not warranted at the present time. I am certainly of the opinion that legislation such as this is less important than the social legislation which this house repealed during the last number of months in the form of subsidies, the maintenance of price ceilings, and so on.

It is a rather strange phenomenon that my hon. friends of the Progressive Conservative party who have been so insistent upon the removal of subsidies, price ceilings and so on should in such large numbers support subsidies for one industry in the country, namely, the mining industry. I say that is paradoxical, but it indicates that where your treasure is, there will your heart be also. I do not want to say anything more, but I do think that this bill should be considered carefully in committee.

Mr. SOLON E. LOW (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) I consider this bill a rather strange phenomenon. The government maintain tariff subsidies of many kinds and yet they declare their opposition to subsidies. They maintain home market subsidies that are paid for by the farmers so that all the people of Canada may have cheaper bread, and yet they oppose subsidies on selected products as the means of bringing down the cost of living. The government refuse point blank to use subsidies in peacetime to stimulate the increase in production of such vitally essential products as milk, which was referred to by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, but now they bring in a bill to authorize the payment of subsidies for the purpose of stimulating the production of gold which nobody can eat, which nobody can wear, and which nobody can burn to keep himself warm. One is led to exclaim: Consistency, thou art a jewel.

If we on this side of the house were as inconsistent as the government we would strenuously oppose the passage of this bill. But we know that we live in a world of grim realities. We are facing serious problems and we know that we must do everything we can to make ourselves strong under the present system in order to be able to solve those problems. Evidently we will not be able to change the system as long as we have people on the other side who think as they do.

As long as there are countries which will buy our gold at a good price and pay us with valuable goods and services such as coal and oil and cotton, then it seems to me that Canada should produce all that Canada can produce in exchange for these commodities, and every means of inducing greater gold production should be thoroughly investigated. I am not suggesting that every means be used, but surely every means of inducing a higher production of gold in this country should be investigated and those means used which will be effective. I am of the opinion that an upward adjustment of price would be a better way of securing higher production, but Canada might find great opposition to using this means, particularly in view of certain statements that have been made in the United States.

We favour the proposed subsidy, but, Mr. Speaker, we protest in the strongest possible way against the government's unwillingness to apply exactly the same principle to other products which are much more essential for the ordinary citizen and his comfort. Sugar, I suggest, is one of those essentials. Why the Minister of Finance will subsidize gold production so as to obtain more United States dollars, and at the same time refuse to subsidize sugar beet production so as to save $28,000,000 of United States dollars every year, or dollars that we have to obtain in some manner, is more than I can understand.

Mr. BLACKMORE: More than he can understand, too.

Mr. LOW: Surely United States dollars saved are just as good as United States dollars earned, and I maintain that if we save them by making ourselves self-sufficient in a product like sugar, that is even better because in doing so we are at the same time taking care of our own people in several different ways. And so with many other products. I think the minister and the government should get down off their high horse and admit that one of the best ways we know of to stimulate all-out production of many essentials of Canadian living is the wise and careful use of selective subsidies. We are in accord with the use of subsidies, and we shall vote for the second reading of this bill. We do submit, however, that in committee we should examine carefully the details of the various clauses of the bill and scrutinize every item to see whether or not it is justified.

Mr. CLARENCE GILLIS (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I shall not detain the house very long. I think the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) has done an excellent job, but I could not let this opportunity pass without reminding the Minister of Finance that not so long ago when we were arguing in this house for a subsidy of about $5,000,000 which would have staved off a general strike in the coal mines of Nova Scotia, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Trade and Commerce were adamant in their stand that no more subsidies were to be granted. The Minister of Justice also declared himself in no uncertain terms as absolutely opposed to the system of subsidies for any purpose.

It is rather strange that the Minister of Finance is not arguing his case very strongly today. I have read carefully the statement he made which was referred to by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, and it sounds to me like a statement which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) drew up, because it is so ambiguous and subject to so many interpretations.

I am not objecting to this subsidy, because, as the member for Rosetown-Biggar has pointed out, while the rules of the game remain as they are, while you still maintain this old machine of free enterprise and try to hang on to the economics of capitalism, this is the way the thing has to be done. So long as the dollar remains predominant in our social order, you have to juggle with gold, dig it out of one hole and bury it in another, in order to keep that elusive dollar and maintain this old economy as long as it is possible to maintain it under present circumstances.

In reading over the minister's speech I notice that he has covered practically every item of expense of the operators, but let me warn him that he had better be careful whom he gets to administer the regulations and make sure they know something about mining and about cost accounting and about the loopholes there are in this legislation which will allow the mining industry to take the government for a ride on this subsidy arrangement. Let the government check back carefully on its experience with Dosco during the war, when like a babe in the woods they got into a subsidy arrangement and were taken for a ride on many occasions until they smartened up.

If I were the Minister of Finance and were making this kind of arrangement I would recommend to the cabinet that we might as well take the industry over because we are going to pay the shot anyway. There are many mining terms in the minister's speech, and I notice that the base period ends on June 30, 1947. I would ask the minister when he speaks to tell us if it is his intention to make this legislation retroactive to that base period. The reason I would like that assurance is that the miners' union in the gold industry has been endeavouring unsuccessfully for nearly two years to get a trade union agreement with the operators. They did have one but it ran out and they have not so far been successful in renewing it, and the miners do not know where they get off in the future as to wage rates.

Secondly, while every item of expense of the operators has been carefully considered in this arrangement, including the recent 21 per cent increase in freight rates, no consideration has been given to the welfare of the miners. Yet I do not suppose in the whole of Canada there is a section of any industry where the hazards are greater than in the gold and nickel mines in northern Ontario. Go through that part of the country and you will find hundreds of men in the forty-year age group who are suffering from silicosis. Once their disease is diagnosed as silicosis they are set to work on the surface. There is no pension arrangement for a man when he is retired from the industry, and there are practically no welfare benefits that accrue to him. I remember back in 1941 reading into the records of this house the will of a man in the mining industry who was suffering from silicosis but he could never prove it to the satisfaction of the compensation board, so he willed his body to his friend to be dissected in order to prove that he had died from that particular disability and secure compensation for his widow and children. This is a sad commentary both on the mining industry and on the government of Ontario, which has jurisdiction in this matter.

Mr. MITCHELL: To be fair, I should state that the Ontario government was the first one to provide workmen's compensation against silicosis.

Mr. GILLIS: They may have given them protection before, but there still is no adequate protection. It is written into the act that silicosis is a compensatory disease, yes; but there is no adequate machinery provided today by the compensation board of this province which can definitely diagnose that disability in its early stages. They can say that he has a chest condition. Whether it is silicosis or not is decided only after a definite fight takes place to prove it. Do not forget that once a man is put on the surface because of a diagnosis showing that he has a chest condition, the final stage of silicosis is tuberculosis, and when the man finally passes away he has no compensation rights. You will find hundreds of men in the forty year age group in that northern country, victims of dust and so forth, relegated to the street without any means of protection, after the company is through with them and has taken whatever profits it can get out of their hides. If the minister had written into this particular subsidy—it should not be a one-way street; it should work both ways—protection for the miners who dig the gold, take the risks and sacrifice their health, it would partly meet our demands. If the minister had recommended that at least a portion of this subsidy should be used for the purpose of setting up adequate machinery for the diagnosis of silicosis, it would meet with our approval. That is one thing that should be done.

In the next place a pension plan of some kind on a three-way basis should be set up. It should be a contributory plan by the industry, the government and the men themselves against retirement or enforced retirement because of disability incurred underground. If the minister wrote these two things into the legislation he would at least be considering the large body of men who make it possible for us to have a mining industry in this country. The fellow who clips the coupons does not dig any gold; the fellow in the United States who makes the investment in Canadian industry is not digging any gold. It is the fellow who gets up at four o'clock in the morning, or the one who goes down on the graveyard shift, who digs the gold and makes it possible for us to have that metal at the present time in order to get United States dollars. I could say a whole lot about this arrangement—

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Are they working three shifts?

Mr. GILLIS: Yes. Let me read this to the minister. It consists of only two or three lines:

> Production expenses, and cost of exploration and development in the mine as may be determined in accordance with the regulations, but does not include any amount in respect of depletion or off-property exploration—

I would judge from that that exploration underground is not included. There is no such thing as underground exploration; it is a matter of developing ahead. Your shaft is sunk; your engineering plans are laid out, as indicated by the hon. member for Calgary West. You know where you are going. You know where the vein is going; in accordance with your engineering plans you develop that mine. I would judge that development which is the ordinary everyday business of the company is to be subsidized by the government, but any exploration of new properties that are off the mining property proper are not to be taken care of at all. If I were making the regulations I would say that it should be the reverse; that if the company has a mine sunk it knows where it is going; it has set its investment up for that purpose. The development of that particular mine is their business and it is good business for them to get as high production as possible out of that particular mine. But to find new gold and develop new properties is where the subsidy should be applied.

I am not going to argue any more. Before this legislation is finalized I would suggest that the minister give consideration to two points. Number one is this: if this industry is to be subsidized in order to get increased production, they should get their men together, sit down with them and settle the wage question and sign an agreement. Point number two is that consideration should be given by the department to the matter of setting up a general welfare plan in the community for the purpose of building up the morale of the workers in their homes and raising their standards, and recognizing them as human beings. If you are going to spend the taxpayers' money to get production, the man who really goes down in the mine and digs the coal is the man who should get first consideration.

Mr. W. GARFIELD CASE (Grey North): I have listened to the leaders of the C.C.F. and the Social Credit party in their arguments that subsidies are being paid for gold but no subsidies for foodstuffs. I think we are overlooking this one fact. This industry is nationalized. I doubt whether the gold mines themselves would be interested in a subsidy for their product if they had a free market for their gold; but when you nationalize an industry and determine that there is only one source through which the product can be marketed, and the price is set by the purchaser, then I feel that the subsidy is indeed justified.

I am not greatly impressed by the criticism which is offered with respect to the position taken by the Progressive Conservative party in relation to the subsidy on gold. May I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that gold has been accepted as a standard of value since the days of the Egyptians; and all down through the ages the countries which had the gold were the leaders in commerce and in industry. It has been accepted as a precious metal, durable and convertible into the things which we need. Canada has been particularly blessed. We have vast resources of this very precious metal. Unfortunately some of our mines are what is referred to as sub-marginal. That gold in the rock is of very little value to mankind unless it can be mined or taken from the rock. It does seem unusual—yet it is true—that we should exhaust our energies and devote our time and talent and labour to the development or the mining of ore simply to store it in a vault. But that has been the accepted practice, particularly since gold has been nationalized and is used more or less as a monetary basis, irrespective of the fact that we are not on what we call a gold standard. Nevertheless it has a fixed value.

It is interesting to note that in Soviet Russia they are building up huge gold reserves; just how great, we do not know. But we do know that they have put a value upon gold possibly greater than any other commodity which they are able to use, inasmuch as they do know that the gold is exchangeable for all the other products which we desire. As a matter of fact I suppose if one were to delve into history he would find that we would never have had the so-called monetary system or the system of bank notes had it not been for gold.

Historians will tell you that in the early days when people carried their gold with them in little cubes, exchanges were made by barter and trade, and the difference was adjusted by paring or slicing off a piece of gold from one man's gold nugget and tamping it on to the other until the better traders presently found themselves with a volume of gold which was very difficult to carry about with them. Gold is a very heavy metal. I believe a fourteen-inch cube of gold weighs in the neighbourhood of one ton. So the next thing was to find a place to store the gold, and the logical place was with the goldsmith, the man who was making gold into beautiful ornaments, gold cloth and other materials which were in demand in those early days. By and by there came a time when a man had a certain amount of gold stored and it was generally understood that he had this gold, so that instead of adjusting his balance by paring off from his gold block and handing that to the other fellow, he simply issued an order on the goldsmith. As long as that order he had issued over his signature was accepted as genuine, the scrip, so to speak, was used just as we use our dollar bills or bank notes today, and it was passed on from one person to another and so made the free medium of exchange. That continued so long as there was confidence that the gold was there. That was the beginning of our monetary system.

Whether our monetary system has been good or bad, it has served a useful purpose all through the ages, and I for one have only one criticism to offer. I will go along with the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis), that there should be set up certain parts of the bonus for the benefit of the miners who dig the ore, provided the bonus is offered straight across the board.

I cannot understand why we should undertake a measure of this kind, which appears so complicated on the face of it. Someone in days gone by used the term "too little and too late". It could be said that this measure is too confusing and too difficult of administration. It will lead to another great army of employees —I was going to use the word "bureaucrats", but that is being overplayed. At any rate it will lead to the employment of officials who must go from place to place, check with the mines, determine their production for the basic period and determine the bonus to which they are entitled.

I believe the minister was on the right track in his first approach to the problem. Just what Washington had to do with it, what right they had to interfere, is difficult for me to understand. I believe it was understood that we were setting up a free market for gold, or a market for gold in which we were paying more for gold than the United States. It was not clearly understood that our bonus was for native-mined gold whereby we could stimulate the production and discovery of gold mines and the extraction of the precious metal from the rock. Had that been made clear it could have been accepted as a sound practice, inasmuch as it was an admission at the time, irrespective of the position the government took on the question of the parity of our dollar with that of the United States, that our dollar was not worth the amount of the United States dollar. It should have been understood that we were simply seeking to offset that condition and to encourage the production of a commodity with great quantities of which we have been blessed.

As a matter of fact, Canada should be in the first rank of the world's gold producers. It is true that we stand well up in comparison with other countries, but I would urge, and urge constantly, that every effort be made to give an incentive to those who are willing to go into the hinterland on prospecting tours to discover mines, and we should encourage capitalists or investors, in other words the public, to risk their capital in the development of the mines.

Our hon. friends to the left would have you believe that they can designate certain mines which indeed have made a success and are now returning substantial dividends to those who were willing to take a chance and invest their money, which was risk capital. But all you have to do is to pick up a mining handbook and read the names of hundreds upon hundreds of companies who received a degree of public support, raising millions of dollars for the development of gold mines, but were more or less a failure.

I believe it was Mark Twain who said that a mine is a hole in the ground with a large cover at the top. It would appear that in many mines an effort was made to secure risk capital and to develop these ventures, but they had little chance from the beginning. And yet that old incentive, that desire to discover some shortcut to fortune, is inherent in everyone who is at all human. We all like to feel that we have an opportunity to enrich ourselves without expending too much energy or too much labour in the accomplishment. The hon. member for Cape Breton South said that plans are made for the development of these mines and that they know where they are going. I doubt if that can be accepted as a fact, because, after all, all the veins are not visible on the surface of the rock. As the shaft is deepened and the tunnels made, crosscuts are made to discover other veins which might be below the surface. Diamond drills, of course, have made a tremendous contribution to the task and to the advantages which we have not heretofore enjoyed in the discovery of mines.

I say to the minister that we should not pick and choose. Whatever we are going to do for the gold mining industry should be done across the board. If we are prepared to pay $40 an ounce for native-mined gold we should not allow pressure from any source to prevent us from developing our own rich resources which we possess as a gift from God. We should encourage our people to take the chance to develop something which is accepted today as the standard of value and which will secure the very things we need most. In other words, so long as we have a good reserve of gold we need not worry a great deal about our position in relation to the United States dollar.

If we are to produce gold, and it is there to be produced, if we can store it against our foreign trade balances, and if we can seek to develop trade with those who are willing to trade with us, I am sure the situation in relation to the United States will in time adjust itself.

As a closing thought I again remind the house that we are confused in any criticism we offer with respect to the bonusing of gold if we overlook the fact that in 1932 the late President Roosevelt on becoming President of the United States nationalized gold, and since that time the gold clause has been removed from their bonds and from their currency. No longer do they promise to pay in gold. Since that time gold has had a fixed value but has had only one definite fixed market, one purchaser, and that is the national purchaser.

Because of that restriction, I say that the subsidy is justified. Otherwise, if we are not prepared to pay it and we wish to put gold in the same position as the commodities to which my hon. friends have referred, then let us remove the restrictions, let the gold miners dispose of their product as they will, and they will not seek the subsidy, because gold is in great demand today. It is one of the most durable metals in the world. We should give every incentive to those who are willing to take a chance to develop this rich natural resource, and we should either pay the subsidy straight across the board or forget all about it and let the gold miners market their product where they wish to.

Mr. E. G. HANSELL (Macleod): I feel, Mr. Speaker, that I must say something with respect to this Bill No. 7, which is virtually to subsidize the production of gold. As the leader of this party has already said, conditions are as they are; and we must deal with circumstances as they are, not with circumstances as we should like them to be. The fact of the matter remains that, through government policy, we have been driven to a place where we are short of some other nation's dollars and that, in order to build up our United States credits, it is found necessary to endeavour to export gold to that country. It seems a little bit difficult to oppose a measure which would aid in exporting one ounce of gold in return for $35 or $37 worth of goods. But I am wondering if there is not a principle involved, namely, that if we resort to the export of gold in order that we may import real wealth, we may not find ourselves in a position at some future time where we shall be asked to accept imports of gold in payment for the export of our real wealth.

I cannot help feeling that there is a vital principle involved in this bill; that there is not merely the fact that the government desires to subsidize the production of gold in order to get a higher production, but that there is the principle whereby this country is forced to bow down and pay obeisance to the golden gods of mammon. That to my mind is a most important principle.

The leader of this group has protested the fact that, while it may appear to be necessary to subsidize the production of gold, evidently it has not appeared necessary for the government to subsidize the more important industries. During the Easter recess, on my visit to my constituency, many people, particularly farmers, came to me almost unanimously sounding one note, namely that through the present financial policy of the government their production, production from the land, was actually being sabotaged; that the farmers were being driven into a position where it would not pay them to produce the abundance of foodstuffs which this and other countries need. I believe the dangerous principle underlying this bill is that we are to subsidize the production of what I term a fictitious metal, while at the same time we sabotage the production of real wealth in this country. That, I say again, is an extremely important principle.

Let us remember that the land of a country is the life-blood of that nation. A nation cannot exist unless it eats, and the only place from which we get food is the land, through agriculture. A nation cannot live except it be clothed, and the only place from which we get our clothing is the land. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) may be wearing a suit that is all wool and a yard wide. If so, some poor sheep had to give its fleece before he could get that suit of clothes; and that sheep could not exist except it grazed on the land. Yet during the war we paid farmers to stop producing! Perhaps the Minister of Finance is wearing a nice pair of shoes.

Mr. ABBOTT: An old pair.

Mr. HANSELL: Let him remember that some poor cow had to die before he could get those shoes; and no cow ever lived without grazing on the green grass of the field. The Minister of Finance may be wearing a cotton shirt. Some cotton plant had to yield its bloom; and no cotton plant ever existed except it gained nutriment from the ground. I have mentioned food and clothing and I can also mention shelter. I do not know what kind of house the Minister of Finance lives in, but if it is a frame house the material had to come from the forest, and the trees were sustained by the ground. If the minister lives in a brick house it is just the same.

Mr. KNOWLES: He probably lives in a glass house.

Mr. HANSELL: Well, it would appear that he does.

An hon. MEMBER: Even the minerals for that come from the ground.

Mr. HANSELL: Yes; as my hon. friend says, even they come from the ground.

What I am trying to say, Mr. Speaker, is that the very lifeblood of the nation comes from the industry of agriculture; yet we can subsidize a fictitious metal that nobody eats, nobody wears and nobody builds houses with, while we permit the very lifeblood of the country to be sabotaged.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): It is used for paving in heaven, you know; that is what the song says.

Mr. HANSELL: Yes, but the fact of the matter is that we are not in heaven yet; we are still on the ground. Even though the Minister of Finance may have his head in the clouds, our feet are still on the ground. I claim that bowing down to a system which requires a fictitious metal to keep it going, while at the same time we penalize the production of real wealth, is a crime against civilization and a sin against the Creator who makes the earth green, who sends the rain and the sunshine in their season to produce for us that by which the people live. That is the principle; and there is no question but that today the farmer is being penalized for producing.

I do not want to get off on another subject, but I know that right now the farmers are making out their income tax forms. Our present policy of taxation penalizes the production of real wealth. The more a man produces, the more he should be paid, but that is not the way it operates. Our present bungling financial policy means that the more a farmer produces, the more he has taken from him. It is the same with the coal miner. He works so many days producing the coal that keeps industry going and warms our homes; but he is penalized if he puts in overtime, so he does not work even full time. That system is wrong.

Let us put first things first. If I remember correctly—and I am trusting to my recollection of Napoleonic history—I believe it was Napoleon who once said the most important thing in civilization was agriculture, and it should be put first; the second most important thing was manufacturing, while the third and least important was financial policy. I believe Napoleon was right in that diagnosis, but somehow or another present governments have reversed that order.

The first thing, which is all important, is financial policy. Next are manufacturing and the secondary industries, while the third and last of the three in importance is agriculture. That is wrong, and the present policy in Canada is wrong. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that if we subsidize the production of a fictitious metal and at the same time penalize the production of real wealth, that is a sin; and I say to the present Minister of Finance and his colleagues, be sure your sin will find you out. It is beginning to find us out now. A few years ago we had the Bretton Woods agreement up for consideration. We in this corner argued that this agreement virtually put us back upon the gold standard. Well, what has happened? That agreement is partly responsible for the present austerity program. Be sure your sins will find you out; and whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap. That is a divine law which no one can repudiate or get around. If we sow the seeds of idol worship of the golden gods of mammon, then in due season we shall reap that which we deserve.

Let us make sure we give our agricultural industry all possible encouragement to produce everything it can. The hon. member for Grey North (Mr. Case) spoke of the advisability of producing this gold and putting it in a storehouse. I am not going to argue particularly against that, but let me say this. A few years ago we spoke of the production of foodstuffs in this country, and we in this corner—I would refer especially to the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore), who made a passionate plea—asked for the production and storage of vast quantities of foodstuffs against the coming of a possible evil day. Did we do that? We did not. We paid our farmers to stop producing. That principle is wrong.

So I say, Mr. Speaker, that we have to get right back to the real, fundamental principles. The greatest wealth of this country is in its actual production of the means of life. Instead of penalizing and discouraging that, we should encourage it all we can by the payment of subsidies, if possible, and by the removal of this terrible system of taxation. We should put first things first and see that things are kept in their proper place. That is my plea today. It may seem strange that, after a speech such as I have delivered, we should say we will support the bill. We are only doing that by reason of the fact that the government, through its bungling financial policy, has driven this country into such a position that, at least for the time being, we may be able to offset part of our foreign debts, shall I say, by this simple method. It will help for the time being. I say once again that if the government are absolutely bent on driving this country back to a fictitious monetary standard such as gold, some day we shall reap the reward of our evil ways.

Mr. DANIEL McIVOR (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is possible for anyone who lives in the Thunder Bay district or in northern Ontario not to be interested in gold mining. I have the finest regard for the gold mining experts in our country. During the depression many of our young men could get only $5 a month in the relief camps, but a great number of young married men were employed by the gold mining industry in our district.

If this bill will do anything to steady that industry, it will be a good thing. It is not altogether true that you dig gold out of one hole and put it in another. That is a fine statement, but in order for a statement to carry weight it must be true. The other day I assisted a young man to place a ring upon the left finger of his intended when they cemented their friendship for life. I think that is a good use for gold. The jewelry business is the backbone of our gold industry. As I say, if this bill does nothing more than steady the industry that we know a little about I think we should support it absolutely.

I should like to offer a suggestion to the minister and I know he is big enough to take a suggestion from a small individual. The prospectors who do the hard work get very little for it as compared with the mining magnates. These prospectors should have some encouragement. I suggest that when they make a find and report it to the department of mines or to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) and experts are sent in, if it is found to be all right after drilling, after the mine is opened up, then the mining industry or those interested should pay back to the government what it costs. That is not a subsidy, is it? I think this bill will do a little bit. As the Scotch say to us, many a mickle makes a muckle.

Mr. HARRY R. JACKMAN (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, several hon. members have spoken on the possibility of improving the lot of the miner. That is a suggestion which I think will find ready acceptance in all parts of this house. As we know, the miner's lot is not an easy one, but on the other hand I know that in the gold mines which I have visited it seemed to be an interesting occupation and the miners underground seemed to take just as much interest in it as the geologists and engineers above ground. May I point out that in order to provide better conditions it is necessary to make the industry healthy and this bill will provide some little help to a large part of the mining industry.

We find the highest industrial standards in the United States and Canada because those countries are the most prosperous industrially and commercially. Where you have prosperity, in due course you have a higher standard of working conditions and living. I was glad to hear not long ago hon. members of the C.C.F. party say that they knew of no country in which they would rather live than in our own Canada.

While it is true that a good many of us in this house are against subsidies in principle, nevertheless there are times when in order to keep an industry alive a subsidy or some assistance such as is given under this bill is necessary. May I point out that the gold mining industry is somewhat different from any other industry in this country in that it is to a large extent, if not 100 per cent, an export industry. For reasons which I shall give later, that is a matter of some importance.

I should like to know from the minister in charge of this bill the government's long-term policy with regard to gold mining in this country. To use the vernacular, the measure before the house is nothing more than a shot in the arm. It will perhaps keep the industry going for a while; but with rising costs occurring almost daily, whether it be in the field of materials or in the field of labour, this small measure of assistance may be quickly lost to the mines and they will be in the same position and in the same plight as they were before the government gave consideration to providing some aid. It would be interesting to know just why the government is giving this aid of which we are all so much in favour. Does the government intend to adopt a further policy if necessary, or what is the real policy of the government in regard to the gold mining industry?

Gold production in Canada in 1939 amounted to $184,000,000, and in 1941 it had increased to $205,000,000. This was quite a substantial boost, and it was at a time when those in charge of the gold mining industry were doing everything they could to carry out the government's request and make as great a contribution as possible to the war effort by producing as much gold or as much foreign exchange as possible. They produced gold even to the extent of taking high-grade ore which would ordinarily have been used over a period of years and forgoing certain development work which they would ordinarily have undertaken and which would have used manpower which was otherwise used in direct production.

By 1946 we find that gold production had fallen from the $205,000,000 peak during the war to $104,000,000. Production was just about cut in half. When the final figures are available for 1947 I think it will be found that production has been cut in two, to say the least. This may be partly due to government action.

For the benefit of those who may be interested, may I say that during the war I was not a strenuous advocate of increased production of gold because we needed manpower in other fields so urgently. Yet our gold did provide a means of purchasing war materials, in particular from the United States. After the United States joined us, I was not one of those who encouraged production. I merely want to belie any feeling anyone might conceivably have that I am primarily interested in gold stocks per se; I am interested in the welfare of Canada as a whole.

I should like to draw the attention of the house to the statement made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) during the debate on the excise tax bill when he was refuting any suggestion from this side of the house that we might have been better off had the government not followed its policy of July 5, 1946, of upvaluating our dollar to a parity with that of the United States dollar. Referring to that time, I find that the minister said on January 30 of this year, as reported at page 735 of Hansard:

> In my judgment, inability to export is the only real justification for currency depreciation on the part of any country.

We have in the gold mining industry one of our basic industries; or rather I should like to know whether the government considers it a basic industry or even an important industry.

We have a product there, namely gold, which we cannot sell abroad because our internal costs in the industry are too high. This obviously is an example which refutes the minister's suggestion that Canada is in a position to sell abroad so far as costs are concerned, for our internal costs in the gold mining industry in this country are so high that we cannot sell gold at the world price, which is apparently the only price that is available.

One of the difficulties in having a reasonable price for gold at the present time or of having a price which gives us a fair return on this precious metal is that rock which would normally be commercial is passed over because the price is too low to make its extraction commercially justifiable.

It is perhaps also worth mentioning that there are many people, if not the great majority, in Canada who would rather see a certain amount of premium, let us say ten per cent, paid for gold under certain circumstances. They would be quite willing to pay that premium, apart altogether from any action which the government might take, and thus save themselves from the extraordinary penalty which the Minister of Finance has imposed on the people by putting into force these very unpopular excise taxes of 25 per cent and more. If gold were produced we would have more exchange and we would not have to suffer the heavy and extraordinarily inconvenient burden and the inequities which the new excise taxes impose upon us at the present time.

One sometimes wonders, Mr. Speaker, when one realizes that Bretton Woods or the international monetary fund has to be consulted at every turn we take, even to help a domestic industry, whether we listened as carefully as we might have done to some of our Social Credit friends who pointed out that we were giving up a substantial part of our sovereignty when we became a member of the international monetary fund. The government's first proposal to give some assistance to the gold mining industry had to be withdrawn, apparently because it could not pass muster with the governors of the international monetary fund, and the present proposal might have been quite otherwise than it is, for all the house knows, and the government might have been willing to go farther, had not its proposal eventually to go again before the international monetary fund to see whether it was satisfactory to its governors.

In this connection I should like to say a word in favour of the free coinage of gold. I do not know what the opinion of the international monetary fund is in regard to that, although I suspect it is opposed, but there are many people in this country who would like to be able to purchase gold even at a premium if necessary. This leads me to say a word or two to belie the suggestion that gold is purely a fictitious commodity with no real value. As long as people are willing to pay for gold and to give for it other goods in exchange, as are the United States and every other country in the world, gold has a very real value. There is no use in considering moral values in this particular case any more than there is in any other case. One might just as well point to articles of clothing and food and drink as having no particular value; in fact some might claim that some of these commodities were injurious. Yet we go on producing them. Gold will always have great value as long as people in the world are willing to exchange other things for it. It will have great value I think long after many of the currencies which today are considered of value have passed into the limbo of forgotten things. So I suggest to the government that if they want to do more for the gold mining industry it would be quite possible to allow the free coinage of gold and let people who wish to have it store up gold for a day which they cannot foresee but which perhaps they can envisage when they believe that gold will afford them a protection which perhaps no other commodity or form of security can give. It would also be anti-inflationary if we allowed the free coinage of gold, because gold need not then come into the monetary system as a basis for credit extension.

I do want to emphasize before this bill passes, and on this side I think we shall give support to it, that the government should tell the house exactly what its policy is in regard to the important industry of gold mining in Canada. I do not wish the Minister of Finance to quibble with me and say that the policy of the government is embodied in this little bill before us, because it is a very small measure as he well knows. It is, as I said before, a shot in the arm which perhaps will enable the industry to carry on for a little while, but as he knows there are many indications on the horizon of squalls and tempests in the way of rising costs which might easily upset the industry and set it back further than it was at the time when he first gave consideration to this bill.

My hon. friend the member for York South (Mr. Cockeram) has already pointed out the great value to Canada of the gold mining industry and its affiliated and dependent industries. It is a crucial industry in Canada and it is in a critical position at the present time. Therefore I ask the government to state what its long-term policy is with regard to this vital industry.

(Translation):

Mr. DAVID GOURD (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, having listened to some of the opposition speeches, particularly those from C.C.F. and Social Credit ranks, I note that, according to certain members from the latter group, we have no real need for gold mining companies since there is no need for that metal. These people seem to think that all you have to do to make money is to print bank notes. On the other hand, true to the tenets of socialism, the C.C.F. seem to favour nationalization.

Mr. Speaker, I have never been in favour of subsidies but helping the gold mines is another matter. It must not be forgotten that, while everything has gone up in the last few years, the price of gold and the revenue from gold have come down, due to the rate of American exchange. Gold is now selling for only $35 an ounce, or $38.50 with the exchange. While the price of all other commodities was going up, that of gold has fallen. It only goes to prove how absolutely necessary and urgent it is for the government to help out the mining companies now.

From what experience I have been able to acquire in the constituency of Chapleau, which I have the honour of representing here, as well as in the neighbouring constituency of Pontiac, I feel that the present price of gold, $35, is certainly insufficient. It certainly does not cover more than two-thirds of the operating and administrative expenses. Were it possible to have an international market where we could sell our gold at a higher price, it would be worth while entering it; but since gold is our monetary standard and since we cannot get more than $35 an ounce, I repeat that it is absolutely indispensable that the government help out the gold mining companies, along the lines indicated in Bill 7.

With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I will even suggest to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) to raise the grant to 50 per cent instead of 33⅓ per cent of the basic production already mentioned in the bill. In other words, the suggested grant on the two thirds surplus should be granted on the increase of half the base year.

Moreover, these companies maintain whole towns with not inconsiderable populations, such as Val d'Or, Malartic, Cadillac, Rouyn and Noranda. Needless to say that such a measure would be most helpful to my constituents, in spite of the fact that most of them are farmers. It must not be forgotten that these companies ensure the livelihood not only of those who work there, but also of all the people in the surrounding districts, where they buy the produce of the colonists and farmers.

For the foregoing reasons, Mr. Speaker, I strongly favour this bill and I hope that the Minister of Finance will succeed, without too much trouble, in having it adopted with this increase.

(Text):

Mr. ROLAND BEAUDRY (St. James): I should like to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) on the bill we are now discussing, even though I do it a bit half-heartedly, because I would have expected, and I think the mining population or the people living in what are known as the mining sections of this country had a right to expect perhaps a little more generosity from this government than is being evidenced by the principle contained in this bill that 33⅓ per cent of the basic year production shall become bonusable on the scale outlined. I hold this view for three major considerations. The first is the number of people who are directly concerned in this country by the implementation of this bill and by its reaction on their daily existence. The number of people who are directly concerned in the regions affected by this bill is as considerable as the number of people in this country who are interested in the automotive industry, and the number of people who are indirectly concerned can be estimated as an aggregate of anywhere between 200,000 and 300,000. A further consideration of the number of people who are vitally concerned in this bill would show that half a million and perhaps 700,000 Canadians have shown their faith in their country and in the mining resources of their country by investing in the various mines which are affected by this bill.

The second reason which would lead me to think the Minister of Finance could have been slightly more generous and could, for instance, have bonused 50 per cent of the basic year production instead of 33⅓ per cent is the fact that the amount involved in either case in proportion to the number of people concerned and in proportion to the purpose of the bill, while not negligible, cannot be looked at as vast under any circumstances. I have already mentioned that perhaps 300,000 people in this country are vitally affected. A great many of them are the more affected because the localities of the regions in which they live exist almost exclusively because of mining operations. It is a fact that of the various regions in this country where mining is conducted, most of them exist also solely because of mining and have become communities, in some cases, of considerable size strictly because mining operations have been continued there for a period of time which varies from fifteen to forty or fifty years.

According to the production figures of gold for all thirty-eight mines concerned in this particular bill during the year 1946, a fairly accurate computation of the amount of bonus which this country should pay toward the upkeep of these mines during the next three years on the basis of bonusing 33⅓ per cent of the basic year production would approximate $2,800,000 a year. If 50 per cent of the production of gold had been bonusable the amount of bonus which these thirty-eight mines scattered across the country would have received would have approximated somewhere around $4,000,000 a year. I trust my figures are nearly accurate. I repeat and insist that the Minister of Finance should have been more generous in his attitude toward the mines of this country. However, I do feel that he has taken a step to help and I hope that future legislation will help the mines of this country to survive and attain that prosperity which a great many of them have not known in recent years.

Mr. L. W. SKEY (Trinity): I support the sentiment which the previous speaker has just expressed when he said that the mines might have expected better treatment from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott). I would advance as my reason for that the great war effort which our mines in this country made at a time when our government, in fact this government, needed foreign exchange in the worst way. It is well known that in many cases the mines carried out stripping operations for which they are paying a heavy penalty at the present time.

I should like to deal with three aspects of the bill. First is the profits mentioned by the C.C.F. party—the profits from this possible bonus. They have said that the whole of the profits should go to the men underground.

Mr. PROBE: That was not said this afternoon.

Mr. McKAY: Not the whole of the profits.

Mr. SKEY: I believe it was said that the underground miners should get the whole of the bonus. I would remind my hon. friends that there are a great many people concerned with mining operations. There are prospectors, producers, assayers, geologists. diamond drill crews, geophysicists, engineers, exploration parties, aircraft pilots and the investors themselves. Many mining men, many miners included, are investors in the gold mines, and the producer companies are in many cases the ones who invest the most heavily by plowing back their own profits into subsidiary operations.

When the house realizes that all these mining companies carry out vast operations in the prospecting fields, and that it is only about once in ten years on the average that they find another mine, the house will realize how difficult it is to discover new mines in Canada at the present time. What money these companies spend over these ten-year periods is lost to them unless it can be made up from the production of any new mine which they may discover.

Secondly, the truth with regard to the wages paid in the mining industry is contrary to the impression given this afternoon. The wages are above the average paid by other industries in Canada. I have here an average wage chart prepared by the Canadian metal mining association, and it shows that at the end of 1946, before there were some substantial rises in wages, the average wage earned by miners was over $2,100 a year, while the average for all industries in Canada was just at the $1,700 level.

Mr. MITCHELL: Have you it on an hourly basis?

Mr. SKEY: No, I have not, I am sorry to say. It is not in this chart, but I believe they work an ordinary eight-hour day.

Mr. MITCHELL: That is right.

Mr. SKEY: And no extra time. At the same time, as the Minister of Labour who has just interrupted me knows, there are many gold mines in this country that have group accident insurance plans apart from the workmen's compensation of the various provinces, and in addition to that many of them have also sickness plans.

Mr. MITCHELL: They are good employers.

Mr. SKEY: They are very good employers, and the miners, for whom I personally have the greatest respect, are some of the finest pioneers in Canada. For the most part they like their work or they would not stick to it. They like the high wages and the opportunities their job offers.

The cost of wages in gold mining has also been furnished by the Canadian metal mining association, and it shows that the cost of wages per ounce of gold produced has risen from $11.50 in 1943 to over $16.50 at the end of 1946. That is just the cost of wages in producing an ounce of gold, so that the minister and the house will realize, when other costs are added, how difficult it is for the mines to produce at a profit at the present time.

It is clearly shown by a third chart of the Canadian metal mining association that the total dividends paid by Canadian gold mines in 1941 was close to $48,000,000 and in 1947 had sunk to $16,000,000. That should be interesting information for the C.C.F., who seem to think the mines are rolling in wealth. When you realize that their returns have been cut by 300 per cent since 1941 you will appreciate the difficulties they are encountering today.

At the same time I should point out again that nearly all the mining companies have policies whereby they plow back into the mining field a great deal of the revenue they obtain from producing properties.

It struck me that the arguments advanced by the C.C.F. this afternoon were perhaps just as fallacious as they nearly always are in this house. If I might draw a parallel it would be this. They seem to think a man who invents, let us say, a carburetor for your car is entitled to no profit from that invention, but the man who takes the product of his genius and manufactures it into a working model is the one who should get everything. That is the same argument they advance with regard to every other question and it seems to me to be so fallacious that it is about time they gave it up.

I am not going to detain the house much longer, but I wish to say one or two things further about the bill. First, to get back to costs, the cause of the decay in the gold mining industry is the artificial price at which gold is now kept. Until and unless this economically unsound price policy is altered, the gold mining industry will not prosper, and there is no other solution than to permit the industry to find a proper market for its product where the price is not fixed by some other government, or for our own government to sell the product of our mines where it can obtain more revenue in United States dollars, or whatever currency it requires, than it obtains at the present time.

The value of gold to the Canadian economy cannot be over-emphasized. It is to the mining industry and to the north that we must look for substantial increases in population. Gold has been the incentive for our development as most base metals finds are associated with prospecting for precious metals, particularly gold. It has added tremendously to the stability of our mining operations and it gives flexibility to our operations, which are unique.

Gold is the magnet which draws development. I merely point out as an example of this that Gilbert LaBine was searching for gold when he found pitchblende and uranium at Great Bear lake. Our agricultural population is showing the tendency of being static, or, in fact, actually declining. If we are to develop, it is to the mines and the Pre-Cambrian shield to which we must look. To suppress artificially the value of the principal product of this rich belt is to strangle the growth of Canada.

Mr. A. L. SMITH (Calgary West): At the moment, Mr. Speaker, I am disposed to vote for the bill and I do so on two definite assumptions. If they are wrong I hope the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott), when his turn comes, or when he chooses, will set me right. In the first place I learned that our production of gold has been more than halved in the last few years. I think the present figure is around $87,000,000.

Mr. ABBOTT: $106,000,000.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Yes, $106,000,000, or practically half. Gold is, of course, of value in conneetion with our exchange position with the United States. Many of these mines cannot continue with costs as they are at the present time and the sale price fixed as it is at $35. That is the third thing I learned. I assume those three things to be correct and to be reason for the advancement of this legislation which is clearly bonusing legislation. While we talk about subsidies, bonuses or whatever you care to call them, from listening here as I have been doing now for several years, it seems to me that is a condition which almost inevitably arises when we go into price fixing. That is true of food products referred to by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell). It seems to me that it is equally true with regard to this commodity called gold. While I enjoy speaking of a fictitious metal, of pulling it out of a hole in the ground in one place and putting it in a hole in the ground in another place, yet as long as there is a market for gold we can get the things we need in exchange for it, for anyone to argue that we should not continue the industry because within itself you cannot eat gold and cannot wear it, I think is begging the question; it is an argument which is of no value whatever.

I want to go back to the suggestion made by the leader of the C.C.F. (Mr. Coldwell) and supported by the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis), which was that we should write into this bill a provision—I am sorry to disagree with the hon. gentleman who has just spoken; I do not think the C.C.F. said that they wanted all of it to go in that direction—that a portion of this should go for the alleviation of conditions of those people who went underground.

Mr. COLDWELL: That is right.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): That is the way I heard it, in any event.

Mr. COLDWELL: That is right.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I have listened here in this House of Commons to a tremendous amount of crying for those people who go underground. A great part of that is not justified at all. Nobody has forced them to go there. It is as the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Skey) has just said. You have heard the expression, once a miner always a miner. That is largely true. In the coal mining business I know it is true that the family gets into mining and stays there. It is certainly true in England.

Then I interrupted and started something I had not intended to start when I asked the leader of the C.C.F. how he would work out this thing, and how it could be done. I asked that question in all seriousness and as yet I have had no answer. I do not think there can be one, for this solid and basic reason. If you take a certain mine which is getting the benefit of this subsidy and its costs are, of course, different from those of other mines in that neighbourhood or in other neighbourhoods, I can see no equitable method whereby you can apply a percentage to go for wages and other benefits, perhaps, without upsetting your whole wage structure and wage scale throughout that industry. That may be possible. The leader of the C.C.F. said that certainly smart people could work it out. May I simply confess that I am not one of those smart people, because I am utterly unable to see how that could be done.

Then we heard something about these wealthy owners. I hope they are wealthy. I am one of those people who are happy when other people make money, even though I cannot do so myself. I could paper the walls of a good big play-room I have in my house with mining shares which I bought and paid for; and they would not even make good wallpaper. That has been my experience in dealing in this business. The answer is, of course, that I have always been a piker; I never had enough money to be anything else. I bought nickel shares, and now they are not worth even that; they are absolutely worthless.

I wish to refer to one matter mentioned by the hon. member for Cape Breton South, namely, this business of workmen's compensation. Like all other developments in labour relations, it has come to what it is now by a process of evolution. In the coal mining business, I remember that many years ago when I was acting for some coal companies I had a fine practice in fighting what we called workmen's compensation suits. In those days the matter came to what we called the district courts or what you in Ontario would call your county courts. We had lawsuits as to whether or not the person was entitled to compensation. Following that—and I think it is the case in all provinces—boards were set up and the matter was taken from the courts; even the matter of appeal, which I think the mining fraternity now wants returned to them so that they may appeal, was taken over by boards. Those boards then fixed the compensation. I want to disabuse your mind, Mr. Speaker, and the minds of the members of this house of this idea that the companies themselves or the operators themselves have been in any way the enemies of compensation. They simply pay an assessment into a fund, and from that fund come all sums of money—be they lump, be they weekly or be they monthly—which are paid by way of compensation. We will all agree and admit that compensation has been growing from year to year as a part of the evolution and growth of a new idea in these relationships.

I remember this silicosis business; I remember the men fighting hard to get silicosis in as a compensable disability. I remember at that time seeing figures brought from the coal mines in England. I learned then that the lungs of a coal miner are clear black and stay that way. The medical people, however, do not seem to think that has done him much harm, and they produced figures to show that, in so far as the incidence of tuberculosis was concerned, a coal miner was less affected than a person engaged in, we will say, another occupation, probably a more sedentary one. But that fight was won. Now I believe silicosis is among the compensable disabilities in all provinces of Canada. That battle has been won. I agree with the hon. member for Cape Breton South that there are sad cases such as the one he mentioned of the man who in his will gave his body to someone so that his lungs might be examined to prove the existence of the disease, in order that his family might obtain compensation. But we find that in every walk of life; you find it in the Department of Veterans Affairs. You will always find that as long as the minds of men are finite or until medicine and medical men become perfectionists, which of course they never will since they are human beings.

The point I am making is that while there are those odd cases, certainly in the province from which I come, and I have no doubt in Nova Scotia as well, that is not the fault of the employer. He has nothing to do with it; he is completely removed from it. It is a result of the advice given to compensation boards by specialists. I think, too, that if the hon. member were in his place at this moment he would agree that the experience of workmen who are under compensation is that almost invariably the doubt is resolved in favour of the individual; that is, the employee. I am proud to say that I know this to be true in the province from which I come, and I think it is true in the other provinces as well.

So if when the minister speaks he will give me the assurances for which I asked in the beginning, I will support this bill. But much as I may like subsidies I make this broad statement. In a country of opportunity, equal opportunity—and I think we have approached very close to that position in Canada—subsidies take money earned by one man away from that man and give it to another. That is what they do, in the broad economic picture. Someone may say I am opposed to all subsidies. I am not. Conditions arise, as in this particular case, because of perhaps unusual and extraordinary circumstances, and in such instances I am in favour of subsidies, as I am in favour of this subsidy. Then in so many cases it is found, as I am sure it will be found in this case—and in this I agree with the hon. member for St. James (Mr. Beaudry)—that a subsidy can be regarded as something in the nature of an investment. But I want to take this position, and state it clearly. I do not think there is anything in the argument which has been used here today that because this house is asked to vote a small subsidy for the general good of Canada—because our exchange situation certainly may be to the great detriment of Canada unless we can correct it—we are in any sense taking away milk from babies or bread from poor people. To my mind that sort of argument is complete and utter nonsense. I know what I have just said will not be popular in many places, but I believe it so thoroughly I had to say it here.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. NORMAN JAQUES (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take only a few minutes, but first I should like to correct one statement made this afternoon by the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis). He said that gold was an essential part of private enterprise. That is not so. Private enterprise is as old as civilization, as old as history itself; the gold standard is quite a modern institution.

I do not want to discuss this bill on technical grounds, but I do want to say that on the most fundamental grounds I am opposed to the whole idea of gold and the gold standard. If you like, I will put it on religious grounds, I mean religio, to rebind or bind back to reality, truth. Surely it cannot be denied today that millions of people in the world are literally starving to death or in danger of starving to death. Neither can it be denied that the mining of gold is a waste of time, effort and materials at a time when millions are suffering for want of the bare necessities of life.

[Mr. Smith (Calgary West).]

If we take the narrow view it may be argued that gold mining is a profitable thing for those engaged in it. If we take the short view it may be admitted that it is profitable for Canada itself. But if we take the long or wide view I think in the end it will be proved that it is not profitable either for those engaged in it or for anybody else.

To say that socialists are opposed to gold and orthodox finance is not borne out by the facts. The London school of economics which certainly would support the gold standard was founded by socialists for the purpose of spreading socialism. I saw just recently that Lord Passfield, one of the founders of the socialist movement in England, was able to accumulate a considerable fortune under the capitalist system and he left that fortune to the London school of economics. Certainly the London school of economics would support gold and the gold standard.

I should like to know how much more gold the world needs. Surely there is enough for the purposes to which it is put today. It is not being coined or used as it used to be used. I can well remember when gold was in circulation, but that is not true today. It is a criminal offence at the present time to have a gold coin in your pocket. Still we are told that we must go on everlastingly mining this stuff which nobody uses and which when it is mined simply disappears into a hole in the ground. Even if we are supporting a gold standard, is it necessary to keep on mining the gold which disappears as soon as it comes out of the ground? Surely the labour, science and materials used in producing gold could be put to better use.

To go on expending this vast effort to produce gold which nobody can use, simply to produce something which it is assumed people must have before they can exchange their wealth, reminds me of what Charles Lamb said about burning the pigsty in order to roast the pig. Surely there is a more economic and convenient way of maintaining a monetary system than continuing this waste of men and materials.

It can be argued that the future of the men engaged in mining and of the districts in which mining is carried on is bound up in the production of gold, but surely these men could be put to a much more useful task. There are other metals and minerals to be mined, not to mention, as I said before, the production of food of which the greater part of the people of this world are in such need.

Much has been said about inflation, and perhaps when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) speaks he will be good enough to explain why gold mining is not inflationary. It seems to me that it is pure inflation.

The main objection which I have and which I think Social Crediters generally have to a gold standard is that it means the centralization of control. We are opposed to that. We know what happened in 1925 when the gold standard was reimposed. We know the dreadful conditions that were brought about. If a restoration of the gold standard is not intended, then I cannot see the purpose of continuing the mining of gold. It is not used in the arts to any extent and it is not used in our coinage. It seems to me that in the end the real purpose is a return to the old gold standard which I believe was responsible for more misery than any other single institution.

I am not criticizing the policy of bonusing this or that commodity, but if it is a good thing to bonus the production of gold I cannot see why the same principle cannot be applied to any other industry which is in need of support.

Mr. J. A. BRADETTE (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, I should like to preface my remarks by felicitating the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) on bringing in Bill No. 7, although the credit should not go entirely to the Minister of Finance and to his department or to the government, because this measure is largely due to the concentrated efforts of every section of the House of Commons and the receptive mind that the minister shows on all occasions.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): Except the C.C.F.

Mr. BRADETTE: No, I would not say that. The leader of the C.C.F. party (Mr. Coldwell) was in my section of the country last fall and spoke on several occasions in the Porcupine district, more particularly in Timmins, and he made it quite clear that he was in favour of a prosperous gold mining industry in Canada. I was pleased to hear him make that statement because on previous occasions—it was before his leadership, I think—the members of his party were not very much in favour of the gold mining industry, and in fact some of them were absolutely against it.

I was not present this afternoon, but I was told that the discussion was a fairly constructive one. I hope it will also be an open-minded one, because the more that the leaders of parties and members of parliament find it possible to go into the gold mining sections of Canada, whether in northern Saskatchewan, British Columbia, northern Ontario or northern Quebec, the better they will realize the great benefit that the gold mining industry is bringing and has brought to the national economy of this country. I can speak open-mindedly on this subject because I do not own a single share in a gold mine in my constituency. I have always been in the happy position, therefore, to be a go-between between management and labour in the gold mining industry. I must state that the management of our gold mining industry in northern Ontario and northern Quebec is a credit to the country's economic activities, and I must state further that labour employed in gold mining has always been very fair, and has constructively co-operated. They have realized the exact situation in most instances and have played fair not only with unionism but with the whole of Canada.

To come to the statement made last fall by the leader of the C.C.F. party, he went so far as to say that if necessary he would give $15 an ounce as a subsidy or bonus on gold production. I do not like those words, "subsidy or bonus"—

Mr. MacINNIS: Call it a hand-out.

Mr. BRADETTE: No, I will not call it a hand-out, and I will come back to that in a moment. The gold mining industry was really the only industry in this country which suffered grievously when parliament on the initiative, in July, 1946, of the Minister of Finance brought the Canadian dollar to a parity with the United States dollar.

I have stated before in this forum that we in northern Ontario and northern Quebec really belong to central Canada. Geographically we are a part of central Canada, and that applies as far south as Sudbury. Our viewpoint is a national one, embracing the whole of the country. Every member from northern Ontario sympathizes with the members from the west when they speak of the problems of their part of the country, and similarly we sympathize with the members from the maritime provinces when we hear them speak of their problems. It may surprise some of the members here to know that in our part of the country we know the names of the mayors in the three western provinces and British Columbia and also those in eastern Canada as far as Halifax; that we are not either easterners or westerners in our attitude and viewpoint, but we take a broad and national outlook.

I repeat that I was glad that the leader of the C.C.F. party committed himself, and I hope his party, to a gold policy that would be beneficial, not simply to our own section of the country nor to the gold mining industry alone, but to the whole of Canada. If you took away the gold mining industry from our national economy there would be an enormous vacuum which would result in great distress and dislocation, not only in our own section of the country, but throughout the length and breadth of Canada.

I listened attentively to the previous speaker (Mr. Jaques). He knows how highly I respect him, but I did not hear him make statements such as were made by his leader, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Low), a year ago last fall in the Pontiac by-election. I know the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Caouette) will support me on this. The leader of the Social Credit party was in that by-election. It is true that it was not the Social Credit party that was running in Pontiac; at least it was so stated by their candidate; it was the Union des Electeurs, but the leader of the Social Credit party took an active part in it, and the language he used was not the language of the previous speaker. Rather he spoke as a man who recognized the necessity of gold mining in this country, and the great beneficial role that it plays in our national economy. He stated that gold was absolutely necessary as a standard in the monetary systems of the world. I was very glad to hear that statement, which was used in that constituency. I said: We have had two parties in the House of Commons who are anti-gold, the C.C.F. and the Social Credit party. I am glad indeed today to see that the leaders of these two parties have realized the necessity and urgency of a prosperous gold mining industry in Canada and have come into the fold.

But there is no necessity for taking my word on that score. I have here an article from the Christian Science Monitor of Boston, in its issue of September 6, 1947, headed, "Demand for Gold Universal," which states it is necessary, not only for the purposes of art or dentistry but because gold is absolutely necessary to the monetary system of the whole world, and that if it was otherwise it would bring chaos to the whole world. I quote:

Before evaluating the foregoing suggestion it might be well to look at the position of gold today. To fully as great a degree as ever before, gold is valued by the people of practically every country as a repository of stable value. Myth, folklore, tradition, as well as intrinsic qualities, have combined to imbed the desirability of gold in the consciousness of the human race. The Greeks, 500 B.C. or earlier, had learned the use of gold from the Asiatics. Julius Caesar found various gold coins circulating in Britain. Laws and regulations affecting the price of gold or making it criminal to possess gold as money, as in the United States, have not extinguished the universal demand for this precious metal. And the return to a gold standard is still being advocated by well-known economists and experts.

[Mr. Bradette.]

Today the United States has $21,700,000,000 worth of gold, or about three-fifths of the world's monetary gold supply. Back in 1934, when the administration devalued the dollar internationally by raising the price of gold to $35 an ounce, there was $3,227,000,000 in the United States treasury. This became $5,464,000,000, producing a $2,200,000,000 profit. The Exchange Stabilization Fund received $2 billion of this profit. Some $687,000,000 of gold has gone into the International Monetary Fund.

Who will declare that this organization has not even so far accomplished some good? It is true that some of the nations which signed the contract with the monetary fund are not fully carrying out what was implied in the contract, but it is certainly a stabilizing factor, during these present serious times. However, I know they will be looking forward to something more and to greater accomplishments. I listened attentively to statements made in the banking and commerce committee by the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch) on the exchange stabilization fund and he certainly showed some knowledge of the urgency and the necessity of establishing such a fund, backed by gold supplied by this country as a guarantee.

The hon. member said that gold is useless. It is extracted from the entrails of the earth with great labour and sweat and then buried again. That is only a nominal truth. A few years ago a member of the original party—it was not then the C.C.F. party—came to our section of the country to address the opening exercises of the vocational school. She said something like this: "You are funny people in this section of the country. You work hard in order to extract your gold from the entrails of the earth, and then in the south we bury it in the ground." On that occasion the mayor of the town of Timmins thanked her for being present and made this statement. He said, "I believe you come from the tobacco growing section of the province of Ontario. To us you should look very odd people because, if we follow the same line of thought that you have used yourself, you go to a lot of labour and a lot of expense to grow that tobacco, and we pay quite a fair price for it in the north, and then we turn it into smoke and ashes." Everything has a value. Who will say that because tobacco is not a food or an absolute commodity we should not grow it in Canada?

I have just come back from Kingsville and the Kent, Essex, Windsor district, where Jack Miner week was celebrated. In that section of the country I saw thousands and thousands of fertile acres of land on which tobacco is grown. No one can tell me that I could not live without smoking. I could certainly live my normal life without smoking but who would dare say that we should not produce tobacco in Canada, and more particularly in Ontario? The same thing applies and perhaps more forcibly to gold. Let me quote again from the article:

U.S. gold not an idle hoard.

The bulk of the nation's gold at present, $17,765,363,574, on September 3, 1947, is not, as has so often been suggested in impassioned attacks on the money system, "idle," but stands as the legal reserve against federal reserve notes in actual circulation and deposits of member banks.

Will hon. members say that we should withdraw all the Canadian gold in the monetary system, whether Canadian or American or any other system in the world? Let us be logical with ourselves. We happen to have a market for gold, a good steady market, a cash market for every ounce we can produce. Are we going to destroy voluntarily that market, and destroy our industry ourselves? Will that be Canadianism? Will that be logical? Will it be doing credit not only to our section of the country which produces gold but to other sections of Canada? Does the hon. member realize the disaster which would take place in the Porcupine district alone, which I use as an example, if that should happen? Last year some hon. members visited the Pontiac section of northern Quebec. Hon. members know of the production in northern Manitoba at the present time and also in British Columbia. We should be very glad indeed of these developments here in the House of Commons. A member of the Social Credit party mentioned the growing of beets. I am in sympathy with that. We shall probably never grow beets in northern Ontario because of climatic conditions, but I would be very proud indeed if Alberta could produce large quantities of beets sufficient to give us the major part or all the sugar that we need in this country.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Sugar is not gold.

Mr. BRADETTE: Who said that it was? Again I hear "not gold."

Mr. FAIR: He is not married yet; he ought to have a little gold.

Mr. BRADETTE: I should like every member of parliament to visit our gold mining centres. I am giving this invitation very sincerely. I want you to come to my section of the country. You will be my guest, and I shall take you to visit sections like Timmins, Schumacher, South Porcupine, Kirkland Lake, or Rouyn-Noranda, represented by the hon. member for Pontiac. There you will see these new centres of population which are helping our farmers and the men employed in the various industries. Would anyone say that we should deliberately destroy, with our own hands commit hara-kiri and destroy the gold mining industry of this country? It is pure nonsense to make such statements; it shows a pure lack of elementary realism and it is not Canadianism. If we had to create a false market; if we had no taker; if gold was not required by the rest of the world I would say fine; we do not need the industry. But practically every nation in the world is asking for gold. They want gold for their own economic and monetary system, and we deliberately are going to destroy that industry ourselves. Even such a thought is absolutely incomprehensible to me. I continue with the quotation.

It is really the metal backing held in trust as the nation's banking reserve. It cannot be sent abroad—

I want members of the Social Credit party to listen to this:

It cannot be sent abroad or allocated here and there in the belief that it is free gold which the government can release where "it will do the most good."

There is only about $1 billion of free gold in the treasury general fund, and there are about $5 billion in the category of excess reserves. These congress could release for expenses or debt reduction. But that the gold hoard at Fort Knox and in the New York federal reserve bank vaults is merely so much useless metal performing no service is an utterly erroneous notion. These reserves are part of our complicated money system, and stand as a barrier to printing press money and the excesses of managed currency advocates.

Mr. QUELCH: Will the hon. member permit a question? Can he tell us if we have gold reserves in Canada against our currency?

Mr. BRADETTE: Surely the hon. member does not expect me to go into these details; they have been told ad nauseam, time and time again in the House of Commons. If we repeated them a thousand times some hon. members of that party would not want to understand them the thousandth time any more than they did the first time.

Mr. QUELCH: Have we gold reserves in Canada at all at the present time?

Mr. BRADETTE: Definitely there is gold behind the Canadian dollar in the international monetary fund. The hon. member knows very well that our paper money is backed with Canadian gold. He knows that.

I continue with the quotation:

These reserves are part of our complicated money system, and stand as a barrier to printing press money.

I heard a minister of the crown in private conversation at one time speaking of printed money issued in an unlimited way so as to solve our economic problems. I want to repeat the statement. It was a private conversation; therefore I will not give his name. He said, "The printing press is in first-class condition. We have the best ink we desire to print all the money without limit. We have the paper to do it; we have the experts and the engravers to do it, and if I wanted to tomorrow I could order the issue of a million dollars of good Canadian money to every man, woman and child in this country. Tomorrow morning every one of us would be millionaires." What would have that meant? It would have meant that the million dollars would have been absolutely worthless, and not worth even the cost of the printing and the paper.

Mr. KUHL: Whose proposal was that?

Mr. BRADETTE: It was not a proposal. We were speaking of funny money as your party often propounds. I said we were discussing the subject of unlimited printing of money, because if it was so easy as all that to use the printing press or apply the Social Credit system to Canada, everybody would need to worry no more. They would get all they want; they would get all the orchestras and all the operas and so on, all the commodities and luxuries to their hearts' desires. There is nothing free in this world. I believe in Santa Claus at Christmas time, but I know after Christmas we poor uncles or relatives have to pay all of his bills.

Mr. KNOWLES: You would make a better husband.

Mr. BRADETTE: I may have to learn yet, and I still hope to make a good husband. I continue with the quotation:

They support our credit structure, our currency, and indirectly our debt. Tampering with the collateral behind the gold certificates is a dangerous expedient.

Not a dangerous action, but a dangerous expedient. I never worshipped the golden calf or the silver calf.

Mr. KUHL: Just the gold.

[Mr. Quelch.]

Mr. BRADETTE: I know the monetary system is resilient and lasting. I did not get the witty remark of the hon. member.

An hon. MEMBER: He is shooting the bull.

Mr. BRADETTE: They did not use that sort of language in Pontiac or in any gold mining district. I challenge any of these hon. members to go to Pontiac and make the speeches they just made against gold. I know the hon. member for Pontiac cannot relish their viewpoint, but by his silence he seems to agree with them. He never uses those expressions in his own constituency, and he never will. I am positive of that, but he must carry the responsibility of the policies of his party.

We have the Bank of Canada at the present time, which is a government institution. We know that a monetary system must be resilient; we know that back of the Canadian dollar or of any monetary system you must have the work, you must have the industry, you must have the energy of the people.

The fact that we have treated this subject with intelligence is seen in the results we attained during the war. Who would have dreamed at the beginning of the last war that Canada would be able to finance the war effort which was put forth by the Canadian people at that time? We were able to do so for one primary reason, and that is that parliament realized the elasticity, the resiliency of our monetary system. But it was more than that, for behind the Canadian dollar there were the Canadian people, who put forward the best effort any people have ever made at any time.

I wish to be reasonable on this subject. I was not here this afternoon, but I was told that the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) made as usual a very sensible speech.

An hon. MEMBER: He always does.

Mr. BRADETTE: I know he always does, but sometimes people are easily swayed. On one occasion I was told that mine was the golden voice of the gold mining industry. Certainly I can say that the gold mines of this country have proved a fruitful source of employment for our workers, our farmers and those engaged in our forests. That is what gold mining has meant to Canada, and it is one of the finest ways of developing a newer section of the country.

It is easy for anyone to stand up here and fight for the gold mining industry in view of what the industry has accomplished for the country. I do not always agree with all the statements on gold made by the members who come from Toronto but I know that they are sincere. I must point out, however, that some of the statements which they made two years ago, at the time the Canadian dollar was brought to a parity with the United States dollar, have not been justified by the events. Those hon. members wanted our gold producers to have access to the world market, to sell their gold on the open market. At that time I stood up in the House of Commons and said that it was impossible for the gold mining industry of Canada to sell gold on the open market of the world.

Mr. SKEY: Why?

Mr. BRADETTE: Why? The thing is as elementary as ABC. Does the hon. member think for one moment that if the Minister of Finance allowed the gold mining industry to sell its production on the open market the industry would not immediately ask the federal treasury to guarantee the collection of the proceeds from such sales? I leave that question with hon. members.

Mr. SKEY: It would be the same as the wheat industry.

Mr. BRADETTE: No, for the simple reason that you are dealing with a different matter. When you are dealing with wheat you know that all the nations of the world want that commodity; but there is only one nation that is willing and ready to buy your bullion at a set cash price, and that is the United States; and are you going to engage in a black market against the United States treasury? That is what it would practically mean. I leave that thought with the hon. gentleman. It would be purely and simply a black market.

Some hon. members have said that as much as $60 an ounce could be obtained for our gold. Let me put this to them, and I am speaking quite sincerely. Suppose tomorrow the Department of Finance allowed the gold industry to sell its bullion on the world market. The next day the industry would be on the minister's doorstep asking, and quite rightly, that he guarantee the collections of the proceeds of those sales, because there would be nothing else for him to do. There is no getting away from that, because these sales would not be made to governments but to individual buyers.

I am not speaking as an expert. I am speaking as a layman, and I believe with common sense, but I have lived in that section of Canada for many years and I know something about the working of the gold mining industry. From such knowledge as I have, I wish to say this with reference to the bill before us, that it is a good measure and a big step in the right direction. I do not suggest that it is perfect, but I would suggest to hon. members that the Department of Finance has always been open-minded so far as the gold mining industry is concerned. Let us be fair. We are all practical men or we should be; if there is one man here who should be practical in regard to this particular question it is myself, and I may say that I could have bitterly attacked the placing of our dollar on a parity with the United States dollar because it hurt the section of the country that I represent here. But the gold mine owners are Canadians and they are good citizens. They knew that the industry was being hurt, but they envisaged the national economy as a whole and they conceded that it was a good thing that the Canadian dollar was being placed at parity with the United States dollar. When the then Minister of Finance, the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley), in the month of July, 1946, made his statement in this house with respect to dollar parity he stated at the time that it would harm to some extent the gold industry.

In my constituency there are three large newsprint mills which at present use a little over 3,000 cords of pulpwood per day, and on the night the announcement was made by the then Minister of Finance that our Canadian dollar was at par I received some telephone messages from the management of one of those big mills. I told them not to worry, because the price of newsprint, the price of sulphite, the price of lumber and the price of pulpwood were not all rigidly controlled by the United States treasury, whereas in the case of gold the situation was entirely different. This was so true that it was only a few days later that newsprint increased by $7, $8 and in some instances by $10 a ton.

The gold industry, on the other hand, found itself in a precarious position. But these men in the gold mining industry were fair, even though they had to be critical, and naturally they had to put their case and problems before the public and the government. As I have said, however, they envisaged the national economy as a whole and they did not use the kind of language that was used by some of the so-called mining papers. They were more reasonable than others that tried to agitate the people, and this is all to their credit. The leading men in the gold mining industry realized that the best and most logical and at the same time the most sincere sort of agitation was to state the facts clearly and forcibly, and to show that the gold mining industry deserved careful consideration at the hands of the government as well as at the hands of parliament. The gold mining industry has always played the game, and for that reason these men felt that it deserved every consideration possible and rectification of their position.

When, early in the last war, the federal treasury requested an intensive gold mining production, the gold mining industry of Canada answered at once, without the slightest hesitation, and in doing this it was helping the serious dollar situation in which the country found itself, before we had special agreements with the United States. In many instances they went so far as to deplete their ore reserves, so much so that some of these mines like Hollinger, McIntyre, Lake Shore, and many others for many months and in some cases for a year or two, suffered a depletion of their reserves, which is always a serious situation for a mine. But they did this from a national point of view. They wanted to do all they could to further Canada's war effort.

Two years later, on account of the labour shortage and the shortage of essential metals, they were asked to shift some of their men to employment elsewhere, to the nickel industry at Sudbury, for example, or to the steel industry, and once again the gold mining industry responded magnificently and without any hesitation whatsoever. On that score alone, therefore, I know that the sympathy of the whole of Canada has been behind the gold mining management, and I repeat without fear of contradiction that our gold management has been second to none so far as labour and the working conditions of labour are concerned. It is not perfect; nevertheless it has done some marvelous things.

Here I should like to say something that may perhaps seem to be rather of local interest, but I believe that I am justified in bringing it up because it is also of interest to the nation at large. I may say that our Barbara Ann Scott got her first effective training in the summer months in one of the finest skating rinks in the country, the rink built at Schumacher by the McIntyre mine, to which every worker in the gold mining industry of that section has full access.

In my opinion management in our section of the country has been too humble about what they have done in the matter of health and improved working conditions, et cetera. It should have let the rest of Canada know what was being done for the workers. Unfortunately at times we have had the wrong kind of agitation in our section of the country, where some people have been trying to stir up the population even against their own labour leaders.

[Mr. Bradette.]

Only a few weeks ago the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Gauthier) and the hon. member representing the Temiskaming district and myself pleaded with the government to stop a certain man who was trying to mislead the workers in our section of the country. I could speak of men like the Bickells, the Timmins, the Schumachers, yes, thousands of others that gave their best in its development. Is it because they have taken chances; is it because they have been energetic that they should be penalized? Some started from the ground and worked their way up. No doubt many hon. members listening to me participated last year in a banquet given by the mine managers and operators and everyone who listened to men like Mr. S. L. Longmore, for instance, and other speakers, was impressed with the sincerity of these men, their logic, their comprehension, realizing that they were humanitarians whose one desire was a solid and prosperous industry and peace between labour and management. Every one of these men at that banquet was always at the disposal of the worker to go up and discuss the affairs of the workers with the management. That is one of the best ways to obtain co-operation.

That is why I am in favour of this bill. As I say, it is not perfect, but it is capable of amendment and if necessary of some changes from time to time as new problems arise. When some periodicals say that the government has done nothing for the gold mining industry since 1946 they are not speaking the truth; they are not trying to be fair. Several things have been done and several things have been tried in connection with this important problem. I might point out that I took it upon myself to go to the United States to find out what could be done, what was the situation there. I want the house to realize that United States gold producers are in the same position as our Canadian gold producers. The cost of living has gone up there, as have the wages; also the cost of materials necessary for the exploitation of gold mining is higher in the United States than it is here at the present time. So when we talk in terms that we should increase the price of gold by $8, $10, or $15 an ounce, we must be very careful indeed.

Some speakers in that group across the floor will say, forget about the United States. They go so far as to say, forget altogether about the gold mining industry; they even wish its destruction. I do not want to see that day come. I hope it will never come. Let us pause and see for a moment what it would mean. In the Porcupine district alone at the present time we have over 75,000 people gainfully employed in gold mining. They have built some fine permanent towns; there are some fine schools, and all the public utilities services possible; towns built on permanent lines. There are in northern Quebec, northern Ontario, northern Manitoba and British Columbia, in the gold mining sections of Canada, people from every section of Europe and of Canada working to develop that needed metal for the benefit not only of the section in which they live, but also for the benefit of the whole of Canada.

I could go on indefinitely speaking on this matter. I hope that this summer, if it is at all possible, we may again inaugurate some excursions into northern Ontario and northern Quebec for the members and senators. Two years ago the Ontario mining institute brought, I believe, twenty members of parliament and senators on an educational tour into the Porcupine, Kirkland Lake and Rouyn-Noranda section. For most of them it was their first visit, and they declared that it was a revelation to them. They saw the situation right on the ground.

I am not going to talk politics, but inasmuch as we hear of some people who seem to fear personal initiative and the making of reasonable profits, I am just going to say this. As far as development is concerned, in the initial stages of gold mining more money has been lost than has been made. When you see the work of the prospectors, the promoters, the first engineers and the first men who go into these apparent mud holes, where you have water, even in the summer, right up to your knees, taking a gamble with their own money and that of others—because there will always be a certain amount of gambling attached to it; there is no getting away from that—and working for months and years before they can get a dollar of revenue, and on many occasions meeting with complete disappointment, you must admire their courage, their determination. This is the kind of industry which has enlarged the borders of Canada as a whole, and has pushed back its frontiers. In northern Canada we have a wonderful treasure house. There used to be a time, even in the section of the country where I live now, when we thought it was not even fit for the Indians and Eskimos. In the riding which I have the honour to represent now, when I went there in 1909 as a settler in that famous clay belt in the centre of the gold mining section, there were about 1,000 people consisting mostly of Indian trappers, white trappers, and a few prospectors. Today I have the honour and the great responsibility to represent in this house some 140,000 people. That shows the development that we are bound to have in northern Canada, and that applies to nearly every foot of ground of that immense territory. We no doubt have it to the same extent in the Northwest Territories. We have it to perhaps a large extent in British Columbia.

I am going to make this prophecy. In northern Ontario and in northern Quebec if we are careful with our mining, if we are careful with its development, and if the government and everyone concerned have foresightedness and realize the importance of this industry to the national economy and prosperity of this country, we shall have there the greatest development that any nation has experienced in the last forty years. I know whereof I speak. We hear about the resources of Labrador. The new member from northern Quebec (Mr. Gourd), who so well represents that section of the country, well knows the potentialities they have there in mineral resources. In northern Quebec and northern Ontario we have what we call the wonderful clay belt, one of the most fertile and arable sections of land there is in Canada at present, and that is intermixed with that fine mineral belt. There are no heavy hills. Apparently by glacier action those hills have been erased or rather greatly worn down. There are fine prosperous agricultural communities there. I am going to take the opportunity of mentioning just a few in my own constituency: Raymore, Val Gagné, Cochrane, Fauquier, Kapuskasing, Opasatika, Moonbeam, Matheson, Hearst, and many others, all names that hon. members have heard. They have an unlimited regional market in the mining centres. The Montreal, Toronto and other markets are quite far away for us to cover because of the long freight haul. But those regional markets are a wonderful thing in agricultural development. The same thing applies to our forest development, because a lot of timber and lumber is used in mining.

I speak feelingly on this subject, and I know that I am receiving a fine and comprehensive hearing from every section of the house. Again I repeat what I said a few moments ago. When I was in New York last fall I was happy to read the accounts of the speeches made by the leader of the C.C.F. party when he was in my section of the country. The hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) has also been there. He has done some good work. We know that he is constructive in his labour activities. He wants to do what he thinks is best for the welfare of Canada and for gold mining, because if gold mining is not prosperous or is on a submarginal basis, they cannot pay the wages necessary to be paid to the worker to live confortably. When hon. members are, I would not say converted, but convinced of the urgent necessity and the serious problems facing the gold mining industry and use their influence accordingly, it will again come into its own. It is not a bankrupt industry but it is in need of practical help. At the present time one may read certain reports, but it is far from being bankrupt. However, it has suffered to a large extent, and it has suffered on account of losing the $3.50 per ounce.

Just one word about subsidies. I know some hon. members of this house will say, Well, you are against a subsidy on milk; you are against the subsidy on this and that, but you are in favour of a subsidy for gold mining. I am not in favour of subsidies for gold mining. I want hon. members to analyse and to judge the situation of gold mining impartially. Is there any other industry in Canada that has suffered as grievously as it did when we put the dollar at parity? I think not. Steel has not suffered in the same way. Neither has nickel. No other mining industry has suffered in the same way or any of our export goods. I repeat that this industry wants to be practical and has proven to be logical. It has no politics, but it realizes the great role that it has to play in the post-war period. The people in my section of the country, the mining interests, would resent it if I had the audacity to make a political speech on this important question. That is why I so highly appreciate the fine attention I have received this evening from every section of the House of Commons. We do not come before parliament as mendicants, hat in hand, for special privileges. We want you to judge the situation impartially and practically. I know if we unite our efforts we can succeed; that we will succeed in this case.

On the question of maritime rights my section of the country always gave its support 100 per cent. With regard to wheat, you fine farmers in the west will always get support from our section, the mining section of Canada; in all the problems you may have to face, our people, all our section of Canada, will give that support diligently and voluntarily, and we make your problems our problems and naturally we expect the same favourable support of our difficulties. I believe that under such circumstances we have the right to expect for my section of the country that the problem which means so much not only to us but to the whole of Canada, will be given support and attention and all the study possible so that a solution will be found that will be reasonable to the industry, and will allow it to play its part in our aim for a prosperous and greater and stronger nation.

Mr. SKEY: Did I understand the hon. member to say the gold producers would require a guarantee from the federal government before they would export their gold? Did he say they would require a guarantee of protection from the federal government before they would export gold for sale abroad?

Mr. BRADETTE: I appreciate the question that has been asked, and perhaps the house will give me two minutes in which to reply. I have discussed this problem with many mine owners and producers. They would like an open market, but at the same time they are afraid of it. Suppose, for example, they sold their gold in Egypt or India at $50 an ounce. That gold would not be sold to the government of Egypt but to some individual. What guarantee would the producers have that they would receive Canadian dollars or the equivalent for the gold? Under such transactions, the sellers would certainly have the right to ask the government to guarantee the collection.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): It would be cash on the barrel, of course.

Mr. SKEY: You give them a chance and they will try.

Mr. BRADETTE: They will not take the chance.

Mr. ABBOTT: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: If the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it will be necessary for me to make any very extended remarks in closing the debate, but perhaps there are some things I should say. At the outset, however, I believe we have had a useful and helpful debate on the second reading of this bill, in which members on all sides have, I think, made a valuable contribution to a real understanding of the purpose of this legislation.

On December 11 last I made a statement to the house outlining the program the government proposed to recommend by way of assistance to the gold mining industry. That program involved certain modifications of the original proposals I had announced in my broadcast address of November 17. Those modifications, as I stated at the time, had come about following representations which had been made by the gold mining industry, and following consultations which had been carried on with the international monetary fund to which, of course, as a member Canada had certain obligations.

As far as the industry is concerned, the representations made to us were to the effect that the original proposal, which was to defray for a three-year period the costs of additional gold production over and above the amounts produced in the base year, which ended December 31, 1947, to the extent of $7 per fine ounce, would not serve to prevent the continued deterioration of the industry and the closing down of additional mines. As far as the international monetary fund was concerned, the consultations were begun immediately after my original announcement, in order to make sure that the detailed working out of the plan was in accordance with our obligations as a member of that organization. In my broadcast I had stated that because of these obligations the details of the program could not be made known until we had discussed them with the fund, and that consequently details would not be made known until I announced them in parliament. But I did indicate in general terms what our proposals were, in order to prevent speculation in the meantime.

In the course of our discussions with the fund it developed that the payment of a fixed dollar amount per extra ounce of gold produced was open, from the point of view of the fund at any rate, to the objection that it might be represented as constituting an increase in the price paid for gold by the government, which, of course, would be contrary to the fund agreement. So in the light of these representations and the consultations to which I have already referred the government decided to modify its proposals, and the general nature of those modified proposals I explained in my statement on December 11. Later, on December 19, when I moved the resolution preceding the introduction of this bill, I elaborated on those proposals.

I do not think it is necessary for me to discuss them now in detail, but when we are in committee we can discuss how those proposals will work out in detail. In view of what has been said during the course of this debate, perhaps I should deal briefly with two general considerations which I consider important in connection with this measure.

In the first place I should like to say a word with respect to its relation to our international obligations. At the end of my statement after moving the resolution on December 19 I placed on Hansard two public announcements made on December 11 by the international monetary fund, following our consultations with them, as well as a statement which had been made the following day by the national advisory council of the United States government. The first statement by the fund attempted to make clear just what the obligations of the member countries are in connection with legislation to subsidize the production of gold. The fund, it was pointed out, has an obligation to see that the gold policies of its neighbours do not undermine or threaten to undermine exchange stability; and under certain sections of the articles of agreement members of the fund are prohibited from buying gold at a price above parity plus the prescribed margin. In its statement the fund pointed out it was felt that a subsidy in the form of a uniform payment per ounce for all or part of the gold produced in any country would constitute an increase in price which would not be permissible under the fund agreement. In another section of the agreement each member of the fund—

> . . . undertakes to collaborate with the fund to promote exchange stability, to maintain orderly exchange arrangements with other members, and to avoid competitive exchange alterations.

It was felt by the fund that subsidies on gold production would offend against that provision if the subsidies were such as to cast doubt on the uniformity of the monetary value of gold in all member countries, or if they tended to contribute directly or indirectly to monetary instability in other countries. In the light of these two sections of the agreement to which I have referred, our original proposal was found to have objectionable features; and incidentally these provisions of the fund agreement are also the provisions against which allowing a free market for gold or selling gold abroad at premium prices would probably offend.

There were two statements issued the same day. In its second statement the fund made it clear that it had examined the revised Canadian proposal, which is the one incorporated in the bill now before the house, in the light of its general statement of policy to which I have just referred, and had—> . . . determined that in the present circumstances the proposed Canadian action is not inconsistent with the policy stated by the fund.

That statement, I may say, was a matter of gratification to the government in view of the objects and purposes we were seeking to achieve. Before I leave this point we should recognize, and I should like to draw to the attention of the house, the significance of the statement issued by the national advisory council of the United States government. Hon. members will recall that this council consists of the secretary of the treasury, the secretary of state, the secretary of commerce, the chairman of the board of governors of the federal reserve system and the chairman of the board of directors of the export-import bank. On behalf of the United States government the national advisory council welcomed the fund's statement of policy and its expressed intention to keep under review the gold policies of its members as an important forward step in the field of international financial co-operation. It referred to the peculiar and continuing interest of the United States as a gold-buying country in the role which gold subsidies may come to play in the production, movement and price of gold; and in particular the council emphasized that the United States would view with disfavour any tendencies for countries to become dependent upon subsidized gold production as a solution of the problem of arriving at and maintaining equilibrium in the international balance of payments.

In stating that the United States would not subsidize its own gold producers, the national advisory council emphasized that the gold stocks of the United States now amount to $22·7 billion and that in the first eleven months of 1947 gold purchased by the United States from foreign countries amounted to $2·7 billion. That is, of course, the real significance of the council's statement. Under existing conditions the United States government provides the real market for the world's gold; and it is its willingness to hold and to buy gold in unlimited quantities, coupled with certain national and international monetary arrangements, including the international monetary funds, which maintains the price of gold at the standard price of $35 per ounce. As the second or third largest producer of gold, Canada has a real stake in maintaining that market and those arrangements.

I do not quote very often from newspaper articles, but I was interested in an article which appeared in Toronto Saturday Night of April 3 written by Wynne Plumptre, who is a recognized authority. The article deals with this question of a free market for gold and I commend it to any hon. member who is interested in matters of this kind. I want to quote only the concluding part of the article which, referring to the international monetary fund, reads as follows:

> The monetary fund is based on gold. Every member undertakes to buy and sell gold at a controlled price in relation to their controlled exchange rate. The fund itself deals in gold. Thus the fund guarantees to gold its position as a monetary metal. It guarantees an international market, and an unlimited market at the fixed prices, for all new gold production.
>
> Without this guarantee the future of gold would be very shaky indeed. During the nineteen-thirties one country after another went "off the gold standard"; the link between gold and the currency was broken. Everywhere people began saying that gold was done for as a monetary metal. Henceforth governments would manage their currencies and their exchange rates without bothering about gold.
>
> Since more than half the gold production of the world went to be used as monetary reserves, the idea that countries would stop using such reserves was very alarming. Double the normal supply would have to go into other uses—such as dentistry and jewelry. Obviously, the price would fall disastrously.
>
> Without the fund, without an agreement amongst many countries to use gold as international money, the yellow metal would once again be faced by this very alarming outlook. It is almost certain that the United States government would stop buying gold mined here; just as it does not buy silver mined here. That is why anyone who is interested in gold production as a long-run proposition, as opposed to a source of quick profits, should be supporting the fund for all he is worth.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): You stated a moment ago that the United States would buy all the gold offered in the world at $35 per ounce. The minister knows the world production year after year.

Mr. ABBOTT: We do not know the world production.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): You know it fairly accurately.

Mr. ABBOTT: We have no accurate idea of the Russian gold production.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): What proportion of the gold produced in the world goes to the United States at that price? It is less than fifty per cent, is it not?

Mr. ABBOTT: I think the United States has in this $22·7 billion something over three-fifths of the known reserves of gold in the world.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): A tremendous amount of gold is not going there at all. It may be hoarded, but it is being spread around the world.

Mr. ABBOTT: We do not know accurately about Russia, but taking gold at the rate of $2·7 billion in eleven months of 1947, the United States is taking gold at a pretty rapid rate. There is not very much going anywhere else. I cannot say offhand the total gold production of the world, but Canada as the third largest gold producer produced $106,000,000 in 1947 and the United States took $2·7 billion worth from the world. It is taking a pretty big chunk of the world production. I have not available the figures for the existing production, but I know that without the willingness of the United States under existing conditions to take gold at $35 per ounce there would not be a market for gold in which we could be paid by anything we could use.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): That is only a prophecy.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is the statement of cold fact under today's conditions.

The warning contained in the national advisory council's statement against a country becoming too dependent upon subsidized gold production as a solution of exchange problems leads me to the second general point I wish to discuss in closing this debate, namely, the purpose of this legislation.

I do not need to assure the house that, so far as Canada is concerned, there is not very much danger in the contingency referred to by the council, namely, that we shall largely stimulate the production of gold as the result of these subsidies. It is true that the bonus payments we are providing for should lead to some increase in production—I hope they will —but we are not under any illusion that the increased production for this reason alone will be of such magnitude as to become a major factor in the solution of our immediate exchange problems. Any contribution which it makes will, of course, be most helpful, but unfortunately there are other important factors at work which, unless conditions change, will be bound to limit the size of that contribution. I refer particularly to the shortage of labour and the mounting production costs which have been referred to by a number of speakers who have taken part in this debate today.

However, I should like if I may to state the primary purpose of this legislation in somewhat broader terms. Our gold mining industry, as has been pointed out by a number of speakers and without any invidious distinction by my good friend, the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Bradette) in particular, occupies a strategic place in our economy, particularly in the development of the social and economic structure in our great northern areas.

As everybody knows, our gold mines are located for the most part in that great mineral bearing area, one of the greatest in the world, which stretches right across the Pre-Cambrian shield in northern Quebec and Ontario, through northern Manitoba and Saskatchewan, up into the Northwest Territories and then down through the mountain area of British Columbia. Many of the mines are small and scattered in remote areas. A good many towns and hamlets have been developed which are solely dependent on them, as are also in certain cases small agricultural communities.

It was the search for gold and other precious metals which was probably the primary factor leading to the discovery of those great mineral areas where the all-important base metals of nickel, copper, lead and zinc and, more recently, the strategic uranium, are produced, with such important results to the wealth and strength of the country. During the depression years of the thirties gold mining was a powerful factor supporting employment, business activity and the soundness of our international position.

In these and other ways the industry has made an important contribution to our national life. It has been a great dynamic factor in our economic development. By promoting the settlement of our great northern areas it has given the country depth as well as breadth. To us it is synonymous with the north, and I think we all have tremendous faith in the role which the north has still to play in expanding our national wealth and income and promoting our defensive strength.

If that be so, and I think all hon. members will agree with me in that statement, it is important that the industry be maintained in a healthy condition. As I have indicated, during the thirties it was very active and prosperous and its output increased to a peak of approximately $206 million in 1941. That was natural and inevitable. I do not need to tell hon. members that, as long as gold remains directly or indirectly the basis of the monetary standard, it will thrive in depression and languish in periods of prosperity. Its fixed price means that, as costs fall during the downswing of depression the industry's profit margin widens, but as costs again begin their upward climb with the coming of full employment and the boom stage of the cycle the profit margin also narrows and in some cases may disappear entirely.

At the height of the war the necessity of mobilizing labour and essential materials for vital purposes added still further to the industry's difficulties. Production declined steadily after 1941 until the late summer of 1945, and for the year 1945 the output of gold in Canada had fallen to $102,000,000. With the end of the war it was hoped that the industry would before very long be able to get back to its peak production. But while production did pick up to some extent, early expectations were disappointed. The war had brought a more rapid rise in the wages paid by other competing industries and the competition of these industries for labour remained very keen. It therefore proved difficult to rebuild depleted labour ranks and, before long, costs began to rise. Then in July, 1946, came the restoration of the Canadian dollar to parity. May I interject that that action was not only not criticized by anyone to my knowledge, but it was praised and recognized by most as necessary and inevitable. It certainly was not criticized by any hon. gentleman opposite.

Mr. COCKERAM: Oh, yes.

Mr. SKEY: The hon. member for York West (Mr. Adamson) immediately rose and criticized it.

Mr. ABBOTT: My hon. friend did not rise and criticize it.

Mr. SKEY: I say that the hon. member for York West did.

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not recall it, but if the hon. member for York West did, he was the only one. The hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Skey) did not.

An important purpose of this action was to safeguard against a more rapid rise in Canadian costs and prices which would otherwise have been inevitable, but the fact remains that its immediate effect in the case of the gold mining industry was to reduce the price of the industry's product in Canadian dollars roughly from $38.50 to $35 per ounce. Since that date there has been a further substantial increase in wage and other costs.

As a result of all these factors, production in 1946 amounted to only $104 million and in 1947 to $106 million. Much potential production had become or was about to become unprofitable. A number of mines had closed down and a larger number were claimed to be operating at a loss. The closing down of marginal mines not only would bring hardship to many northern communities but would mean in many cases so great a cost to reopen that the mines would probably be lost forever as producing entities. Prospecting for new properties had slowed down and it was increasingly difficult to raise new funds for exploration and development. If this process were to continue unabated, serious damage would be done to the existing social and economic fabric of northern Canada, and the further development of the north would probably be slowed down materially.

This was the type of situation which the government's proposal was designed to remedy, the type of danger it was primarily designed to avoid. The bonus we propose to pay should enable most mines at least to maintain and perhaps to increase their current production to some moderate extent. It should enable many mines to avoid closing down with the hardship this would cause to many communities and the social and economic waste involved in the probable necessary transfer of population and the abandonment of homes and other forms of capital investment.

Those are the main reasons, Mr. Speaker, which prompted the government to take the action which it did. The house will notice that the assistance which it is proposed should be given is based on half the difference between the fixed figure of $18 per ounce and the actual cost of producing an ounce of gold in the particular mine; this means that it will be particularly helpful in the case of the remote mine and the marginal or high-cost mine. The program should also help to maintain hope and interest and faith in the industry, make it easier to raise capital, and thus assure the continuance of normal exploration and development work. In other words, it should, we believe, serve to preserve the industry and maintain it in greater health and vigour in a period when rapidly rising costs of production combined with a fixed price were threatening to stifle it. To the extent that the program results in an increased output of gold—and we believe it will to a moderate extent—it will provide a much-needed increase in our reserves of gold and United States dollars. In this connection it is important to note that this contribution will be made without any great increase in the use of our resources, as the gold mining industry is one which is running at only about half its capacity. I do not think there is anything more I need say.

Mr. JACKMAN: What is the long-term policy?

Mr. ABBOTT: Of course it is not my particular function to state what the long-term policy of the government is with respect to the mining industry. That more appropriately comes within the purview of my colleague the Minister of Mines and Resources (Mr. Glen). We have on our statute books and have had for some time, particularly in the tax legislation, special incentive legislation to encourage the gold mining industry. This policy is one which is intended to assist the industry over a temporary period when costs are abnormally high. As to the long-term policy I am not prepared to make a statement now, and I do not think it is appropriate that I should, beyond saying that the dominion government will, as in the past, always be interested in the prosperity and well-being of the gold mining industry, although we do not intend to single out the gold mining industry any more than any other industry for special treatment.

So far as the details of the bill are concerned, I think they can better be dealt with in committee when we are discussing the individual sections of the bill.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. JACKMAN: May I just say to the Minister of Finance in reply to his statement that no member of the Progressive Conservative party had anything to say in criticism of the government's action on July 5, 1946, I think it is well remembered by many on this side of the house that the hon. member for York West and the hon. member for York South did have considerable to say. It is also very well remembered, by me at least, that four or five days prior to July 5, 1946, the question arose in one form or another in the house, and I made the statement at that time that it was extremely injurious to Canadian business to have the government make arbitrary changes in our exchange rate, and that if the government would leave the exchange rate to its own natural workings we would have a situation with which businessmen could cope and they would not be thrown out of gear so completely as they were on July 5, 1946.

If we consider for a moment just what the circumstances were surrounding July 5, 1946, it will be remembered that OPA, the price control system in the United States, had gone off on July 1 of that year and that a rise in prices was expected in that country. A repercussion of that rise was expected in Canada by a good many people. The cost of living was already higher in the United States that here. Products were cheaper in price, and it was felt that there might be considerable increase in exports from Canada which would deplete our markets and perhaps make it impossible for our government to exercise price control as it was in operation at that time. I well remember this particular matter, because the Ottawa Journal was kind enough to give me a short editorial notice on July 5 and said, if I recall correctly, as its caption, "A prophet in the House of Commons." I clearly indicated that we might expect from the government some change of an arbitrary nature in regard to our exchange rate with the United States; and again, as I pointed out at that time, it was much sounder for the government to leave the exchange rate to the free operation of economic forces rather than to the artificial method which they subsequently adopted and which they have continued to adopt to this day. Businessmen do not know where they are, and I think without question at that time, on July 5, 1946, the Canadian dollar, which had been at ninety cents in relation to the United States dollar, would have improved itself of its own accord without any help from the government. The arbitrary action of the government—

Mr. ABBOTT: Nothing like hindsight.

Mr. JACKMAN: —did nothing more than to raise it in a way which business could not allow for, and many people were caught off guard in the sense that people who had small amounts of United States exchange, the tourist people, the season then being at its height on July 5, 1946, found themselves with a few hundred dollars of United States money in their pockets, and in place of getting the ten per cent premium on it, found they had to suffer the loss themselves.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. JACKMAN: We are on the title of the bill, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN: We are on the title, which is section 1 of Bill No. 7. I have allowed the hon. member to make certain general remarks, but I should remind him that in committee we must discuss the section under discussion and we must discuss the section strictly.

Mr. JACKMAN: I have only a few more words to say, Mr. Chairman, and perhaps we might be content with that. I might also point out that it is not the function of the opposition just to oppose unless they have some special reasons for it. On July 5, 1946, the whole international position in regard to prices, with the United States going off price control, was an unknown factor. As I recall it, the governor of the Bank of Canada was away on holidays at that time and was recalled for an urgent and unexpected session of the bank. I do not think the minister is justified in criticizing the official opposition for not having raised its voice more strenuously than it did on that occasion. It gave a clear warning; it pointed out the proper system to follow, namely, the natural working of economic forces. But the minister chose to do otherwise, and now is not the time for him to fling back in our faces the fact that we did not come out and tell him what his business was when we did not have the facts at our disposal.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Definitions.

Mr. ABBOTT: May I say a word, Mr. Chairman, before we carry this section? I have two or three amendments to some of the subsections. They are purely technical in character; there is nothing really of substance in them. I shall ask one of my colleagues to move these amendments at the appropriate time. Perhaps I should give the proposed amendments and then we can discuss the section as a whole. The first is an amendment to section 2, subsection 1, paragraph (b) relating to the base year. The amendment contains an added proviso, and reads as follows:

That subparagraph (i) of paragraph (b) of subsection 1 of section 2 of Bill No. 7 be amended by deleting the comma and the word "and" at the end thereof and inserting a comma and adding the following proviso:

"Provided that where the operation of any such mine was wholly suspended throughout that period, the base year means the period of twelve months commencing with the day on which operation of the mine is resumed after the thirtieth day of June, nineteen hundred and forty-seven, and"

It is to cover the case of a mine which, as the wording will indicate, had been wholly suspended throughout the period. It was a contingency which had been overlooked in drafting the original section.

Then section 2, subsection 1, paragraph (c), which relates to the definition of the cost of production, is amended by deleting lines 8, 9 and 10 on page 2 of the bill and substituting the following:

in respect of any matter for which a deduction is not allowed in determining income from the mine for the purposes of the Income War Tax Act;

This is just for greater tidiness in drafting.

Then there is another amendment to section 2, subsection 1, paragraph (d) as follows:

That paragraph (d) of subsection 1 of section 2 be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"(d) 'designated year' means a period of twelve months commencing on the first day of January in the years, nineteen hundred and forty-eight, nineteen hundred and forty-nine or nineteen hundred and fifty;"

It was suggested this afternoon by the hon. member for York South that the first of January should be substituted for the first of December, and this amendment will give effect to that suggestion.

Section 2, paragraph (h) of subsection 1 is amended by deleting the period at the end thereof and adding thereto the following words:

"but not in any event exceeding sixteen dollars."

to the definition of the rate of assistance.

Subsection 2 of section 2 is amended by deleting the word "and" at the end of paragraph (b) thereof, by deleting the period at the end of paragraph (c) and substituting a semicolon and the word "and" and by adding thereto the following paragraph:

"(d) gold produced from a mine during a designated year shall be deemed to be sold during that designated year if it is sold as soon as is practicable after the end of that year."

Mr. COCKERAM: Excuse me, Mr. Chairman. That is a change from $18 to $16, is it?

[Mr. Abbott.]

Mr. ABBOTT: Not exceeding $16. The section will now read:

"rate of assistance" for a mine for any period means the amount that is fifty per cent of the amount by which the average cost of production of gold from the mine during that period exceeds eighteen dollars but not in any event exceeding sixteen dollars.

Mr. SKEY: The total assistance will run up to $50.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have read the last amendment. It was felt that if the gold were produced on the 31st of December, perhaps it would not be possible to sell it on that date. That provides a little more flexibility to the section.

Perhaps my colleague, the Minister of Labour, will move these amendments. They are all amendments to subsection 1 of section 2.

Mr. MITCHELL: I so move.

Amendments agreed to.

Mr. MacNICOL: Before the section as amended carries, I should like to ask the minister a question. There is nothing new in the debate that has gone on today, particularly in the part that I heard. It is more or less similar to what took place in the thirties when the same problem was before us. But in those days the statesmen in Canada and in the United States approached the difficulty from another angle, which was to advance the price of gold. Has any discussion taken place with the United States or with whoever is concerned—at that time England was concerned—on advancing the price of gold? On that occasion gold was advanced from $20 odd an ounce to $35, and it had the immediate effect of breaking the depression of those days. Advancing the price of gold in the early thirties broke the depression at that time. Everyone knows that the cost of producing an ounce of gold has gone up materially since then. Has there been any discussion with the financial experts at Washington or elsewhere in regard to that problem? Has the time not come again to advance the price of gold from $35 to $50, or, as they were talking of at that time, $100 an ounce?

Mr. ABBOTT: I can say to my hon. friend that there have been no such discussions. Even if there had been, I would not be able to tell him about it, but there have not been any such discussions. So far as I am concerned, and I have been informed by my officials, there have been no such discussions so far as Canada is concerned.

Mr. MacNICOL: I am not going to oppose what the minister is trying to do. There is a problem to be met, and this is his proposal. But on the other occasion the very effective proposal was made and carried out which did solve the whole gold problem at that time. I would have thought that, before a bill like this was brought in, it would be discussed with those who are going to buy the gold.

Mr. ABBOTT: The action that was taken in the thirties was initiated by the late President Roosevelt himself without consultation with any other government, or so far as I am aware without any discussion with any of his officials or anyone else; and, so far as I am aware, there was no discussion with officials of any other government.

Mr. MacNICOL: It was initiated in Canada and it was argued in Canada by a very great man still living, thank God, Mr. Peter L. Robertson of Milton, Ontario, who was the father of the program to advance the price of gold.

Mr. ABBOTT: He may have put it in Mr. Roosevelt's head.

Mr. MacNICOL: I and others brought him to see the prime minister of that day after touring Ontario and the United States; then he was invited to Washington, and I believe the prime minister of that day went with him to Washington. It was from that commencement by Peter Robertson of Milton, Ontario, that the price of gold was advanced. Of course they had to have the consent of the United States. Later they sent a deputation to England to discuss the matter there. If nothing has been done along that line, perhaps it is too late now, but I should have thought that some program would be followed similar to that initiated in the early 1930's by Peter Robertson to advance the whole price of gold, so that all low-grade mines could be brought into production and more gold produced.

Mr. KNOWLES: I wish to ask the minister to try once again to explain to me and to others who may be asking similar questions just how this is really to the advantage of Canada. I will ask him a question in relation to section 2 (1) (h), which is being amended by the motion now before us. That subsection sets out the rate of assistance, and I note that the minister's amendment will put a ceiling on the amount of assistance that is available.

I take it from the subsection as amended that this is the situation. If it is costing a gold mine, meeting the other conditions laid down in the act, $50 an ounce to produce gold, that gold is sold in the United States at $35 an ounce. The gold mine gets $16 assistance from the government, which leaves the net cost to the gold mine itself at $34 for the ounce. Now I can see the advantage to the gold mine in being assisted to the point where production which cost it $50 is reduced to $34, which leaves the mine a profit of $1 an ounce.

My simple question is this. Is it really to the advantage of Canada as a whole to spend $16 out of the federal treasury to enable a private gold mine in Canada to bring in for itself $35 of United States exchange?

Mr. ABBOTT: My hon. friend is, of course, taking an extreme case, and I answer at once that I would not think it would be of advantage to Canada to carry on such a thing for any length of time. But that $50 might be the initial cost when the mine is getting going. It would be a marginal mine and it would yield only $1 an ounce on that basis. This legislation contemplates assistance for three years. As I tried to emphasize in the statements I made in closing the debate on the second reading a few moments ago, one of the main purposes of the legislation is to keep some of these mines going, to keep them open, in the hope that the communities will not be broken up in this period of abnormally high costs, and in the expectation in a good many cases that these costs will be brought down.

I would at once concede that no operation which would cost for a period of time $50 to produce something that could be sold for only $35 should be continued in existence. But my submission is that in the over-all picture, in view of the large place which the gold mining industry occupies in the Canadian economy, and in view of its tremendous importance to a great many of these scattered northern communities, it is desirable as a temporary measure to give this measure of assistance, first, in order to maintain and perhaps moderately to increase our production of gold, and to improve our exchange reserves and, second, to keep the communities going. That is the purpose.

Mr. KNOWLES: I thank the minister for the reply he has made, but there are two or three things that I must say. First of all, he points out that I took an extreme case of $50 an ounce. Yes, I did; and I did so because the minister had just proposed an amendment to set the ceiling at $50 an ounce, which seems to me to suggest that, without that ceiling, there was in the minister's mind the thought that higher amounts might be asked for by the mines.

Mr. ABBOTT: As the legislation stood, there would have been no limit, of course, and that was not the intention.

Mr. KNOWLES: If the minister felt it necessary to put this ceiling in, it looks as if we can anticipate that there will be cases right to that extreme point. But even if that is not so, even if the average run is in terms of $40 as the cost for the production of an ounce of gold, this means that the company pays the first $18 but gets 50 per cent of the other $22. In other words, the company gets $11—

Mr. ABBOTT: Not on all its production, remember.

Mr. KNOWLES: I recognize that, but with respect to the portion of production set out in the act. With respect to that portion, however, it gets $11, which reduces its costs from $40 to $29, so that it is able to make a profit of $6 an ounce. It makes that profit of $6 an ounce because of the assistance of the government; and it leaves Canada in this position again, that we are paying $11 out of the federal treasury to make possible the bringing in of $35 of United States exchange, which goes into private hands.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is, $11 on a third of the production. The other $35 comes in, and there is another two-thirds for which we get $35 in United States currency and on which nothing is paid out of the treasury—

Mr. KNOWLES: I appreciate that.

Mr. ABBOTT: —and the mine might otherwise be closed up.

Mr. KNOWLES: But a moment ago the minister's reply was to the effect that when he introduced the measure he emphasized the fact that one of its purposes was to keep these mines in operation because of their importance to a great many communities in Canada. I recognize that need; but I submit, Mr. Chairman, that that is on all fours with the kind of need which the hon. member for Cape Breton South referred to when he spoke about coal mining. It is on all fours with the discussion we had yesterday concerning freight rates, and it is on all fours with any economic problem in connection with which the need for subsidies arises. In the debate today member after member, like the hon. member for Calgary West, insisted that this was not a subsidy in the usual sense. Member after member insisted, and if my memory serves me aright the minister did also, that the fundamental reason for an emergency measure of this kind is the exchange problem. I submit that neither the minister nor hon. members can have it both ways and go from one argument to the other.

Mr. ABBOTT: It is not going from one argument to the other.

Mr. KNOWLES: If the basic reason for the bill is the need to save certain industries, that makes it sound like a protectionist measure and it might be interesting to pursue that thought; but if the need is to do certain things that are required to be done for sections of the Canadian people, then I submit that the members cannot draw a line between this and the demands for subsidies on milk, bread, transportation and other things that we have argued from time to time on the floor of this house. That being the case, I submit that the minister must, if he intends to present this as an emergency measure, relate it to our exchange position and make out a much stronger case for this measure as a means of solving our exchange problem, than it seems to me he has yet done.

Mr. ABBOTT: My hon. friend is making a second reading speech on that question. That point is one which could be properly raised on second reading.

Mr. KNOWLES: I have said what I intended to say, in any event. But I am not so sure that the minister is right in raising that objection. We are now discussing the whole business of the rate of assistance to these people, and I submit that the case which the minister has made for this kind of assistance on the basis of our exchange position is just not strong enough, and that it leaves us right back in the other position, namely, that the real reason for this is to help an industry and allegedly to protect the interests of certain Canadian workers and certain Canadian communities. If that argument applies in connection with gold, it applies in connection with coal, milk and a great many other things in this country.

Mr. SKEY: I should like to apologize to the minister. When I interrupted him a few minutes ago I was wrong. There was no immediate protest when the Minister of Finance on July 5 of last year moved his parity measure. The protest did come later.

Section agreed to.

On section 3—Assistance payments.

Mr. COCKERAM: I wish to mention the question which I brought up this afternoon and which was also mentioned by the hon. member for St. James. I think the minister has been approached by the producing mines with regard to section 3, subsection 2 (b) being changed to one-half instead of two-thirds. Can the minister give that some consideration?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes. I have given it quite a good deal of consideration and felt that we could not accede to that request. I think I indicated, in the course of my remarks and in my previous statement, that the international monetary fund do not look with too great favour on subsidy arrangements as such. Where such subsidies are, as this one is, related to increases in the cost of production, well and good; they have accepted that as coming within the scope of the fund agreement. I am perhaps not giving away any secret when I say that agreement was not given too readily, and I do not think the international monetary fund would view with favour any increase in the type of assistance which is proposed under this bill. I came to the conclusion that we could not increase the assistance to make it extend to half the production over and above that in the base year, but that it would have to be restricted to the one-third.

Mr. COCKERAM: I have in mind that the mines have passed on all this increase they are to get under this act. In view of the fact that this bill is before us partly because of the necessity of obtaining an increased gold production to help with the exchange situation, I thought perhaps something could be done along those lines. It is a very important matter, because the bill as it is going through now does not benefit the industry. It is true that it does benefit the industry to the extent that the workmen are getting that much more money; but for extra development costs and everything of that kind it does not help a great deal. I was wondering if the minister could not reconsider that section once again.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am afraid that this is as far as we feel we can go at this time.

Mr. KNOWLES: The minister spoke about this matter just now and he also spoke about it when he was closing the debate on second reading. Let me put my question to him as briefly as I can. Do I understand from what the minister says that the monetary fund agreed that assistance to one-third of the production is not a subsidy but that assistance to half the production would be a subsidy?

Mr. ABBOTT: No; I did not put it in that way. I said that our plan as it was here, and some people have said that it is complicated, was for assistance which is based on half the additional cost of production over $18, and on the excess over a proportion only of the production in the base year. The fund held that that was not a contravention of the fund agreement. I was very glad that they did so. I do not think it was myself. But obviously if one carries the formula to the point, for instance, where you are giving something with respect to every ounce of gold produced, and not only a portion of the gold produced over that in the base period in accordance with a pre-determined formula, but with respect to every ounce of gold produced in a given year, then you are getting something that is pretty closely related to the price of an ounce of gold. This assistance varies, as hon. members will appreciate, in accordance with the cost of getting the gold out, and it is of particular value to the high cost marginal mine that is just getting by and is of much less value to the established low-cost high-grade producer.

Mr. KNOWLES: It looks to me as though the fund's lawyers came from Philadelphia.

Mr. ABBOTT: They may.

Mr. GILLIS: Can the minister tell us who will administer these regulations? Once this legislation is passed, will the department put accountants in the mining industry for the purpose of checking costs and so forth, or will they just accept the statement of the gold mining companies as compiled by themselves for the purpose of applying this legislation?

Mr. ABBOTT: There is to be a dual responsibility. The technical end will be administered by the Department of Mines and Resources. The accounting end and the checking of the costs and figures will be handled by the controller of the treasury.

Section agreed to.

Sections 4 and 5 agreed to.

On section 6—Regulations.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have one small amendment to make to section 6 (1) (b) which I will ask one of my colleagues to move. The motion will be:

That paragraph (b) of subsection 1 of clause 6 of Bill No. 7 be amended by deleting the semicolon at the end thereof and substituting a comma and the following:

"or that shall be excluded from the cost of production of gold from a mine for any period in respect of the production of any other mineral or product from the mine;"

So that the section will read:

6. (1) The governor in council may make regulations

(b) prescribing the amount, or the method of calculating the amount, that may be included in the cost of production of gold from a mine for any period, in respect of depreciation, amortization or preproduction expenses, and costs of exploration and development in the mine, or that shall be excluded from the cost of production of gold from a mine for any period in respect of the production of any other mineral or product from the mine;

Mr. MITCHELL: I so move.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. COCKERAM: I should like to ask a question about a matter I mentioned this afternoon; that is, in regard to the details of these regulations, especially having to do with development. I pointed out this afternoon that the majority of mines are behind in their development work because of the war, lack of labour, and so on. It may be, if the mines are to catch up with that work, that their costs will be very much greater in the coming months, now that labour is once more becoming available. I believe special attention should be given that matter, and I think it should be discussed with the mining industry.

Mr. ABBOTT: The regulations are not as yet completed, but they will be carefully worked out by the Department of Mines and Resources in consultation with the industry, and every effort will be made to see that they are proper and sound and fair.

Mr. MacNICOL: Since this is the last clause before we come to the regulations, after which the bill will pass—and I am in favour of it—I am going to offer a suggestion to the minister. I am sure his deputy must have a keen recollection of what took place in the early 1930's when there seemed to be a general feeling on the part of those familiar with the gold problem that the price of gold should be advanced considerably. It was advanced to $35 an ounce, but the argument at that time was that the government should have possession of all the gold; that is, that the government should buy all the gold and pay the producer $50 an ounce. The government in turn would sell it at $100 an ounce to those who had to have it. I am not very clear in my recollection of that discussion. I did not get back until six o'clock this evening, and had I known this discussion was coming up I would have refreshed my memory, but it is all in Hansard. Since this is a problem which is very important to the country, I should like the minister to read the debates of those days, because it was Washington and London and Ottawa that advanced the price of gold to $35. It could have been advanced further. Perhaps $35 is not enough. Perhaps it should not be less than $50, or perhaps it should be more than that. The gold industry has a colossal effect on a large number of businesses in Canada, altogether apart from those located in the vicinity of the mines, so that it is almost of transcendent importance. I remember very well the great quantities of machinery and steel which were shipped to northern Ontario following the price advance to $35. I do not know how many mines were opened up; perhaps the hon. member for York South would know, but I believe scores of mines in which the gold ore was low-grade were opened and developed at that time.

That broke the back of the depression. It was gold that did that. The government gets the credit, of course, but it was the production of gold that bought about such a resurgence of business in all the towns of Ontario and Quebec in which mining machinery and supplies were produced that the depression was finally broken. This looks to me like just a stopgap measure for a while, and in the meantime I suggest that the minister or his officials make an exhaustive survey and at the same time consult with our friends in Washington as to just how much further gold can safely be advanced. It might be possible to pay the producer $50 an ounce, while the government, having possession of all the gold, would be able to sell it at a much higher rate. In those days the argument was that the national debt could be paid off with the money the government received from the sale of gold over and above what it paid the producer, and the amount suggested at that time was $50 an ounce. It is too late to do anything of that kind now, but we may have to meet this problem again, so let us meet it after a thorough discussion of what is best in the interests of the whole country.

Mr. ABBOTT: I shall be very glad to read the debates to which my hon. friend refers. As he will recall very well, in 1932 or 1933, when gold was revalued, this continent and many parts of the world were in a period of acute deflation. Today that condition does not exist, at least as far as this continent is concerned.

While I am on my feet, I now have the figures concerning world gold production to which the hon. member for Calgary West made reference a few moments ago. In 1945 the world production of gold was about $945,000,000 and in 1946 it was about $963,000,000. The figure for 1947 is not yet known, but if one bears in mind the fact that in the first eleven months of 1947 the United States bought $2·7 billion worth of gold it will be appreciated that this was almost three times the new production of gold in each of the two preceding years.

Mr. MacNICOL: I have just one word further. The minister will find in the library, if he has not read it already, a book called "The Remedy," written by Peter L. Robertson and published in several languages, at a cost to himself of thousands of dollars, because he was a patriot. That book goes into the whole problem of gold in exhaustive detail; and it was that book, published in German, French, English and one other language that really brought about the revaluation of gold.

Mr. ABBOTT: I promise my hon. friend I will read the book with interest, though I will not promise to read it in all four languages.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 7—Offences.

Mr. SKEY: I take it that under this section the minister would not claim, or have his officers claim, that just because a man is a director of a company, though he may know nothing about what may have occurred, he is actually to be held guilty of an offence.

Mr. ABBOTT: If my hon. friend will look at the section he will see that it states:

. . . any officer, director or agent thereof who directed, authorized, assented to or acquiesced or participated in the commission of the offence . . .

It is restricted to direct participation.

Section agreed to.

Sections 8 and 9 agreed to.

On section 10—Coming into force.

Mr. SKEY: Does the minister intend to have the act proclaimed immediately?

Mr. ABBOTT: Our intention would be to proclaim it as soon as we can have the regulations drafted and approved, as I mentioned a moment ago. I should hope that would be done very shortly. However, the committee will notice that under the act provision can be made in the regulations for advances on the payments, which might be made quarterly; and I should anticipate we would get it in operation very quickly.

Section agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

INVESTIGATION, CONCILIATION AND SETTLEMENT OF INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to present a bill respecting industrial relations and investigation of industrial disputes and to make provision therein for the payment out of the consolidated revenue fund of the remuneration and expenses of the members of the boards and commissions and the officers, clerks and employees appointed or engaged by or under the authority of the act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the bill in question is intended to replace the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act and follow the wartime order in council, P.C. 1003 of February 17, 1944. The provisions of the bill are almost identical with those of Bill No. 338 which was introduced during the latter part of the session of 1947 and referred to the standing committee on industrial relations after second reading. There are a few minor changes, but nothing of a substantial nature. In order to save time, I would refer hon. members to the statement I made on Bill No. 338 on June 7, 1947, commencing at page 4231 of Hansard.

As I stated in the house at that time, and I have not changed my mind in the meantime, the legislation provides what I consider are the appropriate procedures and conciliation machinery to deal with industrial disputes affecting undertakings over which this parliament has jurisdiction. The essential purpose of the legislation is to create conditions favourable to the free exercise of collective bargaining between employers and employees. For that reason only such regulation of employer and employee activities in their industrial relationship as is considered necessary for the protection of the public interest is incorporated in the legislation. The main responsibility is left with labour and management for the settlement between them of their problems, the negotiation of collective agreements and the administration of such agreements.

The bill will seek to establish an orderly procedure to be observed in the solution and settlement of industrial disputes and it will make available conciliation services to the parties to such disputes. As I stated just now, Bill No. 338 of last session was referred to the industrial relations committee of this house after second reading. That committee held a number of sittings and heard representations from employer and labour organizations and other groups, but it was unable to complete its work on the bill before the prorogation of parliament early in July.

I would point out that the representatives of three out of four of the major labour organizations in Canada who appeared before the committee endorsed the provisions of the bill. I believe I am on sound ground when I say that the employer organizations whose representatives appeared before the committee were reasonably satisfied with the provisions of the bill, although they submitted a number of additional provisions for the consideration of the committee for incorporation in the legislation.

Employer and employee representatives have placed great emphasis on the importance of having uniform legislation in effect in labour relations in industry. I think this is sound and reasonable and sensible. Where you have a uniformity of practice and approach to the solution of labour disputes the trouble is kept, in a comparative sense, at the minimum.

In preparation of Bill No. 338 and in the revisions thereof which are embodied in the legislation which I now propose to introduce, there has been consultation with the provincial authorities with a view to presenting legislation which will be adequate, not only in our own sphere of jurisdiction, but appropriate and acceptable as a basis for provincial legislation. Assuming that the legislation which I am going to introduce is enacted by parliament without any substantial changes, there is, I believe, every indication that the legislation will also be acceptable to a considerable number of the provinces.

Nova Scotia passed a new trade union act in the spring of 1947, which was almost identical in its provisions with Bill No. 338 of last session and with the legislation now being brought down. The Manitoba government has within the last few days brought down before the legislature a new labour relations act, the provisions of which are almost identical with the bill I am now introducing. The minister of labour of Ontario announced in February of this year that, following a study of the proposed dominion legislation, the Ontario government, in the interests of uniform and simplified labour laws, had decided to adopt the proposed dominion legislation. I understand that the province of New Brunswick is studying the dominion legislation before bringing down its own labour legislation. The British Columbia legislation is largely the same as ours with some slight differences. I think it can be fairly said that fundamentally the legislation in existence in Alberta at the moment follows along the same line.

I think it is clearly understood by members of the house that in drafting legislation in the various provinces and the dominion there is bound to be a difference in the language used. In Quebec they always speak of arbitration in referring to what we call conciliation. It is natural that in the provinces of Canada, and I am now speaking of the industrial provinces, there is bound to be some differences in minor matters.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Not Prince Edward Island.

Mr. MITCHELL: I said I was referring to the industrial provinces. As the hon. member for Calgary West understands, there is bound to be some difference in the language used when lawyers in different parts of Canada go to work on the same subject, and I do not say that in any spirit of criticism.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I regard it as a compliment.

Mr. MITCHELL: It is a compliment, and I think that is just as it should be. I do not think the Creator ever intended that we should all be cast in the same mould.

An hon. MEMBER: Amen.

Mr. MacNICOL: Get that down, too.

Mr. MITCHELL: I am looking at my hon. friend. I am a great believer in diversification; I am not one of those who believe in centralization. We have only to cast our mind's eye over the world at the moment to see the power for destruction that exists in nations where you have a highly centralized form of government.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MITCHELL: I am glad to hear my Conservative friends and my good socialist friends applaud that sentiment. That is elementary and fundamental. When you look back to the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act of 1907 you will see that there has been an evolutionary approach to what I believe are sensible and stable labour relations in the dominion, labour relations of the kind and character which, to my way of thinking, compare favourably with those of any country in the world where free institutions exist.

I believe that when you swing too far to the left at one time you are bound to swing to the right the next time. I am one of those who believe that the life of a nation or of civilization moves very much like a pendulum of a clock, swinging backwards and forwards; and to maintain stable labour relations it is far better to go down the middle of the road and to be as fair as is humanly possible both to employer and employee organizations.

My hon. friend the member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is smiling, but he knows what happened in the country to the south of us when the Wagner Act was put on their statute books. Some people thought that it swung too far to the left. They now have the Taft-Hartley law which, in the opinion of some people, is causing a great deal of industrial strife in the United States at the present time. In Australia, where they have a labour government in Queensland, legislation has been passed that swings considerably more to the right than any legislation that exists in the country to the south of us. I do not mention this by way of criticism at all of the people who are charged with responsibility for the administration of affairs in those two parts of the world, because from the very nature of things their legislation must reflect the dominant opinion of the people who sent them to their respective legislatures. Legislators in the United States, Canada and Great Britain, and in New Zealand and Australia naturally all want to be re-elected, so they keep their ear to the ground. The Taft-Hartley law must have been put on the statute book in the United States because conditions existed in that country which the people felt it was necessary to correct, and in Australia somewhat similar conditions must have existed. We too have had our trials and tribulations. That is inevitable when you get two points of view around a council table. If it were not for these honest differences of opinion there would be no employer organizations and no trade unions, and that would be a paradise from the point of view of some people. This House of Commons exists as a deliberative assembly simply because there are different points of view in this country, and I hope I shall never live to see the day when some people, perhaps innocently, would like to see persecution substituted for reason in the affairs of this country. Let us be honest and frank and sensible about the matter.

I leave this thought with the house. There is developing in the world today the strike expressly for political purposes. I am not speaking altogether about the Dominion of Canada, but undoubtedly trade unions are being used as an instrument for the destruction of institutions similar to those under which we live. But if we in this dominion travel down the middle of the road, take the moderate course in the establishment and maintenance of labour relations, we shall be making a great contribution to the life of our time. I was taught that you should never pass a law if you cannot enforce it, and we have seen the truth of that in labour relations not only in this country but in other parts of the world. Fundamentally labour relations are based on character, character on the part of the employer organizations and character on the part of the employee organizations. Not all the angels are on the one side. Each has its fair share. I was in the labour movement and I know that we had our fair share of both kinds of human beings. I believe, however, that if we maintain the course on which we have set out we can continue to enjoy comparative industrial harmony in this country. Look the world over and compare conditions with what we have in Canada today. In this country we have only one strike now in progress, and that involves comparatively few people. What other country in the world can say that? It is in my judgment a reflection of the common sense exemplified by both parties in the industrial and trade union life of this country.

I hope that this bill will move with expedition to the industrial relations committee, as suggested by the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Homuth).

Mr. A. L. SMITH (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, we on this side are in favour of the resolution, treating it as a matter of principle. What we shall say when we see the bill, I do not know. We are told that there are some amendments—we do not know what they are—of the bill that we had last year. But I think I might in a sentence or two affirm two or three principles on the highlights of labour relations in which I believe very firmly, and in large measure I shall speak in agreement with the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mitchell).

Across the world I think that in some places mistakes are being made by having too much legislation on labour and industry matters rather than too little. Let me put it in another way. We believe here in collective bargaining. We believe in collective bargaining between industry and strong unions. To say anything else would be a negation of the word "bargaining", because there can be no bargaining in the proper sense of that word if all the strength be on one side of the table. So again I repeat that our principle is that of collective bargaining, but with strong unions. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I must immediately say that I deprecate—I do not know how strongly I can put it—something that has taken place in the province of Prince Edward Island recently where the most backward and reactionary legislation was passed. Talk about the Taft-Hartley act; it is not even to be compared with what they have done in that island on the east coast.

I turn from that to examine briefly one or two principles, because I am anxious to affirm where we stand. There is a word used in labour relations called the "check-off". I want to say that we are strongly in favour of the check-off, and that if it cannot be arranged by collective bargaining I go so far as to say that it should be done by legislation.

The reason the word "check-off"—and it is still criticized and opposed by some very reactionary industrialists, although not many—is disliked by some of our people is the sound of it. It is a harsh-sounding word. It sounds almost Russian. In these days things Russian are not very popular in this country; but to my mind it is just as simple as this. We will say, Mr. Speaker, that I owed you $10 and that you owed the Minister of Labour $10. Then, sir, we will say that you assigned the $10 that I owed you to the minister. In every province of Canada the minister could sue me directly for the money. It is true that perhaps you would need a written notice to sue me, but it could be done. Therefore the employee in an industrial concern is doing nothing more than assigning a portion of his wages to a third party, that party being a union. All this fuss about the opposition to the check-off is, to me, one of the least justified arguments that I know of, because the labour man can do it, anyway, in my opinion, and he can also enforce it. Of course I am referring to the voluntary revocable check-off.

Let me go a step farther. In this case I am going to discuss two or three other things which are agitating people today. One is union security. You cannot just discuss union security; there are so many kinds of it. We have one or two words naming something, and we might be talking about different things and taking our meanings from these words. I am going to say something about strikes. I hope that this parliament will never take from labour its right to strike, but I add this, that some strikes are legal and some are illegal. Never shall we take from any labour organization which is operating under rules—and they are comparatively simple—and has put itself legally in a position of a right to strike, its right to strike; but I think we should, and I hope we shall by legislation outlaw illegal strikes, because we are a country of law-abiding people and we have lived by and have been guided by law.

I want to say another word, and that will be all on this occasion. I refer now to the sympathetic strike. I hope that this parliament and every legislature in Canada will do everything within their powers to outlaw the sympathetic strike. Why? I say that for this reason. You cannot say today that you are in favour of collective bargaining logically and at the same time say that you are in favour of a sympathetic strike. Why? In the sympathetic strike there is no problem between employer and employee. They have no quarrel with one another. Therefore the sympathetic strike becomes what? Not a strike against an employer, but of necessity a strike against the public of Canada, and I hope I will never admit the right of any union the right to do that.

One word more. May I agree with the minister that in other places—and they are not very far away—they have gone too far in trying to legislate certain things. I am not going to discuss them in detail. Perhaps it would not even be in good taste to do so. I have tried to enumerate two or three principles which I trust will be carried out in this bill which we have not yet seen, and we will reserve our right to discuss the bill more in detail on second reading.

[Mr. Smith (Calgary West).]

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I thought that perhaps the resolution would pass without discussion, and I did not come prepared to discuss the measure at this stage. I should like, however, to draw the attention of the house to the fact that labour legislation is a live issue today in this country and in the neighbouring country to the south. Generally the tendency in current labour legislation is toward restrictions on organized labour. That is significant, because until recently there has been very little labour legislation in Canada. As I see it, the reason for that was that labour was weak and the employers were strong, and those who were making the laws were not legislating in the interests of labour. That is the situation, and anyone who cares may look up the facts and verify them for himself.

I have been a trade unionist now for almost thirty-eight years. During the whole of that period I have been a member of an organization which had what we called a closed shop. We did not have the check-off as I very well know. Since I was the only paid official of my trade union for some time, I had to go around and see that the members paid their dues. However, if they did not pay their dues we had recourse to the closed shop clause to see that they did. Personally I am in favour of a closed shop or a union shop, whichever term you wish to use, because I do not consider that any employee has any right to wages and conditions which he will not help to maintain. That is not only a policy or the principle that we accept in the trade union movement; it is the principle that we accept in our national and municipal affairs. One may be opposed to paying taxes, but the state says you will pay the taxes whether you are opposed to it or not. Trade union dues are merely a tax that the trade unionist or the employee pays to his trade union for the protection the trade union gives him in maintaining better wages and better working conditions. I could give a striking example of what an employer whom I know thought about the matter and what he thought of the employee who would not pay his union dues.

In regard to this proposed legislation, I am receiving, as I suppose other members of parliament are receiving from chambers of commerce and other employer organizations, resolutions which, if heed were given them, would make of this government, as far at least as organized labour is concerned, a policeman.

One of their proposals is that strike votes must be supervised by the government. Surely trade unionists, members of organized labour, citizens of Canada, should be allowed to decide their own affairs without any supervision from the government, any more than a private corporation should have the votes of its shareholders supervised by the government. As far as I am concerned, I shall oppose any government supervision of strike votes, or any other kind of votes, so long as the unions themselves can demonstrate that they have control of their union affairs.

There are other questions to which I would like to refer, but I do not think we should have two debates, particularly when the question is to go to the industrial relations committee, where there will be an opportunity to discuss it in detail. However, as regards employers in this country who have opposed labour's every attempt to organize, and anyone who questions that, I would ask him to read the majority report in the labour inquiry of 1943, under the chairmanship of Mr. Justice McTague, the other member of the commission being, I believe, the late Senator Bench.

Mr. MITCHELL: There was another member too.

Mr. MacINNIS: Let hon. members read what that commission said in regard to employers in this country and their attitude toward organized labour. Indeed, the situation until recently has been that only tough men at the head of labour organizations could get recognition at all for their organizations. If there are conditions in organized labour that we do not like, the blame rests with those who would not deal fairly with moderate people in the organized labour movement.

I would suggest to such people that if they expect co-operation they will have to treat those with whom they would co-operate in such a way as to gain their respect.

I shall reserve any further comment until the second reading of the bill, or perhaps until it comes before the industrial relations committee.

Mr. CLARENCE GILLIS (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Labour is merely introducing a resolution to enable him to bring down a bill which has for its purpose the establishing of a national labour code, and I am quite satisfied with that. I will not argue the merits or the demerits of the bill because I have not seen it. I am a member of the industrial relations committee and I shall examine the bill when it comes before the committee in the light of the proposals that have already been made by the Canadian Congress of Labour.

In my opinion, the Canadian Congress of Labour is a responsible body and it is the legislative centre of the industrial workers of Canada. They have drafted what in their opinion is an adequate measure designed to bring about what the purpose of the present resolution has in view, a national labour code. I do not know what the minister's bill is, but I hope that he and his department have given some study to the proposals made by the Canadian Congress of Labour, because I have read them carefully and I agree with them 100 per cent.

I hope we shall not repeat the performance of last year when we considered Bill No. 338. We sat in the committee a long time and wrangled over it, and I hope the legal minds in the Department of Labour have clarified one point, namely whether we have the right as a parliament to enact a national labour code under the present British North America Act. I hope the minister will be able to tell the committee when it meets whether we can do that, because there is one thing of which I am convinced and of which I think the minister by this time should be convinced, namely, that a national labour code which would embrace the basic industries of the country is absolutely necessary. That was proved to him in the packinghouse workers strike, which occurred in an industry which is established in every province.

You find yourself with a strike on your hands, with meat tied up right across Canada, and you find the federal government powerless to intervene in that strike. You find yourself in the position where the provinces could not get together and come to any sort of uniform understanding.

If a national code is to be effective, then the packinghouse industry should be designated as a national industry and brought under the code, and so should steel. Steel is basic to the economy of the country because it ramifies into every province, and unless these national basic industries are brought under the code it leaves the federal government in the position where, if a general strike takes place in any of these industries, all that the national government can do is to sit back and watch nine little Canadas all jealous of their own prerogatives, refusing to get together, unable to do anything about the matter as a national question, the country being paralysed because there is no legislation to handle the matter. Coal was in that position until the establishment of the national coal board. I believe that under that particular board the federal government has some jurisdiction in the fuel industry.

In the final analysis, labour relations are human relations and there will be difficulties because all legislation cannot be hard and fast. There must be some administrative latitude, some give and take. I have some definite opinions on some of the matters touched upon tonight, and I would be wasting my time and the time of the house if I went into them, because the place where that can properly be done is when the bill is brought down and I have been able to examine it and to discuss it clause by clause with a view to developing the proper mechanics.

One thing I would ask the minister to do when the committee sits is to answer the question whether we have jurisdiction under the British North America Act to enact a national labour code, and, second, whether we are prepared to designate basic national industries running from coast to coast as national industries that can be brought under the code, so that the minister may not be faced with a crisis some time in the future where there is a general strike in one of the industries and he is powerless to do anything about it.

Mr. E. G. HANSELL (Macleod): I do not intend to take much time at this late hour, Mr. Speaker. After all, we are merely in the resolution stage of this bill. However, I feel that I should like to pay some little tribute to the work of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mitchell). I believe that he is honestly trying to do a good job, under the circumstances, for the labouring men. Of course I know that in the past there has been some criticism of his administration by labour unions and certain labour men. I do not suppose that he or his department is perfect, because no human being is perfect. I am inclined to think that, if there has been any criticism, it has perhaps sprung from the extreme agitator who has been the chief offender in this respect and perhaps he could not be satisfied anyway.

As the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) has said, the bill is not before us and we cannot therefore prejudge the entire nature of the bill. But I am sure that we favour any labour legislation which will help to bring labour and management together on a friendly basis, where labour will have confidence that management is interested in it and where management will have confidence that labour is interested in industry. That has not always been the case, but I believe it could be. I recall being invited to a meeting on one occasion where labour and management were both to be present. I walked into the meeting and discovered that the workers were in one room while the management was in another room. I felt that they were not getting together at all. Prior to the meeting, I felt that both of them were going into this meeting perhaps with a chip on their shoulders; and, as far as I could see, the type of the meeting did not call for any chips at all. When they got together, someone came out and said, "All right, boys; we are ready to start." When they got together labour was on one side of the room and management was on the other side, looking at one another. I was asked to say a few words, and I spoke my mind. I said, "Why do you gentlemen not mix up a little bit? Why do you men over here not sit with your bosses and why do you bosses not sit over here with your men?" They sort of laughed a little bit, and I think I helped in relieving the tension. I do not believe that sort of thing is necessary. I believe that we can have some type of legislation which will break down that difference between the two.

I recall going into another factory, a small one, where the manager took me around and introduced me to some of his employees and some of his foremen. Then he left me saying, "You talk with these men." I talked with them and found that there was a friendly relationship between the management of the factory and the employees. I found that they had had little trouble in the past having regard to their relationship one with another. I often think that if I were an industrialist—and I know that I shall never be one—I would do my best to make my employees contented. Perhaps I might get a lust for that extra million; I do not know. But I feel that if I were an industrialist, after taking a fair profit and allowing for some little expansion here and there, I would call my employees together and divide my profits with them. That is the way I feel about the matter. I believe that management can do a good deal with respect to bringing about a better relationship between labour and management.

I agree with the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) when he said that he hoped that no legislation would ever be brought down that would take away the right of labour to strike. I agree with that, because, after all, under the most extenuating circumstances, sometimes that is the only weapon labour has left in its hands to use. I believe there is something more fundamental than that, however—perhaps this is not altogether the responsibility of the Department of Labour; I think it is a joint responsibility of the entire government—and that is to bring about conditions in the country which will give no cause for the necessity of strikes. Perhaps some will think that in that statement I am looking forward to the millennium. It might be a good thing if we could try to do so. But in a country of this kind with such vast natural potential wealth, I believe that conditions can be such that we shall have a satisfied management and contented labour. I believe that can be done, and anything that will help to bring about that situation or help to bring management and labour together so that the welfare of one is recognized to be the welfare of the other, is something that I am sure we are all in favour of.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. MITCHELL thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 195, to provide for the investigation, conciliation and settlement of industrial disputes.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall said bill be read a second time?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Now.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Next sitting.

Mr. MacNICOL: Was it not the intention of the minister to have the bill sent to the industrial relations committee?

Mr. MITCHELL: I am, of course, in the hands of the house. The bill cannot be given second reading tonight without unanimous consent.

Mr. MacINNIS: I think we should see the bill before it gets second reading.

Mr. SPEAKER: Next sitting of the house.

WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCES

PROVISION FOR NEGLECTED OR DEPENDENT CHILDREN, INCREASED PERMISSIBLE INCOMES, ETC.

Hon. MILTON F. GREGG (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act to extend the provisions thereof to a neglected child or children of a deceased veteran and to a veteran with a dependent child or children in special circumstances; to allow for increased permissible incomes and to provide supplementary allowances. Provision is also made to increase the annual salary for members of the war veterans' allowance board.

Mr. KNOWLES: Is the minister not going to make a statement at this stage?

Mr. GREGG: I am prepared to make a statement, but there will be plenty of opportunity on second reading, in the committee on veterans affairs and in committee of the whole. If the house sees fit to adopt this resolution tonight and move the legislation forward I can assure my hon. friend that all the material will be made available as the legislation goes through the various stages.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion? Carried.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings-Peterborough): Before the resolution carries, I would ask the minister if he would not make at least some statement now. We have seen what happened in connection with the bill to amend the Pension Act, and the government cannot bring forward any excuse for rush now. I for one would ask the minister to make a statement. If he is not prepared to do so I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to call it eleven o'clock, because I should like to speak on the resolution.

Mr. GREGG: I am prepared to make a statement, but time does not permit this evening. As the hon. member will understand, this resolution does not give hon. members the details of the bill. If the resolution passes and the bill is given first reading copies of the bill will be made available, and perhaps then it will be more appropriate to make fuller explanation.

Mr. CASE: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion? Carried.

Mr. CASE: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: I have put the motion and declared it carried twice.

Mr. CASE: I was on my feet when you put the motion, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is not enough for the hon. member to be on his feet; he must attract the attention of the Speaker. I put the question to the house and asked if it was the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion. No one objected, so I called it carried, and I suggest that the hon. member resume his seat.

Mr. CASE: I rose to say—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

Mr. CASE: Having lost the opportunity to have the minister make a statement while the Speaker was in the chair I now request him to make a statement on the resolution. Before the bill is introduced I should like to know what is the objective of the government, and then we can look at the bill later on.

Mr. GREGG: The resolution precedes the introduction of a bill to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act, with which I think all hon. members are quite familiar. In the main it is the purpose of the bill to improve the amounts payable to the beneficiaries under that legislation. Hon. members will realize that practically all those beneficiaries are veterans of world war I. In recent years my department and this house have quite properly given a great deal of attention by way of legislation to the new veterans of world war II. The old veteran has not been forgotten with respect to pensions and other matters, but there is a desire here to improve the condition of those who are, in the main, unemployable.

Since this legislation was first introduced in 1930 its objective has been to give the federal authority the right to provide assistance to those veterans who fought in the first war, and who are to some extent unemployable. In the main this bill is designed to increase the amounts payable to them, and to deal with other subsidiary matters indicated in the resolution.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. GREGG thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 196, to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act, 1946.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Tomorrow we would like to proceed with the third reading of Bill No. 7, to provide assistance to the gold mining industry, which was given second reading today; then with the second reading of the bill concerning industrial relations, which has just been read the first time; with the second reading of the bill to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act, which has just been read the first time, and then with the resolution on the order paper to establish a joint committee of both houses of parliament on human rights. In order to meet the desire expressed that the house have a day fixed for a debate on external affairs, we would like to go into committee of supply and call the Department of External Affairs and perhaps one other department. Then we would ask that the items stand, and fix an item in external affairs for consideration by the house on Monday.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, April 7, 1948

The house met at three o'clock.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MCIVOR—REFERENCE TO ATTENDANCE IN GALLERIES BEFORE PRAYERS

Mr. DANIEL McIVOR (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, when I saw part of the press gallery and some of the seats in the members' gallery occupied before prayers, I was going to congratulate you on your progress, as their attendance is in keeping with the prayer we pray every day, that whosoever will may come. I think the press gallery and the general public will enjoy the prayers some day in the future.

FREIGHT RATES

INCREASES ORDERED BY TRANSPORT BOARD—PROPOSED INVESTIGATION OF RATE STRUCTURE OF RAILWAYS UNDER JURISDICTION OF PARLIAMENT

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada, by order No. 70425 of March 30, 1948, authorized the member railway companies of the Railway Association of Canada to make a general advance in freight rates of 21 per cent with certain exceptions, and on coal and coke a flat increase of 25 cents per ton.

The railway companies were authorized to publish and file tariff schedules, in accordance with the board's findings, on not less than three days' notice.

The board's authorization for increased rates does not include the following:—

1. Rates on grain and grain products from all points on all lines of railway west of Fort William to Fort William, Port Arthur and Armstrong.

2. Rates on grain and grain products from all prairie points on all lines of railway to Vancouver, Prince Rupert and other British Columbia coast ports for export.

3. Rates on grain and grain products for domestic consumption between points in western Canada and rates on feed grain published in C.F.A. tariff C.T.C. 154.

4. Joint international rates between Canada and the United States of America (except coal and coke, board order No. 70462) which were increased as a result of decisions of the interstate commerce commission in ex parte 148, 162 and 166.

5. Rates between United States points on traffic passing through Canada.

6. Export and import rates to and from Canadian ports, which are at present on a parity with rates to or from United States ports.

7. Agreed charges.

8. Demurrage and penalty charges.

9. Interswitching rates covered by the board's general order No. 252, dated October 26, 1918.

The government has reviewed the petition from the transportation commission of the maritime board of trade, representing inter alia the governments of the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island and representations made on behalf of the governments of the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia and other interested persons and organizations, to vary order No. 70425 of the board of transport commissioners by providing that tariff schedules published and filed under the provisions of this order be not effective until at least thirty days from the date thereof.

After careful consideration of these representations, and, without prejudice to any appeal, the government has decided that it should not interfere with the effective date of the board's order.

The government has taken into consideration the fact that no general investigation of freight rates has been made in Canada since that conducted in 1925 by the board of railway commissioners. In the circumstances, the government has decided it would be in the public interest to have the board of transport commissioners make a thorough investigation of the rate structure of railways and railway companies which are under the jurisdiction of parliament, with a view to the establishment of a fair and reasonable rate structure which will, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, be equal in its application to all persons and localities so as to permit the freest possible exchange of commodities between the various provinces and territories of Canada and the extension of Canadian trade, both foreign and domestic, having due regard to the needs of agriculture and other basic industries. This investigation will be subject, of course, to the statutory provisions affecting freight rates known as the Maritime Freight Rates Act and the Crowsnest Pass agreement.

I now table orders in council P.C. 1486 and P.C. 1487 of today's date, giving effect to the decisions of the government.

Mr. REID: I should like to ask the minister a question on the statement he has just made. In view of the fact that instructions, almost identical with those previously given, have been given by the government to the board of transport commissioners to investigate freight rates, will the minister review the instructions given to see that the board has power to remove the mountain differential in British Columbia? I ask this question because I think these are the very words in the instructions given by governments in the past, and the board of transport commissioners has said that it has no power to equalize rates.

Mr. CHEVRIER: That is the object of this investigation.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: And nothing will come of it.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The object of the investigation is to make a thorough study of the inequalities which may exist in the various regions across Canada.

Mr. COLDWELL: May I ask the minister a supplementary question? In the meantime I suppose the rates go into effect?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Yes.

Mr. COLDWELL: And the investigation may take as long as the investigation of last year. The rate structure of the railways is a complicated affair and the investigation may take a year or two.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Ten years.

Mr. COLDWELL: In the meantime the people of Canada are to be penalized by these excessive rates.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I cannot tell the hon. gentleman how long the investigation will take. It may take a year, or it may take two years. That will depend upon the dispatch with which the board can get across the country.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): Have the findings of the board of transport commissioners been printed? If so, will copies be placed in the hands of hon. members? I myself have not yet received a copy.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. CHEVRIER: The judgment consists of some 162 pages—

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): It is important enough to have printed and placed in our hands, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The hon. gentleman did not give me time to complete my reply. If he had he would have learned that I was about to say that the order is a simple matter to get out; the judgment consists of some 160 pages or more, which cannot be put out overnight, but if it is the wish of the house I shall see to it that hon. members get copies of it.

Mr. ABBOTT: It was distributed.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: In view of the decision will the ceiling be taken off farm prices so that western Canada will not be further penalized? I am asking for an answer.

Mr. HOMUTH: Why don't you move over to this side of the house?

Mr. KNOWLES: Where do you stand?

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Because I am too useful a member to sit over in that corner. If the minister cannot answer my question, what member of the government can?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. Hon. members will realize that there is nothing before the house and therefore no debate can take place. If hon. members have some additional questions to ask I would suggest that they wait until the orders of the day are called.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, the minister said that the report of the board of transport commissioners would be printed if hon. members wanted it. It is my wish that it be printed, and I think it is the wish of all hon. members.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I have just suggested to hon. members that if they have more questions to put to the minister they had better wait until the orders of the day are called.

Mr. GRAYDON: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, it has long been the wish of hon. members on this side of the house that latitude commensurate with the latitude which is given and often taken by the ministry in making long statements, which of course are not debatable, should be given to hon. members on this side. If we wait until we reach another part of the proceedings other matters sometimes intervene and the whole trend and thread of the discussion is lost. I think Your Honour would be quite right in allowing the same latitude that is given to the government and I hope you will continue to do so.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JAENICKE: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Transport. Will the minister consider the appointment of a royal commission or some tribunal other than the board of transport commissioners for the investigation of the Canadian freight rates structure which he announced this afternoon?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. HOMUTH: What nonsense!

Mr. CHEVRIER: If my hon. friend will look at the Railway Act I believe he will find in a pertinent section of that act that freight rates are regulated by the board and that in order to set up a royal commission parliament would have to amend that act. So the answer is no.

Mr. REID: I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport in the light of the announcement he has made today. Can he give the house any assurance that the instructions to the board to investigate freight rates with a view to establishing a structure that will be just and reasonable will enable the board to remove the mountain differential if evidence is given showing that it should be removed?

Mr. CHEVRIER: The only answer I can give to my hon. friend is that under the terms of reference as set out in the order in council and the powers which the board already have under the act to equalize rates, if in their investigation the board find that there should be an equalization I take it that they will so order.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport in connection with his announcement that the government does not intend to postpone or interfere in any way with the increase in freight rates ordered by the board. Were representations made by several of the provinces to the government asking the government to intervene? If so, what provinces, and will he lay on the table the representations made by the several provinces?

Mr. CHEVRIER: If the hon. gentleman had listened to the statement which was made—

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I listened.

Mr. CHEVRIER: —he would have noticed that representations were made by each of the provinces. If the hon. gentleman wants the representations, which were very short, laid on the table I have no objection.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I should like to ask a supplementary question. Did Ontario and Quebec make any representations?

Mr. HOMUTH: Why do you worry about those provinces?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am not aware of any.

HOCKEY

WELCOME TO R.C.A.F. FLYERS, WINNERS OF OLYMPIC CHAMPIONSHIP, ON THEIR RETURN

Hon. BROOKE CLAXTON (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, may I turn now to a subject on which, unlike the last, I believe there will be complete unanimity in all parts of the house? All hon. members will, I am sure, join me in extending a hearty welcome to the R.C.A.F. flyers on their return home after winning the Olympic championship at hockey. It is often forgotten that Canada did not win at hockey at the last winter games played in 1936. Now the Royal Canadian Air Force team has re-established Canada's proper supremacy in her native sport.

In addition to winning the championship in Switzerland without losing a game, the hockey team, at the invitation of other countries, visited France, Belgium, The Netherlands, Sweden and Czechoslovakia, as well as England and Scotland. They were good ambassadors.

Reports received from abroad show that everywhere, whether on the rink or off, they conducted themselves in the best traditions of Canadian sportsmanship and of the armed forces of Canada. They were a credit to themselves, to their service and to their country.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PRECEDENCE OF GOVERNMENT ORDERS

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs, for the Prime Minister) moved:

That, notwithstanding any other order passed by the house in relation thereto, on and after Wednesday, the 7th of April and every day thereafter until otherwise ordered during the present session, government notices of motions and government orders shall have precedence over all other business except the introduction of bills, questions by members and notices of motions for the production of papers, and from 8 to 9 p.m. on Fridays, private bills.

Mr. GORDON GRAYDON (Peel): I desire to say a word on this motion of the Prime Minister which has been moved by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is generally understood, and I think generally accepted in all corners of the house, that normally and naturally a certain right of way should be given to the government in connection with urgent business which it desires to bring before parliament. On that point therefore no grave exception will be taken to the general principle. On the other hand, the situation here is quite different, because the government, I submit, should not take the attitude of hogging procedure, if I may use that expression, with respect to the introduction and discussion of legislation at the expense of private members on all sides of the house. There must be some give and take on both sides. I would not want to see the order paper cluttered up with private members' resolutions at various stages of the session at the expense of urgent government legislation which all of us wish to have passed. Surely, however, there is some happy medium which parliament might adopt. I must confess that I cannot see how the government at this stage of the session can possibly ask parliament to pass a resolution in the precise terms of the motion now before us.

There are thirty-five private members' notices of motions on the order paper. Many of these are of very great importance. In addition there are public bills awaiting consideration. I think the government is asking too much of parliament when it seeks to have this resolution carried in a form which private members on all sides of the house find it impossible to accept.

I wish to make it perfectly clear that any move we make with reference to this resolution is not for the purpose of delaying government business, because we are not asking for very much in what we now seek. I hear an interruption. You people over there would have us get nothing, I suppose, but thank goodness there are members here who want us to get a fair deal.

Mr. MacKINNON: The interruption came from that side.

Mr. GRAYDON: I do not care where it came from. You people will have to take the same criticism because I will criticize fairly wherever criticism is called for.

My suggestion on behalf of the official opposition is this. We are prepared to allow the government to pass this resolution if they will reduce the period to two weeks, because it is not fair to ask parliament to give the government carte blanche, a blank cheque for the whole session, thereby denying private members the right to bring forward important matters from time to time.

[Mr. Graydon.]

If this motion is adopted it will be following a precedent which has been adhered to not only during the war but in sessions since the war. It is about time the government realized that they are not the only ones in the House of Commons who have been sent here by the people of the country.

I submit that the suggestion I offer is a fair and a just one, namely that we change the date mentioned in this resolution, April 7, to two weeks thereafter. Then, if government business demands a further extension, we shall be prepared to consider it, though I believe that by the time the two weeks have elapsed, enough of urgent government business ought to have been passed, so we should at least give private members something of a break. They are entitled to it, and I am speaking on their behalf at the moment. I ask the government to accept this proposal.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the criticism made this afternoon by the acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Graydon). I am not sure whether his suggestion to the government is of sufficient advantage or offers sufficient latitude to private members. As he pointed out, there are thirty-five private members' resolutions on the order paper, some of them relating to very important topics of great interest to the country at large. I agree with him that while we were willing to forgo many of the rights and privileges of private members during the war, because of the necessities of that period, we do not feel that we should forgo those rights and privileges now that the war is over.

As a matter of fact, all that this resolution proposed by the Prime Minister allots is the hour from 8 to 9 on Friday evenings, and for private bills only. May I point out that private bills are measures that are of interest to private individuals or to private corporations. They are bills which come before this house, moved by private members, asking for special privileges, often for an individual, as in the case of divorce, or for small groups, associations or corporations. On the other hand, there are a number of public bills on the order paper, and they have to do with matters which are of paramount interest to the public of Canada. True, they are sponsored by private members, but when we look at them we realize how important they are. One or two may be rather embarrassing to the government and may not meet with the approval of some members of the house, but whether they are embarrassing or not, whether we agree with them or not, they are of public importance and should be given precedence over bills which relate merely to individuals or to private groups of people. I say whether we agree with them or not, and there are at least two of these bills with which I am in disagreement; nevertheless they are of sufficient importance to warrant their being discussed and decided by the house.

Let us look for a moment at these bills. There is an act to amend the criminal code, moved by the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. LaCroix). There is an act to amend the Dairy Industry Act, which is a measure dealing with the sale of oleomargarine,—

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Shame.

Mr. COLDWELL: —something which is important to the country. Whether my hon. friend the member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank) and I agree with it or not, it should be discussed and decided by the house.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Hear, hear.

Mr. COLDWELL: That is where it should be decided. Then there is an act to amend the Supreme Court Act, which deals with appeals to the privy council, and an act to amend the Railway Act, which deals with a very large group of pensioners of one of the railways.

These are public bills the subject matters of which are of widespread interest. Why should private bills be given preference over public bills of such importance?

I am going to move in amendment:

That all the words after the words "production of papers," in the sixth line of the motion, be deleted, and the following be substituted therefor:

"and from 8 to 9 p.m. on Tuesdays and Fridays, public and private bills, the former having precedence."

From 8 to 9 p.m. on Tuesdays and Fridays, restoring the two hours that are given to bills introduced into this house by private members, public bills having a preference over private bills—the opposite of the motion standing in the name of the Prime Minister and now before the house. I believe the house should support such an amendment.

May I say this before I take my seat. We are not asking for the restoration of all private members' days at this stage of the session, but we do think that the minimum we should ask for is what my amendment to the motion now proposes.

Mr. JAMES SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): I should like to say a few words on this subject, Mr. Speaker, speaking not as a nominal supporter of the government but as a private member and a backbencher.

We have heard from the leader of the government and leaders of the opposition groups. We as backbenchers may be comparatively insignificant and unimportant as individuals when compared with these leaders, but the rights we have as members of parliament are extremely important and significant, and they have never been more so than they are today. Chief amongst those is a fair allocation to private members of the time of parliament as set forth in standing order 15(3), which says that on Monday, Wednesday, and Thursday for the first four weeks of the session the business of private members shall have precedence over government business. That clearly shows that the intent of our constitution is not that this parliament should be the creature of the government, and not that the time of this parliament should be the monopoly of the government.

It is quiet true that in some countries—Russia for example—the government has the monopoly of government business, with no opposition. On the other extreme, in the United States, the executive branch of the government has no right to initiate legislation. All legislation is sponsored by private members, if they can be so called, members of congress or the senate. Here under the British system I think we have a middle course, very wisely, in that the government, being the responsible authority in the country, has certain rights in parliament. But so has every backbencher, no matter how distant or remote his riding may be. If we are limited to those subjects which the government cares to bring forward, then we are in this position: we can only support or oppose. Anything which the government does not want to bring before parliament, anything which it ignores, overlooks, or thinks to be unimportant, no matter what our constituents may think, we of course cannot discuss.

In wartime we gladly gave up certain rights we had as private members, but once the war was over we expected that they would be restored. I looked over the orders of the day for the third session after the last war, in 1921; it is three years now since the end of the second world war. In 1921 the speech from the throne was given the usual precedence over all other business and the debate ended on March 3. March 4 was private members' day. At 3.15 on March 4, without any question or hesitation, a private member from Edmonton started to discuss his resolution. That is the way things went during that session. I looked up the record after the second world war, and found it most interesting. In 1946 the session began on March 15. On April 3, less than three weeks after the beginning of the session, we were embarked on private members' day, with resolutions and bills. There were five bills and six resolutions debated that session. Three of them came to a vote. In 1947 the session began on January 31. This time it was not until April 4, two months later, that private members had an opportunity to discuss public bills and resolutions. At that time seven bills and six resolutions were debated. Three were voted upon.

Now in 1948, when we are three years away from the war, after four months of sitting, a motion is proposed the effect of which is to cut off completely any hope of private members' bills or resolutions coming up for debate.

The government offers the argument—the Prime Minister offered it to me two years ago when I objected to being cut off when the resolution was reached at that time—that ample opportunity is afforded to private members to discuss whatever they wish on the speech from the throne, on the budget or on going into supply. Those opportunities are there, it is true. But what happens in those debates is that every member speaks on a different subject. We are like an army riding off in all directions. Our efforts are dissipated and the government carries on with its own program. If we had our private members' days on which to debate specific problems, then the attention of all members would be fixed on those problems, and bills and resolutions introduced by private members are voted upon. Then the government and the people of the country would know what parliament's feeling is on these matters.

The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) has mentioned the fact that these public bills—and naturally I am greatly interested in one of them, the oleomargarine bill—are not unimportant or trivial. Certainly the first bill, with regard to the outlawing of the communist party, is a subject of great concern across this country. It is quite true that we had a debate on it in parliament lasting one day and leading nowhere. In this country there are a great many people who think that the communist party should be outlawed. There are also a great many people who are not communists but who believe it should not be outlawed. All these people are looking to this parliament for specific direction on that matter—a direction which cannot be avoided by having a three-hour afternoon's blowoff on the subject of communism.

The next thing under public bills and orders is the bill in respect to oleomargarine. The members from Montreal and Quebec tell me that their mail today consists mostly of letters from people in the lower income groups, protesting first of all against the high price of butter, and secondly—

[Mr. Sinclair.]

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I do not think I can permit the hon. member to discuss public and private bills which are on the order paper. Discussion should be relevant to the motion before the house.

Mr. SINCLAIR: It is true that I am a backbencher and not a leader of an opposition group. But as the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar has just finished discussing these bills in excellent style, I think I should have an opportunity of commenting in the same brief way.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I must say to the hon. gentleman that I am trying to treat all hon. members in the same way, whether they are backbenchers or not. I would ask the hon. member to resume his seat. I think it is my duty to call the attention of hon. members to the fact that I will not permit him to discuss oleomargarine or any private or public bills on the order paper. Discussion should be relevant to the motion which is before the house.

Mr. SINCLAIR: I will bow to your ruling, Mr. Speaker, and just conclude by saying that certainly in the estimation of the people of this country none of these four bills is trivial or unimportant. I agree with the leader of the opposition when he says that there is no doubt in the minds of the citizens of this country that these bills are infinitely more important than a divorce bill or a bill to increase the capital of some little insurance company. I cannot agree with the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, however, that simply devoting two hours a week, one on Tuesday and one on Friday evening to these public bills is sufficient, because in the case of Bill No. 4, for instance, which I cannot discuss, the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank) is perfectly capable of talking it out in the time allotted.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: And he intends to do so.

Mr. SINCLAIR: What we need is a chance to revert, as private members, to a full day's discussion in accordance with standing order 15(3) of measures of public importance which we as members of parliament have brought before parliament. I cannot vote for the amendment moved by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, but I shall oppose the motion moved by the Acting Prime Minister.

Mr. E. D. FULTON (Kamloops): May I ask a question having to do with the amendment just moved by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar? I observe that this motion makes no mention of notices of motion which may be moved by private members. I wonder whether I am right in my understanding that no time would be given to such notices of motion, or whether he or any member of his party would be willing to add that to the amendment which he has moved?

Mr. COLDWELL: May I just answer that question, Mr. Speaker? We should be quite willing to add that, but we thought we were asking for the minimum. May I just say to the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. Sinclair) that private and public bills may be discussed only on Tuesdays and Fridays, under the standing order.

Mr. JEAN LESAGE (Montmagny-L'Islet): May I as a backbencher say that I am in agreement generally with what the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) has said, and that I would be in favour of his amendment if it provided a means of giving justice to the people who have come here with private bills. If private bills could come before public bills, I would be in favour of his amendment.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): If this house adopts this motion, then any question of the supremacy of parliament can be forgotten for the present session. We passed a motion similar to this last December, under which parliament abdicated all its rights, functions and privileges to the executive, who have been ruling the country over the head of parliament since the day this house met in December. As I have said on other occasions, the freedom and liberty of the subject have been surrendered to outside boards and controls so that people are being fined and imprisoned against all the laws which should apply in this country.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I would ask hon. members to be silent, because it is very difficult to hear the hon. gentleman who has the floor. A great deal has been said about the privileges of backbenchers, but I believe freedom of speech should apply to the occupants of the front benches as well.

Mr. CHURCH: As I have said previously, Mr. Speaker, in difficult days such as these I do not object to giving the government of the day reasonable powers, but the private members of parliament are forgotten entirely. We are the forgotten link in parliamentary government in this country, and this applies to those on the government benches as well as those in all other parties in this house. When the private member ceases to function, all parliamentary government is at an end. What are we doing here? We are surrendering the control of expenditures to these outside bodies. I had a word to say about this when a previous motion was discussed, and I should like to quote two brief sentences from my remarks on another occasion:

> All kinds of bodies, over the head of parliament, are spending money like water. Every principle for which the British nation struggled in the old land since the seventeenth century has been surrendered to the political caucuses. Parliament itself, which came into being to ensure that taxes shall be voted only by those who have to pay them, has become the institution through which those who do not pay them impose them on others.

And there is another sentence:

> . . . powers of legislation older even than the right of taxpayers to determine the national expenditure have been surrendered, and if we are to continue this sort of thing the power of parliament will be gone for ever.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I suggest that the hon. member confine his remarks to the amendment.

Mr. CHURCH: Quite right, Mr. Speaker; I am directing my remarks to the motion and the amendment. I say we might as well all go home. It is no wonder the people back home in our constituencies are asking what the members of parliament are doing. They want to know what we are doing in connection with margarine and many other matters that have been mentioned here today, but the answer is nothing at all. It is said we are to have a debate on foreign affairs, but I doubt if we will ever get to it; by that time the empire may be gone.

In conclusion I say these matters of controllers and executive rule affect every man, woman and child in the country, and we have surrendered all these powers to the executive. They are irresponsible. They are irremovable, under no control and subject to no appeal. They are above the law, the courts and the House of Commons. If we are not to have our rights and privileges we might as well turn the key in the door of parliament and go home.

Mr. G. A. CRUICKSHANK (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, so far everyone has said he is a backbencher and is speaking for the backbenchers. I am a frontbencher temporarily sitting in the back, though if I were from Ottawa I would be always in the front benches.

I cannot go along with the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) in his amendment. I think everyone knows that the hon. member for Fraser Valley fully intends to talk out some of these measures if at all possible, and I am good for forty-eight minutes or sixty-four, with your permission. However, I believe the particular bill I have in mind should be brought before the house and be dealt with here by the elected representatives from all parts of Canada. I believe a private member should have that privilege, just as I believe a private member should have the courage of his convictions and vote on such a matter. I am going to do my best to defeat a certain bill, but I am prepared to do it right here in this house. Therefore I intend to uphold the resolution.

Mr. J. L. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): As an independent member of this house—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): I repeat, as an independent member of this house—infinitely more independent than any member of any of these parties sitting around me, who rally around their whips—I want to add my protest to the form of this resolution. The government must admit that hon. members on all sides have been quite prepared to co-operate in expediting the business of the house, but I think this resolution, which asks us to give up the rights of private members with no guarantee as to the length of time that will be required, is a little unfair. I believe the government should give further consideration to the matter and see if there is not some way in which a limit can be placed on the time during which they may have the power for which they are asking; perhaps it could be for one month.

Personally I should be very glad to grant such power. As has been stated, we have two bills on the order paper which to my mind are extremely important, not only to those of us in the house but to the people of Canada generally. I refer to the bill which would amend the Dairy Industry Act, and the bill sponsored by the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency in regard to illegal organizations. I would not like to have members of the press gallery say in the newspapers that the members of this house were afraid to face these two important issues. I would like the privilege of recording my opinions on these matters, and I am sure many other hon. members feel the same way. I would be grateful therefore if the government would let this motion stand and reconsider the matter with a view to seeing whether it cannot be made more acceptable to the backbenchers—which the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank) claims he is not—and the ordinary members of the house.

[Mr. Cruickshank.]

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think all hon. members realize the importance of the public business that has to be considered, and that no one wants to slight that business. And I am sure all hon. members must realize that the government has no desire whatever to act in the way described by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Graydon), in a word for which he apologized before using it. There is no intention of hogging the time of the house.

Mr. GRAYDON: I did not mean to apologize; I thought the word was very good.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I think we all feel our responsibility in respect of the public affairs of the country, and we all feel that parliament has to deal with the time at its disposal in the manner that will best suit the interests of the public at large.

The hon. member for Peel offered the suggestion that this motion should be allowed to stand for a period of perhaps two weeks. We would be quite prepared to accept something of that kind, but it would not be quite frank to do so, because whether or not the hon. member realizes it, there is a resolution which would still be in effect at the end of that period, which provides less time for private members than is provided here. So his suggestion would not meet the wish of a large number of hon. members that certain time be allowed for the consideration of matters they feel should be dealt with. The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) has suggested that this motion might be acceptable if two hours were reserved for matters being promoted by private members, but he would invert the order set out in standing order 15.

We have had some expression of views as to how the time of the house should be used in the interests of the public. I would suggest that this debate be adjourned until tomorrow and in the meantime we can get together and see if we can do something which will leave the impression that everyone wishes to be fair. Between now and tomorrow afternoon we can give the matter some further thought, and I think we can come to a conclusion which will leave each one with the impression that no other is trying to have his own way, but that everyone is trying to do what is best for the country at large.

I move that the debate be adjourned.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): May I ask the minister a question? I was wondering whether the smoothness of his remarks was induced by butter or margarine.

Mr. COLDWELL: Do I understand that the right hon. gentleman moves an amendment?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: No; I move the adjournment of the debate until tomorrow afternoon.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

WAR ASSETS—FIRE EXTINGUISHERS

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North):

1. How many CO_2 fire extinguishers are in the possession of War Assets Corporation?
2. Have any such extinguishers been destroyed since the cessation of hostilities? If so, how many?
3. Have any offers of purchase been received by the corporation? If so, how many have been accepted?
4. To whom were they sold?
5. What was the cost price of these extinguishers?
6. Have any been returned to the manufacturers? If so, at what price?

Mr. McILRAITH:

1. There are 727 CO_2 extinguishers located in the Winnipeg area at the present time.

2. Yes. 268 have been scrapped.

3. Yes, offers of purchase have been received and 15 have been accepted.

4. Canada Car and Foundry Co., Fort William, Ont., Canadian Pacific Airlines, Winnipeg, Man., province of Manitoba, city of Winnipeg, Man., City Machinery Co., Winnipeg, Man., Aircraft Service Western Ltd., Winnipeg, Man., Luke's Electric Motor and Machinery Co., Winnipeg, Man., J. Werier and Co. Ltd., Winnipeg, Man., Pioneer Electric Limited, St. Boniface, Man., city of St. Boniface, Man., fire exchange, Winnipeg, Man., Security Storage Co. Ltd., Winnipeg, Man., city of Saskatoon, Winnipeg Electric Company, Winnipeg, Man., W. Davies, St. Vital, Man.

5. The corporation is not in a position to answer this part of the question.

6. 464 of the 2 lb. type were sold to Walter Kidde and Company, Montreal, at $2.25 each. 39 of the 50 lb. and 10 of the 100 lb. types were sold to LaFrance Fire Engine and Foamite Limited, Toronto, at $16.67 and $33.25 each respectively.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT, 1944

Mr. FLEMING:

Up to December 31, 1947, under the National Housing Act, 1944, (a) how many contracts have been entered into under part I; (b) what is the total number of houses for which loans have been authorized under part I; (c) how many of such houses have been completed and are now occupied; (d) what is the total amount of the loans authorized under part I; (e) how many contracts have been entered into under part II of the act; (f) what is the total number of rental housing projects for which loans have been authorized under part II; (g) how many of such rental housing projects are low-rental housing projects; (h) how many of such rental housing projects have been completed and are now occupied, and how many of them are low-rental housing projects, and where are they located; (i) what is the total amount of the loans authorized under part II; (j) how many limited dividend corporations have been recognized as qualified to receive loans under section 9 of the act? What are they and where are they authorized to operate rental housing projects? Which ones are institutional housing corporations, and which are institutional holding companies; (k) which of such limited dividend housing corporations have received loans under part II? (l) (1) To how many municipalities have grants been made pursuant to section 12; (2) what are the individual amounts of such grants and what municipalities respectively received them; (3) what are the other terms, if any of the said grants; (m) (1) how many municipalities have applied for grants pursuant to section 12; (2) how many have been refused; (3) how many of such applications are still pending; (n) how many contracts have been entered into under part III; (o) (1) what is the total number of houses for which loans have been authorized under part III; (2) how many of such houses have been completed and are now occupied; (p) what is the total amount of the loans authorized under part III; (q) how many contracts have been entered into with manufacturers of plumbing and heating equipment or other component parts of houses, pursuant to section 15; (r) how many payments have been made under part IV, and what is the total thereof; (s) what studies and investigations, planning and research have been carried on under part V; (t) what expenditures have been made pursuant to part V out of the $5,000,000 authorized by parliament in 1945, under section 27A?

Mr. McILRAITH:

Detailed information required is available for most questions in the annual reports of the corporation for 1946 and 1947, but is not available for 1945.

(a) Annual report for 1946, page 30; annual report for 1947, page 29.

(b) Answered by (a).

(c) Answered by (a). No information is available for occupancy.

(d) Answered by (a).

(e) Answered by (a).

(f) Answered by (a). The number of rental housing projects corresponds to the number of loans approved under part II.

(g) Forty-one of these rental housing projects were approved under sections 9 and 9A, covering 3,629 housing units, of which 3,449 housing units were approved during 1946 and 180 during 1947.

(h) Answered by (a). Completions during 1947 of housing units in low-rental housing projects were located at: Saint John, Montreal, Three Rivers, Atikokan, Brantford, Brockville, Burlington, Chatham, Guelph, Hamilton, Kingston, Kitchener, Lindsay, London, Marathon, Owen Sound, Peterborough, Sarnia, Stratford, St. Catharines, St. Thomas, Toronto, Waterloo, Windsor, Regina, Saskatoon, Edmonton, New Westminster, Port Neville, Vancouver, Victoria.

No information is available for completions in 1945 and 1946, nor for occupancy.

(i) Answered by (a).

(j) Thirty-five, including the 32 subsidiary companies of Housing Enterprises of Canada, Limited at:—Saint John, Montreal (2 projects), Three Rivers, Brantford, Brockville, Chatham, Guelph, Hamilton, Kingston, Kitchener, Lindsay, London (2 projects), Owen Sound, Peterborough, Sarnia, Stratford, St. Catharines, St. Thomas, Toronto (2 projects), Waterloo, Windsor, Regina, Saskatoon, Edmonton, New Westminster, Vancouver (2 projects), Victoria.

The three other companies are:—Burlington Housing Corporation at Burlington, Ontario; Lakeview Heights Limited at Marathon, Ontario; Don Park Homesites Limited at Atikokan, Ontario.

Housing Enterprises of Canada, Ltd., is the only institutional holding company, control of which has been vested in Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, while the remainder are institutional housing corporations, including the subsidiaries of Housing Enterprises of Canada, Limited.

(k) The 35 limited dividend housing companies listed in (j).

(l) 1, none; 2, answered by 1; 3, answered by 1.

(m) 1, one; 2, none; 3, one.

(n) None.

(o) 1, answered by (n); 2, answered by (n).

(p) Answered by (n).

(q) None.

(r) Annual report for 1946, page 34; annual report for 1947, page 32. No claims have been paid for loans guaranteed under Part IV.

(s) Annual report for 1946, pages 22 to 24; annual report for 1947, pages 11 to 13.

(t) Annual report for 1946, page 38; annual report for 1947, page 34.

IMMIGRATION—CITIZENS OF CZECHOSLOVAKIA

Mr. JACKMAN:

1. How many citizens of Czechoslovakia were admitted into Canada during the years (a) 1946; (b) 1947; (c) and January and February, 1948?

[Mr. McIlraith.]

2. How many applications from citizens of Czechoslovakia for admission to Canada were on file with the Canadian government as of March 1, 1948, and how many of these had been approved?

3. How many of those whose applications were approved had relatives in Canada?

4. Has Canada an immigration office in Czechoslovakia? If so, when was it re-opened?

5. Will approved applicants be granted exit permits by the present Czechoslovakian government?

Mr. MacKINNON:

1. 216 citizens of Czechoslovakia were admitted during the calendar year, 1946.

356 citizens of Czechoslovakia were admitted during the calendar year, 1947.

72 citizens of Czechoslovakia were admitted in January, 1948.

79 citizens of Czechoslovakia were admitted in February, 1948.

2. Records show that during the period April 1, 1947, to February 29, 1948, relatives in Canada filed applications for 2,547 persons residing in Czechoslovakia which were all approved and forwarded to the Canadian legation at Prague and the relatives in Canada were advised to have the proposed immigrants apply in person at the Canadian legation, Prague, for examination and visa. Included in the persons applied for there was undoubtedly a number who were not citizens of Czechoslovakia, and records from Prague show that for the same period 300 immigration visas were granted to citizens of Czechoslovakia.

3. See answer to question No. 2.

4. No regular immigration officer but the Canadian legation looks after immigration matters and the grant of immigration visas. Legation was opened in Prague at the end of March, 1947.

5. The policy of the present Czechoslovakian government in regard to grant of exit permits is uncertain.

MOUNTED POLICE—QUESTIONING OF MEMBERS OF UNIVERSITY FACULTIES

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North):

1. Have any members of the R.C.M.P. interrogated or questioned, officially or unofficially, any member of any faculty of any university or college in Canada during the last two years?

2. If so, how many, and for what reason?

Mr. ILSLEY: Mr. Speaker, I am going to ask the hon. member to drop this question, and on two grounds. In the first place I have a letter from the commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in which he says that in order to answer the question he would have to ask for a report from every member of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and that even that answer would not necessarily be correct because a large number of members of the force have left the service in the last two years. He states he would be unable to reach all of them, as he does not have their present addresses.

The second ground is that even though there were not those considerations of practicability and convenience, these inquiries are not inquiries the results of which could be reported to the House of Commons; they would be of a confidential nature. On these grounds it would not be in the public interest to answer the questions.

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): I am prepared to reword the question to get certain information I should like to have. My information is that these interrogations have been taking place, and I should like to know why.

Mr. SPEAKER: Dropped.

INCOME AND EXCESS PROFITS TAXES

Mr. REID:

What amounts were collected by way of (a) income tax; (b) excess profits tax, in the various provinces for the year 1946?

Mr. WINTERS:

Fiscal year 1945-46

	Income tax (a)	Excess profits tax (b)	Total
Prince Edward Island	$ 2,117,412	$ 902,864	$ 3,020,276
Nova Scotia	26,178,175	13,490,704	39,668,879
New Brunswick	16,608,986	10,844,277	27,453,263
Quebec	258,488,521	151,002,358	409,490,879
Ontario	431,732,700	223,634,790	655,367,490
Manitoba	48,830,094	28,089,644	76,919,738
Saskatchewan	24,186,459	5,363,786	29,550,245
Alberta	37,679,168	14,597,651	52,276,819
British Columbia	91,342,307	46,046,530	137,388,837
Yukon Territory	565,452	223,879	789,331
Canada	$ 937,729,274	$ 494,196,483	$ 1,431,925,757

LIFE SAVING STATIONS

Mr. CHURCH:

1. Has anything been done by the government since the debate on the estimates last session to establish adequate and properly equipped life saving stations in Ontario on the great lakes and international rivers?

2. During the floods at the Etobicoke river on lake Ontario, what life saving appliances and equipment had the government for this work there?

3. What life saving station afforded assistance in this disaster?

4. What life saving stations has the government on the great lakes to aid navigation and the safety of the sailors there?

5. Has any survey been made since the last debate on it?

Mr. CHEVRIER:

1. No actual life saving stations are operated on the great lakes, but as pointed out in an answer to a question tabled last session, the department does maintain and operate on the great lakes between Kingston and the Canada-U.S. border near Fort William, 426 lightstations, fog alarm plants and light and signal buoys as well as approximately 1,100 unlighted buoys, beacons, etc. In addition, government vessels are available on short notice to render assistance to vessels in distress in their immediate vicinity. There are seven ship-to-shore radio telegraph and telephone stations to provide constant 24-hour communication with ships on the great lakes. These stations regularly broadcast weather forecasts, storm warnings and notices of dangers to navigation. There are also fifteen automatic radio beacons from which ships take their bearings by radio.

2. Etobicoke river not under the jurisdiction of the Department of Transport.

3. No information. See answer to No. 2.

4. (a) See answer to No. 1.

(b) It was pointed out in an answer to a question tabled last session that life saving appliances and equipment required to be carried in ships operating on the great lakes are specified in the regulations respecting life saving appliances made under authority of paragraph (b) of section 405 of the Canada Shipping Act, 1934, as approved by order in council P.C. 3 of the 6th day of January, 1937.

All merchant ships operating on the great lakes are required by the terms of section 387 of the Canada Shipping Act, 1934, to have the hull and equipment inspected by the steamship inspectors at least once a year, and inspectors are required to ascertain that the ships are equipped with all equipment necessary for safe navigation, and certificates of inspection are not issued until this equipment is on board.

5. No.

ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY

Mr. CHURCH:

1. Has the government any announcement to make regarding the postponement of the plans agreed to for the construction of the St. Lawrence waterway by the United States, and by Canada?

2. Will the minister make any statement on it before the Easter recess? If so, when?

3. Why and for what purpose was another commission appointed by Canada to investigate the Lachine section of this work?

Mr. McILRAITH:

1. On February 27 last, after considering a joint resolution approving, with the exception of certain of its provisions, the agreement concerning great lakes-St. Lawrence basin development, signed by Canada and the United States on March 19, 1941, the United States senate recorded its decision to recommit the resolution to the committee on foreign relations for further study. In the circumstances, it is considered that no useful purpose would be served by making an announcement at the present juncture.

2. Answered by No. 1.

3. The desired information was given on February 4, by the Hon. Minister of Transport in reply to a similar question from the hon. member. The reply is to be found on page 858 of Hansard of that date.

HEALTH AND WELFARE—CO-OPERATION WITH PROVINCIAL DEPARTMENTS

Mr. BROWN:

What work of a special nature has been carried out by the Department of National Health and Welfare in co-operation with any provincial department of health?

Mr. MARTIN:

1. In response to a request from the deputy minister of health for Prince Edward Island, a two-months' study was conducted of the bacteriological and sanitary quality of milk throughout the province. The provincial department of health provided laboratory facilities, staff and equipment, the Department of National Health and Welfare making available a mobile bacteriological laboratory and the services of a public health engineer who surveyed dairies, pasteurization plants and representative samples of dairy farms. As a result of the report submitted by this department following an analysis of the results of the survey appropriate legislative action was taken to bring into force the recommendations made.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

2. In co-operation with the British Columbia department of health the paediatric specialist of the child and maternal health division of the Department of National Health and Welfare has, since September 1947, been directing a study in Nanaimo, B.C., of the physical condition of some 8,000 school children. This study consists of the evaluation of the physical fitness of children by means of the Wetzel grid. The Wetzel grid is a graph which has recently been evolved for the evaluation of the physique, the growth or nutritional grade, the physical progress and the caloric need of a child. Associated with the study is the organization of services designed to correct the deficiencies encountered; deficiencies due to physical as well as psychological factors, e.g. malnutrition, poor discipline, maladjustment in the home, et cetera, et cetera.

3. The child and maternal health division of the Department of National Health and Welfare recently co-operated with the school medical officer of Saskatoon in carrying out a study of the influence of psychological factors on the growth of school children. The division provided the necessary Wetzel grids for this study.

4. The nursing specialist of the child and maternal health division of the Department of National Health and Welfare was in Regina for some months organizing, in co-operation with the provincial authorities and the Saskatchewan branch of the Canadian Red Cross Society, a mothers' milk service. The service is designed to save the lives of premature and debilitated babies and to encourage breast-feeding of infants. This project entailed organizing the collection, storage, refrigeration and dispensing of mothers' milk to babies in hospitals and in homes. A depot at Saskatoon was also established. Many conferences with local health officials, doctors, hospital and nursing groups were arranged. Talks were given by radio, to voluntary groups and to parents, and articles were prepared for the press, monthly health bulletins, et cetera.

5. The province of New Brunswick is participating with the dominion government in a treatment scheme to determine whether an appreciable number of blind can be removed from the blind pension rolls by operation and medical treatment. Funds have been voted by the dominion government to be used on a 75-25 per cent basis, in agreement with the provinces. Lists of suitable cases have been furnished by the blindness control division of the Department of National Health and Welfare to the other provinces as well, who, it is anticipated, will also participate in the scheme.

6. In response to requests received from the provinces model plans have been drawn up by the hospital design division of the Department of National Health and Welfare for (a) a mental hospital and (b) a provincial department of health building to include various clinics. On request, a consultation service has also been given on active treatment hospital plans.

7. The laboratory of hygiene of the Department of National Health and Welfare is participating in a co-operative effort with the provincial public health laboratories to ensure a uniform service in the diagnosis of syphilis, with a view to facilitating the control of the disease. Re-agents used in the blood test for syphilis are prepared and standardized at the laboratory of hygiene for distribution to the provinces. Collaborative studies to evaluate the accuracy of the blood tests, as carried out in each laboratory, are conducted from time to time. New and improved methods of diagnosis are being investigated. The directors of all provincial public health laboratories have by unanimous resolution accepted the laboratory of hygiene as the national referee laboratory for this work.

8. At the request of the province of Nova Scotia a survey of food services in the small hospitals and country homes was carried out by the nutrition division of the Department of National Health and Welfare. A report was made to the province, giving detailed advice for improvement of the situation observed.

9. At the request of the province of Saskatchewan a member of the nutrition division of the Department of National Health and Welfare worked in the province for two months assisting in a special effort to expand the operation of a school lunch program in rural schools.

10. At the request of the provinces concerned, nutrition surveys designed to assess the nutritional status of the population were carried out by personnel of the nutrition division of the Department of National Health and Welfare in—

(a) a Nova Scotia island;
(b) two counties in Quebec;
(c) a health unit in Ontario;
(d) a health unit in Alberta.

11. A survey of the nursing situation was made in the mental hospitals of Canada, as urged by the dominion-provincial conference on mental health held in October, 1946 and as approved by the dominion council of health at its meeting in November, 1946. The purpose of the survey was to obtain an accurate estimate of the present situation in the mental hospitals as to shortage of nurses, training programs that are being conducted, and working conditions of the nurses, with a view to advising the provinces where their efforts at improvement would be best directed and assisting them with detailed advice.

The survey was conducted by the chief of the mental health division of the Department of National Health and Welfare assisted by a member of the staff of the division, an outstanding nurse with years of experience in responsible positions in the psychiatric field. Thirty-six mental hospitals, three county homes, three veterans' psychiatric units, and three psychiatric units in provincial hospitals were visited. Every province was visited.

A report was made to the provinces which included recommendations regarding a recruitment program, the administrative set-up and nursing services, the staff and facilities needed for an adequate training program, etc.

12. As the provincial venereal disease control clinics have no facilities for testing the toxicity, physical and chemical properties of arsphenamines and related products, the food and drug division of the Department of National Health and Welfare undertook the testing of stocks of these products on hand in the V.D. control clinics throughout Canada. The purpose was to ascertain the stability of these products under varying conditions of storage and to check the effectiveness of the regulations under which the department controls the release of these products in Canada.

13. Technical assistance was given by personnel of the industrial health division of the Department of National Health and Welfare in the field and in the industrial health laboratory in Ottawa in respect to a survey of coal mines in Alberta carried out in co-operation with the tuberculosis division of the Alberta department of health and the provincial workmen's compensation board.

14. Technical assistance was given by personnel of the industrial health division of the Department of National Health and Welfare and in the industrial health laboratory in Ottawa in respect to a survey of the silicosis hazard in foundries and stone-cutting establishments of New Brunswick, carried out in co-operation with the New Brunswick department of health.

15. A survey of health facilities in industries in New Brunswick was, at the request of the New Brunswick deputy minister of health, carried out by the industrial nursing consultant of the industrial health division of the Department of National Health and Welfare.

16. Technical assistance was given by personnel of the industrial health division of the Department of National Health and Welfare and in the industrial health laboratory in Ottawa in respect to a survey of health hazards in certain industries in Nova Scotia and Saskatchewan carried out in co-operation with the Nova Scotia and Saskatchewan departments of health.

17. The dental health division of the Department of National Health and Welfare is co-operating with the Ontario department of health in a study of the fluorine-dental caries relationship. This study is being conducted in Brantford, Ontario, and, while several similar studies are under way in the United States, the Brantford study is the only place in Canada where this work has been undertaken.

In Brantford, where fluorine is being added to the water supply in an attempt to reproduce conditions of lowered dental caries incidence, previously observed in areas where the water naturally provides this element, the dental health division has conducted a carefully controlled study of the dental status of approximately fifteen hundred school children. Similar examinations will be performed by this division on children in two "control" cities in Ontario, one of which has a fluorine-free water supply, the other having a water supply in which fluorine occurs naturally and in optimal amounts with regard to protection against dental caries.

WAR ASSETS CORPORATION—EMPLOYEES AT BOUCHARD (ST. THERESE)

Mr. BERTRAND (Terrebonne):

1. How many persons were in the employ of War Assets Corporation, at Bouchard (Ste. Thérèse), on January 15, 1948?

2. What are the names of the said persons, and what were their places of residence and salaries or wages?

3. Were any employees dismissed between January 15, 1948 and March 15, 1948?

4. If so, what are their names, and for what reasons were they dismissed?

5. Have the dismissed employees been replaced? If so, what are the names, places of residence and salaries or wages of the persons replacing the said employees?

Mr. McILRAITH:

1. 17 employees.

2. Alarie, R., Ste. Therese, P.Q., $131.00 per month.

Aldridge, J., Verdun, P.Q., $190.00 per month.

Batten, H. E., Montreal, P.Q., $214.00 per month.

Beaupre, P. A., Ste. Therese, P.Q., $173.00 per month.

[Mr. Martin.]

Chaisson, W. I., Montreal, P.Q., $227.00 per month.

Comeau, H., Ste. Therese, P.Q., $139.00 per month.

Conmee, A. B., Montreal, P.Q., $240.00 per month.

Edwards, C., Montreal, P.Q., $131.00 per month.

Edworthy, Mrs. V. M., Ste. Therese, P.Q., $106.00 per month.

Frawley, C. E., Rosemere, P.Q., $147.00 per month.

Graves, G., Ste. Rose, P.Q., $183.00 per month.

Hetu, M., Ste. Therese, P.Q., $131.00 per month.

Langley, J. E. T., Ste. Therese, P.Q., $253.00 per month.

Mathews, Mrs. M. N., Ste. Therese, P.Q., $126.00 per month.

McDougald, A. A., Ste. Therese, P.Q., $300.00 per month.

Ringle, P. J., Montreal, P.Q., $147.00 per month.

Roberge, D., Ste. Therese, P.Q., $147.00 per month.

3. Yes.

4. Aldridge, J., completion of work.
Beaupre, P. A., completion of work.
Edwards, C., completion of work.
Edworthy, Mrs. V. M., completion of work.
Hetu, M., completion of work.
Ringle, P. J., completion of work.
Batten, H. E., completion of work.
Graves, G., completion of work.
Langley, J. E. T., completion of work.
McDougald, A. A., lack of experience in final work required.

No, except:

5. Replacement of Mr. McDougald in the person of:

David, L. O., Montreal, P.Q., $284.00 per month.

Mr. David was sent to Bouchard to complete War Assets Corporation records as Mr. McDougald did not have the required experience. Mr. David having completed this work has since been separated.

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—OVERPAYMENTS

Mr. McIVOR:

1. What is the total amount of overpayments of family allowances as at November 30, 1947?

2. What proportion of (1) is collectible by deductions from accounts still in force?

3. What proportion of (1) is considered otherwise collectible although accounts are no longer in force?

4. What proportion of (1) is considered uncollectible?

Mr. MARTIN:

1. $387,494 (covering the period July 1, 1945 to November 30, 1947).

2. $202,156.

3. $164,643.

4. $20,695.

RAILWAY CONSTRUCTION

Mr. McKAY:

1. How many miles of railway lines were constructed (a) since 1920; (b) during 1947, in (1) Canada; (2) Saskatchewan?

2. What mileage af railway was built in Canada since 1920 by (a) Canadian Pacific Railway; (b) other railways?

Mr. McILRAITH:

1. New track constructed 1920-1946:

Canada	5,081 miles
Saskatchewan	2,567 "

2. Net increase in railway mileage, 1920-1946:

Canadian Pacific*	1,842 miles
All other railways	1,203 "

(All annual reports for 1947 not yet received —monthly reports indicate a decrease of 13·6 miles.)

*Constituent railways of Canadian Pacific system in 1946.

SOLDIER SETTLEMENT—MINERAL RIGHTS

Mr. DIEFENBAKER:

1. Have any purchasers of land from the soldier settlement board been denied the mineral rights which were attached to the land at the time of purchase?

2. If so, in how many cases?

3. Under what authority is this course being followed?

Mr. GREGG:

1. Yes.

2. No record has been maintained of the number of soldier settlers who from time to time may have indicated an interest in obtaining title to the mineral rights underlying their land.

3. Section 57 of the Soldier Settlement Act, as passed in 1919, reserved to the crown all mines and minerals in soldier settlement lands. Such mines and minerals are now administered by the Department of Mines and Resources.

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL CORPORATION—EMPLOYEES VETERANS PREFERENCE

Mr. DIEFENBAKER:

1. How many persons are presently employed in the government-owned company, Canadian Commercial Corporation?

2. How many so employed enjoy permanent civil service status?

3. How many employees of this corporation are in receipt of salaries of $4,000 per year or over?

4. How many persons in (3) are entitled to veterans preference?

Mr. McILRAITH:

1. 316.

2. 10.

3. 11.

4. Thirty-one per cent of the male employees of the corporation, including one of those referred to in 3 above, are entitled to veterans preference.

ADVERTISING OF LIQUOR

Mr. BENTLEY:

In what provinces of Canada is liquor advertising illegal?

Mr. WINTERS: No information.

FILM BOARD—DISABLED VETERANS IN RECEIPT OF PENSIONS

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North):

1. How many disabled veterans in receipt of pensions are on the staff of the National Film Board?

2. In what offices or buildings do they work?

Mr. WINTERS:

1. 12.

2. 6—John street building; 1—Middle street building; 2—225 Sparks street; 2—Monument Nationale building; 1—Sovereign building.

RADIO BROADCASTING—BROADCASTS IN ONTARIO IN FRENCH LANGUAGE

Mr. COLDWELL:

1. Has any radio station in the province of Ontario refused to sell more than five minutes continuous time for broadcasts in the French language for commercial, political or other types of broadcast?

2. If so, has this practice been approved by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation?

Mr. WINTERS:

1. No information available.

2. See No. 1.

GRANBY-MONTREAL MAIL SERVICE

Mr. BOIVIN:

1. Have any contracts been awarded by the Postmaster General for the conveyance of mails between Granby and Montreal?

2. If so, how many?

3. To whom?

4. At what amount per annum?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier):

1. No. Mails are conveyed between Granby and Montreal by railway at standard mail pay rates.

2, 3 and 4. See answer to No. 1.

IMMIGRATION—DISPLACED PERSONS

Mr. MacINNIS:

1. How many persons from displaced persons' camps have been brought to Canada for work in the lumber industry in Ontario from July 1, 1947 to March 1, 1948?
2. How many lumber workers in the Ontario area were registered as unemployed as at March 1, 1948?
3. How many of the unemployed were displaced persons?

Mr. MITCHELL:

1. 3,472 persons from displaced persons' camps were brought to Canada for work in the lumber industry in Ontario from July 1, 1947 to March 1, 1948.

2. No figures are available for March 1, 1948, but figures are available for February 26 and March 4. Under the heading of loggers and bushmen there were registered on February 26, as seeking employment in Ontario, 115, and on March 4—102. For your information the unfilled vacancies for this classification of worker were, respectively, for the same dates, 472 and 279. Under the classification of saw mill and planing mill workers there were registered as seeking employment 70 and 67, with unfilled vacancies of 31 and 18 for the same dates—February 26 and March 4. It is probable that these latter figures are not required as displaced persons came out for work in the first classification, that of loggers and bushmen.

3. No separate statistics are kept for displaced persons.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

WAR ASSETS—HOSPITAL BLANKETS

Mr. FRASER:

1. Did the War Assets Corporation sell to individuals or firms unused hospital blankets?
2. If so, to whom were they sold?
3. What was the original price of same?
4. What price were they sold at?

RADIO BROADCASTING LICENCES

Mr. HENDERSON:

1. How many applications for the issue of radio broadcasting licences were (a) made; (b) granted, since January 1, 1947?
2. What persons or corporations made the application in each case?
3. Of these applications, how many have been deferred and what was the reason for deferment in each case?

Mr. McILRAITH: Return tabled.

RYE GRAIN AND MALTING BARLEY

Mr. WINKLER:

1. Has the government received complaints that there appears to be insufficient rye in Canada to satisfy sales for future delivery in May and July?

[Mr. Bertrand (Laurier).]

2. Has the government received requests from the United States of America for malting barley shipped in bond through the United States for delivery in eastern Canada, on the basis of exchanging it for feed barley plus the premium for malting barley?
3. If so, by whom?
4. What was the reply?

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): Return tabled.

FILM BOARD—STILL PRINTS

Mr. FRASER:

1. How many stills were made by the national film board during the months of January and February, 1948?
2. How many of these still prints were sold?
3. What were the sizes; at what price were they sold, and were they black and white or colour?

Mr. WINTERS: Return tabled.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

Mr. FRASER:

1. What crown corporations have been established since January 1, 1940?
2. What are the names of those corporations that are still in operation?
3. Who are the directors and senior officials of each such corporation?
4. What salary, fee or other emolument, is paid to each such director or official?
5. What is the purpose, or object, of each such corporation?
6. What is the capitalization of each such corporation?
7. What factories, plants or other similar physical properties, are owned by each such corporation and where are they located?

PRIVILEGE

MR. MACDONNELL—DELAY IN REPLY TO QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. J. M. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege affecting myself and, I take it, every hon. member in the house—I believe it can be raised at this point—I wish to refer to a question which I asked the minister weeks ago, and the answer to which was delayed for two months. Eventually it came down on March 22.

The question had to do with the purchase of bonds by or on behalf of the government. I waited without making complaint, except to ask about the question, until I received an answer to it. I am now convinced that if it had been asked for in a private institution and the answer was not forthcoming within forty-eight hours, there would have been all kinds of trouble, with perhaps only one exception. There was a return from the wheat board, and it may be that their office staff is in Winnipeg. However I wish to draw the attention of the house to the fact that I believe the delay was either the result of scandalous inefficiency—which I do not believe is the case—or for some reason which I cannot understand it was not thought desirable that I should have the information any earlier.

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): My hon. friend's views are completely without foundation.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I suggest that an ex cathedra statement of that kind does not get us anywhere.

Mr. ABBOTT: Nor do two ex cathedra statements get us anywhere.

MARSHALL PLAN

QUESTION AS TO DELEGATION FROM CANADA TO WASHINGTON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GORDON GRAYDON (Peel): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In the press of the last two or three days there has been an intimation that the minister is to lead a delegation from Canada to Washington to discuss matters relating to the Marshall plan. Will he intimate to the house whether that is to be done, and if so, when the delegation is to leave Canada for that purpose?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I have nothing to announce at the present time. Discussions have taken place on the subject, and when any conclusions are arrived at I shall be glad to announce them.

WHEAT

QUESTION AS TO PROCLAMATION OF WHEAT BOARD ACT AMENDMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. J. BENTLEY (Swift Current): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Will the minister inform the house whether Bill 135 is in force now, or does it have to be proclaimed before it is effective?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, Bill 135 has been passed by both houses of parliament and has received the royal assent. It is now in effect. If the hon. member will read the bill he will find that certain sections are made operative by orders in council. Action has been taken accordingly in respect of one section. Suitable steps will be taken when it comes time to consider making other sections operative.

INQUIRY AS TO SIGNING OF INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. ROBERT FAIR (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has the international wheat agreement been formally signed on behalf of Canada?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The agreement has been initialed on behalf of Canada by the officer who represented Canada in the discussions which led to the agreement, and later in the course of the session the house will be asked to ratify it.

Mr. FAIR: Will the ceiling price as set out in the agreement be raised in line with increased freight costs and other increased production costs?

Mr. HOWE: The ceiling price in the international agreement is not affected by any change in freight rates.

PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE OVERPAYMENT UNDER WHEAT ACREAGE REDUCTION SCHEME

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. S. ZAPLITNY (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, on February 27 I asked the Minister of Agriculture a question in regard to certain regulations under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, and I was told that the matter was being referred to the appropriate officers and an answer would be given later. Can the minister now answer my question?

Right Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): As I remember the question it had to do with certain amounts owing to the government being deducted from payments under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. I have made inquiry and I am informed that some such charges have been made, but my opinion is that the terms of the act are such as not to contemplate the collection of that kind of payment. Until I have had a final decision in the matter I do not care to say more at the moment. It was not the intention that anyone would be able to charge anything against the payments under that act.

EGGS

REQUEST FOR INCREASED PRICE TO COMPENSATE FOR HIGHER FREIGHT RATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. A. CRUICKSHANK (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of a minister—I am not sure which one.

Mr. HOMUTH: Ask them all.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Sleeping quarters will be provided elsewhere. My question is this. Will consideration be given to an increase in the price of eggs for export, to offset the increase in freight rates? That is a fair question. Surely some member of the government can answer it.

Mr. GRAYDON: All the eggs are in Mr. Howe's basket.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: In order to bring it to a head I shall ask the question of the Acting Prime Minister.

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I am not in the egg market; but when I do purchase eggs I pay the price quoted, and I do not know that that depends upon any ceiling. I am not aware that there is any ceiling on the price of eggs.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Might I ask a supplementary question on a matter which very seriously affects my riding? I think it is up to some member of the government to give an answer. This freight increase means an increase of two cents a dozen on eggs. The Minister of Agriculture was not responsible for this increase in freight rates, I know, but will he tell me whether any consideration has been given to an increase in the export price of eggs because of this increased cost?

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport): If my hon. friend's question has to do with what are known as export and import rates, the order of the board does not affect those rates; it excludes them from the operation of the order.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

DEEPSEA SHIPOWNERS AND DECK, ENGINEER AND WIRELESS OPERATORS—SALARIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GORDON B. ISNOR (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement made yesterday by the Minister of Labour in regard to deepsea personnel, would the minister give to the house a comparison of the salaries paid to the officer personnel of the ships in 1939 and the salaries recommended in Mr. Justice McNiven's report?

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): In reply to the senior member for Halifax I will quote from the report of Mr. Justice McNiven, dated January 22, 1948, in which he states:

The following table sets out basic monthly wage rate for officers on Canadian deepsea dry cargo vessels, corresponding as nearly as possible to the vessels now in service, for the years 1939, 1944 and 1946-47, together with the basic rates which I recommend for inclusion in the new agreements:

Rank	1939	1944	1946-47	Recommended
Chief officer	$135	$234.43	$260	$285
Second officer ...	115	209.43	230	255
Third officer	90	179.43	200	220
Second engineer	135	234.43	260	285
Third engineer ..	115	209.43	230	255
Fourth engineer	90	179.43	200	220
Fifth engineer ..	70	159.43	180	200

The radio officer in 1946-47 received $225 and the recommended rate is $250.

Mr. ISNOR: Do those figures include allowances for food and clothing?

Mr. MITCHELL: No. Board and accommodation, to use the language of the shore, is in addition to their salaries; or in the language of the street, it is free.

POSTAL SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO PARCELS TO PALESTINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. O. PROBE (Regina City): I have given the Postmaster General notice of this question. What is the present position of the Canadian Post Office department with respect to accepting food or other parcels for transmission to Palestine?

Hon. ERNEST BERTRAND (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, although I received a copy of my hon. friend's question yesterday I was unfortunately unable to meet my officer, but I will give an answer tomorrow.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE ACT AMENDMENT—INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS BILL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. J. BROOKS (Royal): Mr. Speaker, last night it was indicated that we would take today the second reading of Bill No. 196, to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act. But we have just received copies of the bill since coming into the house and have therefore had no opportunity to study it and are not in a position to discuss it this afternoon. Would it be possible to have this order of business left over until tomorrow?

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I do not know whether an answer to the question would have any practical application today, because there are other items to be taken up before that bill. In any event it was my understanding that as soon as the bill receives second reading it is to be referred to the veterans affairs committee. I am sure that the Minister of Veterans Affairs would not want to ask the house to consider second reading at a time when any hon. member felt that he had not been given sufficient opportunity to study the bill.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): I should like to raise a similar question with respect to the second reading of Bill No. 195. I have had a copy of this bill, and I presume the other members are in the same position, only since I came into the house today. I think it is unfair to ask the members, even if the bill is similar to last year's, to take up the second reading of so important a measure without having had an opportunity to study it.

Hon. MILTON F. GREGG (Minister of Veterans Affairs): In respect to the bill referred to by the member for Royal, I am prepared, as indicated by the leader of the house, to arrange a time that will be in accordance with the general wish of the house.

GOLD MINING

EMERGENCY PAYMENTS TO ASSIST IN MEETING INCREASED COST OF PRODUCTION

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance) moved the third reading of Bill No. 7, respecting emergency payments to assist in meeting increased cost of production of gold.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): Before this bill receives third reading I wish to say a few words. The bill is entitled, "An act respecting emergency payments to assist in meeting increased cost of production of gold." It is based on a policy which I have advocated for every province of Canada. A policy of bonuses, subventions and subsidies would solve all the economic problems of this country and of every province. It would also solve our economic and fiscal problems and the internal problems of this country, and is based on protection. I advocated this policy when I first entered the house. I advocated a policy of farm assistance and assistance for the development of a national fuel supply from the maritimes, and many other economic aids. I advocated a policy of similar grants, bonuses, subventions and subsidies to food products in this country. I am sorry that in connection with this gold industry this action was not taken years ago in new Ontario.

I remember when the high production costs of power and many other things in an economic way were preventing the development of this particular industry in northern Ontario. At that time Sir Adam Beck brought forward the policy of municipal ownership of electrical power, and we tried to get it for new Ontario. At that time also the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario railway was being built, and sections had been built into the gold and silver camps. At that time that railway should have been electrified. If that had been done the mines would have had cheaper production costs and cheap light and power. The cost of light and power was one of the main causes of the high production costs there in this particular industry. At one time in the gold mining and other districts the cost of direct current was up to $60 a horsepower at Cochrane. That was under private ownership. If the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario railway, the government-owned transportation system in new Ontario, had been electrified, that country would have had cheaper production costs by one-half and cheap light and power. They would have got it for $9 or $10 a horsepower as against $60. If that had been done the production of gold today would be five times as high as it has been in the past and the production of silver would be about three times as high.

I can only say that the government is adopting the proper policy in giving emergency relief to this particular industry. I hope that the same principle will be carried out in base metal production and in some food products such as milk and other things. If we carried out this system of bonuses, subventions and subsidies for emergency in such days as these it would solve all the economic problems of Canada from coast to coast, in every province, by protection, particularly if it were properly applied.

Mr. ALAN COCKERAM (York South): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to speak on third reading of this bill, but in reading over the speech made yesterday by the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) I thought that, as one who has been closely associated with the industry for some twenty odd years, I should put on the record a refutation of some of the things which the hon. member said which were not quite fair to labour and management in that industry.

The first point the hon. member made was that there was difficulty at the present time in getting union agreements in the mining districts. The hon. member said at page 2678 of Hansard:

> The reason I would like that assurance is that the miners' union in the gold industry has been endeavouring unsuccessfully for nearly two years to get a trade union agreement with the operators.

As is generally known, the trouble in the mining districts between management and the labour unions at the present time is that communist organizers came into the camps from the United States and it has been very difficult for the management to come to any agreement with the unions. I can assure the hon. member for Cape Breton South that, once these difficulties are ironed out, the mines will be very glad to make an agreement with their employees.

Then the hon. member said:

> I do not suppose in the whole of Canada there is a section of any industry where the hazards are greater than in the gold and nickel mines in northern Ontario.

It has been said by Mr. Longmore, the general manager of the Hollinger mine, and one of the greatest employers of labour in the mining industry, that in the past few years more accidents to miners have happened going to and coming from work than have occurred underground. Outside of the very few spectacular accidents, gold mining is, I think, a pretty safe industry, the management having a fetish for the safety and welfare of their men.

The next point the hon. member dealt with was silicosis. I do not think that in any other place in the world one will find more attention paid to silicosis and greater efforts made to overcome that hazard of mining than in the gold mining industry of Canada. Everybody who knows anything about the industry in Ontario knows that twenty-five cents per man shift is deducted and a special fund has been created by the compensation board to take care of any cases of silicosis. I have yet to learn of any one case brought before the board that was not considered on its merits and the man or men given reasonable treatment.

Then the hon. member made this statement:

> If the minister had written into this particular subsidy—it should not be a one-way street; it should work both ways—protection for the miners who dig the gold, take the risks and sacrifice their health, it would partly meet our demands. If the minister had recommended that at least a portion of this subsidy should be used for the purpose of setting up adequate machinery for the diagnosis of silicosis, it would meet with our approval.

[Mr. Cockeram.]

I have indicated what the industry has done with regard to silicosis. I am sure that there is no other place in the world where men are better looked after.

Then the hon. member for Cape Breton South said:

> There is no such thing as underground exploration.

One has only to go to a gold mine to know that veins have a habit of disappearing, and that a great deal of underground exploration has to be done, which is very costly, before the veins are located again. One of the big items in the cost of the gold mine is diamond drilling underground to find the veins which possibly have been lost. The point that I should like to make the most of is found on page 2679 of Hansard. I quote what the hon. member said, as reported at page 2679:

> Point number two is that consideration should be given by the department to the matter of setting up a general welfare plan in the community for the purpose of building up the morale of the workers in their homes and raising their standards, and recognizing them as human beings.

I do not suppose there is in this country any other group of employers who do more to see that their men are looked after than does the mining industry of Canada, and in this respect I should like to read from the annual report of the Ontario Mining Association issued last year:

> The employment statistics branch of the dominion bureau of statistics in their report on the employment situation, issued on May 5, 1947, showed the average weekly earnings in the nine leading industries of Canada as at March 1, 1947.
>
> | | per week |
> |---|---|
> | The average for the nine industries was | $35.62 |
> | The average for metal mining was ..... | 46.91 |
>
> In only one group were higher average weekly earnings shown: namely, transportation. Here, while the average for the whole group was down at $44.47 per week, steam railway operation paid an average at that time of $50.45 per week.
>
> As referred to previously earnings of Ontario metal mining employees are higher than the Canadian average and in addition, as from December 1, 1946, when controls were finally removed by the Ottawa government, most of the gold mining companies in the province instituted pay increases for wage groups of 10 cents per hour with commensurate increases for many of those in the lower salary brackets.

This is the important section:

> In addition to wages, Ontario mines generally provide extra benefits, varying from mine to mine according to circumstances, and applicable entirely at the discretion of the company. They include such assistances as group medical treatment plans, group insurance facilities, provision of housing below cost, pension plans, operation of company stores below cost, provision of mine clothing and a host of other advantages made available through company financial support in whole or in part of the cost involved.

I thought that, in view of the remarks made by the hon. member for Cape Breton South, I should bring these few details before the house in order to set the matter right. I know of no other industry, left alone, in which there is a better feeling between labour and management than in the mining industry. The management has faith in the men and the men do a good job and are loyal to their employers. Unfortunately there has been some trouble in northern Ontario, caused in the main by communist leaders who have come from the United States to disrupt the industry.

Mr. CLARENCE GILLIS (Cape Breton South): I had not intended taking any further part in this debate. Yesterday I thought that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) completely justified the measure before the house. I made a few observations on it and was prepared to allow the matter to rest there. As I suggested at that time, so long as the Minister of Finance has to play the game according to the rules as they stand today, and when he finds himself faced with a United States dollar crisis, that is about the only basis upon which this measure can be justified. It is unfortunate, however, that of the 245 members the mining companies have so many spokesmen in the house while the miners have so few. I suggest that their side of the story is not being told at all.

The hon. member for York South (Mr. Cockeram), who has provoked me into rising at this time, said that there was no other section of industry in Canada in which there were better internal relations, wherein there was greater mutual love, than between the miners and the mining companies of northern Ontario.

That is not my impression. The miners in the gold mining industry established the right to bargain with their employers only around 1941, after years and years of struggling and pleading merely for the right to form a collective bargaining agency and to have the right to sit around the conference table with the boss in order to get a fair share of the wealth which they produce; for in the final analysis it is the miner who digs the ore who produces all the wealth. After that struggle this government certified a bargaining agency for the gold mining industry of northern Ontario by recognizing the mine, metal and smelter workers' union as the legitimate bargaining body. During the war they arrived at agreements, and in my opinion they arrived at agreements largely because the federal government had jurisdiction in the field of labour and had some pretty aggressive conciliators. War made it necessary to have harmony in the industry, and the machinery of collective bargaining—democracy in industry is really what it adds up to—was established in the mining industry of northern Ontario.

I should, however, like the hon. member for York South to tell the house why it is that since the close of the war the operators in the gold mining industry of the north, for whom he argues, have refused to sign any kind of collective agreement. If at the present time the relationship is so agreeable between employer and employee, why is there not an agreement in the gold mining industry on wages and conditions?

It has been allowed to run out. The men have tried every reasonable means at their disposal to get a contract and so far no contract has been signed. At the same time the mine operators come to the government wanting a contract with the government in the form of a subsidy that will guarantee them a profit on their operations, not only on the operations underground but on freight rates and on almost every phase of the production, distribution and marketing of the product they turn out.

They want a signed agreement in the form of a bill from the federal government, and at the same time they refuse the man who digs the ore, the man who has to go underground, any kind of agreement that will guarantee him that his wages and his conditions in the future shall be such and such.

As I said yesterday, I think one of the first things the gold mining industry of the north country should be compelled to do, before any subsidy is paid to them by the taxpayers of Canada, is at least to allow in their industry the democracy which they preach so much to the employees who dig the wealth out of the ground and make it possible for the industry to carry on that operation.

That should be done and it has not been done, and that certainly does not bear out the argument advanced by the member for York South, that the relations are so harmonious between the gold mining industry of the north and the employees. They have done everything they can to frustrate the men who dig the gold in the north country. I know what I am talking about because I have been up there.

On the other hand, the statement the hon. member makes, that while there has been a little trouble up there, it is largely because of the infiltration of communists from the United States, is a statement that should be examined. That is only an excuse. That is an escape. That is not true. I am not saying the hon. member is making a false statement consciously, but I am saying he is handling the truth rather carelessly or is badly informed on the subject that he discusses. The mine, mill and smelter workers' union is a Canadian union. It has complete jurisdiction in matters of wage negotiations and so forth.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Officered by communists right through the picture.

Mr. GILLIS: Just a minute. The officers of that union in northern Ontario are Canadians who dig gold out of the ground in the north country and they are not communists. Perhaps the hardest fight that is being made in Canada right now against the machine which the hon. member characterizes as communist control from the United States, is being made by the miners of the north country who are in there now doing a tough slugging job to clean up a mess that was developed through no fault of their own. There was plenty of trouble there before these people came from the United States. Let hon. members' minds go back to Kirkland Lake and the battle that took place there for months and months.

Mr. COCKERAM: That was started from the United States.

Mr. GILLIS: It was not started from the United States.

Mr. COCKERAM: Tom McGuire.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. GILLIS: Tom McGuire came in there to help put that thing through. I was out there all through that.

Mr. LITTLE: Tom McGuire is a communist.

Mr. GILLIS: He is not.

Mr. COCKERAM: He was in those days.

Mr. LITTLE: He told me he was a communist. I can prove it.

Mr. GILLIS: He was only kidding you. I know Tom McGuire; I am no friend of the communist party and they are not friends of mine. Do not make any mistake about that. I have a fairly good idea of who is who in this country today.

Mr. LITTLE: So have I.

Mr. GILLIS: That fight took place in northern Ontario. What for? It was not over wages; it was not over conditions. That strike was for the right to sit around the conference table, for certification for their union.

Mr. LITTLE: There is no objection to that.

Mr. GILLIS: And McGuire came in there to help. These men were new. They were green at that time; and in my opinion they were taken for a ride in that strike by the gold mining industry in northern Ontario. I say that for this reason. Gold was a non-essential commodity during the war. Men were badly needed in other sections of industry across Canada for war purposes. A large percentage of the men had to be rooted out of the gold mining industry for that purpose. But instead of taking the responsibility of doing it themselves, the company and the government precipitated a strike, rooted the men out, practically scrapped the community and blamed it on the men. That is what happened at that time. That could not have been done to a union which was well organized and understood the tactics of those who wanted to scrap a community and blame it on somebody else. The men from Kirkland Lake were rooted out all across this country.

Nevertheless, after that fight for certification of their union, today in that north country, in that gold mining industry, the men are denied the right to a contract. If there is any section of the public which has some right to security, the right to know what their wages and their conditions are to be this month and next month, by means of an agreement with their employer, I think it is those who work in the mines. The hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) last night made certain remarks. He is a man who is quite familiar with the mining industry. He served for many years as the legal adviser to the united mine workers out in western Canada. He knows the score. Last night he said that this house was weeping too many salty tears over the life of the miner, that the miner had a wonderful life—once a miner, always a miner. I was a miner for twenty-six years and I would tell hon. members this. I have said it in the house before and I say it again. If I had my choice of going back to the mine or of putting on a uniform and fighting a war, I would put the uniform on and fight the war. That would be short; it would be quick; and I would have some fun while I was doing it. But if the hon. member for Calgary West thinks a miner's life is a nice one—and this applies equally to coal and gold, I suppose—

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I did not say it was a wonderful life. I said the other two things, but let us be accurate. I did not say that or anything like that.

Mr. GILLIS: Well, by implication.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I would not go down in a coal mine if you gave me the mine; that is, if I had to work in it.

Mr. GILLIS: I am glad to hear the hon. member for Calgary West say that. He says he would not go down in a coal mine if they gave it to him. I suppose that the same thing applies to a gold mine.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I have not been in one.

Mr. GILLIS: He is quite satisfied that it is a wonderful life for somebody else, and he tries to kid this house that we are weeping too many salty tears over the miners. I am on the side of the fellow who has to get out of bed at four o'clock in the morning, in the middle of the night, and wend his way out into these large mines, walk for hours, sweat all day, and come back again at night. Then the following week he goes out at three o'clock and he is back home again at twelve o'clock. Then next week he goes out on the graveyard shift.

Mr. CASE: May I ask one question?

Mr. GILLIS: If it is not a speech.

Mr. CASE: The men are not conscripted to go down in the mines, are they? There is freedom of choice, is there not?

Mr. GILLIS: I will answer that question. Yes, I would say they are conscripted. It is economic conscription. They are there by force of circumstances, not by choice.

An hon. MEMBER: The class war.

Mr. GILLIS: My hon. friend can construe it as the class war if he likes. That is the fact of the matter. If it is a class war, it is because the upper class imposes on those below—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. GILLIS: —who lack an opportunity to do something for themselves.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): Rubbish.

Mr. GILLIS: If it is a class war, that war was declared a long time ago by the upper strata of society.

An hon. MEMBER: Not in Canada.

Mr. GILLIS: It is merely a matter of attack from the top, in my opinion, on the fellow at the bottom, by definite means. I certainly cannot sit here and listen to the argument that the mining companies are angels with wings, that they are great humanitarians, that their hearts bleed for the men who work for them, because that is not the fact of the matter at all.

Mr. COCKERAM: They look after their men. I will take you up north and show you.

Mr. GILLIS: I have been up there. And I am going to stay on the ground until some kind of democracy is established in that industry. Anything I can do to help, I am going to do. As I suggested last night, if I were Minister of Finance I would send a wire to the northern Ontario mining companies, and I would say that it does not look so good, granting a subsidy which guarantees you certain profits on your operations while you deny a contract to the employees who work in that industry. Settle your wage question. How are you going to determine a subsidy when these people do not know next month or next year what their wage bill will be?

Mr. COCKERAM: They do too.

Mr. GILLIS: It is at least one-third of their total cost. That should be settled. Then you would know what you were doing. If there were a two-year contract in there, you could make some kind of appraisal of what the operation will cost. They should do that and do it immediately. If the taxpayers' money is to be spent, some form of welfare plan should be established in these heavy industries. As hon. members know, you can wend your way around this House of Commons until you are eighty or ninety, be slipped over to the other place and wheeled in in a wheel chair. But when you go into these heavy industries, at forty you are washed up. Fifteen hundred men were laid off in the mining industry of Nova Scotia within the last few months. They had reached the age of sixty-five. There is nothing for them. They are just out. In your north country today, in your mining industry and in your coal industry, the companies will not hire a man over forty years of age.

Mr. COCKERAM: That is nonsense.

Mr. GILLIS: Who said that?

Mr. COCKERAM: I did.

Mr. GILLIS: I am making that statement, and I challenge contradiction of it.

An hon. MEMBER: You have had it.

Mr. GILLIS: If you go to any mining section of Canada today and try to get employment, you face a medical doctor first, and you must be 100 per cent fit. If you are forty years of age, he will not even examine you; you are too old. That is the established practice today right across this country. That is so in your steel plants also. That has crept in since the end of the war. The hon. member for York South, checking balance sheets and buying stocks and bonds in an office on Bay street, is certainly not keeping in touch with actual conditions in the industry for which he is arguing here. At forty years of age you are out. You have no job. They will not hire you; you are too old.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Nonsense. I know personally dozens of men seventy years of age or more, still working in the coal mines.

Mr. MATTHEWS (Kootenay East): Shame.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Why shame?

Mr. MATTHEWS (Kootenay East): That a man seventy years of age should still have to work in a coal mine.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): They could buy out both you and me. They have plenty of money and are working because they like to do so.

Mr. MATTHEWS (Kootenay East): They are working because they have to, not because they want to.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. The hon. member for Cape Breton South has the floor.

Mr. GILLIS: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I enjoyed that little exchange.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): You may know one of them; his name is Joyce, and he is president of the union.

Mr. GILLIS: That may have been true until a year or so ago, but I know that last year the mining industry in Nova Scotia adopted that formula, that at forty years of age you are out. If you reach the age of sixty-five you are laid off, and the company pays you a small pension. That has been the system for a great many years in the north country. You undergo an examination, and you must be completely physically fit. If you reach the age of forty you are too old; they do not employ you.

So in this matter of welfare, having that in mind, since the Minister of Finance is going to pay millions of dollars from the public treasury in order to finance this industry—and I say "finance" advisedly because he has covered practically every phase of its operations—I think it not unreasonable to ask the gold mining companies to set aside a certain amount for the purpose of establishing a welfare fund under which a man who, because of disability or age, was laid off by the industry would at least have something on which to live. That is done in practically every other section of society. Many of the industries across Canada are doing that very thing today, but it is not done in that section of the country.

On this business of silicosis, the hon. member for York West—

Some hon. MEMBERS: York South.

Mr. GILLIS: York West or York East or York South, it does not make any difference; he is from Toronto anyway. That is a subject I do not want to go into, though I have done so here in the house on several occasions. I antagonized the compensation board in this province back in 1941 to the point that they wrote a brief and sent it to this house in an attempt to prove to hon. members that there was no such thing as silicosis. I had an argument with a medical man in the house. There is a medical man here at the present time. I have gone into this business of silicosis and its diagnosis and so on for a good many years. We fought for years in Nova Scotia to have it made a compensable disease and we finally won the battle; but proving that a man has silicosis is a difficult proposition. I got into it by fighting a claim with the Canadian pension commission. A man suffering from a chest condition had served overseas for a considerable time. Our contention was that the man was 100 per cent disabled; that he had developed tuberculosis on service, aggravated by coal and stone dust after coming back, and that he had a tubercular condition. The pension board said there was no such thing. Well, after checking around for some considerable time, I found out, on medical advice, that by stethoscope and X-ray it is almost impossible for any medical man to differentiate definitely between half a dozen chest conditions. Having that in mind, I went farther. What was to be done about the matter? Well, there is a drug known as libiatol which is injected into the bronchial tree, and the man is put in the sanatorium. I went through that in the case to which I am referring. We had an expert there in Halifax, Doctor Schinaveze; and in the final analysis, after an examination of this kind, he agreed with us. His report said the man had tuberculosis incurred about 1916, aggravated by coal and stone dust; and that man was given a 100 per cent pension.

Having that in mind, and having in mind the advice of medical men, to determine whether it is silicosis, tuberculosis or half a dozen other chest conditions with which hon. members are familiar and which I do not want to go into today, the only accurate test that can be made quickly is the test I have described. The hon. member for York West—

Some hon. MEMBERS: York South.

Mr. GILLIS: Well, the Toronto member—says they are doing a great deal of research into the matter. Certainly they are. They are doing research into almost everything, but not very much is coming from it. Here is a test that can be made quickly. It is a little more expensive than what they are doing now, but until this is done in every case I say they are not doing for the miners of the north country, or the miners of Nova Scotia either, what should be done to determine whether or not a man has silicosis. Putting it in the act and saying it is compensable, and then making a man go out and prove he has that disability, is not the sort of thing that should be done. If there is a test—and there is one, as I have just stated—that test should be made.

A man who develops that condition underground is placed in this position. He is examined by his doctors and they find some condition has developed in his chest. They take him out of the mine and put him on the surface. They leave him on the surface for two or three years, coughing his heart out, and in the final stages he becomes tubercular. That is not compensable. He passes on and his widow and orphan children have no protection. If in the first place there was a proper diagnosis and he was given compensation for that disability, there would be protection for his family when he passed on. As I told this house yesterday afternoon, in 1941 I read into the records of this house a will in which a man employed in the gold mining industry, suffering from silicosis, gave his body to his friend in order that, after he passed away, it might be dissected, to prove that he had this disability, so that his wife and family might be protected. There is no fair play.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): No, and it was not yesterday afternoon, either, when you told us the same story. I agree with you.

Mr. GILLIS: Well, until these injustices are wiped out in the matter of establishing a condition of that kind, I say the compensation board and the Ontario government are not doing what they should. If there are tests that can be made within reason—and there are—then those tests should be made, instead of a man being put on the surface and beaten out of his compensation. I am not saying that is done only in Ontario; that is the situation in every section of the mining industry. I personally know men in Nova Scotia who are on the road because of the same condition. A doctor says it is silicosis. The papers are sent to Doctor Riddell here in Ontario. He does not see the man; he sees the papers and the X-ray reports, and he says the man is not suffering from silicosis. But the man cannot work; he is on the street. He has no income, and that is not fair play. Until these things are wiped out, I do not believe the hon. member for York West—

An hon. MEMBER: York North.

Mr. GILLIS: —or York East—

Some hon. MEMBERS: York South.

Mr. GILLIS: —can stand in his place and say the mining industry in Canada is a great, humanitarian organization. I am going to vote for this measure to help out the Minister of Finance. I am sorry for him. He is a pretty good fellow, caught up in a pretty bad machine. He needs United States dollars. This old system, with the rules of the game as they are, makes him play poker in this way; and until the people of Canada are prepared to give him a mandate to use the financial structure of this country in another way, he will have to do it in this way. But I am strongly suggesting to him that he get in touch with the mining companies and that he say to them, "We are going to give you this money. We are going to do what we can to help you. But get together with your employees and take some of the smear off because of the fact that you are not playing ball. You have not democracy in your industry". Try to establish some kind of welfare scheme up there which will give these men some kind of encouragement for the future along the lines I have suggested.

Mr. J. M. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say just a word. I am stimulated to rise partly by what was said by the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) and partly by what has been said by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Cockeram).

Mr. COLDWELL: Good stimulation.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): My reason for rising is that the hon. member for Cape Breton South said it was a great pity that there were not enough spokesmen for the miners here. It so happens that in a small way I can speak for one miner on this question. The reason I want to do it is that my good friend the hon. member for Cape Breton South undertook when he was speaking to make some pretty sweeping statements about employers.

I do not suggest that all employers are made in heaven, or that they are all going to heaven. I am not suggesting for one moment that they are always doing what is right. But I dislike hearing anyone say that employers have done everything to frustrate their employees.

Mr. GILLIS: No.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Those are your words. I took them down.

Mr. GILLIS: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Let me make my speech. You can correct it later.

Mr. GILLIS: The hon. member is not quoting me accurately. I said the mining industry in northern Ontario did everything they could to frustrate their employees in securing collective bargaining.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): If you think that is a correction, all right. My little bit of experience—and it is small perhaps, but I suggest it is indicative of the situation—would show that the situation is not just exactly as our hon. friends would represent it.

Driving along the road not long ago, I happened to pick up a man, and it turned out that he was a miner. He began to talk to me about mining and, without any prompting from me at all, told me that in his mine they were very well treated indeed.

You will say, "Oh, that is only one mine". You will say it is only one man. I am not exaggerating this, nor am I asking anyone else to exaggerate it. I am just bringing this in because it goes to support what was said by the hon. member for York South.

I believe these questions with which we have to deal are difficult enough, and I would agree with many of the difficulties which my hon. friend has mentioned. But the point I make is this, that every time an attempt is made by any person to set class against class—I do not like that term "class"; let me say rather interest against interest—I say this deliberately, and I do not care what party he belongs to, he is following the communist line. That is communism. Wherever you get that attempt to create hatred, that is communism, and I defy anyone to deny it. And I say that anyone who takes that line need not be surprised if people accuse him of following the communist line.

I have just this to add. I object to people undertaking to say that those in certain occupations have less humanity than people in other occupations. They do not. I have had some little experience with labour. As a matter of fact my experience with labour was right down in Cape Breton South. I am bold enough to say that I and the people with whom I associated got along with labour very well, and it was not because we were different from other people. It was because we tried to be decent, and to tell them the truth. We tried to let them know about the business they were in, with the result we got 100 per cent support.

Then, coming to these people in the north country may I say that I do not doubt there are some of the difficulties the hon. member for Cape Breton South mentioned. But I feel that we in the House of Commons should try to restrain ourselves from suggesting that somehow or another there are some people who are wicked and others who are good, and that that is the reason we are in trouble.

Mr. WALTER LITTLE (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I feel that, coming from the north country, I should say a few words. I have lived in that north country for thirty-seven years; and when I say that I refer to the Kirkland Lake district. I know miners and I know mining just about as well as the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) does.

He has talked about men not wanting to work underground. I could tell him about a chap who worked in a mine right from grass roots until he was down 5,000 feet. The manager of that mine wanted the miner in question to come up to the surface and to work there for a while, but the miner did not want to come up. The manager insisted that it would do him good to get some sun for a while; and when the manager insisted too much the miner said, "Well, I can go to another mine and get work underground". That is an indication of how much that fellow liked working underground. The miner about whom I am speaking still works at the same mine, although I suppose that today he is at least sixty-five years of age. He does not now work underground, but acts as night-watchman.

Then, the hon. member referred to McGuire. I know McGuire well. In company with another man he came into my office one day, and he told me in my office that he was a communist, and that he was not ashamed of it. I will go before any judge in the country or take an affidavit to that effect against Mr. McGuire, and also have the other man called, if that is necessary. There is no use in rising in the House of Commons and trying to protect these fellows when they say they are communists. Reid Robinson says he is not, so we cannot do anything about that. But when a man tells one frankly that he is a communist, then not much more can be said about him.

Mr. GILLIS: McGuire is not in this country now.

Mr. LITTLE: I know he is not; and I wish Reid Robinson was not here either.

The hon. member has talked about mine managers. I have had business with mine managers for thirty-seven years. I hauled stuff into that country until such time as the railroad went in, and I had to deal with mine managers. I had to make many contracts and agreements with them, and I can say I got along well with them. I never had a mine manager act in a mean way toward me, or in a way different from that in which other men would have acted. They are businessmen, just the same as other men who are in business. They will try to get the best bargain they can; but I have always found them fair about it.

I can tell the house that when war broke out prices increased to a great extent in that district, much higher than they are today. We were paying $45 a ton for hay and $5.25 a bag for western oats. I was receiving $7 a day; I was paying my men $4.50 and it cost me $2.50 a day to feed my horses. I went to the mine managers and laid my cards on the table. They said to me, "Say what you want and, if it is fair, we will give it to you." Surely that was fair enough.

I do not like to hear men rise in the House of Commons and speak as the hon. member for Cape Breton South has done, and to talk as he has about mine managers. They are not angels, I know; but—

Mr. GILLIS: I was not talking about mine managers. I was talking about operators.

Mr. LITTLE: Operators, then, if you like.

Mr. GILLIS: A mine manager is, himself, an employee.

Mr. LITTLE: He is an operator.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY

FREIGHT RATES—INCREASES ORDERED BY TRANSPORT BOARD—AMENDMENT, MR. COLDWELL

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I regret I have to do what I intend to do this afternoon. I had no intention of doing it when I came to the house, but, in view of the statement made by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) this afternoon, I wish to say something about his announcement. I feel that in endeavouring to place the review of the freight rates and their equalization before the board of transport commissioners again he is simply shelving the question for a couple of years, during which time the people of Canada will have exceedingly high rates inflicted upon them, and that this house should not tolerate the delay.

This matter, as has been pointed out by various hon. members on all sides of the house, including the government side, is one which is squarely on the doorstep of the government itself. I believe that, in view of the serious effects to our economy, this house should have an opportunity of expressing an opinion about what the government proposes to do and, indeed, about what the government has failed to do. I propose to give the house that opportunity, for I am going to move an amendment to the motion to go into supply. My amendment, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is:

That all the words after the word "that" to the end of the question be deleted and the following be substituted therefor:

"this house is of the opinion that the failure of the government to defer the imposition of the increases in freight rates recently authorized by the board of transport commissioners is inimical to the best interests of the people of Canada; further this house is of the opinion that the government should reconsider this matter and take action to prevent the proposed increases from coming into effect at this time."

The reference again to the board of transport commissioners will be a reference on the basis of certain economic considerations; for that, I take it, is what the equalization of freight rates really involves. The speech which I made on Monday afternoon did not deal with economic considerations. It dealt primarily with political considerations; that is to say, on the effects which the board order would have on various areas of Canada in relation to other areas within our country. I said it was a threat to the continuance of good relationships between the various regions of Canada. I said it might undermine the very basis of confederation upon which this country was founded. I said it would cause discontent because it would impose upon groups of people who live in the more remote areas a charge which was unfair when that imposition was considered in relation to its effect on people who live in other areas in Canada. I said the judgment of the board of transport commissioners on the basis of cold railroad economics was unjust, unfair, and prejudicial to people who live, as I put it, in the maritimes, in British Columbia and in the prairie provinces.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) has already, I believe, received protests from seven premiers of seven provinces of Canada asking that the new rates be not permitted to go into effect until seven of the nine federated provinces of Canada shall have had an opportunity of placing their representations before the authority which has the right and the obligation to make the final decision in this matter—the federal cabinet of this country.

I say, Mr. Speaker, this house should have the opportunity of expressing itself on this issue. While I regret very much having to delay our going into supply to provide an opportunity which we all want to discuss external affairs on Monday next, this issue is of such importance to the whole of Canada that I believe it should be discussed and decided by the house. I believe in responsible government. I believe that the government of this country should be responsible to this house, just as in turn we are responsible to the people of Canada.

I realize that the amendment which I have moved to the motion to go into supply and which I believe to be entirely in order may mean a vote of want of confidence in the government because of the action it has taken today. I realize what may flow from that vote if the government is defeated, but I want to say to the government that if those consequences should flow this question is of such vital importance to the people of Canada that it should be decided by the people of Canada if necessary.

In moving the amendment, I make it abundantly clear that I believe that this house must accept the responsibility of saying to the government: These rates, unjust, unfair and discriminatory, prejudicial to various parts of Canada, should not go into effect at this time. The government in bringing down the order in council this afternoon, merely to refer again to the same tribunal the question of the equalization of rates, is simply dodging an issue which it must face squarely.

[Mr. Coldwell.]

I do not propose to enter into a long debate. I made the case I intended to make on Monday afternoon. But this is a grievance which the people of Canada have, and it is a grievance which should not only be aired but placed squarely before the government so that there can be no dodging of the issue. I have moved the amendment, Mr. Speaker, because I want parliament to decide this issue now.

Mr. J. H. BLACKMORE (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) has done a public service to the people of Canada in raising this question at this time, and I wish to associate myself with what he has said. I would draw the attention of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) and all the members of the cabinet to the very serious situation which they have allowed to develop during the last few days. I desire to be very moderate in the language I use on this occasion, but it is a very serious occasion. I believe one would be justified in saying that the government has been guilty of the complete abnegation of democracy in this dominion during the last few days. The dominion government represents the provinces of the Dominion of Canada. The government originally in Ottawa was set in Ottawa by the provinces of Canada to act as an agent for them. Seven of the nine provinces of Canada have on several occasions expressed the strongest disapproval of increasing freight rates in the Dominion of Canada at the present time, and since the judgment of the board was announced increasing freight rates by 21 per cent, I understand that every one of those seven provinces has expressed its disapproval once more. The government in its announcement today has chosen to ride roughshod over the expressed opinion of seven of the sovereign provinces of the Dominion of Canada. That is no small matter, and it will lead to plenty of trouble. The government has apparently developed the idea that it can kick the people of Canada around whichever way it chooses. We have seen that attitude in existence on several occasions in the last few years. The people of Canada are becoming tired of being kicked around. The government seems to have the idea that there is no recourse, that a people like the people of the maritimes and the people of the west simply must take whatever the dominion government chooses to give them and like it. There are means to which these people can have recourse. I should like to warn the members of the government not to drive these people too far. If we once become convinced in the western provinces that it is impossible to live with Ontario and Quebec we shall find some means of doing another thing.

The people of this dominion must bear in mind that western Canadians are Canadians and are entitled to equal treatment. They do not consist of slaves or menials or peasants; they consist of free men, descendants of free men with free traditions, and if they cannot accomplish the desires of their hearts in the way of fair government by sending representatives to Ottawa, Mr. Speaker, they will be tempted to send representatives somewhere else. That is just how serious it is. And if the members of the cabinet have not had that impressed on them I urge them to take my words seriously because I mean every syllable of what I am saying. Men in my constituency, in my province and in several others are talking in just such terms as that.

Not only has the government disregarded the expressed will of seven sovereign provinces in this dominion, but it has completely disregarded the pleas and requests of organizations of producers from coast to coast in this nation. Farmers' organizations and organizations of producers of every kind have sent in requests. Why, one would think these people were babes whispering in a windstorm for all the attention the dominion government gives to what they say.

May I say one more striking thing? I will wager, Mr. Speaker, that if hon. members were freed from party consideration seventy-five per cent of them would vote against the freight rate increase. I will go farther than that; I will wager that sixty per cent of the present Liberal members of this house, if they were freed from party affiliations, would vote solidly against this increase. Therefore what is the government doing when it is disregarding the will of the members of this house? If it is not abrogating democracy, I do not know where one would go to find it. Is there any way in the world in which the will of the Dominion of Canada can be made to reach into the minds of the men who occupy the treasury benches today?

Mr. KNOWLES: Carry this amendment, and you will defeat the government.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Perhaps it would not be wise for me to go into many of the discriminations in the present freight structure. Years ago, before the war broke out, I used to say a great many hard things and cite many serious facts, all bearing on this matter. My province, Alberta, happens to be at the apex. They get us going and coming, and they get us to the extreme going and coming. We know what these freight rates mean to the people. I do not believe it would be well for me to elaborate on this discrimination just now, since it has been discussed considerably during the last two or three days, but there is in the matter of the freight rate structure from coast to coast in this country a discrimination which stands as a condemnation of any government that permits these discriminations to continue; and to tell us that all the government proposes to do is to turn the problem over again to the board of transport commissioners is to insult us. Why, that group of gentlemen have been in charge of the railway affairs of this country for ten or fifteen years. I do not know where one would go to find a group of men who have made a more tragic mess of their task than these men have. To turn this problem back to them under these circumstances is far far short of being good enough.

I was astonished when the minister made his announcement this afternoon. If there is to be an investigation of the inequities of the freight rate structure in this country, why not have it first and then let the increase be put on if it is found necessary. Just imagine forcing the people all over this dominion to suffer at the present time from the inequities of this freight rate structure for two or three years more, while the board of transport commissioners leisurely proceeds to examine the situation and discovers the abuses which it already knows exist!

I am not going to say any more at the present time. I know there are a good many hon. members who wish to express their feelings in the same way as I have. I am going to cut my remarks short, but I will say that the members of my group will support the amendment of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, and they will support it with the fervent wish that this dominion government be defeated at once. These people have acted as tyrants in this country long enough. I do not know that the ordinary members of the government are at fault; I do not know who is at fault; but there are certain people in the government at the present time whom the Liberal government must discipline, who have to be given to understand that they are the servants of the people and not the masters; and the government might as well start on these gentlemen first, because I have the suspicion that the members of the party will go to work on them if the cabinet does not. As soon as the cabinet discovers who the men are who are trying to run this country and have made such a terrible mess of it, it will be able to decide to do something which will enable this dominion to have decent government. People are simply crying out in anguish from coast to coast because of the things from which they are suffering.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I hear some hon. members saying "Oh, oh." Don't say "Oh, oh" too often. Remember what I have said. I could go to the reading room and bring back resolutions from three meetings in western Canada calling for secession from eastern Canada.

Mr. GRANT: You said that before the last election.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Some of these are going to say it and mean it as the American colonies did.

Mr. GRANT: You said that before the last election.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I do not know whether I said it before the last election or not. If I did, I meant it and there was plenty of reason for it. The point I wish to make is this: I fervently hope that the government will be defeated so that we can have some sort of chance to give this country democratic government.

Mr. A. L. SMITH (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I just bought two pairs of new glasses; I think I had better give you one pair of them. I am here, really I am, and I want to join in this debate for a number of reasons. My first reason is to try to review the actual situation that we are up against and perhaps take away some of the emotionalism which has characterized the debate up to the present time. I may say that I regret the statements made by my old and honourable friend, the member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore), when he was talking about secession, because, although he did not use that word, that is exactly what he was talking about. That will not help the situation at the present time.

I wish to say something about railway rates, and may I first repeat what I said in this House of Commons the first year I was here? On many occasions I have acted for the railways professionally. Therefore I wish the house, in judging anything I may say, to take that fact into consideration. It may be said that I have some self-interest. At any rate, I wish to make it plain that I have had that connection. Perhaps I should add that I acted for the western coal people and the Alberta government in a rate-finding matter where I was opposed by both railways, so that I have had a bit of experience on both sides.

What is the history of rate-making in this dominion? We built these railways, and at that time the railways charged exactly what they pleased for the freight services which they were rendering. From that time on, everything has been based upon the revenues derived from freight, while very little regard has been had to passenger service, including the hotels, which for a long time were regarded from the point of view of rate-making purposes largely as an advertising lead for the freight carrying business of the roads.

Then we built other railways and competition then limited the rates. And in every case where there was a dual service to any point it reduced those rates. But while that was done, no reductions were ever made in carrying freight to points where there was no competitive rail.

The next event of major importance was the opening of the Panama canal, which introduced into this subject the first major difference, and that was that rates were altered in order to meet water competition from eastern Canada through the canal and around to Vancouver. That was the second major event which took place.

The third thing that happened was the building of good roads in eastern Canada—I mean the middle east here—and then we had truck competition, which directly affected freight rates to points where this competition could operate by way of roads.

I mention these things for this reason, that when we start dealing with railway rates it is necessary to find out exactly what the present crazy-quilt structure is in connection with our present rates. I am not using that word in any derogatory or contemptuous way, because it is admitted by everybody that it is a crazy-quilt structure. In other words, there is no railway in the dominion today that can tell you how much it costs to haul a ton of goods from here to there. They cannot do so because the structure has not been built in that way.

On one occasion before the railway board, when Mr. Justice Fullerton was the chairman, we spent some time in endeavouring to find out what it cost to haul a ton of coal from Drumheller or Edmonton or Lethbridge to North Bay and to Toronto. In order to get someone who knew how that might be done, they imported a man who was known as a railway cost accountant. At that time there were only five on the continent and they were all employed by the interstate commerce commission. It was there they received their training because the interstate commerce commission had to a very large extent gone into a new system of trying to find out what costs were and then adding something for the operation. That must have been a dozen years ago that I am speaking of, and to my knowledge nothing has ever been done to further studies which I consider necessary along lines of that description.

We now come to the present time. We find that the board of transport commissioners have sat, and to me it is a matter of great regret that they either did not deal with or were not permitted to deal with the question of equalization. I think anyone who wants to be fair will admit that, having regard to present conditions, the railways need more money to operate. Anyone who has not had his charges raised in ten years, granted that there was some reason in them at that time, must have, it seems obvious to me, more financial return to permit operations to be carried on.

I need only point to the Canadian National deficit. I do not know whether it was announced in the house, but I saw it in the newspapers within the last month or so. It is a very high figure—

Mr. CHEVRIER: Twenty-three millions.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): It proves that the railway which we ourselves own is certainly not operating at a profit and in fact has not enough revenue to allow it merely to break even. I have no intention of discussing that further, but we come to this position, and I have been a believer in this for a long time. Granted that they need this money, they do not need to get it all in one place, namely in the maritime provinces and western Canada.

What is the situation with respect to freight? I admit that this will be a puzzler to the board or to the government or to anyone else. While we have had an over-all increase of 21 per cent, I know perfectly well that in this part of Canada, where there is real truck competition, they will never get it. If they do, they will lose their business to the trucks. That is a simple economic statement which is absolutely true. I do not, of course, mean all the business. Some things do not lend themselves to movement by trucks. But trucks are growing. The other day I was on the road and I saw them carrying five or six motorcars each. At one time these cars were all carried by the railways in western Canada. I do not know whether it is true of the maritimes, but they are still carried out there by rail.

What does that mean? Let us assume that this over-all 21 per cent is the proper figure and that that is what is required to put these people on a healthy operating basis. It means that that sum which is necessary, or whatever portion of that sum may be raised, owing to real practical conditions, the practical problems of competition in transportation, will be paid by western Canada and by the maritime provinces.

I submit this therefore. I had no idea that this motion was to be moved or that there would be a debate, but I am firmly convinced that what we need is a complete overhauling of the structure, a complete change in the basis upon which it was built, which, of course, involves equalization between western and eastern rates.

I am not one of those who think, in fact I do not believe that anybody does think, the provinces of Ontario and Quebec are deliberately trying to bleed us. I do not think they are deliberately doing anything of the kind, but at the present moment that thought is entering into this situation. I have been down east a number of times and have been told by the people of Ontario that Ontario is the old milch cow and that we are still feeding on this milch cow. I have not heard that so much lately and I am glad I have not. I can refute it at any time. It is no problem at all.

I well remember working in a law office as a student in the years 1907, 1908 and 1909. I was a final year student. I was paid the magnificent or munificent sum of $25 a month, which is not quite as much as is received by the miners about whom the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) is so greatly worried. All I did then was to make out mortgages on land, 90 per cent of them on farm land. I never drew a mortgage in the hundreds and hundreds which I wrote—we could not typewrite them under the law, in those days; they had to be written by hand, those private portions—nor did I see one at less than eight per cent; and I drew many at nine per cent. Then we had tough times in western Canada. We had foreclosures and all that sort of thing.

In eastern Canada the comparable interest rate for the kind of loan I am speaking of was five per cent and not above six per cent. In other words, there was at least a two per cent or three per cent differential. The answer that was given was a sound one. It was that this is new country, the risk is greater; therefore the principle of the larger return applies on account of that risk. What happened? The west paid its interest for a long time and paid it at eight per cent and at nine per cent. Then we had drought and trouble, and we did not get our crops; so we had foreclosures and so on. Then we were told about the tremendous losses made by the eastern loan companies because they had been foolish enough to lend their money in western Canada. Mr. Speaker, they never lost a cent in the aggregate. If, when going into a risky venture they would make the ordinary business move that a cobbler become a shoemaker would make, they would set up a reserve. If there were more risks, he would set up his reserve. And if that reserve, on the differential in the interest rate, had been set up as it should have been, instead of being put into large buildings and investments of one kind or another, the people who lent money in western Canada on real estate would not have been out one five-cent piece. So we are not so hard on the old milch cow as some people in this eastern part of the country seem to think.

Mr. HOMUTH: The old cow does not object.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I think I made a remark once before and used the wrong word. But any cows I have known had only four good udders. I think the people in the country here have kept at those four pretty well and we have been left with decoys.

Mr. MANROSS: That is "moosic" of an udder kind.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I now turn to an anomaly which has arisen, and which I think is simply crying out for a remedy. I shall refer to Fort William, and this is in May, 1945; that is the date of this little pamphlet I have in my hand. The differential is given there. For example, the standard rate for first-class freight east of Fort William-Port Arthur is fifty-eight cents for carrying 100 pounds 100 miles. West of Fort William the first-class rate is sixty-five cents for the same thing. Then we have a tapering off of the rate. In the east it tapers a good deal faster and the percentage is much higher than the tapering of the rate west of there. It is not so much west of Fort William that the railways have their difficulties and lose their money. It is going around the north shore of lake Superior where there is no freight accumulating and no additional freight burden is given to the railways that go through that rocky country. While it is true that the country is rocky, it is now showing something in the way of metals.

To my hon. friends from British Columbia who think they are the people who are being gored at the present time with respect to their mountain differential and so on, I want to give a few figures which they can contemplate over the evening or any other time they wish. This is because of competition of water-borne traffic. As I say, I am speaking of the year 1945, but I certainly have not seen anything in the newspapers to indicate any change at all in connection with the figures I am using. We will take a number of commodities as examples, as they are given in this pamphlet, with the rates:

Commodity	Montreal-Vancouver	Montreal-Calgary
Calcium phosphate	$0.75	$2.34½
Ammonia	1.25	2.33½
Glassware	1.34	1.98
Window glass	1.00	1.98
Paint and varnish	1.25	1.98
Barbed wire	.75	1.98
Hardware and tools ...	1.25	1.98

The rates are also given for boots and shoes, iron pipe, structural steel, cotton dry goods and canned goods, so I am not talking about strange articles that get on a train once in a while; I am talking about commodities which are in everyday use. I would ask hon. members to remember this. For certain points in Alberta you can ship into Vancouver and back again at a lower rate than you can ship direct. The town of Holden is one place I have in mind, which town is sixty miles from Edmonton; and I have the exact figures here if anyone is interested in them.

I talked in the beginning about the introduction of some new principle in our freight rate structure. I want to say that in the United States of America there is a case dealing with the rates. I have forgotten the name of it, but it is known generally as the Spokane rates case. The Spokane case decided one thing, and I think this might well be adopted as a principle in any new rate structure which we may have. That case decided, and it is the law in the United States, that you cannot on the same line of railway charge a lesser sum for the long haul than you do at any point on that line. That seems to me to be a sensible decision and would do a great deal indeed to get us out of our present predicament. It seems to me the adoption of that principle is something which should be considered by whatever body may be dealing with this matter.

I do not think it is sufficient to have an accident of geography govern in the matter. You have a flat plain here, we will say, where you can build roads. I shall give you another example. Edmonton is about the same distance from Drumheller as it is from Cadomin. You go west out of Edmonton to Edson, and you go down what we call the coal branch to Cadomin. The other way is the direct line. As a matter of fact, from Edmonton you go east to Tofield and down to Drumheller. But between Edson and Cadomin you are there in the mountains and there is no road whatever to Drumheller; from Edmonton there is a good highway. I took the matter up. I am sorry the hon. member for Cape Breton South has left the chamber, because I want him to know that I have tried to do something for the miners. The people in Cadomin thought that the rate situation was affecting their cost of living, as it was. We took a tub of ice cream as a sample. I went to the freight people of the railroad and found out the difference. I am not going to give the figures from memory, but the difference was considerable; in fact I think the one rate was almost double for the same haul. I asked why this should be; and to prove that I have not been talking nonsense about how the rate structure is made, they told me it was because of the truck competition between Edmonton and Drumheller.

It does seem to me that in this country we should not have a rate structure built on such shifting sands, such changeable conditions as I have outlined. Now the government of Alberta is building that road, and of course the freight and package rates will drop right down, so that eventually I am quite sure we shall have a position similar to what we would have if we were shipping to Drumheller, let us say.

What is the answer to this whole problem? I repeat that I do not think we can expect the railways to carry on when for the last ten years they have had no increase in their rates.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Not since 1920.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Then it is much longer than I said. I do not think in this House of Commons we are the kind of people who would say they just must do this. Wages and all other costs are rising. I do not want to speak of wages only, though I did notice that if he was correctly reported in the newspapers Mr. Mosher said the increase was not enough because the men are at present seeking an increase, and I know a board has been sitting in Montreal dealing with that very matter. Mr. Mosher said the increase was not sufficient to give the men the additional wages to which they thought they were entitled. We cannot just brush off these things. I can see that the minister has a tough problem, and I do not know how he is going to deal with it. I am afraid I have not been a great deal of help, though I have tried to discuss the matter fairly and without pointing at or naming anyone else. But I do say there is not much use in monkeying with the rates, allowing or refusing increases, without at the same time ironing out the inequalities which exist. Someone may say, what about the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, which took no part before this board in those proceedings which were a boon to my profession; if I had not been in the House of Commons I might have been in them myself? As I say, however, that is a situation which really needs to be remedied.

But supposing we refuse this application today. What will it mean? We are going to pay the Canadian National deficit anyway. We are paying $23,000,000 for this year, one of the biggest years they have ever known. If they do not get more revenue from the people with whom they deal and for whom they transport goods we shall have to pay the difference from the taxes of the people of Canada. It is just as plain as that; there can be no doubt whatever about it.

Then what should we do? I agree with much that has already been said, particularly the remarks of the hon. member for Lethbridge. I do not consider it fair to the people, nor do I consider it fair to the board of transport commissioners themselves, that they should be asked to accept the directive which has been issued. I know some of those men; in fact the chairman is a distant relative by marriage. I know that a person sitting in a judicial position, who appreciates the responsibilities that position carries, does not want to be placed in a position where he might be even suspected of reviewing something he has already done. That just does not belong in the administration of justice, or the administration of law if some people like that word better.

In my opinion our great and main problem is equalization, though I find it very difficult to see that we in the west will be helped substantially when you get to the end of that road, when I know, or at least I think I know, that if the railway companies meet truck competition here in the east they will have to do so at a lower rate than whatever horizontal advance may be permitted in the general rates. As I have said, I appreciate that it is a difficult problem, but I am going to go farther and say I think it is a responsibility the government must assume. More than that, it is a responsibility this House of Commons must assume. While some of us come from one part of the country and others come from another, I think this house can shake off sectionalism in a matter of this kind. Surely we do not want to buy votes in the places where we live because we are helping people purely in a financial way, while on the other hand we realize that some increase may be necessary. This may mean the profit making, if you like, and the better operation of our railways; and heaven knows they are far enough behind now. For example, in passenger service they do not even compare with the trains across the line. But surely we can say we believe this is right. Did it ever occur to anyone in this house to think what would happen to the economy of this country if both the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian National went broke? Let us not blind ourselves to the real situation.

As I said, equalization is the main problem. I know we in the west and you in the maritimes are carrying too much of the load now; and I know if we do not have equalization, when this is over we shall be carrying not only more of the load but a greater percentage of the load, which is utterly unfair. I am not going to secede with my good friend the hon. member for Lethbridge; but, though I hate superlatives, I say I think the equalization of freight rates is one of the most urgent matters to be undertaken in this country. If they are equal, who can complain? If they are discriminatory, as they are now, they sow disunity; and as the hon. member for Lethbridge said, disunity is growing in the part of the country from which we come.

Mr. KARL HOMUTH (Waterloo South): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Mr. HOMUTH: Don't get in too great a rush. I agree wholeheartedly with what has been said by my colleague the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith); and in his summation of the situation I think he has left no doubt in the minds of hon. members of this house as to where our party stands with respect to the question of freight rates. Let me reiterate what I said the other day, that the responsibility for the elimination of discrimination in freight rates rests with the government, or with this house if you like that better; after all, the government is pretty well the house, and we must accept that fact. Here we have a board set up to hear a certain case. It is in the position of a judge, a tribunal to hear arguments for and against a certain matter. Let me repeat what I said the other day, that the best accountants and the best legal minds in the various provinces were chosen to place this question before that tribunal. They did so. As a result of what they brought forth, the board made a decision.

Members in the house from various sections of the country, east and west, have seen fit to take Ontario and Quebec to task because those provinces were not represented at the hearings. I would say that if those governments had had anything at stake in the hearings they would have been represented.

Mr. ISNOR: Would the hon. member—

[Mr. Smith (Calgary West).]

Mr. HOMUTH: Let me say to the hon. member from Nova Scotia that the people there felt they had something at stake, with the result that they were represented. Ontario and Quebec, on the other hand, were not. But the fact of their attitude and the further fact that they were not represented do not mean that the people of Ontario and Quebec are less union-minded than the people in other provinces. We are just as much interested in this national union as any people could be.

I look back over the years and I can remember various situations which developed where help was needed either in the east or in the west. Never once in the years I have sat in the House of Commons have I heard a member from Ontario or Quebec deny to the other provinces of Canada anything we thought was in the best interests of the country. Never have I heard a member from Ontario or Quebec in the days of depression say we should not have done this or have done that for the wheat farmers in the drought areas of western Canada.

I have found that in the House of Commons members have been willing to bury their differences, so far as geographical position was concerned; I have found they have been only too willing to do anything which would unite more solidly than ever the various provinces. So I say, when hon. members criticize the two central provinces they are doing something to create national disunity rather than to build unity in Canada.

Let us deal with the problem in a big and broad way, considering what is best and in the interests of the country. Again I say: Certainly there are discriminatory rates. I have no hesitation in saying I do not think a man who lives in Lethbridge, Regina or Edmonton should have to pay $200 or $250 more for a Chevrolet than I pay for one in Ontario.

Mr. BLACKMORE: That is the way to talk.

Mr. HOMUTH: I have no hesitation in saying that perhaps the burden is not proportionately distributed across the country. But that was not the question placed before the board of transport commissioners. The question they had to decide was: Do the railways need more money in order to carry on? Their judgment was that those railways needed 21 per cent more.

The question of discrimination is one of government policy. The other day the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) said the board was a creature of parliament. It is a creature of the government which appointed it—the present government. It is not a creature of parliament at all. I say it is the creature of the majority of members in parliament, the majority which constitutes the government of the day. If the government is not prepared to bring in legislation such as would eliminate this discrimination in freight rates, then surely we cannot blame the board of transport commissioners or the provinces of Ontario or Quebec. We must place the blame where it belongs, and that is on the government. They are the ones who should amend the Railway Act, so that this discrimination will be ended, so that a proper share of the burden of freight rates will be distributed across the whole country, and so that the per capita responsibility in respect of freight rates will be better equalized.

When I read the amendment offered by the leader of the C.C.F. (Mr. Coldwell) I agree with my colleague the hon. member for Calgary West when he says that we cannot say to the board, after those months and months of careful consideration, and after all the money and time that have been spent in placing the facts before it, "You must reconsider your decision. The government is now going to take the power to say that the decision shall not come into force." Surely we would look ridiculous if we were to do anything like that, particularly when, as the minister has said, the board is the creature of parliament or, as I say, of the government.

But the government has every right to say, "We will reconsider the Railway Act; we will reconsider the question of the equalization of freight rates, and their equal distribution across the country." If the government does that I think we shall have brought to an end this unfortunate situation in which we find men from the maritimes and the west attacking the two central provinces, and leaving the impression across the country that the two central provinces are milking the rest of the country in the matter of freight rates.

This question is not the responsibility of the central provinces at all. They do not make the rates, nor do they appoint the board of transport commissioners. It just happens that Ontario and Quebec are situated as they are, and that the question of freight rates is one entirely within federal jurisdiction and one over which the provinces have no control.

On motion of Mr. Homuth the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. GRAYDON: What is the business for tomorrow?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Tomorrow we shall take up second reading of Bill No. 195 concerning the investigation, conciliation and settlement of industrial disputes. Following that, we shall take second reading of Bill No. 196, to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act; then the resolution standing in the name of the Secretary of State for the introduction of a bill to amend the elections act. Following that, we shall consider the resolution standing in the name of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, having for its purpose the introduction of a bill to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act, and the order in the name of the Minister of Trade and Commerce for the second reading of Bill No. 138, to amend the Export and Import Permits Act.

Mr. COLDWELL: When will this debate be resumed?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: We shall now have to consider what would be the convenient time to resume this debate. Of course the debate on external affairs cannot go on until this debate has been disposed of.

Mr. COLDWELL: I understand that, and I regret it.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, April 8, 1948

The house met at three o'clock.

PRIVILEGE

MR. KNOWLES—PRICES CHARGED BY KING'S PRINTER FOR REPRINTS OF MEMBERS' SPEECHES

Mr. STANLEY KNOWLES (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, a few weeks ago I placed with the king's printer an order for 4,000 copies of a twelve-page Hansard reprint. Before doing so I consulted the schedule of rates for reprints furnished to members of parliament over the signature of the king's printer under date of December 1, 1947. From that schedule I learned that my order would cost $46.

Mr. MacKINNON: Cheap.

An hon. MEMBER: Too much money.

An hon. MEMBER: It was not worth it.

Mr. KNOWLES: The replies I am getting from those to whom I sent the speech indicate that it was worth much more. However, under date of April 2, I received a bill from the king's printer for this order in the amount of $62.72.

Mr. MITCHELL: Hear, hear.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. KNOWLES: I am glad to note that the increased value of my speech is recognized. When I complained about this increase, Mr. Speaker, I was told to look at the statement made in the House of Commons on February 25 by the Secretary of State. The relevant sentence is this, as it appears at page 1610 of Hansard:

> Parliament has left it to the king's printer, under the provisions of the Printing and Stationery Act, to set such charges as he deems necessary to meet the cost of printing members' orders for reprints of speeches contained in Hansard.

Mr. McCANN: So what?

Mr. KNOWLES: The king's printer had fixed these charges and furnished to members a printed card setting out the rates. No revision of the rates has since been furnished to us, and I contend that it is high-handed of the king's printer to act in this way.

EXCHANGE OF NOTES

CANADA-UNITED STATES—LAND LINE COMMUNICATIONS BETWEEN EDMONTON AND FAIRBANKS

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I desire to lay on the table exchange of notes between Canada and the United States of America constituting an agreement concerning the operation and maintenance of the land line communications system between Edmonton, Alberta and Fairbanks, Alaska.

PRICES

CHANGE IN PERSONNEL OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport) moved:

> That the name of Mr. Thatcher be substituted for that of Mr. MacInnis on the special committee on prices.

Motion agreed to.

FREIGHT RATES

FEED GRAIN—EXTENSION OF PROVISION FOR PAYMENT OF FREIGHT EAST FROM FORT WILLIAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. L. DOUGLAS (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Does the government intend to pay freight on feed grains east from Fort William beyond July 31, 1948?

Right Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): The government has decided to extend, from July 31, 1948, to July 31, 1949, the period over which the terms of the order in council apply, providing for the payment of freight on feed grain east from Fort William.

INCREASES ORDERED BY TRANSPORT BOARD—OUT-OF-LINE AND BACK HAULS

Mr. R. R. KNIGHT (Saskatoon City): I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Transport. I sent him notice of it, together with a copy of a telegram on which the question is based. Is it correct that the railways are interpreting the order to increase freight rates as covering what are technically known as stop-off, out-of-line and back hauls? If so, does the minister agree with such interpretation?

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport): I thank the hon. gentleman for having sent me a copy of the telegram which he received from the commissioner of the Saskatoon board of trade. I received a similar telegram. With reference to what are known as stop-offs, these are not freight rates. They are services which were specifically covered in the application made by the railways to the board and which are specifically mentioned in the order of the board. So far as out-of-line and back hauls are concerned, the question whether the prohibition against increasing rates on grain would apply to back hauls on grain would appear to be a matter of clarification or interpretation by the board, and I am so advising the commissioner of the Saskatoon board of trade. I am informing him that if he wishes to make application I shall facilitate it for him.

The second question was: Does the minister agree with such interpretation? The answer is that since this is a matter for clarification or interpretation by the board, the minister does not express an opinion.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

DEEPSEA SHIPOWNERS AND DECK, ENGINEERING AND WIRELESS OPERATORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. CLARENCE GILLIS (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to address a question to the Minister of Labour? It arises out of a telegram received from the merchants service guild, communications association, Halifax, Nova Scotia, and it has to do with officers and other personnel who were affected by the strike with the Canadian shipping companies. Has the minister been advised that they have accepted the McNiven report as a basis for settlement of the strike, with the proviso that the officers affected will be returned to the posts they held previous to the strike? Can the minister inform the house whether his department has any statement to make in that connection?

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): Similar inquiries having been made of myself by the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. Sinclair), the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Isnor) and the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Dickey), I would say that the official position has not changed from that outlined in my statement appearing on pages 2668-9 and 2670 of the House of Commons debates of April 6, 1948. That is to say, no settlement of a general nature has been made.

[Mr. Knight.]

Agreements have been consummated between the Federal Commerce and Navigation Company Limited and the Elder-Dempster Company Limited, and the three unions involved in the strike, and the ships of these two companies are sailing. In both cases the companies have agreed to implement Mr. Justice McNiven's recommendations in full, and in the case of the first-named company have agreed to arbitrate two points in dispute. In the case of the second-named company, the arrangement is the same except that the two points will be dealt with at a conference between the employers and the unions.

Telegrams were received yesterday and this morning which indicate that the parties are in direct negotiation, on both the west and the east coasts, and we are hoping for a clarification which may lead to a settlement of the entire dispute within a few days. We have proposed that agreements when made provide that officers will be re-employed without discrimination.

POSTAL SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO PARCELS TO PALESTINE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. ERNEST BERTRAND (Postmaster General): Yesterday the hon. member for Regina City (Mr. Probe) asked me a question concerning the mail service to Palestine, and I said I would reply today.

The parcel post service from Canada to Palestine was suspended last February following information received from the British postal service through which this mail service operates. However, gift parcels intended for members of the British armed forces in Palestine and the Palestine police force may still be mailed. Last month it was found necessary to suspend all remaining mail services by surface route to Palestine. Air mail service will be continued for the present.

The air mail service between the United States and Palestine is the only service in operation.

WHEAT

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT AMENDMENT—QUESTION AS TO EXTENSION TO OATS AND BARLEY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. J. BENTLEY (Swift Current): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Will the minister inform the house whether the government has approached any provincial government with a view to having enabling provincial legislation to make effective clause 29 of part IVA of Bill No. 135?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

Mr. BENTLEY: Just what I thought.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PRECEDENCE OF GOVERNMENT ORDERS

The house resumed from Wednesday, April 7, consideration of the motion of Mr. St. Laurent (for the Prime Minister):

That, notwithstanding any other order passed by the house in relation thereto, on and after Wednesday, the 7th of April and every day thereafter until otherwise ordered during the present session, government notices of motions and government orders shall have precedence over all other business except the introduction of bills, questions by members and notices of motions for the production of papers, and from 8 to 9 p.m. on Fridays, private bills.

And the amendment thereto of Mr. Coldwell.

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it became apparent yesterday, when this motion was moved, that a large number of members of the house desired that there be some time available for the consideration of public and private bills. The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) moved, in amendment to the motion which is on the order paper, that Tuesdays and Fridays from 8 to 9 p.m. be devoted to these bills, but he also moved at the same time that the order of priority provided for by standing order 15 be reversed. I think that would mean that there would be no time for the consideration of private bills during this session, and though no one has any special interest in private bills, the standing orders do provide that they may be introduced in the expectation that they will get consideration, and to some of us it would seem to be unfair to do something which would shut them out at this time.

It may be that standing order 15 should not be in the form in which it is, but that, it seems to us, is something which should be considered not as a temporary provision for this session. Rather, it should be considered by Mr. Speaker's committee to revise the general rules; and if that change were made in the standing order, giving priority to public bills over private bills, it would be known to the public and those making applications for private bills would be aware of the risk they were taking.

I would like therefore to suggest that there be these two hours on Tuesdays and Fridays for these bills but that they be considered in the order which is provided by standing order 15.

My attention has been called to the fact that this is the fifty-eighth day of the session and that a similar order was made in this house last year on the fifty-ninth day of the session. There is no desire on the part of anyone to minimize the importance or the interest of the other matters placed on the order paper by private members, whether they sit in the front benches or in the back benches. That makes no difference to their rights in this house or to the consideration that should be given to their desires. But there is on the order paper a large volume of important public business which we feel it will be the desire of most hon. members of the house to have considered. For instance, this afternoon there is the bill to amend the industrial relations act, and the bill to amend the act providing for allowances to veterans. These are matters which I am sure rank in importance with any that can be placed upon the order paper. I hope therefore that members of the house will be agreeable to accepting the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar to strike out the words "the former having precedence" —that is to say, giving precedence to public bills over private bills—and substitute the words "in accordance with standing order 15," which would leave the priority as established by the general rule.

It may be, though the indications at the present time do not appear to be any too hopeful, that such progress will be made with the public legislation as to allow, at some later date, other arrangements to be made. But hon. members will realize that we have not yet started on the consideration of the estimates. While we made a move yesterday to make a start in that direction, there is a matter of considerable importance which will have to be discussed and disposed of before the house can go into committee to consider the estimates. I hope that this may be regarded as a sincere effort to meet the desires of members of the house generally that there be some time for consideration of public and private bills that are on the order paper, and that public bills be not in such position that discussion on them would shut out any consideration of private bills. There is one private bill which has already been before the house on two or three occasions and on which there has been, I think, a fairly full debate. Hon. members say that they wish these matters to be brought before the house not merely for the purpose of providing an opportunity for making speeches about them, but for the purpose of getting the decision of the house with regard to them. I would hope that there would be no desire, under a rule of this kind, to talk out any of these bills, but rather that they be allowed to go along in the regular course and get to the stage where there can be a decision upon them. For the purpose of making that possible, I would ask my colleague to move, in amendment to the amendment of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, that the words "the former having precedence" be struck out and that they be replaced by the words "in accordance with standing order 15."

Mr. ILSLEY: I so move, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I may point out that the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar is at page 2721 of Hansard.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would call the attention of the house to the fact that in the main motion which was introduced yesterday, these words appear:

> Notwithstanding any order passed by the house in relation thereto, on and after Wednesday the 7th of April . . .

That will have to be changed.

Mr. St. Laurent moves, seconded by Mr. Ilsley, that the amendment be amended by striking out the words "the former having precedence" and substituting therefor the words "in accordance with standing order 15". The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Just before you put the amendment to the amendment, Mr. Speaker, as mover of the amendment may I say that the government has met the purpose of the amendment at least in part, and to that extent I think it is satisfactory. I wish to point out to the leader of the house that certain of the standing orders have been set aside this session, and while standing order 15 does give precedence to private bills, that is no reason why it should not be set aside again.

I am going to suggest still another variation. We now have the two hours for private and public bills, one on Tuesday and one on Friday. I am going to suggest that we give one of those days to private bills and the other to public bills—say, on Tuesday, private bills and on Friday, public bills. I cannot see why private bills should have complete preference over public bills. As I say, the house has varied the standing order considerably this session, and I do not think there should be any objection to varying it to this extent in order to give hon. gentlemen who are interested in public bills an opportunity of proceeding with them forthwith.

Mr. JAMES SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): I should like to say a word or two on this matter, Mr. Speaker. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. St. Laurent) mentioned the fact that if public bills preceded private bills, as is suggested in the amendment of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell), there would be no opportunity in fact for private bills to be discussed. Those are his own words. My obvious answer to that is that if private bills precede public bills, then there is equally no opportunity for the discussion of public bills.

The second point was that when the sponsors of these private bills presented them to parliament they expected that the bills would be discussed and voted upon. May I say to him through you, Mr. Speaker, that when I introduced my public bill I expected that it would be debated and voted on; and I am quite sure the other sponsors of public bills had the same expectation. I had always understood, in my own political philosophy, that the general interest came before special privilege. If private bills and the interests of private corporations and individuals are placed ahead of public bills, I certainly do not think that principle has been followed out.

I agree, however, that some compromise should be effected. The present situation is that there may be, at tag end of either of those two evenings which have been referred to, five minutes left over, in which case somebody might be able to speak for a few minutes on a public bill; but the debate, if any at all, would be a series of tag ends. So far, with regard to private bills, we have had all the time taken on just one, with little expectation of that debate being closed. Therefore I suggest, as the very least sort of compromise, that the suggestion made by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar be adopted and that at least on one occasion in the week public bills and members' resolutions have precedence over private bills.

Mr. GORDON GRAYDON (Peel): I am amazed, Mr. Speaker, at the stand taken by the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. Sinclair), because I think he is settling for less than he should settle for if he is anxious to get his legislation before the house.

Mr. SINCLAIR: I certainly am anxious to get it before the house.

Mr. GRAYDON: All right, then; I think the hon. member ought to have stood out a little more strongly against the government with respect to the amount of time he would require.

I want to make clear our position with respect to this matter. Everyone seems to have overlooked the fact that on the order paper there are other things than public and private bills. There are thirty-five private members' resolutions, many of them dealing with major points, to be debated and brought before the government. We are rapidly reaching the position of piling precedent upon precedent, and that is what alarms me. I do not want to be rising in the house day after day quibbling over small matters—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. GRAYDON: Oh, yes; anything coming from here of course has not the magnitude it would have coming from the intelligentsia over in that corner, but I am glad to know you assess your worth at least somewhat higher than some other people do.

This is more than simply a question of what we are going to do for the rest of this session. If we keep on with this procedure session after session, with a wartime complex being carefully carried year after year into the peacetime period, we are going to reach the point where someone will say: Well, the days of private members' notices of motion may as well be forgotten, because they are only gathering cobwebs on the order paper as things stand.

The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar has made one constructive suggestion. I think it is constructive because I was going to make it myself, and I suppose it is only natural for one to feel that his suggestion is a little more constructive than that of the other fellow. Now, however, we are to have all the private bills put ahead of everything else for two hours, under the government's motion. To my way of thinking that is not right. On the other hand we have the amendment moved by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar yesterday under which public bills would be considered to the exclusion of all private bills. Neither should have the monopoly, as the hon. member for Vancouver North said. There should be a fair division of the time in that respect. I would be in favour of asking the government to make that change, because at least that would be something.

What was said by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. St. Laurent) is quite true; this is the fifty-eighth day of the session. We have sat something like three hundred hours since this session of parliament opened. Now, though private members have not had any opportunity worth speaking of to do anything in those three hundred hours, at this stage of the session—and this is what I want to point out to the hon. member for Vancouver North—we are giving up nine hours a week, I say without enough protest, for a measly one hour on Tuesday evening. That is not good enough. We cannot afford to play around with this business and not make a strong protest with respect to the position of the government.

I want to make it clear that I still think our suggestion of yesterday, that right of way be given for a week or two to urgent government business, is good; but then let us take a couple of weeks or longer, if necessary, during which we may have our Mondays and our Wednesdays to deal with these matters which are so important from the point of view of private members. I protest against people taking this so easily and being willing to settle for one hour a week instead of nine hours. Either this is a principle worth fighting for or it is a principle not worth discussing.

I realize that probably the best the government will do is to give us one hour a week. On the basis that half a loaf is better than no bread we may have to accept that; but if they are going to leave the resolution as it now stands, with this subamendment, I am afraid we shall have to vote against it. It is not good enough if it leaves out public bills altogether, or if it gives no consideration at all to notices of motion. I want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, with all the effectiveness I can summon, that the government should alter the motion along the lines I have suggested.

Mr. SINCLAIR: I rise to a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, because of the inference just left by the acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Graydon) that my opposition to this motion has lessened because I concurred in the suggestion of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar. I can assure the hon. gentleman that my opposition has not lessened, but I am supporting a practical amendment, which is more than the hon. gentleman put forward yesterday. He put forward nothing but suggestions, and now, after criticizing me, in the next breath he goes on to say that he is going to support the position taken by the government.

Mr. GRAYDON: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I did not say I was supporting the motion brought in by the minister. I told the house I was voting against it.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: In spite of these questions of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I hope we may come to a unanimous decision on the best way to serve our respective constituents with the time that remains at our disposal. If that can be achieved by accepting the suggestion of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, concurred in by the hon. member for Peel, I would ask that the subamendment now before you be withdrawn and that it be replaced by one which would read in this way—and I think I carry out the suggestion of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar: by adding thereto the following words, "on Tuesday, and the latter having precedence on Friday." That would make the order read as desired by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar. It would provide for the consideration of public and private bills on Tuesday and Friday, the former having precedence on Tuesday and the latter having precedence on Friday.

Mr. COLDWELL: That is all right.

Mr. GRAYDON: That is, private bills on Friday?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Public bills would have precedence on Tuesday and private bills would have precedence on Friday.

Mr. GRAYDON: Does that mean we are to leave out completely any reference to notices of motions by private members?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I did not want to make this statement, but I do not think the hon. member for Peel has been left out of very much. I had a tabulation made showing how the time of this house has been occupied up to the present time. So far 1,522 columns of Hansard have been taken by members of the party of the hon. member for Peel, while 1,148 columns have been taken by members on this side of the house. That is to say, 125 members have taken 1,148 columns and 66 members have taken 1,522 columns. The C.C.F. members have taken 858 columns. I am not complaining about that, but I am just bringing to the attention of the house the way the time has been occupied. I am not suggesting that it has been wasted, or that anyone has taken more than he should. I am sure every hon. member who spoke felt that it was desirable for him to do so in order to carry out his mandate from his constituents. But I hope that since we have had these discussions on many of these public issues, the actual business that has to be disposed of before prorogation can come about will not take as much time, and a little later on there may be opportunity to make provision for bringing in these notices of motions, which are very important but which after all do not result in legislation but merely in expressions of opinion.

Mr. GRAYDON: I would ask the government to give us some assurance that as the session progresses we shall again have an opportunity of debating this question, and, before the session ends, again opening up the two days to private members. I am not satisfied with the present arrangement, and I do not think it meets with the approval of the house, even though temporarily, for a few weeks, we may have to accept it.

[Mr. St. Laurent.]

Mr. ST. LAURENT: The suggestion of the hon. member for Peel can be discussed on any of the days when we are going into supply, and will receive consideration in the light of the development of the work of parliament at the time the question is raised.

Mr. KNOWLES: About the fifth of August.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion, and to give permission to the right hon. minister to withdraw his amendment?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. SPEAKER: The Secretary of State for External Affairs, seconded by the Minister of Justice, has moved that the amendment be amended by adding thereto the following words: "On Tuesday, and the latter having precedence on Friday".

Mr. CHURCH: When this motion is passed will it rule out any discussion of the railway rates situation? We should have an opportunity to discuss that.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: No.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. GRAYDON: As a protest, it is carried on division only.

Mr. KNOWLES: Put it again as amended.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Do you want that recorded in Hansard?

Mr. GRAYDON: Yes.

Mr. CHEVRIER: It will be.

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion remains—

Mr. KNOWLES: Put it.

Mr. SPEAKER: —as amended. Is it the pleasure of the house to carry the main motion as amended?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. GRAYDON: On division.

Motion as amended agreed to on division.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

INVESTIGATION, CONCILIATION AND SETTLEMENT OF INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour) moved the second reading of Bill No. 195, to provide for the investigation, conciliation and settlement of industrial disputes.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say only a few words before the bill is given second reading. The principle and purpose of the bill is to lay down procedure for the resolving of industrial disputes, and as a means of fulfilling that purpose I would say the bill is timely. If, however, we are to enact a measure of this kind, and if it is to receive the support of employers and employees and the community, the measure as finally passed must be justly and equitably administered. I mention that because in my opinion labour legislation now on the statute books is not equitably administered as between employers and employees.

The principle of the bill is that every employee has a right to be a member of a trade union and to participate in the activities thereof, and that every employer has the right to be a member of an employers organization and to participate in the activities thereof. No exception is made for any reason whatsoever, once an employees organization is certified as the bargaining agency. I understand that the law as it stands at present provides that an organization can be certified after a vote has been taken to determine whether the majority of the employees in that organization want the organization to act as its bargaining agency.

I would draw the attention of the house to the fact that in connection with the Canadian seamen's union, a vote was taken among the employees of the Sarnia Steamship Company and the Colonial Steamship Company and, if my recollection serves me aright, the vote carried, ninety-three per cent of the employees voting for the union. Yet these companies have refused to bargain collectively with their employees. Another steamship company, according to my information, has refused the Department of Labour the right to take a vote of the employees of that company.

This legislation can be effective only if it is administered without fear or favour, whether it be workers or employers who are concerned. There is no other way in which we can have law and order, in this or indeed in any other country. As I said the other evening, I am afraid the government is paying too much attention to representations made to it by employers organizations, and is not administering the law equitably in this country.

Mr. MITCHELL: I deny that, without equivocation.

Mr. MacINNIS: The Minister of Labour will have an opportunity to explain what has happened in the cases I have mentioned, and what action has been taken against those employers. My contention stands or falls on the explanation he gives the house in respect of those cases. If the explanation is satisfactory, then I believe the minister knows me well enough to realize that I will withdraw anything that would reflect either on him or his department.

When I spoke during the resolution stage I said I was receiving resolutions from employers organizations such as chambers of commerce and boards of trade giving advice to the government in regard to labour legislation. I have before me a copy of a telegram said to have been sent by the Vancouver board of trade to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier), the Secretary of State (Mr. Gibson) —all of Ottawa—and to other individuals in British Columbia. I shall not read the whole of the telegram, but the part I shall read will be sufficient to direct attention to the point I am making. It states in part:

> Further to Vancouver board of trade's recent letter recommending that federal and provincial governments co-operate to debar communists from holding office in labour unions in Canada . . .

That is not the full sentence, but as the rest of it does not matter I am abbreviating it in order to save time. I do not know exactly what it means. Is the government being asked to co-operate with the employers in order to prevent communists from holding office in labour unions in Canada? That is what it appears to me to mean. At the proper time I shall make my position clear with regard to the communist party of Canada and the Labour Progressive party, which is the communist party under another name. When I do that I shall not leave anyone in doubt as to where I stand in regard to those parties.

I suggest that if the government and employers are going to co-operate in order to prevent communists from being officials of trade unions, they are in for a long job. They will have to stay in trade unions perhaps for a long time. But that is not the worst aspect of it. If this government says today, or acts as though it is saying, that individuals with certain political convictions cannot be members of trade unions, tomorrow it can take the same action in regard to members of other political parties. There is no way by which the government can act except by the adoption of the methods of the police state, to which I think all of us in this house are opposed.

If this parliament and this government will formulate correct policies, the trade unions of this country will take care of their own organizations. They are doing that already. I could give the house many examples if I wanted to take the time. I find this sentence in a similar resolution passed by the Regina chamber of commerce:

> The Regina chamber urges that a federal government supervised secret ballot be required in federal labour legislation, that the benefits of federal labour legislation be withheld from such organizations as are led by communists.

As I mentioned a moment ago, the government did take a supervised ballot in the industries I referred to, and yet the employers did not recognize that supervised ballot. What would be the situation and what action would the government take if after taking a supervised ballot the workers' organization did not recognize the validity of the vote? I say again that we must have equitable treatment and just enforcement of the laws for employers and employees alike. That is all I wish to say at the present time.

I am afraid we are allowing ourselves to be intimidated, sometimes by one side and sometimes by the other. The government cannot allow that to continue if it wants to have its laws and administration respected, and I want to see laws and administration respected in Canada.

Mr. DAVID CROLL (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have just a few observations to make on this bill. This bill is modelled on P.C. 1003, which, as this house knows, brought labour peace to this country in war time. With the widely differing provincial labour legislation that we have, there is a danger of labour war in peacetime. The house has already been informed that legislation was passed recently in Prince Edward Island which placed a ban on all but autonomous trade unions. It is true to say that the effect of that bill is virtually nil, since less than one thousand people will be affected, but I think it is well to note that the bill is a dangerous and disturbing one. It cuts under every labour principle that we understand. It is an attempt to punish all labour for the sins of the few. It is much like the Taft-Hartley bill in the United States.

One principle which above all others has been established for over a hundred years in Great Britain, and for a lesser number of years in this country, is that employees have the right to organize in a union of their own choice, free from employer control, and with a minimum of state interference. The Prince Edward Island bill places trade unions under licence which may well be cancelled on ministerial discretion. It is a dangerous bill. It points to a need that has been referred to in the house many times, the need of a national labour code to give guidance and to offset such ill-advise and retrograde legislation.

[Mr. MacInnis.]

The provinces are ready to be guided; they are ready to accept dominion leadership. As a matter of fact reports in the press this morning indicate that the legislature of Ontario gave second reading to our labour bill which has not yet received second reading here. That legislature has shown that it is ready to adopt this bill holus-bolus.

Mr. HOMUTH: Was that surprising to you?

Mr. CROLL: No, I am encouraged by that sort of co-operation. I am just a little disappointed that more of it is not forthcoming from time to time from the provincial legislature. I think it is a great mark of respect and confidence and a wise move on their part. Those of us who are familiar with the wartime labour regulations, P.C. 1003, will recall that they laid down some fundamental principles which have found their way into provincial legislation.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Did I understand the hon. member to say that yesterday the Ontario legislature gave second reading to this bill? I am anxious to know how they could do that when hon. members here have not yet seen it.

Mr. CROLL: That was the objection taken by some of the members in the provincial house. It is reported in the Globe and Mail of this morning that one member said:

> In fact it has not even passed in another house. The whole matter is irregular and wrong.

Mr. HOMUTH: Let us get this thing clear. I think my hon. friend realizes that the legislation which was passed was enabling legislation which would bring the bill into force. The bill itself was not even there.

Mr. CROLL: My hon. friend is making it worse now. It is true that the bill itself was not there. No one had seen the bill. We got it yesterday. They had seen the previous bill. In spite of that, enabling legislation was passed by giving second reading to that bill. That is what I intended to say, and I thought I said it. I commend them for it—

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Not for this bill.

Mr. CROLL: No, for the bill that was passed previously. I said that wartime regulations had found their way into provincial labour legislation, and the hope is, of course, that any national labour code which we establish here in peace time shall stand as a model to these legislatures.

I realize that the government is disinclined to act with respect to the Prince Edward Island bill. I think our answer to it could be to pass a bill which will be a model not only to Prince Edward Island but to the rest of the country.

There is one disturbing element in connection with the Prince Edward Island bill which has already been touched on today by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis). That was the statement made by the minister who introduced the bill. The minister without portfolio, the promoter of the bill, said that "the bill was intended to keep communists out of the province." It has become quite popular lately to evoke the menace of communism in connection with anti-progressive legislation. I, too, oppose communism; but what I object to is the use of false and misleading motives for reaching a conclusion.

The hon. member for Vancouver East has just brought to the attention of the house the refusal of the Sarnia and Colonial steamship companies to deal with the Canadian seamen's union, which is the certified bargaining agency. They are using the same excuse as the one used by the minister in Prince Edward Island. It is a weakness in our collective bargaining machinery which we must, if at all possible, correct at the present session of parliament. A union's certification must mean something. For employers to flout that certification is a clear violation of the spirit of the laws that we pass.

So far as the bill outlaws company unions it is a forward step, because they have brought grief and mischief to this country. They are inconsistent with the principle that union organizations should be protected against employer influence.

The minister said that basically this was a middle-of-the-road bill. My purpose in speaking to it is to make sure that it stays in the middle of the road. It needs careful examination; it needs serious study. In my opinion the power given to the minister in this bill is far too wide. I think that power should be with the national labour board. The bill lacks a section to provide for the reinstatement of employees who are discharged. It was well brought out at the last hearing that a determined employer, if he was prepared to pay the price, could keep any man off the job if he so desired. Many unfair labour practices which are increasing from time to time are not sufficiently covered by the bill. The definition is too limited in its scope and application.

There is a section in the bill—I have not the bill before me; it is the wear-down section—which is particularly objectionable in that it permits the employer to challenge the union's certification time and time again before the board.

Mr. HOMUTH: Does not that mean year by year? You cannot do it every month.

Mr. CROLL: There is no limitation on it—whenever he thinks they have not a majority. It is true that there is considerable provision in the bill for cool-offs and compulsory delays, but no one in this house believes that they are a permanent solution to collective bargaining. The bill is a good start. We must ask ourselves, is the bill fair? Will it promote labour peace? Will it increase government intervention in labour relations? With some modification, which I feel sure the committee will recommend, the bill ought to be acceptable as an honest effort. I am very happy to note that there is not much change between this year's bill and last year's, and that we are not attempting to mimic our friends to the south of us.

Given a chance, this bill will be improved by time and experience and I hope by the committee, and confirmed by the house. In my opinion it is a very good start.

Mr. CLARENCE GILLIS (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to occupy very much of your time. I listened with a great deal of interest to the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Croll), but I can never understand what he is driving at. He tore the bill to pieces for fifteen minutes, and wound up by approving it. I shall be interested in watching this thing in committee. I really thought the hon. member was going places until the wind-up, and then the old soft soap and salve were applied. He is a good friend of mine, and I hate to hurt him. I guess he is case-hardened.

I do not think this is the time or the place to discuss the bill section by section. The proper thing to do with it is to send it to the industrial relations committee. Because of the experience we had last year in dealing with a similar bill we have gained considerable knowledge, and in addition we gave the Canadian congress of labour the opportunity to prepare a code which they think is acceptable to the labour movement. We now have that to place alongside this bill proposed by the minister. I think the committee will have a fairly good guide as to what is acceptable to labour. The proposal which the congress puts out is not an unreasonable one.

My purpose in rising at this time is to support to some extent what the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) had to say. I do not care what kind of legislation is brought down, unless it has an understanding administration it will not be any good to anyone. I was always opposed to judges and lawyers sitting in judgment on labour disputes.

They are all right in their field, but their field is not labour relations. Many of the difficulties in connection with legislation in the past have arisen from the fact that men who were trained in another field were given the responsibility of making decisions on matters with which they were completely unfamiliar. In their argument in support of the bill the Canadian congress of labour make that point very strongly. They say that the national labour relations board should be the supreme body in deciding what constitutes a violation of the code. After they make that decision the courts of the country could impose whatever penalties are laid down in the code.

I think the minister should consider that point very seriously, because when these matters are dragged through the courts there is delay, friction and frustration, and in many instances the intention of the legislation is defeated.

The hon. member for Spadina said that in Canada as well as in Britain certain principles had been laid down over the last 150 years with respect to labour relations. That is true, but the trade union movement in Canada is not comparable with the trade union movement in Britain. I do not think the hon. member would say he believes that the trade union movement in Canada should affiliate itself politically with the labour party of Canada, which is the group I belong to.

Mr. HOMUTH: Certainly he would not; neither would I.

Mr. GILLIS: Nevertheless that is the position in Britain, and if you are to go by the principles enunciated by the British labour movement you will have to go all the way with them; otherwise there is no use in talking about it. In the second place, the constitutions of the British trade union movement are written, whereas our constitutions are based not upon conditions prevailing in that country, as are the constitutions there. Most of the constitutions that guide the destinies of the Canadian labour movement are written in the United States and are based upon American conditions because of our international affiliations.

Most of our large organizations that function in the basic industries of the country have their constitutions written over there and not in Canada, so that we have a much more difficult job ahead of us in designing legislation that will satisfy not only the Canadian movement but also to a large extent the United States movement, because they are definitely integrated with us in the field of labour relations. To a large extent also the movement in Canada is influenced from the United States, and I say wrongly in many cases, because the conditions in the two countries are not the same.

Both the hon. member for Spadina and the hon. member for Vancouver East stated that the Canadian seamen's union was the certified bargaining agency to bargain with the shipping companies. I have had several letters and telegrams from sections of that organization, the Canadian seamen's union, with respect to their dispute with the Canadian lake seamen's union. I wrote to the Minister of Labour about two weeks ago asking him if he would give me the facts in this particular dispute. Was Pat Sullivan's union, so-called, a certified bargaining agency, and was the Canadian seamen's union the sole bargaining agency in that industry? The letter I received in reply was to the effect that Sullivan's union was not certified as the bargaining agency, but neither was the Canadian seamen's union; that they held a collective agreement with the shipping companies but were never certified as the bona fide bargaining agency supreme in that industry.

I would ask the minister to clarify that point because I have written to several unions of that organization who wrote to me and I gave them the minister's answer. If that is true, then the arguments put forward by the member for Spadina and the member for Vancouver East are not valid. If it is not true, I want to correct what I have written to the sections of the union that corresponded with me, in order to clarify the point; because I accepted the minister's advice and I thought that he should know.

I am not going to say more on this question. I am a member of the committee and I want to see the bill get into committee so that we may do the job. But, as I said a few days ago, I would ask the minister when he is replying to clarify that point, as to whether we have the power as a parliament to enact an over-all national labour code. I ask him to do that because there is grave doubt about it. The member for Spadina is a lawyer, and I wish he had elaborated that. It was our stumbling block last year. The general opinion in the committee was that we could enact only a code that would embrace radio, the harbours board and the railways. Beyond that we could not go.

Mr. HOMUTH: Unless we have provincial legislation.

Mr. GILLIS: Unless we have the sanction of the provincial governments, and you will not get Quebec for a long time, so that it will not be national.

Mr. TIMMINS: Look at what is happening in Ontario.

Mr. GILLIS: I am not surprised at what is happening in Ontario. In my opinion, the reason why the Ontario minister of labour grabbed at it is clear. He took a look at it and said: It is ineffective anyway; it does not mean very much.

Mr. CASE: That is not the right spirit.

Mr. GILLIS: It hurts you a little bit, but that is true.

Mr. COCKERAM: It does not hurt us.

Mr. GILLIS: What are you squawking about, then?

Mr. CASE: I want you to be a good sport.

Mr. GILLIS: I am a good sport, and I am explaining something you do not understand. Now here is a chance for me to get rid of a headache, because industrial relations in this province are a headache, where you have sixty per cent of industry in Canada concentrated. And it will become worse as time goes on. By accepting the national labour code, so called, which does not mean very much, the minister of labour in Ontario is in a position, at any time a dispute arises, to pass it back to the federal Minister of Labour. It is good politics for the Conservative government in Ontario to dump that load of labour relations into the lap of the federal government.

Mr. CROLL: And it is good imagination on your part.

Mr. GILLIS: It is good sense. Don't kid yourself.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Don't you want a national labour code?

Mr. GILLIS: Yes.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Then, if Ontario comes in, give them credit.

Mr. GILLIS: They will step out quickly enough if you enact something that means anything.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Did you hear the member for Spadina say that the Ontario legislature yesterday gave second reading to a bill for enabling legislation to adopt this in the province? Show me any other province that has done that.

Mr. GILLIS: Yes. They passed enabling legislation to adopt something that did not exist, because it will not exist until such time as it has gone through our committee, through this house and becomes law federally. I have no illusions as to why they grabbed it. If I were minister of labour in Ontario I would have urged it long ago to get rid of the problem that he is getting rid of.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I will not take up more of the time of the house, but when the minister closes the debate I wish he would say something about these two points: the British North America Act, and whether we are able to go forward with this as a national code; and also the matter of the certification of the Canadian seamen's union.

Mr. KARL HOMUTH (Waterloo South): I want to speak for a moment on behalf of our party here and as a member of the industrial relations committee. I am amazed, sitting in this house where there are 245 members elected across the country, to find when we come to deal with these various problems that there is a group to my left which, no matter how right you are, tells you you are wrong because you do not belong to the socialist party in this country.

Mr. KNOWLES: That is the trouble; the hon. member does not belong to it.

Mr. HOMUTH: The more I see of them, the more sick and tired I get of that group of people, who, because someone happens to be a little bit prosperous in this country, say that he is taking something out of the pockets of the people. No matter what you do, you are never right with them.

Mr. MacINNIS: Why do you complain when you vote with the government?

Mr. HOMUTH: I am complaining about the group that sits down there to my left and never has a kind thing to say about anybody except members of the socialist group. You cannot expect them to say anything against the communists because the communists have wrapped their arms around them.

What I wanted to say on behalf of our party is this. We do not intend to debate this bill. We do not intend to go into the various clauses of it. When it comes before the committee we will deal with those clauses and put forward whatever argument we have to put forward. We are in favour of the general principle of the bill. We are happy that our party which is in power in Ontario has adopted the principle of it and is willing to do everything it can to bring about a national code in this country, which is so necessary to labour peace. I hope that other provinces will follow that lead. I hope that public opinion in the province of Quebec—although some say that Quebec will be a long time in passing such legislation—will convince the government, whatever government it may be, that it ought to line up with the others. But as far as the Progressive Conservative party in this house is concerned, we do not intend to debate the bill. We are glad it has been brought forward now. Let us hurry it along and enact it into law.

Mr. J. H. BLACKMORE (Lethbridge): The attitude of the Social Credit group on this bill is one of sympathy. This is an act to provide for the investigation, conciliation and settlement of industrial disputes. In our country it is necessary that we strive repeatedly for a greater and greater measure of justice, both for those who labour and for those who employ labour. We shall make progress in the direction desired by repeated efforts similar to those which are being made in this bill. We must strive for less and less delay and for less disruption of the Canadian economy whenever there arises unhappiness between capital and labour in any industry. We must strive for more and more good will and confidence on all sides.

As all will agree, Canada can be a land of plenty for all; it can be a land of glorious economic strength. Those who will recall for a moment or two the painful experiences through which we passed in 1946, when the steel strike was in progress, will realize afresh how easily our economy could be disrupted and our prosperity destroyed. It therefore becomes extremely important that we devote a good deal of attention to bills of this sort, thereby improving our machinery for settling disputes and avoiding them.

It is well to bear in mind once more, I believe, that it is utterly impossible, under the present economic and financial system, to give justice both to labour and to those employing labour; in fact, it is becoming increasingly difficult to give justice to either side. Into the meaning of what I have just said I will not enter at the present time. The mere fact that we are striving toward what in reality is an impossibility under the present financial system ought not to deter us from efforts toward the accomplishment of the desired objective.

The Social Credit group are anxious to see this bill pass and go to the industrial relations committee, there to receive such study and amendment as will make it as good as we can make it at the present time; for we realize that we must keep trying and struggling. So I will just say that we wish the minister well in his endeavours to build up a machine that will enable our industrial economy to function with the greatest possible efficiency and harmony.

[Mr. Homuth.]

Mr. STANLEY KNOWLES (Winnipeg North Centre): I wish to say a few words for the purpose of underlining a question which I hope the minister will answer when he speaks.

Reference has already been made this afternoon to the fact that the Ontario legislature has given second reading to a bill which accepts the framework of this bill for the province of Ontario. The legislature of Manitoba has before it a labour relations bill, section 60 of which deals with the same matter. As I understand it, that section provides that if there is uniformity between the Manitoba act and the dominion act, arrangements may be made under sections in both acts for the administration to be carried on in Manitoba by federal officials. Despite its shortcomings, the Manitoba act goes a little farther in this regard and provides that in the case of specific industries in which a dispute may arise, authority to deal with that particular dispute, if it is a dispute in common with disputes in other provinces, may be referred to the federal Department of Labour.

My question is this. Suppose a situation were to arise again similar to that created by the strike in the packing industry that we had last fall, would it be possible under this bill, and under bills like the one I have just described in Manitoba, for the federal Department of Labour to take a hand in seeking to settle that dispute? I contend, as the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) pointed out the other day, that we should go farther, and that we should have in this code provision for dealing with national industries such as meat packing, on a national basis, without any question. That is the main shortcoming of this bill, and in the committee we in this group who are members of it will seek to get that provision. But failing that—

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): May I ask how you would do that in the act? What would you put in there, for example?

Mr. KNOWLES: I appreciate the question. I would say we could do something similar to what was done last year at the request of the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Company, when they asked that, because their operations at Flin Flon, Manitoba, are in two provinces, the same be considered to be to the general advantage of Canada and therefore under federal jurisdiction.

Mr. CROLL: With the consent of both provinces; don't forget that.

Mr. KNOWLES: That is granted. But we have passed some other bills in this house—

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): May I ask another question?

Mr. KNOWLES: May I answer this one first?

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Elevators are, I think, the best example you have. Elevators have been declared to be for the general advantage of Canada. My only point was this. Where do you intend to stop? If you keep on going you will end up with the province having no jurisdiction at all.

Mr. KNOWLES: I think we can go step by step and put under federal jurisdiction some of these basic industries that are clearly national in scope.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Oh, I agree; I am trying to be with you.

Mr. TIMMINS: That one company was only a small matter anyway.

Mr. KNOWLES: Exactly. That was my complaint last year, that this one company was only a small matter, but it was able to get this provision. With respect to an industry like meat packing, which was clearly national in scope, we were not able to get it, though as my colleague the hon. member for Cape Breton South said, if we had obtained it last summer we might have had less difficulty in the packing industry at that time. The question I am asking the minister to answer today is not whether he will accept this reasonable request that is being made from all sides of the house, but whether he can say that under the legislation as we now have it, it would be possible for the federal department to deal with a dispute of that kind.

Mr. MITCHELL: The answer is yes.

Mr. D. F. BROWN (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, I represent a riding which is largely industrial, and which of course is very much interested in this legislation.

Mr. CASE: Where is that riding?

Mr. BROWN: The hon. member asks where that riding is. I may inform him, as I have done many times in the past, that it is in the sun parlour of Canada, where today we have cabbages and lettuce in the fields and potatoes planted for early consumption. However, that is quite apart from the legislation now before us.

As I have said, this matter greatly affects the thousands of people who live in my constituency. I am most anxious that as soon as possible the legislation be referred to the industrial relations committee. I was a member of that committee in other years, but because of other duties of a national character which I have in this house it has not been possible for me to continue with that work. I trust, however, that the spirit of this legislation will be carried forward.

I should like to make one suggestion which I trust will be of some value to both labour and industry. In the main constituents I represent work in the large automobile, pharmaceutical and chemical plants in that area, and they have a sincere desire to make their contribution to the projects that have been undertaken. These people have contributed largely to the building up of great plants covering hundreds of acres. These corporations have constructed large buildings; they have branches in all parts of the world. I believe in Windsor we have the largest automotive industry in the empire and in my riding we have established the largest pharmaceutical centre in the empire, while in chemicals and other fields we have contributed largely to the economic life of Canada. This has been made possible to a great extent through the conscientious and sincere efforts of the industrial class; some may say the labour class, and there is dignity in labour. It is my hope that this legislation will lead, in the not too distant future, to a voluntary arrangement under which labour may share in the profits which have accumulated and which are being earned by these corporations. I am sure that as industry appreciates the desire of labour to make its contribution, and as industry comes to realize the advantage and necessity of creating a better and more harmonious relationship with labour, industry will voluntarily make some arrangement under which labour will participate in the profits that are made, and if this bill takes one step toward the realization of that goal I think it will have been worth while.

It is not my desire to take more time at this stage, Mr. Speaker, but as the provinces take this labour bill as a pattern on which they may mould their legislation, where the jurisdiction actually is in the provincial field, I am sure labour throughout Canada will benefit greatly.

Mr. MITCHELL: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: If the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): I am not going to take much time this afternoon, except to answer questions in a general way. This is not the committee stage; we are discussing second reading of the bill, but I do want to reply to one or two observations that have been made.

I believe it was the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) who discussed the differences between the two shipping companies and the Canadian seamen's union. I want to be perfectly frank with the hon. member; that disagreement is based on the fact that the companies will not deal with a union whose officers are communists. They have frankly said so. All the machinery has been gone through, and today the union appeared before the labour relations board asking for leave to prosecute. I think my hon. friend will agree that I should not discuss a matter which is before the board.

I think the hon. gentleman also raised some objection because the Vancouver board of trade, I think it was, and the Regina board of trade, had made representations to the government. Under our institutions I believe any Canadian who wishes may go to the foot of the throne and make representations.

Mr. MacINNIS: If the minister will permit an interjection, I was not objecting to individuals or organizations making representations to the government. I was taking issue with the kind of representations which were made by people who have always opposed labour organizations.

Mr. MITCHELL: I would not altogether say that. As I stated when I introduced the bill, I do not think all the angels are on one side.

Mr. MacINNIS: Quite true.

Mr. MITCHELL: There are plenty of good employers in this country; my hon. friend has dealt with them and so have I. I remember vividly the first agreement I negotiated when I was a trade union officer. It was with the Dominion Power and Transmission Company, the president of which was the father of the present Secretary of State (Mr. Gibson). The union enjoyed the best of relations with that company for many years, and do so today with the successors of the company.

I wanted to make that point, because the Minister of Labour receives many representations. I am often amused, if I may say so, when some hon. gentlemen rise on a question of privilege and read telegrams they received that morning. If they received some of the telegrams I receive, they would be afraid to show them to anyone; let alone get up on a question of privilege.

Mr. KNOWLES: They would burn up the wires.

[Mr. Mitchell.]

Mr. MITCHELL: Yes. I have been in the game. It is the easiest thing in the world when you have a talk to the brothers in local meeting, and when the manufacturers talk among themselves in their organization meetings.

Mr. McIVOR: But you are standing it pretty well.

Mr. MITCHELL: Oh, yes.

Another question was raised about which I should say something. Some criticism was made of judges. I shudder to think what would have become of labour relations in this nation had it not been for the contributions made by members of the judiciary who have acted as chairmen of many conciliation boards.

The hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) was talking about workmen's compensation the other day. I say without fear of successful contradiction that the finest workmen's compensation law on the statute books of any country was passed after an inquiry by a royal commission presided over by, I believe, the late Chief Justice Meredith. The Ontario workmen's compensation law was the result.

Mr. TIMMINS: The first in the world.

Mr. MITCHELL: Yes, and the best.

Mr. GILLIS: And forced by the labour movement.

Mr. MITCHELL: That may be true too. But do not let us take all the credit.

Mr. GILLIS: Do not try to give it all in one direction, then.

Mr. MITCHELL: I had been talking about the judiciary. I played some part in the establishment of the workmen's compensation law in Ontario.

Mr. GILLIS: Some judge capitalized on your work.

Mr. MITCHELL: Don't we all? Sometimes I think my hon. friend feels very proud of himself as the saviour of mankind. I have no objection to that; but let the other fellow make some contribution to it.

Mr. PROBE: I suppose that is why there are so many ultra vires decisions on Saskatchewan legislation.

Mr. MITCHELL: That is not worthy of an answer.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): The hon. member should be ashamed of that, and say so.

Mr. GILLIS: He is asking for it.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): He is not ashamed of anything, or he would be ashamed of that.

Mr. KNOWLES: Now, where were we?

Mr. MITCHELL: My hon. friend says, "Where were we?" At least I know where I am going.

An hon. MEMBER: I hope so.

Mr. MITCHELL: And I hope it is a straight and narrow path, too.

A question has been raised about the courts. I know it is easy to criticize the courts, but I would rather take a chance on them than on some politicians; and I am looking at the hon. member for Regina City (Mr. Probe). I believe in the rule of law with respect to both parties in an industrial dispute.

In connection with the judiciary, I should like to mention Mr. Justice McTague and also Mr. Justice Carroll who, in my judgment, in his time made a great contribution to the coal mining industry of Nova Scotia. I think, too, of Mr. Justice O'Connor of Calgary who has rendered yeoman service in the various fields to which he has been appointed, and of Mr. Justice Archibald and Mr. Justice Richards.

If my hon. friend does not have confidence in the judiciary and does not avail himself of it, of whom would be avail himself? People have faith in the impartiality of such men when they are made chairmen of various boards.

I do not believe I have much more to say. Some point was raised about the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Company. As the hon. member well knows, the mine in question is in two provinces. The government was petitioned by the employees and employers to have an amendment made to the law to make it possible for this matter to come under national jurisdiction.

Let me say this to my hon. friends who talk so much about amending the British North America Act. In my judgment the only way to do that is to go to the people and get their consent. I remember sitting in the House of Commons when the first unemployment insurance bill, the eight-hour-day legislation, was pased on a national basis. The opposition of that day took the view that the legislation was unconstitutional, and it was later so declared. The next government which took office went to the country, and one of the planks in its platform was an amendment of the British North America Act to permit the adoption of unemployment insurance by the federal government. And that is the proper way to do it.

After all is said and done, this is the dominion government; but it is not the only pebble on the beach. The provinces still have some rights, as have also the employer and employee organizations. I have a simple way of expressing this thought. You cannot break a law by agreement. It is easy to say that an industry should be a national industry. It may be, however, that the employees do not want it that way; and they have a perfect right to go to the courts to argue their side.

Some years ago we had the famous Snider case in Ontario, concerning which the privy council said the federal government at that time had no jurisdiction under the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, and that decision has stood to this day.

Mention has been made about the province of Ontario. I suppose the work of my department spills over more into the provinces than that of any other department of government. Let me say that my relations with every provincial government have been most happy. While the minister of labour of Ontario does not belong to the same political party as I do, he has been a friend of many years. I have sat down and discussed with him legislation of this kind. Only this morning my office received a call for 100 copies of this bill. I think that is all to the good, when we find co-operation between the provinces and the dominion.

I believe I have said all I intended to say at this time.

Mr. KNOWLES: Would the minister answer my question? I had not asked about the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Company. My question was this: With this legislation in effect, would it be possible for his department to deal with a strike such as the packing dispute of last fall?

Mr. MITCHELL: If the hon. member would read the act he would see that section 62 makes possible agreements between the dominion and provincial governments giving this government jurisdiction.

Mr. KNOWLES: It depends upon getting together.

Mr. MITCHELL: Absolutely.

Mr. GILLIS: The minister did not answer my question as to whether the Canadian seamen's union was a certified bargaining agency.

Mr. MITCHELL: With the Sarnia and Colonial companies, yes, in 1944. With the Canada Steamship Lines, no.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on industrial relations.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

On the order:

Second reading of Bill No. 196, an act to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act, 1946.

Hon. ALPHONSE FOURNIER (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, it was indicated that after the discussion of this bill legislation in the names of the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Gregg) and the Secretary of State (Mr. Gibson) would be proceeded with. They are absent, attending an official function at government house. However the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) is ready to proceed with item No. 14 and item No. 12.

EXPORT AND IMPORT PERMITS

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE PENALTY FOR FURNISHING FALSE OR MISLEADING INFORMATION

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved the second reading of Bill No. 138, to amend the Export and Import Permits Act.

Mr. A. L. SMITH (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, we had no idea this was to be discussed this afternoon. May I have an opportunity to telephone someone who knows something about it? We were relying upon other legislation for the afternoon.

Mr. HOWE: Mr. Speaker, the first section of this bill provides a penalty for the giving of false information or the making of false representations. The second section of the bill provides for an extension of the legislation. The duration of this legislation is in a peculiar position today. The present act provides that it shall expire two months after the commencement of the first session of parliament in 1948. There is no session of parliament commencing in 1948; the current session started in 1947. I think it can be reasonably presumed that the next session will start in 1949. The amendment will make it quite certain that the act will expire on March 31, 1950. The next section provides for a report to parliament in the usual form. When the bill is in committee another amendment will be moved to permit permits being given to certain countries and refused to other countries. This is to enable Canada to take part in the work of ERP and to take parallel action with the United States in directing shipments to certain countries and withholding shipments from certain other countries.

[Mr. Mitchell.]

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): It would be interesting to know the kind of things that are being done. I take it that this bill deals with imports and exports to and from countries other than the United States; is that correct?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Could the minister give us in a general way the picture of what has been going on?

Mr. HOWE: The act applies to a great variety of products. The purpose of the act is to hold in Canada a sufficient quantity of certain products for Canadian purposes. For instance, about 40 per cent of lumber is retained in Canada for Canadian purposes through the operation of the act. The act prevents the export of nails which are in short supply in Canada and also limits the export of products made of steel, basic steel being in limited supply. It applies to a great variety of commodities. As soon as any commodity is in ample supply, it is taken from the list of commodities subject to export control. Where a commodity is necessary to the Canadian economy and is in short supply, export control is applied.

Mr. TIMMINS: Just what is the purpose of the act in connection with imports when there is a shortage of a particular commodity in Canada?

Mr. HOWE: May I suggest that with the Speaker in the chair this is hardly an appropriate time for questioning. If the bill could have second reading and go into committee my officials could be here and I would be able to answer questions which hon. gentlemen might care to ask at that time.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

On section 1—Offences.

Mr. FRASER: Why is this amendment being made? Were there cases where false applications were made?

Mr. HOWE: We have had several cases where false information has been given and where permits have been issued on the basis of that false information. There was nothing in the bill that permitted us to do anything about the matter.

Mr. FRASER: What do you do in these cases? Do you cancel their permits entirely?

Mr. HOWE: Information came to hand after the material had been shipped, and as there was no penalty provision in the bill, we simply had to let the matter drop. There was nothing we could do about it.

Mr. FRASER: This is to take care of that.

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. McMASTER: To how many articles has the act been applied? According to section 4 of the act, a list was to be published in the Canada Gazette. That list may have been published, but I do not remember seeing it. Was such a list published?

Mr. HOWE: Yes. The list has been tabled. I shall be glad to send a copy to my hon. friend. It was distributed to hon. members.

I have an amendment, Mr. Chairman. The amendment is:

That clause one of the bill be deleted and the following clauses substituted therefor:

"1. Section three of the Export and Import Permits Act, chapter seventeen of the statutes of 1947, is amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

'(2) The governor in council may by order, which shall be published in the Canada Gazette within fifteen days after the passing of such order, establish a list of countries to which section five of this act shall apply, and such list may be amended by the governor in council by order so published.'

2. Section five of the said act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

'5. No person shall export or attempt to export from Canada any goods included in a list established pursuant to subsection one of section three of this act, or any goods to a country named in a list established pursuant to subsection two of such section, except under the authority of and in accordance with a permit issued under this act.'

3. The said act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section six thereof, the following section:

'6A. No person shall, in any application for a permit under this act or for the purpose of procuring the issue of any permit under this act, wilfully furnish any false or misleading information or knowingly make any misrepresentation.'

4. Section seven of the said act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

'7. The minister, or any person designated by the minister, may issue to any person applying therefor a permit to export from Canada, to such place and in such quantity and of such quality as may be specified in the permit, any of the goods included in a list established pursuant to subsection one of section three of this act or any goods to a country named in a list established pursuant to subsection two of such section and may amend, suspend or cancel any such permit.'"

2. That clause two of the bill be renumbered as clause five.

Mr. LOCKHART: Is that an amendment?

Mr. FRASER: That is a new bill.

Mr. HOWE: May I explain the purpose of the amendment? I understand what my hon. friend is going to say, and I agree with him. The purpose of this amendment is to ensure that materials available in Canada for export are used in a manner that contributes to the maximum effort in the reconstruction and rehabilitation of Europe as envisaged under the European recovery program.

One of the keystones of the Hyde Park agreement whereby goods move without restriction from the United States into Canada, is the understanding that this special position accorded Canada will not be subject to abuse, and that the export controls of both countries are sufficiently co-ordinated as to allow for this free movement of goods between the two countries without the possibility of their flowing to a third country.

It is an arrangement which has proven extremely useful to Canada, and one that should be maintained.

The United States authorities on March 1 modified their regulations, in anticipation of the European recovery program, to require export licenses for all commodities being exported to Europe and contiguous areas.

One can readily understand that, with the enormous demands which will be placed on the productive capacity of the United States under the European recovery program, it is desirable that there be no diversion of United States products to Canada for back-door trading, and that we shall be found working as closely and harmoniously together in this peace offensive as under the duress of hostilities.

It is hoped therefore that the proposed amendment will enable us to implement our obligation on this score, and at the same time serve a double purpose of ensuring Canada's own products going forward to the best possible use in Europe.

It is apparent that the continuing world shortages, and the intensified demands that can be expected once funds are available to European countries will entail in Canada as in the United States, the need for directing supplies to those countries whose requirements are most urgent, and in such quantities as to ensure equitable distribution.

I think the committee will agree that in the early rehabilitation of Europe and the United Kingdom lies one bright hope for world peace. It is important, therefore, that every shipment we send to European shores contributes directly to this purpose. There is need, however, for machinery to implement this objective, and this amendment, I believe, meets this requirement.

It will be noted that the amendment provides flexibility to the governor in council in determining the countries to which export control is necessary. It may well be that in the case of certain countries suitable control of the situation will be provided by import controls in those countries, in which case export control by Canada would be a duplication, involving unnecessary paper work. The amendment, therefore, provides authority to the governor in council to determine the list of countries to which over-all export control will apply, and provides for additions to or deletions from such list to be made from time to time, as circumstances may warrant. In all probability the list of countries that will be prescribed will follow closely those which have been placed under control by the United States. Generally speaking, this includes practically all the countries of Europe.

I would ask my colleague to move this amendment.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I so move.

Mr. HOWE: The bill we have before us is an amending bill and this amendment refers to the act itself.

Mr. GRAYDON: I am quite aware of that. That is not what is confusing me.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): Frankly, Mr. Chairman, I am amazed that we are asked to pass this bill in its present form. I do not see how we can possibly digest it. We started with an egg partly turned over, now we have a scrambled egg, and we are asked to unscramble it.

May I speak for a moment with regard to the general idea behind this legislation? Of course, during the war we had to have export and import controls. This country dared not allow itself to be short of certain raw materials, and it dared not prohibit certain materials from coming in. I realize that to a degree that must be the case in peace time. But when are we to be able to clear the channel of all these restrictions and controls so that we may return to the old-fashioned way of trading?

I know that ERP is on the boards now and it may be necessary to have a certain amount of control, but this honourable assembly ought to know the extent of the control. If it is the old list, there are many items in that list, and the new list is not before us. I have not had the pleasure of perusing it and I should like to know what it contains.

The minister said in his previous statement that these controls were flexible and necessary for ERP. Yes, they carry the qualification of flexibility and perhaps of necessity, but within the confines of the amendment as I read it, and of this act, which does not expire until 1950, there will be a good deal more than flexibility in the administration of the measure. Arbitrary decisions will be made by the minister, and are provided for, and I believe that there will be as much in the way of arbitrary decisions as there will be of flexibility.

[Mr. Howe.]

I hazard the guess that this legislation, and particularly the amendment, found its way here from Washington. During the war our officials or many of them sat at the feet of Washington, so to speak. They are still sitting there, and we are not displaying, to the extent that I should like to see, our autonomy as a self-governing nation. To a degree we have to help ERP and I am satisfied to go along to that extent. But let us in our generation refuse to be dictated to by another power which is to the south of us. Let us show our individuality and our entity in dealing with the great wealth of raw materials and other resources that are here for Canadians to develop and to handle. Let us have all these restrictions expire as early as possible.

I hesitate to go along even as far as 1950 under this bill; but I realize the magnitude of the amount involved, the seventeen and a half Marshall billions, and the six billions already arranged for Europe might take us along to that time.

The minister said that one of the main purposes of the measure was to conserve necessary raw materials in Canada. He mentioned lumber and there are a score of others that he might enumerate. To that extent, when this legislation does find its way onto the statute books, I hope that particular feature which is in his mind will be kept track of throughout and that raw materials necessary for increased production in Canada will be held here under this act for the benefit of Canadians, and that a minimum of export and import licences will be allowed.

I do not think the minister should ask us to pass this bill before six o'clock. If he has to send it to another place to have it rewritten, at least he should give us an idea by having these amendments printed, of what we are passing. He might also advise us whether in the other place arrangements have been made for the amendments which he at present proposes to add to the legislation.

Mr. HOWE: I have no desire to press the legislation today. When it is printed hon. members will find that the amendments are quite simple, although the wording we have received from justice looks complicated.

The first amendment gives authority to control exports by destination as well as by materials. At the present time we can control only materials and this gives the power to control both destination and materials.

Hon. members will recall that the hon. member for Waterloo South a few weeks ago rose to complain that valuable machinery from his area had been purchased by Czechoslovakian interests and was being moved to that country. There was no reason for us to control the export of that machinery because there was no particular use for it in Canada, but we did wish to control the destination just as the hon. member wishes to do. Had this amendment been in effect, we could have done that. It so happened that there was a priority order on the machine from Canadian arsenals so that they could take it. It is becoming more and more evident, however, with the changing map of Europe, that we must have authority to control destinations as well as the goods themselves which are being exported.

Mr. TIMMINS: That is a new principle in the act.

Mr. HOWE: Yes, and it is all the more necessary in that we are joining with the United States in offering aid to certain countries, and it will be the purpose of the act to assist us in directing more of our materials to certain destinations where we have undertaken obligations, with the United States, to see that goods are supplied to those countries rather than to others.

The second amendment provides for two lists, one of goods and the other of countries, instead of the single list we have today of goods.

The third paragraph is the same as that printed in the bill, but renumbered. Hon. members will see that it is exactly the same as in the printed bill. The fourth paragraph of the amendment provides for two lists and there is no great change.

Unless hon. members see some objection, I suggest that we might allow the bill to be reported from the committee as amended, with the understanding that when it comes up for third reading at another sitting, if any hon. member wishes to have it recommitted to the committee the government will see that it is recommitted for further study. I know of no other way in which to have the bill printed in its amended form. If that appeals to hon. members as a course which might be followed, we can do that. If they would prefer to study the amendment in Hansard and give it second reading on another day, that also would be satisfactory.

Mr. KNOWLES: Naturally one cannot be expected to express an opinion too definitely on the subject matter of the amendments proposed by the minister without having time to study them. But I would say that, in general, I think I am in favour of those amendments being made. I say that by way of preamble to the remarks I intend to make, because I do not want what I shall say to be interpreted as an attempt to block the legislation which the minister is bringing in.

The fact of the matter is that, even if it is something that I favour, I should like to see it done in a way that is right without question. Frankly I think we are violating some fundamental rules of parliamentary procedure if we permit these amendments to be made in this way. There is a clearly established principle that if one desires to bring in something that is substantially new, it must go through the usual process, including due notice, and not be introduced by way of an amendment to something else. I also find, according to May, at pages 404, 407 and 409, that when the house is in committee on a bill it is not in order to move to the clauses of the bill amendments that are irrelevant to those particular clauses. When the minister seeks to amend a clause that has to do with offences, by changing it or adding to it in such a way as to have it make provision for our participation in the Marshall plan, I think he must admit that it is quite an innovation in parliamentary procedure. In fact I wish the minister and the government generally would note the kind of precedent they are setting for us on this side of the house if they go through with this. If this procedure is allowed, it will mean that any time an amending bill is brought before the house, to amend some sections of an existing statute, it is in order to move amendments to those clauses in order to open up other sections of the existing statute.

At the moment I am not prepared to offer a suggestion as to just how to do this, except that it seems to me that the bill might be withdrawn and reintroduced altogether. In fact we might send the bill back to the other place, tell them to stick to their divorces, and have the bill reintroduced in this house. But I press the point, Mr. Chairman, that this is going beyond the bounds of anything that a private member would ever be allowed to do. I think that at least the matter should stand over for another day, that we should rise and report progress, and that this question as to the proper way of doing it should be further considered by the minister.

Mr. HOWE: While the subject matter of export and import permits is immensely important, the changes made in this bill are, in my opinion, not of great importance. I think Canada would suffer more if this act were repealed immediately than it would if almost any other part of the emergency legislation were repealed—and from that I do not exempt rent control—because this is exceedingly important as a method of controlling supplies.

Mr. KNOWLES: I agree.

Mr. HOWE: The hon. member for Danforth has suggested that we should get rid of it. I agree. There is no more disagreeable task than that of administering this export and import control. Nevertheless—

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): I said, as soon as possible, ERP being considered.

Mr. HOWE: Yes. Every country in the world today has export and import control.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to sit in my seat in this chamber and allow the minister to put words into my mouth. The Minister of Trade and Commerce just now said that I wanted to get rid of these controls. That is quite true. I think perhaps the whole house does. But we must face circumstances as they are today. My question of privilege is this. I want the minister to give the full sentence that I used, namely, that we want to get rid of them, but in view of ERP, and in view of the present world situation, let us extend them as long as is reasonable, but not too long. I would ask the minister to give the whole sentence. The minister said that the hon. member wanted to get rid of controls. I want him to give the whole sentence.

Mr. HOWE: I said I was completely with the hon. member in favour of that. I want to get rid of them too. I certainly did not mean to misquote the hon. member, and I did not mean to suggest that if it were his decision, he would get rid of them. He said it was desirable over a period to get rid of them, and that is all I intended to say. I feel the same way about the matter.

Nevertheless, in the economy as we have it today, and in the world we are living in today, I think every hon. member will agree that we must have export controls. I am sorry to say that I think we must have them for a considerable time. Whether at the expiration of this measure in March, 1950, it will not be necessary to ask for a further extension, I cannot say; but I have the feeling that we shall be back asking for a further extension. I make full apology for the condition of the legislation that I am bringing in today. The difficulty is that the bill was introduced in the senate. At that time the necessity for a further amendment was not evident. As my hon. friend has suggested, the bill can be withdrawn and we can start all over again. But I think the easy way to deal with the situation would be to allow me to have this amendment printed, report the bill and, when it comes up for third reading, I shall be glad to recommit it to the committee for any changes that hon. members may wish to have made at that time. That is the easy way to do it. Of course, if there is any objection to it, we shall not do it in that way.

Mr. KNOWLES: In reply to the minister's statement that this is the easy way to do it, may I ask him this question? If we consent to this, will he support us in our attempt to follow the same easy way in amending other amending bills that are brought in?

Mr. HOWE: If the hon. member's amendments are as innocuous as mine are, we shall.

Mr. KNOWLES: Even innocuous amendments should be made in the right way.

Mr. FRASER: This, I believe, is creating a precedent.

The CHAIRMAN: I should like to make a suggestion. In May's, fourteenth edition, at page 509, there is a paragraph headed "Admissible Instructions", which reads as follows:

(1) Extension of objections—An instruction is necessary to authorize the introduction of amendments into a bill, which extend its provisions to objects not strictly covered by the subject matter of the bill as disclosed on the second reading, provided that these objects are cognate to its general purposes.

Would it meet the wishes of the committee if the committee rose and reported progress today and asked leave to sit again; then when the order is called at the next sitting of the house, that the minister move that instructions be given to the committee to amend the bill in accordance with the amendments which he has submitted today? That might be more in keeping with parliamentary procedure, I believe.

Mr. KNOWLES: That certainly is better than the procedure we are now following. You raised this point so quickly, Mr. Chairman, that I have not had time to look it up. But I think there is an item in Beauchesne which says that such instructions to the committee must be moved the first time the bill is referred to the committee, but that after it has once been referred, it cannot be done. Perhaps we might pardon the minister this time and give unanimous consent to the procedure.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, no.

Mr. KNOWLES: I am only suggesting that unanimous consent be given to—

Mr. HOWE: I do not wish to press the point. I believe this is desirable legislation, but I do not think we should waste too much time on this matter. We can go back to the senate and ask them to withdraw the bill and start all over again, if necessary. That will delay the bill a month or two, but that can be done if hon. members insist. But in order to get on with the business of the country I suggest that we allow this bill to be amended, and then consider it as it will read when amended.

Mr. KNOWLES: May I proceed with what I was saying when I was interrupted. I think your suggestion should be carried out, Mr. Chairman, with the understanding that it will require unanimous consent for the minister to move his instruction to the committee, when we are back in the house with the Speaker in the chair. The minister can then move an instruction that the committee has the power to make this amendment. The only time unanimous consent will be required will be to give him the right to move that motion; then it becomes a debatable motion and hon. members can discuss it if they wish. I agree that it is desirable legislation, but I think it should be put through in the right and proper parliamentary way.

The CHAIRMAN: If I may reply to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, I believe, if it is found fitting when the house is in committee to change the bill and make it much broader than the bill which was considered on second reading, the procedure is for the committee to rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again. Then when the order is next called in the house the minister, on notice, can move that the committee be given an instruction to bring in the amendment.

Mr. POULIOT: I wish to say just a word. In the first place I want to congratulate the Minister of Trade and Commerce on the way he is dealing with trade, and on the splendid Canadian exhibit that will be shown at the British industries fair. I need not say more about that just now, because I shall have other occasions to speak about it; but I should like to say one thing to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I can tell him that I admire his industry; and it was precisely because I appreciate the fact that he has read May, Bourinot and the other writers on parliamentary procedure and practice that I voted for one of his amendments the other day. But he should have no illusion about it. If he becomes too punctilious then he will become a Philadelphia lawyer, and I shall be unable to support him any longer.

Mr. KNOWLES: Heaven forbid.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): While I know nothing about the rules of procedure, it seems to me that the suggestion which has been made is wise. But I wish to add that while I recognize, unwillingly, that probably this has to become law, and that probably the amendments suggested are sound, nevertheless I think we should just not be asked to pass this measure in any formal or perfunctory way. It seems to me that the fact we are asked to give these powers should put us on the alert to cut down those powers as far as may be reasonably possible. Therefore I am glad this matter is to be deferred until we have a look at what we are doing, because at the present time we have not had that look.

Progress reported.

EXPORT CREDITS INSURANCE ACT

AMENDMENT WITH RESPECT TO POWER TO ENTER INTO CONTRACTS

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to present a bill to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act, to empower the corporation, with the approval of the governor in council, to enter into insurance contracts for a term or in an amount in excess of that which the corporation would normally undertake; moneys required to discharge liabilities of such contracts to be paid out of the consolidated revenue fund.

He said: The purpose of this amendment is to increase the effectiveness of the export credits insurance corporation by providing the means whereby insurance contracts up to an additional $100 million can be underwritten by the corporation under special conditions.

The act under which the corporation operates is one of the measures introduced by the government to strengthen Canada's post-war trade and to improve our economic position on a long-term basis. At the end of the war the outlook for the private business man interested in export trade was not encouraging. The need of devastated Europe for the goods Canada could supply was indeed great, but there were factors other than demand that had to be considered. Pre-war trading connections had been broken. In the search for new markets, Canadian exporters found that the field was limited. No longer could they spread their trade all over the world so that the risk of complete or total failure was but a remote possibility. The widespread destruction in so many European countries, the liquidation of foreign investments during the war, the increasing exchange difficulties and general shortage of dollars, the new political and administrative uncertainties and limitations facing private trade—all these were factors that had radically changed the trading picture of pre-war days. Elements of risk above and beyond those the exporter might normally be expected to incur were introduced. If Canada's export trade were to be placed on a firm basis, within the framework of free enterprise at the Canadian end, some new measures were necessary to face the facts of life and adapt our trading system to the changing international scene. One of these measures was government-sponsored insurance.

Before introducing the Export Credits Insurance Act in 1944, a careful study was made of similar schemes which had operated successfully in Europe before the war. Of particular interest was the experience in Great Britain where such a system started about 1920 and continued in force throughout the war. Incidentally, the British scheme has today a surplus in excess of £2 million. Under the act, which first began to function in Canada in 1945, the exporter is insured against the hazards that are not covered by commercial policies. By the removal of this particular unpredictable portion of risk involved, he has been encouraged to expand his foreign trade.

Through the operations of the act over the past two and a half years, an increasing amount of export trade has been insured, and a portion of this is trade which undoubtedly would not have materialized had it not been insured. At December 31, 1947, the current policies of the corporation covered an estimated export volume of $44·5 million, or double the amount covered on the same day a year before.

Through the corporation the government is supplying a service that cannot be provided by private insurance firms. The Export Credits Insurance Act protects against those unexpected and unpreventable losses that occur in spite of every precaution of the policyholder. Some of the risks covered by the act include insolvency of the foreign buyer, cancellation of an import licence in the country of destination, or the risk of adverse changes in foregin exchange regulations. While the corporation will insure against delays in collection that are not the fault of the exporter, it does not cover trade disputes as to quality or quantity of goods received. Nor does it cover straight repudiation on the part of the buyer. On the other hand the exporter is insured against blockage of funds or transfer difficulties which prevent him from receiving payment for his goods in the currency agreed upon at the time of the sale. Such calamities as war or revolution in the country of the buyer are also covered. All these risks tend to have a political tinge and result from the fact that so much of our export trade, other than that with the United States, is concentrated in countries that have not yet recovered from the blows of war. Most of our overseas markets have still uncertain economic and exchange equilibrium which represents additional risks of a non-commercial nature to the Canadian exporter.

The Export Credits Insurance Act is administered in such a way as not to interfere with the normal business activities of the exporter. He is given freedom to extend credit within certain maximum limits without reference to the corporation. And it is up to the exporter to maintain a constant scrutiny of the credit-worthiness of his foreign buyer.

The act in no way subsidizes the exporter, for he still has to compete on the basis of quality, price, credit terms, service rendered, et cetera. But by insuring one of his most important liquid assets, the exporter finds it easier to obtain financial assistance from his bankers. The policy he holds gives him the benefit of the advice and assistance of the corporation in recovering as much of his loss as possible in the event of default. And finally, by being given coverage against the principal forms of loss arising out of overseas trade at the present time, he is able to expand his exporting business and so help in building up Canada's future foreign trade.

The corporation does not compete with commercial enterprises in the insurance field. It is nevertheless administered on a sound and businesslike basis. In all its policies, it adheres to the principle of co-insurance and will pay up to a maximum of 85 per cent of the contract price, leaving 15 per cent to be borne by the policyholder.

This maximum applies to all policies covering capital goods. Under general commodities policies, the same maximum of 85 per cent is set for any loss sustained in connection with individual shipments, but the maximum liability is limited in each policy to 50 per cent of the exporter's annual sales.

Also in keeping with another basic principle of insurance—that there should be a broad spread of risk—the corporation endeavours to cover as wide a range of countries, commodities, exporters, and contracts as possible. In this way the premium rate can be kept down. In 1947, out of 170 policies, 150 were for general commodities sold on short-term credits, and twenty were capital goods policies of short to medium term. More than seventy different countries received a variety of agricultural products, raw materials, and manufactured goods from Canadian exporters, insured by the corporation.

The corporation is operated on a self-supporting basis. It is not a profit-making institution, nor does it attempt to subsidize export trade. In the setting of premium rates, the tariff charged is sufficiently high to cover operating expenses and probable losses. Because of the favourable credit conditions of the last couple of years, the losses of the corporation have been negligible and an underwriting reserve of some $584,000 has been accumulated from the excess of income over expenditure.

I have dwelt at some length on the Export Credits Insurance Act, as well as the work of the corporation, for the bill I am speaking to will extend its scope to meet a situation that has been developing for some time. Under the present act, the corporation can take on liabilities up to a maximum of ten times its $10 million of paid-up capital and surplus. That is, the maximum liability at the present time cannot exceed $100 million. The proposed amendment will permit the corporation to issue contracts involving liabilities up to another $100 million, in addition to the maximum liability now in force. Contracts issued under this new section of the act will be those that are considered to be in the national interest, but that, because of their size, would not normally be covered by the corporation. Any losses from these contracts—which will have to be approved and authorized by the governor in council—will be paid out of the consolidated revenue fund.

The reason for introducing this amendment to the act lies in the number of requests the corporation has been receiving for individual contracts ranging from $5 million to $35 million. In view of the corporation's policy of spreading its risks as widely as possible, it was felt that covering such contracts would take up and centralize an undue proportion of the corporation's maximum liability of $100 million.

To give one example, the projected sale of aircraft to the United Kingdom by Canadair involves $35 million. Underwriting this contract alone would tie up one-third of the corporation's maximum insuring capacity. On the other hand it is obviously an excessive risk in one contract to be undertaken by one private company.

A number of these contracts are related to national policies and are dependent on the maintenance of an international equilibrium over which neither the seller nor the buyer may have any influence. The practical question of payment often depends more on the over-all balance of payments situation, which is sometimes affected by political considerations, than on the normal practices of commercial trade.

In the period following the war, the export credits which have been granted by Canada to European nations removed many of the difficulties I have just mentioned. With the assurance that the money to pay for the sale was right here in Canada, the exporter was not in the same need of insurance against the risks covered by an export credits insurance policy. But faced with the present balance of payments situation, Canada is no longer in a position to extend credits to other nations on the same scale as before. It is hoped, therefore, that this amendment will be able to replace some of the protection that was inherent in our export credits policy.

Because these contracts are for the most part much larger than those normally undertaken, the exporter finds that, in relation to his capital, he is unable to take on the contract without insurance protection. Then, too, the fact that payment may be spread over periods of months or even years makes it difficult for him to obtain the additional financing required, without the support of an export credits insurance policy. In many cases these sales are essential to Canada's well-being or will add materially to the development of her foreign trade.

The government has always encouraged the individual exporter and believes he should be free to carry on his business under his own initiative. But at the same time it must be recognized that state trading is operating in many countries of the world today, and it tends to place the Canadian exporter at a serious disadvantage if he is forced to operate without some government support. The amendment to the Export Credits Insurance Act will give our exporters competitive equality with exporters from foreign countries who already benefit from this kind of insurance, With the Marshall plan now in operation, conditions throughout the world are likely to cause an increase in large-scale government contracts, or those of a semi-political nature, that might be covered by this new section of the act. Where the risk involves political factors that increase the element of uncertainty in foreign trading and where a contract will prove beneficial to the nation as a whole, it is felt that the people of Canada, through its government, should bear some share of that risk, and by so doing place our exporters in a more favourable position with their competitors in the world market.

Before closing, I wish to point out that the policies issued under this amendment will be open to inspection by parliament. In its normal operations, the corporation, in setting premium rates, bases the premium for any contract on the class or type of goods sold, the countries to which they are shipped, and the credit terms involved. To some extent it also takes into account the volume of the exporter's annual sales, the spread of risk on the part of the corporation, the previous loss experience of the exporter, and such relevant factors. Nor does the corporation neglect the fact that each exporter has his own markets, his own credit terms, problems and difficulties —all of which must be considered. It has therefore been the practice of the corporation to consider rates of premium as strictly confidential between policyholder and the corporation. This rule of secrecy will continue in force for all contracts of insurance that have been or will be issued under the present sections of the act. But policies issued under the amendment now before the house, that is, those issued under section 21A of the act, will be treated differently. Because such policies will usually cover contracts with foreign governments or semi-public agencies, and because of the political factors involved, it has been decided that all such contracts should be open to scrutiny by members of parliament. Full information on these policies will therefore be tabled in the house.

Mr. J. M. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Mr. Speaker, the minister has given us a most interesting report on the operations of this act and I think he has made out a prima facie case for its usefulness. I do not think that on the resolution stage one needs to spend a great deal of time in asking questions, and anyway the minister has given us considerable information. However there are some things which will require further explanation when we are dealing with the bill itself.

For instance, it is not immediately clear to me why private insurers could not write policies in connection with goods going to the United States. I note that the minister referred to that and it is not necessary now to ask for detailed information. Another thing I should like to know more about is this. The minister stated early in his remarks that government policies were written in cases where it was impossible for private insurers to act. I think those were substantially his words. The word "impossible" is a rather strong word and sometimes there are degrees of possibility or impossibility. Is this a case of whole hog or none? Could there be exports to certain countries where perhaps some policies could be written by private insurers, while others, because of their size or for some other reason, could not be taken up by private insurers but would have to be taken up by the government?

[Mr. Howe.]

Mr. HOWE: I wonder if we could go into committee when it would be easier to answer questions?

Mr. McMASTER: I should like to say a few words and I wonder if we could call it six o'clock.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. W. A. McMASTER (High Park): Mr. Speaker, I rise to register my opposition to this particular resolution, and in doing so I may say that I speak only for myself. I do not know what position other hon. members of the house intend to take. For reasons which I shall elaborate I have had the particular act to which this resolution refers under consideration for some time. It is one of the acts which I heartily disapprove. It is one of several acts that were passed about the same time during the war. These acts in their very nature were emergency legislation, as will appear from the preamble to the original act which was passed in the fall of 1944 and which reads as follows:

> Whereas it is desirable to promote the revival of trade by establishing a corporation to insure against loss caused by insolvency, delay in collection and transfer difficulties in connection with the export of Canadian-produced goods, and during the period of transition from war to peace by providing for loans or guarantees to governments of other countries or their agencies.

Surely three years after the war we can hardly say that we are in the period of transition from war to peace. In fact, as long ago as June, 1946, the government realized that the preamble was no longer applicable and repealed it, so that in the extensive amendments which were made in 1946 that preamble no longer appears because I presume the government considered it no longer applicable.

I cannot quite understand why this government should want to receive power to enter into any contracts that they have not the power to enter into at the present time because, as I read the act as it was enacted in 1946, they have power to enter into contracts to the extent of $200 million as to guarantees given to other countries, and to the extent of $750 million for the purchase of securities. Incidentally, the capital of the corporation is $10,000,000. These amounts seem to me to be considerable sums of money for one more or less innocuous corporation about which we have heard very little during the past few years. Perhaps one reason we have heard very little about it is that very little publicity was given to the type of work that the corporation is doing.

As I understand it, the act is divided into two parts: loans to other governments and their agencies; and policies of insurance sold to exporters. In a return brought down to a question asked by me in February of this year, return No. 116A, it was stated that at the present time the bank had guaranteed $12,750,000 to three chartered banks in respect of credit given to the Ming Sing Industrial Company of China to purchase ships from Canada. So far as I know, that is the only guarantee given to another government agency, although the terms of the resolution may indicate that some larger guarantees are intended to be given.

I should like to say a word about the policies of insurance issued. Perhaps I should say this first, since the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) in his opening statement referred to it. Apparently all the loans made to other countries under the amendment of 1946, which allowed the Dominion of Canada to extend credits to the extent of $750 million to countries other than the United Kingdom, were advanced under this act; therefore at the present time no responsibility rests upon the export credits corporation, because this money is a loan given to each country. Therefore there is no responsibility to be undertaken by the corporation; it has only to see that the money is properly handed over to a country and that the money is expended in Canada. It may be that up to the present time it had no great responsibility in that regard. One of the things I object to very much is the policies of insurance which the corporation is selling. Before the dinner recess the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. Macdonnell) asked why private people could not issue these policies. The answer may be in the amendment that was made in 1946, but it does not seem to me a very compelling reason for the government to enter into a business which can be carried on privately in an economy that is supposed to be competitive. One of the amendments of the 1946 act says that the corporation may:

> (a) for the purpose of facilitating and developing trade between Canada and any other country, enter into a contract of insurance with an exporter to insure him against any risk of loss in connection with the export or an agreement for the export of goods by reason of the failure of the exporter, for any cause not avoidable by the exporter, to recover the selling price of the goods.

That is a very practical guarantee. Certain exporters who buy one of these policies of insurance will be guaranteed against loss which is not caused entirely by the negligence of the exporter. I presume he has to give some evidence of good faith and allow proper time to recover the money. Once before I asked a question about the reasons for these guarantees of insurance, and I know now why I have not received the answer. Therefore I have devised another way of trying to get some idea of the cost of these government agencies. In the return which I mentioned a while ago of February of this year, I received the following information: issued policies as of December 31, 1947, $23,964,827. I then asked a question as to the size of the policies, and the answer is as follows: one of $3,281,000; one of $2,550,000; one of $1,649,000; two of $1,000,000 each; one of $700,000; one of $580,000; one of $575,000, one of $550,000, and one of $500,000. Who are the fortunate people who received these policies of insurance because, as the minister stated in his opening remarks, goods were shipped all over the world? This is substantiated by the return of the corporation for the year 1947 which, incidentally, happened to come to us through the mail today. If the minister held off his resolution until this was available I want to thank him for doing so because we are in a little better position with that information. On an analysis of the countries of actual risks undertaken during the year 1947, I find a whole page. I think there are about sixty countries to which insurance guarantees have been given. The exports to foreign countries range from $1,000,000 to $3,300,000. Several had over $1,000,000. In the case of the United Kingdom the sum is $6,391,000. Therefore at different times there were guarantees to the extent of $28,000,000 given. Some have been repaid. In other words, guarantees are extended with respect to goods shipped to every part of the world. I cannot see why the government should be expected to give these guarantees and I believe that a considerable loss will be sustained in consequence.

The annual report for 1947 is somewhat better than that of the first nine months of 1946. It shows that the corporation had in their hands $10,000,000 advanced by the Dominion of Canada and on the amount they invested they received $196,000. They received $277,000 by way of premium on risks undertaken and their expenses were in the neighbourhood of $60,000, leaving a balance on hand of approximately $413,000, of which approximately $200,000 came from investments.

Now, $413,000 is just about four per cent on the money invested. If Canada is paying three per cent for money, and if, after this extensive trading in a year, there were no actual losses last year, at least none being visible at the time of this return, the result is a surplus of $122,000 to cover guarantees totalling at that time $23,000,000.

I do not think that is good business. In my opinion the charge is far less than it should be. At one time I calculated it to be about one-fifth of one per cent, which is practically negligible so far as the exporters are concerned. Anyone can appreciate that even if there is not a loss at all it becomes a small charge to the exporter. I fear, therefore, the people of Canada will suffer a great loss.

I realize that the directors are all government employees. The act made provision for certain others to be appointed; but, apart from the general manager, the directors are all employees in the higher brackets either of the government or of the Bank of Canada. There is also an advisory council. I have nothing to say against the advisory council, which is composed of men of substance in the community, but I doubt whether these men have the time to look into many of these different transactions which this government is bound to investigate during the course of the year. I suggest that they can deal intelligently only with certain ones about which they have some knowledge, and the ones they know of would be corporations that would not require the assistance of the government, because they could make use of the insurance companies now available throughout Canada.

I object strenuously to this as I do to three or four other corporations of the kind, for the reason that we do not know what they are doing. We do not know who is borrowing money. The minister intimated, I gathered, that a list of the loans will be available to members of parliament. That will be in the future, because I do not believe that any member has seen it in the past. But I submit that making the list accessible under conditions of secrecy will not serve any useful purpose, because in that case, one may say too much, and then it will no longer be secret, or, if strict secrecy is observed, the information obtained will be of no value to the person who gets it. The information should be available to everyone.

It may be that these exporters do not want their business known. If they do not, they should not apply for the guarantee. They must take the consequence of asking for something which no one else will give them at a reasonable premium.

In regard to this particular corporation, I take the same position that I take with respect to any other department of government. I suggest that a minister of the crown or a deputy minister should always stand on guard in his relations to friends or to other people who may have a persuasive manner, and if he has the knowledge that the people of Canada will learn of the transaction it will make it easier to say "no." I do not think any man seeking a favour would dare to ask for it if he knew he did not deserve it, and that the public would learn of the transaction.

I do not say that, in the matter of publicity, the facts need be widely publicized, but the information should be available to everyone; otherwise it is not democratic. If it is a case where only seven, eight, nine or ten people know the facts in Canada, you have no democracy. In a dictatorship only one man knows, but the difference is merely that in one case ten men are dictators and in the other only one man is. I do not think that is in keeping with democratic government, and I do not believe the exporters of Canada, with their reputation for shrewdness and for sound trading, need be coddled by the government. They should stand on their own feet; otherwise the weaker ones will be in the same position as the strong ones. We do not want ambassadors all over the world. We want live trade commissioners who will look after the trade of Canada. For these reasons I am opposed to the resolution carrying.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Golding in the chair.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): In the report of the corporation I do not see anything by way of reserve on account of outstanding policies in the assets and liabilities. I should like to ask the minister why the premiums were not disclosed before and why they are to be disclosed now. I should also like to know what losses have been sustained so far. What reserve is set up for outstanding policies?

Mr. HOWE: If my hon. friend will read the statement distributed for the year ended December 31, 1947, he will find that at the end of that year the reserve had been built up to $584,336.07. The capital of $10,000,000 which was credited to the corporation on its formation is still intact.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): On what basis are the reserves arrived at? The outstanding liabilities must be very large. I believe the outstanding liabilities under policies outstanding are $27,000,000 and it does not seem to me that $584,000 is sufficient.

Mr. HOWE: Reserves can be built up only from earnings. We have the $10,000,000 capital.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Reserves are a different thing from surplus. I am talking about reserves.

Mr. HOWE: The surplus that my hon. friend talks about is built up from earnings just as the reserves are built up from earnings.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Excuse me; you have two different things. One is reserves and the other is premiums.

Mr. HOWE: All the premiums received to date are in the underwriting reserve.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): What reserves have you on account of losses which will take place, out of this $27,000,000? All you have is something like $485,000.

Mr. HOWE: You have $584,336.07 along with the original capital of $10,000,000 invested in the company.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Can the minister give us some idea about how these reserves are arrived at?

Mr. HOWE: These reserves are the total earnings of the company, the total receipts from premiums less the cost of operating the company.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I do not think that is correct. The minister has the two things mixed up. First of all, you have a surplus which is a different thing altogether. What you have, as a matter of fact, and what you must have are reserves on account of unearned premiums. What are those reserves on account of unearned premiums? What is the basis of arriving at those reserves?

Mr. HOWE: Call them what you will, everything that has been paid into the company is in the form of reserves as shown in the statement. That is all the money there is, and there is not any more. This company was given $10,000,000 when it started and it has collected $584,000 more than it has paid out in operating expenses. That is all the money there is. How can my hon. friend find reserves beyond that point?

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I do not think the minister gets the idea yet. You have outstanding liabilities of something like $27,000,000. That is what you have. What reserve have you against these outstanding liabilities? What reserves do you put up? How do you arrive at the reserves which must be put up there?

Mr. HOWE: I arrive at the reserves by adding the capital and the earnings, and that is all the money there is.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I am trying to get at it from a different point of view. Your capital and what you have earned and so on constitute your surplus. But out of this $27,000,000 you will have some losses. What do you expect to have by way of losses and what reserve do you set up under this for those losses? That is what I want to get at, and I do not see it in the statement.

Mr. HOWE: I will read from the annual report:

> The financial statements of the corporation show that an underwriting reserve of $584,336.07 has been accumulated. Since the business of the corporation is to protect exporters against credit and political risks involved in foreign trade, it must be expected that there will be an appreciable loss experience over a period of years. The three years of the corporation's existence cannot be regarded as typical in this respect mainly because of the favourable credit conditions during this period. Accordingly, while no specific provision has been made for anticipated losses, the total excess of income over expenditure since the commencement of the corporation's operations has been credited to the underwriting reserve.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I still do not think the minister gets the point. I understand what he has. For instance, you have here the excess of income over expenditures for the year ended December 31, 1947, which is $422,000. That is what your excess of income over expenditure is. I understand that all right. But what anticipated losses have you? This statement does not tell me that. What anticipated losses will there be? What do you put in your statement here by way of a reserve for that? For instance, with regard to ordinary year by year fire insurance, the department of insurance in Canada requires that 40 per cent must be put up on your unearned premiums by way of reserve against anticipated losses. Where does that come into this statement? That is what I am trying to get at. What do you expect to have by way of losses out of this $27,000,000? That is the only way we can tell about this.

Mr. HOWE: The inspector of insurance is satisfied with 40 per cent of the premiums as a loss reserve. We are taking 100 per cent of the premiums. Surely we are being more conservative than the company my hon. friend is telling us about. All we can do is put all the money we earn into an insurance reserve.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Yes, I agree with you. You put it in the reserve. But what do you anticipate your losses will be?

Mr. HOWE: We have had no losses to date. We have had a limited experience, but we have had no losses.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): That is what I want to get at. How do you know your premiums are adequate for the risk you take? Or do you figure that the government of Canada will pay those losses anyway? Do you figure that we shall pay them anyway whether we get the premiums or not?

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): No, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): No. I want an answer to my question.

Mr. HOWE: We are operating on the same plan as the British fund, or rather on the same principle or on the same basis. Over the years the British fund has built up a substantial reserve, which is £2,500,000 at the moment. We are hoping that our experience will be similar to theirs. As I say, we have had two or three years of experience and no losses. The losses that have occurred are quite trivial; they are something like $18,000 to date. We are playing safe, because it is not a question of setting aside 40 per cent of the premiums or 50 per cent of the premiums as a loss reserve. We set aside 100 per cent. We cannot do more than that.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I just want to ask one other question which I asked before. Why should the rates of premiums on policies of this kind be cheaper, and why are you not to have them open for inspection now? What is the difference?

Mr. HOWE: They differ between the different countries. They have some relation to the political risk involved. Naturally, we do not want all countries to compare their position in this insurance fund with that of others. There are obvious reasons why we do not publish rates. We like to look at the risk, decide whether we want it or not and, if we want it, the rate of insurance that we shall charge, just as any insurance company would do.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Are these policies which are being issued at the present time annual policies or for a period of time?

Mr. HOWE: We issue both types; we issue annual policies to cover general commodities and also capital goods policies to cover a particular risk. For example, if we are selling a ship paid for by progress payments, the policy will extend over the life of the liability.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I do not propose to delay the committee to any extent now, but I should like to raise one or two points which I think should be gone into with considerable care when we come to the committee stage of the bill. When the Speaker was in the chair this afternoon the minister said, as I understood him, that the reason the public corporation was dealing with these risks was that private business could not take them on. Am I correct in that?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I have seen the report since this afternoon, and I have been studying it. Unless the ordinary insurers have changed their whole way of doing business, or want to go out of business altogether, it is hard for me to understand why they cannot take risks in Australia, let us say, or the United Kingdom, or the Netherlands, and I could mention some other countries. The minister has spoken about political risks. If people were shipping goods to Czechoslovakia or Hungary or Poland I can understand that there might be great political risks; but when we reach the committee stage on the bill I think perhaps the minister might give us some indication of what he bases his opinion on that this must be done by a government agency, and why no private corporation will undertake it. I propose to try to find out something more about that myself. In passing, I notice that we have guaranteed over a million dollars going to the United States of America. If I am correct in thinking that political risks enter into this and, while not the whole, form a large part of the reason for government intervention, surely the United States should not be included.

I do not want to take more time on this now. If the minister thinks it would be better to deal with these matters when we are in the committee stage on the bill, I am content; but it seems to me that we would require some evidence, let us say, far beyond anything I have read, that in the case of many of these countries private business has thrown up its hands, so we have to do this through a public agency.

Mr. HOWE: It is a fact that there are no companies insuring export credits to any country except the United States. That is the fact, but I cannot say why. We wish they were, because we do not particularly like this business; but there are risks today in shipping to almost any country, outside the United States, which risks a private firm cannot assess. There is the risk of devaluation of the currency; the risk of blockage of funds, and various risks of that kind which are peculiar to this period, which the government can assess and probably work out, but on which no private firm could possibly take a chance.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Of course, wherever those conditions exist I can see the reason for it; but does the minister apply those words— "risk of a sudden blockage of funds," for instance—to the United Kingdom?

Mr. HOWE: Certainly.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): In spite of the over-all financial arrangements we have, does the minister mean that a private firm could not satisfy itself, in making a deal in the United Kingdom, that it might not suddenly find the funds blocked?

Mr. HOWE: The fact is that, out of $28,000,000 of outstanding policies, over $6,000,000 are in the United Kingdom. As a matter of fact we have been approached for very large policies with respect to the United Kingdom, policies we could not take on because they would throw our whole insurance plan out of balance. But it is also a fact that many exporters, even though they are exporting through channels they may know all about, believe it is worth the price of a policy just to get the Canadian government behind their risk.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I am not going to pursue the matter further now, but frankly I am still puzzled. When the matter comes up again I may know more about it.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. HOWE thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 197, to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT

PROVISION FOR INCREASE IN SALARY OF CHIEF ELECTORAL OFFICER

Hon. COLIN GIBSON (Secretary of State) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Dominion Elections Act, 1938, to make provision inter alia for an increase of salary to the chief electoral officer.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Golding in the chair.

Mr. POULIOT: Some years ago I suggested the salary of the chief electoral officer should be increased, and at the time the circumstances were particularly interesting. There were two men. One was doing nothing and was receiving $10,000 a year. The other, the present chief electoral officer, was receiving only $4,000 and was doing all the work. This seemed strange and I suggested that the $10,000 should be given the man who was working hard and that the other gentleman should be given no more than $4,000. There was a compromise, and the chief electoral officer was paid $8,000.

He is doing splendid work, and I hope that some day a journalist will ask him for an interview and learn how he succeeded in having the ballots returned on time from all parts of the country after the last election. It was quite an accomplishment, and he deserves special recognition for that. I know he is helped by his son, who has a very fine war record; and I also hope that the services rendered by his son will be recognized in due course.

I am an old timer, Mr. Chairman; I remember elections when the electoral officials were much better paid than they are now, at a time when money had more value than it has today. We are now at the resolution stage of this matter, and I hope that the minister will be good enough to look into the past and see what was formerly paid in both urban and rural centres for the polling booths and to the returning officers, the deputy returning officers, the clerks and all the others who have to do with an election. I remember that in my first election a constable was at the door of every polling booth. That is a good thing; it inspires respect for justice on the part of everyone, even those who are not telegraphers. There are no such people in my constituency, but I speak now of the large, urban centres. In those days the rental paid for the polling booth was much higher than is now the case; and I suggest to the director of elections that all those in this country engaged in electoral work should be at least as well rewarded now as they were twenty or twenty-five years ago. There is no reason why they should not be. And if the salary of the chief electoral officer is to be adjusted now—and I am for it—the salaries of all those engaged in elections work by the government should go up to the level they were twenty or twenty-five years ago. You know, sir, that the whole thing has been decreased gradually and that no one has noticed it. There are many new members who appear for the first time. They do not pay much attention to the amount paid to these men. It is most important to reward them well, because they are doing their duty. If we want to have good men we have to pay them a reasonable amount for the time they spend on public business to help the country in the proper carrying out of elections. The minister must know that. He is not a newcomer but has been in the house for some time.

I was here before the minister came, and I remember the happy time when the adjustment of those salaries was more just than it is now. I shall not insist further, but I will ask for a complete tabulation of the amounts paid to all the electoral officers and for the renting of the polls at the present time and twenty or twenty-five years ago. I shall not ask for all the changes in the statute; that might take too much space in Hansard. I hope that the minister will accept my most reasonable request, which is made on behalf of thousands of people across the country.

Mr. MacINNIS: I am not going to debate the question at all, but I just wish to ask the minister why this matter is again referred to the committee when the committee appointed last year made an exhaustive study of the elections act and presented its report to parliament. I should hope that if there is nothing new the committee would not have to go over the same ground again.

The matter mentioned in the resolution, namely the increase in the salary of the chief electoral officer, was dealt with in the committee's report of last year. Before taking my seat, may I associate myself with what was said by the hon. member for Temiscouata with respect to the chief electoral officer. He is, I think, one of Canada's most respected servants, and certainly I did not have any objection last year to increasing the salary, nor will I have any this year. But I should like to know just why this matter is again referred to a committee in view of the exhaustive study given the matter last year.

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): As the hon. member has stated, this bill was referred to a committee at the last session of parliament. That committee reported, but the bill was not reached before the session ended. In the interval between sessions the chief electoral officer has come across some minor amendments he feels should be made, and he has several further suggestions to offer. It was considered advisable to have a committee consisting of the same personnel as at the last session study these suggestions before the bill receives second reading. I have on the order paper a notice for the setting up of that committee. Hon. members will see that, with two exceptions, namely the hon. members who formerly sat for Yale and Ontario, and both of whom unfortunately are no longer with us, the personnel is the same. If later I have unanimous consent I would suggest that we set up that committee tonight, so that when the bill receives second reading there will be a committee to which it can be referred.

Mr. POULIOT: Would the minister be good enough to say if he will table the tabulations for which I have asked, comparing the amounts paid now and twenty-five years ago to those engaged in election work.

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): I shall do my best to get those figures. I believe they should be readily obtainable, and I am sure the chief electoral officer will be glad to provide them, if he has them available.

Mr. POULIOT: I thank the minister; he will find them in the statutes and in the regulations.

Let me say something further about the work of the committee. There was no unity in the work of the committee last year, and there was much repetition. I am reminded of what happened after Mr. Bennett was defeated. The committee sat for two sessions and the members worked hard. I give them credit for it. Someone had complained that the Conservative legislation was bad. It is true that it was bad. All members were anxious to improve it, and they worked hard night and day. There were evening sittings. At that time some of the discussions brought forth a considerable degree of acrimony and animosity. Hon. members on both sides were so convinced as to the justice of their arguments that there were almost fights in the committee room—a committee to which I did not belong.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Last year?

Mr. POULIOT: No, in 1936 and 1937.

An hon. MEMBER: And 1938.

Mr. POULIOT: Let us say anything to please the hon. member. After two sessions of painstaking and strenuous work, the members presented a very fine report, which was the previous election law that was in force before Mr. Bennett took office. That work could have been done by a minor clerk. When I think that members had to waste their time for two sessions discussing, fighting and repeating the same story, working day and night for nothing, I am still sorry for them. I hope that the next time the matter comes before a committee other than the committee of the whole we shall not have a repetition of that condition.

I am surprised that the members who sat on the committee last year did not ask for a comparison between the amounts paid a long time ago and those paid at the last election. It was most unfair; it was unjust. If there is an increase in the salary of the chief electoral officer, then it must go to all others; and I am most insistent upon that. When hon. members return to their constituencies they will know that what I say tonight is accurate and according to the facts. If they support that contention they will be rewarded by popular applause when they return home.

Mr. KNOWLES: I should like to ask one question relating to a matter which might be dealt with by way of study on the part of the chief electoral officer, might be studied by the committee the minister proposes to set up, or might be studied by the government itself. I refer to the question of arranging for having redistribution carried out by some body other than the House of Commons. When I raised this matter last year one of the chief objections put forward by the hon. member for Quebec South was that the issue was too much alive at that time to permit the time being taken up which would be necessary in order to work out proper legislation. The hon. member for Quebec South told the house that at a previous time, I believe when he was Postmaster General, he had had charge of preparing a bill to permit redistribution to be done by an independent commission.

When this question of an independent commission is raised when redistribution is actually being effected I realize that the argument can be brought forth that there is not time to do it. In other words, the time to reconsider the whole position is in the lull between redistributions. As the Secretary of State knows, we in Canada are backward in this respect. Most democratic countries, such as the United Kingdom, New Zealand, Australia and South Africa, do it the other way. It is not the issue now that it was last year when we had a redistribution bill before the house, but it is a matter related to the elections act and I believe it would come under the supervision of the Secretary of State. I want to express the hope that some consideration will be given to the matter by the government, by the chief electoral officer or perhaps, if the Secretary of State so arranges, by the committee.

Mr. POULIOT: That is the reverse of the medal. I am strongly opposed to the proposition put forth by the former minister for air. It is a case of pure irresponsibility. Why should members of parliament entrust redistribution to a royal commission or to a judge? What judge would know about it except one who had been a politician? Why not have the politicians do it themselves?

Mr. MacINNIS: Most judges are defeated politicians.

Mr. POULIOT: They have learned their geography by running in constituencies where they got votes. I do not want to deprecate the bench, but that is the situation. Last year the hon. member for Quebec South suggested that it should be done by judges. Judges have enough work to do if they are to fulfil their job properly. We are always complaining that there are not enough judges, and we hear that six more superior court judges are to be appointed in Quebec. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, a good C.C.F. man, has more confidence in judges than I have.

Mr. KNOWLES: I did not say judges; I said an independent commission.

Mr. POULIOT: Composed of whom, brokers?

Mr. KNOWLES: A few intelligent men.

Mr. POULIOT: Lawyers, teachers and clergymen.

An hon. MEMBER: Farmers.

Mr. POULIOT: My hon. friend is right; there should be some farmers. The idea of giving everything to a commission, whether presided over by a judge or anybody else, is repugnant to me. Since confederation, and even before, the constituencies have been set up by members of parliament themselves. The senate simply ratifies the bill because it cannot affect them very much. It is our business. Why are we reluctant to do our business? It seems to be the idea of the C.C.F. that everything should be done by others. They seem afraid to assume any responsibility. They consider that when anything is done by somebody else it is a fine job. They are not sure of themselves. They do not have the satisfaction of having carried out their duty. They do not trust their colleagues.

Here we are, a bunch of Liberals, Conservatives, C.C.F.'ers and Social Crediters; I see no members of the Bloc Populaire, but that makes no difference, I shall argue even for them. I would be the laughing stock of the country if I rose in my place and said that we should pass the matter over to a commission, whether royal or princely or anything else. It is ridiculous; it is absurd. My hon. friend has not a sufficient sense of humour to realize that it is the summit of absurdity.

If it is taken seriously there will be headlines saying that the hon. member for Quebec South and the illustrious member for Winnipeg

North Centre have agreed on appointing a commission to do what the House of Commons should do, that they feel that the House of Commons cannot do it as well as a commission. It is most ridiculous.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I think all this discussion is out of order.

Mr. KNOWLES: On the point of order, I understand from an hon. member nearby that last year this matter was discussed in the committee and that it does come under the purview of the chief electoral officer. It seems to me that it is clearly in order, either with reference to this resolution or with reference to the resolution setting up the committee. I should like to have the assurance of the Secretary of State that the matter can be discussed in the committee this year.

I shall not take the time to answer the arguments of my genial friend, the hon. member for Temiscouata, other than to say that I was not proposing that we shirk responsibility. I was simply saying that we have no right as members of parliament to determine the boundaries of the seats that affect us. The history of redistribution by this parliament is not one of which we can be very proud.

Mr. POULIOT: I wish to pay a tribute to the hon. member for Outremont for the excellent work he did last year in Quebec. I do not know what happened in the other provinces, but he certainly did a splendid job. I offer one serious argument in answer to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I would remind him of two things. A distinction should be made between those appointed by order in council and those appointed by the house itself. The auditor general and the chief electoral officer are not bureaucrats. They were not put into their positions by orders in council, by the government; they were appointed by a majority vote of the house. They are both officers of the House of Commons. This is an argument which my hon. friend will quickly understand.

Mr. KNOWLES: I agree. Parliament should appoint the commission.

Mr. POULIOT: No, not at all; it is an altogether different matter.

Mr. KNOWLES: You want it in the hands of the government majority.

Mr. POULIOT: Moreover, both the auditor general and the chief electoral officer cannot be discharged unless there is a majority vote in the house.

Mr. KNOWLES: Hear, hear.

[Mr. Pouliot.]

Mr. POULIOT: Yes. Therefore they are our own officers, the officers of the House of Commons. Let my hon. friend name many others like these. There is Mr. Speaker; there is the chairman of the committee of the whole; there is the Deputy Speaker. Who else besides these are appointed by ourselves, are appointed by my hon. friend as by myself on the proposition of the government? The proposition could be made by anybody else.

Mr. KNOWLES: Will my hon. friend permit a question?

Mr. POULIOT: Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES: Does my hon. friend not understand that I am proposing a commission to deal with redistribution on the same basis? I suggest that the commission be appointed by parliament under section 51 of the British North America Act.

Mr. POULIOT: Oh, no.

Mr. KNOWLES: That is what I am trying to tell you.

Mr. POULIOT: Oh, no.

Mr. KNOWLES: I am sorry you cannot understand it.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. POULIOT: It is a different matter. I still believe in the brotherhood of man and in the fraternal spirit that should exist between all members of parliament. There are rules of the house that bind us when there is no mutual consent, but with mutual consent we could drive a big limousine through the rules of the house. Why not have mutual consent with regard to redistribution? The last redistribution was, of course, fair. It is inescapable—

Mr. KNOWLES: What about the one before that?

Mr. POULIOT: The one before that?

Mr. KNOWLES: Yes, when your friend Bennett was in power.

Mr. POULIOT: It was very bad. It was impossible to come to any agreement with the men who were in Bennett's cabinet. It was impossible to discuss with them. They were abnormal, and that is the reason the redistribution was so bad. Besides that, it was their last breath; they were about to expire; they knew their unpopularity, and they tried to steal—

Mr. KNOWLES: You did the same thing; maybe this is your last breath.

Mr. POULIOT: —Conservative votes from other constituencies. But that is an exception, and the only time it happened before was when a decrepit Tory government was about to expire in 1893. It happened in 1893 and 1894 when the Tories were just as bad as they were in 1934.

An hon. MEMBER: And as they are now.

Mr. POULIOT: I will not say that; I am charitable. We are still not very far from Easter time, and therefore I want to be generous. The fact is that when the Liberals were in power redistribution was always fair.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. POULIOT: I am serious when I say that. We were so fair that there was no complaint from the opposition. It means that it is possible for members of parliament to carry on that work successfully.

I will tell my hon. friends who are students of history that in 1893 Sir Wilfrid Laurier called the Tory redistribution of that year a gerrymander with a vengeance. He stigmatized what had been done by the Tories, and it is not—

Mr. NICHOLSON: The hon. member for Lake Centre used similar language last year.

Mr. POULIOT: My hon. friend should be the last man to quote the hon. member for Lake Centre because they never agree on anything. I will not insist too much on it because I believe in the intelligence of my colleagues and I bow to their pride as faithful members of parliament. I am so sure of what I say that I would have no objection to having the limits of my constituency not changed perhaps but supervised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. If he changed it, if he made my county smaller or larger it would make no difference to me because they are all my friends. He is too practical to waste his time on that, but I will tell him something more. Leaving aside all political considerations, I do not know whether my hon. friend is familiar with the parish organizations in the province of Quebec. It must be the same in the other provinces. I have been there occasionally, but I have not lived long enough in any other province to be able to express a definite opinion on it.

There is the parish, which is a unit. It is a complete unit. People live together, and they have some tradesmen and some farmers. To a certain extent they are self-sufficient. Then the assemblies of these units that are the parishes of the county form the county itself. There are particular boundaries between those who are within that unit. There may be wholesalers and others and the railway facilities. They join together and they go there. My idea of a redistribution is to respect and conserve these two units as much as possible and not pass the boundary of a constituency through the middle of a parish, not take a parish that has been for a long time within a county and put it somewhere else, but respect the customs and traditions of the people.

When some people are taken away from a constituency where their families have been living for a long time it creates a disturbance in their minds; it annoys them, and it causes them difficulties in their daily relations with the other people. The Canadian people have enough grounds for complaint without putting them in front of a judge who will be more compromising than anybody to create trouble. He will try to appease everybody. It will be the same thing as in Russia. The Russians have got everything by blackmail. There will be in front of a judge a party who will insist on having something unjust and create trouble by persistence. Then the judge will say, "Well, we will try to appease him"; and he will give him a slice of the other county to which he is not entitled. These are considerations with which everyone is familiar in the province of Quebec. I am sorry that my hon. friends of the west do not know so much about it; but if they come some day they will have only to let me know and I shall be glad to drive them around and show them that beautiful part of the country.

In cities it is different; there are not the same ties between people. People live in the same house and they do not know each other, but in the country it is hard to make a division like that. The ties are not so strong in large cities. Then there are certain traditions. There are people who do not know each other who sometimes go to the same store or send their children to a certain school, and when there are changes in constituencies it embarrasses them very much. All I shall pray for is that the wisdom of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre will be just as useful to him as he wants it to be to others.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: I wish to ask the Secretary of State a question that is not quite relevant to the point, though it is as close as I shall get to it. Last year the redistribution committee put through a suggestion, or endorsed a suggestion to which the minister gave consideration. It had reference to air transportation in those constituencies which, like my own, cover such vast distances. Will the minister give that suggestion real consideration this year?

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): I do not know that the matter is one to which I should give consideration. This bill is in the form recommended by the committee last session. The bill, in the same form, is being referred back to that committee for further consideration and for some amendments, and whatever consideration the committee feels should be given to the suggestion my hon. friend has made, will be given by the committee there. I would not care to give an undertaking as to what that committee will do.

Mr. MacINNIS: I have just one word to say. I doubt whether the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre had any idea that he would start off so violent a debate—

Mr. POULIOT: Don't you start one.

Mr. MacINNIS: —particularly when he was merely voicing an opinion expressed by the Prime Minister last year when he introduced the redistribution bill.

Mr. KNOWLES: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacINNIS: The Prime Minister pointed out to the house that redistribution should be done by a commission rather than by a committee of the house, and some of us agreed with him. We still agree with him, although evidently some at least of his own followers do not. I think the hon. member for Temiscouata must take it that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and myself are in fairly good company when we are with the Prime Minister. That being all I wish to say in that regard, I would ask the Secretary of State to make a reply to the point raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): In the British North America Act it is provided that, after each census has been taken, the representation of the house will be readjusted by such authority, in such manner and at such time as the parliament of Canada may from time to time provide. The parliament of Canada then considers an act to readjust representation in the House of Commons, and when that bill is presented that is the time that any decision should be reached as to whether a committee of the house should be set up or some commission appointed. I do not think it is a matter that comes under the elections act at all but under the representation act.

[Mr. Archibald.]

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Gibson (Hamilton West) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 198, to amend the Dominion Elections Act, 1938.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT

APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER AMENDMENTS

Hon. COLIN GIBSON (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the house I should like to return to government notices of motions in order to move the resolution with respect to the setting up of the committee to consider amendments to the Dominion Elections Act. I move:

That a special committee consisting of Messrs: Beaudry, Bertrand (Prescott), Brooks, Cote (Verdun), Fair, Fournier (Maisonneuve-Rosemont), Fulton, Gariepy, Gladstone, Hackett, Kirk, Lockhart, MacInnis, MacNicol, Marier, Marquis, McKay, McLure, Murphy, Mutch, Richard (Gloucester), Robinson (Simcoe East), Richard (Ottawa East), Sinclair, Zaplitny, be appointed to study the several amendments to the Dominion Elections Act, 1938, and amendments thereto, suggested by the chief electoral officer, to study the said act, to suggest to the house such amendments, as the committee may deem advisable, and report from time to time, with power to send for persons, papers and records and to print the proceedings and that the provisions of section 1 of standing order 65 be waived in respect to this committee.

Motion agreed to.

WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCES

PROVISION FOR NEGLECTED OR DEPENDENT CHILDREN, INCREASED PERMISSIBLE INCOMES, ETC.

Hon. MILTON F. GREGG (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved the second reading of Bill No. 196, to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act, 1946.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in presenting this bill for second reading I should like to make a few general remarks. At present and for some time to come, the benefits relating to this bill will apply in the main to a small proportion of the old soldiers of the first great war.

In recent times my department, this house and the country as a whole have been giving, and quite properly so, a great deal of attention to the needs of rehabilitation for the young veteran, and I should like to grasp this chance tonight to say a word on behalf of the smaller group of old-timers, contemporaries if you like of a good many of the veterans of the old war who are members of this house.

In the war of 1914-18 Canada had a total of approximately 646,000 men in the armed forces, mainly in the army, a small group in the Canadian navy, and also a small group, serving under command, with the old Royal Flying Corps, of the British.

As closely as can be checked, that old 1914-18 armed force was distributed something like this: engaged in a theatre of war, which for the old war army was confined to the continent of Europe; for the navy, on or under the sea, and for the air force, the Royal Flying Corps, a total of 353,000; a total on service, but not so defined as engaged in a theatre of war, of approximately 293,000.

The War Veterans Allowance Act, to which this bill refers, applies mainly to the first group that I have mentioned. In it I said there were about 353,000. There is no means of telling exactly how many of them have survived the thirty years since their demobilization; but, as closely as can be learned, the figure today is in the vicinity of 200,000 survivors who took part in the fighting or in the theatre of operations in 1914-18, upon the sea, on the long land trail from Ypres to Mons, and with the Royal Flying Corps when flying was in its infancy, and when to go into the air in one of the old crates was in itself a hazard.

What has happened during the past thirty years to these men who were engaged in a theatre of war? After 1919 they set about the task of becoming Canadian citizens, and it was not too easy a one. They received little help compared with the new veterans; yet they were and still are the most forceful and effective sponsors of a better chance for the new veterans. I should like to emphasize the fact that, as far as I know, not one of the old-timers has ever raised a jealous voice in that regard. On the whole they have become valuable, productive Canadian citizens. They are Canadian citizens first, last and all the time. Many of them are leaders in various walks of our Canadian life. They spurned all temptations to carry over into the peace a solid ex-soldier group, politically or otherwise, and they have stood firmly down through the years against any temptation to demand money from their country purely on the basis of services rendered.

What is the picture regarding the whole 200,000 of those who fought and who have not yet died? Of those 200,000, all but approximately 25,000 are carrying on as Canadian citizens without any aid from their country, other than compensation for some honourable war disabilities which they still carry. A little over 25,000 men therefore who, under our definition, saw battle service are at the moment in receipt of war veterans allowance. Their numbers, by the very nature of things, as they move on to the sixty, sixty-five and seventy age group, are bound to increase for the next ten years at least.

Hon. members are aware, I know, of the history of the War Veterans Allowance Act upon which this bill is based. In it our country attempted to see to it that this small portion of the 1914-18 force—as it stands now only about five per cent of the total force—should not beg on the streets. Through old age, through premature aging due to battle strain or fatigue, through physical disabilities not pensionable, through hard luck and a score of other reasons beyond their control, they are unable to cope with life in full measure. Some of them remained bachelors. An extraordinarily large number did so; as far as we can record, the number was approximately 12,000. A total of approximately 13,000 married. And with nearly all of them who married, by the very nature of things children have grown up and have now gone away.

These men all gave honourable fighting service to Canada and they should be ensured an honourable old age. For those, and for others who may yet qualify, this bill proposes more generous terms. I should like to interject here that it is only as a very last resort that these older veterans will accept aid under this act. They prefer to earn their own living just so long as work within their capacity can be found.

It is not too easy in these days of streamlined industry to keep the employment door open to men of their age. With good support from employers of labour, the good offices of the corps of commissionaires, and services set up jointly with the placement service of the Department of Labour, over 100,000 veterans of world war I have been rendered employment services since April 1, 1946, when that service really got under way in the Department of Veterans Affairs. This will to work has had its influence on expenditures under the act. Many have been enabled to give up the allowance voluntarily and a large number now happily and gainfully employed would otherwise have been a charge upon the country.

Hon. members might like to have a general outline of present war veterans allowance beneficiaries and costs. The War Veterans Allowance Act came into operation in September, 1930. Since that time and up to December 31 last, the following figures apply:

Total applications approved in that 17-year period	45,679
Total approved applications later cancelled on account of death or improvement of circumstances	19,573
Total as at December 31, 1947, in receipt of war veterans allowances	26,106

That total is made up as follows:

Veterans of northwest field force	145
Veterans of South African war	592
Veterans of world war I	24,606
Veterans of world war II	434
Veterans of dual service	329
Total	26,106

In addition to these men are widows and orphans, so that the complete summary as at December 31, 1947, is as follows:

	Total Number of Recipients	Amount Liability
Veterans—all wars	26,106	$12,991,995
Widows—all wars	4,790	1,934,938
Orphans—all wars	53	25,596
Totals	30,949	$14,952,529

In addition to the matter of increase, this bill rearranges what was known as "casual earnings" and raises the ceiling of permissible income under the act to $1,105 a year, or approximately $92 a month for married men and to $615 a year, or approximately $51 a month for single men. It is the intention to use the supplementary allowance to augment the recipient's income under these new ceilings. This will result in a flat increase to all recipients in an amount not exceeding $10 a month, made possible by the raising of the ceiling on permissible income.

For the purpose of dealing with the increases, recipients of the war veterans allowance will be divided into three classes by the department in working it out. Some 6,303 pensioners now in receipt of war veterans allowance will have their increase in the war veterans allowance, as well as the pension increase. Of this number, there are 3,702 married men receiving up to 60 per cent pension and 2,601 single men receiving up to 50 per cent pension. In the second class there are now 16,711 non-pensioners who are at present receiving the maximum war veterans allowance and who have no other income; and they will receive the full supplementary allowance. In the third class there are 10,284 additional recipients, also non-pensioners, who are not in receipt of the maximum war veterans allowance. They may have their allowance adjusted under the new ceiling.

It will be noted that in this bill there is the same amount of increase for both married and single recipients, that is, $10 a month in each case. In the original act the scale was $40 for a married man and $20 for a single man. I think it was pretty well an arbitrary arrangement, that the married man should get twice as much as the single man, though I do not know what the plan was. During the last war, authority was given, based on need, to increase this scale to $60 for a married man and $30 for a single man, and when the act was amended in 1946 these became the new rates. It has been considered that in this there is some degree of inequity as between the rates for single and married men. In no other veteran legislation are man and wife together paid twice the amount paid a single man; and now that a further increase is planned it seems that this inequity might be corrected.

Let me briefly review some examples. Under the proposed pension rates a 100 per cent pensioner, married, will receive $117 a month; a 100 per cent pensioner, single, will receive $87 a month. Married veteran students now receive $90 a month; single veteran students receive $60. Married veterans awaiting returns, unemployed or temporarily incapacitated receive $70 a month; single veterans receive $50. It is suggested here that the time has arrived when the war veterans allowances, married and single rates, should be brought into some conformity with the other rates I have just indicated. Consequently the new rate proposed here is $70 a month for the married veteran and $40 a month for the single veteran.

The terms of this bill, will, I anticipate, receive careful study by the special committee on veterans affairs. In the main, Mr. Speaker, this bill is a further important step toward giving the old soldier who fought for his country the assurance that in his old age his country will provide him with some defence against poverty.

Mr. A. J. BROOKS (Royal): Mr. Speaker, we have listened with interest to the speech of the minister and his recital of the history of the war veterans allowance. First let me say I agree that in the period since the war the young soldier should have been given the greatest attention, and as we know that has been done. As the minister has said, the older soldier made no complaint in that regard; he was only too anxious to assist. As a matter of fact I think the old soldier in Canada can be complimented, not only on his attitude during and since the second war, but also on his attitude since the first war. The Canadian soldier has never been very demanding of the Canadian people. When the attitude of our soldiers is compared with that of soldiers of other countries—and I might particularly mention the attitude of returned soldiers in the country to the south of us—I believe our returned soldiers are to be highly commended. I remember that a few years ago, for instance, some of the returned soldiers in the United States marched on the capital of that country, demanding a bonus which ran into many millions of dollars.

Since the resolution preceding this bill was introduced, we have had an opportunity to review the legislation. At the outset may I say that personally I have found it disappointing, and I am satisfied that is the reaction of many hon. members. It does not contain what we expected it would. It is true that it mentions the matters of which the minister has spoken; and while we are not allowed, nor do I intend, to take it up section by section, we have certain small amendments, like the one concerning deserted children, which have something of an emotional appeal but really do not amount to very much as far as dollars and cents are concerned. There would be very few deserted children of soldiers in receipt of the veterans allowance, and I should imagine the provision in that section would cost very little. If we go on to the next section we see that it provides for an increase in the salaries of members of the pension board. I see you are stirring, Mr. Speaker. I do not intend to deal with the sections individually, I am simply pointing out that some provisions of the bill are really not very important as far as the old soldier is concerned, about whose welfare the minister said tonight we were very anxious.

This legislation is going to the committee on veterans affairs, where it will be thoroughly discussed; there need be no doubt of that. I am sorry the bill does not contain more, because I feel that in other bills which have gone to the veterans affairs committee we have been, as it were, too circumscribed in our discussion of such legislation, and this bill is just another example. It contains too little; and the committee cannot make amendments, which I am satisfied we would feel like making, in providing benefits for our old soldiers.

The minister has told us about the history of the War Veterans Allowance Act. May I say at the outset that I have always considered it one of the finest acts, so far as veterans legislation is concerned. This act was brought into force in 1930, eighteen years ago. It was considered then that there were many veterans in this country who were unable to take their place in the labour market of the country and who, indeed, were entitled to assistance.

In 1930 the veterans under the War Veterans Allowance Act were given $20 a month. That was, of course, a small sum, but it compared at that time with the Old Age Pensions Act, of which it was more or less a supplement so far as the soldier was concerned. As the minister pointed out, it has been increased to $30 a month; and now, under certain conditions, the veteran is to receive $40 a month.

In the minister's solicitation for the old soldiers of this country, I felt that Bill No. 196 should have been larger in its scope and should have given benefits to classes of old soldiers other than those mentioned in the bill. For instance, for many years in the house and in committee there has been one group of soldiers for the inclusion of which the Canadian Legion and other Canadian organizations have strongly urged. I refer to those soldiers who in the last war did not get any farther than England. To my mind those men should receive consideration and attention in this bill. I am expressing not only my own opinion, but the opinion of war veterans organizations in this country for many years. There are not many of these men, and the country would not be bankrupted if we included those men who served only in England in the last war. An estimate made in the veterans committee in 1946 placed the amount at less than $3,000,000 that it would cost the country.

In this connection I should like to read a letter I received only a few weeks ago. May I add that the letter comes from a constituent of the minister? This old soldier writes to me in these words:

> Please excuse my writing you, but I note in the Legionary that the legion is again going to plead the case of the vets who only got as far as England in world war I before the parliamentary committee, so I thought I would like to state to you my case. First, I was R.S.M. No. 1 of the 13th New Brunswick reserve battalion. I applied to Colonel Fowler to be allowed to go to France, and his reply was, "No, you are too much value to me." When Major Stirling took over I again applied, but the answer was the same. He went so far as to say they could get lots of men to go to France, but not to take my place. Colonel A. L. Barry now in the fisheries department, Ottawa, can and will vouch for this. I am barred from getting the war veterans allowance. Yet others who were in France but a day or two and saw no action are eligible. Hardly fair, I think. I trained and prepared hundreds of men for their job in the service.
>
> I am seventy-nine years of age, cannot work and have to live on $20 British army pension and $30 old age pension per month, and pay $10 per month rent. Tough going.
>
> I am not asking you to do anything for me, but thought I would like to write you and to state my case, as it might be helpful to others.

The point this old soldier brings out is that he enlisted, went to England, served as a sergeant-major over there and was not allowed to go to France as he had wished. Now, when he is an old man, he is barred from receiving war veterans allowance. I know; I am sure the minister knows, and every soldier member in the house knows that there were thousands of men who went to France and who have no more front-line service than did these men in England. Yet the fact that they sailed across twenty-two miles of water makes them today eligible for war veterans allowance, while these other men who, for no reason of their own, were compelled to stay in England, do not receive it. I say that is a grave injustice and one which I personally had hoped would be corrected in the bill which we have before us tonight.

There is another class of men whom I should like to mention, and who, I hoped, would be included. These are the imperials, the men who served from 1914 to 1916 in the same war in which we served, men who fought for the same things for which we were fighting, men who, if they had not given service, might have brought about a condition whereby more men from this country would have had to sacrifice their lives. Those men came to Canada and made their homes here. For many years they helped to build this country.

In the last war they served Canada again, as did also their sons and daughters. Yet those men who in the last war served alongside Canadian soldiers, and whose sons and daughters served alongside Canadian soldiers in the last war, are not included in the bill and do not receive the benefits of war veterans allowances. I claim this is most unfair.

A few minutes ago I said this was not my own idea. I should like to read to the house some recommendations which were made by the Canadian Legion. This one was made in 1945:

> Be it resolved that the War Veterans Allowance Act be so amended that the same privileges and assistance may be granted to veterans who enlisted in the Canadian expeditionary force and served outside of Canada as are now granted to men who served in an actual theatre of war within the meaning of War Veterans Allowance Act.

That would mean the men who had served in England in the last war. The resolution referring to imperial veterans is as follows:

> Be it resolved that we endorse the present policy of the legion which has been aforestated as follows:
>
> "That we urge upon the dominion government action to extend the war veterans allowance to ex-imperial veterans under the same conditions as to Canadian veterans, other than on the question of pre-war domicile, providing such imperial ex-service men were resident in Canada on September 1, 1930, and have since resided in Canada or who may have had continuous residence in Canada for a period of 20 years."

[Mr. Brooks.]

That is, they recommend that imperial veterans who were in Canada in 1930, the date on which the War Veterans Allowance Act was passed, be included in the act, if they also served in the Canadian army during the last war. Surely that is a most reasonable request.

The cost of this was brought out in the veterans committee in 1946, at which time it was shown that the cost of including these imperial veterans would be in the vicinity of $1,900,000. That is not a tremendous amount of money, as we think of money today. Why, one of the members of the cabinet not so long ago said that a million dollars does not amount to anything. So I say we could very well afford to give these men this consideration.

The war veterans allowance has come to be regarded as a social security measure for veterans and the distinctions that have been made are distasteful. Many of these men fought side by side in the same cause. There are Canadians who served in both world wars but who did not go overseas and who are now eligible for what was hitherto known as the veterans dual service pension. There seems to be no good reason for excluding the imperial veteran of the first world war who served with the Canadian forces in Canada in the second world war. Many men served with the Canadian forces in theatres of operation in the second world war, and if we excluded the imperial first world war veteran who served with the Canadian forces in the second world war we would be discriminating as between men who served side by side in the Canadian forces under exactly the same conditions.

There are other implications of these regulations. The widow of the Canadian soldier who served only in England during the last war is excluded from receiving benefits under war veterans allowances, and there are many hundreds of these widows in Canada. They see the widow of some other soldier receiving benefits. They realize that their husbands served where they were told to serve. Any man in the army goes where he is told to go and serves where he is told to serve, in Canada, in England, or wherever it may be. I say it is unfair that these women should not have the benefits of the war veterans allowances. The same thing applies to widows of members of the imperial forces.

These are the main points that I wish to bring up tonight. I approve the supplementary allowance of $120 a year, but here again there is a nigger in the woodpile. We find that a man must undergo a means test if he is to receive this increase of $10 a month. I contend that if a man is entitled to a war veterans allowance, if he has had his first means test, then there should be no further means test as far as he is concerned.

There is a bad moral effect. You may have two men each receiving war veterans allowances. One man may not be inclined to work; he is lazy and indifferent. He is not thrifty and does not try to improve his situation, but he is eligible for the increase from $30 to $40 a month. Then you have a man who is thrifty, who wants to work and help himself. I am sure we are all disposed to encourage that type of man. If this man works hard he may be deprived of the benefits of the war veterans allowance.

I contend that that is a great flaw in our veterans legislation. It should be so drawn as to encourage the thrifty and hardworking man and not to encourage the man who is slothful, lazy and indigent. This legislation encourages men to lie about their conditions, to conceal the facts. Unfortunately the same thing is true in connection with old age pensions. I will not say all, but because of the means test some of the older people in this country who wish to improve their condition find that they must tell some white lies about their financial position. To my mind the whole thing is wrong.

I shall not discuss this matter any further. The bill is going to the committee and the sections will be gone into most carefully. I know my colleagues on this side and probably those on the other side will wish to discuss the matter very fully. I shall be pleased to give it further consideration when the bill comes before the committee.

Mr. G. A. CRUICKSHANK (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I presume that this bill will be referred to the veterans affairs committee where all the details will be gone into. There is one way in which the United States house of representatives is ahead of us. They do not make political speeches when a matter is to be referred to a committee. The matter is referred to the committee where it is gone into in detail, and then it is referred back to their house. That is what should be done here in the House of Commons. If we do not like the recommendations of the committee, of which I happen to be a member, we can make our own recommendations and if necessary vote against the recommendations of the committee.

Personally I hope that the veterans affairs committee will, without political bias, take into consideration those veterans who served in England only during the first great war and the imperial veterans. I say again that I hope it is done without political bias and without the hope of Hansard recording a multitude of views to be distributed in the respective ridings. I repeat that consideration should be given to veterans of the first great war who served only in England.

In many cases imperial veterans have lived in this country for twenty or twenty-five years or even longer and they have the right to every consideration. I do not want to discredit the position of anyone, but there are many people receiving old age pensions who have lived here for twenty or twenty-five years but who have never become citizens. They are entitled to pensions, but they have not taken out citizenship papers. After all, those who served in the British army were serving in defence of Canada and they are just as much entitled to war veterans allowances as they are to old age pensions.

I intend to foster that and carry it through in the veterans affairs committee. We had some discussion this afternoon about expediting business. I have no authority to speak for the veteran members of this house, but I believe I can speak for my fellow veteran members from British Columbia and even for all members from British Columbia on this side of the house and say we are satisfied to refer this matter to the veterans affairs committee. If we do not approve the recommendations they bring down, then we shall have our say.

Mr. T. J. BENTLEY (Swift Current): Mr. Speaker, I agree in principle with what the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank) has just said. I have often thought that if it were intended to send a matter to a committee it should be allowed to go to the committee and then we could do our criticizing when it came back. However I would remind the hon. member for Fraser Valley that when you are in Rome you should do as the Romans do. Since I have been here this has been, I was going to say the time-honoured procedure, but it certainly has been the procedure, whether it is time-honoured or not.

I listened attentively to what the minister said and it appeared to me that he tried to make out that this bill was much better than it is. I agree in sentiment with much of what he said. It is true that the older veterans have not a spark of jealousy about the improvements in veterans affairs legislation affecting the newer veterans. My goodness, we spend years and years as members of the legion or other veteran organizations trying to improve their lot. So that when we see some improvement for the new veterans we are not envious; we are tickled to death. In that the minister was correct.

However this bill does not give the improvement to them when they become as old as our veterans class is or for the remainder of our group who may require this kind of help. It does not improve the situation in anything like what was indicated by the eulogies that the minister paid to those old veterans, and nothing in comparison with what Canada could and should afford.

I want to point out, Mr. Speaker, some of the things—and I will not be very long; I will be as brief as I can because it was again suggested that this matter will be argued and debated in the veterans affairs committee—

Mr. POULIOT: We always listen to you with great glee.

Mr. BENTLEY: I am pleased to know that I have one good listener in the house. I appreciate it very much.

Mr. POULIOT: I said "we".

Mr. BENTLEY: That is splendid; there is more than one. That makes it plural. I am really glad to hear the versatile member for Temiscouata say that. He always says nice things to people, and I appreciate it very much.

An hon. MEMBER: When he is not angry.

Mr. BENTLEY: Yes. Like the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Brooks), we are unable to understand why we cannot re-define the word "veteran" in the act. During the 1945 and 1946 sessions of the special parliamentary committee, we had quite a lot of discussion as to what should be actually a theatre of war. Britain is actually one of those theatres. I see no reason why the veterans of world war I who served in Britain during that time, but who were subject to be sent to any theatre of action, should not be included. And I say that, having been one of those who did not remain in Britain. I went along in the mud. We believe that the act should be rewritten, so that for world war I Britain would be written into the definition of a theatre of war. This would include a lot of people, but they are people who are extremely deserving citizens and veterans in this country. I believe the minister should give serious consideration to accepting that recommendation either here or in committee.

Again the hon. member for Royal brought up another class of veterans who are not very numerous in this country but who are certainly very deserving of all the benefits any veteran has in this country. I refer to those who served in the imperial forces but did not have the residence, or were not domiciled in Canada prior to their enlistment in the imperial forces. These people came over after the war and settled here in some industry or work or in business or on farms. They became part of the community and likely are citizens now. Probably they have families here as well as interests. They are going to stay here. We of this group believe that they should be included in all the benefits, and that section or provision which requires that they should have been domiciled here before enlistment should be struck out and those citizens treated as they should be.

Another thing that I find it difficult to understand, and people with whom I have talked have told me that they find the same difficulty, has to do with those who have not yet reached the age of sixty so far as men are concerned and fifty-five so far as women are concerned, which the act requires. Generally, although there is a provision in the act that the war veterans allowance board may look sympathetically on claims of people who are below that age but otherwise qualified, we believe it should be more generous, and we believe that the treasury board should not only permit but encourage the war veterans allowance board to be more generous with these people who are not yet of the age but who are incapacitated for some reason or another, burnt out, before they reach the limit of age in the act.

Next is something that we have had many debates on since I have been here and have tried to prevent. That is the cost of living which has gone up tremendously, but at no time has the allowance paid to war veterans been large enough to take care of their needs and keep them in comfort. It has been a bare existence under any circumstances. I believe it was not until the war that it was even increased by order in council from $20 to the $30 that it is now and eventually worked into the statute by legislation. We believe at the present time that, because of the high cost of living, the allowance should be increased, not by the amount mentioned in section 8 of the amendment but to $50 a month for a single veteran, with a corresponding increase for a married veteran. We see no reason why a veteran who has had the misfortune that the minister speaks about—I believe the description he gave of what happened to some of them was just plain hard luck—and is burnt out should be in any different position from that of one who was actually burnt out or disabled because of war services. I say that because these veterans are just as needy and require just as much comfort, care and security as the ones who were disabled by war conditions or by war action. Therefore we believe that the allowance should be raised. I do not think it would cause a great strain on the treasury board and break their purse-strings entirely. I believe this country can afford it a lot better than it can afford some of the things which will be carried on over the next year by our government unless, of course, they give us an opportunity to defeat them this summer some time, which I hope they do.

I should like to mention something else, which is not mentioned in the amendment. In the original act, and very largely in this bill, besides his actual amount of $365 a year a veteran is allowed to have an income of $125 from some sources, casual earnings of $125 if he can earn them, and an investment earning of $25. I see no reason why the incomes from these sources should be specified as coming from different sources. Why not say that he can have it from any source up to a certain amount if we are to continue to apply the means test which, incidentally, I do not believe in; but I know it is there and is likely to remain? We believe that all these various sources of income should be grouped in the amount that he is allowed, and whether he gets it from interest on a war bond or from rentals from some little property he may happen to own or whether he earns it, or by whatever means he happens to get it, it should be in the aggregate and not specified in different amounts.

Another matter that is not dealt with here—and I am surprised that it has not been given consideration by the government, by the minister and by his officers—is the case of a veteran who qualifies in every respect for a war veterans allowance, but who has not lived in Canada for three months prior to the decision to grant him one. A burnt-out veteran is just as badly off if he lives in Arizona or in Iowa as if he lives here. If he requires that his place of residence should not be here, if he needs the allowance he should get it; if he wants to live in some other place because of his health—or it may be a matter of sentiment; since he cannot work any more, or because he wants to spend his old age in the place of his childhood—is there any reason why sentiment of that kind should be penalized? I suppose almost everybody in this house could see some reason for anyone wanting to do that if he were able to do so. We say he must live in Canada, where the eagle eyes of the means tester can look down the back of his neck all the time to see that he does not earn one more nickel than the act allows. I do not think that is dignified treatment for a veteran. If he can qualify in all respects, then his place of residence should not be a deterrent to his receiving the war veterans allowance. At the present time he may live here, he may qualify, he may get the allowance. Then, after two or three years he may feel that he would like to move out, but the moment he crosses the border and enters a foreign country he ceases to be entitled to that war veterans allowance. I know it does not say so exactly in the act, but if there is any dispute about that I can quote from a letter I received from the pension commission pointing out that that is the case in one particular instance to which I drew their attention.

Another thing I want to mention is this. The war veterans allowance is not payable to the married veteran and his wife as having married status if they live apart. This again is very unfair and undignified. The man is, of course, the breadwinner. He is the one who should provide for his family, and as long as he is working and is able to provide for them we expect him to look after his wife and children. That is proper and we have a right to expect it. But the moment something happens to him and he is no longer able to support them, possibly because of inability to work, though he and his wife may have spent forty years together, they find it necessary now to split up, one living with one married child, with whom there is room, the other living with another. The moment they are split up because of their financial condition, the veteran ceases to be entitled to war veterans allowance except under single status.

That, Mr. Speaker, is unfair. The allowance should be generous enough, the administration should be generous enough and the whole spirit of the act should be generous enough to say to the veteran: We should like both you and your lifelong spouse to be able to spend your remaining years together if you so desire, and therefore we will make it possible for you to do so.

I know it will be said there are a few veterans who are so cantankerous that their wives cannot live with them, and I think it may be said there are some men who are not veterans who are also so cantankerous that hardly anyone can get along with them. There may be exceptional cases, but in the main I believe the veterans want to continue their married status. They do not want to split up. When, however, they have to separate because of poor financial conditions they should not be deprived of the veterans allowance. I do not think they should be deprived of it merely because they have decided that it is necessary for them to separate under those circumstances.

There are a number of other criticisms that I should like to offer, but I do not want to take up too much time, because the matter is going to the committee and no doubt others will deal with them. On the points I have presented tonight to the house and to the minister I would ask that serious and sympathetic consideration be given, because I believe that every single one of them is justifiable, every single one of them is possible, every single one of them will do a great deal to bring a measure of happiness and contentment to the few individuals in the class we are speaking of who are still left, and it will give some sense of security to some of the veterans of this war who some day will have to face the same condition as some of our older veterans have to put up with.

Mr. QUELCH: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. JEAN FRANCOIS POULIOT (Temiscouata): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to take up much more time, nor do I wish to take the place of the hon. gentleman, but since I do not belong to the committee I have some remarks to make to the house and to the minister right now. There are not many individual cases that I wish to mention tonight, although I have many files of cases that are pitiful and deserve special consideration.

There are two different bodies. There is the pension commission and there is the war veterans allowance board. If the pension commission were functioning normally there would be no necessity for the war veterans allowance board. It is precisely because the pension commission are procrastinators and never give the benefit of the doubt to the men who apply to them that we must have the war veterans allowance board, and in this respect I will tell the minister that I wish to pay special tribute to his parliamentary assistant, the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker). How many times did I not have difficult cases where the pension commission procrastinated so much that nothing could be done! I went in all confidence to the hon. member for Rosthern and explained the matter to him and the department was telephoned to in order to try to get something done. Among hundreds of cases I will mention one.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Has he not resigned? He is no longer parliamentary assistant, is he?

Mr. POULIOT: I do not know the personal dealings of the hon. gentleman with the department—

Mr. NICHOLSON: He is in Saskatchewan now.

Mr. POULIOT: —but I spoke to him last week about a case and he was kind enough to telephone. I do not know whether he has resigned, but when someone is kind to my constituents it is a thing I never forget, and if the hon. member for Rosthern had resigned ten years ago I would speak as I do tonight.

[Mr. Bentley.]

I do not speak to ask favours of him; I do not need them; but I know he is fair enough to fight the cases of men and women who are deserving. And, sir, I will mention an abomination that happened during the war.

A certain young man was in the army and there was a fire. He was a very delicate fellow—I knew him well—and he went to the fire, worked there, and contracted a cold which turned into pneumonia. He fell dangerously ill. He received the last rites of the church, and after that some officers came to him and said, "You must sign a paper so that your mother will have a pension." He was very sick. I do not know whether they held his hand, but the paper was signed. It was a resignation from the army, and instead of giving an opportunity to his widowed mother to get a pension it deprived her of all pension. He died a day or two afterwards.

It was an abomination, and the men who did that should have been whipped. The mother applied for pension and got nothing. Finally I brought the case before the predecessor of the present minister and he decided to give an allowance of $40 a month to the mother. It is a pitiful case where the pension commission has been more stupid than ever, where officers have behaved very badly, shamefully, and where an allowance was some kind of help to that widow.

This is a fact and I could mention many facts like it. The trouble we have now with the pension commission is that they never give the benefit of the doubt to the returned man. I have within my knowledge cases of men who have been declared fit, who have been accepted in the army and who have served for a long time. I have in mind the case of one man who was on guard duty at the forts at Levis. He was outside, and had no place to warm himself when it was cold, when the wind was blowing fiercely in the winter and when there were snowstorms. He lost his health. I asked for a pension. I was told that his illness was anterior to his enlistment. How is it that some of the medical corps were accepting these soldiers into the army as fit? They served well. They followed the orders they received. Yet after they had served for some years they were not entitled to any pension and got nothing at all. I obtained no allowance for that man. He lost his health; yet he had nothing at all. His illness or his disability was said to be anterior to his enlistment.

All those doctors should be crucified. I have said on many an occasion that a large number of medical doctors were the scum of the medical profession. I received letters of protest, and to those who were protesting I sent the issues of Hansard in which the facts and figures were mentioned, to the shame of the medical profession. One day the dean of the faculty of medicine of one of the universities wrote to me complaining of my language. I sent him Hansard which was just like a document produced in court. He said, "Well it is very sad." It was sad and unfortunate, but nobody was punished.

I have another case, that of a widow who has been deprived of a pension. This is a Toronto case, where a man was suffering from acute appendicitis. The doctor gave him a strong purgative and the poor boy died. The doctor was a murderer.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): Order. I would call to the attention of the hon. member the fact that this is an act to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act. It does not deal with the Pension Act at all.

Mr. POULIOT: I know, Mr. Speaker, but it is correlative. It is precisely because the pension commission is inefficient that we must ask for an allowance. In the first case I have shown the necessity of an allowance. I have mentioned the case of that poor woman. Although I very often disagreed with the predecessor of the Minister of Veterans Affairs, in this case he accomplished an act of deserved charity. He did not always do that; but on that occasion he did well, and I give him credit.

I do not wish to insist on that point, Mr. Speaker, but I will ask the minister if there is any possible means of bringing the pension commission to their senses and making them understand that if the returned man, whoever he is, has a right under the statute, he should be given the benefit of the doubt. I do not say that on behalf of any particular class of veterans; I say it on behalf of all veterans. They are either entitled to something or they are not.

My contention is more than that, as I said before. It is that if the pension commission were working properly, there would be no need at all for any allowance to anybody, and the man would have his pension. The difference between the pension and the allowance is that the pension comes as of right. There is no humiliation when a returned man accepts a pension. He receives what is due to him. An allowance is a gift from the state, which is not at all the same thing. The allowance hurts the pride of the soldier and that of his relatives, whereas a pension does not. It is precisely because I have the highest respect and admiration for our soldiers that I hope the pension commission will receive definite instructions from the minister so that there will be the least possible to do under the War Veterans Allowance Act.

Mr. VICTOR QUELCH (Acadia): We in this group, Mr. Speaker, are glad that the government have seen fit to bring down this bill amending the War Veterans Allowance Act, if for no other purpose than to have it thoroughly discussed in the veterans affairs committee so that the various veterans organizations can make representations regarding it. Amendments to this act are long overdue, but I am afraid that the proposals contained in this bill fall far short of those required to deal adequately with the situation. When the minister spoke he paid a fine tribute to the old veterans, and one that was well deserved. However, after listening to the minister, it is hard for me to understand how the government can bring down a bill of this kind and consider that they are doing justice to the returned men.

The War Veterans Allowance Act was first introduced in 1930. It made an allowance of $20 a month available at the age of sixty to the veteran who was permanently unemployable and who had served in a theatre of actual warfare. It has often been said that the act was recognition of the fact that a veteran had pre-aged by ten years and that, therefore, the old age pension was being made available to him at sixty years of age instead of seventy. I think it is well to keep in mind that fact and to note that at the present time the amount of the old age pension is in excess of the amount of the war veterans allowance. Later on the age limit was reduced below sixty years where the veteran was unable to maintain himself because of disability; some classes of widows were introduced and the amount of the allowance was increased to $30 a month.

The foregoing short summary, I think, goes to show that the war veterans allowance may be considered as the veteran's last resort. When he is unable to get a disability pension because of some technicality in the act or is, on the other hand, too old to work, he can apply for the war veterans allowance; and all he can get under the act is $30 a month. The same is true for the non-pensioned widow. I think all hon. members will agree that $30 a month today is not a living allowance. All that $30 a month does is to permit a veteran to struggle for an existence. As I have already said, he is not as well off as the old age pensioner. The new bill does not propose to increase the amount of the allowance. It merely provides for a supplementary allowance that may be paid in case of need, if need can be shown. Then the increase is limited to $10 a month for both single and married veterans. The new bill also increases the amount of permissible income from $125 to $250 for single veterans and from $250 to $375 for married persons. But it cancels the provision for $125 casual earnings. Therefore it is true that the bill does bring about some improvement in the act. On the other hand, that improvement falls far short of what is required to deal adequately with the situation. The Canadian Legion and the Canadian council of veterans associations have asked that the allowances be increased to $50 for a single veteran and to $100 for a married man. That is to say, the national council of veterans associations has asked that the allowance for a married veteran be increased to $100, while the legion has suggested that it be increased to at least $85.

I know the question will immediately be raised as to whether or not the country can afford allowances of this size. Well, whenever that question is raised my mind always goes back to the veterans committee of 1936, when we were considering both the war veterans allowance and the matter of pensions. We were told by the minister of the day that unfortunately it was not so much a question of what the veterans should have but rather a question of what the country could afford; and he went on to say that the country was bankrupt. It may be true that the country was bankrupt at that time, because we were suffering under the financial policies of Hon. Charles Dunning, which in itself was enough to bankrupt any country. But that is not the situation today. Today conditions are far different from 1936. I noticed that the Canadian Press quoted the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) as saying on April 2 that Canada is enjoying a boom of unprecedented proportions, even though the people do not seem to be aware of it. Well, if the minister is aware of it that is something. It is only natural that the people would not appreciate it when they see veterans having to subsist on a miserable pittance of $30 a month, and old age pensioners receiving only $30 a month as far as the federal government is concerned. However, when we consider that today the national income is around $13 billion as compared with $4 billion in 1936 no one can argue, as it was argued in 1936, that we cannot afford to deal adequately with the veterans of this country.

The government have talked a great deal about our moral obligation to look after people in foreign countries, and we in this house have voted hundreds of millions of dollars to help those people. I should say the first obligation of this country is to look after those men who fought and made victory possible, and that should be considered a first charge against the national income before consideration is given to the needs of people in other countries. After all, there is an old saying that charity should begin at home. Well, veterans are not asking for charity. They are merely asking for fair compensation for themselves and their dependents for services already rendered. I think it is time the government put an end to the hypocritical paying of lip service to these men, and instead dealt honestly, fairly and squarely with them.

I want to give just one example of the type of niggardly assistance being given to veterans under this act; and mind you, Mr. Speaker, when I say this I am not for a moment criticizing the administration of the act. My experience has been that the people administering this act go just as far as the act permits; but that is all they can do. I know of a case right here in the city of Ottawa, of a veteran who has reached the age of seventy-nine years, while his wife is well over seventy. He was awarded a full pension of $60 a month for the two of them; but that was reduced to $38 a month because the veteran found he could not live on $60 and managed to get a few hours work a day which brought him in $10 a week. So his pension was reduced. He was paying $45 a month in rent. It was suggested by the investigator that perhaps he should find cheaper accommodation, but the investigator frankly admitted that she did not know where he would be able to get another apartment at that or any other price. If it is to be argued that a veteran is paying too much rent for the apartment in which he lives, then I think those administering the war veterans allowance will have to accept the responsibility of finding him cheaper accommodation. As long as he has to pay that rent that must be recognized as one of the expenses he has to meet. In view of the fact that this veteran's permissible income had been exceeded, he had to pay back a certain amount of money. I am glad to say that, instead of stopping his allowance entirely, the administration deducted $3 a month in order to make up the amount he had been overpaid, which of course further reduced his pension to $35 a month. The point I want to make is that this veteran is seventy-nine years of age and his wife is over seventy. He never applied for any assistance until he was seventy-seven; yet they had to check up and by the act they were forced to reduce the amount of his allowance in view of the fact that he was exceeding his permissible income. I believe that this question of the permissible income is something that should be carefully investigated. In my opinion that permissible income should be increased to a figure which would make it possible for a veteran to live in a city where rents may be higher than in certain other parts of the country.

We of this group believe that the War Veterans Allowance Act should be amended to provide for the following changes. We believe that there should be an increase in the allowances to $50 a month for a single veteran and to $100 for a married couple. We believe that the means test should be eliminated; or, if the government cannot see its way clear to go that far, that at least the permissible income plus the allowance should be equal to the amount of income tax exemption, which at the present time would be around $1,500 for a married veteran. We believe that, for the purposes of this act, England should be considered a theatre of actual warfare in regard to world war I; that already is the case with respect to world war II. As far as world war I is concerned, a veteran who got only to England is not eligible for a war veterans allowance. When we remember that many of those veterans who enlisted for overseas service and got to England were only too anxious to go farther but were not allowed to do so, it does not seem fair that at this stage of the game they should be barred from the benefits of the war veterans allowance purely for that reason. Furthermore we believe that the benefits of the act should be made available to persons who served during world war I as a member of His Majesty's imperial forces, whether or not he was domiciled in Canada just prior to the outbreak of war. I have had cases of veterans who had been domiciled in Canada for a number of years prior to the war but who went to England perhaps two or three months before war broke out. I had one case of a veteran who went overseas because of the illness of his father. It was ruled that this man was not domiciled in this country because he was in England at the time war was declared, and as a result he has been denied the benefits of the War Veterans Allowance Act.

These are matters which we believe should be thoroughly discussed in the committee, and we are hoping that when this bill goes to the veterans committee some of the changes we have suggested may be brought about. Most of the suggestions I have outlined I think were also made by hon. members speaking for the C.C.F. party and the Progressive Conservative party. As a matter of fact they are suggestions that have been made for a number of years by the various veteran organizations in this country. If the government are really sincere in their desire to see that the old veteran gets a square deal, then they should find ways and means of making these suggestions a reality. As the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank) has stated, this bill it to be referred to the veterans committee, of which I am a member. Therefore I shall not say anything more at this time but will reserve any further remarks until the legislation is considered by that committee.

Mr. G. R. PEARKES (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, as the minister said when he was introducing the bill, the benefits of the War Veterans Allowance Act applied principally to the veterans of world war I. There are a few recipients of allowances who served in previous wars, such as the northwest field force and the South African war. There are a limited number of veterans who served in world war II and who are eligible for the allowance. In the main, however, they are men of the first world war.

I should like to call attention to the spirit of those times, the conditions which existed in 1914. That was the first citizen army war in more than a hundred years. It had been over a hundred years since the Canadian citizen had taken up arms in the defence of his country. When 1914 came there was a rush of men to join the various regiments, and they proceeded overseas. There was very little information upon which to build veterans rehabilitation schemes when the war came to an end.

In this connection I would quote the remarks of the present deputy minister of veterans affairs in a speech he made in 1943, which I think indicates the rush that existed for men to get discharged from that war. He states:

> The principal problem at the conclusion of the first world war was in the fact that Canada, with a population of about 8,000,000 at that time, had to fit back into civilian life approximately 423,000 men within less than a year. All wished to return to civilian life as quickly as possible.

I would emphasize the words: "all wished to return to civilian life as quickly as possible." The men of those years were not pension conscious. A great many men who perhaps had received some small disability, either by war wounds or exposure in the trenches, were anxious to get back into civilian life. They did not bother about declaring their disability. As time went on, those disabilities, not being declared, began to weigh more heavily on the men. And as the years advanced, the men became more and more dependent upon any pension or any allowance they might receive.

This war veterans allowance is really a form of retirement scheme for ex-servicemen who have fulfilled service conditions. I suggest that in a way it is really a contributory retirement scheme, because the men made their contribution in service in the trenches, instead of making it as a monetary contribution, as they might have done had they stayed at home.

As I have said, the cost of living has gone up since those days. Men have become more and more dependent upon whatever allowance or pension they may receive from a pension scheme or by way of allowance.

Listening to the build-up given, and justly so, by the minister to the services rendered by these men, I could not help repeating the words of the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Brooks) when he said that Bill No. 196 is most disappointing. It has certainly not gone as far as the veterans had hoped it would go, nowhere near as far. It is disappointing in many respects. And I think it is particularly disappointing after the encouraging statements made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) in New York a week ago, as reported by the Canadian Press. After describing what a prosperous state Canada was in and how we were experiencing boom conditions, he went on to say that in a few weeks time he would be reporting to parliament in his budget speech, and that he would be able to declare a surplus which would bring a glow to the heart of any Canadian finance minister. I suggest that the puny increases authorized or suggested in this bill will not bring much of a glow to the hearts of those old soldiers who will receive only this pittance. There is no warmth in this bill to bring a glow, even to the tips of their fingers.

It seems to me that the principle upon which the framers of these amendments have worked is to give the smallest amount possible to the fewest number of men. The increases in the allowances are referred to as a supplementary allowance of $120 a year, or $10 a month, which may be allocated to a recipient at the discretion of the board. It is not automatic, but the board will decide whether that amount of $10 a month, or a lesser amount, is to be given to the veterans. The increase is not automatic; that has been declared by the minister in the house.

I suggest that, unlike the Pension Act where we were told that the cheques were ready for issue before Easter, there are no cheques ready for issue in connection with this measure. Those who will hope to get increases will have to have their cases reviewed by the board, and the decisions will be made no doubt in accordance with the regulations as hinted by the minister in his opening remarks. Certain regulations will be laid down for the guidance of the board; but a discretion will be left with the board as to how much they will increase the allowance or allow by way of a supplementary allowance. I suggest that is all going to take time. These various cases will have to be reviewed. Time will be required and additional staff will be needed to look after all these cases.

Mention has been made of the permissible income. The impression was given, I thought, that there had been some increase in the permissible income. That is the amount of money that man may receive in addition to his allowance. The amount of money he may earn was classified under different headings, such as casual earnings for a single man of $125 a year, other income for a single man of $125 per annum and then unearned income of $25 per annum.

The former minister of veterans affairs informed me last year that the term "other income" was interpreted by the war veterans allowance board to mean income derived from any source; that is, investment, pension, superannuation, insurance payments, rentals, et cetera, or as a result of earnings as a gardener, plumber, carpenter or as any other type of artisan.

What has happened, and I think there is some reason to think there has been some improvement, is that casual earnings and other income have been amalgamated, making a permissible income other than allowance for a single man of $250 per annum. That is not a large amount to go out and earn. A man is hardly encouraged to go out and earn that extra amount. I would call your attention Mr. Speaker, to the fact that pensions are included in permissible income.

There has been an increase in pensions. A recipient of a war veterans allowance might have an 18 per cent disability pension. Under the old rates he would draw $11.25 a month in pension; his allowance, allowing for the pension he was authorized to receive, would be $29.58 a month, making a total of $40.83 a month. Under the new rates of pension which are increased by 16 per cent, he would receive $13.05 a month, but his allowance would be reduced by virtue of the fact that the pension has gone up. My interpretation of the act is—I hope the minister will correct me if I am wrong—that with the new pension rate the allowance would be only $27.78 a month, still making a total of $40.83 a month.

While there has been an increase in one case, there has been a decrease in the other. The war veterans allowance recipient has gained through the increase in his pension, but he has lost in connection with his allowance.

I think that ought to be corrected, because that is hardly what was expected by the veterans when they were hoping to get an increase in their allowances.

I have some other remarks to make in connection with the failure to extend the benefits of this act to other groups of veterans, but I am afraid I cannot get through in the two minutes still left before eleven o'clock, so that I should like to move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Mr. Pearkes the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Tomorrow we shall continue the debate on the second reading of this bill and, I hope, conclude it. Then there will be the resolution standing in the name of the Prime Minister to appoint a joint committee of both houses on human rights and fundamental freedoms. Then there will be second reading of the bill to amend the Dominion Elections Act, which I understand is to be referred to the special committee that was established this evening. Then second reading of Bill No. 47, to amend the War Service Grants Act, 1944, and the second reading of Bill No. 60, to amend the Veterans Insurance Act. If there is time we shall take up the resolution providing for the introduction of a bill to amend the Vocational Training Co-ordination Act which stands in the name of the Minister of Labour.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, April 9, 1948

The house met at three o'clock.

SALMON FISHERY

PERMISSION TO EXPORT RAW SALMON—RETENTION IN CANADA OF RAW SOCKEYE, PINKS AND CHUMS

Hon. J. A. MacKINNON (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer to a matter of special importance to management and labour engaged in the salmon fishery industry in British Columbia.

As members will recall, the government late last fall withdrew its control on the export of certain species of raw salmon to the United States. This permitted United States buyers, who were offering higher prices, to obtain substantial quantities of Canadian raw salmon which otherwise would have been canned by our industry for domestic and export markets. Our canners, thus deprived of the raw materials, were obliged to suspend salmon canning operations in the latter part of the season.

The government has been concerned with the possibility of a more serious dislocation of salmon canning throughout the 1948 operating season. Separate submissions were heard from representatives of the canners, labour union and co-operatives, all of whom desired the maintenance of the British Columbia canning industry, notwithstanding some differences of opinion as to the sharing of their respective responsibilities in meeting this end. The government feels that some corrective steps must be taken to safeguard both fishermen and management. The most desirable solution seemed to be a measure of stabilization of the canning industry while at the same time assuring increased export of the raw material to the United States.

I wish, therefore, to announce that, effective immediately, British Columbia fishermen are permitted to export to the United States unrestricted quantities of raw spring salmon. Export of raw coho is also permitted, but only up to September 1 of this year.

Raw sockeye, pinks and chums, will be retained in Canada.

I want especially to emphasize that this decision is simply a ruling that is designed to give balanced treatment to management and fishermen. It is not an embargo. It necessitates, of course, reasonable compromises on both sides.

I am satisfied that the decision reached by the cabinet will provide equitable safeguard for management in maintaining its canning industry and for fishermen by leaving the way open for them to take advantage of the higher prices paid on the United States market for springs and coho.

I might add here that the normal export to the United States of all species of canned, salted, smoked, cured frozen salmon is not, of course, affected by the ruling.

Mr. MacINNIS: May I ask a question of the Minister of Fisheries? He said that this regulation did not constitute an embargo.

Mr. MacKINNON: It does not.

Mr. MacINNIS: Does it mean that, despite the regulation, sockeye, pinks and chums may not be exported, and if they may not, isn't that an embargo?

Mr. MacKINNON: It may be construed as a partial embargo, but it allows certain species of salmon to be exported to the United States market, retaining others at home.

Mr. PEARKES: Can the minister say what steps are being taken to ensure a market for all the salmon that can be canned in our canneries?

Mr. MacKINNON: From our conversations with the industry, and it is the opinion of our own officials, we believe that the catch which will be canned this year in Canada will find sufficient markets, domestic and foreign.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. ARCHIBALD: I should like to ask a further question of the Minister of Fisheries. Owing to the fact that the embargo on chums is a serious blow to the fishermen's co-operative on the coast, will the minister consider referring this matter to the fisheries committee where the co-operatives could present their case?

Mr. MacKINNON: We have gone very fully into the matter, Mr. Speaker. We listened to representations from the fishermen's union, the co-operatives who are both fishermen and canners, and the canners. I think the decision we arrived at, and which I have just announced, is a fair settlement of the difficulty at the present time.

[Later:]

Mr. MANROSS: I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Fisheries. Now that he has taken care of the sockeyes, chums, and pinks, will he try to export the reds?

TREATIES OF PEACE

MEASURE WITH RESPECT TO TREATIES BETWEEN CANADA AND ITALY, ROUMANIA, HUNGARY, AND FINLAND

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide that the governor in council may do such things as to him appear to be necessary for carrying into effect the treaties of peace between Canada and Italy, Roumania, Hungary and Finland, respectively; and for that purpose the governor in council may make appointments, establish offices and make orders or regulations; and to provide further that any expense incurred in carrying out the treaties shall be defrayed out of moneys voted by parliament.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE ACT

AREAS SURVEYED AS SETTLEMENT OR RIVER LOTS—LAND IN ELIGIBLE AND INELIGIBLE TOWNSHIPS

Right Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to amend the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, 1939, to provide that the act may apply to areas surveyed as settlement or river lots, to provide also that where a farmer has land in an eligible township and land in an ineligible township payment may be made to him to the full amount of his eligible land, and for the purpose of clarifying certain provisions of the act.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

[Mr. MacKinnon.]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING CONTRIBUTIONS, PROCEDURE, OFFENCES AND PENALTIES

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1940, to enlarge the scope of the act, to clarify certain provisions thereof, more specially in relation to contributions, procedure, offences and penalties, and to provide further for modification in the rates of contributions with the object of equalizing, to some extent, the total contributions payable by employers and employees.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

VETERANS REHABILITATION ACT

EXTENSION OF ALLOWANCE PROVISIONS

Hon. MILTON F. GREGG (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to present a bill to amend the Veterans Rehabilitation Act by extending the allowance provisions in respect to persons coming under the provisions of the act.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

FREIGHT RATES

FEED GRAIN — QUESTION OF PROVISION FOR PAYMENT OF FREIGHT WEST INTO BRITISH COLUMBIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Yesterday in answer to a question asked by the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Douglas) he stated that assistance would still be continued on feed grain going east. My question is this: Will the same procedure apply to grains going west into British Columbia?

Right Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): Yes. The fact of the matter is that the order in council with regard to both east and west is being extended to cover the period down to July 31, 1949.

For the benefit of the house and others outside the house I should like to say that I understand that yesterday a dollar a ton was added to the cost of feed in eastern Canada because of the fact that there has been a twenty-one per cent increase in freight rates. This morning we sent out word that since the government is paying the freight, whether it is increased or otherwise no one should find it necessary to add anything to the cost of feed.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

NECESSITY FOR COMPLEMENTARY LEGISLATION BY PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. J. BENTLEY (Swift Current): May I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce? Will the minister inform the house whether the government considers that complementary legislation by any or all of the provinces is necessary to make effective Part IVA of section 29A of Bill 135?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): In introducing the resolution to the bill, Mr. Speaker, I thought I made the government's position clear on this point. I stated that complementary legislation was necessary from the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. The province of Saskatchewan has passed complementary legislation; the other two provinces have not. I also made it clear that this government had done its share in opening the door. The Canadian council of agriculture made representations to this government which the government thought deserved action, and action has been taken. I understand that the same representation has been made to each of the three prairie provinces; and the government believes that if either of these two prairie provinces does not take the same view of the situation that was taken by the dominion government, it is an indication that the majority of the people in that particular province do not favour the legislation.

Mr. KNOWLES: Not at all.

FEED GRAIN

CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN ALBERTA AND MANITOBA AND THE DOMINION GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. ROBERT FAIR (Battle River): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has any correspondence taken place between the provinces of Alberta and Manitoba and the dominion government in connection with the government's policy with respect to the price of coarse grain, and have the questions asked in the correspondence been satisfactorily answered?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): It is difficult for me, Mr. Speaker, to keep in my mind all the correspondence I receive, but I think I am right in saying that there has been no discussion of price with the province of Alberta. In regard to Manitoba, certain questions were asked and answered to the best of our ability. The answer was that we would expect an agreement between the eastern consumers and western producers as a basis for a price, and I understand that discussions are proceeding to determine such a basis.

Mr. KNOWLES: The Tories seem to be in control of the coalition government in Manitoba.

Mr. FAIR: May I ask a further question in that connection? Is it not a fact that the work of the Canadian wheat board is to sell the producers' grain at the highest price obtainable?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

OLEOMARGARINE

REFERENCE TO ARTICLE IN MONTREAL "DAILY STAR" —SUGGESTED IMPORTATION TO RELIEVE BUTTER SHORTAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JAMES SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): I should like to direct two questions to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, occasioned by a front-page article in the Montreal Daily Star. First, did the government recently make inquiries about the importation of oleomargarine from Denmark to alleviate the present butter shortage? Second, if this is so, how do the government propose to get around the provision of the Dairy Industry Act which prohibits the importation or sale of oleomargarine?

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: By paying the farmer more.

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The answer to the first question, Mr. Speaker, is no; and the second question is answered by the answer given to the first.

FLOOD CONDITIONS

ETOBICOKE CREEK—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Public Works. Has he received any reports as yet with regard to floods in the Toronto island district and around Etobicoke creek? If so, what action is to be taken?

Hon. ALPHONSE FOURNIER (Minister of Public Works): I have received some correspondence and petitions from the people of Etobicoke stating that they are sending a delegation to see me next week—I cannot say exactly the date; then I will hear what they have to say about the flood conditions.

Mr. CHURCH: The hon. gentleman and the government seem to have made no progress in respect to floods since the days of Noah.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Two or three times before Easter recess I mentioned that when floods cause damage to works belonging to the federal government, we attend to the repairs. When such damage is caused to works or lands belonging to municipalities or provinces, we believe those bodies should take care of the repairs.

Mr. CHURCH: And in the meantime we get no action.

INCOME TAX

INQUIRY AS TO ALLEGED STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. MAX CAMPBELL (The Battlefords): I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture if he made a statement in western Canada recently to the effect that farmers not liable for income tax were not obliged to fill out income tax forms.

Right Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): I made the statement in western Canada recently that the income tax act provides in subsection 1 of section 33 that persons, whether farmers or not, who are eligible for the payment of income tax are required to fill out the income tax forms, and that there is no compulsion on any others to fill out the forms. I added that this is so, with the exception of what is provided by subsection 2 of section 33.

Mr. J. G. DIEFENBAKER (Lake Centre): In view of the fact that there may be some uncertainty arising from the legal opinion given by the Minister of Agriculture, I wonder if the Minister of National Revenue agrees with his colleague's interpretation of the law with respect to the filing of income tax returns.

Hon. J. J. McCANN (Minister of National Revenue): In order that there may be no confusion with respect to section 33 of the Income War Tax Act concerning returns, I should like to read that section, which comes under part V of the act:

(1) Every person liable to taxation under this act shall on or before the thirtieth day of April in each year, without notice or demand, deliver to the minister a return in such form as the minister may prescribe of his total income during the last preceding year.

(2) Any person, whether liable to tax under this act or not, shall at any time upon receipt of a notice or demand in writing from the deputy minister (taxation) or any officer authorized to make such demand, deliver to the minister a return in such form as the minister may prescribe, of his total income during the last preceding year.

Mr. KNOWLES: Read the next subsection as well.

Mr. McCANN: If you want the next subsection, here it is:

(3) Notwithstanding subsection one of this section, the return to be filed in the case of a deceased person in respect of his income for the taxation year received or accrued before his death shall be filed within six months from the day of the death of the deceased.

What has that to do with it?

PALESTINE

DEATH OF BRITISH SOLDIERS—COLLECTION OF FUNDS FOR ZIONIST ORGANIZATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. NORMAN JAQUES (Wetaskiwin): I should like to direct a question to either the Minister of Justice or the Secretary of State for External Affairs, or both; I have not been able to give them notice of it. In view of the latest cold-blooded murder of British soldiers in Palestine, will the government consider the advisability of prohibiting the soliciting of funds in Canada for the purpose of supplying these zionists with arms and ammunition?

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The hon. member gave no notice of his question, and his voice was so low I was unable to follow it completely. I shall read it in Hansard and try to give him an answer after I have seen exactly what he said.

NAILS

INQUIRY AS TO INCREASED PRODUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. K. FRASER (Peterborough West): Yesterday when we were considering the export-import bill the Minister of Trade and Commerce acknowledged that nails were in short supply. I should like to know whether anything is being done to bring up this production, because at the present time it is impossible to get two-inch or four-inch nails in almost any city in Canada.

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The production of nails is increasing month by month. There has been an improvement of about thirty per cent in the last month of 1948 for which we have the figures, as compared with the same month of 1947. The nails are disappearing into trade channels as quickly as they are made, and all I can say is that I hope the continuing increase some day will overtake the demand.

Mr. FRASER: The average hardware man is getting only one or two kegs a month.

WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCES

PROVISION FOR NEGLECTED OR DEPENDENT CHILDREN, INCREASED PERMISSIBLE INCOMES, ETC.

The house resumed from Thursday, April 8, consideration of the motion of Mr. Gregg for the second reading of Bill No. 196, to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act, 1946.

Mr. G. R. PEARKES (Nanaimo): When the house rose at eleven o'clock last evening I was pointing out the inadequacy of the amendments proposed in this legislation. Those inadequacies are in two or three different classes. In the first instance there is the inadequacy of the supplementary allowance that may be granted to a recipient of the war veterans allowance at the discretion of the board. The amount of the war veterans allowance is still $30 a month, but at the discretion of the board an additional supplementary allowance of $10 a month or $120 a year may be authorized.

In his remarks, which I have since had an opportunity of reading, the minister described the recipients of the allowance as consisting of three classes: first, the class who draw a pension as well as the war veterans allowance; second, the class composed of those who are non-pensioners but who draw the full amount of the allowance; and third, those recipients who do not draw a pension nor the full allowance. The figures he gave as to the third class were something in the nature of 10,000.

My reading of the minister's remarks would indicate to me that he is to issue a directive to the department which will make mandatory the payment of the supplementary allowance to the first and second classes, but in respect of the third class he used the word "may" and I presume those recipients in the third class will submit their cases to the board for review. If the board decides they should receive the supplementary allowance, then at the discretion of the board an amount up to $120 a year may be granted. While the minister issues an order that the supplementary allowance will be paid to those in the first and second classes, no such mandatory instruction is contained in the bill. In the bill itself, the decision as to whether the amount of the supplementary allowance shall be granted is left to the discretion of the board. No doubt the veterans committee when the bill is referred to it will give consideration to the advisability of including in the bill specific instructions that the supplementary allowance be automatic to those who are pensioners drawing allowance or who are in receipt of full allowance, leaving only to the discretion of the board those who at the present time are not drawing the full allowance.

I consider the amendments inadequate in that they still maintain the means test. Although in certain respects, the permissible income has been changed, I am not at all clear from the minister's statement that there has been any increase in the permissible income. At page 2788 of Hansard he states:

> In addition to the matter of increase, this bill rearranges what was known as "casual earnings" and raises the ceiling of permissible income under the act to $1,105 a year, or approximately $92 a month for married men and to $615 a year, or approximately $51 a month for single men.

Before this was introduced, the permissible income amounted to $615 for single men. It was made up of $365 as the maximum allowance, $125 for casual earnings, and $125 for other income, making the total of $615 as permissible income. I do not see, therefore, how there is any increase. There is a slight change in that there is the amalgamation of other income and casual earnings. In effect, a recipient of the war veterans allowance who does not go out and earn by his casual work $125 in a year, if he is in receipt of a pension in excess of $125 a year, may amalgamate those two and make up the total of $250. But at the same time the total permissible income of $615 is not exceeded. Encouragement is given to a man not to work, and I suggest that is a wrong principle. It is better for the man himself and for the economy of the country to have a man in production and working, if he can find the opportunity to do so. Many of them make the opportunities in order to obtain casual work.

In addition—and this is the only increase I can see in the permissible income—there is the $120 which may be granted as a supplementary allowance at the discretion of the board or according to the instructions issued by the minister, as outlined by him last night. I do feel that if we are to encourage these middle-aged veterans to find work wherever they can, and improve their positions, rather than try to keep them down and make them live within the $615 or $735 a year—a pretty slim sum in these days—we should raise that ceiling much higher than it is now. I believe it was the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch) who said it should be raised to the minimum income exemptions. We should encourage these men to work for the good of the country and of themselves rather than to rely entirely upon their pensions or their allowances.

One other inadequacy I did not have the opportunity to mention last night, is that of the amendments in respect to extending the allowances to other groups of veterans. At various other times, during this session and in others, I have mentioned the need for providing allowances to other groups of veterans. In the present debate other members have mentioned exactly the same thing, and have drawn attention to some groups about which I intend to speak again this afternoon. I refer to them because I believe it is only by continually impressing upon the government the need these men have, and the demand there is among veterans of all classes in every section of the country that their comrades be included in these allowances and be provided with a decent standard of living, that we can hope to get some consideration, should the committee be prepared to make recommendations along these lines.

The first class I wish to mention is that of the soldiers who went from Canada during the first world war and who, through no fault of their own, did not get closer to a theatre of war than Great Britain. This group may be divided into two classes. There were those who, through ill health incurred in Great Britain, were debarred from going overseas to France. I am certain all hon. members will have vivid recollections of or will have read about the hardships the first Canadian expeditionary force suffered while in training at Salisbury Plains during the winter of 1914-15.

Their living conditions were bad. There were no huts built, as there were in the latter days of the last war. They had to live in tents during an extremely bad winter, where the mud, rain and general conditions were appalling. That is a well established fact.

Many of those men suffered from meningitis and other diseases which in some instances impaired their health for the rest of their lives, and in any event denied them the opportunity of taking their places with their comrades in France.

Then there was another class of men, those who, on account of special training in the non-permanent militia of pre-war days or because of their civilian training, were retained in Great Britain for special purposes, to instruct other men who went overseas. But, through no fault of their own, and against their desire, those men were kept in England. The records show that many individuals applied time and again to their commanding officers to be allowed to go overseas, but in the interest of the service they were retained.

No one is going to suggest that conditions in Great Britain were as hazardous during the first world war as during the second. We do know, however, that bombs were dropped by enemy aircraft. The Canadian camp at Shorncliffe was bombarded. Zeppelins came over; and I remember vividly seeing a map published by the Daily Mail which showed where the bombs had been dropped during the first world war. A number of bombs were dropped with surprising accuracy along the Brixton road leading out of London and there were many casualties. Veterans of the second world war who remained in Great Britain are regarded as having served in a theatre of war, while veterans of the first world war who were denied the privilege of taking their places with their comrades in France, who were retained in Great Britain against their will, are denied this privilege. I do not know the exact number of these men, but it is not great, and I submit that these allowances should be extended to them.

I come now to the question of our comrades who served with the forces of His Majesty other than the Canadian forces, usually referred to as imperials. Every branch of the legion and other veteran organizations across Canada have been recommending for years that these men should receive more generous treatment at the hands of Canada than they have received in the past. I have here a resolution passed by the imperial veterans of Canada in Winnipeg. It first points out that the imperials living in Canada have contributed in great measure to the progress of Canada. It then goes on to explain the contribution they have made to Canada, both in peace and in war, and finally it says:

> And whereas there are imperial veterans long resident in this country, who are now Canadian citizens, living under the most intolerable conditions, with a lower standing of living than those on relief.

It may be said that that is probably an exaggeration. I have here a copy of the British Legion Pension Guide, and on pages 8 and 9 there appears the scale of pensions paid to ex-imperials. Men and boys of the Royal Navy, marines, privates, gunners, leading aircraftmen and aircraftmen of the R.A.F. who are 100 per cent pensionable receive forty-five shillings a week, which translated into terms of Canadian currency equals $36 per month. I am not suggesting that there are many imperial veterans living in Canada who are receiving 100 per cent pension, and they would hardly be affected by the war veterans allowances. I merely cite that as an example.

When you come down to the lower brackets you find that an imperial receiving a 20 per cent pension gets exactly nine shillings per week payable every four weeks, which amounts to approximately $8 per month. I am not surprised that the imperial veterans in Winnipeg passed a resolution stating that men who are trying to get along on $8 per month are living in squalor and under a low standard of living. I feel at this time that we should recognize the fact that we have admitted these imperial veterans into the fellowship of Canadian citizenship; they are now Canadian citizens, and many of them have long residence in Canada.

There are two classes of imperial veterans. I would call the attention of the minister and the committee to the fact that many of these imperials were resident in Canada prior to their enlistment in the British services. According to the regulations, if they were resident in Canada immediately prior to enlistment they would be eligible for an allowance. But if they had left Canada three months, six months, a year or any period of time longer than that before enlisting, they were not eligible.

Many British reservists who were living in Canada in 1914 rejoined their old regiments. They are entitled to an allowance, while Canadian born men who had resided in Canada for many years, but who for one reason or another found themselves in Great Britain when war broke out, are barred from these allowances because they were not domiciled in Canada at the time of enlistment. Some of these men were students who were completing their education in Great Britain in 1914, and they are barred.

Then there is the larger group made up of those who migrated to Canada after the war finished in 1918. They were encouraged to come here, and many of them have lived here ever since. They have contributed much to the development of this country. In many cases their sons and daughters fought in the ranks of the Canadian forces during the second world war, and many of these men joined up locally with the veterans guard or other organizations. The time has come when we should not have any hyphenated Canadians. The imperial soldier who has taken out Canadian citizenship should be considered a Canadian and should have all the rights of Canadian citizenship. He has in other respects.

Finally there are the other groups which I shall not take the time to enumerate, because I have mentioned them on previous occasions. I intend to bring up their cases in the committee. I repeat that I feel that this bill provides inadequate amendments to the War Veterans Allowance Act. In the first place, the supplementary allowances will in many cases be inadequate to meet the needs of the recipient. Second, the ceiling of permissible income has not been raised high enough to encourage men to work and thereby raise their standard of living. Finally, it is inadequate because it makes no provision for these other groups of pensioners who are in urgent need of allowances.

Mr. STANLEY KNOWLES (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I must say that this bill is one of the most disappointing I have seen brought down in this house. I am fully satisfied that the members of the veterans affairs committee, all of whom are veterans, feel the same way about it, and that they will do their best in the committee to secure the improvements that are being asked for in this debate on second reading. My reason for rising to take part in the debate is the hope that those of us who speak as non-veterans will be able to reinforce the views of the veterans themselves who are members of the committee and help them to secure a much better War Veterans Allowance Act than is yet in prospect.

I am sure that last evening we were all delighted with what the minister was able to say, supported by the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Brooks), the hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Bentley) and others, concerning the way in which the old soldiers themselves have expressed no jealousy about the improvements made in benefits for veterans of world war II and have put on no pressure campaigns on their own behalf. I also want to say that we in this house who are non-veterans are thrilled at the way in which the veteran members of the house really go to bat on behalf of their comrades of both wars, and we are pleased too that this is no partisan matter. But I believe it should be said, as the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Gibson) pointed out in another debate, that the desire for the best possible deal for Canada's veterans is shared not only by the veterans themselves on behalf of their comrades, but also by the civilian population of the country generally. All of us want the best possible deal for our veterans, and I hope that the debate now taking place and the speeches now being made on all sides of the house will reinforce the members of the committee as they make their recommendations and seek to improve the bill.

I said at the outset that the legislation struck me as one of the bitterest disappointments I have seen brought down in this house in the form of legislation. In fact I felt that to a certain extent both the house and the country generally have been misled. On the 19th of December the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) announced the proposed increases both in the disability pension and in the war veterans allowance. His reference to the war veterans allowance was very brief. This was it:

> The amendment will authorize the war veterans allowance board to grant supplementary allowances up to $10 a month in cases of need for veterans and widows who, through age and infirmity, are unable to provide for their own maintenance. The board will be authorized to make the supplementary allowances retroactive to October 1, or to any subsequent date, as the circumstances of individual cases may require.

When we heard that announcement, while we recognized that there was in it a means test qualification, still, brief as the announcement was, it pointed to an increase of $10 a month, and I think it is correct to say that we in this house and veterans and veterans organizations generally thought that that was a flat ten-dollar increase to those veterans who are on the war veterans allowance. A few weeks later, to be exact on February 16, after there had been considerable expression of displeasure with the announcements of December 19 having to do both with the disability pension and with the war veterans allowance, the Prime Minister made another announcement indicating that certain further increases were being proposed in the disability pension. On that occasion the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Pearkes), who has just spoken, asked the Prime Minister, as reported at page 1288 of Hansard, this question:

> Is provision being made for increases under the War Veterans Allowance Act?
>
> [Mr. Knowles.]

Although the member addressed his question to the Prime Minister, the answer was made by the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Gregg) in these words:

> The amendments to the War Veterans Allowance Act are still under study, and the proposals will be completed before the end of the present week.

For my part I took it from that statement that, just as there had been some improvement, slight as it was, in the proposals respecting the pension act between December 19 and February 16, so we might anticipate some improvement in the proposed amendments to the War Veterans Allowance Act. But it appears now that the bill before us simply implements the announcement of December 19. I can see in it nothing beyond what we were offered at that time.

A little later the resolution preceding this bill was put on the order paper. Reading it we were still uncertain just what was in store, but there were at least two phrases in it that gave us hope. It said that there would be increased permissible income, and supplementary allowances. Those were the two things in which we were mainly interested —an increase in the allowance itself to the burnt-out veteran or to his widow, and an increase in the over-all ceiling on income allowed to these people. When that resolution was being considered in the committee of the whole the Minister of Veterans Affairs made a brief statement upon it. He said at page 2716 of Hansard:

> In the main it is the purpose of the bill to improve the amounts payable to the beneficiaries under that legislation.

Later in the same short statement he said:

> In the main this bill is designed to increase the amounts payable to them, and to deal with other subsidiary matters indicated in the resolution.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that during all the stages that led up to the introduction of this bill we were led to believe we were to get in the main precisely those two things: a worthwhile increase in the amount of the war veterans allowance, and an increase in the total permissible income allowed to those in receipt of this benefit. I submit, sir, that with respect to many thousands of those on the war veterans allowance we get neither—neither an increase in the amount of the allowance the veteran will receive, nor an increase in the total income permitted to allowance recipients.

I was surprised, but in one sense pleased, to learn from the minister's remarks yesterday that there are about 16,000 recipients of the war veterans allowance who will be entitled automatically to receive the $10 a month increase. I say I was surprised and in only one sense pleased to learn there were that many who would benefit in this way, but on the other hand I was saddened to realize that there are that many veterans, mostly of world war I, whose circumstances are such, who are living so far below the ceiling, that they will immediately qualify for that $10. It does seem to me that that simply is not good enough.

I was glad that the previous speaker, the hon. member for Nanaimo, pointed out in detail that the minister is not really justified in talking about new ceilings and about increased permissible income. It is true that by the terms of the bill before us there is to be what looks like an increase in the amount of income from any source which a veteran may earn apart from his allowance, but that is offset by removing from the existing statute the clause that permitted $125 of casual income. To be fair, we must say that from this side of the house we have asked that the distinction between these two kinds of income be abolished, because of the fact that it has forced veterans to move from one job to another. But when we asked that that distinction be abolished, we hoped there would be a real increase in permissible income and not just the bracketing of the two figures already there.

As the previous speaker pointed out, under the act as it now stands, without the amendments proposed by this bill, a single veteran has the right to earn, in addition to the $365 allowance, $125 from any source and $125 casual income, which is a total of $615 a year. If this bill is enacted in its present form, the ceiling for the single veteran will still be that same figure, $615 a year. There is one slight qualification we should always make, and that is that $25 a year from unearned income is granted; but it hardly alters the case at all. In the case of the single veteran the ceiling is $615 a year, and the ceiling as a result of the proposals made by the minister will still be $615.

Similarly, with the married veteran, the present situation is that he can draw an allowance of $730 a year and make $250 from any source and $125 casual income, a total of $1,105. All that this bill does is to bracket the $250 and the $125 into one sum of $375, which means that after the bill is passed he will be allowed to make $375 from any source, on top of the $730 allowance, which means that the ceiling is the same, $1,105.

May I point out that I have been speaking thus far, in connection with this phase of the matter, about the ceiling. There is another way in which to describe this, namely, to use the language of the act. The act does not talk about a ceiling, as the Old Age Pensions Act does. It talks about other incomes which the veteran is entitled to earn, and if this amendment goes through, the veteran will be entitled to earn other incomes, if he is single, of $250 a year and, if he is married, $375 a year.

I ask the house to face this shameful fact, that these are precisely the figures written into the War Veterans Allowance Act in 1930. The other income allowed to the veteran has not been changed at all by any amendments made to the act since it was first passed in 1930.

I feel that the committee should know the temper of the house, of the non-veteran members and of the country about this matter, and they should make full use of the right they have in the veterans committee, which we do not have in committee of the whole, to make recommendations calling for increases involving the expenditure of money. I say they should make use of that right to obtain a substantial increase in this ceiling on the amount of income allowed to the burnt-out pensioner.

I think the member for Acadia (Mr. Quelch) was most reasonable in suggesting the income tax exemption figure of $750 single and $1,500 married. Incidentally, speaking of the life history of the War Veterans Allowance Act, I was interested in making this discovery. The act was first passed in 1930, and amended in 1936, 1938, 1946, and now in 1948, and on every occasion but one there has been an increase in the salaries of some members of the board. On that one occasion when there was not an increase in salaries there was an increase in the number of members. In other words it has always been possible to find more money for the members of the board. I do not begrudge it, but having regard to the fact that the other income allowed burnt-out pensioners has not been increased at all from what it was when the act was passed in 1930, and also that prior to this supplementary allowance, about which I shall have something to say in a moment, there has been only one increase in the amount of the allowance, and it will be seen that the benefit to the veteran is really not very a good record for this parliament.

Let me put it this way. I do not want to be partisan and to put all the blame in this instance on the government. There is a tradition that veterans legislation is parliament's legislation, and that is borne out by the way in which these matters are referred to the veterans committee. If I speak strongly about the matter it is in the hope that it will reinforce the members of the veterans committee to be—as the minister said last night, though I am afraid he misused the word—generous to the veterans. This legislation, certainly with respect to the ceilings, is not generous at all.

I should like to say a further word about the ceiling question. If the bill goes through in the form in which it stands, the minister and his department might as well know that there will be considerable protest against it during the next few months, and that they will run into administrative difficulties. I would be prepared to predict that a year from now they will come back and ask us to raise the ceiling on the income.

If I may quote a parallel case, I would point out that in 1943, when by order in council the first increase was made in the old age pension in the amount of $5 a month, the government did not see fit to increase the ceiling of pensioners' income. In only a matter of a few months the then minister of finance, now Minister of Justice, was faced with the fact not only that it was not good enough but that there were administrative difficulties, and the government raised the ceiling at least by the amount of the increase that had been made in the pension itself.

And so I say, with respect to this measure, that even though it does include only a $10 supplementary allowance, there should have been at least that much increase in the overall ceiling. In other words, the ceiling should now be not less than $735 a year for single veterans and $1,225 for married. These are not the figures I would suggest. I would suggest $750 and $1,500. But if the minister would at least go that far, his figures would provide an increase in the ceiling to take care of the supplementary allowance itself, and permit all burnt-out pensioners and their widows to receive it.

With regard to the supplementary allowance, there too I want to keep my language moderate, but it does seem to me that we have been misled. I listened closely to the member for Nanaimo, and I thought he was under the impression that some veterans might get that $120 a year on top of the $615 ceiling to which they are held. If the hon. member will look into the bill, which I cannot refer to by section while we are on second reading, he will discover that the supplementary allowance is payable to the veteran only within the $615 or $1,105 ceiling. In other words, if a veteran is now drawing his $365 a year or $30.41 a month—a single veteran—and he is now making a total other income of $20.84 a month, that brings him to $615 and he will not be able to get the $10 supplementary allowance. Neither will it be available to the married veteran now getting $730 a year or $60.83 a month, if he is already making the limit of $375 a year or $31.25 a month, for he will already be at the ceiling of $1,105.

The veteran will get the $10 supplementary allowance only if he is unemployable to such an extent, and lacking in economic resources to such an extent, that he is practically living on nothing more than the burnt-out pension itself.

It seems to me that the least this parliament would like to do, when we talk about the $10 supplementary allowance, is to do it right across the board the way it is done when freight rates are increased: ten dollars a month to every veteran on the burnt-out pension, whatever his situation may be. If that had been the proposal of the minister, some of us would not have smiled as we did the other night when he used the word "generous".

I strongly urge, Mr. Speaker, that the committee battle it out with the minister and send him back to the cabinet with the insistence that that $10 increase be right across the board; that the increase in the ceiling be not the misleading one we have in this bill but an actual effective increase which will make it possible for all veterans on the allowance to get this extra $10.

I should like to say a few words with reference specifically to the case of non-pensioned veterans' widows who are covered by this legislation. It is not many years since there was no provision for women whose husbands, when they died, were on less than 50 per cent pension. I am glad to see that the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol) has just come in, because he is one who, in years not long since, fought hard, along with others of us in this house, to get the government to make an allowance for these women. A measure to make such provision was first brought in in 1943. For a few years—in fact down until 1946—it was a matter of an annual vote, but in 1946 provision for an allowance to these widows of non-pensioned veterans was written into the act which we are now amending. Making it statutory was a step in the right direction. The situation now is that when anything is done for the burnt-out pensioners, it is done automatically at the same time for the widows covered under this act. But on their behalf I want to say that the proposed increase of $10 a month should go to all of them without any question. Because of the way in which the proposed act is worded, they will be subject to the means test and they will get that extra $10 a month or $120 a year only if they are under the ceiling of $615 a year which applies in the case of a widow without a child or children.

I put in a special word for these women, because their situation is a difficult one. Many of them have had the experience of seeing their husbands who were on no pension at all or on a 40 per cent disability pension, suffer a good deal in the later years of their lives from their war experiences. When those husbands pass on, the widows are in just as difficult circumstances as are the widows of other veterans. Yet they must take this legislation which is not something they receive as of right; and the very fact that that is so makes it necessary that the provision for them be much more generous than it has been.

When we talk about the widows, the same considerations come into play that have already been discussed by others who have spoken in this debate. I refer, for example, to the question of service in England during the last war. My attention has been brought to the position of many widows in my own city and in other cities, women whose husbands served only in England during the last war and therefore could not qualify even for this allowance.

I was present last year, Mr. Speaker, when a group of these women—other members might have been present too, but I am not sure about that—had a conference here in Ottawa with the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker), who at that time was parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Veterans Affairs; I understand he has recently resigned that position. On the occasion of that meeting in the Liberal caucus room on the fourth floor these women, speaking on behalf of the organization of non-pensioned widows, presented their requests one by one. With regard to a number of their requests the hon. member for Rosthern could make no commitment; but when they asked for the inclusion of England as a theatre of war in world war I, the hon. member for Rosthern, in so far as he could as a member outside of the cabinet, made a commitment to these women. He said: "I can give you the assurance that next year, although you will not get some of the things you want, but you will get an amendment to the War Veterans Allowance Act that will make service in England in the last war count for the purpose of this act."

I know that the women of that organization have counted during the year on that one specific improvement being made. I realize that the hon. member for Rosthern was not in a position to commit the cabinet. I also realize that he has made about the country a number of statements of the kind which do not seem to get government backing. But these women took it as a solemn undertaking from the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. As a matter of fact they saw the previous minister as well, but I was not with them on that occasion. There is keen disappointment on their part that the change is not being made. I strongly urge upon the members of the committee, representing, as they do, the House of Commons to deal with this phase of the matter as parliament and as the country would wish them to do. The same considerations apply to the imperial veterans now living in Canada, but since this matter has been well developed by others, I need not go into it in any further detail.

Another thing I should like to say on behalf of the non-pensioned veterans' widows who are covered by this legislation is that I hope consideration will be given to their request to be included in the matter of hospitalization. On one occasion when I raised this question the former Minister of Veterans Affairs seemed to misunderstand it and to think that they were asking, or that I was asking on their behalf, that room be found for them in veterans' hospitals. That is not their request at all. They are asking rather that financial provision be made for them when they themselves require hospitalization. So long as the amounts are as they are, I feel that that is a request which the government ought to meet.

Someone has said that this whole War Veterans Allowance Act is in the nature of social security legislation for the veterans. I think that is a good way to describe it. If it is to be social security legislation, let it have in it some element of real security; let it not be just a matter of charity as it is at the present time.

So, Mr. Speaker, I leave it at that. I feel that the amount of this allowance should be $50 a month for a single person and $100 a month for a married person; that the ceiling should be effectively raised and not just in the manner in which this bill does it; that service in England in the last war should count; that imperial veterans now in Canada should be considered; and, as I have already said, that the widows covered under this act should be given by the government the benefit of hospitalization.

I conclude by once again expressing my earnest hope that the committee, when it deals with this matter, will not only deal with it as veterans, which they are, and not only on the non-partisan basis on which they have approached these matters from session to session and parliament to parliament, but that they will realize that the non-veteran members of this house and the civilian population of Canada generally want a much better deal for our veterans than is provided in the bill now before us.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): The motion before you, Mr. Speaker, is for the second reading of the War Veterans Allowance Act, and I wish to draw the attention of the minister to one particular class of people who come under it. The original act was passed in 1930 to give some reasonable allowance to those who fought in the South African war and world war I; and recently those veterans who served in the northwest rebellion, the forgotten men as far as veterans affairs go, were also included. Many of these men are located in the maritimes; a number of them are in the Toronto district; some are in Saskatchewan and some in Winnipeg. They have received practically nothing. They were given grants of land, 160 acres each principally in Saskatchewan and northern Ontario, but they were given no travelling allowance to get to their land, with the result that many men never even saw it.

These were the men who started the militia eight years after the Mackenzie government passed the first militia act. They left their vocations and received no pay for serving, except fifty cents a month. Most of them paraded twice a week and on Sundays; they went to camp; and the fifty cents they received was put back into the company fund in order to build up the militia. Then came the South African war, and later the two great wars. Some of these men are in desperate circumstances today. I believe it was only in 1944 that they first received assistance under this legislation, but then those in charge of the act brought into effect what they call the means test. That was the meanest thing we have ever done in this house, because at the present time these men cannot even rent a small room with the amount they are receiving. Many small estates have been required to pay back the amount received in old age pensions and all that sort of thing. I remember one man who was with Sir John A. Macdonald when he died; I shall not give his name, because I do not think it is necessary. He was in the press gallery here, and he wrote many articles on this subject in the Globe and also in the Mail.

I believe these men have been very poorly treated. They marched across lake Superior in the depth of winter when the temperature was 46 degrees below zero. They lived on dog biscuits and hardtack, and saved that country from being ravaged; and probably they opened the eyes of the whole civilized world to the possibilities of the great prairie provinces which today are doing so much for this country. The other day I received a letter from my kind and good friend the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker), who is always engaged in good works, not only within his own party but in association with others in this house. The letter was from a member of the northwest field force in British Columbia who with others presented a brief to the veterans affairs committee two years ago. I believe he wanted to obtain $160 cash in lieu of the 160 acres of land he had been granted. Nothing has been done about it since the committee got the brief.

The way in which these men have been used is the meanest thing I have ever heard of. The other day I was told of a man who had been one of these veterans, and whose son in later years became associated with the university of Toronto in connection with the training of football and hockey teams. He died, and when they came to settle up his estate it was found to be worth $837. Then along came the government to apply the means test, and asked that $600 be paid back. I must say of the former minister of veterans affairs that I always found him willing to assist the veterans; his heart was in the work. The present minister was for some time associated with the great university of New Brunswick, and holds the highest military decoration in the world. I do hope he will look into the cases of these members of the northwest field force, because they certainly have been given shabby treatment, though they were the backbone and founders of the militia of this country. From 1885 on through the South African war and the two world wars they, their children and their children's children have been serving in the forces.

I do not wish to detain the house longer. I have dealt already with the other matters involved in this bill and the other measures relating to the veterans. For that reason I am prepared to give way now to the soldiers in other parts of the house.

Mr. J. H. BLACKMORE (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, as I read the bill now before us, to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act, and as I listened last evening to the minister make his statement and do his best to give a good appearance to a very bad job, I found myself constantly thinking of the word "cheeseparing". I kept thinking of some words such as these: Canada is hereby providing, for some 25,000 of her noblest, only crusts and crumbs, where she should be setting for each a place at a generous, richly laden table.

The provisions of this bill are bleakly meagre. They constitute a comfortless prospect for tens of thousands of fine Canadians who have deserved of their country the best the country can offer. I fancy the bill would have been more appropriately called the war veterans existence allowance act, or perhaps it should have been called the war veterans sub-existence allowance act.

If Canada could not produce enough, perhaps she could be excused for treating a large number of her finest people in this way, but Canada is able to produce enough, at least a thousand dollars per year in goods and services for every man, woman and child in Canada. All this bill allows a man and his wife is $1,130 a year, not quite $100 a month, far short of the $2,000 a year which is the amount in goods and services this country can produce for every family of two in the nation. If it is physically possible for Canada to provide $1,000 worth or more of goods and services per citizen it ought to be financially possible for Canada to render those goods and services available to Canadians, especially our veterans.

Once more, Mr. Speaker, I would draw to the attention of the house and the country this important fact, that what we can do for our old age pensioners or our returned soldiers or the people who are in need anywhere in this country depends upon our ability to produce goods and services. I am surprised that while people seemed to understand this when the war was on, they were unable to see it before the war, and they seem unable to see it now. Until we begin to think in terms of goods and services in this country we shall continue to do absurd things such as we have now indicated in this bill.

Since this nation is able to produce goods and services abundantly, this parliament is morally bound to render sufficient of those goods and services available to our returned men and their dependents to enable them to live an abundant life, not to drag out a miserable existence.

Before proceeding further, may we consider some statistics which tend to prove Canada's physical ability to provide $1,000 worth of goods and services per year for every Canadian.

Let us take the production of Canada for the years 1943 and 1944. At page 17 of a booklet which I am sure has reached the hands of every hon. member, entitled Canada 1947, which is said to be the official handbook of present conditions and recent progress, and which is issued under the authority of Hon. James A. MacKinnon, we find a list of figures showing Canada's actual production in the years 1943 and 1944, during the war.

These figures show that of primary production—that is, production from her agriculture, forestry, fisheries, trapping, mining and electric power—Canada was able to produce to a value of $3,589,939,153. In 1944 she produced to a value of $3,943,852,473. Those are gross figures.

In the matter of manufactured products, including construction, custom and repair, and manufactures, she produced in 1943 to a gross value of $9,518,909,550 and in 1944 to a gross value of $9,766,954,578. This means that in 1943 she was able to produce to a grand total value of $11,959,951,887, and in 1944 to a value of $12,549,832,627. For the approximately 12,000,000 people living in Canada the 1944 figure works out at about $1,000 worth of goods and services to each one of those people. Even then we are disregarding a very considerable amount of production in the country.

With these figures we should read what is stated at page 15 of the same pamphlet, where we find this:

> In the survey of production only those industries generally considered to have a direct connection with production are considered, the coverage being limited to agriculture, fishing, mining, forestry, trapping, electric power, manufactures, construction, and custom and repair. However, production in the economic sense includes much more than the contribution of these industries. Transportation, trade, banking and numerous other services also contribute to the nation's economy and should be taken into account when attempting a complete survey of Canada's productive capacity.
>
> The gross value of production of commodities in Canada was greater during 1944 than in any other year: the increase over 1943, when a record had been established, was about five per cent.

That gives us some sort of notion, as serious Canadian statesmen, of the magnificent asset we are administering when we are administering the Dominion of Canada. We should consider what we are undertaking to do for our returned men, in the light of this magnificent asset. If we had managed the Canadian economy with skill and wisdom—which we have not—the increase from 1944 to 1945 ought to have been at least five per cent; the increase from 1945 to 1946 ought to have been another five per cent, and the increase from 1946 to 1947 another five per cent.

Instead of managing our country wisely we have allowed our livestock to be depleted and our wheat and other producers to become discouraged and unhappy, and in a general and all-round manner we have allowed our productive capacity to decline. But that does not need to discourage us. It is never too late to repent and to reform our ways, and to take into consideration what we have potentially in this country.

If we had allowed our production to increase, as it could have done with the return of three-quarters of a million of our finest producers from overseas, then we should have enough surplus production to enable each of our people to have a thousand dollars' worth, and still take care of the exports necessary in relation to our external obligations.

Let us keep in mind what I have said as we consider the bill before us, which will render available to the recipient of a war veterans allowance, if he is married, the sum of $1,170 a year.

It may be argued that the country cannot afford financially to give a larger allowance. A sound financial system would overcome that difficulty. What cannot be defended to the satisfaction of any logical mind, is the niggardliness of the means test which is applied not only in this act but in the Old Age Pensions Act and in other acts.

Surely a man should be free to earn what he needs and what he can earn, without risking the loss of his allowance! Let the government and the house once more lay down the principle commonly accepted during the war that no man or woman should be worse off because of going into the services, and no one who stayed out of the services ought to be better off because of having stayed out. The principle ought also to apply to servicemen's wives.

The Canadian parliament is in duty and honour bound, first, to make of Canada a home fitting for heroes; second, to make it possible for every Canadian hero to find in Canada a fitting home, and, third, to render it possible and encouraging for every Canadian hero to raise up a family of hero sons to strengthen and bless our country in the days to come.

May I urge upon the minister and members of the committee that if the Canadian parliament is to discharge these duties they must bring back a bill far more generously and courageously drafted than is the hidebound effort that parliament is now considering and is about to submit to the committee for what I hope will be drastic revision.

May I urge upon the minister and members of the committee that parliament expects the minister and the committeemen to do their duty, not as the treasury board sees that duty but as the progressive, pulsating Canadian people see it.

[Mr. Blackmore.]

Mr. T. A. KIDD (Kingston City): Mr. Speaker, I should like to add a word or two to what has already been said with reference to Bill No. 196 to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act.

The house has listened with interest to the remarks of the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Gregg) and other members who have expressed their views. What concerns me most at the moment is not what has already been said but what has not been said and might be said regarding the war veterans allowances.

In his opening remarks the minister stated that the benefits relating to this bill would apply in the main to a small proportion of the old soldiers of the first great war. He made mention that only 25,000 out of approximately 200,000 soldiers are receiving aid from their country. The complete summary, as tabulated, is as follows:

Veterans, all wars	26,106
Widows, all wars	4,790
Orphans, all wars	53
Total	30,949

First, may I say that I hope the present minister and those who are closely associated with him, the pension board and all who are called upon to make decisions, will never permit the injustice to be done to the veterans of world war II that was done to many of those gallant veterans of world war I. No onus or responsibility can be placed upon the present minister, but it can be placed upon the department which had to do with the policy that resulted in a reduction of many pensions. There is not in this house a veteran of world war I who cannot recall an instance in his own riding of some veteran who enjoyed a 100 per cent pension who was dumbfounded to open his mail and find a letter from the Department of Veterans Affairs advising him that his case had been re-examined and that there would be a reduction in his pension.

To emphasize my point, I should like to draw attention to a case I have in mind of a late pensioner whose family lives in Kingston. This man had had a 100 per cent pension for fourteen years when he was notified by the pension board that his pension would be reduced to 45 per cent. Those familiar with the Pension Act will readily understand the reduction to 45 per cent. It meant that his widow and family would be deprived of any pension at his death, the act requiring that 55 per cent pension is necessary at the time of death for a family to qualify for pension.

This man was seriously ill and receiving treatment in Christie Street hospital. His wife, then in her early sixties, was doing the best she could to get along. What happened? The veteran was heart-broken and died shortly afterwards. I might add that I came to Ottawa to see the pension board on behalf of this widow. I received a courteous hearing and had every reason to expect that the case would be considered. However, for reasons best known to the pension board at the time, that was the end of it.

There seemed to be a feeling at that time that there were too many receiving 100 per cent pension. A special board was arranged to probe into the case but the old soldier had very little recourse. I trust and hope that those veterans of world war II who are receiving pensions will not be dealt with as ruthlessly as have many of the veterans of world war I.

I might also cite another case, that of a pensioner who received notice that his pension had been reduced from 100 per cent to 5 per cent. This man had a family of seven children and it took him nearly twelve months to have his pension returned. The purpose of amending this act is to make provision for the neglected child of a veteran.

The pension board should not take too much credit for caring for certain types of veterans who happen to lose an eye, a limb or an arm. The act is specific as to what should be done in such cases. But there are the borderline cases dealing with nervous disorders, heart or cancer. In so many cases the benefit of the doubt seems to go against the soldier instead of in his favour, and such should not be the case. I emphasize as strongly as I can that I think the benefit of the doubt should be given to the soldier.

I should like to cite a case of a veteran of world war II and I do this because I feel that many similar cases should receive further attention. This man's name is Herbert J. Leach. His number is C-1072 and he enlisted in the R.C.H.A. at Kingston. On January 3 he was killed in action, leaving a widow and two children, a boy and a girl. This man enlisted in 1939 and those who are familiar with the circumstances will realize that his number of C-1072 is not a boxcar number.

The daughter has since married. When this soldier proceeded overseas his boy was just ten years of age. Upon the soldier's death his widow received $60 a month plus $15 a month for the boy until he was sixteen years of age. Unfortunately the boy happens to be below normal and his mother is left with the responsibility of caring for him. She has been refused any further veterans allowance by the pension board. This particular case was brought to my attention and I in turn brought it to the attention of the minister and the department. The application was substantiated by a certificate from the family doctor which stated:

> This is to certify that Victor Leach, aged nineteen, of 51 Raglan road, Kingston, Ontario, is totally and completely incapacitated on account of meningitis at two years and is an epileptic and mentally defective.
>
> R. R. MacGregor, M.D.

In order to support her child, the mother was forced to take a position as laundress for which she receives $18 a week. Her own allowance as a widow was $60, which has recently been increased to $70. The pension board decided that no pension should be paid to the child, stating that no pension shall be paid to a child who, if a boy, is over the age of sixteen years, except when such child and those responsible for his maintenance are without adequate resources.

I think the house will agree that it is a shame and disgrace when the widow of a man who has given his life for his country, a man who paid the supreme sacrifice and left a child unable to care for himself, is turned down by the department. I might add also that the mother of this boy is faced with an extra expense. The boy recently had scarlet fever which necessitated his being in hospital for twenty-one days, the bill incurred for this illness amounting to $111. I want to emphasize what I mentioned a moment ago, that we do not want the veterans of world war II to be treated as the veterans of world war I have been. I am not blaming the minister because these cases came up before he took over the portfolio. I submit that in every case the benefit of the doubt should go to the dependent or the returned soldier rather than to the department or the government.

I should like to draw attention to another case of hardship being visited upon a veteran student. Only last week there was brought to my attention the case of a veteran student who is ill in the Kingston General hospital and receiving treatment. This boy is married and, like many others, carries protection under a hospital insurance plan. On arrival in hospital he was presented with form 706 compiled by the Department of Veterans Affairs, a copy of which I hold in my hand. This form necessitates his turning over to the Department of Veterans Affairs any hospital benefits which he would receive under the insurance plan. This boy is being penalized for trying to look after his wife and family. Any other veteran who happened to enter the hospital and who was not under the plan would have his total hospital expenses taken care of by the Department of Veterans Affairs.

To explain this case further, I might mention that the veteran benefits to this boy will expire in October of this year. What concerns this veteran and his wife is that the hospital benefits to which he has personally contributed were taken away from him by the Department of Veterans Affairs. This means that on and after October 1 this veteran and his family will not be entitled to any hospitalization.

I do not know whether the minister is familiar with this form and I can send him one if he wishes. Great hardship is being suffered by these veterans. It is a mimeographed form. This sort of treatment is something that should not happen.

I shall say nothing further. I have mentioned these two cases and I would refer again in conclusion to that boy. I know that under sections 20 and 21 of the Pension Act the minister has power to look into these cases if he sees fit to do so.

Mr. E. B. McKAY (Weyburn): Mr. Speaker, I should like to be permitted to make a few observations on Bill No. 196, which has to do with the amending of certain clauses of the War Veterans Allowance Act. It is not my purpose to speak at any length because I am a member of the veterans affairs committee to which we have been informed this bill is to be submitted, and where I am confident its merits and deficiencies will be thoroughly reviewed.

The War Veterans Allowance Act was originally set up to provide for needy veterans who would normally not be in receipt of disability pension. Perhaps I may be permitted to enumerate its main features. The veteran must be sixty years of age, permanently unemployable or, having served in a theatre of actual warfare, incapable of maintaining himself because of economic handicaps combined with physical or mental disability or insufficiency.

The maximum allowance paid under this act for a single veteran was $30.41 a month, and the married veteran received double that or $60.83 a month. Casual and other earnings were not to exceed a total of $250. The maximum allowance for a widow was only $365 a year, or one dollar a day, unless there were children, in which case the allowance was increased to $730 a year, or $60.83 a month.

The bill before the house is to make certain amendments to the War Veterans Allowance Act of 1946, all of which I do not care to discuss in detail at this time but I do wish to refer to one which I think should be commented upon. Other amendments could have been proposed which would have received the commendation of the whole house. I am not so sure that all these amendments do.

[Mr. Kidd.]

For instance, the amendment to increase the over-all income earned to $250 a year I cannot see is of very great advantage to the veteran. There are several minor amendments but I shall refer only to the provision for a supplementary allowance. It must be noted that the bill does make provision for the payment of a supplementary allowance of $120 if increase is approved by the board. We are assuming, of course, that the board will in most cases make provision for the payment of this supplementary allowance. But if this supplementary allowance is paid the bill states that the amount must not exceed the difference between the actual income of the recipient and the permissible income applicable in his case. In essence this simply means, if I interpret the bill correctly, that the veteran who receives the supplementary allowance of $10 a month will have his permissible income reduced accordingly, so that he will be, in actual fact, no better off than he was before.

It seems to me that about all that this bill does is to grant the old veteran the right to work harder in order to supplement his income without being deprived of his allowance. Under present conditions of high living costs it is apparent to all that he will certainly have to find some source from which to augment his income or else go hungry. So the government introduces this legislation in order that those able to work may make a few extra dollars to eke out an existence. But many are unable to work; some are completely unemployable because of age or disability. These men will now receive the ridiculously low sum of $40.41 a month allowance.

I do not think these war veterans will be very happy about legislation that makes no greater provision for them than this. They do not complain. They accepted their lot in the first world war and they are accepting it now. But there are many of us in this house who do not consider this legislation as fair to these fine citizens of Canada as it should be. I feel that all veterans throughout this land will be disappointed with this bill. It provides only a pittance where plenty could be provided. Canada has the money; the government has the money. We need only cite the $700 million surplus which it is estimated the government will have on this year's operations to prove that point.

These veterans served Canada well in her hour of need. The minister stated last evening that they rendered honourable fighting service to this country. We all agree with that remark, but actions speak louder than words. If they rendered that valuable service, then all I can say of this bill is that it is cheap and not worthy of a grateful country. Canada should pay for value received. These men are burnt-out in their fifties and sixties because of their participation in early life in the first world war. They may have no visible war scars, no very great war disability, but they are nevertheless some of the most pathetic casualties of the first world struggle.

I wish to associate myself with what has been said by the hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Bentley) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and to urge upon the government that they increase the allowance to at least $50 a month for single man, $100 a month for married men, and to widows in receipt of the allowance to $50 a month. I feel, Mr. Speaker, that these amounts are little enough; indeed, they are much too small because I am sure that few people today can keep a household together on $50 a month. If these veterans deserve an allowance at all, and I do not believe any member of this house would suggest that they are not deserving, then the allowance ought at least to be large enough to permit these old veterans or their widows to live in decency and reasonable comfort in their declining years. They should not always have to live in the shadow of poverty in a country which is rated as one of the wealthiest nations in the world.

Mr. CLARENCE GILLIS (Cape Breton South): It is not my intention to hold the measure up, but I have a few words to say before it goes to the committee.

I am not going to argue the merits or the demerits of the bill. I will leave that for the veterans affairs committee, because I do not think that what we say in the house will have very much influence on that committee. At least that has been my experience in serving on similar committees in the past. There are, however, one or two points which are not covered by the bill and which I should now like to emphasize.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) went thoroughly into the financial aspects of the matter and there is no necessity for me to repeat what he has said. I notice that the bill makes no provision to care for incapacitated veterans who may be residing in the United States. I have had several cases myself which I have taken up with the war veterans allowance board. These war veterans of the first world war came back to Canada in 1919, some of them with war disabilities, and if they had remained in the country and fought their pension claims they could have established their right to pension.

Older veterans in the house will remember that in the years from 1919 to 1925 there was not much opportunity for employment in Canada, with the result that hundreds of veterans who served in an actual theatre of war could not secure employment here and had to go to the United States. Many of these veterans are in the United States today; and representations have been made to me, as no doubt they have been made to the minister himself, asking that something be done for veterans residing in the United States, having dependents and being totally incapacitated and hospitalized. These men have hospital bills, maintenance and so forth and are being taken care of by the United States government, and representations have been made to me to find out whether under the regulations it would be possible to extend the war veterans allowance privileges to veterans in that category while they are residing across the line.

Under the act as it has existed until now the stand taken by the department, and rightly so, in accordance with the regulations, was that this measure was not construed as a war veterans pension measure but as a social measure, more or less an old age pension arrangement for the incapacitated veteran, and that as such it could not be applied outside the country. However, if a man and his family returned to Canada, after a certain length of time in this country he could establish a claim.

I would point out, however, that in many of these cases the man is hospitalized and lacks the necessary means to come back to the country, and therefore he is a recipient of charity in the United States, despite the fact, mind you, that his present condition is attributable to services rendered in a theatre of war for this country, Canada.

I know from past experience with the minister in respect of veterans problems that he is sympathetic, that he understands those problems, and I suggest to him now and to the members of the veterans affairs committee that serious consideration be given to the question of amending this act so that veterans in the United States, in the position I have indicated, may receive the benefits of the War Veterans Allowance Act.

The war veterans pension is paid outside Canada. A man may reside in any part of the world and his pension will follow him. I see no reason why this measure should be construed as a social measure. In my opinion it is just as much a service measure, a pension arrangement for the incapacitated veteran as the Pension Act itself.

There is another point I wish to make with regard to permissible earnings under the war veterans allowance arrangement. The veteran now makes $40 a month and of course the $10 a month supplementary is contingent upon a means test. Most of these old soldiers will qualify under that means test, but I think it is wrong to have every recipient of the war veterans allowance in Canada make application for that $10. It should have been automatic, and there should be no means test attached to it. However I leave that to the veterans affairs committee.

I think I am safe in saying that, in 70 per cent of the cases where a man is on war veterans allowance, the permissible earnings of $250 in the case of a single man, and $375 in the case of a married man, do not come into the picture at all. First, in order to qualify for the war veterans allowance you must prove that you are totally unemployable and you must get a medical certificate to that effect. If the doctor certifies that you are totally unemployable and you qualify for the war veterans allowance you are not working and therefore you are not earning an income for the reason that you are not able to do so. You may be able to get a job around Ottawa running an elevator or as a doorman in a hotel, but in most provinces there is not that kind of opportunity open to these men.

For that reason I think I am safe in saying that 70 per cent of the recipients of war veterans allowance are not affected at all by the permissible income and the only income which they have is $30.41 a month. Working it out, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre showed that it was $1,105 and $615, but he is in error because, in the large majority of cases, there is nothing coming in by way of additional income.

In my opinion the demand is reasonable that this should be brought up to $50 a month where a man qualifies as being totally unemployable, worn out and so on, and it should be without a means test. That $50 a month should be applied across the board. Someone may say that is a lot of money, that it costs money. I do not think money should be the determining factor. It was not during the war when there was no difficulty in getting money.

During the war everyone in this house agreed that whatever was physically possible could be made financially possible, and the minister of reconstruction could say, "I am going to build a munitions plant in Quebec. It will cost $25,000,000, but we have the material and the men and here is the money".

[Mr. Gillis.]

Where has all that money gone to? Why quibble about money in a matter of this kind? Every time you put extra money in the hands of a person who is not in a position to contribute to the national income by way of production, every time you put a dollar in his hands he spends it on the essentials of life, and thereby you are creating an internal consuming market which keeps the wheels of industry moving as it supplies that person with those necessities.

For that reason alone, I think we should forget this business about what it will cost the country. I do not think the taxpayers will quibble about it, and I do not think anyone in this house will quarrel if the minister comes and says that he is going to step up the amount to $50 a month without a means test attached to it. If that were done, the old soldier would be happy and he would have some purchasing power. That would stimulate the machinery of production and everybody would be just as happy as the soldier. Why, therefore, quarrel about this business of money? I suggest that we should forget that completely or at least revise our thinking on it to a considerable extent.

There is another problem, namely, that of the veteran and his wife, who by economic circumstances, have been forced to separate. The last time the veterans affairs committee was sitting, I brought to its attention some specific cases. One was that of an old man and his wife receiving war veterans allowance, with married status. The house they were in was sold. They were not in a position to get another one. The father went to live with a daughter and I think the mother went to live with a son; but force of economic circumstances separated them. Immediately that happened, the married status was taken from them. The old lady was left with nothing and the old gentleman's pension was cut down to that of a single man.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Cheese-paring.

Mr. GILLIS: That matter was raised in the veterans affairs committee. At that time I suggested that at least some administrative latitude should be given to the board where there were extenuating circumstances of that kind. Nevertheless, no amendments were made. That injustice still exists and I think it should be removed.

In dealing with the pension commission and with the administration of the war veterans allowance, both provincially and nationally, I have found them to be most sympathetic and reasonable, prepared to do anything they could within the confines of the regulations; but they are tied up by red tape. When I hear people criticizing the pension commission and war veterans allowance administration, I know that such criticism is unjust. I know that it cannot be justified on the basis of my dealings with them. I know they are sitting there wishing and hoping that the members of the House of Commons had the courage of their convictions and would sit in a committee, prepare an act that was fair, reasonable and just and give it to them to administer. I think they would be quite happy to cure some of the ills that exist in the machinery of the pension administration. As for myself, I think it is too hidebound. I think we do not trust the administration. We tie them up with hard and fast rules and regulations and make no provision for judgment.

I believe that in borderline cases such as that of this old lady and gentleman who were separated, through no fault of their own, the chairman of the commission should have administrative latitude to make a decision, and not allow to take place an injustice such as the separating of a man and his wife and the penalizing of them by the loss of a certain amount of their pension.

I said that I did not intend to say very much on this matter, but if I keep on I shall occupy forty minutes. The bill is fair, but it requires a good deal of amending. That cannot be done here; it will be done in committee. I hope the committee will remember the two points I made. The first was with regard to the veteran in the United States who is being discriminated against, in my opinion; and second, with regard to the possibility of separating man and wife because of economic circumstances. I think those two points should be clearly cleaned up in this session of the veterans affairs committee. I also think they should try to give the pension commission and the war veterans allowance board some administrative latitude in borderline cases. Everything cannot be covered. I have some respect for their judgment, and I am quite willing to trust them with many matters that cannot be set down in legislation. I hope the committee will remember that. I intend to watch this bill carefully when it comes back, because I think that is the time when it must get its real analysis.

Mr. J. R. MacNICOL (Davenport): I shall follow, Mr. Speaker, the good example set by previous speakers and shall also be brief. I first wish to make reference to a remark made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I must thank him kindly for his reference to me. I was perhaps the first to bring in the question of the non-pensioned widows' troubles into the house. As time went on, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and many others strongly endorsed the proposal, and in the end the minister sympathetically put through legislation in favour of the non-pensioned widows. When the matter comes before the committee, and it is an excellent one consisting entirely of war veterans, I hope that further consideration will be given to the non-pensioned widows, to start with.

When I was home two days ago I went to see a war veteran's widow. She was an old lady, living up in a back room in the north end of the riding represented by the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Skey). She is quite an old lady, all crippled up with arthritis. I believe she draws $30.41 a month. She has no relations or no one to assist her in any way. The room was cold. I said to myself that it did not seem quite natural that any human being should be asked to exist—and that is all she can do—on $30.41 a month, after having given her husband in the service of the country. That lady is only one out of many.

I went to see a gentleman who is also a war veterans allowance recipient. It is necessary for him to go to the hospital in Toronto every week in order to receive injections of one kind or another. I believe he has anaemia. He can hardly keep body and soul together with what he receives. If it were not for the fact that his wife also draws a pension, as he is married, he would not be able to make ends meet at all. So I hope and trust that the committee—all of whose members are sympathetic men; and the minister also is most sympathetic with regard to veterans affairs—will see to it that some improvement in their situation is given to both the war veterans and the non-pensioned widows, because this consideration applies in the case of both. They are all thirty years older since the first great war ended and they are that much less capable of earning anything. Furthermore, it is out of the question for them to earn anything at the moment because there has been a big drop in the demand for labour; and that trend, I am sorry to say, is increasing daily. Unless they are given some consideration, their situation will be pitiable.

There is another class of war veteran about whom I wish to say just a word, and that is the South African war veteran. When the estimates for the department come in, I shall have a great deal more to say in that regard. I have in mind a South African war veteran who is now sixty-six or sixty-seven years of age and who, when he went to South Africa, was a mere lad. Of course his body could not have been at that time as well nourished as it should have been to stand the onslaught of South African diseases, with the result that all his life he has been more or less handicapped but not enough to be knocked out completely. Of late, however, he has been. I have been doing my best to see that that poor fellow gets a square deal, but I have not yet been able to get it for him, merely because his wife happens to have a small income of a few hundred dollars a year. I do not think it is any of the government's business what income the wife of a war veteran may have, particularly when it is a small one like that. He should be treated as we expected he would be treated when the South African pension bill was brought into the house—and I was one of those who advocated that years ago—and that is on his own merits. It is wholly unfair and un-British, to my mind, to say that a man may not receive a small pension merely because his wife has a few hundred dollars a year coming in. So I hope the committee will also take that class of veteran into consideration when it considers this bill.

In the main I think we Canadians may be fairly proud of what our government has done for the war veterans. I do not hear much complaint from the men who served in the front line, the men who were incapacitated or wounded. It is only these complementary offshoots that appear to be giving us trouble these days. The hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Pearkes) mentioned another class of which my riding has a large number, though perhaps I should not say more than his; in any event mine is one of the ridings in Canada with a very large number of imperial veterans. In my opinion their treatment has always been very unfair, and I endorse what was said by the hon. member. I need not deal further with this point at the moment, because I want to conclude shortly, and the hon. member put the case so well I could not add anything if I tried. However, I should like hon. members to keep in mind that these men and women are now thirty years older than when world war I ended, and it is these for whom I am speaking in particular.

I think perhaps with a reference to one other class I shall conclude. I have in mind the "Overseas firefighters". I believe the chief came from the riding of the Deputy Speaker, but by far the majority of the "Overseas firefighters" came from the city I represent, and I well remember what they were promised by the minister of that day. They seem to have had quite a difficult time trying to get fair play, and I hope the committee will give consideration to this class of veteran also. They took all the chances anyone else took. It is true they did not have to go across the channel, but during the last war it was just about as bad in England as on the continent, because of the bombs.

I shall conclude by saying that I always appreciate the opportunity to say a word for the veterans because, as is well known, the riding of Davenport is almost made up of soldiers and their families. They are patriots; and I hope the government and particularly the minister will listen to the representations which will be made on their behalf to the committee to which this bill is to be sent.

Mr. J. H. FERGUSON (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I have no criticism of the minister or the cabinet, but as a veteran of the first war I wish to say a word on behalf of the veterans. I have in mind an expression which I would direct to the veterans affairs committee and to the minister, in the hope that he will go to the cabinet and have this bill reconsidered. Those words are: "Lest we forget." Many of us do not realize that the soldier has been a terrific factor in building up this great country. In 1812 the habitant said, "By gar, I guess that Yankee is going to take our country," and the Englishman said, "By Jove, that shan't be," and the two of them worked together on the St. Lawrence to defend this country. So today it is possible for us to sit in this House of Commons and discuss what is the fair thing to do for our ex-soldiers.

All of us in the house can think back to when we were boys and we heard of the great deeds performed by our soldiers in the South African war. How proud we were to welcome them back, and how in our hearts we felt an obligation to those men who returned wearing their scarlet coats. I was a little boy in the town of Rat Portage, which is now Kenora. I was really too young to understand what these veterans were, but I knew they were coming home and I was proud to be there to welcome them back. We think back also to August 4, 1914, when some person attempted to twist the lion's tail. Again the oldest cub in the pack stood beside the mother country without hesitation. They doubted whether this country would be able to raise the first division of thirty thousand men, but the number volunteering was greater than the number requested by England or offered by Canada. Soon 31,000 men sailed from the shores of Canada as the first contingent, perfectly equipped and ready to fight, and those men made history. Again in 1939 war was forced upon this country, and again men volunteered to fight for their homes and their freedom.

Today we are in parliament, dealing in a somewhat niggardly fashion with these men; and this is the only place to which these veterans can appeal for fair treatment. Again I remind the government of the words: "Lest we forget." Think of the times during the first great war when our men trudged up to the trenches, with the rain pouring off their steel helmets and the mud soaking their shoes; drenched to the skin, standing in the trenches for three or four days at a time, then going out to wooden huts poorly heated and equipped. Today many of those veterans who returned from that war without a wound find that, on account of the conditions under which they served their country they need aid from this parliament. So I say to the members of the veterans affairs committee, to the minister and to the cabinet: Do not think you are overly generous if you deal honestly and reasonably with these people.

Fortunately I am not myself in need of a pension. Though I did suffer wounds during the first war I have enjoyed good health since; but I speak on behalf of the man who was disabled in the war, or who has suffered some mental defect, or who, because of the conditions under which he fought, now finds it necessary to come and say to his fellow countrymen, "Give me a helping hand." I say to the members of this house, do not look at the men who have preserved this country for us as you would look at anyone or anything else in this country. Lean backward in your attempt to be overly generous to them. No right-thinking man in this country will criticize you; or if such men do, their criticism is not worth considering.

I say, take this bill back; cut out the means test for these veterans; make it unnecessary for any veteran to have to appeal for a $10 increase. Be men about it. This country owes it to them. I owe it to them; you owe it to them. Remember that phrase "Lest we forget." It is so easy to forget what our soldiers have meant to Canada. Because of them it is possible for us to sit here today and listen to the arguments advanced on behalf of these men; but we also have to listen to instances which should never have occurred and should never have to be cited in this house. The veterans affairs department and the dominion government have a duty to perform. I ask them to perform that duty in such a way that in future we shall not have to listen to cases such as we have heard cited during this debate. They are not justifiable; they are unreasonable; they are not fair to the men who have made it possible for us to sit here in peace and safety.

Mr. E. G. HANSELL (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words with respect to this War Veterans Allowance Act, by reason of the fact that I spoke on the Pension Act when it was in the resolution stage and I now find it necessary to augment what I said at that time. It will be recalled that I advocated something I do not believe had been advocated before. I urged that veterans who had seen actual warfare should be paid a pension, regardless of anything else. I also made the suggestion that no member of His Majesty's armed forces who had been in an actual theatre of war should be now compelled to pay taxes, due to the fact that most of our tax money is for the retirement of the war debt. Our men in the forces should not be asked to fight the war and then, upon their return, be asked to help pay for it.

The reason I mention this the second time is that, when I spoke before, the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) followed me in the debate and suggested to the house that what I had urged was not sound. That took place before the Easter recess. Since that time I have received a considerable volume of correspondence, some from individuals and some from veterans organizations, complimenting me upon the stand I took at that time. So I do not believe that what I said was so unsound as the hon. member for Kootenay West would have led the house to believe.

While I do not intend to take up much time in debate because, as I understand it, the bill is to be sent to the veterans affairs committee, I would ask if it is possible to have information as to the basis upon which the present pension rates are arrived at. In other words, why should the full pension be estimated at the sum of $87. Why should it not be $100 or $150? Or, on the other hand, why should it be as high as $87? Why should it not be $50? Just what is the reason for setting it at $87? There must be some basis of calculation; there must be some reason for the amount as it now stands. By what means does the government arrive at that figure? Does it base the figure on the cost of living? Does it estimate that, because the cost of living is related to a certain index, therefore the pension is $87? Is that the way it is done? Or has it arrived at that figure by taking out pencil and paper and estimating that the average income per person in the country is so much, and that therefore the pension should be $87? Is that the way it is estimated? I wonder what the basis of calculation might be; I have not been able to arrive at it.

Mr. JOHNSTON: Perhaps the minister could tell you now.

Mr. HANSELL: I hope, when the minister closes the debate, that he might answer. I suspect it is figured out on the basis of the lowest possible political expediency. I would think the government has estimated that it would not be politically expedient to put it lower than that.

Mr. JOHNSTON: The political expediency of the government is pretty low.

Mr. HANSELL: I plead for better consideration of our war veterans. But I wish to emphasize particularly that part of the bill which has to do with allowances given to veterans who are not pensioned, and to the widows of non-pensioned war veterans.

There are some peculiar anomalies in this whole scheme of war veterans allowances. For instance, let me give an illustration. I have in mind two widows of war veterans who live in the same district and not far from each other. One of these widows, whom we shall call Mrs. X, receives a pension of $60 a month by reason of the fact that her husband was a war pensioner. He did not see an actual theatre of war, and was never sent overseas. For some reason or another he received the pension. It may have been because of a condition of health due to war service. This bill will increase the pension of Mrs. X to $70 a month.

The other widow, whom we shall designate as Mrs. Y, lives not far from the first one. The husband of Mrs. Y was sent overseas, served in an actual theatre of war and returned safe and sound. Eventually he took ill and found himself without income. He applied for assistance under the War Veterans Allowance Act, and received it. He had been in receipt of that assistance for only a few months when he died, leaving his widow penniless. Of course she was then entitled to an allowance. At the present time she receives the full allowance of $30.41.

This widow, Mrs. Y, has a heart ailment and is unable to work and thus augment her war widow's allowance. As I said, these two war widows live in the same district and move in the same social circle, if I might use that terminology as applying to them. I should like to know why one of these women is entitled to a higher standard of living than the other. I cannot understand why the difference exists. I think there is some reason for our asking for reconsideration of this scheme of war veterans allowances for widows of our veterans.

I should like to make a suggestion. Many of these widows in receipt of allowances are under the impression that they are receiving a pension. It is difficult sometimes to explain to them that it is an allowance rather than a pension they are receiving, that they are receiving an allowance because of their financial circumstances. I do not like to say it when I am explaining it to them, but I can say to the minister, and I think he will agree with me, that what these war widows are really receiving under this act is relief. That is what it amounts to.

There is just a slight difference between their case and the old-fashioned dishing out of relief. When we were on relief we had to go down to the city office every Thursday or whatever day or hour might be set and stand in line. We presented our identification cards and were given a slip of paper entitling us to so much groceries from this store, milk from this dairy and our rent.

Mr. GREGG: May I say to the hon. member that I would not consider such a widow as being on relief any more than I would consider a woman who was receiving an old age pension as being on relief.

Mr. MacINNIS: They are both on relief.

Mr. HANSELL: I am glad to hear the minister say that. I am glad to hear him say that he considers there is no difference. I do. The only difference is that the war widow in receipt of a war widow's allowance gets her cheque every month. She does not have to be embarrassed by going down to an office to get it and she can spend it in any way she wishes. I think I am right in that diagnosis.

Another thing in this bill I want to protest about is the means test which is applied to widows receiving this war veterans allowance. I protest against the means test in any event, but I protest especially this second means test. Under this measure, if there is to be an increase in the allowance it is subject to the board, and I take that to mean that there must be a reinvestigation of the widow's circumstances. Surely if her circumstances have been investigated once and she is in receipt of a war widow's allowance, the increase should be automatic.

Some of the previous speakers have deplored the pittance that is given under this bill, and I do the same. In some respects I sympathize with the minister because I know that he would like to make the amount far greater than it is. I know that personally he would like to put the pensions up as far as it is possible to go, and also the war widows' allowances. But I know that he is subject to government policy. I know that in whatever he says under the bill he must protect the policy of the government. There is no getting away from that, and it is the government policy that I am now attacking because the provisions made by this bill are inadequate for these pensioners and especially for war widows who are left penniless.

I am reminded of a gentleman, not a war pensioner, who died not so long ago. He was a millionaire who had been one of the leading restauranteurs in the United States. He made so much money in the restaurant business that he went insane and he died in an insane asylum. He died crying out, "Cut the ham thinner, boys; cut the ham thinner." It appears to me that perhaps the government is on its last legs. This would seem to be so from what it has been responsible for recently. There has been the income tax forms, a reluctance to make any change in freight rates and so on. Surely the government is facing the insane asylum and now, by this bill, is crying out, "Cut the ham thinner, boys; cut the ham thinner".

Mr. JOHNSTON: It is still bologna.

Mr. HANSELL: Maybe it is bologna they are cutting. Maybe they are cutting it so thin that there is nothing left to cut. During the Easter recess I was speaking to a prominent Conservative in my riding, perhaps the only one there.

Mr. BENTLEY: That is why he is prominent.

Mr. HANSELL: That is why he is prominent. He said to me, "Mr. Hansell, I am wondering if the government want to be defeated. Are they not playing their cards in order to be defeated? I am wondering whether they are finding governmental responsibilities in this day and age too much for them and want someone else to take over?" That is the way it looks.

An hon. MEMBER: More bologna.

Mr. HANSELL: That is the way it looks to me. On the other hand, maybe the Conservatives do not want power either. I do not know where we are getting to.

An hon. MEMBER: You cut the ham pretty thin then.

Mr. HANSELL: I do not know who could cut the ham thinner. It could not be cut much thinner than it is.

I have said what I wanted to say. I believe that our veterans, and especially their widows, should be treated as this country can afford to treat them. I do not mean afford by virtue of the amount of taxes the finance minister can squeeze out of the public. I mean what we can afford to give them by reason of our vast wealth, and no one will say that this country is not one of the richest in the world. It is up to the government, therefore, to adjust its policies so as to make that wealth available to the people and especially to war veterans and widows of war veterans who are called upon in these days of high cost of living to live on a mere pittance.

Mr. D. KING HAZEN (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, the suggestion that has just been made by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell) that veterans should not pay taxes is one that I believe will not be well received by a great many veterans in this country. The men who volunteered and went overseas and fought to defend this country and overcome the forces of evil are, I believe, just as anxious to bear their full share of the responsibilities of this country in peace as in war.

Mr. HANSELL: Let them do so voluntarily.

Mr. HAZEN: They believe they should bear their full responsibility and pay their full share as citizens of this country. I believe that the majority of the members of the Canadian Legion, as it is usually referred to, though its full name is the Canadian Legion of the British Empire Service League—and I must say I like that name and am proud of it—want to serve their country as faithfully and loyally in peace as they did in war.

I rise, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of making one suggestion only, and I shall be very brief. I am not a member of the committee to which this bill to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act is to be referred, and my purpose in rising is to ask that committee to amend the bill to provide a veterans allowance for those men who volunteered for service in the Boer war and went to South Africa but did not arrive there until January 1, 1902. It was not their fault that the war came to an end before they engaged the enemy. They volunteered for service and went overseas, as did the men in the second great war who are to be granted this allowance because they went to Great Britain. But, as I understand the act, the men I speak of who went to South Africa and arrived there after January 1, 1902, are not eligible for the veterans allowance. These men are now old, and many of them are not capable of doing the work they formerly did. Some of them are in need of assistance. If this act is to be regarded as a social security measure, as some members who have taken part in the debate have said, every consideration should be given to these men and they should be granted the veterans allowance.

The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Gregg) on the second reading of the bill informed the house that only 592 veterans of the South African war were in receipt of this allowance. If the act were amended to include the men who went to South Africa but did not arrive there before January 1, 1902, the additional number would not be large and their inclusion would involve no great strain on the treasury of this country. So I would ask the committee when the bill comes before it to amend it by providing that men who volunteered for service in the South African war and who went to South Africa but did not arrive there before January 1, 1902, be included among those who are entitled to a veterans allowance.

Mr. J. O. PROBE (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that I am not a member of the veterans affairs committee this year I should like to make one or two suggestions with respect to the bill which is to go to the committee after second reading. I shall not take up much time, probably only ten or fifteen minutes, and perhaps you would now call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

SECOND READINGS

Bill No. 12, for the relief of Florence Joyce West Shannon.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 13, for the relief of Alice Cecilia Anne Magniac Bailey.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 14, for the relief of Valerie Jean Lewis Samson.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 15, for the relief of William Neville Buckingham.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 16, for the relief of Marguerite Elsie Dunan Currie.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 17, for the relief of Ellen Catherine Holder.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 18, for the relief of Doris Amy Peate Taylor.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 19, for the relief of Kenneth Elliott Mitchell.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 20, for the relief of Margaret Craig Carmichael Nicholson.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 21, for the relief of Hilda Emily Brown.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 22, for the relief of Joan Ruth Grimble Campbell.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 23, for the relief of Raymond Masse.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 24, for the relief of Barbara Mary Day Duffy.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 25, for the relief of Joseph Dunn.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 26, for the relief of Rena Victoria Rabin Wolfe.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 27, for the relief of Frederik Smith.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 28, for the relief of William Thomas Wright.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 29, for the relief of Marie Antoinette Aubut dit Cimon Charron.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 30, for the relief of James Arnold Wells.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 31, for the relief of Magdelena Kleiziute Testart.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 32, for the relief of Hazel Shirley Elizabeth Hart Layton.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 33, for the relief of Irene Morgan Neilson.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 34, for the relief of Elerick Montgomery Barton.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 36, for the relief of Adelaide Margaret Munn Bain.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 37, for the relief of Gwendolyn Beulah Russell Denenfeld.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 38, for the relief of Miriam Salomon Starr.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 39, for the relief of Laura Krause Suffrin.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 40, for the relief of Jean Fullarton Craig Walker.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 41, for the relief of William Hesketh.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 42, for the relief of Janet Alice Smith Bennett.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 43, for the relief of Gwendoline Elizabeth Hunt Edmund.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 44, for the relief of Reta Mabel Welch Gilbert.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 45, for the relief of Leah Shrimer Schanker.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 46, for the relief of Doris Mary Stratton Stuart.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 51, for the relief of Hellmut Hans Karl Pokorny.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 52, for the relief of Bella Wine Rapps.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 53, for the relief of Winifred Anthony Leith.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 54, for the relief of Eugene Alden Anderson.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 55, for the relief of Shirley Leighton Pawson Milligan.—Mr. Boucher.

Bill No. 56, for the relief of Mary Josephine Ruth Girard Rosenberg.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 57, for the relief of Leah Marcelle Pettitt Reeve.—Mr. Croll.

Bill No. 58, for the relief of Marie Yvette Francoise Bayard Savard.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 61, for the relief of Simone Boily Whitelaw.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 62, for the relief of Ernest Alfred Coker.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 63, for the relief of Clarence William Henry Hodgson.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 64, for the relief of Vera May Paulson Ward.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 65, for the relief of Ruth Ethel Attwood McVicar.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 66, for the relief of Henry George Halsey.— Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 67, for the relief of George Crosby-Wilson Gray.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 68, for the relief of Joseph David Ernest Paul Maysenhoelder.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 69, for the relief of Myrtle Macdonald Heale Daniluk.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 70, for the relief of Robert Grincill Barnet Jones.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 71, for the relief of Gertrude Katherine Margolis Bird.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 72, for the relief of Cecilia Maud Wood Marshall.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 73, for the relief of Beatrice Doris Haggerty Goodier.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 74, for the relief of Joyce Knowles Ledoux.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 75, for the relief of Robert Ernest Beadie.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 76, for the relief of Grace Davis Park Parr.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 77, for the relief of Jeanne Crete Benoit.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 78, for the relief of Sarah Cummings Menzies Carlin.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 79, for the relief of Annie Goldenberg Schulman.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 80, for the relief of Clarice Jean Field Campbell.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 81, for the relief of Georgina Claire Williscroft Bovard.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 82, for the relief of Saul Jack Costin.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 83, for the relief of Mary Shore Bernstein.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 84, for the relief of Saul Ettinger.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 85, for the relief of Lloyd Arthur Davies.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 86, for the relief of Alfred Keeley.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 87, for the relief of Marie Albina Ethel Dubois Howick.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 88, for the relief of Ignaty (Ignas) Sokolovsky.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 89, for the relief of Laura Grace Hanley Huggenberger.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 90, for the relief of Eva Wolfovitch Zloty, otherwise known as Eva Wolfovitch Gold.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 91, for the relief of Sheila Lightstone Marcus.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 92, for the relief of Lea Alvina Mary Boulay Orr.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 93, for the relief of Armand Lapierre.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 94, for the relief of Georgette Ruth Cote Geller.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 95, for the relief of Mary Elizabeth Ellwood Blackburn.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 96, for the relief of Annie Elizabeth Horseman Charters.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 97, for the relief of Sarah Ann Older Verrier.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 98, for the relief of Anna Martha Kokojachuk Waugh.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 99, for the relief of Elsie Mark Farley.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 100, for the relief of Lela May Begley Hall.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 101, for the relief of Marguerite Isaacs Katz.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 102, for the relief of Delilah May Jacobs Button.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 103, for the relief of Ruth Shkurnik Gilbert.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 104, for the relief of Goldie Tessler Wise.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 105, for the relief of Martha Norman McCairns.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 106, for the relief of Marion Rita Kendall O'Donahoe.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 107, for the relief of Gertrude Mae McLean Cole.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 108, for the relief of Freda Gertrude Parkes McMillan.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 109, for the relief of Alma Petrides Prysky.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 110, for the relief of Jean MacDonald Di Falco.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 111, for the relief of Betty Yossem Edelstein.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 112, for the relief of Leonard Carlton Matthews.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 113, for the relief of St. Kilda McKay McLean Anderson.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 116, for the relief of Nellie Polistuck Levac.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 117, for the relief of Eleen Rose Gray Lawson.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 118, for the relief of Frieda Kimelfild Solomon.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 119, for the relief of Gordon Merrill Fuller.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 120, for the relief of Phyllis Joyce Bradfield Ainsworth.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 121, for the relief of Michael Charles Parr.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 122, for the relief of Edna Birch Drimer.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 123, for the relief of Elinore Oakes Forgues.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 124, for the relief of Mary Gwozdecka Carter.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 125, for the relief of Ralph Woodall.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 127, for the relief of Joseph Onfroy Pilon.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 128, for the relief of Thelma May Heggie May.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 129, for the relief of Molly Renetta Fry Bist.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 130, for the relief of Patricia Potter Parker.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 131, for the relief of Helen May Smith Saunders.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 132, for the relief of Jean Duncan Girard.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 133, for the relief of Evelyn Sylvia Jones Bowen.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 134, for the relief of Joseph Eugene Ernest Bourbonnais.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 139, for the relief of Mildred Frances Batten Gzowski.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 140, for the relief of Irene Nellie Kon Ballantyne.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 141, for the relief of Theophile Gobeille.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 142, for the relief of Violet Mary Cowper Preston.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 143, for the relief of Virginia Grace Borland Langton.—Mr. Boucher.

Bill No. 144, for the relief of Ethelwyn Lillian Flynn Budd.—Mr. Croll.

Bill No. 145, for the relief of Alfred Winston Savage.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 147, for the relief of Diana Eve Whittall Beurling.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 152, for the relief of Rose Landes Clopoff.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 153, for the relief of Micheline Desautels Dooney.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 154, for the relief of William Roydon Slator.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 155, for the relief of Marie Eva Thibodeau Buelow.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 156, for the relief of Margaret Sleno Staines.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 157, for the relief of Jean Hume Munro Auburn.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 158, for the relief of Gilles Henault.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 159, for the relief of Edward Gordon Jakeman.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 160, for the relief of Kathleen McKeown Stevenson.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 161, for the relief of Alice Mary Gallant Currie.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 162, for the relief of Muriel Frances Marks Buchanan.—Mr. Maybank.

[Mr. Maybank.]

Bill No. 163, for the relief of Leona Selma Cutway Hall.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 164, for the relief of Avery Patricia Gill Reinhold.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 165, for the relief of Poppy Catherine Hayakawa Smith.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 166, for the relief of Dolores Margaret Paul Warner.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 167, for the relief of Norma Bernstein Levee.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 168, for the relief of Eileen Sophie McNamara Sepchuk.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 169, for the relief of Mary Rowan Young Conway.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 170, for the relief of Ethel Margaret Tweddell Cartmel.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 174, to incorporate The Canadian Association of Optometrists.—Mr. Cote (Verdun).

Bill No. 175, for the relief of Winifred Audrey Meyer Holton.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 176, for the relief of Chester Adam Hart.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 177, for the relief of Marie Marguerite Cecile Gagnon Lescadres.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 178, for the relief of Samuel Reinhardt Lewis.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 179, for the relief of Ersilia Pace Imonti.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 180, for the relief of Helen Rose Noel Steele.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 181, for the relief of Edith Saltzman Rashkovan.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 182, for the relief of Ida Malfara Romanelli.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 185, for the relief of Francis Clyde Peachey.—Mr. Boucher.

Bill No. 186, for the relief of Harriet Dodd McLachlan Cummings.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 187, for the relief of Phyllis Smith Curtis.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 188, for the relief of Jacqueline Louise Waddington Skinner.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 189, for the relief of George Malouf.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 190, for the relief of Sonja Anna Margaret van der Walde Brown—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 191, for the relief of Richard Edward Welsh.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 192, for the relief of Violet Maude Mitchell.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 193, for the relief of Elsie Williams Lodge.—Mr. Maybank.

Bill No. 194, for the relief of Joseph Albert Aldee Leveillee.—Mr. Maybank.

BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY OF CANADA

The house resumed from Friday, March 19, consideration of the motion of Mr. Rinfret for the second reading of Bill No. 8, respecting the Bell Telephone Company of Canada.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few remarks on this bill, and first of all I should like to refresh the memories of hon. members by referring to the explanatory note. The purpose of this bill is to obtain authority to increase the capital stock of the company from $150 million to $500 million. The company's present authorized capital stock is $150 million. There remains yet unissued $13,336,700 of authorized capital stock. So far there has been no adequate explanation of this tremendous increase in capital stock.

At this point I think I ought to express my personal appreciation of the efforts of the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Church), the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol) and other hon. members who have taken part in this debate.

Mr. KNOWLES: Good public ownership members.

Mr. IRVINE: Yes. I congratulate them on the good service which I believe they have rendered to this house and to the country by taking the attitude they have toward this legislation.

I recall that in 1928 this company appeared before parliament for an increase in its capital by $75,000,000, and at that time there was as keen opposition as there is on this occasion to permitting the company to increase its stock to the extent then proposed, the only difference being that at that time there was more strenuous opposition to the manner in which the company had been accustomed to issue its stock.

At that time there were charges that the company had issued its stock to its friends, to members of the company. It issued new stock at par to the members of the company, while the value of the stock was as high as $193. I was looking up the old records here in the 1928 Hansard, at page 3084, and I find a quotation from the Toronto Globe of that time of a statement made by a Mr. Reid, who was counsel for the province of Ontario before the railway commission when the matter of telephone rates was up for discussion. Speaking of the Bell Telephone Company at that time, that gentleman made this statement:

> The history of its stock issues shows that the company has been making a regular practice of issuing stock to it shareholders at par of $100 per share when it was listed and selling on the exchanges at market prices, forty per cent, fifty per cent, sixty per cent, seventy-five per cent, and in the instance in the year 1899 at ninety-three per cent higher than its par value, and in each of such cases the shareholders were given a bonus of $40, $47, $50, $60, $75 and $93 per share, in addition to the regular dividend of eight per cent.

That was a very fair melon, if you like to call it that, and I imagine that the taste is still keen for that kind of fruit. It is just possible that with $500 million capitalization there would be afforded an opportunity for carloads of such melons to be brought in.

An hon. MEMBER: Don't you like melons?

Mr. IRVINE: I do not like melons, if my hon. friend wants to know. As a matter of fact I usually get lemons, and my hon. friend is probably in the same boat. However, this telephone business is one of those services which I think most people will agree should be under public ownership. The telephone system should be run, if any service is run, for the purpose of giving the utmost service to the community at large and not for any profit whatsoever. It should be run at cost, at the cost of maintaining the service. I know of no other way by which proper services can be given to all the people impartially.

A private company running a telephone system for the profits which it can make from the enterprise will invariably centre its services in the larger communities and sometimes neglect entirely the sparsely settled communities. In this bill there is absolutely no provision for any extension of service to be rendered to the public. No assurance is given in the bill anywhere that under certain conditions the company will be obligated to give service to the community, and until such assurance is absolutely guaranteed I certainly think we would be remiss in our duty if we passed this measure.

The last time the bill was before the house some hon. member—I am not sure who it was but I believe it was the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe)—suggested that the more people there were on a telephone line, the more expensive it was. That, of course, is not true. It is true, I think, that the more people there are on the telephone system, the better the service or at least the greater service one gets for the money paid for the telephone because he is put in touch with a greater number of people. But I think the minister would not hold that, if half the people of Ottawa had their telephones cut off tomorrow, the other half would get their telephones much cheaper because of that. Yet that would be the logic of the point of view which was then expressed.

Mr. RINFRET: It depends on the number of lines.

Mr. IRVINE: I am opposed to this bill and I am opposed to the increase in capitalization, first, because I am opposed to giving a monopoly of a public service of this kind to any company whatsoever. No private company is good enough to be trusted with a monopoly of a public service. So from that point of view I wish to register my objection. It is not only the fact that this company has the monopoly of the telephone business in eastern Canada, but through its subsidiary, the Northern Electric Company, it has also practically the control of all supplies necessary for the telephone systems throughout the country. If I remember rightly, the point was brought out in discussion in 1928 that this Bell Telephone Company would buy its supplies from itself at enormous prices, and thus make profits through its own subsidiary in a manner which could not have happened had there been any competition at all in supplying the requirements of the company. In other words, it could over-charge itself through its own subsidiary, and the public paid the difference in charges made for services.

As I say, there has been no explanation of this over-capitalization of $500,000,000, and no satisfactory explanation has been offered to the house as to why this should be asked for or why it should be granted. This, however, we can say. The public, in the last analysis, must pay for all capitalization; and particularly will it be required to pay for over-capitalization. So I would remind the sponsor of this bill that I for one wish to have a more complete explanation of why this increase in capital is being asked for, and I also want—

Mr. RINFRET: Let it go to the committee, then.

Mr. IRVINE: —to know how the stock is to be issued. My hon. friend says to let it go to the committee. By that he means, let us first get the endorsement of the house to something that we do not like; then when we get to the committee we shall be told that the principle of the bill has already been passed, and to take it and like it.

Mr. RINFRET: That is not so with regard to private bills.

Mr. IRVINE: That is the way things go. I do not propose just to let things go to a committee without offering my objection beforehand, so that I may be sure that I have had an opportunity of making that objection. Perhaps the most objectionable feature of the bill is the stock-splitting proposal, and that will be found in the third section of the bill.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. IRVINE: I appreciate, Mr. Speaker, that I am not supposed to quote from the bill.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I would ask the hon. member to confine his remarks to the general principle of the bill. The section of the bill may be dealt with when we reach the committee stage.

Mr. IRVINE: I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for having prevented me from quoting; but it happens that the principle of the bill includes the splitting of stock. Since that is so, without referring to the particular clause or without quoting it, I surely will be permitted to discuss the principle of stock splitting, and that is included in the bill. I want to object to that very much indeed.

In the first place, this is a method adopted presumably with the design of obscuring the actual return that is paid on capital. I do not say that it will be used for the purpose, for instance, of cheating the collector of taxes, because that would be a difficult thing to do. But it could be used to fool the public. Since this is a public service, and since the public will have to be charged increased rates whenever the profits of the company require that rates be raised, instead of saying, "We received 10 per cent last year," it is a convenient thing to be able to say, "We received 2½ per cent." When you have split your stock into four, 10 per cent on the original stock becomes 2½ per cent. That sounds so much better in a public report that the public would not mind having the rates raised if only 2½ per cent were made; whereas all the time 10 per cent and maybe, for all I know, 20 per cent has been made.

Mr. RINFRET: Not 10 per cent.

Mr. IRVINE: I do not like that hypocritical way of doing the thing. I think this company should be required to face up—

Mr. FERGUSON: May I ask a question of the hon. member? Does he really believe that the interest yield of 10 per cent on an investment is changed to 2½ per cent on the investment because a man has more shares of stocks? That is what he said. Does he believe what he said?

Mr. RINFRET: In dollars; not in percentage.

Mr. IRVINE: I think my hon. friend is getting warm, as we say in the old game.

Mr. FERGUSON: "Exasperated" is the word.

Mr. IRVINE: It is quite true that it does not alter the actual profits that might be made.

Mr. FERGUSON: Why does the hon. member not say what he means?

Mr. IRVINE: But it alters the report of that profit. That is the thing I am trying to get at.

Mr. FERGUSON: It does not alter the profits at all.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. IRVINE: My hon. friend may take the floor, or whatever you want to call it, and say all he wants to say when I am through. I am expressing what appears to me to be the situation, or a possible situation to be brought about by the splitting of stock. If it cannot be so, and my hon. friend can show that, I shall be glad to learn it. But I am not the only one who takes that view. I can show my hon. friend, or quote to my hon. friend the words of men of financial repute in this city and in the employ of this government, which would support the point I am making there, and show that they say exactly the same thing about it that I have just said.

The next objection to the splitting of the stock is that usually those who buy later on are at a disadvantage, for this reason. Of course the excuse is always, "Oh, we split the stock because we want the dear public all to come in."

Mr. CASTLEDEN: The widows and orphans.

Mr. IRVINE: Yes. It is easier for them to buy a $25 share than a $100 share; so it is said, "It is in the interests of the dear people that we are splitting our stock". I know that is the excuse, but this is what usually follows. When stock is split in this fashion there is usually a quickening of the market, a stimulation, so the stock goes up. The original $100 share may be split into four $25 shares, and each of those shares may go from $25 to $30.

Mr. MANROSS: Time to sell.

Mr. IRVINE: Well, if it goes up to $30 it has greatly benefited the original stockholders. But then they begin to unload on, shall I say, the suckers; is that a parliamentary word? That is where they unload it; the dear people become suckers and pay the extra stock values that their own competition to get in on the cheap stock has created. That is the usual practice in a stock-splitting proposition of this kind. The $25 share may go up to $30. It may go twice as high, but let us say it goes to $30. This increases the original value from $100 to $120, which is a very considerable increase for those who have the privilege of holding the original stock. As I say, the newcomers take the loss; the original shareholders make the gain, and in the last analysis I presume the public pays.

The next principle in this bill to which I object is that which gives this company the right to deal in or control wireless and radio and all the newest devices, appliances and principles which may be developed in these matters. I cannot quote this, but it is stated in the bill that this is a clarification of powers the company has always had. If the company has always had them, what is the need of clarification? But if the company did not always have them the clarification, so called, will see that it gets them from now on. So I am opposed to that provision in this bill. Surely this house is of the opinion by now that wireless, radio, television and so on should not be entrusted to any private corporation. No private company, I repeat, should be given power to handle a public service such as radio communication, television and so on.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this bill. My hon. friend may think I am going to try to talk out the bill. I am not. I am going to conclude my remarks right now, because I want every measure to have an opportunity to be voted upon in this house. I do not believe it would be democratic for me or anyone else to occupy all the time available to this or any other bill in order to prevent it from coming to a vote in the house. I have, however, taken this opportunity to register my protest, and if others feel like it I hope that they will do the same; that ultimately this legislation will come to a vote, and that the house will vote it down.

Mr. RONALD MOORE (Churchill): Since the introduction of this bill I have become very much interested in the action that probably will be taken should it pass the house. I have discovered that the Bell Telephone monopoly is one of the largest monopolies in existence anywhere in the world; and I think it would pay all hon. members to read one of the books in our parliamentary library which deals with this Bell monopoly. It is entitled: "The American Telegraph and Telephone Company; the Story of a Great Monopoly", by Horace Coon, and was written in 1939. It is absolutely amazing the number of companies controlled by the American Telegraph and Telephone Company, and I should like to give a list of at least some of these corporations. At page 155 of this book I find that these associated companies are controlled by the Bell system in the United States—

Mr. MANROSS: What about Canada?

Mr. MOORE: The system in Canada is controlled by the same company in the United States, and they also control the English telephone system. Take the New England Telegraph and Telephone Company; 66·31 per cent of its stock is controlled by the company I have mentioned.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. If I understand the hon. member correctly he is about to quote a number of companies who are affiliated with the Bell Telephone Company of the United States?

Mr. MOORE: Yes.

Mr. SPEAKER: The bill before the house is not concerned with the Bell Telephone Company of the United States; it has to do with the Bell Telephone Company of Canada.

Mr. MOORE: I agree entirely, Mr. Speaker, but I think it can be easily seen by all hon. members that since the Bell system in Canada is only a part of the American system it is relevant to point out that this is one great world monopoly in the field of telephone communication.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon. member knows perfectly well that on second reading the debate should be confined to the principle of the bill which is before the house. The bill under consideration just now is with respect to the Bell Telephone Company of Canada. So I would ask the hon. member who has the floor and other hon. members to confine their remarks to the merits of the bill before the house.

Mr. MacINNIS: If I may comment on the point of order, this bill asks for the extension of the capital of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada, and surely anything bearing upon that has to do with the principle of the bill. You cannot discuss the principle of the bill without associating it with something else. So I should say the remarks of the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Moore) are quite in order and that it has always been in order to discuss a matter of this kind.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am sorry, but I do not agree with the hon. gentleman. It is clear that the bill before the house has to do with the Bell Telephone Company of Canada, so the hon. member should confine his remarks to that company.

Mr. MOORE: Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not entirely agree that these other matters should not be considered in connection with the Canadian system. However, since it is the ruling of the Chair that what I have been saying is out of order with respect to this bill I shall confine my remarks to the Bell system in Canada. At the start I want to say that I am not in any way attacking the Bell system for its labour relations or any matters of that kind. I believe we have to concede right at the beginning that the Bell Telephone Company of Canada is one of the best private companies in this country for which any individual could wish to work. But the principle behind this bill is not in the interest of the public of Canada. And I venture to say that, instead of this house passing the legislation, we ought to look to the time when we in Canada shall be able to control our telephone system. Already we control it in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and some of the other western provinces. The reason we control it there is that at the time telephone lines were built in western Canada it was not profitable to go into that business. I believe that, particularly in Manitoba, it began as private enterprise but, to use a common term, it fell through, and the government had to take it over.

Mr. RINFRET: That is not true.

Mr. MOORE: The government took it over anyway.

Mr. RINFRET: It took it over, but it was not broke.

Mr. MOORE: It was very nearly.

Mr. IRVINE: Badly cracked.

Mr. MOORE: The same position as the five privately owned railroads.

Mr. RINFRET: Not at all.

Mr. MOORE: Otherwise private enterprise would not have allowed it to be taken over. The only reason we have this great monopoly today is that it was profitable at that time to go into that business.

There was only one other point I wished to make this evening in connection with this telephone system. There is great danger that if we continue the private ownership of telephone systems in Ontario and Quebec they will in time control radio broadcasting as well. Here again we find a similarity with the position in the United States. At page 205 of this informative book it states:

> The Bell system has a stranglehold on the radio industry at one of that industry's most strategic and vulnerable points, for it has a virtual monopoly in furnishing the wire facilities to broadcasting stations. Chain or network broadcasting cannot be made in the United States without the use of Bell system wires.

I submit that if we continue to allow the private ownership of telephones to expand in Canada we may get in this respect a similar situation in connection with radio to that now existing in the United States. I intend to vote against this measure.

Mr. STANLEY KNOWLES (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): When do we get this vote?

Mr. KNOWLES: The hon. member asks when we shall vote. If I have anything to say about the matter, we shall vote in a very few minutes.

Mr. MacINNIS: We will let you help your friends in a minute.

Mr. KNOWLES: We of this group have made clear our position on the bill. We are not alone; we have had the excellent support of my good friend the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Church) and my good friend the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol), as well as the support of a few other public ownership members of the Tory party.

The basic reason for our objection to the bill is that we see in it the strengthening of a private monopoly in connection with a public service. Like my two good friends in the front row of the Tory party, here—

Mr. JACKMAN: Oh, talk for yourself.

Mr. KNOWLES: Take all the time you want. We feel that a public service of this kind should be a public monopoly and that we should move in that direction rather than in the direction of strengthening a private monopoly. In addition to that fundamental objection to the bill, we feel that even those in the house who do not support public ownership still have a responsibility to the people of Canada, whom they represent to consider a bill like this most carefully before it is passed. In the main—

Mr. RINFRET: Let it go to the committee.

Mr. KNOWLES: If my hon. friend will contain himself for a moment I shall make a suggestion which will be helpful.

Mr. MITCHELL: We are talking.

Mr. KNOWLES: Now, where was I, before the Minister of Labour's voice distracted my attention?

Mr. JACKMAN: You were against giving greater monopoly to private enterprise. That is the one point, sum and substance of all your speeches.

Mr. KNOWLES: Well, I am delighted to learn we have been able to make our point sufficiently clear that the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Jackman) understands it. That is a feather in the cap of the C.C.F.

Mr. JACKMAN: Don't be so ungentlemanly as to be boring.

Mr. KNOWLES: I was endeavouring to point out that even private ownership members in the house should look several times before they approve the principle of a bill which contains two particularly offensive features. One of those features is what we regard as a tremendous increase in the authorized capitalization; the other feature we regard as offensive is the one to which my colleague from Cariboo (Mr. Irvine) referred, namely the giving of retroactive rights in the field of radio, television and other things mentioned in the bill.

I feel there are members in the house who do not go along with us so far as our public ownership views are concerned, but who nevertheless consider that to grant this sort of extension of privilege to private interests is not good for private enterprise itself. It is just this sort of thing, as some private enterprise supporters realize, that brings private enterprise into disrepute.

For these reasons it seems to me that the discussion of the proposed legislation in committee, which the hon. member sponsoring the bill is so anxious to have, should take place before approval is given to the principle of the bill. The hon. member for Cariboo has already answered one interjection on that point by indicating what usually happens. Once second reading has been voted, we are told that from then on the house has approved the bill in principle, and that there is nothing left to do but to talk about minor details and, in the end, the bill becomes law.

So, as a generous gesture to the hon. member for Outremont (Mr. Rinfret) who wishes to get this matter to committee, and so as to facilitate the taking of the vote other hon. members have asked for, I move in amendment seconded by my deskmate, the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Nicholson):

That Bill No. 8, letter C of the senate, be not now read a second time, but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion? Those in favour of the motion will say "yea".

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yea.

Mr. SPEAKER: Those opposed will say "Nay".

Some hon. MEMBERS: Nay.

Mr. SPEAKER: In my opinion the "nays" have it.

Mr. KNOWLES: You wanted a vote.

Mr. JACKMAN: We asked for bread and he gave us a stone.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Knowles) which was negatived on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Archibald	McCullough (Assiniboia)
Bentley	MacInnis
Blackmore	McKay
Bowerman	McMaster
Bryce	MacNicol
Burton	Matthews (Kootenay East)
Campbell	Moore
Castleden	Nicholson
Church	Probe
Fair	Quelch
Hansell	Shaw
Hlynka	Thatcher
Irvine	Townley-Smith
Jaenicke	Wright
Johnston	Wylie
Knight	Zaplitny—34.
Knowles
McCuaig

NAYS

Messrs:

Arsenault	Gibson (Comox-Alberni)
Baker	Gingues
Barrett	Gladstone
Beaudoin	Golding
Beaudry	Gour (Russell)
Belzile	Gourd (Chapleau)
Bertrand (Prescott)	Grant
Black (Cumberland)	Gregg
Blanchette	Harkness
Boucher	Harris (Danforth)
Bourget	Harris (Grey-Bruce)
Bradette	Hazen
Bradshaw	Howe
Brooks	Ilsley
Brown	Isnor
Cardiff	Jackman
Case	Jutras
Casselman	Kirk
Charlton	Lafontaine
Cloutier	Langlois
Coté (St. Johns-Iberville-Napierville)	Lapointe
Coté (Verdun)	Laurendeau
Dechene	Leger
Denis	Lennard
Diefenbaker	Little
Dion (Lake St. John-Roberval)	McCann
Dionne (Beauce)	McCulloch (Pictou)
Douglas	Macdonald (Brantford City)
Emmerson	McGarry
Ferguson	McGregor
Fleming	McIvor
Fournier (Hull)	MacKinnon
Gardiner	MacLean
Gauthier (Nipissing)	McLure
Gauthier (Portneuf)	MacNaught
Manross	Robinson (Simcoe East)
Marier	Ross (St. Paul's)
Matthews (Brandon)	Rowe
Maybank	St. Laurent
Mayhew	Sinclair
Menary	Skey
Mitchell	Smith (Calgary West)
Mutch	Stephenson
Nixon	Timmins
Parent	Tremblay
Pearkes	Tustin
Pouliot	Warren
Richard (Ottawa East)	Weir
Rinfret	Winkler
	Winters—99.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. G. H. CASTLEDEN (Yorkton): Mr. Speaker, it was our hope that this bill would have been allowed to go to a committee where all the relevant facts in regard to the company could have been brought out; but, since this is not to be done, it is not my intention to see the vote taken on the second reading until we know more about the principle of the measure.

An hon. MEMBER: How are you going to find out?

Mr. CASTLEDEN: If the bill had been sent to a committee we could have got the facts with regard to this application and the need for this increased capitalization.

First, let me say that if the bill related only to telephone service we might have let it pass, but it seeks to raise the authorized capital stock of the company from $150,000,000 to $500,000,000, which would make the company of such magnitude that it would affect the living and well-being of a great many Canadian people. This company has extended its service in the eastern part of Canada to the point where today it is practically a monopoly. Were that the only thing implied by this bill, it would not be too bad, but obviously we are on the eve of great developments in the field of communication.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hour for private bills having expired, the house will now revert to the business before it at six o'clock.

WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCES

PROVISION FOR NEGLECTED OR DEPENDENT CHILDREN, INCREASED PERMISSIBLE INCOMES, ETC.

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Gregg for the second reading of Bill No. 196, to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act, 1946.

Mr. PROBE: Mr. Speaker, before the dinner hour the members of the house were expressing their views on the principle of the amendments to Bill No. 196, to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act. As I said when I rose to my feet at six o'clock, since I am not privileged to act on the veterans affairs committee this year, I should like to mention a number of deficiencies in the bill for consideration by the committee.

First of all, I share the feeling expressed by other hon. members that the amounts allowed to those veterans who are unfortunate enough to require the benefits of the War Veterans Allowance Act are insufficient under present circumstances. The bill as it stands gives a maximum contribution from government sources, to the participants of the benefits of the legislation, of $40 a month for single persons or $70 a month for married persons, and there are permitted certain additional small incomes from other sources. The over-all effect is, of course, unchanged from the previous years. The total permissible income in the case of single veterans is $615 a year, and in the case of married veterans, $1,105 a year.

In view of the increase in the cost of living in the last couple of years particularly, in which we have had a rise in two years of 30 points, the minister might well have considered a bonus, perhaps on a sliding scale, in addition to whatever his government felt was a proper base income—a sliding scale bonus which would go up and down on the basis of the rise or fall in the cost of living, from a certain well defined yardstick, whether it be the scale of 1939 or the scale applying at the end of hostilities. A base period might well have been considered for which the allowance as it is now written into the proposed act might apply, with supplements that would vary periodically with the rise and fall in the cost of living.

There is one further deficiency that I see. I feel that the minister might have considered at the same time including in this war veterans allowance legislation the right of the veteran to receive certain specified medical treatment and hospitalization. That might be included to supplement further the benefits which the veteran might receive from the legislation, because, in the case of the married veteran receiving somewhat better than $2 a day, if from that sum there must be subtracted the cost of unforeseen accident or illness, with hospitalization and the medical bills that would ensue, he is worse off than the destitute, after all is said and done.

When the minister gave his statement yesterday he informed the house that there were under 31,000 recipients of benefits from the act—30,949, if his figures are correct, and I will question one phase of that in a moment—with a total cost to the Canadian nation of just under $15,000,000 as of the year 1947—$14,952,000 odd.

I think there may be one error in this statement and I should like the minister to make a note of it and to explain the figures as he has them. For example, under the heading "orphans, all wars", he told the house that there were fifty-three recipients of benefits and that the total liability on an annual basis was $25,596. That amounts to nearly $500 per orphan on an annual basis. The minister will concede that, according to the War Veterans Allowance Act, 1946, which is not amended in this particular under part II of the act, under clause 8, subsection 3, the maximum allowance payable in any year to or on behalf of orphan or orphans shall be $360 in the case of one child, and so on, and there is a sliding scale downwards. So that I think the minister should give some explanation with respect to that figure on the basis of $360 per orphan. The liability for fifty-three orphans would be something in the neighbourhood of $19,000 instead of $25,000. Unquestionably, therefore, there is an error either in the amount or in the number of recipients. Perhaps the fifty-three refers to fifty-three families of recipients. I trust the minister will give an explanation in that regard.

Another point which I think the minister should consider is with respect to the present amount payable under the War Veterans Allowance Act. This corresponds so nearly to the amounts that are payable by way of old age pensions in certain provinces, when the dominion does in fact pay the maximum, that it may under certain circumstances be desirable for the recipient of the war veterans allowance to refuse to accept the allowance and to accept the old age pension of the province.

I know it is not the wish of the Department of Veterans Affairs to increase the fiscal burden of the various provinces by having them assume the cost of the payment of allowances in respect of veterans; but under part IV of the War Veterans Allowance Act, which is not amended by the bill before the house, a recipient of the war veterans allowance cannot accept the old age pension of a province while at the same time accepting the war veterans allowance.

There is another matter I would ask the minister to consider. I believe he can do this with great credit to the department, and it would not cover a large number of cases. According to the present War Veterans Allowance Act, veterans' widows are eligible for pension only when they have attained the age of fifty-five, and then, of course, only under certain circumstances. Widows under fifty-five years of age are not eligible according to the act, unless permanently unemployable by reason of physical or mental disability. That is the way the act reads.

There are widows in their forties, with children, who are neither physically nor mentally disabled, but because the children are too young, the mothers cannot leave them to find employment. Such widows are unable to qualify for the allowance under this act as it now reads. I am sure the number involved throughout Canada would not be excessive, and in view of the fact that the total cost of the act is not to be stepped up immeasurably as a result of the amendment the minister has brought in—it was under $15,000,000 as of December last—this will not create an additional burden on the dominion treasury, while it will help to rectify a situation which I feel the minister himself and the treasury benches would not wish to see perpetuated.

There is one final consideration, Mr. Speaker, and that is that there is no special provision for children unless they are orphans; that is, unless father and mother are both deceased. There are innumerable cases across this country where the recipient of that allowance has more than one or two children. In fact, it is one of the paradoxes of life, almost, that the more necessitous the circumstances of many people, the larger the family with which they are blessed. For our unfortunate veterans who must apply for war veterans allowance it seems to me that a case could be made out comparable with that for families of pensioners where consideration is paid to the size of the family.

I say, first of all, that I feel the minister has allowed the treasury board to be niggardly in the amount which it is allotting for war veterans allowances generally under present conditions. Because of the similarity in amount of provincial old age pensions and war veterans allowance, I feel there is a danger that there will be a temptation for the veteran in certain provinces to apply for the old age pension—when he reaches the age of seventy, of course—rather than to use the financial resources of the Department of Veterans Affairs for his support. I think the minister should see to it that no injustice is done to the province, and that special provision should be made for widows under the age of fifty-five who have children. In the case of large families, or families with more than one child, I think some supplementary allowance should be paid to the children of such veterans.

Mr. W. G. CASE (Grey North): I wish to add a word at this time, Mr. Speaker, because I believe there should be evidence of a desire on the part of members generally to encourage the committee to give more generous consideration to the provisions outlined in this bill. This is a measure introduced by a newcomer to the department, the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Gregg). I think the attitude we take here could encourage him and could strengthen his hand in his appeals to the government to provide more generous treatment for the War Veterans Allowance Act.

I suggest that we cannot afford to be niggardly with these veterans or the veterans' dependents. As a matter of fact we can afford to be generous, when one appreciates the resources of this great nation and the wealth which we possess. I would ask hon. members to recall, if they will, the fact that these veterans played their full part in preserving our way of life, in guaranteeing to us the security which we enjoy today. If we let our minds go back to those trying times when the bands were playing and the soldiers were marching forth to battle, it will be brought home to us that it is a sad commentary that the soldier is the man of the day and the man of the hour, but he is all too soon forgotten.

While these veterans were away, many men who remained at home had an opportunity to augment or to build up their resources. That opportunity was denied to the veteran who was serving overseas. Those years were lost years in the ordinary course of civilian life. The veteran suffered that handicap, if no other. I agree with my hon. friend who spoke this afternoon when he said that the veterans are not seeking any preferred treatment in their status as citizens of this country. They are willing to carry their full share of the load. But I feel that they are entitled to a just and proper reward for meritorious service in the defence of their country, that their widows should have consideration, and that their children particularly should have an opportunity of receiving an education comparable with that received by children of others who have been more fortunate and have been able to provide this opportunity for them.

Unfortunately, the world is a long way from being at peace. Already we hear notes of discord and the distant rumble of warfare. As a matter of fact there are those who will say that we are now at war—a cold war. We may again find it necessary to call upon the manhood of this nation to make a similar sacrifice. It is only fair that those who are prepared to make that contribution should have the absolute assurance that there will be, in reality, a sense of economic security for them. In other words, while we hesitate to glorify war, the present signs indicate that soldiering has become a profession; and it will remain so as long as the world is in this state of anxiety and as long as this discord and lack of understanding prevail throughout the world. So I submit that our future security and our future ability to encourage another generation, or even this generation, of young men to take up arms, may depend upon the attitude we express in our parliament today.

I consider it most important that the committee on veterans affairs, to whom this bill will be referred, should be encouraged to believe that there is a large degree of unanimity in this house in regard to our desire to see that the veteran and his family receive far more generous treatment than they have received in the past. I can think of young men, now growing older, who, through a sense of loyalty and a sense of devotion, went forth to battle and played a tremendous part, who have since returned to our midst and whose health has been of an indifferent character all these years. They have not had the robust physique which has been enjoyed by some of their more fortunate fellow citizens; thus they have been under a handicap all these years. Now, as the shades of evening come closer, they are met with a degree of adversity, a lack of security; and I certainly feel that a burnt-out veteran and his family should not be subjected to the means test. With our wealth and resources we should indicate to these veterans that the nation is solidly behind them in peace just as we idolized them in war, when our very existence depended upon their bravery and courage.

So I would respectfully submit that the veterans affairs committee should take note of the temper of the speakers who have participated in this debate. They have endeavoured to interpret the attitude of thousands of Canadian people, and to show that the country is prepared to deal generously with her veterans. I believe the minister, who is directly responsible to the veterans, to this house and to the government, should pay heed to the remarks which have been made, because I have not heard one hon. member say this was enough. Everyone has urged more generous treatment. Everyone has intimated that he feels we are being altogether too niggardly. With that expression of opinion, surely the minister can approach his cabinet colleagues determined to secure their support for more adequate treatment of our veterans. With that leadership on the part of the minister and the members of the veterans affairs committee, I sincerely hope that more generous treatment will be given those to whom we owe so much, particularly with respect to economic security for themselves and their families.

Mr. RONALD MOORE (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to speak at any length this evening on this measure because as a member of the veterans affairs committee I shall have an opportunity later to bring up most of the points with which I wish to deal. Since that committee was set up, however, most hon. members of this house as well as the members of that committee have received many letters from veterans and veterans' organizations protesting against the treatment being given the veterans under the various acts. The measure now before the house, the War Veterans Allowance Act, is one of those measures which we think do not meet the requirements of the veterans. I believe every hon. member will agree that a single veteran in receipt of $365 a year, or $30.41 a month, does not receive enough to maintain anything like a Canadian standard of living. It is true, of course, that he is allowed other income up to a total of $615 a year; nevertheless even that is not sufficient to maintain a Canadian standard of living.

The main objection most veterans' organizations have with respect to the government's legislation is that it is not sufficiently generous toward the veterans, and I can wholeheartedly agree with that contention. For example, I do not see why a single veteran should not receive at least $50 and a married man at least $100 a month. I know there are people who argue that such expenditures on behalf of our veterans would take a great deal of money from the treasury. No doubt that is true; but it is also true that the income of this country is higher than ever before in our history. So while the government have this money I think they ought to place legislation on the statute books which will give our veterans a reasonable standard of living.

Then I should like to say a word in support of the veterans of the South African war. I believe this legislation should apply to them as well. There are other things I shall deal with when this matter comes before the veterans affairs committee, but I want to repeat that veterans across this country are not satisfied with the legislation which has been brought down. They feel it is not sufficiently generous, and I think they are right. I do not believe they can maintain anything like a reasonable standard of living on the amounts they receive under the War Veterans Allowance Act.

Mr. D. G. ROSS (St. Paul's): This may be my only chance to say something in connection with this matter, since I am not on the committee. I shall not detain the house for long, but I felt it my duty to make a few remarks. I am glad the minister has seen fit to bring down this bill. It is long overdue, but it has been a great disappointment to me, as I am sure it has been to others. In introducing the bill, the minister said, as reported at page 2788 of Hansard:

> The terms of this bill will, I anticipate, receive careful study by the special committee on veterans affairs.

I hope it does receive careful study, so much so that when the bill is brought back to the house hon. members may have difficulty in recognizing it. Then the minister went on:

> In the main, Mr. Speaker, this bill is a further important step toward giving the old soldier who fought for his country the assurance that in his old age his country will provide him with some defence against poverty.

I do not think the amounts provided under this bill, a maximum of $40 for a single man and $70 for a married man, even with the amounts they are permitted to earn in addition, will give these veterans much protection against poverty. We must remember that the $20 the old soldier got back in 1930 was worth about $50 in terms of today's values, so that not very much is being given at the present time. I suggest that the minimum should be $50. It is within the discretion of the board to allow $50 in case of need for a single man, and up to $100 in case of need for a married man, but I say these men should be given a chance to earn a much larger total. I believe that total should be $750 for a single man and $1,200 for a married man; that would be a little more reasonable.

I do not intend to name the various groups who should receive assistance under this bill. The veterans of the South African war have already been mentioned several times. I would put in a word, however, for the non-pensioned widows, some of whom are finding it very difficult to get along today. They are not as young as they used to be; they have done a good job, and they deserve some assistance. Then there are the imperials and others who have been supported so strongly by many hon. members, more especially by the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Pearkes) and the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Brooks).

In conclusion, let me say that these old soldiers and the widows of old soldiers either deserve adequate treatment, or do not deserve anything. Surely they deserve that adequate treatment, because the minister has said so. But I do not think we should be so niggardly. What we should do is to give them what would be a defence against poverty in their old age, and we ought not to be content just to give them partial aid. After all, when they reach the age some of these men have reached $40 a month is not very much, particularly when they cannot earn anything for themselves. It is poverty.

I hope that when the bill returns from committee it will be an entirely different looking product from what it is now.

Mr. L. E. CARDIFF (Huron North): Mr. Speaker, we are going to find that a great number of veterans will be disappointed in the bill unless, while in committee, it is revised so as to give those in distress much more consideration than the bill in its present form affords. I am not a member of the committee, and for that reason I should like to speak briefly this evening.

Let me say at the outset that I concur heartily with the appeal made so eloquently by the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Pearkes), who spoke more effectively than I could ever hope to do. I agree with everything he said. This evening I have in mind one particular case, and I should like to bring to the attention of the house one point which I believe has not been discussed by any other member. I do not wish to repeat figures which have already been given. However I would refer to a soldier who came back from the war several years ago. This man was discharged in 1934 as having a heart condition. Dependent upon him were a wife and four children. He was discharged from the army with a ten per cent pension, was unable to do anything and indeed was confined to his bed. Because of his heart condition he was told not to exert himself in any way. After appealing for a reboard, he went back to the hospital for observation.

This man was let out a second time, again with a ten per cent pension. That was in March, 1944, and I did not know anything about the case until the fall of that year. During that length of time his wife had found it necessary to use all their spare money saved from the purchase of war bonds, and they had reached the point where they were fit subjects for relief. This man, however, was too proud to ask for relief, and his pride even prevented him from coming to see me to ask if I could do anything for him.

Let me say at once that I am glad to give credit to the department because, when I intervened on this man's behalf, his pension was increased immediately, I am told, to 100 per cent. They gave him $50 and also an allowance for each of his children, all of whom were under sixteen years of age. This brought in a total sum of about $90.

After a year he was reboarded and given observation, with the result that his pension was cut, although he was still unable to do any work, and was under doctor's care. This man was told not to exert himself in any way but, periodically, he would feel better and would attempt to do some gardening or other light work. Each of those times he would have to go to bed for two or three days. His pension was cut from $50 back to $30, or thereabouts. It has been cut further since that time, and the second to last occasion he appeared for a reboard it was cut again.

This man is still unable to do anything. The oldest child has in the meantime reached the age of sixteen years, so that the father does not receive any allowance for him. That boy is out trying to earn a livelihood for himself. The family is, however, in next to destitute circumstances. I was in the house this winter and one could not tell by the temperature of the room if there was any heat in the building or not. I know this man could not afford to buy fuel. I do not know how much fuel he had in the house, or whether he had any. But I do know one could not feel any heat in that building. Surely that is a disgraceful condition.

The point I am making is this, that when this man went to hospital for a reboard he was not allowed to say anything on his own behalf. If he attempted to tell them anything he was told either to keep quiet, or that they would send him out. That is not right, surely. A man with a heart condition does not always look as sick as some others not suffering from that ailment might look. But I do not know how a man's condition could be ascertained unless the man himself were asked to give the symptoms, and to tell something about himself. Surely it is not right to have a man in hospital for observation, and then not permit him to speak on his own behalf. That is not fair and should not be allowed.

I hope that when the bill goes to committee the minister will reconsider it, and that if the recommendations in the bill are not sufficient he will redraft it so that these men will get what is rightfully theirs without having to have others intervene on their behalf. Why should we as members of parliament have to intervene for men who have served their country faithfully and well and then, upon discharge, find that they have disabilities for which they are not responsible? It is time parliament was big enough to look after these men without our having to make representations on their behalf.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, at this late hour in the debate, after so many members have spoken in favour of a more generous measure than the one now before us, there is very little one can say that has not already been said. However, since I am not a member of the veterans affairs committee, and since I have received many letters from veterans, not only recently but over a number of years, complaining of the inadequacy of the allowance, I wish to add my protest to those which have already been made. Also I would add my hopes, if they are worth anything, to those who have already expressed the hope that the minister will reconsider the measure either before or after it goes to the veterans affairs committee, and bring something forward more worthy of Canada than this bill.

I examined the bill for a considerable time before I could find where there was any amendment to the act. This is a bill to amend the War Veterans Allowance Act, 1946. I have in my hand a leaflet issued by the war veterans allowance board, giving information in regard to the 1946 act. I have also examined the 1946 act and I have found it difficult to discover what the amendments are. Undoubtedly there are some amendments. I did find one amendment, early in the bill. That is an amendment increasing the salaries of the members of the board from $6,500 to $7,000.

After that very good start by those who drafted the measure, I was hoping they would carry it on for those who are supposed to benefit from war veterans allowances, those for whom the War Veterans Allowance Act was enacted, and not just for those who were administering the act. Persons who are required to administer an act of this kind ought to be well paid because they have to do a dirty job. The act provides $365 a year for a single person.

An hon. MEMBER: A dollar a day.

Mr. MacINNIS: A dollar a day, and in a leap year it will be just one dollar less than a dollar a day. This is a leap year and I imagine these men will have to go hungry for the extra day. Is there a member of this house who believes that he could live decently on $365 a year?

Mr. PEARKES: Why use the word "decently"?

Mr. MacINNIS: I assume that "decently" is a proper word in this connection. I suggest that the hon. member for Nanaimo is having a decent living and I am having a decent living, but we are not—

Mr. PEARKES: I meant that you could not live on it at all.

Mr. MacINNIS: I appreciate what my hon. friend means, but we expect people to live decently. I do not know how many single veterans are receiving this allowance, but they are supposed to live on $365 a year. The minister shakes his head, but I will read the relevant section. There could not have been much in the heads of those who drew up this act, whether they were shaking them or not. Section 4 reads:

> The maximum allowance payable in any year to an unmarried veteran or a veteran bereft by death of his or her spouse, without child or children, shall be three hundred and sixty-five dollars less the amount of any income of the recipient in excess of two hundred and fifty dollars per annum.

If he has not $250, if he has not anything beyond the $365 he will have only the $365 on which to live. The basis of the allowance should, in my opinion, be a living allowance in itself. If this great, rich country cannot provide a living allowance for the men who risked their lives for their country, then there is something very wrong with the members of this house and with the government of this country. What amazes me is the difficulty of improving the standard of living of persons with low incomes. If one has an income of $3,000, $4,000 or $5,000 it is not difficult to add another $1,000 every two or three years, but if a person is receiving less than $1,000 or less than $500 he must live on that because there is no hope in the world that he will get anything more.

I have jotted down some of the reasons why we should be more generous with war veterans than we are in this bill. The first thing that struck me is that we could afford to be. This is a rich country and at the present time the government is fairly flush with funds, if I may use that term. For that reason alone we should be more generous. If a man treated an animal the way we treat these people he would be brought up in the courts for cruelty to animals.

The second reason is that we are seeking recruits for the armed services. When a young lad finds his father or his grandfather subjected to this sort of treatment after having risked his life for his country, what hope is there that the young man will be eager to join some branch of the services? There is not the slightest hope in the world. The third reason is that there is a great ado at the present time about the danger of communism. Communism is not something that just happened for no reason whatsoever. Communism developed under the autocracy of czarist Russia. It did not develop in countries where freedom and justice existed.

An hon. MEMBER: It is a disease.

[Mr. MacInnis.]

Mr. MacINNIS: My hon. friend says it is a disease. Perhaps it is and perhaps it is contagious. When people are subjected to the conditions under which it developed in the first place they are more liable to catch the disease than those who are not subjected to the same conditions, the same as with any other disease. If there is one thing that creates divisions and sets people against each other it is inequality, the feeling on the part of some that they are being discriminated against, that they are not receiving their fair share after they have performed their fair share of the duties required of a citizen. I suggest to the minister and to the government that they pay heed to the pleas that have been made in the house this afternoon, and that when this bill comes back from the committee it will be a better bill than the one we have before us. There will not have to be a great many changes made to make it a better bill, but I hope the changes will be made.

There is another point I wish to make. I cannot imagine why the single person for whom the government makes the magnificent allowance of $365 a year should not be allowed to earn at least that much more by his own efforts. Why is it that he is not allowed to have additional income of more than $250? If he earned more than that who would be hurt? Who would be hurt if he earned $500? I suggest to the minister that the more the individual recipient of war veterans allowance is allowed to earn, the better it will be for the individual and the better for Canada. Nothing can be worse for the individual than the continual frustration of not being allowed to earn a living income by his own efforts, to be denied that right without being penalized for earning more than $250.

The hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell) wanted to know the basis of these allowances. I wonder if someone would explain how it was that somebody—that somebody who convinced the minister and the cabinet—came to the conclusion that $365 is sufficient income for a man who had offered his life for his country and who is not now able to make a living for himself by his own efforts? Would somebody explain just how the conclusion that $365 was a sufficient income was arrived at?

Mr. GREGG: Mr. Speaker, I think that statement should be challenged for this reason. It is not stated in the bill and has not been stated in the house that $365 was a sufficient income for a veteran with no other source of income. Under this bill, in addition to other earnings he can receive at least $40 a month, which multiplied by twelve makes $480 a year.

Mr. MacINNIS: All right, suppose we make it $480. Who determined $480 as an income sufficient for a man to live on? Who on the government side of the house wants to live on $480 a year? That amount is just as bad as the other; it is simply adding insult to injury. I hope that when this bill goes to the veterans affairs committee they will throw out this means test if they do nothing else, and put the veteran in the position where, if he tries to do something for himself, he will not be penalized for so doing.

Mr. A. M. NICHOLSON (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, since coming to parliament in 1940 I have taken no part in the discussion of veterans problems because they have been handled very well by the veteran members of our group and other veteran members of the house. Since 1945 the veterans of world war II have joined the veterans of world war I, and I feel, in justice to the people of my constituency who are affected by this legislation, I could not let it pass without expressing my protest.

In the first place I do not wish my remarks to be considered by the minister as personal at all. I am sure that every member of the house and the citizens of Canada are proud of his record in world war I and world war II. I know something personally, too, of the high esteem in which he was held in the University of New Brunswick before coming here. I am sorry for the minister that it is his misfortune to pilot legislation of this type through the Canadian parliament in the year 1948.

In the February issue of The Legionary, an article appears by the general secretary of the Canadian Legion which uses very moderate language:

> Our idea of a new rate for war veterans allowance would be $50 per month for the single person and $85 per month for a married couple.

In an editorial in the same issue The Legionary says, speaking of the government's proposals for increasing disability pensions and war veterans allowances:

> To many pensioners and to all war veterans allowance recipients the tremendous increase in actual living costs is nothing less than catastrophic.
>
> These aging men and women are not concerned with the jump in automobile prices, or the higher cost of nylon stockings or cosmetics. They were already leading a marginal existence before the price increases and were not able to afford luxuries then. What they are vitally and desperately concerned about now is the price of bread and milk and butter and meat, and of shoes and everyday clothes and other things that are needed to exist. About the only bright spot in the whole gloomy picture is the fact that rents have been allowed to remain stationary, or nearly so.
>
> These men, who offered their lives in the hour of Canada's greatest need, have earned a better deal than that which the government is proposing to give them.

The minister's officials have come to the conclusion that the cost of living warranted something being done. As the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) has mentioned, provision is made in the bill for board members, who receive a monthly cheque of $541.66, to get an increase of $41.67 because of the increase in the cost of living. They are to have extra take-home pay of $41.67 a month. It is very difficult for me to understand why a man getting $541.66 a month must have his salary increased to $583.33 because of the increase in the cost of living, while at the same time it is expected that single veterans getting $30.41 can get along with an extra $10 a month, or $40.41, and married veterans get along with $70.83, an increase of $10 over their present $60.83.

A little over a year ago I happened to be present at a public meeting in the city of Montreal when the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Claxton) was making one of his first public statements as minister of that department. He spoke of the contribution that Canada had made during the war and said that it had been our objective to see that no man who put on a uniform for his country would be any worse off for doing so and that no one who remained at home would be in any better position for having done so. He mentioned that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott), who also represents a Montreal seat, was doing his part to see that those who remained at home would not be in any better position than if they had gone to war. He also mentioned the present minister's predecessor, who also was seeing to it that those who fought for Canada would not be in a worse financial position for having joined the force.

I think members in all parts of the house are agreed that veterans who have to get along on the provision we have had in effect of a maximum of $640 for a single person and $1,130 for a married person certainly does not put the veteran in a preferred position. I know a great many veterans who thirty years ago could not establish the fact that sleeping in the mud or being forced to go without sleep hour after hour impaired their physical health, but many of them are now in the evening of life. According to the minister's own figures, 16,711 veterans of world war I will be entitled to the full $10 a month, which means that they are to get by on $640 for a single person and $1,130 for a married person. That is the maximum, and many will get less.

If there were any question of Canada's not being able to afford to pay more the veterans would accept their lot without a great deal of complaint, but we are all proud of the magnificent performance of Canada during the war and there is no indication in the world, either in the field of construction, in the sale of automobiles, in travel or anything else, that Canada is now on the verge of bankruptcy. I looked up Hansard of February 11, 1944, to find out how we were prepared to spend money in those days. I find that the Department of National Defence was able to get $28,000,000 for capital expenditure on construction, purchase, repairs, and operating expenses of properties; $51,000,000 for repairs, operating expenses and rentals; $182,000,000 for ammunition and bombs; $104,000,000 for armament, including rifles, machine guns, mortars and guns of all descriptions; $274,000,000 for motor transport vehicles, trucks, tractors and trailers; $30,000,000 for the operating cost of mechanical transport. Now the minister comes to parliament and asks for only $14,000,000 odd for the twelve-month period to discharge our responsibility to veterans of world war I, and world war II. Mr. Speaker, that is just not good enough. I feel sure that if the minister and the members of the committee cannot bring back to parliament proposals making more generous provision for the veterans who risked their lives for Canada, a great number of Canadian people will lose faith in the ability of Canada to keep her commitments to those who risked their lives for her in time of trouble.

Hon. MILTON F. GREGG (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the debate with interest and noted carefully the criticisms and suggestions made. As I have listened this evening it has occurred to me, as it probably has to other members, that this 9th day of April, 1948, marks thirty-one years exactly since the first Canadian corps, which contained many of the men about whom we have been speaking during the last day or two, stormed Vimy Ridge and made a great name for itself. I am sure the survivors of that old corps will be glad to know of the generous feeling on the part of this house as reflected by the speeches that we have heard from all corners of the chamber both yesterday and today. Sandwiched in between the expressions of individual generosity there has been some criticism, but it has been a source of gratification to myself to note that those in the department, the board, who administer the work have not come in for any serious criticism in their administration of the act, whatever criticism may have been directed against the act itself. The work of those administering the act has received due recognition. But that is only a small segment of the whole veterans program of Canada.

It has been stated by some that these amendments are not very important, while others have said that they are downright niggardly. All I wish to say in reply to such statements is that ever since 1930 in this house, and quite properly, the War Veterans Allowance Act has been held up as one of the finest pieces of veterans legislation in this or any other country for the purpose for which it was designed. I believe that is true, and I am sure hon. members believe it is true. If it is, then these amendments are very valuable for they improve that act for the veterans by approximately one-third.

The amendments are important because they increase the amount to the recipient. They are important, too, because the adjustments of the permissible income ceiling, and the other features related to it, give effect to those increases to the maximum degree.

There has been discussion of eligibility under this act, not touched upon by the amendments. I am not going into that tonight. There could be a long discussion as to where the cut-off line should be. There was at one time a school of thought from the old war that suggested that only those beyond the old artillery horse lines ought to be eligible for these benefits, because they were the only people who were really in a position to be preaged or to have serious after effects on account of active war experience and hardship.

That school of thought, I am glad to say, has not prevailed and for the old war the English channel was taken as the cut-off line. Arguments might be advanced if the Atlantic ocean were made a cut-off line; as the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Pearkes) so admirably pointed out, there might be some discussion as between zeppelin bombing and Salisbury Plain, on the one hand, and the experiences, which the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Isnor) might relate, in the explosion that occurred in Halifax, which killed sailors and soldiers, and which were attributable to the war. There might also be added some of the hard, cold camps such as Valcartier in those days.

I expect that in future years there will be discussions as to whether the Atlantic is the proper cut-off line for the new veteran, but that can await future discussions.

The question has been raised: what is the basis of this war veterans allowance? Hon. members know as well as I do, perhaps better, the basis of the original allowances set up in the original act. Whatever that was, I will not attempt to define it tonight. In setting up the increase in these amendments, I certainly feel, however, that it should not be done without some consideration being given to the whole Canadian population; in other words, to the relationship between this increase and social security legislation such as old age pensions.

In reply to a number of hon. members, the hon. member for Regina City (Mr. Probe), the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) and others, I may say that these amendments will make the benefits under the War Veterans Allowance Act greater than the combined federal and provincial benefits of old age pensions in any province in Canada.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Not in Saskatchewan.

Mr. KNOWLES: Nor in Alberta or British Columbia.

Mr. GREGG: I should like to go into that more fully in the committee, and I will let my statement stand until refuted at that time. I will, however, add this. The attempt has been made in working out these amendments to do precisely what I have said.

The statement has been made that the increases are subject to the approval of the board. Of course they have to be subject to the approval of the board, but that has carried with it the matter of the means test, and I am free to say that I am not very much more keen on that term "means test" than any other member of this house. Somehow it implies taking a person into a cold room and putting him through a close examination in respect of all factors entering into his life and living.

I can tell the house that in the administration of this act the members of the board and their staff look upon this part of their work under the act as an endeavour to help the veteran, a study of the difficulties which he has to meet through no fault of his own, and that attitude toward the work will continue.

There is one point I should like to emphasize. It has been suggested that the present recipients of the war veterans allowance must in all cases undergo a further investigation of their financial condition before this proposed increase can be paid to them. As somebody said, they must make application and by some method let it be known that they would like to get this increase and that they are qualified to get it.

That is not the case. The government has given special consideration to this matter. It was desired that this bill be so prepared as to enable the full increase to be paid immediately to all cases where existing records show the maximum allowance is now being paid and the recipient is not now in receipt of income up to the new permissible income created in this bill; and we now know who those veterans are.

The practical effect of this will be that the main body—not quite all; I will refer to that later—of present recipients, based upon the recent study of records at the head office of the board which has now been carried out, will be paid the full $10 increase retroactive to October 1, 1947, immediately after this bill is ratified by parliament and the remaining group will be dealt with equitably by the board with the utmost dispatch and understanding immediately thereafter.

That bears upon the remarks of the hon. member for Nanaimo. He referred to page 2788 of Hansard and the statement I made yesterday afternoon in which I referred to a third group. I did not attempt to divide them into groups, except to try to give some definition of the veterans who have been under study by the members of the board during the past few weeks. Groups 1 and 2, as already referred to, can be dealt with right away or automatically, if you like, now that the study of the file has been completed. In the third group referred to there will be some—I cannot say the exact number tonight—following that study, who will be able to receive the full increase. There will remain perhaps one-third of the whole number of recipients from whom some further information may have to be obtained.

Hon. members will know full well that each one of those 26,000 or 30,000 cases, as they are called here, are human beings made of flesh and blood, with individual and complex sets of circumstances that are happening today, tomorrow and the next day. I spoke of the attempts of the department, in conjunction with the placement service of the Department of Labour, to get these men placed in work, encouraged to work, assisted in finding their way back, if they possibly can, with this veterans assistance grant as a backlog underneath to help them. We will take a man now receiving the grant who, we believe—according to the last discussions we have had with him, and the assistance that has been given him—hopes to get into a permanent or semi-permanent job. If I were to say that on this date or whatever date this bill becomes ratified, he will get the increase, it would mean one of those things which no veteran likes, namely, the necessity of a government department asking for a refund in the future. So there is an attempt there in what I referred to yesterday as the third group, to tidy these things up ahead of time in order to make as few as possible subject to investigation when the bill is ratified.

During the debate there has been some discussion to the effect that some worthy veterans are reluctant to apply for war veterans allowance because they consider it a dole and feel that there is a stigma attached to it. I can assure the war veterans allowance recipients that nothing is farther from the minds of those who administer the act; I know that nothing is farther from the minds of the members of this house; and I believe that nothing is farther from the minds of the people of Canada. I want to make this quite clear. The War Veterans Allowance Act is, in my opinion, social legislation designed to help to meet the needs of some of the older veterans who have rendered valuable service to their country and who have been unable to gain full employment. I should like to repeat that the war veterans allowance is not in any sense a dole or a charitable payment. The spirit in which the act has been administered so far is the spirit in which these increased benefits contained in the amendments will be administered by the members of the board.

When this bill receives second reading, I shall have much pleasure in moving that it be referred to the committee on veterans affairs.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the committee on veterans affairs.

Mr. GREGG: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, may I refer to a matter which I overlooked. The hon. member for Regina City (Mr. Probe) asked me to clarify page 2788 of yesterday's Hansard, "Orphans—all wars—53; $25,596". I should have explained it at the time. That means fifty-three families of orphans or, in other words, the orphans of fifty-three veterans.

HUMAN RIGHTS

FUNDAMENTAL FREEDOMS—OBLIGATIONS UNDER UNITED NATIONS CHARTER—APPOINTMENT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Justice, for the Prime Minister) moved:

That it is expedient to appoint a joint committee of both houses of parliament to consider the question of human rights and fundamental freedoms, and the manner in which those obligations accepted by all members of the united nations may best be implemented;

And, in particular, in the light of the provisions contained in the charter of the united nations, and the establishment by the economic and social council thereof of a commission on human rights, what is the legal and constitutional situation in Canada with respect to such rights, and what steps, if any, it would be advisable to take or to recommend for the purpose of preserving in Canada respect for the observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms;

And that Messrs. Beaudoin, Breithaupt, Cournoyer, Croll, Dechene, Diefenbaker, Fournier (Maisonneuve-Rosemont), Fulton, Hackett, Hansell, Harkness, Hazen, Herridge, Ilsley, LaCroix, Macdonnell (Muskoka-Ontario), Marier, Marquis, Michaud, Massey, Miller, Probe, Rinfret, Robinson (Simcoe East), Smith (York North), Stewart (Winnipeg North), Stuart (Charlotte), Whitman, Zaplitny be members of such committee, as far as the interests of this house are concerned.

That the committee shall have power to send for persons, papers and records and to report to the house from time to time.

That a message be sent to the Senate requesting that house to unite with this house for the above purpose, and select, if the Senate deems advisable, some of its members to act on the said proposed joint committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether it will be possible, in view of the lateness of the hour, for the house to give this measure sufficient consideration tonight to enable it to be passed. I would hope so. In any event, I shall content myself with a somewhat brief statement of the facts relative to the resolution. Apart from the names of the proposed members of the committee, the resolution is the same in terms as a resolution passed by the house last session. Pursuant to that resolution a joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons was set up. That committee met on June 5, June 13, June 17, June 20, June 26, June 27, July 4 and July 11, a total of eight meetings. It made four reports to the Senate and the House of Commons. Those to the House of Commons were dated June 6, June 17, July 12 and July 14. The general public made no oral representation to the committee, though a number of letters and I think, petitions were received which are now in the committee records. However, the deputy minister of justice was heard in regard to the legal and constitutional position of Canada in so far as human rights are concerned. The chief of the first political division of the Department of External Affairs gave evidence concerning the obligations assumed by Canada as a member of the united nations; and the director of the division of human rights, department of social affairs, united nations, appeared and supplied information relative to the activities of the united nations in the matter of human rights.

I should like to direct the attention of hon. members to the terms of the resolution. It will not be necessary for me to read it again since you, Mr. Speaker, read it a few moments ago; but the interpretation placed upon the resolution by the committee last year was that it naturally falls into two divisions, the first dealing with the obligations Canada assumed as a signatory of the charter of the united nations, and the second relating to the steps it may be desirable for this parliament to take, irrespective of its obligations as a signatory of the charter of the united nations, in respect of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

With regard to the first division of the resolution to which I have referred, I think I should bring the house up to date with respect to what has happened since the committee ceased its deliberations last year and made its report. The commission on human rights which functions under the economic and social council of the united nations had a somewhat important meeting in Geneva from December 2 to December 17 of last year. This was the second session of the commission on human rights; and it has submitted a report of its proceedings and conclusions. This report has now been submitted to member governments of the united nations by the secretary general, with the request that the observations, suggestions and proposals of the various member governments with respect to the draft bill reach the secretary general by the 3rd day of April, 1948.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: May I ask when the government received that request?

Mr. ILSLEY: That was received in January; and this resolution was placed upon the order paper with the hope that there might be an opportunity for the house to consider the resolution and for the committee to give the government some advice as to the suggestions that might be made to the united nations before April 3. That was not found possible, so the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. St. Laurent) wrote a letter to the secretary general of the united nations which I shall now read, with the consent of the right hon. gentleman. This letter is dated Ottawa, April 1, 1948, and reads:

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your letter of January 9, 1948, in which was enclosed a report on the second session of the commission on human rights, and to inform you that the proposals contained in the draft international bill of human rights have been closely considered by officials of the government, and it is expected that they will be considered by a joint parliamentary committee on human rights. A discussion of this subject by parliament has not yet been possible, however, and the Canadian government would not wish to express views on a matter of such importance without having had the benefit of learning the opinion of parliament. This is especially true in view of the nature of the Canadian constitution, and the Canadian government, therefore, regrets that final comments on the declaration will not be available for April 3.

The Canadian government is anxious that ample opportunity be afforded to comment on the international bill of rights both at the meeting of the economic and social council in July and at the meeting of the general assembly in September.

It is the opinion of the Canadian government that the final drafting of an international bill of rights is a serious task involving the reconciliation of differing philosophies and judicial principles. It is therefore respectfully suggested that the final expression by the united nations of human rights and fundamental freedoms may well require much more time than is at present contemplated, and that postponement of approval of the draft bill from the 1948 to the 1949 session of the general assembly might be with advantage taken into consideration.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

Louis S. St. Laurent,
Secretary of State for External Affairs.

As I say, that letter was addressed to the secretary general of the united nations, Lake Success, New York.

I should like to say a few words with regard to the report of the commission on human rights, but perhaps I can shorten what I intended to say by referring hon. members to the Canadian Bar Review of March, 1948, where at page 548 they will find a short statement by Mr. John P. Humphrey, director of the division of human rights, united nations, setting out the present position, and a short description of the report. This report contains an account of the work of the commission, together with a draft international bill of human rights, presented in three annexes. It has been agreed that the term "International Bill of Rights" shall be understood to include (a) a draft international declaration on human rights; (b) a draft international covenant on human rights; and (c) the measures of implementation. It was on all three sections of the international bill of rights presented in the report as annexes A, B and C, that the comments of the member states were requested.

The draft declaration, when its final form has been settled, will be submitted by the economic and social council to the general assembly of the united nations for adoption, by a resolution of the general assembly as a statement of the human rights and the fundamental freedoms contemplated by the charter.

The authority for the resolution will be article 10 of the charter under which the general assembly may make recommendations to the members of the united nations or to the security council, or to both, on any questions or matters within the scope of the charter. The declarations so adopted would therefore have the character of a recommendation and would not have absolute juridical force. That this is the accepted understanding of the juridical effect of the declaration is apparent from the report of the working group on implementation.

The declaration, while not a lawmaking document, would no doubt have a highly persuasive character; it could be appealed to as a political rather than as a legal argument by individuals considering that, in relation to themselves, there had been a violation of its provisions. It might also, in the course of time, be incorporated in whole or in part into the common law as a reflection of public policy. But whether or not the declaration would have this sort of effect upon the common law is speculative.

I have been talking about the declaration. As contrasted with the declaration, the covenant which is found in annex A is proposed as an international convention which will, upon ratification, become binding upon the states party thereto. The covenant in its present, or in other similar forms, will create binding international obligations which states will have to discharge by legislation, in so far as there is any inconsistency between the terms of the covenant and the state of its domestic law.

This being the case, it is apparent that the covenant should be scrutinized with the greatest possible care. The conclusion of international agreements is a prerogative matter which rests as a matter of law exclusively with the executive. There is, thus, no positive requirement of parliamentary approval or sanction before the ratification of a covenant such as the one now under consideration. However, it is well established constitutional practice that important international agreements imposing obligations on Canada or purporting to affect rights and interests within Canada are submitted, before ratification, for the approval of the houses of parliament by way of resolution.

The joint parliamentary committee, when set up, will of course be master of its own procedure. If the same scheme or organization is adopted this year as was set up last year, there will be a steering committee. But it would seem appropriate for the joint parliamentary committee in its division of its responsibilities to consider, first, annex A of the international bill of human rights; that is, the declaration. This part of the draft bill defines the principles upon which the international covenant, annex B, is expected to be based. It is suggested that these principles should be considered prior to an examination of the proposed international covenant.

It is suggested further—and more properly as I say, these suggestions should be made to the committee rather than to the House of Commons; but the House of Commons will want to know why they are setting up this committee, and something about what the committee is expected to do—that the committee might find it appropriate to examine only annex A, namely, the declaration, to begin with, rather than all three annexes of the proposed international bill of rights. At the next session of the general assembly it is possible that only the declaration will be considered for approval, while the covenant, annex B, may be referred for further consideration to the international law commission. In this event, the Canadian delegation to the next session of the general assembly would have to express approval or disapproval of a resolution embodying only the general principles outlined in the declaration, annex A. The covenant, annex B, would not be submitted in final form to the member states for some considerable time. For this reason, although comments on all three annexes were requested by the secretary general, it may be found advisable by the joint parliamentary committee to give its consideration first to the declaration only.

That will be, I assume, one and probably the first branch of the committee's duties. I may say that the question as to what steps nations should take with reference to this international bill of rights was considered in the British House of Commons. The debate is to be found in British Hansard, the issue of February 26, 1948, particularly at pages 2268 to 2276. This question as to whether nations should favour entering into a covenant creating international obligations, or whether they should be content with a declaration setting out principles alone, and having very much less binding effect, was given some consideration.

The Minister of State, Mr. McNeil, said this, bearing somewhat on the point about which I have been speaking:

> It is quite plain, as every hon. member who has spoken tonight has said, that it is not enough that we should have signatures to a treaty. There have been treaties in the past to which the signatories were nothing more than signatories. We must, in these most troublous times, also ensure that this treaty is enforceable and enforced.

And later he said:

We want definition, we want as wide and free an agreement as possible, and we want to be quite firm in ensuring that this is not just another pious resolution. I agree with the point about the peoples of eastern, and unfortunately, central Europe. We can, by disseminating the reports from the commission, by publication and by broadcasting the speeches, keep alive the idea; but let us be quite sure that we are unanimous that this is an enforceable covenant. That will be, I am sure, the wish of all sides of this house.

On that question I assume the committee would wish to make some recommendations. But, as I say, the declaration is the first matter to consider, rather than the covenant, which is much more definite and a much more difficult matter.

Mr. COLDWELL: The minister said there was a good summary of the draft bill. If it is not long would he read it, or have it placed on Hansard.

Mr. ILSLEY: It is fairly long.

Mr. COLDWELL: It would make the minister's statement more complete.

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not think I can hope to make my statement complete in that sense. I think I shall have to take some steps to see that this is circulated among members of the house.

Mr. COLDWELL: Is it too long to go on Hansard?

Mr. ILSLEY: The draft declaration?

Mr. COLDWELL: I mean Professor Humphrey's summary.

Mr. ILSLEY: As a matter of fact there is not much more in Professor Humphrey's summary than I have told the house. There is much more in this declaration and in this covenant, but they are too long to put on Hansard. However they will have to be communicated to members of the house in some way so that they may have an opportunity to see what they are.

If I may I shall come to what was regarded last year as the second division or another division of the duties of this committee, although I must say that the duties of which I am now going to speak are closely allied with the duties I have been discussing. The committee was asked to consider and make recommendations as to what steps, if any, we should take in this country, apart altogether from our obligations as signatories to the united nations.

In that connection the committee decided last year that the attorneys general of the provinces and the deans of the law schools should be communicated with and invited to submit their views as to whether the dominion parliament has the power to enact a comprehensive bill of rights applicable to all of Canada, and that such written views be forwarded to the Minister of Justice. I think it would be appropriate at this moment if I were to state the results of that inquiry.

There is no record of a reply from Alberta. A reply was received from British Columbia stating that the attorney general of British Columbia is of opinion that most of the matters relating to human rights discussed by the committee appear to fall within provincial legislative jurisdiction and are for the most part dealt with and safeguarded by the common law, which is part of the law of British Columbia.

An acknowledgment only was received from Manitoba, and the same is true of New Brunswick. A reply was received from Nova Scotia saying that in the view of the attorney general, because of the distribution of subject matters of legislation between the dominion and the provinces as contained in the British North America Act, and because a bill of rights would affect both subject matters that belong to the dominion and subject matters that belong to the provinces, the parliament of Canada would not be competent to enact a comprehensive bill of rights applicable to all of Canada.

There was an acknowledgment only from Ontario. There was a reply from Prince Edward Island stating that the attorney general considers that it is doubtful whether such a statute could be drafted so as not to conflict with the provisions of the British North America Act. There is no record of a reply from Quebec.

A reply was received from Saskatchewan. The attorney general of Saskatchewan considers that it would be presumptuous for him as attorney general to attempt to advise the committee on matters of law. He forwards a copy of the Saskatchewan bill of rights passed in 1947. In his opinion, the dominion can go much farther than the province did in the realm of criminal law in giving protection against arbitrary arrest or detention and in guaranteeing the right of habeas corpus and the right to assistance of counsel. He states that Saskatchewan is in favour of a federal bill of rights.

Mr. HAZEN: Did the minister mention Ontario?

Mr. ILSLEY: There was an acknowledgment from the secretary of the attorney general, but no opinion has been received.

Before I pass on to deal with the replies of the deans of the law schools, I think I can sum up the result of this correspondence in this way. No attorney general says affirmatively that he is of opinion that the dominion parliament has power to pass a comprehensive bill of rights applicable to all of Canada; certain attorneys general express a negative opinion and deny that power, and several show very little or no interest in the matter. The general course and tone of the correspondence, when taken with that of the deans of the law schools, make it fairly clear that if the dominion government does undertake to set limits to the activities of the provinces in dealing with civil rights of this kind, it is altogether probable that a considerable provincial rights controversy will be precipitated.

This is perhaps borne out by the replies from certain deans of law schools. A reply was received from Dalhousie University as well as from Laval University. There is no record of a reply from McGill University, Osgoode Hall law school, the University of Alberta and the University of British Columbia. An acknowledgment was received from the University of Manitoba. There is no record of a reply from the University of Montreal, the University of New Brunswick and the University of Saskatchewan. A reply was received from the University of Toronto.

I shall not undertake to summarize the opinions of these deans because they are contained in an exhibit before the committee, but generally speaking they are most unfavourable to an affirmative answer to the question as to whether this parliament has that power. It will be the duty of the committee to consider these replies and decide whether they want to press for further replies, whether they should hear representations from the general public and from the number of organizations which have requested to be heard, as to what is legally possible and what is desirable in regard to this matter.

That is the present status of this matter. Briefly it can be said that we set up this committee last year but were not able to get very far on account of the pressure of work. We gave an undertaking to reappoint the committee this year, and the work which the committee can usefully do has been outlined in the few remarks I have made tonight.

Mr. J. G. DIEFENBAKER (Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, first may I say that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley) has properly outlined the events that have taken place since the committee met. While he was generous enough to say he felt that this resolution could well be passed this evening, I am not as optimistic as he was. There is one thing that I have noticed. From the time that this matter was first mooted in this house, namely, the drafting of a bill of rights for Canada, and later on a request on the part of the united nations for assistance from Canada in the drafting of an international bill of rights, little support was received from the government of this country. That, sir, is very well supported by the fact that in January last the draft of the united nations organization, which believes that an international bill of rights is necessary if peace is to be preserved, was thought of so little importance by the government of this country that the matter has remained there secret until this evening, in spite of the fact that reference was made to that question on February 13, when I asked whether the government had received the draft and whether it would be submitted to the committee. Yet all the time the government knew that the nations of the world, meeting as they have been to draft an international bill of rights, were expecting an answer by the 3rd of April. That indicates, more clearly than words, how disinterested the government of this country is either in a national or in an international bill of rights.

I have very little time this evening before the adjournment of the house, but I am going to face one situation which the minister reiterated tonight, as he so frequently did in the committee, namely, the danger, because of the constitutional position of our country, of Canada passing a bill of rights.

Here we are a sovereign nation among the nations of the world and promising as a signatory of the united nations to uphold fundamental freedoms as one of the principal prerequisites for the success of the united nations; yet the minister's attitude tonight raises a doubt whether Canada even internationally can do that which all the nations of the united nations undertook to do when the charter was accepted.

We were circumvented last year in the committee by the constitutional issue being raised on every possible occasion; and the minister tonight reiterated the summation of the answers given by the attorneys general of the provinces and by the deans of the law schools, apparently believing that those answers, coupled with the evidence given before the committee, would once and for all end in this country the crusade for a national bill of rights and would determine as well Canada's position as being unable to discharge her international responsibilities.

The committee, if it is to meet as it did last year, will merely be shadow-boxing, going through motions, postponing and procrastinating, with the government forever hiding behind the constitutional position.

The Supreme Court Act makes provision for determining this question once and for all. Time is going to deny me the opportunity to read section 55 of the Supreme Court Act, but I am going to sum it up in this way. When important questions of law or fact arise, touching the interpretation of the British North America Act, the constitutionality or interpretation of any dominion or provincial legislation, or concerning the powers of the parliament of Canada or of the legislatures of the provinces or of the respective governments thereof, whether or not the particular power in question has been or is proposed to be exercised they may be referred by the governor in council to the supreme court for hearing and consideration.

Then it says that the determination on that question of reference, although advisory only, shall, for the purposes of appeal by His Majesty in council, be treated as a final judgment of the said court between the parties.

Let us get away from this sham battle. Let us ascertain once and for all whether or not we have the power to discharge, first, our responsibility as a nation in the united nations, and, second, if a bill of rights is necessary for Canada, of which I suggest recent abrogations of civil rights in Canada indicate the necessity. Let us determine the question once and for all. For that reason I intend to move, seconded by Mr. Casselman, the following amendment to the resolution:

That the following words be added at the end of paragraph 2 of the resolution:

"that in order to assist the committee in its deliberations the government do immediately submit to the Supreme Court of Canada such questions as are necessary to determine to what extent the preservation of the fundamental freedoms of religion, speech, press, assembly and the maintenance of constitutional safeguards of the individual are matters of federal jurisdiction.

That, Mr. Speaker, once and for all will determine this question, so that no longer will anyone be able to hide behind the concept that under our confederation Canada cannot maintain the fundamental freedoms of Canadians within Canada. I now move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. COLDWELL: What is the business for Monday?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: We shall have the pleasure of listening to the continuation of the argument of the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) on this motion to set up the committee and the amendment he has moved, and, after that has been disposed of, we shall deal with the matters that were indicated for today's business but which were not reached today. In addition, if there is time, we shall take the second reading of Bill No. 197, to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act.

Mr. COLDWELL: The amendment to the motion for supply will not come up on Monday?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: No.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, April 12, 1948

The house met at three o'clock.

STANDING ORDERS

First report of standing committee on standing orders.—Mr. Sinnott.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

DEEPSEA SHIPOWNERS AND DECK, ENGINEERING AND WIRELESS OPERATORS—TERMINATION OF EAST COAST STRIKE

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): I thought, Mr. Speaker, the house would like to know that in so far as the east coast is concerned, the strike of officer personnel of deepsea ships is over.

Over the week end there were negotiations between the parties concerned in which officials of the Department of Labour took part. These negotiations resulted in ironing out the main difficulties and all ships will be sailing from eastern ports today or tomorrow. There are one or two minor matters to be settled but it is expected they will be taken care of satisfactorily.

With regard to the Pacific coast, negotiations are continuing and I am hopeful that by tomorrow the strike, as far as that area also is concerned, will be ended.

The settlement with regard to wages and working conditions is on the basis of the recommendations of Mr. Justice D. A. McNiven, who was the conciliation commissioner, with the provision that the unions and the companies agree that there will be no discrimination in employment or prosecution by the companies against their officers who have been on strike or by the unions against officers who have sailed or been on articles on any ships during the dispute.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORT FOR THE YEAR ENDED DECEMBER 31, 1947

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport): I desire to lay on the table, Mr. Speaker, the following reports in English and in French: annual report of the Canadian National Railway System for the year ended December 31, 1947; annual report of the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships Limited for the year ended December 31, 1947; annual report of the Canadian National Railways Securities Trust for the year ended December 31, 1947. Copies of these reports are being distributed to hon. members this afternoon.

The auditor's report to parliament has been delayed in printing, but I hope to be able to table it shortly.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

CHANGE IN PERSONNEL OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport) moved:

That the name of Mr. Winkler be substituted for that of Mr. Tucker on the special committee on veterans affairs.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

IRRIGATION IN ALBERTA

Mr. HANSELL:

1. Have any irrigation surveys been made in the Lomond-Retlaw-Enchant districts in Alberta? If so, what areas do these surveys cover?

2. Do any contracts or agreements exist between the dominion government and any person or persons respecting any irrigation project in these districts?

3. Have any plans been made for work to start on any irrigation project in these districts within the next year or so? If so, what are the details of these plans?

Mr. GARDINER:

1. Not by dominion government.

2. No.

3. Yes; plans have been made subject to the execution of an agreement between the dominion of Canada, the province of Alberta and the Canada Land and Irrigation Company.

The plans involve the details, improvement and extension of existing canals and appurtenant works.

CENTRAL MECHANICAL DEPOT BUILDING, LONDON, ONT.

Mr. MANROSS:

1. What was the total cost to the government of C.M.D. buildings on Highbury avenue in London, Ontario?

2. Are they for sale to industry?

3. What is the annual maintenance cost?

4. How many employees were there in the buildings in each year 1944, 1945, 1946 and 1947?

5. What was annual payroll in each of these years?

Mr. CLAXTON:

1. $1,381,000.

2. No.

3. Average annual maintenance cost:

Light	$ 4,165
Heat	6,956
Civilian maintenance, personnel	1,544
Repairs and upkeep	15,000
Total	$ 27,665

4.

Year	Military	Civilian	Total
1944	723	26	749
1945	534	194	728
1946	438	571	1,009
1947	243	464	707

5.

Year	Military	Civilian	Total
1944	$779,538 60	$ 27,952 00	$ 807,490 60
1945	577,328 76	187,054 39	764,383 15
1946	474,099 96	740,138 54	1,214,238 50
1947	264,401 01	683,655 12	948,056 13

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES—WINNIPEG AND MONTREAL OFFICES

Mr. THATCHER:

1. Have any head office departments of Trans-Canada Airlines been recently transferred from Winnipeg to Montreal?

2. How many employees of the T.C.A. head office in Winnipeg, have been transferred to Montreal since January, 1947?

3. What plans, if any, have T.C.A. made to transfer any portion of their head office from Winnipeg to Montreal, in the future?

Mr. McILRAITH:

1. No.

2. Not applicable.

3. T.C.A.'s head office is, and has always been, in Montreal whereas the operating headquarters have been located in Winnipeg for the past several years.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—ST. THOMAS SHOPS—REPAIR OF N.Y.C. ENGINES

Mr. COYLE:

1. Have the C.N.R. shops at St. Thomas been making any repairs on American New York Central engines of the J 1 type in the past year?

2. If so, are they still doing this work?

[Mr. Manross.]

3. If not, when was the work stopped and for what reason was it discontinued?

4. Has any demand come from the New York Central for continuance of this work?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I understand the hon. gentleman wishes to reword his question. If that is so perhaps he would agree to drop it and place another question on the order paper.

Mr. COYLE: It can be dropped and I will reword it.

Mr. SPEAKER: Dropped.

YUKON QUARTZ MINING ACT—SURVEYS BY DOMINION LAND SURVEYORS

Mr. COLDWELL:

1. Has the government notified the recorded owners of mineral claims that in accordance with section 78 of the Yukon Quartz Mining Act they must have surveys made at their own expense by duly qualified dominion land surveyors within one year?

2. If so, will the government reconsider the serious consequences to many small owners of mineral claims resulting from this action?

Mr. MacKINNON:

1. Yes; this is provided by the act.

2. The matter has already been considered. On January 7, 1948, the minister authorized the mining recorders to issue the notices contemplated by section 78 of the act. At the same time arrangements were made to have a dominion land surveyor undertake the necessary base line surveys at government expense, and the mining recorders were advised that this dominion land surveyor would survey claims for claim holders at the actual cost of the work done on each claim.

As it became evident from correspondence that the situation was not thoroughly understood, the following circular letter is being sent by the mining recorder to all those to whom notices have been given under section 78:

The correspondence which has been received as a result of the notices sent to claim holders under section 78 of the Yukon Quartz Mining Act has been reported to the department and I have been instructed to furnish further information to all those to whom these notices have been sent, supplementing the information already given.

The necessity of a survey of mineral claims has been a fundamental requirement of the Yukon Quartz Mining Act from the beginning. The two-post staking system which is in effect in the Yukon Territory contemplates that there will be an early survey so that the boundary of each claim may be defined. This requirement was not enforced during the time when it was impossible to obtain the services of a surveyor. The net result of this leniency has been that those who wish to proceed with the development of the mineral resources of the territory are unable to ascertain the limits of the properties that can be secured either by purchase or staking.

Now that the services of dominion land surveyors are available it has been considered appropriate to require claim holders to have their claims surveyed. There is no intention of taking arbitrary action. If it is impossible to have a survey made, either because the surveyor cannot get around to it, or for good and sufficient reason the claim owner while developing his property is unable to pay the expense of the survey, then the circumstances will be considered by the minister on the representations of the claim holder.

The department is willing to do its part by improving the maps and assigning government surveyors to run the base lines. In order to assist claim holders the department is assigning a surveyor to make surveys of mineral claims. The claim holders who take advantage of this offer will be asked to make a deposit to cover the cost of the actual out of pocket expenses incidental to the survey of their claims. These expenses will not include the salary of the surveyor. It has been estimated that these charges will not exceed $200 per claim. This deposit of $200 should be made to the mining recorder, and a refund will be made should the cost be less than this amount.

It will be the responsibility of each claim holder either to have the survey of his claim made or to make the required deposit with the mining recorder. Those who are unable to comply and who desire to establish a case for special consideration by reason of their bona fides as actual developers of the property they hold under entry should disclose the circumstances which in their opinion would justify the minister in not cancelling their claims.

LEASE OF BUILDING IN VICTORIA, B.C.

Mr. PEARKES:

1. Does the government lease a building known as 710 Fort street, Victoria, British Columbia?
2. If so, for what purpose?
3. Has it been advertised as a hotel?
4. How many tenants, lodgers or guests were there in this building on April 1, 1948?
5. How many of these are veterans?
6. What rentals, if any, are charged?
7. Has there been any increase in the rentals since January 30, 1948? If so, what increase was authorized?
8. Who are the managers of this property? Are they ex-servicemen?
9. Are they employed by the government? If so, under what department and at what salaries?

Mr. McILRAITH:

1. Yes.

2. This building is leased by the government for operation under the home conversion plan to provide accommodation for Victoria residents. Building contains twenty-four suites and thirty-six single rooms.

3. Yes.

4. On April 1, 1948, there were 107 persons in residence at 710 Fort street, Victoria.

5. Thirty-five of these are veterans.

6. Single rooms rent for $7.50 to $10.50 weekly including cleaning service, linen, towels, etc., while apartment rentals are between $13.50 to $22.50 weekly with the same services.

7. On March 1 single room and apartment rents at 710 Fort street were raised $1 per week to incoming tenants. No increase was made in the rents of tenants in possession at that time. In addition, there were some other adjustments in rentals for individual suites which were out of line with the rental structure for the rest of the project.

8. The property is managed by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation on behalf of the government. Resident manageress is Mrs. W. E. Rayfuse, an employee of the Victoria office of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

9. No.

EMIGRATION—YUGOSLAVS

Mr. McCUAIG:

1. How many people of Yugoslav origin have emigrated from Canada back to Yugoslavia since 1945 to date?
2. How many Canadian-born Yugoslavs emigrated from Canada to Yugoslavia during that period?
3. What was the total value of goods, vehicles and implements taken with these people back to Yugoslavia?

Mr. MacKINNON:

1. Information not available.

2. Answered by No. 1.

3. Answered by No. 1.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—OPTOMETRISTS

Mr. LENNARD:

1. Was authority issued by the Department of Veterans Affairs for the employment of optometrists on the staffs of D.V.A. hospitals and institutions? If so, when?
2. Have any optometrists been so employed?
3. If so, where?
4. If not, why were they not appointed?

Mr. GREGG:

1. Authority was issued for employment on a casual fee basis, but not for appointment to positions within the public service. April 22, 1947.

2. No.

3. Answered by No. 2.

4. No need for services has arisen.

PUBLIC WORKS—FLAGS

Mr. LENNARD:

1. How many flags were purchased by the Department of Public Works during the twelve months ending March 31, 1948?
2. What percentage of these were union jacks?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull):

1. 1,857.

2. 10·77 per cent.

PENSIONS AND ALLOWANCES TO VETERANS OF TWO WORLD WARS

Mr. CAOUETTE:

1. Are the veterans of world war I receiving the same benefits and consideration as the veterans of world war II?
2. If not, for what reasons?

Mr. GREGG:

1. Yes, except where the terms of the legislation applicable to them differs.

2. A difference in terms of legislation.

POSTAL SERVICE IN ANTICOSTI ISLAND

Mr. DORION:

1. Since what year has there been a service for the conveyance of mails to and from Port Menier, Anticosti island?
2. In what manner was such service operated up to 1947?
3. What was the cost of the conveyance of mails from the mainland, on the north shore, to the Port Menier post office, on Anticosti island, prior to 1947?
4. Has any change occurred in such service during the last few months? If so (a) by whom is the said service performed; (b) what is the cost of such service at present?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier):

1. Departmental records indicate service in effect prior to 1906 but details are not available.

2. By boat and air.

3. Fiscal year 1946-47:

By boat (summer season)	$ 750 00
By air (winter season)	2,741 50
	$3,491 50

4. Yes. As from the 10th February, 1948, Anticosti island has been served from Gaspe, P.Q.

(a) Anticosti Shipping Company.

(b) $3,000 per annum.

FOOD AND DRUGS ACT

Mr. CRUICKSHANK:

What protection is offered the public by the Food and Drugs Act against filth and extraneous matter in foods?

Mr. MARTIN:

Section 4 paragraph (d) of the act states that a food shall be deemed to be adulterated within the meaning of the act "if it consists in whole or in part of any filthy, putrid, disgusting, rotten, decomposed or diseased animal or vegetable substance, whether manufactured or not, or if it is otherwise unfit for food".

Foods are examined in the department's food and drug laboratories for the defects noted in this paragraph of the act. If found defective they are refused entry into Canada or, if already on the domestic market, they are not permitted to be sold for human consumption.

[Mr. Fournier (Hull).]

INCOME TAX—CORPORATIONS—FUNDS IN LIQUIDATION

Mr. FULTON:

What is the total amount of the funds of corporations in voluntary or compulsory liquidation, the distribution of which has been frozen pending the issuance of releases to the liquidator by the income tax branch?

Mr. WINTERS: In the case of corporations in voluntary or compulsory liquidation, clearance certificates are issued to the corporation or trustees concerned upon payment of any outstanding tax liability but no statistical record is maintained by the taxation division as to the total amount of distributable surpluses in such cases.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

CIVIL SERVICE—VACANCIES, COMPETITIONS AND APPOINTMENTS, 1947, 1948

Mr. VIAU:

1. How many vacancies occurred in the various departments of the dominion government (a) during 1947; (b) since 1st January, 1948?
2. How many competitions were advertised by the civil service commission for appointment to vacancies occurring in the various departments of the dominion government (a) during 1947; (b) since 1st January, 1948?
3. How many applications were received for each competition (a) during 1947; (b) since 1st January, 1948?
4. How many candidates were declared successful in each competition (a) during 1947; (b) since 1st January, 1948?
5. How many of the successful candidates were appointed to vacancies which occurred (a) during 1947; (b) since 1st January, 1948?
6. How many of the successful candidates receiving appointment were already in the employ of the dominion government (a) during 1947; (b) since 1st January, 1948?
7. How many of the candidates appointed (a) served overseas; (b) in Canada only; (c) were civilians; (d) were bilingual?

PUBLIC BUILDINGS—MACLEOD CONSTITUENCY

Mr. HANSELL:

1. How many public buildings are owned by the government in the constituency of Macleod, and what is the value and location of each of these buildings?
2. Does the dominion government pay any taxes on the above-mentioned properties? If so, what amounts are paid in each case and to whom?

RESEARCH IN AGRICULTURE

Mr. RAYMOND (Beauharnois-Laprairie):

1. How many persons are in the employ of the Department of Agriculture in each province?

2. How many national research council employees, in each province, are performing research work in relation to agriculture?
3. What is the total amount of salaries paid to the said employees, for each province?
4. What is the amount of expenditure incurred for such research work, in addition to salaries?

FREIGHT RATES

INCREASE IN EXPRESS RATE ON EGGS FOR HATCHERIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Is the Minister of Transport aware that the express rate on eggs for hatcheries from Yellow Grass, Milestone and Duval to Regina, nearby points, has been increased from 35 cents to 70 cents per crate of thirty dozen; and from Dafoe and Davidson to Regina, a slightly greater difference, from 35 cents to 75 cents a crate? Will the minister investigate the authority for the increases in these rates?

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport): I am not aware of the situation to which the hon. member refers, but I am glad he sent me this notice. I have asked the board to investigate and report to me upon the matter.

SUBVENTIONS ON NOVA SCOTIA COAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. CLARENCE GILLIS (Cape Breton South): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, arising from the recent increase in freight rates. Is the government considering increasing the subventions paid on the movement of Nova Scotia coal to absorb the additional charges that will occur because of the freight rate increase?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The subventions on coal are based on the amount necessary to equalize the price of Nova Scotia coal with the price of United States coal at certain points of delivery. That being so, the subventions will automatically be increased to take care of the additional freight rates.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

CLOSING OF CORNWALLIS VETERANS HOSPITAL, DIGBY, N.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. C. BLACK (Cumberland): Is it the intention of the Department of Veterans Affairs to close the Cornwallis veterans hospital for tubercular patients, Digby, Nova Scotia, and transfer the patients to Camp Hill hospital, Halifax, or elsewhere? If so, why is such action being taken, and what is to be the date of closing Cornwallis hospital?

Hon. MILTON F. GREGG (Minister of Veterans Affairs): The hon. member kindly sent me advance notice of this question. The department does intend to close the Cornwallis veterans hospital for tuberculosis patients at Digby, Nova Scotia, in the near future and transfer the patients from this hospital to Camp Hill, Halifax. The action is being taken for the following reasons:

1. To permit a closer liaison with the medical staff at Dalhousie Medical School and so assure a continuing high standard of adequate diagnostic treatment and service to the patients.

2. To conform to the established policy of abandoning service hospitals which were taken over temporarily to cope with the peak load as soon as suitable alternative accommodation is available in our permanent treatment centres.

3. Bed space is available at Camp Hill hospital and structural changes are well under way to adjust this accommodation and make it suitable for the care of patients suffering from tuberculosis.

4. The concentration of our treatment facilities in Halifax not only assures the availability of better medical care, but allows for improved treatment at a considerable reduction in over-all cost.

The exact date of closing has not been set but will be determined by the completion of the structural changes to which I have referred. The prospective date will be some time in the late summer or early fall.

WORK OF THE COMMITTEE FOLLOWING EASTER RECESS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. S. WHITE (Hastings-Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Is the work of the committee on veterans affairs for this session completed? If not, why has there been no meeting of the committee since the Easter recess?

Hon. MILTON F. GREGG (Minister of Veterans Affairs): After consultation I believe it was decided to hold the next meeting tomorrow.

PETROLEUM PRODUCTS

INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBILITY OF OIL AND GASOLINE RATIONING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. B. McKAY (Weyburn): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply, of which I have sent him a copy. In view of the possibility that there may be gasoline rationing in Canada this year, as suggested in a news dispatch appearing in the Ottawa Journal of April 8, will the minister indicate what is Canada's position at present with regard to oil and gasoline supplies, and state whether or not rationing this year is contemplated?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): Well, Mr. Speaker, I suppose there is always the possibility that gasoline rationing will become necessary, but I know of no circumstance this year which makes it any more likely than last year or the year before. We are just approaching the season when stocks for the winter normally move into Canada. The government is taking every precaution to see that nothing interferes with the normal movement; and at the moment I do not anticipate the need for gasoline rationing next winter.

CORPS OF FIRE FIGHTERS

INCOME TAX—SUGGESTED DEFERMENT PENDING REPORT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. J. BENTLEY (Swift Current): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. I did not have time to give him notice, since it arises from a telegram recently received. In view of the desire of many hon. members to have the Canadian corps of fire fighters brought within the scope of veterans legislation, will the minister consider holding in abeyance the payment of income tax by members of this corps on money earned in that service, until the special committee on veterans affairs has reported on the matter?

Hon. J. J. McCANN (Minister of National Revenue): Not having had notice of the question I can only say the matter will be considered and an answer made at a later date.

SOCIAL SECURITY

INQUIRY AS TO HOLDING OF DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. STANLEY KNOWLES (Winnipeg North Centre): I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister based on reports appearing in the press last week. Is there to be held this year, and if so when, a new dominion-provincial conference on old age pensions and other social security matters?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I regret that I am unable to give my hon. friend an answer to that question. I cannot say whether or not there will be a conference.

Mr. KNOWLES: Is it under consideration?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Well, I suppose everything is under consideration.

Mr. GRAYDON: Better not spread yourself too thin.

EUROPEAN RECOVERY PROGRAM

INQUIRY AS TO EFFECT ON CANADA'S EXCHANGE SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. ROSS THATCHER (Moose Jaw): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a question, notice of which I have sent him. Is the minister yet in a position to tell the house what effect the passing of the European recovery program by the United States will have on Canada's shortage of United States dollars? Will the additional U.S. dollars made available permit any early easing of the emergency regulations?

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): My hon. friend was good enough to give me notice of his question, and I can give him this answer.

The adoption of the European recovery program by the United States should enable Canada to continue to ship to Europe the large volume of exports which we have been sending there and which the European countries need for their recovery.

It is still too early to say what the effect of the program will be on Canada's dollar shortage. I do not expect it will permit any early easing of the emergency import restrictions. On the other hand, I wish to emphasize that if the European recovery program had not been adopted, the Canadian dollar difficulties would have been greatly intensified.

Many of the details of our relationships with the European recovery program are still under discussion. I hope to be able before long to give the house a complete statement on our position when a number of matters now under discussion have become clarified.

HUMAN RIGHTS

FUNDAMENTAL FREEDOMS—OBLIGATIONS UNDER UNITED NATIONS CHARTER—APPOINTMENT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

The house resumed, from Friday, April 9, consideration of the motion of Mr. Ilsley (for the Prime Minister) for the appointment of a joint committee of both houses of parliament on human rights and fundamental freedoms, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Diefenbaker.

Mr. J. G. DIEFENBAKER (Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, before the adjournment on Friday evening I had moved an amendment with a view to having determined by the supreme court the question of the jurisdiction of the federal authority in the field of civil liberties. I hope, sir, the government will see fit to accept my suggestion, which I believe will go a long way toward determining once for all this important question, to which in 1935 the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) himself made reference. Incidentally, just as a matter of interest, I have found in the course of reading that in 1832 the grandfather of the Prime Minister made a special trip to England for the purpose of placing before the imperial government the question of the preservation of civil liberties in Canada.

In his speech the Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley) referred to an article written by Doctor Humphrey, secretary of the committee on human rights. I should like to refer to another article written by the same gentleman on the subject of the international protection of human rights. It appears in the Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Sciences for January, 1948. By way of indicating the importance of an international bill of rights in which through the united nations Canada could participate and to which she could contribute, I should like to quote briefly from that article. Doctor Humphrey says this:

> It is probably correct to say that there has been more public interest in the work of the commission on human rights and its various subsidiaries than in the activities of any other organ of the united nations, with the exception of the security council, although discussions in the human rights commission have seldom hit the headlines.

It goes on to indicate why the international committee has been of such importance. It states that one reason, of course, is the personality of its chairman, Mrs. Franklin Roosevelt, and that another is the realization on the part of the public of the important issues at stake. The article continues:

> Not only did the peoples of the world know that world war II had been fought for human rights; they knew that the denial of human rights by certain countries had been a contributing cause of the war.

Then he uses these words:

> It is significant and appropriate that this victory of the common man, this victory of private individuals, should be a victory in the age-long struggle for the definition and establishment of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

I would bring that to the attention of the minister who, when he spoke the other night, made it evident that the government of this country has displayed but little interest in this important matter. Indeed an examination of the records of the united nations committee shows that all other democratic countries have made recommendations to this committee. The United States made recommendations, and the United Kingdom made recommendations in great detail, setting forth the necessity for the preservation of fundamental freedoms, as well as the sanctions that should apply.

In view of the great interest, as Doctor Humphrey says, that is being shown throughout the world in fundamental freedoms, and the need for serious consideration of the subject in this country, I suggest that there be placed on Hansard the draft international declaration of human rights as well as the draft covenant. When the suggestion was made the other evening by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) the minister said that this material was too long for inclusion in Hansard. Sir, this is a declaration and covenant about which the people of this country generally know very little. I think it should appear in Hansard and thus be made available to all.

Mr. ILSLEY: I suggest that Votes and Proceedings would be a better place for it than Hansard. I would have no objection to placing it there.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: That would be suitable. It should be available to every member of the house.

There are some sections which have been accepted by the committee consisting of representatives of eighteen countries. Indeed practically the only objections to many of the clauses have been from countries which are communist or under the curtain of communism.

Let me refer to three or four pertinent international human rights which this declaration would protect, not only internationally but also in the various nations subscribing to them. I read these in the light of some of the abrogations of civil liberties which have taken place in Canada within the last few years. These particular declarations, sir, represent the consensus of many democratic nations throughout the world; no communist nation has yet given any indication as to its views, although they voted against its acceptance. Here are a few articles which are regarded as of sufficient importance internationally, designed to lay the foundation for the prevention of war:

Article 3 states:

> Everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set forth in this declaration, without distinction of any kind, such as race (which includes colour), sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, property status or national or social origin.

And article 5:

No one shall be deprived of his personal liberty or kept in custody except in cases prescribed by law and after due process.

This is particularly significant:

Everyone placed under arrest or detention shall have the right to immediate judicial determination of the legality of any detention to which he may be subject, and to trial within a reasonable time, or to release.

This section means that nations will not permit the denial of habeas corpus.

Here is another section which is of interest in view of some of the things which have happened in Canada in the last few years, particularly since the war. I quote:

Subject to any general law not contrary to the purposes and principles of the united nations charter and adopted for specific reasons of security or in general interest there shall be liberty of movement and free choice of residence within the border of each state.

There is a further one, article 16:

Individual freedom of thought and conscience to hold and change beliefs is an absolute and sacred right.

Provision is made also for the drafting of an international covenant, and it provides:

Every state, party hereto, undertakes to ensure: (b) that such laws, respecting these human rights and fundamental freedoms, conform with the general principles of law recognized by civilized nations;

(c) that any person whose rights or freedoms are violated shall have an effective remedy, notwithstanding that the violation has been committed by persons acting in an official capacity.

Then:

No person shall be subjected to arbitrary arrest or detention.

How often I have said in this house that when the right to be represented by counsel is taken away, law returns to the middle ages. All these nations have agreed to this:

In the determination of any criminal charge against him or of any of his civil rights or obligations every person is entitled to a fair hearing before an independent and impartial tribunal and to the aid of a qualified representative of his own choice.

Then in regard to freedom of religion, every person shall have the right to freedom of religion, conscience and belief. The only limitations on that freedom shall be such limitations as are prescribed by law and are necessary to protect public order and welfare, morals and the rights of freedom of others.

In the event that one's fundamental freedoms have been interfered with, he should have the right of recourse. That is why I ask that there be an amendment to the Supreme Court of Canada Act to the end that anyone in any province in Canada whose fundamental freedoms are interfered with shall have the right of determination of his rights before the Supreme Court of Canada.

My right hon. friend referred to the constitutional division between the provinces and the dominion. I should like to refer to one case which is the only one which has been before the Supreme Court of Canada in reference to the question of fundamental freedoms. There are two points of view. Some say that the right of the provinces to abrogate and interfere with the fundamental freedoms is inherent in the British North America Act, although the preamble to that act states that our constitution shall be similar to that of the United Kingdom. Those who contend that these rights rest in the provinces aver that we in this country must be a balkanized Canada whereby an individual may enjoy certain fundamental rights in one province while in another they may be denied. It is that question of legislative jurisdiction that I am asking the government of this country to submit to the supreme court. If it is the law, then it denies to the individual that Canadian citizenship which should be the result of the measure introduced by the Prime Minister in 1944. To say that in one part of Canada a Canadian may enjoy freedom of religion and of speech and of association, all those great and abiding freedoms, and that in another province a Canadian may not enjoy them, is a denial of the possibility that we shall ever build a united Canada on the basis of equality of the individual before the law in all parts of the country.

A reference was made to the supreme court with respect to an Alberta statute of 1938, as reported in the Canadian Supreme Court Reports of that year. I should like to quote from the judgments of Chief Justice Duff and Mr. Justice Cannon, which indicate that while property and civil rights are a matter for the provinces, the preservation of abiding freedoms is a matter for the parliament of Canada. The judgment of Chief Justice Duff is to be found on page 133. It will be remembered that the Alberta legislature passed a law that denied the freedom of the press in that province.

Mr. BLACKMORE: That is absolutely false. I challenge the hon. member. The hon. member has no right to make remarks of that sort to this house without their being challenged.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: There cannot be any controversy on that. I point out that the judgment is as follows:

> The right of public discussion is, of course, subject to legal restrictions; those based upon considerations of decency and public order, and others conceived for the protection of various private and public interests with which, for example, the laws of defamation and sedition are concerned.

And further down:

> We do not doubt that (in addition to the power of disallowance vested in the governor general) the parliament of Canada possesses authority to legislate for the protection of this right.

I would refer to page 134, where the chief justice points out that the freedom of the press, the right freely to express itself, is a right with which no province can interfere.

Mr. JAQUES: It does not exist anyway.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I am not in an argumentative mood today; I am simply placing this on the record and doing it as dispassionately as I can. I hope my hon. friend will permit me to continue. On pages 145 and 146 appears the judgment of Mr. Justice Cannon, which reads:

> Under the British system, which is ours, no political party can erect a prohibitory barrier to prevent the electors from getting information concerning the policy of the government. Freedom of discussion is essential to enlighten public opinion in a democratic state; it cannot be curtailed without affecting the right of the people to be informed through sources independent of the government concerning matters of public interest.

Then there are these significant words, which have never been departed from or derogated from since 1938, by the Supreme Court:

> No province has the power to reduce in that province the political rights of its citizens as compared with those enjoyed by the citizens of other provinces of Canada.

What that means is that no province may within the ambit of property and civil rights interfere with freedom of religion or freedom of speech or freedom of the press by provincial legislation which would deny the maintenance of those freedoms. I suggest that in view of this authority of the supreme court, something should be done by this parliament to grant to the individual the right of appeal to the supreme court when his fundamental freedoms have been interfered with in any way. That case came before the supreme court, not as a result of an appeal by an individual, but on a submission by the governor in council.

The position regarding civil liberty is this. If any province can by the exercise, or by the subterfuge of the exercise, of its licensing authority under municipal law, interfere with fundamental freedoms, and there is no recourse to the courts, the individual so interfered with, however great his freedoms may appear to be, in fact does not possess those freedoms. If being a Canadian implies the possession of fundamental and traditional freedoms, no citizen of this country should be denied the opportunity of asserting his freedoms in the courts.

With those who say that the dominion parliament has no power to pass a bill of rights I do not agree; but let us accept that for a moment. The first thing, then, that the parliament should do is to equalize the rights of Canadians everywhere in Canada, so that they can go to the foot of the throne, to the Supreme Court of Canada, and, if they will, to the privy council, when their rights have been abrogated.

If a municipal authority has the right by licensing, by imposing a licence fee, to deny the privilege of practising one's religion it then can do indirectly what it cannot do directly. I suggest to the Prime Minister as the culminating act of his career that he give to Canadians everywhere the assurance of full rights of equality in Canadian citizenship which was placed on the statute book by his government, by amending the Supreme Court Act to give the individual the right to the preservation and maintenance of his freedoms against provincial intrusion wherever it occurs.

Mr. POULIOT: What intrusion?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: There is any imaginable number.

Mr. POULIOT: If the hon. member would specifically mention one, it would be more illuminating.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I will point out what happened in the United States, where the preservation of the right of freedoms was maintained by the supreme court of that country. in Murdock vs. Pennsylvania, 319 United States Reports, 103—

Mr. POULIOT: But we have not been annexed yet.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: What my hon. friend says is true, although there are many who say we are a satellite. But I am not dealing with that phase this afternoon. I am dealing with interference with the individual's rights and with the necessity of an amendment to the Supreme Court Act to prevent in any provincial authority or any emanation of a provincial authority the exercise of the right to do by indirect means what cannot be done directly. In that case Mr. Justice Murphy of the United States supreme court used these words:

> It is wise to remember that the taxing and licensing power is a dangerous and potent weapon which, in the hands of unscrupulous or bigoted men, could be used to suppress freedoms and destroy religion unless it is kept within appropriate bounds.

If being a Canadian anywhere in Canada implies equality and the possession of those traditional freedoms, then let us grant the individual the right to preserve his freedoms by having an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada.

I pass on to the next phase, and it has to do with the international aspect of the matter. I cannot understand, sir, why it is that so little interest has been shown by the government of this country in submitting suggestions for an international bill of rights. Over a period of two years no such recommendations have emanated from Canada. The government knew in January last what were the terms of an international bill of rights. The united nations committee forwarded to the government the draft terms in detail, and it has remained under cover all through February, March and April. It could have been tabled in the house in order to permit of consideration and discussion, but like so many other matters connected with our foreign affairs it has had to remain the secret of the government until now. That committee met. We had no representative there from Canada. The secretary was a Canadian. The committee drafted this bill of rights in two documents, a declaration and a convention.

Mr. ILSLEY: How can my hon. friend say it was a secret in the bosom of the government when it was published to the whole world?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I was sent to the governments of the various countries, and sent to Canada, but if it was not a secret it has been kept under wraps and not tabled in parliament since January last.

Mr. ILSLEY: It has received publication here.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: In a publication in the month of March, 1948.

Mr. ILSLEY: It was available long before then.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Available to whom and by whom? Not to parliament or in parliament. It is against this secrecy in connection with our foreign affairs in general that I protest.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

There is a convention and a declaration; a declaration that will merely be a statement of the pious idealism of the various countries, and a convention declaring a number of rights which the several states making up the united nations will be required to enforce. When it is ratified by a two-thirds majority it will be legally binding on each state when ratified by that state. My right hon. friend indicated that there is no rush. He admitted that this matter was supposed to be considered by the various nations within the united nations by April 3, 1948, and parliament did not get it until the 8th or 9th of April. It was to be considered by the various countries and suggestions were to be made by them. Now the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. St. Laurent) suggests that we do not rush the matter, which was supposed to be dealt with next fall, but that we delay it again. Mrs. Roosevelt has written an article on the subject in the April 1948 issue of Foreign Affairs, wherein she emphasizes the necessity of action now, action before the united nations ceases to function, as it is ceasing to function in parts of the world. She indicates that the one hope for mankind is that they get together and arrive at a standard in connection with the maintenance of human rights, without which there cannot be peace.

The declaration will be merely a declaration of hope. The convention will be a declaration of civil liberties binding on the nations when accepted by them.

Mr. POULIOT: It binds no one. It binds only the hon. member for Lake Centre. That declaration binds no one else.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Apparently my hon. friend, usually so well informed, has not read this. He has not had an opportunity because it is just now to be tabled. Canada's parliament and Canada generally should know what is the attitude of the Canadian government with respect to an international bill of rights. We have never yet been able to find it out. The United States took so great an interest in this matter that its state department sent out letters to 350 private organizations in the United States asking for their opinions and suggestions. The state department has publicly stated its appreciation of the suggestions given as the result of the request of the government. Canada has a position on the security council of the united nations; Canada is on the atomic control board; Canada has seats here and there; but in a matter that every one of the united nations representatives in San Francisco indicated was upon the conscience of mankind and should be epitomized in the form of a declaration, Canada does nothing. All it did was to wait while the committee had sat for a period, off and on, and at the end of three months concluded its recommendations, terminated its sittings, and agreed to meet again on May 8 or 9 of this year after further recommendations on the draft had been secured by the several nations. It does indicate, sir, if not a fear on the part of the government to face this question, at least an apathy, which, according to Doctor Humphrey, whom the minister quoted as an authority on the subject, is not to be found among the other nations who are interested in the preservation of the united nations.

I ask the minister this: has parliament not the right to know whether Canada is to be bound by the convention? Has it taken up with the provinces the question as to the degree to which correlative and complementary legislation will be passed? If not, Canada will be in the position of being not in the vanguard but in the rearguard of the march on the part of the nations of the world to these better things conducive of international peace.

I come next to the question of freedom of the press. This is a subject which has been before the people of Canada in very recent days. The preservation above all things of that freedom is so fundamental that without its preservation, parliament cannot function or democracy operate in the interest of the people. Now that a decision has been arrived at, the minister should give early attention to what I suggested some weeks ago, namely, amending section 888 of the criminal code so that never again will publishers, writers or authors be subject to being taken from one end of Canada to the other at the whim or desire of any group.

All along the road mankind has had to fight for freedom of the press as for other freedoms. Freedom of the press was first established in 1771 in the John Wilkes case. In the diastole and systole of history, the freedom of the press, though diminished from time to time, has been maintained in the main. It is for that reason that one of the chief committees set up by the united nations committee on human rights was the committee on freedom of the press. That committee has just reported. Canada had representatives on the committee, which met in Geneva. Free discussion is fundamental for the preservation of the principles for which we stand. Experience shows that man will speak the things he will within the law, regardless of the punishment that may be levied against him for so doing. Preservation of our freedoms lies in the right of every man under law to express his point of view, limited only by sedition, blasphemy and libel. When I hear people talking about repression and denying a man the right to think the things he will under law, I am amazed. They believe that all you have to do to prevent the spread of false philosophies is to bring in laws that will deny the right to free speech. In doing so they deny the preservation of the thing that by repression they believe they are preserving. The only effective answer to the propagation of false philosophies is to assure to every citizen information on what are the abiding principles of freedom. They will recognize their superiority over those false doctrines, those godless doctrines, those doctrines that would destroy the relationship between a man and his God and the sacredness of his personality.

Mr. POULIOT: What false doctrines?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I speak now of the doctrine of communism.

Mr. POULIOT: Will you please enumerate?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I speak of the doctrine of communism; I hope I have my hon. friend's agreement. The freedom to destroy false doctrines is to have the right to speak against them. When I hear people say how they would control false doctrines I say that we need in this country those who will exercise the right to freedom of speech and show our people what freedom means, what are its abiding principles and its superiority over doctrines which result in the blackout of freedom and the maintenance of tyranny everywhere in the world.

Yesterday I came on a quotation from a speech which was delivered in the British House of Commons a hundred and fifty years ago. It is now repeated in the declaration on freedom of the press made a few days ago by the thirty nations meeting in Geneva. One hundred and fifty years ago Sheridan used these words:

> Give me but the liberty of the press and I will concede to the government a corrupt and servile House of Commons. I will give ministers the full swing of the patronage of office. I will give them a whole host of ministerial influence. I will give all the power that can be conferred to purchase submission and overawe resistance. And yet armed with the liberty of the press I will go forth to meet them undismayed. I will attack the mighty fabric government has reared with that mightier engine. I will shake down from its heights corruption and bury it beneath the ruins of the abuses it was meant to shelter.

What have we done in this nation with regard to that committee and the maintenance of the freedom of the press? Thirty-five nations were represented on the committee. Five of them voted against the preservation of the freedom of the press. Those five consisted of the U.S.S.R. and its satellite nations, the Ukraine, Czechoslovakia, Poland and Yugoslavia. The thirty nations agreed that we must preserve these freedoms, and the greatest of these, to assure the penetration of the iron curtain, is the freedom to distribute news everywhere in the world without regard to country or opposition in any country. They said:

> Freedom of information carries the right to gather, transmit and disseminate news anywhere. Freedom of information depends for its validity on the availability and diversity of sources of news and opinion.

Then the committee set out the responsibilities and the duties of the press. It says this:

> The press has a moral obligation to seek the truth and report the facts, thereby contributing to a solution of the world's problems.

If the minister is to be the chairman of this committee I should like him to bring before it representatives who have attended on behalf of Canada at this press gathering in Geneva, to the end that we in this country will have presented to our people something of the appeal that was made to these men as to the necessity of preserving as a federal responsibility freedom of the press everywhere in this country.

There are some who contend that when you speak of freedom in the world today you speak of an anachronism. By freedom do you mean the absence of law? Do you imply that freedom is the absence of direction? Those things are not freedom. Some there are in our own country who fear freedom. Others there are who believe they should have the freedom to do the thing they desire to do, but that someone else should be denied that same right under the law. To me freedom means the recognition of my right as a person within the state to equality under the law; and my right to the maintenance of fundamental freedoms which are our heritage. That heritage can be preserved only when there are rules which require the other person, in my interests and in his, to keep within the rules. It implies that each must be restricted by the existence of equal rights for others.

Equality for all has not been characteristic of some of the actions of this government during the years since the war. I am trying to keep away from any suggestion of political considerations in this discussion. But I say—and I do so without fear of there being anyone who will seriously deny it—that within the last two or three years in our country there has been an unnecessary continuance of invasions of the fundamental freedoms belonging to our people. In 1932 the Prime Minister himself summarized the danger. Speaking in this house, he warned the country of the dangers of arbitrary authority. These words I bring to his attention and to that of his government today:

> Arbitrary authority helps breed arbitrary authority. The enjoyment of a certain amount of absolute power creates the appetite for more power in the way of absolute power and finally absolutism knows no bounds.

This government was in power during the second world war. All of us were willing to surrender rights which were fundamental, in the greater interest of the survival and preservation of the state. But, with the conclusion of the war, in too many cases the government has continued to abrogate our rights, no doubt soothed by the fact that in the days of war we submitted willingly and voluntarily. When I observe the actions of some of the ministers in the cabinet I ask myself if these men are engaged in a competition among themselves for absolute power. Some show a greed for power. Some show that they are afflicted with the violence of unrestrained authority outside the law. I refer only to what happened recently when the imposition of taxes in our country was announced by radio speech. No one denied that it was an abrogation of the principles of Magna Carta. The minister could not do it. Following Magna Carta, because of the inclination on the part of some people to depart from its principles, a curse was placed on all who departed from them. According to the author I read, no king's minister, no cabinet minister, no adviser or person who departed from those principles would ever be able to remove himself from the curse that was pronounced, namely, that he would be driven out of power or restrained by the people. I shall read what that curse was. It condemned every official of the state sworn to uphold it, and—

> "All those that by word, deed or counsel—in any point, break or undo" its provisions or who "in any manner" procure, counsel or any way assent to resist or break them or "to go about it, by word or deed, openly or secretly, by any manner of pretence or colour."

Some people say: You have Magna Carta; what more do you want? The great principles of Magna Carta are abiding, permanent, eternal. What right has any individual in this country, if the federal government decides to do away with his right to appeal to the courts to have its principles preserved for him? In connection with the imposition of taxation outside of parliament, John Hampden in 1628 was approached by the representatives of the king who said, "Well, forget about it; after all, it is just one departure. Pay it up." His answer was, "That I dare not do, for I fear to draw upon myself the curse in Magna Carta." What Hampden remembered in 1628 was apparently forgotten by the government of Canada in 1947. Why do we need a bill of rights in this country? I am not going to quote to you what the papers that do not support the government have to say; I refer you, Mr. Speaker, to what the Winnipeg Free Press said as late as February 26, 1948:

The remedy,—

It refers to invasions by this government of the rights of individuals that have continued since the war.

—in good part at least, lies with the dominion parliament and some action is being taken.

Then it points out the necessity for action.

No civil liberties legislation exists in Canada to protect the fundamental freedoms of Canadians. In the past it has been assumed that the liberal tradition and the vigilance of an alert electorate would suffice to protect them, but recent experience shows that this is only too obviously not so. Within a decade or a little more, serious inroads have been made upon the rights of Canadians.

That is in 1948, written in a paper which generally gives support to the government. It points out the necessity for a bill of rights which will assure not only the maintenance of fundamental freedoms but the right of the individual, under law, to recourse to the courts in order to have those rights preserved.

In England within the last few months an anomaly has been removed; the crown may now be sued in the courts of the land just as an individual may be sued in those courts. In this country the federal government is in business on a scale not exceeded by Great Britain. I am not going to enumerate the businesses it is in. No citizen has any right to recourse to the courts against the crown, except by leave of the crown. I suggest that the time has come to remove this anomaly from the law in our country. I go further and point out the unfairness which was exhibited by this government two years ago when a man in western Canada, Mr. Oatway, instituted an action against the wheat board for certain rights he contended were his. He got into the courts and went as far as the court of appeal of Manitoba; he had the right to take proceedings, but what did this government do? When he decided to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada this government, which asserts that it believes in fundamental freedoms, had an order in council passed denying him the right to appeal to that court, and also denying him the right ever to have commenced the action he legally started. I say, sir, that is a serious matter. It indicates that some members of this government believe they and those under them are above the law. This is the sort of thing that parliament can and should correct. You may ask whether this is the situation only in Canada. It is not.

Mr. ILSLEY: Would not the hon. member consider that the tying up of the distribution of scores of millions of dollars to the farmers, which would have resulted if that matter had gone on, was something that should be considered?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Oh, sir, that is exactly the point I want to make. Whenever this government infringes upon fundamental freedoms it says, in effect, that you have the right but in the interests of the state we are denying you the right we state you have. That principle of ex post facto legislation is denied in the united nations draft. It is a most dangerous form of legislation, to come along after the event and by law deny the individual his right in court.

I want to read now what the Marquess of Reading said when he introduced the bill of rights in the British House of Lords in 1947. He pointed out these continuing invasions which are taking place, with government divesting itself of control by parliament, and infringing upon the rights of the individual beyond what is necessary for the preservation of the state. At page 763 of the House of Lords Hansard the Marquess of Reading dealt with this matter in these words.

Mr. POULIOT: What date, please?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: It was in February of 1947. I have not the date here, but it appears at page 763 of the House of Lords debates:

Personal freedom had for so long been the current coin of life in this country that we had been apt perhaps to forget that currency may be slowly and stealthily withdrawn from circulation, that coinage may be debased without any very evident outward signs, and it may even be deliberately counterfeited without immediate detection.

It is not part of my case today to allege any malign conspiracy on the part of anyone deliberately to attempt to overthrow the liberties of the subject. The process has been gradual, stealthy, haphazard, almost inadvertent, but unfortunately both insidious and menacing in its cumulative effect. The pace and the magnitude of events have in recent years been filched and liberties purloined almost without the notice of parliament or the knowledge of the public.

The earlier parts of the bill he introduced—which incidentally passed the House of Lords——are, therefore, directed to the remedying of two evil tendencies; the growing usurpation by the executive powers of parliament, and the increasing exclusion of the courts of law from what is perhaps their supreme function—protecting the individual citizens against the excessive and illegitimate encroachments and abuses of authority. These tendencies are, unhappily, no new feature of our life. They have now been nurtured upon the special conditions of emergency obtaining throughout two long, arduous and fluctuating wars.

What do I suggest should be done? My suggestion, sir, is that in view of the importance of civil liberties and their preservation, there be set up a standing committee of the House of Commons on civil rights. The recommendation has been made in the British parliament—and while it has not been accepted yet I understand it was very favourably received—that a committee be set up which meet continually and have for its responsibility the examination of all orders in council, statutes and the like that deny the individual the right of recourse to the courts. Such a clearing house committee would be of great benefit. It would reveal to the people as a whole the trend that is taking place, and would create a well informed social concern. That committee would be a vigilant upholder, through publicity, of the rights of the individual. Recently when the Prime Minister moved the appointment of the prices committee he said one of its great functions would be publicity. Surely if in economic matters publicity will cure evil, in the matter of one's freedoms it would also be an advantage if a committee such as this were set up; for, sir, as Mr. Justice Douglas of the United States supreme court said in a recent judgment:

> The extent of a community's respect of the human rights of all its citizens is in fact the measure of its progress in civilization.

This committee would correlate information regarding interferences with civil liberties as they take place. It would give publicity thereto. It would make Canadians everywhere cognizant and constantly aware of invasions of our basic liberties and of the inadequacy, in many cases, of our present laws in guarding those liberties. It would make Canadians freedom-conscious, for this committee would provide parliament with a watching brief over freedom regardless of what may be the distribution of powers under the British North America Act.

Mr. POULIOT: Was all that said by Mr. Justice Douglas?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: No. I ended the quotation while you were talking to the minister.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. POULIOT: I asked him if the Douglas was the American.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon; anyway it was then I ended the quotation.

Mr. POULIOT: You did not tell us whether or not he was a Yankee.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I now quote in that connection from a speech delivered by Lord Chesterfield in the British parliament many years ago—

Mr. POULIOT: Quote Canadians; quote Tim Buck, the Witnesses of Jehovah and all the others.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I cannot understand my hon. friend's interruptions at all. Usually they are intelligent. Lord Chesterfield used these words:

> Let us consider that arbitrary power has seldom or never been introduced into any country at once. It must be introduced by slow degrees, and as it were step by step, lest the people should see its approach.

That is to like effect to what the Prime Minister said in 1932.

Next I suggest that we set up in the Department of Justice a civil liberties division to which every citizen in the land will be able to turn when his civil liberties are interfered with. A similar committee has been set up in the United States. It was established in 1939, and has been a reservoir into which people in all parts of the United States have poured their complaints when their rights have been interfered with.

I have already referred to the necessity for recourse to the courts. Let me say to the minister, now that the emergency following the war is officially over, that I should like to see something done about removing from the statutes of the country provisions which deny the individual his right to the courts. Consider for instance the act creating the foreign exchange control board. No matter how illegally, how unjustifiably, or how tyrannically a representative of that board may act, while the right to go to the courts is not denied, the right to recover damages is limited to nominal damages which is a dollar, with no costs. That, I say, is a dangerous interference with the rights of the individual. State rights have their place, but the rights of the individual should be paramount as against officials operating under state authority.

I do not wish to weary the house with further references to the necessity for a bill of rights. However one of the latest editorials on the subject is to be found in the Family Herald and Weekly Star of March 10, 1948, in which it is stated:

> The dominion parliament, or rather, any majority in the dominion parliament, has far greater power over the individual citizen than has the United States congress. It is therefore reasonable that we should be particularly wary about granting unlimited powers to a cabinet, which, if it has a majority in parliament, can do anything—

And the word "anything" is in italics—

> —to any citizen, and can neither be called to account in the courts, nor blocked by any obstacle to its ambition, which it could not remove at will.

What have been some of the invasions lately? Well, sir, the first is the doctrine of emergency which is being used by this government to circumvent constitutional balances by overriding provincial rights.

Mr. ILSLEY: Oh, oh.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: My right hon. friend laughs.

Mr. ILSLEY: My hon. friend is now getting himself on both sides of this provincial rights controversy.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: No. I deny the right of the central authority to invade. So far as private rights and fundamental freedoms are concerned, let us find out once for all who has the power, by submitting the matter to the supreme court.

Hon. gentlemen opposite have carried the emergency doctrine to the point if at any time the cabinet says there is an emergency, they contend that the power vests in the federal authority to get around the constitution and interfere with provincial rights.

Secondly, there has been established the doctrine that our constitution can be amended by a simple address on the part of a majority in the House of Commons and the Senate, and without consultation with the provinces. This is a further indication of the centralizing influence that seems to control this government in its attitude to the constitution of our country.

The action of the government in refusing to reconvene the dominion provincial conference unless all the provinces are prepared to accept terms proposed by the federal government in advance is a denial of the spirit of confederation, which was based upon co-operation.

There should be a declaration that never again will statutes passed by parliament be amended by orders in council and made inoperative by the governor in council. I give an example: A couple of years ago the government, with its majority, forced through civil airways legislation by which no railway transportation company was permitted to operate civil airways after a certain date. I did not support the government in that; but it put the legislation through. That legislation became inconvenient to the government. What did the government do? They simply had an order in council passed so that that which parliament had declared for in a statute should be postponed in its operation.

Mr. KNOWLES: It was not even an order in council. It was just a minute of the cabinet.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: The hon. member points out, and correctly, that it was not even an order in council. It was just a minute—a statement to the effect that the statute was no longer in operation.

The same condition prevails under the Patent Act.

Then there is the Foreign Exchange Control Act, to which I have already referred, and also the Income War Tax Act, denying a person the right of recourse to the courts, in certain particulars, and giving the minister powers that no minister should ask, much less receive, from parliament.

Mr. ILSLEY: May I ask a question?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: The powers given under the Income War Tax Act were summarized recently in an issue of Toronto Saturday Night. Powers are given under the statute whereby the minister has the right to discriminate between individuals, and the decision is not subject to challenge in the courts.

Mr. ILSLEY: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Yes.

Mr. ILSLEY: Does the hon. member disapprove of the principle of workmen's compensation legislation in the provinces under which an employee cannot go to the courts?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: That legislation has prevailed for a very considerable period of time in all the provinces. The reason for it is that most labour men take the view that if a matter were carried to the courts it would cost money. That was the argument.

Mr. MITCHELL: It was their experience.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: They are willing to accept that in connection with workmen's compensation. I am referring to federal legislation in connection with income tax. I ask this: Is there any citizen of this country who ever told the government that it was acceptable in practice to have legislation which denies a person the right to appeal to the courts against a minister's discretion so far as income tax is concerned?

Then, as to workmen's compensation legislation—

Mr. ILSLEY: I will answer that. My recollection is that the representations were that they wanted to go to other than the exchequer court. They wanted a board set up. That was the suggestion they made—that there be a board set up to which they could go, instead of to the courts.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: My right hon. friend realizes that these points are worthy ones, and he is now trying to exculpate himself by saying that some representations were made in which a board was asked for.

Mr. ILSLEY: The hon. member asked the question. He asked whether the minister or the government would say that anybody did not complain. I answered the question; that is all.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: In connection with workmen's compensation?

Mr. ILSLEY: No, in connection with income tax.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: All right. If the minister says he had that complaint, then he has answered the question, and it is perfectly right that he should do so.

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: But I assert this, as Lord Reading said in Great Britain—and the British government has seen fit in large measure to remove the anomaly—that the denial of the right of the individual to have recourse to the courts denies that freedom and equity in law to which every citizen in our country is entitled.

Mr. ILSLEY: Is the hon. member now talking about fiats?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: If the minister cannot understand it, then he will have to read it and ultimately ask his law officers to interpret it.

Mr. POULIOT: If you are for human rights, then admit the contradiction.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: The denial of the right of counsel should be removed in every case and in every statute. It has not been denied in Britain since 1652. If a citizen is denied the right of access to the courts against the decision of a cabinet minister, the minister is placed in the position that he is able to usurp the rights of the individual and protect wrongdoers who are acting for the crown.

These are only a few matters which in my view deserve the attention of my right hon. friend as Minister of Justice. He, after all, is the conscience of justice of the Canadian people. He is the person in whose custody and subject to whose control reposes and rests the preservation of fundamental freedom. Civil rights and their preservation are the cornerstones of liberty. All history and our own experiences recently in Canada have shown that these rights are not safe in the hands of the executive when the individual has no right to challenge their legality in the courts.

Let us resolve once for all the doubts that are expressed as to who has the custody of the preservation of these rights. If they are in the dominion, let us in this parliament do our part toward their preservation. If they are in the provinces, then so far as an international and national bill of rights is concerned, if Canada is to take her place internationally and nationally the provinces will have to assume their responsibility in passing complementary legislation.

This is not a matter for partisanship. Freedom is an abiding thing. It is the heritage which we inherited. Freedom is your right and my right to equality under law. It is your right and my right to respect each other's rights under law.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, we have listened to an argument in favour of the adoption by this parliament of a comprehensive bill of rights. The amendment which has been moved requests that the legal and constitutional position of the dominion and the provinces shall be clarified. With the subject matter of the amendment I am in agreement. I want to say to my hon. friend that while I agree with much of what he has said, indeed with almost all of it, yet I rather think that he tends to overlook something. Recourse to the courts is not always as he suggests it is under various statutes of Canada. As a matter of fact some people are denied access to the courts because they cannot afford to pay the amounts that must necessarily be paid or that are involved in carrying actions right through to their ultimate conclusion. Until that disability has been removed, there is no equality in access to the courts; there is no equality before the law.

I think that is one of the reasons why the workmen's compensation acts are as they are today. The workmen knew that in fighting powerful and wealthy corporations for compensation they would be at a distinct disadvantage under certain circumstances. Consequently these acts are drafted as they are.

This is an important committee. I had the privilege, along with the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Graydon), of attending the San Francisco conference and, jointly with him, being a member of the committee which dealt with certain clauses of the charter of the united nations which have a material bearing on this whole issue.

The committee is being established for the purpose of recommending what steps should be taken in Canada for preserving or extending respect for the observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms. I want to say that I make no apology for supporting the setting up of a committee of that description. I make no apology for supporting a move to give greater human rights and better fundamental freedoms.

The party with which I am associated in this house shares the long tradition of the workers' movements throughout the world for improved social and economic conditions, for greater freedom and more fundamental rights for humanity. My mind goes back this afternoon, particularly as I heard the hon. gentleman speaking, to the Chartist movement and to 1848, which is sometimes called in our history the year of European revolutions. I remember how that was followed by the long struggle for the right to vote, the long struggle for the universal franchise, the long struggle for the secret ballot and the periodic election of representatives to parliaments. Out of that struggle arose some of the great movements that have made for greater freedom; the trade unions, for example, the cooperative societies and other peoples' movements which we take for granted in the world in which we are living today. The very basis of the party which I represent here this afternoon, the very basis of democratic socialism is to be found in the legislation which has been adopted through the pressure of ordinary people in all the countries of the world. Those aims were written into the charter of the united nations, a copy of which I hold in my hand. Article 55 reads:

> With a view to the creation of conditions of stability and well-being which are necessary for peaceful and friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, the united nations shall promote:
>
> a. higher standards of living, full employment, and conditions of economic and social progress and development:
>
> b. solutions of international economic, social, health, and related problems; and international cultural and educational co-operation; and
>
> c. universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion.

When we signed the charter of the united nations we approved article 56, which reads:

> All members pledge themselves to take joint and separate action in co-operation with the organization for the achievement of the purposes set forth in article 55.

Partly because of article 56 we are taking the action we are taking here today, the setting up of a committee to see how in Canada we can bring about conditions that are more in conformity with the aims and obligations of the united nations. When the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. St. Laurent) in San Francisco in 1945 put their signatures to the charter of the united nations they obligated us not only to set up a committee but to take appropriate action when the committee reports to the house. True, of course, in these days there have been what I might call perversions of the meaning of both the words "democracy" and "socialism". Human rights and fundamental freedoms are being denied in the name of both to millions of people in some parts of the world. But this is not the first time in history that great words, great expressions, great phrases and great ideas have been perverted. Take the history of the Christian religion. Looking back over its long history, we recall how in the name of Christianity from time to time liberties were restricted, freedom of speech and of thought prohibited, and persecutions took place, with war, burnings at the stake and all the rest of it, not by one nation against another but by varying religions against other religions. But these events did not destroy the fundamental value of the Christian religion, nor can any perversion of democracy or of socialism today interfere with the basic rightness of those ideals and the basic struggle which they involve for human freedom and human good.

So I say that the party with which I am associated is proud to support every move for greater social and economic freedom. But I also say that until we have achieved economic freedom we have not completely achieved a democratic society. As a matter of fact today in this house we are apt to discuss only one side of this problem of freedom. What are the fundamental rights every human being should enjoy?

First I say that every human being, regardless of race, colour, creed, religion, sex, or ethnic origin should have the right to pursue his or her work, to earn a decent living, and to enjoy the fruits of labour; also to have the opportunity for spiritual and cultural development in conditions of dignity and of freedom. Until we have guaranteed economic freedom, with all that it implies, we have not secured the conditions which provide either for good employment or for proper cultural and spiritual development. I say that this involves more than the elimination of the terrible menace of unemployment, that sense of insecurity which haunts many a worker from the cradle to the grave. It means the right to a voice in the management of industry, as well as the right to organize and bargain collectively, for how free is the individual until he has some say as to the conditions under which he labours in industry and gets his living? I want to express that thought in the words of a great Christian socialist, the late Archbishop of Canterbury, Doctor William Temple, who wrote in his little book, Christianity and Social Order, a paragraph which I remember reading at the time and which strikes a note in my memory today. He said:

> The great lack is the absence of any voice in the control or direction of the concern to which most of the waking hours of the day are given. Till this can be remedied there will be one most important respect in which the working class is shut out from a vitally important expression of personality. Men have fought and died for a voice in making the laws which they are to obey; that is the essence of political liberty. But the government of the firm for which he works affects a man's life more closely than the government of his state; yet in it he has no part except so far as he may threaten to hold up the process by withdrawing his labour and that of his fellow-workers in a strike. In many businesses nowadays the workers are often consulted, especially about regulations affecting hours and conditions of work. So far, so good; but this is done as a favour and not as a matter of secured right. The cause of freedom will not be established till political freedom is fulfilled in economic freedom.
>
> Moreover, until this is done, the breach in the fellowship—of which the class-war is the ultimate expression—must remain. It is important to remember that the class-war was not first proclaimed as a crusade by Marx and Engels, it was first announced as a fact by Adam Smith. Nothing can securely end it except the acquisition by labour of a share in the control of industry.

That, Mr. Speaker, is one of the fundamental rights, one of the fundamental freedoms, that is often overlooked in a debate of this kind. While I agree with the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) that we should write into our constitution a bill of rights safeguarding our political liberties we shall never have full freedom and full fundamental rights until the dignity of every man is recognized and until every man's right to a say in the conditions under which he works and lives has been established. These are some of the basic rights which in my opinion have yet to be achieved, basic rights which to a very large extent through being denied are responsible for the great wave of unrest that is passing across the world. I believe with the late Archbishop Temple that until we have given recognition to the dignity of the worker in relation to his own industry we shall never meet the threat of that class war which threatens us today. Indeed once you give that right, you banish the very reason for such a class war, because then the worker will be in a position to control his own destiny in common with others in the community.

Freedom of association and freedom of expression, as my hon. friend the member for Lake Centre so well said this afternoon, we have been in danger of losing through what I think were ill-advised actions of the government during the lifetime of this parliament. The government knows what I am now thinking of. It is not only that kind of action which jeopardizes our fundamental freedoms, but the kind of action that is sometimes encouraged by people who have not thought the matter through when they approve mob violence in any form. I regret sincerely that within the last few weeks we have seen violence against political leaders and a political party whose fundamental principles I cordially detest. Nonetheless, if we condone violence against parties we dislike the time may come when the very procedure that we have condoned may be used against all the rest of us. We cannot afford ever to pass over lightly any violation of those freedoms which we enjoy.

If I may use this as an illustration, Great Britain at the present time is probably the nation, certainly in the European continental orbit, with the least danger from either fascism or communism. I was over there twice during the war. I went to the Hyde Park corner where I saw the utmost freedom of speech. The hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Wright), the hon member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) and I went there one evening. There was a crowd of soldiers and sailors of various nationalities, British, American, Polish, and so on around there. We heard a speaker denouncing the war and calling upon the people to stop what he called the bloody slaughter. He was telling them how they would be fooled once more when the war was over. All the time a policeman was walking around seeing that there was no interference and no attempt at interference. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the more freedom of speech we have, the less danger there will be of subversive elements destroying our democratic institutions. Therefore I say that these recent disturbances have been very disquieting to those of us who believe in freedom. They are symptomatic of dangerous tendencies which, being allowed to grow, may have dire results. After all, if violence is used against those who believe in violence—because both the fascist and communist parties fundamentally believe that the only way to secure control of the state eventually is by the forcible overthrow of the state—we invite and justify their violence later on. We must see that we do not jeopardize our fundamental freedom in that regard.

Then sometimes we have ill-considered legislation. My hon. friend mentioned some this afternoon. Very recently we have had an ill-considered piece of legislation which has done more to play into the hands of subversive elements than anything that has happened in Canada for a long time. I refer to the recent legislation passed in Prince Edward Island dealing with labour unions, outlawing national unions and international unions, excepting only those that are connected with the railways. When you attempt to interfere with the right of labour to organize freely in associations of its own choice as Canadian citizens all across Canada in co-operation with their fellow Canadians you are inviting serious trouble, and you are placing in the hands of those who wish to point out that governments will destroy labour unions whenever the opportunity and necessity arises, an argument which, as long as legislation of that description remains on the statute books, you cannot meet. Therefore I say that we must beware lest legislation of that description is allowed to stand. Consequently I am glad that the committee on industrial relations has also been set up and that a national labour code will be considered.

I should like to see a code which gives every Canadian wherever he may live the right to organize and bargain collectively. It requires, as do some other matters with which my hon. friend dealt this afternoon, some complementary legislation, some understanding between the provinces and the dominion about their respective powers; but every effort should be made to see to it that every Canadian worker has full rights as a Canadian citizen.

We have seen the rights of minorities interfered with. Goodness knows I have no connection with or sympathy for the teachings of, for example, Jehovah's Witnesses. Particularly I have no sympathy for some of the propaganda and their statements; but I view with considerable misgivings attempts to crush out a religious minority and to prevent their discussing religious issues from their point of view. Surely the rest of us who do not believe in the kind of teachings which they present to the Canadian people have enough faith in our own religious bodies to be able to meet the criticisms that they level against the churches —and I use the plural because all our churches are criticized by Jehovah's Witnesses—to which we collectively or severally belong. Therefore I say that we have to beware lest we permit the persecution of minorities; because if we do we are false to the fundamentals of human freedom, of fundamental human rights, and we are false to the very charter which our representatives signed at San Francisco and which this parliament subsequently approved.

We have as well the blot on our statute books which we of this party tried to remove again this year, namely, the continuance of disabilities against a group of Canadians who are of a different race and different colour from our own. I refer to Canadians of Japanese origin. I might also say that we have not yet removed all the disabilities against another group, the Chinese residents of this country, who do not enjoy the same privileges as residents of other nationalities within this country. Until we have removed these blots on our escutcheon, we shall find it difficult to face the committee on human rights and fundamental freedoms of the united nations. In fact, when I was there in the autumn of 1946 and some of these matters were under discussion, to a minor extent, I know that all the members, irrespective of party, of the Canadian delegation felt very conscious of the manner in which we ourselves were situated when some of these topics came before the assembly or were mentioned by representatives of other nations.

I say that we have to beware lest we ourselves are guilty of that which we condemn. We should remove from our statute books and from our country all the disabilities which afflict individuals merely because they are of a different race, different colour or different religion. I know, too, that there are parts of Canada where people of different racial origin find it difficult to get hotel and other accommodation. That is a disgrace in Canada in 1948. The hon. member for Lake Centre mentioned freedom of the press. That is a precious heritage. No one who has read that wonderful tract by John Milton, the "Areopagitica", a plea for the liberty of the press, can fail to understand that his plea referred to one of the very bases of our fundamental freedoms. John Wilkes came along later, and after arrest and trial he established the right to criticize the crown's ministers, to report the debates of parliament and to say what he would about public questions. Freedom of the press? I say freedom from censorship of books, of the press and of art, except only to the extent made necessary by the requirements of morality and of decency. There should be no other form of censorship except that we should see to it that decency and morality are protected. I remember an amusing incident which occurred a few years ago in the city in which I lived. A friend of mine sent to a secondhand book store in Britain to get some books. When they arrived, he received all the books except one. The book he did not receive was sent to Ottawa to see if it was a fit one for him to read. The book was "Socialism, Critical and Constructive", by James Ramsay MacDonald who at that time was Prime Minister of Britain.

Mr. GRAYDON: Those fellows read it too.

Mr. BENTLEY: What did Ottawa say?

Mr. COLDWELL: That it was a good book for him to read, and he received it. That was back in 1923 or 1924.

Mr. GRAYDON: That is the time of their conversion.

Mr. COLDWELL: I am afraid they are not yet converted.

Mr. GRAYDON: They have gone a long way.

Mr. COLDWELL: The hon. member for Peel is a distinguished citizen of a province in which his own party laid fairly wide foundations of public ownership which will be extremely useful later on when we come to extend public ownership in the form we advocate. I refer, of course, to the hydro electric system of Ontario.

It seems to me that we need to strengthen, as the hon. member for Lake Centre said this afternoon—and I think this was the best part of his address, as a matter of fact—the protection of the individual in our country after what we have seen in recent days, against arbitrary arrest, detention without due process of law, and search and seizure except by the process of law. When arrests are made, charges should be laid promptly. Never again, I hope, will any persons, no matter of what they may be accused, be whisked away somewhere, so that their friends and relatives do not know where they are, and be denied access to counsel. I do not believe that will happen again, because I believe the government finally felt that, while the circumstances may have been grave, such procedure could not be justified.

So when arrests are made, the charges should be laid promptly; the opportunity to plead should be given promptly as well as the opportunity to consult counsel regarding the charges which have been laid. I say again that I agree with the hon. member for Lake Centre when he says that violations of these principles by the present government may be dangerous precedents for a government in the future, unless we are prepared to write into the statutes of our country measures giving protection against such incidents recurring in the future.

I spoke of freedom of religion. Freedom of religion is a fundamental right of every individual, and I said that it should be restated over and over again whenever we have an opportunity to do so.

As I have already said, the rights of individuals should be uniform across Canada. I am proud of the fact that in my own province of Saskatchewan, under the first C.C.F. government to be elected there, a comprehensive bill of rights has been enacted. That is an example which I hope will be followed by other provinces and by this dominion. I am proud of that enactment. I think it is significant that the first government to be elected in Canada which advocated the principles of democratic socialism was the first government in Canada to place on the statute books a comprehensive bill of rights. I believe it shows more completely than all the words which can be spoken exactly where we stand with regard to human freedom.

Mr. GRANT: The next one was Prince Edward Island.

Mr. MacINNIS: Yes; your labour bill.

Mr. KNOWLES: The hon. member spoke out of turn there.

Mr. COLDWELL: So far as the interruption of the hon. gentleman is concerned, may I say that the hon. member sits in this house as a Liberal; it is true, Liberal with a capital "L." But when I look back on the history of liberalism with a small "l", and what has taken place in Prince Edward Island, may I tell him—

Mr. KNOWLES: It is a case of liberalism gone to "L".

Mr. COLDWELL: That is very good, but hardly appropriate for the record. The hon. member's liberalism has fallen from the high pedestal on which the old-fashioned nineteenth century Liberals once placed it. I say that it is not liberalism; it is the height of reactionaryism, and I hope that the people of Prince Edward Island will endeavour to remove that blot from the escutcheon of their province.

So I say I am proud of the fact that a socialist government in Saskatchewan enacted a bill of rights to the extent that authority to do so was within its competence. From what was said in the debate at that time I know that that government would be prepared to discuss with the federal government the writing into our statutes of a bill of rights, even if it means granting to the federal authority certain legislative prerogatives which the province now enjoys under our constitution. Let me say that what one province does is not enough. All Canadians, wherever they live, should have the same fundamental rights and the same fundamental freedoms.

Before I sit down, Mr. Speaker, I want to say I believe that no Canadian delegation can go to the united nations and sit on committees dealing with this problem until we have ourselves done something to lay the foundations more securely for human rights and fundamental freedoms in our own country. When we have done that, we can then go there and criticize more effectively and conscientiously those countries which today are denying the elementary rights of human freedom. In the past few years we have seen many interferences with human rights. We have seen indignity after indignity, torture and death inflicted upon men and women of various races, creeds, colours or political opinions. I care not what may be the race or creed or colour or political opinion of a man or woman; he or she must be safeguarded in the exercise of those fundamental rights and human freedoms.

Mr. ILSLEY: I wish to raise a question of order, Mr. Speaker; I am not taking part in the debate. On Friday evening the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) moved an amendment to the resolution in the words which are to be found at page 2847 of Hansard for April 9. My submission is that the amendment is not in order, for two or three reasons.

In the first place it is in essence a separate motion rather than an amendment. The motion itself is to set up a committee, and it prescribes the terms of reference to that committee. If this amendment had sought to add to the duties or functions or purposes of the committee it would have been in order. Instead of that, it seeks to cast a duty upon the executive of the government of Canada, and therefore in essence is a separate motion and not an amendment.

Secondly, and I submit this ground with great confidence, the amendment would cast upon the Supreme Court of Canada the duty of doing what the committee is to be appointed to do. One of the duties of the committee is to consider what is the legal and constitutional situation in Canada with respect to such rights. The object of the amendment is to take that function away from the committee and place it instead with the Supreme Court of Canada. If that reference were made to the supreme court the matter would then become sub judice and the committee would be unable, during the time the matter was being considered by the supreme court, to consider what is the legal and constitutional situation in Canada with respect to such rights. The two objects cannot co-exist in the same resolution. Then the resolution would say the committee is to determine what is the legal and constitutional situation in Canada with respect to such rights, and the amendment would say that for a period at least, while it is assumed the committee will be sitting, the Supreme Court of Canada is to consider that very question.

I think there are other grounds as well but I shall not mention them. I just want to say that the two grounds I have raised are without prejudice to such other grounds as may exist; but I submit these two grounds, and certainly the second one, with confidence.

Mr. SPEAKER: Do any other hon. gentlemen wish to speak to the point of order?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: My submission is that the amendment is really an enlargement of the motion and as such is in order. My right hon. friend said his strongest objection was the second one he raised, that it would cast upon the Supreme Court of Canada the duty of deciding what is legal and constitutional. As a matter of fact the motion now reads:

> . . . in the light of the provisions contained in the charter of the united nations, and the establishment by the economic and social council thereof of a commission on human rights, what is the legal and constitutional situation in Canada with respect to such rights . . .

The only way any committee can determine what is the legal and constitutional position in Canada is by a submission provided under the Supreme Court Act. No amount of discussion on the part of the committee can add to or subtract in the slightest from the legal and constitutional situation. Last year we found ourselves in the position that grave doubts concerning the matter were expressed by the deputy minister of justice. With a view to resolving those doubts, as Your Honour knows, the matter was submitted to the deans of law schools and the attorneys general of the several provinces. They merely expressed their opinions on the subject; and the only body that can determine what is the legal and constitutional situation in Canada is the supreme court. Without that decision, any discussion by a committee would be merely technical discussion and would not be in any way final or definite. If the committee is to learn these legal and constitutional matters, the supreme court alone should determine them.

Mr. ILSLEY: Then should the committee not recommend that there be a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Well, Mr. Speaker, my right hon. friend has changed his attitude slightly. A moment ago he advanced with certainty—

Mr. ILSLEY: Not at all.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Please; after all I did not interrupt the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. ILSLEY: But I have not changed my attitude.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I should like to know what it is but a change of attitude. Certainly that is my inference when a moment ago the right hon. gentleman said a submission to the supreme court would take away from this committee the right to determine the legal and constitutional position.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is correct.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Now he advances the argument that if the wording were slightly changed and the committee were given the right to ask for that power, then it would be proper. I submit that is exactly what he has done; he has altered his position.

Mr. KNOWLES: I should like to say a few words with respect to the point of order raised by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley). At the outset I wish to say I am in favour of the substance of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker), and anything I say with respect to the point of order is aimed at getting what he seeks, in a proper way. It does seem to me that there is some validity to the two points raised by the Minister of Justice. First of all, the amendment moved by the hon. member for Lake Centre would add, to a motion setting up a committee, an instruction to the government. It seems to me that is something altogether different, and its propriety as an amendment would have to be studied. Then there is the other point raised by the minister, that if the amendment were carried and the motion as amended were adopted it would result in the same subject matter being referred to two bodies, the committee and the Supreme Court of Canada. In that event it seems to me that the course indicated by the Minister of Justice might follow, namely, that, with the matter being before the Supreme Court of Canada, for a time at least it would be sub judice and therefore not capable of being discussed by the committee.

My reason for speaking is not to confuse the situation but to express the hope that if, after listening to the arguments on both sides, Your Honour should rule the amendment out of order, that will not necessarily be the end of the matter. It does seem to me that it would be possible to meet the objections raised by the Minister of Justice by some other member moving another amendment.

Mr. GRAYDON: You are getting ready for that now.

Mr. KNOWLES: I have it already prepared, but I am ready to let the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Graydon) have it so that he can move it.

Mr. GRAYDON: It is no surprise to me; but I will not move it, although I have not seen it.

Mr. KNOWLES: My suggestion is that the very same wording proposed by the hon. member for Lake Centre could be proposed as a third or fourth paragraph; but I have given away the only copy I have, so that I cannot read it.

Mr. GRAYDON: You may have it back.

Mr. KNOWLES: It could be added as a third or fourth paragraph—in that part of the motion which gives powers to the committee. One of the powers given to the committee could be the power to request a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada. It seems to me that not only would that be in order, inasmuch as it would be an extension of the powers of the committee to be set up, but it would also leave to the committee the decision as to whether or not it wants this matter referred to the Supreme Court of Canada. In other words, the matter would not be taken out of the committee's hands against its will, but would go to the courts only when the committee so decided.

May I make it clear that I am not trying to steal the thunder of the hon. member for Lake Centre. On the contrary I am just trying to be helpful; and I hope that if Your Honour does rule the present amendment out of order someone else—I would not hesitate to do it myself, but a member of the Progressive Conservative party could do it if he wished—would move this amendment which would serve to meet the objection of the Minister of Justice, so that we may achieve the desirable objective set out by the hon. member for Lake Centre, namely, that at some stage of the proceedings we shall have, not the opinions of provincial attorneys general, not the opinions of deans of schools of law, but the opinion of the Supreme Court of Canada.

Mr. SPEAKER: Before the point of order was raised this afternoon, I had given consideration to the amendment of the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) and, in that connection, had prepared the following ruling:

The main motion proposes that a select committee be set up to consider, inter alia, what is the legal and constitutional situation in Canada with respect to human rights and fundamental freedoms. The hon. member for Lake Centre has moved in amendment that in order to assist the committee in its deliberations the government immediately submit to the Supreme Court of Canada such questions as are necessary to determine to what extent the preservation of the fundamental freedoms of religion, speech, press, assembly and the maintenance of constitutional safeguards of the individual are matters of federal jurisdiction.

This amendment actually proposes that the supreme court be asked to consider the same matter that the main motion proposes to refer to a select committee. It seems to me that both those propositions cannot be approved at the same time by the house. If the constitutional situation of human rights is submitted to the supreme court it thereby becomes sub judice and cannot be considered by the committee until the court has given its decision. The question cannot be before two public bodies at the same time. For this reason I feel bound to rule the amendment out of order.

Mr. E. G. HANSELL (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, a motion similar to this, to set up a committee to look into and to recommend with respect to matters concerning human rights and fundamental freedoms, was passed at the last session of parliament. The present motion is made to set up the same type of committee for this year's deliberations.

I fancy the government must attach some considerable importance to the committee by reason of the fact that the speech from the throne read by His Excellency at the commencement of the session contained a recommendation that a committee be set up for this purpose.

While much has been said in debate with respect to human rights and fundamental freedoms as they are related to the united nations organization, I shall not deal with that phase of the subject. This afternoon I shall sound a note which I fancy will not be accepted any too readily in some parts of Canada, and perhaps not too readily in some parts of this House of Commons.

I am not so much impressed by arguments which have been used by those who advocate the need for a bill of rights for Canada. We talk about freedom of speech; we talk about freedom of religion and freedom of association; but I am always inclined to ask myself which of these freedoms we have lost, or which of them we are in danger of losing.

Have we not always had these freedoms; do they not still exist? The only freedom which people in this country have not realized is economic freedom. And when one proposes a way in which that freedom could be established, his proposal is taboo. In what way are our human rights and fundamental freedoms endangered today? To hear some speak, one would be almost led to the conclusion that the present administration must be on the verge of taking some of those freedoms from us. Of course in time of war we have witnessed the government exercising certain controls which were necessary in wartime. We have delegated, by legislation, the power to the present government to institute those controls. We have been waiting patiently for the government to release them since the war.

That release may not be taking place as quickly as some of us might wish. Personally, however, I cannot quite believe that the present administration desires to take away from Canadians their human rights and fundamental freedoms. I have been sitting in this corner of the house for about thirteen years looking at pretty much the same faces on the treasury benches. I have opposed much that they have proposed; but I cannot quite bring myself to the belief that they are so lax in their loyal Canadianism that they would interfere today with the human rights and fundamental freedoms of Canadians.

I have associated with my Conservative friends. They may some time or another take over the reins of office. They may not have a solution for the economic freedom of the nation, but I am quite sure that if they were in office they would not assume their responsibilities with any idea of curtailing our human rights and fundamental freedoms.

I have listened to our C.C.F. friends and I do not know that I am so enthusiastic about our human rights and fundamental freedoms being so safe in their hands. I cannot quite bring myself to believe that all this crying aloud in Canada for a bill of rights is so necessary. Why all the hollering?

Mr. JAQUES: Just a smoke-screen.

Mr. HANSELL: Even those who would have destroyed our freedom in Canada during the past were left free in the matter of freedom of speech, freedom of the press and freedom of assembly. The fact is we did not hear a great deal about a bill of rights in Canada until the freedom of the communists appeared to be in jeopardy. It was not until the government began to crack down on communistic activities that the cry arose and certain people in Canada began to clamour for the protection of our freedom. That is so; there is no question about it.

What freedoms have we been denied in Canada? What freedoms have Canadians been denied that communists or anyone else would restore to us? Indeed, what freedoms and human rights would the communists give us that we have not already? I ask that question in all sincerity.

I am as convinced as I ever could be that traitors to our way of life are behind this clamour for a bill of rights to protect our fundamental freedoms. What do they want it for? They want it in order that they may be free to destroy the way of free men. I should like someone to answer this question if they can. I want to know if a traitor has the right to the freedoms inherent in our democratic way of life which he seeks to destroy?

I said I was convinced that behind this clamour for a bill of rights was the voice of communism. Even my good friend, the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker), for whom I have the greatest regard, can be fooled. He is a very able debater; he is a very able gentleman within his own field as a legal exponent, but I am afraid that on this subject his mental vision has been cramped into the musty confines of the court room. He should enlarge his scope of vision; he should lift his sights; he should attempt to extricate himself from the legal court room strait-jacket.

When he has done that and has considered the subject in its wider concept he should then examine himself and ask himself whether or not the speeches which he has made in and out of this house on the subject of a bill of rights would be acceptable in communist circles. I believe he would have to conclude that if he gave his speeches on this subject he would be welcomed with open arms into every communist organization in Canada. Let him analyse that and ask himself that question.

I enjoy his speeches. I enjoyed the one he made this afternoon and with much of it I agree. However I must confess that I was a bit confused this afternoon. I assure him that I shall read his speech in Hansard tomorrow and attempt to analyse it more thoroughly. It seemed to me that at one time he indicated that our human rights and fundamental freedoms came under provincial jurisdiction, while at other times he seemed to indicate that he thought they should come under federal jurisdiction. I am a little confused there. I should like to know if he advocates that our human rights and fundamental freedoms should come under the authority of an international organization. That seems to me to be the big issue.

I said that perhaps what I had to say would not be readily accepted in some parts of Canada. During the recent past since there has been this cry for a bill of rights we have received a good deal of correspondence, some of it from organizations known as organizations for the preservation of our human rights and fundamental freedoms. I think anyone who is in the know does know that organizations throughout the United States and Canada which are pressing for a bill of rights are nothing more or less than communist fronts.

The other day I received a letter from the Civil Rights Union of Toronto, and I suppose all hon. members received a similar letter. The subject matter of the letter dealt with the LaCroix bill. I am not concerned with the merits or the demerits of that bill; I am concerned only with the fact that this letter was written on the letterhead of the Civil Rights Union, an organization which appears to regard our civil rights as being so precious. Who are the people attached to this organization as indicated by the names on the letterhead? I shall read them to you, Mr. Speaker.

The chairman is Mrs. M. H. Spaulding, secretary, Miss Dorothy Henderson; Jack Cowan, A. T. DeLury, Barker Fairley, Leopold Infeld, A. Y. Jackson, C. S. Jackson, C. B. Macpherson, Ben Manson, F. W. Park, H. C. Pentland, J. H. Sword, J. M. Wainberg. Will anyone say that some of these people are not communists?

Mr. KNOWLES: Jack Sword is not.

Mr. HANSELL: Some at least of them belong to the Labour Progressive party in this country. Analyse their records. Some of them may be respectable people; I do not know, but the old adage still holds good with me, "birds of a feather flock together". Let us not forget that it is quite possible to judge the colour of a movement by the personalities sponsoring it.

Here is another letter which came during the sittings of last year's committee. It comes, according to the letterhead, from the Committee for Bill of Rights, and the address is given as Toronto. The letter asks the committee to look into certain matters. I quote this paragraph from it:

> The constitution of Canada, of which the B.N.A. Act is the principal written part, is a constitution "similar in principle to that of the United Kingdom," and embraces by implication but nowhere expressly sets forth in binding and written form such fundamental freedoms as freedom of speech, religion, assembly, press and association, nor does it afford protection for the individual against arbitrary arrest, seizure and excessive bail, and other like civil liberties and human rights.

The next paragraph refers to legislative or administrative action and protection through the courts. The passage I have quoted is, I suggest, an attack upon the present administration. Of course it is not the first time they have been attacked; I have attacked them myself a good many times. But this attack on the present administration arises from their handling of the spy ring not so long ago. I am not going to criticize the government for that because, as a matter of fact, I do not disagree with anything they did in that respect. If I had anything to reprimand the government for it would be for allowing that situation to develop. But I ask this question. Who but a traitor or saboteur is in danger of arbitrary arrest? I wish someone would answer that question. I should like the Committee for Bill of Rights which sent in this submission to answer that question if they can. Who but a traitor or saboteur to our nation is in danger of seizure and excessive bail? I should like to know who is. I should like to know who would arrest these men and haul them into court unduly. It is only the traitor and saboteur who are in danger of anything of that kind. I do not think this government, or any other possible government, except perhaps one that might be remotely looming on the horizon, would do such a thing. Let these people say who would do these things. If they say, but some day a government might arise that would do these things, let them name that possibility. The only one that I can see at the present time is the communists, the reds.

Mr. JAQUES: The pinks.

Mr. HANSELL: Or the pinks, who perhaps are on the way. Here is another question I would ask. Even though these specific items, freedom of speech, freedom of religion, freedom of assembly, freedom of the press and freedom of association are written into our constitution, does anyone imagine or suggest for a moment that a communist government would regard these constitutional rights as inviolable? Why, the constitution itself would at once become a scrap of paper.

This Committee for Bill of Rights, whose address is Toronto, and which sends in this submission, sends an accompanying list of names of people who are supposed to be supporting the committee's efforts for a bill of rights, and in order to save time, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might be given permission to put the list of names on Hansard without reading them.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): Has the hon. member leave of the house to put the list on Hansard?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Other hon. MEMBERS: No.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): There must be unanimous consent. There was objection, so that perhaps the hon. member had better read the list if he wishes it to appear in Hansard.

Mr. HANSELL: It would take considerable time to read them because they cover two foolscap pages. There are about two hundred names.

Mr. WEIR: Who are they?

Mr. HANSELL: The Committee for Bill of Rights wrote to the house committee suggesting that our human rights and fundamental freedoms be embodied in the constitution, and they submitted with their letter a list of names gathered throughout Canada of people who are supporting them in this move.

Mr. KNIGHT: Is there any proof that these people are supporting them?

Mr. HANSELL: I think we shall have to take it that they support them. The committee would not submit the list without soliciting the support of these people. I could read the list, but why detain the house all that time?

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): I will ask the hon. members again if they agree to the hon. member putting this list of names on Hansard.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, if we are to have the list of names put on Hansard we should also have the whole document put on. I do not see much object in having the list of names unless we know what they are supporting.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): Unless there is agreement by the house the hon. member cannot put the list on the record. I ask again if the house is agreeable or opposed.

Some hon. MEMBERS: We are opposed.

Mr. HANSELL: I did not get unanimous consent. Those who have not given unanimous consent have played right into my hands.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Most of us would be happy to be there.

Mr. HANSELL: Thank you. Some interest will be aroused now as to who those men are. I shall read a few of them. There is Mr. Carl J. Stimpfle, president of the farmers' union of Alberta.

Mr. McCUAIG: Nothing the matter with him.

Mr. HANSELL: There is not? The man is a communist if ever one did live. I mention him only as one. If Doctor Sidney Smith wants to have his name associated with him, it is here.

Mr. JAQUES: And a good many more.

Mr. HANSELL: I will say this, Mr. Speaker. I thought I was doing these people a favour by pointing out to them who their associates were in this matter. Do they know? Did they know what they were supporting? I fancy some of them at least thought they were supporting the preservation of our freedoms against communism, and, being unaware that the reverse was the truth, they willingly lent their names and support to a sponsorship that would steal our freedoms from us. I repeat, I thought I was doing these people a signal service by pointing out who their associates were.

To my mind there are only two classes of people who are crying for a bill of rights in Canada, and having it written into our constitution under the sinister pressure of communist friends. Those two classes are traitors and dupes.

Mr. JAQUES: Reds and pinks.

Mr. HANSELL: We can think that one over, and I am saying that with some responsibility. I believe that to be absolutely true.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: May I ask a question? In which category will the hon. member put Doctor Sidney Smith?

Mr. HANSELL: Doctor Sidney Smith is a very clever man, but I am going to say that the cleverest of men have fallen for these communist fronts. Did not the spy report indicate to us that the Canadian-Soviet friendship league was a communist front? May I say to the hon. member for Dauphin that his own leader was one of the prominent men in that organization. I will ask him, was he a communist or was he duped into it? Let him answer that one.

Mr. KNOWLES: So was the Prime Minister.

Mr. HANSELL: If he was, that only adds weight and force to my argument, that even very intelligent people can be duped into these things.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend does not say that my name is on that list, does he?

Mr. HANSELL: No, I am not saying that the Prime Minister's name is on that list to which I referred. What the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre reminded me of was that the Prime Minister supported the Canadian-Soviet friendship league, which was a communist front. His name was prominently advertised in that connection.

Mr. CLAXTON: It was not a communist front at that time.

Mr. HANSELL: Oh!

Mr. BLACKMORE: Who says so?

Mr. HANSELL: Now, Mr. Chairman, we have the Minister of National Defence, a keen-minded man, saying that it was not a communist front at that time.

Mr. CLAXTON: I asked the question if that is not so; that it was not so at that time.

Mr. HANSELL: All I will say to him is this, if it was not a communist front at the time, then while they were in the organization the communists were clever enough to put it over them and make it a communist front. They did not safeguard their organization. If that is what he says, this is my answer to him: all these organizations parading under these fancy names were communist fronts. Let it not be forgotten that error does not go around parading as error. As one man once upon a time said, two beautiful young women went bathing one day. One of these young women was named Truth and the other Error. When Truth took a dive into the water Error put on her clothes and has been parading around ever since in Truth's clothes. Perhaps that is why all these intelligent man have been falling for Error.

It is nearly six o'clock, and my hon. friend wants to ask another question.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: It is a very short one. May I ask if the hon. member agrees with the views expressed by Mr. W. D. Herridge, with whom he was once very closely associated, in his book called, "Which Kind of Revolution?"

Mr. JAQUES: We do not agree with him.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: He is one of your gods.

Mr. HANSELL: I have not read the book; therefore I do not know whether I agree with him or not.

Mr. KNOWLES: He was the founder of new democracy.

Mr. HANSELL: I have a sheaf of notes and I am not yet through with my speech. Perhaps I shall be able to give the rest of it on some other occasion.

Mr. JAQUES: After supper.

Mr. HANSELL: Unfortunately I cannot do that. I have to address a public meeting tonight and cannot be here at eight o'clock. I shall have to continue at some other time. Let me say this. Let us be on our guard in respect of these matters. These human rights and fundamental freedoms are precious to us and we have them. You can write these things into a constitution, but putting them on paper and making them law does not preserve them. They are principles of life, and they operate as an organism operates; as life operates. This government is not going to take them from us; perhaps no one in this house is going to take them from us. If you want to write them into law, all right; but that does not preserve them and it does not give them to us. What we have to be on guard against is this false and evil thing coming into our country and stealing from us our human rights and fundamental freedoms, making Ottawa, if you please, another Prague and Canada another Czechoslovakia. Remember this, the people of the satellite states talked the same way some of our Canadians are talking, before these rights were stolen from them. Let us remember that. I have a strange and strong conviction that I am right. Believe me, I am right. I am sorry I cannot go on tonight, but you will hear from me again, Mr. Speaker.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. JEAN FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Temiscouata): In the first place, Mr. Speaker, we must state the question and try to understand what is meant by liberty and freedom. My understanding of liberty is that it is the faculty of man to act within the limits of the law. It is a general definition, but there is not absolute liberty in this world. Ever since the Ten Commandments were given to man, there have been restrictions on his liberty. The object of the civil law—and in using that expression I take it in a broad sense; I mean the purpose of all laws made by man—is just to help man to act in conformity with the Ten Commandments. This is the principle of all legislation. Naturally there is too much of it and there are hindrances as a result of the excess of legislation. But I still persist in saying that freedom is the faculty given to man to act within the law.

There are, of course, some good laws and some bad ones. That is inevitable. That goes with the freedom of man. But law is conducive to order. The purpose of law is to maintain order, because order is the most desirable condition of society; and order in society is to be appreciated by men as the normal condition of affairs. When some men act as termites to destroy the pillars of state and to destroy order, that order must be maintained in spite of the efforts of the few to destroy it. This is why sanctions are necessary in order to maintain order in any well organized state. It is not a pleasure to pay taxes for the support of policemen, but it is done in all civilized countries in order that the laws shall be respected. There are constables at the various doors of this building. They do not arrest anybody. They are here just in case something wrong happens and just to maintain order and to restore order if ever it is disturbed.

There are some people who have more sympathy with those who destroy the order of society than with those who abide by the law. It is their right to think in that way, but it is my right to tell them that they are wrong. I remember the time during the war when people were so enthusiastic—at least, some of them were—in defending the liberties of the people that they were calling the draftees "zombies". They thought those men ought to be sent to jail because they were not reporting at once after what had been said to them by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and some of the cabinet ministers. An atmosphere had been created, and that atmosphere was inflated by prejudice. Those men who are now the champions of liberty and of fundamental rights were precisely those who were most unjust toward an honest and respectable class of our population. And they were less excusable for being so prejudiced and bigoted, because there were some exemptions for people who said they were conscientious objectors. But when a farmer was honest enough to say that he was not a conscientious objector, he was called a zombie, and had "traitor" written on his brow by those men who today advocate liberty for all. It is a great conversion, and I admire the zeal of the neophytes in the predication of liberty and freedom.

Before going farther, I want to say how greatly surprised I am that the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell) was not given the opportunity to table the list of names he mentioned or to put them on Hansard. How can we listen to speeches about human rights, freedom of speech, the freedom of this or the freedom of that, when objection is taken to allowing a member to put on Hansard a list of names that has been sent to each member of the committee on human rights? I have that list here. I wonder if the house will accept it and allow it to be put on Hansard as it is? If not, I will read it.

Mr. KNOWLES: What is it?

Mr. POULIOT: It contains the names of those who are for legislation on human rights.

Mr. SPEAKER: Has the hon. member the unanimous consent of the house to table this list?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. ILSLEY: Is that not the list which was just refused?

Mr. SPEAKER: If there is no objection—

Mr. POULIOT: It is a list of names of those who favour a committee on human rights, and who wrote to the members of the committee.

Mr. ILSLEY: Lay it on the table.

Mr. KNOWLES: Is it the same list that was refused from the Social Credit corner this afternoon?

Mr. POULIOT: It is the same list, but it was not sufficiently explained. It is a list of names hon. members have received.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have already put the question. If there is no objection the hon. gentleman may table the list. If there is objection he may not do so.

Mr. POULIOT: Then it may be tabled?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Read it.

Mr. POULIOT: Then I will read it; and this shows how prejudiced in fact are the hon. members who say they are for human rights. They consider it a shame to mention the names of some communists and some honourable people who are in favour of this. They are for human rights. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley) is for human rights; the hon.

[Mr. Pouliot.]

member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has prepared a long speech on that subject, but they do not want to be told who are their partners. They are not sincere about it. This shows what a joke it is from beginning to end.

Mr. KNOWLES: That is an unparliamentary remark.

Mr. POULIOT: Well, it is true.

Mr. KNOWLES: I rise to a point of order. The hon. member for Temiscouata is making the assertion that those of us who object to this list being tabled without being read are insincere. I submit that the word "insincere" applied in that case is out of order and unparliamentary, and should be withdrawn.

Mr. POULIOT: Those who are for human rights apparently do not want this list on Hansard, and I say they are not sincere.

Mr. KNOWLES: Read it.

Mr. POULIOT: If the word is unparliamentary I withdraw it. I withdraw everything that is unparliamentary, because I am going to read these names.

Mr. SPEAKER: I must call the attention of the hon. member to the fact that this afternoon, when I was absent from the chamber, an hon. member who had the floor asked the same privilege the hon. gentleman is asking now, and it was refused.

Mr. POULIOT: Well, I say it is a joke to speak of human rights, freedom of speech and all that bunk. Now I will take the names one by one:

Vancouver: Earle Bireny, Dr. Norman Black, Kenneth Drury, Hugh Dobson, John Goss, Dr. A. E. Grauer, Lawren Harris, Adolph Koldofsky, Leon Ladner, K.C., Hunter Lewis, R. J. McMaster, Dr. Norman McKenzie, Elmore Philpott, Dorothy Steeves, Watson Thomson.

Victoria: Dr. J. M. Ewing, Rev. A. E. Whitehouse.

New Westminster: Dorothy Livesay.

Edmonton: L. Y. Cairns, K.C., C. H. Huestis, George Hunter, Elmer Roper, M.P.P., Carl J. Stimpfle, R. H. Settle, F. G. Winspear.

Calgary: Alex Calhoun, Gladstone Virtue, K.C.

Saskatoon: F. T. Appleby, Dean F. C. Conkite.

Regina: Hon. J. W. Corman, K.C., Mrs. Margaret Cooper, Hon. T. C. Douglas, Rev. J. P. C. Fraser, Rev. Homer Lane, Dr. H. C. Newlands, C. G. Palmer, A. B. Ross.

Winnipeg: Grant Dexter, Samuel Freedman, K.C., Eileen Garland, Jos. Harris, E. J. McMurray, K.C., David Owen, Victor Sifton, Dr. Carleton W. Stanley, Dr. A. W. Trueman, Dean D. S. Woods, W. J. Waines.

Ottawa: Mrs. John Bird, Patrick Conroy, Phileas Cote, M.P., R. E. G. Davis, Maurice Fyfe, Major J. C. G. Herwig, J. M. Macdonnell, M.P., A. B. MacDonald, A. R. Mosher, Senator Arthur Roebuck, Alistair Stewart, M.P.

Toronto: J. E. Atkinson, Dr. Gordon Agnew, Gerston Allen, C. A. Ashley, Andrew Brewin, Dr. Peter Bryce, Karel Buzak, George Bagwell, John Coulter, Dr. E. A. Corbett, Murray Cotterill, Jack Cooke, Dr. Harry Cassidy, Capt. R. G. Cavell, Dr. W. A. Cameron, Dr. John Coburn, Ethel Chapman, Warren Cook, William Arthur Deacon, Rev. Gordon Domm, Rev. J. T. Dawson, Oakley Dalgleish, Rabbi A. L. Feinberg, Mrs. Kaspar Fraser, Rev. J. M. Finlay, Anne Fromer, Prof. J. Finkelman, Edith Fowke, Mrs. W. L. Grant, G. M. A. Grube, Margaret Gould, Lorne Green, Marvin Gelber, Saul Grand, Leonard Harman, Andrew Hebb, Irving Himel, Prof. Charles E. Hendrie, Emmanuel Hahn, Leopold Infeld, Dr. Harold Innes, Canon W. W. Judd, Rev. Wm. Jenkins, Emma Kaufman, Prof. J. D. Ketchum, Dr. C. C. Lingard, George McCullagh, Sir Ernest MacMillan, C. H. Millard, Elliott L. Marrus, G. H. Maitland, J. S. Midanik, Dr. S. K. Ngai, Dr. Lorne Pierce, Dr. E. J. Pratt, A. F. W. Plumptre, Dr. Stanley Russell, Ben Rose, Dr. A. Rose, Ralph Staples, Dr. Sidney Smith, Provost R. S. K. Seeley, B. K. Sandwell, Mrs. Margaret Spaulding, Rev. J. Lavell Smith, George Tatham, Rev. E. H. Toye, Mrs. P. Tanner, Bessie Touzel, E. B. Titus, William M. Teresio, Herman Voaden, David Vanek, Dr. Malcolm Wallace, Jack Wainberg, Drummond Wren, Leon Weinstein, Prof. H. Wastaneys, Isabel Wilson.

Windsor: George Burt, Mayor Arthur J. Reaume.

Kingston: Lt.-Col. Eric Harrison, A. R. M. Lower, Gregory Vlastos.

Hamilton: Mayor Sam Lawrence.

Montreal: Dean W. H. Britain, Rev. Angus Cameron, Madame Therese Casgrain, C. C. Papineau-Couture, K.C., Gerald Cragg, Rev. Claude deMestral, George V. Ferguson, Gwethalyn Graham, Madame Constance Garneau, Paul LaFontaine, Arthur Lismer, Dr. J. C. Meakins, John McConnell, Hugh MacKenna, Roger Ouimet, Dr. Wilder Penfield, Leslie Roberts, F. R. Scott, Dr. Baruch Silverman, Dr. D. L. Thompson, Frederick B. Taylor, Gordon Webber, Mme. Pauline Donalda.

Shawinigan Falls: Dr. C. N. Crutchfield.

Fredericton: The Hon. C. H. Blakeny, Dr. Fletcher Peacock, Dr. F. J. Toole.

Halifax: Dr. H. B. Atlee, Donald Crowdis, Dr. L. J. Donaldson, C. F. Fraser, F. G. Gilkie, Rev. J. W. A. Nicholson, L. Richter, Lloyd Shaw, George A. Smith, L. E. Shaw, George Wilson.

Glace Bay: Freeman Jenkins.

Kentville: Robert Leslie.

Antigonish: Alex MacIntyre.

Now I say to you and the house, sir, that I am quite a good sport, and there was no reason to object to the reading of the list. I make no comment about anyone, but it shows how narrow-minded and bigoted some hon. members are.

Mr. KNOWLES: On a point of order—

Mr. POULIOT: I do not want any interruptions now. I have been fair enough, and I do not want to be interrupted.

Mr. KNOWLES: I rise on a question of privilege. I did not object to the reading of the list. My objection was to having it placed on Hansard without being read, and I am glad I made the objection.

Mr. POULIOT: The hon. gentleman could not object to the reading of the list; therefore it is a good thing he did not do so.

Mr. KNOWLES: That is right.

Mr. POULIOT: He must read the authors on parliamentary practice, and moreover he must understand them. Perhaps he should read a little less, but he must spend more time in trying to understand the spirit of the law as well as the letter. I have read this list. It contains the names of some well-known communists as well as the names of some other good people who have been led into error by those communists and the people who make themselves the advocates of the communists in the House of Commons.

What is the purpose of this discussion about human rights? What has been the sequence of it? The other day I suggested that the West Indies should be annexed to Canada, and some unpleasant remarks were made about this country by a cabinet minister there. I take the following from the Vancouver Sun:

W. A. Bustmante, minister of communications in the island government and virtual prime minister, said: "I will resist with all influence at my command any attempt by Canada for Jamaica to become part of its dominion.

That is a matter of opinion. Then he goes on to say:

The colour question is much more rampant in Canada than in the southern and western United States.

That is untrue. It is obviously untrue. If there had been no discussion of human rights last year, and if we had not set up a committee on human rights that man would not have been led into error by the people who represent Canada as a country where the rights of minorities are not respected, and where there is so much trouble for the coloured people.

This is untrue. But it is one result of that waste of time on so-called human rights. And I will tell something else to my hon. friend the member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker), who is one of my most coveted colleagues, a man who has the gift of eloquence, who is well read and a good debater. I am not interested in the opinion of Mrs. Roosevelt, the widow of a great man; I am not interested in what is said by Mr. Justice Douglas of the United States—his two heroes —or in what is said by the Marquess of Reading. They may say anything they like. Mrs. Roosevelt and Mr. Justice Douglas speak for the United States; they know nothing about conditions in Canada. And so it is with the Marquess of Reading.

If my hon. friend goes on quoting Mrs. Roosevelt and Reading and Douglas, then I shall answer by quoting Lin Yutang, the great philosopher, who was Chinese and who would think that those people were crazy.

Let us talk about Lake Centre now. If we are in that mess today, it is precisely because the government has wanted to appease him. He was crying for human rights, just the same as children cry for Castoria—"Human rights; human rights!" And when I wanted him to define what it was, he could not say anything.

He has now made a great suggestion. He has said that no statute passed by parliament should be amended by order in council. He was right on that, but he said it many times. I said the same thing long before we had this discussion; and the committee on human rights and fundamental freedoms will not change it.

He suggests that there should be amendments to ensure freedom of the press, something which I would favour, provided that the press remains within the bounds of normal truth and justice. The press often jumps over the fence. He suggests an amendment to section 688 of the criminal code. Do we need a committee on human rights for that? He wants a standing committee on civil rights; but we have no civil rights. Will he change the constitution? Civil rights are not ours. That belongs to the provinces, and rightly so; and I am all for it. Ottawa has no business to interfere with them any longer.

They complain about centralization; they complain about bureaucracy in Ottawa, and they want the bureaucrats at Ottawa to have jurisdiction over civil rights. Well, where is the logic in that? Then, not satisfied with that, this man, who denounces bureaucracy, is for red tape and for bureaucracy because he is not satisfied without a standing committee on civil rights, when Ottawa has no jurisdiction whatever over civil rights.

But he wants more than that. He wants a civil liberties division in the Department of Justice, and said that it would be a reservoir, a fountain of justice, or something of that description.

Then he wants repeal of the Foreign Exchange Control Act. On that he just repeats what I have said, without mentioning the committee on human rights. I am for that repeal.

He says he wants another dominion-provincial conference to be called. Called for what? If Ottawa is to take everything, according to his suggestion, then what is the use of a dominion-provincial conference? It would be the same thing as the invitations sent to the satellites of Moscow to go there to sign papers before Stalin. If the hon. member is logical with himself, if he is bold enough to state that Ottawa shall have a committee on civil rights, then the provinces are finished. That is one reason why I am opposed to this so-called business of human rights.

Then he referred to the income tax act. This has nothing to do with the income tax act. He referred then to workmen's compensation legislation—and I do not know whether it was he or the leader of the C.C.F. who made that reference. There is already a committee instituted for that purpose; it is just like a dog with two tails. They never have enough committees, to waste the time of parliament.

Then he referred to the conscience of the Canadian people. Let me say that the conscience of the Canadian people is pretty good, and that most Canadians are law-abiding. There should be no complaint about that. I find it strange when the hon. member leaves his audience under the impression that no one enjoys any civil rights, that no one has enjoyed any individual rights until now; not only until now, but until the millennium, when such legislation will be passed. He knows very well we have legislation to protect human rights, and those who insist upon human rights are those whom the hon. member for Macleod has called, and justly so, traitors and troublemakers. But they have to be kind to them.

If the government was right in instigating the spy probe, then there is no need to bring in legislation like that. Then, taking what has been said by the leader of the C.C.F. group, we find that he spoke about proceedings by poor people. Well, in Quebec they can proceed in forma pauperis, which gives a chance from the poorest to the richest.

He spoke about greater freedom and more fundamental freedoms. Those are the words which are used as propaganda by the termites who want to destroy the pillars of state. He stated that we have achieved complete freedom, but not a complete democratic society.

An hon. MEMBER: Who said that?

Mr. POULIOT: The leader of the C.C.F. party. Then he referred to the Archbishop of Canterbury, the dead one, who was much better than the one who is retired, and who is an active Soviet agent. He referred to the Archbishop of Canterbury and the share of labour.

An hon. MEMBER: Who is that?

Mr. POULIOT: I mean Fisher. I remember he gave swimming lessons to young girls in the Black sea. The picture appeared in Life magazine.

An hon. MEMBER: Who did?

Mr. POULIOT: Fisher, the former Archbishop of Canterbury. It was a full-page advertisement.

An hon. MEMBER: That was Inge.

Mr. POULIOT: He was trying to explain his propaganda. The article appeared in Life magazine. What I say is true. You may not agree with me but you will have to admit the facts. He said that we shall have no freedom until the dignity of man is recognized. I agreed so much with that in principle and in fact that I was the only one to defend the dignity of the working man during the war. I had no supporters when I defended the dignity of the working man in this house, when I argued that he ought to be respected because he was supporting the war effort. Now that the war is over, now that the working man, the labouring man has been abused by the press, by the politicians and by the soapbox orators, they begin to respect his dignity. They respect his dignity because of the next election.

Then he spoke of Hyde park. That is a small corner of the city of London. A small portion of that small corner is used by cranks who stand on soapboxes and say all kinds of silly nonsense. Nobody objects to them and nobody listens to them. A man may say he is the anti-Christ and another may say that he is our Lord. They are all crazy people, but they are not so crazy as to advocate silly legislation like this. When I was in London I passed through Hyde park many times and listened to these people. They were all ready to boast of themselves but they never spoke of legislation like this.

Here we have the Jehovah's Witnesses. We all remember what happened in regard to the Jehovah's Witnesses. They interfered with the freedom of others. I do not bother anyone and I do not want to be bothered by anybody; I want to have my peace. If these fellows annoy and disturb people they are acting against the provisions of some by-law or regulation and they are arrested.

Then take the padlock law of the province of Quebec. I can tell you what happened there. Mr. Lapointe was Minister of Justice and he was of the opinion that the law should be repealed. I did not think so and I sent a memorandum to the Prime Minister and told him that he would have to choose between Cardinal Villeneuve and Tim Buck. That is why that legislation was not disallowed. Cardinal Villeneuve was a greater man than Tim Buck. Cardinal Villeneuve's successor was a chaplain in the army and he did not sign the famous list that I read not long ago. That is history.

Do you not think that reform should start at home? Do you not think that the great trouble about freedom is that very few people think? Most people are ready to accept canned ideas, and the proof of this is in the list I read. A committee on human rights will not change anything that interferes with the freedom of man. What men and women have to do is to be introspective. They must banish the fears they have, the fear of losing patronage, the fear of losing personal advantage, the fear of losing something. Most people abdicate their right to think in order to gain some personal advantage. Everybody knows that is right.

We hear reference to the freedom of the press. I remember when King Edward VIII was being married the English press said that it was self-censored. The people of Canada are self-censored about everything. They are afraid to do anything; they are too shy. Is that liberty? Is that freedom? We need to think. Privately they tell us, "You are right;" openly they tell us, "You are wrong." What could be done by the committee to correct that? What the Canadian people need is a closed retreat where they can examine their souls and realize that reform must take place within each individual. When the individual reforms himself he will be much happier.

I have not treated this matter in a political way. I believe that all members should unite together to prove that they are not so credulous and so gullible as to swallow silly legislation like this which has been inspired by communists to destroy order in this country. When I see men of the intelligence of the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker), men of the intelligence of the leader of the C.C.F. (Mr. Coldwell); men of the intelligence of the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Croll), men of the intelligence and genius of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King); men of the intelligence of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley) getting together to do what Fred Rose proved in this house time and time again, I am discouraged.

Will there be a time when those who have great responsibilities in this country realize that the time has come when they have no right to be so credulous or to impose such a waste of time on the members of parliament by the creation of a committee on so-called human rights which will eventually destroy the rights of all by giving undue privileges to disorderly elements in this country?

Mr. J. M. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make just a few brief observations directed to just one point in this discussion. I shall not be nearly as exciting and certainly not nearly as long as the hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot).

I sympathize to some extent with those who say that the mere writing down in legislation of our rights, not only does not extend them but may even confine them. I sympathize with those who go back to the words of the poet and say that they want that freedom which—

> . . . slowly broadens down
> From precedent to precedent;

—and is not contained in statutes.

Nevertheless I think that in these days when we are subjected to such a flood of statutes which are confining our liberties in many ways we can be thankful to the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) who has drawn our attention to these things and who has suggested to us that we had better have a good look at them and not assume that methods and measures which have been sufficient in the past will necessarily be sufficient for the future.

My reason for rising this evening is merely to deal with one aspect of this matter, and that is the international aspect. In particular my purpose is to ask a question of the Minister of Justice, who is a serious man and whose words are taken at their face value as the words of few men are in this house. I want to ask him whether the international aspect of this thing is a serious matter or whether we are just playing with it. If one reads what he said the other evening, and I think he must have been very uneasy in some of the things he said, it seems to me that perhaps unwillingly, perhaps unintentionally, by the reading of the letter from the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. St. Laurent) explaining why we had done nothing he slipped into two things that I doubt very much he wished to slip into. This letter says that the reason for the delay, the reason which makes it impossible, I understand, for anything to happen at the next meeting of the international body is that we have gone past the date, and this letter of April 1, 1948, is a letter of delay. There are two reasons given for that delay: first of all, the government wished to refer this matter to parliament, and, further, that there had been no opportunity to discuss it as yet in parliament.

[Mr. Pouliot.]

I submit that both of those reasons are trivial reasons. They are really not the kind of reason we ordinarily get from the Minister of Justice for any of the things that he puts forward, for the government have not made us ordinary members feel that they really consider it necessary to come to us very often when they want to do anything. They have rather made us feel that they can go ahead very much on their own and tell us as, if and when they feel like it. Further, I think that anyone would say that if there had been any genuine desire on the part of the government to have this matter come up in parliament some weeks ago it could easily have come up. Surely for that reason, if for no other, we might have deferred the excise taxes bill. That would simply have been a matter of extending its illegality for a few weeks longer, and if the illegality of those taxes did not trouble the government at their inception I do not see why they need have been bothered at the continuance of that illegality for a few weeks longer.

I think we are entitled to know from the Minister of Justice, who is a serious man, whether this thing means anything. I have in my hands the Canadian Bar Review and I have looked at what is proposed to be done. I have looked at the draft international declaration and at the draft international covenant, and no one is likely to say that these are things which can be taken up in a light-hearted manner. They are very difficult things. It is outside our usual field perhaps to do these things, and the only reason I suppose we would contemplate doing them at all is when we reflect on what has happened in this world we live in during the last thirty years. I was thinking today of an incident that happened, which those who have had the misfortune to be as old as I will recall, in 1913 at Zabern. It is almost impossible to believe that a single act of brutality committed by a Prussian officer in Alsace could have rocked the whole world. I will read in a sentence what happened:

> In November, 1913, Zabern was the scene of a fracas which caused great bitterness in France and assumed the proportions of an international incident. A German lieutenant named Forstner grossly insulted Alsatian recruits, and a street riot followed. Twenty-nine persons were arrested. On December 2, Forstner caused the arrest of a boy at Zettweiler and struck him with his sabre. The affair led to a vote of censure on Bethmann-Hollweg in the Reichstag, but the military party secured the acquittal of Forstner on appeal to the war council.

Bethmann-Hollweg was the German Chancellor, I believe, at the time, and the vote of censure took place in the Reichstag, in what was then a real parliament. The only reason

I have read that is that we should remind ourselves that thirty-five years ago in this world it was possible for a single act of brutality committed in Alsace, then under German occupation, so to exercise public opinion throughout the whole world that it produced a crisis in the German government, and it is hardly too much to say that it shook the world. It seems almost incredible, almost like a fairy tale, because today you could have thousands of people killed and it would not shake anything.

It is interesting also to recall in Churchill's book on the life of his great ancestor, the Duke of Marlborough, that in the eighteenth century even war was partly civilized. The book says that in the eighteenth century the nations in peacetime did each other as much good as possible, and in wartime they did each other as little harm as possible.

It seems like a fairy tale. The only reason I mention it is that we should remind ourselves that we have moved back into the dark ages. That is where we are, and if there is anything that can possibly be done in the international sphere to serve mankind we should not regard it as a joke. It is not a joke. This is the most desperately urgent thing that could ever engage our attention, and so I ask the Minister of Justice, who is a serious man, whether he takes this matter seriously. We should not have it brought to us at all if it is not taken seriously, and if it is taken seriously we ought seriously to consider it.

The task is almost superhuman; I admit that. It may be that we should just say we cannot do it and that we should consider it no more; but before we say that I suggest that we should remind ourselves that if we do not do it, if we do not at least try to do it, sooner or later I think the third world war will come unless we can prevent it by some kind of vital association which we must take seriously. You will remember what happened to the league of nations. Why did it fail? Because people were bored with peace. They did not like peace. Peace is a dull thing. People get excited only in wartime. You could not get anyone to work for the league of nations society except long-haired cranks like myself, people who were regarded as queer people. We were told that people are combative, that they always have been, and that a second world war was sure to come. A lot of people were saying that who had never done anything themselves in the first world war. Now we have had a second world war, and many think we are to have a third world war. I do not know whether this thing is any good at all, but I think we are at least entitled to hear from the Minister of Justice whether he thinks it is a good thing.

Mr. DAVID CROLL (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, earlier this evening the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell) attempted to put on record a long list of names, and the hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) succeeded in putting them on the record. I think in fairness, not so much to the three members of the house whose names were included and who can look after themselves, but to those who are not members of the house, the country ought to know exactly what these people subscribed to, and for that reason I am going to complete the record by quoting from their statement in support of a bill of rights:

> The protection of the liberties of the subject has from time immemorial been the historic responsibility of parliament.
>
> The constitution of Canada, of which the B.N.A. Act is the principal written part, is a constitution "similar in principle to that of the United Kingdom," and embraces by implication but nowhere expressly sets forth in binding and written form such fundamental freedoms as freedom of speech, religion, assembly, press and association, nor does it afford protection for the individual against arbitrary arrest, seizure and excessive bail, and other like civil liberties and human rights.
>
> Recent events in Canada and throughout the world have demonstrated that it is desirable that such rights be stated with the utmost clarity in the written constitution of Canada, namely, in the B.N.A. Act, in order that all men and women in Canada shall know them and shall feel that their rights are secure from interference by legislative or administrative action, through the protection of the courts.
>
> We therefore urge that the parliament of Canada should by resolution seek an amendment to the B.N.A. Act, restraining the parliament of Canada and provincial legislatures from making or enforcing any laws abrogating the aforementioned liberties and, in particular, any laws interfering with freedom of religion, freedom of speech and expression, freedom of the press, freedom of assembly, freedom of association and organization, protection against excessive bail, protection of minorities, protection against cruel and unusual punishment and protection against arbitrary and abusive deprivation of life, liberty or property, and providing against the exile of Canadian citizens, establishing the above rights and the right to the franchise, to habeas corpus, to a fair trial with the assistance of counsel, all without discrimination as to race, sex, language or religion.
>
> Parliament has recently approved the charter of the united nations which declares it to be amongst the purposes of the united nations to promote and encourage respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion.
>
> It would be particularly timely when recent events have left in the minds of our people a vivid sense of the dangers of totalitarianism and the repression of civil liberties, and when the parliament of Canada has recently defined Canadian citizenship, that a solemn and explicit declaration of these fundamental freedoms hitherto implicit in our traditions, should now be enacted as part of our constitution. These rights would be in addition to, and in no way in derogation from existing minority rights already set forth in the B.N.A. Act.

We urge that the members of parliament of all parties should seize this opportunity to establish a bill of rights for all Canadians.

That is the statement which was subscribed to by the men and women whose names were placed on record earlier this evening. I for one, in common with these people, believe that there is need for a charter, for a bill of rights. That is not only self-evident, I think it is overwhelming. We are living today in a time of great stress. In some parts of the world it is almost hysteria. Here at home, and abroad, men are being driven to unreasonable and excessive acts, almost to the point where they besmirch the very cause they believe in. No matter where you look, from every corner of the world, Bogota, India, Palestine, yes, in Canada, we receive reports of almost meaningless violence. We Canadians have become accustomed, yes, I think we have become indifferent to acts of violence in distant lands, and last week we had occasion suddenly to find ourselves startled from our complacency and deeply disturbed by danger signals at home. We should be all disturbed by the undemocratic behaviour of the students in the city of Windsor. No Canadian can condone such an attack on civil liberties. A mob is a mob, whether it is in Canada or in Bogota; and for us to close our eyes to certain goings on seems to me an incentive to others who are tougher than these students to see if they cannot try it, since it seems to be easy to get away with; and one excess leads to another. It is obvious in the world today that there is a division between the attackers and the defenders, and the battlelines on ideological grounds are already being drawn.

We in Canada have always been well aware of the dangers of the extreme right and the dangers of the extreme left. We know that the extreme right led us to one war. Now the extreme left has at least the possibilities of another world conflict; and to us both extremes are hateful. We want to pursue the middle course. We have always wanted the course of freedom; but the middle course, the course of freedom has some obvious deficiencies, not the least of which is the lack of a formal instrument of freedom, a bill of rights. I am familiar with the two schools of thought who have been enjoying an academic field day on the subject for the past few years. One side wants a bill of rights written into the constitution. The other side says that in the last analysis civil rights are the result of an informed and intelligent public opinion and that they cannot be guaranteed by putting them into a statute. Both sides, if left to themselves, will probably be arguing happily for the next twenty years.

The point I wish to make is that a bill of rights is not an academic subject for debating societies, but a very real and a very live one and very much needed by Canadians today. There is no fundamental law in Canada guaranteeing civil liberties; there is no fundamental law in Canada prohibiting the exercise of state power in the denial of civil liberties. Ours is a negative freedom. Free speech, for instance, is in the position where it is not forbidden; but a negative freedom is not enough. There are amongst us many minorities, racial, religious, economic and political minorities, who are profoundly upset at the present state of freedom in Canada. They see a growing spirit of intolerance manifesting itself in not just isolated cases here and there, but in mass action against whole groups; and they know full well that if discrimination can be practised against one group with impunity, it can be directed against any group.

We are not going to legislate tolerance in this country. I well remember the days when we tried to enforce temperance by law and it was a dismal failure. In the same way prejudice may masquerade as protecting the Canadian way of life, or a crusade against reactionism or communism or any other ism with which the majority happens to disagree and is out of sympathy with. Yet defining the limits of civil liberties by law would not be an empty gesture, as one hon. member intimated. There is a great need today for a formal re-statement of the fundamental principles of individual freedom. The people of Canada want to know what their rights are. They have the right to know what their rights are. The objection raised is that this house is not competent to deal with a dominion bill of rights. We are told that it would not be constitutional. Without getting into a discussion of the constitutional law, let me say that I do not think the question is as simple as all that. It is true that, under section 92, subsection 13 of the British North America Act relates to property and civil rights in the province. But is this provision meant to cover what we understand by civil liberties? I would recall that a few years ago, in the reference re Alberta legislation—the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) referred to it; 1938 S.C.R., page 100—the Supreme Court of Canada indicated that federal legislation was authoritative in relation to public debate and discussion.

I quite agree that it is difficult to say offhand just what the position is. But the constitutional difficulties are no reason for sloughing off this whole thing. It is a simple matter to determine what the constitutional position is. If the Department of Justice is unable or unwilling to give us an authoritative opinion that is strong enough for us to proceed on, then the committee if given the power—and they should be given that power—can direct a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada. It is quite obvious that constitutionality is a condition precedent to a bill of rights. That being the case, we ought to determine the position with the least possible delay.

It seems to me that in any issue of general public policy, the government is remiss in its duty if it fails to give leadership. This is true in regard to the matter of a bill of rights and also in regard to a subject which is closely allied to it, and which has been under discussion here today, namely, the matter of communism in Canada. It is fair to say that we continue to sit on the fence in this vital issue long after Britain, Australia and South Africa have declared themselves unequivocally. The question in the minds of a great many people in Canada today is this: Is communism to be legal or illegal? Is our bill of rights to have in it a clause denying the freedom to be a communist? These are questions which we shall have to decide before very much longer.

I have had considerable experience in dealing with domestic communism. I have more of them in my riding than there are in any other riding in the Dominion of Canada. I have met them, dealt with them and defeated them, first municipally, then provincially and finally federally, over a period of nearly twenty years. My formula has always been a simple one. I like my communists out in the open so that I know who they are, where they are and what they stand for. I have done them in on every occasion that I have come to grips with them. I give that information to the house for what it is worth.

Already in this country groups of people here and there seem to be acting as though the decision to outlaw them has already been made. The very fact that they are acting in that way does not take away from us the responsibility; it only increases the responsibility. Until we are prepared to guarantee the freedom of the individual in a broadly conceived bill of rights, supported by all the ethical and social sanctions that our society as a whole can command, we shall go ill-armed into the great ideological conflict that is only beginning to make itself felt at the present time. The danger in Canada is still small, in my opinion; still just a few isolated happenings which the majority of us deplore. But it is something which can become embedded in our national consciousness. The way to prevent that from happening is to act now, because we cannot sit this one out. The people of Canada are looking to us for guidance, for leadership and for reassurance. It is our duty to express to them the canons of individual freedom on which our society is based.

I said I felt that the need for a charter of civil liberties is overwhelming and self-evident. The mechanics of the thing can be worked out if there is a will to do so. What we do now may avoid the need for having to do something much more drastic in the days, months, and years ahead.

I like to recall John Stuart Mill's words in his famous book on liberty, where he said that the worth of a state, in the long run, is the worth of the individuals who compose it; and that a state which dwarfs its men in order that they may be more docile instruments in its hands, even for beneficial purposes, will find that with small men no great thing can really be accomplished.

Mr. ANTHONY HLYNKA (Vegreville): The resolution before the house, Mr. Speaker, embraces both our national and international fields. In the international field the need for a code of human rights and fundamental freedoms is indeed of immediate and urgent importance. However, it will be recognized at once that the matter of the establishment and the enforcement of such a code falls within the purview of international organizations. It follows, therefore, that Canada's utmost contribution can be made in this matter by advocating and supporting the establishment and the enforcement of such a code. Obviously the extent of Canada's influence at international councils in this and other international problems will be proportionate only to her military, economic and diplomatic strength.

I was hoping to have an opportunity to discuss the international aspect of this subject, but in view of the immensity of this field I must postpone its discussion until some other time. On this occasion I intend to limit my discussion to human rights and fundamental freedoms as these rights and freedoms affect Canadian citizens within our own country. I think it will be generally agreed by most democratically minded Canadians that human rights and fundamental freedoms are the basis upon which our constitution, our form of government and our institutions have been built. It is my view that, even though there may be some shortcomings and imperfections in our political and organizational structure, which admittedly could stand improvement, nevertheless no loyal Canadian would want to see our concept of life replaced by any other advocated in the world today.

It is with this consideration in mind that we should be discussing the principles of human rights and fundamental freedoms as far as their application in Canada is concerned. However, in line with what is being proposed in the international field by the nations of the western world it may be advisable for us to review and improve some of the laws in our own country. To use but one example, I would point out that in the economic field human rights and fundamental freedoms have never been known to all our people. In other words, the economic freedom which all our people should enjoy is measured, under the present financial system, by the amount of money they can afford to spend. No one will deny that there is plenty of room for improvement in this regard. We know, too, there are numerous other things that cry out for improvement. However, the matters I have mentioned have not been the central theme of the many advocates of human rights and fundamental freedoms; it was something else that brought on the alarm. What is more, as far as human rights and fundamental freedoms are concerned, everything seemed to be running quite smoothly until Mr. Igor Gouzenko appeared on the scene with his famous bundle of documents. Now and then there might have been casual references by jurists, scholars and legislators to instances where our laws should be improved, but there was definitely no general alarm about this matter. Even during the war years, when the Canadian government did many things that revealed poor judgment or lack of knowledge in dealing with certain important matters, the general public recognized that those were abnormal times, and in view of that fact no particular protest was raised by anyone. As a matter of fact, as time went by, some of those blunders were corrected, others were forgiven and still others are being lived down by persons who were thus affected.

It was not these things that brought about the crisis in the matter of civil liberties. It was not these things that brought into the fold of the civil liberties branches many well-meaning but misled Canadian citizens. It was the clamouring of persons who were selling out the freedoms of the Canadian people that brought about this alarm, the demand for wider freedom so that they could continue their work of treason undisturbed. Yes, it was not until Gouzenko forced those famous documents upon this government and a number of suspected persons were rounded up and detained for questioning, that human rights and fundamental freedoms began to receive so much attention. Surely it must be plain by now to most Canadians, whom this spy ring was serving and what were the intentions of the people involved.

Ah, but the critics of the procedure of the government in dealing with this problem would say, "Prosecute them in a court of law". The critics of the government in this regard may have a point there; but I wonder what procedure they would have followed if they had been in the position of responsibility, faced with the unprecedented situation that existed at the time of the unfortunate incident, when cells of agents were discovered to be in the service of a foreign country, agents who had spread their networks into various phases of activity in this country. Would they have taken a course of delayed action by providing an opportunity for persons held for questioning to get together and agree to withhold certain information? After studying the evidence carefully, it appears to me that the matter of the prosecution of suspected persons was of secondary importance as far as that situation was concerned. I may be mistaken, but it seems to me that the most important factor entering into this whole matter was to learn what information and how much was transmitted to interested parties. This consideration would appear to me to override everything else; for, after all, there are no torture chambers in Canada; no third degree methods are used here; and the slight inconvenience which may have been suffered by a few persons who kept company with dangerous characters may serve as a warning to others not to fall into the same trap.

Perhaps those learned in the law could show that I am mistaken on this point. They might be able to propose a method by which any such crisis could be avoided in future. If they can suggest a sound procedure for dealing with such matters I shall give them my support; but I have yet to hear any sound procedure suggested. I am convinced that the Canadian public would lend their support to any suggestion which would have the effect of improving our laws; but it must also be kept in mind that any such improvement should provide proper protection for this nation against treachery, deceit and treason. At no time should our laws be fashioned in such a way as to make it convenient for foreign agents to use them as a protective cloak for espionage activities.

In this connection I might mention that last Friday evening, after this debate was adjourned, I met a Progressive Conservative member outside this chamber; and before we parted he made a casual statement which I consider profoundly true. He said, "Any person who needs a bill of rights to hide behind is a poor type of citizen to have in this country". There is much wisdom in that statement. If I may go on from there, in the report of the royal commission on the espionage activities we find the following passage:

> The evidence has revealed the existence of an organization constituting at least a threat to the safety and interests of the state, as evidenced by the fact that some witnesses holding strategic positions have made the significant statement under oath that they had a loyalty which took priority over the loyalty owed by them to their own country, and for that reason they acted as they did, and would unquestionably have continued so to act had they not been detected.

It is a terrible state of affairs, Mr. Speaker, when some Canadians say they owe a higher loyalty to some outside power, in preference to their own country. The shocking reality of this whole situation lies in the fact that these are not simple, agitated folk who, through ignorance or economic conditions, parrot what someone else has said or make threatening remarks to make themselves more important. These young people had better than average opportunities, as their educational standings and their preferred positions indicated.

Canada and the Canadian people have been kind to these persons and placed them in positions of trust. These are the type of persons who normally would be expected to provide leadership to their less fortunate brothers. But what do we find? It is clear from the evidence that Canada and the democratic concept of life is not their ideal. The ideal which was sold to them was the nazi-fascist dictatorship, wrapped up in a red coat. While this was going on, such men as John Robert Osborn of Winnipeg, Manitoba, gave their lives in defending Canada. I might add that John Robert Osborn was awarded the Victoria Cross posthumously for his gallantry at Hong Kong. He left five orphans and a widow. I should mention also that in addition to his service in the recent war he also served in the first great war.

I would suggest, therefore, that when we are discussing this subject of civil liberties we should think of Osborn and others who have given their lives on the battlefields so that the torch of freedom may continue to burn in Canada.

A press report on this heroic role played by John Osborn says:

> Time and again he picked up flying Jap grenades being hurled at his position and threw them back at the enemy with reckless disregard for his own safety. Finally a grenade fell too far away, and he had only time to smother it. It exploded just as he covered it, and he was killed. His body stopped the flying shrapnel from seriously wounding any of his companions.

In fairness to our fighting men, and particularly in fairness to the memory of those who have died in battle, we owe it to their memory and to their widows and children to stop all those who would sell out the freedoms of this country. There is no room for soft pedalling or appeasement in dealing with treachery.

Last Friday night the Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley) introduced a resolution dealing with this subject of human rights and fundamental freedoms. His statement, so far as any human rights bill for Canada is concerned, was significant. It was significant because he had no definite proposition to make.

First, the minister read the resolution into the record. He then reviewed the dates on which last year's committee on human rights sat, and said that it held eight meetings and made four reports to the House of Commons and to the Senate. He then reviewed what was done in regard to the international bill of rights. He told us that all provincial governments and law deans in Canadian universities were invited to submit their views on this matter, and particularly with regard to the division of power as between provincial and federal governments. The minister told us also that some of the provinces and some of the law deans replied to the communications; others just acknowledged receipt, and some did not even bother to reply.

Finally the minister told us that he had no bill to present to the house; but since an undertaking was given last year that the committee would be set up this year, the minister wanted to keep his word. Well, Mr. Speaker, I cannot help but agree with the minister; and I must say I am surprised he was able to say as much as he did on the matter; for, after all, what else could he say?

So far as a bill of rights for Canada is concerned, no one has submitted a definite proposition. No doubt a bill dealing with this matter can be brought in, but only after an exhaustive study by competent jurists and other men interested in this subject. It is a task, however, which requires considerable research, and it will take considerable time to complete it. The matter must also be settled with the provinces.

So the minister could hardly do other than he did when he failed to promise anything on this matter. I feel I should add this, that the main reason the minister and the government placed the resolution before the house was to silence the demand of civil liberties associations and, when the committee on human rights is set up, to throw the matter into the lap of that committee.

In view of what I have said thus far, some hon. members may think I am speaking in defence of government policy in dealing with this matter. But nothing could be farther from the truth. It is my view that the government should be given the severe verbal thrashing which they deserve. But they should be taken to task on another count. When the spy ring was uncovered I was sure that the chief spokesmen of the opposition parties would have the government over a barrel. Here was a situation where able young Canadians occupying positions of trust betrayed their country. Here was a situation which developed as a result of the government's lackadaisical policy. Here was a situation where the government appeased communists at every turn, and in fact entered into an unofficial arrangement during the Grey North by-election and the general election in 1945. Here was a situation where communists were actually treated as a privileged class in Canada.

Was the government not aware that, while we were being entertained by the various friendship leagues, the Trojan horse was being ushered in? Prominent Canadians and government representatives took a leading part in these powwows. And I might say this affair did not stop there. What is more, a foreign citizen had to beg the government and to plead with them to take the documents and to do something about the situation that developed in Canada.

But the government told him to go away. Mr. Speaker, it is inconceivable why the opposition critics did not take the government to task on this score. But what do we find? Instead of being alarmed about the danger, the opposition critics and other civil liberties champions lashed out at the government for inconveniencing a number of persons who were held for questioning. Evidence of conflicting loyalties, evidence of infiltration of agents in a foreign service, evidence of the workings of fifth column groups in Canada did not worry the champions of civil liberties. They were concerned about the complaints of detained persons. Let me emphasize that civil liberties must and should be protected, but the champions of civil liberties must also admit that by doing so we must not place the liberty of the entire nation in jeopardy. Under foreign domination we would have no say about civil liberties; or about anything else for that matter. In other words, our civil liberties and our national liberties should both be protected. But to champion civil liberties at the risk of losing our national liberty is to render a disservice to Canada and to the Canadian people. I say to the champions of civil liberties that at this stage of history the struggle is not only for the extension of civil liberties; it is also a struggle, first of all, for our own national survival.

Does it not seem strange to us that this alarm for civil liberties can be found only in Canada, in the United States, in the United Kingdom, in France and in a few other countries in western Europe? But what about the civil liberties in Yugoslavia, in Roumania, in Bulgaria, in Poland, in Czechoslovakia, and above all, what about human rights and civil liberties in the U.S.S.R.?

Mr. STANLEY KNOWLES (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to put myself clearly on the side of those who believe that we should have a bill of rights for Canadians. I noted the last question of the previous speaker when he asked why it was that in countries like Canada, the United States and the United Kingdom there is the greatest amount of concern about civil rights. I feel that that is highly significant. What it means is that in those countries where we enjoy a certain amount of freedom we know its value and we want it extended and guaranteed and made secure for all our people.

The only reason I chose to intervene in this debate—after all, the case that I might make was made so much better this afternoon by my leader, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell)—was because of what happened this afternoon when the Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley) raised a point of order with respect to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker). I felt that the points raised by the Minister of Justice were technically correct, but I indicated at that time that I was in wholehearted support of the substance of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Lake Centre. I suggested to him or to some of his colleagues that it would be desirable to have another amendment moved in a form that might be in order so that we could pursue this project of having the whole question referred to the Supreme Court of Canada.

I consider that the government should have taken more responsibility in this matter. It seems to me that the government should have drafted a bill of rights, brought it before parliament and let us deal with it in the house and in committee. As part of the consideration of such a bill of rights introduced by the government, arrangements could have been made for it to be referred to the Supreme Court of Canada, either before or after its final enactment. However, the government has not taken that course, but has chosen rather to throw the matter into the lap of parliament and in turn has asked parliament to put it into the hands of a committee.

That being the case, we do not have the right under the rules of this house to instruct the government to do anything by way of making a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada, but I am convinced that we do have the right to make sure that the special committee which is being established has the right to make recommendations, if they so choose, calling for a reference to the supreme court. As indicated by the hon. member for Lake Centre this afternoon—I want to make it clear that in part I am taking precisely the language he used in the amendment that was ruled out of order—there is, on the one hand, the possibility of referring to the Supreme Court of Canada hypothetical questions as to the extent to which there is federal jurisdiction over matters relating to the freedoms of religion, speech, press, assembly and so on, but there is also the possibility of asking that there be referred to the Supreme Court of Canada a draft bill of rights.

I contend that the committee should have the power, without making it mandatory, to discuss these two ways of attacking the problem. The committee should have the power of making recommendations, either that such questions be referred to the Supreme Court of Canada or that a draft will be referred to the Supreme Court of Canada. Since the government did not introduce such a bill, I suggest that it is up to the committee either to decide the questions to be referred or the nature of the draft bill to be referred. Accordingly I now move, seconded by the hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Jaenicke), the amendment which I suggested this afternoon during the discussion on the point of order, as follows:

That the following paragraph be inserted between paragraph three and paragraph four of the proposed resolution:

"That the committee shall have power to recommend (a) that there be referred to the Supreme Court of Canada such questions as in the opinion of the committee are necessary to determine to what extent the preservation of the fundamental freedoms of religion, speech, press and assembly, and the maintenance of the constitutional safeguards of the individual, are matters of federal jurisdiction; or (b) that there be referred to the Supreme Court of Canada a draft bill of rights, containing such provisions as in the opinion of the committee should be included therein, to determine whether or not it is within the powers of the federal parliament to enact such a bill of rights for the Canadian people."

I am satisfied that that amendment is in order. It does not do one thing which the amendment proposed this afternoon did, namely, put the responsibility back on the government. The simple fact is that under the rules we cannot do that. But this does give the committee the green light to make recommendations along the lines suggested in the amendment.

I shall not take the time of the house to say anything more, either on the amendment or on the general subject now before us except to say that I feel we should do everything we can in this country to maintain and extend all the freedoms we now enjoy, political, civil and religious. Freedom of thought and speech, freedom of the press, freedom of assembly, yes; but let us remember that far too many human beings live lives blighted and dwarfed by economic oppression. Man will not really be free until economic tyranny is no more. In my view that is the job of political democracy today, to achieve economic freedom for all.

Mr. NORMAN JAQUES (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I should like to associate myself with the remarks which have been made by the hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot), the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Hlynka), and the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell). I am sorry that the latter was not able to conclude his speech, and for a few minutes I shall endeavour to carry on where he left off.

In considering any policy I always like to find out if I can the motive behind the policy. For instance, in a certain form of heart trouble a little strychnine may save a man's life, while in another form of heart trouble a little strychnine might mean instant death. So before I support any remarks on the virtues of strychnine in treating heart disease, I should like to know just who is to administer the strychnine and just what his motives are.

The hon. member for Macleod said, if I remember correctly, that there are just two kinds of people in the Civil Liberties Association; there are traitors, and there are the stooges, the dupes. I agree with that, and I go a little farther and say with regard to this motion that there are just two kinds of people in Canada. There are those whose first loyalty is to Canada, and there are those whose first loyalty is to internationalism. On several occasions in this house in the past I have warned people against the dangers of internationalism to our Canadian freedoms. For instance, five years ago I made this statement which I have since quoted in the house:

> The defeat of German arms is certain, but the plots of international finance and communism, their plans for world control by the surrender of national sovereignty to world government and police force, have become a greater threat to our liberties as Christians and democrats than the disaster at Dunkirk.

I was severely taken to task for making that statement, but in the light of what has happened since and the present condition of the world I think what I said then was more than justified. This session I quoted a statement made some years ago by the present Prime Minister of Great Britain, the Right Hon. Clement Attlee, who, according to a statement I have read, said in 1934:

> We have absolutely abandoned any idea of national loyalty and we are deliberately putting a world order before loyalty to our own country.

Then five years ago this month I quoted from and denounced a statement made in this country by Mr. B. K. Sandwell, whose name I think was mentioned this evening by the hon. member for Temiscouata.

Mr. POULIOT: And I said, Oh, ho!

Mr. JAQUES: Mr. Sandwell's statement was this. He advocated a supra-national authority, with power to settle questions of immigration, natural resources, the treatment of minorities, repudiation of debts, finance, et cetera; to bring about Canada's acceptance of a new authority it would be necessary to bring all the people to a diminution of their loyalty to the crown by substituting a new loyalty to an authority wider than Canada, wider than the British commonwealth of nations or of all the democracies together. Well, Mr. Speaker, chickens have a habit of coming home to roost and Mr. Attlee now finds it necessary to do what he can to clean out the communists not only in the civil service but in the House of Commons itself.

I well remember, and I think it was mentioned by the hon. member for Vegreville this evening, that in the report of the royal commission on espionage the main reason given for the otherwise inexplicable behaviour of young responsible Canadians in betraying their country was mainly the teaching which they had received that they owe a superior loyalty to some international ideal or ism.

We come now to civil liberties. I think I might quote Mr. Churchill on civil rights. As I said when I started, I look at the motive of any policy. Speaking of communism in his book "Great Contemporaries", Mr. Churchill said:

> Communism is not only a creed. It is a plan of campaign. The anatomy of discontent and revolution has been studied in every phase and aspect. The method of enforcement is as much a part of the communist faith as the doctrine itself. At first the time-honoured principles of liberalism and democracy are invoked to shelter the infant organism. Free speech, the right of public meeting, every form of lawful political agitation and constitutional right are paraded and asserted. Alliance is sought with every popular movement towards the left.
>
> The creation of a mild Liberal or socialist regime in some period of convulsion is the first milestone. But no sooner has this been created than it is to be overthrown. Woes and scarcity resulting from confusion must be exploited.

When I see the names of many in these civil rights organizations I ask myself always, what is the motive behind this agitation for civil rights? I am not sure, but I believe I am right in saying that the ultimate purpose of this bill on human rights is this. First of all, the rights of the provinces with regard to civil rights are to be placed with the dominion government. I am not accusing the Liberal government of this. This is what I have gathered from some of the speakers this afternoon. The rights of the provinces are to be gathered together, so to speak, and placed with the dominion government; then they are to be transferred to the united nations. That is as I understand it. When I look at the record of the united nations all I can say is that if it inspires anybody to trust his liberties to it I do not think he can value his liberty very highly. Look at what has happened to liberty since the united nations was formed. Look at Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, and so on. They have all lost their civil liberties, and what has the united nations been able to do about the matter?

We now come to a question which is still alive. I am not going into the Palestine question tonight. I mention it because it illustrates what I have said about the united nations and fundamental rights. Not only have I spoken on this particular question in various parts of Canada and in the United States, but I have discussed it with leading zionists and with many of the Arab leaders. In the last few weeks I have read everything that I have been able to lay my hands on with regard to the united nations organization and partition. I may say that I have read the reports and the columnists of the United States and Canadian press, and so far as the Arabs are concerned I have yet to read one reference to their fundamental human rights. If anybody can show me that I am wrong I shall be very much obliged.

What happened when the administration of the United States found it necessary to reverse their policy of partition? As I say, I have read all that I can obtain on the reaction in the United States and in this country, not only among the people but among members of the senate and of congress, and it all boils down to this: the only effect or the only notice that was taken of the reversal of partition was the possible results upon their political futures. For instance, President Truman was said to have killed his chance of election this year as president because he had lost the Jewish vote. The democrats immediately rushed in to say that it was a disaster; that it would mean the end of the united nations, and the Republicans said the same thing. The only reaction to the reversal of partition in the United States was simply a political reaction as it might affect the political chances of the various parties. I am only repeating what I have read in dozens of United States papers, that the future of the Arab people and, if you like, of the Moslems, depends, not on any question of fundamental rights but upon the Jewish vote in the United States.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): The hon. member surely does not mean that.

Mr. JAQUES: Of course I mean it.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): God help you.

Mr. JAQUES: God help you. Let me say to the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) that if he denies that, then I say he denies what has been said by every paper and commentator in the United States.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I am sorry; but I deny it absolutely.

Mr. JAQUES: So do the communist papers; I will admit that.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Thank you for putting that in.

Mr. JAQUES: That is quite right; the communists and fellow travellers, and they are to be found in all parties.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Even in Great Britain, which never voted for partition.

Mr. JAQUES: I know. I spoke against partition in this house and outside it, even before it was passed by the united nations. If the hon. member for Calgary West thinks I am talking of things about which I do not know anything, let him rise in his place when I have finished and say whether he approves or disapproves the zionist action in Palestine. I have condemned it for a good many years now, but I have not heard anybody else in this house do so.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Condemned what?

Mr. JAQUES: Condemned political zionism. I mentioned motives—

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Now you are at something you know something about.

Mr. JAQUES: I mentioned motives.

Mr. KNOWLES: Was that Moses or motives?

Mr. JAQUES: Motives. Somebody mentioned racial and religious discrimination. There are two ways of looking at that. It is a well-known fact that no people are so keen on banning that discrimination as are the communists. It is easy to see why. Suppose you pass a law—I am not a lawyer, and I do not intend to talk in a legal way—to make illegal what is called racial and religious discrimination. Suppose I am an employer of labour, and that a man comes to me for a job. I know that man, we will say, is a communist; he might happen to be a Jew or anybody else, for that matter; for instance, he might be a Mormon or a Doukhobor. But if I refused to employ him because he is a communist, it would be a criminal offence; he could immediately accuse me of racial discrimination. That sort of law would open the door to the communists and it would be almost impossible to deal with them.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Under what law could you be prosecuted?

Mr. JAQUES: I said if there was a law—

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I beg the hon. member's pardon. May I ask him a question? As I understood him, he said he could be prosecuted because he refused to employ a man who was a communist. Under what law could that be done?

Mr. JAQUES: It was a hypothetical case. I said that were such a law passed—and certainly some members this afternoon said that in their opinion such a law should be passed—I could be prosecuted. I say that such a law would be the finest shield for the penetration of communists into any organization.

Mr. HARTT: There is such a law in New York and in Manitoba. Has anything like that happened there?

Mr. JAQUES: Not yet, so far as I know.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): May I say that I misunderstood the hon. member who has the floor. I understood that he said there was such a law. I did not hear him correctly.

Mr. JAQUES: Thank you.

Mr. HARTT: There is the same law in Ontario, and nothing of the kind has happened.

Mr. JAQUES: These things do not happen all at once. There is no hurry.

Mr. HARTT: No, no.

An hon. MEMBER: Take your time.

Mr. HARTT: We will wait.

Mr. JAQUES: Speaking of internationalism and the real purpose and motive of internationalism, I have made a few notes on the social credit analysis of the hidden motives behind this drive for internationalism. It is an essential strategy for world dictatorship. The central strategy is to gain the monopoly of credit and of world propaganda so as systematically and continuously to spread false doctrines and to exploit the inevitable confusion resulting from putting such false doctrines into practice. This exploitation takes the form of centralizing every kind of control, the creation of greater and greater monopolies leading to the police state, and to the final step of world government by world cartels controlled by international financiers. Some of the meshes of this international net are UNRRA, Bretton Woods, emergency food board and UNESCO, by which nations surrender control of their credit, food supplies and propaganda; in other words, a world cartel of credits, propaganda and food to be used as sanctions against any recalcitrant countries.

National sovereignty is an obstacle in the way of these international socialists and would-be dictators. An inner ring of internationalists, extending to many countries, repudiate loyalty to the country of their adoption; they give their loyalty to their international ring and its ideals. Through their control of financial policy they are able to exert a controlling influence over the governments of the country in which they live. Their plan is to replace national with corporate government, the control being within the international ring. This is the empire of international cartels, with the international financier as the emperor. With them war is a means to an end. War is "the pursuit of policy by other means." These internationalists work to a plan. Let me name some of them. Mond sets up a chemical cartel linked with Germany and America. Samuel recommends state ownership of coal. Isaacs (Lord Reading) negotiates a war debt settlement with Wall Street, binding the British to undisclosed terms. Sieff sets up political and economic planning, using the war as an excuse to overcome opposition. Cassel finances the London school of economics to train the bureaucracy for the future world socialist state. Laski preaches class—that is civil—war. The state assumes the ownership of coal and other real assets, and international finance involves the state in dollar debt. The socialists bankrupt the state, and the international financiers foreclose on the physical assets. In the meantime the people, forced into the factories under the slogan "Work or want", are controlled by quotas and ration books, ticketed and dossiered by social security.

That, Mr. Speaker, is a brief but, I believe, absolutely true picture of the real motives behind this drive for international government, and the surrender of national sovereignty to international control.

Mr. E. B. McKAY (Weyburn): Mr. Speaker, the purpose for which the committee on human rights and fundamental freedoms has been set up is extremely laudable. It is to consider the manner in which the obligation assumed by Canada as a signatory to the united nations charter may be implemented. It will also have the job, if I understand the terms of reference correctly, of studying and recommending ways and means of preserving in Canada these human rights and fundamental freedoms.

It is extremely important in this changing world that Canada set her own house in order. The challenge of totalitarianism makes this imperative if our democracy is to continue to flourish. I consider it important to recognize that communism is not a disease in the strictest sense of the word. It is held up by its proponents as a way of life infinitely superior to the democracy to which we have subscribed our allegiance. As Canadians we must meet that challenge in the most effective way possible. We must prove to the world that democracy is a better way of life than that which is the basis of the Russian system.

I cannot conceive of laws and regulations preventing the growth of an idea such as communism; and I must agree with the many people who hold that you cannot destroy ideas with guns. It has been tried before with but one result, the martyrdom of a cause. But I do believe that the setting up of a new social and economic order based upon the dignity of the individual can accomplish the ends desired by all democratically minded people. Canadian boys in the last war died to establish a new world order based on human equality, respect for the individual by reason of his humanity, justice in every sphere of life without any barriers of colour, race or creed. Our duty as legislators is, as I see it, to bring to fruition those very principles and ideals our sons hoped to realize in the post-war world.

The united nations has made considerable progress in achieving that goal. Not the least among those achievements is the adoption of a draft of a world bill of rights issued from Geneva on December 16 last by the united nations commission on human rights which, when adopted, will become binding upon all the signatories, including Canada. The clauses in the text are as follows, and to me they appear comprehensive and to cover adequately the field of human relations:

1. Everyone is entitled to life, liberty and equal protection under the law.

2. Everyone has the right to freedom of information, speech and expression; to freedom of worship, conscience and belief; to freedom of assembly and of association, and freedom to petition his government and the united nations.

3. No one shall be subjected to unreasonable interference with his privacy, home, correspondence or reputation. No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his property.

4. There shall be liberty to move freely from one place to another within the state; to emigrate and to seek asylum from persecution.

5. No one shall be held in slavery or involuntary servitude. No one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel or inhuman punishment or indignity.

6. No one shall be subjected to arbitrary arrest or detention. Anyone arrested has the right to be promptly informed of the charges against him and to trial within a reasonable time or to be released.

7. Everyone in the determination of his rights and obligations is entitled to a fair hearing before an independent and impartial tribunal and to the aid of counsel. No one shall be convicted or punished for crime except after public trial pursuant to law in effect at the time of the commission of the act charged. Everyone regardless of office or status is subject to the rule of the law.

8. Everyone has the right to a nationality. Everyone has the right to take an effective part in his government, directly or through his representatives, and to participate in elections, free and by secret ballot.

9. Everyone has the right to a decent living, to work and advance his well-being; to health, education and social security. There shall be equal opportunity for all to participate in the economic and cultural life of the community.

10. Everyone everywhere in the world is entitled to the human rights and fundamental freedoms set forth in this declaration without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion. The full exercise of these rights requires recognition of the rights of others and protection by law of the freedom, general welfare and security of all.

These are fine and noble ideals and, as I see it, it is practical Christianity. But the mere acceptance of this bill of rights is not enough. Everyone must be prepared to do everything in his power to see that the clauses are implemented not only in Canada but everywhere in the world. That is why the setting up of this committee is so important.

Democracy must be realistic, if it is to meet the problems of our day and age. If there are problems of racial and religious inequities to be solved, let the problems be met now. Putting them off until another day, and hoping that something will happen to solve these problems will never take care of the situation. Delay is dangerous particularly in this modern world of ideologies. People who are victims of discrimination of any kind are fertile soil in which the seed of communism will flourish.

I feel that this committee not only can do a great deal to solve the problem of discrimination but may serve as well as an instrument through which problems of human rights as they affect the Indian in Canada, Chinese, Japanese, negroes and certain religious denominations may be placed squarely before the Canadian people. These are all important problems and must be solved. It may not always be politically expedient to grapple with such questions, but postponement of the evil day will not lessen but will increase the danger to this country as a democracy, if we fail to settle these differences within our social and economic structure. To talk about the brotherhood of man is not good enough. Envy, malice and hatred have all entered our civil and, in some cases, our personal lives, because of senseless inequalities which make barriers between one Canadian and another. Natural inequalities there may always be; but in no way do these deny the inherent equality of man, while artificial inequalities of wealth, birth, race, religion and opportunity do deny it.

Canadians ought to simplify the philosophy of life. We must convince ourselves and the world, too, that democracy works. Let us purify our system of glaring injustices which serve totalitarianism propaganda so well. Our thinking must rise above the level which looks down on the red, black or yellow man, the Jew or the new arrival from Europe. It must rise above the level that prefers lower taxes to good schools and adequate social legislation. It must rise above party politics or religious or racial feelings of superiority to accept the dictum that all men are equal, regardless of race, colour, creed or social status.

There is in the world today an angry surge of rebellion against exploitation, the misery of poverty and war. We can meet that protest by an understanding of the situation and by putting our own house in order. Corrupt privilege at the expense of the people should not be the democratic way. Democracy has been an outstanding success for those who have enjoyed its privileges, but it must speak the language of the under-privileged if it is to win them as supporters. That is our job as legislators.

Recently, when discussing the work of the New York state fair employment commission in reducing discriminatory practices by employers, Mr. Charles Luckman of Lever Brothers stated:

> Big business has a tremendous stake in securing civil liberties for every man, woman and child in the United States. It is my firm conviction that private enterprise is doomed in a country where civil liberties are ignored or forgotten or legislated against. In the process of investigating the abuses of civil liberties we found that whenever such abuses were rampant, standards of living were lowest, property yielded smaller returns in taxes and businessmen usually ended up in bankruptcy courts. Loss of civil liberties has invariably been followed by poverty, ignorance, and ill-health—three scourges which kept people from being good customers. Democracy is good for business.

Yes, business has a big stake in securing civil liberties for every man, woman and child. But every Canadian who enjoys our democratic way of life also has a big stake.

Our way of life today is being challenged, and we can meet that challenge if we but try. The pattern of our laws must follow the Christian concept. We have nothing to fear if we follow the teachings of Christianity, for they have stood the test of time.

In closing, I should like to direct the attention of the house to a short statement made by Edwin Markham which may serve as a guide in the committee's deliberations. He said:

> We have committed the golden rule to memory; let us now commit it to life. We have preached brotherhood for centuries; we now need to find a material basis for brotherhood. Government must be made the organ of fraternity, a working form of comrade love.

Mr. A. L. SMITH (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I cannot tell you how much I have enjoyed the splendid essay just delivered by the hon. member who took his seat immediately before I rose to speak. I love beautiful phrases. I like to read them, particularly after I have gone to bed and perhaps have had a cigarette, and am just about to fall off to sleep. That is the time to enjoy essays—if they are not too serious. Frankly I like blood-spitters or thrillers even better; but essays perhaps come after that.

May I say that I believe I can go along with the prime purpose of the amendment offered by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles); of course it is nothing more or less than that moved by the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker). The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has added the word "recommend", and in the second clause he suggests that a case should be prepared and submitted to the supreme court.

In other words it is merely a change of vehicle. One might be the Irish jaunting car, which would throw out most of the people riding in it, perhaps including yourself, Mr. Speaker. The other one is more of the phaeton type, which permits one to go over the rough spots more smoothly.

But they seem to be part of the same thing. While I agree with the spirit and the purpose, perhaps I should say something about it. In the brief space of time I have been in the House of Commons, as we do in civil life and as we have in reading the newspapers and the periodicals, we have found great difficulty in dissociating provincial from federal jurisdiction. It does seem to me that the suggestion made by the hon. member for Lake Centre has been put in not more just language but more tricky language in order to conform to our rules. I use the word "tricky" in its most respectful and respectable sense.

What is this committee going to do? It will meet and there will be some wonderful debates for the first three or four days, as happens in most committees. Then they will be telephoning around to get a quorum. Then the senate will adjourn and there will be no quorum. The thing will end just where it has started. I am not for one moment trying to derogate the great importance of this purpose, if I may use that expression. I am one of those who think it would be a splendid idea to have something in writing with respect to these freedoms and personal liberties. In that I disagree with the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell) who, I see, has finished his speaking engagement and is back checking in Hansard the speech he made before six o'clock.

We all dislike the word "infiltration," but it is easy to see that by infiltration we have lost certain freedoms. However, it does seem to me that they would not have been lost so easily if we had had written down a law in this country forbidding anyone to take them from us except in a state of emergency, and by "emergency" I mean a state of war; for example, not such emergencies as those which permitted the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott), on the advice of the law officers of the crown, to change his mind in a few months. I mean real emergencies when I speak of that.

I must come back to my hon. friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. He ended up what I thought was his most excellent short speech—and you will notice, Mr. Speaker, that I use the word "short"—by telling us that he wanted to go much farther and end economic tyranny. He was supported by men who talked about—I have it all written down here on the back of an orders of the day—international finance, international something else, the international ring and so on.

Mr. KNOWLES: They did not support me. Those were Social Credit members; they are all on the other side.

Mr. JAENICKE: Those are your Alberta friends.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I am proud of them, but only in a comparative sense. They are so infinitely better than hon. members from Saskatchewan and Manitoba. All night we have been listening to great big words. We have been told that there are communists. I know that; I have heard it before. It is not new. Then we find there is an international ring. Then we have our hon. friends to my immediate left with their economic tyranny. I do not think I am misquoting them.

Mr. KNOWLES: That is right; we want to end it.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): All right; let us end it. Perhaps you will not be so anxious to end it when I have ended with you. Their whole political philosophy is based on a question of preaching envy and that envy will ultimately amount to hatred.

At the end of the road they may form a government. I am not so old, but if I live twice as long as I have I am quite sure I shall never see it. If I should live to be 105 years of age, then I could spend that last year here and I know one of the things that would happen under the tyranny with which they would operate their system. In other words, it would be a police state.

Mr. WRIGHT: That is what they said in England five years ago.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): You are getting closer to it every minute. You must know that in England right now they have a capital levy.

Mr. WRIGHT: They will survive all right.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I am quite sure that I could express the pious hope as my hon. friend has. I would not express it as a fact. I would continue to think it is a hope that they will survive. Of course they will survive, but under conditions more dreadful than anything they have ever known. But the courage is there and with that courage they will survive.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Things are not so tough as they would be if the Tories were in office.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Let us assume that the hon. member is right and things would be tough in England if the Tories were in power, but the recent by-elections would seem to indicate that the people are inclined to think it would not be so bad. If my hon. friends were in power I know what my hon. friend's job would be. He would be the head of the gestapo in the government they would form after the rest of us had been thrown out.

Mr. KNOWLES: More nonsense.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I usually hear my hon. friend. Stop talking into your whiskers.

Mr. KNOWLES: I said, "more nonsense".

Mr. NICHOLSON: Who is to head this gestapo?

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I thought you would, but you have a better chap who is not here tonight. You can be assistant chief or something of that kind. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre says "more nonsense." I am glad to see the hon. member for Lake Centre is here, because I intend to steal an expression from him and say that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is the greatest exponent of nonsense that I ever knew. He knows all about that sort of thing.

Mr. McKAY: Coming from the source it does, it is a compliment.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): These little boys who play with firecrackers sometimes get their fingers burned.

Mr. McKAY: Where is the fire?

Mr. SPEAKER: I would ask hon. members not to interrupt the hon. member who is speaking, without his permission.

Mr. KNOWLES: He likes it.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I am grateful to Your Honour for upholding the dignity and rules of the house, but I hope you are not suggesting that I need protection from these little boys over here.

What I am anxious to say is that it seems to me that we shall serve a great deal of time in this committee. We have been told that we are to leave here at the end of June. Between now and the end of June there are two or three by-elections coming up and I for one am going to be away from here for a short time. What I have in mind is this. If we are really serious about this thing—the hon.

member for Winnipeg North Centre will like this even though he made some nasty cracks before he finished—why do we not first settle the question of the authority which we or the committee may exercise, instead of spending over two or three months in the committee and probably ending in a blind alley. That seems to be simply common sense. I know that somebody will immediately rise and assert the dignity of the high court of parliament, but we all know that our legislation is always subject to review by the Supreme Court of Canada if a position is created where it may be taken there.

It is a well-known constitutional fact that an opinion may be sought from the supreme court by way of question. That would mean perhaps a delay until another session. I have no idea at the moment how busy that court may be, nor do I know how long it would take to prepare and properly present the argument. I have a suggestion to make. The greatest authority on rules that I know of is the hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot), and I think we might excuse him while he argued this case for parliament before the Supreme Court of Canada. Now that the amendment of the hon. member for Lake Centre has been ruled out of order on technical grounds, which I respect, sir, and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has moved an amendment in language which may be more appropriate because he learns by the best of rules, that of trial and error—I do not want to credit him with being too great a genius, for I think he learned something from the amendment of the hon. member for Lake Centre—why can we not agree to find out if we are right or wrong?

We have had nothing written into our constitution since 1867 dealing with this question. We are now in 1948, and surely it can wait another year if it would take that long to decide it. I am quite sure that we could not get a finding from the supreme court by the end of June in time for us to do anything about it in this House of Commons this session. Why can we not all get together and adopt that simple suggestion? If the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is not in proper form, let us put it in proper form and find out just what authority we have, instead of having a lot of us sitting around a table, making big speeches and talking all this idealistic business and some members not appearing in the committee at all because engaged perhaps on other duties, or something of that kind. Let us find out what our authority is, and then, when we know what it is, let us move within our authority just as far as we can. I submit to you, sir, with great respect that that is the common-sense view to take of the whole position that we are in now. Then we may accomplish something, instead of delaying the situation for another year by forming the committee now.

[Mr. Smith (Calgary West).]

I do not doubt that every member of the house is in favour of these freedoms and these liberties. The only difference I have heard in the house today was that raised by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell), but he is an agreeable sort of gentleman and I think he might come along with us. He is the only person I have yet heard express a view against having something written into the constitution, but I do not think he would maintain that position long, because to write it in could not hurt the liberty situation; it could not hurt the basic freedom situation. The worst you could say about it would be that at the end it might be nugatory and accomplish nothing, but even at that we should have lost no ground.

So, with the greatest deference and respect I submit to the government and the minister in charge of this measure that they give it just a little more consideration. The supreme court are not so busy. We do not owe them anything. We vote their salaries in this House of Commons. They are fine men, able men, and I think they would be delighted to determine this jurisdictional question once and for all. Then we might have a committee of this house which would get some place. More than that, I suggest that the sensible thing is first to find out what we may do before we attempt to decide what we shall do, not knowing whether we have a right to do it or not.

Mrs. GLADYS STRUM (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to read an essay; I hope I shall not have to indulge in a lot of dialogue, and I shall finish by eleven o'clock.

I wish to refer to the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and to the resolution to which it refers. The object of the resolution is to find out what is the legal and constitutional position in Canada with respect to human rights, and what steps, if any, it would be advisable to take or to recommend for the purpose of preserving in Canada respect for and the observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms.

I suggest to the government and to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley) that it is not only his right but his duty to bring in a bill of rights. I think citizenship means very little if it can be qualified from province to province and subtracted from and denied on certain grounds. Two years ago we had introduced to this house a Citizenship Act, of which we were all very proud, and we did not go to the provinces to ask them whether we had the right to pass such an act. We did not write to all the deans of law schools in Canada or to the attorneys general. We passed the Citizenship Act and it has never been challenged.

Last year when I was on the committee of human rights I thought it a strange procedure that we should search out all the objections to doing something if we really intended to fulfil our covenant with the united nations. In the summary which the minister gave the other day of the replies which he had received I found very little trace of objections. It was not a summing up of objections so much as a summing up of indifference, a summing up of ignoring. If this had been a burning question of vital importance to the provinces we would not have had the minister going over one reply after another and saying that such-and-such a one had expressed no opinion, and that another was simply an acknowledgment of his letter without stating any grounds. It was, as I say, a summing up of indifference to, rather than a summing up of objections to, a bill of rights. I think it was an irregular thing to do, because in this house if we think we are on solid ground we pass a bill and then wait for it to be challenged, instead of going out and asking for the challenge first. The customary thing is to pass an act, and then if it is declared ultra vires by the court we must abide by that decision. But in order, I think, to appease certain people we have reversed the procedure in this case.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that citizenship and the bill of rights are associated in law and in practice and in justice and that they must be considered jointly and on the same grounds. Since we passed the Citizenship Act, we have had some violations of our basic freedoms. The right of assembly has been violated, and I regret very much that the first violation of this right of assembly took place in the province from which I come. I regret very much that it took place in Regina where a group of citizens broke up a meeting that was called under the protection of the law. If the Labour Progressive party is an illegal organization we should say so. Until it has been declared illegal, we have no right to condone the breaking up of any meeting by force, because the right of assembly is just as basic as the right of religious freedom and the right of freedom of speech. The violation which occurred in Regina was repeated in the city of Windsor. I regret that, too. I am afraid these young people have heard their parents say at home what they think should be done with the communists. Very often older people are irresponsible and they make rash and extravagant statements, knowing that they will not act on them, but then their teen-age children go out and act on them. Maybe that is what happened in this case.

I hold no brief for the communist party, and the party with which I am associated is unalterably opposed to the methods and doctrines of the communist party. That is true of every party in this house. There is not a party in this house that would defend the communist doctrine or practices. What is it that we must oppose in this doctrine of communism? Is it not this denial of protection to the individual, this denial of human freedom and human dignity? When we condone lawless acts of violence, acts that violate the method of democracy, then we are condoning the very essence of communism. That is why I believe in Canada we must have a bill of rights. I believe that we must set out in statutory form the things which we wish to protect and the method by which we propose to do so.

There have been not only violations of freedom of assembly in Canada but other things as well. I wish that my hon. friend, the member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) and the other hon. members to my left had protested the action that took place in Alberta not so long ago where a woman in the middle of her washing, the president of the I.O.D.E, had her home invaded by the mounted police who searched for papers.

Mr. JOHNSTON: How do you know that?

Mrs. STRUM: It was in your province.

Mr. JOHNSTON: Was it legal or otherwise?

Mrs. STRUM: I do not think there was any reason to search the premises of the president of the I.O.D.E. If the I.O.D.E. is an illegal society I have not heard of it. I object to these violations of the privacy of the homes of individuals. I object to the violation of religious freedom; I object to the denial of the right of people to exercise ordinary human rights because they are coloured—because they are Chinese or because their ancestors were negroes—and yet these violations have taken place across Canada. It is time that we began to insist that this is a democratic country and that we intend to defend and enforce these human rights.

Recently in Europe we had an example of the observance of the rules of decency and law in the trials of war criminals whose acts provided an example of the most horrible and degrading human bestiality yet on record. These people were tried and sentenced under a method that demonstrated, as nothing else could have done, the difference between the rule of law and the rule of brutality. Is that not the basic difference between the system which we defend and the system which we resist? Is not this building up of law as an entity, this building up of a method through which it might be practised, that demonstrates the value of democracy? It is time that we set up in a bill of rights a code and a method for the protection of the individual.

Referring again to our citizenship act, I have been pleased, since the passing of this act, to notice that the British government is studying it, that the government of Australia is studying it. Throughout the commonwealth it is held up as a model. That is something of which our country should be very proud. We should now pass a bill of rights which would compare with our Citizenship Act in defining the basic rights and freedoms which it would guarantee to the individual. It is time that we did this.

It is wrong to suggest that provinces may encroach upon the rights of the federal government in this respect. Recently I have had occasion to study in detail the history of the Canadian constitution. I was surprised to find that in the beginning, when the rights of the provinces were set out as opposed to the rights of the federal government, the federal rights defined by the British North America Act were used in the beginning only for illustrative purposes. They were used to illustrate the territory which should be exclusively under the jurisdiction of the federal parliament. As time went on, through judicial decision, we find the provinces encroaching on the rights of the federal government. In that undefined and unexplored legislative territory we find that the provinces made more gains than the federal government did, and gradually the only rights remaining to the federal government were those that had been originally set out for illustrative purposes only. I think it is a false conception of the federal system of government to assume that provinces can limit human freedom and human rights and can lessen the protection of the citizens of this country. Therefore I would suggest to the government that they waste no time in framing and introducing in this parliament a bill of rights. Canada is now not only a great economic and military power but is a great moral force in the world today, and we wish to have this moral force unqualified by subtractions or limitations throughout the length and breadth of our land.

On motion of Mr. Church the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. ST. LAURENT: The program for tomorrow will be the continuation of that of today, with the addition of the motion to go into supply and the adjourned debate on the amendment of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell).

Mr. KNOWLES: In what order?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I am not in a position to say in what order. I would hope that this debate on the motion to set up a committee on human rights and fundamental freedoms might be completed and disposed of in a short time before anything else was dealt with, but that has not yet been determined.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, April 13, 1948

The house met at three o'clock.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

CHANGE IN PERSONNEL OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport) moved:

That the name of Mr. Bourget be substituted for that of Mr. Lalonde, and the name of Mr. Hamel be substituted for that of Mr. Raymond (Beauharnois-Laprairie) on the select standing committee on industrial relations.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

ANNOUNCEMENT OF RESIGNATION OF F. L. M. ARNOLD

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I desire to announce that Mr. F. L. M. Arnold has resigned as a member of the wheat board, effective May 15; and I now table the correspondence in respect thereto.

CRIMINAL CODE

ONE-THIRD OF JURORS TO BE FEMALE IN TRIAL OF FEMALE PERSONS

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 199, to amend the criminal code (juries).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FREIGHT RATES

INQUIRY AS TO MODIFICATIONS IN GOVERNMENT POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister having to do with a matter we will be discussing this afternoon; that is why I ask it now. Has the government made any other modifications in its announced policies with respect to freight rates?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Doubtless my hon. friend will hear the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) in a few minutes, and he will answer the question while he is speaking.

TABLING OF REPRESENTATIONS ON BEHALF OF PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Has the Minister of Transport received permission from the seven interested provinces to lay on the table of the house, representations made on behalf of the provincial governments to stay the order of the transport commissioners recommending increased freight rates? If so, will he table the documents?

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport): The answer is yes. The request was also made by the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker). I now table the applications to stay effective date of the order of the board of transport commissioners. At the same time I should like to announce that there will be distributed to members' boxes, if indeed this has not already been done, the judgment of the board of transport commissioners in the case.

PALESTINE

DEATH OF BRITISH SOLDIERS—COLLECTION OF FUNDS FOR ZIONIST ORGANIZATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. NORMAN JAQUES (Wetaskiwin): On Friday last I addressed a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who said he would give an answer after he had time to read Hansard. I would ask when I may expect an answer to my question.

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The question is framed in language which makes assumptions of facts as to which I have not been able as yet to obtain confirmation. That is the reason no answer has yet been given.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. D. KING HAZEN (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Veterans Affairs, based upon a resolution passed by the Saint John trades and labour council on April 2 last. It states:

We consider that the request made unanimously by—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon. member must understand that he cannot refer to a resolution in that way.

Mr. HAZEN: I cannot very well ask my question without doing so.

SUPPLY

FREIGHT RATES—INCREASES ORDERED BY TRANSPORT BOARD—AMENDMENT, MR. COLDWELL —SUBAMENDMENT, MR. BRACKEN

The house resumed from Wednesday, April 7, consideration of the motion of Mr. Abbott for committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Coldwell and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Bracken.

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate fully conscious of the serious political and economic implications that the question which the house has been debating may have upon the country.

As I indicated in a statement made earlier in debate, there have been some definite contributions to the discussion, some constructive speeches made by hon. members; and on the other hand there have been some destructive speeches. Some speeches unfortunately have been aimed at heaping abuse not only upon the judgment of the board of transport commissioners but also against and upon the government.

In the remarks I shall make this afternoon I propose to be frank and honest about the discussion now before the house, and that for more than one reason. But before entering upon a discussion of the three points with which I should like to deal today—first, the responsibility of the governor in council; second, the decision of the board, and, third, the decision of the government to require or direct a thorough and complete investigation of the inequalities in freight rates—I should like to dispel some of the misconceptions which seem to me to exist on this question.

First of all there seems to be a misconception with reference to the decision of the board. The decision of the board deals with an application for an increase in freight rates by the railways—and that was the only matter that came before the board at that time. The board on that occasion did not deal with inequalities in the freight rate structure, the so-called discriminations which have been mentioned in this debate. But the board dealt with and was faced purely with a revenue case.

Next, it was clearly stated, and I shall refer to this later, that in the discussion by counsel for the provinces they had no intention of submitting at that time an application for the disappearance of inequalities. Their arguments and evidence were directed clearly as an objection to the application of the railways.

Dealing therefore with the first consideration I mentioned a minute ago, namely, the responsibility of the governor in council, I should like to say this. Many hon. members, and I think no one more forcibly than the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker), have taken the position that the responsibility was not that of the board of transport commissioners, but that of the governor in council. To use the expressive words used at that time, it was said that this was not only the responsibility of the governor in council but also that of the minister, that the baby was on the doorstep of the government, and that it was up to the government to deal with it.

I have no intention even in the slightest measure of backing away from any responsibility the government may have, and in anything I shall say I will not be back-pedalling from that responsibility. But I think the house should know that there is a definition respecting the responsibility of the government and the governor in council. That is what I should like to place before hon. members at this time.

Prior to 1903 the responsibility for rate fixing and for the rate structure in this country lay squarely upon the shoulders of what was then known as the railway committee of the privy council. That committee was charged not only with that responsibility, but with all other responsibilities having to do with transportation in Canada at that time. It soon became evident, however, as hon. members will immediately realize, that that method of dealing with freight rates, freight structure and the like was not only desultory but ineffective. Parliament therefore decided to obtain the opinion of a recognized authority on the subject, Professor McLean, who passed away only a short time ago.

Professor McLean proceeded to make an investigation and to report to the government. This is what he had to say with reference to the inability and the ineffectiveness of the railway committee of the privy council to deal with this subject:

> That committee has been unable, owing to its organization, to grapple effectively with the problem presented. It has been impossible, owing to its stationary character, to deal effectively with questions pertaining to rates and preferences. A more migratory body could deal more effectively with these matters.

The defects of the railway committee as a regulator of railway transportation I would place under the following heads:

1. It has a dual function, political and administrative.

2. The lack of migratory organization renders it impossible to deal effectively with complaints.

3. The distances to be travelled by complainants render the expense too great.

4. There is lack of technical training for the work.

5. The existing organization is not sufficiently permanent.

And still quoting Doctor McLean:

In my opinion, the only way to put the matter of railway regulation on a more satisfactory footing in Canada is by entrusting it to a railway commission composed of men of technical training, who shall receive salaries adequate to attract the most efficient, and who shall have a long tenure of office.

It was following that report made by Doctor McLean to the then minister of railways and canals that parliament decided to pass the Railway Act. That act became law in 1903. It contained comprehensive provisions with respect to tariffs and tolls of the railways, and established the railway commission to administer the act.

Section 52 of the act sets out clearly the responsibility of the governor in council with reference to the matter. It states that the government shall have wide and varied powers to deal with applications of this kind. And while the discretion is vested in the governor in council in proceedings under this section, the position of the governor in council is defined as one of a judicial nature.

The intent of the legislation of 1903 was to invest the governor in council with these judicial powers by which he may, in his discretion, aid in securing and enforcing the provisions of the Railway Act, having due regard to the method of railway rate regulation by an independent commission, which was the outstanding innovation of the Railway Act of 1903, and has been preserved throughout the succeeding amendments which were made to the act down to the present time.

In other words, the powers of the governor in council are judicial in nature. These are not the only powers of the governor in council which are of a judicial nature. I do not think, and this is my own personal opinion, that it was ever intended that the governor in council should interfere in the question of rate making or rate equality or rate discrimination. The very nature of the act indicates that that should be left to the technical and expert knowledge of the staff of the board.

Again, without in any way backing away from the responsibility of the governor in council, it would not seem to be desirable, except under very extraordinary circumstances, that the governor in council should undertake to rehear or review the decisions of the board as to whether, upon the facts appearing in the evidence before it, in any particular case, the provisions of the statute with regard to rates have been complied with. That seems to me to be the proper interpretation to place upon section 52 of the act. In fact that is the history of the various cases. I believe that I am reliably informed when I say that from 1917 to date, in the cases wherein the increases were passed or ordered by the board following world war I, in no instance has the governor in council interfered to change the findings contained in the board's order.

In fact the contrary is true. In the 40 per cent case, to which I shall refer later, the decision of the board was dated September 9, 1920. It provided for an increase in rates of 40 per cent to be effective September 13, 1920; that is, four days later. An application was made to the governor in council to stay the order, but the governor in council declined to interfere with the effective date of the order. In other words, the point I am making now is that the governor in council should not substitute its judgment on a technical question demanding expert and technical knowledge and evidence for that of a board which parliament has created to do the job.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Will the minister permit a question? There was an appeal, was there not?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I shall be glad to answer any question at the close of my remarks. I am afraid I shall not be able to make in forty minutes the remarks I have to make.

Mr. KNOWLES: You have unlimited time.

Mr. CHEVRIER: What I have said thus far is without prejudice to the right of the premiers of the various provinces of the dominion to make application by way of appeal for a review of the decision of the board. Nothing in what I have said affects that position. While the premiers have not thus far made that application, they have asked for a stay in the order. They have signified a notice of intention to appeal. When they do I can assure this house that their representations will be carefully considered. If it is thought necessary to hear them, they will be heard. In the light of what they may have to say then, as well as in the light of circumstances, a decision will be made having regard to the best interests of the country as a whole.

The next point with which I should like to deal is the decision of the board made pursuant to order 70425 of March 30, 1948, following application by the railways for a thirty per cent increase in rates. The railways applied as well for an increase of twenty, thirty and forty cents per ton on coke and coal. The application of the railways specifically excluded a long list of items which I shall not repeat but which may be summarized under three heads. The application of the railways did not include (a) rates on grain and grain products under the Crowsnest Pass agreement; (b) rates on international traffic beyond the Canadian border; and (c) certain import and export rates on such traffic through Canadian ports.

What I should like to bring to the attention of the house is that the application for increases, instead of affecting an estimated freight revenue of $492 million for the two main railway lines in Canada affected a freight revenue of approximately $262,500,000, thus immediately eliminating nearly $230,000,000 of freight revenue. The application was predicated upon increased costs of operation. In other words, the board was faced with a revenue case. The railways claimed that because of higher wages, higher material costs, their revenues would be insufficient to meet their operating expenses, their fixed charges, their dividends and also the provision of adequate amounts for additions and betterments to their lines. After having listened carefully to the best expert evidence which could be brought forward, after having heard technical evidence by accountants and the like, the board of transport commissioners came to the conclusion that there was a substantial deficiency in the financial requirements of our two railways. They found that that deficiency amounted to $70,000,000 in 1947. For the Canadian National Railways lines in Canada alone the deficiency was in the neighbourhood of $40,000,000.

Let me pursue that point just a bit further. In 1940 the operating revenues of the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway put together amounted to $384,000,000 and these produced a net operating revenue of $80,500,000. In 1947, seven years later, the operating revenues of the same railroads was $693,000,000 which produced a net operating revenue of only $71,000,000. In other words, an increase in operating revenue of $300,000,000 produced a smaller net operating revenue. There in one word is the position of the railways in Canada today.

If one stops to compare the position of the Canadian National Railways alone in the year 1946 with that of the year 1939 one finds that wages have increased by 42·2 per cent; fuel by 51·4 per cent; ties by 47·3 per cent; rails by 27·4 per cent; other materials by 26·2 per cent, or an over-all increase in wages and materials of 40·1 per cent. Thus $60,000,000 more was paid for wages in 1946 than was paid in 1939 and this for the same level of employment. A total of $26,000,000 more was paid for the materials used in 1946. This comparison needs no adjustment for the man-hours performed nor for the amount of materials used.

How can anyone expect that under those circumstances the railways can meet such mounting costs without additional revenue? The comparison which I have just made is based on the year 1946, and everyone knows what increases have taken place since.

The board gave careful consideration to all the arguments that were put before it. They sat for almost fourteen months. The hearings themselves began in February of 1947 and terminated in December of the same year. Sittings were held in every province. The provinces were represented by able and outstanding counsel. Expert witnesses were called and technical evidence was put before the board. From one end of the country to the other the board listened carefully and attentively to groups, associations and individuals who desired to present their cases.

There are six commissioners on the board at the present time. The board through the chief commissioner has delivered a clear and outstanding judgment in this case. One of these commissioners is a former attorney general of the province of Saskatchewan. Does anyone in this house think that that man was not fully conscious of the position in which he found himself or that he did not understand the implications which this decision would have upon the province of Saskatchewan or upon the prairies or the rest of Canada?

Another commissioner is the former president of the Farmers Union of Canada. He subsequently became president of the United Farmers of Canada. He also served as a commissioner on the royal grain inquiry. Does anyone suggest for a moment that that commissioner, equally with the member from Saskatchewan, was not fully conscious of his duties as a commissioner and did not understand fully the impact which this judgment might have on the economy of Canada?

A third commissioner is a former member of the government of British Columbia. He delivered a separate judgment. He agreed fully with the conclusions arrived at by the chief commissioner, but he made some distinction with reference to the mountain differential. True, he referred to the inequality which existed in British Columbia so far as the mountain differential is concerned, but he agreed in substance with the conclusions and with the decisions arrived at by the rest of the board.

Still another commissioner came from the maritime provinces and represented the railway brotherhoods from that section. Four out of the six commissioners represented provinces other than the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. Surely these men were as much interested and as much concerned about the decision which they might render as any hon. member of this house could be.

The board had to assist it expert advice and expert assistants. It had two bodies from which it could seek advice. First it had the traffic department of the board of transport commissioners, composed of some twenty men, headed by a traffic officer and an assistant traffic officer, both of whom have done nothing during the whole of their lives but study freight rates and their effect in various parts of the country. Does anyone suggest for a moment that these men were not fully conscious of their position in the advice which they gave to the board?

The other body which the board had to assist it is known as the bureau of transportation economics, established in 1946 to assist the board of transport commissioners in the freight rate case now under discussion. It comprises some forty employees, seven of whom are technical men fully versed in the economics of transport, whether it be from the accounting, the financial or the statistical standpoint. So when the statement is made in this house that the board of transport commissioners are a group of incompetent men who have made a mess of their task and should be fired, I say that those who make such charges are not fully aware of the facts, nor are they doing justice to themselves. They are making statements which are entirely contrary to the facts.

May I deal briefly with the changes in the rate structure in this country following world war I. I think it will be of interest to the house, because there are some parallels which might well be drawn.

The first increase in freight rates in this country following world war I came in 1917. It was known as the 15 per cent case. It was made as a result of an application by the railways to the board of transport commissioners following the granting of a general 15 per cent increase in the United States. The increase then granted in Canada was generally 15 per cent in the rates, with a large number of exceptions too numerous to mention.

The second increase came in 1918. It was the 25 per cent case. It followed the McAdoo award in the United States; and hon. members will please note this, that it was made by the direction of the cabinet to the board. The increase was a general 25 per cent increase all across the board, with a number of exceptions too numerous to enumerate.

The third increase, known as the 40 per cent increase, came in 1920. It was made on application of the railway association to the board and was heard from August 10 to August 23, 1920. It provided for a general increase of 40 per cent in eastern Canada, 35 per cent in western Canada, and 33⅓ per cent in transcontinental rates, subject to certain exceptions.

In January 1921 there was a reduction in the rates by five per cent. In December of 1921 there was a reduction of ten per cent, and finally in 1922 the increase in the 40 per cent case was reduced to 17½ per cent in eastern Canada and to 12½ per cent in western Canada. Since 1922, therefore, there have been no changes in the general rate level in Canada, though rates have been substantially increased both in the United States and in the United Kingdom.

In the United States here is what happened. In 1935 there was an increase of 5 per cent; 1938, an increase of 7·5 per cent; 1946, an increase of 6 per cent; 1947, an increase of 11·6 per cent, and again in 1947 an increase of 8·9 per cent; 1948, an increase of 8 per cent. The railways of the United States were therefore granted a series of interim increases the cumulative effect of which amounted to between 50 and 60 per cent.

What happened in the United Kingdom? On May 1, 1940, an increase of 10 per cent was granted; December 1, 1940, an increase of 6⅔ per cent; July 1, 1946, an increase of 8⅓ per cent; October 1, 1947, an increase of 30 per cent. The total increases granted in the United Kingdom were therefore approximately 55 per cent, as compared with an increase in the United States ranging from 50 to 60 per cent over the pre-war level, and an increase in Canada of 21 per cent.

A great deal has been said in the debate about the tremendous effect that this increase will have on the cost of living. The Canadian National Railways have prepared a chart showing the range of freight rate increase in cents per retail sales unit for commodities transported from their principal sources of supply to important consumption centres in Canada, and with the consent of the house I should like to place this chart on Hansard. Before doing so I should like to comment on one or two of the more important items used by the average citizen in this country. For instance, on tea moving from its principal source of supply to Vancouver there will be no increase, none to Calgary and none to Regina; there will be no increase anywhere with reference to tea because of the decision of the board. So far as coffee is concerned there will be an increase of one-tenth of one cent per pound on that commodity moving from these principal sources of supply to Quebec. There will be no increase to Montreal. There will be one-tenth of a cent increase to Halifax and Toronto, no increase to Winnipeg, no increase to Vancouver, one-tenth of a cent increase to Regina, and two-tenths of a cent to Calgary.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Are these commodities moving both ways?

Mr. CHEVRIER: No, moving from their principal sources of supply.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Take tea.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Yes. It depends on where it originated. If it originated in Quebec and was moving to Montreal, there would be no increase; but I shall take other items which will, I think, make the point clear in a moment. Take milk. Because of the decision the increase per quart will be one-tenth of a cent moving from various sources of supply across Canada to all the points mentioned in this document. The same can be said of butter. There the increase will be one-tenth of a cent per pound, and the increase is almost the same on cheese.

I do not want to refer exclusively to items which bear out my point. Let me take one which may have a different bearing on it. Let me take a Chevrolet car, which the average man does not buy. A Chevrolet car moving east from Walkerville or Oshawa to Quebec will have to bear an increase of $7.33; to Montreal, $5.33; to Halifax, $7.86; to Toronto, $2.40; to Winnipeg, $17.48; to Regina, $23.39; to Calgary, $29.73; to Vancouver, $31.26.

I should like to place this table on record for the information of the house.

Mr. SPEAKER: Has the minister the unanimous consent of the house?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The table follows:

On the morning of March 30 the board of transport commissioners handed down its decision under order No. 70425 pertaining to the railways' application for an increase of 30 per cent in freight rates within Canada. The order referred to authorized an increase of 21 per cent in freight rates. On coal and coke an increase of 25 cents per ton was authorized. No increase was permitted in rates on grain and grain products moving between points in western Canada.

Here are shown the range of the increase in final freight costs per retail sales unit, for twenty-one different commodities transported from their principal sources of supply to eight representative centres of consumption in Canada. The commodities selected are, in the main, important items in the cost of living budget. Other items were selected in order to illustrate the situation more fully. The information shown does not necessarily represent increases in retail prices which may occur as a result of the increase in freight, but is merely indicative of the limited extent to which laid down costs will be affected by the proposed increase.

RANGE OF FREIGHT INCREASE IN CENTS PER RETAIL SALES UNIT

FOR COMMODITIES TRANSPORTED FROM THEIR PRINCIPAL SOURCES OF SUPPLY

TO IMPORTANT CONSUMPTION CENTRES IN CANADA

Commodity	Retail sales unit		Quebec		Montreal		Halifax		Toronto		Winnipeg		Regina		Calgary		Vancouver
			Carload	L.C.L.	Carload	L.C.L.	Carload	L.C.L.	Carload	L.C.L.	Carload	L.C.L.	Carload	L.C.L.	Carload	L.C.L.	Carload	L.C.L.
			cts.	cts.	cts.	cts.	cts.	cts.	cts.	cts.	cts.	cts.	cts.	cts.	cts.	cts.	cts.	cts.
Tea	Pound	Low	0·0	0·0	0·0	0·0	0·0	0·0	0·0	0·0	0·0	0·0	0·0	0·0	0·0	0·0	0·0	0·0
		High	0·7	1·1	0·7	1·1	0·7	1·1	0·7	1·1	0·5	0·7	0·5	0·7	0·6	0·9	0·7	0·8
Coffee (roasted)	Pound	Low	0·1	0·1	0·0	0·0	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·0	0·0	0·1	0·1	0·2	0·2	0·0	0·0
		High	0·5	0·7	0·3	0·7	0·5	0·7	0·3	0·7	0·3	0·5	0·3	0·5	0·4	0·6	0·3	0·7
Milk	Quart		.....	0·1	.....	0·1	.....	0·1	.....	0·1	.....	0·1	.....	0·1	.....	0·1	.....	0·1
Butter	Pound	Low	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·1
		High	0·1	0·1	0·3	0·5	0·5	0·7	0·1	0·1	0·3	0·3	0·2	0·2	0·2	0·3	0·3	0·4
Cheese	Pound	Low	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·3	0·3	0·4	0·5	0·5	0·6	0·1	0·1
		High	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·3	0·3	0·4	0·5	0·5	0·6	0·5	0·7
Eggs	Dozen	Low	0·1	0·3	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·2	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·2	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·2	0·1	0·1
		High	0·5	0·8	0·5	0·8	0·8	1·3	0·5	0·8	0·5	0·9	0·1	0·2	0·4	0·7	0·5	0·7
Apples	Pound	Low	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·2	0·3	0·2	0·2	0·1	0·2	0·1	0·1
		High	0·3	0·7	0·3	0·7	0·3	0·7	0·3	0·7	0·2	0·3	0·2	0·5	0·2	0·2	0·1	0·1
Refined sugar	Pound	Low	0·1	0·1	0·0	0·0	0·0	0·0	0·0	0·1	0·0	0·0	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·0	0·0
		High	0·1	0·2	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·2	0·3	0·3	0·3	0·2	0·2	0·0	0·0
Salt (refined)	Pound	Low	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·0	0·1	0·0	0·1	0·0	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·2	0·0	0·0
		High	0·1	0·2	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·2	0·0	0·1	0·1	0·3	0·1	0·5	0·1	0·3	0·2	0·5
Beef	Pound	Low	0·1	0·1	0·0	0·0	0·1	0·1	0·0	0·0	0·0	0·0	0·0	0·1	0·0	0·0	0·0	0·0
		High	0·3	0·5	0·3	0·5	0·3	0·6	0·3	0·5	0·2	0·4	0·1	0·3	0·1	0·2	0·3	0·5
Fish (salted or cured)	Pound	Low	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·0	0·0	0·1	0·1	0·3	0·4	0·3	0·4	0·2	0·3	0·0	0·0
		High	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·0	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·3	0·5	0·3	0·5	0·4	0·6	0·3	0·7
Potatoes	Peck	Low	0·8	1·5	0·3	0·9	0·6	1·1	0·5	0·8	0·4	0·6	0·8	1·7	0·4	0·9	0·6	1·1
		High	0·8	1·5	0·9	1·7	0·8	1·5	1·1	2·0	2·4	4·4	2·0	3·8	1·3	2·3	0·7	1·4
Canned goods	Tin (20 oz.)	Low	0·1	0·1	0·0	0·0	0·1	0·1	0·0	0·0	0·2	0·3	0·1	0·2	0·1	0·1	0·0	0·0
		High	0·1	0·2	0·1	0·2	0·2	0·3	0·1	0·1	0·3	0·6	0·4	0·6	0·5	0·7	0·2	0·9
Men's suits	Suit	Low	0·7	0·7	0·0	0·0	1·0	1·0	0·0	0·0	2·7	2·7	3·5	3·5	4·5	4·5	5·0	5·0
		High	1·0	1·0	0·6	0·7	1·2	1·2	0·8	0·7	2·7	2·7	3·5	3·5	4·5	4·5	5·0	5·0
Men's shoes	Pair	Low	0·0	0·0	0·0	0·0	0·3	0·4	0·2	0·2	1·1	1·6	1·5	2·1	1·8	2·7	1·9	2·9
		High	0·3	0·5	0·4	0·5	0·6	0·8	0·5	0·6	1·1	1·7	1·5	2·2	1·9	2·8	1·9	3·0
Shirts	One	Low	0·1	0·1	0·0	0·0	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·4	0·4	0·5	0·5	0·6	0·6	0·5	0·5
		High	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·1	0·2	0·2	0·1	0·1	0·7	0·4	0·5	0·5	0·6	0·6	0·5	0·5
Bath tubs	One		35·0	51·3	28·0	42·0	39·7	59·5	16·3	25·7	79·3	123·7	109·7	168·0	137·7	212·3	123·7	249·5
Coal stove	One	Low	14·1	22·7	28·3	36·7	22·7	28·3	15·6	25·5	96·1	150·0	133·1	204·0	167·3	258·0	167·3	254·7
		High	45·3	73·7	38·0	56·7	53·9	80·7	45·3	65·1	101·9	158·7	136·0	212·5	172·7	266·7	167·3	311·7
Electric stove	One	Low	32·5	45·5	22·7	32·7	43·3	61·7	15·1	21·7	88·8	145·3	121·3	192·8	151·7	244·7	182·3	294·7
		High	43·3	62·8	34·7	50·0	48·7	69·3	30·3	43·3	88·8	145·3	121·3	192·8	151·7	244·7	182·3	294·7
Chevrolet car	One	Low	733·3	656·0	533·3	546·7	786·7	786·7	240·5	240·5	1,748·0	1,748·0	2,339·7	2,339·7	2,973·9	2,973·9	3,126·7	3,632·7
		High	733·3	656·0	533·3	546·7	786·7	786·7	240·5	240·5	1,748·0	1,748·0	2,339·7	2,339·7	2,973·9	2,973·9	3,126·7	3,632·7
Lumber	1,000 board feet	Low	116·7	.....	116·7	.....	116·7	.....	116·7	.....	186·7	.....	163·3	.....	116·7	.....	0·0	.....
		High	630·0	.....	630·0	.....	746·7	.....	618·2	.....	385·3	.....	396·7	.....	350·0	.....	0·0	.....

I should now like to deal with the third point which I proposed to consider at the outset of my remarks, namely, the decision of the government to direct the board to make a thorough and complete investigation of the inequalities in freight rates in Canada.

Section 314 of the Railway Act deals with equality as to tolls and facilities. The section in effect says this, that there should be equality as to tolls with respect to all traffic carried under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, and that no tolls shall be charged which unjustly discriminate between different localities. The two principal considerations governing the board are one, as to the reasonableness of the rate per se; and two, whether or not there is a feature of unjust discrimination. In that respect may I be allowed to state that in Canada we have four different grades or steps in the freight rate structure. First there is the maritime rate in preferred territory; second, the competitive rates of Ontario and Quebec; third, the prairie rates in Manitoba Saskatchewan and Alberta, and fourth, the mountain scale or Pacific scale of rates. I need not define these—the house is fully conversant with them. But why is it that freight rates are somewhat higher in some areas than in others? The reasons will be found in 33 Canadian Railway Cases, page 127. This is an extremely important and extensive judgment—

Mr. GREEN: What date?

Mr. CHEVRIER: 1927. In that judgment will be found the reasons for these discrepancies. The reasons are so extensive that there is not time in a debate such as this to go into them fully. But let me say briefly, and speaking generally, that the general level of rates in eastern Canada on general merchandise and other commodities is somewhat lower than in the prairies and in the so-called Pacific area, namely, west of the Crowsnest, British Columbia, Canmore and Edson, Alberta, the rates are somewhat higher than on the prairies. There are, however, numerous exceptions with respect to various special rates which have been published. Lower rates in eastern Canada are compelled by water competition, a combination of water and motor truck competition, as well as rates established by the United States lines. The different rates have been brought much closer together under various decisions of the board at different times since 1914.

In 1925, in the decision referred to a moment ago, the board undertook a complete investigation, the largest one of its kind, into the rate structure in this country. This lasted for two years, and a decision was rendered in 1927. Some mention has been made in the house of the time it will take for the board to complete this investigation. In order that there will be no further misunderstanding on this question may I say that I conferred with the chief commissioner of the board and asked him how long in his opinion it would take to complete this investigation. He said that because of the circumstances which had changed in the economy of this country from the time that the judgment was handed down in 1927, it would require an absolute minimum of six months in which to complete the investigation, and that it would probably be completed within a year.

I have this further to say as to the time within which the board can dispose of the investigation into inequalities. Just as soon as the provinces have indicated their readiness to submit their case to the board, the board will move immediately to the region or the province which is ready to present its case. I am informed, I believe reliably, that already in the province of Alberta preparations have been made for a presentation to the board—preparations extending over a period of several months and in fact almost a year.

The charge has been made that while the investigation is being carried on the people of this country will have exceedingly high rates inflicted upon them. I believe it was the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore) who said that the rates would be exceedingly high, and I believe the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) used the expression "unusually high", because of the inequality. Does the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar know of any group, any individual, any association, any board in any province which, in the last twenty years, or since the decision of the board in 1927, has signified any intention to the board of making an application to it to do away with inequalities?

Mr. COLDWELL: I know there has been constant criticism of the inequalities from boards and all other sources.

Mr. CHEVRIER: There may have been constant criticism—

Mr. COLDWELL: And may I say it was in every brief presented by the various governments.

Mr. CHEVRIER: There may have been criticism, but the point is, has there been an application? And really, if there has been criticism without the application, the board could not be seized of the inequalities. Let me quote from page 44 of the judgment of the chief commissioner. He states:

What was presented to us was, to a considerable degree, of a generalized character. Many of the rate features covered by the submissions made at the regional hearings were referred to as being of long-standing unfairness and unjustly discriminatory, but it is somewhat significant that since 1927, when the last general freight rates investigation was concluded, not one of these matters has been made the subject of a formal application or complaint to the board.

The board is of the opinion that if the interested parties desire to have these questions dealt with under proceedings upon complaint, they should be handled in accordance with the board's rules and regulations and more specifically in accordance with rules 2, 3 and 4 thereof.

It is, of course, obvious that these matters would require to be very fully explored in a separate investigation involving much study and most complete evidence from all interested parties. There would require, among other things, to be special surveys made of actual traffic movements in various regions as well as with respect to railway operating costs in such regions. While many of the subjects presented in this case have been considered and dealt with in the past, it may be that since that time, which was many years ago, there have been such changes with respect to some of these matters that upon further investigation it would be found that there should be some changes made in the rate structure along the lines suggested in what was put before the board.

I have already put on the record in this house, but I think I should again record, the statements made by counsel for the various provinces, who made it quite clear that they did not desire this investigation to be made one for the removal of the so-called discrimination or inequalities.

Counsel for British Columbia stated, at page 57 of the chief commissioner's judgment:

This is not an application for the removal of the mountain differential by British Columbia. Our role is quite clear; we say there should be no increase in rates while the present inequality under which our people have been suffering remains. Removal of the mountain differential is something which must be brought up by a substantive application which, when our preparations are complete, I propose to launch.

Counsel for Alberta stated:

We are not here now petitioning for the removal of the mountain differential nor to be relieved from discrimination which results from transcontinental rates.

Counsel for Manitoba stated:

We have heard considerable evidence on this question of mountain differential; and aside from the argument, I do not think that this board has before it at the present time evidence upon which any finding could be made. That, I submit, would have to be a matter of investigation.

Coming back to the charge made by the hon. member for Lethbridge and the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, that the effect of this judgment will be to make freight rates exceedingly high in this country, the answer is to be found in the chart which I tabled a moment ago, and also in this statement. Does the hon. member know that the average revenue per ton mile in Canada has always been lower than that of any other country in the world? It now stands at less than one cent per ton mile, with no increase having been granted since 1920, although substantial increases have been granted in the United Kingdom and the United States.

One cannot lose track of the fact that the last general rate increase was granted to the railways back in 1920 and the last general freight rate investigation was completed in 1927. Considerable development has taken place in Canada since that time. During those twenty years the railways of this country have had to cope with exceedingly difficult conditions. They were faced in the twenties with highway competition, then they went through the depression, which lasted nearly ten years, and everyone will agree that the war effort of the railways was tremendous and contributed in no small measure to Canada's share in the final outcome of world war II.

It should, it seems to me, be a source of great satisfaction to the citizens of this country that the railways were able to stand these economic upheavals without any increase in freight rates. It is only since 1946, when the increase in costs became greater than the increase in revenue, that the railways were forced to apply for a revision in their freight rates.

The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar suggests that this increase should not be allowed to go into effect. I wonder if the hon. gentleman has considered the implications of such a decision. I wonder if he has realized that the net result of such a decision would unquestionably lead to amalgamation of the railways. I wonder if he has given consideration to the fact that, with the deficit of the Canadian National Railways as it now stands at $15,000,000, and with what will be required if this increase is not allowed to go into effect, namely, $25,000,000 or $30,000,000, this house will be called upon to vote somewhere in the neighbourhood of $45,000,000 to $50,000,000 to meet the deficit of the Canadian National Railways. I have no brief for the other railway, but in fairness I think it should be stated that were it not for the other income mentioned in its annual report that railway would be short by no less than $30,345,000 in meeting its requirements.

If that is the situation in reference to the two railways and the house should be asked to vote such a tremendous sum for the National Railways, does it not follow that if the judgment is not allowed to go into effect the Canadian Pacific Railway will be placed in a deficit position and will eventually have to go into liquidation, and that in effect and in the end this will mean the amalgamation of the railways?

Mr. COLDWELL: Not at all; not necessarily.

Mr. CHEVRIER: My hon. friend cannot argue himself out of that position, which I think follows logically from the request he makes.

Mr. COLDWELL: It does not follow.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Does any hon. member of this house think that is a desirable thing, that we should have railway amalgamation in this country? I doubt if any hon. gentleman would take that position.

Now I want to say a word about the contribution to the debate by the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith). The hon. member has made many excellent contributions in this house, and he has made some that were not so good. In fairness to him I have to state that his was really a constructive contribution to the debate. He attempted to deal with the matter not from the political but from the economic angle; and he dealt with two of the very serious sore spots in his part of the country, the mountain differential and the transcontinental rate. As the house knows, the mountain differential is brought about by the fact that in calculating rates, one mile in the mountain region is equal to one and a quarter miles in the prairie region. Here let me pause for a moment to state what has been done in the past with respect to the mountain differential. It used to be that one mile in the mountain area equalled two miles in the prairies. Following various investigations conducted by the board from time to time, that was reduced until now a mile and a quarter on the prairies equals one mile in the mountains. By virtue of at least two decisions of the board that differential was reduced first from two to one and three-quarters and then from one and three-quarters to one and one-quarter miles. The judgment of the board in 1927 dealt with that very matter, and that judgment is specific as set out in 33 Canadian Railway Cases, at page 127. Since that time economic conditions in this country have changed materially, as no one knows better than hon. members who come from the British Columbia and prairie regions. Since conditions have changed it may well be that when the board of transport commissioners ends its investigation it will come to the conclusion that having regard to all the circumstances, including the changes in the economy of this country, the time has come when the mountain differential should be made to disappear altogether; and if that should be the decision I am sure no one will have any fault to find with it.

The hon. member for Calgary West also dealt with the matter of the transcontinental rate, which, as is well known, was established to compete with water transportation via the Panama canal. The hon. member suggested that perhaps a remedy could be found by virtue of the decision in the Spokane case. I have considered that decision with the officers of my department, and I am informed that it is no longer in effect; that it has been eaten away by various exceptions and provisions, and that because the general effect of the decision has been reduced by those provisions and exceptions in various judgments of the interstate commerce commission it could not be made to apply with equity to Canada, because if any attempt were made to apply it here it might well result in a benefit to one region but a great disadvantage to another.

One hon. member suggested the appointment of a royal commission, and I think it was the hon. member for Calgary West who said that in his opinion some other body should undertake this investigation. I say to the house that if we were to appoint a royal commission or other body to investigate the inequalities of the freight rates structure in Canada this is what would happen. The royal commission or other body would come to the government and say, "We are ready to proceed with the case. Give us the technical assistance; give us the experts." We would have to reply, "We know of only two groups of people in this country who are able to give you the technical evidence and assistance you require, and those two groups are to be found in the board of transport commissioners." Those groups are, first, the bureau of economics of the board of transport commissioners, and second, the traffic experts of that board, the one composed of a personnel of forty and the other of a personnel of twenty. That being the case what would be the use of asking four, five or six men, not nearly as conversant with this question as are the members of the board of transport commissioners, and who to my mind would not have the same knowledge of the circumstances as the board, to carry out such an investigation? I say to the house therefore that the members of the board, four of whom are from provinces other than Ontario and Quebec, are better qualified and equipped to deal with this question than would be the members of a specialized board or commission of some kind or other.

I return to the point made at the outset, that in 1903 parliament vested in the board the duty and responsibility of fixing rates for this country. To take that responsibility away from the board set up at that time I do not think would be a step in the right direction.

In his contribution to the debate the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) said at page 2656 of Hansard:

> As I understand the question in British Columbia, it is not that we object to an increase in freight rates if that increase is necessary, but we object to the fact that the decision made at this time perpetuates freight rates which we have considered for years to be inequitable. That is the point.

And a little later on:

> Let me say again that, as I understand the position of the people of British Columbia, they are not opposed to an increase in freight rates as such. They are opposed to the maintenance of an inequitable freight structure.

Is that not exactly what we are doing? Is that not exactly the decision of the government? It has declined to stay the order, for the reasons mentioned; and it has ordered a thorough and complete investigation into the rate structure by the only body competent and efficient to deal with it immediately and with dispatch.

It has been said that this board has not the powers to deal with the matter of the investigation ordered by the government. I say to the house it has. There are contained in the various sections of the Railway Act all the powers required by the board of transport commissioners to make a thorough and complete investigation of the freight rate structure. In fact, in conversation with the chairman recently, I was informed by him that he was of the opinion—and so did his brother commissioners—that there was nothing in the Railway Act which hampered them in any way in dealing with the inequalities or the so-called discrimination which may exist in this country. What use would there be in further defining the powers of the board, in further instructing or directing the board as to what they should do in the investigation, if they themselves are of the opinion that they possess all the power that is required to remove these inequalities?

The same position obtains so far as the maritime provinces are concerned. That is why I submit it is impossible to make a decision over night—in a week, a month, or two months —in a case of such importance; because if the board were to move to British Columbia and dispose of one matter there without weighing the position in the maritimes, I submit with deference to the house that the board could not then render a decision which would seek to equalize the freight rates from one end of the country to the other.

One must keep in mind the fact that there are two statutory rights having to do with freight rates. The first is the Crowsnest Pass agreement, which this investigation will not touch, and those will remain as they are. The other is the 20 per cent subsidy under the Maritime Freight Rates Act, in the territory east of Levis, which also will remain as it is, by virtue of this investigation.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): They are statutory rates.

Mr. CHEVRIER: As the hon. member says, they are statutory rates.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Parliament alone can deal with them.

Mr. CHEVRIER: And they cannot be interfered with without an amendment to these statutes. But what I wanted to make quite clear was that there would be no misunderstanding with reference to the investigation.

I believe I have almost completed what I had intended to say. It has been suggested to me that perhaps I have omitted one pertinent feature in the discussion, and that is the application made by the brotherhoods for a wage increase. That is where my friend, the leader of the C.C.F. party, has placed himself in a most anomalous position.

Mr. COLDWELL: Not at all.

Mr. CHEVRIER: On the one hand he seeks to protect or to defend the farmers of the prairie provinces from an increase, by asking the government to refuse to allow the increase to go into effect. On the other hand, what is his position with respect to the members of the railway brotherhoods? What is the position of the railway employees? I deal now only with the increases granted in the year 1947.

Mr. COLDWELL: Has the minister read the reference from the conciliation board? The railway brotherhoods recognize that this has nothing to do with it, and the C.P.R. says it requires all the revenue for purposes other than wages.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I say to the hon. member that because of his attitude he has placed himself in a disastrous position.

Mr. COLDWELL: Oh, nonsense.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I say that, fully conscious of the fact that you cannot say to one section of the country: You are not to have an increase, and to another section: You must get the benefit of the judgment.

Mr. COLDWELL: We want both to have justice.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I have realized that since this debate started, because no one has been flooded with more telegrams than I have from members of the province of Saskatchewan. And this indicates to me that there is some attempt to make a political issue out of this question.

Mr. COLDWELL: Is that what the minister is attempting to do now?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. COLDWELL: I am asking, is that what the minister is attempting to do now?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I told the hon. member when I rose in this debate that I wanted to be frank and honest about the position, and I did not intend to make a political speech.

Mr. COLDWELL: Oh, oh.

Mr. CHEVRIER: So far I have not made a political speech.

Mr. COLDWELL: You are making it now.

Mr. CHEVRIER: All right; my hon. friend has prompted me by his interruptions into stating that if that is not the case, why is it that all these telegrams come from one province and do not come from another?

Mr. COLDWELL: I cannot tell you that.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Well, if my hon. friend cannot tell me, surely I am entitled to say to the house why I think they come from that province.

Mr. COLDWELL: Our people are wide awake. Where is Tucker?

An hon. MEMBER: What a broken political arm!

Mr. COLDWELL: That is Mr. Tucker.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Succour for Tucker.

Mr. COLDWELL: Tuckered out.

Mr. CHEVRIER: There have been said in this debate many things which might well have been left unsaid.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am referring in that statement to the talk of secession.

[Mr. Coldwell.]

Mr. COLDWELL: You have not heard us say that.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I have not said so.

Mr. COLDWELL: Don't point at us, then.

Mr. CHEVRIER: There has been much said about secession.

Mr. COLDWELL: Not by us.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I make this statement now: I grant immediately that there is no question which can divide the country any more easily than this one can. There was a time when we in this country were divided by racial and religious issues. Fortunately members of parliament have cast that to one side and have placed reason far above passion and emotion. If this particular question is not dealt with in that light, unquestionably it can divide our country. Any hon. member who attempts to make a political issue out of this question is to my mind doing a disservice, not only to himself but to his country.

This is a motion to go into supply, and my hon. friend has decided to move an amendment to the motion in order to expound a grievance, something which he has a perfect right to do. But I submit that before that grievance was expounded the government had made the grievance disappear by ordering a thorough and complete investigation into the railway freight structure by the only board competent and efficient to deal with the question. The government has moved to have the situation righted by this investigation.

The only consistent thing to do is to adopt the position that that board is the proper body to fix rates, that that board is the proper body to eliminate so-called discriminations and inequalities. The only logical course the government could adopt in the light of all the circumstances was to take the step which it did take. For these and other reasons which I have mentioned during the course of my remarks I submit with deference that the house should vote confidence in the government.

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago the board of transport commissioners made a report. It recommended a horizontal increase in the freight rates of this country of 21 per cent. The government then took steps to see that that recommendation was put into effect.

On Monday, April 5, a motion was moved in this house for leave to adjourn in order to discuss a matter of urgent public importance, namely, this question of freight rates. The discussion continued until the hour of adjournment.

On Wednesday, two days later, following criticisms which had been made, the government announced a change in policy and said that there would be a further investigation into the inequalities and discriminations in the freight rates of this country. On the same day on the motion to go into supply the matter was further discussed, until adjournment at six o'clock. In that discussion the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) moved the amendment which is now before the house. Today we are considering the matter again.

We have just now heard from the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) who dealt with three phases of this question, the responsibilities of the governor in council in respect to freight rates, the decision of the board recommending the increase, and the decision of the government to have the board further explore freight rates. I should like to make a brief comment with respect to each of these points.

First, as to the decision of the board. The minister said that application had been made by the railways for an increase in rates to cover increased costs and expenses, and that it was purely a matter of revenue that was referred to the board for consideration. He said that there was no application for the consideration of inequalities and discrimination. My criticism, our criticism and the country's criticism is that the government did not appreciate and deal with these inequalities and discriminations before this and did not take steps to see that they were removed.

In connection with the responsibilities of the governor in council with respect to freight rates, the minister went back for more than forty years, to the time prior to the appointment of an independent board dealing with these matters. He pointed out that now we have an independent board; that it is not now the responsibility of the governor in council to determine detailed matters of rate increases, that theirs is more a judicial capacity and that it is the responsibility of this so-called technical and certainly independent board to deal with details of freight increases.

The minister said that the government had never interfered with the board's responsibilities in that respect. I am speaking now from memory, but I have a recollection that more than twenty years ago—if I remember correctly, in 1925—we did have a serious fight with the government of the day in connection with interference with the statutory rates known as the Crowsnest Pass rates. I heard the minister refer to this only a few moments ago, and I have not all the details in mind; but my impression is that there was interference by the government at that time with respect to statutory rates and that it was a long-drawn-out fight which resulted finally in the rates being retained for the interests of the people of western Canada.

Mr. GARDINER: 1920, not 1925.

Mr. BRACKEN: I am speaking of the action of this government in 1925. I was not premier of Manitoba in 1920, and I was premier of that province at the time we had this fight over the Crowsnest Pass rates. My recollection is that it was 1925.

Mr. GARDINER: They put them back at that time to where they were before.

Mr. BRACKEN: In connection with the responsibilities of the governor in council the minister said that they would now consider a petition of the provinces for a stay of the application of this rate if they asked it. I gathered that that was what he said.

Mr. CHEVRIER: May I say just a word? What I did say was—

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: You would not allow anyone to interrupt you.

Mr. CHEVRIER: If the house does not want to know—

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: You did not allow it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: With the permission of the leader of the opposition.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I do not like to say "correct" the hon. gentleman, but I should like to say to him that that is not what I stated. What I stated was that we had considered the application to stay the order, and that we would consider an application for appeal when it would come to us. We have not received it, but we have received notice of intention.

Mr. BRACKEN: I am glad the minister got up to speak. What he says now is that they did consider the application. What I want to point out is that they turned it down.

Mr. KNOWLES: By order in council.

Mr. BRACKEN: Yes, by order in council. The minister is now apologizing and saying: Well, we made a mistake; now that we know better we will consider an appeal if they make it.

I have here a copy of the order in council the government passed. It might as well be read now. I quote:

P.C. 1486

Certified to be a true copy of a minute of a meeting of the committee of the privy council, approved by His Excellency the Governor General on the 7th April, 1948.

April 7—That was the very day the amendment was moved in this house. The order in council goes on:

The committee of the privy council have had before them the petition of the transportation commission of the maritime board of trade (representing, inter alia, the governments of the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island), and representations on behalf of the governments of the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia to vary order No. 70425 of the board of transport commissioners for Canada of March 30, 1948, by providing that tariff schedules published and filed under the provisions of the said order be not effective until at least thirty days from the date of the said order.

The committee of the privy council, having given due consideration to the said petitions and representations, are unable to advise that the said order of the board of transport commissioners for Canada be varied in the sense requested.

(Signed) A. D. P. Heeney,
Clerk of the privy council.

My point is that application was made by seven provinces, that the government considered it and turned it down, and only now, after long discussions in the house, does the government come forward and say that if they receive a petition for a further appeal they will give consideration to it.

I want to deal with one other point in this connection. When the minister was speaking of the decision to have a full investigation made of the freight rate structure, he made the statement that if the amendment now before the house moved by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) were passed, it would result in denying to the railways any further revenue by way of increased freight rates, and he implied that if that were the fact there could be no other result than that the railways in Canada would have to amalgamate.

Mr. COLDWELL: I did not imply that.

Mr. BRACKEN: I did not say the hon. member did; I said that was the minister's implication. I wish to say here that, so far as this party is concerned, we are opposted to amalgamation and opposed to any conditions which would bring about amalgamation. We feel that this country is better served by having one privately owned railway and one publicly owned railway. We think one will check the other. We think that the privately owned railway will check any tendency toward extravagance on the part of the publicly owned railway, and we think that the publicly owned railway will tend to check arbitrary decisions and any danger of exploitation by way of rates or otherwise by the privately owned railway. We think we are better served the way we are—by two railways rather than by a railway monopoly.

In what I shall have to say now, I wish to look at this question from as broad a point of view as possible. Here are two great railway institutions serving this country. They are very important to our economy and emphasize the necessity of dealing with measures such as this as wisely as it is possible for human beings to deal with them. Canada is a land of vast distances, with diversified resources which are widely scattered, and with a sparse population in relation to its wide extent of territory. The combination of these circumstances has created a dependence upon communications, especially railway communications, unequalled in any other country in the world. With our small population scattered over a vast territory the railways are a basic element in the economic life and development of a nation.

Each of the economic regions of Canada is rich in its own particular type of resources, but is largely dependent on the other regions for the rest of the needs of life, and for markets. Practically everything that we eat and use and produce must be transported, generally over a vast distance. Matters affecting transportation have therefore a direct and enormous impact on the daily life of every Canadian. It is not surprising therefore that people of so many parts of Canada are gravely concerned in any measure affecting freight rates. Freight rates are an important factor in our standards of living and in determining our competitive power in domestic and world markets. The very existence of our whole industry and the lives of millions of Canadians are profoundly affected by any sharp increase in freight rates.

The railways themselves are similarly affected by these vast distances, and they have their cost of living problem the same as the rest of us. There are three great areas which are relatively deserts to the railways so far as revenue-producing traffic is concerned, producing only a relatively small amount of business. One of those areas is the long circuitous route from the maritime seaboard in the east to the cities in the St. Lawrence valley. Another is the long stretch over the Canadian shield north of the great lakes, and the third is the great height and great expanse of the Rocky mountains. These areas must be traversed, and it costs as much—or more—to operate the railways through them as it does in populous regions where substantial revenues are derived.

There is also the question of the numbers to be served by the railways. In Canada there are barely 200 persons to every mile of railway tract, as against more than 400 persons per mile in the United States and 2,000 persons per mile in the United Kingdom.

Further, the cost of railway operation has been steadily rising. The deadly work of inflation has not spared our railways. When we promote or cause to be developed a state of affairs in which the cost of living rises by fifty per cent, it is not conceivable that these great industrial organizations can carry on their operations without increasing their revenues at least to some extent.

In 1940 the combined gross revenues of the two principal railway companies, as the minister stated, was some $384 million, from which a net revenue of $80·5 million was obtained. But in 1947, seven years later, a gross revenue of $693 million, produced only $71 million in net revenue before fixed charges, income tax and dividends. In other words an 81 per cent increase in gross revenues resulted in 1947 in a 12 per cent decline in net income. Ultimately the Canadian National Railways showed a loss of $15·8 million, and the Canadian Pacific Railway had an income of some $318 million and an expenditure of $295 million. But it is reported that even this road would have had a loss of $4·1 million had it not been for "other income" not accruing from railway operation.

I am not quite certain of all the details but I think what I shall have to say as to railway wages is substantially correct. There was a cost of living bonus granted to employees early in the war. In any event, early in 1944 this was absorbed into a wage increase. This added charge amounted to an increase of $36,000,000 a year to the railway companies. In 1944 also there was a wage increase of six cents an hour to substantially all employees, and it was dated back to September, 1943. That increase resulted in a $24,000,000 a year wage bill to the railways. On June 1, 1946, a little less than two years ago, another increase of ten cents an hour was granted. This created a further charge of $37,000,000 a year on the expenditures of the two railroads. At the present rate of employment, therefore, the two railways are paying about $97,000,000 a year more than the same number of workers would have received before the war. Roughly it would appear that they have received on an average about twenty-five cents an hour increase. But the cost of living, as compared with pre-war days, has gone up 50 per cent, while the average wages of railway employees it would appear have gone up only some 33 per cent. That last figure is just an approximation; some say it is 40 per cent. Under such conditions of increased cost it is beyond question that the railways require an adjustment of their financial position if they are to stay in business and to provide Canada with the efficient service which is essential on economic, political and strategic grounds.

What has been done in the circumstances, and what will be the consequences of present actions? The board of transport commissioners have ordered a 21 per cent general increase in freight rates. It is estimated that this will give the Canadian Pacific Railway an increase of $30,000,000 in revenue and the Canadian National about $40,000,000. One of the consequences is, as the evidence strongly suggests, that even this will not give them sufficient revenues to meet their needs. The railways have stated that nothing less than a 30 per cent increase will meet their needs. That is their position. We do not need to accept that statement without examination. Anyway, that is their statement. Within the board itself there was a doubt, reflected in Commissioner Wardrope's recommendation of a 24 per cent increase. Finally, Mr. A. R. Mosher, president of the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Employees, has stated that the 21 per cent rate increase is not adequate to provide for necessary wage increases.

We may say that the views of the railways on the one hand and the views of Mr. Mosher on the other are one-sided or possibly prejudiced views; but I mention them for what they are worth. In any event it must be remembered that also concerned in this issue are 180,000 railway employees. These working men and women have had no adjustment of wage rates since June of 1946. Yet since that date the cost of living index has risen 27·2 points over the 1938-39 average, and the food index has gone up 43·8 points during the period when they have had no increase. Clearly this aspect of the matter deserves immediate and most careful consideration.

Finally it is entirely possible that the increase in rates will result in a falling off of traffic. Even the railway officials themselves do not like having to do this, and yet under these conditions, in order to pay for the goods they buy and pay the wages they have to meet, an increase has had to be asked for. But in asking for it they recognize that the higher the rates are the more it tends to discourage traffic.

Finally, it is entirely possible that the increase in rates, as I have said, will result in falling off of traffic, thus reducing actual revenue below the 21 per cent increase which is assumed. If, then, the financial needs of the railways and their employees are not met, what is the effect on the rest of the country? If it does not fully meet that need, we might look at what is the effect elsewhere.

First, a general flat increase on all rates serves to intensify the discriminations that now exist and to increase the inequalities which exist in our freight rate structure. It is as simple as this, Mr. Speaker. If over there in one area there is a high rate and over here in another area there is a lower rate, and you put 21 per cent on that high rate and 21 per cent on the low rate, you get a bigger increase over there than over here, and you intensify and increase the discrimination rather than lessen it.

What are some of the discriminations? One might mention a few that have been brought prominently before us. There is the mountain differential, which bears so heavily upon industry and the consumers of British Columbia, a western province, separated from the rest of Canada by the Rocky mountains. One of our railroads has to go up over a hill a mile high to carry all its freight from one section of the nation to the other. The other railroad has to go up two-thirds of that distance. It is because of that condition that high rates result.

It is said by some that the Canadian Pacific Railway was forced to take the southern route for political reasons. I do not mean "political" in the narrow sense; I mean it in the large national sense. It is said that they planned to go through the low passes of the north, the Yellowhead region, where the Canadian National Railway now goes through, but that it was government policy to see that the railway came down further south and went through the Kicking Horse pass west of Calgary. It is said that that was done in order to keep United States railway interests from getting into southern Canada and eventually having larger sections of what is now Canada tacked on to the United States. If that was so, and to the extent that it was a political decision, then the nation should bear that cost and it should not be left as a burden upon one or two of the nine provinces of Canada.

Among these inequalities, as I have said the mountain differential bears heavily upon the industry and the consumers of British Columbia. Then there is the heavy burden in the Alberta rates—Alberta, a long way from eastern Canada and separated from the west by the Rocky mountains. Someone has said that Alberta is at the apex of the rate structure in Canada. These rates bear more heavily upon that province than perhaps any other province of the dominion. The Crowsnest agreement sought in part to overcome that handicap. This was an agreement entered into many years ago, an agreement by which the railway accepted some $3,000,000 from the government of Canada in connection with the construction of a railway into the Crowsnest pass. In return it undertook, wisely or unwisely, certainly unwisely from the point of view of the railroad, but wisely from the point of view of the people of western Canada, to give low through freight rates on the grain produced in that area. That is the agreement I referred to a little while ago. In 1925 we had to fight for its preservation.

Another of the inequalities was in connection with the maritime freight rate concessions. Ever since confederation the maritimes have been fighting because of the increased burden of freight rates on their economic life. The maritimes were once the most prosperous parts of Canada, but when the nation became centralized after confederation, industries started leaving the extremes of Canada to come to the centre. Then the burden of freight rates became unduly heavy on the maritimes, and as long as I can remember they have been fighting to get a better deal and they have been given it to a degree. Now in the maritimes they have a 20 per cent concession in freight rates. That is one of the inequalities, and in the effort to correct other inequalities we must take steps to see that this concession is not lost to the maritimes.

Secondly, in addition to the specific hardships I have just mentioned, the substantial increase in freight rates will have several important effects on the nation as a whole. I have stated quite frankly that under conditions where the cost of living goes up 50 per cent, and the cost of goods goes up 50 per cent, no industrial concern can get along without increased revenues. If the plans proposed do not succeed in meeting the needs, what then is the general effect on the nation? How much better off would we be if we could avoid it?

First, these increased rates will increase the cost of living. It is estimated that even butter, which we heard so much about, will be a cent a pound more, meat two cents more, eggs one or two cents a dozen more, sugar one cent per pound more, coal twenty-five cents a ton more. The last is specifically provided in the recommendations approved by the government, and prices in the maritimes, the prairies and British Columbia will be higher.

Second, it will increase the cost of production. The figures I have here are taken from one of the financial papers and I do not vouch for them. Steel will go up from $1.47 to $1.75, fuel by twenty-five cents a ton, and building and other materials in varying amounts.

Third, it will decrease our competitive power in world markets, because the higher our costs rise as a result of railway freight rates the less will be our competitive power in world markets. For example, aluminum will possibly be a cent a pound more and newsprint $1.40 a ton more.

Fourth, it will increase the exchange problem by diverting purchases of the maritimes and British Columbia from Canadian suppliers, who must ship by rail, to foreign producers, who can deliver by sea. Canadian-produced machinery and equipment will be a little further out of reach for the men of the prairies.

Fifth, it will cause the further emigration of industries from the maritimes, thus de-industrializing the region which it is most important should be industrialized further in Canada.

Sixth, it will cause the further departure of farmers from the prairies, thus tending further to depopulate the region which most needs a heavy increase in population.

One of the distressing features of the development of our Canadian economy, particularly in recent years, has been the tendency of the west not to grow in population, the tendency of the central parts of the prairies to become less in population. Some of the figures I have show that it is less in some parts than it was ten years ago; and that condition is being perpetuated by the policies of the government—policies affecting livestock, which are driving people out of livestock production in the west, and policies of the government with respect to the price of wheat in preventing its being sold to advantage.

The policy of the government with respect to freight rates results in these being increased where they are already too high. As evidence of all this, the average farm in western Canada is reported now to be more than 400 acres, nearly twice as much as it was when I first went there nearly forty years ago. With the way things are going, it will not be long until the average farm in the prairies is twice 400 acres. I say that because it is almost impossible to get farm labour; often those who can be got are not too well trained for the work, and the farmer has to compete with the cost of labour in urban industry. With these conditions facing the farmers, they find that it is more economical, and that they can make more money, by using large and heavy machinery, thus needing fewer people to farm the land, while at the same time farming more land. That has been the tendency over the last forty years, and under present conditions it will continue.

These ill consequences are not the fault of the board of transport commissioners. By their terms of reference they are required to consider only the position of the carrier petitioning for an increase in rates. These great economic, social and political issues were not their responsibilities. The responsibility for the issues affecting the welfare of the nation falls upon the government, and upon the government alone.

I am referring now to the responsibility of the government in dealing with these major issues, and not with the detailed issue of determining whether a rate should go up five cents here or down three cents there. It is proper that that responsibility should be left with the technical board, and that a political institution such as this should not be charged with the responsibility of fixing these rates. If we ever get back to that state of affairs it will be a serious day for Canada. But when I say that, I say equally that the government cannot avoid its responsibility for meeting these major questions that are before us.

I repeat, the responsibility for the issues affecting the welfare of the nation falls upon the government and the government alone. The action which has been taken is not an adequate solution of the problem. It tends to accomplish one thing at huge economic costs and creates still further inequalities in the process.

The government has denied without a hearing the pleas of seven provinces. I read its own order in council denying those pleas. The government has allowed no stay of these increased rates to give time for a removal of discriminations. The government has allowed a situation to develop in which it is made to appear that the railways are pitted against the people. The only suggestion the government has to offer is a long investigation. A few days ago it was suggested that it would be a year or two; today the minister suggested that it might be less. He has not been very specific about it, but it is a matter of a long delay during which time anything can happen to the railways, their employees and the public.

In this connection I wish to take a moment or two to deal with various discriminations, and I shall do so briefly. The discriminations and inequities that are claimed are many and varied. For example, the maritimes claim that reductions elsewhere, made by the railways to meet competition, have impaired—in fact, some of them say they have nullified—their 20 per cent differential granted by the Maritime Freight Rates Act. Ontario claims, at least some people in Ontario claim, that their rates are unduly high in comparison, for example, with western grain rates. I am referring to those low through-rates achieved many long years ago by a bonus to one of the railways.

Alberta claims that, being at the apex of the transcontinental freight structure, the people there are victimized more than others in consequence of long-distance hauls. Alberta claims that through rates across Canada to Vancouver, put into operation to meet water competition via the Panama canal, enable goods in certain cases to be shipped by rail to Vancouver and back into Alberta more cheaply than they can be shipped direct to Alberta. That, of course, is a simple statement of fact. That is what the construction of the Panama canal did to the economy of Canada. It gave to both coasts economic advantages and a disadvantage to inland points.

British Columbia complains of the mountain differential. This higher rate simply means that the people of British Columbia bear an extra charge for the mountain haul. British Columbia also claims that freight rates on goods brought from eastern Canada, under compulsion of the tariff, are higher than freight rates on bought goods shipped from British Columbia to markets in eastern Canada, although there is no corresponding difference in haulage costs.

The Crowsnest agreement and the Maritime Freight Rates Act should be protected in any reference to the commission for further consideration of freight rates. The whole matter, however, is most complicated and deserves an impartial approach, one having regard both to local needs and to the national welfare. So I say the responsibility rests upon the government to deal with these major principles in connection with freight rates, but the detailed decisions with respect to smaller matters affecting rates should be left to the impartial and technical body we call the board of transport commissioners and its advisers.

The government's policies—its livestock policy, its labour policy, its marketing policy with respect to wheat, the decision to place oats and barley under a board which, by government decision, is not to get the best price it can for the farmers but rather to depress prices—all these tend still further to depopulate the prairies. I say in all sincerity that this vast agricultural empire, eight or nine hundred miles wide, is likely under present policies to see either a very slow increase or an actual decrease in population in large sections. Such policies as these will tend still further to strangle industrial development in the maritimes and will hold back development in Alberta and British Columbia.

[Mr. Bracken.]

The 20 per cent freight rate concession to the maritimes should be preserved. The Crowsnest Pass rate should be preserved. In my judgment the mountain differential should be removed. The apex of freight rates is reached in Alberta. In this and related regions the rates should be examined with a view to possible adjustments. The board of transport commissioners is the proper body to deal with these matters; but the general principles should be settled by the government with the approval of parliament. Political bodies should not be asked to determine such details. That is why a while ago we objected to the appointment of a political body, in the form of the wheat board, to determine the prices farmers will receive in this country. We do not want political prices, and we do not want political rates. As I have said, the government should tell the commission to protect the rate concessions already won by the maritimes; to protect the concessions bought and paid for under the Crowsnest Pass agreement; to reconsider the situation where the apex of freight rates bears heavily upon certain communities in Canada, and to remove the mountain differential which so hampers the development of British Columbia and Alberta.

In the meantime the government should do one other thing. It should get off the backs of the people. Here we are with two great railway systems in Canada, one asking for $30,000,000 and the other for $40,000,000 in order to meet costs which are ever-increasing, due largely to government policies. They are asking for $70,000,000, while this year this government is collecting as much revenue as it collected in the highest year of taxation in the middle of the war. We do not know what amount was collected last year; the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) knows and he will tell us when the budget comes down. It will probably show that our revenue was in the neighbourhood of $3,000 million, and that our surplus is seven or eight or nine hundred million dollars, or perhaps more. Here we have this government taking seven or eight or nine hundred million dollars from the people more than it is spending in services; then the railways come along and the government says, If you want more money go and put higher rates on the people and get your $70,000,000.

My proposal is that the government should get off the backs of the people and to a large extent lessen the costs of running the railways. In this way the government could make it possible for the railways to meet their obligations without imposing such high freight rates. I say the government should reduce taxation, and in this way lessen to a great extent the impact of the freight rate burden upon the people of this country. This could have been done if the government had made, or if it will immediately make, a major reduction, particularly in the indirect taxation, which multiplies and pyramids upon itself, taking from the people of this country quite unnecessarily from fifteen per cent to thirty per cent or more in increased prices for the things they buy.

A hasty examination of such evidence as is available suggests that some $250 million to $300 million of the annual expenditure of the railways contains a substantial element of indirect taxation; and it also appears that the average rate of the indirect tax is not less than fifteen per cent and probably is much more. The lowest sum which might be saved to the railways by the removal or substantial reduction of these taxes would be not less than $30,000,000, and probably it would be much more. By removing some of these indirect taxes, if not all, or by at least lessening them, it would be possible by government action to reduce the need for a freight rate increase by probably one-half. Such a measure would be fully justified. It would not be a special privilege for a particular industry but the lifting of an intolerable burden from the whole nation, a burden which falls with the greatest severity upon those sections of the people least able to bear it. Canada is a nation which has been created out of a group of isolated communities linked together by steel rails. But it is not enough to "create" a nation; that nation also must be preserved and maintained, and we must ensure that the chief physical factor in our unity continues to serve us well.

Having regard to the views we hold in this matter, Mr. Speaker, I am going to move an amendment to the amendment. With much of what is said in the amendment I am in agreement, but it leaves open the question as to whether the requirements of the railways, in respect even of wages, will be met. I am not now criticizing the amendment, except on that point, which is not clear. This is the amendment I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green):

That all the words after "this house" in the fourth line of the amendment be deleted, and that the following be substituted instead thereof:

"regrets the government's failure to secure the removal of inequalities and discriminations in the Canadian railway freight rates structure before the imposition of a horizontal increase of twenty-one per cent—an increase which is bound to intensify the aforesaid inequalities and discriminations; and

"Further regrets that the government has refused the reasonable request of seven provinces that the imposition of increased freight rates recently authorized by the board of transport commissioners be delayed for thirty days until they could be heard."

Mr. W. ROSS THATCHER (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to say that I was pleased this afternoon to note that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) was much more conciliatory and much more humble than he was last Wednesday. Perhaps the Liberal caucus this morning had something to do with that.

On the other hand I wish to say—and I believe I speak for many westerners—that the minister's remarks this afternoon were particularly unsatisfactory, so far as we are concerned. I think he tried to befog the issues as best he could.

A little more than a week ago, as hon. members will recollect, the board of transport commissioners allowed this increase which was, with a few exceptions, a flat increase of 21 per cent across the board. Since that time, as the minister pointed out this afternoon, protests have been pouring in to the government. Some of them have been pretty violent protests, I think, particularly, from the outlying sections of this country. Those protests have come from producer organizations. They have come from farm organizations; they have come from city councils, and they have come from private citizens. I believe almost without exception, those protests pointed out—

Mr. MITCHELL: Did any come from labour organizations?

Mr. THATCHER: Possibly so. I shall come to that in a minute. Those protests pointed out that this decision, if it were approved, would increase a discrimination which was already unfair, and would perpetuate injustices which were already severe.

The announcement of the board of transport commissioners a few days ago aroused such resentment in the west, and in the maritime provinces, that those provinces protested to the federal government. They sent in an appeal to the federal cabinet, which was the only place where they could take such an appeal. All the provincial governments asked was that the increase be held up thirty days, until the seven premiers could come to Ottawa and discuss the matter themselves, with the government.

Surely that was a reasonable request. What was the minister's reply last Wednesday? I quote what he said, as reported at page 2717 of Hansard:

Without prejudice to any appeal, the government has decided that it should not interfere with the effective date of the board's order.

Was there ever a more abrupt; was there ever a more arbitrary; was there ever a more unreasonable reply, given to a legitimate plea? I think that, regardless of the merits or demerits of the case about which we are arguing today, the government has been guilty of shocking rudeness to the premiers of seven provinces. Knowing their wishes, and without even giving them the courtesy of a hearing, the government allowed these rate increases to be put into effect.

The minister uses the expression, "without prejudice to any appeal". I wonder if he is trying to kid someone. It is quite true that the premiers can still come to Ottawa; it is quite true they can still have their conference; it is quite true they can talk over the matter if they wish to. But the fact of the matter is that their appeal has been prejudged. The minister has already rendered his decision. He has allowed the rates to go up.

I believe every member in the house will concede that the conference, even if held, has been rendered futile in advance.

I say the minister's action was similar to that of a judge of an appeal court who renders a decision before he has heard the evidence. We hear a good deal today about the need for better dominion-provincial relations. I think the need for better relations in that field certainly exists. But surely the action of the Minister of Transport last Wednesday, when he rode rough-shod over the express wishes of those seven premiers, marked a new low in dominion-provincial relations. The people of those seven provinces are looking to this parliament today to rectify that blunder; and the failure of the House to Commons to do so could in my opinion have far-reaching consequences.

Why are these freight rates causing so much resentment in the maritimes; why are they causing so much resentment in the west? Is it because westerners feel that the railroads should not obtain additional revenue? Perhaps that is the answer in part.

It does seem to us that it is somewhat strange for the Canadian Pacific to ask such a large rate increase just after it has shown in its annual report a surplus of $47,000,000, the second largest in its history. Most of us are a little dubious about the contention of the two railroads that they need an additional $70,000,000 in order to balance their books.

[Mr. Thatcher.]

Yet most of us I think agree basically with the railroads when they say that the cost of railroading has gone up. We know that wages have gone up. We know that materials have gone up. We know that other costs have gone up. We know that at the same time the rates have stayed pretty well stationary.

In railroading, as in other business, if costs increase, then sooner or later prices have to go up. I believe it is in the national interest to have a railroad system which is efficient, and a railroad system which is financially healthy. And for that reason, while I query the amount, I do not argue basically with the contention of the railroads that they must have some extra revenue.

On the other hand I believe fundamentally that the method they are suggesting to obtain this additional revenue is discriminatory. I believe that it is unfair, and that it is contrary to the interest of certain sections of this country.

It is conceded by the railroads—I believe it is conceded by all hon. members—that over the past few decades, rates in the maritime provinces and in the west have been higher than those in central Canada. Originally the prairie scale of rates was 40 per cent higher than the eastern scale, and the British Columbia rates, in turn, were 100 per cent higher than those of the prairies. However, as a result of unceasing protests for forty years the prairie scale stands today about fifteen per cent higher than the east, and the British Columbia rate is about sixteen per cent above that of the prairies.

The judgment brought down last week ignores the fact that this heavy and unjust discrimination is already there. The recent decision of the cabinet means that for the first time in forty years, the west and the maritimes have lost ground in trying to obtain equalization of freight rates. So far as the prairies are concerned, the fifteen per cent discrimination now becomes eighteen per cent. That is our basic grievance. We can see no reason why we in the prairies, or in British Columbia, or in the maritimes, should pay rates which are higher than comparable rates in Ontario or Quebec.

A moment ago the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mitchell) asked about the attitude of labour unions in that connection. I say there is no great difference of opinion on this issue among C.C.F. members, whether they are farmers, or members of labour unions. I should like to read a statement issued only a few moments ago by Mr. A. R. Mosher, president of the Canadian Congress of Labour and the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Employees and other Transport Workers. The release states:

> Asked to comment on the alleged difference of opinion between the C.C.F. members of parliament and himself, as representing a large group of railway workers, regarding the twenty-one per cent increase in freight rates, Mr. Mosher said he felt that there had been a good deal of exaggeration in that respect. "It is true that I have supported the increase," he continued, "as being fully justified, in the light of present-day costs of operation, and, so far as I am aware, there has been no attempt by the C.C.F. to deny the need of the railways for increased revenue.
>
> Mr. Coldwell, on behalf of the C.C.F. asked for delay in the application of the increased rate for the purpose of dealing with alleged discrimination, which it is claimed will seriously affect the western and the maritime provinces. I am opposed to delay in this respect, but I am in full support of an examination of the whole rate-structure, with a view to removing any discriminatory features that may exist, and I share Mr. Coldwell's view that every section of Canada and the Canadian people should be fairly and justly treated.
>
> The fact, however, that there may be differences of opinion on specific issues does not affect the mutual confidence and respect which exists between the C.B.R.E. and the C.C.F., and I have no doubt that in each case such differences will be resolved in a satisfactory manner."

Mr. MITCHELL: I should like to ask a question.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. MITCHELL: This is still a free country, I hope.

Mr. COLDWELL: There are still rules of order.

Mr. HANSELL: That is why he should be free to finish.

Mr. MITCHELL: My hon. friend stated clearly that Mr. Mosher was opposed to any delay in the increase in freight rates.

Mr. COLDWELL: Quite right; that is an honest difference of opinion.

Mr. THATCHER: That is just what I read.

As I said a few moments ago, it seems to me that the chief issue in this debate is very clear cut. Is confederation to be an association of provinces equal in every respect, or is confederation to be an association of provinces where seven provinces will receive treatment less favourable economically than the other two? Is the transport board, where freight rates are concerned, to treat some provinces as first-class provinces and others as second-class? That is the question before us today.

As a Canadian who comes from a western province, I ask for precisely the same treatment on freight rates as is given to the Canadian who comes from Ontario or Quebec. My constituents ask for no more than equality, but they will willingly accept no less.

Some hon. members may feel that there are certain reasons why the west should pay freight rates which are higher than those paid in central Canada, but I can assure them that there are many reasons for the opposite being true.

The prairie provinces have almost everything which should make for low rates. We have flat country with very few rivers. We have almost no natural obstacles. I think these features should make for low operating costs. Certainly the capital investment of the railroads has been kept much lower than it is in central Canada. The hauls on the prairie are long, and the density of traffic is there. The prairies have bulk products which should make for lower operating costs. Despite the advantages which we have, we are at an overwhelming disadvantage through not having competition similar to that which is present in the east. In the east there is competition from the United States railroads, from the great lakes, and from trucks. All these factors have forced the railroads to keep their rates at a reasonable level. Speaking in Saint John, New Brunswick, on November 25, 1946, Mr. D. C. Coleman, then president of the Canadian Pacific, had this to say about the proposed increase:

> Railway rates should be based on what the traffic can afford to bear.

Obviously that is the way in which the railroads have fixed their rates during past years. The west has had to pay higher rates simply because it was felt that it could afford to pay them. The railroads have taken advantage of the situation to make the west "pay through the nose" in many cases. If hon. members think I am exaggerating I would refer them to exhibit 131 filed by the Canadian Pacific during the recent hearing.

In the past ten years 1936-45 inclusive, 65·8 per cent of the operating profits of the Canadian Pacific were made in western Canada. In the twenty years ended in 1945, the Canadian Pacific earned $245 million in the east as compared with $525 million in the west. In my opinion the recent 21 per cent increase will not be fully enforced in central Canada because of the competition to which I referred a moment ago.

In the past, high freight rates have had a definitely harmful effect upon the economy of the west. In the first place, our standard of living has been adversely affected in direct proportion to the unfair differential. In the second place, higher freight rates have made it difficult for industry to develop in the west since industry must start out under a disadvantage as far as eastern competition is concerned because of those higher rates. It seems to me that if this is allowed to go through the discrimination will be increased. In other words, it is the firm belief of this group that, before this increase goes through, equalization across Canada should take place.

An hon. MEMBER: Two years.

Mr. THATCHER: That is too long. The Minister of Transport on Wednesday last and again this afternoon made a feeble attempt to placate public opinion. He stated that the board of transport commissioners would be instructed to investigate these rate differentials in the near future. Let me tell the minister that I do not think he is—

Mr. CHEVRIER: The hon. member should state what the minister said before commenting on it. He is all wrong.

Mr. THATCHER: All right. The idea of charging the Canadian people an additional $70,000,000 and then ducking behind a new investigation, will be recognized by the people of Canada and by hon. members of this house for what it is. If after sitting for nearly two years, the transport commissioners do not know that there is discrimination in the railway rate structure of Canada, then I doubt if they ever will know it. What is the point in having them spend another two years on an investigation, as the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore) said the other day, simply to discover abuses which they know already exist?

I believe the last time we had a similar investigation was in 1925. At that time it took the board seven months to commence after they had been ordered to start, and then it took them eighteen months to finish their inquiry. I think the government is simply shelving the whole matter for a couple of years, during which time Canadians will be forced to pay higher rates.

Where were all the Liberals when this decision was made? When the Minister of Transport spoke in the house the other day backbenchers got up—I give them credit for this—and protested. I hope they will vote according to the way in which they spoke in the house the other day.

An hon. MEMBER: They have had a caucus since.

[Mr. Thatcher.]

Mr. THATCHER: I think the minister should have known when he made his announcement that the maritimes, the prairies and British Columbia could not take an increase like this one lying down.

Where were the cabinet ministers? Where was the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King)? I may be wrong, but it did not seem to me that the announcement made by the Minister of Transport had the Mackenzie King touch, the usual finesse. It seems to me that possibly the Prime Minister was in seclusion somewhere trying to get caught up with his work, during which time the cabinet made its decision without him. I do not know, but it seems to me that that is what happened.

British Columbia is one of the provinces most vitally affected by this decision. Where was the cabinet minister from British Columbia? British Columbia has not had a cabinet minister for about four months. I will wager that, had Senator Mackenzie been still in the cabinet, a lot more would have been said against the proposed increase. I think this decision has demonstrated more than any other single thing that the Liberal government should appoint a cabinet minister to represent British Columbia without further delay. If they are waiting for the Vancouver by-election they may have a long time to wait, because I do not think they will get one in that riding.

Where was the cabinet minister from Prince Edward Island, another province vitally affected. It is some years since that province has had a minister. Prince Edward Island had nothing to say about this decision which affects them to such an extent. I understand that the cabinet minister for Manitoba was unfortunately too ill to be present and Manitoba did not have cabinet representation when the decision was made.

What about the province of Saskatchewan? Where was the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner)? If he was out in Saskatchewan I suppose we cannot blame him too much because, after all, there is an election coming up. However I think that when such a vital issue was being debated it would have been better for the people of Saskatchewan if the minister had been present. Where was our other representative from Saskatchewan, the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Tucker)? Well, he was out electioneering too, trying to ride a dead horse.

An hon. MEMBER: What dead horse?

Mr. THATCHER: May I finish? What did the parliamentary assistant have to say? He made a statement in Saskatoon, as reported in an article which is headed, "Tucker thinks west will get fair deal on freight rates". The article goes on to report him as saying:

> I think the west will get a fair deal out of the freight rate situation under proper representations.

Apparently we did not have proper representation in the cabinet. I doubt very much if the parliamentary assistant is happy about the way in which the freight rate situation has developed. I picked up the Ottawa Journal just before I rose to speak and I notice this headline:

> Liberals united on freight rate crisis.

Are we to take from this statement that the Minister of Agriculture and the parliamentary assistant believe that this decision is the best that Saskatchewan can get on freight rates?

In other words, four out of seven of the provinces affected by this discriminatory action were not represented in the cabinet when this matter came up.

We hear a great deal today about the need for national unity and that is all to the good, but I think we must realize in this house that national unity must be brought about on a basis of equality. The action of the government in permitting the freight rate increase cannot but cause discontent in the dominion, because it will impose on the citizens in the remote areas of Canada a charge which is greater than the charge imposed on people in Ontario and Quebec. Once again I do not argue basically with the railways when they say they need increased revenue, but I disagree strongly with the way in which they are proposing to obtain it; that is, by a flat increase instead of by equalization. As equal partners in this confederation we are asking for the same rates as Ontario and Quebec. Let all sections of Canada pay freight rates which are on a fair and equitable basis, and if the government must be defeated to make it see the wisdom of such a policy, then let it be defeated.

Mr. ROBERT H. WINTERS (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, as a member from Nova Scotia I wish to present certain aspects of this problem of freight rates. But first I should like to say how much the house was enlightened by the statement made so capably this afternoon by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier).

This is undoubtedly an issue of the gravest importance, and at the outset may I briefly summarize the history of the case. On October 9, 1946, the railways applied for an increase of 30 per cent in their freight rates. They emphasized that there had been no general increases since 1920 and no general investigation since 1925 and pleaded that costs of labour, materials, and other factors had risen enough to justify increased rates.

The board of transport commissioners undertook a comprehensive study of the situation and gave all concerned an opportunity of presenting their cases both for and against. Seven of the nine provinces opposed the increase; Quebec and Ontario refrained from presenting their views.

It is important to note that it was the railways—not the government—that requested the increase.

After hearings and study lasting almost eighteen months, the board announced on March 20 that it had authorized an increase of 21 per cent—instead of the 30 per cent requested—with the effective date to be April 8.

When the board announced its decision, the seven provinces indicated their intention to appeal to the cabinet and asked that the provisions of the order be not effective until at least thirty days after the date initially announced, April 8, pending the results of the appeal. This the government did not see fit to do, but the minister stated on Wednesday, April 7, as reported at page 2717 of Hansard, that such action would not be prejudicial to any appeal.

It is my understanding, Mr. Speaker, that when the seven provinces presented their briefs in opposition to the increase requested by the railways they made it clear that they were not at that time dealing with so-called equalization or differentials. Any action they had in mind in this regard they clearly indicated to be for future consideration. Nevertheless the government, according to the minister's statement of April 7, directed the board to conduct an investigation into this matter of inequality and the general problem of a fair rate structure for all parts of Canada. The minister's statement was as follows:

> In the circumstances, the government has decided it would be in the public interest to have the board of transport commissioners make a thorough investigation of the rate structure of railways and railway companies which are under the jurisdiction of parliament, with a view to the establishment of a fair and reasonable rate structure which will, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, be equal in its application to all persons and localities so as to permit the freest possible exchange of commodities between the various provinces and territories of Canada and the extension of Canadian trade, both foreign and domestic.

According to the minister's statement and press reports, the board has already met for this purpose.

There is no question that the increase in freight rates will be a severe and adverse blow to the maritime provinces as well as to the west. Even at the old rates it was almost impossible for our industries to put their products on central Canadian markets at competitive prices. To be in a competing position, it was necessary not only to aim at wages more moderate than those prevailing elsewhere but to keep our other manufacturing costs down. What small measure of success we have had indicates that we have achieved both these aims to some extent. Now, however, the higher freight rates place another obstacle in our path. They will tend to make us live within ourselves in an industrial sense more than ever before.

The establishment of a railway with its attendant facilities and services was one of the conditions upon which the maritimes accepted the terms of confederation, as is clear from the British North America Act, section 145, which reads in part:

> Inasmuch as the provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick have joined in a declaration that the construction of the Intercolonial Railway is essential to the consolidation of the union of British North America, and to the assent thereto of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and have consequently agreed that provision should be made for its immediate construction by the government of Canada.

That was one of the important terms upon which the maritime provinces entered confederation. Such a railway was regarded in the eyes of the dominion as being necessary to give maritime merchants a market in Canada, particularly since the maritime provinces stood to sacrifice reciprocal and profitable trade agreements with the United States. It was clearly understood at the time that construction and operation costs would not be related directly to the traffic that might pass over the line, but would be borne in great measure by the dominion in the interests of national, imperial and strategic considerations.

It is clear that the intention of those concerned with confederation was to give the maritimes freer access to central Canadian markets, whereas this increase in freight rates as such may well have a further effect in the opposite direction.

The Maritime Freight Rates Act recognizes that certain statutory advantages in rates should be given to the maritimes as a matter of right. It states clearly that no rates will be approved which may destroy or prejudicially affect such advantages. Section 8 of the Maritime Freight Rates Act reads as follows:

> The purpose of this act is to give certain statutory advantages in rates to persons and industries in the three provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, and in addition upon the lines in the province of Quebec mentioned in section two, together hereinafter called "select territory," accordingly the board shall not approve nor allow any tariffs which may destroy or prejudicially affect such advantages in favour of persons or industries located elsewhere than in such select territory.

We in the maritimes attach great weight to this statutory advantage.

On the other hand, there is no denying that costs have gone up and there is clear indication that the railways needed some relief if they were to continue in operation. This applied more particularly to those privately owned railways which were incurring operating deficits and were not able to offset them by government funds made available through subsidies or some other means of financing.

In its last annual report the Canadian National Railways showed that since 1939 the average compensation paid to each employee had increased by $816.26. Over the same period many materials which are used by the railways in their operation had increased in large proportion. For example, softwood ties increased from 59 cents each to $1.35 each, or a percentage increase of 128·8. Coal increased from $4.09 to $7.50 a ton, or an increase of 83·4 per cent. There are many other such increases shown. Assuming therefore, Mr. Speaker, that some help was needed if revenues were to balance expenditures, it would appear that three courses were open. The first course was to reduce wages, or at best to hold them from going higher, not only to the railway employees but to all employees engaged in allied undertakings; second, to pay increased subsidies on a very broad scale; and third, to increase revenue by charging higher rates for goods carried.

It is not necessary to dwell on the disadvantages of reducing wages at this time or the reaction that would have resulted across the country if any such course had been followed. The reason for not dealing with the problem by this method will be well understood.

As to the second alternative; that is, subsidies, we in Nova Scotia do not look unfavourably on subsidies that tend to minimize the disadvantage under which we operate as a result of our geographical situation. The maritimes have subsidized Ontario and Quebec industry for many years—out of all proportion to the returns we derive from these two wealthy provinces—by buying their manufactured goods. The industrialization of Ontario and Quebec has been accomplished, and is being protected, by tariffs which continually operate to the disadvantage of the maritimes. We regard, and Canada regards, reasonable subsidies to the maritimes as being a matter of right, but we do not want subsidies on a scale that would make us fully dependent upon or pensioners of central Canada. We want every opportunity to stand on our own feet.

Solving the problem completely by subsidies means that all taxpayers would be required to share the burden, whereas we feel that the brunt of it should be borne by those who use the freight hauling facilities of the railways.

Sir Stafford Cripps, in bringing down his British budget last week, said that high prices and inflationary pressure cannot be removed entirely by government action unless England is to envisage a degree of economic control too rigid to be operated in a democracy. Coming from a socialist government, this is clearly indicative. We in the maritimes also are satisfied that subsidies cannot be regarded as the full answer to the entire problem.

This leaves as the third alternative the necessity for increasing rates. We see the necessity of this move; but, situated as we are in the maritimes, and with due regard to our attitude toward subsidies, we feel that if the problem must be solved by applying increased rates, the solution should carry with it a measure of subsidies. In other words, the impact of the freight rate increase must be cushioned by subsidies wherever they are indicated.

Let us look for a moment at the government's performance in the field of freight assistance to the maritimes. There is not much doubt that the administration fully realizes this problem and our position as a result of it. The Maritime Freight Rates Act, to which I have already referred, provides that westbound freight from the maritimes shall be at a rate 20 per cent lower than that prevailing for eastbound freight to the maritimes. This alone will cost the dominion over five and a quarter million dollars for the present fiscal year, but will assist the maritimes in putting their goods on Canadian markets. Freight subsidies which enable our farmers to purchase feed grains at prices comparable with those prevailing at the head of the great lakes are another form of financial assistance which helps to offset the disadvantageous position in which our farmers would otherwise find themselves. It was good news for the maritimes farmers to learn from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) that the period for this subsidy assistance will be extended to July 31, 1949. Then, too, there are the well known subventions on coal which are intended to enable our miners to place their coal on Canadian markets in competition with United States coal.

According to statute, the advantage extended to us by the Maritime Freight Rates Act must be protected, and there is no indication that the government will not live up to its obligations. Where it develops that the increased freight rates react to our disadvantage when compared with other sections of the dominion, we will seek offsetting assistance, as we believe we have the right to do.

On this basis, and in the light of the government's assistance in the past, as well as the undertakings extended to Nova Scotia when entering confederation and our present statutory protection, I can see no good reason for supporting this amendment opposing the government's action. Moreover, both the amendment and the subamendment resolve themselves into motions of lack of confidence in the government.

Mr. MacINNIS: That is the determining factor, is it not?

Mr. SINCLAIR: Looking across at the hon. member, I say it is.

Mr. WINTERS: Without denying the gravity of the possible effect of this increase in freight rates, I believe it would be an outstanding lack of wisdom to use this one predicament as a lever in an attempt to unseat an administration which has done such a commendable job on a broad front. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, since the amendment and the subamendment have resolved themselves into motions of lack of confidence, there is no alternative but to oppose them.

(Translation):

Mr. GEORGES H. HÉON (Argenteuil): Mr. Speaker, I wish to begin this brief speech in French, in order to assert once more my absolute right to speak French in this house. However, as the majority of the members have not the advantage of speaking that beautiful tongue, I shall now proceed in English, that I may be readily understood.

(Text):

On March 30 last, the board of transport commissioners rendered judgment on an application of the railway association of Canada on behalf of its member railway companies for authority to make a general increase of 30 per cent in freight tolls and rates and of a specified amount per ton on coal and coke. The judgment rendered authorizes a general advance of 21 per cent and an increase of 25 cents per ton throughout on coal and coke. The government has refused to interfere with the judgment rendered, whilst the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) is being offered to prevent or rather to defer the increase which the judgment of the board has allowed after a prolonged and exhaustive inquiry in the presence of counsel, and the representatives of the applicants and seven highly interested provinces.

The press of Canada has given much space and attention to the government's decision to respect the board's ruling, and to the amendment which it is alleged may put some hon. members on the hot spot if they dared vote against it, because of the political dynamite therein contained. The whole problem, as I see it, is not one which should be approached with the view of winning impending by-elections, provincial general elections or a threatened general federal election; but rather it should be considered on its merits, on the evidence and on the arguments advanced before the board by the interested parties and their counsel.

To start with, it is evident that the board of transport commissioners was not asked to equalize freight rates, nor did any eminent counsel for the provinces suggest, prior to or during the hearings of the board, that the issue of equalization of rates be joined to the demand for a general increase in tolls and freight rates. The board, therefore, could not in my very humble opinion, without exposing itself to ridicule and violating all rules of law and evidence, rule on an issue which was not contained in the application.

This house, then, is called upon to decide only whether the increase of 21 per cent decreed by the board is justified, at least in principle.

It is generally agreed, I believe, that our railways, much the same as every other public or private corporation and individual, have felt the pinch of increased costs of maintenance, construction, operation and extension of services. Then again, the travelling public is constantly asking for more speed and comfort, with air-conditioned cars, de luxe parlour and sleeper cars and coaches, exclusive cuisine, expert personnel, while it continually complains of bumpy roadbeds, outmoded and dilapidated passenger cars and day coaches, lack of snow-removal and repair equipment, trains running behind schedule, delays in freight and express deliveries.

To do all these things the railways have offered before the board conclusive evidence that they need more money to operate. This money cannot be obtained without an increase in rates, and an increase in rates, cannot be established or put into force without being examined and sanctioned by the board.

[Mr. Heon.]

Further, the Canadian National Railways, owned, operated and financed by the Canadian people, is one of the applicants and has lately announced a deficit of $23,000,000. We cannot hope to erase this deficit, even partly and thereby lessen our financial burden arising therefrom, unless relief is provided through increases in rates.

As to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, which is privately owned and therefore taxed to help balance the deficit of its chief competitor, it also has construction and operation problems which can be solved only by increased rates. As a matter of fact, the Canadian Pacific could not successfully compete or even attempt to compete with the Canadian National Railways unless it enjoyed the same increases, because it cannot delve into the dominion treasury to recoup its operating losses.

For these reasons alone, Mr. Speaker, I would vote against the amendment of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar. But there are two other more important reasons which will motivate my vote, and which I wish to put on Hansard.

First, today's newspapers carry the announcement that conciliation in railway wage negotiations has collapsed. My sympathy is with the railway workers, who are entitled to a fair and reasonable increase in wages; and I do not want, by voting in favour of the amendment, to give a further excuse to the railway companies, if the increase in rates they seek were denied, for not meeting the motivated wage increases of their employees.

Second, I went on record in this house last year as stating that I was unwilling to vote for any issue which would precipitate a general election in the midst of the constitutional term of this parliament; and I am not changing my mind, particularly at this time, when the dangers of the international situation are too great to afford the risks of a general election.

I would, Mr. Speaker, vote for a measure or a resolution tending to a fair equalization of freight rates for every province, but not at the cost of an immediate general election.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

CRIMINAL CODE

ORGANIZATIONS ADVOCATING OVERTHROW OF CONSTITUTED AUTHORITY

Mr. WILFRID LaCROIX (Quebec-Montmorency) moved the second reading of Bill No. 2, to amend the criminal code.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill is aimed at suppressing the communist party as a political party and preventing the formation of a permanent fifth column in the event that we should be forced into war against Russia. The difference between my bill and the padlock law of Mr. Duplessis lies in the fact that, instead of the minister or the government itself deciding whether or not a certain political group is communist under the present law, a procedure which might lead to abuse in the case of political opponents, under my bill as opposed to the attitude taken by Mr. Duplessis a superior criminal court would decide definitively whether a certain political group is communist according to the present law. Mr. Tim Buck, leader of the Labour Progressive party, has written to hon. members of this house telling them that his party would never conspire to use force in order to take over power. That is exactly what has been done in all countries where the communist party, with the help of democratic institutions, succeeded in obtaining key positions which subsequently permitted it to suppress its opponents by force. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Ilsley) recently declared publicly that the Labour Progressive party was following directions dictated by Moscow. How can we tolerate in our country a political party whose allegiance is given first and foremost to a foreign government? This has been amply proved, and I challenge any hon. member to demonstrate the contrary.

I have been in this house for the past twelve years, and I know from experience that when a bill is referred to a committee before its principle is accepted by the house on second reading that bill generally dies quietly in committee and is forgotten forever. Such was my experience last year, and I do not want the same thing to take place this year. Therefore I insist on my bill being put to the house for second reading before being referred to a committee, where its details may be examined, since a bill the principle of which has not been accepted by the house seldom comes up for third reading. However, since only one hour is allowed for the consideration of bills moved by private members of the house, I would ask my colleagues who support this bill to remain silent. If they spoke time would be wasted and the bill would go to the end of the list when the time limit was reached. Every hon. member is aware that when it is desired to kill a bill some hon. members are asked to speak, ostensibly in support thereof but really in order to exhaust the time allowed for its consideration. Thus some hon. members may seem to be in favour of a bill while actually against it. I will set an example by resuming my seat and asking five of my colleagues to support my stand, in order that the house may vote on the principle of the bill.

Before I take my seat may I add that here in Canada we are first and above all a country whose people believe there is a God. We must not forget that here, as in the United States and the United Kingdom, Christianity is part and parcel of the law of the land; and I consider it necessary to prevent the growth and development in Canada of a political party whose main tenet is atheism, because we must bear in mind that communism is a philosophical system based upon materialism. Allow me also to point out that I am thoroughly convinced that the mere fact of not believing in God is likely to suppress any sense of responsibility in the individual. Therefore we must bear in mind that we are a nation who believe in God. Each day before resuming deliberations in the House of Commons we say this prayer:

> Our Father which art in Heaven, Hallowed be Thy name.
> Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven.

This clearly shows that we are believers, and that we intend to remain so.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words in opposition to the principle of this bill, but before stating the reasons why I oppose it I want to make it quite clear that I am as much opposed to the aims, the policies and the methods of the communist party and the Labour Progressive party, which is merely the communist party under another name, as anyone in this house or anywhere else. Further I should like to say that my opposition to the communist party is not a matter of recent date or recent development. It has been my attitude since 1918, when for the first time the principles and tactics of the communist party began to show themselves on this continent. I have been associated with the labour and socialist movement in Canada since the first war; consequently I think I am about as familiar with the policies and tactics of the communist party as anyone in this country can be.

I was elected first to the House of Commons in 1930; consequently I have contested four elections from 1930 to 1945. On every occasion I have been opposed by a communist party candidate. Not only that; but on every occasion the communists who were opposing me were definite in stating that they were more opposed to me than to the candidates of the old parties, and, on my part,

I am glad to say that there was complete reciprocity: I was more opposed to them than I was to the candidates of the old political parties. And I am not a bit ashamed to say that I had much more in common with the candidates of the other parties, Liberal and Conservative, than I had with the communist party; because the candidates of the old parties, and I, stood for something in common; we stood for government by consent of the people whose support we sought.

Furthermore my opposition to the communist party has not lessened over the years. I have not been taken in by any of the palaver that has taken in so many people during the past few years. Indeed my opposition to the communist party has grown, because the danger of the philosophy they advocate has become much more clear in the past few years. And as I said, I am more opposed now than ever before, because communists everywhere have consistently shown that they reject and despise those attributes of civilized human behaviour in which I believe, and which govern my relations with other people in the community.

I believe in such things as honest dealings, integrity as between man and man, group and group, tolerance of other points of view, and the bringing about of social and economic change by consent. May I add this note, that I find it impossible to have personal dealings with any individual whom I cannot implicitly trust and in whose integrity I do not believe.

I have just mentioned what I am opposed to in the communist party philosophy. I also reject what the communist party makes the guiding principle of its policies and methods; that is, the overthrow of existing governments by force, government by dictatorship, liquidation of political opponents—and that is just a polite term for murder of one's opponents.

There may be occasions when force may be necessary in effecting social change. I know of very few countries where the people are ashamed of the revolutions by which they brought about social, political and economic changes. We heard much talk in the house during yesterday's debate about Magna Carta. Let us be clear on this: Magna Carta was not something given to the British people by the willing consent of the British King. I remember quite well, though it is a long time ago, reading in my school history that when King John signed Magna Carta in the meadow at Runnymede he signed it with a smile on his face but with rage in his heart. In other words, the barons of England of that time—and let us be clear about it; it was not the common people of England, but the ruling class—told King John, "You sign here"; and King John signed, because there was no alternative to signing.

In the United States they had their revolution of 1776, of which all Americans are very proud indeed. Sometimes I am amused when I read statements made by the Daughters of the American Revolution, worthy ladies who have organized to perpetuate the achievements of one revolution, and who insist that no more revolutions must ever take place, no matter how great the need may be.

I mention these facts merely to show that there may be occasions in the lives of people when force is necessary to put down tyrants.

Mr. CASE: Are you in favour of communism, or against it?

Mr. MacINNIS: I will tell my hon. friend this, that it would be useless to tell him whether I am in favour of it or against it, because he would not know after I had told him.

Mr. CASE: Yes, he would.

Mr. MacINNIS: I do not believe there are any Englishmen who consider that the civil war of 1648 and 1649, when King Charles lost his head, is something to be ashamed of.

Mr. CASE: King Charles lost his head.

Mr. IRVINE: You never had one to lose.

Mr. MacINNIS: I mention these things merely to show that there may be occasions in the lives of men when violent action may be necessary. But I am glad to say that I am living in a country where change by the consent of the people has become a tradition. And I should like to say here that in all the years I have been advocating political action through parliamentary institutions, the argument my communist opponents used against me was this: Yes, but when you have elected your socialist parliament the ruling classes will not allow you to put your program into effect.

If there is anything that has been completely falsified by events, it is that assertion. I do not know of any socialist government in any democratic country that has been prevented from carrying out its program by any counter-revolutionary action on the part of the former ruling classes. I want to make that clear.

Mr. CASE: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? Do you subscribe to the theory introduced in the book "Make This Your Canada" by David Lewis, alias Louz?

Mr. ARCHIBALD: Take out the drunken bum.

Mr. MacINNIS: I suggest that that question is quite unworthy of an answer. David Lewis did not write "Make This Your Canada." He collaborated in writing the book. May I say that before the book was published I went over every line of it.

Mr. CARDIFF: I ask that the hon. member of the C.C.F. here at the back withdraw at once the statement he made about the hon. gentleman.

An hon. MEMBER: Who are you talking about?

Mr. CARDIFF: I ask that the hon. member withdraw that statement.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. CARDIFF: Yes.

Mr. SPEAKER: Would the hon. member be kind enough to state his point of order?

Mr. CARDIFF: The hon. member for Skeena made a slanderous remark about the hon. member for Grey North and I ask him to withdraw the statement.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: The hon. member for Grey North made a slanderous statement about a member of our movement and implied race hatred.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. CARDIFF: Take back your statement.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would ask the hon. gentleman to state the words he would like to have withdrawn.

Mr. CARDIFF: He said he was a drunken bum.

Mr. SPEAKER: I ask the hon. member to withdraw that statement.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Withdraw.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: Under your instructions, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw.

Mr. FRASER: Not under instructions; that is not good enough.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would ask hon. members to keep silent in order that the Speaker may hear what is going on. I ask the hon. member for Skeena to withdraw his remark.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: I withdraw.

Mr. MacINNIS: I suggest to the hon. member for Grey North that it would have been far better for him to reject the support of the communist party when he was elected to this house rather than to come here now and attack hon. members who have taken a stand against that party and who have refused at all times to accept the support of communists. He is casting slurs on the character of such hon. members, but he had an opportunity to reject the support of the communist party and he did not do so. He came here first with their support.

Mr. CASE: No, I was never supported by a communist in my life. I understood that "Make This Your Canada" was one of your textbooks.

Mr. HARTT: Who else was supporting you?

Mr. MacINNIS: I oppose the principle of the communist party that the end justifies the means. This is not a new principle historically. I maintain that the means used to achieve any purpose—

Mr. FERGUSON: May I ask the hon. member a question? Do you support the views of David Lewis and the co-author of that book "Make This Your Canada"? Declare yourself yes or no now in this House of Commons.

An hon. MEMBER: Who are you?

Mr. MacINNIS: Of course I support the views expressed in the book "Make This Your Canada." If you do not like them you do not have to support them.

Mr. FERGUSON: We know you for what you are.

An hon. MEMBER: You do not know anything; you never did.

Mr. HARTT: In the name of human rights.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. Hon. members will realize that it is one of the duties of the Speaker to protect freedom of speech in this house. Hon. members realize also that it is not necessary to pass a bill to have freedom of speech in this house and they will permit the hon. member who has the floor to carry on with his speech.

Mr. MacINNIS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I will do the best I can. I was stating that I was opposed to the principle of the communist party that the end justifies the means, and I said that was not a new philosophy in history. I maintain that the means used to achieve any purpose will have an effect on those using them. We cannot use bad means to achieve even a good end without ourselves being debased in the process. I should like hon. members to pay particular attention to that, because in our political activities in this country bad means are used to achieve what some people may at the time consider to be good ends. But as I say, we cannot use bad means without ourselves becoming debased in the process.

I wish to make one thing quite clear so that even my hon. friends over here will be able to understand it. I believe that today the communist party is the greatest menace in the world to human peace and freedom. It is filling the world with fear and foreboding and distrust. If there is anything worse than that, I do not know what it is.

Having said that as clearly as I possibly can, I want to go on to say that I am opposed to this bill. In my opinion it is the embodiment of the principle and philosophy of the communist party. It adopts the principle of the communist party that what you do not like you suppress. We are not going to overcome the evils of communism by adopting the methods of communism into the laws of our country.

Remember that this bill proposes to outlaw the communist party, not because they have committed illegal acts but because they have ideas which we do not like. That is implicit in the bill. They are being outlawed as political opponents. It is true that all political opponents are not to be outlawed at once under this bill; but I should like to point out, as was mentioned many times in this house yesterday, that if we adopt the principle of this bill it may be but a beginning. It should be observed that the communist party itself does not abolish or liquidate all its opponents at once. It takes them one at a time, but ultimately the point is reached where every party but the communist party is liquidated. Once we embark on a policy of suppressing or outlawing organizations or associations of people because we do not like their ideas, where shall we end? Where will be the limit to our suppressions?

The bill mentions the Communist Party of Canada and the Labour Progressive Party of Canada by name, but it also includes others. I quote from the bill which I have before me:

> . . . and any association, society, group or organization having similar aims or purposes are declared to be, and shall be deemed to be illegal organizations . . .

Mr. LaCROIX: Provided that a superior court of criminal jurisdiction has expressed the opinion that the association is an illegal one.

Mr. MacINNIS: I know that the bill provides that if, upon a reference submitted by the governor in council, a superior court of criminal jurisdiction expresses the opinion that the association is illegal it may be outlawed, but I submit that no party in this country, unless it is guilty of overt acts, should be outlawed just because a court has expressed an opinion as to its aims.

[Mr. MacInnis.]

I was going to draw attention to the proviso which the sponsor has just mentioned, and which modifies the sweeping provisions of the bill except in so far as it applies to the communist party and the Labour Progressive party, but the section being bad in principle it cannot be made acceptable to a democratic people by a modifying proviso. I know of no democratic country which is not plagued today with its quota of communists, but I know of no democratic country at the moment which has legislation such as we are now being asked to put into our laws, legislation which is contrary to democratic practice and democratic traditions. What is needed in this country is not a law to make illegal parties and ideas that we do not like, but that we should as quickly as possible improve the quality—I emphasize that, improve the quality—of our democracy by abolishing social inequities and making our economic democracy as pervasive as our political democracy. That is what this parliament has to do, and when we do that I have sufficient confidence in the common sense and good judgment of the Canadian people to be satisfied that we shall not need any repressive laws such as this bill would put into effect.

May I point out that no country ever saved itself from revolution or from overthrow by oppressive laws. If oppressive laws have any merit, if they would prevent subversive methods from growing, the communist party would never have come into existence, but the fact of the matter is that the communist party grew and prospered where oppression flourished. There is only one way in which freedom can be extended. That is by extending it. We cannot extend freedom by limiting it. We have laws now on our statute books for dealing with sedition and overt acts. Let us apply these laws where and when there is need, but do not let us begin to make laws to ban ideas, because such laws just won't work.

It is interesting to note that the section which this bill proposes to add to the criminal code is numbered 98. There was a section 98 in the criminal code from 1919 until 1936, the purpose of which was to outlaw certain associations, organizations, societies or corporations. It was later repealed. I should like to read subsection 1 of the old section 98 of the criminal code, which later was repealed. The marginal note to the section is "Unlawful associations," and subsection 1 reads:

> Any association, organization, society or corporation, whose professed purpose or one of whose purposes is to bring about any governmental, industrial or economic change within Canada by use of force, violence or physical injury to person or property, or by threats of such injury, or which teaches, advocates, advises or defends the use of force, violence, terrorism, or physical injury to person or property, or threats of such injury, in order to accomplish such change, or for any other purpose, or which shall by any means prosecute or pursue such purpose or professed purpose, or shall so teach, advocate, advise or defend, shall be an unlawful association.

That was the old subsection 1 of section 98. The section which this bill proposes to introduce is of a similar nature except that it mentions the communist party and the Labour Progressive party by name. There were ten other subsections in the old section 98, but the one I have read was the operative subsection. It was passed in panic after the Winnipeg general strike of 1919 and it remained on the statute book until 1936. There was considerable agitation before it was repealed. I was a member of the house at the time and I can well remember the debate.

The late Mr. Lapointe, then Minister of Justice, introduced the bill to repeal the section. I should like to quote briefly from Hansard some of the points made by Mr. Lapointe at that time. I do so because I know that Mr. Lapointe was highly regarded in this house not only on the government side where he sat but on this side as well. As a matter of fact I came to know Mr. Lapointe well before I ever met him, through hearing the late Mr. Woodsworth speak of him with appreciation. I quote from page 3901 of volume IV of Hansard of the session of 1936. Mr. Lapointe said:

I come now to another phase of the matter. Those who hold the views I hold on this question have been and are being charged with friendship towards the communistic element.

Unfortunately that continues to this day. You cannot speak for what you think is decency and democracy and liberty and freedom in a situation of this kind without being accused of being a communist. An amazing statement was made in the house yesterday by an hon. member to the effect that everyone who gave support to a certain organization was a communist or a member of the communist party. Mr. Lapointe was not a communist and I am not a communist. As I have said before, I detest and abhor everything they stand for.

Mr. Lapointe went on:

I am not a friend of the communists, and those who say that know I am not. I abhor, I hate the teachings and ideals of communism. But I want to fight them in a successful way, and I believe the way to fight them successfully is by argument, by attempting to have social justice everywhere and sound policies of administration.

He then quoted from a statement made by himself on some previous occasion, and he said:

To ensure our political stability as well as our economic stability, to victoriously repel the attacks of the trouble makers we must rely not so much on the criminal code, the officers of justice and the gaols as upon the personal dignity, the individual effort and the social co-operation which are the substance and soul of a free nation.

Could anyone put the situation clearer than it is put here by Mr. Lapointe? May I say that I agree with him; I agree with him with my mind and soul. He continued:

The adepts of the strong manner to the contrary notwithstanding ideas, whether they are good or bad, cannot be killed with guns or machine guns. There must be an enlightened acceptation of the changes to make and the reforms to accomplish to take away the weapons which certain abuses and certain mistakes have placed in the hands of the enemies of order.

There again you have it. We are not going to destroy these people by sections in the criminal code. We are not going to destroy them by jails and prosecutions; we are going to destroy them only when we build a social order in which they cannot exist. It must be remembered that roses do not bloom in gutters. It is as sensible to try to destroy ideas of this kind by repressive measures as it would be for a man who wanted to clear his garden of weeds, and who, on seeing a weed growing, took a rock and put it over the weed. In a few days, instead of killing the weed he would see that the weeds had sprouted all around the rock. By suppressive measures we may think we are destroying communism, but we just hide it as the weeds were hidden by the rock; it will sprout out in every direction and we will not have the same opportunities for dealing with it as we have when it is in the open.

I should like to give one other quotation from the speech of the late Mr. Lapointe.

Mr. MANROSS: Read the whole book.

Mr. MacINNIS: No. It would do you good if you read it. Now that you know the page in Hansard in which to find it, I hope you will go to your room and read it. Mr. Lapointe continued:

May I add that perhaps we are at fault in that regard, too, and that conditions which permit a small group of men to get together with a little sum of money, which with the help of privileges and our protective laws and insufficient social legislation became $15,000,000 after a few years, are productive of communism.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I must call the hon. member's attention to the fact that he has exhausted his time.

Mr. J. A. BRADETTE (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, to some extent I am sorry indeed that I cannot comply with the perhaps legitimate request made by the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. LaCroix). However, no one can blame me, and least of all my constituents, if I take a little of the time of the house to speak on such an important private bill as the one we are discussing at the present time. I believe I would be remiss in my duty if I did not find it possible to express the opinions that I believe would be re-echoing the opinions of my own constituents. I want to preface my remarks by citing one of the telegrams that I have received during the last ten days from the Labour Progressive party of my own constituency. I shall read one of them and I shall read the answer that I gave to that telegram. It is as follows:

Timmins, Ont.

Mr. J. A. Bradette,
Parliament Buildings,
Member of Parliament for Cochrane, Ottawa.

It is an insult to the intelligence of the Canadian people that at a time when the cost of living is the highest in our history,—

That is typical of their propaganda.

—when the nation faces the gravest threat, economic chaos and depression —

Old clichés again that we have heard ad nauseam.

—that the government of which you are a part, should indulge in a debate on the LaCroix bill which is designed as a weapon of political discrimination against a minority Canadian political party.

Poor little party!

Implementation of the LaCroix bill will not solve one of the real problems facing the people today. It will only give comfort and aid to the real enemies of Canadian democracy, the profit hogs that are gouging the livelihood of the Canadian people.

The fact that the bill was introduced by a man with well-known fascist connections should relegate it to the waste basket without delay. We demand that you register yourself in opposition to this bill and that the government get on with the real business of the nation.

For the Labour Progressive party in Cochrane.

On the twelfth day of this month I sent the following reply:

In reply to your telegram of 8th inst., I beg to state that parliament as a whole is doing right in allowing the discussion of the private bills and resolutions, like the LaCroix bill. We must realize that we have in Ottawa a democratic government in which each individual member of parliament has an implicit right to maintain his prerogatives.

Personally, although I do not agree with some of the private bills or resolutions, I shall however do all that I possibly can that such prerogatives will be maintained in a free parliamentary system.

I hold no brief for Mr. LaCroix, although I highly respect him, and I have often strongly disagreed with him, but neither do I agree with your mentioning the old cliche, which is often used without reason whatever, of calling Mr. LaCroix a fascist. He is not a fascist but he is a good Canadian who expresses views, with which the majority of people may not agree at times, but no one can doubt his sincerity of purpose and his great love for his province and his country.

This is the kind of propaganda to which we have been subjected in the last few days.

By way of preface to my remarks, I should like to quote a great theologian of the Roman Catholic Church, Father Gustave Sauve, O.M.I., of the University of Ottawa, dealing with the present bill, in an article that appeared in Le Droit, an Ottawa journal on December 16, 1947. In order to be sure of my ground, instead of relying on my own translation, I will read four paragraphs of that article in the language in which it appeared:

(Translation):

A bill will be introduced in the House of Commons to ask that the Labour-Progressive party, which is nothing else but the Canadian Communist party alive and authentic, be outlawed.

Here are the three closing paragraphs of this article:

Again let us not deceive ourselves. Here in Canada the Labour-Progressive party, imbued with the genuine Marxist doctrine, is ever striving to bring closer and closer the revolutionary ideal of Marx, Lenin and Stalin. Canadian communists are the bitterest enemies of our spiritual, social and economic traditions. Relentlessly and with an amazing energy, they worm their way everywhere under the cloak of democracy; they speak soothingly and admiringly of our wonderful country while, on the other hand they are polishing up weapons to destroy our dearest possessions.

Communism is a constant threat, an ever-increasing menace to our country. Therefore I do not hesitate to declare that it would be expedient to outlaw any communist party, provided that such outlawry be followed by strong measures with a view to putting an end to the misfortunes of the working classes; to preventing capitalism from becoming an exploiter; to giving access to private ownership to the majority of workers; to promoting all activities aimed at the betterment of the labouring class.

I am for doing away with communism by a legal decree, but do not forget that communism has its source in poverty and misery, so that if you sincerely desire to definitely annihilate it, make sure, first of all, that the people enjoy the necessary degree of economic prosperity.

May I be permitted to give a free translation of the last paragraph of this article.

(Text):

I should like now to translate the last paragraph of that excellent article of Father Sauve from which I have just quoted:

Do away with communism by a legal decree, I am with you, but do not forget it has its source in poverty and misery, and consequently if you sincerely desire to definitely annihilate it, first of all, make sure of the economic prosperity of the people.

My first reaction to this bill would be to support it 100 per cent, if I followed my own personal inclinations, because I have suffered from communists in my own section of the country. In 1934, in my own town of Cochrane, I barely escaped with my life, and if three provincial policemen had not sheltered me with their own bodies I might have been killed—by whom? By people who were not even Canadian citizens although they had lived in Canada many years. But they were the pupils, the slaves of Moscow and of Russia. That is why I speak freely on this important subject tonight.

I repeat, if I followed my own passions, my own personal inclinations, I would say, by all means let us pass this legislation at once. But I must remember also that I am a Christian; I must think also as a Canadian; and I must ask myself to be logical both with myself and with my own people.

Would it be a solution of the communist problem in Canada? To my mind, it would not. It would be simply laying on a thick coat of paint over rotten timber. It would be camouflaging to some extent the real issue. If we passed such a law it might for a time lull the Canadian people into a false sense of security which would not exist after the passing of the legislation.

I have no time tonight, Mr. Speaker, to elaborate this point; but I hope that hon. members, when the bill comes up again, will allow me to continue the debate. I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hour reserved for public bills having been exhausted, the house will revert to the business prior to six o'clock.

SUPPLY

FREIGHT RATES—INCREASES ORDERED BY TRANSPORT BOARD—AMENDMENT, MR. COLDWELL —SUBAMENDMENT, MR. BRACKEN

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Abbott for committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Coldwell, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Bracken.

Mr. JAMES SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): My colleagues, the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) and the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank), have already spoken in this freight rates debate, giving their views, as British Columbia members on the government side, so far as the present dispute is concerned, and I feel I should join them.

The matter of railways is, of course, of special significance to British Columbia, because we would not be in confederation today except for the promise of a railway for that province. British Columbia, after all, was tempted into confederation by the promise of the Dominion of Canada that a railway would be built to connect that province with the eastern provinces. With that promise we came into confederation, and immediately in, we began to develop our first grievance, the fact that the promise of rapid construction had not been fulfilled.

Long after the promised date for the completion of the railway, the railway had still not reached British Columbia. There followed, of course, further great land grants to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. Out of the construction of the railway in British Columbia the Canadian Pacific Railway Company got a twenty-mile belt, on either side of the line, of the choicest lands in the province and the greatest forests on Vancouver island, the greatest softwood forest in the world.

Once the railway was completed in 1886, there began our second and greatest grievance, the fact that, once completed, this railway, which was intended to unify this new confederation, was not uniform so far as rates were concerned. We were being charged double the rates of the prairies, while the prairies were charged 40 per cent more than the rates of eastern Canada.

That grievance has been an historic one in the short history of British Columbia. I first heard of it in my school days twenty-five or thirty years ago. It was impressed upon us at that time that it was because of this economic injustice that British Columbia was a province engaged mainly in primary production. We were the hewers of wood and drawers of water, and the east, because of tariff protection and freight rates, was the part of Canada engaged in secondary production.

Today, however, I feel quite sure that informed businessmen in British Columbia are agreed that the railways of Canada do need more revenue. They have only to look at their own businesses to find proof of that Mine is perhaps one of the largest heavy industrial ridings in British Columbia, with the shipyards, the oil refineries, sawmills, pulp and paper plants and mines; and in each of those industries which are directly affected by this freight rate increase the management know there have been substantial increases in their own labour and material costs which have added to the final cost of production of their product. In turning to the figures supplied this week by the Canadian National Railways in their annual report, anyone can see justification for the request of the railways for an increase, if not in rates as given, then certainly in revenue. On page 6 we find that in 1939 the average wage to employees was $1,566. By 1947 that had risen $816, or by 52 per cent. In other words, there was a 52 per cent increase in wage costs to the railways during the war years. The other principal operating cost of a railway, coal, climbed from $4.07 in 1939 to $7.50 in 1947, or an increase of 83 per cent.

The railways asked the board to examine their need, and they endeavoured to prove to the board that they had need of an increase in revenue. To my mind, as the minister explained this afternoon, the railway board are the only group in Canada competent to judge such matters; and after fourteen months of close study, after every province concerned had presented its case in the very best light and through the best legal and technical talent they could hire, the railway board did come to the conclusion that the railways had established need and that more revenue would be required. I contend that the individual members of this House of Commons are not in the position of the board of transport commissioners with respect to coming to a conclusion on whether there is or is not need as far as the railways are concerned. I think most of us realize that we have not the training, the time, the talent or the opportunity to give to this case the study which was given to it by the board appointed under the law of parliament to do this task; and it is significant that, aside from a slight mention by one hon. gentleman, no hon. member of this house has attacked the ability of the board to judge such a case.

However, hon. members have two or three indications which they can use as criteria. The first is the fact that there have been no increases in railway rates since 1922. What other industry or what other labour group can say they have had no increase in either the cost of their labour or the cost of production during that time? Then every year, when we have the Canadian National estimates before parliament, this house has to vote very large sums of money to make up the Canadian National deficit. That, too, should be some indication to us that the Canadian National at least has need of additional revenue.

The third point to which I think we should pay attention comes from a rather extraordinary source. Mr. Mosher, head of the Canadian railway brotherhood, has said publicly that the railways must have this increase if they are to pay the wage increases the railway employees are now demanding. How different that is from the argument we so often hear, especially on the west coast, by labour leaders that companies can meet their demands for more pay without any increase in their price structure. Therefore I say that when Mr. Mosher, a respected officer of the railway brotherhood, makes that statement, to my mind that is significant. It has been said here that the C.C.F. are the political arm of that body, a rather broken arm one hon. member said today. If the C.C.F. are so determined that this increase should be suspended or dropped, then I think that, as the political arm of that brotherhood, they should have said to the brotherhood, "Since Mr. Mosher has said the increase is essential before we can get increases, we will also advocate that we stop the wage negotiations now in progress until some adjustment is made." So far I have not heard such a declaration. I represent two railway towns in my own riding. At Port Coquitlam we have the main yards of the Canadian Pacific in the Vancouver district, and at the town of Squamish we have the terminus of the Pacific Great Eastern. So I know some of the problems of the railway employees in trying to meet the cost of living in British Columbia; and I know I would not go before the railway employees in either of these towns and tell them they should now drop their applications for wage increases because the C.C.F. have moved a motion to drop or suspend this freight rate increase.

The British Columbia opposition is not to the fact that the railways asked for an increase and proved their need for more revenue. Our opposition as a province stems from the fact that this is to be a percentage increase on top of our existing inequality, the mountain differential. That, of course, is the real reason for the opposition of British Columbia. There are members on this side of the house from my own province who have criticized Ontario and Quebec members for not pitching into this fray on our behalf. I do not join in that criticism. After all, this parliament consists of members from every province so that we may be able to intelligently bring before this parliament those particular problems pertaining not so much to the nation itself but to our own provinces; and if the British Columbia and western members are not able to present intelligently to parliament their special problems, they should not expect the Ontario and Quebec members to do so.

Mr. FULTON: Must have been a powerful caucus you had this morning.

Mr. SINCLAIR: My hon. friend has had very interesting meetings in the west himself, to judge by what I hear from Moose Jaw. In this connection, for example, as a British Columbian, badly off though our province may be, I believe there is one province in Canada in a worse position than British Columbia. That is Alberta, which is at the very apex of the freight rates. At least we in British Columbia get a little advantage from the water competition that exists between Montreal and Vancouver. Alberta gets none of that; but I do not feel I should stand in my place in this house and explain the Alberta plight, when Alberta is represented by the able members from that province. I say also one other body has a very great responsibility for the present plight of British Columbia and for doing something about it. That is the provincial government, whose responsibility it is to take every possible step to safeguard our provincial economy. Yet—and this was the thing that struck me as most astounding and which actually, I can tell the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton), did dampen my fires a bit—I learned from the minister that not since 1927 has our province taken any specific, official action. Oh, certainly they have talked. The members of the legislative assembly have talked; the members of parliament like ourselves have talked, but there has never been the one thing which would have brought about some correction of that mountain differential. There has not been an official demand by the government of British Columbia upon the board of transport commissioners for a review of the mountain differential since 1927.

The reason for that is probably that we have become accustomed to our burdens. When you are burdened down with afflictions, after a while you get used to them and bear them. You do not like it, but it is only when extra afflictions are heaped upon you that you suddenly object to the original ones; and that is the situation today. It was only when the 21 per cent was laid on top of our already heavy burden of the mountain differential that we suddenly rose as a province to protest against it. But I say the real responsibility rests with the government of British Columbia, which should have made concurrent application about the mountain differential when the railways filed their application, so that today the board of transport commissioners and the federal government could not point the finger and say the only matter considered was the application of the railways for increased revenue and that the province of British Columbia made no application for a review of the mountain differential.

That is why, instead of condemning the federal government, I stand here today praising them, for at least they have taken the one specific action which will remove the mountain differential. The announcement of the minister that not British Columbia, the province most directly affected, but the federal government had asked the board of transport commissioners to start an investigation into the inequalities, not only in British Columbia but across Canada, was a positive step which my province and the other western provinces should have taken long ago. I would say this, to the credit of one provincial premier—Premier Manning—that at least a year ago he started preparing his case on the mountain differential. It has now been a year in preparation and should be very well presented before the board of transport commissioners.

There are some in the house who will say: What is the value of the applications now made by the federal government? The actual record shows that in the case of British Columbia the applications to the board of transport commissioners for the removal of the mountain differential have borne continuing fruit. At one time we had a double rate. An application was made against it by the province and the rate was reduced to one and three-quarters. Then came the famous freight rates case of 1924 when our province, at great expense, hired distinguished legal talent, who later adorned this chamber, and who succeeded in having that rate reduced to one and a quarter.

It is also true that a later application, a third one, failed. The vote by the board of transport commissioners was four to two, a very close vote indeed. Since that time great changes have occurred in the economy of our province which have changed our case. Certainly the imposition of this 21 per cent increase will have aggravated the case for the province; but I feel confident that the application made by the federal government on behalf of British Columbia, which British Columbia should have made for itself at the time the railways were making their application, will bring the mountain differential down to parity with the rest of Canada.

For these reasons I will vote against both the Conservative amendment and the C.C.F. amendment, and will support the government in the action they have taken.

(Translation):

Mr. MAXIME RAYMOND (Beauharnois-Laprairie): Mr. Speaker, may I briefly define my stand on the amendment moved by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) and the amendment to the amendment moved by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken). I cannot support either for the simple reason that both embody a principle which I wholeheartedly condemn. What, after all, is the point at issue? It is not a matter of deciding whether the board of transport commissioners' decision suits us or not, nor of deciding whether it is fair, reasonable and acceptable to all sections of this country. On the contrary the amendment moved by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) would have us blame the government on the plea that it failed to intervene as a court of appeal in order to repeal a legal decision taken by the board of transport commissioners. Such a proposition implies a dangerous principle. If political tribunals were to replace our judicial ones, what would become of justice? In my opinion, that is the sole question involved in this case. Again, it is not a matter of deciding whether the board of transport commissioners' decision suits us or not but if the government should take the place of a judicial body or, in other words, if it must set itself up as a court of appeal to review a legal finding. That is the meaning of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar and the meaning of the amendment to the amendment moved by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken).

I do not mean that I approve the increase granted by the board of transport commissioners. I must say that I am not much in favour of an increase which adds to the burden of taxation in our country and will enable certain companies to pay big dividends to foreigners. But that, may I say once again, is not the issue. The only reason why I cannot vote for the amendment and the amendment to the amendment is that they embody a principle which is contrary to the public interest, a principle whereby a political tribunal and not a judicial tribunal would deal with certain matters of general interest.

[Mr. Sinclair.]

(Text):

Mr. ANTHONY HLYNKA (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, members of this group are not opposing any increase in freight rates if, as I said on April 5, an increase is necessary. But we certainly disagree with the principle that western Canada and the maritimes should pay the bulk of this increase.

For our immediate purposes the discussion on the subject of freight rates may be narrowed down to two major points. First there is the existence of discrimination in the scale of freight rates as between the two central provinces on the one hand and the four western provinces and the maritimes on the other. In other words, Ontario and Quebec have been favoured in the present freight rates, and the rest of Canada has been discriminated against.

To substantiate my argument, I need only refer to the figures given in exhibit 131 filed by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company at the hearing before the board of transport commissioners. The exhibit states that east of Fort William in the ten-year period from 1936 to 1945 $90·4 million of working expenses brought to the Canadian Pacific a net earning of $12·1 million, or 34·2 per cent of the total net earnings in the whole of Canada, while west of Fort William in the same ten-year period $90·0 million of working expenses brought net earnings to the Canadian Pacific of $23·3 million, or 65·8 per cent of the total net earnings. I think no further argument is necessary on that point.

The second major point is this: Will this discrimination be allowed to continue; will the federal government allow an additional burden to be imposed on western Canada by permitting a flat increase in freight rates of 21 per cent; and what does the federal government intend to do about the matter, if anything?

According to the statement of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier), the government has no intention of doing anything about this matter. It is evading its responsibility by putting forth the argument that the board of transport commissioners was set up by parliament for this very purpose. The minister stated that the board was charged with the responsibility of studying this question and rendering its decision. It has given its decision, and the government has accepted it.

The question is now: Where do we go from here? After listening to the speech of the Minister of Transport this afternoon, I was convinced more than ever that the protest of the west against any additional increase in freight rates upon the western provinces before the existing discrimination is removed is justified, without a doubt.

The minister pointed out that the act provides that any person or persons or any province may make application to the board of transport commissioners for equalization of freight rates, and that it is up to the province to file such appeals, if it so desires. In other words, the government is endeavouring to wash its hands clean of the whole problem. In view of the government's stand on this issue, the western provinces should first of all satisfy themselves that they know exactly how this matter stands; secondly, that the federal government has decided not to do anything about it; thirdly, that the provinces should study and arrive at some decision as to the ways of solving this problem.

Touching on a few other points, first I should like to say that in spite of the explanation given to this house by hon. members from western Canada, in spite of the briefs which were prepared and circulated by the western provinces on this question, there still are those who persist in arguing that the railways need additional revenue and that, therefore, an increase in the freight rates in western Canada is justified. Let me make it plain once again that if it is shown to the west that the railways need additional revenue I am sure that no reasonable person would object to an increase in freight rates, but spread the load fairly over all parts of Canada. Why take a disproportionate share of the revenue from western Canada?

I am telling the minister that the government must take full responsibility for the 21 per cent increase and for the existing injustice of discriminatory freight rates. I say further that the people of western Canada are not going to take this lying down. If the government does not understand the pleas of the people of western Canada which have been expressed through their provincial governments and through their members of parliament the people of the west will have to adopt language which all political parties understand.

In his speech this afternoon the Minister of Transport paid a compliment to the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) for putting freight rates above politics. Freight rates in western Canada are so high that no member from the west has a reach high enough to put anything above the present freight rates. However I agree with the minister that the question of freight rates should not be used as a political football.

Let me explain what I mean. I have in my hand a copy of the platform which was circulated in the constituency of Vegreville and presumably throughout Alberta during the election of 1940 by the candidates of the party in power at the present time. The Liberals placed before the people of that province a program which reads in part:

> Agriculture—Pool the freight on wheat.
> Reconsider whole freight rate structure.
> Lower the cost of agricultural machinery.

If the candidates of the Liberal party had not used freight rates as a political football it would never have been in politics. Under the circumstances we are asked by our constituents to do something about these questions, because they say that the Liberal candidates told them that if they voted for them the government would do something about the matter. I agree with the minister that questions of this sort should be solved in a non-partisan way. Many questions should be solved in a non-partisan way, but I hardly believe there is another group in Canada that has been using these questions in politics to the extent to which government members and candidates have.

I wish to come back to this mistaken view that seems to have taken hold of some people who keep on repeating it. I want to make it clear beyond a shadow of a doubt just where this group stands on the question of freight rates. I believe that the majority of those who have opposed or who have criticized the minister take the same stand. The following editorial appeared in the Ottawa Journal of April 9, 1948:

> Entirely sensible is the government's decision not to interfere with the increase in freight rates granted to the railways. The board of transport commissioners, after exhaustive inquiry, decided that increases were needed.

Then it goes on:

> Opponents of freight rate increases say there are regional rate injustices which should be righted. Would it help to right such regional injustices, assuming that they exist, if we bankrupt our railways in the meantime?

Surely those people who look at these questions fairly will agree that no one from western Canada wants to starve our railways or see them bankrupt. But, as I said before, why take it out on western Canada and the maritimes? Why discriminate against those provinces which are politically weaker? It appears that the famous saying could be paraphrased in this case and we could say that where there is political might, there is right. That appears to be the way things are running in this case.

I clipped out an article which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen of March 30 of this year just before the release was made in connection with freight rates. One significant paragraph reads:

> The decision equalizing east-west freight rate levels will take into account a present higher scale in the west estimated at about seven per cent above the eastern level. The dividing point is the head of the lakes.
>
> It was understood the board's method of equalization would consist in withholding increases from certain rates in the west.

Even the newspapermen who were writing about this question before the decision was handed down felt that something should be done to equalize freight rates as between the east and the west. But what happened? When the decision was handed down we found there was to be a flat increase in freight rates for the entire country. Some hon. members have already pointed out that the west will have to carry an additional burden of something like eighteen per cent higher than the rest of the country. Surely that question must be faced by this government. The minister now promises that the board will go ahead and study the whole question again. As time goes by, it will render its decision on the equalization phase of this question. But why did not the government long before this ask the board to study this question? The government in their election platform in 1940 said they were going to do something about equalizing freight rates; but they have waited until this time, and surely now, after the board has studied the rate question for more than a year and a half it must have learned all the facts and need not take years to bring down its decision.

I do not think I have much more to add to what I have said tonight and what I said on April 5, except that I insist that the government shall not shirk its responsibility in connection with this problem. What the people of western Canada want is action, and action now, not later. When the next election rolls around, if this question is not settled before, the government will again use it as a political football and then, when the election is over, the whole thing will be forgotten. We want this question settled now. We do not want it to be involved in politics. Let us solve it now and then it will not be involved in politics.

It must be remembered that the majority of the people in western Canada are primary producers. This means that they have to pay freight both ways; they pay freight on everything they buy and on everything they sell. It is only the primary producer who is in that position. The manufacturer does not pay freight both ways. He has not to pay freight on everything he buys and on everything he sells. But the primary producer does, so in reality multiply this increase by two and then you will be nearer the mark as to what the farmer of western Canada has to pay in increased freight rates.

[Mr. Hlynka.]

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, the old Grand Trunk railway which was a pioneer good road, made very good money in Ontario, and then what did they do? They went and built a third transcontinental from Moncton to Winnipeg, and the result was that the system got into such difficulties that in 1916-17 a royal commission to investigate the railway situation in Canada had to be appointed, consisting of Mr. A. H. Smith, president of the New York Central railway, Sir Henry Drayton, head of the railway commission as chairman, and Mr. Acworth, who was a leading executive of the Great Midland railway in England and had made a great success of that road. The city of Toronto and the Ontario government in 1918-19 opposed the railway rate increase, and we took an appeal on questions of facts to whom? To the governor in council, and they dismissed our appeal.

The province of Ontario, with the other great industrial province of Quebec, contributes more in taxes than any other province in this dominion. The province of Ontario gets little or nothing from governments and little or nothing from some railway corporations. But I do say that there should have been set up in this house long ago a committee to consolidate and revise the Railway Act. Thirty years ago, back in 1917 and 1918 there was a committee of the House of Commons appointed to revise and consolidate the Railway Act, which met for two years. I appeared before that committee as head of the Canadian Union of Municipalities, accompanied by the late Sir Adam Beck, and we proposed to the railway committee that the Railway Act, like the Bank Act, should be revised every ten years. There has been no revision of the Railway Act since 1917 or 1918. But the railway committee of that day sat for nearly two years and the city of Toronto had to have some of its chief officials appear before that committee for nearly two and a half years, because the Mackenzie interests had gone to nearly every legislature in the country and got charters for the building of a third transcontinental line. We had to watch them because the Sir William Mackenzie interests owned the old Toronto street railway with a thirty-year terminable franchise expiring in 1921. We had a clause put in the Railway Act at that time, after a long battle here, to protect the municipalities. It provided that a federal corporation could not run its line in, on, along, over or under a highway without the consent of the municipality. That was a blessing to the municipalities, which otherwise would have been ruined, with no control over their own streets. As I say, a committee should have been appointed long ago, directly after the war, to revise the Railway Act and bring it up to date, but that has not been done since 1919 up to the present time.

As to the present rate increase, the toll charges and rates should provide that there be no more political rate structure in Canada, setting one part of the country against the other, causing divisions and all that kind of thing. Ontario does not want that, nor does any other province that I know of. This particular application by the railways was considered by the board for nearly a year and a half. The board is a judicial body appointed under the Railway Act, which removed control of the railways from the old railway committee of the privy council, which used to consider all railway legislation down to the appointment of the board in 1903, when the late Hon. Mr. Blair, a former minister of railways, became first chairman of the railway board.

The board is a law court. I raised some question about the matter when the late Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux was Speaker of the house, and he ruled that the board was a law court. The then solicitor general, Mr. Cannon, had objected to some things that had been said in the debate and it was then that the Speaker ruled that the board was a court of law. The act gave the board very wide powers over any class of goods or persons or property of every description conveyed by the railways or by steamships connected with the railways.

Section 33 of the Railway Act gives the board powers equal to the powers of the supreme court. It has jurisdiction of its own volition. It does not need an application before it at all. It can go to work of its own volition and investigate express rates, freight rates and all that kind of thing. It is its function and duty to do so. This board did not do it. The province of Ontario wants nothing the other provinces do not get also from the country; it wants no hand-outs from the country and has never got any. Were it not for the resources of the province we would not be in the position in which we are today. Ontario is the greatest taxpaying province in the dominion. If it were not for this province in the past, the dominion would not be able to go into all this kind of thing and duplication.

They had big eyes in those days. Cox could not wait. We remember the old Grand Trunk Pacific which started to build a road from Moncton to Winnipeg and the railway board had no jurisdiction over it. They all had big eyes. Branch lines would have been built to the sun, to the moon and the stars if they had been allowed to carry on. After all this was done, the good old Grand Trunk in Ontario took the rap and became bankrupt. It had to be taken over by the country, which meant a serious loss to the country. The Canadian National Railways made all their money in Ontario out of the old Grand Trunk. There was an investigation into this situation, appointed by the gentleman I have named. The chairman of the board at that time was Sir Henry Drayton who was associated with Mr. A. H. Smith. What did the report find? The report found the following, that Canada had too much railway mileage for its population. It said:

> The mileage of Canadian railways is very great in proportion to the population of the country. It has increased out of proportion to the increase of population.
>
> Canada's natural waterways make railways less absolutely necessary than in other countries.
>
> The net return is so low as to prove that more railways have been built than can be justified on commercial grounds under present conditions.
>
> The public investment in railways is very large. The total amount of public capital involved in direct construction of government lines, and cash aid, land grants and guarantees to private companies is $968,451,000, not counting the value of lands still unsold.

They were not satisfied with that. They went to the provinces of Manitoba, Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia and they got further hand-outs of millions of acres of land and right-of-way protection; so much so, that chaotic conditions were created. The report went on to say:

> The development of Canada justified two transcontinental lines. It did not justify three. The Grand Trunk and Canadian Northern should have been amalgamated.

Then they recommended certain things to be done in regard to taking over of this railway. They did not consider that operations by a minister directly responsible to parliament would be in the public interest. They said:

> It would not secure better service or lower rates.

They rejected the idea of direct government ownership and operation and they recommended that parliament not fix the rates. They recommended that the commission be appointed as a judicial body, and they could not be criticized here. They have the same jurisdiction and powers as a judge of the superior court or of any of the courts of this country. One of the cardinal principles of the British constitution is that the courts of our country are subservient to the legislature. That is a very good principle. They also report that the railway board be non-political, permanent and self-perpetuating. They said:

We give reasons for concluding that railways are not a proper subject for direct parliamentary control.

That is right. We have the same thing in connection with the Toronto transportation commission. The original bill consisted of sixty pages, and I boiled it down to a page and a half. That act has now been used as a model by the city of Ottawa. They recommended:

That the act of parliament provide that the operation of the company shall be on a commercial basis, and that the trustees make no general reduction in rates until the property earns a reasonable net return.

They also recommended that there be given to the trustees the widest powers in the management of their property, and that they take into account depreciation, overhead and all the rest of it, and to run the road from the commercial aspect. The Drayton report recommended that the authority of the railway commission be extended to include all government railways.

Mr. A. H. Smith, president of the New York Central, in an amending report said:

Amend the regulating policy so that the railway commission may have jurisdiction over all railroads in the matter of maximum and minimum rates, the issuance of securities, the building of new railways, or the extension of lines, and other matters properly within the scope of governmental supervision.

Create a board of trustees, consisting of two government officials and three private citizens to act for the government in the matters hereinafter proposed.

The commission in 1909 was appointed under the chairmanship of Mr. Justice Mabee who had tried to regulate railways and their rates, and he did make some substantial progress and was a strong chairman. I might refer to the application I had before them in connection with the coal subsidy. I believe that the national policy should be extended in railways to include bonuses, subventions and subsidies, because we had that regarding the coal situation, which has been carried on by an act of parliament outside the railway commission's authority. We had one or two other instances of that as well. The house will find that all set out in the coal debate on my national fuel policy in Hansard of Monday, March 19, 1923. It took six years to make it statutory as applying to the maritimes, and Alberta coal and coal from Wales, and it was a blessing to the people of this country.

I may say that before there was a railway commission, away back on the 11th of June,

[Mr. Church.]

1897, the Laurier government, which came into office in 1896, introduced a bill regarding British Columbia railways and the building of the Canadian Pacific to the Crowsnest pass. The bill was introduced in this house by the minister of railways of the Laurier government regarding a subsidy for the railway to the Crowsnest pass. There was a debate in this house. Mr. Ross Robertson, the then member for Toronto East, discussed the bill. I am reading from "The Economic Aspects of the Crowsnest Pass Rates Agreement, No. 13, of the McGill University economic studies, one of the national problems of Canada series," by Mr. Theodore Herbert Harris, M.A. Mr. Harris said that at the time the bill was passed discussion fell into three principal divisions: first, the advantages to be derived from the construction of the line; second, the terms under which the line was to be constructed, more particularly with reference to the subsidy which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was to receive and, third, the feasibility of constructing the line as a government enterprise. Regarding the first, there was practically unanimous approval, the sole dissenting voice being that of a member for an Ontario constituency, Mr. Ross Robertson, who failed to see why so large a sum was being devoted to the development of British Columbia, while the province of Ontario was, in his opinion, being neglected. And it was neglected, with the result that we had not had the Temiskaming and Ontario system electrified in 1910-11-12. If we had had that it would have been of great advantage to Ontario.

I stood at Fort Erie the other day watching the trains going down in that border town. I saw these magnificent new cars that they are using now on the subsidiary of the Canadian National Railways, the system they are using throughout Maine, New York and other places such as central Vermont and on all these other roads that are subsidiaries. I bring that to the attention of the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Ferguson), because he is interested in the rates and rolling stock of the railroads up north in Ontario and all that kind of thing as well. This report goes on to say:

It was that section of the bill that dealt with the subsidies which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was to receive that promoted the greater part of the discussion, leaving little time for the house to hear the pros and cons of the argument that the government undertake the work on its own behalf.

From the parliamentary debates on the terms of the Crowsnest act I quote the following:

Opposition to the subsidy granted the Canadian Pacific Railway Company under the terms of the bill came from many sources, but particularly from Mr. Ross Robertson. This member pointed out that as the total cost of constructing the 330 miles of railway was estimated at $7,000,000, and that as the government was subsidizing it to the extent of $11,000 a mile, the company was only required to find forty per cent of the funds necessary for the construction of a line which he believed would be a commercially successful enterprise from the very start. He deplored the fact that the public resources of British Columbia were being transferred to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to the extent of 20,000 acres of land per mile, and felt also, that when the line was in operation, the people would be wholly at the mercy of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Some further misgivings were entertained due to the fact that there had been guaranteed to the British Columbia and Southern Railway, a company incorporated under the laws of British Columbia, a land grant of 20,000 acres per mile in the event of that company constructing a railway line through the Crowsnest pass. By the terms of an agreement between the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the British Columbia and Southern Railway, the former fell heir to a portion of this grant. The fact was made clear, however, that a considerable portion of the land which the Canadian Pacific was to obtain by virtue of its agreement with the British Columbia and Southern would be turned over to the dominion government.

Further debate on the subject was restricted to the usual parliamentary tactics of delay.

As a matter of fact, a considerable portion of the land which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was to obtain in British Columbia in connection with the southern railway was returned to the dominion government. A further debate ensued and the Crowsnest Pass agreement was adopted. Then came the Manitoba agreement, which was submitted to the railway commission, and there was another one with respect to the Crowsnest Pass agreement, which was considered away back in 1924 when an application was made under the Railway Act. The matter was referred to the Supreme Court of Canada, and it was found that the Crowsnest Pass agreement applied only to the conditions that existed when it was originated and, I think, to the class of freight also.

I submit that there should be no more political rate structures in this country. The national railway is faced with a deficit of $23,000,000, notwithstanding the fact that it pays no taxes.

May I ask, Mr. Speaker, that hon. members observe some order in the chamber? I should like to get the attention particularly of some of my hon. friends from Ontario. I do not see why hon. members from Ontario should not follow this discussion with interest. I would ask them to pay some attention. I can wait until they are through talking. I am not in a hurry. I should like to get some order, at least on my own side of the house.

The people of this province generally, the farmers of Ontario are paying heavy taxes and some are getting no service at all. Let me ask hon. members representing the districts around Haliburton and Frontenac and western and northern Ontario what service their people have been getting from the old Grand Trunk. We cannot get any steam suburban service in Toronto, which has contributed more revenue to the railways than has any other community in Canada. The Ontario members are afraid to stand up for their own province, as the members from some of the other provinces have done. We cannot get anything from any government. We have not had in the Toronto district a cabinet minister since 1935. Today we have this Canadian National deficit of $23,000,000 for one year and the people of Ontario will pay a considerable part of that deficit. The national system has many advantages which are not enjoyed by the other railway.

In my opinion this railway system should be operated on a commercial basis. One matter which I have raised, and which is not covered in the order for the present 21 per cent, has reference to the employees of the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian National from coast to coast. They were entitled to some kind of war bonus for what they did during the war. They worked day and night in the transportation of troops from Vancouver to Halifax. They worked long hours, some of them eighteen hours a day. Surely these men are entitled to some recognition from parliament, the same as some others who did less got.

So far as the province of Ontario is concerned, we have no support at all, and our Ontario members on all sides of the house are to blame. What have my friends representing Haliburton, Frontenac and Huron, and all these other places in western Ontario, to say with regard to the Canadian National services they have got? What have they received in return for the funds taken from the old Grand Trunk of Ontario and given to complete the "Cox can't wait" transcontinental from Moncton as far as Winnipeg?

I do not think there should be any political rate structures in Canada, and that is all we have ever had. No wonder the farmers of Ontario do not get anything. Their members are responsible. As I say, they are afraid to stand up for their province as the members from the prairie provinces, the maritimes and British Columbia have stood up for their provinces.

What has been responsible for the condition that has brought about appeals from seven of the provinces? Consider the extravagance condemned in the Drayton-Acworth report, attributable to the operation of three transcontinental railways. Some of the seven provinces now object to the rate structure of this country, and I am not here to support yet an increase in rates. Far from it. The appeal should have been allowed first. In my opinion sufficient material was submitted to the government for the government to decide. But some of the seven provinces who have been objecting were themselves largely responsible for the present state of affairs as a result of the overbuilding of railways and useless duplication in Canada. We had railway construction three times in excess of what the country could stand.

For example, there were three branch lines from Toronto to Belleville and the result was that one line of the tracks had to be ripped up. There were other sections of railroad in the other provinces which also had to be ripped up and abandoned, such was the overexpansion of railway construction in Canada. I do not say that all the provinces were to blame, but I suggest that the intention which was expressed at the time railway construction began in Canada should be carried out, and that is, that there should be no more political roads or political rate structure. The roads should be managed from the commercial point of view, after proper inquiry, and the facts should be allowed to speak for themselves.

I believe there should be a proper system of railway rates in Canada, and let me say in this connection that we in Ontario do not want anything from the other provinces of the dominion. I myself have always been in favour of the principle of confederation, that what is good for one province is good for the rest of the country. In other words, I believe in the old Cornish battlecry for confederation, "Each for all and all for each."

There is no doubt that there are inequalities in rates, nor is there any doubt of the fact that there is at present a very large Canadian National deficit, but I believe in the principle I put forward in 1923, of bonuses, subventions and subsidies granted after an inquiry along the lines of the coal investigation, in order to see that inequalities are wiped out.

Finally, I suggest that the Railway Act should be revised every ten years, as the Bank Act is revised. The last Railway Act revision took place in 1917. Why should we wait thirty years for a revision of so important an act as the Railway Act? Two long wars and a heavy depression have intervened and we have had no revision of the Railway Act to check up on inequalities and to find out what, if anything, can be done.

[Mr. Church.]

I think the government of the day might have taken some steps after the seven provinces wrote them, after this order was passed. I have the order of the board here, and I have the opinion of Mr. Wardrope, who believes that the railways should have got another two per cent. That order was dated March 30, not so long ago; there was an appeal to the governor general in council, and the government should have allowed that appeal, because there is provision in the Railway Act for such an appeal on questions of fact. I was before the governor general in council myself at one time. We had a whole staff of accountants, lawyers and everything else. It was in connection with passenger rates and freight rates. We presented our brief to the railway commission and later took an appeal to the governor general in council.

I sympathize with the prairie provinces and the maritimes and have always favoured liberal treatment to those parts of the country which have done so much for Canada. I am a great admirer of British Columbia which is not only rich in water power but generally has been a great blessing to confederation. So I think the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) might, after a request of seven provinces, have taken the initiative himself, because he has power under the act; and the governor in council should have heard the appeal. The operation of this order might have been postponed for two weeks or so in order to permit this to be done, and then the government could have given their decision. After all is said and done, the onus is upon the government to some extent, though the reports are the other way and the railway commission may be considered a court of law, as it is in fact. They are called commissioners, but that body is a successor of the old railway committee of the privy council, and the Railway Act says it is a court; I quoted the section a short time ago. The question as to whether or not the railways were entitled to a 21 per cent increase is a question of fact. The government could very well have postponed the application of the order for two or three weeks and heard any appeal from it. Then, after they gave their decision, I do not see what we could have done as members of parliament, because the railway board was appointed for a specific purpose: to find out what are reasonable rates.

I do not believe the increase is entirely justified. Perhaps ten per cent or more might have been more in line with what is required; but to give an increase of 21 per cent all at once, after taking about eighteen months to hear the case, seems hardly fair. Surely after having taken that long the government could have taken a few days more before putting the judgment into effect. It was put through as a matter of policy, not as a matter of law. Instead of taking time to hear the appeal, however, the government announced the next day that they had no jurisdiction, though there is an appeal in law to the governor in council on questions of fact and to the Supreme Court of Canada on questions of law, or to the privy council in England. Nothing like that was done, and I am afraid to some extent the government was influenced by the action of the railways across the border and the interstate commerce commission.

These matters have to be considered. I believe the government might well have heard the appeal as I have suggested and then announced its decision.

Mr. F. E. JAENICKE (Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, with his great effort this afternoon the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) undoubtedly convinced or converted many of his followers who a week ago were sort of faltering on this question; but I am sorry to say he has not been able to convert me and that today I feel just as I felt the day we heard over the radio the announcement of the board's order. When the minister spoke this afternoon he more or less elaborated upon the argument he advanced in this house on April 5, when we had a debate on this freight rate question. This afternoon he again stated that he wanted to dispel some misconceptions. I may say there is no misconception in my mind. I should like to quote from what the minister had to say on that other occasion, as reported at page 2662 of Hansard:

> There has been a tendency in this debate today to confuse two issues, the one which was the increase recommended by the board of transport commissioners and the other which was the equalization of the rates; or, to use the expression mentioned at various times in the debate, a discrimination in the rates across Canada. . . . The board in this case was dealing with one specific matter, namely an application . . . to the board of railway commissioners for an increase in freight rates.

With great respect I say to the minister that I think he was wrong, as I shall try to show in a moment. What he said is, of course, substantially what the board of transport commissioners said in their judgment; and in my opinion the board were also wrong. They held that discrimination was not in issue, and skilfully skated around that point. This afternoon the minister quoted from the decision of the board something which had some application to the argument I am about to make, but I am going to quote another paragraph from the judgment of the chief commissioner as it is found at page 81 of the mimeographed copy:

> Wide latitude was given to the protestants in the development of their objections to the proposed increase. In a considerable number of instances the objections involved matters more appropriately to be dealt with under proceedings upon complaint and in other cases virtually amounted to an endeavour to have reheard various phases of some of our previous decisions. A case of this character is a poor vehicle for the adjustment of individual rates or for the elimination of preferences or unjust discrimination existing except where same may be outstanding. One reason is that no notice has been given to the public of the intention to try such unanticipated issues and many interested parties were therefore not before us and could not have been heard completely if they were.

I said, and I repeat, that I believe the board were wrong in their judgment when they said that in fact they had no jurisdiction; because I maintain that in any case before the board for approval of any tolls or rates, discrimination is always an issue. Let me refer to the act to make my point clear. The application was made under section 325 of the Railway Act, which reads:

> The board may disallow any tariff or any portion thereof which it considers to be unjust or unreasonable or contrary to any of the provisions of this act, and may require the company within a prescribed time to substitute a draft satisfactory to the board in lieu thereof or may prescribe other tolls in lieu of the tolls so disallowed.

Then I wish to quote part of section 314, which deals with the matter of discrimination, part of which was also quoted this afternoon by the minister. The first subsection reads:

> All tolls shall always under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, in respect of all traffic of the same description and carried in or upon the like kind of cars or conveyances, passing over the same line or route, be charged equally to all persons and at the same rate, whether by weight, mileage, or otherwise.

Subsection 2 reads:

> No reduction or advance in any such rates shall be made either directly or indirectly, in favour of or against any particular person or company travelling upon or using the railroads.

Subsection 4 reads:

> No toll shall be charged which unjustly discriminates between different localities.

In my opinion all the sections under this particular part of the act, including sections 314 to 321, are overriding sections and must be taken into consideration in any case of approval submitted under section 325. I think that in view of their decision, in the case before them, that they had no jurisdiction to deal with discrimination or equalization, the board were wrong in law. It might have been different if they had found as a matter of fact that there was no discrimination. But they did not do that; in fact they could not do that. As I said before, they skated around the point and they held that discrimination was not in issue.

In my opinion, therefore, they were wrong in law and perhaps an appeal by the provinces might lie to the Supreme Court of Canada. The government should at least have stayed the order until the provinces had sufficient time to decide upon an appeal or upon some further action. But it seems that some mystic power has more influence with the government than members of parliament from all parties who pleaded so forcefully and effectively on April 5 the cause of justice and non-discrimination.

Talking about discrimination, my mind goes back to the time we had the debate on the prohibition and restriction of imports, when a few months ago the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) gave the house a lesson in non-discrimination when we were discussing this bill to prohibit and restrict imports. He told us that this government was all out for non-discrimination. He went so far as to say at one time to the committee that we were going to set an example to the world in non-discrimination. It is true that this lesson referred to international relationships; but it now seems that when it concerns our own Canadian people not only is discrimination advisable, but it is quite right to enhance this discrimination if it is a matter of providing in perpetuity the necessary operating expenses and profits of the railways.

Many points were made on April 5 and again in this debate on the motion and on the amendment offered by my leader in connection with the matter of discrimination. I wish to mention only one example to show that there is very unjust discrimination. The example I have chosen is the one which has been referred to by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Hlynka) this evening. I shall go a little farther than he went in pointing out the injustices of this discrimination, and that it is such an unjust discrimination as would come within the meaning of the act and the particular section I read a few moments ago. As was said by the hon. member, the evidence before the board showed in a statement from the Canadian Pacific that in the ten-year period between 1936 and 1945 the average of the gross earnings of the Canadian Pacific was $215 million a year. The working expenses to be paid out of that were approximately $180 million, so that the net earning in each year was approximately $35,000,000. The evidence also established that the lines east of Fort William showed an average gross earning each year of $102 million and working expenses of approximately $90,000,000, leaving net earnings in the east of $12,000,000. In the west, that is to say the lines west of Fort William, the Canadian Pacific had gross earnings of approximately $113 million, and the working expenses in the west are practically equal to those in the east, namely $90,000,000, leaving net earnings out of western lines of approximately, $23,000,000. In other words the net earnings of the Canadian Pacific in the west, on equal operating expenses, were almost double its net earnings in the east.

If we translate these figures to a per capita basis we find that the gross earnings in the east contributed about $3 per capita, and in the west about $5.40 per capita. If we take the net earnings of the Canadian Pacific in these years we find that the east contributed $2.52 per capita and the west contributed $4.83 per capita.

If we take this 21 per cent increase we shall find that, on the basis of these figures, the eastern people will contribute 35 cents per capita, while we in the west will have to contribute about $1.10 per capita, so that the Canadian Pacific can have these additional profits. The figures which I gave as to the company's earnings in eastern Canada also include the lines in the maritimes, where the people are also being discriminated against so far as freight rates are concerned. If we take into consideration this discrimination against the maritimes, the tremendous disparity which I have already pointed out as between east and west will be enhanced as between the two central provinces of Ontario and Quebec and the rest of Canada.

As I pointed out a minute ago, I compute this increase in the freight rates structure to be more than three times as great in the west as it will be in the east; and if we take into consideration the injustices done to the maritimes, this disparity will be even greater.

Surely such a disparity in rates which results in people in the west paying more than three times as much per capita as people in the east in order to supply these additional earnings for the railways is unjust discrimination within the meaning of section 314 of the act. As a matter of fact the government might be deemed to have admitted as much because of their contemplated investigation of this matter.

For a moment let me come back to the board and its attitude in the matter. The board's duties and powers are not clearly defined in the act. But, generally speaking, I would say that its duties and powers are to see that the provisions of the Railway Act are fairly enforced. I would say that, taking the act as a whole, the board's primary responsibility is the protection of the public. It is true perhaps that the board is there to protect the interests of the railways as well; but an act which grants extraordinary powers to the railways, such as the power of expropriation, is primarily an act for the protection of the public.

And may I suggest that in any decision the public ought to have the benefit of the doubt. The board knew of the grossly unjust disparity in freight rates already existing between the central provinces and the rest of Canada. However, instead of rectifying the situation, as it had power to do, it accentuated the situation by its judgment.

In my opinion the board had full power to reject the application of the railways, and to tell them to submit a new freight rates schedule for approval which would meet with their needs and which at the same time would be non-discriminatory. Why should the board or anyone else figure out a just, equitable and non-discriminatory freight rates structure for the railways. The way I read the act it is the duty of the railways to do that; and they should have been told to submit such a schedule for approval of the board, and to put their house in order.

I am of the opinion that the board has entirely misconstrued its duties and powers under the act, and that the people of Canada —certainly the people in the west—have lost faith in the competency of the board. For these reasons I believe that a royal commission or some other tribunal should be set up for the investigation of the freight rate structure as proposed by the minister. I believe that some of the provinces have already taken the same stand.

But let me again suggest that the onus of providing a fair and equitable freight rate tariff for the whole of Canada is, in reality and according to the provisions of the act, upon the railways themselves. The railways should be given to understand that the course of least resistance which they seem to have adopted this time when asking for an increase all across the board will not do. They should get busy and work out for the approval of the board or some other tribunal a schedule which will meet their needs and at the same time be just and non-discriminatory as far as the public is concerned.

I also plead with the minister, although I presume it is now too late, that the government reconsider the matter, suspend the board's order as they have the power to do and request the railways to submit a scheme which has these just and non-discriminatory features. Not only would this course be fair and just, but may I suggest that it would also be in the interests of the government.

This afternoon the minister mentioned something about the political situation that might develop in connection with this railway rates dispute. I have here an editorial which appeared in the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix, a newspaper which warmly supports the government of the minister. They certainly do not do so in connection with this freight rate order. The editorial reads in part:

> Some of the reasons why the Chevrier policy contains the seeds of a fatal error for the King government may be found in the judgment of the board of transport commissioners. No one objects to the railways getting more money. Everyone should object to them getting it as a discriminatory levy upon the west. The board, of course, may say that the effect of a rate increase is none of its business. The federal cabinet cannot say the same and expect to remain in office, and it is an incredible lapse of the ordinary political sagacity of the cabinet to find that any of its ministers think it can. Yet that is what makes politics, and the consequences will unfold quickly. Another reason why the Chevrier proposal is bad is that the board of transport commissioners is unacceptable as the body to conduct a general inquiry into the rate structure. But meanwhile, a new generation of politicians seems sure to learn one of the basic facts of Canadian politics, that is, that freight rates are basically a political matter.

I suggest to the government that they had a grand opportunity to take this matter of freight rates out of politics.

Mr. HOWARD C. GREEN (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, the hour is growing late; but in view of the fact that the subamendment moved by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) was seconded by myself, I should like to say a few words this evening. It contains two paragraphs, and I shall deal first with the second, which reads:

> Further regrets that the government has refused the reasonable request of seven provinces that the imposition of increased freight rates recently authorized by the board of transport commissioners be delayed for thirty days until they could be heard.

As hon. members know, the judgment of the board was delivered on March 30. Almost at once the premiers of seven provinces of Canada wired or wrote in to Ottawa requesting that it be suspended for at least thirty days. For the life of me I cannot understand why that request was refused. These were the premiers of the seven provinces that had co-operated with the government by entering into agreements within the last year or eighteen months. There was the Premier of British Columbia, my native province, and the Premiers of Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia.

These were responsible men, men who were far closer to the people living in those provinces than the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) or any dominion cabinet minister. They were men of all political shades. The Premier of British Columbia represented a coalition government of Liberals and Conservatives. The Premier of Alberta represented a Social Credit government. The Premier of Saskatchewan represented a C.C.F. government. The Premier of Manitoba represented a coalition government of Liberals, Conservatives and Social Crediters. The premiers of the three maritime provinces represented Liberal governments. I wonder that the government failed to heed the reasonable request of those seven premiers. In my opinion that was shabby treatment; treatment which should be condemned in no uncertain way by the members of this house. Therefore I approve strongly the wording of the second paragraph of the subamendment. The first paragraph reads as follows:

> Regrets the government's failure to secure the removal of inequalities and discriminations in the Canadian railway freight rates structure before the imposition of a horizontal increase of twenty-one per cent—an increase which is bound to intensify the aforesaid inequalities and discriminations.

Hon. members will notice that the essence of that paragraph is the reference to inequalities and discriminations. No one can deny that such existed before the judgment of this board was handed down, and no one can deny that they have been intensified by the judgment of the board. It seems to me that the question of these inequalities and discriminations is vitally bound up in the whole freight rate situation; yet it is being cavalierly brushed aside by the Minister of Transport and those who have spoken in support of the government's stand.

I shall not attempt this evening to deal with the position in any other province than my own province of British Columbia. There our problem, and our complaint, for decades has been the mountain differential. It was explained neatly in the judgment of the British Columbia member of the board of transport commissioners, Mr. MacPherson, at page 84 of the board's judgment, and I propose to quote from Mr. MacPherson's explanation. He says:

> During the progress of the hearing it was pointed out by counsel for the provinces on many occasions that in Canada we have different grades or steps in the freight rate structure, viz. . . .

[Mr. Green.]

By the way, the Minister of Transport made the same explanation this afternoon. The commissioner went on to enumerate the types of rates:

> The maritime rates (in preferred territory).

As I understand it, those are rates reduced by 20 per cent by reason of the Maritime Freight Rates Act. Next:

> The competitive rates of Ontario and Quebec.

Which rates apparently are higher than the maritime rates. Next:

> The prairie rates for Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta.

Which in turn are higher than the rates in Ontario and Quebec. The Minister of Transport will perhaps correct me if I am wrong in any of my statements. Next:

> The mountain scale or Pacific scale of rates.

These are higher again than the prairie rates. In other words, they are the highest of all four rates. They apply only to freight moving through the province of British Columbia.

Mr. CHEVRIER: May I interrupt the hon. gentleman at that point? Did not the commissioner whose judgment he now cites agree with the judgment of the chief commissioner?

Mr. GREEN: I am at the moment citing only that portion of Mr. MacPherson's judgment which explains the four different types of rates in Canada.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Did he not agree with the judgment of the chief commissioner?

Mr. GREEN: Yes, he did agree, with the reservation which I am going to quote in a few minutes about the mountain differential. In effect this higher rate for freight in British Columbia means that we are being penalized for living in the mountains. It is very fine to live in the mountains. I would not want to live anywhere else. I was born there and it is where I like to live. But we should not be penalized right down through all the history of Canada. There is certainly no justification for a penalty of that type. What we really are being penalized for is that we live so far removed from Ottawa. We are in the province farthest away from the capital. We have always had a comparatively small number of members and we have not yet been able to get this mountain differential wiped out.

I cannot say too strongly that that mountain differential is unfair. It is opposed by everyone in the province of British Columbia and has been ever since I can remember, running back for many years. The reason used in support of it seems to have been that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had heavy expenses in running their trains through the Kicking Horse pass, through that particularly mountainous portion of our province. But over thirty years ago one of the predecessors of the present Canadian National Railways was hauling its freight from Alberta to the coast through the Yellowhead pass, and, as the minister knows, the line goes through on a grade which is lower than the grade on the prairies. That in itself should have been sufficient to wipe out the mountain differential, but in spite of that fact we are still being penalized. Surely the whole basis of decision with regard to these higher rates should be that there is competition. We should have a rate that would meet the requirements of the Canadian National Railways. There is no reason why we should not get the benefit from the fact that its line of railway has gone through the mountains on such a good grade. Either the rates are being kept up to protect the Canadian Pacific Railway Company at the expense of the people of British Columbia, or the Canadian National Railways is getting rates to which it is not entitled. I suggest that the only fair basis would be to give us the benefit of the fact that the Canadian National Railways has that lower grade.

I doubt also whether the Canadian Pacific Railway Company under present operating conditions is incurring more expense than it is incurring in running, for example, through the rocky country of northern Ontario. I believe that neither railway has ever been able to prove in the hearings before the board that it did cost them more to operate in British Columbia than in other portions of Canada.

The attitude of the British Columbia government in connection with the recent hearing was very reasonable. I must say I was amazed this evening to hear the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. Sinclair) try to place all the blame on the British Columbia government. I was amazed to hear a member of our province make an attempt of that kind. He did not do the British Columbia government justice at all. When their counsel appeared before the board, this was the stand taken; members will find it at page 57 of the judgment; the chief commissioner is citing the stand taken by British Columbia counsel, which was:

> We say there should be no increase in rates while the present inequality under which our people have been suffering remains.

That was the stand taken by Mr. Locke, who has since been made a justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, and was one of the most distinguished counsel in Canada. That was the stand taken by him on the opening of the inquiry eighteen months ago.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Will the hon. gentleman read the following sentence?

Mr. GREEN: I am quoting from the chief commissioner's statement. The next sentence is:

> Removal of the mountain differential is something which must be brought up by a substantive application which, when our preparations are complete, I propose to launch.

The province of British Columbia was asking that there be no increase in rates until the question of discrimination had been dealt with, and that has been their position throughout, but it was misrepresented this evening by the hon. member for Vancouver North.

British Columbia is hit harder than any other province by this increase in freight rates. That is shown by Mr. MacPherson. I refer again to his judgment, where at page 84 he says:

> The maritime rates which are covered by the statute, viz., the Maritime Freight Rates Act, carry a twenty per cent discount on all freight moving within the maritimes and as far west as Levis, P.Q., and also cover freight consigned west of Levis originating in the preferred territory.
>
> In Ontario and Quebec, competitive rates are governed by water and truck competition, the latter being uncontrollable, resulting in some very low competitive rates.
>
> The prairie provinces get the benefits of the Crowsnest pass grain rates and also truck competitive rates, this last to a degree. However, these truck rates are controlled by provincial highway boards and cannot be considered to be competitive to the same degree as the truck rates of Ontario and Quebec.
>
> This is also true in British Columbia where the provincial public utilities board controls truck rates in certain areas.

Finally the paragraph I wish to emphasize:

> Then lastly, there is the mountain or Pacific scale, which is commonly referred to as mountain differential, whereby one and one-quarter prairie miles equal one mile in Pacific territory for rate purposes. I am of the opinion that this situation, which amounts to an increase of 16 per cent over the prairie scale of rates, should be again reviewed at the earliest possible date.

I repeat that our province has been hit harder than any other province by this increase. You see, Mr. Speaker, railway rates are of vital importance to us because we are in the most remote province of Canada. Our goods, both those which are sold and those which are bought, have to come farther by rail in most cases than the goods of any other province. The proportion of our costs which is made up of freight rates is higher than in any other province. We are also in this position. Our province has been growing in population. We have had many thousands of splendid citizens come out from the prairie provinces, and many of the young men who served in British Columbia during the war have moved out there since the termination of hostilities. This means that there must be many more jobs found in our province than in any other province at the present time. Yet our industries are handicapped by this heavy freight rate. It has been a drag on them from the time when the railway was first put through to the coast. Some of the industries are particularly hard hit. The Okanagan valley is our great fruit producing district. From there fruit is shipped to all parts of Canada, and also to the United States. Some is shipped to the coastal ports for export overseas. All the fruit that is moved out of that valley must go by rail, and we find a great protest coming from that Okanagan valley as a result of the increase. I hold in my hand a press dispatch of just a few days ago headed, "Okanagan Freight up $1 Million". This is from Kelowna and reads in part:

The 21 per cent rail freight boost may cost B.C.'s fruit industry $1,000,000 a year.

The estimate was made today by A. K. Lloyd, president and general manager of B.C. Tree-Fruits Ltd.

He foresaw a jump of 11 cents in the cost of shipping a box of apples or pears to main western markets. Charges for peaches, plums and prunes probably would go up five cents a box, he thought.

Said Mr. Lloyd:

"While at first sight the freight rate boost appears an additional burden for the consumer, it does not always work out that way.

When the laid-down value of produce exceeds a certain limit, the producer begins to feel the lag. He may have to take some of the squeeze in order to continue the free movement.

It comes down to a question of supply and demand, and too often additional freight rates reflect a reduction in the net amount to the producer."

Last summer the B.C. Fruit Growers' Association presented a brief to the board of transport commissioners, and a very reasonable brief it was, dealing with the effect of an increase in freight rates on their industry. They pointed out that, because of the loss of a market overseas, they were having to ship a far larger proportion of their fruit than ever before to Canada and to the United States, all of which involved freight rates. In the brief we find this paragraph:

Because of our geographical location and our great distance from large centres of population, the railways have secured, and continue to secure, long haul freight charges on practically every pound of fruit we produce. They also secure large revenues on practically all the supplies required by growers to produce the crop, such as fertilizers, insecticides, machinery, paper wraps, nails, pads, labels, strapping wire, salt, etc. We know of no other industry in Canada or United States from which the railways secure such a large share of the consumer's dollar. On a substantial portion of Ontario, Quebec and maritimes fruit the carriers receive no revenue whatever, and in the eastern and U.K. market we must compete with those provinces.

They point out that:

An increase of transportation costs is almost certain to result in decreased, instead of increased revenues to the carriers as our lower grades cannot, on a buyers' market (or heavy crop year) carry the burden of transportation costs, and they will, therefore, be left on the trees, or sent to processing plants.

I believe the situation is somewhat the same in the fishing industry. A large proportion of our fishery production has to be sent by rail east of the Rockies and the increase in rates will handicap that industry in a serious way.

This increase, with the mountain differential on which the increase is imposed, will hold up our development in the province. I hold in my hand an editorial from the Vancouver Sun, which is a supporter of the government. It is dated March 31, less than two weeks ago. The heading is: "Worse Than Ever." We find this paragraph at the end of the editorial:

The mountain differential is an artificial barrier to British Columbia's industrial expansion. By heightening the barrier, the transport board has heightened British Columbia's determination to smash it down entirely.

As the minister must know, the feeling in British Columbia about this mountain differential goes very deep. What is the remedy proposed? In his remarks this afternoon the minister said words to the effect that now that the whole question was to be reviewed by the board of transport commissioners, they might find that the mountain differential should be dropped. He admitted that the chairman had told him that the hearings would take from six months to a year. My own opinion is that they are more likely to take from one year to two years, because there will be representations heard from all over the country. In any event, they will take a very long time.

Like some of the members on the minister's own side, such as the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid), I am doubtful of the results when the next judgment of the board is handed down. My own belief is that the question of the mountain differential will never be settled without government action. We have had this rate structure in Canada for many years. Part of it is the mountain differential, and the board of transport commissioners is very unlikely to do away with that. Judging by their actions in the past, I think it is very doubtful that they will take the step. The minister himself admitted that we have now vastly changed economic conditions. That is certainly true of British Columbia, and I suggest that there must be legislation brought in abolishing this mountain differential.

Here you have a clear-cut case for legislation by this parliament. There was legislation to set up the Crowsnest Pass agreement. That legislation met a situation which could be met only by parliament. There was also legislation to provide for the 20 per cent subsidy in the maritimes, and I am not questioning for a moment the wisdom of giving that subsidy, but I point out that the situation had to be met by legislation. The government has recognized these facts because, in the order in council of April 7, P.C. 1487, in which it directed that the board of transport commissioners review the whole freight rate structure, there appears the following:

> The committee, accordingly, advise that the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada be directed to undertake a general freight rates investigation along the lines indicated in the preceding paragraph, subject—

And this is the provision to which I draw attention particularly:

> —to such special statutory provisions as affect freight rates.

The cabinet itself, in drawing up this order in council, has recognized that there are certain conditions which must be met by legislation. I submit that the mountain differential is another such situation and one which can be met only by legislation.

In British Columbia we are not asking for a rate that is lower than that given anyone else. We are asking that our rate be dropped to the level of the others. Surely there is nothing unfair in that request. I cannot for the life of me understand why we should be singled out for the doubtful honour of paying the highest rates of any group of Canadians. It just does not make sense, nor does it make for unity in this nation.

The party of which I am a member stands for removing the mountain differential. My leader, speaking this afternoon, said that the mountain differential had to be removed. We believe that it must be removed by legislation, and we propose, Mr. Speaker, to see that it is removed.

On motion of Mr. Isnor the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. GRAYDON: May I ask the acting leader of the government what the business will be tomorrow.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Tomorrow the government would like to proceed with the motion, appearing under government notices of motions, in my name, to set up the committee on railways and shipping. That should not take very long. Next we should like to continue with this debate on the motion to go into supply and the amendment of the leader of the C.C.F. and the subamendment of the leader of the opposition. If this is disposed of, then the motion to set up the committee on human rights and fundamental freedoms, and legislation on other matters already announced but not yet disposed of.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, April 14, 1948

The house met at three o'clock.

THE DEPUTY CHAIRMAN

EXPRESSIONS OF FELICITATIONS ON THE OCCASION OF HIS BIRTHDAY

Mr. NORMAN J. M. LOCKHART (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to a matter of privilege affecting one member of the House of Commons in particular, and for that purpose I crave your indulgence for a few moments.

A person is usually known by the company he keeps. May I be permitted to refer to an item which appeared in the Montreal Gazette of yesterday, April 13, and which concerns in particular the hon. member to whom I have referred. The names of the three illustrious persons mentioned in the Gazette were His Excellency the Earl of Athlone, the former Governor General of Canada; the Honourable Walter Jones, Premier of Prince Edward Island, and—no less important than the other two—none other than our genial vice-chairman of the committee of the whole, the hon. member for Huron-Perth (Mr. Golding). These three names are linked together, and rightly so.

It was reported in the Gazette that these illustrious persons are today passing another milestone in their journey through life. Before stating my question of privilege I consulted the Parliamentary Guide and found to my amazement that our genial friend from Huron-Perth has inadvertently omitted from that record the date of his birth. I traced his career to earlier days and I found that April 14 was his natal day.

I express my appreciation, sir, of your indulgence in allowing me to discuss the matter at this time. What I am saying was prompted particularly by consultation with the hon. member for Kingston City (Mr. Kidd), whom, I might say, very little passes. I feel sure that every hon. member in the chamber will join with the hon. member for Kingston City and me in conveying to our genial friend the felicitations of all members of the House of Commons, and that all will join with us in wishing him many happy returns on this his natal day, and many more years of preference and distinction.

STANDING COMMITTEES

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS—CHANGE IN PERSONNEL

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport) moved:

That the name of Mr. Skey be substituted for that of Mr. Homuth on the select standing committee on industrial relations.

Motion agreed to.

STANDING ORDERS—CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT

Mr. J. S. SINNOTT (Springfield) moved that the first report of the standing committee on standing orders presented on April 12 be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS—CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT

Mr. PAUL E. COTE (Verdun) presented the first report of the standing committee on industrial relations, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

BANKING AND COMMERCE—CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT

Mr. HUGHES CLEAVER (Halton) presented the third report of the standing committee on banking and commerce, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Mr. J. H. HARRIS (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, before the motion is carried I should like to make an observation. For a quarter of a century the banking and commerce committee has been convened in an orderly way so that members of the committee would find it convenient to be present when the committee was called. My reason for rising at this time is to say that in the mail box of members of the committee there was found, some time after the hour of ten o'clock in the morning, a notice saying that the banking and commerce committee would meet, while the house was in session, at 8.30 that day.

Those who open their mail boxes before ten o'clock in the morning and not again until later in the evening find themselves bereft of the information that this long-established committee on banking and commerce, which meets ordinarily when the house is in session, is to be convened on that day. As a member of this house I am of opinion that there is ample time and ample opportunity for those who order the convening of the committee to give notice of it in the ordinary way so that the itinerary for our march during the day may be so arranged that we shall be able to attend its meetings.

Yesterday through no fault of his the member for Danforth innocently stood to one side while the committee on banking and commerce was being convened, and in his innocent sort of way he knew not thereof. This committee has been functioning since confederation, and with so much time now being available for our meetings, a notice given after 10 o'clock in the morning that we shall meet at 8.30 o'clock that day while the house is sitting is not sufficient for the old-fashioned representatives who still sit in this honourable assembly.

Motion agreed to.

REPORTS AND PAPERS

ANNUAL REPORT OF DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I desire to lay on the table the English edition of the annual report of the Department of Transport for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1947. The French edition will be tabled as soon as it is received from the king's printer.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

TABLING OF BUDGET

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table the budget of the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships Limited for the calendar year 1948.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

FREIGHT RATES INQUIRY—COUNSEL

Mr. DIEFENBAKER:

1. What is the total cost incurred in connection with the sittings of the Board of Transport Commissioners on the application by the railway companies for an increase in freight rates?

2. Who were the counsel appointed by the dominion government to appear at the hearing and how much was paid to each of said counsel for (a) fees; (b) living or other expenses; (c) other disbursements?

3. What was the per diem fee paid or agreed to be paid to each of said counsel?

[Mr. Harris (Danforth).]

Mr. CHEVRIER:

1. $20,034.32.

2. No counsel were appointed by the dominion government.

3. See answer to no. 2.

DOMINION GRAIN INSPECTORS

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North):

What has been the average increase in salary allotted to the dominion grain inspectors between December, 1939 and December, 1947, by the following grades: grain samplers, grain inspection assistants, grain inspectors grade 1, grain inspectors grade 2, grain inspectors grade 3?

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West):

Average increase in salary between December 1939 and December 1947: Grain sampler, $471; Grain inspection assistant, $408; Grain inspector, grade 1, $360; Grain inspector, grade 2, $345; Grain inspector, grade 3, $660.

Grain inspectors, grade 1 or grade 2 in charge of elevators, increase of extra pay from $10 per month to $20 per month.

Increase in hourly overtime rates of pay: Grain sampler, 75 cents per hour 1939 to $1 per hour, present; Grain inspection assistant, 85 cents per hour 1939 to $1 per hour, present; Grain inspector, grade 1, $1 per hour 1939 to $1.30 per hour, present; Grain inspector, grade 2, $1 per hour 1939 to $1.50 per hour, present.

CHILD AND MATERNAL HEALTH

Mr. HARRIS (Grey-Bruce):

What is the Department of National Health and Welfare doing in an educational way regarding child and maternal health in Canada?

Mr. MARTIN: The department has produced within the last year a series of films and filmstrips which are available to the provincial departments of health, health units, women's organizations and similar groups and devoted to pre-natal and post-natal aspects of child and maternal care. Most important of these is a film entitled "Mother and Her Child" which has been produced in English and French and is in colour. Another is entitled "Know Your Baby", also in colour. Two filmstrips are entitled "Nine to Get Ready" and "Introducing Baby".

The seventh reprint edition of the book "The Canadian Mother and Child" is now being printed and will as usual be made available to provincial departments of health for free distribution to expectant mothers and others interested in child care. It is expected that within the next few months the distribution of this book, since it was originally written by the chief of the child and maternal health division of the Department of National Health and Welfare, will pass the one million mark.

Additionally an attractive folder entitled "Ten Points to Remember" is now being prepared by the information services division. This is intended as a complementary piece of literature to the films mentioned above and will be made available to the public when such films or filmstrips are being shown to women's audiences.

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—INVESTIGATION OR CASE WORK

Mr. JAENICKE:

With what provinces has the Department of National Health and Welfare made arrangements to do investigation work or case work on behalf of the Department of National Health and Welfare in respect of recipients of the family allowance?

Mr. MARTIN: Nova Scotia, Ontario, Manitoba, British Columbia.

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—PAYMENTS TO OTHER PERSONS OR AGENCIES

Mr. MARQUIS:

In how many instances has it been necessary to make family allowances payable to another person or agency under section 5 of the Family Allowances Act?

Mr. MARTIN: As at February 29, 1948, a total of 238 cases, of which 154 are being administered by social agencies and 84 by individuals.

*MEETINGS WITH REPRESENTATIVES OF RUSSIA AND OTHER COUNTRIES

Mr. GAGNON:

1. Since entering upon his duties as Secretary of State for External Affairs, has the Right Honourable Louis St. Laurent met (a) official representatives of the government of Soviet Russia; (b) official representatives of countries other than Russia?

2. If so, (a) when, where, for what reason and who were the said representatives, in each case; (b) what was the result of the conversations held, in each case?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I should like to answer this question orally. First, with respect to representatives of governments other than Russia, the answer to that question is yes. In answer to the second question I should like to say that it is not in accordance with diplomatic practice nor in the national interest to disclose the nature of official conversations with representatives of other countries.

With respect to the representatives of Soviet Russia, the answer will have to be somewhat qualified in order to be accurate. Since I assumed my duties as Secretary of State for External Affairs there has been no occasion for official conversations between representatives of Soviet Russia and the Secretary of State for External Affairs. As hon. members know, the post of ambassador from Russia to this government has not been filled, and such conversations as there may have been would be conversations between the chargé d'affaires or members of his staff and members of the permanent staff of the department.

On the other hand it would not be accurate to say that I had not met any representatives of the Russian government. No doubt I participated in meetings of the united nations where there were representatives of that government, and I have no doubt it did happen that I attended social functions where they were also present. Those were the only times when I had occasion to meet them since I assumed the duties of my office.

CIVIL SERVICE—HEALTH DIVISION

Mr. LANGLOIS:

What are, at present, the specific activities or functions of the civil service health division?

Mr. MARTIN:

1. To examine new employees upon employment or upon application for permanency and at other specified times as circumstances dictate.

2. To examine employees upon reassignment of duties, change of position or promotion demanding review of physical requirements.

3. To examine employees upon their own request or upon the request of their supervising officer.

4. To examine employees where the physical requirements of the job in relation to the duties involved are in need of assessment.

5. To conduct studies and make reports on the health of civil servants.

6. To protect civil servants from contracting and spreading disease.

7. To study hazards associated with the nature of the employment and adopt measures for their control.

8. To discover and instruct employees in overcoming physical defects and defective health habits, especially those of a remedial type by individual and group health education.

9. To enlist the services of private practitioners and specialists for the detection of physical or mental defects.

10. To provide emergency and first-aid service for minor disorders and injuries.

11. To furnish medical guidance and advice to all departments of government on matters relating to the health and welfare of civil servants. This includes job placement, ventilation, lighting, heating, accommodation, and other factors associated with environmental sanitation.

12. To assist in the interpretation of medical reports when such interpretation becomes a factor in administrative procedure.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

FILM BOARD—MOTION PICTURE PROJECTORS

Mr. FRASER:

1. How many motion picture projectors are owned by the national film board?

2. What is the size and value of each make, and are they new or used?

3. How many of each kind of projector are there in each of the national film board offices and are these projectors loaned to other joint or individual film councils?

Mr. WINTERS: Return tabled.

FISHING REGULATIONS—ALBERTA WATERS

Mr. HANSELL:

What are the rivers and lakes in the province of Alberta which come within dominion government fishing regulations?

Mr. GIBSON (Hamilton West): Return tabled.

NATIONAL REVENUE—INCOME AND OTHER TAXES

Mr. HEON:

1. What provinces of Canada have refrained during the fiscal year ending March 31, 1948, from levying (a) personal income taxes; (b) corporation income taxes; (c) corporation taxes; (d) succession duties (as defined in agreements made between the dominion government and the governments of certain provinces under the provisions of the Dominion-Provincial Tax Rental Agreements Act, 1947)?

2. What revenue has the government of Canada collected in each of such provinces during said fiscal year from (a) personal income taxes; (b) corporation income taxes; (c) corporation taxes; (d) succession duties?

3. What is the amount of the total compensation paid and/or payable for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1948, to each of such provinces under agreements made pursuant to the said act?

MILK BOTTLE FILLING MACHINES

Mr. WINKLER:

1. Are milk bottle filling machines ranging in capacity from 12 or 15 quart bottles per minute, to 120 quarts, made in Canada?

2. Is there a customs tariff on all of these sizes of machines being imported into Canada? If not, on what sizes is there none?

[Mr. Martin.]

U.S. CURRENCY PAID FOR GOODS OR ASSETS IN CANADA—ALASKA HIGHWAY

Mr. JACKMAN:

How much United States currency or gold was paid to the United States government or its agencies for goods or assets located in Canada, including that part of the Alaska highway within Canada, and purchased by the government of Canada since December 31, 1945, specifying all items costing over $1,000,000?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

LOAN FROM EXPORT-IMPORT BANK

Mr. JACKMAN:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the Department of Finance and any other departments of the government and the Export-Import Bank of the United States regarding the negotiation, application, granting and acceptance of a loan from that bank to the Dominion of Canada.

COMMODITY PRICES STABILIZATION CORPORATION—MARINE INSURANCE

Mr. FLEMING:

For a copy of all correspondence exchanged between Commodity Prices Stabilization Corporation and Dale and Company of Montreal, concerning marine insurance and the premiums thereon, and the placing of such insurance, in respect of import shipments for the account of Commodity Prices Stabilization Corporation?

BRIDGE ACROSS SOUTH SASKATCHEWAN RIVER AT SASKATCHEWAN LANDING

Mr. BENTLEY:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and text of telephone conversations exchanged between the government of Saskatchewan, its officials and employees, and the federal government and its officials and employees, from January 1, 1948, to date, regarding the request of the Saskatchewan government for permission to build a bridge across the South Saskatchewan river at Saskatchewan Landing.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Mr. Speaker, the government has no objection to the passing of this resolution, with the usual reservation that the government of Saskatchewan be consulted, and if they do not object we shall table the return.

Mr. SPEAKER: Carried, with the reservation made by the minister.

RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING

APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEE ON ACCOUNTS AND ESTIMATES OF GOVERNMENT OWNED TRANSPORTATION LINES

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport) moved:

That a sessional committee on railways and shipping, owned, operated and controlled by the government be appointed to consider the accounts and estimates and bills relating thereto of the Canadian National Railways, the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships, and Trans-Canada Air Lines, saving always the powers of the committee of supply in relation to the voting of public moneys; and that the said committee be empowered to send for persons, papers and records and to report from time to time, and that notwithstanding standing order 65, in relation to the limitation of the number of members, the said committee consist of Messrs: Bourget, Chevrier, Clark, Emmerson, Fulton, Gibson (Comox-Alberni), Hatfield, Hazen, Hlynka, Jackman, LaCroix, Lafontaine, Lockhart, Maybank, McCulloch (Pictou), McLure, Moore, Mutch, Nicholson, Picard, Pouliot, Reid, Warren.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is the usual annual motion to set up the committee on railways and shipping which deals with the affairs of the Canadian National Railways and Trans-Canada Air Lines, and to which is referred the annual reports of the Canadian National Railways, the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships, and Trans-Canada Air Lines. The motion is in exactly the same form as that establishing the committee last year.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I would have thought that the minister would not have brought in this motion until after the amendment moved by the leader of the C.C.F. party to the motion for supply had been disposed of. It has been thirty years since we have had a revision of the Railway Act, the last revision being in 1919. There have been vast changes since then. There have been very few results, so far as I have observed, from the setting up of this committee each year. The accounts are referred to the committee, which makes a report but concurrence in the report is not moved, and that is the last we hear of it. It means that the House of Commons is simply divesting itself of all control over the Canadian National Railways and its ocean, hotel and lake services. If you ask me, we have got very little value from this committee, and certainly this motion should have stood until the amendment of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) had been disposed of.

I do not believe in the setting up of this committee at all. It is not the proper way in which to conduct the business of the house. Here is the annual report of the Canadian National Railways, in a booklet with these flowery pictures on the covers, and it shows a deficit of $23,000,000 on last year's operations. Who is going to pay that deficit? It is charged very largely to consolidated revenue fund, which means that the two central provinces of Ontario and Quebec are paying 74 per cent of all these deficits. We have no control over rates or over the money the railways are spending on the system, on hotels, on ocean services and subsidiaries. Thirty years ago the province of Prince Edward Island sent up an old boat, the Northumberland, to be used on lake Ontario by the Canadian National subsidiary, but on two occasions the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol) instead of going with his picnic to Port Dalhousie on such a boat as that, went in safety to Centre Island.

I can tell you this: too much is charged up to capital expenditures on the system which should be charged against earnings. Furthermore the refunding system is all wrong. Talk about subsidiaries; we cannot get a steam suburban service in the Toronto district, although Montreal has had one for thirty years. The headquarters of this national railways should be moved back to the public-ownership city where it started with the old Grand Trunk, in Toronto, and made all its money. They scrapped the old Grand Trunk in Ontario and used the funds to build the Grand Trunk Pacific from Moncton to Winnipeg.

I am opposed to the principle of this motion, for the reasons I have given. The capital structure is all wrong. The forgotten people are the taxpayers of Ontario and Quebec, who have to make up these deficits. The committee might just as well never meet. The time has come to revise the whole set-up of this system. Handouts of passes should be abolished and the British system of paying cash for everybody adopted instead. The board of transport commissioners has not been consulted on these various reports. It is all done over their heads. The Drayton-Acworth report set out what should be done with this government-owned railway, and how to avoid deficits. There is too much interference. The committee might just as well never meet because it has done nothing but whitewashing ever since it started.

Motion agreed to.

BRITISH FOOD CONTRACTS

INQUIRY AS TO CONTINUANCE OF EXPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. O. WHITE (Middlesex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that the agreement covering financial arrangements between the United Kingdom and Canada ends today, what provision is the government making so that Canadian food exports will continue without interruption?

Right Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): The agreements do not end today, but on December 31 next. Arrangements were made last December covering down to December 31 next.

Mr. GORDON GRAYDON (Peel): Then what does the British Food Minister mean when he said that today was the day the agreements would terminate?

Mr. GARDINER: We have no such word here. I do not know what the newspaper reports from Britain may say, but we have had no indication to that effect. The agreements are continuing.

Mr. GRAYDON: That is not what Mr. Strachey said.

HOUSEWIVES CONSUMERS ASSOCIATION

QUESTION AS TO INTERVIEW WITH MEMBERS OF GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the government. Has it refused to grant an interview to representatives of the Housewives Consumers Association? If so, is the government aware that many of these ladies are members of all parties represented in this house and are not confined to any one particular group?

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): Perhaps I might answer that question, Mr. Speaker. Representatives of the Housewives Consumers Association have visited me on I think at least two occasions, perhaps three, and on each occasion some of my colleagues were present. I came to the conclusion, as they did, that the primary purpose of these delegations was to foster communist propaganda. I am quite aware, as my hon. friend the member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) has indicated, that a great many people who come with these delegations and form part of the association are not communists nor do they support communist propaganda. Nevertheless I came to the conclusion that that is what these delegations were being used for. One of the leading spokesmen in the last delegation who took an active part in the discussion was a well-known communist from the city of Toronto.

For these reasons the government felt it was not justified in facilitating movements of that kind. The advice that was given to these organizations was that the government would be prepared to consider any representations which they cared to make in writing, but was not prepared to facilitate mass demonstrations of this kind in Ottawa.

Mr. COLDWELL: May I ask a supplementary question? Is not the minister aware that refusal of requests of this kind will be used as communistic propaganda against the institution of parliament?

Mr. ABBOTT: I am quite aware of that. I and my colleagues have already seen this organization on three occasions. There have been large delegations each time. The third occasion was a repetition of the others; there was not a single new thing brought forward from what had been said on the other two occasions. I do not think it is the duty of myself, or of any of the ministers, to facilitate that sort of propaganda, and that is the reason why we refused them.

Mr. COLDWELL: That is what the refusal does.

Mr. ABBOTT: I will just add one thing, Mr. Speaker. I am glad that my hon. friend has brought this up, because it has enabled me to make this statement in parliament, and the people of the country can form their own conclusions.

COMMUNISM

VIMY DAY ADDRESS OF BRIGADIER MURPHY AT CALGARY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. S. HARKNESS (Calgary East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Has the minister, or any of the officers of his department, communicated with Brigadier Murphy of Vancouver in connection with the Vimy Day address he gave before the United Services Institute at Calgary on the subject of communism? If so, what was the nature of the communication, and why was it sent?

Hon. BROOKE CLAXTON (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I did not communicate with the brigadier and my office did not; and from inquiries that I have made so far I have been unable to find anyone of national defence headquarters who did.

(Translation):

POSTAL SERVICE

LACHUTE POST OFFICE AND LACHUTE MILLS POSTAL STATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GEORGES H. HÉON (Argenteuil): Mr. Speaker, before we take up the orders of the day, I would like to ask the Postmaster General (Mr. Bertrand) a question, notice of which I have sent him. Did the minister receive representations recently from the Lachute Board of Trade regarding the cost of postal service between the Lachute post office and the Lachute Mills postal station?

Hon. ERNEST BERTRAND (Postmaster General): In answer to the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, I shall ask the officers of the department to investigate and in a few days I shall, as my hon. friend has suggested, answer the Lachute Board of Trade directly.

(Text):

INCOME TAX

QUESTION AS TO PAYMENT OF 1942 REFUNDABLE PORTION OF COMPULSORY SAVINGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. CLARENCE GILLIS (Cape Breton South): May I be permitted to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue? Can the minister inform the house what percentage of those who were entitled to a return of their compulsory savings portion of income tax for the year 1942 did receive them by March 31, the deadline set by the government when all refunds would be made? Can the minister inform the house as to when his department expects to complete rebates on the refundable portion of the tax that still remains to be paid?

Hon. J. J. McCANN (Minister of National Revenue): The hon. member sent me notice of his question, for which I thank him. The answer is as follows.

There was a total of 1,100,000 cheques in all to go out for the refundable portion of 1942. Of that number, approximately 200,000 could not be mailed because the department did not have the addresses. In that particular, may I mention that an attempt was made through a questionnaire and through a card system to obtain the addresses of all persons to whom the refundable portion was payable in 1948. It might amaze the house to know that of the 1,100,000 that were sent out, our information was to the effect that over 400,000 people had changed their addresses, or their names, or both, since 1942. I might say that the cheques have been left in the hands of the district offices and have been going out slowly since the end of March. The department has no way of telling how rapidly they will go, but is using every effort to trace the taxpayers to whom they should be delivered, and as fast as addresses come forward, the cheques will be mailed out.

Mr. KNOWLES: May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of National Revenue, or perhaps it should be of the Minister of Finance, with respect to these compulsory savings? Reference has already been made to the 1942 savings portion repayment of which is now being made. Will consideration be given to making the remaining payments, that is, those for 1943 and 1944, in just one more bite instead of two?

Mr. McCANN: Under the present regulations, and I think the statute, the 1943 payment will be made in 1949 and the 1944 payment in 1950. Of course in the case of death, and an estate makes application for the refundable portion, it is paid; and in cases where persons who have a refundable portion coming to them, and are over sixty-five years of age and have an income of less than $5,000, the refundable portion is paid upon application.

Mr. KNOWLES: May I ask another supplementary question? Is it not true that the legislation sets the deadlines referred to by the minister, but that the governor in council can make payments sooner?

Mr. McCANN: The matter of combining the payments of 1949 and 1950 will be given consideration.

Mr. GRAYDON: That question should be directed over here, because we shall be looking after it then.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh!

MARSHLANDS

PROTECTION, DRAINAGE AND RECLAMATION IN NOVA SCOTIA AND NEW BRUNSWICK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. C. BLACK (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I wish to inquire of the Minister of Agriculture whether he is now in a position to announce, or when he will be able to announce, the policy of the federal government with respect to the protection, drainage and reclamation of the marshlands in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, as requested by the premiers and the ministers of agriculture for these provinces when they waited on the minister and the government on February 24 last?

Right Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): The government has made an arrangement with the two provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick as the result of a meeting which was held, under which for this year we are advancing certain moneys to each of these governments which form part of an expenditure under which the provinces, the farmers and this government are sharing in the reconditioning and repair of dikes of the marshlands. The plans for the permanent policy proposed have not yet been put into form. I rather expect that they will be considered very shortly and some decision reached with regard to them.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Agriculture? Will the same consideration be given in connection with dikes in the province of British Columbia that is given in the maritimes. If not, why not?

Mr. KNOWLES: There are two by-elections on out there.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I am asking the question.

Mr. GARDINER: We are carrying on operations in the Pemberton area of British Columbia on a similar basis.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: That is not the Fraser valley.

Mr. GARDINER: We are carrying on operations on a similar basis and for about the same amount as in the maritimes.

SUPPLY

FREIGHT RATES—INCREASES ORDERED BY TRANSPORT BOARD—AMENDMENT, MR. COLDWELL—SUBAMENDMENT, MR. BRACKEN

The house resumed from Tuesday, April 13, consideration of the motion of Mr. Abbott, for committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Coldwell, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Bracken.

Mr. GORDON B. ISNOR (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, on April 5 the hon member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) rose in his place and asked leave to move the adjournment of the house for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely, the proposed increases in freight rates authorized by the board of transport commissioners, which rates it is understood to be posted by the railroads concerned on April 8. Having received permission, the hon. member proceeded to present to the house a very reasonable and well thought out argument.

Mr. GRAYDON: Less noise in the house.

Mr. ISNOR: Thank you.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. ISNOR: Again I say, as I have said in the past, that the hon. member for Peel is always considerate, and apparently he is anxious to hear what I have to say. I appreciate his kind consideration.

I was saying that the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar proceeded to present a very reasonable and well thought out argument as to why he did not believe that the decision of the board of transport commissioners was one which would be well received in all sections in Canada. After he had presented his case he was followed by other members representing the different parties, and together with two other members from Nova Scotia I had an opportunity at that time of taking part in debate.

While I do not wish to go over the ground which was then covered, I do wish to refer to certain remarks I made on that occasion, because of the amendment by order in council which was later introduced by the Minister of Transport.

At that time I did not have the report of the Canadian National Railways, although I did point out that it was difficult for those residing in the maritime provinces to understand why a 30 per cent increase in freight rates was necessary, in view of the large increase in revenue in 1947 over 1946, particularly in connection with freight operations. Since then I have received a copy of the annual report of the Canadian National Railways, and it is shown that 78·2 per cent of the total revenue of the railway company was derived from freight rates. That 78·2 per cent in 1947 represented $342,582,002 as against $300,313,198 from the same source in 1946, an increase of $42,268,803 in the freight receipts. It was also shown in the report that there was a decrease in the passenger traffic, represented in dollars and cents, amounting to $7,110,000. I mention that figure because, in the summing up of the case by the board of transport commissioners in their finding, they took the whole operation into consideration.

I should like also to point out that there was an increase in the express rates. Whereas in 1946 the receipts for express were $19,579,478, in 1947 they had increased to $21,251,783, an increase for the year of $1,672,304. Therefore it was a little difficult at the time this decision was made for the man in the street to understand why this increase was granted.

It is true the application made by the two railways was for an increase of 30 per cent, and having received representations from the various provinces and parties throughout the dominion, they decided that 21 per cent was all that was necessary.

Representations were made from seven of the nine provinces. It was mentioned on one occasion, as something rather strange to those living in other parts of Canada than Ontario and Quebec, that these two provinces did not make representations. Well, I believe the other sections of Canada know the reason. These provinces were not greatly concerned with the application for increased rates; they had other methods of looking after their transportation problems.

The two central provinces are thickly populated; they are prosperous; they are industrialized to an extent attained by no other province in the dominion. Therefore they were not greatly concerned, and for that reason did not deem it necessary or advisable to argue against the increase, nor indeed to show the slightest interest in it.

I have said that they had other means of taking care of their transportation problem, and I have trucks particularly in mind. They have an organization, largely centred in Ontario, known as the Canadian Automotive Transportation Association, with 5,000 members and employing something like 70,000 persons. They are able therefore to transport goods in certain areas much more efficiently perhaps, and certainly in a manner which gives greater service to the user, than the railways, who depend to a large extent on their long hauls.

I say that Ontario and Quebec, with their population of roughly speaking 7,000,000 people as compared with 1,100,000 in the maritimes, found it hard to appreciate the significance of the increase brought into effect, particularly as Ontario and Quebec were served by this trucking association whose lines extend to every part of these two provinces, doing an exceptionally big business.

I am not criticizing the operations of this organization. They serve a good purpose and I believe in competition. But I repeat that it is because these highly industrialized areas have thickly populated centres that the organizations can operate to the extent that they do.

I noticed in a recent publication an illustration which brings home the points I have in mind, in a comparison between industries in the extreme east and those in the central provinces. I quote:

> You know that at Oshawa there is a huge plant manufacturing motor cars and trucks. The axles for these vehicles are made not in Oshawa but in St. Catharines. How do the axles produced on the St. Catharines assembly line flow smoothly into that main assembly line at Oshawa? Two hundred and forty axles a day have to be delivered. A highway transport company spent weeks working out this problem with officials of the two plants. Four specially designed tractor-trailers were assigned to the run, and a system of carefully scheduled deliveries was evolved. The result is that axles produced at St. Catharines today, Tuesday, will be components of the new cars and trucks rolling off that Oshawa assembly line some time tomorrow.

We find therefore that they are able to give service in Ontario such as we lack in the maritimes. And may I say that whereas this association has connections throughout the central provinces, extending westward, there are no such connections in the maritime provinces. They state definitely that they have no similar organization to carry on their activities in the maritimes.

So you see, Mr. Speaker, that we were concerned about this railway freight rate increase, because we felt that no matter what the increase might be, it would result in a heavier burden on our section of the country than would fall on the two previously mentioned industrial areas.

I pointed out, in my previous remarks on this subject, the background, the early days of the railway system. I referred to confederation, the manner in which Nova Scotia and the maritimes entered it, the undertaking to build the old Intercolonial railway system and to connect Nova Scotia by rail with the industrial areas of central Canada. The measures were designed also to increase the population of the two central provinces, which certainly has been the result, and to industrialize them; but at the same time they would provide a means whereby we should be able to ship our goods into those two large central provinces.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, it has not worked out in that way. It is a long haul from Halifax, we will say, to Toronto, as it is to Montreal and into the larger centres. Unfortunately, manufacturers in the maritimes must bring certain of their products all the way from these industrial centres down to the east coast, and then ship the goods in manufactured form back to the central provinces against keen competition. So I say we have been more or less labouring under a handicap ever since the days of confederation.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) and others may argue that this matter does not enter into the application as presented before the board of transport commissioners and that for this reason they were unable to deal with it. I raised that point when I spoke on April 5, and I am going to raise it again today because of the wording of the amended order in council placed before us by the Minister of Transport.

I contend that the reference limited the board of transport commissioners in their findings and deliberations. They dealt with the matter purely from the point of view of dollars and cents and did not take into consideration the spirit of confederation as outlined on many occasions, and as so well set forth by the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Winters) in his remarks on this subject yesterday. I feel that it is necessary, if we are to bring about a proper adjustment of freight rates, to deal with this subject not only from the point of view of dollars and cents, but also, and more particularly, from the point of view of the spirit of confederation, looking to the development of trade between one section of the country and another. If there is anything in the freight rate structure which is detrimental to any particular section, that structure should be overhauled and a remedy should be found if possible.

Let me read what I said on April 5 on this question, as reported at page 2641 of Hansard:

> From my point of view, what is important is the question of trade connections which must be maintained throughout all parts of Canada, and that is a matter which, I suggest to the minister, and through him to the cabinet, should be given serious consideration.

Later in my remarks, as reported in the next column of Hansard, I had something to say along the same lines:

> Therefore I say it might be possible for the board of transport commissioners or the government itself to consider whether the whole railway structure should not be revamped so as to bring it more in line with a service to the country such as that given by the postal department.

Again I had in mind the trade of our section of the country with central Canada.

The hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg also touched on maritime freight rates. If I may be permitted to touch on the reasons for what was done in that regard, I should like to do so just briefly. We were not given any preference at that time. It is true that the rate was readjusted and there was an allowance of 20 per cent made to us, but it was not any preference. It was simply a matter of adjustment. At that time, through a review, it was shown and clearly set forth that the index of operations on the old Intercolonial had risen over a period of years to 192—the index being 100, of course—thus showing a 92 point increase. The index in other sections of the country had increased to only 155, or a 55 point increase. So there was an increase there in the beginning that we must overcome. It was because of the endeavour to equalize the freight rates in all parts of Canada that we in the maritimes were granted an allowance of 20 per cent. Twenty per cent of 192 is 38, and that brings us down to 154 or one cent below the 155, which is no preference so far as we were concerned. We felt at that time that we were simply getting what was rightly ours, and today we are asking for the same consideration, the same attention, that we received on that occasion.

We do not think this 21 per cent increase will result in a horizontally equalized freight rate from one end of Canada to the other. Once again in some cases we shall suffer and be working under a handicap. So as I say, Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that the minister would enlarge the reference which he placed before this house two days later. He brought in a copy of an order in council which in its terms, while asking the board of transport commissioners to look into the over-all structure, did not go as far as I had hoped it would. The orders in council are described in Votes and Proceedings as follows:

> Order in council P.C. 1486, approved April 7, 1948: providing that certain tariff schedules authorized by order No. 70425 of the board of transport commissioners for Canada of March 30, 1948, be not interfered with.
>
> Order in council P.C. 1487, approved April 7, 1948: directing the board of transport commissioners for Canada to make a thorough investigation of the rates structure of railways and railway companies which are under the jurisdiction of parliament, with a view to the establishment of a fair and reasonable rates structure which will, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, be equal in its application to all persons and localities in the various provinces and territories of Canada . . .

When the Minister of Transport spoke yesterday, he did so in an exceptionally fine manner. He is outstanding in that respect, and it is only natural that we followed his remarks with a great deal of interest. In fact I believe the country will read and re-read what the Minister of Transport had to say because his speech contains a great deal of information. Not only did he give us a clear picture of the matters with which the board of transport commissioners have to deal, and the manner in which they must deal with them in making a decision in connection with an application for an increase in rates, but he gave us background material which was most helpful. Then he referred to the powers of the board of transport commissioners, and pointed out that the order was sufficiently wide to permit the board to approach the question from all angles.

I am not a lawyer. I am just an ordinary businessman, and certainly would not think of offering my opinion against that of so brilliant a lawyer as the minister. I cannot help believing, however, that there has been a slip in the wording of the minister's order. In some of the judgments the board takes the view that it cannot handle questions relating to trade. Let me place before the house one or two of those judgments. I do not know if I am proceeding in the proper manner in my presentation, but I am sure my legal friends will correct me if I am not doing it properly.

In the case of the application of the District Board of Trade of Coalhurst, Alberta, the finding is stated in these words:

> The board under the Railway Act has no profit and loss responsibilities, and its intervention in the matter of rates must, as has been indicated, be concerned with matters falling within the categories of reasonableness and unjust discrimination and not with a policy of the development of industries through rate adjustments.

So if we in the maritimes are to gain the point we have in mind, there is question in my mind as to whether the board can deal with the matter in the broad sense I have indicated.

Another quotation states:

> The board has no power to regulate tolls for purposes of equalizing costs of production or geographical or climatic or economic conditions.

That was the statement in connection with an application by the Imperial Rice Milling Company vs. the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, case No. 376.

Then there is one other, the British Columbia News Company vs. Express Traffic Association, which reads as follows:

> It is not the board's function, as delegated by parliament, to make rates to develop business but to deal with the reasonableness of rates, either on complaint or of its own motion.

Therefore I say one can understand why we in the maritimes and those in other sections of Canada are concerned as to whether the board of transport commissioners will be able to make its finding as full and as broad as we had hoped it would be in a position to make it.

Following the tabling of the order by the Minister of Transport, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) moved an amendment. I believe I was fair when I stated that the hon. member made a splendid presentation of the matter on April 5; I felt that on that occasion he was fair, and that he created a good impression throughout Canada. But when he introduced his amendment and was so definite in stating that it was a motion of want of confidence in the government, then I believe he undid all the good he had done. He showed clearly that he was trying to make merely a political manoeuvre, and I feel the hon. member did not do himself justice. Instead of its being a smart move, it rebounded and there has been considerable criticism.

Mr. KNOWLES: You mean he put you on the spot.

Mr. CHEVRIER: He thinks he did.

Mr. ISNOR: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) says it puts me on the spot. Well, I am glad to know that was the intention of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar—

Mr. KNOWLES: That was the result.

Mr. ISNOR: —in moving his amendment, because I had an idea that it was something like that. And if it is a question of putting me on the spot, then I do not hesitate to meet it.

Mr. KNOWLES: Will the hon. member permit a question? Does he recall that the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank) asked that someone present a definite motion on this matter, even though it was a motion of non-confidence?

Mr. ISNOR: I was referring to the motion made by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar.

Mr. KNOWLES: We made the motion we were asked to make from your side of the house.

Mr. ISNOR: Because of the wording of the amendment offered by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, and his emphasis on the fact that it was a motion of non-confidence—and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre now reaffirms that fact, and says it was done to put me on the spot—I would say that it was in the true sense a political move which is not in the best interests of the country and does not meet with the wishes or approval of those who, like myself, are sincere in regard to this matter of freight rates.

When that amendment was introduced it gave me a greater opportunity to study what the Minister of Transport had to say. I do not know whether it will take six months or a year to find out what we want to find out. But we do know that so far as the decision of the board of transport commissioners is concerned—and I am prepared to accept the words of the Minister of Transport on this point—there was nothing else that the board could do, so far as their reference was concerned. It was simply an application made by the two railway companies of Canada for an increase in freight rates. The board gave consideration to that application and made its finding. That is final. Now, in an effort to assist the east and west, shall I say, the Minister of Transport has broadened his reference and taken a step which I trust will help my section of the country to readjust matters so that we may be in a better position to compete with industry in central Canada.

I was hoping the minister would have made his reference even broader. I hold in my hand the report of the royal commission on maritime claims, which contains a letter written by the then prime minister to Sir Andrew Rae Duncan, the chairman of that commission. The other members were Hon. W. B. Wallace and Professor Cyrus Macmillan. This letter, dated April 17, 1926, states:

To the Chairman and Members of the Maritimes Royal Commission:

Gentlemen:

The government of Canada is asking you to undertake a task of national importance in inquiring into maritime province grievances. The scope of the inquiry is indicated in the order in council constituting the commission. My colleagues and I desire to emphasize our conviction that the commission should not interpret its instructions or its duties in any narrow or technical sense, but should take every opportunity for the fullest and frankest discussion of the economic difficulties facing this part of the dominion, the endeavours which have been made to overcome them, the causes of any shortcoming in these endeavours, and the most effective and practicable remedies.

The question is not a new one. What is necessary now is to focus the discussion into a practicable program, to take stock of what has been done, of what has been left undone, and of what still may be done.

Then the prime minister of that day went on to refer to our railway problem, the closing paragraph of his letter reading as follows:

I am sure that I am speaking for the people of Canada as a whole when I say that it is our earnest desire that the impartial and thorough inquiry which we anticipate will be made will result in clearing away any misunderstanding or lack of appreciation of one another's problems, and will assist in working out constructive policies for the continued development of the maritime provinces and the welfare of all parts of our common country.

That was signed by the Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, who was then the Prime Minister of Canada. I say to the Minister of Transport that I had hoped he would have found it possible to enlarge his reference to include the spirit indicated in that letter of the Prime Minister in 1926. I am still hopeful that the minister will show his interest —I know he has done so already—by allowing this matter to be discussed in the broadest way so that the board of transport commissioners will have the feeling of hon. members from various sections of Canada.

I do not know that they can bring in a satisfactory finding with the present reference. I state again that I am not a legal authority. But there is a difference of opinion. I do feel that the minister has taken a step toward what we have in mind when we ask that the whole railway structure be revamped in the far as it applies to the maritimes will be carried out.

I feel that much good has been done by this discussion. I think the country has a greater understanding of the problems of our railway systems and will appreciate what they are endeavouring to do in the way of providing proper transportation facilities.

As I mentioned in my remarks on April 5, I appreciate, and I think every hon. member who has had any training in business appreciates—I believe the manufacturers, even though they are called upon to pay increased freight rates, recognize this—that you cannot operate a system or any type of business without the necessary revenue. I did not have the report of the Canadian National Railways when I spoke previously, but today I have before me details of the increased cost of the various items which are necessary to carry on a railway system. It is shown clearly that increased revenue must be obtained if they are to get away from the continuing deficits which they had in pre-war days and which they are again showing to the extent of $15,000,000 for the current year.

I am doubtful whether the board of transport commissioners were justified in confining their inquiry to freight rates, which represent 78·2 per cent of the revenue. There is a question whether they should not have considered the over-all picture of the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian National and made a finding on that basis. If they had, I feel sure that the increase would not have been as large as seemed necessary when they were dealing only with one branch of the operations, namely, the freight structure.

I do not apologize for having spoken the second time on this question. I felt it was necessary to do so in view of the additional information supplied to us yesterday by the Minister of Transport in his splendid presentation of the freight rates case. I do not hesitate to stand here in my place or face my people. They know how I stand in regard to maritime rights. They know my interest in Nova Scotia. They know that my whole interests are tied up in the development of that particular section of the country. I do not hesitate to stand here today and say that I will not vote for an amendment which is really a vote of no confidence in the government.

Mr. GREEN: We did not expect you to.

Mr. ISNOR: The hon. member for Vancouver South says that he did not expect me to. That is the political attitude the hon. member always shows. He is a fine chap outside the house but when he comes into the house he immediately adopts a political bias which it is hard for me to understand. I would not have dared to say this if the hon. member had not brought it on himself. I say to him in a most kindly way that I am just as sincere in working for Nova Scotia as he is in working for the interests of Vancouver and British Columbia.

It is because of that and the good government which we have had, it is because assistance has been given to Nova Scotia and the maritimes on more than one occasion, that I am not going to vote in favour of a no-confidence motion moved by the leader of the C.C.F. or by any other member of that group.

Mr. A. J. BROOKS (Royal): Mr. Speaker, we have listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the senior hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Isnor). I agree with much of what he said. First, I agree with his statement that the board in its report did not deal with the subject from the point of view of the spirit of confederation but rather more from the point of view of dollars and cents. That is one of the main objections we from the maritime provinces are taking.

The hon. member also mentioned the fact that he had spoken on this matter before. I also spoke on this matter on a previous occasion and I am not going to apologize for speaking again. I have received a great many letters, telegrams and long distance telephone calls from my own province of New Brunswick. These indicate that people in that part of Canada are still greatly agitated over the freight rates situation. I feel that we are entitled to do all we can to place before the public the true situation of the maritime provinces.

I wish to say at the outset that I am not opposing general increases in rates; after reading the report I feel that increases are necessary. However, what I do question is the method adopted for increasing those rates. I feel that the increase could have been adapted to the situation existing in the various provinces and should have been equally and fairly distributed. I do not think that is the situation.

As I said on April 5 when I spoke before, I consider that we in the maritimes are again being asked to pay more than our full share of the cost and have had placed upon our shoulders more than a full share of this burden.

The senior member for Halifax has given the house something of the history of these freight rates. The history is a long one. Transportation was one of our main problems at the time our province entered confederation, and one of the reasons that induced our province to come in was the assurance given that we would have access to the markets of Canada. From 1867 down to 1912 we were fairly well treated in that regard, because the different governments of Canada allowed the maritime provinces more or less to adjust their own freight rates. But in 1912 a new situation arose. The Intercolonial railway, which was the railway given to the maritime provinces at confederation, was taken over by the Canadian National Railways and in 1912 or 1913 there was an increase of ten per cent in the rates so far as the maritime provinces were concerned. In 1915 there was a further increase of five per cent, and in 1918 another increase of fifteen per cent. For the information of members from other parts of Canada I might point out that the first two of these increases applied only to the maritime provinces, the one in 1912 and the one in 1915. The minister will bear me out in that.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am sorry I was not following the hon. member.

Mr. BROOKS: These increases applied only to the maritime provinces, not to the rest of Canada. That is correct. Then in 1918, as I have said, there was another increase of fifteen per cent. All these increases began to put an intolerable burden on the maritime provinces, an increase of many millions of dollars which fell on the shoulders of our people in the maritime provinces and not on the rest of Canada.

In addition it should be pointed out that the maritime provinces have more than borne their share in providing railway extensions for other parts of Canada. When the western provinces were formed, new railways were constructed and the maritime provinces contributed many millions of dollars as their share of that expenditure. So, all in all, our maritime provinces have more than paid their share so far as railway construction and railway freight rates are concerned.

The situation had become so intolerable in 1925 that all the members of parliament from the maritime provinces joined together in a movement known as "Maritime Rights", in which politics were forgotten so far as the individual members were concerned, all uniting their efforts to remedy the situation. Those efforts resulted in the appointment of the Duncan commission, which investigated the situation and made certain recommendations. I have never felt that those recommendations have been fully implemented. As a matter of fact, when I happened to be in London, England, a few years ago, I had the honour to meet Sir Andrew Rae Duncan, and he asked me what part of Canada I was from. When I told him I was from the maritimes he said, "You in the maritime provinces are the most long-suffering people there are in Canada, possibly in the whole world. I made certain recommendations in my report but those recommendations have never been fulfilled."

Be that as it may, Mr. Speaker, I am not now discussing those recommendations except the one which has to do with freight rates. The government of that day, 1926, felt that the freight rates problem in the maritimes was a very serious one and that it should receive first consideration, and accordingly it passed in 1927 the Maritime Freight Rates Act. Since then we have been fairly well satisfied with our freight rate structure, but the situation in the maritime provinces has been such that we have not been able to take full advantage of those rates. We all remember that from 1929 to 1938 there was a great depression in this country and business shrank, with the result that the maritime provinces did not have an opportunity to develop manufacturing industry as they would have liked to do. Then from 1939 to 1945 we passed through a second world war, during which the maritime provinces had no opportunity of developing the industries they would have liked to develop.

In 1947 and 1948, when possibly we could have made some advances, we find ourselves handicapped by the imposition of these increased freight rates, a horizontal increase of 21 per cent on all our industries in the maritimes. To show that these increases are having a very serious effect in the maritime provinces, I should like to quote a paragraph or two from a telegram that was sent to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) on April 9 last by the chairman of the transportation commission of the Maritime Board of Trade. For the information of hon. members, the commission is composed of men chosen from every political party in the maritime provinces, outstanding men chosen for their knowledge of railway matters and economics, and whose judgment is considered sound. They are men who are not easily alarmed. This is what the chairman of the transportation commission said in his telegram to the Prime Minister:

> You as the head of the then government—

He was speaking of the government in 1926.

> —authorized the hearings of the Sir Andrew Rae Duncan commission which recommended the present Maritime Freight Rates Act. In the opinion of this commission the spirit and terms of this act have been violated and in addition to that the imposition of an horizontal twenty-one per cent increase in freight rates means that maritime industry in many cases will be seriously affected and in some cases destroyed.

That is pretty strong language and, as I say, it comes from men who are not alarmists but men of good sound business judgment in the maritime provinces. The telegram goes on to say:

> This is not only true in regard to industry but it applies with equal force to agriculture.

The telegram is a long one but that is all I shall quote at the moment.

I should like to point out that as to the judgment of the board of transport commissioners, counsel who represented the maritime transportation commission expressed the opinion that the spirit and terms of the Maritime Freight Rates Act had been violated. It was also pointed out that no recognition was given to the strong contention of the maritimes that in the event increases were found necessary the board, under the Railway Act, had power itself to exempt or provide limitations to percentage increases. The board itself in its judgment on page 43 has this to say:

> For the maritime provinces it is essential that they continue to find, to a considerable degree, markets for their primary products, as well as their manufactured products, in the more densely populated areas of the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, where competition is keen. The number of manufacturing industries in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia is not large, but they are of much importance to the areas concerned. In spite of the distance from the markets to be found in the large centres they have, with, perhaps, one or two exceptions, managed to overcome largely their geographical disadvantage and make progress. For these industries concern is expressed lest they be put at a disadvantage with their competitors, in the event that a horizontal increase in freight rates such as applied for is allowed.

I might say that nothing was done about this. What I have read is part of the judgment of the board that was studying this matter.

The question arises as to whether these freight rates in any way affect our industries in the maritime provinces. Mr. Rand Matheson, who is secretary of the maritime transportation commission, has made a study of the question. He found, for instance, that on hard woods from Antigonish to Toronto there will be an increase of $2.80 per 1,000 feet. With competition such as that, I ask this house, how is it possible for these people in Antigonish to compete with industries in Ontario and Quebec? He estimates that on apples from Kentville, Nova Scotia, to Toronto the increase will be twenty-seven cents a barrel.

When I was speaking on this matter a few days ago I pointed out that the Annapolis valley of Nova Scotia, in the past, under the empire trade agreements, had an opportunity of sending its apples to Great Britain; as a matter of fact, I think 90 per cent of the pick of the apples in the Annapolis valley was shipped overseas. These apples must now find markets in central Canada and in other parts of Canada. In order that they may be shipped to central Canada, they will have to meet an increase of twenty-seven cents a barrel in freight rates. He also spoke about feed grains. It has been announced in the house that the assistance to feed grains will be continued as before, and I wish to thank the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) for this and assure him that it will be of great benefit to the farmers in the maritime provinces.

Sixty thousand tons of fertilizer are used in New Brunswick alone. To a great extent this fertilizer comes from Hamilton, Ontario, and from other parts of Ontario. The increase in freight on fertilizer is $1.40 a ton, which will increase the cost of producing potatoes and other farm produce in New Brunswick. Mr. Matheson says that potatoes from Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, and Grand Falls, New Brunswick, will be increased six cents a 75-pound bag. Besides having to pay the extra cost of fertilizer, farm machinery and everything else that goes into the production in the maritimes, we shall also have to pay the extra amount of freight and still try to compete with the farmers of Quebec and Ontario. Frozen fish from Halifax and Saint John to Winnipeg will be increased thirty-one cents per 100 pounds. Steel sheet for manufacturing, shipped from Hamilton, Ontario to Sackville, New Brunswick, will be increased by $2.40 a ton. I might point out that in Sackville, New Brunswick, a very high grade of stove is manufactured. These people have been able to compete in the past with like articles all across Canada. With this increase in the material coming from Ontario to the maritimes, and then again the increase in freight rates from the maritimes to the different markets, it will be almost prohibitive for this industry and many other similar industries in these provinces.

Mr. Matheson also analysed the difference in first-class and fifth-class freight rates per 100 pounds. He points out that on the first-class rate from Halifax and Saint John to Windsor, Ontario, there is an increase of four cents per 100 pounds over the difference established by the Maritime Freight Rates Act. He points out that we are not getting the benefit of the Maritime Freight Rates Act, and that this is a violation of that act.

When I spoke before I think I mentioned the fact that $8,000,000 will probably be the amount that the maritime provinces will have to pay out of the $70,000,000 which will be received from the increase. The senior member for Halifax mentioned it today. In the maritimes we have a population of about one million people. There are approximately thirteen million people in Canada. We are paying $8,000,000. If we paid our proper proportion, and everything else was equal, we would be paying one-thirteenth of the cost of this increase instead of just a little over eight per cent.

I should like to refer to another industry in New Brunswick which has been giving, perhaps more than any other, considerable concern. I refer to the coal industry. The coal industry in New Brunswick is not a great industry when compared with the same industry in other parts of Canada. As a matter of fact it is a small industry when compared with the great industry of Nova Scotia and of Alberta and of other sections. But to us in New Brunswick it is a very important industry. As a matter of fact the whole economy of our province is more or less bound up in the coal industry around Minto and Chipman in our province. We get our hydro electric development from the production of coal. Our pulp and paper mills use our coal, and there is a splendid market right in our own province for the coal production if we were not interfered with from the outside. I should like to point out to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) just how we are interfered with so far as coal is concerned. I have mentioned it in this house on previous occasions. On Nova Scotia coal which is shipped out of that province there are what are known as subventions. These subventions are paid on coal shipped by that province to Ontario and Quebec and also to New Brunswick to the extent that Nova Scotia coal can be shipped into New Brunswick and delivered at points such as Bathurst, Newcastle, Chatham, Dalhousie and to other industrial centres at a lower rate or at the same rate as is paid for New Brunswick coal. The result of that competition is very unfair, and it has made it very difficult indeed for the New Brunswick coal operators and coal mines to carry on.

Just the other day the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) assured the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) that in any increase in the freight rates as far as Nova Scotia coal was concerned there would be a corresponding increase in the subventions. This will make a more serious situation in our province because, as I mentioned a moment ago, no subventions are paid for New Brunswick coal which is being shipped in the province itself, where most of our coal is consumed. The result will be that the competition, which has been very severe in the past, will be more severe than ever.

In that connection I should like to read some telegrams I have received from the mining industry in the province. The first one is dated Minto, April 21:

If the freight rate increase authorized by the board of transport commissioners is allowed to remain in force the coal mining industry upon which this community depends will suffer most seriously. Some time ago we gave you information showing the serious financial and competitive position in which this industry has been placed. The direct result of this increase will be to make that position very much worse. Indirectly this industry will suffer because of the general curtailing effect upon all New Brunswick industries. In view of this most critical situation every New Brunswick member has a most serious responsibility placed upon him, also a great opportunity to give vital service to his province. We urge you therefore to use all your influence to protect the interests of this community and this province by having removed this unjust and unequal burden which has been placed upon us.

That is signed by the Minto chamber of commerce. There is a further telegram from the same community addressed to myself:

This New Brunswick coal mining industry has for a long time been suffering from discriminatory freight rates. The present increase will make the situation worse. The announced increase in subventions to the central provinces will not help us as our market is nearly all within New Brunswick. Because of this our percentage increase will be higher than the average. In one of the worst instances the rate jumped from 30 cents to 55 cents per ton on a haul of three to ten miles. Coal mining will also suffer because all New Brunswick industry will be given a severe set back. We are looking to you to stand firmly for the rights of this province and to do everything possible to protect this industry.

[Mr. Brooks.]

This is from the New Brunswick coal producers association. The minister may tell me that there has been a five cent reduction in the twenty-five cents per ton on coal moving in the maritimes.

Mr. CHEVRIER: So I understand.

Mr. BROOKS: I noticed a Canadian Press dispatch this morning. The five cents is not very much, and I am sure it will not help to any extent the situation I have indicated.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I said I have seen it, but I cannot say officially that there is. I would not like to be committed.

Mr. BROOKS: I noticed a Canadian Press dispatch from Moncton, New Brunswick, saying that there is a five cent freight rebate on coal in the maritimes. I do not believe this will help the situation very much, and I hope that when these freight rates are being considered the minister will see that very careful consideration is given the coal situation in the province of New Brunswick. That industry is fast being driven out of business. I have mentioned it time and again in this house, and the situation is far worse today and will be increasingly worse under the present freight rates.

I do not intend to detain the house for any great length of time. I have mentioned how our industries have suffered in the past. We have not any great number of industries in our provinces, but those that we have have been able to exist and to do business in Upper Canada, as we call it, and in other parts of the dominion, more by reason of the excellence of the goods they produce than for any other reason. The quality of the goods produced in the maritime provinces is of the very best.

I see some members smiling, but I need mention only such commodities as the Hartt boot and shoe, considered one of the finest if not the finest produced in Canada. I might mention Stanfield underwear, than which I do not think there is anything finer. I could mention Moir's chocolates and Ganong's chocolates and the Enterprise stove. These goods are all of the finest quality, the equal of any similar goods produced in this country. It is for that reason and for no other that these particular industries have been able to survive and to compete with others in the same line in Canada. I hope that everything will be done to ensure that those industries which we have will be allowed to live.

I listened to the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Winters) as he made his elaborate excuses why he would not vote for the amendment. I also listened to the senior member for Halifax this afternoon when he said that he was not going to support the resolution.

Mr. ISNOR: Mine was not an excuse but a good reason.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Did he say he would not support it?

Mr. BROOKS: Yes; he said he would not support it. The amendment proposed by our party states that it regrets the government's failure to secure removal of inequalities and discriminations in the Canadian railway freight rate structure before the imposition of the horizontal increase of 21 per cent. The hon. member has made two speeches and in both he has regretted that very fact. I would refer the hon. member to his own premier, who spoke in no uncertain terms regarding this very point. I would refer other members from the maritimes, from Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick, to the statements of their own premiers, and I would ask them whether they are going to support the premiers of the three maritimes, who are Liberals and not C.C.F. or Conservative. I appeal to these members of the House of Commons to stand up and support what they consider to be in the best interests of the maritime provinces. I do not think these men were very enthusiastic before they attended their caucus the other day.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): They always swallow themselves.

Mr. BROOKS: I should like to know what happened in the caucus.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Join the Liberal party and find out.

Mr. BROOKS: The hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank), if I remember correctly, was one of the most enthusiastic ones. I wonder what happened. Talk about being put on the spot! I should like to see the eighteen Liberals from the maritime provinces put their government on the spot. I should like to see the western members, when in caucus, instead of saying that they are put on the spot here by the Conservatives or the C.C.F., put their own government on the spot and see that they do what our provinces are entitled to have done for them.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Your own party has never been more on the spot than it is now.

Mr. BROOKS: Make no mistake about that; our party is not on the spot. Our party knows exactly where it is going as far as this is concerned.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Does the hon. member know what his party did when this matter was up before, following world war I? If he did, he would not make that statement.

Mr. BROOKS: Whenever anything is brought up in the house the hon. gentleman, to defend himself, must go back twenty or twenty-five years, without records or anything else.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: It will be fifty years before you get over on this side of the house.

Mr. BROOKS: This it not a matter of twenty-five years ago; it is a matter to be decided today.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. BROOKS: Yes.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Is he in favour of increased revenues for the railways?

Mr. BROOKS: I am.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Thank you. Is he in favour—

An hon. MEMBER: You are making a speech.

Mr. BROOKS: What is the hon. gentleman's next question?

Mr. CHEVRIER: May I have the permission of the hon. member to ask him another question?

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Just one.

Mr. BROOKS: Yes.

An hon. MEMBER: Just one question.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The question is this. Is the hon. gentleman in favour of the investigation directed by the government into the inequalities of freight rates?

Mr. BROOKS: Yes. But what I am in favour of is the suggestion made by three maritime premiers to the effect that we should have waited thirty days and given them an opportunity to present their case.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Then the hon. gentleman should support the government.

Mr. BROOKS: I support the three premiers from my section of the country although, as I say, I am not on the same political side as they are. I am surprised at hon. members who are of the same political stripe when they do not give these three premiers the support to which they are entitled and to which I feel our maritime provinces are entitled.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): They are not even given a hearing.

Mr. BROOKS: In this connection I should like to quote what the Telegraph-Journal of Saint John, of April 12, says about this 21 per cent increase:

> The present twenty-one per cent rise in freight rates—in the considered opinion of the maritime transportation commission—sets us back to the desperate position in which we found ourselves after the first war. What are our representatives at Ottawa going to do about it?

That is the question which the Liberal members from Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick will be asked by the people of the maritimes. What are they going to do about that?

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): And what an answer they will have to give!

Mr. BROOKS: Then the editorial goes on to say this:

> If those who sit in parliament for the seven non-central provinces pool their forces, they can compel the federal government to give their regions justice.

That is what the people of those provinces expect, that they will pool their resources and that they will make some effort to compel the government to do what they feel is justice for their provinces. The editorial goes on:

> The future will be resolved, then, by the actions of these men. The answer lies with them, and they cannot evade the responsibility.

That is a paper, Mr. Speaker, which is friendly to this present government; and when it publishes that, I am sure it is not publishing it in order to try to do the government any harm but rather is simply trying to present the case for the maritime provinces.

Mr. H. G. ARCHIBALD (Skeena): I rise to a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. In the Globe and Mail and other papers of today there was a news item arising out of an interjection by me while the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) was speaking, which interjection cast a reflection on the hon. member for Grey North (Mr. Case).

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. member is rising to a question of privilege.

Mr. CHEVRIER: He cannot do it now.

An hon. MEMBER: He is doing it.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: When I made that interjection, Mr. Speaker, I was not thinking of any particular member of the house. My remarks were prompted by the general hubbub on the floor of the house.

[Mr. Brooks.]

Mr. J. S. SINNOTT (Springfield): The subject under discussion, Mr. Speaker, namely, freight rates, has caused considerable turmoil. The previous speaker said that a considerable number of members of the Liberal party did not know a few days ago what they were going to do. The pressure he talks about was not needed after the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) made his speech on the matter yesterday.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Others spoke besides the Minister of Transport.

Mr. SINNOTT: I am not going to be misled or fooled by the amendment of the C.C.F. or by the subamendment of the Conservative party.

Mr. KNOWLES: You are already fooled and misled.

Mr. SINNOTT: The Conservatives, who were in command years ago, had the chance to make this equalization and failed to do so. The fact that the party in power now has given orders and instructions to the board of transport commissioners to find out the differentials and report thereon should be enough to convince us that the right thing is being done. I hold no brief for the railways who contend they need more revenue. It is true that the costs of materials, maintenance of way and wages, have all gone up. Naturally, the railways will need more money. But at the same time there are factors to be taken into consideration by the board which, I hope, will result in much benefit to eastern and western Canada. As this debate goes on, I hope the matter will not be treated as a political football but rather that hon. members will act in the interests of Canada as a whole and not merely in those of their own little sphere. I stand here as a dominion member, not acting for my own constituency; I am acting in as fair a manner as I can for the whole of Canada.

I claim that there should be no battle between the east and the west or between the central provinces and the east and the west. There is no doubt that there will be some hardship unless the board of transport commissioners make a wide adjustment of present rates. With the competition of waterborne traffic in the east and the competition of trucks, it will be imperative for the railways to have an over-all increase of 21 per cent. The very fact that the railroad rates are increased by 21 per cent will naturally result in the truckers getting more business, and the railways will have that much less revenue. The long hauls between Vancouver and Montreal will be the ones that take the brunt of it, and the ones from Montreal east. What I should like to see is that the board of transport commissioners, before they arrive at their decision, take this matter into consideration and that the loss, if any, be suffered by the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Some mention has been made of the seven provinces which have made representations with a view to having the board's decision held up for thirty days. This has been a bone of contention for the last couple of weeks or so. Great emphasis has been laid on the benefit which would be derived from holding up the matter for thirty days. For my part, while I believe it might possibly have been better if that had been done, at the same time there is no object in doing so, from the very fact that the board of transport commissioners have now been given instructions to go ahead. The provinces have the chance to appeal. If they are right, they have the same opportunity as they had before.

The main freight hauling from western Canada to the east is in connection with grain. That matter has not been touched at all. Naturally western Canada is looking to eastern Canada for a market for its feed grain. The federal government is paying a subsidy on this feed grain moving east, and the amount of that subsidy is coming out of the consolidated revenue fund. This subsidy is helping to market our feed grain in eastern Canada. Because of the climate in eastern Canada it is far more convenient to feed stock there than it is in the western provinces.

I do not know whether I have been rightly or wrongly informed, but I have been given some information about the competition between the Canadian Pacific, a privately owned railway, and the Canadian National Railways, which is nationally owned. My information is that the effect of an order of the board of transport commissioners is that the Canadian National is not allowed to compete unfairly with the Canadian Pacific. I am informed that a train on the nationally owned line can travel from Vancouver to Montreal in about nine or ten hours less time but, because of the hampering restriction of the board of transport commissioners in curtailing speed, they are not allowed to compete in that way.

I believe that is one reason why trains of the Canadian National are running only half filled with passengers, while those of the Canadian Pacific are filled. This is the condition, despite the fact that the Canadian National track is straighter, their grade is lower, they use only one engine between Montreal and Vancouver and, if pressure were put on the board of transport commissioners or those who are in charge of the travel of these trains, they could make much faster time and still travel at a safe speed. I understand that the time between Winnipeg and Ottawa could be cut by seven hours. I believe that with these changes the revenues of the Canadian National would increase considerably. As I said before, I am voting with the government.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): No, no!

Mr. SINNOTT: That is not because I am a back-bencher, not because I have been forced into voting for them, but because I am convinced that the government is acting in the cause of justice for the whole of Canada.

Mr. E. D. FULTON (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, in this debate on the subject of freight rates let me at the outset advance the point of view that this is a national problem, one of concern to the whole of Canada and, therefore, properly to be discussed in the House of Commons. At the same time I agree with the hon. member who has just taken his seat that there should be no controversy between east and west, or between the central provinces and the east and west. There should be no controversy; but we have to deal with actualities, and there will be controversy so long as the extremes of the country are at a disadvantage in this particular matter as compared with the central part. That being so, and the hon. member holding the belief he expressed as to the desirability of doing away with controversy, I suggest that he join with us in attempting to remove the causes of that controversy. That is what we are doing when we seek to have an equalization of freight rates as between British Columbia and the maritime provinces, and central Canada.

I do not intend to enter into a controversy as to who is actually most prejudiced by the present freight rates structure, whether it be the maritimes, the prairies or British Columbia. But I do wish to place before the house some of the rates in existence, so that hon. members may judge whether we in British Columbia are prejudiced.

In this connection I would quote from the judgment of commissioner MacPherson as it appears at pages 84 and 85 of the judgments of the board of transport commissioners for Canada. Referring at the outset of his judgment to the mountain differential, Mr. MacPherson says this:

> During the progress of the hearing it was pointed out by counsel for the provinces on many occasions that in Canada we have different grades or steps in the freight rate structure, viz.,
>
> The maritime rates (in preferred territory)
> The competitive rates of Ontario and Quebec

The prairie rates for Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta
The mountain scale or Pacific scale of rates.

Then he went on to say at page 85:

Then lastly there is the mountain or Pacific scale which is commonly referred to as mountain differential, whereby one and one-quarter prairie miles equal one mile in Pacific territory for rate purposes. I am of the opinion that this situation, which amounts to an increase of sixteen per cent over the prairie scale of rates, should be again reviewed at the earliest possible date.

By inference the commission is there agreeing with those who claim that on account of the mountain differential, which means an increase of sixteen per cent over the prairie rate which, in turn, is higher than the rate in central Canada, we in British Columbia are hardest hit by the freight rates structure. So that the importance of this question to British Columbia can be seen by reference to the judgment of the commissioner. We from British Columbia would ask the co-operation of all members in the house at this time to remove that differential, the cause of our grievance.

It has been said, and clearly proven, that the railway problem in Canada is a national one. The railways were constructed as part of a national policy in the building of Canada so as to ensure that our lines of communication, trade and commerce should be east and west, rather than north and south. That policy has carried with it certain benefits as well as some difficulties. But inasmuch as the whole of Canada has participated in the benefits, it stands to reason that the whole of Canada should be concerned about removing the disadvantages. Since it is a national policy it follows, also, that both the welfare of the railways which serve the national interest, and the welfare of the country in its relationship to the railways are matters of national concern, and should be discussed in parliament.

It follows from this reasoning that the welfare of British Columbia, as part of Canada, is also an item for consideration in this house. At this point I should like to deal with the argument advanced yesterday by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) that the board of transport commissioners was justified in concluding that an increase in freight rates was necessary, and at the same time in making an award, without removing the discriminatory features in our freight rate structure.

During the course of my argument today I do not intend to question that some increase in revenue on the part of the railways is necessary. That fact I take for granted because, after all, after fourteen months of hearings the board has come to that conclusion. Certainly I would not question it, and I doubt if anyone who has participated in the debate would question it. However, what I am concerned about is the minister's statement that the board was justified in awarding the increase without at the same time taking any steps to remove the discrimination.

[Mr. Fulton.]

It must be admitted that at that time the board concerned itself only with a revenue case. The minister himself said that, when at page 2898 of Hansard he is reported to have said:

The board dealt with and was faced purely with a revenue case.

I do not, however, accept the suggestion that there was no other issue before the board. I maintain that there was the issue of discrimination under the freight rates structure; and that aspect of the matter I would ask leave to deal with later.

I agree with the minister when he says that the main consideration before the board was the revenue aspect of the case, and also when he says that, in making its decision the board did not allow itself to give consideration to political or economic questions outside the matter of revenue. But I submit that political or economic questions, in the broadest sense of those terms, must be considered in arriving at any fair decision with regard to what freight rates may be found to be necessary. I say that is a national problem, and I submit that, therefore, the government of Canada must be concerned with the political and economic implications of the question and that the Canadian House of Commons is the proper place in which to make our views known to the government.

I have no criticism to make of the railroads for applying for a rate increase, or of the board for deciding that an increase was necessary. But we have the strongest criticism to make of the government for allowing the increase to go into effect without removing the inequalities under which various sections of this country have suffered for years. That is the point involved in the first paragraph of the amendment moved by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken), and I should like to read this paragraph in order to bring out that aspect of the situation. It reads:

That all the words after "this house" in the fourth line of the amendment be deleted, and that the following be substituted instead thereof:

"Regrets the government's failure to secure the removal of inequalities and discriminations in the Canadian railway freight rates structure before the imposition of a horizontal increase of twenty-one per cent—an increase which is bound to intensify the aforesaid inequalities and discriminations."

That first paragraph of the amendment indicates the clear issue which is being placed before this House of Commons for consideration. In connection with that point I ask hon. members to consider the effect of this 21 per cent increase upon the economy of British Columbia. For this purpose I should like to divide our population into three groups. The first group would be made up of consumers generally. We are all consumers and, therefore, we are all affected by an increase in freight rates. It has not been denied and it cannot be denied that, since we already have a tremendous differential, a greater burden will be imposed upon our province than upon the rest of Canada. An increase of 21 per cent all across the board hits us that much harder. Therefore the consumer in British Columbia will be that much harder hit than the consumer anywhere else. As an example of this fact I should like to refer to a report in the Winnipeg Free Press of April 10, reading as follows:

Freight Rate Compensation

Shortening and soap will rise in price

Ottawa, April 10—The wartime prices and trade board will shortly authorize increases in the prices of shortening and soap to compensate for the increases in freight rates, it was learned Friday.

There we see the beginning of the increase in the cost of living which affects our consumer population in British Columbia much more adversely than the consumers in the rest of Canada.

The second classification I should like to make for this purpose is made up of our farmers. The province, particularly the interior from which I come, is interested principally in the primary industries of farming and logging. These primary producers will be affected because they must pay the increase both on the things they have to buy and on the things they have to sell. It has been said, and said truly, that the farmer is the only person whose costs are doubly affected by any increase in freight rates. Certainly that is true of the livestock industry where you have to ship your cattle. It is always the case that from the return received from the sale of cattle there is deducted the amount of freight from the collection point to the marketing point, which in our case is Vancouver, Calgary or Edmonton. Not only is the farmer hurt because of the increase he must pay on everything he has to buy, but he will have this extra freight deducted from the prices of the things he has to sell.

The president of the tree fruits industry in British Columbia, Mr. Lloyd, has already said —this was referred to last night by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green)— that this increase in freight rates will cost the British Columbia fruit industry approximately $1,000,000 a year. The effect of this increase will be that much greater on our people.

The third category which I should like to consider is made up of the railway employees themselves. In British Columbia they are concerned both as consumers and as railway workers. In many areas in the interior the prosperity of the district is largely dependent upon the prosperity and stability of employment enjoyed by the railway worker. I am quite certain that no railway employee in British Columbia, facing this problem as he must as a British Columbian, as a consumer and as a railway worker, wants any increase in freight rates to be made at the expense of our province or indeed at the expense of any section of Canada. I have spoken to some representatives of the railway employees, and they are as vitally interested as anyone else in the removal of discriminations in connection with freight rates.

I maintain that the wage increases which the railway employees are asking for should form no part of this discussion. We must not allow the wage requirements of the railroads and their employees to be caught in the cross fire of political controversy. One or two addresses which have been delivered in this debate have indicated a tendency toward making this aspect of the matter a political issue. I want to make it clear that I am not opposed to any increases in freight rates as such, but I am opposed to increases without equalization, to increases which increase discrimination at the expense of the railway workers, quite as much as that of anyone else in British Columbia.

In order to keep the record clear in this respect, I should like to refer to what the leader of the opposition said yesterday. He indicated clearly that he felt the position of the railway workers should not be prejudiced as a result of this discussion. The leader of the opposition said, as reported on page 2911 of Hansard of April 13:

Roughly it would appear that they have received on an average about twenty-five cents an hour increase. But the cost of living, as compared with pre-war days, has gone up 50 per cent, while the average wages of railway employees it would appear have gone up only some 33 per cent.

And then again on the same page:

These working men and women have had no adjustment of wage rates since June of 1946. Yet since that date the cost of living index has risen 27·2 points over the 1938-39 average, and the food index has gone up 43·8 points during the period when they have had no increase. Clearly this aspect of the matter deserves immediate and most careful consideration.

So I repeat that the problem of these workers must not be squeezed by any cross fire of political controversy. If it be the case that British Columbia is particularly hard hit because of the discrimination arising out of this 21 per cent increase, it is similarly the case of the provinces which objected to the present increase and the present multiplication of discrimination. The government has refused their request to grant a thirty-day waiting period before bringing the rate increase into effect. Here I should like to read the second paragraph of the amendment moved by the leader of the opposition, which reads:

> This house further regrets that the government has refused the reasonable request of seven provinces that the imposition of increased freight rates recently authorized by the board of transport commissioners be delayed for thirty days until they could be heard.

After all, Mr. Speaker, the thirty days' delay would not prejudice anybody. The railways, it must be admitted, need an increase to meet their increased costs and to meet their wage negotiations which are now going on. But I should like to put this consideration before the house and before the minister in asking him to reconsider the matter. Although the Canadian Pacific Railway Company may have made out a case for an increase, its annual report now before the country shows that it has made a profit of approximately $17,000,000 on last year's operations, so I submit that, without prejudice to any request for an increase which it has made, it could go part way at any rate in meeting this request for a delay of thirty days to give the provinces an opportunity to make their views known.

Very much the same situation applies in the case of the Canadian National Railways. Although that railway has shown a deficit on last year's operations, it should be borne in mind that if the capital structure of the railway were overhauled, and an overhauling is past due, the railway would have a decent chance to show a profit. It does make an operating profit, but it has this terrible burden of an appalling capital structure, which is no fault of the present management of the railway. If that overhaul were made the Canadian National Railways too would be in a position, I suggest, where they would have revenues available to meet some of their legitimate requirements in re-equipping themselves and in fulfilling the wage negotiations now going on.

So neither the railways nor the country would be prejudiced in any problem that confronts them by the granting of thirty days delay while this whole question of discrimination and the provincial representations are gone into.

I should like to give some figures to show the actual extent of the present discrimination against my province and the further increased discrimination involved in the 21 per cent increase now authorized.

In exhibit 131, filed before the board of transport commissioners at its last hearing, it was shown that the four western provinces contributed, in the ten-year period 1936 to 1945, 65·8 per cent of the freight revenue of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and their population for that period totalled only 28 per cent of the nation's. In the same period the eastern provinces contributed 34·2 per cent of the freight revenue of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and their population was 72 per cent of the total for the nation. So that 28 per cent of the people contributed 65·8 per cent of the freight revenue, while 72 per cent of the people contributed only 34·2 per cent of the freight revenue. So it can be seen where the freight charges bear most heavily.

Further, the standard freight rate east of Fort William is 58 cents per 100 pounds per 100 miles, while west of Fort William it is 65 cents per 100 pounds per 100 miles. In British Columbia we have in addition the mountain differential of 1¼ cents, which results in an increase of 16 per cent over the standard rate west of Fort William.

If we turn to specific commodities we can see by specific examples just what this increase will mean to us. Here are some typical results of the discriminatory practices as they affect important commodities. Take lumber. A cargo of lumber shipped from a Quebec mill to Ontario a distance of 600 miles pays 23 cents per 100 pounds, while a cargo of lumber shipped from Vancouver to Calgary, also approximately 600 miles, pays 50 cents per 100 pounds.

Take the case of fresh fruit from the Okanagan valley, the Thompson valley and the Shuswap area, as compared with fruit shipped from the district around Hamilton, Ontario, which are both important shipping centres for fresh fruit. From the Okanagan to Calgary, a distance of 350 miles, the shipper pays $1.04 per hundredweight. From Hamilton eastward over a corresponding distance a shipper would pay only 65 cents per hundredweight. From the interior of British Columbia, from the Okanagan to Red Deer, Alberta, a distance of 453 miles, the rate is $1.41 per hundredweight, while from Hamilton, Ontario, to Isbister, also a distance of 453 miles, the rate is 91½ cents. So that quite obviously a 21 per cent over-all increase will hit the western shipper far more severely than his eastern rival.

In addition it must be borne in mind that British Columbia is the only province which is affected by the fact that we can have no through-freight truck competition between British Columbia and Alberta. Under the national park regulations you can ship into a national park by truck, and you can ship out of a national park, but you cannot ship by truck through a national park. The national parks lie astride the only roads between British Columbia and Alberta. The only road now is the Big Bend highway, although it is just possible to get through over the Yellowstone road, but both are straddled by national parks, and so we can have no through-truck competition with the railways.

I do not think it is necessary for me to give many more details to prove that our plight is made very much worse than that of the rest of Canada by this over-all increase in freight rates.

Let us turn for a moment to the argument put forward by the various provinces with respect to discrimination. The Minister of Transport has attempted to show that the question of discrimination was not before the board. As reported at page 2898 of Hansard of yesterday, April 13, he said:

> The board on that occasion—
>
> The occasion of the hearing just concluded. —did not deal with inequalities in the freight rate structure, the so-called discriminations which have been mentioned in this debate.

He went on in his submission to show that the board had no authority to deal with that problem; but I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the question of discrimination was before the board, and it must be before the board in any such application, because the opposition of the provinces to this increase was based on the position that it should not be granted in blanket form since it would aggravate the present discrimination. In support of my position I should like to read an editorial appearing in the Winnipeg Free Press of April 10, in the form of "Special Correspondence from Ottawa." It reads in part as follows:

> By a series of carefully selected quotations, Hon. Lionel Chevrier, minister of transport, has tried to convince the house that the question of discrimination was not an issue in the freight rates case.
>
> No one familiar with the evidence will accept this statement. Railway counsel did their best to prevent the question of discrimination coming up. They said the terms of reference of the inquiry—drawn up by the railways themselves when they made their application—prevented this question from being considered. But the seven provinces appearing before the board repeatedly broke this barrier. The evidence simply teems with references to discrimination. Without considering the problem of discrimination, an examination of freight rates is impossible.

The editorial continues:

> The failure of the board of transport commissioners to deal with discriminations will certainly not increase respect for its findings. In any event, Mr. Chevrier is confusing the issue when he takes refuge in the board's report. The power of parliament to deal with the question of discrimination is absolute.

I certainly agree with the last paragraph of the editorial. As I said at the beginning of my remarks, not only is the power of parliament absolute, but this is the proper place where the matter should be dealt with, because it is a national question; this is the place where it must be dealt with, and we members of parliament from all parts of Canada must make known our views to the government.

I think the minister has contradicted himself in the course of his own speech, because on the one hand he says that the discrimination question was not before the board, and in another place in his speech of yesterday, as reported at page 2907 of Hansard, he said this:

> In fact, in conversation with the chairman recently, I was informed by him that he was of the opinion—and so did his brother commissioners—that there was nothing in the Railway Act which hampered them in any way in dealing with the inequalities or the so-called discrimination which may exist in this country.

Then the question is, if that is so, if there is nothing in the Railway Act which prevents the board of transport commissioners from dealing with the question of discrimination, why did they not deal with it when it was so obviously before them in the hearings which they held? The fact that they did not deal with it was something which they themselves decided. They decided not to make a recommendation on account of it. The matter was before them, since it was an integral part of all of the submissions of all the provincial counsel, and the chief commissioner himself, in his judgment on page 44 of the document in regard to the findings of the board, has this to say. This shows that all provincial counsel put the matter before the board, as it was constantly before them, and everywhere they went the question of discrimination was raised in the course of the hearings. He said as follows:

> A major subject of complaint in British Columbia had to do with the mountain or Pacific scale of rates, generally referred to as the "mountain differential". The mountain or Pacific scale of rates is higher than other scales of rates, such as the prairie scale. This condition, it is alleged, works to the serious disadvantage of the business and industries of British Columbia, and is most discriminatory in respect to that province. It is further submitted that this situation should be taken fully into account by the board in fixing rates in the present case. The submissions of British Columbia on this subject had the full support of a number of witnesses in Alberta.

Some other questions raised in the submissions made during the western hearings had to do with rates to assist and develop industry.

Farther on he says:

Wide latitude was given to the protestants in the development of their objections to the proposed increase.

Then he goes on to show that in fact they had all raised this question of discrimination; therefore the question was certainly before the board. The minister has taken two completely different positions. On the one hand he says, as reported on page 2907 of Hansard, that the matter was not before the board; that the only thing properly before the board was the question of the revenue situation. On the other hand he says in the same speech that the board of transport commissioners themselves said that there was nothing in the Railway Act which hampered them in any way in dealing with the inequalities of the so-called discrimination which may exist in this country.

Mr. CHEVRIER: May I interrupt the hon. gentleman?

Mr. FULTON: Yes.

Mr. CHEVRIER: That statement has to do with the investigation which has been ordered by the government, and not with the case which was before the board for the increase in rates.

Mr. FULTON: I agree with the point the minister is now making, and in reply to him I say that, although the board refused or declined to take any action with respect to inequalities and discriminations at the time they made their findings and recommendations, it cannot be denied that the question of discrimination and inequalities was very much before them, as I have proven in my reading from the judgment of the chief commissioner who said that the matter was placed before them on many occasions and that wide latitude was given to the protestants to bring the matter before them.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Will the hon. member allow me?

Mr. FULTON: May I finish this? That is the case, and if there is nothing in the Railway Act to hamper them in dealing with the question of discrimination my point is that the question should have been dealt with at the time they made their findings.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The application was not for removal of the inequalities, and counsel for the provinces so stated.

Mr. FULTON: The minister has made that point before. Counsel for the provinces said that if we were making at the moment an application for the removal of discrimination it would be brought out and that we would have to make separate submissions. Their position was: This application was made by the railway company. We admit that they are not applying for the removal of discrimination, but an integral part of our position was that it could not and should not be granted without at the same time removing discrimination. Therefore the point I make is that there could be, in my view, no doubt that the question of discrimination was very much before the board during the whole course of this hearing.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I do not agree with the hon. gentleman.

Mr. FULTON: The fact that they declined to take action on it is a matter, the reasons for which can be known only to them, but there was nothing to prevent them at that time from taking action to deal with the inequalities and discrimination in the Canadian freight rate structure. That being the case, it seems to me that the government has been compelled further to reverse its position. Immediately after the freight rates decision was made known, seven of the provinces said that they would apply for a stay in its imposition. The government refused to grant that stay. They concurred in the immediate imposition of the freight rates increase. I wish to make this clear. The government concurred in the imposition of the new freight rates, and the western provinces, of course, took that as an insult. In fact one is given to understand that in some of their minds it was taken as being an indication that the governor in council did not propose to permit them to make an appeal from the decision. We now find that the government is saying, While we will go ahead with the imposition of the freight rates immediately, we shall have to allow the provinces to appeal the actual award. The present decision of the government followed the protest which was raised in the house as soon as an opportunity was given to discuss the matter of freight rates, the protest which took place on Monday, April 5, and again on Wednesday, April 7, a protest which was joined in vigorously, in fact almost led by members from British Columbia, including members on the government side.

May I at this point read some of the submissions made by the provincial premiers, tabled in the house yesterday by the minister. The Premier of Alberta said this:

The decision of the board of transport commissioners authorizing an over-all increase of 21 per cent in freight rates has been a shock and a severe disappointment to the people of Alberta. This province has for many years suffered from excessive and discriminatory freight rates and the judgment of the transport commissioners only serves to aggravate that situation. This province desires and intends to appeal from the board's decision to the governor general in council. If increased rates made effective now and then the governor in council as we confidently expect rescinds the board's increase order much confusion and dislocation of business will inevitably result. The government of Alberta respectfully requests the governor in council to use the power conferred by section 52 of the Railway Act and vary the transport board's order 70425 by extending three days notice period to thirty days.

The Premier of Saskatchewan made a similar submission. The province of British Columbia wired in the following terms:

Government of British Columbia protests strongly any increase in freight rates under recent ruling of board of transport until such time as the mountain differential affecting British Columbia and Alberta is removed. Existence of mountain differential constitutes a grave injustice under ordinary circumstances. Imposition of a 21 per cent increase in freight rates would further accentuate the injustice and place both British Columbia and Alberta in very disadvantageous positions within Canada's economy. Strongly urge that ruling of board of transport commissioners be withheld from operation until such time as British Columbia government has opportunity to appeal against the decision.

Byron I. Johnson, Premier of British Columbia.

These requests from the premiers of the seven provinces were, as the house knows, in effect rejected by the dominion government which introduced the order in council referred to yesterday, saying that the governor in council had considered the representations and had come to the conclusion that the freight increases must be granted forthwith.

Then, as I say, there was a protest which took place in the house, in which western members on all sides joined, and the government then reversed or partly reversed its decision and said, "We will continue to make the increase effective as of now but will permit an appeal and will in fact refer the matter of discrimination to the board."

The point is this. The question of discrimination was before the board. The government has the power to insist that discrimination be removed, and I suggest that it should have done so at the outset and not waited until the protests in the house and in the country became so great that the government was forced to throw out the sop that it would submit the matter to the board, at the same time forcing itself to say that such consideration would take from six months to a year before any effective action could be taken.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I wish to read from an editorial that appeared in the Vancouver Sun of April 9, 1948, which sums up the position we take:

This government has been in power since 1935. At any time since then, if it was sincerely concerned about the inequalities in the national freight rate structure, it could have instructed the transport board to make a revision. But no. The government thought it politically unwise to arouse the animosity of Quebec and Ontario, hereditary beneficiaries of the obsolete system.

Only at this late date, when the chickens of neglect have come home to roost on Parliament Hill, does the government decide "it would be in the public interest to have a thorough investigation . . . with a view to the establishment of a fair and reasonable rate structure."

There is absolutely no evidence that such an inquiry would have been started by Ottawa on its own volition. If the railroads had not asked for a percentage boost across the board, and won their case before the transport commissioners, the government would have been quite content to continue its neglect.

This government has given the victims of regional rate discrimination not the slightest grounds to believe that it is interested in inequalities as such. It is interested, however, in shutting up the roars of protest evoked by a 21 per cent magnification of the injustices.

The editorial concludes with these words:

A test of how genuine is Ottawa's sudden conversion would be an application to the government for subsidies on B.C.'s freight bills pending the transport board's rulings.

This would give Ottawa a cash reason for speeding up the hearings. B.C. business is genuinely alarmed at transport minister Chevrier's estimate of one or two years for the investigation. A restriction of that duration on B.C.'s trade with the prairies would be intolerable.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MOTION TO SUSPEND STANDING ORDER 28 FOR SITTING OF THURSDAY, APRIL 15

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Zaplitny) is about to rise. With the permission of the house, if I may interrupt him for a minute or two, I should like to move a motion having to do with the business tomorrow. I should like to move:

That the provision of standing order 28, in relation to Mr Speaker leaving the chair without question put, for the house to go into supply, be suspended for the sitting of Thursday, April 15, 1948.

Without the suspension of that rule, this debate could not be continued tomorrow because the rule provides that there is no question put about the Speaker leaving the chair on Thursdays or Fridays to go into supply.

Mr. BRACKEN: Can the minister say what the business will be tomorrow?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: If this motion is carried we shall go right on with this debate and, if and when it is concluded, go back to the debate on the motion to set up the committee on human rights, and if that were concluded we would proceed with the other business that has been indicated for the past few days.

Mr. GREEN: Can the minister indicate when time will be set aside for discussing external affairs?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: If this were completed tomorrow, the intention would be to call one item of external affairs, have it stand, and fix it for debate on Monday, so that we could have a day or two to consider the general field of external affairs.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY

FREIGHT RATES—INCREASES ORDERED BY TRANSPORT BOARD—AMENDMENT, MR. COLDWELL —SUBAMENDMENT, MR. BRACKEN

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Abbott for committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Coldwell, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Bracken.

Mr. F. S. ZAPLITNY (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, this is the second time we are debating freight rates in that many weeks, and it may be useful to state at this time the reason for this type of procedure. I think the public generally knows that on October 9, 1946, the railway association applied for an increase in freight rates, and immediately after that application was made opposition was taken to it by various provincial governments and members of this house. Many of them would like to have debated that issue in the intervening time between the application and the decision, but were prevented from doing so because of the rules of the house, which preclude our debating any matter which is before a judicial body.

I think it will be admitted also that, after the announcement of the board was made on March 30, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell), when he rose on April 5 and asked that this house debate the question, was doing a public service to the people who are interested in this issue, both in eastern and in western Canada.

It is possible that, had not the hon. member risen at that time and initiated a debate on this very important issue, the decision might have been accepted without very much protest in this house, and the people concerned would not have had the benefit of what I consider to have been an interesting and valuable debate here.

The second motion which the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar made came on April 7, which followed the statement made by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) in reply to the debate of April 5. The motion was necessary because the statement the minister made on April 7 in this house was not satisfactory either to the members of the house or to the provincial governments concerned.

The minister, in his remarks yesterday, made some statements with which we can agree, but which he was not exactly in a position to make, because he is reported on April 13 to have said, at page 2908 of Hansard:

> Any hon. member who attempts to make a political issue out of this question is to my mind doing a disservice, not only to himself but to his country.

I agree with that statement, but I think it is clear, from reading all the debates in the house, that when the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar raised the question in the house in the first instance, and again on the second occasion, it was not on a political basis. As a matter of fact, the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank), who spoke in that debate, made the statement in this house, complimenting the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, that he had left politics entirely out of the matter and was to be commended therefor. So that the debate which was initiated in this house started off on a very reasonable basis; but before the Minister of Transport had finished his speech, he himself had introduced certain political considerations into the question.

For example, he made what amounted to an accusation, that there was some type of lobbying going on from the province of Saskatchewan. He said, in reply to a statement of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar:

> I have realized that since this debate started, because no one has been flooded with more telegrams than I have from members of the province of Saskatchewan. And this indicates to me that there is some attempt to make a political issue out of this question.

That statement was unfair, and it was inaccurate because, as a matter of fact, the members of this house who represent the constituencies which are affected by this increase have all been receiving telegrams, resolutions and letters which have been urging us to make our views heard in this house. For example, coming from Manitoba, I have a resolution which comes from a municipal council in that province. It happens to come from the rural municipality of Dauphin. The resolution is in these words:

> Whereas the board of transport commissioners authorized an increase of 21 per cent in railway freight rates.
>
> And whereas the said increase will bring about an increase in price on all commodities detrimental to our economy and cause inflation.
>
> Now therefore be it resolved that we protest against the proposed increase in freight rates until an equality in way freight rates has been established as between eastern Canada and the prairie provinces.

That is a resolution which is characteristic of the type of resolutions and telegrams we have been receiving. They have been coming not only from municipal bodies but from locals of pool elevators, co-operatives of different kinds, boards of trade and so on. They have been coming from other provinces as well as from Saskatchewan. Therefore I do not know that the minister was on solid ground when he intimated that Saskatchewan exclusively was carrying on a lobby on this question.

As a matter of fact, a statement was made here the other day to the effect that it is quite possible that the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) who, I understand is in Saskatchewan at the present time, may be doing his quota of lobbying on this question. He is reported in the western papers to have stated that in his opinion the western provinces—that is, the prairie provinces—will get a square deal out of this decision yet; that the announcement of the board of transport commissioners is not final; that it is in the nature of an advisory ruling, and that the government will see to it that an equalization is carried out. Of course that hope is somewhat on a par with his ill-fated hope on the coarse grains issue. It is too bad that he has not had an opportunity to state his views in the house during this debate. The hon. member for Rosthern seems to have the uncanny faculty of being in Saskatchewan when the issues are hot in Ottawa and of being in Ottawa when they are hot in Saskatchewan.

I think it can be said, however, that for the most part the members who took part in this debate have shown something which is perhaps new on this issue, and that is an awareness that our transportation system in this country has graduated from being a purely commercial undertaking, and is now a social undertaking. I believe there is a new realization, perhaps brought about by events in recent years, that the transportation system of this country is now so vitally necessary to all provinces and to all people concerned that we can no longer treat it as a purely commercial operation requiring so much revenue to provide certain services, and leave it at that. We must take into consideration the burden of keeping that transportation system functioning and giving good service in parts of Canada which in themselves may not be able to produce the necessary revenue. It might be considered perhaps as a minor version of the situation we have in our post office system. Our post office system takes into consideration the convenience and necessity of communication for the country as a whole. Where it is found necessary to give service to a certain community, that service is given regardless of whether or not it is possible to raise in that district the revenue with which to pay for the service. Something of that kind of consideration must now be taken into account in dealing with this question of freight rates.

There are, of course, two broad phases involved. The first is the general flat increase of 21 per cent, and the second is the discrimination as a result of the differentials that exist. On the first issue—that is, on the general increase—I believe it is in a way one of the fruits of the government's decontrol policy. The government were warned on more than one occasion that, if they continued their decontrol policy, they would be faced with one problem after another; and this freight rate problem is not the last one. There will be other problems along the same lines and emanating from the same reasons. The other day the minister stated that the cost of operating railways, the level of wages and the expense of maintaining our system have increased. That is true. But the government itself will have to take the responsibility for having permitted prices to rise to the point where it was necessary for the men working in this industry to ask for higher wages. I do not think that one member of this house has said a word in opposition to the efforts being made by the railroad workers to have their wages increased, because we realize that the cost of living today is such that it is necessary for them to ask for that increase.

It is not possible for me to complete my remarks, Mr. Speaker, so I would move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Mr. Zaplitny the debate was adjourned.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, April 15, 1948

The house met at three o'clock.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REFERENCE OF AUDITORS' REPORT TO RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING COMMITTEE

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport): I desire to table the report to parliament of George A. Touche and Company, auditors of the Canadian National Railway system, for the year ended December 31, 1947, in English and French.

By leave of the house, I move:

That the report to parliament of George A. Touche and Company, auditors of the Canadian National Railway system, for the year ended December 31, 1947, tabled this day, be referred to the sessional committee on railways and shipping owned, operated and controlled by the government.

Motion agreed to.

REFERENCE OF ANNUAL REPORTS, BUDGET AND CERTAIN ESTIMATES TO RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING COMMITTEE

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport) moved:

That the annual reports for 1947 of the Canadian National Railway system, the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships Limited, and the Canadian National Railways Securities Trust, tabled on April 12, 1948, and the budget of the Canadian National Railways and Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships Limited for 1948 tabled on April 14, 1948, be referred to the sessional committee on railways and shipping owned, operated and controlled by the government, together with the following items of estimates for 1948-49:

Vote 502—Maritime Freight Rates Act, Canadian National Railways;

Vote 503—Maritime Freight Rates Act, railways other than Canadian National;

Vote 557—Prince Edward Island car ferry and terminals, deficit 1948;

And that the resolution passed by the house on March 9, 1948, referring certain estimates to the committee of supply, be rescinded in so far as the said resolution relates to votes Nos. 502, 503 and 557.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

RENTAL APPEALS—ONTARIO

Mr. WHITE (Middlesex East):

1. How many rental appeals in respect of homes, housing and domestic establishments have been heard and adjudicated upon in the province of Ontario in each year and to date since the inception of rent control?

2. How many were heard before county and district court judges?

3. How many have been determined in favour of (a) the tenant; (b) the landlord?

4. In how many such appeals was there an application for (a) increase of rental; (b) decrease of rental?

5. Of such appeals mentioned in question 3 were (a) increases of rental granted; (b) decreases of rental granted?

Mr. MAYHEW: Mr. Speaker, I discussed the subject matter of this question with the hon. member, and he has agreed to drop the question in its present form and reword it.

Mr. SPEAKER: Dropped.

FLOOD CONDITIONS

DAMAGE TO FEDERAL BREAKWATER AT WARD'S ISLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): I should like to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the damage recently done by the worst storm and flood in thirty years to the breakwater at Ward's island. This is a federal government work, and the federal government has admitted responsibility for the maintenance of the breakwater from Ward's island to Gibraltar Point.

Hon. ALPHONSE FOURNIER (Minister of Public Works): I will give instructions to the engineer of my department in Toronto to make a survey of the damage and make a report. If the hon. gentleman is right in saying that we have admitted responsibility, he may be sure that we shall attend to the work.

FREIGHT RATES

INCREASE IN EXPRESS RATE ON EGGS FOR HATCHERIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): May I direct a question to the Minister of Transport, whom I questioned a few days ago about an alleged sharp increase in the express rate on eggs at certain points outside Regina? Can the minister now reply?

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The question which the hon. gentleman asked had to do with an individual shipment of less than 100 pounds—

Mr. COLDWELL: Per crate of thirty dozen.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I have made inquiries of the board and find that under authority of board order No. 70425, the railways on April 8 increased by 21 per cent their express rates which had previously been abnormally reduced to meet truck competition. For quantity shipments of crates of eggs, from the points mentioned, such as Yellowgrass, Milestone, Duval, Dafoe and Davidson, to Regina, the increases per crate vary from 4·7 cents to 6 cents for crates of 30 dozen eggs. For individual shipments weighing less than 100 pounds, the minimum rate was increased to a level apparently commensurate with truck competition. All these increases were made by the railways at their own discretion by virtue of the board order referred to.

If the hon. gentleman will refer to page 88 of the board's judgment he will find an item covering a minimum charge movement.

Mr. COLDWELL: If I may ask a supplementary question, the minister gave the increase in cents in the first instance but not in the second. Has he the figures in cents?

Mr. CHEVRIER: If the hon. gentleman will look at the item covering the minimum charge he will see that the minimum charge for a single less than carload lot shipment is 75 cents per 100 pounds. That is to meet truck competition, as set out in the board's order covering competitive rates.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA

REFERENCE TO APPOINTMENT OF CONSUL IN MONTREAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. DIEFENBAKER (Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I do not know to which minister to direct this question, but I presume it should be the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It has to do with the appointment of Evzon Syrovatka as consul for Czechoslovakia in Montreal. Is this the same man who was declared persona non grata to the United States government for alleged subversive activities, and if so, was the government of Canada consulted before the appointment was made?

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs is not here, but I shall bring the hon. member's question to his attention and perhaps he will wish to make a reply tomorrow.

GOVERNMENT ANNUITIES

INQUIRY AS TO REPORTED INCREASE IN RATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. STANLEY KNOWLES (Winnipeg North Centre): May I address a question to the Minister of Labour? Is it true that the purchase price of government annuities is to be increased, and if so why, particularly at this time when the people of Canada want better old age security?

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): As my hon. friend well knows, probably as well as anyone else in the house, any question of government policy will be stated in due course.

Mr. KNOWLES: Are the reports in the newspapers correct?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

INCOME TAX ACT

INQUIRY AS TO SENDING OF REVISION BILL TO BANKING AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Mr. Speaker, may I again ask the Minister of Finance whether he has reached any conclusion with regard to referring the income tax bill to the banking and commerce committee?

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): No, I have not, Mr. Speaker. My present intention when the preparation of the bill is completed is to refer it to the committee of the whole house, but if circumstances are such that it seems desirable to refer the bill to the banking and commerce committee, perhaps that might be done.

Mr. GRAYDON: Better get some evidence from the farmers while you are at it.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE RESOURCES

INQUIRY AS TO PROCLAMATION OF SCHEDULE III OF BILL 3

On the orders of the day:

Mr. RONALD MOORE (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance of which I did not have time to give him notice. It is based on a report appearing in the Financial Post dated April 17. Is it true that schedule III of the emergency control legislation has not been proclaimed? According to the Post, that is cited as one reason why no further action has been taken recently to curb additional capital imports from the United States. It goes on to say that there has been a heavy flow of purchases of all types of capital goods from the United States in recent months.

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): The whole bill has not yet been proclaimed, because the regulations have not yet been completed. The matters covered by schedule III are now under control of my colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) by virtue of the powers contained in the Foreign Exchange Control Act.

Mr. KNOWLES: He turned it over to you by letter.

COMMUNISM

VIMY DAY ADDRESS OF BRIGADIER MURPHY AT CALGARY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. BROOKE CLAXTON (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Calgary East (Mr. Harkness) asked me whether or not the Minister of National Defence or anyone of the headquarters staff had communicated with Brigadier Murphy regarding a speech he made at Calgary. I did not have full information yesterday, but I now have word from the general officer in command saying that he has communicated with Brigadier Murphy, who assured him that he has received no communication, verbal or otherwise, from any individual whatsoever indicating censure or adverse criticism resulting from his Calgary address.

CIVIL SERVICE

REGULATIONS WITH RESPECT TO HOLDING OF CIVIC OFFICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. T. RICHARD (Ottawa East): I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State, relating to the order in council which bars civil servants from holding civic office where the salary exceeds $500. Will he state whether any representations have been made to him or the government to increase the maximum salary which may be paid to civil servants holding civic office? The matter is of particular interest at this time when there is the possibility of aldermen's salaries being increased.

Hon. COLIN GIBSON (Secretary of State): Some representations have been received, and they are receiving consideration at the present time.

SUPPLY

FREIGHT RATES—INCREASES ORDERED BY TRANSPORT BOARD—AMENDMENT, MR. COLDWELL—SUBAMENDMENT, MR. BRACKEN

The house resumed from Wednesday, April 14, consideration of the motion of Mr. Abbott for committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Coldwell, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Bracken.

Mr. F. S. ZAPLITNY (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, when the house rose yesterday at six o'clock I had pointed out that there were two phases to this issue of increased freight rates.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I have pointed out that there are two phases to this issue of freight rate increases, namely, the general increase of 21 per cent across the board, and the question of equalization of freight rates across the country.

On April 7 the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell), who leads this group, put the following motion as reported at page 2743 of Hansard:

> . . . this house is of the opinion that the failure of the government to defer the imposition of the increases in freight rates recently authorized by the board of transport commissioners is inimical to the best interests of the people of Canada; further this house is of the opinion that the government should reconsider this matter and take action to prevent the proposed increases from coming into effect at this time.

What the debate has been about since that motion was moved has been chiefly whether the present government at Ottawa should take the responsibility—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. May I ask the hon. members to keep silent? I would ask the hon. member who has the floor if he will be kind enough to speak louder.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Thank you; I shall do my best. Before I am through I believe I shall be able to make myself heard. I like to wind up slowly.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Speak up.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: You will hear presently more than you bargained for.

As I said, the debate so far has been on the motion of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar. Later the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) moved an amendment to the amendment which, for all practical purposes, is merely a paraphrased version of the original amendment. The debate has revolved around whether or not the government should take the responsibility of deferring the imposition of the new freight rates, or whether the matter should be shelved or passed on to some other body. I hold in my hand a clipping which was handed to me only today which I think indicates the wisdom of the plea which my leader made for deferring the imposition of these rates until further consideration is given to them and until the provinces have had an opportunity to put their case before the board, if reconsideration is to be given to them. The clipping refers to the situation at the port of Halifax. It is dated Halifax, April 14. I submit that this has a very strong bearing on what we have had to say in this house, because the dispatch says:

Provincial government and waterfront officials today protested anew against increased freight rates as they considered its latest ramification—diversion of vessels from this port to avoid long rail hauls for cargoes. First example of this was the freighter Martha Kleppe, which arrived here today from Suez with 3,100 tons of peanut products and other cargo, consigned to Hamilton, Ontario. When about 1,000 tons had been discharged, the consignees changed their instructions and ordered the ship to New York. From there the goods would be sent to a great lakes port. An hour later it was learned that the English Prince, also carrying a cargo from the far east, had been diverted from Halifax to Montreal to save rail charges.

President J. J. Campbell, of the longshoremen's association, said the two diversions were examples of "what is in the wind."

"If we lose the far east business, we might as well hang out the crepe," he said.

Here is one example, and perhaps one of the first, to show that the tax increase of 21 per cent may have a more upsetting effect so far as the maritime provinces are concerned than was intended. That is to say, the transportation system of the two railways in the maritimes may find that instead of increasing the revenue by increasing the rates, they may actually receive less revenue in the long run, because shipping will be diverted from its regular course to the waterways in order to avoid paying higher rates. What is true of the maritime provinces is, to a certain extent, also true of the central provinces. There happens to be truck competition in the two central provinces. There is water competition for the maritime provinces. For these reasons the railways are faced with one of two alternatives. They have either to keep the rates low enough to compete with these other systems of transportation and face a deficit, or put their rates up in some other part of Canada to make up the difference in the revenue. The result will be that, if the railway companies decide not to go the full length of the increase in the two central provinces because of the competition, they will eventually, in order to keep the revenue up, have to place still higher rates on the four western provinces. All this goes to show that it is time the government took an over-all view of the whole transportation system and took immediate steps to see that equalization and justice are given to all parts of Canada.

The suggestions made by my leader in the course of his speech following his motion have, to some extent, been already adopted by the government, although under very severe pressure—but not to the full extent that they would have been adopted had the private members of the party that supports the government, and who sit across the way, and who at the first instance had been in the rebel camp, not too quickly laid down their arms. I believe they had a great opportunity to force the hand of the government on this issue, and they certainly should have used it. Of course I realize that things have happened since the motion was moved. We are told that there was a most powerful caucus held by the Liberal party, and according to the Journal of April 14 it appears that the whip was used mercilessly and ruthlessly, and whipped into line those so-called rebels who threatened to jump the line. According to the Journal we find that they were told very bluntly, because this issue is such an embarrassing one, because the risk of an election at this time might prove disastrous, they had better support the government, "or else", regardless of whether or not they had to face the music when they got back home.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Were you there?

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Apparently there was somebody in on it, because I am now going to quote from the Journal, which says this, referring to the statement of the Prime Minister:

It had been his idea since 1945, he told his followers, that the government should live out its full term of office,—

A very desirable objective. I continue:

—delaying an appeal to the country until the spring of 1950.

Then the report says this:

It was after this discussion that he discussed the government's position on the freight rates issue, bluntly telling the members they would have to fall into line.

Here is the real thing:

Should there be any deviation from party loyalty bringing an adverse vote, it would mean a general election on the unwanted freight rates issue.

I do not know whether he meant an unwanted issue or unwanted rates. Further down the article says this, to soften the blow a little bit:

The election would be the only possible course, and he warned his followers he believed the country would be "angry" and "resent" an appeal to it on the freight rates issue in view of the much more serious world situation.

I cannot conceive of the world situation being so serious at any time that it would prevent a government from submitting its stewardship to the judgment of the Canadian people. If the government feel that they are right on this issue, and would like confirmation of it from the Canadian people, I do not believe that they should use this subterfuge or a smoke-screen or any excuse to by-pass it and say to their followers: You will support the government because of the international situation, regardless of whether our domestic policies are right or wrong.

It is no secret that we have had two general elections in this country during the war, and the international situation then must certainly have been more serious than it is now. Yet at the present time, when the Prime Minister apparently feels that the issues are not favourable to the government, he warns his followers, You will support the government or take the consequences. I believe they will have to take the consequences in either event —if not now, at any rate later.

The minister also referred to the way in which the government treated the premiers of the provinces. The provincial governments made a very reasonable request asking that the government defer the putting into effect of the increase until they had had an opportunity to prepare and present their case on appeal. Instead of granting that very reasonable request, the government of course, in their famous order in council which was tabled in the house on April 7, told the premiers bluntly that they would do nothing of the sort.

I wish to quote briefly from an editorial which appeared recently in a newspaper which has recently begun publication. I refer to the Winnipeg Citizen, which to the best of my knowledge and belief expresses an independent point of view. I quote:

Without a master hand at the controls, the government at Ottawa discloses an innate ability to take the wrong course. Latest of its maladroit moves must be considered the decision to refrain from delaying the enforcement of the 21 per cent rate increase permitted by the board of transport commissioners.

On April 24, the government is to meet the premiers of seven provinces to hear their representations on the matter.

Incidentally, the premiers have not yet appeared here; therefore the case has been prejudged. To continue:

There can seldom have been a more discourteous move on the part of a senior government than so to permit the subject of an appeal to be enforced before hearing the appellants' case. The premiers will meet to discuss an operation already settled and in effect. Is it to be supposed that Ottawa will reverse this fait accompli and thus create even more confusion?

It is doubtful if greater confusion is possible. The editorial goes on to say:

Operation "dropping the pilot" has not shown evidences of careful planning. In Mr. King's heyday there would not have been the series of tactical blunders perpetrated in the house and out of it in the past few months, seemingly the result of the lack of his masterful technique. Or is it that the government is old and tired?

I hope the electors will not allow the government to die of old age. No doubt they will take care of that. The point is, however, that this government, with perfect propriety, and I believe in perfect justice, could have given in to the plea of the premiers of the seven provinces and waited at least until they could prepare their appeal and take it to the proper body.

It is not only discourteous but it is taking an unfair advantage of any appellant when you have prejudged his case and handed him an accomplished fact before he has had an opportunity to lay the evidence before the judge.

I want to refer to the discrimination which exists between different parts of Canada in the matter of freight rates. Often in this house we have deplored, or those of us from western Canada have deplored, the fact that western Canada, which has so many varied resources, has not the secondary industry which it should have in order to develop those resources and convert them into finished products. We are being put in the position all the time of having to produce our raw material and ship it east, paying freight rate on it, and then have it shipped back in finished form, paying freight rate on it again.

I believe the members of the house will agree when I say that one of the reasons for the lack of population in the west as compared with the central provinces is the fact that we have not been able to establish industry in our part of the country to the point that it should have been established by this time. One of the reasons for that is that the freight rate system works against any manufacturing industry in western Canada.

I have here some figures which I should like to put on Hansard. I will not put them all on, because we have been figured to death in the house in the last few days, but those that I am about to give are significant in that they show how the difference in the rates works against manufacturing in western Canada.

Let us take canned goods, for example. If you shipped canned goods from Vancouver to Calgary, a distance of 642 miles, the rate would be 98 cents per 100 pounds, whereas from Chatham, Ontario, to Thetford Mines, Quebec, which is 678 miles, a longer distance, the rate is only 45 cents per 100 pounds, or less than half the rate charged in the west.

Take cement. On a 300-mile haul the rate in western Canada or on the prairies is 24 cents per 100 pounds while in Ontario and Quebec it is only 19 cents.

Or take livestock. On a 300-mile haul on the prairies the rate is 30 cents per 100 pounds and in Ontario and Quebec it is 27 cents.

I have heard the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Wylie), which is in the province of Alberta, make the statement that if irrigation could be developed in his part of the province they could raise there vegetables which could compete with those produced in any part of Canada. I am not going to comment on the soundness of that statement, because I do not know. I take his word for it. But even if they could grow vegetables and can them there, with the freight rate system as it is operating against them they would have to pay more than twice the rate per 100 pounds to ship vegetables than is charged in the central provinces.

I want to make it clear that I am not joining in any criticism of the two central provinces. The people in Ontario and Quebec are not in the least responsible for the discrepancy in the freight rate system. That is something that is the responsibility and duty of the federal government, because we have a Department of Transport and a Minister of Transport—a genial minister, by the way—and it is their responsibility and duty to see to it that the transportation system of the country, and particularly the railroads, shall serve the needs of the Canadian people as conveniently and as efficiently as possible and that the burden is distributed as fairly as it can be across the dominion.

Had the Minister of Transport accepted the motion moved by our leader in the first instance, most of this debate would have been unnecessary, but we have been put in the position in this house of having to get piecemeal concessions from the government by putting pressure after pressure upon it. That seems to be the only course which we can follow at the present time.

Earlier in this debate mention was made of certain rates on off-line hauls of grain, and today a question was asked about rates on eggs, which again is evidence to show that the effect of the 21 per cent increase on branch lines in some parts of Canada is going to be even more serious than had been expected in the first instance.

The government has made the promise that it will submit to the board of transport commissioners, for another investigation, the whole question of equalization. It is doubtful whether, after the board has already sat for eighteen months, and after the government has had several opportunities to submit the question to the board, a submission at this time will bring any greater results than were achieved before.

I believe that we might be farther ahead in the long run if we were to admit that what is required is not another face-lifting job on this freight rate structure, but rather a major overhaul, and that the whole question should be submitted to an independent commission which would by-pass and perhaps to a certain extent forget the past history of the whole freight rate structure—all the prejudices and all the injustices that have crept in—and start from scratch to bring forth a plan which could be developed and brought into being.

On this point I wish to quote, again from the Winnipeg Citizen, a paragraph which I believe has a great deal of wisdom in it. It is as follows:

> It is doubtful whether the present board, or any board appointed with the view of control of railway rates and practices, is competent to adjudicate the question so full of complexities outside the normal sphere of its authority. If the government wishes to carry the confidence of the country with it, it will appoint an absolutely independent commission of a calibre equal to the importance of the issue and empower it to inquire into every phase and its full bearing upon public welfare.

I want to say that I agree with that paragraph. In other words, what is required now is an independent commissioner, perhaps a royal commission, which would take evidence across Canada apart altogether from the views of the railway companies or any interested persons, but based upon the welfare of the nation, and try to formulate a transportation plan which would work fairly in all parts of the dominion. I realize that it would not be an easy task, and it could not be done in a month or two. But from all appearances, even if it is handed to the board of transport commissioners, with all their experts and all the technical advice they can get, it is admitted that it may be a year, eighteen months or even longer before they can bring in their report or their judgment on the question of equalization.

There is something else to consider, and that is that we have reached the point in our transportation system where it is impossible to divorce railway transportation from truck, bus and boat competition. I think the whole system must now be taken as a unit for future purposes. In a modern country we can use all the forms of transportation we can lay our hands on, and I do not believe it will be necessary to displace any labour in the building up of a unified system of transportation. I think we can co-ordinate and synchronize the transportation of this country without displacing a single person, because we are still definitely in the expansionist stage of our transportation system.

We have been told in this house that we are now in the atomic age. On paper I suppose that is true, but much of our transportation is still just emerging from the horse and buggy stage. All we have to do is to go south across the boundary line to the United States, look at some of their forms of transportation, and compare them with some of ours. I am not saying that all of ours are in that stage. For example, we have the Trans-Canada Air Lines, which is almost a model of efficiency; we also have railway transportation which is of a high order. But much of our transportation is still in a backward stage of development. I think one of the reasons for that is the fact that in the past we have relied upon the principle of competition in a commercial way to provide transportation for this country. I believe that, up to a point, competition can be useful, but when it begins to interfere with the efficiency of the transportation system, when it is creating a chaotic condition or when it is getting to the point where competition becomes practically an end in itself, with each system of transportation trying to cut the throat of the other, it is time we began to think in terms of co-operation in respect to our transportation system.

In common, no doubt, with most other hon. members, I have had representations from trucking concerns and motor transport companies complaining bitterly about the encroachment of the railways upon their type of business. Plenty of evidence can be obtained from the railroads taking the opposite view. I think we in this country can make ourselves almost ridiculous if we go too far in that direction, if we take it that competition is such a good thing that we must compete each other to death. Even the most rabid private enterpriser, I think, will admit that when it comes to certain public utilities—and transportation is fast becoming a public utility in this country—there is a field for public ownership, or at least for a certain amount of social control in order that we may have co-ordination and synchronization of transport for the convenience and use of the public. I believe the criterion should be efficiency, convenience, and value for dollars spent, rather than the financial or commercial success of any form of transportation.

I will conclude, Mr. Speaker, by making a further plea to the government to consider carefully the question of acceding to the reasonable request made from this side of the house that a stay of the imposition of these freight rates be granted until the provinces have had an opportunity to prepare and submit their case in the proper way to the proper body.

Mr. J. A. ROSS (Souris): I should like to offer a few comments, Mr. Speaker, on this freight rate issue. First of all I should like to quote the order in council under date of April 7, P.C. 1486:

> The committee of the privy council have had before them the petition of the transportation commission of the maritime board of trade (representing, inter alia, the governments of the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island), and representations on behalf of the governments of the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia to vary order No. 70425 of the board of transport commissioners for Canada of March 30, 1948, by providing that tariff schedules published and filed under the provisions of the said order be not effective until at least thirty days from the date of the said order.
>
> The committee of the privy council, having given due consideration to the said petitions and representations, are unable to advise that the said order of the board of transport commissioners for Canada be varied in the sense requested.

This was signed by A. D. P. Heeney, clerk of the privy council.

As a further basis for my remarks I should like to quote the amendment which was so well introduced by my leader (Mr. Bracken), and also to endorse all the arguments so well advanced by him in presenting that amendment on April 13 with regard to this issue. The amendment reads:

That all the words after "this house" in the fourth line of the amendment be deleted, and that the following be substituted instead thereof:

"regrets the government's failure to secure the removal of inequalities and discriminations in the Canadian railway freight rates structure before the imposition of a horizontal increase of twenty-one per cent—an increase which is bound to intensify the aforesaid inequalities and discriminations; and

"Furthermore regrets that the government has refused the reasonable request of seven provinces that the imposition of increased freight rates recently authorized by the board of transport commissioners be delayed for thirty days until they could be heard."

The granting of this increase by the board certainly is going to intensify these discriminations, and in many cases will result in hardship upon those least able to pay. To some of these small shippers the increase will be as much as fifty per cent; to those who cannot afford to buy large quantities the burden will be great.

The situation is worse west of Fort William, where we find the mileage principle introduced. For instance, in parts of the prairie provinces we have to pay $169 more for a Chrysler car produced in Windsor than you pay for it in Ontario. For a light delivery truck we pay $150 more per unit than in Ontario. On an electric range we pay approximately $7 more, while the difference on refrigerators runs anywhere from $6.25 to $12.75 more per unit. For an ordinary washing machine we pay approximately $5 more per unit on the prairies than you do in the east. The farmer certainly is penalized, because he pays approximately $48 more for his binder than is charged in Ontario, while on the 16 to 25 horsepower tractor the difference is $112.

I might go on and quote many other items, but perhaps a few figures as to freight charges for comparable distances would be sufficient. On an average haul of one hundred miles there is a difference of 4·6 per cent. On a haul of four hundred miles the rate is 12 per cent higher on the prairies than in the east. On grain we pay 13 per cent more per ton mile, and on lumber, which is quite an item to many producers on the prairies, the difference is 31·1 per cent more per ton mile. On some commodities the difference is much greater. In certain parts of Alberta it is as much as 85 per cent more than in Ontario for certain distances. On bituminous coal the difference is 36·6 per cent.

[Mr. Ross (Souris).]

I spoke of the difference on lumber. I would remind this house that according to the last issue of the Bank of Canada statistical summary the price of lumber in this country has advanced more than 216 per cent, and that does not take into account the higher freight rates, which will be a further increase. That is going to be quite an item for many people throughout the prairies. Certainly it will add to the cost of living. According to that same statement the cost of living index for the previous month was 150·8, an all-time high in the history of Canada; and again that did not take into consideration these increased freight rates. The other day the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier), while presenting his argument in defence of the increase, placed on Hansard at page 2903 a table showing the rates from sources of supply to certain points in Canada. According to this table the greatest increase in the freight rate on lumber is on shipments to Manitoba, that increase ranging from $1.86·7 to $3.85·3 per thousand feet.

I have listened to arguments presented in behalf of various parts of Canada, the maritimes, British Columbia and so on. While I agree that the situation is difficult in British Columbia, I should like to place on Hansard certain figures which will give some idea of the benefit derived from competitive water rates. These figures deal with the year 1945, but I do not think there has been any significant change since that time.

The rate from Montreal to Vancouver on calcium phosphate is 75 cents, while the rate from Montreal to Calgary, because of the mountain differential, is $2.34½. On ammonia the rate from Montreal to Vancouver is $1.25; to Calgary it is $2.33½. On glassware the rate to Vancouver is $1.34 and $1.98 to Calgary. The rate on window glass is $1.00 to Vancouver and $1.98 to Calgary. On paint and varnish the rate is $1.25 to Vancouver and $1.98 to Calgary. The rate on barbed wire is 75 cents to Vancouver and $1.98 to Calgary, while on hardware and tools the respective rates are $1.25 and $1.98. I could mention such other items as structural steel, iron pipe, canned goods, and so on, but I do not think it necessary at this time.

As I say, those differences result from the zoning and the mountain differential, and I am afraid many people in Canada do not realize that these materials can be shipped much greater distances at considerable saving when they are sent by water. In any event, the people of Alberta probably bear the greatest brunt of these discriminatory freight rates; and this further increase is certain to add to their burdens.

I certainly believe something should be done to equalize freight rates in this country, though I am not sure how that might be brought about. In the Globe and Mail of this morning I noticed an editorial dealing with this matter, headed, "The answer is more people". The editorial says:

The immediate issue before the house was whether railway freight rates should be advanced by 21 per cent in accordance with the ruling of the transport commission. The government is in favour of granting the increase at once. Objectors argue that, to begin with, certain "discriminations" should be ironed out. This demand, of course, comes exclusively from the western and maritime provinces, which, as everyone admits, will have to carry the large burden of the higher railway charges.

Further on the editorial continues:

Why must the people of the west and the maritimes rescue the railways by paying higher freight rates while Ontario and Quebec escape the extra levy almost entirely? It looks unfair, but it is not due either to the wicked selfishness of the central provinces or to special privileges they enjoy. The reason for it is that they are in a competitively favourable position. Ontario and Quebec are, by Canadian standards, well populated and originate much traffic. Furthermore, it is traffic which can move by water or highway if railway charges go too high. Therefore freight rates are lower here than in parts of the country which are thinly populated and lack the services of ships and trucks. This is inescapable economics which no amount of argument can alter.

Further on the editorial states:

It takes very little imagination to see that the right answer to the freight rates problem—the way to make transport cheap for the people of the now unfavoured regions—is to increase their numbers by immigration.

Then the last sentence reads:

What the country needs is a bold conception of its own future and some practical leadership.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I wish the problem were as simple as that. I agree with those comments; I hold no brief either for or against these two great provinces of Ontario and Quebec. But I do not believe immigration will take care of this problem in Canada. I want to put myself on record as to this question of immigration. More than once in this house I have argued for a much greater selective immigration to this country; but that would not cure the present difficulty. I have before me The Economic Annalist, issued by the federal Department of Agriculture. On page 5 it is pointed out that in 1946 there were 59,000 fewer people living on the prairies than in 1941. Most of the decline took place in Saskatchewan, but this movement is felt in the three western provinces, and it has been continuing since those figures, the latest available, were issued. In the same article I find this statement:

The number of people living on farms in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta declined by about 145,000, or nearly 13 per cent, in the period between 1941 and 1946.

My point is that under the policies of this government, both during the war years and today, that movement has been taking place; and it would be unfair and unjust to attempt to cure it by immigration without at the same time altering those governmental policies which have been responsible for it.

The following statement was made by the United States agricultural attaché at Ottawa, Mr. Francis A. Flood, when he addressed the federation of agriculture at Brockville this past winter. I quote just one paragraph of his speech, a report of which appeared in the Rural Co-operator, as follows:

I have heard Doctor J. F. Booth, of your Department of Agriculture, say that Manitoba and North Dakota have more in common with each other than Manitoba and Ontario or than North Dakota and New York state; that New York state and Ontario have more in common with each other than they do with their own prairie states.

The lines of similarity seem to run north and south rather than east and west—so that had arbitrary political lines been run north and south instead of east and west like the Mason-Dixon line and the border here, there would really have been more sense to it from the economic and social standpoint.

I want to make my position clear. I have always been proud of this Canadian nation. I have never had any time for those who talk about seceding or anything of that nature. However, I do want to point out the difficulties and strains faced by our confederation. I have pointed out repeatedly that I do not think we are making the most of our great nation. We have probably more undeveloped resources than any other country. We have many sparsely populated areas, and with the proper policy we could easily make a much greater nation of Canada than has been done during the past.

Further to the contrast between conditions in North Dakota and Manitoba—the province with which I am best acquainted, although I do considerable travelling in North Dakota—I have before me a recent issue of Searle's grain index, which gives a comparison of the cash receipts of the United States farmer and the Canadian prairie farmer. It shows that the cash receipts of the prairie farmer in 1947 for all farm products averaged $3,623 per farm family, while the cash receipts in the state of North Dakota averaged $14,940 per farm family. That is gross income, but I would think the percentages would be the same for net income. This gives some idea of the economic trials during the past years of the farmer on the prairies as compared with the farmer in the United States.

I have another editorial here to which I should like to refer; it was published in a journal which certainly cannot be accused of being anti-Liberal—the Winnipeg Free Press. The issue of April 12 contains an editorial headed, "A blow at the west." It is a long editorial and I shall read only portions of it. I quote:

> Thus the burden of the $70 million per year increase now granted to the railways must fall chiefly upon the west and to a lesser extent upon the maritimes.
>
> Having decided to oppose the board's judgment, the seven provincial governments did two things: they asked the dominion government by telegraph to postpone the coming into effect of the rate increase until after their appeal has been heard, and second, they agreed to meet at Ottawa on April 24 to work out a common procedure of appeal.
>
> So matters rested until Wednesday, last, when Hon. Lionel Chevrier, dominion Minister of Transport, stated in the House of Commons that although petitions of appeal had been received from the seven provincial governments, the dominion government "has decided that it should not interfere with the effective date of the board's order." He qualified this statement with the phrase "without prejudice to any appeal." At the same time he tabled a copy of order in council (P.C. 1486) passed on April 7. This order states that the cabinet has before it the petitions of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, and the representations of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia and proceeds:
>
> "The committee of the privy council, having given due consideration to the said petitions and representations, are unable to advise that the said order of the board of transport commissioners for Canada be varied in the sense requested."
>
> Not since the transport board, a quarter century ago, undertook to throw out Crowsnest Pass rates has western Canada been treated so rudely and harshly . . .

Mr. SPEAKER: I have permitted the hon. member to quote from newspapers, but I would ask him to refer to citation 306 of Beauchesne's second edition, where he will find that it is not the practice of the house to quote articles which emanate from outside parliament. The house is interested in having the representations of members on the matter before the house, but not those of outsiders.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I shall abide by your ruling. I am sorry if I have followed the example of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and members of the cabinet. They have set me a bad example in this respect in other debates. I shall abide by your ruling and not follow them any further.

[Mr. Ross (Souris).]

Mr. SPEAKER: Some hon. members may blame me for having given already too much liberty to the hon. member for Souris.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Without quoting it I would say that the editorial goes on to point out that the minister's statement did not appear in the order in council. The editorial says that it is a misstatement of fact, and it goes on to say that as the government has handled these seven provinces very shabbily, surely the members from British Columbia and the prairie and maritime provinces will represent the people who sent them to the house as members of parliament.

In contrast to the editorial in that great Liberal journal, which certainly was written with great feeling, it has been a surprise to me during the last few days that supporters of the government from British Columbia, the prairies and the maritimes should rise in their places in this house and ignore completely the wishes of the vast majority of the people who had made it possible for them to be members of this House of Commons. More than that, they have completely ignored these requests from the governments of the provinces from which they come.

During the time that I have been privileged to be a member here I have given careful study to this matter, and have come to the conclusion that I should vote and talk in the interests, first of the people in my riding, then of the people in the great province from which I come, and then of the people of Canada generally. I would hope that every member of this House of Commons would so vote on this important issue of freight rates.

I remember that in the past a great issue was made of an incident when the Prime Minister, probably in some heat—I was not a member at that time—said that he would not give a five-cent piece to a Conservative government in any province. What is the situation today? First of all we have a coalition government in British Columbia. Then in Alberta there is a Social Credit government. In Saskatchewan there is a C.C.F. government. In the great middle province of Manitoba we have a very efficient coalition government.

An hon. MEMBER: Where is the Tory government?

Mr. ROSS (Souris): There is one standing right here who will vote as his conscience dictates. Then we go to New Brunswick, where they have a Liberal government. There are the provinces of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island where they have their Liberal governments. Therefore it is difficult for me to understand the attitude of the Minister of Transport, the Prime Minister, and this government.

They may think that they are showing a strong hand, but I think it is really a sign of decay, a case of being in office too long. They might well have heeded the request of these seven provincial governments and stayed this judgment for some thirty days while the arguments of the provinces were being prepared, so that they could discuss the matter with the department and the government on a proper basis.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Does the hon. member remember a similar occasion in 1920 when a stay of a similar board order was asked for and refused under similar circumstances?

Mr. ROSS (Souris): No, that was long before my time in the House of Commons. I do not live too much in the past. I am more concerned with the present and future welfare of the people of my province.

Mr. GARDINER: There was a good Conservative government in power then.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I am not interested even in that, but rather in a future Conservative government administering the affairs of this country for the welfare of the people of Canada.

Mr. CHEVRIER: And interested in a little politics as well.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I should be happy if I could ever rival the Minister of Transport in political astuteness.

I do not wish to take up more time, Mr. Speaker. In conclusion I earnestly appeal to every member of this house to give thought to the welfare of the people who sent him here. According to the Ottawa Journal this government had a very serious caucus of its members last Tuesday, and it is reported that the Prime Minister told them that this parliament should live out its full term. He probably threatened some of the boys with an election, which would not be palatable to many of them if the issue were increased freight rates. It has been amusing to me to see some of the boys opposite who were regarded almost as outlaws a few days ago now coming back into the house and attempting to swallow themselves on this great issue. I trust that every member of the house, irrespective of political affiliation, will vote in the interests of the constituents who sent them here and bear in mind the request which has been made by seven provincial premiers for a stay of the board's order.

Mr. A. M. NICHOLSON (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, many members have spoken eloquently in this debate, but a good deal of material is still available that has not been discussed, and I propose to introduce some new ideas.

In the first place I would urge upon the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) that he stay in Ottawa a little more. I realize that pressing duties take him away from the capital from time to time, but it is unfortunate that in two major catastrophes occurring within the last six months the minister was away from Ottawa. I refer to the government's policy in connection with coarse grains which was announced last fall when the minister was in Saskatchewan, and to the recent decision of the board of transport commissioners increasing freight rates. I feel that the minister's absence places him in a very embarrassing position when he has to go back and justify government policy to his friends in Saskatchewan.

In view of the fact that seven of the nine provincial premiers are slated to be in Ottawa this month to interview the government, I cannot think of any good reason why the operation of the board's order could not have been stayed until the premiers were given the opportunity to speak for the people they represent.

I also cannot understand why the government has not taken action to give some relief to the Canadian National Railways in its overcapitalization. This is a problem which has been on our hands for many years, and if the government was really concerned about its own railway it could have afforded relief by adjusting the railway's capitalization. Prior to the amalgamation of the different railways into the Canadian National Railways system these railways were running in the red at the rate of nearly $1,000,000 a week, and I think it was quite unreasonable to ask the publicly-owned utility to take over a bankrupt set of railways and try to operate them in the clear year after year.

When the president of the Canadian National Railways, Mr. Vaughan, was before the railways and shipping committee in 1946 he outlined in some detail the proposals which his company had made to the government. At page 19 of the evidence he said:

> I referred last year to a recommendation of mine that the government accept income bonds of the Canadian National Railway Company in payment of the amount owing by the railway to the government for repatriation of British securities.

Mr. Vaughan also presented a table to the committee comparing the position of the Canadian National Railways with first-class railways in the United States. It showed that the Canadian National Railways had a ratio of fixed charges to operating revenues in 1939 of 26·24 per cent. Its competitor in Canada, the Canadian Pacific Railway, had a ratio of 16·76 per cent; the Pennsylvania Railway, 18·47 per cent; the New York Central, 14·10 per cent; the Southern Pacific, 13·79 per cent; the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe, 6·91 per cent; the Union Pacific, 8·66 per cent; the Baltimore and Ohio, 12·68 per cent. The class one railways of the United States which I have just mentioned averaged a ratio of 15·21 per cent. By 1944, owing to accelerated war traffic, there was a marked improvement in the ratio of all these companies, but still the Canadian National Railways was forced to operate at a very serious disadvantage. Its ratio had been reduced to 11·44 as compared with 6·50 for the Canadian Pacific, and 6·00 for the class one railroads which I have just mentioned in the United States.

At page 25 Mr. Vaughan said:

> If the government of the day had not wished or desired to protect private capital, a number of the railways which now make up the Canadian National would have been forced into liquidation because of the fact that they could not meet the interest charges on their funded debt, and the result would have been that their funded debt would have been reduced to a point where they could earn interest charges on it.

Mr. ISNOR: Does that statement apply to the United States lines as well?

Mr. NICHOLSON: No, he is speaking of the Canadian National.

Mr. ISNOR: The lines in the United States are privately owned.

Mr. NICHOLSON: But they have been taken to the cleaners and have adjusted their capitalization, and so they can show a fair ratio of fixed charges to operating revenues.

Mr. ISNOR: They are privately owned.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I am not suggesting that the Canadian government should have asked people outside of Canada who had invested their money in the Canadian National Railways securities to take a loss on their investment. What I am saying is that the government should place the financial balance sheet of the Canadian National Railways in a proper light so that the railway would not for ever be held up to the criticism of those who oppose public ownership that it is always running in the red.

The president of the railway was asked by the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Jackman) whether the railway would be satisfied if the proposals made by the president the year before, that the government accept income bonds in payment of amounts owing by the railway, were accepted. Mr. Vaughan replied:

> We would say that we should have a proper set-up, one which would make our fixed charges not more than twenty-five per cent of what they are today. If you do that, if you would make our fixed charges not more than 25 per cent of what they are, we would not come back again. But this would be only a partial remedy of the situation.

I might say that on the basis of the financial statement we had before us at that time, that sort of adjustment would have given the Canadian National Railways around $30,000,000 a year more than they had.

Mr. CHEVRIER: May I interrupt?

Mr. NICHOLSON: Yes.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I presume the hon. member is referring to the suggestion of the acceptance of income bonds in lieu of notes.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Yes.

Mr. CHEVRIER: If that is what he is referring to, it would only be a matter of some $10,000,000 or $12,000,000.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Yes; that was all that would be saved by the government accepting income bonds. But as the president replied to the hon. member for Rosedale, if the Canadian National Railways was placed in a competitive position with the Canadian Pacific Railway and similar class one railways in the United States, they would have to have an adjustment of their capital stock, reducing the fixed charges to not more than 25 per cent of what they had been for the previous year. If they had paid only 25 per cent of that, it would have given them the sort of adjustment they were expecting at that time in an upward revision of the freight rates. I suggest that if the government was sincere in giving the Canadian National some very practical help, instead of authorizing the increase in freight rates it would be much more practical to have made—

Mr. CHEVRIER: May I interrupt? The hon. gentleman is incorrect when he says that the government authorized the increase in freight rates. He is misrepresenting the position entirely.

Mr. NICHOLSON: According to the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) the recommendations of the board of transport commissioners were not final. The cabinet would have the final say. He promised the people of Saskatchewan that nothing would happen; immediately therefore in the final analysis the cabinet must take the responsibility for approving or disapproving this increase. The cabinet cannot shirk that responsibility.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Apparently the hon. member did not listen to my speech.

Mr. KNOWLES: We read your order in council.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I was interested in reading some of the evidence given by the late Senator McGeer at the hearings in Vancouver in June of last year. I understand that the late Senator McGeer spoke for nearly four hours during the hearings, and made such an eloquent argument that none of the counsel appearing for the railways was able to pick any flaws in his case or embarrass him in any detail. Senator McGeer made reference to the very large percentage of preference holdings outside of Canada. In looking up the annual report for this year I was interested to find on page 20 that ·51 of one per cent of the preference holdings were held in Canada, 96·64 per cent in the United Kingdom, ·34 of one per cent in the United States, and 2·51 per cent in other countries.

Mr. ISNOR: Which company?

Mr. NICHOLSON: The Canadian Pacific. The late Senator McGeer was very eloquent in protesting against a proposal to increase the toll on Canadian citizens to protect such a large number of people living outside of Canada. He had something to say about the board of directors; he said that there is only one member of the board of directors who lives west of Toronto, the Hon. Eric W. Hamber, Vancouver. He pointed out that the list of directors includes: The Right Hon. Sir John Anderson, London, England; Edwin G. Baker, Toronto; L. J. Belnap, Montreal; Hon. F. Philippe Brais, Montreal; D'Alton C. Coleman, Montreal; Hon. Charles A. Dunning, Montreal; G. Blair Gordon, Montreal; Hon. Eric W. Hamber, Vancouver; John W. Hobbs, Toronto; Louis L. Lang, Kitchener; W. A. Mather, Montreal; R. S. McLaughlin, Oshawa; Ross H. McMaster Montreal; Sir Edward Peacock, London, England; Howard P. Robinson, Saint John; Robert C. Stanley, New York; G. A. Walker, K.C., Montreal. Senator McGeer had some rather unkind remarks to make about his old friend, Hon. Charles Dunning. He said:

> Take Hon. Charles Dunning. He started in England and got everything in the way of progress from the confidence that western Canadians placed in him. Probably no one is more guilty in the estimation of railway men of making greater blunders in railway building in Canada than this same Mr. Charles Dunning.

On page 8332 of the evidence Senator McGeer referred to the 1946 Canadian National deficit of $8,961,000 resulting from including a charge for interest on government loans of $21,322,583. He said:

> Why does the government of Canada want interest on its own public utilities? We financed this war through the chartered banks in substantial measure by using deposit certificates. We got the money at three-quarters of one per cent and every chartered bank financing the war on that basis was in the excess profits taxes brackets. Imagine a nationally-owned public utility corporation asking for an increase in rates to pay $21,000,000 of interest into the federal treasury, when in the post war period we lent England a billion and a quarter dollars for five years. We did not say to her that we wanted any interest. No, we said for five years you are to pay no interest. Further we said we won't accept any interest from you on that loan unless your economic position is such that you can pay it.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): On a point of order, how much longer is the hon. member going to read from this essay that he has in front of him?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Is the hon. member reading from a committee report that has been tabled?

Mr. NICHOLSON: I was reading from the evidence that was given before the board of transport commissioners.

Mr. CHEVRIER: That is not evidence; that is a statement made by counsel.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I should like to know what you call the evidence given by the former mayor of Vancouver to the chairman of the board of transport commissioners when the board was sitting in Vancouver trying to find out what public opinion was in connection with the matter. I should like a ruling, Mr. Speaker, as to whether I am in order in discussing it.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I submit with respect that the hon. member is not in order if he is quoting a statement made by the late Mr. McGeer, who was not a witness, but counsel.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I would like a ruling, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I understand that the hon. member is reading from part of the record?

Mr. NICHOLSON: I am reading from part of the evidence given by the late Senator McGeer when the board of transport commissioners sat in Vancouver and invited publicly interested organizations to appear to give evidence for or against the increase in freight rates.

Mr. CHEVRIER: What was the date?

Mr. NICHOLSON: June 19, 1947.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: It is not very clear to me whether the hon. member is reading from the record, but hon. members have been allowed to read from newspapers which I do not think they should have been permitted to do. Under the circumstances I am going to allow the hon. member to continue.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): It was not allowed a few minutes ago.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): I rise on the same point again. Within the last hour an hon. member was called to order for reading from a newspaper, and he had to desist. That took place before you, sir, took the chair.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Yesterday afternoon I recall that a number of hon. members read newspaper articles, which I do not think they should have been allowed to do. I do not think it was in order. Probably I should state now that it is not in order for an hon. member to read from a newspaper or to read any statement made outside of the house reflecting on any debate which is before the house. At the present time it is not clear to me that the hon. member for Mackenzie is not reading evidence from the record; therefore I am not going to stop him. I would ask him to use his discretion as to how much further he should read.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I have finished that particular part.

Mr. MITCHELL: May I ask the hon. member for the source of the remarks he is reading?

Mr. NICHOLSON: If the hon. member had stayed in the house and listened he would understand. He does not expect me to repeat it three times.

Mr. MITCHELL: I say to my hon. friend that I spend more time in the house than he does.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I announced that I was quoting from page 8332 of the evidence which was taken during the hearings when the board of transport commissioners were in Vancouver. I was quoting from the evidence given by the late Senator McGeer.

Mr. KNOWLES: He is not even listening now when you do answer his question.

An hon. MEMBER: What has the hon. gentleman in his hand?

Mr. NICHOLSON: I have my notes in my hand and the hon. gentleman is free to check on it. At page 8365 of the evidence the late Senator McGeer made the following statement:

> I am quite satisfied this case is not going to end here, no matter which way it is decided. Furthermore, I believe it must be dealt with as a matter of public policy, because I do not think that these railways or this board have any power to attempt to solve the situation by this proposed increase of rates. On the contrary, I am firmly of the opinion that it will require a national policy vigorously and effectively enforced, and in the formation of that national policy in our system of constitutional democracy, the high court is not the governor in council, it is public opinion.

I should like therefore to take this opportunity to urge hon. members, particularly on the government side, to take to heart the words of wisdom of the late Senator McGeer and to consider what is in the best interests of the people whom they represent. I might mention that excellent evidence was given by representatives from all the provinces, but I have made a special study of the evidence presented on behalf of Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan. The government of Saskatchewan was in my opinion to be commended for having selected as chief counsel Hon. M. A. MacPherson, who was attorney general and provincial treasurer in a former Conservative administration. I believe that all who followed the hearings were convinced that Mr. MacPherson did an outstanding public service in cross-examining the witnesses and in presenting the case for the people, especially in the prairies.

On page 8 of the brief presented by the province of Saskatchewan it is pointed out that the effect of the increase would be inflationary, and that:

> If these forces continue to hold up the current level of economic activity, then the proposed increase in freight rates could easily become a factor leading to a further inflationary rise in prices since it would lead in all probability to further demands for higher wages . . . The effect of the proposed increase in freight rates might easily be such as to bring a double impact upon the industrial areas of Canada.

Then on page 9:

> Great as is the threat which a substantial increase in freight rates offers to the Canadian economy as a whole, a still greater danger lies in the extreme probability of further disruptions in regional and international relationships. In the first place, to the extent that prairie incomes over a term of years have tended to be lower than the national average, an increase in freight rates will be regressive in that the burden will be borne by those least able to support it. In the second place, as will be shown at length in other parts of this submission, the proposed increase would almost inevitably be reflected in further sharp reductions in western incomes.

In the submission by the Edmonton chamber of commerce attention is drawn to the effect which the increase will have and what it will mean to the people in that province. The Alberta members have presented this case very well, but I was interested in the rates applying to flannelette blankets which move to Edmonton at a rate of $4.53, whereas the rate from Montreal to Vancouver is $1.75. I find that the citizens at Holden, which is 60 miles east of Edmonton, if they were interested in ascertaining the freight rates on this description of material shipped from Montreal, would receive some rather unusual advice from the agent. The agent would say to them, "If you are in a hurry for the material and want it shipped here directly we will give you one rate, but if you are not in a great hurry, if you are satisfied to have the material go from Montreal to Vancouver and shipped back from Vancouver to this town, 60 miles east of Edmonton, we will give you a rate of 21 cents per hundredweight less than that which you would be charged if the material were shipped here directly."

I submit therefore that it will be very difficult to convince the people in the prairies and in British Columbia that a further increase of 21 per cent in freight rates that are now out of line in those provinces should be imposed upon our people.

In the material prepared by the Saskatchewan government some time ago we have a comparison of freight rates between Megantic, Quebec, and Ingersoll, Ontario, 596 miles, where the rate on lumber is 24 cents. From Golden, British Columbia to Moose Jaw, the same distance, it is 40½ cents. On lumber the western rates are 39 to 69 per cent higher than the eastern rates.

The cement rate from St. Mary's, Ontario, to Apple Hill, Ontario, 388 miles, is 22 cents, and from Winnipeg to Madrid, Saskatchewan, the same distance, 28 cents. The rates are 30 per cent higher.

On petroleum products the rates in the west are 35 per cent higher; on salt the rates are 30 per cent higher, and so all across the line. But there is no reason for that. It has been demonstrated by the railways that they can actually move material more economically in the west than they can in the rest of Canada. I have here the orders and regulations of the board of railway commissioners for September 1927, giving the actual cost of moving freight in the different provinces.

Manitoba had the lowest rate at that time: ·00232; Saskatchewan the second, ·00281; Alberta the third, ·00299; Ontario the fourth, ·00367; British Columbia, ·00376; Quebec, ·00504; New Brunswick, ·00553. Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island do not appear in this table.

I was interested in the net earnings of the Canadian Pacific Railway over a period of years in the east and in the west respectively, during the depression years and the years of the war. Their net earnings were much higher in the west. These were the earnings in the east and in the west in the following years:

	East	West
1936	$5,855,000	$17,455,000
1937	10,013,000	13,728,000
1938	3,319,000	17,432,000
1939	5,949,000	22,573,000
1940	14,058,000	21,580,000

Obviously it is unfair to impose a further 21 per cent tax on the people west of the great lakes, when that part of the system has been so profitable and when our people have been penalized throughout the years as a result of these exceedingly high freight rates.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Is that freight rates alone?

Mr. NICHOLSON: Yes.

Mr. ISNOR: What were the profits of the Canadian Pacific Railway last year?

Mr. NICHOLSON: The hon. member can get it. I am glad the hon. member for Fraser Valley has come into the chamber. I understand he is speaking immediately after me and I want to make an appeal to him. I have a very high regard for the hon. gentleman. I think it is his opportunity now to perform an outstanding service to Canada and it is up to him to decide whether this injustice shall be perpetrated.

Speaking a few days ago, the hon. member commended the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) for the excellent speech he made. In fact he said it was the best speech the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar has delivered since 1940. The hon. member intimated that if an opportunity were given to hon. members to test the opinion of this house, even although it involved a want of confidence motion, there would be at least three members on the government side who would be expressing lack of confidence. He said as reported at page 2653 of Hansard:

> I can assure the government that if some of my legal friends, the hon. member for Lake Centre or some other member of his profession, can show me how a motion can be introduced that will present this issue straight to the house, at least three British Columbia members will vote in favour of the motion, even it it should be a want of confidence motion, because we believe that the very future of our province is at stake in this matter.

The hon. member was right. The future of his province, as well as that of the prairie provinces, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, is at stake. Even if the government were defeated, if the members on the other side of the house are of the opinion that they have public opinion behind them, there would be no question of their coming back with a fresh mandate. But if the members of this house are not prepared now, as this debate closes, to stand up and be counted for or against this increase in freight rates, then we are going to introduce into our Canadian economic life a question that is so controversial that it will divide east and west more sharply than they have ever before been divided. It will make at least seven of the nine provinces feel that the dominion government has given them anything but a square deal.

We have heard from the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. Sinclair). He intimated that he was not one of the three mentioned by the hon. member for Fraser Valley. But we have not heard from the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Gibson), the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid), or the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank) in this debate. I hope those three will make good the promise that was given a few days ago, to the effect that they are prepared to vote against this government and let the chips fall where they may.

Like the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross) who has just spoken, I have never had any time for those who advocated secession. Nothing would be gained by forming two or three separate countries within this dominion. Nothing would be gained by linking up with the United States. Within our democratic framework I think we have the machinery necessary to make it possible for us to iron out these differences.

I want to make my position clear. As far as the Canadian National Railways are concerned, I do not think the government needed to worry about giving them relief in this way at this particular time. I do not think the Canadian Pacific Railway is in the position of needing help at this time. I feel it might have continued for at least another year until all the facts were thoroughly studied. I find that this railway has had generous treatment at the hands of the people. Again quoting from the board of railway commissioners for Canada, judgments, orders, regulations and rulings, under date of September 12, 1927, I find that the late Premier Oliver of British Columbia mentioned the favourable treatment given to this railway, at page 147, as follows:

Cash subsidy	$25,000,000
Constructed railway including service	38,000,000
Cash in exchange for subsidy lands	10,000,000
18,206,985 acres selected lands valued at	27,310,000

Premier Oliver of British Columbia at that time said:

> At the time of union, the people of British Columbia, protected by the statutes as then in force, had no reason to think, and as a fact did not anticipate, that they would be required to pay higher rates for service from the railway than were imposed in other parts of Canada on the same railway.
>
> Had the terms of union stipulated that higher rates might be charged in British Columbia for railway service than were charged by the same railway in other parts of Canada, the people of British Columbia would not have entered the union on such terms.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that now would be a good time for the hon. member for Fraser Valley to help right this injustice which has irritated the people of his province through so many years.

Mr. G. A. CRUICKSHANK (Fraser Valley): This is the first time, Mr. Speaker, since I have been in this house that I realize how important a man I am. I have had this idea about myself ever since I entered politics, but never had it been recognized in the house until today. I have just come from a meeting that I think was probably almost as important as this one. That is the reason I was out of the house. I am a member of the veterans affairs committee. The widows of non-pensioned Canadian veterans are appealing to us for assistance. That is the reason I had to miss part of what was said by the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross) and part of what was said by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Nicholson). That may be one of the reasons why I do not altogether appreciate the attitude of the government and of the board of transport commissioners in connection with this increase, since in my opinion any increase in freight rates will increase the cost of living of those veterans' widows.

As I said, I am glad to note that my hon. friends of the C.C.F. party now appreciate my value. In some ways I am sorry that they are not like my hon. friends of the official opposition who change their leader three or four times a year. I might have an invitation to take over their party.

Mr. NICHOLSON: We shall watch how you behave today.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I am glad the hon. member for Mackenzie mentioned what I said on April 5, 1948, in connection with the motion from the other side of the house. It is true that I was talking a little bit large when I said three members from British Columbia would vote for it. After all, I have authority to speak for only one member, and that is myself. The other two members may not be quite as bright as I am, and may not fall right in line. I am glad that the hon. member mentioned exactly what I said on that date.

An hon. MEMBER: Who were the other two?

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I will let them speak for themselves. As will be remembered, I said that if there should be a motion that would bring this matter fairly and squarely before this house and the people of Canada—and I want to repeat that: fairly and squarely before this house and the people of Canada—I would support it. Hon. members can read in Hansard exactly what I said. I probably spoke too broadly when I attempted to speak for someone else. I said I would support the motion even if it meant a vote of want of confidence. My hon. friends of the C.C.F. party do not often slip. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is an expert in preparing amendments. In fact, he is so good that not long ago he marshalled out half his followers on the other side of the house and almost defeated the government by rushing them in suddenly. I am sorry that in preparing this amendment he did not take the time to prepare it as it should have been prepared. I said at the time, and I repeat it now, that in my opinion the leader of the C.C.F. made an excellent, non-political, non-regional speech in connection with freight rates. In my opinion he made by far the best speech that has been made during this debate on freight rates. I repeat that, and I have no hesitation in doing so. The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) sent out the party whip who took only a minute or two to prepare his amendment. He came in with an amendment which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre himself described as one of non-confidence. At page 2745 of Hansard of April 7, the hon. member's concern was not as to whether it will help the people of Canada, or particularly the people of my province who suffer more just now than does any other part of Canada; rather he said:

> Carry this amendment and you will defeat the government.

The same thing was said by the leader of the C.C.F. party at page 2744 of Hansard, in almost identical language. In other words, the amendment was moved for other reasons than to improve the lot of the people of western Canada by eliminating discrimination. That amendment, which is at page 2743 of Hansard for April 7, appears in these words, and I want this on record again:

> That all the words after the word "that" to the end of the question be deleted and the following be substituted therefor:
>
> "this house is of the opinion that the failure of the government to defer the imposition of the increases in freight rates recently authorized by the board of transport commissioners is inimical to the best interests of the people of Canada; further this house is of the opinion that the government should reconsider this matter and take action to prevent the proposed increases from coming into effect at this time."

Mr. KNOWLES: Don't you agree with every word of that?

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I agree that the policy was not the best that might have been followed, but I defy the hon. member or anyone else to show me anything in that amendment which will help the situation. I shall refer to the subamendment in a moment; but if there is anything in this amendment that will help the poultrymen and berry growers of British Columbia I should like to be shown it.

Mr. KNOWLES: It is in one word; it asks for reconsideration.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Why did you not word it as the leader of the opposition worded his amendment? I am not altogether in favour of that one, but it is a far better resolution than yours.

Mr. KNOWLES: All right; vote for his amendment.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I will do my own voting, and also my own talking. I believe the government erred in this connection, and I frankly say so. For the life of me I cannot understand why the government had to bring this increase into effect at once. Ever since I have been old enough, I have been borrowing from the banks, though perhaps my credit is not exceptionally good. To tell me that the two great railway companies could not have borrowed enough money to meet the demand for increased wages for only thirty days just does not make sense. I believe this action was an insult to seven premiers of Canada. I do not care what party they belong to; they represent seven of the provinces of Canada against the other two. All they asked was a delay of one month so that they could present their case. As I say, I believe the government was wrong in not granting that thirty-day delay. I do not agree with the government when they say it was necessary that the increase be put into effect at once. I do not think a short delay would have hurt the railways at all, because in the long run any decision would have been made retroactive.

Mr. CHEVRIER: No.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Perhaps not, except as to wages; but I say to the minister that if the railways of Canada will go bankrupt if they do not get that 21 per cent increase for thirty days, then it is time we took them both over and put in new management. What is most important to me in this connection, as I said the other day, is national unity. I do not believe you will ever get national unity in this country if two provinces can dictate to the other seven, and I do not care which two provinces they are. I am not referring to the members from either of those provinces who sit in this house. In my experience at Ottawa the members most willing to co-operate in anything which is in the best interests of Canada, particularly in the economic field, have been the members from the province of Quebec. I only wish the members from Ontario were the same. But I do not think any seven provinces should be imposed upon by the actions of the other two. I believe the government are mistaken in this policy, and in my opinion we shall get no action toward eliminating these discriminations for a long, long time if we depend upon the board of transport commissioners, without a directive from the government. The province of British Columbia has spent hundreds of thousands of dollars for the best legal talent it could engage.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): The lawyers got it all.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: That is quite true; the lawyers got enough to make up the deficit of the province of British Columbia. We shall now have to start all over again. According to the minister, the board has the authority to wipe out these differentials. In that case I think it is the duty of the board and the government to do so, without any further hearing. They have all the information already with respect to the mountain differential and other inequalities in certain parts of Canada. No one can tell me that the evidence presented to the transport commission by the greatest authority on freight rates we ever had in Canada, the late Senator McGeer, is not still on record; and there has been no great change in the meantime. Conditions may have changed, but that has nothing to do with these inequalities; that is covered by the increase of 21 per cent. All the evidence with respect to the mountain differential is before the board, and I think it is the duty of the government to issue an absolute directive to that board. I do not see any point in setting up a royal commission or other special body, for if there is to be an inquiry they will have the same experts to advise them. I particularly object to the fact that the delay of thirty days was not granted in order to permit the seven premiers to appear before the cabinet.

I now wish to say a word with respect to the amendment moved by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken), which, at least in one respect, goes to the core of the matter, in that it describes the discrimination which is being practised as against certain parts of the country. I have not a copy of the subamendment before me, but if I remember correctly it suggests that before any increase was granted these discriminations should have been wiped out. With that I entirely agree. I am sorry I cannot support the C.C.F. amendment, because I do not think it means anything.

An hon. MEMBER: It is the same amendment.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: It is not. The C.C.F. amendment says that this government has lost the confidence of the people, and that it is no good. I do not agree with that. With the international situation as it is today, I do not believe the people of Canada want an election; and do not think I am afraid to face one in my riding today, tomorrow or any day. If the amendment should carry, what could we expect but a general election, if hon. members like myself were asked to vote not on the matter of freight rates but on a direct question of want of confidence? I think the members of the C.C.F. party will admit that they could not form a government, and even the junior Conservative party in the far corner will admit that with the material available at present, there would be little chance for the party across the way to form a government. So obviously if the amendment carried there would have to be a general election immediately. I think the C.C.F. are quite right in fighting against discriminatory freight rates, but I say they should force the issue on freight rates, but not on a straight motion of want of confidence, in the only party that can carry on under present conditions.

Mr. J. M. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all hon. members present will agree that we have had a very interesting inside account of yesterday's Liberal caucus.

At such a late stage of this debate I hesitate to intervene, and I do so for only one reason. I do so because I think it desirable that someone from the province of Ontario—I am sorry the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank) did not include us with the province of Quebec—should rise and say that he deeply regrets the situation which has arisen; perhaps I should say "someone else" from Ontario. Today we have seven provinces which genuinely feel they have been sinned against and that, whether or not it is the fault of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, somehow we are getting an advantage we should not have. I believe we in Ontario and Quebec are very much like the people of the rest of Canada. I do not think we want any unfair advantage. It is because the government, by its neglect, has allowed this situation to develop that I feel justified in voting, as I intend to vote, for the motion of want of confidence in the government.

I want to digress just for a moment on the question of freight rates, to make my position quite clear. I agree with what has been said, and said very well, by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) on another occasion. I agree that the railways must receive sufficient earnings to keep them sound. I agree with the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar that it is a discouraging and even demoralizing thing for the officials of the Canadian National Railways, and I mention them particularly, to travel along with deficits such as they now have. They had a deficit in 1947, a year of record high business. Therefore I say not only is that prima facie evidence, but it is obvious that the railways have to have additional earnings. How can anyone expect the railways, in the face of the terrific increase in costs during these last years, not to need an increase in their earnings?

I wish to make another point which is perhaps incidental. There is an idea that some way or another all deficits of the Canadian National Railways can be cured just by relieving it of a lot more of its indebtedness. There is no warrant for that belief. The Canadian National Railways has had many hundreds of millions of dollars of its indebtedness absorbed, and in my opinion rightly so, by the government of this country. That has been done because they were forced to take over and put together a number of lines that were not intended originally to be put together. Nevertheless the Canadian National now have an indebtedness to the public of only something less than 25 per cent of their apparent assets. They have an indebtedness to the public of, I think, only some $582 million against apparent assets of well over $2,000 million. Therefore I say that this increase in rates is something which the railways needed.

I now come back to the main point. I think it is a lamentable thing, something which should not be tolerated, that we should have in Canada—goodness knows we have enough difficulties in this country, enough things to divide us—a further division of the country on this question of freight rates.

The other day the minister made a most excellent speech. I tell him that if ever I am in trouble and have a weak case and need counsel to defend me, I shall be glad indeed to be able to get his services. He made a most plausible and even persuasive argument that there was really no fault on the part of the government, that the fault was all on the part of the provinces. He told us, and I have no doubt he was correct in telling us, that during the course of the rate investigation it had been pointed out that this was purely a matter of rates and that everyone had agreed that it was no occasion on which to discuss discriminations. The minister pointed out further, and at the time I was quite impressed, that in a great many years there had been no appeals from the provinces, that, although they could have come in and appealed against these discriminations, they had not done so.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am afraid I shall have to interrupt the hon. gentleman. I did not say that there had been no appeals from the provinces; I said that there had been no variation of the board's orders, which is a different thing. I assume that the provinces did appeal from time to time from the various judgments.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I will correct myself. The minister said that in those years the provinces did not take the initiative in coming and complaining against these inequalities. Is that correct?

Mr. CHEVRIER: From 1927.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I was quite impressed with that at the time, but I looked up the judgment of 1927 when the matter was gone into most exhaustively. When I saw certain things that were said there I decided that, after all, I was not quite so impressed. It seems to me that in the course of that judgment various phrases were used which practically said to all concerned, there is no use in coming to Ottawa and talking about these things because they are all settled. I shall refer only briefly to the head-note of that case which is indicative of others. In refusing certain requests it was said that "the matter had been developed in other judgments and there seemed to be no other possible course to follow."

I can well imagine anyone thinking of coming here to appeal coming up against what he might regard as a judgment which says everything has been decided and there is no use in coming here and talking about it. The hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) points out that what I should have said was that there was no use of their coming here themselves and making application to the board after what had been done.

I come back to my first point, namely the fact that we have this discontent. In my opinion the government are greatly to blame for having let this situation ride along all these years, knowing that this discontent existed. They must have known it; they did know it. There was plenty of evidence of it. We had most eloquent testimony from both sides of this house during the earlier course of this debate. It is very sad that some of the voices have been stilled; nevertheless the fact remains that at one stage in the debate there was a considerable measure of agreement.

One of the responsibilities of men in responsible positions is to be able to foresee the consequences of their acts and also of their neglects. I say that the allowing of this situation to go on has resulted in just what is referred to in the amendment of my leader. Anyone should have been able to foresee, first of all, that in the face of rising costs the railroads would be granted higher rates. Anyone should have been able to foresee that the effect of that would be exactly what it has been, namely, to cause bitter complaints throughout this country, complaints which I think are most lamentable and most injurious to the welfare of the whole body politic.

There is only one further point I want to make. To have given thirty days to the provinces in which to come here and have another go of it would, I think, have been a most reasonable thing. I realize that the minister will probably say to me, "What was the use of their coming here? They would just say the things that were said before. It would be just a sign of weakness and we would be just pushed from pillar to post." In reply to that, I would say that it would have been a courteous thing to do. It would have been a sign of conciliation. I think it might have done something to lull the bitter feeling which we are seeing from coast to coast.

The minister made a very persuasive argument. It was so persuasive that I had to get away and think it over before I realized that it was not as convincing as it sounded at the time. He said that everything would be all right for the future, because the government was commissioning the board to go ahead and go over the whole thing again. He quoted the chairman of the board to the effect that he thought the board had sufficient power to enable them to review the situation.

What I intend to say now is not said with any disrespect toward the board or any member of it. If the matter is merely reviewed under the wording of this order in council, which does not seem to me to open the thing up or change it or give the board a fresh start in any way, I am afraid that, while the board may review the thing, they will review it, faced with all the decisions which have been made in the past. How are they going to jump outside of what they have done in the past? I do not see how they can do so. I am inclined to agree with the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Cruickshank) that they must have a new directive. I am not competent to say what that new directive should be.

Mr. CHEVRIER: What they need is new evidence.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): That is the thing that bothers me.

Mr. CHEVRIER: It is not direction that they need.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I was hoping—I really got my idea from the speech of the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith)—that perhaps it might be possible to call in some new board. I have thought that over and discussed it with people, who know more about it than I, and they think that to bring in a new board would not be feasible. That board would have to make use of the same experts and, furthermore, this is a highly technical matter. We should remember that. It would probably take a long time before they would even understand this highly complicated matter.

But I doubt very much if under this order in council we shall get a fresh start. There is a feeling on the part of people throughout the length and breadth of this country that these men cannot really look at this thing afresh, unless they are given some new directive, to use the words of the hon. member for Fraser Valley, that is, unless the government takes responsibility.

It is finally the government's responsibility. Perhaps they could lay down some different rules under which this is to be done. I know that is difficult, and that it is a complicated matter; but I repeat, we have in this country a situation which is lamentable and I believe the government have been grievously at fault in allowing it to arise. I am dubious whether they will accomplish anything better under this order in council; whether they have really started out even now to cure the situation.

Mr. A. W. STUART (Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, in the few remarks I have to make I believe I shall be introducing something new in this debate, and I am pleased to see the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Harris) and other Ontario members now in their seats.

During this debate thus far we have heard little criticism regarding the necessity of increasing freight rates. It would appear as though the great majority of members who have taken part in this debate are convinced that an increase in freight rates is essential. The criticism that has been made is of the inequality of the way in which the rates are increased. I believe that, because of the increase in compensation paid to the railway employees and the enormously increased costs of materials used in the operation of the railroads, more revenue must be found, and sufficient evidence has been adduced to prove that this increase is necessary.

The chief criticism is that eastern Canada and western Canada must bear the greater part of the burden, while Ontario and Quebec have little reason to complain. In other words, the failure to equalize the rates is responsible for the criticism levelled at the board of transport commissioners and the Department of Transport.

The increase was opposed by seven of the nine provinces. The neutral attitude taken by Ontario and Quebec would indicate that these provinces were not adversely affected.

If we wish to achieve the utopia of a united Canada, which appears to be approaching very slowly, sectionalism, the predominant factor in this debate, must be discarded, this atmosphere of suspicion completely cleared and a spirit of co-operation introduced in which we may approach this problem not as maritimers or as British Columbians, western or central Canadians, but as united Canadians.

I will take a few minutes to point out one of many circumstances in New Brunswick in which the citizens affected have developed a feeling of distrust toward industrialized central Canada. For many years in the town of St. Stephen, in the county I have the honour to represent, the St. Croix Soap Company manufactured an article used practically exclusively in the maritime provinces, and well known in many other parts of Canada. Many citizens of this town were employed in this thriving industry. A few years ago Lever Bros., a large manufacturer in central Canada, approached the management of this small industry; they painted a glowing picture of the manner in which this little industry would grow if it were controlled by Lever Bros. The offer made to the owners, and the visions of a much larger industry, influenced the St. Croix Soap Company to sell their business to Lever Bros.

In a very short time production started to fall, and during the last war, when materials used in the manufacture of soap were in short supply, they were earmarked for central Canada. Eventually the manufacturing ceased in St. Stephen, and this small business, which means a lot to a small town, was moved to central Canada. We have left there at the present time an empty plant, and many of our citizens are out of employment.

The Mann Axe Company, in this same town, received exactly the same treatment, as did many other small industries in our province. This has brought about, as I have just said, a feeling of suspicion when you mention central Canada to a maritimer. As was pointed out yesterday by the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Brooks), the few manufacturing industries in the maritime provinces which have survived have done so on their merits by producing quality; for example, Ganong Bros. and Moir's, manufacturers of candies; Stanfield's products; Hartt, boots and shoes; Palmer, boots and shoes; Connors Bros., canned fish, and many others who produce quality goods known right across Canada.

Many of these manufacturers have a policy of one price to all. In other words, their commodities may be purchased in Vancouver at exactly the same price that we pay in the maritime provinces.

The Maritime Freight Rates Act provides that westbound freight from the maritimes shall be at a rate 20 per cent lower than that prevailing for eastbound freight to the maritimes. The new rate in no way affects this 20 per cent lower rate from the maritimes.

It has been suggested by several hon. members that if the railway board undertakes an investigation into the rate structure in this country it will not be completed in less than a year and a half or two years.

My belief is that conditions now prevailing can be greatly improved in a very short time if those who are in a position to assist are prepared to meet the challenge. I do not refer to the railway board or to the government of this country but to the manufacturers in central Canada who are protected by tariffs which have always operated to the disadvantage of the maritime provinces. The lowering of the tariff is one way of bringing about equalization.

Another method of approach would be for the manufacturers themselves to have one price only for every section of this country. This could be done without costing the manufacturers a single dollar.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): Horse meat the same price all over.

Mr. STUART (Charlotte): That would be much preferable to granting subsidies, and I assure the house that it would bring about a much better feeling between the east and the west and central Canada.

I wish to refer to the table which the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) put on Hansard and to quote a paragraph from his remarks when introducing it. He said at page 2902 of Hansard:

> A Chevrolet car moving east from Walkerville or Oshawa to Quebec will have to bear an increase of $7.33; to Montreal, $5.33; to Halifax, $7.86; to Toronto, $2.40; to Winnipeg, $17.48; to Regina, $23.39; to Calgary, $29.73; to Vancouver, $31.26.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): Shame!

Mr. STUART (Charlotte): That will be the additional freight when the 21 per cent increase goes into effect. When the increase in the eight cities mentioned has been averaged you will find that the average increase is $15.58; the low in Toronto area of $2.40; the high in Vancouver of $31.26. The manufacture of this vehicle is exclusively in Ontario. This province received full benefit of the thousands employed and of the enormous taxes paid by these large corporations which are protected by high tariffs.

No branch of this industry is established in the maritime provinces. We could purchase our cars in the same country in which we find markets for our produce were it not for tariff protection. Surely we are not taking a selfish attitude when a request is made to equalize the price of manufactured articles purchased from industrialized central Canada.

Many Ontario and Quebec manufacturers have already adopted this plan. For example, Tip Top Tailors, and many others, have one price to all. I shall mention several that I believe should fall in line. To head the list would be manufacturers of cars and trucks, manufacturers of farm machinery and manufacturers of household appliances—these appear on the list in Hansard—such as bathtubs, furnaces, stoves, refrigerators and hundreds of other household articles.

Another important item would be canned vegetables. Canned fish of all kinds, which are manufactured in the county I represent, are sold right across Canada at one price to all. They can be purchased in the city of Vancouver at the same price at which I can purchase them in the town in which I live. British Columbia salmon is another article that should sell in the maritime provinces for the same price at which it sells in British Columbia, and all vegetables that are canned in Ontario should have one price tag from Vancouver to Halifax.

Take, for example, manufacturers of cars and trucks. If they wish to adopt the idea that I have endeavoured to put forward they would have a record of the number of units delivered to each dealer in every part of Canada for several years. It would be a simple matter to find the average freight that should be charged right across the board. In this way those protected by tariffs—which is to the maritimer, as I have stated before, a subsidy—that benefit the citizens of central Canada only, would pay their proportional part in delivering the vehicle to the purchaser in eastern or western Canada.

Interprovincial trade, as well as international trade, must be a two-way street if it is to function successfully. Co-operation is essential. If the suggestions I have made should be adopted by manufacturers of central Canada, it would go a long way toward equalizing and balancing the freight rates that are under discussion at the present time. If hon. members from Ontario and Quebec are sincere in their desire to be helpful in this particular case, in no way could their sincerity be better exemplified than by pointing out to the manufacturers in their respective constituencies the unfair advantage they have taken of the citizens of eastern and western Canada, and at the same time use their influence in support of the removal of this gross injustice. This is not a problem for the government, but for the manufacturers themselves.

As I stated before, I am firmly convinced that an increase in freight rates was necessary; the burden, however, should not be borne by one or two provinces; it should be borne by all. This equalization can be realized to a great extent if we work, not as individuals for particular sections, but collectively as Canadians, and in doing so our united efforts would produce the desired result.

Mr. J. H. DICKEY (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, in rising at this stage of a long and very fine debate I propose to make several brief observations on a question which is so vital to the maritime provinces generally and particularly to the constituency of Halifax. I propose to vote against the amendment moved by the leader of the C.C.F. party (Mr. Coldwell) and the amendment to the amendment of the leader of the official opposition (Mr. Bracken). I can summarize briefly my reasons for voting as I intend to do.

However, before I develop the one or two points with which I wish to deal I should like to refer briefly to the matter brought up earlier in the debate this afternoon by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Zaplitny). He referred to a press report originating in Halifax relating to a situation in respect of which I had already received representations. I have been able to secure certain information relating to this matter which I should like to put on Hansard in order that the hon. member for Dauphin may realize the situation to which the newspaper report refers.

The hon. member made reference to two ships which have been diverted from Halifax. The first is the English Prince. This ship cleared from England under orders to proceed to Halifax or Montreal, depending on the opening of the St. Lawrence river. As a result of the opening of the St. Lawrence river this ship, while on the Atlantic has apparently decided to proceed to Montreal. This decision had absolutely no reference to the 21 per cent increase in freight rates. I would point out to the hon. member for Dauphin that it is specifically provided in the order of the board that the 21 per cent increase is not to apply to import-export rates through Canadian ports.

The other ship to which reference was made is the Martha Kleppe. This ship had a cargo consisting, in part, of some 2,200 tons of peanuts destined to a firm in Hamilton. I am advised that negotiations for re-routing this ship were in progress before the decision of the board of transport commissioners was handed down, and the decision to re-route this cargo through New York has no reference at all to the board's decision. As a matter of fact, not one ton of cargo in either of these ships was affected by the 21 per cent increase in the freight rates.

The decision of the board of transport commissioners has been to authorize a horizontal increase in the rates of ordinary freight within Canada. This increase is contrary to the representations so forcefully made by counsel for the maritime provinces who appeared at the hearing. It is contrary also to what is conceived to be the spirit and the principle of the Maritime Freight Rates Act and, perhaps most important of all, it is contrary to what many conceive to be the essential interests of the development and the healthy continuance of the economic situation in the maritime provinces.

Protests against this horizontal increase have been widespread throughout the maritimes and in other parts of Canada and these protests have resulted in the announcement of the premiers of seven provinces of an appeal from this decision. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) has clearly stated that the government is prepared to hear this appeal and to deal with it when it is made. I should like, as simply and as briefly as I can, to sum up the situation as I see it in its application to the maritime provinces.

As a result of the Duncan commission of 1926, which was a wide and searching inquiry into the whole economic system of the maritime provinces, the Maritime Freight Rates Act was passed by the federal parliament in 1927. The purpose and basis of this act were to equalize existing discriminations against the economy of the area of the three maritime provinces and to do away with certain disabilities which had been imposed upon the economic development of those provinces.

Both before and after that commission and the enactment of the Maritime Freight Rates Act, the board of transport commissioners in various decisions has considered the powers which are given to it under the Railway Act to deal with the question of discrimination and inequalities. It has also, not less importantly, made decisions with respect to the matters and considerations of which, under the act, it is permitted to take cognizance in determining applications of this kind.

My own view is that the board of transport commissioners, in the past, has taken the position that it is not empowered to deal with the kind of discrimination and the inequalities against which we complain in the maritime provinces and, further, that it is not empowered under the act to give consideration to the problems of geography and of distance which we say are the very considerations to which, most importantly, regard should be had in dealing with the difficulties under which we operate in the maritime provinces.

This view which I have stated is not shared unanimously. The government, by the order in council presented to the house by the Minister of Transport, has instructed the board of transport commissioners to institute a full and searching inquiry into the question of discrimination. The wording of the order in council is addressed to the board and instructs it to make an investigation with a view to establishing a fair and reasonable rate structure which will, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, be equal in its application to all persons and localities in the various provinces and territories of Canada.

This is in line with the suggestion made by my colleague the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Isnor) when speaking in this house on April 5. In stating to the house the basis on which the government had passed this order in council, the Minister of Transport, speaking earlier in the debate, clearly stated his opinion that the board has full powers to deal with all questions of discrimination and inequalities which may exist in the rate structure throughout the dominion, and in addition he has stated that the chairman of the board of transport commissioners has said to him that is also his view of the situation.

I submit that this must be understood as instructions from the government to the board, with respect to the investigation which they have authorized it to make, to exercise its full plenary powers, whatever powers it may have under the act, to carry out a full investigation and to reach a decision on the matter referred to it.

In my opinion this is exactly what is needed to settle the problem from the point of view of the maritime provinces. There is at present confusion as to the powers of the board and as to the division of responsibility for the freight rates structure as between the board of transport commissioners and the government.

When the board of transport commissioners has completed the investigation which it has now been instructed to undertake, and has rendered a decision, all the inequalities or discriminations which may exist should be out in the open and be a matter of record.

In rendering its decision, the board will have to do one of three things. It will have to deal with these discriminations and inequalities in a satisfactory manner; or, secondly, it will have to refuse to deal with them by reason of the fact that it finds it lacks the power to deal with them or that it is restricted, under the provisions of the Railway Act, in the considerations which it is permitted to explore and to take into account in dealing with these matters; or, thirdly, it will bring down a decision which will be found unsatisfactory to the interested provinces.

[Mr. Dickey.]

It is my hope that the board will deal with all the outstanding questions in a satisfactory manner. That would be the object of the inquiry. But if that is not the case, the reason or reasons whereby it has been unable to deal with these matters satisfactorily will be clear to all. It will then be possible to refer any outstanding questions to the government in the sure knowledge that there can be no question in anybody's mind as to where the responsibility lies and on whose authority proper decisions must be arrived at.

I am therefore supporting the government and refusing to support the amendment and the amendment to the amendment for two reasons. One is the expressed and evident desire of the government to consider any appeal which it may be thought proper to make against the present order of the board. The second is that the decision of the government to refer to the board a full and complete inquiry is the quickest and the best method of settling the question of discrimination and inequalities, and of disposing, in the best and the quickest possible way, of any outstanding questions of divided responsibility and jurisdiction with respect to the question of freight rates, which, as has already been said, is one of the most important and serious questions we have to face at the present time.

Mr. W. CHESTER S. McLURE (Queens): Mr. Speaker, before beginning my remarks on this serious question of transportation and freight rates, may I be permitted to do something that will no doubt give rise to a smile on the face of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier). I should like to read a few items from a press report I have before me.

An hon. MEMBER: About reefer cars?

Mr. McLURE: You guessed correctly. This press report is dated Wednesday, April 14, and appears in the newspaper The Guardian of the Gulf. The heading of it is this:

Reefers now in excess of all demands.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Hear, hear.

Mr. McLURE: Hon. members are smiling. The article reads, in part, as follows:

With 200 refrigerator cars on hand and with about 40 arriving daily, transportation facilities have at last caught up with island potato shippers' requirements and are even in excess of the demand, according to railway officials interviewed yesterday.

Then another item:

All through the season, strong complaints were voiced with regard to the refrigerator car shortage . . . No criticism was made with regard to the local railway officials . . .

There is a great deal more to the item, but that is sufficient for me to read. Another item of interest reads:

Kingston, Ontario, April 13.
The first of 18 diesel locomotives being built for the Canadian National Railways left the plant here today.

That was on April 13. The item continues:

The locomotives are destined for Prince Edward Island.

Having been permitted to introduce my remarks by reading those items, I shall be content. There is a great deal more of them, but I have read just the important parts, and I shall be glad to hand the paper over to my hon. friend the Minister of Transport. It will save my writing him a letter as I did on a previous occasion.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Or asking a question.

Mr. McLURE: No. I can assure the minister that if ever again there is a shortage or a near shortage, he will be bombarded with more questions.

The question of freight rates is, without doubt, probably the most important question that has been brought before the house in some time. Perhaps anything I say on this occasion will be more or less a matter of repetition. However, there are a few things I wish to touch on that are vital in connection with the problems of Prince Edward Island.

In speaking on this question a few days ago, I said it was my opinion—and nothing has yet been produced to change that opinion—that the board of transport commissioners have no authority to set fixed rates for the railways when, as I see it, the authority to fix those rates rests entirely with the government of the day. But they were entitled to make suggestions to the government; and then it was for the government to decide. I do not think the commission has the authority of a court. In fact, while they can bring in submissions to the government, I do not think the government should lose sight of the fact that they have the right to say, right there and then, either that they accept or reject them.

In this case, however, the Minister of Transport, acting for the government, seemed to be in a great hurry to put these increases into effect immediately without due consideration being given to the provinces that were most affected. In my opinion it would have been a better policy had the Minister of Transport listened to the protests that were immediately raised by the seven provinces of Canada in regard to what they called discrimination in reference to them. On this point I might say that I believe the premiers of the seven provinces will be in attendance here in Ottawa in the course of a day or two, but in the meantime this question may be definitely decided. Whether the vote goes one way or the other, the question may be definitely decided and the premiers of the seven provinces will not then have a hearing that is worthwhile.

As I said in speaking about the Canadian National Railways a few days ago, that railway is government-owned and, during the last few months, submitted a statement to the government pointing out that it could not operate under present conditions and asking for a thirty per cent increase in freight rates. The board of transport commissioners, after reviewing the case, come along and say, "No. We can recommend to the government a horizontal increase in the freight rates right across Canada of only 21 per cent".

Perhaps if another investigation were made, the next report would look at the finances of the Canadian National Railways and Canadian Pacific Railway Company in a different light, and we might have only a ten per cent horizontal increase right across Canada. Therefore I think the government were in too much of a hurry in bringing this matter up for an immediate decision. I think the government should have done as the premiers of the seven provinces had urged upon them, namely, wait at least thirty days until some further consideration had been given to the matter.

In reference to the railways, before this matter was really brought into the open, when I was speaking on the speech from the throne I urged strongly on the railway department that certain things should be done with reference to railway men in each province. For instance, I urged that there should be an increase in the pensions given to railway men, especially those who were in the lower wage brackets. I also urged that the men in the lower wage brackets should have an increase at an early date because some of them, from their low wage earnings, had not really sufficient money with which to live in a proper way.

However we are also looking for better transportation service from the railways; we are looking for better passenger service as well as better freight service. When we make those demands on the railway, we know that good transportation service requires good equipment and good facilities; and those in turn can be maintained only by economical operating methods and by proper charges for services rendered to the different provinces.

I give it as my opinion that if the railways cannot continue to operate and give us an improved service, then it is definitely up to the government to decide how to take care of this service and how it is to be paid for by the people of Canada. After all, the railways were built for the purpose of developing Canada and having trade move from east to west and west to east, under certain conditions with respect to freight rates. If there is to be this great loss of some $33,000,000, according to the last report of the railways, it is a matter for the government to look into and see how that amount can be made up. On the basis of this 21 per cent horizontal increase right across the board, it is an injustice to certain provinces and means discrimination against certain products.

Last evening the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Brooks) carefully reviewed the whole situation in the maritime provinces, so that it is not necessary for me to go into the same details. I agree 100 per cent with his remarks concerning New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, but I should like to add a few words with particular reference to my own province of Prince Edward Island, where I believe we are the most victimized of all under this increase. Under proper conditions, and if we can be shown the need, we are prepared to pay our average share of the cost, having in mind the service we get and the freight we are producing for the long haul.

Just here I should like to mention one particular item. In the case of western Canada the great cash crop is wheat, followed by coarse grains. I was pleased to note that under the order granting the increase the rate on wheat was not changed, that it remains as it has been in the past. In Prince Edward Island our cash crop is seed and table stock potatoes, followed by turnips. Our cash crop is not given the consideration that is given the cash crop of the west. This outstanding industry in Prince Edward Island should not have to pay this increase while the rate on the cash crop of the west remains the same. As I said before, I do not object to the west having this advantage, but the cash crop of Prince Edward Island should be placed in the same position.

With respect to potatoes, we get it both coming and going. We shall have to pay a much higher freight rate on our potato machinery, and it has been stated that fertilizer brought in for use in connection with the production of potatoes will cost $1.40 or $1.50 a ton more because of the increased freight rates. Then, when we ship our potatoes to the central provinces, to Montreal and Toronto, where we have to meet the competition of home grown potatoes, we shall have to pay an additional $1.60 a ton. These increases on both incoming and outgoing freight make a considerable difference.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. McLURE: When the house took recess at six o'clock I was talking about the discrimination against our cash crop of potatoes. As hon. members are aware, this is a perishable crop as compared with wheat and it needs a great deal of care in storage and handling prior to shipment. I submit that the board should have given special consideration to our cash crop as has been given to the cash crop of wheat in the west.

When the Minister of Transport was making his able speech with reference to this subject a few nights ago he seemed to fear that if this measure did not carry as suggested by him there would be amalgamation of the two great railroads. I would remind him of the slogan that we used to hear at one time: "Amalgamation never, competition ever." We have no fear of amalgamation in Prince Edward Island because there is no competition as far as the railroads are concerned.

This is a serious question for our producers. For instance, our shippers were handicapped for a time last winter because of a shortage of reefer cars. If there is a shortage of cars in New Brunswick the people there can appeal to the Canadian Pacific and obtain the same number of cars that they would procure from the Canadian National. Since we have no competition, we are entirely in the hands of the government-owned Canadian National. I was glad to be able to put on the record that the Minister of Transport had been able to meet the need for reefer cars. However, as I said, if there were competition we could appeal to the Canadian Pacific when such a shortage arose.

The other night the hon. member for Royal stated that he had received a great many telegrams, letters and telephone calls from people in the maritimes. I think most hon. members from the maritime provinces have received scores of telegrams, letters and telephone messages demanding that the members from the maritimes stick together on this issue and fight to have it left as it was before, especially as far as the maritime provinces are concerned.

When the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Homuth) was speaking on this question the other night he said that in his opinion the great province of Ontario would be willing to pay its share of the cost of any revision of freight rates. I suppose it was quite reasonable for him to say that, because if there is a deficit to be paid by the government it would mean that Ontario, considering the amount of taxes which that province pays, would probably pay 50 to 60 per cent of the deficit.

While I can speak for only a few members from the maritime provinces, I know that they have received letters and telegrams from their own people, most of them complaining of a violation of the terms of confederation and the provisions of the freight rates act of 1927 as well as of the recommendations of the Duncan commission of 1926.

Apart from repeating what the hon. member for Royal has said, I have covered the ground pretty well. Prince Edward Island is differently situated from New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. Those provinces produce certain manufactured goods but there are few industrial plants in Prince Edward Island. Our province is largely agricultural. If this commission were making due inquiry into the conditions of our province with reference to the freight shipped therefrom I cannot understand why they should ask the government to nullify the provisions of the Maritime Freight Rates Act and the recommendations of the Duncan commission.

A demand has been made of most members from the maritime provinces that we implore the government through the Minister of Transport to delay this matter until the representatives of the seven provinces have had an opportunity to make their protests known to the government. I should like to read part of one telegram which I received, as follows:

> We look to the members from the maritime provinces to fight for the restoration of our former position under the act.

Mr. J. R. MacNICOL (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, many excellent speeches have been delivered on the question of freight rates, and I feel that I cannot add anything new, certainly not along the lines that have been covered so far. I am going to approach this subject from another angle and shall endeavour to make a suggestion or two. If they cannot be considered now, perhaps consideration will be given them later on.

I have in mind quite clearly what the minister said in his excellent speech. When the minister speaks he presents his arguments in a plain, matter of fact way so that everyone can understand what he means. I have in mind clearly what he said. Three facts stand out: No. 1, that we must have railways; No. 2, that the railways must have more revenue, and No. 3, that there should be more freight.

I have asked myself, Mr. Speaker, just what are the reasons for the railway situation in Canada being what it is, and answering that to my own satisfaction, I then asked myself: Are we forever to be facing the problem of increasing freight rates every few years? Is there not some method by which we can have at least some fixity of railway tariffs?

I am not going to blame the railways in any shape or form, or anybody else, unless I blame all of us who are members. I remember quite a few years ago—I was not a member then—I had to come to Ottawa nearly every week, and I used to go and sit in the railway committee room where often in those days plans were placed before the members for railway extensions here, there, and everywhere throughout the country. Those were the days of railway expansion. Those who represented the railways had to contend against the members of parliament of those days who were pressing their demands for a railway in this direction or in that direction, and naturally they recommended that the railway run through their own community or somewhere near it. The members themselves were being besieged by everybody back home to see that the railway ran in their direction. As a result of all this pressure, the railways were compelled to build lines which their engineers told them, and which they knew themselves, were wholly uneconomic. That is one of the burdens with which our railways have been afflicted down through the years and which has put them in the boat they are in today. I will give just four examples in different parts of the country.

If you were to travel away to the west, Your Honour, in the direction of the Alaska highway, you would have to pass through Edmonton if you went by rail. The railway after it leaves Edmonton has its terminus at Dawson Creek, but at the time the railway was built it was never determined that Dawson Creek should be the terminus. The railway hardly knew where it was to go. It had to meet the requests of members of parliament, who wanted it to go here and wanted it to go there, with the result that it was constructed as far as McLennan Junction, about 267 miles north west of Edmonton. There it divided, and one branch went to the west on the north side of the Peace river to what is known as Hines Creek, where it ended up in the woods. It could not possibly bring results to the railway so far as traffic was concerned. The other part of the road went on straight west from McLennan Junction. I do not believe at the time that the railway had any conception of where they were going to go, but they were being importuned by the members of parliament, and if I had been here I would likely have done the same as the members of those days did, supported the application for railway extensions into new parts of the country.

After McLennan junction you come in contact with a most peculiar situation. The railway, after a run of fifty miles, arrives at a place called Spirit River, and it ends there, ends nowhere, ends in the woods. When the road was projected toward Spirit River the intention was to proceed straight west, and the roadbed was built but not railed for another fifty miles toward a place called Pouce Coupe. But pressure was brought to bear on those building the road, and what happened? Today if you were travelling through that country, when you reached Spirit River you would find that the railway backs up five miles. It does not go forward; it does not even turn around; the whole train backs up to a place called Rycroft, because the pressure was excessive from the area now called Grande Prairie, a prosperous part of the country well worthy of a railway. At Rycroft the railway runs south for fifty miles, to an area quite foreign to where it had started for. Arriving at Grande Prairie, it runs northwest for approximately 100 miles to its present terminus at Dawson Creek. So every farmer and settler in that whole area is compelled to pay freight on an additional 100 miles and the railway is compelled to run its trains that extra 100 miles to Dawson Creek. How can the railways pay under those conditions?

North of Dawson Creek is the only known area which can accommodate a great new immigration settlement, which has to come, for the railways must have more traffic, and the only way they can get it is by opening up the country. There is an area where perhaps 150,000 to 200,000 more farms are available for settlement. But unless something is done, the people who settle there will be compelled, for goodness knows how long, to pay freight on that extra 100 miles and travel that extra distance. I do not blame the railways for that, but it does add to their costs and reduces their profits. But they are not to blame for those conditions. It is we here who are to blame.

Having said that, I feel that any adjustment that is to be made to relieve the railways of these extra costs should be shared by the country at large, not just by the businessmen and merchants and people who are trying to carry on there.

[Mr. MacNicol.]

Let me give another such example. Supposing Your Honour is going to Flin Flon or to Sherridon, two great mining centres in a district that is opening up and growing very rapidly. It is on the pre-Cambrian shield, with much commerce by way of mining being conducted there. What happens? You take a train to Winnipeg and go away past Dauphin and finally pass a place called Swan River. If you could only turn north from there it would be only 100 miles to The Pas, a fine city which is growing rapidly and destined to become great. It will be the centre of all that new mining area. But you cannot go straight north. You have to go away west to Hudson Bay junction. The railways had nothing to do with that. They were compelled to build that road which, like Topsy in Uncle Tom's Cabin, just "growed". Many of our railways just "growed up" without any relation to economics or traffic. That was not the fault of the railways. When you arrive at Hudson Bay junction you turn and go 100 miles northeast before you reach The Pas. In other words, you go another 100 miles out of your way.

So I am beginning to say to myself that the time has come for us to revamp the whole business associated with railways and give them a chance to live. They have not a chance under the conditions I have mentioned.

Suppose you were going to Arvida or Chicoutimi by rail, what would you have to do? First of all, you go west of Quebec city fifty miles. You go to a place called Rivière à Pierre. Then you turn to the north, and run 100 miles and come to Chambord. Then you turn to the right and run east fifty miles down to Jonquière and Arvida and Chicoutimi. It is in the lower part of that part of Quebec, Jonquière, Arvida and Chicoutimi, that the country is growing. It is a very great country, Your Honour, destined in my judgment to be a great industrial centre some day because of the cheap electricity that results from the vast plant at Shipshaw and the vast waterpower resources which are behind it. Power can be developed there far cheaper than in any other place in the world. Therefore it is destined to become a great manufacturing country and a great agricultural country because up the Peribonka river, that country which was made famous by Louis Hemon in his book "Maria Chapdelaine" will be well settled. What does it mean? Until alterations are made there, it means that for all time the thousands and thousands of people who will settle in there will be compelled to go 100 miles out of their way because the railway just "growed up". It was not the fault of the railway. It was just extended to take in those areas.

The hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Black) was telling me yesterday—I have seen it myself; I knew something of it—that when the railway was being built on Cape Breton island there was a big debate in parliament on where they would run the railway from Mulgrave to Sydney. A great battle took place between those who wanted the railway to run in the centre of the island—I am not making any comment as to where it should have been run—or along the shore. It meant a distance of close to thirty-five or forty miles extra, via the centre route. Because of that, the fine city of Sydney, the coal mines and the steel plants there, have for years and years been compelled to ship their coal and steel forty miles farther than it was necessary for them to do. How can they compete against the world, as they have to do, when they have to go away out of their way? Not only that, but when you drive on the main line again you find that the railway is not where it should have been. It is not the fault of the railways. They were compelled to do things. Therefore, sir, I say that, not the maritime provinces, not the west, not Manitoba, but the whole of Canada must assume the burden of revamping the railways so that they will be in a position to carry freight at a lower rate.

I am not advocating the lower rate today. According to the board, the rates are too low. I accept the judgment of the board of transport commissioners. The minister said that one of two things would have to take place: either the railways would have to have a higher rate, or amalgamation of the two railways would have to take place. That has been advocated by some. I do not think it has ever been advocated by anyone who really understood the problem. Personally I could not support amalgamation of the railways. I am strongly in favour of the two railways. One is in opposition to the other, and each one meets the other and tries to do a better job.

If what the minister said is true we must choose one of two alternatives; either the rates must be higher, or we must accept amalgamation. Therefore it comes down to only one alternative, namely, higher rates. Having been in big business for many years, and having a keen conception of what freight rates mean to business, I say that increased freight rates at the present time would work a very great hardship on the maritime provinces—they are just trying to pull themselves together—and to British Columbia, also.

Therefore the problem is, what can we do? Something must be done. It is a problem to solve what can be done, because what the railways want is much more freight. If they had two or three times the amount of freight they now have, even with the present rates, they would have a lot more revenue, perhaps enough to carry on. I do not know; it is not for me to say. But one thing is certain. They must have a lot more freight. They cannot get more freight by throttling business by higher rates in the maritime provinces. The maritime members have been saying what it would mean to their business to have higher freight rates, and I presume they are right. The British Columbia members in all parts of the house have said the same thing that increased freight rates would throttle their business which is struggling to go forward. I am inclined to agree with the members from the east and the west in that regard.

What can be done? That is the problem. We all admit that we must have the two railways. We all admit that the existing railways must have more revenue. There are only two ways in which they can get it, from an increased amount of freight or from higher freight rates. At the moment it is out of the question for them to get much more freight. I am going to submit a program which will result in much more freight, but it could not be worked out in a short time. Therefore I am going to suggest to the minister—it may be too late; I do not know whether it can be done now or not—to consider not putting into operation the new freight rates for some time. What would it matter if they were not put into operation for a year, provided that the government of this country, which I will support to do this, accept the deficits on each road resulting from the lack of the increased freight rates. That may not be possible. If that were acceptable— .

Mr. CHEVRIER: It is possible, but it is a tremendous amount. It is against the policy of the government.

Mr. MacNICOL: The minister is a bright young man, and I am sure he would like to give the suggestion some consideration. In any event, that is all I can say. I suggest that he abandon the increased rates on the condition that the country accept the deficit of these two roads. It is only fair that the country should do that until such time as the whole matter can be threshed out, which will be quite a problem. I know what the minister is up against. It will be quite a problem to face the premiers of the seven provinces.

Since I come from Ontario, I wish to put myself square with the country. As a citizen of Ontario I am willing to do whatever I possibly can to help both the east and the west, and that is the only way we can overcome the difficulty. Since I am an Ontario member and a taxpayer, I would be willing to pay my part; I am sure the people of Ontario would be willing to pay their part, and I would think the people of Quebec would be willing to pay part of the cost to provide for the deficits of the two roads until the whole matter could be studied again. I am as satisfied as I am standing here that the whole railway problem must be studied again. I do not think it is right that the railways should be compelled forever to be up against what they have been in the past, and make these endless journeys and endless additional costs without reason, to do business in parts of the country.

The minister may not agree with what I am now going to say. I am going to ask him to reconsider the building of a bridge over the strait of Canso. I was a member of the reconstruction committee two or three years ago. I heard engineers of both the roads, I believe—if it was not of both roads it was the engineers of the Canadian National Railways—tell the committee that a bridge across the strait of Canso would save the railroads a million dollars a year. If that is so—I am not going to say whether it is or not; the minister would know much better than I do, because he is in a position to know, with those who are behind him advising him who should know—then it is up to the government of Canada to build a bridge across the strait of Canso without cost to Nova Scotia, New Brunswick or the railways. By this means the railways would get business and we would get the money all back again. The steel would all be made there and it would be a splendid thing for the city of Sydney to be able to produce that million tons of steel. A great deal of work would result in that part of the country, and heaven knows the people there need it. I offer that suggestion as one which in my opinion the minister should seriously consider.

I have made extensive surveys of bridges. I know there are half a dozen going up across the Mississippi; at St. Louis and at San Francisco they have constructed two gigantic bridges costing roughly $150 million each. That program has been carried out in the last few years, and there are now projected at San Francisco two more bridges at a cost of $200 million each. The people in the United States have done this because the bridges that have been built have proved to be wonderful dividend producers.

I suggest to the minister that he should not hesitate to put into effect a program which would enable the Canadian National to carry out such an undertaking as I have described. It would be an investment that would return dividends, because certainly the building of a bridge across the strait of Canso would be one means whereby the yearly deficit could be cut down, to the extent of one million.

There is another suggestion I have to offer. I have been across the prairies many times, and it is my judgment that the western provinces have never had a square deal, nor have they had the chance of securing a square deal. It is not that they have not tried hard to get it. The railroads running through the prairies for perhaps a thousand miles pass through half a dozen communities, at most ten communities of any size producing freight. They carry wheat to the east, with very little freight going back, and the result is that the railway companies are faced with a colossal expenditure. This is not fair to these companies.

We must try to solve the problem that faces us in that respect. How are we to solve it? We should do the same for the west as for the maritimes—expand their industrial activities, both primary and secondary. So far as the west is concerned, I read only today that it may be ten years before the dam is constructed across the Saskatchewan river at Riverhurst or somewhere in that vicinity. If it were in my charge to build a dam across the Saskatchewan river, I would do it in a great deal less than ten years.

I have had a good deal to do with many dams, and in my judgment that is one thing which has to be done if we are to give the west a chance to produce freight. They are producing too little today in that part of Canada, not because of any inherent inability on their part. It is not their fault, because they cannot produce without water. The water is there simply flowing into Hudson bay to make more ice.

If the increased rate of 21 per cent across the board were left off for some time, it would give the country an opportunity to get together and solve this gigantic railway problem, which must be solved in any event, because we cannot go on forever having an application every few years for increased freight rates. Let us have the problem settled once for all. I have suggested one or two ways in which it might be helped.

I do not want to take up much more time because I know the house is anxious to get the vote, but I have one or two more suggestions to offer the minister. He is a bright man, as I said to my deskmate yesterday. I should not like to say that he is the brightest on the government side but I spoke very highly of him to my deskmate, and as one who is a good deal older than the minister, and who has been in big business and has seen many big business problems solved, I wish to make a suggestion or two to him. I have seen a small plant grow from the stage at which it engaged very few men until it became a large organization, and this was the result of careful business operation.

I would say, if I were in the minister's place, that this problem ought to be solved not so much from the point of view of raising freight rates as by means of the rehabilitation of the railways themselves, by doing that which will give them the chance that they have not had of increasing their freight carriage. And I would do this by opening up the country so as to produce more freight. One has only to travel in order to see the results that follow from such a program. One has only to consider such a railway as the Chicago-Burlington-Quincy, which runs up the valley of the Platte river, passing through forty towns and cities, all rich and thriving communities. That resulted from the rehabilitation of that area. We have distances two or three times greater in western Canada, and we might have not forty or fifty but sixty new cities and towns which would all produce so much more freight.

That is one of the requisites of our railways. We must produce more freight, and how can the railways get more freight unless we open up the country, build new communities and expand our manufactures? In this connection, I may say that on some other occasion I shall submit for the maritimes a program which, if carried out, will double the population of that part of Canada in a period of fifteen or twenty years. That would mean a great deal more business for the railways.

These remarks I have made tonight have been offered in the friendliest spirit without any intention of criticizing. I simply wish to have the minister take into consideration the necessary means of increasing the freight potential along our railways and reducing the cost of operation by eliminating long nuisance hauls that get us nowhere. If he would do that it would be all to the good of the country.

As an Ontario man, I think I can speak for the people of this province when I say that in a sense we really live through the co-operation of other parts of the country. There is in Toronto a population of nearly one million, and the men and women in that city are engaged in the production of commodities, the raw materials of which come from outside the city. There is nothing in Toronto from which we can make the things we produce there. We import them into the city and our people convert them into finished goods. Such a program as I have suggested would mean increased returns for us. It would develop other parts of the country and it would mean more freight for the railways.

That, I suggest, would be a good deal sounder than a large increase in freight rates. I am not saying that it is not necessary to have more freight revenue at the moment. How it will be done I do not know. I am not advocating higher rates. I am advocating the other program of building up the country and bringing in more people and making more freight.

Earlier in my remarks I referred to the country north of Peace River. I have been through that country, hundreds of miles of it, and it was not easy travelling. Sometimes I went on horseback; much of my travelling was on foot. It is a wonderful country. I would call it the last place in the world for Anglo-Saxons, French-Canadians and people of our stock to settle in. But I am sure you could settle two million people there if you provided the facilities, and that would mean a great deal of freight for the railways. That is what they want—more business and more revenue through increased business. If they had more business they would not have to come here every few years for increased freight rates. My last word will be this: High freight rates will throttle instead of encourage business.

Mr. BENOIT MICHAUD (Restigouche-Madawaska): Mr. Speaker, I need not apologize for taking part in this debate. I may say that I was particularly prompted to do so yesterday when I heard the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Brooks) throw out a challenge to the maritime members, particularly those from New Brunswick, sitting on this side of the house. Lest my silence be improperly interpreted, I think I had better state clearly what my stand is in this important matter. It would not be the first time that New Brunswick newspapers and politicians criticized Liberal members of this province for their silence in some of the debates in this house. In the past, however, matters were so trivial that they could be laughed at. This time I consider the subject a serious one; hence my remarks.

Before dealing with the challenge issued by the hon. member for Royal, perhaps I had better read what he said yesterday. As reported at page 2963 of Hansard of April 14, he said:

> I appeal to these members of the House of Commons to stand up and support what they consider to be in the best interests of the maritime provinces. I do not think these men were enthusiastic before they attended their caucus the other day.

Then the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross), with his usual timely interruption, had this to say:

Mr. Ross (Souris): They always swallow themselves.

Then the hon. member for Royal continued:

Mr. Brooks: I should like to know what happened in the caucus.

And then he went on along that line. I wish to take issue with this reference by opposition members to a change or so-called change of attitude on the part of Liberal members following this caucus. They surmised—and as usual they are wrong—that the boys had been told to fall into line. It is no wonder that members of the opposition come to that conclusion and openly express it. That is obviously the way things are run in their own caucus—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MICHAUD: —and they cannot conceive of a party discipline different from their own. Let me tell these wishful thinkers that once again they are all wrong and that their vicious insinuations are without any foundation whatever.

I am sorry that I cannot hear the interruptions from that far corner of the house.

Mr. CARDIFF: Speak about something you know about.

Mr. MICHAUD: I do not believe they add any great contribution to the debate, in any event. If we look at this aspect of the situation from an unbiased point of view, what ground is there for opposition members to make these unfair insinuations? What ground is there for any member on the other side of the house to insinuate that the boys were told to fall into line? Has there been a single member on this side of the house who, at any time in the course of the debate, intimated that he might vote for that far-fetched motion of non-confidence? I have listened to or read most of the speeches, and I am unable to find any statements made on this side of the house which would warrant the belief by anybody on the other side that any member on this side could possibly fall for such an awkward and deceptive trick as this non-confidence motion.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): Particularly awkward.

Mr. MICHAUD: On the other hand, I am not greatly surprised that some members of the opposition resort to such tactics. They must try in some way to camouflage their utter lack of serious arguments to defend this amendment, which is just as much out of place on the present motion to go into supply as it would have been before the Easter recess. There is no more foundation for this amendment today than there would have been three or four weeks ago.

Like many of the other criticisms of the opposition that have been levelled at the government, this one is bound to have a short spell of popularity. When we came to the house last December, the government was indicted by the opposition on several counts. Foremost of all was the failure to devaluate the Canadian dollar. We have not heard so much about this of late, and I do not believe we are likely to hear very much more, following this report of the Bank of Nova Scotia, which report originated in Toronto, and which, I believe, gave the coup de grace to that much vaunted panacea of devaluation.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): The hon. member is reading from the wrong speech.

Mr. MICHAUD: Then there was the count as to the removal of the subsidies on coarse grains. We heard about it for weeks and weeks. I imagine that it is fairly well worn out by now, and that we are not likely to hear about it any more. The situation is fairly well under control. There are other subjects of criticism which have passed into oblivion so rapidly that, when one comes to think of it, he wonders how it comes about that subjects of criticism of that kind should be of short duration. This one with regard to freight rates will also wear out, and I dare say it will do so quite rapidly.

Mr. PROBE: You hope.

Mr. MICHAUD: The government has been criticized—

Mr. BRYCE: Tell us about potatoes.

Mr. MICHAUD: I am sorry but I missed the interruption of the hon. gentleman. I do not believe, however, that it adds a great deal to the debate. This afternoon the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. Macdonnell) accused this government of neglect, of allowing this situation to develop with regard to the railways. But unfortunately he did not point out wherein the neglect lay or how it came about that the government allowed this situation to develop. The government does not interfere with the running of the railways. I fail entirely to understand just what he means by that; and, in view of the fact that he did not care to go into detail, I dare say that possibly he himself is not quite sure just what he means by making those attacks on the government.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): He thought you could understand the object, but apparently you can not.

Mr. COTE (Matapedia-Matane): He was presumptuous.

Mr. MICHAUD: Unfortunately we are not all endowed with the same amount of intelligence and ability as some hon. members on the other side of the house think they are endowed with.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Thanks for the compliment.

Mr. MICHAUD: Let us come now to the challenge of the hon. member for Royal. I wish to tell him and all other hon. members that I am not afraid to take a stand on this question. As a matter of fact, I had made plans to go away yesterday; but for fear that I might be accused by some of our good friends across the way of running away and dodging the issue, I decided to stay here until the matter is finally disposed of.

Mr. BRYCE: Face the music.

Mr. MICHAUD: There would be no advantage in my repeating some of the arguments which were presented so ably by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) the other day. I should like, however, to say just one word as to the utter futility and inopportunity of this debate under present circumstances. To my knowledge, nobody in this house has denied that the railways need the extra money in order to carry on and grant promised increases of wages to their employees. I am not aware either that any objection has been taken to the recent decision of the government to require the board of transport commissioners to make a thorough investigation into the rate structure. As a matter of fact the hon. member for Royal, when questioned by the Minister of Transport, admitted that both steps were justified.

If the complaints of the maritime and the western provinces in regard to freight rates are justified, as I believe they are, this is solely on the basis that, because of numerous considerations which have been placed before the house repeatedly during the course of this debate, historical and economic considerations, they should have lower freight rates than the central provinces. In my opinion that is the problem in a nutshell. That principle was recognized some twenty years ago as far as the maritime provinces are concerned. At that time the Duncan commission recommended lower preferential freight rates for the maritimes, and in 1927 those recommendations were implemented by means of the Maritime Freight Rates Act, which established rates 20 per cent below standard on the bulk of the traffic. This preferential rate has endured for more than twenty years. Whether or not it is still equitable under present circumstances, I am not in a position to say. I would venture to suggest, however, that it is no longer equitable, and that the preferential should be increased to at least 30 per cent below standard. If that were done, according to my calculation the recent increase would amount to only about five per cent as far as the maritime provinces are concerned, and I presume there would be no particular objection to such an increase.

Let me repeat that in my opinion the only consistent attitude for maritime members to take on this matter of freight rates is to press for a further reduction under the Maritime Freight Rates Act. This should be done by way of amendment to the act, not through this ill-timed non-confidence motion. What bothers me with respect to the criticism of the hon. member for Royal is the fact that the situation of which he complains is not a recent development. The hon. member has been in this house since 1935; as a matter of fact he was the only Conservative member returned from the maritime provinces in that election. Not having been here as long as the hon. member, I do not know what if anything he has said or done in the past on the floor of the house with regard to having maritime freight rates further reduced. This argument applies also to the other opposition members from the maritime provinces, though not to the same extent since they have not been here so long. However I do not recall any great pressure being exerted since 1945 by those hon. members with a view to having freight rates in the maritime provinces further reduced.

This afternoon the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Stuart) made an interesting suggestion, to the effect that manufacturers throughout Canada should sell their products at a uniform price delivered to the consumer in any part of Canada. He pointed out that this is being done now by some industries in the maritime provinces. I wonder how many of our good friends from Ontario, particularly on the other side of the house, would do something to promote this suggestion. I dare not venture an opinion as to the extent to which it might be practicable. Possibly it might be adopted in reference to commodities in which the freight rate bears a low ratio to the value; but if it came to coal and lumber and steel I doubt very much whether the suggestion could be carried out.

In any event, if there are grievances in the maritime provinces, as I believe there are,

I repeat that the solution is a further reduction of freight rates in the maritime provinces. In my opinion it would be the quintessence of irresponsibility for a government to interfere with the judgment of a judicial body set up some forty years ago, with which thus far no government has dared interfere. There would be no more justification for the government to interfere with a judgment of the board of transport commissioners than there would be for it to interfere with a judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I shall have no hesitation in voting against both the amendment and the subamendment.

Mr. E. G. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I rise to add my voice to those who have spoken in opposition to the imposition of a 21 per cent increase in freight rates. I was astounded to hear the decision of the transport board to allow this increase, but I was even more than astounded when I learned the government intended to disregard the request of seven premiers that the federal government stay the order of the board for thirty days until they could make their representations. I feel that this was a betrayal of the democratic principles of this country. At this time, when we are trying to promote peace and unanimity across this country, I think it was poor judgment on the part of the government to permit an action of this kind which imposes real injustices and inequalities upon certain sections of the country. The increased freight rates will make it necessary for many of our labouring people to demand new wage increases, because British Columbia, the three prairie provinces and indeed the maritime provinces will all find the cost of living going up, due, both directly and indirectly, to these new freight rates.

I do not say that there should not be a thorough investigation into the question of freight rates, or that the railway companies are not justified in asking for a revision of rates if they are in any danger of becoming insolvent. The hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Michaud) stated a few moments ago that he did not consider this debate timely. I quite agree that for some hon. members it is not timely, and indeed is embarrassing, but I believe the leader of this group has done the people of Canada a real service in bringing about a debate in this house on the action of the government in upholding the decision of the transport board to increase freight rates by 21 per cent.

In view of what the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska has said, I should like to quote the amendment which is under discussion today. The amendment moved by the leader of this group (Mr. Coldwell) is as follows:

> That all the words after the word "that" to the end of the question be deleted and the following be substituted therefor:
>
> "this house is of the opinion that the failure of the government to defer the imposition of the increases in freight rates recently authorized by the board of transport commissioners is inimical to the best interests of the people of Canada; further this house is of the opinion that the government should reconsider this matter and take action to prevent the proposed increases from coming into effect at this time."

Later on, the official opposition moved a further amendment which is quite in keeping with my own sentiments and which reads as follows:

> That all the words after "this house" in the fourth line of the amendment be deleted, and that the following be substituted instead thereof:
>
> "regrets the government's failure to secure the removal of inequalities and discriminations in the Canadian railway freight rates structure before the imposition of a horizontal increase of twenty-one per cent—an increase which is bound to intensify the aforesaid inequalities and discriminations, and
>
> Further regrets that the government has refused the reasonable request of seven provinces that the imposition of increased freight rates recently authorized by the board of transport commissioners be delayed for thirty days until they could be heard."

I think that is a reasonable request. We should have democracy in this country because that is what we fought two wars for. It is what we have been trying to build up in this country. Before this we have had the premiers of the different provinces coming to Ottawa to attend dominion-provincial conferences and attempt to bridge any gaps which there might be in our Canadian way of life. They have tried to come to agreement with the federal government, so that details of the British North America Act and other constitutional enactments might be threshed out in a democratic way and bring harmony to this country. But here we have action on the part of the government which has aroused anger from coast to coast. As long as I have been in politics I have never known of an issue which has so much aroused the people of my province.

We are not in disagreement with the right of the railroads to demand an increase if they need it, but I want to say first that the whole freight rate structure should have been thoroughly investigated. If further revenue were needed, then it should have been granted on a basis that was fair and equitable across the country. I should like to quote the statement made by Mr. Macdonald in his submission to the transport board. Referring to the revenue of the Canadian Pacific, he said:

> The Canadian Pacific railway is thus, on our contention, in a position to pay all of its dividends, all its fixed charges and provide all of the $15·2 million for additions and betterments, and leave a surplus of almost $10 million.

I listened with great interest to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) when he spoke the other day. I thought he was going to give the whole railroad picture, but in my opinion he failed to tell the house one of the most important things. He said nothing about the profits and the surpluses set aside by the companies to provide for the betterments referred to in their submissions.

I agree with the Minister of Transport when he says that we need able men on the transport board if we are to have a proper investigation, but I feel that it does not take great intelligence to realize that, when injustice and inequality already exist in the freight rate structure, by imposing a further horizontal increase on those existing inequalities you simply increase the burden on a large number of people. I know I speak for the farmers and people of Saskatchewan when I say that all we want is fairness and justice. I do not think that is any more than a democratic institution should give to the people.

The cost of living is increasing all across the country. The veteran who is trying to rehabilitate himself finds it more difficult to get along. There have been further increases brought about by the new rate schedule. We find that on the off-lines the new schedules will apply. It will be only on the transcontinental lines that there will not be any increase in freight rates. Next we find that the minimum weight will be 100 pounds. For example, the cost of shipping a crate of eggs will be increased from 35 to 75 cents. This will decrease the income of the women on our farms who have been shipping eggs and milk and cream.

I have listed what I believe are eight important aspects of this situation which affect the western farmer. It should be understood that the western farmers are the greatest consumers of manufactured products in Canada, particularly farm machinery. The special committee on farm machinery which sat in 1937 found that there was a great backlog of demand for farm machinery in western Canada. During the hungry thirties few farmers were able to buy farm machinery and a backlog of about $50,000,000 of demand was built up. Then during the six years of war with large quantities of steel going into war equipment the farmers found themselves still unable to get farm machinery.

I think this is an instance where a large company has influenced the transport board and the government in order unjustly to impose a situation upon the farmers. The demand for farm machinery in western Canada has now reached a total of from $60,000,000 to $70,000,000 a year. These increased rates will mean a tremendously increased cost, and I have calculated what this additional cost will mean to the western farmer.

If we estimate the annual requirements at from $60,000,000 to $75,000,000, plus $15,000,000 for necessary replacement parts, this gives a total of from $75,000,000 to $90,000,000. According to the 1937 special committee, 7·4 per cent of the cost of farm machinery is made up of freight. That would mean about $5.55 million each year. If we estimate the freight from distribution centres like Regina to the local points as being one-third of the freight from the factory to the distribution point, we find that the additional cost will be from $1.85 million to $2.22 million. The 21 per cent increase in freight rates will cost the western farmer in connection with his machinery requirements an additional $1.55 million to $1.86 million a year. That is a tremendous amount of money. Here we have the farmers who are operating on a flexible income which has no stability at all put in the position where it is difficult for them to determine when they buy machinery whether their income next year will be sufficient to allow them to pay for it.

The representations made by the railway companies were based to a large extent on the revenue which they expect to get in the future, and it is interesting to note in that connection just what the Canadian Pacific Railway Company did submit to the board. In their submission the Canadian Pacific Railway Company said that their revenue in 1947 would be about $285·4 million. Actually it turns out that their gross earnings that year were $318·6 million, or an additional $34 million. This shows that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company is in a very liquid position, after allowing for fixed charges, income tax, dividends, additions and betterments, and reserves. Again we find a net increase in 1947 over 1946 of $2·1 million. In other words, the net income of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company increased from $20·8 million in 1946 to $22·9 million in 1947.

I consider that the federal government has given the seven provincial premiers who have tried to co-operate with this government a slap in the face. All I am asking is that the government rescind its action and stay the application of these increased freight rates until it has heard the representations of the provincial governments. That would lead to co-operation between the provinces and between the people of Canada. If the railways need additional income to pay decent wages to their employees, let them have it on the basis of equality of rates all across this country. We have already had enough of situations that would break the east away from the west and the west away from the east. Let us now try to build for unanimity and co-operation across this country. If there is a single thing that will cause fresh labour disputes and demands for increased wages and make it more difficult for the veteran and the farmer and all of us to go ahead in this peacetime economy, it is this very action. I think the government was very ill-advised in taking the action which it did.

Mr. D. KING HAZEN (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, the people of the constituency I have the honour to represent in this house, like the people in every part of the maritime provinces, have been seriously perturbed by the judgment of the board of transport commissioners granting the railways a 21 per cent horizontal increase in their freight rate structure. It is for this reason I want to say a word or two in this debate.

I do not think any useful purpose would be served by my referring to and setting forth again the protests that were made by the premiers of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, all of whom are, I might say, supporters of the Liberal government. Nor do I think it would be of any advantage for me to take up the time of the house by reading the protests that were made by the maritime transportation commission, by the maritime board of trade, by other organizations and by the press of the maritime provinces. All those protests have been brought forcefully to the attention of the minister and the government and to repeat them again at this stage of the debate would be merely a waste of time.

I should like to preface what I have to say by quoting from the report of the royal commission on dominion-provincial relations, known as the Rowell-Sirois report, which was made on May 3, 1940. At page 91, volume II of that report, the commission says:

> New Brunswick shares with Nova Scotia the unhappy distinction of the longest unfavourable economic history of any Canadian province. The inferior character of many of the province's resources, and transportation and marketing difficulties, have retarded economic progress and created chronically impoverished areas and distressed industries.

This is not a happy or a wholesome picture or a condition that we would like to see continue. The maritime provinces complain that, compared with other Canadian provinces, they have a lower standard of living, a higher cost of production and higher marketing costs, and that these unfavourable conditions under which we have laboured have been made worse by the decision of the board which was handed down on March 20, last. In this connection I should like to quote, and to make his words my own, what was said by the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Winters) in this debate yesterday afternoon. He said, as reported at page 2920 of Hansard:

> There is no question that the increase in freight rates will be a severe and adverse blow to the maritime provinces as well as to the west. Even at the old rates it was almost impossible for our industries to put their products on central Canadian markets at competitive prices. To be in a competing position, it was necessary not only to aim at wages more moderate than those prevailing elsewhere but to keep our other manufacturing costs down. What small measure of success we have had indicates that we have achieved both these aims to some extent. Now, however, the higher freight rates place another obstacle in our path. They will tend to make us live within ourselves in an industrial sense more than ever before.

I have no hesitation in saying that the railways of this country must have an increased revenue if they are to carry on. There is no question in my mind as to the need for this being done. I do not intend to give the reasons I hold for having that opinion. These reasons have been given in the house on a number of occasions during this debate. It is not the increase in revenue but the manner in which the board has decided that these revenues are to be obtained to which objection is taken in the maritime provinces.

A memorandum of the maritime transportation commission on the judgment of the board of transport commissioners states that the board found a straight percentage increase is the only manner by which general increases can be applied. If that is a fact, then I say it is a most unfortunate state of affairs in the maritime provinces.

I wish to say a word or two about the plan of the government to have the board investigate the freight rate structure of the railways. I was surprised at a statement made by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) in this house on April 13 during the course of his speech. He said, as reported at page 2908 of Hansard:

> This is a motion to go into supply, and my hon. friend has decided to move an amendment to the motion in order to expound a grievance, something which he has a perfect right to do. But I submit that before that grievance was expounded the government had made the grievance disappear by ordering a thorough and complete investigation into the railway freight structure by the only board competent and efficient to deal with the question. The government has moved to have the situation righted by this investigation.

If we can make grievances disappear by referring them to any board, then this country would be a country very easy to govern and it would be a happy land in which to live. But, sir, the only way to deal with a grievance is to face it, and the only way that a grievance can be rectified is to solve it. To refer a matter to a commission and think you will solve the grievances of the maritimes or the west or of any other province in that way seems to me to be utter nonsense. The order in council provides for an investigation of freight rates by the board, and it reads as follows:

Order in council P.C. 1487, approved April 7, 1948: directing the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada to make a thorough investigation of the rates structure of railways and railway companies which are under the jurisdiction of parliament, with a view to the establishment of a fair and reasonable rate structure which will, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, be equal in its application to all persons and localities in the various provinces and territories of Canada.

I must confess that when I read that order in council I was puzzled by it. I failed to understand what it meant, or what powers the board was given under it. I believe now, after making a hurried examination—and that is all I had time for—of the Railway Act, that the wording has been adopted from section 314 of that statute which is headed "Equality as to Tolls" and so on.

This board is not all-powerful. Its powers are limited by the act that created it. The board, under the act, as I read it—I do not profess to be an expert in these matters, and I would ask to be corrected if I am wrong—has no power to fix rates that will assist an industry to develop and function. It has no power to fix rates that will remove handicaps under which many maritime businesses function on account of their geographical situation or distance from central markets. It has no power to fix rates that will develop business in the maritime provinces. It has no power to adopt experimental rates. Its powers are limited, and this move of the government in referring the matter to the board is, in my opinion, a political expedient to put to one side a difficulty the government does not want to face up to.

The senior member for Halifax (Mr. Isnor), when speaking in this debate yesterday, said as reported at page 2957 of Hansard:

I cannot help believing, however, that there has been a slip in the wording of the minister's order. In some of the judgments the board takes the view that it cannot handle questions relating to trade.

Well, sir, if there has been any slip in the order, let the minister have it corrected. In my opinion, however, there has been no slip. The wording was deliberately and carefully made, and the powers of the board are, of necessity, circumscribed.

The royal commission on maritime claims, which was headed by Sir Andrew Rae Duncan and had as one of its members Doctor Cyrus Macmillan who for some time occupied a seat in this house, made its report on September 23, 1926. In its report it refers to the limitation of the board's powers. I propose to read into the record a paragraph from this report under the heading "Scope of the railway commission's functions". I do so because I think it is a matter that should be given further study by the Minister of Transport, by his assistants and by the government. This it what the report says in part on page 24:

In addition, the cases which the maritime provinces have already submitted to the railway commission also raise the question of handicaps arising from the geographical position of their natural products, and their distance generally from central markets. If we were satisfied that under their present power the railway commission could adequately deal, on appeal, with the broader aspect of the maritime cases before them, we would make no further comment.

Previous judgments of the railway board, however, lead us to fear that they will not feel competent to deal with such broad considerations as are still involved in these maritime claims. We cite, in particular, the following extracts from the board's judgments: (volume 13, pages 260-261, application of district board of trade, Coalhurst, Alberta.)

"The board, under the railway act, has no profit and loss responsibility, and its intervention in the matter of rates must, as has been indicated, be concerned with matters falling within the categories of reasonableness and unjust discrimination, and not with a policy of the development of industries through rate adjustments.

(Imperial Rice Milling Company v. Canadian Pacific Railway Company, 14 Canadian Railway Cases, 375.)

"The board has no power to regulate tolls for the purpose of equalizing cost of production, or geographical, or climatic, or economic conditions. (British Columbia News Company v. Express Traffic Association, 14 Canadian Railway Cases, 178.)

"It is not the board's function, as delegated by parliament, to make rates to develop business, but to deal with the reasonableness of rates, either on complaint or of its own motion . . . As it has not been established that the rates as charged are unreasonable, the board is not justified in ordering the installation of the experimental rates asked for."

The report goes on:

The conclusion to be drawn from these extracts seems to us to be that the railway commission does not feel itself empowered to pass under its review, when appeals are made to it, the same wide range of business considerations which railway companies themselves can take into account in forming a judgment as to the extent to which they should develop trade and business.

The report goes on to state:

At present the work of the railway commission is circumscribed within the two considerations, viz. (a) reasonable compensation to the carrying company, and (b) no unfair preference or unjust discrimination as between traders.

The report then refers to section 320 of the Railway Act which, it says—

. . . seems to give the wider powers that we have in mind to the railway commission, so far as the question of undue preference or unjust discrimination may be involved.

It quotes the section. I am not going to do so, but I have compared the section as set out in their report with the section as it appears in the act as it now stands, and I may say there is no change. It quotes the section and says:

Even there we feel that, if the intention was to have larger national interests in mind, the section should be made clearer, and instead of the words "in the interests of the public" (which might be interpreted as in the interests of the "consuming" public), the words should clearly state that it is national interests (both "producing" and "consuming") that are in mind.

The judgment of the board came before the maritime transportation commission in Moncton on, I believe, April 9; and after considering what the government had decided to do, the commission sent a wire to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and a copy of that wire to the Minister of Transport. In that wire it said that the action of the government in referring this matter again to the board was throwing a red herring across the trail. What it had in mind, I believe, when it made that statement were the sections of the act and the powers of the board to which I have just referred.

Perhaps I might take the time of the house to say just what the wire of the maritime transportation commission to the Prime Minister stated. I do not propose to quote it all. It states that in its opinion the spirit and terms of the Maritime Freight Rates Act have been violated, and in addition to that it points out that the effect will be that maritime industry will in many cases, be seriously affected and, in some cases, destroyed. It points out that in using the word industry it refers to agricultural as well as other industries, and then it states:

We feel that the proposal to hold a general freight rates investigation is simply a red herring across the trail. In the very nature of things it will require at least two years—

[Mr. Hazen.]

The Minister of Transport told us it might take a shorter time, six months I believe, or a little longer.

—as did the general investigation of 1925 to 1927, with little or no result.

The wire goes on to say:

We feel that your government should consider the matter outside the railway act because of its economic and political implications. When we consider that seven provinces in this dominion are aligned against this decision and only two are not opposing it, due to their geographical and special locations and their advantages over the other seven provinces in mass production and protection under Canadian tariff, we think you still appreciate the very serious questions that have been raised by this issue.

I think the long and short of the matter is that once these rates are imposed, and they are now imposed, it will be very difficult to get any change. I do not wish to read again the order that sends the matter to the board of transport commissioners, but I am still puzzled and I should like the minister, when he replies, to tell us just what powers the board have, just what they can do after they have heard the matter, and what will be the effect of their decision.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I may tell the hon. member now that they have power to equalize rates but have not the power to fix prices or to realign the boundaries of the country as he would like.

Mr. HAZEN: Perhaps I might say another word or two. I will refer to the order again, order in council P.C. 1487, approved on April 7, 1948. I read it because, as I say, I do not understand it.

Mr. GRANT: That is repeating.

Mr. HAZEN: It reads:

. . . directing the board of transport commissioners for Canada to make a thorough investigation of the rate structure of the railways—

That is plain enough.

—and railway companies which are under the jurisdiction of parliament,—

I can understand that.

—with a view to the establishment of a fair and reasonable rates structure . . .

Who is going to establish the rates structure?

Mr. CHEVRIER: The board, upon evidence, I presume.

Mr. HAZEN: Will that be by the board or by the government?

Mr. CHEVRIER: It is not the business of the government to fix rates. I explained that in my remarks the other evening. Nor is it the business of the government to equalize rates. It is the business of the board.

Mr. HAZEN: Another thing that puzzles me is this.

Mr. GRANT: Read it again.

Mr. HAZEN: The review of this judgment by the maritime transportation commission says the board found that a straight percentage increase is the only manner by which general increases can be applied. Having found this, how in the world are they to change their decision, in view of all the evidence that has been brought before them? How are they to change the decision and make any other one or devise any other method of raising revenues?

Mr. CHEVRIER: If I may answer that, because the application by the railways was one for an increase and the provinces did not appeal in regard to equalization. On the contrary, they clearly stated that they were not launching an application for equalization but that they would do that at a later date.

Mr. HAZEN: I am still puzzled by one thing, and perhaps the minister can clear this up. I have here a statement made by the Premier of New Brunswick, Hon. J. B. McNair, after the judgment was announced; and in the course of the statement he issued to the press he says:

> The maritime transportation commission, acting on behalf of the provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island made strong representations to the board that if increases were to be made in the freight rates structure such increases should not be flat or horizontal percentage rate increases but in effect should provide for lower rates on primary products. The board in its judgment has not seen fit to comply with our representations with the exception of rates on coal and coke.

How do you explain that?

Mr. L. PHILIPPE PICARD (Bellechasse): The discussion arising out of the amendment now being considered, Mr. Speaker, is most important, not only because any change in railway freight rates is bound to have a heavy repercussion on the economic structure of the country, but also because it forces upon us once more the fact of our interdependence with the United States. Because the United States were not successful in applying controls to trade and industry and because political pressure bore too heavily on the Washington administration, controls there were removed, and prices which were already on the way up, skyrocketed to unprecedented levels. Inevitably we felt the shock, because our economies are interrelated, because our importations affect so many varied lines of business, because so many Canadian goods or machines cannot be completed without the importation of some component parts from the United States. The inflation already existing in the United States rendered so difficult and so complicated the controls of prices here that government advisers decreed that we also should abandon controls. Good excuses were found: necessity to revert to democratic ways and practices; even provincial rights were invoked. The real reason was our dependence on United States economy.

The ruling of the board of transport commissioners that caused the present amendment to be introduced is in direct relation to the removal of controls and the high cost of living, and it will eventually help in raising the latter more. In a moment I will say a few words about the decision itself; but the main object of my remarks is to point out that we adopt, all of us, the attitude of the ostrich when it comes to facing the fact of our economic plight. We did it on the measures for exchange control, for United States dollar conservation, for importation restrictions. We are still doing it.

The trouble is that we have always had a dependent and subservient economy and we carry on, suffering from this condition. We are subservient to Britain and dependent on the British market and the fancies or ingratitudes of British governments, and subservient to the United States and dependent on its price structure, its inflations or depressions. It would not be half as bad if, besides the inconveniences resulting therefrom, we would benefit as much as they do on other occasions and share their prosperity and attain their per capita income.

If we all awoke and realized that stark realities are calling for leadership and courageous decisions we would spend less time in exalting parochialism, in defending east-west forced economy or the long narrow ribbon of railway siphoning goods from the centre to the extremities of the country, and we would start right away to negotiate not only a customs union but a full commercial union which would make all of America north of the Rio Grande an integrated economic unit. We might then still have many of our troubles to face, but we would also have the compensations and the broader life and more rational economy which would result from regulating our trade, not by sentiment or by so-called nationalistic pride but according to geographic, climatic and ethnical conditions.

Under our present fiscal, financial and commercial set-up, this railway problem will always be on us because, over and above the technical and economic problems inherent in railways in other countries, we have the problem increased here by the unnatural and artificial pumping of goods across the country at great losses to everyone. But being as it is and what it is, the railway problem and our economic problems cannot in any way be cured or even helped by the two amendments now before the house. They suggest no remedies. Their result would be only to postpone a needed solution of the problem. I like far more the courage and the logic of the government's decision of not interfering with the railway board's decision.

At this point I should like to congratulate the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) upon the splendid presentation he made on Tuesday last. I do not think he has convinced us that the flat 21 per cent increase constitutes a solution with which all parts of the country should be satisfied, but he has shown the urgency of remedies to be applied, and the great need that the railways be helped at the present moment.

I may say at this point that I have admired the public spirit shown by the members on this side of the house coming from British Columbia, the prairies and the maritimes in supporting the government's attitude and at the same time presenting so well the case for their own parts of the country.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Since Tuesday.

Mr. PICARD: At all times.

Mr. NICHOLSON: No, not last week.

Mr. PICARD: So far as I am concerned, I think the decision is logical because the matter was entrusted to the board, and the latter investigated the problem at length, coming to its decision after careful study and realization of the seriousness of the situation as well as the impact the increase will have on the Canadian economy. Either the commissioners are not competent or to be trusted, in which case they should be replaced, or they are sincere and sufficiently able, in which case their decision should be accepted. I believe a government should interfere as little as possible with the decisions of specialized, semi-judicial institutions; and although it is the duty of the government to review such questions and invoke if necessary the higher motive of the defence of the public interest should any decision be manifestly unfair, I do not think it is right for a government to interfere with the findings and decisions of independent boards functioning under laws created by parliament.

I also think the decision of the government not to interfere with the ordinance or delay its application is courageous, because it is bound to be attacked and exploited by the opposition parties, who had nothing better to recommend, at a time when its results will be felt by the public. In that connection may I say that not only will the 21 per cent increase be resented by the people, but the small shippers and small manufacturers will be hurt much more than the larger ones. That will come about, not only as a result of the 21 per cent increase, but mainly because of paragraph 5 of the ordinance of March 30, which reads:

> The minimum charge for a single l.c.l. shipment between any two stations to be 100 lbs. at first-class rate but not less than 75 cents.

In plain language this means it will now cost just as much to ship orders weighing twenty-five, fifty or seventy-five pounds as it will to ship orders weighing 100 pounds. That may mean it will cost up to 150 per cent more to ship certain goods from one point in Canada to another. For instance, prior to the ordinance it cost fifty cents to ship fifty pounds of tobacco, let us say, from Quebec to Toronto, because I am told that not only are good sentiments exchanged between Toronto and Quebec but also plain goods, including tobacco. Under paragraph 5 of the judgment it will cost $1.21 to ship the same parcel to Toronto. It formerly cost fifty cents to ship a fifty-pound parcel from Quebec to Montreal, a distance of only 180 miles. Under the new arrangement it will cost eighty-two cents, or an increase of 65 per cent.

That is the part of the ordinance I dislike most, because it is most discriminatory as against the small dealers who necessarily order in smaller quantities. Either the manufacturer will pay the shipping charge and will now refuse to accept orders of less than 100 pounds, or if the dealer pays the freight he is bound to lose much of his profit on goods the prices of which are fixed nationally. This is one of the aspects of the ordinance I consider to be more discriminatory, but there is nothing we can do with the judgment as it is now, or until the new investigation is undertaken.

The railways are facing a situation that needs to be corrected. The transport board, after long and careful consideration, has rendered a decision. I repeat that in my opinion the stand taken by the government is courageous, and eventually the people will realize that during this discussion no opposition party has proposed any remedy to deal with the railway situation. Delaying application of the ordinance would be no remedy at all. No other party has told us how they would get the railways out of their present predicament in any way other than that decided by the transport board. The stand of the opposition parties has been solely an endeavour to embarrass the government and hope for the best. I believe the membership on this side of the house, no matter how much it hates to see these new rates imposed, no matter how much it hopes discriminatory measures in our railway rate structure, especially those affecting the western provinces and the maritimes, will be removed, will understand that it is its duty to support a government that shows the courage to uphold an ordinance intended to remedy a dangerous situation. I also hope that the proposed investigation of the rates structure by the transport board may result in an arrangement of rates as satisfactory as possible to all parts and all elements of the country, despite the fact, as I stated at the outset, that our forced east-west economy shall always remain a sore spot in the economic life of this part of North America. I also believe less petty and parochial views are needed before all our economic and financial problems are adjusted.

Mr. ALISTAIR STEWART (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the other evening the hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Jaenicke) made a case showing that in some respects the board of transport commissioners were wrong in law in the judgment they handed down. I am not going to elaborate upon his arguments; those interested may find them in Hansard at page 2939 and following. The argument I am going to present this evening is that the board was not only wrong in law but wrong in fact, and that in supporting the judgment of the board the government is equally in error with respect to the facts. I maintain that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company did not make any case at all before the board for an increase in freight rates. I mention the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, because in his judgment the chief commissioner states that the Canadian Pacific has been taken as a guide or measure for the establishment of the rates. That statement will be found at page 36 of the judgment, in these words:

> Upon consideration of all that has been placed before us I am of the view that this can best be accomplished by taking the requirements of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company as the guide or measure in the establishment of what we consider to be just and reasonable freight rates to be paid by the users of the railways.

Therefore tonight I am going to refer specifically and frequently to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, its profit and loss account and its balance sheet, to establish my contention that the company did not make a case at all for any increase in freight rates. On page 6 of this judgment we find part of the submission of the railway association of Canada:

> Canadian railway companies are in the unique and perilous position that they have been operating under rigidly controlled freight rates in the face of steadily mounting costs . . .

That is quite a rhetorical statement, because I do not know what a "unique and perilous position" can be as far as the railways are concerned at this moment. But unfortunately it is only half the truth, and therefore all the more dangerous. I grant that costs have increased, in some respects considerably; but if costs have increased, revenues have increased even more. For instance, at page 11 of the judgment we find a table showing the total operating revenues of all Canadian railways. According to this table, in 1939 total operating revenues were some $367,179,095, while in 1946 they were $718,501,764, or an increase of almost 100 per cent.

The other evening in this chamber the minister fell into the same trap and only told half the story. He told us about the Canadian National Railways, and that there was an over-all increase, with respect to wages and materials, of 40·1 per cent between 1939 and 1946. He did not at the same time tell us about the total operating revenue of the Canadian National Railways, which increased in the same period by some $179,000,000 or the difference between $173,000,000 and almost $352,000,000. When those figures are placed side by side they shed a different light on the situation.

On page 7 of the judgment, paragraph 3, we find the following statement by the railway association:

> The decline in railway gross earnings which commenced to be substantial in the latter part of 1945 has progressively continued into 1946 and such decline has not nearly been matched by a corresponding decline in working expenses.

A table is given here by the commissioner, showing that to some extent there was that decline but that the decline was more than made up in 1947. It may be that the railways had reason to fear a decline in 1946, but I think the board might have taken into consideration the substantial increase in operating revenues in the following year. One of the arguments presented by the commissioner, I presume to support his judgment, is to be found on page 11. This is another table showing the total operating revenue, and I quote from the judgment:

> From the above it is noted that the monthly percentage increase in railway operating revenues in 1947 over the same period of 1946 is showing a tendency to disappear altogether.

I assume that he came to that conclusion on the basis of a comparison between November 1947 and November 1946, which showed a percentage increase in 1947 of total operating revenues of only ·98 per cent over 1946. Nevertheless, had the commissioner gone back to February of that year, he would have found that there was actually a decrease, not an increase, in 1947 over 1946 amounting to ·92 per cent. But in the ensuing months that decrease diminished and became a substantial increase amounting to 20·05 per cent in May of 1947 as compared with 1946.

Another statement which has been made is that the railroads were suffering from the effect of increased wages which had been demanded by the employees. I do not consider that to be a good argument, and I intend to use some statistics which were taken from the annual report of the Canadian Pacific and also from exhibits 22 and 116 which were presented to the commission. We find that in 1933 the gross operating revenue of the Canadian Pacific was some $114,000,000, while the wages charged as operating expenses amounted to some $58,000,000, or 51 per cent. This percentage of wages in following years was as follows:

	Per cent
1937	49
1939	47
1946	47
1947	49

I have taken the Canadian Pacific estimate of its gross operating revenue for 1947. This was given as $285 million, whereas the actual figure was some $318 million. Therefore I maintain that the percentage of wages to gross operating revenue would be somewhat lower than 49 per cent. The argument that wages are responsible for the increase in freight rates is one which is obviously not tenable.

On page 9 of the judgment the commissioner asks this question:

> Have the applicant railways made out a case of financial need for greater revenue requiring a general advance in freight rates?

He comes to the conclusion by somewhat devious logic that they have. I am going to suggest that the commissioner has altogether omitted facts and has devoted himself to fancies. On page 11 we find this interesting statement:

> A close analysis of the current operating revenues of Canadian railways indicates that lower levels may, perhaps, reasonably be expected.

[Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North).]

He then goes on to give reasons why he thinks the current operating revenues may be lower, but I am not going to deal with them. Surely this is not a matter of fact. It is a matter of opinion, and I am going to suggest that the commissioner has come to his conclusions on the basis of his own opinions and not on the basis of facts. He is indulging in prophecy when he says that the current operating revenues "may perhaps, reasonably" be expected to be lower. Had the government wanted an opinion like that it would have been much cheaper if it had gone to a teacup reader. It would have got precisely the same answer. Surely that is no basis upon which to establish the case which has been presented to us.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): He may have consulted the railroad brotherhoods.

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): I have no idea whether or not he consulted the railroad brotherhood, but I do know that those three words, "may, perhaps, reasonably" rather stick in my crop. I maintain that they have nothing to do with facts, and the railroad company has not made itself clear as to the losses which it expects to incur.

I should like to discuss the balance sheet position of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. This corporation has the widest ramifications. It owns, controls or operates steamships, hotels, air lines, coal mines, communications, stockyards, towing companies, terminal elevators, express services, abattoirs, and I do not know how many other things or industries. Among other assets owned, it has some forty-five railway companies, and it controls or owns the stock in an additional twelve railway companies. With some of these companies it has leases running for as long as 999 years, while others run in perpetuity.

I should like to refer to one of these leases, because it is an interesting example of what we in the C.C.F. consider to be the working of big business. One lease is with the Ontario and Quebec railway and the amount paid to that company, which of course, is a fixed charge, amounted to $1,038,927 in 1947. The Ontario and Quebec railway was incorporated by an act of parliament in 1881. It has the line running between Toronto and Montreal.

There is outstanding share capital of 20,000 shares of which, according to the evidence submitted to the commission, the Canadian Pacific own only fifty. The Canadian Pacific own fifty shares out of 20,000, and yet every officer of the Ontario and Quebec railway is an officer of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. As was pointed out by an officer of the Canadian Pacific, all the distribution of interest and dividends is done directly by the Canadian Pacific as the lessee.

There are 400 holdings of common stock, of which only 39 are in Canada. There is debenture stock of about £4,000,000, made up of 4,250 holdings, of which only sixteen are in Canada.

This railway in turn has a lease agreement with the Toronto, Grey and Bruce railway, and the Canadian Pacific pays the interest on the bonds of this latter railroad which is leased to the Ontario and Quebec railway. What I want to point out in connection with these fixed charges is that throughout all the years of the depression the shareholders of the Ontario and Quebec railway were getting their six per cent, while ostensibly the Canadian Pacific Railway Company could not afford to pay many of its workers the wages they were asking for. We see here protection of absentee landlordism as evidenced by the fact that only thirty-nine out of 400 holders of common stock are resident in Canada. The Canadian Pacific has refused to acknowledge the rights of those who were on strike in Winnipeg in 1919, but it pays meticulous attention to the rights of these shareholders and has looked after them carefully.

There is another matter of some interest to which I should like to refer. There appears to be utter inadequacy in its cost accounting on the part of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. That inadequacy may be the fault of the executive. Of that I am not certain, but I know that when a witness was asked to give a breakdown of the loss of earnings by freight, passenger, mail, express, sleeping car, parlour car and dining car services, Mr. C. F. H. Carson, who was counsel for the railway association, said that it just could not be done. He said that there could not possibly be a breakdown as between those services, and yet here we have a judgment to the effect that freight and freight alone shall bear the burden of whatever extra revenue the Canadian Pacific is to get.

It is an amazing way to run a business when you cannot break down its various departments to find out which is making a profit and which is making a loss. It reminds me of the story of a serious train accident in a rural area, the only eyewitness to which was the village simpleton. Very shortly after, reporters from the newspapers landed at the scene of the accident and went to see this eyewitness and asked him what had happened. They said, "We have got to get the story for our papers." And so the old man told them, "I was sitting on the bridge over there and I seen one train come down that track at forty miles an hour and another train go up that same track at sixty miles an hour, and I thought that is a hell of a way to run a railway." But it is not very much different from what is happening in this case. We do not know where the Canadian Pacific is making this loss which it fears but which has not yet been established.

Furthermore, as regards the balance sheet, we should remember that this company, which is in such a perilous and unique position, has, since 1939, retired all its six per cent bonds; in 1943 it retired its five per cent bonds; in 1944 it retired its 4½ per cent bonds, and today it is paying an average interest rate of 2·8 per cent, whereas in 1939 the average interest paid was 4·1 per cent.

Again we find that this railway, which is in such a perilous position, has today current assets of some $144 million against current liabilities of $47 million, a ratio of nearly three to one, which I think even the member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Gibson) will agree is a healthy situation.

When one examines the assets of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company we find that it has Dominion of Canada securities of $31,667,000, and cash amounting to $42,644,686 —an amazingly fine liquid position for a company which is in such perilous and dire straits.

Furthermore, the funded debt of this company in 1939 amounted to $228 million. It is now reduced to $75 million, or a decrease through the war years of some $153 million.

What about reserves and unadjusted credits? In 1939 reserves and unadjusted credits amounted to some $92 million. Today they amount to $380 million—a magnificent situation indeed from a balance sheet point of view.

Its profit and loss account balance in 1939 was $141 million. Today it is $279 million. What sort of nonsense is this to talk of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company being in a perilous position! Nothing could, of course, be farther from the truth. The company is better off today than it has ever been.

Let us see the situation as regards the working capital of this company:

Canadian Pacific Railway

Statement of Comparative Working Capital

Current Assets	1939	1947		Increase
Cash	$31,809,398	$ 42,644,686		$10,835,288
Dominion of Canada securities	....	31,667,000		31,667,000
Miscellaneous accounts receivable	5,120,664	17,968,071		12,847,407
Agents' and conductors' balances	6,695,339	14,741,396		8,046,057
Materials and supplies	19,389,497	36,712,903		17,323,406
	$63,014,898	$143,734,056		$80,719,158
Current Liabilities	1939	1947	Decrease	Increase
Payrolls	$ 2,889,276	$ 7,053,336	....	$ 4,164,060
Audited vouchers	5,496,276	9,284,072	....	3,787,796
Net traffic balances	226,986	4,491,862	....	4,264,876
Miscellaneous accounts payable	2,949,928	9,452,084	....	6,502,156
Accrued fixed charges	2,710,139	938,186	$ 1,771,953	....
Unmatured dividends declared	....	2,278,841	....	2,278,841
Other current liabilities	....	13,339,604	....	13,339,604
	$14,272,605	$46,837,985	$ 1,771,953	$34,337,333
Working Capital	$48,742,293	$96,896,071

Summary

Increase in current assets	$96,896,071
Less: Increase in current liabilities	48,742,293
Increase in working capital	$48,153,778

In other words, there is an increase in current assets of $96,896,071, less an increase in current liabilities of $48,742,293, or an increase in the working capital between 1939 and 1947 of $48,153,778. Again a remarkable position for a company which is in such perilous straits.

We are told that the railway wants an increase in case it may perhaps at some unknown future date lose money. I see no reason at all for a railway company being granted the right to increase rates on the basis of a hypothesis, on the basis of an assumption, but that is precisely what has happened. The railway company is not being given an increase because it has shown need, for the railway's position today is better than it has ever been.

I should like to refer to the profit and loss position of this company, and to spare the house the reading of innumerable figures, I would ask permission, Mr. Speaker, to have printed in Hansard the table on page 66 of the judgment, entitled "Canadian Pacific—Restatement."

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): Has the hon. member consent of the house to do so?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. STEWART (Winnipeg North): The statement is as follows:

Canadian Pacific—Restatement

Net railway operating income—without adjustments		$22,892,189
Additions:
Deferred maintenance charged in 1947	$2,400,000
Overstatement of Depreciation—Rolling Stock	2,000,000
Overstatement of Depreciation—Road Property	2,000,000	6,400,000
Net Railway Operating Income—after Operating Expenses Adjustments		$29,292,189
Deduct Fixed Charges		15,787,174
Net Railway Operating Income—after Fixed Charges		$13,505,015

[Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North).]

Canadian Pacific—Restatement—Concluded

Adjustment for Taxes—
The 1947 accounts contain the following Taxes:
Property Taxes	$ 3,800,000
Income Taxes on Railway Earnings and Other Income	12,372,935
Total	$16,172,935
Add Income Tax for 1947 as above		$12,372,935
		$25,877,950
Taxable Income from Railway Operations
Income Tax at 35 per cent		9,057,283
Net Income available for Dividends and Surplus		$16,820,667
Add Back Fixed Charges		15,787,174
Net Railway Operating Income—As Adjusted		$32,607,841
Requirements		(1) 52,332,174
Deficiency in Revenue		$19,724,333

Note—(1) Made up as follows:—
Dividends, $21,310,000,Fixed Charges, $15,787,174, Allowance for Surplus, $15,235,000, making a total of $52,332,174.

That statement shows the Canadian Pacific's net operating income, after adjustments made by the board of transport commissioners. We are told that the net railway operating income, as shown by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, is $22,892,189. Then the commissioners proceed to add back, and rightly so, certain charges amounting to $6,400,000, arriving at a subtotal of $29,292,189. They deduct for the time being fixed charges, which are added back later. There is also deducted the entire income tax which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has charged against operation, and the figure arrived at is $25,877,950, on which the board proceeds to compute the income tax. That is an extraordinary situation indeed, where we have income tax accepted as a charge against the operations of any concern. I should like to know what the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann) thinks of such behaviour. Certainly I know that no business in this country would be entitled to charge income tax against profit and loss account as a charge against the business of the year; but on page 22 of the judgment the commissioner states:

> Income tax payable in respect to railway operating income is, I think, properly chargeable to railway operating expenses.

It is a good thing the commissioner said "I think", because obviously from the point of view of business practice it is entirely and completely wrong. Income tax is an appropriation of profits, neither more nor less, and has nothing at all to do with the running expenses of the business. However, it has been added back here, and I shall amend it myself later. The fixed charges are also added back, leaving a net railway operating income as adjusted, in the mind of the commissioner, at $32,607,841. I maintain that that figure is utterly and completely fallacious.

If that is the basis for the board's action and the government's action, then it is time to reconsider the position. I am going to suggest that there be added back to that figure the $9,057,283 charged for income tax, which would then bring the net railway operating income up to $41,665,124. I am also going to suggest that the "other income" of this railway company be added back in its financial statement, that is "other income" of $24,788,927. When that is rightly and correctly added back we find that the profit position of the Canadian Pacific Railway should be not this $32,000,000 for 1947 envisaged by the board of transport commissioners but $66,454,051.

Let us consider that amount in view of what the board considers to be the requirements of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The requirements, as estimated by the board, are $52,332,174. On the basis of my argument, which I maintain is right in law and in logic, the railway company has a surplus then of over $14,000,000. But let us consider how this $52,000,000 is made up. Dividends amount to $21,310,000; fixed charges, $15,787,174; allowances for surplus, whatever this may be, $15,235,000, or a total of $52,332,174.

Let us now see what the chairman of the board of transport commissioners has to say, on page 26 of the judgment, about this surplus:

> The question should, I think, be approached from the point of view of whether or not the railways are entitled to earn a reasonable surplus over and above fixed charges and dividends and not as to whether provision should be made for a sum to cover specifically additions and betterments. The amount which a railway may consider expedient to expend on additions and betterments may vary substantially in different years.

Of course it may. But what is the effect of this $15,000,000 when added to the requirements of the company? It is simply that an amount equivalent to practically 70 per cent of the dividends is to be credited to profit and loss account, and this may be paid out in some future year as dividends whenever the financial position permits. In other words, what the chairman of the board suggests is that the dividends of the ordinary Canadian Pacific stock should not be five per cent but eight or nine or even ten per cent.

I agree that it is reasonable that some surplus should be appropriated for balance sheet purposes, but I think $15,000,000 is out of the question entirely. A more reasonable amount would, of course, be $5,000,000, in which case the argument of the board of transport commissioners again suffers somewhat, because the requirements of the railway are not $52,000,000 but $42,000,000, and it then has a surplus over these requirements of some $24,000,000.

It has been argued that this $15,000,000 should be used for betterments of the railway and capital improvements. That, I maintain again, is a fallacious argument. This amount is being credited to profit and loss account, no matter how the funds are used. Nevertheless the amount will always be available for distribution as dividends. Whenever the directors of the company think the company needs money for capital improvements, let them go out on the open market and borrow the money for that purpose. As a matter of fact, from the figures I have already submitted on the reserves—and I repeat them again, reserves and unadjusted credits were $91,000,000 in 1939, and are $380 million today—the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has lots of surplus fat on which it can live for some time to come.

On this question of "other income" which seems to have perplexed the board of transport commissioners, they saw no reason for adding "other income" to the entire income of the corporation. Surely the board must have forgotten that much of the income which goes under the name of "other income" was derived from gifts and presents of the people of Canada to the same railway system. For instance, in British Columbia—the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Gibson) may be interested in this; I expect he knows it—when the Canadian Pacific railway was built in that province, over $100 million was paid to it in cold cash plus about twenty miles of land on either side of the railway all through the province. That gift is today returning handsome dividends; yet the commissioners refused to credit the revenue from this gift to railway operations.

[Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North).]

Then again the company has invested money in various operations. The money that has been invested has certainly been taken from the operations of the company, from the surplus earnings of the company, and therefore any earnings from such investment should be credited to the operations of the company.

We have, for instance, the case of the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company. I have no doubt that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company purchased shares in the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company for the purpose of facilitating control of freight traffic. It has paid them handsomely from the point of view of their traffic receipts. This stock is in the books of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company at $8,412,500. Its market value today is about $150 million. Where is this perilous position which the Canadian Pacific Railway finds itself in with all these hidden reserves tucked away?

What about the hotels? Does the board of transport commissioners intend to argue that hotels are not part of the railway business, in view of the fact that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company itself has argued before two courts in this country that legislation affecting hotels is railway legislation? The company cannot have it both ways. Either it is railway business or it is not. If it is railway business then, of course, the proceeds should go into the general fund, as indeed they do. I maintain that when we look at the company's financial position we should consider its overall position rather than the financial position of only one part of the undertaking.

On page 23 of the judgment we find this:

> The Canadian Pacific has a common treasury for all its various enterprises and into which goes its whole corporate revenue, including railway operating income and "other income." And from this common treasury all disbursements are made.

In effect, the company makes no distinction at all between operating income and "other income." Farther on the commissioner states:

> The whole enterprise of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company is somewhat closely integrated.

Surely a classic understatement.

> And for this reason I have found considerable difficulty in appreciating the true situation of the company in respect to its railway operations.

The commissioner has difficulty; the commissioner never saw through it, and yet he comes to his entirely unwarranted conclusion. Obviously, if these activities are transportation activities, then the profits resulting from them should be included in the general profits of the whole business; if they are not, then they are improper investments for a public utility and the Canadian Pacific should get rid of them rapidly. I maintain that, on the basis of the figures which I have presented to this house, neither the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the board, nor yet the government has made a case for the increase in freight rates which has been granted.

Much has been made of the demands of labour for higher wages. I am in complete sympathy with these demands. I see no reason why labour should not get higher wages, but it is something approaching hypocrisy when the Canadian Pacific Railway Company professes to be so desirous of looking after the interests of its own employees in view of its record in the past with respect to these same employees. I am willing to say this. If, after the increases which the workers have asked for have been granted, the railways then show that they are taking a loss, I can see no reason at all why they should not be given an increase in freight rates. But I do not see why they should be given that increase when obviously they are not taking a loss and all they are doing is crying "wolf" and trying to frighten everybody.

Unhappily the only people they frighten are the board of railway commissioners and the present government, and the people of Canada have to suffer for it. So far as we in the west are concerned, even if there is an increase in freight rates, we are not going to lie down under the discrimination which exists in rates as between the west and the central provinces.

Again I join with those who do not blame the central provinces, but discrimination is a fact that has to be dealt with. We in the prairies have to pay 15 per cent more in many cases, in British Columbia and Alberta sometimes about 25 per cent more. Taking the picture by and large over the last twenty-nine years, we find that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in its western lines has made net earnings of $753 million in the west, and in the east, $361 million, and now it wants to come and soak us once again.

I maintain that the action of the government in what it has done, in passing that order in council, has been hasty and arbitrary and that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has more than enough tucked away in profits and reserves to last for two years, no matter what increases are given in wages, until we have the new examination completed. There was no reason for increasing the rates. What we see again is the west, and, I suspect, the east, being exploited, with the active assistance of this government.

We also have the interesting, not to say anomalous position of some Liberal members who were breathing fire and smoke and bellowing loudly against the judgment on the 5th of April, when there was no want of confidence motion before the house. Then they were ready to do anything, but when the chips were down, in true Liberal style we could not see them for smoke.

It reminds me of what Heywood Broun said about a Liberal. As he was walking in Central park with his son, a small boy, they came to a merry-go-round. The youngster began squalling when Broun put him on the contraption and it began to spin around. He squalled more loudly and fiercely until his father took him off and they started away. Then the boy squalled the loudest. He wanted to go back; but he did not want to climb on again, but to stand as close as he could to the whirling thing without touching it and, above all, without having it touch him. "At that moment", said Broun, "I knew what a Liberal was".

Mr. T. J. BENTLEY (Swift Current): There have been so many speeches in this debate that a few more will be in order. The speeches have taken a variety of turns, running from the one the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) made when he attempted to defend the government's position and tried to make the defence look like a major attack.

There have also been some pretty good analyses of railway statements, and there have been some careful criticisms such as that which has just been given by my hon. friend the member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Stewart).

I am going to try to deal with the matter from the ordinary citizen's point of view as it affects those of us who live by virtue of the work done in our day-to-day occupations, in the west, and to whom the matter of increased costs is extremely important. I know that those who live in the higher realms of finance and business can nearly always take a pencil and balance sheet and justify any action they wish to take in order to improve the position of the particular institution in which they are interested.

It is not by any means an odd situation that they should want to do so, but I sometimes think they do these things without realizing the effect on other people, and a great many people will suffer more than they need to because of this action.

I am not going to blame the railway companies very much. After all, they are human beings like everyone else; their interests are in the business they manage, and they attempt to manage that business in line with their particular economic gospel, to get all the profit the traffic will bear. They are not alone in the worship of that particular golden calf.

A number of statements have been made here—I believe someone called it "slick", or used some similar adjective—describing the move which the C.C.F. made when our leader moved the amendment on going into supply the other day. Prior to that, and before the time when these rates were to go into effect, an attempt was made, by moving for the adjournment of the house to discuss the matter, to persuade the government that they should stay proceedings. It was not asking the government to disallow the increase. It was not asking the government to take any other position or to do any other thing than simply to delay or to put a stop to proceedings until such time as everyone concerned had had an opportunity to present to the government the effect which the increase would have on the people to whom they were responsible. These were the premiers of the seven provinces which are affected, who knew the temper of their people and the conditions in their provinces.

As has been pointed out here before, these premiers, these provincial governments are of different political stripes. So when they said they were dissatisfied with the judgment of the board of transport commissioners, they did so in the full belief that they were dealing with the matter, not from the political or partisan point of view, but from the point of view of the effect it would have on their particular provinces.

It has been said in this debate that the C.C.F. and others who were opposed to the increase were not giving consideration to the needs of those people who worked for wages on the railways. I have read through the judgment. I will not say I have made an exhaustive study of it, as possibly others have done, but at least I have read it sufficiently to know what is not in it, and I find no place in the judgment which indicates that the increase has been granted by the board, in any part whatsoever, specifically to be applied to an increase in wages or salaries of the workers on the railways.

I am also informed by other sources outside the judgment that the unions who represent the workers on the railways were not permitted to add their voice one way or the other when evidence was being given before the board. I wish further to point out that there has been no alternative proposed by either the government or the board, or by the management of the railway companies themselves. It may be possible that there are alternatives, but if their need for increased revenue was great, alternatives could have been proposed, and they have not been mentioned.

I wish to point out another thing before I go very far into this subject, and that is that in the early stages of the discussion the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore), who was quite vehement in his observations, pointed out that a thing of this kind, added to the many other discriminatory practices against the west and the east—he was dealing mostly with the west and I will, too—may possibly cause in the west a serious rupture of good feelings toward the two central provinces. The leader of our party said more mildly that it was a threat to good relations, because the country, economically, was bound together by bands of steel. That has been mentioned on more than one occasion both in histories of this country and in historical novels written by people who write things of that kind.

The hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) was inclined to feel that the hon. member for Lethbridge did not add anything to national unity by making the suggestion. But I think the hon. member for Lethbridge did a good job in doing that, for this reason. While I am the last one who wants to see any disunity, I do not think we should shut our eyes to anything that may happen to cause breaches such as he suggested. I know the people in the west are not thinking of secession—that is, not a large number of them—although it is true that there are a few here and there who will get up and say that we should have secession. But I know there are quite a number of people in the west who, whenever something like this happens that affects them, will then start to consider seriously the suggestion of these few other people I just mentioned who call for secession. I know, however, that the great bulk of the people in the west want to have a united nation in Canada as well as a united nations organization in the world. I am also one of those, and I certainly will never do anything I can avoid doing that will cause any serious talk of a split in our Canadian nation. I think it would be most unfortunate.

The hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Homuth) is, I believe, quite ill. I regret that, and I should like to say to him, through his friends, that I hope his recovery will be rapid and complete. I regret greatly that he is absent because of his illness. But he mentioned the fact that he did not think any differences which might exist between the central provinces and either of the extreme ends of our country were bred entirely of selfishness, and that he believed that it was not fair for him to be able to buy a Chevrolet car—I think that was the example he mentioned—more cheaply than somebody in Regina, Edmonton or Vancouver could buy it, just because there was a heavy freight charge on it out there. I give the hon. member credit for that, and I believe he meant what he said.

I hope his friends will convey that to him because, when he was making that statement, he said that members of this party never had a kind or pleasant word for anybody. I assure him and many of his group that many times we believe in their sincerity. I believe he would do as he says. But unfortunately the history of the country has made it possible for concentration of control of our economic life to be in these central provinces; and sometimes the management of these large concerns which have that control have not exercised the restraint they might have exercised in their dealings with other parts of the country, thus causing to a large extent those feelings which I have just described, which were mentioned by the hon. member for Lethbridge.

We do not want any secession. We want a complete and unified nation. I do not intend to go beyond that as did one member on the other side of the house tonight, I believe, when he suggested that we should have customs union and possibly political union with the United States. I am still quite happy to be a Canadian, and I believe that Canadians can run their own business in their own way without any joining up with somebody else to run their domestic affairs.

With regard to some of the things dealt with by the judgment, there has been misinterpretation either by the press or by political speakers, and possibly a combination of both, which has given rise to a belief that is not correct. We were led to believe that there was to be no alteration in the freight rates on grain. When we read the judgment we see that that is not a correct statement. But the word went across the country making many people believe that it was so. Now we find ourselves flooded with protests because the new freight rates are being applied on out-of-line hauls, I believe on storage in transit and on local movements of grain in the provinces. That will have an effect on the cost of living and the operations of farmers in both buying and selling their grain in the different localities. I believe these rates should have been left as they were. Of course I do not think any of the increases should have been granted at all in the judgment. But if they were to be granted, I believe that these rates should have been left as the word went out they were to be left.

Another thing I wish to point out is that, as stated in one place in the judgment, the minimum charge of seventy-five cents per 100 pounds on less than carlots will mean, in some cases, not a 21 per cent increase, but more than 100 per cent increase. We will take the matter of a crate of eggs, for instance; and many small poultry people, in order to have their eggs go forward to market as fresh as possible, must ship them frequently in one-case lots. I want hon. members to realize that a great many people operate on a small scale. That is how they make a living, and that living is important to them. I presume that if you ship a case of eggs now under what the judgment has allowed the railways, where it used to cost thirty-five cents to ship a case, it will now cost seventy-five cents. That is more than double the price charged before, and I think it is completely unwarranted and unfair treatment of the kind of producers I have just mentioned.

There is another thing. I am sure that in the judgment I can find no authority for this being done but I am informed that it is being done, and that is—

Mr. CHEVRIER: Pardon me. If the hon. gentleman will look at page 88 of the judgment under the title of "Minimum Charges" he will find that there is authority for doing that very thing.

Mr. BENTLEY: Pardon me. I imagine I did not make that point clear. I had finished with that remark. While authority is there for seventy-five cents per 100 pounds on l.c.l., I just got through saying it should not have been allowed by the board.

But what I want to mention now is the matter of retroactive charges on these freight rates. That is not allowed in here that I can find; yet I am informed that in the western provinces, cars that were shipped out before April 8 and were in the showrooms, and farm machinery that was in the warehouse, now have added to their cost the 21 per cent increase in freight. Who is to get that? Not the railroad. The machine companies and the automobile manufacturers or the dealers will not collect that retroactive freight and turn it over to the railroads.

Mr. CHEVRIER: May I be allowed to tell the hon. gentleman that the board's order carries no retroactivity. It is effective as of April 8.

Mr. BENTLEY: I agree with the minister. I heartily censure him for not having taken steps to see that no dealer in these machines made that charge on goods shipped before April 8. The government took no such action to protect the people. It did the same thing in this connection that the Tory government did many years ago when it put the excise tax on sugar and allowed people with warehouses full of sugar to reap that extra profit and put it in their own pockets. The government has not given the attention to the needs of the people that it should have given.

A short time ago I said no thought had been given to the alternatives. There are at least three principal reasons why the railways felt it was necessary to ask for this increase in freight rates. The first is the tremendous over-capitalization, particularly of the Canadian National; and I want to quote authorities for that statement. First I refer to the report of the royal commission, commonly known as the Duff commission, at page 30:

> Another aspect of the problem is the total capital liability of the system. At December 31, 1931, the long term debt of the Canadian National Railways due the public (funded debt unmatured) amounted to $1,276,457,207. The money invested in the original government railways, loans by the dominion government to the privately-owned railways now absorbed in the system, loans to the Canadian National Railways to meet annual deficits, interest accrued on these loans and unpaid, and deficits on eastern lines, together total $1,393,469,164. The total of these two sums is $2,669,926,371.
>
> It has been suggested that in view of the excessive capital liabilities in relation to the earning power of the system they should be reduced to an amount which would more nearly approximate the earning power of the railway. The net operating income (i.e. the amount available for interest and dividends) of the Canadian National system for the period 1923 to 1931 inclusive averaged $24,414,447 per annum. This figure would require adjustment if adequate provision were made for depreciation. It is obvious that on this basis of earnings the capital liabilities would require a very drastic writing down.
>
> And while this commission is of opinion that it must be frankly recognized that a very substantial part of the money invested in the railways comprised within the Canadian National system must be regarded as lost and that its capital liabilities should be heavily written down, they do not consider that the time is opportune to deal with this important matter.

That was back in 1931 or 1932. When is the time to be opportune to do that job? Again, at page 86 of the judgment of the board of transport commissioners just issued, they confirm that statement in the second paragraph under the heading "Other income":

> The Canadian National Railways are efficiently managed but are operating under a very large debt which carries a large fixed charge, which makes it very difficult to operate from a profit point of view, it being an amalgamation of a number of non-paying roads.

More could be quoted along this line. At page 41 of the book "The Tragedy of Henry Thornton", the writer makes this statement:

> It is true that "surgical operations of the bankruptcy courts" should have lessened the crippling burden of capital indebtedness . . . .

I am not so sure I would want to recommend a surgical operation of that kind, but I say that, since the Canadian National Railways is a government-owned concern, if that is necessary in order to put it on a paying basis, then the proper thing to do is to write it down to its actual value. Then let the capital, which has no representation in physical assets but which represents the savings of widows and orphans and other people who had a right to expect their investment was safe, be provided for and serviced by all the people of Canada, including Ontario and Quebec. That would be a fairer way and a better alternative than allowing this increase in freight rates, which will have a more detrimental effect upon the people of the west and, I understand, those of the east than they should be expected to bear.

On motion of Mr. Bentley the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. BRACKEN: What will be the business for tomorrow?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Tomorrow afternoon we shall resume the debate on the motion to set up the committee on human rights and fundamental freedoms. If that is disposed of before six o'clock we shall proceed in committee of the whole on Bill No. 138, to amend the Export and Import Permits Act. If that should be disposed of before six o'clock the next item will be the second reading of Bill No. 197, to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act. After six o'clock the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Trade and Commerce will have other official duties that will prevent them from being in the house during the evening. At eight o'clock, of course, there will be the hour reserved for private bills. After that will come the second reading of Bill No. 47 to amend the War Service Grants Act; second reading of Bill No. 60, to amend the Veterans Insurance Act, and then the resolution standing in the name of the Minister of Veterans Affairs preceding a bill to amend the Veterans Rehabilitation Act. If that is not enough the Minister of Transport will be prepared to go on with the second reading of Bill No. 10, respecting the appointment of auditors for the national railways, and with the resolution preceding the introduction of a bill to increase the grant to the railway grade crossing fund.

Mr. MacINNIS: When will today's debate be resumed?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: This debate will probably not be resumed until Tuesday. On Monday the unfinished business of the program for today will be continued, and other items will be added if there is time for more work.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, April 16, 1948

The house met at three o'clock.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

REFERENCE OF ANNUAL REPORT TO RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING COMMITTEE

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to table the annual report of Trans-Canada Air Lines for the year ended December 31, 1947, in English and in French. The report is being distributed this afternoon.

I wish to move:

That the annual report of Trans-Canada Air Lines for the year ended December 31, 1947, tabled this day, be referred to the sessional committee on railways and shipping owned, operated and controlled by the government.

Motion agreed to.

RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT

Mr. H. B. McCULLOCH (Pictou) presented the first report of the sessional committee on railways and shipping owned, operated and controlled by the government, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

DEEPSEA SHIPOWNERS AND DECK, ENGINEERING AND WIRELESS OPERATORS—TERMINATION OF PACIFIC COAST STRIKE

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, on Monday last I was able to announce the termination of the strike of officer personnel employed on deepsea dry cargo vessels of Canadian registry at Atlantic coast ports.

I am pleased now to advise the house that a settlement has been reached on the Pacific coast and ocean-going vessels which have been held up by the strike there will be free to sail from British Columbia ports immediately.

The terms of settlement on the west coast are the same as those previously reached on the east coast. Wages and working conditions of officer personnel for the coming year will be as recommended by Mr. Justice D. A. McNiven, industrial disputes inquiry commissioner, and the companies and unions have agreed that there shall be no discrimination in employment or legal action taken or penalties imposed against officers who have been on strike.

PALESTINE

DEATH OF BRITISH SOLDIERS—COLLECTION OF FUND FOR ZIONIST ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. W. E. HARRIS (Parliamentary Assistant to the Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, last week the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Jaques) asked this question, as reported at page 2804 of Hansard:

Will the government consider the advisability of prohibiting the soliciting of funds in Canada for the purpose of supplying these zionists with arms and ammunition?

I am asked to make this answer. Arms and ammunition cannot be exported from Canada without an export permit, and no export permits have been granted for the shipment of arms and ammunition to Palestine. Nor is exchange authorization given for the transfer of funds from Canada to purchase arms and ammunition abroad for shipment to Palestine. Therefore the government does not consider it necessary at the present time to take the action suggested.

CIVIL SERVICE

REGULATIONS WITH RESPECT TO HOLDING CIVIC OFFICES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. COLIN GIBSON (Secretary of State): Yesterday the hon. member for Ottawa East (Mr. Richard) asked a question concerning the holding of public office by members of the civil service, and I told him that representations had been made and the matter was receiving consideration. I have much pleasure in advising him now, and also hon. members, that an order in council has been passed amending the previous order in council of 1932 concerning the acceptance by civil servants of municipal office. The order as amended will now read:

Provided always that the minister administering or in charge of any department may, in his discretion, grant permission to any of his officers, clerks, or employees, to accept a municipal or civic office which does not carry with it a salary, honorarium or other emolument exceeding nine hundred dollars per annum, if, in the opinion of the minister, the acceptance of such office does not interfere with the proper and regular performance of his duties as a civil servant.

I might say that the previous figure was $500.

JOINT DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO EXPANSION OF ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. W. SKEY (Trinity): I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the action taken yesterday by the United States House of Representatives in voting $3 billion to increase their air force from fifty-five to seventy groups, has the minister or the Canadian government during the last year received any representations from the United States government regarding the expansion of the Royal Canadian Air Force? Since the United States government has taken this action will the Royal Canadian Air Force be expanded in implementation of our joint defence agreement?

Hon. BROOKE CLAXTON (Minister of National Defence): In answer to the first question as to whether we have received any requests from the United States government that we should expand our air force I can say no, and I think it would be almost inconceivable that such a request should be made.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. CLAXTON: In answer to the second question, the provisions for the Canadian navy, army and air force have been put before the house in the estimates and any increases would be put before the house in the form of supplementary estimates if that becomes desirable. The intention of the government will be made known in due course.

Mr. SKEY: On a question of privilege, I said "representations" and not "requests" of the United States government.

Mr. CLAXTON: I think I should add a further word in reply to the hon. member for Trinity's question concerning the agreement between Canada and the United States with regard to joint defence. I did not have notice of his question and I have not before me the statement regarding joint defence which the Prime Minister made in the house on February 12, 1947; therefore I cannot give the page of Hansard or the actual text of the agreement. But I do think it important that the agreement, contained in the joint declaration, should be taken for what it is, namely, an agreement under five heads. Anything in the nature of the suggestion of my hon. friend certainly would not be within the purview of that arrangement.

[Mr. Gibson (Hamilton West).]

EUROPEAN RECOVERY PROGRAM

INQUIRY AS TO EFFECT ON CANADA'S EXCHANGE SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he is in a position to tell us yet of the effect that the Marshall plan, now that it is passed, will have on our dollar situation, and in particular whether it will enable the government to remove any further items from the effect of the austerity taxes.

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of Finance): I made a statement on that matter the other day in reply to a question put to me by the hon. member for Moose Jaw. If the hon. member will look at page 2854 of Hansard he will see my views on it.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I thought that the minister may have got more information since then, and that I could get information which was up to the moment.

Mr. ABBOTT: No; my answer was given only a day or two ago, and I am afraid there is nothing really new since that time.

INCOME TAX

PRAIRIE FARMERS—NET WORTH STATEMENT—QUESTION WITH RESPECT TO FORMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Having regard to the violent exception taken by the western farmers to the net worth statement of the prairie farmers income tax forms, will the minister consider issuing new income tax forms, deleting the net worth statement, and extending the date necessary for filing them sufficiently to allow this action to take place?

Hon. J. J. McCANN (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, it would not be practicable to do that at the present time because the forms are already in the hands of the taxpayers.

TRADE AND COMMERCE

CANADA-UNITED KINGDOM—QUESTION AS TO RELAXATION OF RESTRICTIONS ON IMPORTS OF BRITISH GOODS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. DOUGLAS G. ROSS (St. Paul's): I should like to direct a question either to the Minister of Trade and Commerce or to the Minister of Finance, I do not know which one. It arises out of a report in the Globe and Mail this morning of a statement made by Mr. J. C. Patteson, retiring president of the Canadian chamber of commerce in Great Britain, in which he said that trade between Canada and the United Kingdom is severely restricted.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): My question is this. In view of what Mr. Patteson said, is the government aware of the parlous condition of Canadian commercial interests in that country arising out of economic forces and the prevailing foreign exchange situation, and has the government given consideration to the relaxation of some of the controls, restrictions and prohibitions so that Canadians may buy more British goods, which will meet our shortage here and help our foreign exchange situation? If so, what consideration has been given?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce): So far as I know, trade between the United Kingdom and Canada is moving freely and seems to be on a fairly satisfactory basis.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Has the minister or any other minister had no representations from Mr. Patteson, retiring president of the Canadian chamber of commerce in Great Britain, to that effect?

Mr. HOWE: The answer is no.

HUMAN RIGHTS

FUNDAMENTAL FREEDOMS—OBLIGATIONS UNDER UNITED NATIONS CHARTER—APPOINTMENT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

The house resumed from Monday, April 12, consideration of the motion of Mr. Ilsley (for the Prime Minister) for the appointment of a joint committee of both houses of parliament on human rights and fundamental freedoms, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Knowles.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is the house ready for the question?

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Justice): I think I should say a few words in reply to some of the statements that have been made. I am not sure that I should do so, but in any event my remarks should be very brief.

Mr. COLDWELL: Is the minister closing the debate?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES: On a point of order, the minister is speaking in the debate on my amendment.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is true; I am speaking on the amendment.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: And the minister is not closing the debate.

Mr. ILSLEY: I am not closing the debate, because of the amendment. After the amendment is disposed of it will be open to anyone to speak.

Mr. KNOWLES: Including yourself.

Mr. ILSLEY: I shall just say a word about the amendment. I will accept the amendment. It is merely an empowering amendment. It is understood of course that it is not in any sense a direction to the committee. It merely gives the committee power to make certain recommendations to the House of Commons, which it may or may not choose to make, and so long as that point is clearly understood I accept the amendment.

Mr. KNOWLES: It is up to the committee.

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): I wish to point out to the house the great importance of this motion in view of what happened in the second rape of Czechoslovakia last February and March. We have already lost the supremacy and the freedom of the seas, and do not know where it is going to land us. We do not know where it is going to land Canada. Because of that loss I wish to take part in this debate on human rights.

The events which have taken place in Europe in recent days have shocked the entire civilized world into recognition of the grave danger that faces not only the people of Canada and of the United States but the British empire as a whole, because of the irreconcilable difference between western ideas of democracy and the ideas of the east. For that reason I wish to say something this afternoon on the motion that is before the house.

I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) on his persistence in bringing this whole human rights matter to the attention of the house. I referred to it myself when parliament met in September, 1945. On that occasion I discussed this whole subject. The hon. member deserves a great deal of credit for pointing out to the house the grave danger in which our country finds itself at the present time.

For four centuries we have depended for our freedom on Britain's supremacy on the seas.

British naval might saved us, or rather our forefathers, in the days of Philip of Spain and the Spanish Armada, as it has done on other memorable occasions, in the days of Louis XIV, Napoleon, and twice in our own generation against Germany. British naval power and command of the seas saved the whole civilized world. From the peace that followed Waterloo in 1815 the world had a hundred years of peace, until the outbreak of the first world war in 1914, because Britain was supreme upon the seas.

The motion which the Prime Minister has introduced for a committee of both houses on human rights is concerned with the fundamental freedoms of speech and of assembly, and freedom from want and fear, as set out in the Atlantic charter. I should like, Mr. Speaker, to get the attention of hon. members opposite. If they are not interested in what I have to say, at least they should be interested in the subject I am discussing. Does freedom, and particularly the freedom that I have been referring to for the last few minutes, the freedom of the seas, mean nothing to hon. members in this house? We can find time to discuss the price of sugar, the price of wheat and other material things, but apparently hon. members are not interested in their own security. It is about time we all woke up to the danger that faces us.

I was referring a moment ago, Mr. Speaker, to the Atlantic charter. The word charter has undergone some change. It is defined in the Pocket Oxford Dictionary in these terms:

> Charter—Written grant of rights by sovereign or legislature, privilege or admitted right.

That is one of the meanings, but in our day it has come to mean a good deal more. I say this because under our system we have a complicated constitution. I agree with what the Minister of Justice has said, that there are certain provisions in our constitution that leave a wide field to the provinces. We are part and parcel of the empire, and I suggest that we should never overlook that fact in considering our relations with other parts of the commonwealth with respect to a motion of this kind. I contend that the principles which the fathers of confederation had in mind did not contemplate the duplicate provincial system we have today. Property and civil rights fall within the provinces and it is difficult to secure uniform law. When the Supreme Court of Canada was created the purpose was to hold an even balance between the municipalities and the provinces on the one hand and the dominion on the other, under the charter which we call the British North America Act.

In my opinion we should have the right as a parliament, under the Supreme Court Act, to refer to that tribunal any doubtful matter, and in this connection I suggest that we should have a legal committee functioning in Canada. We should have had one years ago. I have frequently urged something of the sort. Certainly there should be some body to which we could refer matters such as that which we have been discussing in the last few days.

Since confederation the enforcement of federal law has been delegated to the attorneys general of the provinces. The federal government does not enforce its own enactments. I contend that there should be federal enforcement of federal law, but because we have not the proper machinery for the enforcement of these laws, their enforcement is turned over to the provinces, who in turn further delegate it to municipalities and local police forces.

In considering the motion before us we have to take into account the constitutional act of 1791. Much of the common law of England has been copied into our constitution, since 1791, as adapted to our circumstances, including the right of habeas corpus and the principles embodied in the Bill of Rights, the Petition of Rights, and Magna Carta. It must not be forgotten that the principles of Christianity have also formed a part of the common law of England, and since 1791 that has been copied into our laws. Unless we do everything in our power to preserve the freedoms that we enjoy today, and above all to do our part in maintaining the freedom of the seas, through the naval supremacy of Britain, we may find ourselves in very grave danger, with one-half the rest of the world armed to the teeth.

The main questions before the country today are parliamentary reform, constitutional reform, cabinet reform and law reform. We have had no law reform in this country, as far as I can see. The jails have been filled with people who should not be there. We talk about human rights and all that sort of thing, but many of our young people have been suffering as a result of our system of controls. Fundamentally, the motion is sound in principle, but whether it can be enforced is another matter. In the olden days might was right. Today, might plus right is right, especially in the world as it is at the present time. Under the British constitution the courts are subservient to the legislature. That is one of the cardinal principles of the English constitution and has been from time immemorial.

We have seen the effect of this in many ways in our own country, observing what goes on both within and outside Canada. I have always insisted in this house that, ever since the year 1770, parliament has been recognized as the body charged with the determination of national expenditures. It was on the principle that there should be no taxation without representation that the United States of America, or as it was at the time of the secession, the colonies, broke with Britain, when the people of Boston threw the tea into the harbour. The British people from that time to this day have demanded parliamentary control.

Since the lights went out in Europe in 1914 we have had pretty nearly thirty-five years of war and fear. The people have been haunted by fear, restraint and discipline. Fear is filling the cemetery. We have a tendency to over-organize. We are living in an age in which labour is taught to fear capital and capital is taught to fear labour. The United States fears invasion and boom and bust. The world fears the atomic bomb. Everyone fears someone or something, and liberty is nowhere. What we want in Canada today is more freedom and less legislation which interferes with the liberty of the subject.

The world outlook today is extremely dark. As was stated by William Pitt in the House of Commons in England, "necessity is the plea for every infringement of human freedom. It is the argument of tyrants; it is the creed of slaves." If you look at the world today, you will find its condition set out in the second verse of the first chapter of Genesis:

> And the earth was without form, and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep.

That is exactly what you have today. Where is freedom of the seas? Let me tell you that questions have not been and will not be answered in the British House of Commons. Where will you be without freedom of the seas? That was the real Monroe doctrine for nearly two hundred years, the supremacy of Britain on the seas, and freedom of the seven seas. Where are you going to be without it? I can tell you, and I cannot be successfully contradicted. In the old country there is the navy league. They are up and doing and they know where every ship is. But what have we here? We have not a battleship on the seven seas. We have not a carrier or a destroyer on the seven seas today. The navy has simply been wiped out. Where are we going to be in this country? Yet there is talk about the price of food and all that kind of thing. I may say that the country does not belong to those who sit here in this house representing their constituents. It is an inheritance from the past, a possession for the present, and a trust for the future. Where are you going to be while all this is going on?

I am a great admirer of the people of the United States. I wish to refer to them now for a few moments. The people of the United States, now that they are running the united nations, and the organization is located in their midst, need not think that the second league which they created at Lake Success will be any better than the other one. These leagues have been in existence for over a hundred years. Hon. members will recall the Holy Alliance which led a great prime minister of Great Britain, George Canning, to urge Britain to get out of Europe and unite, and led to the Monroe doctrine in 1823. From that date forward the Monroe doctrine was the supremacy of Britain on the seas, which gave them the freedom they have.

I marvel at what the people of the United States have done in two wars. I think it would be better, though, if we were to tell them the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth about our side of the world's story. Look at the way these things have been handled at Lake Success. Wait until the historians write up these events. Look at what has been done with regard to Palestine, India, the Suez and Greece. Look at what happened in Geneva; millions in buildings erected there. All the newspapers commented —and not in one or two or three lines—on the collapse of that league over in Geneva. Look at the way they have handled Palestine, the Indian situation, the Balkan states, and the Baltic states. All these matters have been before this united nations organization, and everybody has wanted to go down there in such a great rush and stop at the fine hotels. I venture to say that when we get the bill for a floor of a Biltmore hotel or two $100,000 will be a small amount compared with what has been expended at the great feast that has been going on down there. Wait until the people find out what has been going on.

Has Lake Success made it any easier for the United States to get on with Russia? I should say no. The U.N.O. at Lake Success has been one of the most mischievous institutions we have ever had in the past or will have in the future. Today I think that western civilization is farther apart from eastern civilization than it has ever been in the past. There is no use in our supporting these leagues any longer; they have been a flat failure in the past. There is no use in the United States and Britain pretending all that kind of thing, that they can accomplish peace and security by any such international organization. If they do, then we are going to have a third war as sure as anything. They are just wasting time. What have they done for freedom and human rights?

There is a book called "Stalin and his Russia", by Dr. Dallin—I think you can find it in the library—which gives the history of millions of slaves who have been deported from various parts of Europe and forced to work in the mines and all that kind of thing. They are slaves and they are always going to be slaves. Where is our delegation down at the united nations? They have the information on this. Why is the House of Commons not informed? Why do the press not inform us? Why does the radio corporation not inform us? Why is something not done to give the public the facts of this slavery? Are they to be blindfolded the way they were before the great war of 1914 and after that between the two wars? Now, after Britain has scrapped the finest navy and army and air force the world has ever seen, are we to go on pretending? I say no, that no nation should be allowed to go on pretending, the way they are doing, to ensure peace or security by such an agency as Lake Success.

I wish to refer to the manner in which this resolution was introduced. The principle of the resolution depends on faith and Christianity. Christianity is based on kindness. But everyone who is a Christian deprecates the wrong and the sin within himself. Good Friday, a Christian holiday, was turned into a carnival of revelry and jazz on the radio and everywhere that it could be done, and no attention was paid to it at all in a so-called Christian nation. The Christian principles on which the British empire has been built from time immemorial are set out in the summary of the ten commandments—

> Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind.
>
> This is the first and great commandment.
>
> And the second is like unto it, thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.
>
> On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets.

That is the backbone of this resolution. That is the backbone of the British constitution.

As I say, Christianity is within and not without. A person who sees his own waywardness and who extends compassion to all men, bears the same burden as others. The Christian doctrine is concerned with the salvation of self; it endows all men with an individual value, in that they are all equally children of a Divine Creator.

[Mr. Church.]

Last Monday was an historic day in the old land—and it will be an historic day for this house too, because on that day the hon. member for Lake Centre made a splendid speech for human rights and freedom. At the same time in London a bronze statue was unveiled to the memory of a great man, one who will live in history, namely the late president of the United States. Wordsworth, speaking of the death of Milton, said:

> Milton, thou should'st be living at this hour:
> England hath need of thee!

We today should say: Kipling, thou should'st be living at this hour: England hath need of thee. In 1897, at the time of the diamond jubilee of the Empress Queen Victoria, when the empire was at its peak, when from cape and island and continent the men of forty races came to England, jostling each other in the streets of London; at a time when Britain was still mistress of the seas, Rudyard Kipling in his great poem "Recessional", said:

> Far-called, our navies melt away;
> On dune and headland sinks the fire;
> Lo, all our pomp of yesterday
> Is one with Nineveh and Tyre!
> Judge of the nations, spare us yet,
> Lest we forget—lest we forget!

This week this building was visited by a great missionary bishop of the Church of England, one of the greatest in the empire, the learned and gifted Right Reverend R. J. Renison. Last Wednesday in the Globe and Mail there appeared an article written by him in which he spoke of the "Recessional," and said:

> Our people have been greatly favoured, and we may be thankful that the poet of empire once called attention, not to battleships and far-flung flags, but to righteousness and truth and God, through whom alone men may reign.

He went on to quote another verse of that great poem:

> The tumult and the shouting dies;
> The captains and the kings depart;
> Still stands Thine ancient sacrifice,
> An humble and a contrite heart.
> Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
> Lest we forget—lest we forget!

Last Monday in London a monument to the memory of Franklin D. Roosevelt was unveiled and dedicated in the presence of Mrs. Roosevelt. Right Reverend Bishop Renison, of whom I spoke a moment ago, referring to Kipling's "On the Great Heart", written by Kipling at the time of the death of Theodore Roosevelt, said that Kipling's "Great Heart" might rather have been dedicated to Theodore's kinsman, Franklin D. Roosevelt. The bishop continues in his article:

> The death of Franklin Roosevelt had all the lights and shadows of great drama. Coming as it did on the eve of victory, at the moment when freedom's Easter light is warming the world's heart after five and a half years of night, the eyes of mankind turned from the eastern and western fronts to look at the passing of a tired warrior who died in his bed at Warm Springs. For three days the movement of armies seemed forgotten. It was a tribute to the power of personality. Surely the spirit of man is the candle of the Lord. Rudyard Kipling wrote some lines at the end of the last war about the death of Theodore Roosevelt which, even heard today, seem more appropriate to his great kinsman. The poem is entitled "Great-Heart".

Since the beginning of time mankind has been herded in continents like cages. The legends of our race have taken centuries to reach the universal heart. But now there is one world. This fact has made Franklin Roosevelt the world's neighbour. This invalid warrior was known in every land. For ten years his face has been seen on every page. His voice has been heard in every living room. His gallant bearing cheered us all in dark days. His smile was cordial to drooping hearts and his jutting chin as he signed the death warrant of the axis after Pearl Harbor was a prophecy. Through the years we marked the etching of the lines of care on his face. After his return from Yalta our hearts sank as we saw the shrinking of his frame. Now Great-Heart is gone. His work is done. What shall we say of lives like this? Does the Creator cast such handiwork on the void?

There is a sense of destiny upon our age. This may well be humanity's finest hour. Every generation carries the torch and then passes it on. Every little man among us feels greater and stronger as he thinks of those who have run well. Our life is an arena. What a comfort it is to know that we are watched by the bright spirits of those whose names are our inspiration. In the Epistle to the Hebrews there is a great passage in which the mind can see the true perspective of pain and suffering:

> "Seeing, therefore, that we are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith, who, seeing the race that was set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down on the throne of God."

In conclusion I want to point out one or two other things about our great and grave danger. Democracy never dies; it perishes from neglect. Militant communism is on the march westward. I want to emphasize the very grave danger this country is in at the present time, as well as this continent and the whole world. Not since the days of Munich has the world outlook been so depressing. Not since the days of the barbarian invasion has Christian civilization faced such a menace as the ruthless advance of communism. These are times that try men's souls. The red devils have overrun the Balkan states. Yesterday it was Poland and Austria; today it is Czechoslovakia and Finland; tomorrow it may be Italy, China, Spain or France. Nations that have experienced the brutality of nazi oppression are now experiencing the cruelty and horror of soviet nightmare. "Their fate," says H. H. Schlact, an American, "will be ours unless we wake up right now. In one generation our dauntless manhood has bled and died twice on foreign battlefields. They fought to destroy the roots of the insatiable ambitions of fiendish tyrants who sought to enslave humanity."

It is sad to contemplate that after such terrible conflicts we should be faced with such grave events. Russia has the largest army and the largest air force. She does not maintain this mighty military machine for defence; for no one threatens her. She maintains this mighty armada for aggression and attack and conquest. Russia will attack us when she thinks we are weak. She will never attack us if we are strong. While our lawmakers talk, ponder and debate our national security, Russia is relentlessly weaving her web of intrigue and violence wherever she can obtain a foothold. She challenges our physical courage. She challenges our moral fortitude. She challenges our military power. She challenges our culture and our church. Our democratic way of life is threatened by communist concepts.

Let us sound the clarion call for national defence. Let us summon every true Canadian, every Britisher and American, to fight for national defence. There is little time left; there is no time for timidity. To be free we must be strong. Preparedness is not a war policy but an insurance policy for peace.

If history has taught us anything it should have taught us that it is not given to man to achieve his end or realize his desires easily. Freedom and liberty, then, should be conservative ideals. Freedom of the person is born of self-respect of the individual. This brings in its train institutions as English as the greenness of our grass. We think of trial by jury, of the law concerning habeas corpus, of the Bill of Rights, the Petition of Rights, the privileges of the houses of parliament, privileges which allow of the better achievement of the functions of members. It is a long time now since the barons won the first round against tyranny, and the change has not been so great since 1215.

Equally important with legal freedom is political freedom, including freedom of speech and of opinion. These are the most valued today, and should not be curtailed. A man should have the right to stand for election no matter what may be his views, but that is not so in such satellites of Russia as Bulgaria,

Poland and all the others. I have always contended that we should see to it that our method of representation creates no injustice and does not infringe on the liberty of the subject. There should be freedom of thought and freedom to seek a living voluntarily, without being coerced as they were under the statutes of labour in England in the thirteenth century.

We should support private enterprise without interference politically or otherwise. I am opposed to government by the delegation of controls and moving the control of parliament to the law courts, whereby personally controlled judicial boards grant individual freedom. That cannot be in a democracy; there is no real democracy in a condition of that kind.

Tradition is part of the policy of the party on this side of the house. We have respect for the ancient customs of ordered life and living, for privileges of parliament and freedom of speech, for legal respect, for the independence of judges and the judicial system. This party has respect for all that kind of thing.

Also as Progressive Conservatives we believe in bridging the gap between owner and workman, landlord and tenant, ruler and ruled. There is a unity of purpose, and all classes are bound, because our future happiness depends upon mutual sympathy and understanding in a Christian way. When Disraeli saw two nations, the rich and the poor, living within one country, he provided aid and succour to the weak by introducing social legislation. In my opinion the past cannot be separated from the present or the present from the future. We cannot escape from the responsibilities of the present, or shrink from our duty toward the future. We have accepted the doctrine of trusteeship.

It is for these reasons I shall support the motion. We need no longer think that we can have any of our freedoms under organizations such as that at Lake Success, which is nothing but a tower of Babel. We must not allow our interests to be thwarted. Does any hon. member know any nation which will permit its own interests to be handed over to another country? Certainly no nation will do that, unless she is so small that she cannot protect herself. Because after all is said and done patriotism is the cement that binds nations together. Those nations in Europe which have been overrun by the Soviet union want their freedom back. Let us look at Czechoslovakia, formerly one of the freest peoples in the world. Look at the way they were raped for the second time in the month of February last.

One of my reasons for supporting this motion is that I believe we shall always have patriotism, because people love their country. Love of country is something that cannot be taken from one. After all, it was Sir Walter Scott in the Lay of the Last Minstrel who said:

[Mr. Church.]

> Breathes there the man, with soul so dead,
> Who never to himself hath said,
> This is my own, my native land!
> Whose heart hath ne'er within his burn'd
> As home his footsteps he hath turn'd,
> From wandering on a foreign strand?
> If such there breathe, go, mark him well;
> For him no minstrel raptures swell;
> High though his titles, proud his name,
> Boundless his wealth as wish can claim,—
> Despite those titles, power, and pelf,
> The wretch, concentrated all in self,
> Living, shall forfeit fair renown,
> And, doubly dying, shall go down
> To the vile dust, from whence he sprung,
> Unwept, unhonour'd, and unsung.

No country, not even Canada, should leave its own affairs to other nations or to Lake Success; you cannot have peace or security by any such procedure or farce as that.

They tried it before. It was tried in the Holy Alliance, 1815 to 1823, and that was a failure. No country will allow other countries to run its affairs, unless that country is too weak to fight in its own defence. In Canada at the present time we have no defence. The future of both Canada and the United States depends upon the peoples of those countries. Today at least they are wide awake, after what happened in Czechoslovakia. But the leagues, or the united nations organizations, or towers of Babel, or Lake Success, or the Marshall plan, can do nothing better than Great Britain and her dominions can do when they are working together and hanging together and united together. I say that because Great Britain and her dominions are vastly superior in resources than either Russia or the United States. The minute we depart from the empire, Great Britain will become a second-class power and neither Britain nor her dominions will have anything at all to say in the peace terms.

Our position in the future is of great importance. We should re-establish our air policy; the empire air training plan should be set up again at once. Our position at the present time is an important one, and it is because of that that I say our air policy should be planned, in consultation with Great Britain. We should have an empire security council, and all that kind of thing.

I had not intended taking part in the debate, but I felt I should make these few observations. What would become of the people of this country in another war? In the last one we had submarines right in the St. Lawrence river. At Riviere du Loup, where the submarines are said to have been, the river is as wide as is lake Ontario from Niagara-on-the-Lake to the eastern gap. But the newspapers then did not say a word of it; the people were not entitled to know. Are we going to have the same situation as we had here in 1938, when we were entirely unprepared? Are we going to wait until the enemy comes?

The trouble with Russia all started down at Lake Success, because we will remember that during the war Russia was an ally. After the first great war we lost two of our allies, Italy and Japan, and we never should have lost them. We have lost one of our allies from the last war, and will lose some others, because those others have no security. Are we going to wait until our enemy comes here and sails up the St. Lawrence river?

We have a long and unprotected coast on the Pacific, stretching from Puget sound. What are we going to do about it? Britain has no battleships, destroyers or fleet carriers out there.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. CHURCH: We have none on the Atlantic, the Pacific or the Mediterranean, and it is time we had some.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. CHURCH: I thank hon. members, through you, sir, for your courtesy in listening.

Mr. L. W. SKEY (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, what I have to say in this debate will not take more than two minutes. However I believe mine will be a contribution of a practical kind, one which will be worthwhile, because it relates to those who are reaching our shores now from Europe, from the displaced persons camps, as workers, farmers and relatives of Canadian citizens.

The people who are coming here have suffered much; they have lost much, and they have feared much. Almost invariably they are confused as to their rights of freedom in this new land to which they come for the first time. Therefore I suggest that the government should form orientation centres at our ports to which the ships are bringing these people. There the workers, farmers and relatives should be held for a few days only, so that they may be told about their rights, privileges and freedoms in the country they are entering. At the same time they could be shown some films and given information about the climate of our country. They could begin their cultural orientation to our Canadian way of life. They could be told how the machinery of our electoral system works, and, most important of all, they could be told what to do when the agent of a foreign power threatens them when they reach Canadian soil.

This last mentioned is the most important suggestion I have to offer. I believe they should be told even before they reach our shores what they can do with respect to those who would continue to threaten them in Canada. They should be told how to approach our police, how to advise Canadian authorities respecting approaches made to them. I make these suggestions because I know the newspaper articles are quite true in their reports as to incidents which have taken place on trains and in homes in Canada.

I hope that the government will take note of this suggestion in order that our hopes for the future and the rights and privileges enjoyed in this free country may be brought to the attention of our new citizens immediately upon their arrival.

Mr. PIERRE GAUTHIER (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I usually speak French in the house and English in the committees. This afternoon I shall try to express in English what I have to say, and I hope that I shall not be too long, in order that I may please as much as I can those whom I am going to criticize.

In this country, and especially, may I add, in my province of Quebec, we are all for civil rights and freedom, and this question has been widely discussed on many occasions. But the difficulty lies in the fact that it is hard to establish a sound basis from which to start. To hear some hon. members in this debate one might think that a few of them—fortunately only a few—were ready to give equal freedom to evil and good. In my province we are not ready to give equal freedom to evil and good. It is all right to talk about civil rights and freedom, even for those who are organizing from central Europe in order that they may be ready to break our back when they judge the proper time has come. In this country it is useless to name those who are getting ready to break our back and to do it more rapidly than this house seems to think.

I should like to refer to the question put by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell), speaking in this debate the other day, as reported at page 2871 of Hansard of April 12, where he said:

> But I am always inclined to ask myself which of these freedoms we have lost, or which of them we are in danger of losing.

In answer to his first question I would say that no one can reasonably maintain that we have lost any freedoms in this country. To the second question I answer that in reality we are in danger of losing many freedoms.

Some members, I say, give me the impression that they are ready to give equal freedom to evil and good, even to those very same people who are ready to break our back. What would those people do if they were in our place in this free House of Commons? They would ask for freedom and civil rights in this house, but outside the house they would organize and tell their friends to get ready for the day of revolution when they will overthrow by force and violence this very government of Canada. What we are being asked to do is to give more freedom and civil rights to these people.

I am a Catholic, and I am absolutely opposed to materialism and atheism. To every Christian I have no hesitation in saying that we must not be ready to give equal freedoms to those who are daily fed with materialism and atheism, because not only would they destroy our democratic form of government; at the same time they would destroy the creed in the minds of our people who believe in the existence of God. We cannot allow them to do that. That is my stand on this resolution.

I do not doubt for one moment the sincerity of the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker). He made a wonderful speech. It took a very able lawyer to make such a speech in favour of human and civil rights when in this free country the civil rights and freedoms, especially of the French-speaking people, have often been denied in some quarters, and we were told to keep quiet. We did not bring forward any resolution or make long speeches saying that we were persecuted. No, we continued our march towards national unity, assured that some day that national unity would be attained by the good will and consideration of everyone in this country. We did not leave the country. Sometimes we may have appeared to some to be taking the wrong way in refusing help to those who were asking us to go and fight nazism and fascism. But it was agreed, if I may say so, that we were not obliged to take part in any external war. That time however has gone, and now we have come back together to make this country the best in the world. In doing that we should not be ready to give sufficient freedom to our enemies within to help to secure the proper weapons to destroy this very country of ours. To do so would be absolutely illogical, and that is why I am trying to give my thoughts to the house this afternoon.

Someone said the other day that in trying to pass a law to ban communism we were using the same weapons as the communists, doing the same things that the communists are doing. That may be so, but when it is a question of life or death I say let us strike first in order not to be killed afterwards. That is why I would favour the passing of such a law—not because I believe that that is the only way to stop the spread of communism, Mr. Speaker; far from it. But if that is one of the weapons we need to stop the march of that evil theory to which some of us are ready to give freedom equal to what they give to the real democrats in this country, then we should use it.

On the national ground, Mr. Speaker, I could give example after example of the truth of my words this afternoon. The people of this country, yea, the people of all the countries of the world, were not aware of the danger ahead. Now they are afraid of the danger within and the present danger. Some of the nations of the world have banned communism. Is communism spreading more rapidly in those countries? Take Brazil, for instance. They imprisoned Julio Prestes. Brazil is victoriously overcoming communism. They have banned communism. Turkey has banned communism, and they are fighting communism equally victoriously, and Soviet Russia.

Chile has done the same. Let us hope that more countries of the world will do the same. Very often some people will say: Would you like fascism better? No; I am a real democrat. But sometimes some nation, especially the united nations, would be glad to have a Spain, a fascist-ruled nation, at the present time, to stop communism from spreading in Europe in order to take away from England the strait of Gibraltar. I was reading the other day a book entitled "Forging of a Rebel", and I discovered in that book—I saw the information was accurate because I checked it in other books, and one of them was that book on Stalin by Trotsky—that communism has been working since 1915 in Morocco across the strait of Gibraltar, and that Doctor Juan Negrin had developed a war in Spain. In saying that they had developed a war in Spain I am not trying to excuse Franco, but I am stating the real facts about Spain.

Let us hope, Mr. Speaker, that communism will not spread wider in Europe; let us hope that it will not go farther than it has gone, but if it should go farther we would be glad to have fascist Spain to help us to defend what is left of democracy in Europe. I should be glad if our representative in the united nations would whisper in the ears of England and the United States not to try to take Spain away from the European recovery program, because they are in a position to help democracy. This is the time to assist freedom and civil rights, because the Spaniards are enjoying that regime at the present time, and it would be right to ask the other nations to try to help England. If England, with her socialist government, does not understand yet, let us hope that the people will continue their victorious march, started in the municipal elections, and that they will do away with a government that has no understanding of the real advantage to England of having the assistance of Spain.

With regard to the united nations organization, I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, that I shall say things that may not be approved by everyone in this house or outside of the house, but I am speaking my mind. I think that the shadow of communistic Russia has been falling on the united nations organization for too long a time. Notwithstanding their numerous vetoes, very often we can see from the speeches delivered by Gromyko and Vishinsky that they have a deliberate goal to attain. It is to try to impress on the nations of the world the necessity of giving more freedom outside Russia, and outside the iron curtain, in order that their organization may go farther in these very countries. We have been warned before. For instance, we were warned in 1932. I hold in my hand a copy of the judgment in the King vs. Buck and others, delivered by the court of appeal of Ontario, concerning the communist party in Canada. In a preface to the judgment Mr. William H. Price, the then attorney general for Ontario said:

> The chief justice has outlined in the judgment the origin of the communist party of Canada, has referred to the evidence showing it to be an integral part of the world-wide communist international.

There is no question that the communist party of Canada is just a part of the communist international. We cannot discuss it without wasting our time. In the judgment we find the following:

> According to the evidence of the accused Timothy Buck, large numbers of communists in Canada, in the fall of 1920, secured copies of those theses and statutes and in 1921 several groups of communists held a conference in Canada and formed an association called the communist party of Canada. Buck testified that the communist party of Canada was a section of the communist international and that from the year 1924 onward the above-mentioned theses and statutes became binding upon the communist party of Canada.
>
> The communist international at the meeting of its second world congress (its supreme governing body) held in Moscow in July, 1920, passed certain theses and statutes. Two editions of them were published, being exhibits 27 and 103 at the trial.
>
> "The communist international makes it its duty to support with all the power at its disposal every soviet republic wherever it may be found. . . ."

Russia is asking for the same civil rights and freedom for all citizens of the world, because she is ready to support every republic wherever it may be found under the role of the communist workers.

> Only a violent defeat of the bourgeoisie, the confiscation of its property, the annihilation of the entire bourgeois governmental apparatus, parliamentary, judicial, military, bureaucratic, administrative, municipal, etc. . . .

You are ready to give more civil rights and more freedom to those who want to do all this to your free institutions? You are asking that they be given more freedom? I do not understand how anyone can ask that such people be given more freedom.

It was in the name of civil rights and freedom that the French people had La Déclaration des Droits de l'Homme in 1789. What happened in France after that? There were a few revolutions. There was one in 1848 and another in 1871. Do you think, Mr. Speaker, that the chiefs of government in France, who were radical socialists with a tinge of communism, though they did not confess it frankly, who passed laws to deprive a few million Frenchmen of their religious teachers, were not in favour of greater freedom and civil rights for themselves? They were in favour of more human rights and more freedom.

In 1901 they re-enacted another law which had been repealed before the fall of Napoleon III. In 1901, under the socialist premier Waldeck-Rousseau, after that law had been re-enacted by the French parliament, the religious teachers and institutions of France were penalized. Do you want to give people of that kind, the people who were ready to do that sort of thing, greater freedom in this country? In the name of civil rights and freedom, do you want to give them the power which they will inevitably obtain if we continue extending more and more freedom to them in their evil-doing? Do you want to give such people freedom to do in this country, if possible, more than they did in France?

We cannot do that. We must keep wide awake. My hon. friends have read "Speaking Frankly", by Byrnes, on the international situation, and those who have read it know what is going on. To those who will take the trouble to read serious writers or, I would say, even to read communist writers, I commend a book prefaced by Senator Pepper, entitled "Great Conspiracy against Russia", a copy of which was sent to me by a communist of Montreal. They will read in that book what organizations like the NKVD would do in this country.

What happened in that organization? They killed each other simply to retain power. They are doing precisely what Stalin did in the name of civil rights and greater freedom, when he had three trials against Zinoviev and Kamenev, with Vishinsky acting as attorney general. As a result of those trials where were the victims sent? Everyone here can give the answer to that question. Is that the situation we wish to develop in this country by giving greater freedom and more civil rights to people who are coming here, presumably to become good Canadians, but who are really waiting for an opportunity to break our back, if war should break out with Russia? That is the real situation.

I do not mind if there is laughter at this. I know I am right. I know that we have not been sufficiently afraid of the danger that lies right ahead of us, and it is about time we stopped these people. It is about time we stopped asking parliament to give them greater freedom to kill us.

When I was a student in the Catholic seminary of Quebec I read the speeches delivered in the Senate of Rome by the great Cicero to Catiline, public enemy No. 1. He must have been the Tim Buck of that time. Cicero said to him: "When, O Catiline, do you mean to cease abusing our patience? How long is that madness of yours still to mock us?" I am asking that very question of every man in this country, whether he is Canadian born or foreign born, or whether he is a communist. How long? I know it will be for a long time, because this institution of communism is more than a political party. They make a wrong use of the freedom they have been given, and which they gladly received when they came to Canada. If they do not understand the kind of freedom we have, which is real; if they do not understand and cannot appreciate the real freedom they are enjoying here, then I say, let them go back home and leave us to make this Canada of ours a great country. It is already a great country, but what we wish above all else is national unity. We want the freedom that we have been enjoying, even if sometimes there is what we call in French un petit accroc.

We have attained this freedom for ourselves and we do not want to have these people destroy it just to obtain a greater advantage for themselves in organizing their evil workers. And when I say workers I mean communist workers on every step of the social ladder.

I ask these people to think as Canadians. If they cannot, it is most unfortunate, because we are Canadians. And to those who, I repeat, are sincerely asking for more civil rights and freedom for these people, both on international and on national grounds, I say, be careful not to give equal freedom to evil theories and to good theories. They have no right to act so that their acts will destroy this democracy of ours, because I believe in democracy.

I want to finish my remarks, Mr. Speaker, by these words that you must have heard when Frenchmen sing their national anthem, La Marseillaise: "Liberté, Liberté chérie". We enjoy it here and, however, important he may be, we do not want anyone to destroy it. We are going to fight it out to the end and we are going to keep it in spite of everything.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Shall the motion as amended carry?

Right Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Justice): Perhaps I should say a few words, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: If the hon. member speaks now, he will close the debate.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go ahead.

Mr. ILSLEY: Perhaps I should say a few words before the motion passes. The hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. Macdonnell) asked me to express my opinion as to whether this thing is any good at all. He said, as reported at page 2881 of Hansard:

> . . . I think we are at least entitled to hear from the Minister of Justice whether he thinks it is a good thing.

Earlier he said:

> I think we are entitled to know from the Minister of Justice, who is a serious man, whether this thing means anything.

He was talking about the international bill of rights, not the proposal for a national bill of rights, so-called, about which I shall have something to say before I finish. I thank the hon. gentleman for the confidence he reposes in my judgment but I myself feel that my judgment is not particularly good on this matter. As he asked a serious question, however, I think perhaps I should undertake a serious reply.

I am of the opinion that the insertion in the charter of the united nations of the articles referring to human rights and fundamental freedoms served a useful purpose. Article 13 of the charter provides:

> 1. The general assembly shall initiate studies and make recommendations for the purpose of:
> b. promoting international co-operation in the economic, social, cultural, educational and health fields, and assisting in the realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion.

Before the war and during the war, peoples in many parts of the world had terrible experiences as the result of the violation of human rights and fundamental freedoms. One now needs only to think of what went on in nazi Germany and in other countries to realize the force of what I am saying. Certainly this objective—the promotion of international co-operation for the realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms—is a high, noble and worthwhile one. The very insertion of these articles in the charter of the united nations I think has caused the governments and the peoples of the world to look critically at themselves with a view to seeing whether their own laws, the administration of their own laws, their own customs, their own practices, violate, in any substantial way at least, human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Pursuant to that article it was deemed necessary to set up a commission on human rights and to undertake this measure, the drafting of what has been called an international bill of rights. As the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario said, this is a task of enormous difficulty. It is a task that will not soon be completed. A draft bill of rights has been submitted to the countries of the world for their comments. This draft bill of rights, as I said in moving this resolution, consists of three parts: a draft declaration of human rights, a draft covenant of human rights and measures of implementation. I have no doubt that, before any agreement is arrived at, many changes will be made in this international bill of rights. There will be many exceptions, many qualifications, many provisos and many escape clauses. The prospect is a somewhat formidable one, but I believe that not only are we committed by our signature to the charter of the united nations but that the task itself will be a worthwhile one which I hope—and I cannot do any more than hope—will come to something after a very considerable length of time.

We were criticized by the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario for not moving more rapidly since January. We were criticized, I think, by the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) for not assuming responsibility as a government for making comments and suggestions to the united nations on the draft bill of rights. In the British House of Commons the speakers who dealt with this urged not haste but deliberation. I do not think that there was so much hurry about this matter that leaving it until it could be placed before a committee of parliament, and before parliament, before the government made their comments and observations, in any real sense prejudiced the objective which we hope will eventually be attained.

I have been speaking about the international bill of rights. I have not been talking in a tone of undue optimism or enthusiasm, as hon. gentlemen will know. But I am responding sincerely to the invitation given by the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario to express my opinion as to whether it is a good thing or whether we are justified in spending our time thinking about it. I think we are. I think we are justified in doing so.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Will the minister speak a little more loudly?

Mr. ILSLEY: All right. With regard to the proposal which interests a few members of the house more than the international bill of rights—that is, the national bill of rights that has been suggested—I should like to say just a few words. The proposals in this debate have been not that our constitution be amended so that the provinces and the dominion would both have the field of their activities in the realm of civil rights curtailed; the proposal has been that we enact a dominion statute. I should like to follow the implications of that. That statute, of course, would not impose any restraint, except moral, upon future parliaments or future sessions of the same parliament. That is, this parliament could pass a statute the following year or any year thereafter which did not comply with the statute defining the human rights and fundamental freedoms which must not be infringed. On the other hand, to the extent that statute might be valid, to the extent that statute would be within the limit of our constitutional authority, it would impose restraint upon the provinces; and the point I was trying to make clear in my opening remarks was that we should be very careful not to stir up a provincial rights controversy over this matter unless we are very sure of our ground.

It seemed to be assumed by the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) that we should find out by a reference to the court how far we could go, and go that far. I do not think that is obvious by any means. I think when a curtailment of rights heretofore exercised by provinces in certain fields is attempted there is a little higher duty imposed upon the dominion parliament than to find out just how far it can go and go that far. I think they must have some regard to the traditions, the history, the feelings and the beliefs of the provinces as to what their powers are. The hon. member for Lake Centre says he does not want to invade any provincial fields; yet later in his remarks he accused the government of trying to centralize authority here. Well, no one wants to invade any provincial fields, and as far as we know we have never done so.

What are we being accused of? Not that we have invaded provincial fields or done anything illegally. We have been accused by the hon. member for Lake Centre consistently and persistently of having acted not illegally but improperly, in trying to centralize authority in this parliament and in this government. That is what we have been accused of. We do not want to act improperly.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: If you have learned that lesson we have gone a long way.

Mr. ILSLEY: Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to get into too much of a controversy here, but you know it is a little hard to listen to my hon. friend protest his desire to be non-political and non-partisan, while at the same time, in a non-political and non-partisan speech, he makes a remark like this, which is found at page 2860 of Hansard for April 12:

When I observe the actions of some of the ministers in the cabinet I ask myself if these men are engaged in a competition among themselves for absolute power. Some show a greed for power. Some show that they are afflicted with the violence of unrestrained authority outside the law.

Parliamentary rules do not permit me to characterize that statement as I should like to do. I have sat in this government since 1935, and I have never sat with a colleague who had a greed for power, or who was afflicted with the violence of unrestrained authority outside the law, or who was in competition with another minister for power. What we did during the war and what we are doing now was and is done out of a sense of duty to the Canadian people. We are bringing everything before parliament in so far as it is possible to bring things before parliament, having in mind the emergent situations that arise. We have laughed off this idea that we are a group of little tyrants trying to monopolize power, trying to centre power in ourselves, greedy for power, and so on. We have laughed it off year after year, and perhaps we should laugh it off still. I do not think very many people believe it; but this is the kind of accusation the hon. member for Lake Centre has, I think, talked himself into believing. I want to say to my hon. friend, do not become inebriated with the exuberance of your own verbosity. Get away from this sophomoric invective. Get away from this adolescent abuse. Be mature in your criticism of the government. I am saying that to my hon. friend through you, Mr. Speaker. The government certainly is not perfect; the government makes mistakes, but do not get down to this ad hominem abuse and accuse us of being greedy for power, of competing with one another for power or of trying to centre power in ourselves for the sake of power, because there is nothing in it and members of this house, outside the hon. member for Lake Centre, do not believe it in their hearts, nor do the people of the country.

Mr. KNOWLES: There is no abuse as between the Liberals and Tories out in Saskatchewan. They are working together very well out there.

Mr. ILSLEY: Never mind. Then in his speech my hon. friend had some new suggestions to make, all of which will be given consideration. I remember that last year two of the prominent features of his speech were, first, that the War Measures Act should be repealed, and, second, a scathing criticism of the spy probe. He has not repeated those this year. Why? Would it be that the political atmosphere, the atmosphere of public opinion in the country, is not too favourable to a repetition of those points this year? Instead the hon. member offers new suggestions, such as the setting up of a civil rights division in the Department of Justice. I do not want to condemn that out of hand. They have a civil rights division in the department of justice in the United States, and of course that is what the hon. member had in mind. He suggested that it would be a reservoir, a place to which Canadians could go with their complaints; whereupon, naturally, those in charge of the civil rights division or the Minister of Justice would immediately intervene; would write to the provinces, I suppose, and say, "What are you trying to do with this kind of legislation?" I can see all sorts of friction and controversy arising from that suggestion; I can see many objections to it; but, like the other suggestions, it can be given consideration.

When we set up this committee we shall consider what we ought to do and how far we ought to go with regard to this national bill of rights, so-called; and by the amendment which has just been adopted the committee is empowered to recommend that the government can have the assistance of the court if they wish. In this debate we seem to have thought that it is a simple thing to draft abstract general questions as to how far we can go, and put them to the Supreme Court of Canada. The supreme court will refuse to write essays in answer to abstract questions. Moreover those answers will have no binding force of law; they will not be final or conclusive. And it is going to take a considerable degree of skill, I may say, on the part of the members of the committee to frame any questions which will be appropriate to put to the court. I hope eloquence in debate in this house will be converted into diligent action in the committee, because I can see that the committee will have before it a task which it will be hard to discharge.

Mr. KNOWLES: The power given to the committee is also to draft the bill.

Mr. ILSLEY: When my hon. friend gets to drafting a bill of rights I think he will have to desist from quite so active participation in debates in the house.

I want to say a word or two about one remark made by the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Croll). The hon. member made a statement with which I disagree, and I wish simply to state my disagreement without giving my reasons. He said:

> There are amongst us many minorities, racial, religious, economic and political minorities, who are profoundly upset at the present state of freedom in Canada. They see a growing spirit of intolerance manifesting itself in not just isolated cases here and there, but in mass action against whole groups.

I just wish to say that I think a better case can be made for the proposition that we are becoming more tolerant in Canada than for the proposition that we are becoming more intolerant. And without going into this matter any further, and prolonging the debate, I should just like to say there is a great deal of truth in what was said by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell) when, in closing his remarks, he said:

> You can write these things into a constitution, but putting them on paper and making them law does not preserve them. They are principles of life, and they operate as an organism operates; as life operates. This government is not going to take them from us; perhaps no one in this house is going to take them from us. If you want to write them into law, all right; but that does not preserve them and it does not give them to us.

I think we ought to quit talking as if this were a country of tyranny and despotism, where people are deprived of their liberties. This is one of the freest countries in the world. Someone has talked about our embarrassment before the united nations by reason of certain laws and regulations we have in this country. We have not any cause for embarrassment in the united nations. One does not wish to make invidious comparisons between this and other countries. But take almost any country in the world you like, and you will have a country where there is far greater and far more infraction of personal liberties, human rights and fundamental freedoms than in this Dominion of Canada.

Why is that so? Because, just as the hon. member for Macleod has said, these principles are principles of life. They operate as an organism operates, as life operates.

Those are the only observations I wish to make.

Motion (Mr. Ilsley) as amended agreed to.

EXPORT AND IMPORT PERMITS

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE PENALTY FOR FURNISHING FALSE OR MISLEADING INFORMATION

On the order:

House again in committee of the whole on Bill No. 138 intituled: "An act to amend the Export and Import Permits Act.—The Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. G. J. McILRAITH (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, when Bill No. 138, to amend the Export and Import Permits Act was before the house for second reading on April 8, amendments to the bill were indicated. Those amendments are set out in full at page 2769 of Hansard of that date.

Because of the nature and extent of the amendments proposed, some question was raised as to the regularity of the proceedings. That question as to the regularity of the proceedings is one upon which there could perhaps be considerable discussion. There seems to be very little doubt, however, that any question concerning regularity of procedure can be settled by an instruction to the committee. With the unanimous consent of the house, I would now move such an instruction.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Has the hon. member unanimous consent?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. McILRAITH: I move:

That it be an instruction to the committee of the whole that they have power to amend Bill No. 138 (Letter U3 of the senate) as follows:

That clause one of the bill be deleted and the following clauses substituted therefor:

"1. Section three of the Export and Import Permits Act, chapter seventeen of the Statutes of 1947, is amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

(2) The governor in council may by order, which shall be published in the Canada Gazette within fifteen days after the passing of such order, establish a list of countries to which section five of this act shall apply, and such list may be amended by the governor in council by order so published.

2. Section five of the said act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

'5. No person shall export or attempt to export from Canada any goods included in a list established pursuant to subsection one of section three of this act, or any goods to a country named in a list established pursuant to subsection two of such section, except under the authority of and in accordance with a permit issued under this act.'

3. The said act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section six thereof, the following section:

'6A. No person shall, in any application for a permit under this act or for the purpose of procuring the issue of any permit under this act, wilfully furnish any false or misleading information or knowingly make any misrepresentation.'

4. Section seven of the said act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

'7. The minister, or any person designated by the minister, may issue to any person applying therefor a permit to export from Canada, to such place and in such quantity and of such quality as may be specified in the permit, any of the goods included in a list established pursuant to subsection one of section three of this act or any goods to a country named in a list established pursuant to subsection two of such section and may amend, suspend or cancel any such permit'."

2. That clause two of the bill be renumbered as clause five.

Mr. J. M. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments on this motion. When the minister introduced it the other night he told us, and I think properly so, that the real change being made was to be able not merely to control commodities, as the act formerly authorized, but to control destinations.

The minister made some interesting remarks indicating just why that required to be done. However I wish to read some of the remarks. I should like to carry the mind of the house back, for a minute, to the real gist of the original control, and then I want to point out what a tremendous additional power this is. It is not small; it is a great power, and we should not take it lighly. I believe we should make sure that everything has been considered before we go so far as this goes.

I should like to recall one or two things which took place at the time of the passage of the original act. It was made clear then, and I think to the satisfaction of all concerned, that there were certain commodities —I believe steel was one of them—which, because of their shortage, needed certain controls. I recall very well the illustrations given to us as to the way in which the control operated.

There would be various manufacturers in Canada competing for steel. There was not enough steel to go around, and the available quantity had to be allocated so that each manufacturer would get his required amount. It was made clear to us by competent civil servants that this had gone to considerable lengths—and I am not criticizing them; I am only stating what we were told—that the minister's department had had to go to considerable lengths in discriminating not merely as to quantities but as to the claims of one industry against another.

[Mr. McIlraith.]

One of the illustrations given to us was of a certain industry which was manufacturing here for export, which was considered probably in the nature of a war baby, and which was manufacturing something that had formerly been manufactured chiefly in Holland. It was not thought that industry was likely to be able to continue against foreign competition as time went on, and so it was considered less worthy of receiving steel than an industry in a different line of business which it was thought could continue. I mention that to make this point. It was clear that, just as soon as this power to control imports and exports was given, a wide field would be opened where the authorities had to begin to decide whether this business or that was most entitled. That legislation was passed a year ago. Now the minister comes back and asks for power, as he puts it, to control destination, and he has related that to the coming into effect of the Marshall plan. I should like to repeat briefly what the minister said. His words were:

It is apparent that the continuing world shortages, and the intensified demands that can be expected once funds are available to European countries will entail in Canada as in the United States, the need for directing supplies to those countries whose requirements are most urgent, and in such quantities as to ensure equitable distribution.

One paragraph more I want to read:

I think the committee will agree that in the early rehabilitation of Europe and the United Kingdom lies one bright hope for world peace. It is important therefore, that every shipment we send to European shores contributes directly to this purpose. There is need, however, for machinery to implement this objective, and this amendment, I believe, meets this requirement.

The thing that perplexes me as I think this over is this. I can see that there has to be some correlation, some over-all arrangement, so that the available supplies are sensibly distributed where they are needed. I ask the minister whether there is to be a combined plan in Europe whereby the European nations will agree among themselves as to the allocation of the materials available, or whether there is to be, as I saw suggested, some kind of queue in Washington of the European nations who are beneficiaries under the plan, coming there and presenting their claims and leaving the matter to be more or less haggled out. I go on to make a further point.

Mr. HOWE: May I interrupt my hon. friend for a moment. He has asked me questions with the Speaker in the chair. Is there any objection to going into committee and putting the questions there? This is just a motion to consider instructions.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Very well.

Motion (Mr. McIlraith) agreed to.

The house resumed from Thursday, April 8, consideration in committee of Bill No. 138 to amend the Export and Import Permits Act —Mr. Howe—Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: The minister has an amendment to be moved.

Mr. McCANN: I move, Mr. Chairman:

That clause one of the bill be deleted and the following clauses substituted therefor:

"1. Section three of the Export and Import Permits Act, chapter seventeen of the statutes of 1947, is amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

'(2) The governor in council may by order, which shall be published in the Canada Gazette within fifteen days after the passing of such order, establish a list of countries to which section five of this act shall apply, and such list may be amended by the governor in council by order so published.'

2. Section five of the said act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

'5. No person shall export or attempt to export from Canada any goods included in a list established pursuant to subsection one of section three of this act, or any goods to a country named in a list established pursuant to subsection two of such section, except under the authority of and in accordance with a permit issued under this act.'

3. The said act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section six thereof, the following section:

'6A. No person shall, in any application for a permit under this act or for the purpose of procuring the issue of any permit under this act, wilfully furnish any false or misleading information or knowingly make any misrepresentation.'

4. Section seven of the said act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

'7. The minister, or any person designated by the minister, may issue to any person applying therefor a permit to export from Canada, to such place and in such quantity and of such quality as may be specified in the permit, any of the goods included in a list established pursuant to subsection one of section three of this act or any goods to a country named in a list established pursuant to subsection two of such section and may amend, suspend or cancel any such permit.'"

2. That clause two of the bill be renumbered as clause five.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): The question I was asking was this, whether the European nations who are to be beneficiaries under the Marshall plan are going to arrange the distribution, or is there to be a queue of them at Washington? What bothers me is this. The minister said in effect that in order to make this thing work there must be co-ordination between the United States and Canada as the main suppliers, so that there will be a working arrangement as to how the goods are to be sent. That is no doubt true, but what is not clear to me is why this power, and it is a tremendous power, is needed for that purpose. Perhaps I had better stop my question there and let the minister explain, because what bothers me is that this, as I see it, really puts an end to private trading in this country in respect of a wide range of commodities. We are not told now what the commodities are, but I have before me the report of the board for last year, which covers quite a range of commodities. Nor are we told which countries are to receive these goods. I would ask the minister, with his knowledge of private business, which we all know is great, to explain just where the private individual stands. Just what does this mean? Does it mean that the private firm may just as well forget any connections it has in any of the countries designated? Incidentally I would ask the minister to give us an idea whether the number of countries designated is likely to be small or very large.

I repeat, this should not be regarded as a small or incidental power, but as a very great and far-reaching power.

Mr. HOWE: To answer the last question first, there are at present sixteen countries on the committee of European economic co-operation qualified to receive ERP aid.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Does that include any countries beyond the iron curtain?

Mr. HOWE: No.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Roughly it includes all those west of the iron curtain?

Mr. HOWE: Yes, except Spain. That is the situation. My hon. friend has asked whether the countries are coming to Washington to ask for goods, or whether allocations will be made in England and filled from Washington. That is a very difficult question which has not yet been decided. I am just awaiting word from Washington to go there to discuss the matter. I have been invited to be there at the appropriate time, which I assume will be within the next week or so. Private trading is very much restricted in any event in view of the credit risks and exchange difficulties in the sixteen countries we are now discussing.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): But you are going to ensure this and make it possible for them to get the goods?

Mr. HOWE: There will still be a little difficulty about money. Practically every transaction is cleared through the department of commerce. There are very few entrepreneurs operating today.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): When the minister said that practically every transaction was cleared through the department of commerce, did he mean the Department of Trade and Commerce in Canada or the United States department?

Mr. HOWE: In Canada. We have had difficulty over the years in stopping exports to certain countries; for example machinery to Czechoslovakia. We have had no means of doing that unless we pass specific legislation. There is the additional point that if we join with the United States in certain commitments under the European recovery program we do want to have the power to make sure that private enterprise does not divert to other countries material that we have sold to or committed to ERP. We may never use it. It is not likely that that will happen, because I think private enterprise is, on the whole, just as anxious to co-operate with the government in ERP as it was to co-operate with the government in the war. Nevertheless it is a solemn matter to make a commitment with another country, and we wish to make sure that if the commitment is made the commitment will be carried out.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Did I understand that the minister from day to day has knowledge of the commitments to be made by private individuals to foreign countries? Is that what I understood the minister to say a moment ago?

Mr. HOWE: Well, under the present law if it is commodities they must come to the department and get an export permit in order to export goods to almost any country.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Therefore the minister does know.

Mr. HOWE: We know, yes.

Mr. COLDWELL: These permits will be issued in conformity with the plan of supplying to ERP.

Mr. HOWE: If this amendment carries. Today we have no right to refuse a permit on the basis of the country. The only basis for refusing a permit is that Canada requires the material in Canada for national reasons. In other words, if we have surplus material the export permit issues automatically today, because we have the right under the present bill to direct the supply of commodities, but we have no right to direct materials to be exported to one country and withheld from another.

[Mr. Howe.]

Mr. COLDWELL: It is not so much a matter of withholding them or being able to control exports so that supplies will not go to a country you do not like.

Mr. HOWE: No.

Mr. COLDWELL: As I understand it, this is a bill to ensure that supplies do go to countries to which we are obligated to send them.

Mr. HOWE: That is it exactly.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I do not see the risk. If the minister does not know what goods are already committed to Luxembourg, let us say, and then commits himself to send a lot more and finds that there was a surplus and overlapping I cannot see that that would create a danger to be guarded against. But if in fact the department knows from day to day that goods of a certain type are already going to Luxembourg and knows the total amount required, it can then buy the additional amount itself and send them. The reason I am saying this is one which the minister will appreciate. It seems to me, whether you like it or not, that this is just saying to the private individual, there is no use in your doing anything; it is in the hands of the government. It seems to me that you are saying to the ordinary entrepreneur, the ordinary man, working hard to build up a business, Just go and roll your hoop. It is no use your showing the energy and initiative which we want you to show. Is that a fair way to put it? And if so, is it not a serious state of affairs?

Mr. HOWE: To me this gives very little additional power to control exports in any section of the world outside western Europe to which we are exporting and will continue to export. The point I make is this: if we join with the United States in ERP, it is very similar to joint supply projects during the war. At that time we had the power to direct material to the sources. War material was, of course, entirely in the hands of the government. We could direct it. But this is supply material; and if we go to Washington and a list is laid before us and we agree with the United States that we shall take care of a certain part of the list and they will take care of certain other parts of the list we become responsible for that supply. Well, without being able to regulate our exports by countries, a situation might arise where we could not supply it for the reason that the goods, if the transactions were entered into, were diverted to another country for probably private reasons or for some other reason over which we had no control.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): It seems to me that you are taking a steam hammer to crack a nut. I would have thought that the danger was remote, and not only remote but even if it did arise it would be trivial. The minister knows business in this country like the palm of his hand. He is in touch with people. I do not believe these dangers that he points out are serious. On the other hand, I think that to stifle initiative, which I think is what it is doing, is serious. The minister says that we have many other countries besides western Europe to whom to export. Nevertheless we rely greatly on western Europe.

There is one other thing that arises. As I understand it, we have no knowledge yet of exactly how the United States are going to work this out. If I understood the minister correctly, he said he expected to be called to Washington shortly to confer with the people there and to take the necessary steps. But now, in advance of that and, I submit, before the minister knows what powers he really needs, he is coming and asking for these very wide powers. He is not fooling in the powers he is asking for. The minister has had wide powers, and I do not hesitate to say that he has often exercised them very well. He made a remark a moment or two ago which I think is symptomatic of the trouble we are in now. He said, we had these powers or similar powers during the war. In effect he says we have them now. I admit that great emergencies still exist. My hon. friend to the left may very naturally approve this, as I expect he will. It is right down his alley. This is what he believes, and no one can criticize him for it; but to those of us who believe that initiative and private energy should be given as much scope as possible I confess I find it very disappointing to see another door being shut, and nothing that has been said convinces me that it is necessary.

Mr. HOWE: I suggest to my hon. friend that this is a free enterprise bill, and he is advocating for state buying. If the only way we can fill an ERP order is to buy the material in Canada and ship it ourselves that would be a move toward socialism. If we can control the export of free entrepreneurs through granting export permits, as we can do if this bill passes, it is in my humble opinion, greatly in the interests of free economy.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I wonder whether the minister's answer is quite as perfect as it appears. I wonder whether I have been wrong in thinking that the minister, both the other night and a few minutes ago, suggested—certainly he did, if I did not misunderstand him—that there would be a great deal of government buying to fill these orders.

Mr. HOWE: I said I did not know.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): If I am wrong in that, then to that extent perhaps my question goes astray.

Mr. COLDWELL: May I just say a word? I am inclined to agree with the minister, as a matter of fact, that our present method of doing business in Canada, that is by what is called free enterprise, and the present methods that are being adopted to supply European nations to my mind—while I would prefer to see the government enter into negotiations and agreements for bulk sale and buying—does not do what my hon. friend says I would like it to do. I think the minister is right, that this does permit free enterprise a great deal of scope, and all you have is a permit system instead of a complete bulk sale to the nations that need the goods. That is my view, and it is a criticism perhaps that I might make of it.

Mr. CASE: I do not suppose we can all be right. It seems to me that the regulations will have to be fairly strict. It will mean a channeling of trade; it will mean, I fear, a danger of dampening or restricting the possibilities of production that you are seeking. We seem to be predicating our economy on the success of ERP. I regret that we have not foraged more for ourselves. In other words, what I would expect to result from this would be an economic dovetailing into the whole of the United States economy. It may be said that if they are putting up all the money they should say where the goods are to be obtained, who is to do the shipping, and so on. I am inclined to feel that the minister has left something to private enterprise, but it will be fairly closely regulated. Will this, then, mean that we are to be dove-tailed into the economy of the United States? If so, what shall we have left?

Mr. HOWE: My hon. friend is opening up a large subject. I have never found any objection to selling goods to the United States over a period of years, and I have never found it to be a method involving Canada or destroying her independence. That position will continue. As a matter of fact, this makes little change in the policy. We have a permanent system today and export a great variety of materials. The shipper must obtain an export permit. There is this additional power in issuing the permit, that we can regulate by countries as well as by commodities.

Mr. GREEN: Are all sixteen countries to be treated in the same way? Will the regulations applied to shipments to Great Britain be the same as those with respect to shipments to continental countries?

Mr. HOWE: Not necessarily. It depends on circumstances. As a matter of fact, we know no more about ERP than my hon. friend does. The regulations have not yet been framed and the director was appointed only some ten days ago. He has not yet obtained an office. I would ask my hon. friend not to press me for details on ERP because, frankly, I do not know them.

Mr. COLDWELL: Is it not a fact that the nations which are co-operating in ERP have made it plain that, while they expect to co-operate closely with the United States, they are expecting that the aid which is given is given on the distinct understanding that there will be no interference with their economies. The minister is going to Washington, and I should hope that when he is in Washington, instead of accepting directives from the United States, he will represent Canada in the capacity of a representative of a government which is a partner, a junior partner if you will, but nevertheless a partner and not a satellite in this particular arrangement.

Mr. HOWE: I can assure my hon. friend that when I go outside Canada I represent Canada.

Mr. GREEN: Will the minister explain how shipments of lumber from the Pacific coast will be affected by the new arrangements?

Mr. HOWE: I have not the faintest idea.

Mr. GREEN: Then why should the minister not wait until he gets a few ideas before asking for an amendment to the act? He is going to Washington in the next few days, and it might be wise to defer consideration of the amendment until he knows about the plan.

Mr. HOWE: The position is this. All lumber from Canada is being sold today. About 25 per cent of the export is going to the United Kingdom under an old contract, and the bulk of the rest goes to the United States. Whether that will continue I cannot say. In any event the permits are given with the present pattern of trading in mind. If the pattern of trading changes, the permits will be given in accordance with the change.

Mr. GREEN: Will the United States be able to say, for example, what percentage of the British Columbia lumber is to go to the United Kingdom?

[Mr. Howe.]

Mr. HOWE: Just what has the United States to do with timber in Canada? The United States will say what it wants. We shall decide what we shall do.

Mr. GREEN: They will have no voice with regard to the shipment of Canadian lumber to the United Kingdom?

Mr. HOWE: No.

Mr. GREEN: What is the minister's answer?

Mr. HOWE: No.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): This has to do with import permits as well?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I was not able to read the full account of the report in the paper this morning, but the minister probably knows Mr. J. C. Patteson and he will know Mr. Patteson is a reliable man. Mr. Patteson says that trade between Canada and the United Kingdom is severely restricted. I suppose so. I quote from a press item reporting what Mr. Patteson said:

> He appealed for relaxation of some of the restrictions and controls, and warned that the situation today is more devastating than at any period in the history of the Canadian organization.

That is a strong statement. The item goes on:

> Canadian commercial interests, active in Britain, were in a parlous condition due to economic forces and the prevailing foreign exchange situation. Though there was a strong sentimental desire in Canada to buy British goods, such trade was severely restricted by controls. In some cases it was entirely excluded; in others there were token imports of 20 per cent.

That seems to me to be a strong statement coming from such a man. I asked the minister the other day whether he had had representations from Mr. Patteson himself. Has he had any representations from the chamber of commerce, and will he comment on the statement which Mr. Patteson has made? I do not think it can be taken lightly, because he would not have made the statement in that spirit.

Mr. HOWE: If my hon. friend will read that clipping more closely he will find that Mr. Patteson was talking about controls against Canadian goods entering England.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I do not think so.

Mr. HOWE: I read it carefully and I am sure that was what he was talking about. He was speaking in England.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): But he was speaking for Canadian interests over there.

Mr. HOWE: I know Canadian interest in England is to get Canadian goods into England.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I happen to know of Canadian interests there who have been affected in Canada by not being able to bring things in. Perhaps he is talking about that, but I think it probably has something to do with this other matter as well. The minister says he knows nothing more about it?

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Let me read again what the minister said, as reported at page 2769 of Hansard:

> . . . in Canada as in the United States, the need for directing supplies to those countries whose requirements are most urgent.

I am referring to what the minister said, and I want to be clear. He said, as I understand, and I admit the words bear out what he said, that directing supplies does not imply government purchase of supplies. I want to ask him this question: Does he say now that there will not need to be government purchases of supplies to fulfil the requirements which we may find from the European countries? Does he say that?

Mr. HOWE: I would sincerely hope so, yes.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): That is different. We want to know as a matter of fact.

Mr. HOWE: As I have told the hon. member, we have never bought lumber. We have shipped lumber to England for years and have never bought it. It is bought in England by English buyers and shipped from here, and that is true of other commodities. I see no reason why, after all these years of the war and export restrictions, the government should suddenly go in and buy everything.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I hope that is so, but you are stepping into a quite different situation from what you had then. I note that, whereas a few minutes ago the minister said there would not be government buying, now he says he hopes there will not. But that goes back to what the hon. member for Vancouver South said. Are we not getting off ahead of the gun? The minister told us he does not know what ERP involves and does not know what measures will be taken to work it out, and yet we now are being asked to pass measures on the basis of a situation which is still entirely obscure. I should have thought it more sensible to deal with the bill after he had been to Washington and found out what the score was.

Mr. HOWE: What we are asking for is a very minor and simple amendment. My hon. friend is building this up into a house of cards to a perfectly ridiculous extent, I suggest. He wants the assurance that we will not buy anything. We have never bought lumber; we have always bought wheat and I presume we shall continue to buy it. I sincerely hope we shall allow the trade to sell its own lumber, provided that it sells it in countries to which we have ERP commitments. Nothing could be simpler than that. If the hon. member goes down the list he will find that they fall into one classification or the other. The purpose of this bill is to make it unnecessary to change them from the one classification into the other. If they are commodities that the trade have been ordinarily selling direct, we would prefer, and this bill would so provide, that the trade should continue to sell direct, provided that they sell to countries to which we had a commitment. Surely nothing could be simpler than that.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I admit that there is a great deal of force in that, but I still come back to this. The minister has told us that he has no idea exactly what measures will be taken in the United States in order to carry this out. Yet here we are now asked to pass a measure which is designed for the purpose of dove-tailing with the United States arrangement. That seems to be getting off ahead of the gun.

Mr. HOWE: The officers of the Department of Trade and Commerce are the people responsible for these transactions. They say they need this amendment. It is a simple amendment. It cannot possibly harm any legitimate interests that I can think of in Canada. Does my hon. friend seriously say he wants to tie up another day in parliament over this trifling amendment? Surely not.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I do not say that.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): The minister said he thought the things I was referring to were things which were being imported into Great Britain. I should like to draw his attention to the article I referred to when I first brought the matter up. The end of the article reads as follows:

> Though there was a strong sentimental desire in Canada to buy British goods, such trade was severely restricted by controls. In some cases it was entirely excluded; in others there were token imports of 20 per cent.

I myself know there are certain imports which are prohibited from coming into Canada from Great Britain. I cannot understand why that is done.

Mr. HOWE: There are no 20 per cent token imports.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): There are prohibitions.

Mr. HOWE: There are no token imports so far as we in Canada are concerned. The token imports are United Kingdom imports. The hon. member reads a newspaper and he believes every line in it. But he will not believe me when I tell him that Canada never adopted a system of token imports.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): The writer calls them token imports, and the minister knows as well as I do that there are some prohibitions of imports from Great Britain at the present time.

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): That comes under the act.

Mr. HOWE: Bill No. 3 which we passed some time ago.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): They are prohibitions under the act. That is what he is talking about at the present time. There are some quotas as well. I asked the minister, in view of what is taking place and in view of what he says, if the government had taken this under consideration. The government said no, that trade was moving nicely. As a matter of fact, I do not think this man would say that if trade was moving nicely and everybody was satisfied with the situation. That is what I wanted to know. I am now going to ask the minister if he will not look into this matter and see if something can be done so that Great Britain will get more of our dollars.

Mr. GREEN: The minister has referred several times to commitments. Apparently there are to be commitments to supply certain goods to certain countries. How will those commitments be determined? Will that be done on the government level, or just how does industry come into that picture?

Mr. HOWE: I will be frank with the hon. member; I do not know. I have told the hon. member that before. I know very little about the machinery of ERP, because there is none at the moment.

Mr. GREEN: The minister has not any idea how the commitments would be arrived at?

Mr. HOWE: No.

Section 1 as amended agreed to.

Section 2 as amended, and title agreed to.

Bill as amended reported, and amendments read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: When shall this bill be read the third time?

[Mr. Howe.]

Mr. GREEN: Next sitting of the house.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Next sitting of the house.

EXPORT CREDITS INSURANCE ACT

AMENDMENT WITH RESPECT TO POWER TO ENTER INTO CONTRACTS

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved the second reading of Bill No. 197, to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Golding in the chair.

On section 1—Contracts approved by governor in council.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): The other night I asked the minister a question with reference to the position of private insurers, and he told me that there were practically no private insurers who wanted to engage in this kind of business because of the risks involved. That leads me to ask two questions. First of all, why is it that, in business taking place on this continent, there were some million dollars or more which were insured under this act? The second question I want to ask the minister is this. I have been trying to explore the question of the private underwriters, and I am afraid what he said is correct. I was disappointed to find the small extent apparently of international insurance on this continent. It has always been my understanding that London was one of the great centres of underwriting, that one of the great specialties of the London business world was the readiness to underwrite almost anything. It is hard for me to believe that there would be no underwriters ready to do this business in London. I wanted to ask the minister with regard to that point, and whether it is not possible that more trade could be given to them. After all, the great thing needed in London now is an opportunity to earn dollars.

Mr. HOWE: My understanding is that Lloyd's of London stopped this type of insurance; as a matter of fact, they have never done it at all. The British board of trade have been handling this type of insurance since 1920.

Mr. JACKMAN: What is the nature of the business, if this is pertinent to what we have under discussion, of the great London discount houses and the merchant bankers? I thought they purchased bills of exchange from such persons as foreign shippers or foreign buyers and gave the man who presented the draft his cash. Is that not a recognized business over there? I always understood that it was.

Mr. HOWE: Yes. My hon. friend is talking about merchant banking. This is merchant insurance.

Mr. JACKMAN: Is there much difference? This is quite a different situation. The exporter to South America, let us say, presents his draft on the South American importer to a discount house in London. He gets his cash, because the discount house knows the credits in South America, or whatever country it is, and that is tantamount to financial insurance, where a bank gives you your credit in return for a premium. In all banking there is an element of financial insurance, a transfer of credit risk.

Mr. HOWE: What my hon. friend says is quite true, that the banker gets a paper which he will discount and give the cash for; but the purpose of this act is to ensure that the bank gets the paper.

Mr. JACKMAN: That seems hardly a complete answer to the question. Surely when the Canadian exporter ships the goods he must draw a draft on the foreign importer. It is not a question of getting the actual piece of paper. There can be no doubt about that, because it is no trouble for the importer to give the paper. The real risk is involved in getting cash in Canadian or United States dollars for the draft on the foreign importer.

Mr. HOWE: This is all business done through banks. Let us assume a transaction of which we have had several, where a South American country orders a ship built in Canada. If that country will deposit paper in advance to cover the full cost of the ship, there is no need for this insurance. But most ships are built on progress payments, so much when the keel is laid, so much when the ship is 25 per cent completed, and so on. Very often the builder wishes to get insurance to ensure that those progress payments will be made when they are due. That is insurance versus banking. My hon. friend is talking about banking and we are talking about insurance.

Mr. JACKMAN: But this is financial insurance, the minister says; this is insurance against the completion of a job, or construction insurance, with which the minister is familiar. That is purely financial insurance, to make certain the exporter will get his money. Is that not the chief or perhaps the sole purpose of this act?

Mr. HOWE: What other purpose has it?

Mr. JACKMAN: I do not know; I am asking the minister. I say it is purely financial insurance, to make certain that the exporter will get his money.

Mr. HOWE: That is right.

Mr. JACKMAN: As my colleague the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario has said, are there not in this country and in Britain houses engaged in this type of finance? Are there not such houses in the old country, where they badly need the premiums and can render a service for them?

Mr. HOWE: No, neither in England nor here.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I am bound to defer to what the minister says, I suppose, though it comes to me as a great surprise, for there is a saying that Lloyd's are ready to gamble on anything. Leaving that aside, however, I understand that the minister has said the board of trade in England has done this since 1920 on a commercial basis for British firms?

Mr. HOWE: That is right.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Then why should they not get the business?

Mr. HOWE: The British board of trade only cover exports from the United Kingdom. They have never suggested they would like to cover exports from Canada; and they do not use the kind of money that is of much good to us.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): It seems to me that is rather begging the question. That, I take it, is another matter; let us set it aside for the moment. If there is any possibility of having this done on reasonable terms by the board of trade in London I consider it unfortunate that we do not give them the chance to do so. You may say, Why have a public body do it there rather than in Canada? I would feel there was a great deal to be said for giving them a chance, though I must admit that argument is not quite as strong as it would be in the case of private underwriters. Again I ask the minister to make absolutely sure of what he has stated, that is, that there are no private underwriters in London ready to do this business. I put it to him that if there is any uncertainty he should follow that up, because I cannot believe that if this business is available the exchange side of it cannot be taken care of.

Mr. HOWE: My experts assure me there is not a private firm in any part of the world doing that kind of business.

Section agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

WAR SERVICE GRANTS ACT

ABOLITION OF BOARD OF REVIEW

Hon. MILTON F. GREGG (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved the second reading of Bill No. 47, to amend the War Service Grants Act, 1944.

Mr. GREEN: Is the minister making a statement on this bill?

Mr. GREGG: Mr. Speaker, the War Service Grants Act provided for a board of five to review and examine the service records of those men classified as having been discharged from the forces with what is defined by the services as dishonourable discharge. It was intended that this board should see if there were any mitigating circumstances, in which case the board would have the power and would advocate payment of war service gratuity and the setting up of re-establishment credits.

The board began its work with the Department of Veterans Affairs in February, 1946, and up to February 29, 1948, completed a total of 7,879 cases. Of that number, 5,035 were given favourable decisions and 2,844 have been finally refused entitlement. Some 458 cases remain to be reviewed, and it is considered that this should not take very long. The department foresees a condition coming up shortly when it will be more economical and as satisfactory to establish a reviewing officer within the department to perform the few remaining functions formerly exercised by the board. It should be noted, I think, that, while this board has authority to interpret with respect to entitlement for re-establishment benefits, it had and has no right to change the record of a man's service. It merely considered each case with a view to advocating award of the gratuity or re-establishment credit.

At this time, with the approaching end of the work of the board, I should like to pay tribute to their approach to that work and the way in which they have executed a difficult task with understanding and humanity. I can assure the committee that from what I have seen of the work of the board its members have leaned backward to give the benefit of the doubt in all cases. In saying that, I think, too, one should say it is a tribute to our Canadian forces in this war when, after being sifted by an impartial group of their peers and equals, that small group of less than ·03 per cent have not been considered entitled to Canada's re-establishment benefits.

Mr. GREEN: Is it the intention that the present board will review all cases which remain undecided?

Mr. GREGG: Yes, that is the intention. I am prepared to meet the wishes of the committee as to whether or not this bill should be referred to the committee on veterans affairs.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Golding in the chair.

On section 1—Abolition of board of review.

Mr. LENNARD: Are the rejections in the two thousand cases final, or would they be on hand if in the odd case an appeal were made?

Mr. GREGG: Those are final as at this date. It was thought that a member of the department would have under constant review any new evidence coming to light at any time.

Mr. GREEN: Has consideration been given to setting up within the department a board of officials of the department who would make these decisions, instead of leaving it to one person? The powers are wide and these are important questions. I doubt whether it would be wise to leave them to one man. Surely some of the senior officials in the department could be constituted a board to deal with the few cases which may come up from time to time. It would not be necessary to have them paid for that work; it would be just another job for them. I suggest that this would be more sensible than the present provision which gives to one man in the department the job of reviewing all these cases, and makes his word law. Surely it is not wise to give one man all that power. The amendment gets away from the judicial function. This one man will become the employee of the department whose job it is to go over these cases. My suggestion is that we should have a board acting as a judicial body.

Mr. GREGG: I agree in the main with what the hon. member says. As is shown in the bill, the board is still in existence. This is enabling authority to carry forward any further work when the main task of the board disappears.

In the preliminary discussions respecting the carrying-through technique to be applied afterwards, something along the lines suggested by the hon. member has been discussed. We will keep that situation in mind. In other words, I can assure the committee that in the continuation of the work this official will be looked upon more as a person detailed to study cases, but that each case will come before the deputy minister and/or a committee created under him as the most effective means of carrying out the purpose of the bill.

Mr. GREEN: But that is not the way the section reads. The proposed amendment refers to abolishing the board of review and transferring its powers, duties and functions to an officer employed in the Department of Veterans Affairs, who shall be called the "Reviewing Officer, War Service Grants Act". This officer "shall exercise and perform such powers, duties and functions in accordance with rules of procedure to be made by the governor in council." In other words, the amendment gives this employee full power, and there is nowhere any suggestion that the deputy minister or any other senior officials are to review decisions of this "Reviewing Officer, War Service Grants Act".

Could not section 12B in the act be left as it now stands? It provides for the appointment of a board of review and also states that the members are to receive such remuneration as the governor in council may determine. The minister could set up a board of review composed of his senior officials. They need not be paid any remuneration for this work, because there would be very few cases. In this way we would have a judicial board. Under the proposed amendment, one employee in the department, in effect becomes the board, and has all the powers given by the act.

Mr. GREGG: I may be wrong, but I can see no reason why the objective sought by the hon. member could not be carried out, if this amendment were accepted.

Mr. GREEN: If the amendment passes, a veteran who has been deprived of his war service grant can appeal only to this officer; he cannot appeal to a board such as is described in the act.

The minister has intimated his intention to have some of the senior officers review the work of the reviewing officer. If that is so, then surely this amendment is superfluous. The proper procedure would be to appoint a board composed of senior officials with authority to do the reviewing. The preliminary work could be done by an employee of the board, but the final decision would be made by the senior officials.

I am certain that that is what the veterans would prefer, namely, to have the final decision made by a board rather than by one man. Would the minister be willing to consider this during the supper recess with his officials?

Mr. GREGG: I shall do that.

Section stands.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

CANADIAN VETERINARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

Mr. J. A. CHARLTON (Brant) moved the second reading of Bill No. 150, to incorporate the Canadian Veterinary Medical Association.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. CHARLTON: Mr. Speaker, I think very little explanation is needed. This bill is simply to incorporate into a national organization the various provincial veterinary medical associations if they so desire. The names of the presidents of all the provincial organizations are on the petition for this bill. It will not interfere at all with the rights of the provincial associations. I do not think I need read the objects of the association, which are set out in section 3 of the bill. I shall be glad to answer any questions.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

NATIONAL INSURANCE COMPANY

Mr. EDOUARD RINFRET (Outremont) moved the second reading of Bill No. 151, to incorporate the National Insurance Company.

Mr. KNOWLES: Is the hon. member not going to explain the bill?

Mr. RINFRET: It is a very simple bill to incorporate the company, and with power under section 8 to acquire a French company named La Nationale Compagnie Anonyme d'Assurance contre l'Incendie et les Explosions. The bill is along the same lines as those incorporating two other companies last year.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. Rinfret moved that the bill be referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The motion to refer the bill is not debatable. I thought I gave the hon. member ample time to discuss the bill on second reading.

Mr. GREEN: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Broadview did not hear the bill called for second reading, and I submit that he should be allowed to make a statement.

Mr. CHURCH: I wished to speak on the second reading, Mr. Speaker. I shall take only about two minutes.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Under the circumstances, since the hon. member did not hear what I said owing to some noise in the chamber, I think he should be allowed to speak.

Mr. CHURCH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why do these bills from the senate always have the same movers in this house? One hon. member has several bills in his name. I object to the procedure with respect to these private bills. They are introduced in the senate and, after little or no discussion there, they are sent over here. It is becoming a racket if you ask me. I have followed these proceedings for the last month. The bill is introduced and read the first and second times in the senate, with hardly anybody there, and there is no discussion. Once in a while a bill is sent to a committee, where the whole discussion occupies only three or four lines, and then the bill is sent over here. The bill should be introduced here where the people's representatives are.

The present procedure is a farce and a racket. What discussion is there upon the second reading of the bill? How many of these insurance companies have we? Has the superintendent of insurance reported on this bill? I can find no discussion at all on the bill. Talk about the reform of the senate; they are here today and away tomorrow! They are on holidays now. We know nothing about these bills.

The committee system of this house might as well be abolished. I do not wish to reflect on the mover of the bill because he is an honoured member. I have a copy of the bill here, and I must say that I cannot understand why it was not introduced in the House of Commons where sit the representatives of the different constituencies, not only in the province of Quebec for which I have a great respect, but in the whole of Canada. Where is the report of the superintendent of insurance on this bill?

The company is being given power to transsact fire insurance, accident insurance, aircraft insurance, automobile insurance, boiler insurance, credit insurance, and so forth. We have had a dozen of these bills in the last few years. There are too many of them. The company can also transact earthquake insurance, explosion insurance, livestock insurance, marine insurance, personal property insurance and many other things. I proposed three years ago that we should have a body similar to the board of transport commissioners to look after these fire and life insurance companies and many others. There was an investigation made into these companies in 1929 or 1930. Many of them could not qualify for a certificate under the law. Many of them are purely provincial companies, and they are taking advantage of the senate to introduce the bills over there. The thing is becoming a racket. That is what I called it three or four years ago. If this house is to be flooded with bills of this kind, we are on very dangerous ground. There are too many of these companies. They pile up. Later, by some merger they come in and get a charter and float it all around the country; then they come back, and sooner or later we find that it is gobbled up by some larger concern. If this is the way in which the House of Commons is conducting its business we are on very dangerous ground.

Mr. CLARENCE GILLIS (Cape Breton South): I am going to have a few words to say on this bill. I imagine that this is a dangerous field to get into. I agree with the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Church) who has just taken his seat that the other place is beginning to initiate too much legislation. I notice that most of the bills which come from the other place deal with million dollar corporations. Without giving hon. members of this house, or a committee of this house, an opportunity to go over these bills and have some understanding of the intentions of the people who are sponsoring them, they are thrown at us at a moment's notice and we are obliged to make a decision on them. The first objection I have is that if the other place is to continue to initiate legislation of this kind some provision must be made for a committee of the House of Commons at least to scrutinize these bills before they come to this house.

I am glad to see that the hon. member for Broadview is about seventy-five per cent socialist when he suggests that if this field is still open some move should be made by the government to set up some supervisory machinery to give the government some control over it. This bill is all right; it is innocent-looking enough; the capitalization is not too great.

Mr. KNOWLES: Just a million dollars.

Mr. GILLIS: Yes, but when you have become accustomed to talking about billions during the war this seems like small change.

My second objection is this. There is enough protection in Canada today through similar organizations to this in the field that this particular company wishes to enter. There are enough insurance companies of this kind in Canada at the present time. It is time that the government did as they did in Saskatchewan and said that from now on we are going to set up government machinery so that we shall know something about the internal operations of these companies. It is time that we set up government competition with the privately owned companies that are today handling insurance.

Instead of setting up another new company and putting a lot of agents in the field selling insurance and collecting premiums and high-pressuring people into buying insurance, we should see that the men who would be engaged in that work be routed into some gainful occupation in this country. We talk about taxes and about social services and all that kind of thing. Often, when sitting here listening to hon. members I get the idea that some hon. members think there is a mysterious pool of wealth somewhere into which the government can reach its arm—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. GILLIS: That kind of talk comes from the Liberal members and the Tory members. Read some of your election manifestoes and the promises you have made.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Talking subsidies.

Mr. GILLIS: That mysterious pool of wealth does not exist. It all comes out of production.

An hon. MEMBER: Of the worker.

Mr. GILLIS: Yes; he produces it all. I do not think it is necessary to put a few hundred more men into this insurance field, men who could be routed into some occupation in this country where they would contribute to that pool of wealth. To set up this kind of a company would be a waste of manpower and a duplication of machinery already existing. High-pressure salesmen and all that kind of thing are overdone in this country at the present time. I would suggest very respectfully through you, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. member who is piloting this bill through the house that he take this thing back, look it over and advise the other place that we think this field is adequately serviced at the present time. If, after an examination of the bill by the government, we find that it is necessary to set up any more organizations of this kind we will do it under government supervision so that the people of the country may have some protection.

Motion (Mr. Rinfret) agreed to on division.

THE CANADIAN ASSOCIATION OF OPTOMETRISTS

Mr. PAUL E. COTE (Verdun) moved the second reading of Bill No. 174, to incorporate the Canadian Association of Optometrists.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the principle underlying this bill is exactly the same as that of the Canadian Veterinary Medical Association which was read a second time a few moments ago. I may say that optometry is perhaps the youngest profession we have in Canada, since it has existed as a body only since the beginning of this century. The first incorporation that can be found in any provincial statute dates back to 1904. That was the statute which incorporated the Quebec Association of Optometrists. In 1909 by letters patent the Ontario association was incorporated. Since then, each and all of the provincial associations have become organized by provincial statute to regulate the admission to and the practice of optometry within their borders. In 1934 the nine provincial associations gathered together and decided to form a national body, and this is the bill to incorporate the optometrists of Canada in a national body under the name of the Canadian association of optometrists. I do not think there is much more that I can say at this time. It would be more in order to wait until the committee stage to give any particulars on the sections of the bill.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): Here is a bill which is not by the widest stretch of the imagination a federal bill or for the general advantage of Canada. This bill and the veterinary bill were objected to in the Ontario legislature for the reasons I have given. These bills were first introduced in another part of this building, and without any discussion they are sent over here. There was practically no discussion at all. As I said before, this is becoming a racket. That is exactly what it is. The House of Commons is ignored by it. If these people want to come here over the heads of the legislatures where they belong, with both the veterinary bill and the other one, I wish to object.

Why should we have a federal organization on veterinary affairs and on optometry? There is no necessity for it; there is no demand for it. Who is asking for this bill? What are the provinces that are asking for the Canadian association of optometrists? Not a province has asked for it. We are going very far afield when the House of Commons is used, as it is, to consider bills such as these which are purely provincial matters, relating to provinces. Some of these bills will be attacked in the law courts. We have no power under section 91 of the British North America Act to incorporate such societies.

Look at this bill. It was passed by the senate on March 22. If you look at it you wlll find that there was no discussion at all. They just passed it the way they pass other bills over there. I can tell you something about that. There is a widespread public demand in this country today to do something about the other end of this institution of parliament. It is costing the country $600,000 a year, and what value we get out of it I do not know.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. The hon. member must discuss the bill and not the other place.

Mr. CHURCH: I am speaking now, Mr. Speaker, on the bill itself, Bill No. C-5 of the senate. We may not be able to say anything about the other institution of parliament. They are here today and gone tomorrow. The way they are passing some of these bills is, however, becoming a racket. Look over this particular bill and what do you find? This is an act to incorporate an association that is a purely provincial body. Where does the medical profession come in under this bill? I venture to say I would not go to any of these people if I had eye trouble. We had large "I's" this afternoon in every bill we considered, large "C's", and so on. Here, however, they refer to the city of Winnipeg with a small "c" and the same in the case of Toronto.

I do not know what the principle of this bill is. The principle of a bill is in the title of the bill; it is in the preamble; it is in the marginal notes; it is in every section of the bill. The law courts so declare, and so do the textbooks. How, then, can one discuss the principle of a bill without reference to its individual provisions. Here is this bill referring to the city of Lethbridge, the city of Toronto, and the city of Montreal with a small "c".

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. I am afraid the hon. member is discussing the clauses of the bill and he should not do so at this time. He must confine his remarks to the principle of the bill.

Mr. CHURCH: Technically, sir, you are correct, but it seems to me to be a distinction without a difference. You will notice that there is a small "c" for the city of Montreal. That is my point. I would ask Your Honour to look at the bill. You are a distinguished lawyer. Here they have "city of Winnipeg" and city is spelled with a small "c".

[Mr. Church.]

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I must insist that the hon. member confine his remarks to the principle of the bill. If he objects to certain clauses he can raise his objections at the proper time.

Mr. CHURCH: That may be so, Your Honour, but here we have the city of Toronto spelled with a small "c". That is what I object to.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. I have informed the hon. member that he is out of order in discussing the sections of the bill at this time. Once more I would ask him to confine his remarks to the principle of the bill and to refrain from discussing the clauses.

Mr. CHURCH: Correct again, Your Honour. But I submit that a member of the House of Commons has a right to discuss any bill that comes before us and we cannot do so in the haphazard manner in which this bill is drawn up. I am referring to the preamble. They do not know grammar in another part of this building. A small "s" would be better for them. I should like to discuss the principle of the bill, but I am almost afraid to say anything about the bill at all, because I cannot discuss the principle. In fact, there is no principle in this bill. I have never seen a principle in any bill coming from the other end of the building. If you ask me, the bill is not within the purview of parliament. There is no demand for it. Has any university asked for it? No. If that is the way you want to pass the bill, very well, pass it.

Mr. F. E. LENNARD (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I do not agree at all with the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Church). He said that this association had not been a success in any province, that no provincial organization of the kind had been a success. Let me tell him that, as far as the optometrists' association of Ontario is concerned, it has proved itself and is undoubtedly a success.

The hon. member said he would never go to an optometrist and he did not think anyone else in this house would. I have never gone to anyone but an optometrist, and I guarantee that over 50 per cent of the members of the house who wear glasses are also patrons of optometrists.

I am sick and tired of sitting here hour after hour listening to a lot of cheap talk, and that is the reason I do not get up oftener myself.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. I would ask the hon. member not to reflect upon all the members of this house.

Mr. LENNARD: I have nothing more to say, Mr. Speaker, except to express my conviction that this is a good bill. It is for a good organization and it should not be held up any longer.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY OF CANADA

The house resumed from Friday, April 9, consideration of the motion of Mr. Rinfret for the second reading of Bill No. 8, respecting the Bell Telephone Company of Canada.

Mr. WILLIAM BRYCE (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few remarks on this bill. My deskmate, who was speaking when the debate was adjourned last Friday, is unfortunately unable to be here tonight and I should like to continue for a few minutes what he really intended to say.

The first fact that strikes one on looking into this bill is the tremendous amount of money that is involved. I do not understand why so much money is needed. Perhaps one of the things that attracted my attention to the bill in the first place was the speech of the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol) and the speech of the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Church), men who have spent a lifetime in the public service and who, when it comes to transportation, hydro, communications, and even irrigation take second place to no one. I have been greatly impressed by what these hon. gentlemen had to say. The hon. member for Davenport told about the poor service they get in the city of Toronto.

The bill has been pretty well discussed. The hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Irvine) pointed out the manner in which the company had divided up the shares, a thing that always creates suspicion in the minds of the rank and file when one sees a large company doing such a thing.

I do not understand why a bill like this, so important to the whole dominion, should not be brought in by the government instead of being left to be introduced by the hon. member for Outremont (Mr. Rinfret).

Mr. RINFRET: Because it is a private company.

Mr. BRYCE: The hon. member for Outremont has my sympathy in being asked to sponsor a bill like this one.

Mr. RINFRET: You mean that with your help it will be better?

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): Do not feel sorry for a lawyer.

Mr. MacINNIS: Do not feel sorry for a person introducing a bill like this.

Mr. BRYCE: I was going to say, when I was interrupted by the independent member, that the bill should have been brought in by the government. I think that was the right and proper thing to do. When a company's capital is to be increased from $150,000,000 to $500,000,000, that is something which should be done on the floor of this house so that we can get into it. The C.C.F. brought in an amendment that would send the subject matter to the committee so that we could ask what the money was for, so that we could bring before the committee the people who are building the Bell Telephone Company today—the main people, the subscribers—and see if they are getting the service to which they are entitled.

Mr. RINFRET: That can be done in the railway committee.

Mr. KNOWLES: After the principle is adopted.

Mr. BRYCE: Yes, after the principle is adopted.

Mr. RINFRET: No. That is not so with a private bill.

Mr. BRYCE: Yes, it is.

Mr. RINFRET: No, it is not.

Mr. BRYCE: The hon. member has his views about this and I have mine. I am sorry he has this job to do. I am sorry for him.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): He is doing all right.

Mr. BRYCE: I have supported public ownership most of my life. I think the telephone system should be under public ownership, and the service should be given at cost because it is something that every individual can use. When you stop to figure this out, you find that power is to be given to a private company to bring its capitalization up to $500 million. By giving that power, you are only helping to build up a great private monopoly. No doubt the greatest weakness in the free enterprise system today is the tendency for private companies to grow into monopolies.

The Bell Telephone Company now has a capitalization of $150,000.

Mr. RINFRET: $150 million.

Mr. BRYCE: I get mixed up in this, Mr. Speaker, because I have never been accustomed to talking in figures like that. I understand that the Bell Telephone Company was started or incorporated in 1880. The capital allowed was $1,000,000 at that time. In 1884 the capitalization was raised to $2,000,000. In 1892 it was again raised to $5,000,000. In 1902 it was advanced to $10,000,000. In 1906 they were allowed to increase the capitalization to $30,000,000. In 1920 the capitalization was increased to $75,000,000 and, in 1929, to $150 million. Now we have this bill asking that the capital be increased to $500 million which seems to me to be out of all proportion. Had they asked for $100 million or something reasonable, it would be different. But when they ask for $500 million, I do not know what to make of it.

An hon. MEMBER: They might as well take over the national debt.

Mr. BRYCE: I should have liked to know what they are going to use that money for.

Mr. RINFRET: Let the bill go to the committee.

Mr. BRYCE: I have been thinking this matter over since it has been debated in the house. I wonder if this money is for the purpose of allowing them to by-pass the provincial telephones, in some way for the Bell Telephone Company to be able to dictate to the provincial governments in the prairie provinces? Had we been able to go to committee, I could ask that question. I cannot get any answer to it today. The hon. member who is sponsoring the bill does not say whether that is so or whether it is not. If that is the case, that the Bell Telephone Company is getting this money so as to put a direct line through the United States in order to by-pass the prairie provinces, it is a shame if this government or this parliament should give it authority to get that money.

Mr. RINFRET: I explained why it was. Read my speech.

Mr. BRYCE: I want to know if it is for that purpose.

Mr. RINFRET: Read my speech.

Mr. BRYCE: You tell me if it is for that purpose.

An hon. MEMBER: Answer the question.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. BRYCE: The hon. gentleman does not say whether it is or is not for that purpose, so I take it for granted that my suspicion is well founded.

[Mr. Rinfret.]

Mr. RINFRET: Mr. Speaker tells me not to answer.

Mr. BRYCE: A most reliable publication is Moody's. I looked up Moody's and the Lehigh railway operates 1,254 miles of railway track, the main line extending from New York to Buffalo. The last statement I could find in Moody's was that the capitalization was $170,000 per mile of track, which would give an over-all capitalization of $225 million. Most hon. members have seen that railway. They have a capitalization of only $225 million. Yet this company is asking for $500 million. Again I cannot help but regret that we have not had an opportunity to find out what this money is for. I think the telephone should be one of the public services, the same as our hydro and transportation lines. Businesses such as these should be run as a service, at cost, and should not be used for private gain. The telephone is a necessary service to the people and should be operated for the good of all. A bill like this asking for large sums of money for capital expansion should not be brought in by a private member but by the government and should be given far more serious consideration than we have the opportunity of giving it here. My main objection to the bill is that it will create for this company a monopoly of a public service, namely, the telephone service.

Mr. E. G. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): I rise at this time, Mr. Speaker, to add my voice to that of various other members in all parts of the house who have registered a protest against the passing of this bill. I wish to say that I think the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Church) and the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol) should be congratulated on the fact that they did a real public service in speaking against this bill and the method or manner in which it was brought before this house.

It is asking a good deal of the public servants of this country to ask us to give authorization for such an increase in the capitalization of any company without thoroughly scrutinizing the impact and ramifications of such a bill. I think it would be a good thing at this time just to go over some of the things which are proposed in this bill. In the first instance, a request is made by the Bell Telephone Company to increase their capital stock from the present $150 million to $500 million or, in other words, a capitalization of 230 per cent of their present capital. On the face of it, I think it is completely unreasonable to bring before this house a private bill asking that we should endorse such a request.

There are four reasons that I raise at this time for opposition to this bill. In the first place it will give the Bell Telephone a virtual monopoly, and hon. members in all sections of the house will agree that we do not want a monopoly in connection with public services of this kind. In the second place I take exception to it because of the over-capitalization. My third objection is that this should be a publicly owned utility; and in the fourth place I believe we should know more about it before we agree to give the bill second reading.

At the present time the gross assets of the Bell Telephone Company amount to $270,802,000. With the exception of the prairie provinces, the telephone system of this country is controlled principally by four large companies, which in turn are indirectly controlled by United States corporations. I do not feel that it is in the interests of the people of Canada that we should go farther in alienating the development of our public services or our utilities of any kind to United States capital.

In regard to the monopoly angle, as the matter stands at present it will mean that the services of this company will be developed for profit, which in turn will mean that they will give service to the more thickly populated sections of the country because there will be more profit for them in those localities. I think it is important that we should so develop our public services that the people in the more sparsely settled areas will have service comparable with that in the more congested areas. That seems to me only fair; but if we allow the Bell Telephone Company to extend its monopoly in this country there will be no assurance that the people on the back concessions will be able to get the services enjoyed by those closer to the larger urban centres.

With respect to rates, I am quite convinced that when a monopoly gets control of an industry or a public utility there is no assurance that the people will get service at a reasonable cost. I would direct attention to some of the representations already made in this connection by one or two hon. members, and also to a news dispatch appearing in a Montreal newspaper of February 26, headed "Hints of increase in telephone rates," which states:

> Frederick Johnson, president of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada, told the annual meeting today that the company "cannot live forever within its present rates for service."

That is an indication that if this company does not see fit to continue to give service at the present rates there will be an increase, and there is no way whereby the public can be sure that the rates will be kept down or will be competitive in nature once we hand over to the company the power asked for in this legislation.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): Does the transport board not have jurisdiction in those matters?

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): This is the only time we as members of parliament have jurisdiction over the matter, and I think it is our duty to investigate all the ramifications. I am not quite sure as to the powers of the board of transport commissioners; but, as I said during the debate on freight rates, I am not any too pleased with the report of that board and its decision to permit that freight rate increase. So I am convinced that we as members of parliament have a real duty to perform in doing the best we can to make sure that our people get the best possible service at the lowest possible cost.

As the hon. member for Broadview has indicated, this bill went through the other place with practically no discussion at all. I do not think that is what should be done here. I believe we should try to get all the information we can; but, despite the attempts of the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Irvine), the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) and others who have tried to get information from the sponsor of this bill, as yet we have not been given any information which would warrant us in approving an increase of over 230 per cent in the capitalization of a company of this kind. We have done our best to get that information. On April 9 the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) moved an amendment in these words:

> That Bill No. 8, letter C of the senate, be not now read a second time—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. The motion referred to by the hon. member has been dealt with by the house, and the hon. member should not deal with it again.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): Very well, Mr. Speaker; but we did have a motion that this bill be referred to a special committee of the house where all available information could be given, so that we might know what we were doing, and that motion was turned down.

With respect to over-capitalization, here we have a company which already has an authorized capital of $150,000,000, and has not as yet used that to the full extent, since they still have available some $13,336,700. I think it is unreasonable for them to come to us and ask for authority to expand their capitalization to such an extent until they show that they are going to build certain lines, or that they are going to need this money for further development. So in that respect I think it is ridiculous.

Then I said I thought this should be a public utility. Let me say at once that I believe the hon. member for Davenport and the hon. member for Broadview, who sit on the Tory side of the house, should be complimented upon having asked in no uncertain terms that this be made a public utility. I have other reasons for advocating that we do not allow these utilities to come under a private monopoly. I come from the province of Saskatchewan where we have a government which certainly believes in public ownership and the development of our natural resources and public utilities, because we believe we can give our people greater service in that way. From May of 1945 to May of this year we shall have reduced our power rates by 46⅔ per cent, and in spite of this the power corporation still makes a return to the crown in that province. This shows what can be done if the government is prepared to develop our resources so that our people may have service at cost.

I now wish to say a word with respect to the splitting of the shares of this company. Some people say this is being done to give widows and orphans a chance to buy shares at $25 when they would be unable to buy them at $100. I think, however, there is a different reason for it. When we investigate the reports of various companies, such as the Bell Telephone Company, which have split their shares in the past, we can see what it means. As an example, say you take a $100 share and split it into four $25 shares, on which you pay a dividend of 2½ per cent. In the report it seems that the corporation is only making 2½ per cent, whereas on the par value of the original share the return is actually 10 per cent.

Mr. RINFRET: It is always 2½ per cent. It is a straight percentage.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): The percentage remains the same. I am not saying it increases the percentage of the dividend; but it does this: it gives the impression to anyone reading the financial statement of the company that it is getting a return of only 2½ per cent, to which no one would take exception because it is quite reasonable, whereas in many instances the actual return is 10, 15 or 20 per cent.

In my discussion I am not in any way reflecting upon the personnel or directors of the Bell Telephone Company; I want to assure the house of that. I think they have a fine group of directors, even though six of the sixteen sit on the boards of chartered banks in Canada. At the same time I would say that what I am criticizing is the principle of the bill. We have had too much of this sort of thing in Canada. Since I have come to the House of Commons I have noted the growth of monopolies in this country. I have seen our fertilizer industry sold down the river, so that our people have had to pay more money, to the extent of millions of dollars. It was sold to the American Cyanamid people for a mere song. I have seen our Trail and Calgary fertilizer plants sold down the river in the same way.

Again, I do not challenge the integrity or the ability of the men in control of those companies. I know some of them, and I believe they are fine gentlemen; at least those of them whom I know. But what I say is this, that we are here as representatives of the people to look after the people's welfare. And when we find a monopoly, such as we now have in connection with fertilizers, and as we shall have in the Bell Telephone system, there is no assurance that our people will get, at reasonable prices, either the service or the goods they need. It is that to which I take exception.

In the past we have seen some of the actions of this company. We have found that in the company's history they have divided their shares and handed them out—

Mr. RINFRET: They have not.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): —to their stockholders at a nice profit. I wish to say right here that the history of the stock issues shows that the company have been making a regular practice of issuing stock to their shareholders at a par of $100 a share when it was listed and selling on the exchanges at market prices 40 per cent, 50 per cent, 60 per cent, 75 per cent and in the instance of the year 1899, 93 per cent higher than its par value.

Mr. RINFRET: What is the hon. member reading from?

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): From a record of the company's past history.

Mr. RINFRET: From what? A newspaper?

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): The whole thing boils down to this, that here we have a principle involved where we are asked to permit a tremendous over-capitalization. We must realize that it is asking quite a bit to ask the House of Commons to allow capitalization of a company to the extent of more than 100 per cent of its present capitalization.

I do not refer now particularly to this bill, but I say that as a principle we in the House of Commons should give expression to the idea that no company at any time should be granted a capitalization 100 per cent over and above its present capitalization.

Mr. CASE: Canada will be a big country in fifty years.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): Yes, but it would not be if some of these people had control of it. I know about it, because I have had experience in Saskatchewan. Under private enterprise, where would our lakes, rivers and mines be?

In conformity with what I have said, I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bryce):

That Bill No. 8 be not now read a second time, but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this house no company should ask parliament for an increase in authorized capital in excess of one hundred per cent.

Mr. JACKMAN: One hundred per cent of what? Complete the resolution. The resolution means nothing.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bryce) has already spoken. I doubt if it is competent for him to second this motion.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I second it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Then it is seconded by the hon. member for Mackenzie.

Mr. A. M. NICHOLSON (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I think it is important that hon. members have a full and free opportunity to discuss the principle of this important legislation, before we are asked to vote upon it. In view of the fact that the sponsor of the bill was not prepared immediately to deny the suspicion of the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Bryce), I believe all members of the house should take further time to consider what is involved.

In view of the fact that the prairie provinces have made large investments in the telephone systems in their respective provinces, at a time when corporations such as the Bell Telephone Company were not interested in extending lines into these unprofitable areas of Canada, I believe it would be a great pity if a near-monopoly, such as the Bell Telephone Company, which might be anxious to make conditions more difficult for the publicly owned organizations, were authorized to construct new lines across the United States which might by-pass the provincial telephone systems and thereby deprive them of large amounts of revenue which normally they would receive.

Mr. RINFRET: On a point of order, there is no intention on the part of the Bell Telephone Company either to buy or to acquire the three telephone systems on the prairies, and there is no intention of putting a wire or a line across the United States.

Mr. NICHOLSON: The question was not that of purchasing the—

Mr. RINFRET: That was the question which was put.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I am glad the hon. member for Outremont has given us the assurance—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. The hour reserved for private bills having expired, we shall revert to the business before six o'clock.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CHURCH—STATUS OF MEMBER ON PRIVATE BILLS

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. I understand that during the debate on one of the private bills the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Lennard) referred to me. He did not mention any names, but that was the reference. I can tell him once and for all that I never have been a nodder and a yes man in this house on these private bills. If he wishes to be, let him be one. I am fed up too.

WAR SERVICE GRANTS ACT

ABOLITION OF BOARD OF REVIEW

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. 47, to amend the War Service Grants Act, 1944—Mr. Gregg—Mr. Golding in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: When the house rose for recess we were considering section 1.

Mr. GILLIS: When the house rose at six o'clock the hon. member for Vancouver South had suggested an amendment to this bill. If the minister is about to propose that amendment I shall reserve what I have to say until I hear him.

Mr. GREGG: At six o'clock we were discussing the point of the continuing authority for the consideration of these cases which may be left after the board is disbanded. The suggestion of the hon. member for Vancouver South has been studied. My colleague will move this amendment, that we delete all the words after the word "to" in the thirteenth line and substitute the following:

a committee of at least three officers of the Department of Veterans Affairs who shall exercise and perform such powers, duties and functions in accordance with the rules of procedure to be made by the governor in council.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I move accordingly, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. GREEN: In effect that sets up a departmental board of at least three senior officials.

Mr. GREGG: Who would be full-time officials of the Department of Veterans Affairs.

Mr. GREEN: That seems satisfactory.

Mr. CARDIFF: What classes of cases would come under this?

Mr. GREGG: The same class of cases, if they exist, as have been dealt with by the existing board to which the bill refers.

Mr. CARDIFF: Would a man who has applied for a pension come under this?

Mr. GREGG: No, this is Bill No. 47, to amend the War Service Grants Act. As was explained this afternoon, the amendment grants authority to disband the board as soon as its task is finished, which will be in the reasonably near future. This has nothing to do with pensions or veterans allowance, but rather with a study of the records of men to see whether they are qualified for rehabilitation benefits.

Mr. GILLIS: I am not so sure that I am quite satisfied with this arrangement. I remember very well the difficulty we had in having this board set up in the first place, and I have had considerable to do with it since it was set up. I want to pay tribute to that board. It is one section of the Department of Veterans Affairs which has performed yeoman service in a very difficult field. At the end of the war a large number of Canadian service personnel came back with misconduct discharges, in many cases for a very slight infraction of military rules and regulations, for which they were penalized severely. A misconduct discharge meant a stigma on a man for the rest of his life and militated against his securing employment. In addition many of them were fined and lost their pay and gratuity. We did not argue that they should be paid gratuity for the days or months they may have spent in confinement, but we did think that the gratuity should be paid for the period of actual service. That was not the case when the war ended and we brought the matter up in the house and in the veterans affairs committee. I was particularly active in the matter myself because I had a number of these cases on my hands. Ultimately the board was set up.

[Mr. Gregg.]

I agree with the minister that there is a saturation point in this kind of thing and that there may not be any longer the necessity of maintaining a full-time organization. But the board the minister is going to set up will consist of three or four or five officials of the department who already have a full-time job, and to whom this will be a sideline. They will be somewhat in the position of a broker in the city of Toronto who is also a member of parliament but whose mind is mostly on his private business rather than on the business here. Similarly the officials of the department will have their own specific work to do in the department, and this other work will be a sideline to them. I should like to know from the minister, before we pass this amendment, how many misconduct discharges there were, how many applications were made to the board, how many were granted and how many refused. Then we shall have some idea of the number still to be dealt with. I believe there is still a large number who have not made application for the gratuity which I think will be coming to them under the changes made in the War Service Grants Act.

I also want some assurance from the minister that this board will actually function, so that we shall not be writing to someone who is on some other job in some other place, but will be back in a week or next month to answer your letter. If the minister can give us that information I would very much appreciate having it, because I am not prepared to disband the present board until I am reasonably sure that there is not sufficient work to keep them employed for some time to come.

Mr. GREGG: This afternoon I gave the number of applications dealt with. I have not the figures here at the moment. The total number now remaining to be dealt with is 458, and it is our intention that the board or a quorum of the existing board shall continue to deal with all those 458 cases. We desire to continue the facilities for dealing with cases, because new evidence may be brought in regarding any of the 2,844 applications which were refused out of the whole Canadian naval, land and air forces. If any further evidence comes in which might mitigate their record the committee would take that into consideration.

Mr. BROOKS: Was any time limit set on making application?

Mr. GREGG: No.

Mr. BROOKS: I very much approve this bill. If the functions of the board are about completed it would be an unnecessary expense to continue it. There were some 5,000 or more cases before the board, I understand; is that correct?

Mr. GREGG: There were 5,055 granted and 2,844 refused. Of course the remaining 458 cases in which a decision has not yet been given have to be studied.

Mr. BROOKS: I was not in the house before six o'clock, when perhaps this information was given. Is there any appeal from the board's decision?

Mr. GREGG: If, after the end of the board's work, new evidence should come to light regarding any one of these cases, that evidence will be considered by this continuing committee, if this bill passes.

Mr. BROOKS: I presume there would be a chairman of the committee. Will there be any remuneration for the other members?

Mr. GREGG: No, there will be no additional pay for this committee. While I would not want this to be taken as final, I think the obvious choice for the chairman of the committee would be the deputy minister.

Mr. BROOKS: I think that arrangement would be very satisfactory.

Mr. HERRIDGE: Under this committee which it is proposed to establish by the amendment to this bill, will the permanent force officers who have been cashiered and lost their long service pension, or members of the permanent forces and other ranks who had also lost their long service pension through some default, be able to present their case and the new evidence required to this committee?

Mr. GREGG: No; the board, under the original act, had authority to deal only with gratuities and re-establishment credits.

Mr. PEARKES: I presume that the numbers given by the minister referred to men who have already been discharged from the service. There may possibly be some men who are still liable to be discharged from the service with an unsatisfactory discharge certificate. I do not know if there are still men carried on the strength of the forces who are classified as deserters. We must remember that, after world war I, deserters were declaring that they were deserters for many years afterwards. How many of these cases are those which the board may have to consider? In other words, how many men are there in Canada who were deserters from the forces and have not been brought to trial or have not declared themselves as deserters? How many men are there still in prison as a result of crimes, and therefore have perhaps not yet been discharged from the service?

Mr. GREGG: The main questions asked would apply to the Department of National Defence. My department deals, of course, only with men and women when they become veterans. If a man is in prison he is still under the control of the Department of National Defence.

In reply to the first question I can say this. If such a man were discharged with such a record now and application were made the existing board would study that case as it has these others and decide upon it. If it should be later, if the board were disbanded, then this committee, if this amendment passes, would be clothed with exactly the same power and authority to study that case and deal with it as though the board had actually been studying it.

Mr. PEARKES: I realize that, but I am trying to ascertain how much work the board will have to do. Are there many such cases?

Mr. GREGG: I cannot give the exact number tonight.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

VETERANS INSURANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS WITH RESPECT TO ELIGIBILITY, ETC.

Hon. MILTON F. GREGG (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved the second reading of Bill No. 60, to amend the Veterans Insurance Act.

Mr. PEARKES: Will the minister give an explanation of this bill before it is given second reading?

Mr. GREGG: Mr. Speaker, the main purpose of this bill to amend the Veterans Insurance Act is to extend and clarify the eligibility section of the act. This amendment is the first amending legislation that has been proposed since the act came into effect on February 20, 1945.

The original act provided for the approval of applications within three years after discharge or three years after the coming into force of the act. This bill provides for an extension of the period to six years. This will be of value especially to veterans who are still under treatment, or whose health at present will not permit their acceptance for insurance.

There are also veterans who are, or who have been, under training, and others who have been unable, for various reasons, to rehabilitate themselves financially, and they will welcome this extension. In addition there will be certain United States veterans who served in the Canadian forces who have been training under their G.I. bill of rights, and eventually they will be able to purchase veterans insurance with the remaining portion of their re-establishment credit.

The bill provides a revised and clarified definition of classes eligible to contract for insurance, and includes statutory provision for members of the permanent force and certain merchant seamen who originally qualified under order in council passed under emergency legislation, which has now expired. The bill will extend the benefits of the act to merchant seamen who qualified to receive a war service bonus. It excludes one small class, the dependent parents of deceased members of the forces, or persons standing in the place of parents. It was not intended that they should be eligible, but the phrasing of the act was found not clear, and this amendment includes a clarification of that.

Widows of members of the forces who died on service have previously qualified as pensioners. It is considered advisable to provide specifically that these widows shall qualify as widows, as do the widows of those who died after discharge. The class of pensioners will now include only those in receipt of a disability pension.

The bill provides a clarification of wording in several places; there is also a retroactive feature which will avoid any break in the period of eligibility.

The total amount of veterans insurance issued to March 31, 1948, was 19,280 policies for $55,353,500 worth of insurance. There are some 211 applications now pending for $509,000 worth of insurance from veterans whose period of eligibility has already expired and, if this amendment is passed, who would become eligible.

Mr. GREEN: May I ask the minister a question? Several of these amendments to which he has referred do not appear in the bill as it has come from the senate. Is it the proposal that different amendments will be offered in this house, or just where do we find these other changes?

Mr. GREGG: Perhaps I can defer that if I might move that the bill be referred to the committee on veterans affairs.

Mr. GREEN: I think, Mr. Speaker, that we should know how the government proposes to make these various changes. Several of them, for example the six-year provision and the provision for widows, do not seem to be in this bill at all.

[Mr. Gregg.]

Mr. GREGG: It was proposed to bring forward certain amendments at the committee stage.

Mr. GREEN: The minister's explanation, then, covers several matters that are not yet before the house. Might we have a list of the proposed changes?

Mr. GREGG: I have not the list as a list, but it will be found in my introductory statement in Hansard.

Mr. CLARENCE GILLIS (Cape Breton South): I feel somewhat as the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green) does. We are dealing now with the principle of the bill and with that principle we can agree. It is a matter of clarification, changing some of the wording and extending the provisions of the act to personnel who are not included in the present measure. Before the bill goes to the committee, I should like to see the proposed amendments.

I have every confidence in the veterans affairs committee; but, the minister's explanation notwithstanding, I would ask why, for example, there is a change from the word "insured" to "applicant". I am not going to read the section; but it gives the minister, if he so desires, the right to subject any applicant to a medical examination, whereas the whole purpose of veterans insurance was to give insurance to service personnel who could not pass a medical examination.

As I understood the old bill, the word "insured" was used where the word "applicant" now appears. That is a matter of definition and I am sometimes afraid of legal definitions. Who is the insured under the old act? I suggest that the insured is the beneficiary. That is the person who is really insured, the person who receives the benefits which the insurance carries. I believe there would be a good deal of difficulty in the exercise of the powers granted the minister now with respect to medical examination. If this wording is used, then when the person applying makes application for this insurance, the minister, if he so desires, can instruct the departmental officials to have every applicant for this insurance subjected to a medical examination.

I am afraid somebody behind the scenes is getting smart and taking the competition in this field away from the old line insurance companies. I am apprehensive of that particular change and I should like to have it thoroughly explained. The minister is perfectly honest, and, I am sure, has not in mind what I am suggesting at the present time, but there is a lot of intrigue and manipulation in matters of this kind in a structure of society which is based upon profits. They do not like to see growing up in the country in government circles anything that may be interfering with that particular field.

There are a large number of service personnel in the country today. It is a good insurance field; and I want to be assured that the business of having the applicant insured under the legislation will not involve his being subjected to a medical examination, because, if he is, that defeats the whole purpose of veterans insurance.

If the minister has an explanation to give as to why the word "insured" is being changed to "applicant", with the powers given the minister under that particular section, I wish he would give it because I am a little bit afraid of it.

Mr. A. J. BROOKS (Royal): I am in perfect agreement with the principle of the bill and, as I listened to the minister's explanation of the proposed amendments, I would be in agreement with the amendments. I agree with what the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) has said, except his definition of "insured". I do not altogether agree with that.

Before we consider this bill, the amendments should be before us. I suggest that the bill be not now read the second time. It might be referred to the veterans affairs committee as suggested by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green). We cannot consider it intelligently in the house at the present time without having the amendments before us.

Mr. W. GARFIELD CASE (Grey North): I would support the view expressed by the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Brooks), inasmuch as we are being asked to give second reading to a bill which is incomplete. I think it is wrong to expect the house under the circumstances to approve even by second reading. In my opinion the matter should be stood over until we have the amendments to which the minister has referred and which it is difficult to follow by simply hearing them. We should have them completely before us when we are asked to give second reading to the bill.

In reply to the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis), I do not think any of the old line life insurance companies will be greatly interested. They are anxious to write insurance, it is true; but I should like to point out, and I think it is a tribute to these insurance companies, that there are hundreds of veterans who are salesmen for the old line companies and they are making good in the majority of cases. This is a risk they could underwrite and I think that was intended by veterans insurance. I hope that no part of that phase will be changed in the present act.

Mr. G. R. PEARKES (Nanaimo): I understand that the minister is going to make certain amendments to the bill. May I suggest that when the amendments are being considered the inequality which exists, regarding the terms upon which a veteran may obtain insurance, as to those who joined the forces between April 1, 1946, and February 7, 1947, be removed.

According to the bill as it now stands, a man who joined the forces prior to the 1st of April, 1946, will have three years to make up his mind as to whether he wants to take out insurance or not. The man who joined the forces after February 7, 1947, will also be given three years to make up his mind. The man who joined between April 1, 1946, and February 7, 1947, will have only just over two years to decide.

Mr. HOWARD C. GREEN (Vancouver South): May I suggest to the minister that the bill be not now read a second time but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the special committee on veterans affairs. Then the proposed amendments could be submitted and the whole bill discussed. It would be much more satisfactory to have it done that way rather than to pass the bill now without knowing what the amendments are to be.

Mr. P. E. WRIGHT (Melfort): I support the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green). I do not think that if we gave the bill second reading and went into committee of the whole on it, and if the amendments which the minister has suggested were then introduced, we would be able to pass those amendments, because they introduce a new subject matter which is not in the bill to which we would be giving second reading. Under the circumstances, the only thing we can do is to refer it to the committee.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): I do not wish to speak to the bill, but I suggest to the house that they be careful if they want the bill to carry when we consider the amendments. I am of the opinion that, if carried, they would kill the bill. The bill would have to be reintroduced and then given first reading, and I do not know whether that can be done. I think it would be much better to leave the second reading over until the members have the bill before them. That is the usual way. Then there would be no danger of throwing out the legislation which, after all, is highly desirable legislation.

Mr. L. A. MUTCH (Winnipeg South): Following what the last speaker has said, may I point out that the motion that the bill be not read now but that it be referred to a committee in order that the subject matter might be considered is a well-established way of giving the bill the hoist. There is some real doubt in my mind, and I think there would be in the mind of the house, whether or not, under the circumstances, it would be possible to deal with the subject matter of the present bill again this session.

Mr. GREEN: Of course nobody wants to kill the bill.

Mr. MUTCH: I know that. I am quite sure that no one does. I think the house ought to bear in mind that this bill comes to us in its present form from another place. Naturally it has been the subject of study by the department and the officials of the department. The minister, in his brief introduction to the bill tonight, indicated that the department are in fact prepared to go farther than the recommendations which have been included in the bill in that other place.

The question for us to decide at the moment is whether or not the house desires to take the minister's statement of what he proposes to do, let the bill go to second reading and debate and accept or disregard these further recommendations in the committee, or to defer second reading. It seems to me that there is no particular advantage in either procedure, beyond the fact that we dispose of the bill and get it into the hands of the most interested parties if we let it go to second reading. There can be no serious objection to delay.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does it meet with the approval of the house to give the bill second reading on condition that it will be referred to the special committee on veterans affairs?

Mr. GREGG: Just before the motion is put, Mr. Speaker, let me assure the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) that there is no sinister motive in the wording. It is for clarification. I think the procedure which has now been suggested will be a helpful one. Quite a long time ago, early in the session, this bill was passed through another place; and as it came to this house, I should have made note that the introductory remarks I was making covered those things already in, and also those things that we wanted to get in; and that the bill will be amended in accordance with the statement I made in the beginning.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the special committee on veterans affairs.

[Mr. Mutch.]

VETERANS REHABILITATION ACT

EXTENSION OF ALLOWANCE PROVISIONS

Hon. MILTON F. GREGG (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to present a bill to amend the Veterans Rehabilitation Act by extending the allowance provisions in respect to persons coming under the provisions of the act.

Mr. GREEN: May we have a statement from the minister?

Mr. GREGG: The resolution before the house, Mr. Speaker, is one dealing with amendments to the Veterans Rehabilitation Act. Certain anomalies and conflictions have occurred in the experience with that act since it first came upon the statute books, and in some respects these amendments are to correct those anomalies and conflictions which are based upon the experience of the department.

The bill—if I have your permission, Mr. Speaker, so to refer to it at this stage—will provide for the payment of allowances to veterans on behalf of children who are in the process of adoption. It will also provide for payment of an allowance where an illegitimate child of a veteran's wife is maintained by the veteran. Items such as these are taken up in the amendments.

Provision is contained in the oncoming bill to provide compensation to veteran trainees who received a disability from accidents which occurred during the course of their training subsequently to August 31, 1946. For example, one veteran suffered injury during his training prior to this date and is becoming blind as a result of the accident. The amendments proposed will take care of such cases prior to that date and will cover all cases of injury incurred during training, under the provisions of either the post-discharge re-establishment order or the Veterans Rehabilitation Act.

It has been ruled that an individual who enlisted during the war and remained with the permanent force and is finally discharged ten or twenty years hence will be eligible under the present legislation to apply for benefits under the Veterans Rehabilitation Act. I am told, Mr. Speaker, that that is something which was not in any way intended when the original act was passed; and from reading of the records I believe that is so. That will be corrected.

The intent of the act was to provide assistance for veterans on discharge from their war service. The proposed amendments in the bill will provide that veterans of the permanent force will be deemed to have been discharged or retired from the forces as of September 30, 1947, which is in accord with order in council P.C. 2372 of June 17, 1947, whereby the armed forces ceased to be on active service after September 30, 1947.

Certain limitations are provided in the act which prevent desirable transfers from vocational training to university training, and the other way around. Perhaps this will be the most important feature of the legislation coming forward under this resolution. Cases have been brought to the attention of the department where these restrictions work a hardship on the veteran in his efforts to complete his rehabilitation. The oncoming amendments will permit transfers to take place for those who have discontinued training within six months of the coming into force of this amending legislation and for those now in training within six months from the date that they discontinued their present courses.

Also veterans who are receiving university training, including pre-matriculation courses leading up to university training, are debarred from the benefits of the Veterans Land Act. In many cases, because of a change in objective, the veteran, after completing his pre-matriculation course, did not continue on to university as he originally intended. The proposed amendments restore to such veteran students eligibility to apply for benefits under the Veterans Land Act. Where a veteran has completed one academic year of not more than nine months at a university, he is required to pay the allowances and other costs of such training prior to the restoration of his entitlement under the Veterans Land Act.

These proposed amendments bring into effect the results of the experience of the department during the past three years in the preparation of veterans for their careers in life. Quite often they came out of the services convinced that they knew exactly what they were going to do in life and the course they wanted to follow to prepare for that objective. They had counsellors within the service; they had counsellors within the universities and vocational schools; they had counsellors in the department. Sometimes they thought they were counselled to death. However, in the main the veteran himself or herself made the decision. Sometimes the counselling had effect; sometimes it had not. After they got under way for a few months in vocational or university or on the job training, they found that was not the field they should try to enter, and under the original act there was a certain rigidity that made it difficult for such a veteran to take the fork in the road leading, the department hopes, to the vocation which best fits his aptitude.

This resolution gives me an opportunity to say a word about the training program for veterans made possible by the original rehabilitation act. The number of veterans who have received or are receiving or are about to receive training at universities now stands at upwards of 55,000. When I say "are about to receive" I mean including those who are now at pre-matriculation schools with the intention of going on to universities. Therefore, including those who have graduated, those who are in, those who intend and are preparing to go in, the figure is over 55,000 at present. The corresponding total with regard to vocational training is approximately 93,000.

These numbers do not by any means tell the whole story. For example, when the original act came into effect the universities were faced with a great opportunity and a great duty to provide university training for veterans, which brought total enrolments at those universities up to two, three and, in one case in the far west, four times the normal enrolment. The story of how that has been done is an interesting one. It is a story of co-operation between the universities and the federal government in a way that has been a source of great satisfaction to the universities and which has been very effective in behalf of the veterans whom they tried to serve by leading them into the proper courses and eventually to rehabilitation.

The word "rehabilitation" was, of course, the key word. It was intended to give the student an opportunity to find his way back to civil life, but I am glad to say it is meaning more than that. Veterans at our universities, as well as those taking vocational training, are getting a broadening of experience and education that will mean more than mere rehabilitation, important though that may be. The initiative taken by the university authorities is leaving nothing undone, even changing the whole set-up of their establishments, to fit into this plan has been commendable. One pleasant feature is that it is being done with the universities maintaining their time-honoured autonomy, yet preserving the most harmonious relations with this department on the many interlocking points of operation that have come up.

I could say more on that point, but the amendments being brought in come within that field of co-operation. When the plan for university work came into operation each institution worked out, under university authority, a counselling service. Some of these services have grown to quite extraordinary dimensions and are now considered to be an important part of university work. It was to a great degree through that counselling, after the student veteran got under way, that this need for redirection of course became more apparent. All the universities operating under the plan have that system in effect now, and it has been possible for them to do that without interference by the department, while at the same time receiving from the department assistance under their supplementary grants making this possible.

The amendments being brought forward, providing as they do more flexibility in the early direction of courses, are a direct result of that work, and I am sure that the experience gained in this field by the universities will be of value long after the veteran period has passed, that it will be one of the useful by-products. I could say much also about the task involved in working out the vocational training for the nearly ninety-five thousand veterans concerned.

In some cases, particularly in medicine and dentistry, the fees to the university plus the supplementary grant of $150 have exceeded the $500 which it will be remembered the act set as the maximum payable on behalf of the veteran in tuition fees. The ratio of costs of instruction in medicine and dentistry has increased to a greater extent than in practically all the other courses. As hon. members know, Canada is very short of medical men and dentists, and a great many veterans elected to take those courses. So an attempt is made here to see that no potential veteran doctor or veteran dentist does not take the course due to the fact that his tuition is more than $500. In other words, an attempt is made to have that tuition payable on his behalf.

Mr. F. E. LENNARD (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw one matter to the attention of the minister, because I feel it should receive the serious consideration of the Department of Veterans Affairs. In many cases the overseas wives of Canadian veterans have refused to come to Canada. That amounts to desertion; yet the Canadian veteran has no redress in our courts, unless at great expense to himself he can prove adultery. The overseas wife of a Canadian veteran can get a divorce in England by proving desertion, but that divorce does not hold good in Canada. I am not a member of the legal profession, but I realize that divorces come under the jurisdiction of the provinces, with the exception of Quebec. I do feel, however, that the Department of Veterans Affairs should consider this problem seriously and take it up with the provinces in an endeavour to correct what to me is an injustice to many of our veterans.

Mr. G. R. PEARKES (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, if I heard the minister correctly I believe the amendments we are introducing will remove rehabilitation grants from those men who have joined the permanent force of this country. If that is correct, it seems to me grossly unfair, because when a man decided to remain on in the active forces of this country, be they navy, army or air force, he would have been influenced by the fact that when his service engagement was terminated he would still be eligible to draw his rehabilitation grant.

If the amendment means that after he has joined one of the services the rehabilitation grant is to be taken away from him and that he is to be deprived of the opportunity of having that grant, then I think he has been grossly misled in being permitted to join the active force on the understanding that when his service terminated he would still be able to get his rehabilitation grant.

I hope, if my interpretation of the minister's statement is correct, that he will give the matter serious consideration, because it seems to me that a condition of that kind would be doing a gross injustice to those men who are still remaining on in the service of this country. Even if it is not possible for the minister to grant them their rehabilitation grants, perhaps at the time they have completed their pensionable service they should at least be given an opportunity of having their rehabilitation grants when they are asked if they wish to re-enlist in the services after the termination of their first enlistment.

Mr. CLARENCE GILLIS (Cape Breton South): There is another point I should like to bring to the attention of the minister. I hope, when the bill reaches the committee on veterans affairs, that some attention will be paid to the point raised by the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Lennard). I refer to divorce, as applied to service personnel, and the application of Canadian divorce laws as well as those of Great Britain. I have discussed this matter before and I shall not waste time on it this evening.

I have in mind another point which has not been discussed. I am thinking of the veteran who was discharged, went into some industry and probably remained there for eight months or a year. Then, at the end of that time he decided to take a course under the government's regulations. Completing his course, he found that he could not get a job, and as a result made application for unemployment insurance. However, he could not establish a benefit year and had not made the 180 contributions. Then he applies for his armed service credits, which are applicable in a case of this kind to any serviceman who did not take a course.

There have been quite a number of boys in the circumstances I have described who could not qualify, who could not get a job, and to whom armed service credits were not made available. I suggest that when the minister is discussing this bill in the veterans affairs committee that point should be considered. I believe there has been rank discrimination, and I have brought specific cases to the attention of the department. The legislation as it now stands does not take care of that kind of situation.

Mr. A. J. BROOKS (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to delay the passage of the resolution for any length of time. The minister referred to university students and to vocational training and, I believe, made the suggestion that possibly some of these students have not been getting their training along lines best suited to them. His suggestion that a change should now be made is a good one.

There is another class of student to whom very little attention has been paid. I refer to children of veterans who were killed overseas or who were war casualties. I know it has been mentioned on other occasions in the house that these orphaned children should receive some sort of grant for educational purposes. I would refer again to the condition in the United States where, in different states of the union, they pay all the way from $150 to $300 a year as an educational grant for the education of orphans of deceased war veterans.

Has any consideration been given or will it be given to a grant of some kind for this purpose? I understand that to a great extent education comes within the control of the provinces, and perhaps that is why the matter has not been considered. I would ask, however, if any consideration has been given to that point. No doubt the minister will have an opportunity to reply when we are in committee on the resolution.

Mr. HOWARD C. GREEN (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, there are two or three matters I should like to place before the minister and the house in connection with rehabilitation. As I understand it, this measure does not apply to veterans of the first world war. When I was in Vancouver during the Easter recess I found that there are some veterans of the first war around the age of fifty years who could be benefited greatly by receiving vocational training of one kind or another. I have in mind training as gardeners. Apparently some of them have had that training and have been enabled to get jobs from which they are able to earn a living.

The minister's staff in Vancouver has no authority to give training of that kind to veterans of the first war. I imagine they are stretching the limits a bit, because of the great need of placing these men. I suggest that the minister should give consideration to extending the act to cover veterans of the first world war who could benefit by training of this type. If he will check up in his department I think he will find that that would be the recommendation of his own men who are on the spot and who are trying to place these older veterans.

Incidentally, in my opinion the staff in Vancouver—and I have no doubt the same condition obtains elsewhere—are doing a fine job in helping to place veterans of both the first and second world wars. They are keen about their job; they are enthusiasts, and I am sure it would help them if they were able to give some sort of training to this particular class of men from the first world war.

Another group I would mention is that of the merchant seamen. In his opening remarks the minister said nothing about extending the benefits of rehabilitation to the merchant seamen. My understanding is that the only benefits they can get now are by way of training for the sea. They can get vocational training to go to sea, but not otherwise. For example, they cannot get training at a university. As the house knows, our merchant marine is small in size, although it is a great deal larger than it was before the war. Yet it is so small, compared with its size during the war, that only a very small proportion of the men who served in the merchant navy could hope to carry on in that occupation in peacetime.

In effect, most of the men who served in the merchant navy can get no rehabilitation benefits, and I hope that the government has not closed the door on giving training to these men. This is not the time to repeat the submissions which have been made here in other sessions, and in fact this session, but I do hope that the door is not closed against these men.

The minister said nothing with regard to university students. The married students were given an increase of, I believe, $10 a month, but there was no increase whatever given to the single students, and the representations that I receive are to the effect that $10 a month is still not sufficient to meet the requirements of the married men. The single men are getting in a worse position all the time. The cost of living has been going up steadily; the funds of these men are running lower and lower, and many of them are going deeper and deeper into debt. This is a situation which I believe must be met. It has not yet been adequately dealt with.

I have also had representations about the permissible earnings. The suggestion is made that these men should be allowed to earn more than $75 a month, which I believe is the figure at the present time, is it not? The suggestion is that they should be allowed to earn more than $75, and I suggest that under present conditions it would be wise to grant that permission. It does not need any amending legislation, since it can be done by regulation under the act. That would greatly ease the situation.

I would point out that in the United States just about two months ago veterans attending schools were given an increased allowance. I have here a press dispatch from Washington of February 14 last, which states that the United States has raised the monthly subsistence allowance for veterans without dependents from $65 to $75. In Canada I believe it is $60. The dispatch goes on to say that those with one dependent have had their allowance increased from $90 to $105, and those with two or more dependents, from $90 to $120, effective April 5.

I do hope that the minister will deal with these points when we get into committee. All of them are, I suggest, worthy of consideration, and I hope that provision can be made in the bill to meet them.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Golding in the chair.

Mr. WRIGHT: I want to ask the minister a question with respect to the rehabilitation grant. When a soldier writes in and asks for his rehabilitation grant I understand that the department sends out a form for him to fill in. One applicant showed me this form. In the lower corner was this stipulation which the applicant had to sign:

"It is not my intention to make application for vocational training or settlement under the Veterans Land Act." He had to sign that as well as the application form. But it was our understanding in the veterans affairs committee that accepting the rehabilitation grant did not prevent a man from, later on, repaying that grant and making application to come under the Veterans Land Act. These chaps were very much alarmed about this form. The form did not state that they could not, later on, repay the rehabilitation grant, but it required them to state that they would not ask for settlement under the Veterans Land Act.

I have had complaints from veterans who have stated that the department had refused to accept repayment of their rehabilitation grant and to grant rehabilitation under the Veterans Land Act either on small holdings or on permanent farm holdings. I would ask the minister to explain just what the situation is in that regard. It was our understanding in the veterans affairs committee that the rehabilitation grant could be repaid and application be made for settlement under the Veterans Land Act.

Mr. GREGG: Perhaps we might defer going into that in detail until the committee stage of the bill, but I think it has been understood through the counsellors in the regional offices of veterans affairs that these men could repay their re-establishment credits.

There are one or two points to which I might refer while on my feet. One was with regard to divorce. I am going to leave that to the veterans affairs committee. Like other members of that committee, I have run across difficult situations, and if a solution can be found I shall be as happy as anyone.

Referring to the point made by the hon. member for Nanaimo, I said a little while ago that my understanding of the purpose of the original rehabilitation act was to have the veteran re-established. As we stand now, it would appear to me that the permanent officer or soldier is re-established. If by any chance he is discharged now or next week or next year he will, of course, come under whatever remaining benefits there may be related to the last war, but twenty years from now one would expect that vocational training schools and university training plans and many of these other things which were built up definitely for re-establishment will have served their purpose. In addition there are parallel training plans, even in service, up to university level, also trade schools and matriculation.

Mr. PEARKES: Can the minister give any idea as to the time? For instance, a man joins the forces, say on a three-year enlistment; will he be eligible at the end of his first term of enlistment for whatever benefits there are?

Mr. GREGG: This is designed for war veterans. Those who enlist for short term service now, for a three-year term, would not, I feel, be entitled to the benefits under this act.

Mr. PEARKES: It may be the minister's impression that this means rehabilitation; but I suggest that the man who joined the active forces believing that he would get these benefits at the end of his period of service considered that as part of his rehabilitation. He was going to rehabilitate himself by staying on in the service for a period of three years, at the end of which period he believed that he would have an opportunity of taking certain courses. He knew that when he first signed his enlistment there was great demand for those courses and that they would be crowded; whereas if he waited three years—it might now be only two years—he believed that he could get the course at the end of his first enlistment. I think that to deprive him of that opportunity now is grossly unfair to the man who joined up with that understanding or with that impression.

Mr. GREGG: I do not propose to discuss the merits of that tonight, because it introduces quite a new principle. It is quite debatable. It is for the department creating a new army to say whether that should be done or not. Under this act which was designed for the rehabilitation of the veterans coming out of the war, it certainly was not the intention, when the act was passed, that it should be used for that purpose. If what my hon. friend suggests should be done it should be done under a completely new dispensation relating to the new army.

Mr. PEARKES: I disagree. I feel that the man had to make a decision as to whether he would stay on in the active forces or not, and whether he would stay on perhaps for a period of his first enlistment which, as I say, is normally three years, realizing at the end of that time he would have an opportunity of having his rehabilitation grants. He decided to stay on, and now before that period of enlistment has been completed you are going to withdraw the rehabilitation grant. If that is the minister's intention I do not think it is at all fair to these men who made that decision with the belief that they would be entitled to these rehabilitation grants at the end of their enlisment.

Mr. GREGG: May I clarify what I said a moment ago? Perhaps I misunderstood my hon. friend. I was thinking of the eighteen year olds who may enlist now for three years; but I can see now that the hon. member refers to these veterans who served during the war and are going on for three years more. As they come out from month to month, they will certainly be entitled to such rehabilitation benefits as gratuities, re-establishment or Veterans Land Act benefits.

Mr. BROOKS: Was the time not increased to three years for that particular purpose?

Mr. GREGG: One of the amendments put forward in the insurance bill tonight was partly for that purpose as well as for veterans who were in hospital or in training.

Mr. MUTCH: The original rehabilitation grants were for a period of ten years from the cessation of hostilities or the discharge of the veteran or the transfer to the other service. Is not that correct?

Mr. GREGG: Yes.

Mr. MUTCH: If I understood the hon. member for Nanaimo correctly I want to know, if the man leaves the service any time before that ten-year period has expired, whether all these rehabilitation credits which he has not used will be applied on application?

Mr. BROOKS: I do not think you can wait ten years to apply for a university course. That is what the hon. member for Nanaimo was speaking about particularly. I think it was eighteen months, was it not? You cannot wait ten years for an educational course.

Mr. GREGG: Not the educational course; but his re-establishment credit and his gratuity would be available to such a man as the hon. member for Nanaimo suggests.

Mr. MUTCH: If he applies within ten years.

Mr. GREGG: Up to the period of ten years, which is now laid down. A plan is being worked out, for instance, in the engineers where university officers in the engineers can complete their university training within the service. Furthermore, classes are being worked out for education of other ranks.

Mr. PEARKES: That is an entirely different matter.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I suppose I am going to be quite out of order. I have listened to some of the debate which has gone on, and I think this might be a constructive suggestion. We have quite a lot of difficulty at the present time in getting volunteers for the navy, army and air force. We are below strength. Under the circumstances today, Canada should do something to see that she is able to defend herself. My suggestion is that in Canada at the present time we should have universal volunteer training. I do not know what I should suggest as the length of time that we should have it. I suggest perhaps a year or a year and a half. During that year or a year and a half we should have universal volunteer training. This is not conscription or anything like that. We should take into the navy, army and air force men who have finished their high school courses or perhaps those who have finished their first year course at the university. I suggest to the minister, who knows something about education, that perhaps it is a wise thing to have a boy go to university for one year and then go out and earn his living and come back to university. That system would give him a better understanding of what earning a dollar means.

My suggestion is that we formulate some plan for the defence of Canada and that we give these boys, during the period of their voluntary training, schooling which will be equivalent to whatever year they are in in high school or matriculation or something like that. If they are in arts they could carry on the first year of arts or the first year of science. Give them something that will carry them along that year and make it worthwhile. It will take a lot of money, but if we do that we shall get the voluntary force which will be needed to defend Canada in case of necessity. I want to repeat that this is voluntary.

One of the main reasons I have for speaking about this matter tonight is this. We have the threat of communism on us in Canada today. What we must have in Canada as soon as we can get it, to combat any subservient activity which may come along, is loyal subjects. We must have people who voluntarily are willing to defend their country in time of trouble. I am not talking about having them voluntarily defend their country in time of war outside Canada. That goes without saying, because we know that every man, woman and child in this country, in the case of war, outside, would jump into the fray and defend Canada.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order. The hon. member was quite correct in the statement that he would be out of order. What is before the committee at the present time is the following resolution:

That it is expedient to present a bill to amend the Veterans Rehabilitation Act by extending the allowance of provisions in respect to persons coming under the provisions of the act.

I hope the hon. member will confine his remarks to the resolution.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I am making this suggestion—

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: The hon. member is not in order in discussing matters that are not before the committee at the moment. He admitted himself that he would be out of order. That is not the proper thing for the hon. member to do, to continue speaking when he knows he is out of order. I hope he will deal with the resolution.

[Mr. Ross (St. Paul's).]

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): The resolution is to extend vocational training. I think that is what it is.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Has the hon. member the resolution before him?

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): No.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: I have read the resolution to the hon. member and I hope he will confine his remarks to it.

Mr. GREEN: Could the minister deal with some of the matters raised while the Speaker was in the chair?

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I have just a few more words to say. I think I have made myself clear. I suggest that the act will probably need to be so framed as to take care of the points I have suggested. I think my idea is a good one, that in time of trouble we should have loyal people in the country. If, therefore, we have many of these men attracted into what I call voluntary universal training for one year—

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): —I think we shall have a good many loyal citizens.

Mr. GREGG: I should like to refer once more to the remarks of the hon. member for Nanaimo. The limitation in the date of discharge is September 30, 1947, which applies only to those things in the Veterans Rehabilitation Act such as training. That is one which is tied in with that date. Then there are out-of-work allowances, allowance while temporarily incapacitated, and allowance while awaiting returns. There are others to which that date has no relation, such as gratuities. The member of the active army who served in this last war may get his gratuities at any time if he has not received them. That, therefore, is clear. Then there is the re-establishment credit. As it now stands, he may get it at any time within ten years from the date of discharge, or within ten years from January 1, 1945, whichever is the later. Then there is the Veterans Land Act, in respect of which at the present time there is no time limit. Does that answer the question?

Mr. PEARKES: I will wait until I see the bill before answering that question.

Mr. GREGG: On the point raised regarding student veterans at universities, I am not going to discuss that at any length, except to say that across Canada there is a great variation in costs just as there is a great variation in the thriftiness of the students themselves. As I understood it—I may have been wrong—this plan was developed as an effective federal scholarship for veteran students. Let us take the maximum, or less than the maximum. The maximum tuition has been $500 and, if it is more now, it will be paid, but the average tuition across Canada is in the vicinity of $300. There is $60 a month for a normal eight months period, which is $480. So that the veteran has a scholarship of $300, plus $480, or $780, and that applies, whether he is single or married, to the veteran himself.

This increase was designed to assist the married veteran and to make it more possible for him as a married man to take care of his dependents. True, he did not have to get married, but to my mind it is a great advantage to the country that the young men who are at the universities are finding it in the main possible to get married and to have children; and I believe that when they come through with their war service and their university training, together with their initiation in domestic experience, they will be valuable citizens.

I know that in some parts of Canada, in the large centres, there is some hardship even yet for some individual married students, and there is as well, in some cases, for single students. The single student is able at this time of the year, or he will be in a few weeks' time, to reduce his expenses and his responsibilities. He can go and work for the whole summer. He can get work of some kind, quite often along the lines of his expected profession, and he is able to return in the autumn with at least some surplus money to act as a backlog for the coming session at the university.

Mr. GREEN: I think it is more difficult this year.

Mr. GREGG: It is more difficult for them to get the type of work that is closely related to their university training, but there is work that can be got which would enable the single man to make a good deal more than it will cost him to live. On the other hand, the married man has to retain an establishment somewhere, normally at the place which he has found, or which has been found for him, within the university precincts or within the university community. Failing this, he has to send his small family home, which costs money. It is a rare case in which the married student veteran can get through the long summer holiday with very much of a surplus for the coming year.

Mr. BROOKS: What are the reports as to summer work for students this year? Will there be 100 per cent work obtainable, or what is the proportion?

Mr. GREGG: We have not had any definite reports in that regard and we shall not have until the holidays begin, because there is a great deal of last-minute employment. There is the closest possible co-operation between the labour department, through the employment offices across Canada, and the counselling service within the universities, which normally has, as a part of the service, a full-fledged employment bureau. The Department of Labour often has in the larger universities a full-time, or, in the smaller universities, a part-time representative meshed in with the university employment office, upon which normally the students' representative council has a quota of representatives. This assists in placing students.

There are sent from Ottawa through the employment offices of the Department of Labour to the universities lists of opportunities for summer employment. Instead of their being posted up casually, they are studied by the employment officers of the university and the students' representatives. The veterans affairs representative also has a part in the work with the Department of Labour. An attempt is being made to sort out the summer opportunities to fit the type of training the veteran student is taking, so that, if it is engineering he is taking, for example, he may get some kind of work related to engineering, and so on. I must admit that the opportunities in the applied science field are much greater than they are in the field of pure arts and science.

Mr. GREEN: What about the permissible earnings?

Mr. GREGG: The permissible earnings still stand at $75 a month for the veteran. A married man may earn $75 a month and his wife may earn $75 a month. But those restrictions apply, of course, only while he is actually at the university, or approximately eight months a year. The reason this was set up was, I think, to assist the student to keep in mind the importance of what he was doing, that the task he was undertaking at the university had the topmost priority, that his work there under the assistance of the government was important and the help he received was intended to assist him to get his training in the shortest possible time, rather than that he should be employed in the town and that the university work should be of secondary consideration.

I should like to add one other factor and that is that for any veteran student, in an emergency, there is still available a loan to keep him, if he is a good student, from having to leave on account of financial shortage.

Mr. GREEN: Apparently the students do not like to go into debt.

Mr. GREGG: Nobody does.

Mr. GREEN: I believe there is a great reluctance among the students to incur indebtedness in order to finance their courses. Surely the department has control over the progress made by students. I think that is one of the features of the whole plan. If the veteran does good work, if he gets within a certain percentage or is fairly close to the top, he can get the benefit of a longer period than his service calls for. I think there is an effective check on the work being done by the students in universities. I doubt whether it is necessary to restrict the amount they may earn. In some cases the veteran or the veteran's wife might well be able to earn enough money to make it a great deal easier for the family to get by.

Another point is this. If this training is in the nature of a scholarship, there should be no ceiling placed on earnings. You do not say to a scholarship holder that he can earn only so much out of his university time. I cannot see why it should be necessary to impose these restrictions on earnings, and I would ask the minister to give some consideration to removing them.

Mr. GREGG: I should like to comment on that. I do not intend to do so in full at the present moment, because there will probably be another opportunity to do so. I should like to say that, on that point of the earnings and on every other point affecting the students at universities, my predecessor arranged for a university advisory committee to the Minister of Veterans Affairs, composed of the heads of representative universities, which met regularly every quarter, I think. All those points and more have been discussed by that committee. As I look over the record, I see that in the main, the point of view of that committee has been taken on this point as well as on many others.

Mr. SKEY: Does the minister intend to permit representatives of the university students' federation to appear before the veterans affairs committee?

Mr. GREEN: He cannot stop them.

[Mr. Gregg.]

Mr. GREGG: If the committee so wish, I have no objection.

Mr. MUTCH: That is for decision by the committee.

Mr. GREEN: Will the minister say something with regard to training for veterans of the first war?

Mr. GREGG: I cannot say anything, except that it is not now included in the act. I should like to consider that further and discuss it at another time.

Mr. BROOKS: I should like to ask the minister a question with reference to a matter which was brought to my attention the other day. It has to do with a veteran of two wars who had two sons also serving, but who had served only, we will say, a year and a half or two years, not giving them time enough to complete a full university course. The representation which was made to me was that, where the father of these boys had served, they felt that the department should allow the time which he had earned for university training, and which, of course, he was not able to take on account of his age, to be passed along to his sons who had not earned sufficient time. I should like to have the minister's comment on that and see what he thinks of that proposition.

Mr. GREGG: The proposition is not new. It has been suggested in other connections. But it has been decided, and I cannot see any other way around it, that the benefits under this act must be tied to the individual veteran and not transferred even to members of the family.

Mr. BROOKS: That is a final decision, is it?

Mr. GREGG: Yes.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Gregg thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 200, to amend the Veterans Rehabilitation Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): When shall the bill be read the second time?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Now.

Mr. BROOKS: Next sitting of the house.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): Next sitting of the house.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

APPOINTMENT OF GEORGE A. TOUCHE AND COMPANY AS AUDITORS

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of Bill No. 10, respecting the appointment of auditors for national railways.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is the annual bill seeking the appointment of auditors for the Canadian National Railways. The firm of George A. Touche and Company, chartered accountants, with offices in Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg and other cities, have been appointed for the last number of years and have been doing the work of the Canadian National Railways with satisfaction. There are many advantages in having a continuous accounting of the affairs of the railways, and it would be inconvenient if the auditors were changed, because the work must be of a continuing nature. Again for the year 1948 this bill seeks the appointment of the same firm of auditors.

Mr. A. M. NICHOLSON (Mackenzie): I should like to draw the attention of the house to the debate that took place a year ago when a similar resolution was under consideration, during which the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. Sinclair) made what I considered a very reasonable argument with a view to having this important work done under the direction of the auditor general rather than by this particular firm of chartered accountants. I have had some contact with this firm since I have been a member of the committee that has examined the operations of the Canadian National Railways, and I have no criticism whatever to offer with respect to the auditing that has been done by the George A. Touche Company. But, as the hon. member for Vancouver North argued a year ago, there is no good reason why this work might not be undertaken and completed by the auditor general. Last year the minister gave the reasons he thought were important, but I do not think the defence made by the minister was very reasonable.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The house agreed with it.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Yes, the house did agree with it; but I think no great problem presents itself in asking the auditor general to take over the job. The book-keeping of the Canadian National Railways has been done very carefully over a period of years, and there is no reason under the sun why the staff of the auditor general could not perform this service. I feel that the views we expressed a year ago apply with equal force this year. I draw Your Honour's attention to the amendment I moved a year ago, which is found at page 1910 of Hansard for March 31, 1947. At that time I referred you to page 228 of Beauchesne, third edition, citation 657, which was my authority for moving the amendment. So this evening I would move an amendment in exactly the same terms, seconded by the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Wright):

That all the words after "that" be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"this bill be not now read a second time but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this house the government should give consideration to the making of provision for the auditing of the accounts of the Canadian National Railways to be done by the auditor general of Canada."

Mr. CHEVRIER: Perhaps I should say a word in reply to the remarks of the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Nicholson). I need not amplify what was said on the subject last year, but I am surprised that the hon. member should move the same amendment, giving the same reasons, when the amendment was defeated last year.

The reasons that it would not be in the public interest to have the auditor general audit the accounts of the Canadian National Railways are, first of all, that the auditing should be a continuing process. If the auditor general were to do the work he would have to set up a specific and separate staff to look after the special work of the railway. Again, the Canadian National Railways have offices in the United States. George A. Touche and Company have offices in various centres of the United States where the Canadian National Railways operate, and by means of these representatives are able to do the work far more efficiently than the auditor general could. I understand that a staff of some thirty or forty are assigned to the Canadian National Railways, of whom many attend exclusively to this particular job of auditing. The auditor general would be in exactly the same position and would have to employ a separate staff.

For these reasons and many others I gave during the debate last year, I think it would be against the public interest to have auditors other than the present firm, who have given entire satisfaction to the railways and, I think, to parliament as a whole.

Amendment (Mr. Nicholson) negatived on division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Golding in the chair.

Section 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed, on division.

RAILWAY GRADE CROSSING FUND

INCREASE IN AMOUNT TO BE APPROPRIATED FOR NINE YEARS FROM APRIL 1948

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to increase the amount to be appropriated for the railway grade crossing fund from $200,000 to $500,000 each year for nine years, commencing on the first day of April, 1948.

He said:

The object of this resolution is to increase from $200,000 to $500,000 the amount paid into the grade crossing fund. Last year, 1947, there was passed an amendment to the Railway Act which provided for the payment into the railway grade crossing fund for a period of ten years an annual amount of $200,000. It has been thought advisable in 1948 to increase the payment from $200,000 to $500,000, because there are many projects now before the board of transport commissioners, involving large grants from the fund. It was felt that, with the grade crossing fund standing at the amount at which it was during the greater part of 1947, and again in 1948, the appropriation should be increased. There are, of course, special votes which are made from time to time by the house, which have to do with special projects involving grade crossing features.

This resolution will seek not only to increase the appropriation to the grade crossing fund but to amend the Railway Act in perhaps three or four different ways. They are amendments which have to do with the construction of cables under highways, with giving to the board the same powers in all municipalities which it has in towns and cities, and two other minor amendments which I need not discuss until we are in committee on the bill.

Mr. KNOWLES: Will the minister at some stage of debate give us information respecting prospective grade crossings which might be carried out?

Mr. CHEVRIER: When we get into committee on the bill I think I shall be able to give the hon. member as detailed information as is in my possession at that time.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Golding in the chair.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Chevrier thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 201, to amend the Railway Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): On Monday we shall have the third reading of Bill No. 138, to amend the Export and Import Permits Act; the second reading of Bill No. 198, to amend the Dominion Elections Act, 1938; the resolution in the name of the Minister of Labour for the introduction of a bill to amend the Vocational Training Co-ordination Act, 1942; a resolution in the name of the same minister to introduce a bill to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1940; the second reading of Bill No. 149, to amend the Animal Contagious Diseases Act, and, if there is time, we shall take up the second reading of other bills and resolutions on the order paper, at the convenience of members.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, April 19, 1948

The house met at three o'clock.

GOVERNMENT ANNUITIES

REDUCTION IN INTEREST RATE USED IN COMPUTING PURCHASE PRICE

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): I should like to table copies of orders in council P.C. 1713 and P.C. 1714, dated April 16, 1948, each having to do with operation of the Government Annuities Act.

Mr. KNOWLES: Shame.

Mr. MITCHELL: My hon. friend said "shame" before I read the statement. These socialists make me smile; they always want to run everything in reverse.

Mr. KNOWLES: That is what this is, a step in the wrong direction.

Mr. MITCHELL: The orders have changed the rate of interest to be used in computing the purchase price of annuities from four per cent per annum to three per cent per annum, compounded yearly. In other words, it is a reduction in the rate allowed on money paid for purchase from four to three per cent.

Changes have been made in the mortality table to be used in computing the purchase price of annuities and direction given as to the interest rate and mortality table to be used in calculating the liability for any annuity. Provision has also been made for necessary alterations resulting from these changes in the forms of application for annuities.

The change in the interest rate has been made in order to make it the same as the rate paid on long term government bonds.

The government will, of course, continue to contribute towards the cost of administration of the annuities branch so that, from an investment point of view alone, the purchase of annuities will be attractive. Actually the contribution through the cost of administration will be increasing.

In selling annuities it will be appreciated that the length of life of the purchaser is of vital importance. Recent figures published by the national office of vital statistics of Washington show that the average length of life of the American people in 1945 reached a new high of nearly 66 years. This was two and a quarter years more than the corresponding figure in the immediate pre-war period and 16⅔ years above the level prevailing at the beginning of the century.

Canadian experience probably approximates that in the United States and the trend is continuing. The present mortality basis established in 1937 allowed a small margin for improvement in mortality and has measured, with a slight margin, the actual experience. The new mortality basis is considered necessary to provide a margin of safety for contracts maturing in future years.

These orders have effect as of the 19th day of April, 1948, but do not change existing contracts.

The Government Annuities Act is in my judgment an excellent act and I consider it most advisable that it be kept on a sound basis.

Mr. BOUCHER: I should like to ask a question on these orders in council which have just been tabled. Has any change been made in the regulations with respect to the assignment of annuities? In the past certain difficulties have arisen where joint annuities have been taken out. Can the minister tell us whether there has been any change in the situation with respect to this matter?

Mr. MITCHELL: I think I can say to my hon. friend that consideration is being given to amendments to the annuities act, and I shall bear his observation in mind.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): Since the minister intends to bear in mind my hon. friend's observation, will he also make sure that no income tax is payable on the capital portion of annuities, present and future?

BRITISH FOOD CONTRACTS

TABLING OF SIGNED AGREEMENTS

Right Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): In answer to a request made by the leader of the opposition I should like to lay on the table two copies of the signed agreements with Great Britain on food.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

PRINTING

Mr. PROBE:

1. What was the total amount of printing let by the government of Canada to commercial printing firms in each province of Canada in each of the past five years?
2. What are the names and addresses of firms receiving in excess of $5,000 for government printing in any or each of the past five years, and what amount was paid to each?
3. What value of government printing is it estimated was used in each of the provinces of Canada in each of the past five years?
4. What was paid for freight or express on government printed matter sent out of Ontario or Quebec to other provinces by departments of the federal government during each of the past five years?

Mr. PROBE: With respect to the fourth part of this question, which has been standing on the order paper for nearly two months, it has been drawn to my attention by the department concerned that it will be difficult to get the information in the form in which the question was asked. I therefore wish to drop the fourth part of the question, provided that such explanations as are readily available will be forthcoming.

Mr. SPEAKER: Part 4 dropped; parts 1, 2 and 3 stand.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—EMPLOYMENT OF W. D. LOWE

Mr. DIEFENBAKER:

1. Was W. D. Lowe, of Montreal, in the employ of the Canadian National Railways in 1938 and 1939.
2. If so, in what capacity and what was his salary in each of said years?

Mr. McILRAITH:

1. Yes.
2. Chief buyer, Montreal office, Canadian National Railways. The question of salary has to do with the internal management of the Canadian National Railways and is of a type that all governments have consistently declined to answer.

TOURIST INDUSTRY

Mr. TIMMINS:

Having regard to the moneys appropriated in the estimates and supplementary estimates to promote the tourist business in Canada in 1948,
1. What amount of money is to be spent (a) for each respective province; (b) for radio services; (c) for newspaper advertising; (d) for the printing and distribution of pamphlets?
2. How many persons are employed directly by the federal department and how much will be spent on salaries?

[Mr. Gardiner.]

3. How many tourist branches have been and will be established?
4. How much money will be allocated for winter tourist business and what specific districts will be advertised in respect of winter tourist business?

Mr. McILRAITH:

1. (a) No money is spent for each respective province. The function of the Canadian government travel bureau is to carry on its advertising and promotional program on a national rather than a provincial basis.

(b) No amount of money has yet been spent for radio services out of the Canadian government travel bureau vote. The question of utilizing radio for travel promotion is, however, continuously under consideration.

(c) For newspaper advertising in 1948 the expenditure will be between $175,000 and $200,000.

(d) For the printing of pamphlets, booklets, etc., the estimated expenditure will be $208,613. Our booklets, maps, etc., are distributed through co-operative agencies all over the United States and in many other countries of the world. Such organizations as the American automobile association and affiliated associates distribute our literature free of cost. Literature is also distributed through Canadian government trade commissioners and ambassadors abroad, and through banks, hotel associations, hotels, travel agents, travel bureaus, etc.

2. Fifty-seven persons are employed by the Canadian government travel bureau. Estimated salaries for 1948-49 will be $91,496.

3. None. The Canadian government travel bureau has not established branches but works directly with provincial tourist bureaus and tourist transportation interests throughout the country.

4. The estimate for our 1948-49 winter tourist advertising has not yet been decided upon.

REPAIRS TO C.N.R. ENGINES IN ST. THOMAS NEW YORK CENTRAL SHOPS

Mr. COYLE:

1. Have the New York Central shops at St. Thomas been making any repairs on C.N.R. engines of the J 1 type in the past year?
2. If so, are they still doing this work?
3. If not, when was the work stopped and for what reason was it discontinued?
4. Has any demand come from the New York Central for continuance of this work?

Mr. CHEVRIER:

The Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. The N.Y.C. shops at St. Thomas have not made any repairs to any engine of the J 1 type in the past year, but some repairs have been made to type S 1.

2. Yes, but the shops are closed down temporarily as a result of the recent coal strike in the United States.

3. See answer to No. 2.

4. No.

AMHERST HARBOUR, MAGDALEN ISLANDS

Mr. CAOUETTE:

1. Has a petition been received by the Department of Public Works for the deepening of Amherst Harbour (Havre Aubert), Magdalen islands, province of Quebec?
2. If so, what decision has been arrived at concerning such petition?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull):

1. Yes.

2. The project necessitates an extensive examination on the site, which will be undertaken as soon as personnel conditions permit.

ST. LOUIS DE GONZAGUE, QUE., RURAL MAIL SERVICE

Mr. RAYMOND (Beauharnois-Laprairie):

1. Has the mail service on rural route No. 1, St. Louis de Gonzague, been changed or suspended in part?
2. If so (a) since what date; (b) for what reason; (c) when will the Post Office Department re-establish the regular service?
3. Has the mail service on rural route No. 2, St. Louis de Gonzague, been changed or suspended in part?
4. If so (a) since what date; (b) for what reason; (c) when will the Post Office Department re-establish the regular service?
5. Has the Post Office Department received a resolution from L'Union Catholique des Cultivateurs, of St. Louis de Gonzague, protesting against the fact that mail was not delivered daily?
6. If so (a) on what date was the said resolution received; (b) has the government rectified this situation?

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier):

1. Reduced temporarily to tri-weekly.

2 (a) 10th January, 1948. (b) Contractors for St. Louis de Gonzague Nos. 1 and 2 refused to carry on after 31st December, 1947. Only one person interested in performance of services, but, owing to condition of roads, services could only be performed on alternate days. (c) When road conditions permit use of automobile.

3. Reduced temporarily to tri-weekly.

4. (a) 10th January, 1948. (b) See answer to 2(b). (c) When road conditions permit use of automobile.

5. Yes.

6. (a) 3rd February, 1948. (b) Standing order issued for daily service as soon as road conditions permit use of automobile.

EXPORT RESTRICTIONS

Mr. RAYMOND (Beauharnois-Laprairie):

1. Is the export of powdered milk, flour, butter, lard, cheese and soap prohibited?
2. If so, what are the countries to which such prohibition does not apply, if any?

Mr. McILRAITH:

1. No, except in the case of roller process whole milk powder.

2. As the information is readily available by countries to which exports will be permitted, the answer is submitted in the following form.

Skim Milk Powder.—Permits are being issued under allocation for Newfoundland, British West Indies and Netherlands West Indies.

Spray Process Whole Milk Powder.—Permits are being issued against producers' quotas to any destination.

Roller Process Whole Milk Powder.—No permits being issued.

Butter.—Export permits are issued under allocation to the British West Indies and Newfoundland.

Lard.—Export permits are issued under allocation to the British West Indies, Netherlands West Indies and Newfoundland.

Cheese.—Is under contract to the United Kingdom, but export permits are issued under allocation to the British West Indies and Newfoundland. Arrangements have been made to grant a few special allocations for export to the United States.

Soap.—Export permits are granted under allocation to Newfoundland, Netherlands West Indies and the British West Indies. As of April 15 an export allocation of 2,000,000 pounds of soap of all types was set up for export.

Flour.—Permits are issued under allocation to certain designated countries determined quarterly.

CANADAIR LIMITED—NORTH STAR AIRCRAFT

Mr. SKEY:

1. How many North Star aircraft have Canadair completed?
2. To whom have the above aircraft been sold and how many to each person, corporation or country?
3. At what price per aircraft were these sales made?
4. How many North Star aircraft are (a) under construction on the assembly line; (b) stored in a completed or partially completed state; (c) on order by any government or private concern?

Mr. McILRAITH: Mr. Speaker, it will be seen from this question that it asks for details of the operations of a limited company. As the company is not a crown-owned company, there is no means of getting this information. However, I might add that last year a good deal of information about the former aircraft plant at Cartierville, Quebec, was given on March 20, and information on that subject will be found at page 1540 of last year's Hansard.

Mr. SKEY: I placed this question on the order paper, first, because I understood that the government had a continuing interest in the Canadair plant at Montreal, and second, because of the press controversy and the tremendous public interest in the North Star aircraft and its efficiency in comparison with the DC. 4 at the present time. I feel that if the government can give me any information as to production figures they have every right to do so as a continuing owner of this plant, which will not be paid off for some years. I think I have a right to ask for this information and I would request that the question be left on the order paper until it can be further considered by the government.

Mr. HOWE: Answered.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. McILRAITH: There is no point in leaving the question on the order paper, because the crown does not own Canadair Limited and never has. If the hon. member wants information on the subject of North Star aircraft, and if he will ask about that subject, I shall be happy to get such information as the government has. But he does not ask about that subject; he asks about the operations of Canadair Limited. We have not that information, and there is no method I know of by which to get it.

Mr. SPEAKER: Answered.

Mr. SKEY: Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon. member realizes it is against the rules to permit a debate on a question.

[Later:]

Mr. SKEY: May I ask Your Honour what you stated with respect to my question with regard to North Star aircraft?

Mr. SPEAKER: If the hon. member will look at the rules he will find that it is the privilege of a minister to refuse by reason of public interest to answer a question as put. There is nothing for me to do but to accept the word of the minister or his representatives.

[Mr. McIlraith.]

WAR SAVINGS CERTIFICATES

Mr. HANSELL:

Can war savings certificates be cashed without being discounted or without a charge being levied for the service?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes. War savings certificates may be forwarded postage free to the Registrar, War Savings Certificates, Ottawa. Cheques issued in redemption of certificates may be negotiated free of charge at any branch of any chartered bank in Canada upon satisfactory identification.

SOUTH SASKATCHEWAN IRRIGATION PROJECT

Mr. THATCHER:

Have any plans been concluded by the government to commence construction work during 1948 on the South Saskatchewan irrigation project?

Mr. McCUBBIN: No. Further survey and engineering work is necessary before construction can be considered.

SASKATCHEWAN IRRIGATION PROJECTS

Mr. THATCHER:

During the calendar year 1947, how much money was actually spent by the federal government for (a) surveying and engineering; (b) construction, on (1) the St. Mary's River irrigation project; (2) the Red River irrigation scheme; (3) the South Saskatchewan irrigation project?

Mr. McCUBBIN: Stand, with one correction. In the second part of the question it should be the Red Deer irrigation scheme and not Red River.

Mr. SPEAKER: Stand.

ARGENTINE EMBASSY

REQUEST FOR PROCEEDINGS AGAINST HUMANE SOCIETY INSPECTORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. DIEFENBAKER (Lake Centre): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It arises out of a press report that His Excellency the Argentine ambassador has asked the Canadian government, as additional to an apology, to institute proceedings against two humane society inspectors who in performing their meritorious duties allegedly invaded protocol. The question I wish to ask the minister is this: Is the minister in a position to report as to the attitude of the government towards this unusual request?

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I must say I learned with regret of this incident and of the inconvenience to which the Argentine ambassador may have been put. Then I carefully considered the legal aspects of the matter and came to the conclusion that the Department of External Affairs could not under the circumstances initiate proceedings of any kind. Now my understanding is that when the president of the humane society was apprised of this incident he immediately proceeded to the residence of the ambassador and expressed regrets, and followed that up with a letter, and to these regrets and those expressed by the chief of protocol of the Department of External Affairs I have added my own.

Mr. COLDWELL: As a supplementary question, may I ask to what extent, in the view of the Department of External Affairs, diplomatic immunity overrides municipal legislation, bylaws and so on. The question is interesting to municipalities as well as to diplomats.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I do not think I should at this time attempt a dissertation—

Mr. COLDWELL: We should like to know some time.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: —on the extent to which diplomatic immunities override municipal legislation. I think that in practice the good sense of all those concerned enables them to find solutions which dispose of any of the incidents that may arise.

HOUSING

QUESTION AS TO SUBSIDIZING CONSTRUCTION OF DWELLINGS FOR RENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. M. NICHOLSON (Mackenzie): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply. Has the minister received a communication from the Canadian association of women voters, Montreal, of which Madame Casgrain is president, in connection with subsidized low rental housing? Could he indicate whether or not Mr. Mansur was expressing government policy when he stated: "The present is a bad time to start subsidized rental housing"?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE: (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): I did receive a copy of the letter referred to, sent to me from the Prime Minister's office. In reply to the second part, I may say that government policy has been and will be announced by members of the government.

HEALTH INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION AT THE PRESENT SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. STANLEY KNOWLES (Winnipeg North Centre): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of continuing reports in the Winnipeg Citizen and other newspapers, and in view also of the fact that it was in the Liberal party's platform of 1919,—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. KNOWLES: —may I ask the Prime Minister whether the government is yet in a position to say whether health insurance legislation will be submitted at this session of parliament.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): In view of the extent of the preliminaries to the hon. member's question, I shall have to read it over before I can give an answer.

Mr. KNOWLES: You have had only twenty-nine years.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA

REFERENCE TO APPOINTMENT OF CONSUL IN MONTREAL

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to answer a question asked by the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) when I was absent on official duty elsewhere. On Thursday the hon. member referred to the appointment of Doctor Evzon Syrovatka, consul for Czechoslovakia in Montreal, and the question was in this form:

> Is this the same man who was declared persona non grata to the United States government for alleged subversive activities, and if so, was the government of Canada consulted before the appointment was made?

The answer I wish to make is this. Doctor Evzon Syrovatka was formerly an officer of the Czechoslovak embassy in Washington. The United States government recently informed the Czechoslovak embassy in Washington that he was persona non grata but it is not the fact that the United States government alleged that he had taken part in subversive activities. We have made careful inquiries and have received no information which would lead me to conclude that Doctor Syrovatka would in any sense be an undesirable or unreliable Czechoslovak consular representative in Montreal.

In accordance with normal diplomatic practice, the chargé d'affaires of the Czechoslovak legation in Ottawa has requested the Canadian government to give provisional recognition of Doctor Syrovatka as consul in charge of the Czechoslovak consulate general in Montreal, pending the arrival of his commission of appointment, when a request will be made for an exequatur for him.

I might add that we are informing the Czechoslovak chargé d'affaires that his request for provisional recognition of Doctor Syrovatka has been granted.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. A. CRUICKSHANK (Fraser Valley): May I direct a question to you, Mr. Speaker: in view of your ruling that in future no exhibits be allowed in the house, does the decoration worn today by the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Hackett) come under that ruling?

H.M.C.S. "MAGNIFICENT"

REFERENCE TO ARTICLE IN TIME MAGAZINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. L. LANGLOIS (Gaspe): I wish to direct the following questions to the Minister of National Defence. First, has his attention been called to an article in Time for April 19, on H.M.C.S. Magnificent, and is this article based on information received from the Department of National Defence? Second, are the statements in the article correct?

Hon. BROOKE CLAXTON (Minister of National Defence): In answer to the first question, Mr. Speaker, I would say that the article is partly derived from facts given to the correspondent of Time by the press officer at National Defence headquarters. These were not fully or correctly reported, certain of them having been lifted out of their context, while certain other information gathered from other sources is incorrect.

In answer to the second question, I would say that most of the statements in the article are not true, and because they are misleading and because of the possible effect on the services, I should correct them.

The article says:

> Because budget economies have hit the air divisions hard, less than half of its 125 pilots are fully qualified.

[Mr. St. Laurent.]

There are 130 pilots in the Royal Canadian Navy, not 125 as reported. Economies had nothing whatever to do with the proportion of pilots who are qualified. Although trained as pilots, there are 38 pilots who have not yet been fully trained for carriers; twenty-nine per cent, not fifty per cent as reported.

The article goes on:

> Its pilots are R.C.A.F. trained. For their flying service they may choose the navy if they prefer. Few do, for there is no special flight pay to attract men to the navy's air arm.

The fact is that there is a combined R.C.N. R.C.A.F. training schedule. whereby the R.C.A.F. trains pilots for the navy up to "wings standard," and the navy provides advanced operational and deck-landing training. But both pilots and observers enter the R.C.N. before training: neither is transferred from the R.C.A.F. during any stage in the training, as stated in Time. Contrary to Time, aircrew in the R.C.N. receive flying pay at the same rate as aircrew in the other two services—that is, $30 per month additional.

The article states that the two squadrons "will have an operational strength of only 18 aircraft against a regulation 40." The figure 40 is wrong. In addition to the 8 Sea Fury fighters and 10 Firefly IV fighter-bomber-reconnaissance aircraft of the latest operational types borne on H.M.C.S. Magnificent, there are at present 8 Sea-Fire fighters and 10 Firefly I fighter-bomber-reconnaissance aircraft at Dartmouth.

There are two more squadrons at Dartmouth, composed of miscellaneous types, for aircrew training and other necessary services.

In addition to the Sea-Furies now on H.M.C.S. Magnificent, we are awaiting delivery of a further number which have been on order for some time to provide reserves and spares for the fighter squadrons. Sea-Furies have an announced cruising speed of 300 miles per hour and a top speed of over 450 miles per hour. They are among the most modern and effective carrier-based planes. The use of jet-propelled aircraft from carriers is still in the experimental stage, and the purchase of the Sea-Furies is in line with the policy of keeping abreast of the best available equipment.

I should add that there is a steady need for additional officer personnel in the fleet air arm. The requirements are graduation from Royal Roads, Royal Military College or a university, for permanent officers, and senior matriculation for short service commissions.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION RESPECTING CO-OPERATIVES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. J. BENTLEY (Swift Current): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Will he inform the house if the government proposes to introduce at this session any legislation with respect to co-operatives such as was promised in the 1919 platform?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I shall have to look up the 1919 platform.

Mr. KNOWLES: May I send a copy over to the Prime Minister?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

POSTAL SERVICE

VETERANS PREFERENCE FOR POSTMASTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. FERGUSON (Simcoe North): I should like to address a question to the Postmaster General. Is it the practice of his department to give the preference, everything being equal, to returned soldiers in the appointment of postmasters in suburban areas? If so, why was a man who came here eleven years ago from Ireland given a preference at Phelpston, Ontario, over a flying veteran who served for five years in the recent war?

EXPORT AND IMPORT PERMITS

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE PENALTY FOR FURNISHING FALSE OR MISLEADING INFORMATION

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved the third reading of Bill No. 138, to amend the Export and Import Permits Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

VOCATIONAL TRAINING

EXTENSION OF 1942 ACT TO UNEMPLOYED PERSONS NOT APPLICANTS FOR UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Vocational Training Co-ordination Act, 1942, to extend vocational assistance to unemployed persons although such persons may not have applied for insurance benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1940.

Mr. COLDWELL: Is the intention of the minister to make a statement?

Mr. MITCHELL: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I think I should make a brief statement at this point.

The Vocational Training Co-ordination Act, 1942, was designed to provide legislative authority for the carrying out of the various forms of training in connection with the prosecution of the war, for the training of discharged members of the forces, and for forms of vocational training or assistance for vocational training foreseen as being desirable in the post-war period.

The act provides that all training may be undertaken by provincial authorities under agreements between the dominion and provincial governments providing for financial assistance by the dominion. Experience has shown that the provisions of the act in this respect have been entirely adequate to meet the situations and to provide the training for which it was designed.

From the inception of the act, the most important program was the war emergency training for war workers and tradesmen for the armed forces, and then the training of veterans preparatory to their return to civil life. A splendid job has been accomplished in these two fields through the joint efforts of the local and provincial educational authorities in co-operation with the Department of Labour. I regard our arrangements and relations with the provinces, for the carrying out of the provisions of the Vocational Training Co-ordination Act, as a most satisfactory example of what can be accomplished by dominion-provincial co-operation.

There has been established under the act a vocational training advisory council which includes representatives of the provinces, employers and labour and other interested groups. The work of this council has been of great assistance in the administration of the act.

One of the provisions of the act empowers the Department of Labour to undertake a training program or to enter into agreements with the provinces for the operation of a program, to fit for gainful employment persons directed for training by the unemployment insurance commission. Under the Unemployment Insurance Act, however, the only unemployed persons whom the commission may refer for vocational training are persons who are entitled to draw unemployment insurance benefits. Thus there is no provision under the Vocational Training Co-ordination Act for training of persons who have exhausted insurance benefits or have not been working in insurable occupations. It is proposed to broaden the scope of the training provisions of the act so that vocational training may be provided in approved cases. The idea is to fit those concerned to secure gainful employment offering better chances of permanency than they previously have had. This is the purpose and effect of the amendment to the Vocational Training Co-ordination Act, which is now being introduced.

Up to the present, fortunately, it has not been necessary to make very much use of the provision for the training of unemployed persons, because, outside of seasonal and temporary lay-offs, there has been little unemployment in Canada since the termination of the war in 1945. However, it is desirable to make provision for such training so that it may be provided when required.

This program for training of unemployed persons has been discussed with the provincial authorities and all provinces have expressed their willingness to co-operate with the dominion in plans for such training.

I think it will be of interest to members of the house to have some particulars of the training activities being carried on at the present time under the Vocational Training Co-ordination Act. First, there is training of discharged members of the forces as approved by the Department of Veterans Affairs. This is carried on in all provinces under the re-establishment training agreements. The dominion reimburses the provinces for one hundred per cent of these training costs. Second, we have youth training and assistance to students. This type of training was formerly carried on by the provinces with financial assistance from the dominion under the Youth Training Act, which was superseded by the Vocational Training Co-ordination Act. The youth training agreement is in operation in all provinces and the approved training costs are equally shareable by the dominion and the province. The program was initiated during the depression years. In recent years the dominion and provinces have joined in a wide range of courses for rural young people, both men and women, financial assistance to university students and nurses in training in hospitals.

We also have agreements with the provinces for either full-time or part-time training classes for apprentices indentured under provincial apprentice legislation. The training has been generally applicable for the building and construction trades. At the present time this plan is in effect in all provinces except Prince Edward Island and Quebec. The approved training costs thereunder are shared equally by the province and the dominion.

[Mr. Mitchell.]

Another phase of our work is assistance to vocational schools. The financial contribution provided under agreements with the provinces is a continuation in modified form of the provisions of the former Technical Education Act of 1919. The agreements cover the carrying on and expansion of vocational training on the secondary school level and are in operation in all provinces. The costs are shared equally by the provinces and the dominion. Under the terms of the agreement, a fixed amount is allotted to each province for each fiscal year.

I have referred to the training of unemployed persons generally, which is the proposal under the bill to be introduced.

Since the passing of the Vocational Training Co-ordination Act, up to January, 1948, the gross total of enrolments in vocational training projects was 662,896. This total is broken down as follows:

Workers for war industry	181,686
Supervisors and foremen in industry	150,844
Navy tradesmen	9,056
Army tradesmen	49,362
Air force tradesmen	65,214
Youth training schedules	50,776
University students and nurses	13,209
Correspondence training to apprentices, approx.	10,000
Discharged members of the forces (men and women trained since end of war)	132,349
Unemployed civilians—approx.	400

Of the discharged members of the forces enrolled for training, 2,103 have been in correspondence courses; 17,359 have been enrolled in private trade schools and business colleges; 28,746 have been enrolled for training on the job in industry; 29,358 have been enrolled in pre-matriculation classes; 54,783 have been in the regular vocational training classes. Veterans in the last two categories have been trained in schools under the supervision of the Department of Labour and carried on in co-operation with the provincial governments.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I believe this vocational training scheme is one of the most important and most interesting projects undertaken by joint agreement between the provinces and the dominion, and every encouragement should be given to the improvement the minister says is contemplated under this measure. While what he says is perfectly true, that up to the present time it has not been necessary to broaden it in the manner he suggests, since there has been little or no unemployment, obviously the high peak of demand may end within a measurable period or time. We have the Marshall plan going into operation which may defer it, but even if deferred for a year or two I think it is worthwhile making preparations now for the conditions that may arise afterward.

The defect I see in most projects of this description is that we train people in our universities for certain specialized vocations; we train them in our vocational schools and under such schemes as this, but we have no method of so arranging our future industrial and economic projects that we can guarantee them something to do when they have taken the training. It seems to me this is something we must think about, particularly in the future. Should there come a period of unemployment we cannot face again the prospect of having unemployed a large number of young people in our country, adequately trained to do jobs that are necessary to the welfare of the community. If we do, there will be not only a great deal of distress but a great deal of social difficulty. I suggest to the Minister of Labour that attention be given by the department to this phase of the matter.

One of the most satisfactory projects under this plan in the past has been the training of young people in our rural areas. Those of us who are acquainted with what has been done at some rural points in our provinces are appreciative of the fact that, really for the first time, training of this kind has been placed within reach of young people in the rural areas and on farms. Of course I realize that this has been a financial burden on some of the provinces, and that provision of the necessary facilities has imposed a strain on provincial departments of education. When new agreements are discussed, every consideration should be given to more generous aid to the provinces in order that they may carry out this project in the manner in which I am sure all hon. members of the house would like to see it carried out.

The measure when it comes before us should be discussed in the light of doing something for the thousands of young men and women who have taken advantage of this training—I was not aware until the minister gave the figure that such a large number of our service personnel were taking advantage of it, and I think it is a splendid thing to have such a high percentage of them enrolled.

Mr. MITCHELL: The number is 132,349.

Mr. COLDWELL: When we consider that this is in addition to the large number who have taken advantage of educational grants under the Department of Veterans Affairs we realize that coming out of this war there will be a group of young men and women better equipped to play their part in the economic and social life of the country than we have ever had before. That I think is an important fact in view of the conditions which this country may face in the future, when we expect our population to increase by immigration. Provided that we can find a satisfactory means of livelihood for those who come in, such immigration is to be welcomed, and it is well that we should have a well-organized and well-equipped group of young people who will be able to give leadership to those who have not had similar opportunities. If we get that much out of the war we shall have something that is really constructive. War is destructive in so many ways that a project which gives some hope for the future development of our country, both economically and socially, should be supported by all members of the house.

I shall be brief, Mr. Speaker, because this is not a subject which I have studied as fully as some other members of our party in the house; as hon. members know, we divide up the work of the session among us, and some members of our party have given particular attention to this matter. But in the first place I do wish to point out that having trained this group of young people to contribute to the economic life of the country, ways and means will have to be found to give them an opportunity to exercise the aptitudes developed under schemes of this kind. I do not think that can be done by any hit-or-miss method. We must find ways and means within our democratic society of so planning our economic life that we can give opportunities to all our people, not only to contribute in the field of industry and labour but to reap the fruits of that industry and labour and thus enjoy improved cultural standards also. I think this is becoming more and more apparent in every country, and it is perhaps because it is not being done in some countries that much unrest is prevalent throughout the world.

In the second place, no undue burdens should be placed upon the provincial departments of education. The costs of education have risen sharply in all our provinces. Teachers' salaries have risen, and properly so. They were lamentably and disgracefully low, and still are in many parts of the country. The cost of equipment has gone up tremendously. School supplies, books, papers, pencils, everything that is used in school, have increased in price, as well as the material required for cleaning and heating the buildings. The departments of education in some of our provinces have greatly expanded their services. They provide a health service now that we knew nothing about when I started to teach forty years ago.

Mr. MITCHELL: They were real schools that you and I attended.

Mr. COLDWELL: But changes have been made for the better. In my opinion generous aid should be given to the provinces to put this scheme into effect. If they have to increase their facilities, we should assume an obligation proportionate to our greater sources of revenue, which are much wider than those of the provinces.

That is all that I want to say at this stage, Mr. Speaker, but I am quite sure that other members of our party who have given more study to this subject will wish to comment on some aspects of the minister's statement.

Mr. J. H. FERGUSON (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I think this is a very worthy and outstanding plan of training ex-service personnel. I hardly think that our friends of the C.C.F. need have any fear of the future, because while the present government have no plans for increasing employment, and the C.C.F. have none, we of the Progressive Conservative party have a plan and in the near future we shall be in power and be able to fix everything.

Mr. CLARENCE GILLIS (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the resolution but I think the statement made by the minister was all too short.

Mr. MITCHELL: The shorter the speeches the more business we get done.

Mr. GILLIS: Had the minister's explanation been a little longer and more informative I might not have found it necessary to get up.

Mr. MITCHELL: The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) and I were taught at school that empty vessels make the most noise.

Mr. GILLIS: The resolution to extend the the Vocational Training Co-ordination Act is all right in itself but I wish to point out a few things which I think were wrong with the act originally.

In the first place, while the minister pointed to the large number of service personnel who had taken advantage of the act, I would point out that a large number of service personnel had no opportunity to benefit by it. I am referring to that group who through no fault of their own were denied the rights which others received. Hundreds of service personnel who came back from the war never had a job before entering the service, and when they applied for vocational training upon their return they found that they did not have the necessary basic education to qualify under the terms of the act, which require an eighth grade education. I know thousands of young boys who did not have that necessary basic education when they enlisted; consequently on their return they were relegated to the ranks of the unemployed, and so far as I know the great majority of them are still there. I refer particularly to my own part of the country.

Mr. MITCHELL: If my hon. friend has any facts to bear out that statement, I should like to have them.

Mr. GILLIS: You should know them.

Mr. MITCHELL: I do not want to interrupt my hon. friend, but provision has been made for those who have not matriculated. I presume that conditions are the same in Nova Scotia as in Ontario, where those who had not matriculated before going overseas were given the opportunity of taking the training.

Mr. GILLIS: I do not want to enter into an argument with the minister, but I have talked this matter over with his officials in the field, and have also discussed it in committees of the House of Commons; and I have pointed out that defect in the act. I am not talking about those who had their matriculation, I am talking about the young fellows who had no more than an eighth grade education. They did not qualify under the terms of this act and nothing was done for them.

I suggested before the war had finished that these young fellows should be given an opportunity to go back to school at government expense in order to obtain the basic education necessary to qualify under this act. Most of these boys were in their bare feet during the depression. Their fathers were working one or two days a week and were not able to send them to school. Through a lack of interest on the part of those in charge of this legislation no provision was made for these boys to be brought up to the standard of education necessary to qualify under the act. I want some understanding on this point before the bill finally goes through the house.

During the war the Department of Labour set up a vocational training scheme and apprenticeship plan in the mining industry. This worked out very well. It was the first time in the history of mining in this country that the Department of Labour or the government had recognized that some training was necessary. Prior to the war the conception of coal mining was that all that was necessary was a broad back and a weak mind. Then it became a matter of production essential to the war, and interest was taken in this industry. It was found to be a technical operation. You have to know something about ventilation; you have to know machinery; you have to know something about compressed air. All these things required study. The Department of Labour set up an apprenticeship plan under which boys would be sent down into the mine under proper supervision to be given a course of instruction for six months. That did not cost very much, because the coal produced by these young fellows during their apprenticeship period offset the cost of their training.

This plan was carried on during the war but as soon as the war finished the legislation was abandoned and the plan folded up. With the fuel situation in this country as it is, with our complete dependence upon the United States, the time has come when this industry should be developed. I think the Minister of Labour should have continued this legislation in connection with the coal mining industry and carried on the apprenticeship plan that was carried on during the war. If the industry is developed, this country could be made as nearly independent as possible of coal supplies from the United States. When the minister brings up this bill for second reading I want him to say something about that.

There is another point on which I want information. Unless the minister has the complete co-operation of industry in this country this legislation will be ineffective. I shall give him a case in point about which I have been writing him for the last two years. We have not got anywhere with it, but in this particular instance it is not the fault of the government. A group of service personnel came back to my home town. Prior to going into the service they were taking training in a large machine shop of the Dominion Coal Company. During the period of the war they were out. When they came back they were unable to come under this vocational training scheme because the company would not sign a contract with the government.

A government grant would have augmented the wages they were getting under the company apprenticeship plan. The result was that these fellows were losing from $1.50 to $2 per day. The government was quite willing to pay them but the company would not sign a contract. As I say, unless you can get the co-operation of industry this legislation will not be very effective.

My understanding of the terms of the resolution is that unemployed, regardless of whether they are service personnel or not, will be given vocational training in training camps or be placed in industries which have a vocational training set-up. It would not be a bad thing to make a start down in that end of Nova Scotia, because it is practically an unemployed camp today. There are 27,000 unemployed in the maritimes, and there is not a school I know of down there doing any kind of job in that field. I hope the minister is thinking in terms of something like that.

Unless you can offer these young fellows employment there is not much use in training them. That would mean just getting them off the streets for a short time. I want the minister to tell the house what they are going to do with the 27,000 unemployed in the maritimes even after they have been trained. There is no use in training them as machinists, or what have you, if after their period of training they are to be relegated to the ranks of the unemployed. Unless you have some program of employment for the unemployed in that part of the country there is no use in applying this palliative of vocational assistance. The whole thing must be considered in its relation to the prospects of employment after a man comes out of training.

I think the minister will have to make a more detailed statement before the bill goes through the house. Personally I want to know exactly what this proposed legislation means in relation to the 27,000 unemployed in the maritimes. I want to know what they are going to be trained for, the terms under which they are to be trained, and the prospects of employment after the period of training is over. I think the house is entitled to know that.

To just stand up and wave your arms and say that this is another step in the right direction is no good. We in this house should be ashamed to talk about unemployment. We on this half of the North American continent, with a population of 12,000,000, have more natural resources at our disposal than they have on the other half of the continent where the population is over 130,000,000. We should not be talking about unemployment in this country. These people should be put to work, with the world screaming for the production of this continent. It is a reflection upon the intelligence of everybody in this house to be talking in terms of unemployment in this country and setting up a scheme to train the unemployed in order to get them off the streets. These people should be working at producing the goods which the world so badly needs at this time.

Mr. DANIEL McIVOR (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to make a long speech, but there are one or two things which strike me as being important.

We are getting back now to first principles. Hon. members will recall the old Jewish nation where every man was taught a trade. Whether or not there was employment, if he had a trade and initiative he could get busy and earn his own living. That is one good thing in favour of this resolution. The other thing is this. When the leader of the C.C.F. (Mr. Coldwell) rises in his place and commends this resolution, it makes me believe that there must be something good in it or he would not commend it.

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. McIVOR: Thank you: I am glad you agree with a sensible speaker.

I do not agree with the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) that those who have not matriculation standing do not get the vocational training. Perhaps I am not stating it correctly. I have known young men who did not matriculate before they went overseas, but they received the groundwork, and at the end of this month they are graduating. One young man will graduate in electronics, and he did not have his matriculation when he took up the course. When we had our vocational school in Fort William a recommendation was sent forward to the provincial and dominion leaders of vocational training asking that the school should be continued for civilians, but it was not. This resolution is a step in the right direction. If it is any commendation to him may I tell the Minister of Labour that the experts in labour at the head of the lakes will support him thoroughly in this matter, and that is something. The resolution should be strongly supported because it is absolutely necessary.

As the hon. member for Cape Breton South said, we have great resources in this country We have also a government with unbounded initiative, and therefore we are certain to go ahead.

Mr. JOHN R. MacNICOL (Davenport): This resolution is in line with legislation which has been introduced in this house during all the years I have been here, and on every occasion I have supported it. One of the minister's predecessors, the late Norman Rogers, the former member for Kingston, had a very broad vision as to how to make a scheme like this operate. Unfortunately for this country he was taken away before his time. I really believe and did believe at that time that had he lived he would have put into operation schemes to follow up legislation such as this, because this is legislation for the training of young men, and every one of us is in favour of that, whether they are returned soldiers or not. I should say it is for them in particular, but for others as well, because all must make a living.

We must look forward to what these men are to do when they are trained. Today I had a letter from a young veteran from Nova Scotia who has been in Toronto for two or three months. He got out of employment about six weeks ago and I have written on his behalf to ten different companies in Toronto including the Toronto Transportation Commission, to try to get him a job. He had a distinguished record, but in his letter today he tells me that up to the moment he has been unable to get anything to do. This does not speak very well for opportunity, does it?

I know myself that the opportunities for employment are not anything like they used to be. I am not blaming anybody for that. The war is over. During the war multitudes of men were busy at making munitions. These factories are not now making munitions, unless some of them have started doing so again. I hope the minister will couple a program such as this with some other program or direction or body of control which will make it its business to see that those young men are placed in jobs when they graduate from the vocational schools.

On a trip recently I met a father who had three sons in the recent war. When I inquired about these three sons he told me that they were all in the United States. They had all gone to western United States to work on bureau of reclamation projects. Will this legislation include training or teaching in the vocations through which the bureau of reclamation of the United States has been able to provide many thousands of jobs? When the minister speaks again I should like him to tell us whether there will be instruction in the surveying for and the building of dams, and all that pertains to the construction of dams, concrete mixing, steel to be used in the construction of water conservation works and so forth. I know that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) has a program for western reclamation which, as it develops, will require many thousands of men in the construction of conservation works, irrigation works and all matters associated therewith. Therefore I should like to know whether this vocational training program will provide for the training of men required in this kind of employment.

Everyone knows that a large number of the soldiers who have come back received a great deal of training during the war in actual operation of engineering works associated with the war. This would be very useful to them if they were employed in the construction of reclamation works in western Canada. Will the program envision the training of men to work on reclamation programs? Will it have to do with the training of young men in the field of oil production? We all know that great oil companies such as Imperial Oil and others in this country are sending quite a number of young men, competent engineers and geologists, to every part of Canada to ascertain if there is oil in the areas into which they are sent. Will this program have to do with the training of young men who can be placed in fields where oil is to be developed, or in places in which oil is now being developed, such as the Leduc field and the Norman Wells field, and so on? I am convinced that besides training them we have to go a step further and make provision for their obtaining employment in the kind of activity toward which their training has been directed.

As a previous speaker has said, there is not much use in turning out trained young men unless there is something for them to do, particularly in Canada, because altogether too many young men are now crossing the line to obtain employment in the United States.

I am anxious to know whether the program will do three things. First, will it train young men for positions in the whole field of reclamation, including flood control works, irrigation works, water conservation works, and so on? Second, will it train them in the field of the promotion and development of oilfields in Canada and in all matters associated with the oilfields? I saw a large number of oilfields during a recent trip I made to the United States, and it was amazing to see the multitude of young men who were working on all sorts of vocations connected with this industry. Will the scheme cover that as well, and will there be some program to see that after these young men have been trained at Canada's expense, they will be provided with jobs in Canada to help to build up this great country?

Mr. F. S. ZAPLITNY (Dauphin): The resolution before us, although apparently it refers to an extension of the provisions of the act, does bring into focus the whole question of federal aid to education.

About two years ago I had the privilege of introducing a resolution in this house asking that the federal government provide financial assistance to the provinces for education. Unfortunately on that occasion there was not time to debate the resolution and bring it to a vote, but those who did take part in the debate agreed almost unanimously that the time had come when the federal government should take further steps in the direction of aid to the provinces generally for education. The act to be amended, should this resolution pass, is the Vocational Training Co-ordination Act, 1942. If the provisions of that act are not too strictly interpreted, assistance could be given over a very wide range of educational activities in the provinces. For example, under definitions, "vocational training" is defined thus:

> "Vocational training" means any form of instruction the purpose of which is to fit any person for gainful employment or to increase his skill or efficiency therein, and, without restricting the generality of the foregoing, includes instruction to fit any person for employment in agriculture, forestry, mining, fishing, construction, manufacturing, commerce or in any other primary or secondary industry in Canada.

According to that definition, there are very few activities in the field of education that could not be brought under this act. I realize, however, that the immediate purpose of the resolution is to extend the provisions of the act so as to cover unemployed persons, although such persons may not have applied for insurance benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

I wish to make an admission: in this respect Manitoba is probably the province most at fault, but unfortunately the provinces have not taken advantage of the act to the fullest extent possible. For example, I have the report on Canadian vocational training for 1946-47 and it shows that in the matter of replacement of depreciated equipment in vocational schools, Manitoba made use of only $8,000 whereas it could have used a great deal more than that under the act. Further, in connection with youth training, I find that Manitoba used only $3,167.59 in 1946-47, whereas it had an allotment of $20,000.

One reason for the failure to make use to the greatest extent of the opportunity afforded is to be found in the fact that the greater part of Manitoba is made up of rural school districts which are organized on the single-district basis, and outside the city of Winnipeg, where there is a different system, it has been difficult for the school districts of Manitoba to furnish even elementary education, what we sometimes call primary education, for the children of the province, to say nothing of going into the technical and vocational branches, which they cannot afford. For that reason, the province has not been able up to this time to make the fullest use of the provisions of the act.

There is, however, an encouraging sign. It so happens that we have now one of the larger-unit areas, taking in a whole group of school districts under one administration. This happens to be in my constituency, and in the town of Dauphin within the last two years there has been set up what is called the technical school branch. I have seen it personally and I think it can compare with any similar branch anywhere in the province, or perhaps, for that matter, in western Canada. A real attempt has been made to bring technical and vocational education into that part of the province. which is the first step of the kind taken anywhere in Manitoba outside the city of Winnipeg. That is only the first step. Other parts of the province are taking similar steps, thus attempting to provide education of a kind which the individual school districts, organized on their present basis, could not finance.

In Saskatchewan and Alberta they have gone much further in the direction of grouping small school districts into larger areas so as to have a central high school or college in which they can provide the higher forms of education, including technical and vocational training. There is wide scope for the federal government to give assistance.

There might be some dispute if one were to advocate general grants in aid to the provinces for education, because then questions with respect to constitutional difficulties, as well as many other considerations, might enter into it. But there is a clear field in vocational technical training; here there is no dispute as to the right of the dominion to provide assistance, because the act has been in operation since 1942, and I believe the federal government could with perfect propriety enter the field of furnishing equipment and facilities. At present these are the real bottlenecks in the field of technical and vocational training.

It is true there is a shortage of personnel, but the provinces could look after that end of it. Provision of equipment and buildings, which are so expensive these days, is something which the federal government could very well look into.

I should like to put on record a resolution which was passed in December 1946. This is the first opportunity that has presented itself for a debate of this kind of legislation; therefore I should like to put this resolution on the record. It deals with grants in aid for higher education for university students, returned service personnel. It was sent on to us by the Co-operative Commonwealth University Federation, and reads:

> We endorse the policy of federal government assistance to war veterans to enable them to undertake university training;
>
> We condemn the inadequacy of D.V.A. grants which have resulted in great hardship for veterans without other means of income; and we point out that the inadequacy of these grants increases daily with the rising cost of living;
>
> We believe that under no circumstances should the pre-war condition be allowed to return, with thousands of students unable for financial reasons to complete their education;
>
> Therefore we urge that educational grants to veterans be immediately raised to an adequate level, and that plans be laid down now to extend the principle of federal grants in aid for higher education, by means of:
>
> 1. An extensive scholarship system to enable all students of ability to complete their university training;
>
> 2. A program of interprovincial scholarships to enable students in considerable number to complete their education in other parts of Canada, particularly to facilitate an interchange of students between English-speaking and French-speaking Canada;
>
> 3. Federal assistance for students of outstanding ability to study outside Canada, on condition that they return to work in Canada for a specified number of years or repay the state for the assistance provided.

This was passed in 1946 and certain changes have taken place since that time, but in essence what is set out in the resolution still applies. I believe the federal government should give favourable consideration to a plea of that kind.

Mr. W. GARFIELD CASE (Grey North): I will not detain the house very long, but I wish to make this observation. The proposal to provide for vocational or educational training is all to the good so long as it remains on a voluntary basis, that is to say, so long as the applicant can make his own choice. Too often we read that a plan is made by some government or planning authority and the individual is subjected to training which he may or may not desire, with the result that there is a measure of socialism or social planning.

I have every reason to believe that no such provision will be made in this bill under the present Minister of Labour (Mr. Mitchell). But I cannot help listening with concern when I hear the leader of the C.C.F. suggest to this house that we should make this a land of opportunity. The challenge that applies to everyone in this country is to seize the opportunity himself. All too often the tendency is to delegate to some authority the responsibility for planning.

The hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) suggested that we in this house should be ashamed to talk about unemployment. I do not know that anyone talks about unemployment to any great extent. I suppose there is a certain amount of seasonal unemployment at this time. Surely we are not going to suggest to the government that they take it upon themselves to direct the employers of labour. As a matter of fact my own considered opinion is that the sooner the government gets away altogether from planning and delegates to the individual himself the responsibility to do a little foraging for himself, the better it will be for the individual. He will retain a sense of personal pride in himself, and no doubt will make a greater contribution to the common national welfare.

I am not prepared to go along with the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McIvor) in reference to the abundance of initiative that is evident in the government. Nevertheless I feel that we would do well to accept the resolution and proceed to the stage where we shall have an opportunity to examine the bill; because one of the desires of any individual should be so to train and qualify himself that he can make some contribution to society and feel a sense of security in his knowledge of how to make that contribution. Above all, the constant desire of everyone should be to learn how to make a living. That is the measure of success. If you can forge ahead in this competitive world, if you have the initiative, the ambition and the courage to go forward, there is no doubt that this is a land of golden opportunity.

Mr. F. D. SHAW (Red Deer): When the Vocational Training Co-ordination Act received approval in this house we gave it our support. We recognized fully that there was a place for this type of training in Canada. We recognized also that it provides an opportunity for the federal government to lend sorely-needed assistance in the field of education. It is appropriate therefore that I should state that we are also prepared to give approval to any extension of the benefits or opportunities to be provided under the Vocational Training Co-ordination Act of 1942.

While it can be agreed that the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) had a point in his reference to unemployment, we must face the fact that we have unemployment and are likely to continue to have a certain amount of it. Therefore the very least we can do is to provide a type of training for the unemployed, and more particularly, as the resolution now states, for those who have not applied for benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

On a number of occasions we have urged that the federal government provide greater assistance in the field of education. We feel that education is something which benefits not only the individual so educated but also Canada as a whole; and more particularly, where we find a free movement of people throughout Canada, we feel that we can ill afford to have one part of Canada obliged to provide a lesser degree of educational opportunity than another. I well recall that when the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Zaplitny) introduced his motion a couple of years ago, we gave unqualified support to the demands which he included in his observations with respect to education. The province of Alberta has had most pleasant experiences in the field of vocational training. I believe the minister would be the first to agree that Ottawa has received unqualified support from Alberta in that field. We feel that the results have been splendid. We should like to see the opportunities further advanced in our province so that a greater number of our young people may acquire this necessary training, which is good for them whether they ever use it or not.

I should like to pay particular tribute to our instructors in those vocational training schools. If I were to lodge a complaint, I would say that the compensation which they receive is altogether too little when one has regard to the kind of work they are doing. I well realize that the minister would likely advise me that the province established the rate of pay, and that, provided it meets with the approval of Ottawa and is in keeping with the general wage scales they are quite satisfied with it. I feel—and whether I am talking to the dominion Department of Labour or to the provincial governments does not make any difference to me—that the instructors should have more adequate compensation for the splendid service they are rendering. I should think the minister would be careful to see to it that these salaries are in keeping with the type of work done.

Veterans who have acquired good training under the Vocational Training Co-ordination Act have found it impossible on graduation to acquire the tools necessary for the carrying on of their work. Sometimes the cost of these tools is substantial. I should like to see steps taken to make grants to these veterans, or loans, if nothing better can be offered, in order that they may not be deprived of the opportunity of engaging in the type of work for which they have been trained.

As I said at the outset, we approve the Vocational Training Co-ordination Act and we welcome extensions to it. We shall act accordingly when a decision is rendered by the house on this measure.

Mr. J. O. PROBE (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mitchell) for the opportunity, under the discussion of this act, to speak in general terms on the subject of federal aid to education. Vocational training, which is the subject up for discussion this afternoon, is to my mind something which goes beyond the narrow definition contained in the act, and should be defined as training of any kind that assists in the earning of a living. Having a lengthy first-hand experience with problems of Canadian education, I wish to state my views on the duty of the federal government in the educational field.

I wish to preface my speech by the statement that I concur in the wisdom of the British North America Act of 1867, by which education was made a responsibility of the provinces. With the reasons for the decentralization of control of education, no member of this house can seriously disagree. I must, however, remind the house that the federal system under which Canada is governed was made possible in the first place by the undertaking on behalf of the central government—a fact often forgotten—that since the provincial governments surrendered to the dominion the field of indirect taxation—this being in 1867 the source of greatest revenue—the federal government, in effect, guaranteed to the provinces sufficient subsidies to meet their local needs.

In view of the encroachment by Ottawa upon the taxing powers of the provinces in the field of direct taxation, this principle must be restated; that confederation in 1867 carried with it responsibility on the part of Ottawa to the provinces for adequate sums of money with which to meet their ordinary requirements. This contention is supported in a study of dominion-provincial relations prepared by Eggleston and Kraft in 1939, and I should like to read a quotation from page 119 of that study:

> Quebec was in none too strong a financial condition during the early years of confederation. During the period 1874-1882, Quebec borrowed over $15,000,000 for expenditures upon railways, thereby increasing its interest charges. In March, 1883, the province submitted a petition to the dominion government stating that Quebec did not dispute the fact that the terms of 1867 were to have been final, but that these provisions had been based upon the belief that subsidies would be sufficient to meet local expenditures.

As a matter of record, in 1867 dominion subsidies provided sixty per cent of ordinary provincial expenditures; but in spite of frequent and insufficient readjustments as provincial needs were presented to Ottawa, by 1930 the dominion government was contributing less than ten per cent of ordinary provincial expenditures. With impending ruin in many of the provinces in depression years, this percentage of ten per cent was raised, but it has never reached the original figure of sixty per cent in effect in 1867.

It has been argued by hon. members in this house that provincial autonomy would be in jeopardy should Ottawa provide subsidies adequate for provincial purposes, especially for education. Such a view is short-sighted with respect to revenues for the educational needs of a democracy. It is contrary, too, to at least one statute passed last century by the Canadian parliament. I quote again from Eggleston and Kraft at page 140, dealing with the financial difficulties of Manitoba after its entry into confederation.

> The dominion refused to take any action upon these complaints, but it did advance $30,000 during the year 1882-83 for educational purposes.

That was by 47 Victoria, chapter 7. Revenue for education in Canada has always been hard to find. In no field of public expenditure has there been a more sacrificing spirit manifested by its servants, that is, the overloaded teachers; and nowhere has there been more value given for the meagre dollars spent. Teaching is still the altruistic field of the social pioneer, with its rewards rarely in money or in material advantage but only in the satisfaction of well done community service. The day of the itinerant and ignorant army man with birch rod and discipline as his only teaching certificate has happily ended. His round of free board, by staying a week at a time at the home of each student, has been superseded by a meagre pay cheque approaching that of the unskilled industrial worker. The money for Canadian education is still far less plentiful, shame to relate, than it is for liquor.

So unsatisfactory was the educational accomplishment in Canada that in 1909 various trade unions asked the Canadian government to appoint a royal commission on industrial training and technical education. Sir Wilfrid Laurier appointed this commission in June, 1910, and in 1914 its report was presented to parliament. The outbreak of world war I shortly after prevented any action from being taken upon its recommendations, but in 1919 the sum of $10,000,000 was voted for technical secondary education in the provinces on a conditional basis, and at that time special provision was made for agricultural education.

In 1929 the government of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) passed an act continuing the grants authorized to the provinces in 1919 for a further five years; that is, in so far as it concerned the unexpended portion of the grants voted at that time, which amounted to some $1,500,000.

These conditional grants, small though they were, had given a boost to technical education across Canada, and there was much criticism of the Canadian government on their threatened discontinuance. Accordingly in 1931 the Bennett administration voted a further $750,000 only, for fifteen years, by way of educational assistance to the provinces. When I see the change of attitude of some of my hon. friends to the right on this subject I need only say that times must have changed indeed since 1931, because, of the grant of $750,000 for fifteen years, made by the Bennett administration, not one penny has yet been spent.

During the late depression years, and during the war, some further expenditures—many of which have been referred to in this house this afternoon—were made by the dominion government for various types of relief and military and industrial education. Since world war II, the Department of Veterans Affairs has assumed the bulk, not all, of the cost of veteran education, and of apprenticeship and industrial training programs.

So, Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw to the attention of the house and the country how insignificant in fact has been the help of the federal government toward this most important branch of Canadian life. In this country we prate about the menace of communism. We talk of its danger, but we have not the national backbone to do anything about it in a way that really counts. If our way of life is superior—and I feel that it can be made so—I suggest that there is no better way to make it work than by putting cash on the line to educate our future citizens, in order that they may be equipped to live the Canadian way and may be immune to the blandishments of the totalitarian ideology. The man trained to think for himself and equipped for the emergencies of life, given the opportunity to live his life in the way of his own choosing, is not led astray by any foreign siren.

It is the duty of this House of Commons to take practical steps to win the war of ideas. Prohibitions and commandments are not enough. The most practical form is to vitalize, through provincial subsidies, the educational sinews with which the base of undesirable isms may be shattered. Where a province spends a good deal on education, its effects go beyond the borders of the province itself.

I have shown in a rough way what limited aid has been given from the federal purse to meet the educational needs of our people. In 1883 Quebec stated that federal subsidies were intended to be sufficient to meet local expenditures. In the field of education we are moving farther and farther from this implied condition of confederation. In 1900, according to the dominion bureau of statistics, the total enrolment in the publicly controlled day schools of Canada was 1,086,381, while in 1944 it was 2,056,743, or roughly double the enrolment at the beginning of the century. By provinces this figure is divided as follows:

	1900	1944
Prince Edward Island	21,289	17,179
Nova Scotia	100,129	114,879
New Brunswick	67,159	89,797
Quebec	311,253	620,106
Ontario	494,217	645,308
Manitoba	50,460	119,974

Saskatchewan and Alberta were not separated in 1900, the provinces not yet having been formed, but for 1900 the combined figure for the two provinces was 20,343, and for 1944 the figures were 179,372 for Saskatchewan and 151,985 for Alberta. The table continues:

	1900	1944
British Columbia	21,531	119,043
Total	1,086,381	2,056,743

Figures for high school enrolment, while not available for 1900, show an even greater expansion than do those for elementary schools in the figures available for the period from 1921 to 1944.

The dominion bureau of statistics indicates that in 1921 the number of students in secondary schools, above grade 8, in Canada, excluding Quebec, for which no statistics for 1921 are available, were 86,156, and in 1944 had almost trebled, the total being 241,215.

With the consent of the house I should like to put on the record a summary prepared by the dominion bureau of statistics, showing the number of students in secondary schools of Canada for the years 1921 and 1944:

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): Has the hon. member leave to put the table on Hansard?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. PROBE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The table is as follows:

	1921	1944
Prince Edward Island ...	1,737	2,548
Nova Scotia	9,705	14,341
New Brunswick	2,863	9,735
Ontario	42,551	111,448
Manitoba	8,615	18,831
Saskatchewan	5,917	31,202
Alberta	7,509	28,285
British Columbia	7,259	24,825
Total (Excl. Quebec)...	86,156	241,215

The two sets of figures that I have thus far presented indicate the expansion in enrolment since the turn of the century. The cost of this expansion has been met almost entirely by local school district taxation and provincial grants, the amounts for each province or for each district depending largely on the sense of public responsibility of the citizens, and limited by the relative financial strength within the district or within the province.

The dominion bureau of statistics has prepared a table indicating the revenue of the public schools of Canada for 1944 by provinces, which, with the consent of the house, I wish to place on the record.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): Has the hon. member consent to place the table on Hansard?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. PROBE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The table is as follows:

Revenue of Public Schools 1944 (By provinces)

	Gross Revenue	Per Pupil
Prince Edward Island ...	$ 612,488	$35.65
Nova Scotia	5,277,299	45.94
New Brunswick	3,468,361	38.62
Quebec	30,337,234	48.92
Ontario	55,268,313	85.65
Manitoba	9,293,887	89.05
Saskatchewan	15,316,030	85.33
Alberta	12,803,060	84.24
British Columbia	11,159,456	90.39

When this is broken down on a per pupil basis the provincial expenditures fall into two well-defined groups. In the one group are the provinces of Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Quebec, in that order, with Prince Edward Island spending in 1944 $35.65 per pupil.

In the other group are found Alberta, Saskatchewan, Ontario, Manitoba and British Columbia, in that order, with Alberta having a gross revenue per pupil of $84.24, and British Columbia $90.39.

One could argue that the two groups of provinces I have mentioned attach lesser or greater importance to the need for education, depending on the group in which the province falls. I feel that this argument is fallacious and is not necessary for the purpose of demonstrating the need of much-expanded federal grants. With various exceptions, the brunt of bearing even the limited costs of education, as indicated in the table just presented, has fallen, and will continue to fall unless the federal government assumes its rightful role in providing finances, upon the teacher in the class-room. And strangely enough, where the need for exceptional teaching qualifications is greatest, namely, in the one-room rural school, there the remuneration in every province is below that of the unskilled farm-hand working in the same district.

Unfortunately the dominion statistics are not up to date with respect to this matter, but I have here a table prepared by the bureau to show the average salary, by provinces, excluding Quebec, for the public schools of Canada, for the year 1944. This table gives the average salary for all teachers in the public schools, of each province mentioned, for the city schools and for one-room rural schools. With the consent of the house, I should like to place these figures on Hansard.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Golding): Has the hon. member the consent of the house to place these figures on Hansard?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. PROBE: They are as follows:

	All Schools	City Schools	One Room Rural Schools
Prince Edward Island	$ 587	$ 943	$ 538
Nova Scotia.....	736	1,281	580
New Brunswick	740	1,355	612
Ontario	1,209	1,806	1,021
Manitoba	982	1,885	843
Saskatchewan	924	1,696	902
Alberta	1,139	1,760	996
British Columbia	1,471	1,795	1,007

These figures show a spread of remuneration from a low of $538 a year for teachers of one-room rural schools in Prince Edward Island, to a high of $1,885 a year for the city schools of Manitoba.

I am not arguing at this stage that the federal government should subsidize salaries of teachers, even though I feel that the federal taxpayers' dollar could be spent to no better advantage. I believe, however, that the federal government can, within the framework of the British North America Act, either make outright grants for certain educational purposes, the administration of which could well be handled under federal agencies now existing, or easily set up; or in other fields make conditional grants based on comparable contributions by the provinces, with the provinces doing the administering.

For example, in the field of adult education, it is not likely that there would be jurisdictional disputes were the government to finance a comprehensive course in Canadian citizenship, especially to new immigrants.

A country as progressive as ours should be able to afford a national library, with branches across Canada, to make available to its meanest citizen literary and historical documents.

The federal government could foster appreciation of music, through national symphony orchestras, and an expansion through the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation of various types of musical education. Encouragement of national arts and crafts would be a stimulus to our artists, our home builders and our technicians.

No one could quarrel with generous contributions to university graduates and college professors for research scholarships, travelling fellowships, tenable both in Canada and abroad.

Instead of relying on the ability of parents or the generosity of private philanthropists, needy students of brilliant attainments should be provided from federal funds with competitive scholarships at each year of university training.

Teachers in high schools and elementary schools could be provided with sabbatical scholarships to refresh themselves in the noble work they are pursuing for Canadian children. Funds should be provided for drama and language classes over C.B.C., and the work of the national film board subsidized to provide films at all school levels.

The Department of National Health should provide refresher courses in health topics and in household science to teachers of these subjects and provision should be made for refresher courses in art, music and primary methods.

Rather than spend money on cadet training, I would build the physique of our youth by an extension of the physical fitness program through the schools by sponsoring athletic displays and encouraging interprovincial playdowns for team sports.

All these fields could, in my view, be taken over or initiated under federal sponsorship, without conflict of jurisdiction with the provinces. Where conditional grants have their place is, I think, in the fields of apprenticeship and industrial training, for which I wish here to give credit to the Minister of Labour and his department. I think this work is worthwhile and the money spent is reaping direct returns in national well-being.

Much has been said in this House of Commons about our young people leaving Canada because of greater opportunities in the United States or elsewhere. This trend could be arrested in part were the dominion government to endow special faculties of universities or departments of education at present unavailable in Canada.

A slight amount of progress has been made, again through the labour department, through conditional grants for capital costs of buildings and equipment, used for occupational training as has been mentioned this afternoon. These grants should, in my view, be extended to include schoolhouses and dormitories for high school students coming from remote rural areas.

As I said earlier, our way of life can be threatened by foreign ideologies only if we do nothing to make it more attractive. The day of education consisting of a boy on one end of a log and Mark Hopkins on the other should be ended for Canada. The start from a federal viewpoint has been meagre and grudgingly given. Let us save the future of Canada by the dominion government making a tenfold expansion in its contribution to the future of Canadian education.

Mr. C. E. STEPHENSON (Durham): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister if an opportunity will be given to those who start vocational training to complete their courses. If not, there will be no value in this plan. The minister knows quite well that there were many ex-service men who had to wait until they were old enough to enlist. They enlisted late in the war and served for only five, six or seven months. The amount of training they were able to take was based upon their length of service.

Many of these young men wanted to take their junior or senior matriculations, but they found that at the end of five, six or seven months their training period was over and they had to leave school. I brought this matter to the attention of the minister and I think some consideration should be given to these young men.

I consider this resolution a step in the right direction. Above everything else, we need vocational training in this country. The trades have lost dignity. Many of the younger people feel that they should have a university education and I think this move to give dignity to the trades is in the right direction.

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, one hon. member said something about my making only a short statement. I am a great believer in short statements as long as the information is there. A long speech is like a long letter. A long letter is rarely read and a long speech is never read and rarely listened to. I sometimes think that if we took out the desks in this chamber and had it only half as large as it is we would get through in three months rather than six. I am a great believer in debate in the conversational manner as takes place in the House of Commons in Great Britain. There the members have a few notes in front of them and they make their speeches so that everyone can hear. That being as it may, I simply make the observation in the light of what was said by one hon. member.

When a minister makes a statement I do not think it is his business to read a report which every hon. member can get. I am speaking to the resolution and am dealing with the principles of the resolution. Most of the information that has been asked for this afternoon by hon. gentlemen could have been obtained from the report on vocational training if they had taken the trouble to read it.

Other hon. gentlemen have referred to the responsibility of the federal government in connection with vocational training and education generally. The hon. member for Regina City (Mr. Probe) developed the history of technical education from the federal point of view. A royal commission was appointed in 1910 by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and one of the members of that commission was a personal friend of mine. The sum of ten million dollars was voted and spent in co-operation with the provinces in establishing technical training schools throughout the dominion. Even up to this day there is at least one province which has not spent its portion of that ten million dollars.

It is quite easy to rise in one's place in this house and talk about spending millions and millions. I have a vivid memory of a little Scotch town. A man who had been born in that town came to North America and made a fortune in the steel industry. He gave his home town a magnificent library, a swimming pool and a vast park but he gave them so much that he impoverished the community which tried to maintain them.

Whether we like it or not, the provincial governments have jurisdiction over education. I wonder what some hon. members would say if it were suggested that, because of the money being spent by the dominion, we should take over education in the provinces. It is quite easy to get up and say what we should do for education as a federal government, irrespective of the party in power, but the fact remains that the provinces are jealous of their prerogatives.

I do not know of any provincial government that is in destitute circumstances today. I know of no time in the history of this country when the provincial governments have had greater surpluses than at the present time. One hon. gentleman referred to the need for this type of education. I want to say that I have never seen a man who could handle a hammer, saw or file who was destitute under normal circumstances.

Mr. CAMPBELL: What is the file for?

Mr. MITCHELL: To file some sense into the brains of some hon. members. I have tried to express myself in simple language. If I had made my remarks complicated so that the hon. member for Regina City could not understand them he would have thought it was wonderful. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) says that I could not.

Mr. KNOWLES: I interrupt sometimes, but this time I did not say a word.

Mr. MITCHELL: I was greatly impressed by the observations of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) about the placement of these people after they have been trained. I think we have made great strides in connection with the special placement department of the unemployment insurance commission which handles handicapped people. We are considering setting up vocational guidance departments in the communities in which we have offices established. Technical education is a slowly growing thing. Rome was not built in a day and neither will this scheme come to full fruition in twenty-four hours after the foundation has been set.

Mr. COLDWELL: Are you giving special training to placement officers in view of the large number of classifications that exist?

Mr. MITCHELL: Yes, and I will tell you where I got the idea from. They did it when I was a youngster in England. I do not know that there is much more I need say until we are in committee on the bill.

Someone referred to the hardships suffered by veterans. I am not talking about the married veteran. I think that even a veteran—like many hon. members I was a veteran myself of the first great war—in order to obtain a university education should make some contribution and sacrifice for that education. The best students are those who do so. If the state provides a measure of support during the school term, it is the obligation and the duty of the student during the vacation period at least to endeavour to augment the amount of money provided by the state.

Let me say that my department has a special division for finding employment for veterans who are attending university. It has been very successful. Only yesterday I received a letter from a student in the United States. He said that his American friend said that he wished the employment service in that country had the same kind of organization. We all know that there are not enough universities in this country to permit all the men and women who were engaged in the last war to avail themselves of a university education, notwithstanding the generous assistance rendered by the Canadian people. Many of the men who came back from the war went into industry. Had they not done so, the manpower situation that exists at the moment in a broad and general way would have been much more difficult than it is. I repeat, I think that a university education is worth a little bit of sacrifice and struggle to obtain.

Basically this bill rounds out the policies which have been set in motion since I have been in the ministry to make provision for the training of youths and adults. It was found that there was a missing link in the chain in the Unemployment Insurance Act. You can refer people who are enjoying and receiving unemployment insurance benefits to training; but once these benefits run out, the assistance lapses because there is no legislative provision to maintain it. Then, of course, there are other people who are not within the four walls of the legislation, people who are not at the moment paying unemployment insurance.

I have always felt that it is far better to train a person to earn a livelihood than for the state to support him. This is a simple amendment. The idea behind it is the training of men and women who, through circumstances over which they have no control, are unable to earn a livelihood. The machine is more or less in the process of being set up. In the very nature of things, consultations must be had with the provinces with respect to any advisory group or placement group that will be responsible for deciding who shall and who shall not be trained. It is the joint responsibility of the people who supply the money and the equipment, and they, of course, are the provincial and the federal governments. It is my intention to set up advisory committees in the different regions, composed of employers, employees and employees' organizations. That is a vital necessity in a training program of this kind.

When we go into committee I shall endeavour to answer all questions that hon. members may ask.

Mr. MacNICOL: Is the minister going to answer the questions I asked him?

Mr. MITCHELL: Yes. The hon. member asked about oil drilling and building dams. I touched on that lightly. Before any classes are established in a province it is necessary to get co-operation, not only co-operation but also support of the provincial governments to join with us in establishing these classes. If there is any province in Canada where that can be done I am sure the dominion government will co-operate.

Mr. STEPHENSON: I made reference to—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. May I suggest to the hon. member that if he wants to ask questions he should wait until we get into committee.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Golding in the chair.

Mrs. STRUM: A few moments ago the minister made the statement that it was easier to train people and permit them to earn their own living than to support them. Will this amendment cover people who are physically incapacitated or partly incapacitated, people who need sheltered employment?

Mr. MITCHELL: When I was speaking I thought I mentioned that we have a division in the unemployment insurance commission to deal with the placement of physically handicapped people. I have not the figures under my hand at the moment, but I think it will be found that we made a very good start in that regard in the last twelve months. If the provinces wish to co-operate I see no objection to setting up classes in that regard.

Mr. COLDWELL: The minister thinks that it would come within the four corners of the resolution?

Mr. MITCHELL: We must have the co-operation of the provinces.

Mrs. STRUM: I wondered whether there was any particular clause or section in the bill in which it was definitely stated.

Mr. MITCHELL: No; the bill is broad in its terms, as the hon. member will see when she gets it. It will take in almost anything.

Mr. STEPHENSON: When I spoke a few moments ago I mentioned the possibility of those who start their courses being permitted to finish them. Will some guarantee be given by the minister that they will be allowed to complete their courses, so that the training will be of some value to them and not like the courses which were given to some veterans based on their training of five or six months? That is all they were entitled to when they came out of the armed forces, because they had been only five or six months in the forces.

Mr. MITCHELL: There is no intention whatever at the moment to provide university courses by this bill. The question raised by the hon. member had to do with the amount of training based on the length of service.

Mr. STEPHENSON: That is right.

Mr. MITCHELL: The hon. member will have to talk to the Department of Veterans Affairs about that. My department does the training; they do the choosing. They lay down the rules and the principles.

Mr. STEPHENSON: It was apparently your department.

Mr. MITCHELL: We do the training.

Mr. STEPHENSON: My point is this: what is the use of training a boy for five months and then kicking him out in the middle of the course, telling him, You are finished?

Mr. COLDWELL: I do not think the minister quite understood the question I asked when I interrupted him during his last remarks about the placement officers. With the complicated and complex industrial system we now have, there are a very large number of different types of jobs. The point I was interested in was this. Is the department doing anything either to provide for or to encourage special training for placement officers so that they will understand the differentiation of the jobs? I saw a report, I think from a United States source, a year or so ago. I have forgotten the figures, but they ran into several thousand job classifications, all the way down. I have not heard lately, but in former days, I heard of persons who had applied for a job and been offered something quite unsuitable, largely because the man behind the desk was perhaps not as well trained in placement as he should be in these days. In the appointment of officers, in the exchanges across the country, is some attention being given to the qualifications of persons for the placement of applicants or, on the other hand, are any steps being taken by the department to give some specialized training to officers so that they may be adequately equipped to deal with the placement of applicants?

Mr. MITCHELL: We are continually training people. Of course the engineering of material things is an exact science and is entirely different from the engineering of human beings.

Mr. COLDWELL: Certainly. Psychology is an important factor.

Mr. MITCHELL: Yes. In the unemployment insurance commission, dealt with under the other bill I am introducing, people are being continually trained. In a broad way, we have not done too badly in Canada.

Mr. MacNICOL: I know that in Toronto the heads of the department have been for some time sending out to various plants members of their personnel to see for themselves just what goes on in this and that line of manufacturing. I have come in contact with this work, and I was pleased to see that the department was training its officials so that they might more intelligently answer applicants coming to their desk. I cannot speak for other parts of the country, but I know that in Toronto an honest effort is being made to train personnel so that they can answer applicants intelligently.

[Mr. Mitchell.]

Mrs. STRUM: There is one phase of this work which, so far as I know, has not been considered. I refer to the rehabilitation of persons coming out of tuberculosis sanatoria. In almost every province there is free treatment for tuberculosis, but we would be appalled if we knew how many people come out of these institutions only to find themselves forced back into them for the simple reason that they have to compete with others who are well, and under these conditions try to do a full-time job. There is a field for research in order to find out whether light and part-time employment can be provided for persons coming out of sanatoria. We must make sure that they do not overdo it and thus become repeaters.

I have had a good deal of experience with tuberculosis sanatoria for a number of years, and I am thinking of one lad who in the end went out and committed suicide because he had found readjustment so difficult. He had been a repeater on a number of occasions and had to go back and live in a home where conditions were impossible if he expected to remain well. There is an important field here.

Treatment in tuberculosis institutions is costly, and it involves hospitalization not for weeks but for years. I have known people to come out of these institutions after having been in for fourteen years. The cost of treatment is as high as it is because we give not only medical care but special housing and special diet. I am sure the provinces would be only too glad to co-operate with the federal government in investigating the kind of training required, and then the employment service that goes with placement, with a view to helping these people to stay well, instead of leaving them to face the terrible discouragement and heartbreak that such people invariably experience.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Mitchell thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 202, to amend the Vocational Training Co-ordination Act, 1942.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING CONTRIBUTIONS, PROCEDURE, OFFENCES AND PENALTIES

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1940, to enlarge the scope of the act, to clarify certain provisions thereof, more specially in relation to contributions, procedure, offences and penalties, and to provide further for modification in the rates of contributions with the object of equalizing, to some extent, the total contributions payable by employers and employees.

He said: The bill which is to be introduced for your consideration provides for a number of important amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act, which was passed by parliament in 1940 and became operative on July 1, 1941.

Our purpose is to keep this social security measure up to date so as to assure maximum usefulness in the public interest. Regulations passed under the act from time to time do permit certain changes in application but alterations in rates of benefits and contributions must have parliamentary approval.

When the act was passed, the insurance coverage applied only to those earning up to $2,000 a year. Higher wartime salaries and wages made it desirable to amend the act at the session of parliament in 1943, when the maximum ceiling was fixed at $2,400 a year. Other changes were made which are on the record and which I do not think it necessary to deal with at this time.

It was originally estimated that 2,100,000 persons would be brought under the act. The war was on at that time and gradually, as more became employed in munition industries and other essential activities, the coverage expanded. By the time the act was amended in 1943, an additional 676,000 workers had been made insurable employees.

The act was again amended at the 1946 session of parliament at which time a great many more workers were brought under its provisions. Since then, there have been other additions and the information which is given to me by the unemployment insurance commission is that a gross total of 3,357,984 have been covered by the act, that is the number of insurance books issued.

There is a certain duplication in this total with respect to the issuance of books and there is also included a number of persons who entered insurable employment for temporary periods. However I think that a figure of around 3,000,000 persons benefiting under the act is about right.

The present bill is important from several angles. It provides for increased benefits to an insured person with a dependent. The maximum becomes $18.30 weekly instead of $14.40, or $3.05 per day instead of $2.40. For the person without a dependent the maximum benefit increases from $12.30 to $14.40 per week, or from $2.05 to $2.40 per day.

It will be appreciated by members of the house that the unemployment insurance fund must be maintained on an actuarial basis. We cannot gear the rate of benefits to fluctuations in the cost of living index. An upward change in wage levels, however, puts the wage earner concerned in a higher class for insurance purposes and in that way he gets a higher rate of benefit should he become a claimant.

The rates of contribution provided in the original act (1940) were so arranged that the employers and employees contributions would be equal in the aggregate. The employer paid the greater contributions in respect of employees in the lower wage groups, and the employees in the higher wage groups paid a larger contribution than did the employer, but in the main the gross contributions of each class were approximately equal. With the increases in wage levels, the employees moved up the ladder for the purposes of contributions and benefits. Whereas we have had seven classes of contributions, the wage adjustments made from time to time have had the result of placing a substantial percentage of workers in class seven, the top class.

For that reason, the employers' weekly contribution for employees in that class is to be raised from twenty-seven to thirty-six cents, the employee contribution remaining at thirty-six cents. There has been upward adjustment in employer contributions in other classes but no increase in employee rates. The bill also adds another class, No. 8, for persons earning $34 a week and more, employer and employee contributions being the same—forty-two cents weekly.

The bill changes the insurable annual ceiling from $2,400 to $3,120 for monthly rated employees. There is no ceiling for hourly rated people. This change for monthly rated employees was made effective January 1 last, on the recommendation of the unemployment insurance advisory committee, and approved by the governor in council. The shift of so many workers into the higher earnings brackets made this essential. It is significant to note that in less than eight years the earnings ceiling under the act has been raised by $1,120 per year for monthly paid workers.

The higher benefits, of course, are not yet in effect. As indicated, they require the approval of parliament. There are a number of other changes in the act, and one that will be of great interest to employers is that of exempting them from the payment of twenty-four cents a week for each person holding a certificate of exemption. We have had many complaints about this and decided that it was a provision that should be deleted from the act.

To speed up the payment of benefits, there is an amendment which will authorize the local insurance officer to pay a claimant a maximum of thirty-six days' benefit upon the production of an unemployment insurance book showing 180 consecutive contributions. Up to now the requirement has been that a claimant must show 180 contributions in the preceding two years, and then the insurance officer had to check back for five years to find out the benefit position of the claimant. This proposed change will speed up the payment of claims.

Hon. members will note, when the bill is distributed, that the increase in benefits is less in the lower earning brackets than for those in the higher earning brackets. The explanation for this is that the benefit rates for the lower earning brackets have always been based on 80 per cent to 90 per cent of earnings and so any non-actuarial raise would threaten the safety of the fund. The increase is greater in the higher earning classes in which a very large proportion of claimants are found. In 1946, 77 per cent of all claimants were in the two top earning classes.

Mr. Speaker, the bill has been drafted with the realization that the Unemployment Insurance Act can only be successfully administered on actuarial principles. I know in recent years there has been a demand from various parts of this country for the payment of higher benefits than can be approved. It must be remembered that this is a social security scheme of a tri-partite nature: contributions by employer and employee, plus one-fifth of the total by the dominion government.

There is no one in the house who would be more strongly in favour of higher benefits than myself. But we have to be reasonable. This is a great social measure. Its effectiveness easily can be destroyed by paying out more than is justified by contributions to the fund. I know, and the members of the house generally know, that the benefits provided for are not related to approximate earnings. The purpose of the act is to provide allowances to persons temporarily unemployed, sufficient to take care of their most necessary needs.

[Mr. Mitchell.]

Unemployment insurance is not a substitute for a salary or a wage. I want to make that clear. If we have benefits pushed up to a point where the amount is sufficient to provide normal expenses, then we are going to have, on the part of a percentage of our workers, a disposition to avoid work and live as long as they can on unemployment insurance.

I want to emphasize at this point that I believe the vast majority of the workers of Canada are honest, decent citizens. There is, however, as in all countries, a minority of would-be idlers. They are the ones threatening the stability of social measures such as the Unemployment Insurance Act.

The safe level for benefits varies with wage levels. Thus a benefit rate of $6 may be reasonable for a person earning $7.50 weekly—a rate of 80 per cent of wages. But 80 per cent for a person who has been earning $40 weekly would be $32 and that, in our opinion, would be too high.

Unemployment insurance is long-term insurance. Should wages and prices recede from their present levels, it would then be very important that benefit rates be on a sound basis. I might add that reductions in earnings do not become fully reflected in a worker's benefit rate until he has made 180 contributions at lower rates, for the average of 180 contributions is taken. In the meantime, his benefit rate is based on a higher average of earnings.

At the present time we have about $441,000,000 in the unemployment insurance fund. On the surface this appears to be a large fund, but a period of major unemployment would whittle the total down very quickly. Personally, I am happy to see the fund so big and I hope it gets larger for this means continued high employment. It is nice to know that we have such a back-stop for the workers. I do not know when we shall have a period of serious unemployment, and, Mr. Speaker, I do not think any other hon. gentleman in this house could predict that. I am an optimistic individual who feels that, provided that we keep our feet on the ground and act rationally, I shall not live to see the day when we shall go through what we did in the thirties.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): I hope the minister is right.

Mr. MITCHELL: I hope I am right too. Some people hope I am not right.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): Oh, no.

Mr. MITCHELL: I am not reflecting on my hon. friend opposite.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): No. I hope you are right.

Mr. MITCHELL: We have to be guided by past events and we all know that there have been serious fluctuations in employment in the past fifty years. Even a moderate amount of unemployment would have an adverse effect on the insurance fund.

I do not want to say that we were fortunate in that a wartime period brought enactment of the Unemployment Insurance Act. The act itself is good; the war was the most terribly unfortunate and disastrous occurrence that ever could have happened to the world. However, parliament passed the act in 1940 and, as we organized our war efforts, more and more people became gainfully employed and came under the provisions of the act.

I should like to say this in passing, Mr. Speaker. I think we planned and builded better than we knew. My hon. friend laughs.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): I am not laughing.

Mr. MITCHELL: These people get a satanic delight out of misery.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): We are fortunate.

Mr. COLDWELL: The minister himself is laughing.

Mr. MITCHELL: I am laughing at the hon. member who is laughing.

Mr. MacINNIS: The hon. member is laughing at the minister who is laughing.

Mr. MITCHELL: These people get a satanic delight out of depression and misery.

Mr. COLDWELL: No, do not say that.

Mr. MITCHELL: No. The phrase I used was not addressed to the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar but to the hon. member who laughed.

I just want to make this point and, in doing so, I am speaking for the Canadian people; I do not take all the credit for the government, although the government had, of course, to give leadership. The establishment of unemployment insurance in 1940, and particularly the creation of an employment service such as we had, made possible the organization of a war effort generally conceded to be, on a per capita basis, the greatest of the democratic nations engaged in that great struggle.

With regard to the post-war period, our minds go back to 1919. Those of us who came back from the first great war know something of the confusion that existed in that demobilization period, and when I say this I am not being critical of anyone who had any part to play at that time. I think, however, that the employment service made possible the smoothness with which we were able to demobilize our men and women of the armed forces after the second war, on a scale and in a way that, I believe, surprised even the most optimistic among us in this House of Commons and throughout the country generally.

We are now passing through the period of reconstruction, when immigration is beginning to move on a wider front and at an accelerated rate. Here again we have the employment service rendering a distinct service to the people of Canada in the placement of persons from England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales; people from the displaced persons camps of Europe and others, bringing us the finest blood streams of Europe. Nearly all these people are being moved through the employment service; and I think it is to the credit and reflects the common sense of the Canadian people that we have been able to create, in such a short space of time, a machine of this kind which has rendered yeoman service to the dominion.

My mind goes back to the establishment of unemployment insurance in Great Britain, I think it was in 1911. They started off with just seven trades. Today, of course, it covers around 14,000,000 people. That act has been amended thirteen or fourteen times in a major way. As I said to the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) this afternoon, the engineering of men in a social way is more or less a virgin field into which the world has not moved, except in the last generation. I believe it is to our credit that we have been so successful in this country, and I hope, in the light of practical experience, we may move forward in this regard.

I spoke of the development of the fund. For the year ended March 31, 1942, roughly nine months after contributions became payable, the balance in the fund was about $44,000,000. A year later it was $114 million. In 1944 it was $190 million; in 1945 it was $268 million; in 1946 it was $317 million, and in 1947 it totalled $372 million. These, of course, are net totals. We have paid out benefits every year.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): I suggest that the minister should be very conservative as to the net totals.

Mr. MITCHELL: Oh, yes. I think $441 million is only chicken feed.

Mr. CASSELMAN: Where do you get that chicken feed?

Mr. MITCHELL: My mind goes back to the experience of Great Britain. Those who have followed the course of this sort of legislation will recall that in the twenties the fund was absolutely bankrupt. There they had the advantage of a high level of employment during the war, as we did; then they had that collapse or recession, whatever you want to call it; and they had the same revolutionary condition in Europe at that time. There was the Russian revolution, the putsch in Germany, the trouble in Hungary and so on, and had it not been for unemployment insurance, I sometimes wonder what might have happened even in Great Britain.

I am not very much impressed by people who, when they have $10 in their pockets, think they are millionaires and want to get rid of it, and when it is spent lean on the other fellow. I believe this unemployment insurance money belongs to the good people who paid into the fund. By the very nature of things, thousands of people who have paid into this fund will not draw a copper from it. I believe this parliament, not necessarily the government, but parliament—is charged with some responsibility with respect to the proper administration of that money because, as I have said before, I will take my chance on the working people of the country. They are the backbone of every country and of civilization itself; they always have been, and I hope they always will be as far as this dominion is concerned.

To the end of February of this year, that is in the past six years and eight months, benefits paid to workers under the act have totalled $111,000,000; but in passing I might make a reference to that figure, having in mind the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis). At one time, through circumstances over which no government had any control, we had 16,000 people in the city of Vancouver drawing unemployment insurance. They had a bad snow condition there this winter. My mind goes back to the thirties, when there were many people in the same position in Vancouver, and we had a great deal of trouble. This gives some indication of the cushion this form of legislation can provide under conditions of that kind.

The outlay of benefits naturally has been greater in the last three years because we had maximum employment during the war, and following the end of the war there were necessary lay-offs because of the change-over from the wartime to a peacetime economy. Then, of course, a great many more persons are covered now.

Not all the money to the credit of the fund has been contributed by employer, employee and the government. Since the act became operative, a total of more than $34,000,000 has been earned from interest on investments and profit on sale of securities. The gross revenue of the fund to the end of February of this year was $552,000,000.

It is our desire to bring as many as possible under coverage of the act. The bill to come before the house gives the unemployment insurance commission more authority in this respect. The idea is to reduce the number of excepted employments to the very minimum.

As instances, in 1943 it was provided that certain employees of hospitals and charitable institutions and employees of public utilities, owned by municipal, provincial and dominion governments could come under the act.

In 1946 we included lumbering and logging workers in British Columbia and employees in transportation by water. Recently, stevedoring has been added. The industries which remain excluded are those which are particularly difficult to insure.

There is another point I want to mention to the house. Hundreds of letters have come to my office in recent years and I know many more have been received by the unemployment insurance commission, suggesting that persons in insurable employment, who have been forced to give up work because of illness, should receive benefits. That, of course, is impossible on the present actuarial basis. It would require very much more substantial contributions on the part of employer and employee and the government. In any event, this was intended to be an unemployment insurance plan, not a combination of unemployment and sickness insurance.

Apart from those I have mentioned, there are other proposed amendments to the act which have been drafted to ensure better administration and to enable the unemployment insurance commission to deal more effectively with problems that have come up in the past two years. An act of this kind necessarily is subject to periodical change. In Great Britain their unemployment insurance act was passed in 1911, and during the succeeding quarter of a century fifteen amending bills were brought before parliament.

When members have studied the bill, I know the government will have the benefit of much in the way of constructive suggestion and criticism.

That will be welcomed because it is our desire to have an Unemployment Insurance Act which will function in the interests of the public to the highest possible degree.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): The minister has made a fairly comprehensive survey of the amendments he intends to bring in and of suggested improvements, as I understood from his reading of them, to the Unemployment Insurance Act. I realize the difficulties, but I am sorry that the minister and the government did not find it possible to make some extension of unemployment insurance to cover sickness, particularly when it occurs to the recipient of unemployment insurance. I drew attention to this earlier this session; and I cited a typical case, using a fictitious name of a person who was insured and became unemployed for several weeks and drew his unemployment benefits under the act. Then, while still unemployed, and when there was no employment available for him, he became ill, and certainly, if he needed an income when he was unemployed and well, he needed it still more when he was unemployed and ill. But his income stopped and no provision was made for him. I appreciate that the Unemployment Insurance Act is based on actuarial considerations and that if its provisions are to be extended in any large measure in certain directions the amount of the contributions will have to be increased, but since the purpose of the act is to provide an income for a person when he is involuntarily unemployed, I think we should go a step farther and provide insurance or an income when he is ill, because illness is also involuntary.

The minister referred to the fact that the Unemployment Insurance Act came into effect in 1940, and he left the impression that it was the designed policy of the government to bring the act into force at that time. As a matter of fact it was purely a matter of expediency.

Mr. KNOWLES: The minister is smiling.

Mr. MITCHELL: I was not in the house then.

Mr. MacINNIS: He realizes the truth of what I am saying. But I will accept his apology.

Mr. MITCHELL: My hon. friend and I went through all this in the 1930's.

Mr. MacINNIS: I will come to that later. In 1940 the government were faced with increasing employment in war industry and knew they would shortly be faced, as they were, with the necessity of taking various measures, as they did, to reduce the income in the pockets of the ordinary workers who had money which could not be spent on consumer goods because they were not available. So the bright idea occurred to the government of bringing in unemployment insurance, for which the workers of this country had long been asking. My hon. friend the Minister of Labour, when he was a member of a labour organization, and not a member of the cabinet, used to appear before the cabinet and urge them to put unemployment insurance into effect. That, to my own knowledge, had been going on for more than twenty-five years without the slightest response from this or any other government then in office. But at last the time came in 1940, and I am glad the government took advantage of it and brought the act into force. Perhaps if the war had not come we should not have had unemployment insurance yet, so that out of evil good did come. I am glad that the Unemployment Insurance Act has been put into effect, because I am sure it is filling a great need.

While the increases are not large, they are welcome and they would be satisfactory if the periods of unemployment were merely short periods. Unemployment insurance is designed to help the insured from the time he loses one job until he gets another, and the hope at least is that it will be a short period. With these payments, the unemployed worker is not able to provide for all his expenses as his wages did, but they will help to tide him over a period of unemployment. But if the period of unemployment is protracted these payments are totally inadequate and will have to be supplemented from some other source.

Fortunately there have been, I suppose, very few cases since the act came into force where recipients of unemployment insurance have been unemployed for a long period of time and have had to depend upon unemployment insurance alone. I hope, with the minister, that that situation will continue.

The minister said that the benefits are kept low because, if they were made higher, there might be a tendency for the recipient to stay on unemployment insurance longer. But the remedy for that is, I submit, education. We should carry on amongst recipients of unemployment insurance a process of education, the same as with recipients of any other government assistance, and show them that what they are drawing from is the income of all the people who have been contributing under the act, and that no one should draw unemployment insurance any longer than is absolutely necessary. I must confess, after a very long time in public life, that I am sometimes shocked by the attitude of many people toward any payments that the government may make. That attitude is: Well, the government is paying, and why should we worry if the payments are a little bit more than they should be; we are taking it from the government anyway? That is the wrong outlook and governments themselves have been largely responsible for people getting into that frame of mind.

I suggest to the minister that his public relations in connection with unemployment insurance leaves much to be desired. Persons contributing under the act do not realize that the act provides only for unemployment, that it is not designed to pay benefits when a person has reached the age when he is no longer able to carry on or is retired. I do not know what the unemployment insurance commission would do in that case. It is possible that they may pay some benefits, I do not know, but those who contribute should know exactly what they are entitled to because of their contribution. I do not believe the department has made that clear, and consequently there is a great deal of misunderstanding.

Perhaps it is too late, but I hope the minister and the government will take into consideration the broadening of this act. What is really required is a comprehensive social security program that will take care of the individual through all the hazards of his industrial life.

Mr. JOHN R. MacNICOL (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the minister did not mention it, but he knows that we passed an unemployment insurance act in this house, I think in 1935. It was during the administration of the late Viscount Bennett. At that time the minister sat in this corner to my left. He may remember my going to England to inquire into the matter, after which I delivered a speech in the house in support of the principle of unemployment insurance.

I compliment the minister upon bringing in amendments to the act. It was well understood that amendments would be required as the years went by. As he said, the British act has been amended many times and this act may have to be amended again. I rose merely to state that the 1935 act was not put into operation because of the controversy in the country at that time as to dominion and provincial jurisdiction.

I have only one word to say in addition to what I said a few moments ago. If the act does not call for it I hope that provision will be made for the education of the personnel of the unemployment insurance offices throughout Canada, so that they may deal more intelligently with the unemployed who come before them to register when they are unemployed.

It may be through the instigation of the management, but I know that in the offices in Toronto members of the personnel have been sent to various plants so that they can observe what goes on in the plants and what is done by the various work people. They become better equipped to deal with unemployment in that line when it comes into the office. I realize that the number sent out may not be very large, but I heartily support any program which leads to the education of the office personnel so that they may become better qualified to deal with unemployment problems, in the many trades.

I know of one young woman in the women's branch in Toronto who has visited many plants where women are employed in order to acquaint herself with what women are doing. She told me that this has been of great benefit to her when dealing with unemployed people coming into the office. She knew what qualifications are required for different jobs and she was able to send applicants to jobs. I hope that the minister will give instructions to his managers or superintendents in Toronto and elsewhere so that this field of endeavour may be expanded.

When a young woman—and this would apply to men as well—comes into an unemployment insurance office and registers as being unemployed, if the person she talks to is familiar with jobs for girls generally she may find on her files a position that is open which would suit the applicant, even though it is not exactly the same type of work she has been doing. I may not have made myself quite clear, but if the act does not call for something like that I hope arrangements will be made to have it included.

I will support anything that will lead to the better operation of the Unemployment Insurance Act. The success of the act depends largely upon the intelligence of those employed in the different offices. This is one line of endeavour which, I think, would result in a greater success of the act.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. CLARENCE GILLIS (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I was a little in doubt about rising at this time because I was not sure whether you had put the motion before recess. I am heartily in favour of the resolution if it means what it says, the extension of the act and its clarification.

I wish to make just a few observations for the minister's benefit before he brings in the bill, and that is why I make them at this time.

I want to say first to the minister that my relations with those who administer the unemployment insurance and selective service regulations have been very happy. The administration, from the maritime director down to the local offices, with whom I have had to deal have been very co-operative and efficient, and while they had the selective service regulations under their administration they regulated manpower to a large extent.

I was sorry to see that phase of the unemployment insurance office set-up abandoned. The employer used to put in his requirements and the officials could direct the employees to suitable employment and so forth. But today that phase of the work has been discontinued. The employers no longer use it for that purpose, and about all the unemployment insurance officers can do is to register the man and tell him where he may go and get employment. It has been difficult, because the average person who comes in and registers for employment often blames the unemployment insurance officer for not being able to secure employment for him when in reality such officers have nothing to do with the direction of employees into any particular industry.

There is one thing I wish to bring forcefully to the minister's attention. I have written him on this subject and I have had his reply. I have always argued that social legislation in Canada should be reciprocal with similar legislation in any other part of the British empire. In the matter of unemployment insurance it is not reciprocal with British unemployment insurance, and this has created difficulties for Canadians. I have had cases come to my attention of seamen in particular. I can think of one seaman who served in the British merchant marine all during the war and up to the end of 1947. These men paid unemployment insurance in Britain. The British government then repatriated them. They were sent home. When they landed in Canada they were of the opinion they could apply for unemployment insurance and have it paid in Canada. They believed they could register for employment. I was reasonably sure, after looking at their books, and finding them paid up to date, that there would be sufficient administrative latitude granted to the commission to take care of cases of that kind, but I was advised by the minister's office that there was no reciprocal arrangement with Britain with regard to unemployment insurance.

If the act is to be amended and the scope broadened, that is one particular phase of unemployment insurance which should be considered by the minister. We shall not have very many cases of that kind, but where there is even one case or there are two or ten cases the individuals are as badly affected as if there were hundreds. To the individual it is the most important thing in the world. I suggest that the minister should consider this matter before the bill is introduced.

Another matter that I brought to his attention and tried for some considerable time to have ironed out is the problem of the veteran who came back and took employment in some given industry, but who did not work there long enough to make the 180 contributions which would qualify him for benefits. He may have made 80, 90 or 100 contributions; I think it was 107 contributions in the case that I brought to the attention of the department. The individual to whom I have reference then left his employment—he was on the railroad—and took a course, under the regulations laid down by the government in the rehabilitation set-up. After completing the course, he came back but could not secure employment in the field for which he was trained. He applied for unemployment insurance and was told by the officials that he could not secure unemployment insurance because he had not made a sufficient number of contributions to establish the benefit year. He then applied for his armed services credits, which would have qualified him under ordinary circumstances. He was told then that, because he was taking this course, they could not give him the armed services credit, with the result that the boy was unemployed for a long time and, as far as I know, he may still be unemployed. I know he was unemployed in November, 1947. To meet that particular case would require only a slight change.

I have always contended that one cannot make these rules and regulations so rigid that the people who apply them are merely automatons who read a book. There is no latitude given them which permits them to exercise any discretion where there are extenuating circumstances. I think any parliament or any government which brings in an act and makes it so rigid as that has very little confidence in the people appointed to administer that act. I know the officials of the minister's department; I know the minister himself, and I suggest that the deputy minister or someone at the top of the administrative staff should be able to say: This is a small problem; very little money is involved in it; therefore we shall use our discretion. I know they are borderline cases; nevertheless they affect people. By the attitude that has been taken in the past you have created in the mind of this individual a resentment which will be aired in every circle in which he travels. Why not give the deputy minister or someone in the department the power in the act to say, We shall take care of that. It is a borderline case. I know you cannot cure them all, but when we are passing legislation we should at least have some confidence in the people who are administering the act, so that in cases of that kind they will have sufficient power to correct any difficulty that may arise.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member. May I call the attention of hon. members to the fact that we have before us a money resolution preceding a bill to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act. The question before the house is a motion—I want to emphasize these words—to go into committee of the whole to consider this resolution. The hon. member will remember that it has been decided by the House of Commons that a money resolution cannot be amended. I would ask hon. members to confine their remarks to the merits of the question and not go into details, but to wait until the resolution has reached the next stage of committee of the whole. After the committee of the whole has dealt with the resolution, it will be reported. Then the minister will introduce the bill which will be given first and second readings, and then the house will go into committee of the whole on it. At that time the committee will have an opportunity of discussing the several clauses of the bill.

On a resolution this afternoon I made the mistake of permitting the minister to answer questions, which he is not allowed to do. I am not calling the hon. member who has the floor out of order at the present time, but I make these remarks so that we shall not discuss the same matter two or three times, but only once and thereby save the time of the house.

Mr. GILLIS: I had nearly finished anyway, Mr. Speaker. Under ordinary circumstances I would wait for the bill so as to have a look at it, but in my opinion this resolution opens up a broad discussion. The intention is to enlarge the scope of the act, to clarify certain provisions of it and so on. I rose at this time in anticipation of the minister looking into the bill once more before he brings it into the house, because the spots on which I have put my finger are sore spots, and he may have a chance to amend the measure he is bringing in, so as to take care of the problems I have been discussing with him. These are real problems in my part of the country.

There are many other aspects of the matter to which I should like to refer, but I wish to have a look at the bill and I shall have more to say on the second reading.

[Mr. Gillis.]

Mr. L. W. SKEY (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I am another member who is pleased with this excellent piece of legislation which is brought down for the purpose of enlarging the scope of the act and clarifying its provisions. My remarks this evening will be quite brief, but I did wish to second what the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) said this afternoon with regard to sickness benefits. I am of the opinion that people who are unemployed as a result of sickness should be entitled to draw some benefits, because that is the time they need this help most.

The hon. member also spoke of the lack of public information so far as this legislation is concerned, and in this connection I should like to refer the minister to a recent public-opinion poll which found that only 40 per cent of the people insured under this act knew anything about the benefits to which they are entitled. This information was published in the Literary Review. Perhaps the minister's attention was drawn to it.

There is an almost scandalous lack of information on the part of those who are making contributions; and I suggest that the minister's department would serve the public very well if, in sending out the new books as these unemployment insurance books come due, they would also send an information card with them to those who are contributing, so that these people would know exactly what should be paid in case of unemployment, what their benefits are, and how they can realize those benefits.

There are two classes of people who come under the Unemployment Insurance Act and for whom particularly I should like to speak. In the first class we find young women and, in the second, the men and women in the older age group.

As regards the first, the young women, a great many of these girls come into employment in industry or office work and, after five or six years, they pass, we hope permanently, out of the labour market through marriage. During their time of employment they have perhaps been working continuously and contributing continuously to the unemployment insurance fund, and they have never drawn any benefits from it and never will. The contributions they make are lost to them entirely.

I would suggest to the minister, if he has time to reconsider the legislation before it is brought down in the form of a bill, to take into account the position in which these young girls find themselves; and perhaps he might find some way, through the Unemployment Insurance Act, to make them a nice wedding present of their own contributions.

The second class comprises those of the older age group who perhaps have to pass permanently from the working population of the country. The same argument I have made with respect to the young girls applies to the older men and women who will be passing permanently out of the labour market. Perhaps they have an unbroken record of contributions to the unemployment insurance fund and in their old age they will need every help they can get. They will never receive any benefits from the unemployment insurance contributions which they have made.

I would say again to the minister that in this legislation he might see his way clear to giving this older age group of workers a nice retirement benefit.

Mr. STANLEY KNOWLES (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise to say just a few words with respect to this measure at this time. My colleagues the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) and the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) dealt with a number of the points in which I am interested, and I should like to support in particular the plea of the member for Vancouver East that the minister give further consideration to the question of enlarging the scope of the act to provide for sickness coverage, at least in the case of those who become ill while receiving unemployment insurance benefits. We can go into that matter again at a later time and I intend to do so. In fact, at some stage I intend to quote from the remarks of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) when at the Liberal convention in 1919 he moved an important resolution which called for a number of things, some of which have not yet been put on the statute books, even though twenty-nine years have since gone by.

Tonight I wish to speak about two matters which I had hoped would be included in any measure the purpose of which is to enlarge the scope of the Unemployment Insurance Act. The two points which I desire to bring to the attention of the minister are those which the Winnipeg and district trades and labour council has come to the conclusion are the most important ones so far as the making of changes in the act itself is concerned.

First of all, there is this difficult question of suitable employment. We have had a number of discussions about it from time to time during the past few years when the administration of this act has been before us in the estimates, and I must confess that the minister can point out that there are provisions in the act which give the administration the authority to make the definitions of suitable employment which have caused the trouble. Because that authority is in the act, it seems to me that some change should have been made with respect to that matter at this time.

May I sum up the situation by reading a couple of quotations from a brief on the matter, prepared by the Winnipeg and district trades and labour council:

> In the long run, it is more advantageous to let a person draw benefits a little longer, and put him into a job where he will be satisfied, where he will work to the best advantage; than it is to harry him, under penalty of losing benefits, into a job for which he is unsuited, and with which he will never be content.

Further on, there are a couple of short paragraphs which I should like to read. The first has reference to a number of cases that have already been cited in this brief where the suitability angle is referred to in relation to wages. I quote:

> The cases here referred to concern only "suitability" with respect to wages. There are many other factors, such as distance from home, nature of work, domestic responsibilities and union agreements, all of which affect the suitability of employment.
>
> It is the opinion of the Winnipeg and district trades and labour council that no pressure whatever should be placed on a man who is sincerely seeking employment, to compel him to accept work at a lower rate of pay than that to which he has been accustomed.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but I must ask him to confine his remarks to the merits of the resolution which is before the house.

Mr. KNOWLES: May I call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the resolution which we shall be asked to consider in committee? The resolution reads:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1940, to enlarge the scope of the act, to clarify certain provisions thereof . . .

And so on. As a matter of fact, I had concluded what I intended to say on the particular point that I was discussing—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I do not wish to be disagreeable to the hon. member or to any other hon. member, but he will understand that I have a duty to perform and that is to keep the discussion relevant to the resolution before the house. That resolution is:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1940, to enlarge the scope of the act, to clarify certain provisions thereof, more specially in relation to contributions, procedure, offences and penalties, and to provide further for modification in the rates of contributions with the object of equalizing, to some extent, the total contributions payable by employers and employees.

I do not think hon. members should discuss employment, whether salaries should be increased on account of the fact that people live far away from the place at which they work and so on.

Mr. KNOWLES: It so happens, Mr. Speaker, that I had concluded, before you interrupted on the point, the matter I was discussing. But I must insist on my right to do so under the provisions of the resolution before us. It proposes to amend the act "to clarify certain provisions thereof", and I was complaining about a provision in the act that is not clear—"more specially in relation to contributions, procedure, offences and penalties". As the minister knows, this whole question I am talking about is one of the most ticklish and difficult procedures that the unemployment insurance commission has to deal with under the act. It is under this section that the penalty of being denied benefits causes a loss of confidence on the part of workers. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that a careful reading of the act itself, and perhaps a closer acquaintance with the administration of the act, would convince anyone that what I have said bears directly upon the resolution.

I just want to conclude by saying that I am sure the minister has received these representations from bodies like the Winnipeg and district trades and labour council; and I hope that even yet, before the bill is introduced, he will see to it that one of the things it clarifies is that particular provision.

The other important point which the Winnipeg and district trades and labour council—along with other labour bodies—felt it wanted to make representations on had to do with the fact that the act, as it now stands, provides for only one umpire in the whole of Canada. At another stage I shall go into some detail as to the difficulties that arise because of this fact; but I ask the minister to give consideration to the request of bodies such as the council to which I have referred, for an amendment to provide for at least three umpires in a country of this size. I am sure he will agree with me that those two amendments to the act which have been asked for would add a great deal to the usefulness and the value of a piece of legislation which, we all admit, is already of great use and value in the life of this country.

Mr. F. D. SHAW (Red Deer): In keeping, Mr. Speaker, with the examples set by previous speakers I propose to be brief. In fact, what I have to say may occupy less time than I expect, because I found it virtually impossible to hear what Your Honour said when directing words of advice to the previous speaker. However I shall proceed, believing firmly that you will stop me if you deem it advisable to do so.

It is to be observed that the resolution before the house indicates that it is expedient to introduce a measure to do, among other things, a bit of clarification. It is about that feature, Mr. Speaker, that I wish to make a few observations. Under the Unemployment Insurance Act of 1940, we find a section, namely section 31, dealing specifically with persons eligible for benefits under the act. I have found that there is a rigidity of interpretation which is hardly justified and which, in my estimation, hardly carries out the spirit of the act. Whether or not clarification is possible remains, of course, a matter of conjecture. Possibly if we were provided with copies of the various directives which are sent out to the regional officers, we might be in a better position to know exactly why they make certain decisions. Let me hasten to observe that I am not speaking critically of those who administer the Unemployment Insurance Act. My limited relationship with them has been pleasant indeed. However I know they are human beings and as such must err upon occasion.

Interpretations under those sections establishing eligibility have aroused the indignation of at least one organization within the province of Alberta, or at least the branch of it within Alberta, namely, the brotherhood of maintenance of way employees who have had several bitter experiences with cases with which they were associated and which affected persons who belonged to their organization. While I do not dare to endeavour to cite too many details of a specific case, I shall give just one or two facts to try to bear out what I had in mind with respect to the spirit of the act.

For the moment I shall use a fictitious name, that of John Brown. I do that for this reason. I shall hand this particular case to the minister, because I feel that he believes we should not allow every case to stand with the decision of the lone umpire functioning under the act. Here is a man, John Brown, for example, who is employed for thirty-six years as a section foreman and who retired at the age of sixty-five. He is a man drawing a salary of $6.75 a day. He owned his home in a small hamlet and had living with him his wife—an aged lady who was badly crippled by rheumatism—and her aged sister eighty-four years old.

This man became unemployed and made application for benefits under the act. For a time he received benefits. He was advised that a certain position was open to him and that he must apply for it. This position was in a tiny mining centre, and the employment to which he was directed was in the kitchen peeling potatoes and washing dishes at $80 a month, plus his board. It would have required $2 a day, plus board, to hire a man to look after his home and take care of the two adult ladies there.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I would point out to him that at this stage he should not discuss particular cases. The hon. member should confine his remarks to the general principle of the resolution which is before the house. When the bill is introduced he will know what is in it; and if what he is interested in is not in the bill, he can make representations accordingly.

Mr. MacINNIS: I think that ruling, Mr. Speaker, cannot be allowed to go unchallenged, because we are dealing here with proposals made for amending an act. Those proposals are wide open; as a matter of fact, there is more scope than when the bill is before us for second reading. The bill will contain definite principles, but in this resolution the terms used to describe the principles which will be in the bill are very wide. During the time I have been in this house I have not seen discussion at the resolution stage limited to any particular point, as long as it had some relation to the subject matter involved; and I should be glad indeed if Your Honour would cite the rule or standing order that provides for the limitation of debate at this stage of a measure.

Mr. GREEN: I should like to support the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis), and I trust Your Honour is not endeavouring to cut down our right of debate at this stage. The resolution itself is in very broad terms. It refers to "enlarging the scope of the act", which is a general statement, and "to clarify certain provisions thereof." You really could not have a resolution more broadly worded than the one now before the house. I think it is admitted that we would have full freedom to discuss the question of unemployment insurance during the committee stage of the resolution, and I submit that we have just as much freedom of discussion with Your Honour in the chair. I submit that there is nothing in the rules which would permit Your Honour to restrict debate as you are endeavouring to do at this time.

Mr. SPEAKER: I tried to make it clear to the house that I was not making a ruling when I drew attention to the fact that some hon. members were discussing individual cases. They may be relevant; it is always possible to find words in a resolution which may cover some cases, but I pointed out that if each hon. member decided to discuss individual cases during the resolution stage, instead of discussing the merits of the resolution itself, it would take a very considerable time. If it is the wish of hon. members that this should be done, well and good; but I thought it my duty to call attention to the fact that the motion before the house is for the Speaker to leave the chair for the house—and I want to emphasize this again—to go into committee of the whole to consider this resolution.

As I stated a moment ago, it has already been decided that these resolutions cannot be amended except in committee, and the minister is not permitted to speak twice on the resolution at this stage. So I thought it only fair to suggest to hon. members that they discuss the merits of the resolution now and go into the details when we are in committee. Then, if they have some further provisions they are anxious to have in the bill, such provisions may be brought forward when the bill is under consideration.

Mr. GREEN: Surely an hon. member has the right to cite a case as an illustration of the point he is trying to make, and I believe that is what the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Shaw) was doing. If we are not to be permitted to do this our discussion may be seriously curtailed. The question of amendment has really nothing to do with our right to debate this resolution. No one is asking for permission to amend the resolution, but surely we have the right to debate it.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would call the attention of the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green) and other hon. members to the fact that I did not intend to suggest they could not debate the resolution now before the house. Of course it is their privilege to debate it, but there is a difference between the privilege of debating the matter, and not confining their remarks to the principle of the resolution now before the house.

Mr. KNOWLES: May I ask Your Honour to consider one other point in connection with the matter?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I suggest that the hon. member for Red Deer proceed.

Mr. SHAW: Speaking broadly and in a very general way, I have endeavoured to emphasize the fact that the administrative officers operating under this act, being normal people, are bound to err, especially when the terms of the act are such as would tend to bring about that natural result. I was not quoting facts relative to a specific case; I took a case which was generally typical of conditions which have aroused the ill-will, shall I say, of a particular labour organization, the brotherhood of maintenance of way employees. I suggested that it surely could not be argued that the spirit of this act is being followed when an individual who has been employed in a position which enabled him to be home every night to look after his aged wife and aged sister-in-law, a position which paid him $6.75 a day, should now be obliged to leave his home and travel sixty miles to take a job in the kitchen of a mining camp, peeling potatoes and washing dishes, for $80 a month and board, more particularly when it would become necessary to hire someone at a minimum of $2 a day and board to look after his dependents at home. That is a situation which has developed under the act, a situation which has led the assistant general chairman of the brotherhood of maintenance of way employees to state:

> . . . I feel that labour should not be required to accept such a decision as given in this case, without lodging a strong protest in the highest quarters and the arbitrary powers of the umpire, if not used with discretion and a sense of fair play towards labour, should be curtailed.

That is the feeling of the assistant general chairman. It might also be of interest to note that they say a rank injustice has been done not only to the individual or individuals but to those dependent upon them, and in this communication they refer constantly to a strong feeling of resentment which has developed at what they call these arbitrary tactics. Possibly that expression is rather strong. I want to emphasize that I think the men who are administering the act are endeavouring to do a good job, but I wonder if they are plagued by directives which countermand their desires, so that generally they are placed in an unfortunate position, as a result of which their actions under the act may take on the appearance of arbitrary action.

Then, of course, they go on to point out that surely the welfare of the workingman should be taken into account, and in fact they say it should be the primary object under the act. They say the maintenance of way employees have been aroused wherever this case has been discussed.

The point I want to make is this. During the consideration in committee on the bill which will follow this resolution, I hope that more than merely passing consideration will be given to the sections relating to eligibility under this act, and that we may find out whether or not this situation, which evidently prevails in certain parts of Canada, is general across the country. I have not desired to be critical in what I have said, but I think the duty rests upon us to remove conditions which result in cases of this kind.

May I point out that under the act this case was carried right to the top so far as the act goes; it was carried to the umpire; and, so far as the employee is concerned, he is finished at that point. But I fancy the minister, if he were so disposed could assess the facts of a case like this and, if he finds that a rank injustice has been done, he can take the necessary action to render justice to this poor old fellow, who believed that he had complied with all the regulations, and who, I believe, did and who certainly deserves better consideration than to be told to go out washing dishes, even though there is a difference of some hundreds of dollars a month in the rate of pay.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I wish to give general support to this resolution. When I first came to parliament I introduced on the first or second day a motion in the house, along with the then member for Winnipeg North Centre, Mr. Woodsworth, in favour of unemployment insurance and old age pensions. I happened to be the president of the Union of Canadian Municipalities when we were urging this thing in the early 1920's and before. We had hundreds of employees in the various departments in the city of Toronto, with a payroll running into millions of dollars. Some of them went to the first war and afterwards returned to their old positions in the city's service. Then we had the school board, public utilities, the harbour board, and hydro, and later on, the transportation commission, all with a large number of employees and a big payroll.

Before the present government introduced the Unemployment Insurance Act in 1940, some of the municipalities in Ontario went to Queen's Park, Mr. Hepburn then being premier, and we were told that under the municipal act we could not legally pay our employees on retirement $12 a week, and were recommended to come to Ottawa. The result was that this act was introduced, and it has been a blessing not only to the employee but to the employer.

I do not want to impose any undue burden on the employer; far from it. Unemployment insurance has been a splendid thing for the country. There are certain defects in the present law, and I believe that the minister has already received representations from the public utilities of the province, from employees and employers, who recommended certain amendments. Is that not right?

Mr. MITCHELL: That is correct.

Mr. CHURCH: I wish to support this resolution. The more a person pays in, whether it be employee or employer, the better the results will be. I have seen a good deal of the working of this act and it has been a great thing for the country. Long may it continue. I believe that the amendments now proposed will clarify the existing regulations which are issued by the minister and his officials. I want to say that he has some very good men in that department. I know because I have seen a good deal of them. I shall await the bill with interest and in the meantime give general support to this resolution.

Mr. J. H. HARRIS (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I should not like this occasion to pass without my word of commendation for this resolution. I think earlier today the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mitchell) was perhaps a little dubious on which side of the fence I leaned.

Mr. MITCHELL: Never.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): Thanks so much. I am firmly convinced that legislation of this kind is good for the weal of Canada. I remember so well reading what the late Mr. Lloyd George had to say prior to the introduction of his unemployment insurance measure in the British house and before he made that great speech on the subject of wastage—the wastage of manpower, the wastage of the energies of the British people, the wastage of waterpower, waters tumbling down a mountainside, leaping from rock to rock, but grinding no corn. We of the present generation have learned how to harness that waterpower, and my imagination was gripped by his words. When in this honourable assembly we had to wait until 1940 for unemployment insurance legislation, I thought we, too, had waited too long.

I do not want to be confined in my remarks, Your Honour, to the individual clauses of the bill which will come before us in a day or two, but rather I want to make a few observations in a broad general way, as one of this chamber who is privileged to see, on the one hand, a couple of hundred employees contributing each week to this unemployment insurance fund, another 350 in another place, and another forty out west. The fund today amounts to $450 million. I ask the Minister of Labour if that is not the correct figure.

Mr. MITCHELL: Close to it.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): It is earning $30,000,000 a year. It is like a snowball going down hill growing in magnitude. But when the July sun of unemployment finds its place in the changing of things that snowball will melt away. The day may yet come when this fair Canada of ours will be short of funds wherewith to pay back to those who have subscribed to the unemployment relief fund, and we shall find ourselves—pray God not for a while or in our time—borrowing money with which to provide the funds necessary to pay unemployment relief. I hope that day will not come. I am thinking of those with whom I am associated when I say that I hope that for a long time no one of them will find himself unemployed and unable to contribute to unemployment insurance.

I must from the Conservative point of view ask the minister when bringing down his bill to give consideration to this: Do not be carried away with the requests for the enlarging of the provisions of this bill which you propose to introduce. You have been asked to give consideration and to grant benefits which do not belong to this bill. I heard mention this afternoon of sickness insurance and whatnot. That is the responsibility of all of us, but it is not the responsibility of those with whom it has been my privilege to associate who have contributed each week, out of their pay envelopes, a mite for unemployment insurance for the time when they are unemployed. That mite is not for sickness but for unemployment only.

I charge this administration, or any administration which follows it, to take full responsibility for all these other features of social welfare. They should be considered individually. Let every herring hang by its own tail. Since 1940 this administration has extracted from the people $450 million, for what? For unemployment insurance. Put that $450 million into the category where it belongs and do not be carried away by any socialistic ideas of putting it elsewhere.

That strikes a common note with the Minister of Labour. Without reading the resolution which is in front of me, I say to him not to be tempted to dabble into this large reserve created by payments made by honest employees for one purpose and one purpose only. Keep it where it belongs. We will rise in our places and vote, if we are in power at that time, for sickness insurance and whatnot, or if someone else happens to be there we will support any measure of social security which is reasonable and right. Speaking for myself, I will not support any resolution which expands the payment out of this fund for sickness insurance, as was suggested this afternoon, or for any other kind of insurance.

When these things come along in their right order and in their right place they will receive sympathetic consideration. I say to the Minister of Labour and to the administration which surrounds him: Do not in any way dissipate the funds which have been paid in by employees whomsoever for any purpose whatsoever. Keep the fund inviolate and by itself.

Those of us who have been privileged to make up substantial payrolls are concerned when we see the pay envelope being desecrated by demands of provincial and dominion administrations. In common with the minister I am British and I consider that a man's pay envelope is something that is almost sacred. I consider it to be almost sacrilegious for any administration to go into a man's pay envelope and take out unemployment insurance and a dozen other things.

When the man comes home to his wife he brags that he is making $30 or $40 a week. He then hands her his pay envelope, and I hope the Canadian workman will always hand over his pay envelope to the woman who knows how to spend it and how to conserve it. He thinks he has earned $40 a week, but when she opens up the envelope she finds only $30. There have been deductions of $10.

I may be Victorian and old-fashioned, but really and truly I cannot bring myself to the point where I believe that that is fair, decent or right. I think every dollar a man earns should be in his pay envelope, so that his wife can receive it. Even if you have to come along and collect it afterwards, collect it as best you can and God help you. I think it is wrong to interfere with a man's pay envelope, especially a workingman.

There has been such a continuity and extension of this practice during the last two or three decades that some of us who have the privilege of filling pay envelopes throw up our hands in holy horror. We cannot explain to our employees what has happened. These men could not tell you on their oath how much has been taken from their pay envelopes for unemployment insurance. If the Minister of Labour told them that $450 million had been extracted since 1940 they could not understand it. All they think about is their take-home pay. Their wives can spend only 80 per cent of the money their husbands have earned. That is all that is contained in the pay envelope. This may not be parliamentary, but I think it is a sneaky way to take it away. They do not even know it is gone. All they know about is what is left in the pay envelope.

Let us be honourable. Let those who are charged with the administration of Canada's affairs see that that fund of half a billion dollars is not dissipated. It should be reserved and conserved so that it can keep on earning $30,000,000 a year as it did last year. However, the rate of interest has gone down from four per cent to three per cent. We should save it for these people for that day which will come when they will need it.

History will repeat itself, but I hope it will be a long time before we have difficult times. We are getting so used to good times that it is going to shock a lot of people when the difficult days come. I hope the Minister of Labour will listen not to the ideas of some of our socialist friends, and I am thinking of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who bewails the fact that there is nothing in this for sickness insurance. Leave the blessed thing alone. We will tackle sickness insurance when sickness insurance needs to be tackled. Leave the unemployment fund intact because it may be needed. Lloyd George lived long enough to see it needed in England. I hope the minister will live long enough to see this party on this side of the house administer it in Canada on behalf of him and his friends.

Mr. MITCHELL: That is the only time you will need it, when you are over here.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): Thank you. I turned my deaf ear so that I could not get it. I do hope that this fund will not be dissipated in any way whatsoever, and that the minister will not listen to the blandishments he may receive from the left particularly, and perhaps the odd one from the right. Leave the resolution intact as it stands, inviolate. Put it through this house and it will get some support in the years to come, and this administration which is looking after it in our interests will receive the endorsation of the people of Canada along with the endorsation of those who have the privilege of sitting on this side.

Mr. G. K. FRASER (Peterborough West): Mr. Speaker, on March 23 I asked the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mitchell) a question and I should like to read it now. It was prompted by a resolution that was passed by the city council of Peterborough and forwarded to me, a copy of which I showed the minister. The question may be found on page 2504 of Hansard, and reads as follows:

Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. As municipal welfare departments are receiving many applications each day for public assistance from unemployed persons during the time that these persons are waiting to receive their first cheque from the unemployment insurance commission, and as the minister knows this welfare is charged one hundred per cent to the municipality, this is the question: Will consideration be given by the commission to shortening the delay in the payment of the first cheque to a waiting period of six days instead of the present waiting period of nine days, during which time no payment is made of unemployment insurance benefits?

The minister said:

Mr. Mitchell: The hon. member has stated the position correctly. Of course, the responsibility for unemployment relief is that of the municipalities and the provinces. At the moment amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act are being studied by my department and an announcement of government policy will be made in the usual manner.

When the minister made his statement today I do not think he said anything about shortening the waiting period. I do hope that, when this bill is brought down, consideration will be given to this point because it is certainly unfair to the workers today and to the municipalities.

On the same day I asked the following question:

I have another question. Has the dominion government considered increasing these unemployment insurance benefits owing to the increased cost of living?

The cost of living today, as the minister knows, is sky-high. With $450 million in the unemployment insurance treasury, I see no reason why, for the time being, these benefits cannot be increased. I hope that the minister will give consideration to that.

Mr. D. G. ROSS (St. Paul's): I have not the command of voice of my colleague, the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Harris). I was entertaining some of my friends from my own riding in Toronto who are very important people, and I said to them that I was sorry, that we would probably miss the wonderful speech which has just been made by the hon. member for Danforth. However I must say that we did hear the speech because, as we came down the hall, we heard practically every word that the hon. gentleman said. It was a very able speech, and I agree with everything that he said.

I have only a few remarks to make in connection with this matter. The minister said that he had had a letter from some man in the United States who told him that he wished the Unemployment Insurance Act was as well administered in the United States as it is in Canada. I think it is well administered in Canada, but I think it is well administered in the United States also. I find that it is well administered there.

I should like, in passing, to point out to the minister that it is most important that he should have the best people that we can possibly get to administer this fund in Ontario so that we do not make communists. That is my point about it, and I think it is very important.

The minister said that this act was actuarially sound. I do not know whether it is or not; I do not know whether we have had sufficient experience to tell us whether it is actuarially sound or not; I hope it is, and I hope that we administer it in that way.

There is just one thing that appeals to me in this matter. I have had a little correspondence with the minister in connection with a certain case, and I know he has had correspondence along the same line. When a person has been paying into the unemployment insurance fund for years and all of a sudden meets with a terrible accident which incapacitates him, it seems very difficult when nothing can be done for him. The minister said that there are lots of people who have been paying into this fund who will never get a dollar out of it. I do not think this fund goes far enough. Any person who has done an honest day's work for years and meets with an accident which incapacitates him should have some recourse. We know there are opportunities for insurance against such casualties; but, after all, if a person pays a premium into this fund for years he has the idea that if he meets with an accident he will be taken care of.

Mr. MITCHELL: How about car insurance and fire insurance? What do you want? Choose your weapons.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Perhaps I should get busy and find some insurance to compensate the minister when his government goes out of office not so very far from now. There should be some extension of this act to take care of a person who meets with an accident. I am speaking of the person who becomes absolutely incapacitated through no fault of his own and has paid into this fund for years. I know the act says a person is entitled to insurance so long as he is able and willing to work. Is that not what it says?

Mr. MITCHELL: Yes.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): There is an opportunity here to do something with this act so that it will assist those persons to whom I have referred if they are not able to work. I am not talking about people who are sick. There are certain classes of sickness which may incapacitate; but where a person is incapacitated by an accident, something should be done to compensate him for all the money he has paid into the insurance fund.

That is all I have to say, but I would ask the minister a question which I should like to have him answer. He said, in this letter to me, that the premium which would have to be paid by the individual would be considerably greater than it is now. As far as sickness is concerned, possibly that is so. I am asking, however, about people who have accidents of one kind or another and not people who suffer in the ordinary course of employment. That is taken care of by workmen's compensation. How much more would such people as I have in mind have to pay? How much would the premium be increased to take care of that situation?

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Golding in the chair.

Mr. PEARKES: There is one matter which I would bring to the minister's attention and on which I would ask him a question. I refer to a group of employees in the coal mines on Vancouver island, known as fire bosses. These employees are hired on a monthly salary, and from time to time their salary has been increased as a result of increases in wages paid to miners who are working in their gangs. Quite recently there has been an unfortunate cessation of work in the Nanaimo coal fields. The result has been that wages were increased to the miners, but it has also resulted in a corresponding increase in the monthly wages paid to the fire bosses. As a consequence, the fire bosses are no longer eligible for unemployment insurance, owing to the ceiling of, I believe, $3,120 a year, which is the maximum salary a monthly employee may draw if he is to obtain unemployment insurance.

I should like to read a paragraph from a letter I received from the secretary of the fire bosses' union, because I think it explains the case very well. I quote:

> We have been in and out of the confines of this act at various times since it came into operation. For example, we contributed continuously from June 7, 1941, until December 23, 1943, when an increase in our monthly salary placed us in an exempted class. Since that time we again contributed for a short time in 1946. Then again in November, 1947, to present date. Since our monthly salary rises with miner's wages, any increase granted to end the present strike will again place us in the exempted class.
>
> Now our complaint is, that although at present out of work due to the miner's strike we have been denied benefits for what we paid in between 1941-43. In 1944 we made strenuous efforts to continue our payments but were ruled out because we were on a monthly salary basis and were above the yearly ceiling set by the government.

[Mr. Ross (St. Paul's).]

My question is this. Do the amendments now being introduced raise the monthly ceiling?

Mr. MITCHELL: The amount has been raised from $2,400 to $3,120 per annum.

Mr. PEARKES: In these amendments?

Mr. MITCHELL: Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES: I should like to ask the minister to comment on three points which were raised at a previous stage of the debate. First of all, I would ask him to say a word about sickness, but in raising the matter now I would ask him to follow me closely and to realize that I am not now asking him about the broad issue of an over-all scheme which might be called health insurance in general. I am asking now with specific reference to the kind of case which the hon. member for Vancouver East brought up and which is fairly common, the case of an insured person becoming unemployed, qualifying for benefits and becoming the recipient of benefits, but being taken ill later while in receipt of benefits. The minister knows that when that happens the recipient's benefits are cut off, even though there is still no employment for him. I am not asking the minister to go into the broad picture of health insurance at this time, but I hope he will comment on this point.

It seems to me that some amendment might have been made to the act at this time to provide that such a person who is receiving benefits shall continue to receive them, even though he may be taken ill during that period of time.

The second matter on which I would ask the minister to comment is that concerning which representations have been made to him from time to time, particularly the representations from the Winnipeg and district trades and labour council to which I referred earlier this evening, having to do with suitable employment.

Again, I am not going into details such as we have gone into before with respect to the directives sent out, such as those referred to by the hon. member for Red Deer. I am referring to the general fact that there is a section in the act covering the matter.

The third point I would ask the minister to comment upon is the request from labour bodies for increasing the number of umpires from one to at least three.

Mr. MITCHELL: My hon. friend says he does not want me to cover the broad question of sickness insurance. You have to do so.

Mr. KNOWLES: All right; go ahead.

Mr. MITCHELL: On the present basis, this legislation cannot provide for sickness. A fresh actuarial basis would, in my opinion, be necessary for that purpose.

Mr. CASE: That is right.

Mr. MITCHELL: As regards suitable employment, I do not think it is possible to state in the English language what is suitable employment. I do not think it is possible in the drafting. However we have applied checks and balances. The hon. member for Red Deer raised a question, the details of which I do not know, but in such cases there is an appeal to a court of referees composed of employer, employees and an impartial chairman, with the right of appeal to an umpire.

My hon. friend has suggested three umpires. I have an open mind on that point; but he will agree with me, I believe, that it is far better to have one umpire and at least have some uniformity of decision such as is ensured by such a provision.

When we are speaking of suitable employment, it occurs to me that in Great Britain they have had unemployment insurance for thirty-seven years and they were never able to define the term in English. By the very nature of things, it is like a board of conciliation. It is like this House of Commons. Each case must be dealt with on its merits. If my hon. friend has the language, I should like to take a look at it.

Mr. KNOWLES: May I proceed for just a moment longer, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I will just ask the minister the questions again. First of all, the minister mentioned the question of actuarial soundness.

Mr. MITCHELL: Certainly.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I should like to know a little bit about that, just how he knows about the fact of actuarial soundness. The other thing was this. I had a little bit of correspondence with the minister in connection with one case; that was with regard to accident. I said I did not think it would cost a great deal more to put that into the act, and the minister, in his letter to me, said the premium that was paid would not be nearly sufficient to cover the thing. What I should like to know is how much more the premium would have to be in order to cover the case of accident which created a total disability.

Mr. MITCHELL: I am not like some members of this House of Commons, who are experts on everything and masters of nothing. I am not an actuary and I do not intend to try to be an actuary this evening.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Who are your actuaries?

Mr. MITCHELL: I do not know. I am informed that they were the best we could get in the dominion at the time the act was drafted.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): That does not answer my question.

Mr. MITCHELL: It must answer it.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): It does not. Who are your actuaries?

An hon. MEMBER: Do not embarrass the minister.

Mr. MITCHELL: You cannot embarrass me. Do not worry about that. May I say that if I have the choice of having to take the advice or opinion of an actuary or having to take the advice or opinion of the hon. member for St. Paul's on the actuarial soundness of this legislation, I will take the actuary's advice every time.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): The minister makes a statement. The minister says they had the best actuaries there were. There are just 245 members in this House of Commons. The minister said he does not know who the actuaries are. My point is this. I think the House of Commons is entitled to know who those actuaries are, so that the House of Commons can judge them for themselves.

Mr. MITCHELL: The actuary was Mr. A. D. Watson of the Department of Insurance, who is recognized as one of the outstanding actuaries in the dominion.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): How much more would it cost to have accident included. I am not talking about sickness but rather of accident. The minister said it would cost a great deal more. I doubt that it would cost a great deal more. As I said before, a person who had been paying into this fund for years and who becomes totally incapacitated as a result of an accident through no fault of his own, should certainly be protected. He has a recourse of course; the minister knows it and I know it. He himself can take out insurance. But how much more will it cost to put it into this thing?

Mr. MITCHELL: I do not know.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): That is a good answer.

Mr. MITCHELL: Yes, it is a good answer. It is a correct answer. If my hon. friend knows how much it would cost, I wish he would tell me. I have made the point, I think, with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that sickness insurance by itself must stand on its own feet. In Great Britain sickness insurance was entirely separate from unemployment insurance. In New Zealand it is the same way. But when we are talking about sickness insurance—and I have advocated it all my life pretty well; ever since I was in the labour movement, anyway—I wish sometimes the people who advocate it—and I am not opposing it when I make this observation—would tell the men and women of this country what it will actually cost. The hon. member for St. Paul's talked about deductions in connection with unemployment insurance.

Mr. KNOWLES: That was the hon. member for Danforth.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I am talking about the premiums that are paid.

Mr. MITCHELL: That is a small amount in comparison with the deductions which will be necessary to have an over-all plan of health insurance.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): That is not what I am talking about.

Mr. MITCHELL: Sometimes the hon. member does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Wait a minute. The minister cannot say that. I take exception to that. I do know what I am talking about. I know more about it than the minister thinks I do.

Mr. CASE: Or more than the minister does.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Or more than the minister does either.

Mr. MITCHELL: If my hon. friend would just stop interrupting, that is all I ask. I did not interrupt him when he was speaking.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): That is all right.

Mr. MITCHELL: I did not interrupt him when he was making that masterly oration just now. As I say, you should be frank with the people. There is no free nation on earth that I know of which has been able to combine health insurance and unemployment insurance.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I did not ask about health insurance.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. MITCHELL: Does my hon. friend not see that by its terms this resolution has to do with unemployment insurance? He is talking about sickness insurance—

[Mr. Mitchell.]

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): No, I am not.

Mr. MITCHELL: —and accident insurance. Then what are you talking about?

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): The minister has not answered my question. I am talking about something which is entirely different. I am talking about accident insurance. Perhaps the minister did not understand what I said. I will apologize for him for not understanding. I am talking about accident insurance. The minister says he does not know how much it will cost to have the kind of thing I am talking about put into this bill. I think it is a good suggestion that it should be put in. I would suggest to the minister that he get good people to find out what the cost would be.

The DEPUTY CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I could find out how much it would cost; I could get, through people I know, how much it would cost; and the minister, through his connection, ought to be able to do the same thing.

Mr. KNOWLES: I appreciate the minister's comments in reply to the questions I asked a few minutes ago. I want to say right now he is perfectly right in pointing out that if we are to have in this country—as some day I hope we shall—an over-all social insurance scheme, we shall have to pay for it. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. CASE: We are glad to hear that.

Mr. KNOWLES: The minister need not suggest that any of us think social security can be pulled off trees somewhere, but it will be worth paying for. As the minister knows, whenever the occasion arises I am doing my best to press the government to move in that direction. But what I asked him about tonight was not, I submit with all respect, the broad question of health insurance, but rather cases of the restricted kind that the hon. member for Vancouver East drew to the minister's attention. The minister did not deal with cases of that kind. He just replied that, by the very nature of the thing, you had to go into the whole broad story.

I again ask the minister to face this question. I accept his statement that he is not an actuary. I am not one either. It seems to me, however, that it is a fair question for me to ask him as to whether it would upset the actuarial soundness of the unemployment insurance fund to continue paying benefits to the kind of person about whom we are talking. We are not talking about a person who is on the job and who becomes sick and therefore asks that he be covered out of his unemployment insurance; that is another question, equally important, but not now before us. We are talking about John Doe who became unemployed because there was no job for him. John Doe subsequently qualified for unemployment insurance benefits and began to receive them. But while he was unemployed, during that period, he became ill. His wife went to the unemployment insurance to collect the benefits, but when she reported that he was ill, he was cut off. There was still no job for him. Had he been well, and had he been able to go and draw his benefits, there being no job for him, he would have drawn them. The only point I am asking the minister to consider just now is the question: would it upset the actuarial soundness of the plan to enlarge its provisions to cover a case of that kind?

I repeat that I am quite prepared, at the proper time, to argue and press the claim for complete health insurance, indeed for overall social insurance, covering all the things which happen to us, which are beyond our control; but for purposes of my present argument I accept the minister's statement that we are dealing with something that has an actuarial basis, and within that framework I have asked him to deal with a particular kind of case.

While I am on my feet I should like to ask the other question, so that I shall not have to quarrel again with the hon. member for St. Paul's for the floor.

Mr. SINCLAIR: Let us have that question answered.

Mr. KNOWLES: All right; the hon. member for Vancouver North suggests that we have this question dealt with.

Mr. MITCHELL: In the first place, I never heard of this case until it was mentioned this evening by the hon. member for Vancouver East, and I should like to take a look at it myself. From the mere fact that a person writes a letter, it does not necessarily follow what is in the letter is a statement of fact. I should like the hon. member to give me the letter privately so that my officials in Vancouver, if it is in Vancouver, may look at the case. Most of these matters go over my desk, but this is the first I have heard of it. In view of the discussion which we have had this evening and the number of complaints which have been expressed by hon. members here, having in mind that we have three and a quarter million people insured, I think that is a pretty fair batting average. However I would be grateful to my hon. friend if he could give me the correspondence confidentially so that I can have my officials look at it.

Mr. KNOWLES: Both the hon. member for Vancouver East and I will do so.

Mr. SINCLAIR: I can tell the minister it is not an unusual case. I know of several such cases in the shipyards of North Vancouver, where men went on unemployment insurance and then became ill. There was still no work for them, but their benefits were cut off. Whatever minute saving might be made cannot compare as against the distress to such a man who, if he needed the benefits when he was well, certainly needed them far more when he was sick. I suggest that it is not a case for the exercise of ministerial discretion so much as a case for a ruling on the general principle of whether, when a man becomes ill while in receipt of unemployment insurance, and still no employment presents itself, he should not continue to draw his benefits.

Mr. MERRITT: In making his statement this afternoon, the minister referred to the situation which occurs in Vancouver almost every winter, when large numbers of unemployed come to town looking for jobs. As the minister knows, that creates quite a difficult situation for the Vancouver authorities and the community chest. This year that body carried out a survey and found that fifty per cent of those unemployed at that time came from out of town. They thought part of the trouble, part of the reason the relief for these unemployed falls upon their shoulders so heavily, is that unemployment insurance benefits are, as a rule, not paid during the nine-day period.

I want to ask the minister three questions, of which the first is this. If I understood him correctly, this afternoon he mentioned that a thirty-six day advance could be made on production of the unemployment insurance book. Does this mean that a person coming into the unemployment insurance office in Vancouver, though he did not work or make his contributions there, on production of his book giving the proper information can get an advance of thirty-six days, from an office where his records are not kept?

Mr. MITCHELL: Yes, that is being provided for in the bill. I will go into that later, but at the present we are still at the resolution stage.

Mr. MERRITT: The minister mentioned the thirty-six day advance this afternoon; that is why I asked.

Mr. MITCHELL: That is right.

Mr. MERRITT: In other words, the advance can be made without reference to some other office?

Mr. MITCHELL: Yes.

Mr. MERRITT: I think that is a very good provision, which undoubtedly will do a great deal to relieve the situation.

Mr. MITCHELL: I should like to make a point, if I may. The man must have his book with him, you understand.

Mr. MERRITT: Yes, that would be necessary. I suppose the commission will take steps to let people know the importance of having their books with them, in view of this provision. I repeat that I am sure this will be very useful in relieving the situation in Vancouver.

The next question is the one asked by the hon. member for Peterborough West. Will the minister tell the committee whether it would be possible to reduce the nine-day period to six days, as suggested by the hon. member? A reduction of this kind would take the responsibility for unemployment relief further off the shoulders of the municipality and private agencies, and would be a great help.

My last question—perhaps the minister can deal with these two at once—is whether he will make a statement on what can be done under the Unemployment Insurance Act or by his department to relieve the strain on a municipality caused by a seasonal influx of unemployed persons?

Mr. MITCHELL: As to the first question my hon. friend raises, I have had it looked into by the actuaries, and they think it would be too great a strain on the fund on the present basis. I consider it fair to say that unemployment conditions being as they are, I do not think nine days is too long. Take a single fellow in Regina, Calgary, Edmonton or Winnipeg who picks up stakes and goes to Vancouver. A waiting period of nine days is no hardship, in my judgment, if that fellow has been steadily employed.

The other question is more difficult. The hon. member spoke of the migration to the west coast.

Mr. MERRITT: Yes, though I understand it takes place in other cities as well.

Mr. MITCHELL: I may tell my hon. friend I should like to live in Burrard myself during the winter.

Mr. MERRITT: We should like to have you.

[Mr. Mitchell.]

Mr. MITCHELL: But someone has to stay in the cold climate and produce some of the wealth, though you understand I am not suggesting that you do not produce your share in British Columbia. It is like the birds, and you will remember the story about the seagulls in Victoria. The birds like to fly south for the winter, and under ordinary conditions those of us who can afford it like to go south as well. There is not much difference between that and a fellow jumping on a freight or getting on a train and going to Vancouver or Victoria. That is one of the penalties you have to pay for living in that sublime climate; and it would not be so bad if you did not brag so much about it. In that case perhaps fewer people would want to go there.

Mr. CASE: We might have the first two months of the session out there.

Mr. MITCHELL: Yes, of course.

Mr. KNOWLES: Be careful; there are a couple of by-elections being held out there.

Mr. MITCHELL: We will be there, too. I have watched that movement for a good many years. We have advised against it. We did so last fall, and I think it was the hon. member for Cape Breton South who spoke of the power my department and particularly the minister had under selective service. I believe in the basic principles of freedom. While it may be logical to push people around in wartime when men and women are in uniform and there is a tremendous shortage of labour, I question the wisdom of telling anyone he cannot go anywhere he likes in this country on his own responsibility.

In my quieter moments during the war period I often used to say to myself that I hoped all the "shalls" and "dos" and "don'ts" I had to enforce then would not impair the basic freedom of the Canadian people. It is so easy to slip into a form of what might be called dictatorship, though some people call it planned economy, to make it sound good. I think it is a dangerous thing for the state to have the right over a long period of time to move people around against their will, so that young people in the formative stage will come to take it for granted. That can lead to only one thing.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Communism.

Mr. MERRITT: I never suggested that the minister should direct labour or anything like that. His analogy of the bird was a nice one, but what we are concerned with is who keeps the bird's nest, and we would much prefer the minister to keep it rather than the municipal authorities and private social agencies in Vancouver. I suggest to the minister that the condition is a chronic one and that it does not prevail only in Vancouver, but I have heard it said that there is a similar migration into Windsor. The services for these people who are unemployed through no fault of their own have to be provided by some agency, dominion, provincial or municipal. When such a large percentage of the unemployed come, as shown by this survey, from outside the municipality it does not seem to me to be fair that the municipality or private agencies should bear the cost. The difficulty may not be easy to solve. but it should be studied by the unemployment insurance commission with a view to the dominion assuming its responsibility.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: The Prince Rupert labour council several months ago inquired as to the possibility of placing an officer in the northern area of British Columbia to settle the cases up there, because they have to wait so long to be cleared through Vancouver. Has the department come to any conclusion on that point?

Mr. MITCHELL: As far as my memory serves me, we did send a man out there; it is an administrative question, as my hon. friend knows, but I shall be glad to look into it. We have endeavoured to decentralize the adjudication of claims both in the western provinces, Ontario and Quebec, and the maritimes so as to speed up payments.

Mrs. STRUM: I think we should at this time try to impress upon the minister the necessity of helping the worker to insure himself against illness as well as against unemployment. I believe the government was wise in bringing in unemployment insurance at a time of high employment and when wages were good, although, of course, its action was long overdue.

I have in my hand a document brought out in 1919. It is called the National Liberal Convention, held thirty years ago, and here is one of the things it proposes:

> And further resolved:
> Effective legislation for the conservation of human life and health.

Dear knows how many people will have died in the meantime before we get around to doing that.

> And further resolved:
> That in so far as may be practicable, having regard for Canada's financial position, an adequate system of insurance against unemployment, sickness . . .

And so on. I wish to draw to the minister's attention that even thirty years ago the Liberal party put beside unemployment insurance, insurance against illness. When we talk of how much it would cost, what the actuarial basis would have to be, and how much more the worker would have to pay to insure himself against illness, I suggest to the minister that the worker is paying for illness now and that it costs a great deal more for him to do it on an individual basis than through a group. Illness may cripple you for years, and what is even worse you may go without treatment; you may shorten life itself and leave a dependent family because you could not face the cost of treatment in time. So I urge the minister to think of the family whose breadwinner is ill or whose breadwinner is dead because he did not get medical care soon enough. I urge upon the minister and the cabinet to take into consideration the merging of unemployment insurance into a larger plan of social security.

The minister gave an impressive figure a few moments ago; I think he said three million people were now covered by unemployment insurance, and I am very happy to hear that. But there are many categories who cannot be insured against unemployment. There are also many people who are self-employed. They have the hazard of unemployment and the greater hazard of illness, too common uncovered.

Some mention has been made of New Zealand. I had the benefit of spending almost four months in that country a few years ago, and I found that there they had merged their unemployment insurance into a social security plan. True, the people pay for it; but you never get anything without paying for it; you pay less for insurance within a group than you pay as a private individual, and when you have covered illness too you have covered almost every emergency. I would remind the minister that we are very much more able to do this than New Zealand because we have so very much more in the way of natural wealth.

I was surprised to find that in New Zealand they have no oil, no metals, little timber and hardly any coal. They have an extremely limited economy. They have an agricultural economy and are just beginning to develop secondary industries, and so they have tied their social security to citizenship, not to small industrial groupings as we have done with unemployment insurance. In Canada we have so many people excluded by category and so many people living on farms that we should tie our social security to citizenship rather than to industrial groupings, as Great Britain tried to do at the outset. So I plead with the minister, and particularly now when the cost of living has risen so tremendously and when it is hard enough, even with a pay envelope, to keep a family together, the children clothed, and food on the table, that he and the government take into consideration insurance against illness, because it is a tragedy if illness strikes and, through illness, the unemployment insurance becomes not payable, so that the family has illness, plus unemployment.

Mr. MITCHELL: I have listened several times today to references to the Liberal platform of 1919.

Mrs. STRUM: Would you like to see it?

Mr. MITCHELL: Certainly; will you pass it over.

Mrs. STRUM: Yes; it is time you read it again.

Mr. MITCHELL: I think it is safe for me to go back with my hon. friend in a diplomatic way to 1919. It is all very well for a political party, even the C.C.F., to say we will socialize this and socialize that when we get into power, but if they give the impression that they can do it all within twenty-four hours they are just fooling themselves and fooling the people.

Mr. STRUM: We never said that.

Mr. McKAY: You have not done it in twenty years.

Mr. FRASER: You have broken your promises.

Mr. MITCHELL: I am sure the hon. friend for Vancouver East has read Engels and Marx and knows what Engels laid down as the ultimate goal of a socialist state. Since 1919 I think this dominion, federally, provincially and municipally, has made more progress in a social way than at any other time in its history. Let us be nice about it. Do not let us all take credit for it. We have all played our part. These Latter Day Saints who think they have an answer for everything are not willing to give credit to those people who went before them.

I remember as a young man after the first great war that I used to read of how they laid the basis for the hospital scheme in Saskatchewan. I think they called it the municipal doctor scheme. During our lifetime we have seen the development of workmen's compensation, of old age pensions, of widespread hospitalization in our communities on a voluntary basis, of mothers' allowances, of unemployment insurance and the raising of the school age. Those things did not fall as the gentle rain from heaven; they were placed in operation by responsible people. Give credit where it is due; do not take it for yourself after it has already happened.

At this very moment $2,000,000 is being spent every day on social services in Canada, 80 per cent of which is paid by the federal government. I stand to be corrected, but at the outbreak of this war the total budget of the dominion was not $600 million. Today we are spending $750 million on social services.

Reference has been made to 1919. I used to be an active member of the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada and I still carry a card in my pocket. The trade unions have played an active part in connection with the social legislation in this country. Like the farmer organizations, they were the type of organization that could take steps ahead of the average political party which has to wait for public opinion. Even socialist governments have to do that, as do Conservative and Liberal governments. They must wait for the development of public opinion before they introduce legislation of a social character.

Just in passing, I might mention that the trade unions always fought the introduction of family allowances because it was felt they would be used as a substitute for wages. The principle of family allowances was first adopted in Belgium, if I remember rightly, and from that country it spread to other countries like Australia and this Dominion of Canada. Right up to the passing of the legislation, there were powerful trade union bodies in this country which were opposed to family allowances. I think, upon reflection, all in this house will agree that it was one of the greatest social policies ever placed in operation in any country in the world.

If the house will permit a personal reference, my father died when I was eleven years of age and, since I was one of nine children, I know something about the struggles in raising a family under those conditions. People said that this money would be spent in beer parlours or taverns, that it would not be spent on the children. However I do not think any section of the community has a first mortgage on that sort of thing. I believe it is generally agreed that 99 per cent of the moneys paid for family allowances is spent for the benefit of the children of this country.

I think many of us will live to see it in the proper perspective and see proper credit being given to the Liberal administration of this day for placing upon the statute books this piece of humane legislation. We are hearing about 1919, but take a good look at it. Thirty years is merely a heartbeat in the life of a nation. My hon. friends know that.

They had their manifesto in Regina in 1932 and it is still a manifesto in the blueprint stage.

Mrs. STRUM: How can we be blamed for not carrying it out when we have not been the government?

Mr. MITCHELL: My hon. friends will have to do what every political party has had to do, convince the people and the nation that they are on the right track.

Mrs. STRUM: We are.

Mr. MITCHELL: It is just as simple as the fact that the sun will rise tomorrow morning. I am not saying this in a critical sense; it is just a passing observation.

Mr. FRASER: Just in a kindly way.

Mr. MITCHELL: I thought I would just make these one or two observations because we have heard so much about 1919. Probably we shall hear a good deal about 1932.

Mr. CROLL: May we get back to 1948? I am rising to support the statement made in the house by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the hon. member for Vancouver North with reference to what I think is an unreasonable interpretation of the regulations. The act never contemplated that a man must go to the office in order to draw his unemployment insurance; that is simply an administrative regulation. It appears to me that to deprive a man, who is unable to go to the office because of illness, of his unemployment insurance benefits, is to increase the fund by a method almost tantamount to chiseling.

The minister should take action immediately with respect to this sort of thing. Many cases have been brought to my attention which have been handled in the way indicated in this house. I repeat that it was never intended that the act should be carried out in that way. I know it is easy from the point of view of administration, but on the other hand the act does not depend for its improvement on that sort of administration. It is a good act and, because it is, there is no purpose or reason why it should in a small way incur the anger of people and bring upon itself a certain amount of discredit. This ought to be corrected at once.

Mr. KNOWLES: I should like to say a further word with respect to one other matter the minister was good enough to comment on. I was glad to hear him say that he had an open mind with regard to this question of having three umpires instead of one. I admit that the points he made have some validity, but I know also that in trade union circles there is a strong feeling about this matter. The minister knows that when the Unemployment Insurance Act is discussed in trade union circles it is discussed among its friends.

I am going to give the minister an example of the kind of thing that bothers these friends of the Unemployment Insurance Act. I ask the minister not to get warm under the collar because I refer to this kind of thing. I do not intend to imply that there is any miscarriage of justice or anything of that kind.

According to information put out by the unemployment insurance commission, a certain number of appeals were made to the umpire during the period April 1, 1947, to October 31, 1947. This is the disposition of the appeals dealt with during that period. Of the appeals made to the umpire by the claimants, namely by the persons who were trying to secure their unemployment insurance benefits, two were upheld and thirty-six were denied. On the other hand, in the case of appeals taken to the umpire by the insurance officer, thirty-six were upheld and only eight were denied. I ask the minister not to get hot under the collar because I mention that. I am not trying to make it out as a case of the miscarriage of British justice. I know the minister may say something about the fact that when an insurance officer takes a case to the umpire he is a little better acquainted with the facts, perhaps; but, even after you introduce all these extenuating circumstances, the fact is that that sort of result adds to the feeling of the trade unionists, who are friends of this act, that it would be much better to have these decisions made not by one umpire, but by a board which might consist of at least three umpires.

This is only one of the arguments, but for the others I refer the minister to the brief which I have already quoted from tonight, which I am sure has been submitted to him by the trades and labour council of my own city. I just want to say I am glad that he indicated he has an open mind on this question, and I hope he will pursue the matter and see whether this is not a change which ought to be made.

Mr. SHAW: I have one question. There has come to my notice a number of cases where so-called suitable employment could not be found or where the applicant who was residing in a small hamlet where there was no employment, was ordered to move to take a job in some other place. That has happened in a number of cases, even though the individual may own his home and may have resided in the place for twenty or twenty-five years. My question is this: is it a hard and fast rule that if suitable employment cannot be found for the applicant in the community in which he is domiciled he cannot secure unemployment insurance benefits if he refuses to move from that community?

Mr. MITCHELL: The answer is no.

Mr. FERGUSON: Does the minister mean to say that if a man resides in a certain community such as the town I come from, Collingwood, and there is no employment for able-bodied men in that town and there is a position offered him in some other part of Canada, that man can live at the expense of the taxpayer simply because there is no work for him in Collingwood?

Mr. MITCHELL: That is not what I said. I said there was no hard and fast rule. That was the implication I gave.

Mr. FERGUSON: Where does the discretion lie? Does it lie in the hands of the manager in that particular community?

Mr. MITCHELL: Discretion lies at the first level, and then there is an appeal to the court of referees and then to the umpire.

Mr. FERGUSON: I am sure that the gentleman who does not want work except in his bailiwick does not appeal to your board if your manager is generous with the taxpayers' money and gives the loafer unemployment insurance. Who has the say? Surely there must be some rule. I am astounded to find that a man may refuse work, remain at home and still draw unemployment insurance.

Mr. MITCHELL: I think I made that point earlier in the evening.

Mr. FERGUSON: I am not looking for votes.

Mr. MITCHELL: It is difficult to put in language what is suitable employment. What may be suitable employment for my hon. friend would not be suitable employment for me. Does the hon. member get my point? It may not be suitable employment for the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. That is the reason we have the checks and balances to regulate the administrative organization in the insurance offices. Then there is an appeal to the referee and, after that, to the umpire if necessary.

Mr. FERGUSON: What I am getting at is this. There is a regulation which says, "If suitable employment can be obtained." The man cannot simply say, "I will refuse to take it because I own my own home in this community," if there is no suitable work for him in his community. If there is work some place else in Canada, surely he cannot sit back and draw unemployment insurance.

Mr. MITCHELL: He can be told to go to the other place.

Mr. FERGUSON: If he does not go, you can then tell him to go where?

Mr. MITCHELL: Suppose you are the insurance officer or a member of the court of referees and a man comes to you who is unemployed. He may have a young family, and his wife may not be very well. I may be living in Collingwood and I may not want to go to Toronto to work—I do not know why I would not want to go there.

Mr. KNOWLES: You have lived in a lot of places tonight.

Mr. MITCHELL: In a case such as that, you have to use common sense and judgment. As I said earlier in the evening, the British who have had nearly forty years' experience with this legislation have not yet found language that will cover every case in point. It is pretty difficult to put it all down in English.

Mr. FERGUSON: They have ended up with a socialistic government in England.

Mr. HANSELL: The minister has been at bat all night and has been knocking out a few grounders.

Mr. BRYCE: Mostly foul balls.

Mr. HANSELL: He thinks it is just about time that he took his base. I should like to ask him a question with respect to part-time employment. I will give him a hypothetical case. A man is employed by several different companies or persons. He may be the janitor of a bank; he may be the fireman in some other building and he may be a janitor in a store. As I understand it, the first person for whom he works is the one who pays the employer's part of the insurance; but the hypothetical case is that the man does not have to work any particular hours in these particular cases. He may work for one person first for one day and for another person first the next day. I am told that there are cases where the three employers are paying their share of the unemployment insurance when only one employer should be paying it. Can the minister clarify that situation for us?

While I am on my feet, may I say that I have no serious criticism to make of the administration of the Unemployment Insurance Act. I have a constituency where unemployment insurance has to be administered carefully and properly, and I wish to say that I have had fewer cases of complaint in that regard than of almost any other department of government affecting my constituency. Generally speaking, I think the Unemployment Insurance Act functions smoothly. Can the minister clarify the position I have mentioned?

Mr. MITCHELL: I do not want to read the regulations; I shall put them in a few words. Where a man works for several employers each day, the commission can make arrangements as to who shall be assessed for the payment. Failing that arrangement, the first employer pays the assessment.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Mitchell thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 203, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1940.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

ANIMAL CONTAGIOUS DISEASES

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR PROSECUTION AND TO PROVIDE FOR THE OFFENCE OF CONSPIRACY WITH HEAVIER PENALTIES

Right Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture) moved the second reading of Bill No. 149, to amend the Animal Contagious Diseases Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Golding in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. CHARLTON: Will the minister make a statement?

Mr. GARDINER: This bill has been considered in the Senate, passed by the Senate, and is now before us in the form of Bill No. 149 of the Commons. The bill is to provide protection for the considerable trade that has been built up between this country and the United States in purebred and dairy cattle. We had an export of dairy cattle to the United States, just prior to the war, of about 9,000 head per annum and about the same number of purebred cattle. That export has grown from the figure of around 9,000 to 68,000 in dairy cattle in 1946, which dropped to 45,000 in 1947, and of purebred cattle the trade was built up to 28,000 in 1947.

It will be seen from these figures that this is a considerable trade and probably one which brings a great deal of wealth to the farmers in certain sections of Canada, particularly to the group who raise this type of cattle for sale.

We have experienced some difficulty in connection with the export of these cattle, partly perhaps because of the profits which can be made from the sale of cattle of this type in that market, and we feel that we require heavier penalties than those provided for in the act as originally drawn, in order to make certain that we can maintain this trade.

Cattle cannot be exported to the United States without a certificate of tuberculin test, blood test and freedom from contagious disease, signed or endorsed by a veterinarian inspector under the health of animals division.

In the second place, stock owners can employ accredited veterinarians at their own expense to take such tests and issue such certificates. The certificate of the accredited veterinarian is taken to the veterinary inspector for endorsation. He endorses the certificate, relying on the integrity of the accredited veterinarian.

We have had some difficulty in the matter, in that there appears to have been, and in some cases has been proved, a certain amount of conspiracy in connection with the issuing of certificates. It was found when the cases were heard, that there was great difficulty in securing conviction and the kind of penalty we feel ought to be provided. Complaints during the past three or four years have been received from the United States department of agriculture, as well as from different state departments of agriculture, indicating that tuberculosis cattle and cattle affected with Bang's disease were arriving there from Canada, covered by proper certification.

On investigation it was found that there were infractions of our regulations. In the first place, there had been removal of the ear tags which mark cattle, and there had been substitution of animals; that is to say, the tag would be taken from one animal and put on another. Then there had been inadequate and improper tests for disease. There had been false certificates by accredited veterinarians.

In order to meet these cases and to prevent their happening in the future, this act is being amended to provide greater penalties. The time limit under the code was previously six months and the period is being made longer. The limit must be increased to give time to make full investigation and to have reports made back with regard to the stock.

To overcome this difficulty, conspiracy charges were laid, some of which were dismissed because the offences under the act were not indictable. The solution which is being suggested under the act is to extend the time limit for prosecution. This removes the difficulty of prosecuting, but recent investigations also indicate serious conspiracies to defeat the whole act. We therefore feel that a more severe penalty should be provided for infractions. One method would be to make offences against the act and regulations indictable offences, but this would be too severe in the case of many minor infractions. Therefore this amendment creates a distinct offence with heavier penalties. This is done by changing section 50 of the act, and the bill is to provide for that change.

Mr. CHARLTON: How many convictions have there been in the last couple of years?

Mr. GARDINER: I am not able to say how many convictions there have been. There would probably have been more started if this particular clause had been drawn as now proposed. In a number of cases we had great difficulty in obtaining convictions, and in some where convictions were obtained, it was thought the penalty was not sufficiently severe to prevent their happening again.

Mr. WRIGHT: May I ask the minister if the same types of tests are used in both countries for Bang's disease and tuberculosis? There was some indication a year ago that different types of tests were used, and that was partly the reason why the cattle were going down that were exported.

Mr. GARDINER: Until about two years ago the tests which we were using in Canada were somewhat different from those being used recently in the United States. Some change has been made in order to make the tests more nearly conform in the two countries. The same is true with regard to Bang's disease. We have now accepted the calf vaccination practice which has been going on in the United States for a considerable time so as to prevent Bang's disease.

Mr. STEPHENSON: Is there an improvement in the situation with regard to the number of veterinarians available to make tests? In my county, cattle shipments to the United States are held up unduly through lack of veterinarians to test the animals. In some cases there is no veterinarian in the county and the exporters have to send out and bring one in to do the work. Is there any improvement?

Mr. GARDINER: The situation has not improved greatly up to the present, although we have made arrangements under which third-year students and up are accepted as internes, so to speak, to go and work under the direction of veterinarians. But there are 500 veterinary students in the colleges at present who will graduate within the next four years. The number that will graduate this year is not as great as the number that will graduate in the last two years of that period, but there are approximately 500 whom we expect to graduate within that period of time. That is not nearly enough to take care of the situation which now exists, and we hope that it will be found necessary and possible greatly to increase the numbers as the years go along. I think the only condition that will make it possible to encourage men to go into the practice of the treatment of animals is a continuation of the fairly good prices that are now obtained for livestock, which makes it possible for men who are raising livestock to call in veterinarians in many more cases than they were able to do a few years ago.

Mr. STEPHENSON: I do not think the remuneration which is being paid to veterinarians by the department at the present time will attract veterinarians into the department for this work. I understand that the remuneration paid is $2,800 a year. I think any veterinarian could go out today and earn a good deal more than $2,800 a year. Has any consideration been given to raising the remuneration of these veterinarians in order to attract them to the department?

Mr. GARDINER: In recent months there has been adjustment of payment which has been made under the direction of the civil service commission. All I can say in regard to it is that we are informed that our veterinarians are being paid on a level which the civil service commission thinks is sufficiently high to compare favourably with salaries being paid in other departments. I cannot go any farther than that at the moment. We have one or two vacancies on the staff of the department at the present time, which would indicate what the hon. member says is true, namely, that most veterinarians can make more outside the department at present than they can in it. I should just like to say that condition is rather a new development over the last five or six years.

Mr. BRYCE: When a complaint is received that there has been infringement of this act, or when there is a complaint about an animal going to the other side of the boundary, does that matter come to the minister's department? Do the Department of Agriculture and the minister set the prosecution afoot, or is that done by the Minister of Justice?

Mr. GARDINER: We have an arrangement with the United States authorities under which they accept certification from our veterinarians under the conditions that I outlined a few moments ago. Of course, if we get reports from there that cattle are arriving in the United States which are not in accordance with the certification, then we may give a warning. If it is not a serious case or if it is not a repeat of something that has happened before, we may give a warning. But if there is any repeating of the offence, of course prosecution will be started.

Mr. BRYCE: Is that the responsibility of the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. WRIGHT: I should like to find out a little more about this matter of prosecution. It would be mostly a matter of cases of United States buyers who are here and pick up cattle, and who are endeavouring to get them across, in which the offences would occur; or at least I would suppose it would be in their case that most of the offences would occur. What jurisdiction has the minister to prosecute in those cases where the offences may have been committed by someone outside the country?

Mr. GARDINER: The cases I know of are not cases of United States buyers. They are cases of Canadian sellers; that is, they are buyers from the farmers who sell into the United States. The conspiracy is, in some instances, between the veterinarian who gives the certificate and the buyer who is buying the cattle; and in other instances, it will be as between the veterinarian and the owner of the cattle who wants them cleared, to be shipped to the United States.

Section agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE ACT

AREAS SURVEYED AS SETTLEMENT OR RIVER LOTS—LAND IN ELIGIBLE AND INELIGIBLE TOWNSHIPS

Right Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to amend the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, 1939, to provide that the act may apply to areas surveyed as settlement or river lots, to provide also that where a farmer has land in an eligible township and land in an ineligible township payment may be made to him to the full amount of his eligible land, and for the purpose of clarifying certain provisions of the act.

Mr. WRIGHT: Will the minister give an explanation of just what are the implications of this resolution?

Mr. GARDINER: Hon. members who come from the area along the Red river, and those who come from areas in Saskatchewan along the Saskatchewan river, will understand that the first settlers in those areas settled on the system of land ownership which prevailed at that time in the province of Quebec; that is, they have river lots which ran back from the river. The river was then the means of transportation as between these various farms, and they have a system of river lots that run from the river back into the country. Under this resolution we provide that payment shall be paid on the basis of a township; and the township, as we understand it and as it is defined in the act, is the local survey unit six miles square. No provision was made in the original act for taking care of these river lots. It has become necessary, as a result of experiences during the last year, to make such provision. These lots are now in areas which should draw under this act, and there is no special provision for them. So this gives us authority, under the regulations, to define, within the district in which the river lots are, an area which bears a reasonable relationship to the six miles square that prevails in other sections of the three western provinces.

The other matter which is mentioned in the resolution specifically has to do with an amendment we made last year. Hon. members will recall that when I brought in the legislation last year I suggested that no material change was being made in the principle underlying the payments which were to be made. But after we started to administer the act, we found that in one of the sections we had provided something which did make a material change. Where a farmer was on land in two different townships, and where one piece of land was removed from the other by four or five, or maybe ten miles, part of the land would be in a district where there was an average crop of less than eight bushels to the acre, while the other would be in a district where the average would be perhaps more than eight bushels, which meant that the one piece of land would come under the act while the other would not. Last year we provided, I think inadvertently—I did not understand at the time that this change would be made, and certainly it was not explained to other hon. members—that this land would be dealt with proportionately, as between the two areas, as though it were one farm. It has been found that this does not deal fairly with farmers in the different areas, and we are simply asking to have the act put back as it was before. There will be no change now from the provision which was in effect prior to last year, and the payments for 1947 will be made as though the act had not been amended at that time. It will result in some additional amount going to the farmers as compared with what they would get under the amendment of last year; and, since the act has been administered on the other basis ever since 1939 and has given general satisfaction, we do not think this change should be made. Therefore we are asking to have it amended in order that payments may continue to be made on the old basis.

These are the chief amendments being made. As is indicated, the others are for purposes of clarification, and I think they can be better discussed when we are considering the bill in committee.

Mr. BENTLEY: Last year the act was amended to permit the payment of prairie farm assistance to those operating co-operative farms. Has that been carried out this year?

Mr. GARDINER: No change is being made in that connection. It is left as it was last year.

Mr. BENTLEY: I ask the question because today I was informed that the Matador co-operative farm is not receiving those payments, on the ground that it is a co-operative. I should like the minister to verify that, if he will, because it is a serious situation.

Mr. GARDINER: I can get that information before the bill is brought down, and we can discuss it then.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. GARDINER thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 204, to amend the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, 1939.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

VETERANS REHABILITATION ACT

EXTENSION OF ALLOWANCE PROVISIONS

Hon. MILTON F. GREGG (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved the second reading of Bill No. 200, to amend the Veterans Rehabilitation Act.

Mr. BROOKS: Will the minister give a short explanation of the bill?

Mr. GREGG: I do not wish to add anything to what I said on the resolution Friday evening, except that, following second reading, I shall move that it be referred to the committee on veterans affairs.

Mr. A. J. BROOKS (Royal): I do not propose to say very much on this bill at this time, since it is to be referred to the committee on veterans affairs. When the minister was speaking the other day I understood him to say the bill was intended to correct certain anomalies and conflictions; I think those were his words.

At the outset I may say I am in agreement with the principle of the bill in practically all its aspects. There is one anomaly, however, that I think should be dealt with briefly tonight. That is the situation of members of the merchant marine as far as educational benefits are concerned. On numerous occasions we have urged that the young men who served in the merchant marine should receive the same benefits as those who served in the other branches of the services, and I believe that this is an anomaly which the minister and the veterans affairs committee might very well deal with when the bill is under consideration.

Another anomaly, as I think I may call it, has to do with the South African nurses. We remember that at first these nurses were not given the benefits which were granted to the other nurses who went overseas, as the result of a certain situation that arose in South Africa. Later they were granted those benefits; but I have been informed that certain nurses who served in South Africa did not return home but married in England and other parts of the world. Because those nurses did not return to Canada they have not been able to obtain benefits under either the War Service Grants Act or the rehabilitation act, and I think this is something which should receive consideration.

Then I have a letter before me from a Canadian doctor who was in the United States when war broke out. He came back to Canada desiring to join the Canadian forces but was rejected on physical grounds. He returned to the United States and served with the United States forces in the south seas for nearly three years. He then returned to Canada, but not being able to set up a practice, returned to the United States and took out his first citizenship papers, but not being satisfied again returned to Canada. Because he served in the United States army and took out papers as a United States citizen he cannot obtain rehabilitation benefits from our Department of Veterans Affairs. Because he was a Canadian citizen during the period of his service with the United States he cannot obtain benefits from the United States department, and I think this is an anomaly. In his letter the doctor says he knows of other cases of the kind, so that I think this is another matter which should receive some attention.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, this bill will be before the veterans affairs committee, so it is not my intention to deal with it at any greater length this evening.

Mr. G. R. PEARKES (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to bring to your attention one amendment which will work great hardship on a certain group of veterans. I refer to the statement made by the minister on April 16 concerning the veterans of the permanent force who will be deemed to have been discharged or retired from the force as of September 30, 1947. When we were discussing this amendment during the resolution stage, at one time the minister was under the impression that I was referring to the younger men who were joining the permanent force. I want to make it quite clear that I refer to the veterans who served during the second world war and who decided to remain on in the active forces of this country. When a man joins the active forces he enlists for a definite period of time, for five years in the Royal Canadian Navy, five years in the Royal Canadian Air Force, and from three to five years in the Canadian army.

These men on the 30th day of September, 1947, were discharged or, I should say, ceased to be in the interim forces, and many of them on that day or on the following day or at some subsequent period decided to enlist in the active forces. They entered as it were into a contract with the government to give their services in the active forces and to receive in return certain pay and allowances. At that time, as they knew, rehabilitation allowances were then being granted to men who were being discharged from the army, navy or air force at the time they took their discharge. Those are the allowances which veterans coming within the army, navy or air force have been entitled to, provided that they make application within twelve months of the time of their discharge.

I submit that the men who remained on did so in some cases fully realizing that they would be eligible for these allowances when the period of their service was terminated. The justice of such a course would seem to be illustrated by subsequent remarks made by the minister when he said, as reported at page 3068 of Hansard, in the discussion.

If by any chance he is discharged—

That is, one of these veterans.

—now or next week or next year he will, of course, come under whatever remaining benefits there may be related to the last war.

Again on the following page he said:

As they come out from month to month, they will certainly be entitled to such rehabilitation benefits as gratuities, re-establishment or Veterans' Land Act benefits.

We are discussing at the moment rehabilitation allowances, awaiting business returns and education allowances in the main. I submit that at this stage when men are through their term of enlistment, and when they have in good faith carried out the terms of the contract which they made with the government, it is a gross breach of contract to say now that they may not get those benefits to which it was agreed or understood at the time they would be entitled, and which the minister on Friday night thought they would be allowed to get as they came out from month to month, or this week or next week or some time next year.

I feel that the bill as it is presented to us establishes a cut-off line, the 30th day of September, 1947; and twelve months after that, which I suggest is the 30th day of September, 1948, these men would not be entitled to the allowances to which I have referred.

The only fair way to deal with this matter would be to say they would be entitled to these allowances until the termination of their enlistment contract; that is, until the end of the three or five years, as the case may be, for which they have entered into a contract with this government to serve under the terms decided upon in 1946 or whenever they joined. A man decided, perhaps at the end of 1946, that he would stay on in the permanent force because he would realize at that time he was not ready to start up in business or he was not ready to take that course of training which he desired in order to complete his re-establishment into civil life. So he entered into a contract with this government for a term of three or five years' service, and I submit that it is a gross breach of faith to break that contract at this time.

I hope the minister will consider an amendment to the amendment so as to enable the veteran who is now serving in the active forces to complete his first term of enlistment and, at the conclusion of that term of enlistment, to receive all the allowances which are now in force under the rehabilitation act.

Mr. HOWARD C. GREEN (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, as the house knows, it is under this act that assistance is given to veterans attending university. On Friday evening we had a short discussion with regard to these particular veterans, and on Saturday morning, as luck would have it, I received a brief on the "Financial Problems of Student Veterans at the University of British Columbia," submitted by the university branch of the Canadian Legion. That branch is very strong and well run, and in the past its summaries of situations faced by the student veterans have been accurate. I have no reason to doubt that the present brief is also carefully prepared and well worthy of study.

They deal with several points, but this evening I should like to emphasize two to the minister. The first is the position of the single veterans. There has been no increase in the amounts paid to them, and this brief states:

A sample poll taken among single student veterans at University of British Columbia in March, 1948, showed that 32 per cent of those answering said they could not complete their courses on their present income, and an additional 12 per cent said it was doubtful. Further, 90 per cent of all students polled worked during the summer vacation.

That is their review of the situation of the single veteran.

They also deal with the question of permissible earnings; that is, the amounts which students are allowed to earn before their grants are reduced. The brief sets out:

In the case of all groups the present regulations limit the earnings of a student veteran or his wife to $75 a month or alternatively reduce his grant by any amount over $75 earned. We know of no case where the husband and wife have been able to earn $75 a month each thus making a combined "other income" of $150. Under the existing regulations where the wife earns nothing the husband who earns over the $75 a month has his grant reduced by the amount he earns over the $75. While the possibilities of a man earning more than $75 and still succeeding with his studies are limited, nevertheless, some possibilities exist. For example, some students have been able to obtain jobs as night watchmen under circumstances where they can study during the greater part of their working hours. In order to take such a job the student veteran must work the number of hours per month which the job calls for. If the job pays, for example, $90 a month his grant is reduced by $15. If he accepts only $75 a month for a job which would normally pay $90, in order to avoid reducing his grant, the net effect of the government regulation is to subsidize the employer, and often entails breaking minimum wage laws in the province of British Columbia.

In the case where the wife earns over $75 like restrictions apply. Should a man's wife be earning more than $75 per month the husband's grant is reduced to the single rate, hence if a wife is earning $80 a month her husband's grant is reduced from $90 to $60.

And later on:

We are firmly of the opinion that the overhead cost of enforcing this regulation is far greater than the amount the government could possibly save by whittling down the grants of student veterans in this manner.

It is difficult to reconcile the present restrictions on earnings with the government's attitude towards self-help on the part of the student veteran and, therefore, we urge that all restrictions on earnings of student veterans be removed.

They go on to point out that this business of reducing the grant to student veterans is solely within the discretion of the minister under the terms of section 13 of the act. No amendment would be required in order to enable the minister to change these regulations, because apparently they are ministerial. I suggest once again that the minister and his department give careful consideration to doing away with this restriction on veterans earning what they can get. I do not think it is helping the government; I do not think it is helping the country, and it is hard on the veterans themselves.

[Mr. Green.]

Mr. BENTLEY: When the minister spoke a few minutes ago he did not speak loudly and he was not facing this way. Did he say he was going to ask that this bill be referred to the special committee on veterans affairs?

Mr. GREGG: Yes.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the special committee on veterans affairs.

RAILWAY GRADE CROSSING FUND

INCREASE IN AMOUNT TO BE APPROPRIATED FOR NINE YEARS FROM APRIL, 1948

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of Bill No. 201, to amend the Railway Act.

Mr. GREEN: May I suggest to the minister that this bill be allowed to stand since it is now five minutes to eleven?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am perfectly satisfied to move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. CHEVRIER: Tomorrow we shall resume the debate on the amendment of Mr. Coldwell to the motion to go into supply and the subamendment of Mr. Bracken. It is hoped that we shall be able to complete the debate on the amendment and subamendment before six o'clock, but if that is found to be impossible the debate will be adjourned until Wednesday at three o'clock in the afternoon. From eight o'clock until nine o'clock tomorrow evening we shall take public bills. After nine o'clock we shall take the second reading of the Vocational Training Co-ordination Act amendment, which is No. 6 on today's order paper. Then the second reading of the Unemployment Insurance Act amendment, which is No. 15 on today's order paper. Then the second reading of the bill to amend the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, No. 14 on the order paper, and the second reading of Bill No. 201 to amend the Railway Act, No. 7 on the order paper.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

END OF VOLUME III