

Germany and France On Verge of War; Britain Stands by the Side of Latter

No Progress Made Over Morocco Affairs and Sinister Rumors Abroad

London, June 17.—It can no longer be denied that we are in the presence of an international crisis of the first magnitude. The public gained its first knowledge of the grave nature of the situation from a Paris dispatch, which was published throughout Europe, producing the profoundest impression of any newspaper utterance of recent times.

Any serious encroachment on British interests, Lord Lansdowne has counselled France, while avoiding all provocation, to preserve a firm attitude in face of German aggression. Great Britain has also taken important independent action, which is not discussed. It will become known when the China squadron and other ships of the British navy, which are hastening homeward at top speed, are reported to be in the Mediterranean.

To discuss, the French Government is waiting for Germany's answer to those questions. The correspondence adds that M. Rouvier's conciliatory tone has been mistaken by Germany for weakness, and the Kaiser's demands are increasing correspondingly. But for the encouragement received from Lord Lansdowne, British Foreign Secretary, France would by now have acceded to all the demands.

Since the railway officers and local police began to give tramps special attention six years ago, the number of tramps has been gradually growing smaller, with the result that thefts and other crimes have decreased appreciably. According to the detective the trainbands are very thankful to the Government for removing one of the most dangerous elements they had to contend with.

Grand Trunk's Petition Causes Some Uneasiness

Shippers Concerned About the Railway's Latest Move Re Interwitching.

The petition which is said to be in circulation at the instance of the Grand Trunk Railway in regard to inter-switching is causing great deal of uneasiness amongst local shippers. Not many of them have been privileged to see the document as yet, but it is understood to contain a statement that the shippers of London do not desire that the Grand Trunk shall be called upon to place cars on its sidings for shippers over other roads to points at which these other roads compete with the Grand Trunk. For example, a shipper located on a Grand Trunk siding desires to ship a carload of goods to Windsor via the Michigan Central. He notifies the Grand Trunk that he wants a Michigan Central car on his siding, and will then send the goods via the M. C. R. to Windsor. This is where the objection of the Grand Trunk comes in. The company feels that it should not be called upon to place the cars of other companies on Grand Trunk sidings unless the Grand Trunk does not reach the point to which the shipment is consigned. But the shippers naturally see the matter in a different light. Some of them say that the Grand Trunk should not seek to make a different arrangement with London to that which it has made with other places. In Toronto and other cities where inter-switching arrangements are in force, it is understood the Grand Trunk is bound to place cars on its sidings for shippers, no matter where the goods are consigned to. Thus the Grand Trunk is compelled, they say, to bring cars of other companies on its own sidings to compete with the Grand Trunk. In the entire inter-switching controversy the sticking point has always been that the Grand Trunk has all to lose and nothing to gain by entering into an inter-switching arrangement in this city, for the very good reason that the great majority of local shippers are located along the line of the Grand Trunk, and until such times as the Grand Trunk gets something in return for the privilege of allowing other companies to compete with it in London, an agreement with the other companies is not likely to be reached, unless it lies within the power of the railway commission to make the railway enter into an arrangement. Of course, the commission has ordered that the Grand Trunk make the connection in East London by the 22nd of this month, but in local municipal circles it is said that it will occasion no surprise if something turns up which will give the G. T. R. an excuse to delay the agreement. Asked if the city proposes to take any further action in the matter, Mayor Campbell said today that inter-switching had been placed in the hands of the city solicitor some time ago, and that he can be depended upon to look after the city's interests. Any action which the mayor recommended in the matter will be taken by the city council. His worship also explained that the city solicitor had been objected to the payment of a bill of $137.75 for the expenses of the party which went to Ottawa some time ago to interview the railway commission re inter-switching, do not quite understand what they are objecting to. The party went in no sense a party of honor. It consisted of the mayor, the city solicitor, a couple of aldermen, and a witness from the township, who had seen the Grand Trunk men destroy the connection of the inter-switching line with the C. P. R. The party had been requested by the city solicitor, and each and every man went to Ottawa as a witness for the city of London. Consequently all the names of the party were registered at the meeting of No. 1 committee, when the accounts came up, was not well grounded. In fact, it is said that had it been known on the deputation there would have been no objection.

Satisfactory Agreement Reached Between Telegraphers and Teamsters and Owners Said to Have United and Forced Up Price to Public.

Montreal, June 16.—A satisfactory agreement has been reached between the Grand Trunk and the representatives of the telegraphers, as the result of conferences held here between H. B. Perham, president, and D. Campbell, vice-president of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers, representing the men, and General Manager Charles M. Hays and Mr. McLaughlin, of the Grand Trunk. The settlement is in the nature of a mutual compromise. According to the basis of settlement the company agrees to raise the minimum wage of the telegraphers all over the system, but the company will have the right to pay extra for Sunday work if they see fit. The excursionists made the best of the situation, and spent the night dancing and singing. The Detroit Belle Isle and Windsor Ferry Company, early today, when word was received here of the stranding, sent the steamer Promise to the Columbia's assistance. The passengers were transferred to the Promise, after a number of ineffectual attempts had been made to pull the Columbia into the channel, and arrived here at 7:30 a.m. There was no panic nor excitement among the passengers at any time.

ONE BIG "D...N" COST $30,000

Verdict Is Given Architect Who Says Mrs. Gould Swore at Him.

New York, June 17.—One big "D...N" by Mrs. Howard Gould has been adjudged in court to be worth approximately $30,000. Twelve good men and true on a jury at Mineola, L. I., fixed the price.

Basing their decision on a big and angry "D...N" which they believe Mrs. Gould hurled at Albert J. Haydel, an architect, they returned a verdict today for $29,183 against Mrs. Gould's husband in a suit brought by Mr. Haydel for alleged breach of contract in connection with drawings for Castle Gould, a $1,000,000 mansion which was to have been erected on the Gould estate at Sands Point, L. I.

Incidentally refused to believe a lady under oath, even when backed up by her husband's sworn testimony.

Those who heard the testimony and the instructions given to the jury were not surprised by the verdict. Influenced by what he said, it is believed the jury reached its conclusion chiefly on the alleged humiliation to which Mrs. Gould subjected Mr. Haydel when she ordered him from the Gould apartments in the Waldorf-Astoria, threatening it was tested, said Mrs. Gould called me a damned architect and told me to get out or she would have me thrown out.

Much discussion between the architect and the Goulds regarding the changing of plans for Castle Gould had preceded the argument, which led up to the alleged threat of expulsion from the hostelry. He refused to go there again for negotiations, but Mrs. Gould insisted on appointing another meeting place. This they refused to do, and so the work on the plans lapsed, thus giving Mr. Gould, as he thought, grounds for a $30,000 damage suit against Mr. Haydel.

Mr. Haydel then filed a $60,000 suit on his own account for alleged breach of contract. While both Mr. and Mrs. Gould vigorously denied on the witness stand that profane language had been used by either party, the judge was ordered to leave the Gould apartment, Judge Keogh made much of the incident in his charge. In his charge to the jury he virtually made the decision of the jury hinge on Mrs. Gould's big "D...N".

The judge said: "There are certain recognized standards which govern the relations of persons in civilized society. While the contract between Mr. Gould and Mr. Haydel for the drawing of plans for Castle Gould did not stipulate that the defendant was not to use profane language in dealing with the plaintiff, yet the obligation not to do so was implied, just as strong. If the jury believes Mr. Haydel was subjected to great chagrin and humiliation by Mrs. Gould and that his sensibilities were deeply wounded and that he was justified in not going back to the Gould apartments, then it shall govern itself accordingly in deciding whether he shall have compensation for services rendered."

"The great question as between man and man is, Was he so humiliated by bitter, severe and degrading treatment that he was justified in refusing to go back?"

Mr. Gould's attorney has taken steps to appeal the case.

DEATH OF THE ESKIMO APILE

The Famous Northman Succumbs to Heart Failure at New York.

New York, June 17.—Apile, the most widely-traveled Eskimo in the world, is dead. An old trader and a weak man, he had been in New York since Saturday, June 15.

His daughter, Esther Smith, was the first of the family to visit the United States. She was born in the Peary country and had acted as his interpreter among her people, the Labrador Eskimo, and had been in New York since Saturday.

She had been in New York since Saturday, June 15. Her father, the Eskimo, had been in New York since Saturday, June 15.

Before that Esther had married a white man named Smith. At the fair, their first baby was born a girl. It was the nine-days wonder of the Midway, and Mrs. Potter Palmer named it Apile.

Apile went back to Labrador after the fair, saying that he was sick of the white man's ways. He didn't stay long. Fifty years ago he was a young man, and he was a young man when he was taken to the fair.

Several years ago, while he was playing an engagement at Huber's Museum, Apile fell in with Harlan I. Smith, of the Museum of Natural History. Smith gave him a job at the museum. These clothes in native garments, are on exhibition at the museum.

When Apile settled down in Brooklyn last winter to await the opening of the Coney Island season, he was in very poor health. An operation was performed on his old tumor, but it left him weak. He was 60 years old and life in a climate to which he was not accustomed had told on him.

He failed steadily until a heart attack carried him off on Saturday.

"You see," said Esther Smith, who speaks perfect English. "We had been expecting it for a long time. Nine of us came from Labrador to the Chicago fair, and my father is the first to die. The Greenland Eskimos in native garments, are on exhibition at the museum. All die of consumption, but I taught our people how to take care of themselves."

STOLE DUCHESS' GEMS

Coolly Walked Into House and Helped Himself to $30,000 Worth.

London, June 17.—A homeless vagabond named Chapman was arraigned in the police court recently for the burglary of the Duchess of Devonshire's jewels, which were stolen from her London residence May 30.

One of the jewels was offered at a jeweler's shop for valuation, and the thief led to Chapman's arrest. He then made a statement, showing that he had the stuff with a tailor named White, who buried it. White confessed this and showed the police where the valuables were buried. He is now under arrest.

MARY ROGERS MUST DIE

Placed in a Darkened Cell Until Marches Out to Gallows.

Windsor, Vt., June 17.—Mary Rogers, condemned to die June 23, on the gallows which stands just without her cell door, had had her last glimpse of the green fields and the blue sky which stretch before the windows of the room in which she has passed the last year of her life.

Yesterday afternoon, before the death watch was posted at the cell door, Matron Durke pasted across the windows large sheets of brown wrapping paper. Through the six-inch space below the paper Mrs. Rogers has a limited view of the prison yard and the street, but the blue sky and the green fields have gone from her sight forever.

Nor can any one from outside see the condemned woman. Heretofore, as she stood at the window, she has been clearly visible to passers-by, and the curious and the pitying have gazed upon her impressive features as she has looked from these windows, meditating, perchance, upon that afternoon when she killed her husband to death with chloroform.

ZELDA DAMERON

BY MEREDITH NICHOLSON.

"Grocery or drug store, possibly." "Where did you get it?" his tone was fierce now.

Zelda and Olive exchanged glances and lifted their voices in laughter. "Somebody's been in the car. There's no mistaking that stuff!"

"I've lost a bet," said Zelda, mournfully. "I'm almost afraid to tell you that I made a bet against you."

"Of course you would bet against me." "It was with Mr. Leighton. I said it was all about your being able to tell that it was all alike, and all very disagreeable, and that nobody really knew."

"But," said Zelda, "he couldn't see it! He's so very good. Really good and proper people like Mr. Leighton never touch anything but the real thing."

"Ze, don't be silly. Olive Merriam, your cousin is just too foolishness. I hope you can show her the light of a little sweet reasonableness. She's getting worse."

"It's wonderful how well she hides her real feelings," said Olive. "But here comes that little soldier on horse-back."

Pollock was riding up to the house on his nimble-footed sorrel. He had been to the city and was returning to the quarters he had established in a dwelling on the corner of the street.

"How dare he come here?" asked Rodney, half aloud. "It doesn't take a very big dare, for we have expressly asked him," answered Zelda, as Pollock walked around to the veranda steps.

"He's a little fellow," reflected Rodney, under his breath, as he looked up the steps, shaking hands with Zelda and Olive. As the young man turned toward him with hand outstretched.

"Thank you, but I'm too hot to ride. I'm much prefer the car, sir," replied Rodney, stiffly, without looking at the young man.

Pollock flushed slightly and the young woman tried to hide their surprise. "Thank you, but I'm too hot to ride. I'm much prefer the car, sir," replied Rodney, stiffly, without looking at the young man.

"I suppose I'll miss the car," observed Merriam irresolutely. "You ought to miss it! Why did you treat Captain Pollock so shabbily?"

"Nothing Better" Could be said of any Piano than the Words Contained in the Letter Below from Mr. A. T. Hunter, Regina.

Mr. Hunter is the Manager of the Regina Roller Mill Co., and a musical enthusiast. Not long ago, after considering all the different makes, he purchased a New Scale Williams Piano and his letter is eloquent as the result.

"I beg to state that the New Scale Williams Piano you sold me gives me entire satisfaction. Its tone, beautiful melody, its action excellent and it stays in tune longer than any piano I have ever heard."

"I don't like him," replied Merriam, grimly. "I wish you just wintered to have anything to do with him. You must drop him. Do you understand?"

"I certainly do not. I'm sorry you don't like him; I like him—better than anybody."

"Then stop it right now; stop it; stop it!" And the old gentleman beat the road with his stick until the gravel flew.

"I'm not going to do anything of the kind," said Zelda. "I'll even tell you a secret," she said, dropping her voice to a whisper.

"I'll fix that. I'll give him a bottle of this unparelleled stuff. He deserves it for his sayings." "But," said Zelda, "he couldn't see it! He's so very good."

"It's wonderful how well she hides her real feelings," said Olive. "But here comes that little soldier on horse-back."

kindly on the visitor, "I regret very much that you have come to me with this question."

"I've no doubt you do, sir," began Pollock, hotly. "—because," Merriam continued, paying no heed to the interruption.

"Then wait! I regret very much that I should have been felt by a feeling which I should prefer not to explain."

"I'm not going to do anything of the kind," said Zelda. "I'll even tell you a secret," she said, dropping her voice to a whisper.

How to be Healthy and Beautiful

How to prevent the Summer sun from playing havoc with the complexion.

Powder under the gloves will prevent the hands and arms from freckling.

Get a becoming sun hat.

Plenty of powder before exposure.

THE first hot rays of the early summer sun play havoc with the complexion, and the woman who wants to retain a beautiful skin, free from tan and freckles, must begin to take preventive measures early.

There are many salves and lotions for removing the enemies of the summer beauty; but perhaps it is worth while to consider preventive measures first.

The average girl of to-day likes the out-of-door life and goes about bare-headed in the strong sun, and to some fortunate ones this brings a healthy, open-air complexion with a most becoming shade of tan and no freckles. But to the less fortunate it brings results that are not so effective—skin red as a lobster or covered with large, brown freckles, which never adds to the appearance, even though it may look healthy.

Of course, wearing a hat is a great bother at times; but some of the sun hats this year are creations of beauty, and the summer girl will do well to consider them. Suitable for country walks, walking, and the old-fashioned sun-bonnets of mull, in white, pale pink or blue, are equally fascinating, and can be comfortably worn even when playing golf.

However, if you scorn wearing a head-covering of any sort, perhaps you will not consider it too much trouble to prepare the skin to resist the havoc which is the result of exposure. Before going out, bathe the face with warm water, and after thoroughly drying, rub in a good cold cream—those containing cucumber juice are the best—wipe off gently with a soft linen cloth, and then dust lightly with powder.

In these days of elbow sleeves, the hands and arms should receive the same care as the face; and the effect of the most fetching summer frock is spoiled by a pair of red, freckled arms. Sometimes the arms and hands will freckle even when protected by gloves; but this can frequently be prevented by applying powder freely before putting on the gloves.

Another simple remedy is the juice of a lemon, and the most convenient way to apply it is to cut the lemon in half and rub the inside on the skin. In using any lotion on the face, care should be taken in applying it. The best way is to pour as much as you will need at one time of whatever you are using in a clean saucer, then apply with sterilized absorbent cotton or gauze, which can be bought reasonably by the pound or package. You can make some little balls of the cotton or pad of the gauze and put them into a clean, wide-mouthed jar, with a screw top, and use them as needed. Dip them into the lotion and gently wash over the face, using fresh ones from time to time during the process.

I am going to add some of my prescriptions which have proved most successful in the removal of tan and freckles, and I trust that all my correspondents who have written to me on this subject will consider their questions answered. Let me say, however, that no one preparation of the kind will produce the desired result in every instance. All that some skins require is the simple lemon and glycerin lotion; when this fails, experiment until you find a lotion that is successful for you.

Lemon and Glycerin Lotion.
(For Light Freckles and Sunburn.)

Lemon juice
should be applied immediately after exposure.

Citric acid (lemon), 3 drams; hot water, 11 ounces; borax, 2 drams; red rose petals, 1 ounce; glycerin, 1 ounce. Dissolve the acid and borax in the water; infuse the petals for an hour; strain through a jelly bag after twenty-four hours; decant the clear portion and add the glycerin. Apply as often as agreeable.

Dr. Shoemaker's Bleach.
Bichloride of mercury, in coarse powder, 8 grains; white zinc, 2 ounces; rosewater, 1 ounce; salicylic acid, 1 grain. Rub together. Moop over the affected parts. Keep out of the way of ignorant persons and children.

To Remove Moth Patch.
Cream butter, 10 grams; castor oil, 10 grams; oxide of zinc, 20 centigrams; white wax, 10 centigrams; essence of rose, 10 drops. Apply to the moth patch night and morning.

Obstinate Freckles.
Oxide of zinc, 1/2 dram; sublimed sulphur, 1/2 dram; dextrin, 1/2 dram; glycerin, 1/2 dram. Spread the paste upon the freckles at night before going to bed. In the morning remove what remains with a little powdered borax and sweet oil.

Salicylic acid, 60 grains; bay rum, 4 ounces; kiesel, 1/2 ounce; sweet oil, 1/2 ounce; white soap, 1/2 ounce; white cream, 1/2 ounce; blanching almonds, 1/2 ounce. ## If You Would Have Pretty Teeth

Don't bestow less care upon the teeth than upon complexion and hair.

Don't brush across the teeth, but up and down; the upper teeth from the gums downward, and the lower teeth from the gums upward.

Don't go to bed without brushing the teeth, for it is at night that the acid of the saliva acts in its work on the teeth.

Don't let tartar accumulate on the teeth, for it brings a whole train of evils in its wake, and is removed by a dentist at least once a year.

Don't use a tooth powder which contains gritty acid or irritating substances.

Don't fail to rinse the teeth thoroughly with an alkaline wash after taking acids, such as lemon juice, vinegar or strong medicines.

Don't swallow food without mastication. Modern cookery, by making mastication almost unnecessary, is responsible for much decay of the teeth.

Don't use one side of the mouth only when eating, for then the teeth have not all the same amount of exercise, and decay sets in more rapidly on one side than the other.

Don't crack nuts or bite thread with the teeth.

Don't fail to ponder occasionally on these facts: that if you have good teeth there cannot be thorough mastication. Without thorough mastication there cannot be perfect digestion. Without perfect digestion there cannot be proper assimilation. Without proper assimilation there cannot be nutrition. Without nutrition there cannot be health. Hence, the paramount importance of good teeth.

LETTERS AND THEIR ANSWERS

Get a becoming sun hat.

Wants Fluffy Hair
Could you suggest a shampoo which would leave the hair soft and at the same time fluffy? My hair is fine and inclined to be oily. I have tried borax, the egg shampoo and several good soaps, but, while they all leave it very soft, none leaves it fluffy. It lies close to the head, and for some days after washing it I can do nothing with it on this account.

Cucumber Lotion or Cream.
(For Sunburn.)
Expressed juice of cucumbers, 1/2 pint; denatured alcohol, 1/2 ounce; sweet oil, 1/2 ounce; shaving cream, 1 dram; blanching almonds, 1/2 ounce. Red Face
You have done so much for others, and have received help from your columns myself, but have never seen anything pertaining to a very high color of the face. When I got the least bit warm or excited, the blood goes to my face, and it gets so red and burns so, and it takes so long for it to cool off, or the color to go down. In fact, my face is always red, more or less.

To Restore Color of Hair
I am interested in one of your recipes for restoring the natural color of the hair, but would like to know before using the preparation if it will change the color of hair not gray. Will it also promote the growth and stop the hair from falling out and cleanse the scalp from dandruff? There are some other ladies in the house who would like to use it, but I fear I cannot help you in your trouble. Chronic redness of the face is apt to come from constitutional causes, or else is the result of a very thin, sensitive skin; and I do not know of any general remedy.

To Enlarge the Bust
I am very much interested in your page of recipes and advice, and enjoy it more than any of the other pages, and I want to tell you how much I enjoy it. I have written through your column what will enlarge the bust, and I would like to know if you will appreciate your kindness very much, and I also would like you to tell me how I can gain flesh. I am very anxious for large hips, as my hips are small in proportion to the rest of my body, and I am so anxious to enlarge them, also tell me a remedy to make my eyebrows heavy.

V.—THE ADVENTURE OF THE PRIORY SCHOOL.

W E have had some dramatic entrances and exits upon our small stage at Baker street but I cannot recall anything more sudden and startling than the first appearance of Dr. Watson.

hunger and fatigue," said I, with my finger on the thready pulse, where the stream of life trickled thin and small. "Return ticket from Mackleton, in the North of England," said Holmes, drawing it from the watch-pocket. "It is not 12 o'clock yet. He has certainly been an early starter."

"I must inform you, gentlemen, that the Priory is a preparatory school, of which I am the founder and principal. 'Huxtable's Sidelights on Horace' may possibly recall my name to your memories. The Priory is, without exception, the best and most select preparatory school in England. Lord Leverstoke, the Earl of Blackwater, Sir Cathcart Soames—they all have entrusted their sons to me. But I felt that my school had reached its zenith, when, three weeks ago, the Duke of Holderness sent Mr. James Wilder, his secretary, with the information that young Lord Saltire, ten years old, his only son and heir, was about to be committed to my charge. Little did I think that this would be the prelude to the most crushing misfortune of my life."

was discovered. I at once called a roll of the whole establishment—boys, masters and servants. It was then that we ascertained that Lord Saltire had not been alone in his flight. Heidigger, the German master, was missing. His room was on the second floor, at the farther end of the building, facing the same way as Lord Saltire's. His bed had also been slept in, but he had apparently gone away partly dressed, since his shirt and socks were lying on the floor. He had undoubtedly let himself down by the ivy for we could see the marks of his feet where he had landed on the lawn. His bicycle was kept in a small shed beside this lawn, and it was also gone.

"I am quite well again. I cannot imagine how I came to be so weak. I wish you, Mr. Holmes, to come to Mackleton with me by the next train. My friend shook his head. "My colleague, Dr. Watson, could tell you that we are very busy at present. I am retained in this case of the Ferrers Documents, and the Abergavenny murder is coming up for trial. Only a very important issue could call me from London at present."

"You have been very remiss in not coming to me sooner," said I, looking at the young man. "You start me on my investigation with a very serious handicap. It is inconceivable, for example, that this boy and his livery would have yielded nothing to an expert observer."

"I am not to blame, Mr. Holmes. My friends were desirous to avoid all public scandal. He was afraid of his family unhappiness being dragged before the world. He has a deep horror of newspaper headlines. "But there has been some official investigation?" "Yes, sir, and it has proved most disappointing. An apparent clue was at once obtained since a boy and a young man were reported to have been seen leaving a neighboring station on the night of the disappearance. The news that the couple had been hunted down in Liverpool, and they prove to have no connection with the matter in hand. Then it was that in my despair and disappointment, after a sleepless night, I came straight to you by the express. "I suppose the local investigation was relaxed while this false clue was being followed up?" "It was entirely dropped."

"YOU INFERNAL SPIES!" THE MAN CRIED. slipped down upon the floor, and there was that majestic figure prostrate and insensible upon our bestricken hearthstone. We had sprung to our feet, and for a few moments we stared in silent amazement at this ponderous piece of wreckage, which told of some sudden and fatal storm far out on the ocean of life. Then Holmes hurried with a cushion for his head and I with brandy for his lips. The heavy, white face was seamed with lines of trouble, the hanging pouches under the closed eyes were leaden in color, the loose mouth drooped dolorously at the corners, the rolling chins were unshaven. Collar and shirt bore the grime of a long journey, and the hair bristled unkempt from the well-shaped head. It was a sorry stricken man who lay before us. "What is it, Watson?" asked Holmes. "Absolute exhaustion—possibly mere

"Important!" Our visitor threw up his hands. "Have you heard nothing of the abduction of the only son of the Duke of Holderness?" "What! The late Cabinet Minister?" "Exactly. We have tried to keep it out of the papers, but there was some rumour in the Globe last night. I thought it might have reached your ears. Holmes shot out his long, thin arm, and picked out "Volume H" in his encyclopedia of reference. "Holderness, 4th Duke, K. G., P. C.—half the alphabet! 'Baron Beverley, Earl of Carston—Dear me, what a list! Lord Lieutenant of Herefordshire since 1900. Married Edith, daughter of Sir Charles Appleton 1888. Heir and only child, Lord Saltire. Owns about two hundred and fifty thousand acres. Minerals in Lancashire and Wales. Address: Carlton House Terrace; Holderness Hall, Holderness; Carston Castle, Badgworth, Wales. Lord of the Admiralty, 1872; Chief Secretary of State for—' Well, well, this man is certainly one of the greatest subjects of the Crown."

"The greatest and perhaps the wealthiest. I am aware, Mr. Holmes, that you take a very high line in professional matters, and that you are prepared to work for work's sake. I tell you, however, that his Grace has already intimated that a check for five thousand pounds will be handed over to the person who can tell him where his son is, and another thousand to him who can name the man or men who have taken him."

think, Mr. Holmes, it is time that we were leaving for Euston. "I will order a four-wheeler. In a quarter of an hour we shall be at your service. If you are telegraphing home, Mr. Huxtable, it would be well to allow the people in your neighborhood to imagine that the inquiry is still going on in Liverpool, or wherever else that you had herring led your pack. In the meanwhile I will do a little quiet work at your own doors, and perhaps the scent is not so cold but that two old hounds like Watson and myself may get a sniff of it."

"That evening found us in the cold, bracing atmosphere of the Peak country, in which Dr. Watson's famous school is situated. It was already dark when we reached it. A card was lying on the hall table, and the butler whispered something to his master, who turned to us with agitation in every heavy feature. "The Duke was here," said he. "The Duke and Mr. Wilder are in the study. Come, gentlemen, and I will introduce you."

"I fear I cannot help you much, Holmes. My only perspective is so far as I know was his own father."

I could see that there were other questions which Holmes would have wished to put, but the nobleman's abrupt manner showed that the interview was at an end. It was evident that to his intense aristocratic nature this discussion of his intimate family affairs with a stranger was most abhorrent, and that he feared lest every fresh question would throw a fiercer light into the discreetly shadowed corners of his dual history. When the nobleman and his secretary had left, my friend flung himself at once with characteristic eagerness into the investigation. The boy's chamber was carefully examined, and yielded nothing save the absolute conviction that it was only through the window that he could have escaped. The German master's room and effects gave no further clue. In his case a trailer of ivy had given way under his weight, and we saw by the light of a lantern the mark on the lawn where his heels had come down. That one dint in the short, green grass was the only material witness left of this inexplicable nocturnal flight.

"THE SHOCKS OF DOOM."

BY O. HENRY IN NEW YORK AMERICAN.

There is an aristocracy of the public parks and even of the vagabonds who sit on the benches in the private apartments. Alliance fell rather than knew this, but when he stepped down out of this world into chaos his feet brought him directly to Madison Square. He had a hat and a string of beads, and a schoolgirl of the old order—youthful but breathless with the budding years. Vallance looked at her, lighted his last cigarette and took his seat upon a bench. For three minutes he mildly regretted the last hundred of his last thousand that he had clipped in the driver's hall when the bicyclist cut up an end to his last automobile ride. Then he felt in every pocket and found not a single penny. He had given up his apartment that morning. His furniture had gone toward certain debts. His clothes, save what were upon him, descended to his man servant for back wages. As he sat there was not in the whole city for him a bed or a broiled lobster or a street car fare or a carriage for his butchery unless he should obtain them by some means or other, or by false pretences. Therefore, he had chosen the park.

And all this was because an uncle disinherited him, and cut down his allowances from liberality to nothing. And all that was because his nephew had disloyed him concerning a certain girl who was not in the picture—therefore all readers who brush their hair toward its roots may be warned to read no further. There was another nephew, of a different branch, who had once been the prospective heir and favorite. Being without grace or hope, he had long ago been driven forth into the mire. Now dragnets were out for him; he was to be rehabilitated and restored. And Vallance fell grandly to the ground, the lowest of the low, the tattered ghost in the little park. Sitting there he leaned far back on the hard bench and laughed at the cigarette smoke up to the lowest of the lowest branches. The sudden swerving of a car, his life's ties had brought him a free, thrilling, almost joyous elation. He felt precisely the sensation of the aeronaut when he cuts loose his parachute and let his balloon drift away. The hour was nearly by. Not many loungers were on the benches. The park-dweller, though a stubborn fighter against autumnal coolness, is slow to attack the advance line of spring's chilly cohorts. Then arose one from the seat near the leaping fountain, and came and sat himself at Vallance's side. He was a young man, with a pair of baggy trousers that flared him out; his eyes and combs had passed him by. He had a drink had been bottled, and he had a goodly amount of money. He had a match, which is the form of introduction among the benches, and then began to talk.

here. Say, Dawson, I'll get the old man to give you a letter to somebody about a job when I get back home. You've helped me a lot tonight, I don't believe I could have gotten through the night if I hadn't struck you."

"Thank you," said Vallance. "Do you lie down or sit up on these when you sleep?"

For hours Vallance gazed almost without winking at the stars through the branches of the trees, and listened to the sharp clapping of horses' hoofs on the sea of asphalt to the south. His mind was active, but his feelings were dormant. Every emotion seemed to have been eradicated. He felt no regrets, no fears, no pain, or discomfort. Even when he thought of the girl it was as if an inhabitant of one of those remote states which he gazed at. He remembered the absurd antics of his companion and laughed softly, yet without a feeling of mirth. Then the daily army of milk wagens made of the city a roaring drum to which they marched. Vallance fell asleep on his comfortable bench.

At 10 o'clock on the next day the two stood at the door of Lawyer Mead's office in Ann street. The man who looked worse than ever when the hour approached; and Vallance could not decide to leave him a possible prey to the dangers he feared.

When they entered the office Lawyer Mead looked at them wonderingly. He and Vallance were old friends. After his greeting he turned to the man who stood with white face and trembling limbs before the expected crisis.

"I sent a second letter to your address last night," Mr. Mead said. "I learned this morning that you were not there to receive it. It will inform you that Mr. Paulding has reconciled with his wife, and she has decided not to do so, and desires you to understand that no change will be made in the relations existing between you and him."

"Ide's trembling ceased suddenly. The color came back to his face and he straightened his back. He turned toward half an inch, and a gleam came into his eye. He pushed back his battered hat with one hand, and extended the other, with leveled fingers toward the lawyer.

"Tell old Paulding he may go to the devil," he said loudly and clearly, and turned and walked out of the office with a firm and lively step. Lawyer Mead turned on his heel to Vallance and smiled.

"I am glad you came in," he said, genially. "Your uncle wants you to return home at once. He is reconciled to the situation that led to his hasty action, and desires to say that all will be as usual."

THE NEXT TREK OF THE BOERS

AN INTERESTING TALK WITH GENERAL JOUBERT, CAVALRY LEADER IN SOUTH AFRICA.

Plans for Colonization in South Africa Stalwart From Orange Free State Finds Plenty of Sympathy.

"Peace hath her victories no less renowned than war." So said Milton, and so says General G. Joubert, the cavalry leader of the Orange Free State.

"It is quite true," he says, "that if we had not been defeated in South Africa I should never have known the pleasure of meeting the American delegates. Their native land is a compensation for many battles."

But the women who gather about General Joubert, at receptions, at after-noon teas and elsewhere, are only a small percentage of the sympathizers he has discovered in his lecture tour across the United States. During which he has explained the mystery of how so small a number of untrained Boer farmers could wage little for three years with the disciplined troops of the British Empire.

It has been roughly estimated that every Boer soldier has a wife and child. The Boer leaders, of course, are higher. General Joubert repeats a remark made on this point by the Duke of Devonshire, who said: "You men are interesting to meet. You cost the English Government £200,000."

"Until that moment," says Gen. Joubert, "although we knew the price was high, we really did not know the exact sum. It really did stagger us to hear it in round numbers."

"Gen. Joubert is stalwart and swarthy, with a black hair and a white, lustrous cavalry mustache. His eyes are dark and flashing and his gestures are full of the confidence of a man accustomed to command."

"You know," he says, with just a touch of the Dutch accent, "immediately after the war I went to Europe, and for the last year I have been in California and other parts of the west. The trip has not been an entirely of recuperation, but rather a study of conditions."

and became expert in judging distances the lack of which knowledge handicapped the scientific officers who met at the common soldiers of the British army.

Asked concerning Cecil Rhodes' Barroo and other men whose names are so closely associated with the development of South Africa, Gen. Joubert helped a feeling of indignation when he heard that title 'empire builder' applied to Rhodes.

"Rhodes did more harm to South Africa than he did good. Whatever commercial and other improvements South Africa underwent during his life was the natural evolution of a country so richly endowed. The changes would have come anyway they were bound to."

"The Cape-to-Cairo Railroad was a necessity. If Rhodes had never been born it would have had to be built any way with lots of other schemes for which he got the credit. It is said that he drank himself slowly to death through remorse I don't know. It is true however, that Rhodes, who was a great man, died a broken man."

Asked concerning the present conflict between Russia and Japan, Gen. Joubert expressed a South African contempt for the war. "When men use cold steel against each other," he said, "they are not essentially a fact in marksmanship, but that is a fact concerning the two armies in the last war."

"Personally, I consider the armies of America and Germany the greatest in the world. The world's greatest military power is not that of the United States, but that of the British Empire. We do not believe in your fighting, but only wastes the ammunition, but our Africans would pick off the British easily at two or three or four hundred yards."

Joubert is cautious in his remarks concerning English officers, but does in fact in grim sarcasm when the name of Kitchener is pronounced. "New York Sun."

A Bit of History. The annual reappearance in the British House of Commons of the bill legalizing marriage with a deceased wife's sister brings to mind Walter Bagehot's account of the history of the act providing such unions. Its originator was the famous Lord Lyndhurst, the Tory leader during the long period of Whig supremacy at the beginning of the last century. Lyndhurst was a great lawyer and a great speaker. He had no care to have opinions. He regarded politics as a game to be played, first for himself and then for his party."

Bagehot was very accurate in his historical tracts, and there doubtless is no reason to dispute his account of the reason for the act. The reason was the real object of the act, he says, was to please certain particular people who had married their sisters-in-law, and as it stands to this day, it is a relic of the old marriages. As it was originally brought in, it was intended to give a right of succession to the property of the deceased and other people represented by Lord Lyndhurst that there would be an outcry against it. He replied: "Put it the other way, then, forbid the future marriages. I am sure I don't care which way it is."

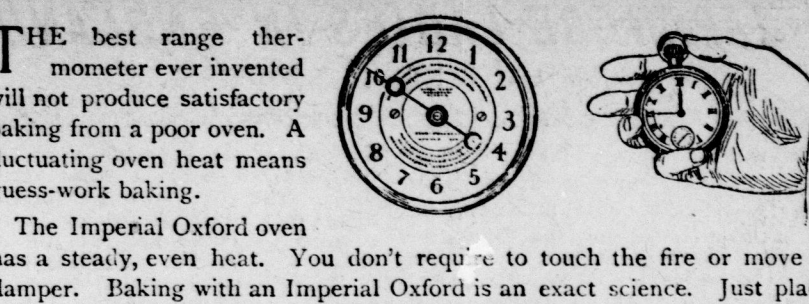

He wanted to serve a temporary purpose, and he did so always, says Bagehot, by reading many of his speeches quoted in his "Life."

It seems curious that a law, which by its advocates—namely Lord High Cecil—is regarded as being both doctrinal and practical, should have been originated to serve the interests of a few particularists. The King, when Prince of Wales, voted for its repeal, and most Canadians will hold that his majesty was on the side of common sense, morality and social progress.—Canadian Magazine.

Cremation in England.

"There are nine crematories," says United States Consul Mahin at Nottingham, "in active operation in Great Britain. Statistics demonstrate that cremation is making headway slowly in that country, and it is believed that the feeling against it, whether founded on religion or sentiment, is gradually weakening. While the public is slowly becoming accustomed to the idea of cremation, it shows very little interest in the subject. This is laid partly to requirements as to certificates, etc., than in cases of ordinary burial. In 1884, a law court held that unless explicit instructions had been left in the will, an executor is not competent to cremate his testator. The ground of the decision was that every one is entitled to a Christian burial. Thus it appears that only enthusiasts for hygiene who make the stipulation themselves are cremated. It is a request that testators generally hesitate to make and one which they are inclined to forego when they think of the feelings of their relatives who are usually strongly attached to the older plan of burial. The advocates of cremation have had the misfortune to lose in the death of Sir Henry Thompson the most powerful champion of the cause."—Washington Star.

ONE OF THE HYMNS YOU OUGHT TO KNOW

"CORONATION" WRITTEN OVER ONE HUNDRED YEARS AGO.

Edward Perronet (associated with the Wesleys, would have been long ago forgotten but for his one great hymn. He wrote several other hymns, but they have all passed out of use, while this one has been given a new lease of life. It is the four greatest Christian hymns. Its theme of the universal Lord ruling all nations has made it a favorite with congregations in "every kindred, every tongue, and gathering in India, and in Africa, and in China, and in the same emphasis as those at home. In America it is usually sung to the tune "Coronation," while in other lands "Miles Lane" is used. The hymn has always been a favorite with soldiers, being sung frequently on the march, and in some instances its thrilling strains it has put new life into dispirited regiments and swung them back into line, turning defeat into victory. The last verse of the hymn is said to have been used by Joan upon in 1871.

All hail the power of Jesus' name! Let angels prostrate fall; Bring forth the royal crown, And crown him Lord of all.

Crown him, ye morning stars of light, Who fixed this floating ball; Who hail the strength of Israel's might, And crown him Lord of all.

Crown him, ye martyrs of our God, Who from his altar call; Extol the stem of Jesse's rod, And crown him Lord of all.

Ye chosen seed of Israel's race, Ye ransomed from the foe, Hail him, who saves you by his grace, And crown him Lord of all.

Sinners, whose love can never forget, The workwood and the gall; Go, spread your trophies at his feet, And crown him Lord of all.

Let every kindred, every tribe, On this terrestrial ball, To him all majesty ascribe, And crown him Lord of all.

O that with yonder sacred throng We at his feet may fall; We'll join the everlasting song, And crown him Lord of all.

Strong on Discretion. Discretion is a beautiful thing, and here is a story about an Irish tailor who had a head of it.

One morning Mrs. Murphy, a customer, came into the shop and found him busy with pencil and paper. She asked him what he was doing.

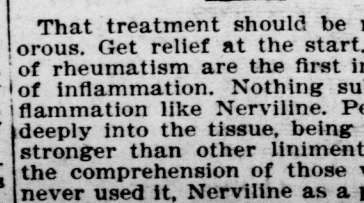

"Oh, makin' a list of the men in this block who Oh kin be put in jail," he said. "Have ye got Murphy's name down?"

"Murphy heads me light," she said. "Home Mrs. Murphy and broke the news to her man. He was in the tailor shop in a lift."

"Me woman tells me that ye're after makin' a memorial tablet for the man that sez can be put in jail, and she sez to me at the head of it. Is that true?"
