"The best township fair"—that's what everybody says when speaking of Frankville exhibition. The show this year takes place on the 28th and 29th, and a high-class continuous programme has been arranged for the last day. Go and meet your friends—they're sure to be there.

There was a pretty wedding at Harlow on Wednesday last, when Miss Louise Campbell, daughter of Mr and Mrs R. Campbell, was united in marriage to Mr Oscar Wills of Smith's Falls. The ceremony took place in the Methodist church which was beautifully decorated for the occasion. The bridesmaid was Miss Pearl McMillan of Ellipsisville and the groomsmen were Mr W. A. Tweedy of Smith's Falls.

The Baptist Young People's Union reorganized on Tuesday evening and elected the following officers:—
Hon. President—Rev Westell.
President—Miss A. Currie.
Vice-Pres—Miss W. Wilson.
Treasurer—Miss E. McConnell.
Secretary—Miss A. Stevens.
Organist—Miss G. Breese.

Death of Mrs. Besley

The remains of Mrs John Besley, who died in Hamilton, arrived here on Monday evening and were conveyed to the family residence at hard Island. Mrs Besley went to Hamilton from Haileybury a few weeks ago for medical treatment and to visit her sister, Mrs E. Middleton.

Deceased was a daughter of the late Justus Robeson and had spent nearly her whole life in this section, where she was highly esteemed. About four years ago she removed with her husband and family to Haileybury. Her health had been poor for some time, so this sad termination was not unexpected.

Besides her husband, she leaves a family of small children to mourn her loss, and these have the sympathy of many friends here in their sad bereavement.

ROBERTSON—WEESE

At Addison, at 10 a.m. on Sept. 20, Miss Williamette Weese, daughter of Rev W. W. Weese, was married to Mr Harry Bostwick Robertson, son of Mr J. M. Robertson, merchant of Pakenham. The wedding ceremony was performed in the Methodist church, the altar of which was decked with white and pink flowers. After the wedding party and groom had taken their places the march was played by Miss Frances A. Weese, sister of the bride, while the latter, elegantly gowned and carrying a large bouquet of white roses, lilies of the valley and rare ferns, entered leaning on the arm of her father, the pastor of the church, who also pronounced the sacred words that made them husband and wife.

The dining room of the parsonage, where a sumptuous dinner was served, was tastefully decorated with plants and flowers in pink, white and green. The bride's presents were numerous, useful and costly, including silverware and a piano. The happy young pair proceeded by carriage to Brockville where they boarded the fast train for Montreal and other eastern points and on returning will be at home at Kinburn, Ont.

O'DONNELL—HICKEY

The following notice we take from The Daily Province, Regina, August 28th:—

Fred J. O'Donnell, manager of the Singer Sewing Machine Co. in Regina, was married at Portage la Prairie to Miss Stella A. Hickey. The young couple will take up their residence on Cornwall Street. The Portage gives the following particulars:—

St. Cathbert's Church was the scene this morning of a wedding in which the contracting parties were Fred J. O'Donnell of Regina and Miss Stella Hickey, daughter of Mrs Catherine Hickey of Athens, Ontario, the ceremony being performed at 7 o'clock by Rev. Father Arsenault. The bride, who was given away by her brother, G. W. Hickey of Athens, was gowned most becomingly in a tailored suit of grey serge, with picture hat of black velvet, and was attended by Miss

Following the ceremony, a wedding breakfast was served at the residence of Mrs S. Kerr, Campbell street, and Mr and Mrs O'Donnell left on the 10 o'clock train for the east, after which they will take up their home in Regina. Since coming to Regina the bride has been operator at the C.N.R. city office, and has made herself very popular, which was shown by the numerous gifts bestowed on her. The groom was formerly manager for the Singer Sewing Machine in this city.

RECIPROcity REJECTED

On another page of this issue we give in full the results of the polling in Canada on Thursday last. The Conservatives, backed by many Liberals, turned down the reciprocity proposal by an overwhelming vote. It is a complete victory, so sweeping in its character that Bourassa and his little bunch of malcontents in Quebec are completely submerged. They will be able to command no special favors or considerations from the new Government. For this, all loyal Canadians will be thankful.

In Athens, at the Conservative committee rooms on Thursday evening, there was much jubilation and early in the evening the younger citizens, in harmony with the prevailing spirit, had a bonfire blazing merrily on Main Street.

In the Liberal rooms the returns were received quietly, and as it became evident that the Government had met with a decisive defeat there was a rapid thinning out of the attendance.

The defeat of Hon. Geo. P. Graham is keenly regretted by the Liberals, as he was with them a most popular candidate and to many a personal friend. His public career has been one of marked success and it is hoped that he may, at some not distant date, be placed in a position to again serve this country in a public capacity.

As the evening wore on the elders repaired to their homes, but the young men and boys were bound to make a night of it and about 12 o'clock, headed with a life and drum, they paraded the streets. The familiar airs of the glorious 12th soon changed their thoughts from Rouge and Bleu to Orange and Green, and the procession developed into an Orange demonstration. In this the boys were needlessly offensive. However, it was a pretty fair brand of music, with cheers filling all interludes, that the boys served up, and no one took serious exception to the parade.

Following is the result of the vote in this riding:—

AN ADDRESS

To the Electors of Brockville Riding:—
Gentlemen,—After fifteen years of Liberal rule in Canada, the Government has been defeated. It is gratifying to have the testimony of those opposed to Sir Wilfrid, that under his administration Canada has enjoyed and is enjoying unparalleled prosperity. He is leaving the affairs of the country in a much better shape than he found them. The Government has gone down on a big issue, in which the people took a very deep interest, and on which it was not unreasonable there should exist a great divergence of opinion.

In Brockville, in addition to this great question, one or two local matters played an important part.

As your representative in the local legislature and Dominion parliament, for the past thirteen years, I have endeavored to perform my whole duty, both to the country and the constituency.

I wish to thank with my whole heart those who stood by me through all those years, and particularly will I never forget those brave men who sacrificed time, energy and business in the campaign just closed in my interest. Words are inadequate to express my feelings of gratitude. Trusting that everything will work out in the best interests of our beloved country, I remain, Gentlemen,
Your obedient servant,
Geo. P. Graham.

Rice Famine in the Philippine Islands.

Cuban Editors Fight a Duel With Raplers.

This year to date 116,000 British emigrants have left for Canada. Father Bernard Vaughan, S. J., leaves England for Canada on Saturday.

John McEntee, a miner of South Porcupine, was killed by a train while returning from a political meeting. His body was horribly mangled.

The Meiji Gakuin, the leading Presbyterian mission school in Tokio, was totally destroyed by fire. The academic department had 360 students in attendance.

Thomas Holden, an alleged pickpocket from Niagara Falls, N. Y., was arrested at Toronto on a charge of attempting to steal $47 from Stewart James, 14 John street.

Edward Savage, a bartender at Stomont's Hotel, Toronto, narrowly escaped death from drowning in Bolger Creek, a few miles north of Parry Sound.

William J. Connors of Buffalo, former chairman of the New York Democratic State Committee, has resigned his membership on the commission to take effect immediately.

The C. P. R., which is completing a new roundhouse and machine shop in the east end of London, will build a modern station there also. East London station will cost about $10,000.

Elizabeth Stevenson, a three-year-old child, met death at Montreal when she was run over in front of her house, 34 Gallery Square, by a team belonging to the Shelden Forwarding Company.

Mrs. E. Martin, a middle-aged woman, who boarded at 102 Sackville street, Toronto, and two other women who are being taken from London, will be deported to France on Sunday next.

Geo. O. Glavis, of Chicago, was indicted for alleged false pretence and embezzlement in securing $650 from the Chicago Tribune on the pretext of procuring evidence of alleged corruption against Senator Lorimer of Illinois.

It is said that Tattersall Castle, which was built by Oliver Cromwell, and was recently offered to the British nation, has been purchased by an American millionaire, who will re-erect it stone by stone in the United States.

Danger of a famine in the Philippines on account of the failure of the rice crop has become so threatening that Governor General Forbes to-day decided to order the purchase by the Government of an entire shipload of the cereal.

Arthur de Carriarte, editor of El Debate of Havana, and Ramon S. Varona, editor of El Comercio, of Cienfuegos, fought a duel with raplers. Varona was wounded in the arm, but not seriously. The duel was the result of a newspaper controversy.

TRADE WIVES

With Calf Put in as Good Measure.

Erickson's Pretty Bride Refused to Milk Cows.

Des Moines, Sept. 25.—Two Swedes, Olson and Erickson, bought adjoining farms in Central Iowa. Erickson wed a rosy cheeked Swedish girl, who had been in service in this country for a few weeks previous to her marriage. Now, Hulda had ideas of her own. She married Erickson in order to become "a real American lady."

The first difficulty arose when, much to the amazement of poor Erickson, she refused to milk the cows. Her husband waxed emphatic and punctured his remarks by kicking the new milk pail, beating the cow and threatening the bride, but all to no avail. Hulda would be a lady.

In desperation he appealed to Olson, his friend and neighbor. The good Olson's frau was an able-bodied dame from Holland. Not only did she milk the cows and plough the hay field as well, Katrina, too, had reared three stalwart sons of Holland thrift, but Katrina had not roses in her cheeks. Her waist line was no longer trim and neat nor her eyes an enticing blue.

Mr. Olson grew a bit far sighted. He could spy Hulda's blonde head and print dress across a ten acre field, hence he was most ready to sympathize when his friend Erickson approached him with tales of domestic woe. In fact, he encouraged the confidences and promised labor with Hulda concerning the marital difficulties. Katrina seemed to grow suddenly very old. Her thrift was often annoying and she was overparticular about hours.

After commencing much with Erickson and more with Hulda together they hit upon a happy plan. One fine morning Mr. and Mrs. Erickson, with Mr. and Mrs. Olson, climbed into the Olson wagon and drove to the country seat. Mr. and Mrs. Erickson, with Mr. and Mrs. Olson, in the Olson wagon, drove back that evening by milking time, but it was Hulda Olson and Katrina Erickson who returned. Hulda told the judge of the dents in the new milk pail, and Olson remembered how Katrina had, half heartedly, compelled him to sleep in the barn when he had returned a bit late from a chat with his friend Erickson.

That same evening as Katrina sat patiently milking Mr. Olson led over to his friend Erickson the finest of his heifer calves—because, as any man sees, "a trade is a trade, and should be fair." Last month the Ericksons sold out to go further west, Katrina, wanting more land, and no one was so good to see them go as their old friends the Olsons.

CENSUS FIGURES NEARLY READY

Hamilton's Great Increase in Manufactures

Toronto and Montreal Gain Most in Population.

Western Ontario Population Has Fallen Off.

Ottawa, Sept. 25.—Canada's fifth census, begun in June, has been completed and the official figures will be made public in a few days, as soon as the returns are in from the far-off Yukon and Northwest districts. While the figures in hand will not be given out in detail, many of the facts disclosed by the census were available to-day.

First among these is the fact that Canada's total population is well under the eight-million mark, which enthusiastic prophets had foretold.

The returns show that Toronto and Montreal have made the largest gains in population. The former has the greatest percentage of gain and the latter the largest gain in numbers. The Maritime Provinces, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia have not grown as have Quebec and the other provinces, but that they have more than held their own is about as strong as the census officials will put it.

The gains in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia were confined practically to Halifax and the mining sections. Prince Edward Island has stood still. The Province of Quebec will show large gains all around, both in town and country. All the cities and towns increased and the increase included the rural districts.

In Ontario the population of the rural districts has fallen off, notably in Western Ontario, from which there has been a large migration to the west since the last census. This has been partly offset by a great increase of population in Northern Ontario, in the four districts of Nipissing, East and West Algoma, and Rainy River and Thunder Bay, where the population has more than doubled.

All the western provinces show great gains, the largest percentage of gain being credited to Alberta. The cities of Winnipeg and Calgary show the largest gains of any of the western cities.

Mr. Archibald Blue, chief of the Census and Statistics Bureau, said that a glance at the figures relating to manufactures, showed many surprising gains, and instanced the city of Hamilton, Ontario, whose manufactures have increased more than 100 per cent. since the last census. He said the cities of Montreal and Toronto would show similar gains.

The census of the district along the west shores of Hudson Bay and went to the Height of Land was taken under the direction of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police, and is complete, showing a population of 1,500 Eskimos and Indians and a few white and half-breed trappers. The enumerators there had to travel thousands of miles by canoe and horseback and on foot. In some remote sections of the far north the duties were performed by missionaries and men of the Hudson Bay Company.

The census of the Arctic waters was taken by Captain Bernier, the explorer, who has just returned.

The large increase in the Province of Quebec will raise the basis of representation in the House of Commons from 25,000 to 32,000. This will result in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick each losing two seats and in Prince Edward Island losing one seat. Ontario will certainly gain no members and may lose one or two. The provinces west of the Superior will gain about 27 additional members, which will increase the membership of the House of Commons after redistribution from 221 to 241 members.

STRIKE OVER

But Anarchistic Bands Plundering in Spain.

Madrid, Sept. 25.—Premier Canalejas, on leaving the palace last night said to the assembled newspaper men: "Gentlemen, I have the pleasure to tell you that the strike is over everywhere." The only strikers left in Madrid are the cab drivers. They have been given three hours in which to resume work, or have their licenses cancelled.

ANARCHISTIC THIEVES

Valencia, Sept. 25.—Notwithstanding work generally has been resumed, anarchistic bands continue to spread terror around the countryside. They have plundered the municipal treasuries, and also attempted to set fire to the Duke of Gaudier's palace, but were driven off by the troops.

FELT A SHOCK

Washington, Sept. 25.—An earth shock of unusual intensity was recorded shortly after midnight by the instruments of Lake Georgetown University. The disturbance began at 12:31 o'clock, ending at 12:57, at 12:57 the greatest agitation was recorded, the registration being 23 millimetres. Usually two or three millimetres are registered by the needles. No estimate of the distance of the earthquake from Washington was made by the observers.

MATCH TRAGEDY.

Hamburg Little Girl Burned to Death.

New Hamburg despatch: A very distressing fatality took place at Hamburg on Wednesday afternoon, when Maudy, the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Otto Kress, was burned to death. The little girl, aged three, and her brother, one and a half years old, were playing together alone. Their mother was away to the fair in Wellesley, and their father was working in the barn. Hearing screams, Mr. Kress ran toward the house, but met his daughter, enveloped in flames, her hair and her clothing being ablaze. A lot of matches on the front porch told the tale. Almost the whole of the little girl's body was burned black. She suffered excruciating pain until the arrival of a physician from Wellesley, who relieved her as much as possible from her sufferings, but death ensued six hours after the accident.

New York Fireman Falls Three Storeys.

New York, Sept. 25.—Groping his way atop a burning building on Broome street last night fire battalion chief Wm. Devlin, blinded by the dense smoke, walked off the edge of the roof and fell three stories to the ground. He was picked up unconscious with serious in-

CHILD DRANK POISON.

Orangeville despatch: On Tuesday a little boy, aged 2, a son of Albert Nell of Caledon township, got possession of an old medicine bottle, supposed to have contained tincture of belladonna, and drank the contents. The deadly drug took effect very rapidly, and, although the best medical attendance was rushed to the child's aid, the doctors remaining all night, it died in the morning.

FIRST SCOTTISH EARL.

The Earl of Crawford, who has completed his sixty-fourth year, is the premier Earl of Scotland, and one of the most interesting members of the peerage.

He is a keen scientist and bibliophile, an experienced traveler, and an enthusiastic yachtsman, and he is the possessor of one of the finest stamp collections in this country. He is also a great authority on astronomy, having been for two years president of the Astronomical Society, and some years ago he took part in an expedition to Spain to observe a solar eclipse.

As Lord Balcarres he sat in the House of Commons as member for Wigan, resigning the seat in 1880 on the death of his father, the twenty-fifth earl.

The earldom of Crawford was conferred so far back as 1368 upon David Lindsay, the ninth baron, who fought a passage-of-arms with Lord Welles in the presence of Richard II. and Queen Anne of Bohemia.

One of the present earl's ancestors was the Crusader Sir William Bradehaugh, of Haigh, whose wife, when she learned that her husband had been killed in Palestine, married again. But some time afterwards Sir William returned alive and well, and when he discovered what had happened, he slew his rival, and made the lady do penance by walking barefoot, once a week, from Haigh to Haigh Cross, wet or fine.

Lord Crawford is very rich, deriving his wealth from Lancashire minerals as well as from his broad Scottish acres. He has a beautiful place in Fifeshire.

His lordship was once pointing out to a country lady the Houses of Parliament.

"Well, now," she exclaimed; "what a fine building that is! It ain't the gateway, is it?"

"It is, indeed," he replied; "the gateway of the whole British nation."

Russia's Pet Aversion.

So Sir Francis Younghusband, who recently met with a serious motor accident in Belgium, might be described. He probably knows more about the innermost parts of Asia than any other European living, and Russia has feared him to such an extent that at one time his every movement was watched by their spies and duly reported. Among the stories which Sir Francis tells is one concerning a native who was with him in the British expedition which penetrated into Tibet. Sir Francis was extremely annoyed by the guerrilla tactics of the mountaineers, especially by one determined sniper, whose aim was particularly good, and who was responsible for at least one casualty every day.

One afternoon Sir Francis was approached by a native, who had recently joined the expedition, and requested to be allowed to go and stalk the stalker. This was readily granted, and the man went off. A day or two later he returned, bearing the sniper's rifle, and a grin of triumph on his dusty countenance.

"Well," asked Sir Francis, "how did you succeed in silencing the man?"

"I know his ways, sahib," was the reply. "I kill him easily." "Why, was he a friend of yours?" "No, sahib—only my father," was the illuminating rejoinder.

Commodore R.Y.S.

A leading figure at Cowes each year is the Marquess of Ormonde, Commodore of the Royal Yacht Squadron, and Hereditary Chief Butler of Ireland, an office which has been in the family since 1177. The marquess is the owner of a magnificent service of gold plate, one of the heirlooms of the Ormonde family, which was presented to a former butler by Charles the First. The plate is only used on state occasions and is of fabulous worth, being valued at over a million and a quarter sterling. Among other historical relics at the marquess's home, Kilkenny Castle, which is one of the oldest inhabited houses in the three kingdoms, some of the rooms remaining to-day almost exactly as they were in the year 1100, are official robes which have seen service at three coronations. They were worn by Lord Ormonde's grandmother at the coronation of Queen Victoria, and appeared in the official picture of the ceremony.

The Welsh Woman's Red Cloak.

The red cloak which the Welsh women wear is not only ornamental, but it also contributed to the repelling of the last invasion of their island. When a French force of 1,400 men under General Tate landed at Fishguard in 1797 Lord Cawdor hastily gathered together the local militia, while several hundred women had followed their husbands from the hills dressed in the national costume—red mantles and men's beaver hats. The French, knowing that scarlet was the British uniform, concluded that large reinforcements had reached Fishguard and hastened to make an unconditional surrender.—London Chronicle.

The Return of the Prodigal.

When the elder brother of the prodigal son came near his father's house he heard, according to the authorized version, "music and dancing." Dr. Rendel Lumsden, in an address at Westminister College, Cambridge, says that the word for music in the original is "symphony" and that symphony means the bagpipes. Wycliffe's version gives the word symphony, but no other translator has done so. Wycliffe also says that he heard "symphony and a crowd." Now, crowd is the Welsh crwth or harp. In view of the two instruments Dr. Harris says that the elder brother had some justification for getting angry.—Christian World.

The Newest Cruiser.

The latest type of scout cruiser of the British navy, the Dartmouth, is of 5,250 tons, carries eight six-inch guns and will probably have a speed of twenty-six to twenty-seven knots. The vessel, like every other type of warship, are increasing rapidly in size.

TREASURES OF ROYALTY.

A Glance of the Priceless Contents of Buckingham Palace Vaults.

On the basement floor at Buckingham Palace are vaults, the contents of which are worth a fabulous amount of money, and which are guarded with immense care.

In these vaults are stored accumulations of treasures which have come into the possession of the royal family in different ways during the past fifty or sixty years, and for which it is impossible to find room in the apartments, corridors, or halls of the royal residence, as they are already filled to their full capacity with armor, statuary, and various valuable works of art.

Two of the treasure vaults are of immense size; one nearly square, has a floor space of 300 feet by 260 feet and runs under the state apartments on the first floor. There is a passage leading into it outside the Bow Room which looks out on the gardens, but the entrance to this passage was covered over in Queen Victoria's reign.

The second vault is somewhat smaller than the first; the third has only a floor space of 30 feet by 10 feet. The vault is steel-lined throughout, and it is here that the gold and silver ornaments and other small valuables for which there is no room in the royal palaces are stored. In the two large vaults, which, by the way, are absolutely air-tight, and heated by radiators, are kept the larger treasures, such as statues, big pictures, etc.

Probably the contents of the smallest vault equal in value all that is stored in the other two. The weight of the gold ornaments alone—they are made of the purest metal—is said to be over a ton. There are over six thousand of these. But the weight of many of these ornaments bears no relation to their value. There are, for example, half a dozen grotesque Arabic figures not more than a couple of inches in height whose united weight is probably less than one pound; they are a present to Queen Victoria from an envoy from the Persian court, and are reputed near a thousand years old. In the open market these figures would probably fetch a couple of thousand pounds apiece.

All the wonderful wealth of gold and silver in this vault is placed on tray-tables; each table is fitted with four trays, one over the other, and as the articles accumulate more trays are added to the tables. In Queen Victoria's reign the tables contained only two trays. Every single article in the vault is checked and counted over once a year under the supervision of the Keeper of the Privy Purse.

The pictures and statuary in the vaults are the least valuable of their contents. Queen Victoria purchased and accepted as gifts a great many pictures and statues from a number of modern artists, chiefly Germans, whose work is not of much value, and these, when the late King came to the throne, were removed from the apartments and halls in the royal palaces and placed in the vaults, and replaced by other objects of art of much greater value, which were then in the vaults.

Much of the furniture and armor is, however, of immense value. A set of old oak chairs and two long tables which are of the eleventh century, which were fetched thousands of pounds if sold. These chairs are so massive that an ordinary man could not raise one completely from the ground.

Each vault is fitted with three steel doors. The keys of these doors are kept by the Keeper of the Privy Purse, and the vaults are only opened in his presence or that of some responsible official of the royal household.

The French Ambassador in London.

One of the cleverest diplomatists in Europe, M. Paul Cambon, the French ambassador in London, who has been a prominent figure in the Moroccan crisis, is a striking example of how a man may, through sheer force of character and industry, rise to a high position in the state. He was eight years of age when his father died, leaving a widow and two sons not very well provided for. But M. Cambon worked hard, studied for the law, and ultimately entered the diplomatic service. He is one of the most popular men in London society, a favorite at court, and esteemed throughout France on account of his keen interest in French charities. He possesses one of the most valuable collections of autographs in the world, and is quite an expert on chess.

He Thought Right.

Two of Britain's greatest fighters, Lord Nelson, the hero of Trafalgar, and the Duke of Wellington, nicknamed "Old Nosey," met but once in their lives, and that meeting occurred in the little hall at 10 Downing street. Beside the quaint old fireplace there they entered into a general conversation, and Nelson, who was so impressed with the duke that he asked a servant who was the man with the striking nose.

"Major General Sir Arthur Wellesley, my lord," replied the servant, astounded at the sailor's ignorance.

"Ah!" said Nelson. "I thought he was no common man."

Wisdom of the Serpent.

The serpent is even wiser than the woman tells us, according to Professor Maynard, the noted educator of Cambridge. In a startling statement the professor declared that as a result of study of snakes he is convinced that had they been able to develop hands and feet instead of being obliged to crawl their brains would have enabled them to dominate the world. In that event, he asserts, man probably would have remained in a primitive savage state; or possibly even as an ape.

Happiness.

"I am sometimes accused," writes Sir John Lubbock, "of being too optimistic. But I have never ignored or denied the troubles and sorrows of life. I have never said that men are happy, but only that they might be; that if they are not so the fault is generally their own; that most of us throw away more happiness than we enjoy."

$11,000 IN PRIZES AT WINTER SHOW IN OTTAWA
There is probably no exhibition in Canada which is making more rapid growth than the Eastern Ontario Live Stock and Poultry Show, the great educational show held each January in Ottawa. In recent years the attendance has been increasing over fifty per cent annually, while the gain in the number of exhibits has been almost as great. This result is largely due to the generous prize list which is sufficient to bring out very high quality exhibits in large numbers. The different departments and the total of prizes offered in each are as follows:—
Horses$3000.00
Dairy cattle 1400 00
Beef cattle 1600.00
Sheep 850.00
Swine 850.00
Poultry 2750.00
Seeds 550.00
Total$11000 00

There are in all 148 sections in the prize list representing 197 breeds and varieties. The individual prizes are large and in a great many cases more than one prize may be won by the same animal.
A new feature of the prize list this year is the introduction of several classes open only to exhibitors who have never won a first prize at exhibitions held at Ottawa, Toronto, London or Guelph. These will offer special inducements to new exhibitors as they may also show in open classes.
The dates for the next show are January 16 to 19, 1912. Our readers may secure prize lists by sending a request by post card to D. T. Elderkin, Secretary, Ottawa, Ont.

A LONDON DOCTOR
Tells How to Cure Stomach and Liver Troubles.
A distinguished London physician during the course of a recent lecture on stomach and liver troubles, gives the following advice:—
"Be moderate in the use of heavy, rich foods. Do not eat hurriedly, and thoroughly masticate the food. If your habits are sedentary, take a moderate amount of exercise before retiring and immediately upon arising. Do not use strong cathartic pills, many of which are advertised as pure cases, but in reality do injury by weakening the system. If you find it necessary to use any laxative, stick to the old-fashioned vegetable mixture, viz.—
Fluid Extract Cascara..... 1/2 oz.
Syrup Rhubarb 1 oz.
Carruba Compound 1 oz.
Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla 1/2 oz.
Take one teaspoonful after meals and at bedtime.
This acts in a gentle, natural way, and is free from the weakening effects of strong purgatives.
The ingredients can be bought separately, and anyone can mix them at home. This information will be of benefit to our readers and is worth knowing."

A HERO OF THE WILDS

SIR HARRY JOHNSTON IS ONE OF BRITAIN'S VANGUARD.

Indefatigable African Explorer Obeysed His Restless Spirit and Went Over Vast Stretches of Wild Territory—Did Much to Stamp Out Cannibalism in Uganda and to Place Settlers in the Country.
The scene was a river bank in the wildest, wildest West Africa. A canoe was moored to the side, and its owner, a square-shouldered little Englishman, was being hauled by savages to their villages. There was a feast toward, and, suspecting the appetites of his captors, the little man was thinking to himself, "Well, whoever else may make the after-dinner speeches it is certain that I shan't." For he quite expected that he himself would be the dinner.
But now, the natives had captured him to the intent that he might be a guest and not one of the dishes, and they set him down in a place of honor and bade him eat. He ate. The tip-bit of the feast consisted of a red paste of decidedly agreeable flavor.
"What is it?" asked the prisoner.
"Man," he was answered.
And it was. They had caught one of their failing kin, had smoked him over a fire of reeds, and, after cutting up his flesh and mixing it with palm oil and pepper, had served him up in the manner aforesaid.
The guest was Sir Harry Johnston. Twenty years afterwards he attended as a guest of honor at another African feast; but this time the menu was in French, and the feast cooked after French methods, by sable gentlemen in a raiment of fig-leaf.
With the former feast in mind, we may say that Sir Harry has some thing of the African in him, and he will not deny the soft impeachment. But the two contrasts afford a very good epitome of the history that he has helped to make in Africa. The progress which he has helped to effect is incredible. Still, how he ever got to Africa at all must be as great a mystery to most people as the presence of the fly in the amber. For no man so young, so naturally qualified for the rough-and-tumble, the peril and privation of African travel than this handsome little artist and student.
His father was secretary to an insurance company in London, where Sir Harry was born in 1856. His grandmother was an artist; the faculty skipped a generation, then crept out in him, so his father, after having put him to King's College, sent him on to the South Kensington School of Art, where he won a gold medal, and then turned him loose as a regular student at the Royal Academy, with supplementary studies in the art schools of France. Everything was cut and dried for him as an artist, and there seemed every probability of his painting his way to glory. Suddenly his health failed. He seemed to have a wretched constitution, and he had over-studied with his painting, his greedy reading, his frenzied devotion to the mastery of languages.
He was sent for his health's sake on a tour through France, Spain and Portugal; and a latent, unsuspected instinct for travel now asserted itself. Instead of returning to his studies, he threw in his lot with a French expedition to North Africa, and when he did come back it was to launch out with a notable series of articles on Tunis. This was in 1880, prior to which he had never earned a penny. And then he was anybody's man for a time; his career became a matter of great uncertainty.
With his health improved, his soul cried out for action; he could not face the prospect of years of study at Cambridge, so he threw himself into natural history and biology, toiling away at the Zoological Gardens under expert guidance until he became a first rate naturalist and anatomist. All unconsciously he was sowing seed of which the Empire was afterwards to reap the harvest. Not a particle of his artistic training has been lost, nothing of his talent for languages has been wasted, nothing of his literary skill but has been advantageously utilized.
At about this time Lord Mayo was planning a West African expedition, and he needed a man who could speak Portuguese. Johnston was the man. He had mastered Portuguese, French, Spanish, Italian, and if you please, Arabic. He was pining for a chance such as this, for though he had not yet absorbed black man, his trip to the Dark Continent had set his blood dancing with the zest for travel in that mysterious land. Once you have been you always desire to return, while youth keeps your muscles supple and your heart undaunted. So off he went with Lord Mayo's expedition. The party compassed its purpose and returned, but Johnston stayed on. He determined to wrest the secrets of the Congo from that mighty river, and off he went alone, a breadless boy of four-and-twenty.
"Mr. Stanley, I believe," he one day said, varying the historic formula, when to his great joy he ran across the camp of Livingstone's discoverer. Stanley took to him at once. Two wonderful little men they must have seemed to their black cohorts, for Stanley, like Gordon and Johnston, was a tiny man. Together they explored the untracked purlieus of the splendid river, and when Sir Harry returned to England he wrote a book which made him famous at the age of twenty-five. His work caught the eye of the Royal Society, who placed him in command of their scientific expedition to Mount Kilimanjaro. On his return Lord Salisbury sent him off as Vice-Consul to the Cameroons. Here he speedily succeeded to the chief post, and was launched at last on his great official career.

$3,600 in Cash Prizes for Farmers

Are you going to build that new horseblock, sidewalk or dairy house of cement? Then insist on your dealer supplying you with the "CANADA" Cement. Not only will this ensure your getting a pure, uniform and entirely high-grade cement, that will guarantee the lifelong permanency of the thing you build, but it will also entitle you to enter our Prize Contest. And in this contest you stand a good chance of winning a prize that will perhaps more than pay you for the cost of the work. Every farmer in Canada who uses "CANADA" Cement is eligible to compete. Four prizes will be awarded in each Province and these prizes will be divided as follows:

PRIZE "A"—$100.00 to be given to the farmer in each Province who will use during 1911 the greatest number of barrels of "CANADA" Cement.
PRIZE "B"—$100.00 to be given to the farmer in each Province who uses "CANADA" Cement on his farm in 1911 for the greatest number of purposes.
PRIZE "C"—$100.00 to be given to the farmer in each Province who furnishes us with the photograph showing the best of any particular kind of work done on his farm during 1911 with "CANADA" Cement.
PRIZE "D"—$100.00 to be given to the farmer in each Province who submits the best and most complete description, of how any particular piece of work shown by photograph was done.

Notice how we have purposely planned in order to give large and small users of cement an equal opportunity. As an illustration of this: In prizes "C" and "D," the quantity of cement used has no bearing whatever on the result. The farmer who sends us the best photograph of as small a thing as a watering trough or a gate post, has as much chance for prize "C" as a man who sends a photograph of a house—and the same applies to prize "D."
Don't hold back from entering because you think you don't know anything about concrete work. It's very simple. Besides, we have a 160-page book that will send you free on request, which tells you all about concrete and how to make and use it. In this book, you'll find complete instructions for the making of almost everything you can think of in the way of farm utilities, floors, vats, troughs, stairs, posts, etc.
This free book—entitled "What the Farmer Can Do With Concrete"—will not only inform you—it will also greatly interest you. So send for it anyway, whether you intend to try for one of the prizes or not.

Sweet Miss Margery

Lord Court had welcomed Miss Lawson warmly and courteously, and even in their brief meeting a mutual liking sprang up between them. The earl was delighted to see the flush of pleasure, called up by her presence, on Margery's face, and he added his entreaties to his wishes to urge the governess to stay longer; but their pleadings were vain, and Margery could only kiss her true friend and let her depart, having first extracted from her a promise of an early visit to Court Manor.

The afternoon on which Miss Lawson left was gloomy and wet, and Margery felt sad and a little lonely as she sat with her books and work. Her husband had gone to the club before luncheon, and she had decided to make the best of a long afternoon when the door opened and he appeared.

"Do you feel inclined to go out, my darling?" he asked, tenderly, bending to impart a kiss on her brow.

"Margery looked up inquiringly. "Because," he explained, "I should like to take you with me to call on an old friend who is ill. I had no idea he was in England. As a rule, he is wandering round the world in a most extraordinary fashion. But I saw Nottaway at the club, and he told me Gerant has been down with rheumatic fever for the last six weeks and was quite alone. So I looked in on him for a few minutes, and, having mentioned my young wife, he pressed me to bring you round to see him, if you had nothing better to do."

"I will go with pleasure," replied Margery, rising. "Who is he, Nugent?" "Sir Douglas Gerant. I knew him years ago in England; but we met abroad principally, and I liked him very much. He is a peculiar, almost unorthodox man, but so kind and good—as tender as a woman and most unselfish. For these weeks past he has been very ill; but he would not let his people know, and has been attending only his servant, who has been his companion in all his travels."

"And he would really like to see me?" queried Lady Court, putting her dainty work into its basket.

"He seemed to wish it. I happened to mention that I was married; and when I spoke of my happiness, he said, in his odd abrupt manner, 'Bring me your wife, if she will not be frightened by such an old savage; so I came at once. But, if you would rather not go—'

"Oh, I should like to see him!" broke in Margery. "Poor man, all alone! And I have nothing to do this afternoon. I will not be long, Nugent."

With a tender smile the early watcher of her graceful figure flit through the doorway; then he walked to the fireplace, and, leaning his back against it, gave himself up to pleasant thoughts. The careworn look, the expression of trouble and pain, was gone from his face; now seemed written on every many feature, and the handsome dark eyes flashed with a light of gladness that spoke plainly of his stored life.

Margery was soon back. She had put on her shawl, a round cap of the same rich fur, summing up her red-gold curls, and for once she wore no veil. She had determined to hide herself no longer. She had nothing to fear; it was she who had been wronged and insulted. Pride lent her strength, and she felt that her eyes could meet Vane's clearly and coldly now, even though her heart still ached with the pain Stuart Crosbie had caused.

The earl settled her comfortably in the carriage, and then stepped in himself. "This weather is terrible," he said, as they started. "Once this law business is settled, Margery, I think I shall take you to a warmer climate, to see the sunshine and breathe the scent of flowers."

"There is one pilgrimage I must make before we do that," returned Margery in a low voice. "I cannot rest till I have visited Fild's grave."

The earl raised her little black-gloved hand to his lips. "You speak only my heart's thoughts, my own; but I hesitated to take you to the manor in this wet gloomy weather. I thought the sunshine would—"

"Sunshine is beautiful; but the manor is home, and it is near here," Margery smiled faintly; she was compelled to speak these words, for she felt almost overpowered by this tender devotion and suffered miserably as she thought how poorly she could return it. Henceforth it mattered little to her where she lived; but if her choice of the manor brought him pleasure, she was glad.

"Home," repeated Lord Court, tenderly. "Ah, Margery, you can not know what a wealth of happiness there is in that word! Thank you, dear, for uttering it. Yes, we will go home."

They were silent after this till they reached a quiet street in an unfashionable quarter, and presently the earl handed Margery into the doorway of a tall, gloomy-looking house.

"Gerant always stays here," he said, as they went upstairs. "Will you remain here, my dearest, till I see if he is ready to receive you?"

Margery smiled, and waited in a room that looked cozy and picturesque in the fire-glow. The walls were hung with weapons of all nations; a heterogeneous mass of quaint curious things were grouped in corners; carved and painted gauds were placed here and there, with ivory ornaments and rare bits of china.

It presented a strange contrast to the dull, ordinary exterior of the house, and Margery found much to attract her till her husband returned.

"Now my darling, come with me. Loose that heavy cloak, or you will be too warm; and, if the old man asks you to sing, will you gratify him?"

"With all my heart."

Lord Court led his wife across a passage, and pushed open a door almost dark, but Margery saw a low flat couch pulled near the fire, with a gray head resting on the pillow. She could not see the invalid's face properly, but a faint something in the dark eyes struck her as familiar.

"I have brought my wife to see you, as I promised, Gerant," said the earl, cheerfully, leading Margery to the couch.

"It is kind of you to come, Lady Court," the sick man answered, in a faint, weak voice. "I have known your husband a long, long time—years, eh, Court?"

Where had Margery heard that voice before? It sounded familiar, faint and husky as it was.

"I am very glad to come," she responded simply, and took the chair the servant pushed forward.

"And Margery will sing for you, if you like."

"Margery!" whispered the sick man; and then he tried to raise his head from the pillow. "Margery!" he repeated.

"I think Sir Douglas is ill," said Margery, rather frightened, turning to the servant.

"It is weakness, my lady," returned the man.

"Let me raise him a little," said the earl. "I think he wants to speak." In a lower tone he added to the servant, "He's much weaker than he was this morning; what is it?"

"Spasms at the heart, my lord; his heart is very weak."

"Don't be alarmed, my darling," whispered the earl to Margery. Then he put his arm round the sick man, and raised him easily into a sitting posture.

Sir Douglas tried to murmur thanks, but for a few seconds his weakness was too great. Then, as his strength came back, he stretched out a thin white hand to the girl sitting in the shadow.

"Come into the light," he whispered; "that I may see your face."

Margery slipped her hand into the speaker's weak, trembling one, and bent toward him as the earl stirred the fire into a blaze.

The girl's eyes met the sick man's hollow dark ones, which were full of strange eagerness and excitement, and again she seemed to remember them.

Sir Douglas closed his long fingers over hers, and drew her nearer and nearer, till she bent over him.

"Closer," he murmured. "Yes—I can see—it is! Heaven is good! You are—"

His strength seemed to fail entirely. Margery bent still nearer as he sunk back upon the cushion, and her heart-shaped locket escaped and dangled against his withered hand.

"He is fainting!" she said, hurriedly. "Look how pale he is!"

His eyes opened as she spoke, and wandered from her face to the little gold locket. A spasm of pain caused his mouth to twitch; his breath came in gasps; he tried to open the locket, and his eyes spoke words that his lips refused to utter. Then, as the earl drew Margery back, the lids closed over them, and the face became calm.

"It is only a faint. Come away, my darling! I wish I had not brought you; but he was almost well this morning."

Margery suffered her husband to lead her into the other room and place her in a chair. Her nerves were unstrung, and she was full of a vague uncomprehensible excitement.

"Go back to him," she murmured. "I am quite well. I can not leave till I know that he is better. Poor man! How strange he looked!"

The earl obeyed her; and, when she was alone, Margery put her hands over her eyes and tried to think what the memory was the sick man had brought back to her.

"Is he better?" asked Lord Court, on his return to Sir Douglas' side. "It was only a faint, Murray."

The man looked up from his prostrate master, and shook his head sadly.

"It is the end, I fear. May I make so bold as to ask you, my lord, to ring that bell? I shall send to his cousin immediately. Mr. Stuart should come at once. I hope her ladyship is not frightened?"

Sir Douglas always seemed strange when he heard the name of Margery.

"She is anxious to know how he is. I will take her home, and return as soon as possible. Yes, send for his relatives, Murray. The Crosbys, you say? Well, they ought to come. Poor old Gerant!"

"Thank you kindly, my lord; I will. He will be glad to see you, I know, if he recovers; but I never saw him so bad as this before."

The earl waited till he saw the heavy eyelids raised, then he returned to Margery.

"Yes, he is better, darling," he said, in answer to her eager inquiry. "Come—I will take you home, and then I will return to learn how he is progressing. Murray is going to send to his people, the Crosbys, of Crosbie Castle, and they will look after him."

"The Crosbys of Crosbie Castle!" The words rang in Margery's ears. In an instant she remembered where she had met this man before. She saw once again at the hot dusty lane, the Lodge-keeper's wife, the strange man who had questioned her so curiously and spoken the terrible words that blighted her young heart, and she knew that Sir Douglas Gerant and that man were one and the same. She stood silent, almost overcome by the conflicting feelings within her breast, and was scarcely conscious that the earl led her downstairs, and she was driving home.

CHAPTER XXIV.

That she possessed some strange magnetic influence over Sir Douglas Gerant Margery did not doubt, but what it was she could not tell; it seemed so vague, so mysterious, and yet her heart was filled with great and unfathomable emotions. What had she in common with Sir Douglas Gerant? Why should he gaze at her so eagerly? She sat very quiet in her carriage, yet every nerve was thrilling.

The earl noticed her manner, but attributed it to the sympathy he felt for the sick man. He regretted now that he had taken her to see his old friend, but Sir Douglas had seemed quite convalescent in the morning, and he had thought the visit might do him good.

On reaching her room, Margery let

Until Cuticura Remedies Cured Him

Those who have suffered long and hopelessly from torturing skin eruptions will read with interest this letter from Mr. T. Williams, 118 Pacific Ave., Winnipeg (dated Jan. 14, 1911): "The Cuticura Remedies certainly did work for me, and I am thankful that there is such a remedy, and that I tried it. About three months ago a terrible itching commenced on my body. I could not understand it. It gradually grew worse and covered a large portion of my body. There was also a slight eruption of the skin, sort of a rash. I suffered greatly with the itching and at night time I had little sleep. I tried one or two remedies which did no good, and then I tried Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Resolvent. In about ten days I was completely cured."

For more than a generation the Cuticura Remedies have afforded the speediest and most economical treatment for itching, burning, scaly and bleeding skin and scalp humors of young and old. Sold by druggists and dealers everywhere. For a liberal sample of Cuticura Soap and Ointment, with 32-p. book on the care of the skin and treatment of its affections, send a postal to the Foster Drug & Chem. her husband remove her weary mantle and her cap without a word; then, as she stood looking undecided beside her, she turned to him.

"Please go back to him. I am right, and I should like to know how he is now."

"Are you sure you are better, darling? You were quite frightened."

"Yes, yes! Perhaps you may be of some service."

The earl stooped and kissed her, and was soon rattling away in a hansom, while she sat silently thinking and wondering over what had occurred.

Lord Court found Sir Douglas restored to consciousness, but too weak to utter a word. Already there was a great alteration in the worn face, and the sick man's eyes, as they wandered with a restless eagerness round the room, struck the earl with sudden astuteness.

"I've sent down to the castle," said Murray, who was watching his beloved master; "and I've also sent to Mr. Stuart's club. He may be in London; if so, he'll come as quickly as he can. I hope he is, for Sir Douglas would like to see him, I know. Many and many a time I've wanted to let Mr. Stuart know, but he wouldn't let me; he was always thinking he'd be better in a day or two, and was longing to be off. He has fretted so through his illness, my lord, it has quite worn him out."

"Have you sent for the doctors?" asked the earl.

"They've just gone, my lord. They didn't say much. 'Give him a teaspoonful of brandy every half hour,' they said; and I know what that means my lord."

"How wasted he is," thought the earl; "how changed! I wish he could speak; he looks as if he wished to say something."

He bent and asked Sir Douglas, if there was anything he specially wanted; but the rigid lips did not move—only the eyes seemed to plead more and more before. The earl's presence appeared to give him pleasure, for, it Lord Court moved, the thin, trembling hand went out toward him, and Murray construed this to wish for his friend to remain.

An hour passed without change, and the earl was thinking of sending a message to Margery, explanatory of his long absence, when the door opened, and the sick man's face suddenly altered. He made a feeble attempt to rise, his hands moved restlessly to and fro, and his lips parted to speak, as a young man bent over his couch. It was Stuart Crosbie.

"Cousin," he said hurriedly, with real pain on his face and in his voice, "my dear cousin, oh, why did you not send for me before?" Then, turning to the servant, he added, "Murray, you should have let me know! Six weeks ill, and I thought him in Australia! It has distressed me more than I can say."

"Sir Douglas would not let me write, sir," replied Murray, as he put the brandy to the invalid's lips. "Lord Court came to-day, and he's the first person as has been here."

"It was a shock to me, too, Mr. Crosbie," remarked the earl. "Gerant and I have been old friends for years. I am heartily glad you have come."

"You are very kind," said Stuart, putting out his hand; "but can not he have something to give him strength?" Then, turning to the invalid, he added, "You want to speak to me, cousin?"

He knelt down by the bedside as he spoke, and looked eagerly into the sick man's face.

"Sir Douglas has tried to speak, but he can not, Mr. Stuart—yet."

"Hush," interrupted Stuart, putting up his hand—the pale lips were moving. "You will not forget?"

"My promise!" finished Stuart, gently. "No; everything you wish shall be done."

Sir Douglas fixed his eyes on Lord Court, and a faint sound came from his lips. The earl bent his head the better to hear.

"I can not hear," he murmured sadly to Stuart.

"Give me the brandy, Murray," said Stuart. "Come, that is right; we shall have you well and hearty soon, cousin," he added to the sick man. "Do not distress yourself; I will do all I promised."

Sir Douglas looked at him earnestly, as if his dark eyes would read his inmost heart. Then a change came over his face, and he smiled faintly. His head was raised for a minute from the pillow, and a whisper fell on their anxious ears:

"Glady's—wife—it—has—come—to—"

Margery—little—Margery—thank—heaven!"

The voice died away, a convulsive tremor seized the heavy eyelids, which closed slowly over the dark eyes, glazed with a film now the head sunk back, and with a sigh the spirit of Douglas Gerant fled from its earthly abode.

Stuart knelt on, whilst hot tears were stealing down his cheeks. A solemn trust was confided to his care—of what nature he knew not. The ne'er-do-well, the wandering nature, the truant from home, had not been alone all his life. The name of the spirit passed from his lips as death closed his eyes. Some tale of sadness, of disappointment, was to come, and with it was linked a name that had destroyed Stuart's joy and youth—the name of "Margery."

A strange thrill ran through the young man's frame when at last he rose from his knees. There was now a bond of sympathy stronger than has ever existed in life between himself and his dead cousin.

"It is not true! I will not believe it! The whole thing is a romance from beginning to end. Douglas Gerant always—"

"Mother, do not forget you are speaking of a dead man," broke in Stuart Crosbie, quietly and sternly. "I will not listen to such words."

Mrs. Crosbie turned and faced her son. Stuart was leaning against the mantelpiece in a room of a London hotel, his face pale, yet determined. Mrs. Crosbie, dressed in heavy black robes half hidden with erape, was walking to and fro, vexed and wrathful.

"Do you mean to say you will not dispute this iniquitous will?" she asked, sharply.

"Certainly not. I have no right. It is a most just one."

"And you will let Beecham Park pass from your hands into the clutches of some low-born girl who has no more right to it than a beggar in the street?"

"Except the right of a daughter!"

"Daughter!" repeated Mrs. Crosbie, with scorn. "There was no marriage, and even if such was the case, the girl is not to be found; he left trace of the mother and child for sixteen years, and now has conjured up some romance about a likeness in a village wench."

"Mother, you are not just or temperate. Douglas Gerant has set forth in this letter the sorrow of his life. With his dying lips he claimed my promise to fulfill his wishes, and I shall do so."

"You are mad, Stuart!" declared his mother coldly. "But," she added, with a sneer, "I need not look very far for your motive; it is for the sake of the girl, this Margery Daw, that you are determined to sacrifice everything. Had Sir Douglas seen a resemblance in any other woman, the desire to carry out his wishes might not have been so strong. You have no pride, Stuart, not a—"

"I have honor, mother," Stuart interrupted, his brow clouded, his lips stern.

"You wrong me and insult me. The past is gone. Why bring it back? I shall do my duty for Douglas Gerant's sake, for honor, justice, right and truth's sake, and for nothing else. I shall seek out Margery Daw; I have pledged myself to the dead and shall keep my word."

"And what will Vane say to this quixotic course?"

"Vane is a true-hearted woman; she will say I am right. But should the not, then I can not help it—I am resolved."

Stuart turned to the fire as he spoke, and looked into the blaze with a pained, weary expression on his face.

"The world will call you mad," observed Mrs. Crosbie, crossing to the window and sinking into a chair; "and Vane will be greatly displeased."

"Vane loves me—so you say," replied Stuart quietly; then he turned to the table and began to write rapidly. (To be Continued.)

Facts About Motherhood

The experience of Motherhood is a trying one to most women and marks distinctly an epoch in their lives. Not one woman in a hundred is prepared or understands how to properly care for herself. Of course nearly every woman nowadays has medical treatment at the time of child-birth, but many approach the experience with an organism unfitted for the trial of strength, and when the strain is over her system has received a shock from which it is hard to recover. Following right upon this comes the nervous strain of caring for the child, and a distinct change in the mother results.

There is nothing more charming than a happy and healthy mother of children, and indeed child-birth under right conditions need be no hazard to health or beauty. The unexplainable thing is that, with all the evidence of shattered nerves and broken health resulting from an unprepared condition, women will persist in going blindly to the trial.

It isn't as though the experience came upon them unawares. They have ample time in which to prepare, but they, for the most part, trust to chance and pay the penalty.

In many homes once childless there are now children because of the fact that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound makes women normal, healthy, and strong.

Any woman who would like special advice in regard to this matter is cordially invited to write to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass. Her letter will be held in strict confidence.

PLENTY OF DULL, GREENISH GOLD.

Heavy Cords Trim Hats and Figures As Centures on Smart Costumes.

In a number of cases this fall the black velvet toques have nothing more in the matter of decoration than a very heavy cable cord of old gold tissue—not the gold of last season, but a more greenish and subdued tint which suggests ornolu. This is twisted into a huge Turk's head knot on one side of the hat, with short tasseled ends depending from it.

Nearly all the Empire gowns and coats have the waist-line defined in this manner, an enormous cord of padded velvet or satin, over which the corsage pouches a little, marking the raised line of the waist. This is the great feature of the present season.

One can more readily date a gown by the shape and style of its centre than one can by its sleeves, the old-fashioned, tight centre being quite discounted.

Sometimes a narrow band of old-gold braid is used to mark the waist-line, while in other cases the flat cure sash with fringed ends is preferred. Bead chains are worn extensively now. There are the soft-shaded gray beads, known as "Job's Tears," which are really huge seeds dried and polished, and which are slung together and worn over the velvet gown or costume, and there are the chains of semi-precious stones, such as lapis lazuli or jade, which are linked together with tiny beads of gold filigree.

A BAD BRUISE

Often causes a good deal of trouble. The best cure is a prompt application of Nerville's which instantly stops pain, prevents swelling, removes all blackness and discoloration. Nerville is antiseptic—prevents blood poisoning. No liniment so strong, so penetrating, so swift to destroy pain. You miss a lot of comfort by not using Nerville's. For nearly fifty years it has been the standard family liniment of Canada.

A VEGETABLE WHISKEY SHOP.

Among the many rare and interesting plants forming the collection in the Botanical Gardens, at Washington, is a complete set of insectivorous plants. These plants are so constructed as to attract insects, capture them in various ways, and feed on them. Among these is a species called the "Vegetable Whiskey Shop," as it captures its victims by intoxication. The entire shop is shaped after the manner of a house, with the entrance projecting over the rim. Half-way down the brim of the cavity there are an immense number of honey-glads, which the influence of the sun brings into active operation. This sweet acts as a lure to passing insects, and they are pretty sure to alight on the outside edge, and tap the nectar. They, however, remain there only a brief period, as there is something more substantial inside the cavity in the shape of an intoxicating liquid which is distilled by the plant. The way this beverage is straight, and the entrance is paved with innumerable fine hairs, all pointing to the bottom. When the fly has had its first sip it does not stop and fly out, as it could do, but indulges until it comes staggering up and reaches the point where these fine hairs begin and where its progress outward is stopped owing to the points of the hairs being placed against it. The poor fly is now in a pitiable plight, it attempts to use its wings, but in doing so only hastens its own destruction.

It inevitably gets immersed in the liquid, and dies drunk—another example of the fate of the moderate drinker.—Selected.

NEW USES FOR GYROSCOPE.

The gyroscope, for many years a mysterious toy, has been receiving practical recognition recently at the hands of the world's inventors. Applied to a camera for taking moving pictures it enables the operator to dispense entirely with the use of the tripod. The camera is simply held as an ordinary instrument of this character and the rapidly-revolving wheel of the gyroscope steadies it so that there is no perceptible motion. This greatly enlarges the field of the moving picture, as scenes of busy streets may be reproduced without attracting crowds of onlookers, which mars the results on the film. The gyroscope built in the chassis of the automobile is said to be a remedy for skidding and, used in connection with the mariner's compass, it enables the vessel to be sailed much closer to her course.

Pleasures of Trout Fishing.

Catching trout is not the only thing that makes fishing a mountain stream worth while. The early morning ride to the place where you are to commence your day's sport is in itself pleasant to a degree wholly missed by those who take their rides later in the day. During the early hours of the day the air is fresh and invigorating; every leaf and spear of grass by the roadside sparkles with dew, and the forest is pungent with pleasant and health-giving odors that are dispelled as the sun rises above the tree tops and dries the moisture on leaf and twig. As you drive quietly along you may have the good fortune to see a deer browsing in a roadside clearing. He stands watching you for a moment or two; then turns quickly and, with graceful leaps, disappears among the trees. An old fox steps out into the road and trots boldly along ahead of you for some distance; but, when he discovers that you are gaining on him, he turns for an instant, shows his teeth with a snarl, and then slinks away into the bushes. Further along a partridge with her brood of chicks has also ventured out into the road, and when she, too, discovers that you are drawing uncomfortably near, there is a great to-do. With outspread wings, and uttering the plaintive cry made by a mother partridge when she believed her young to be in danger, she hastily collects the members of her family and leads and drives them back into the security of the woods.—From "Brook Trout and Their Surroundings," in the Outing Magazine for June.

PLAYTIME STORIES.

GIOTTO'S TOWER.

Way over in the city of Florence, Italy, is a great tower which was designed by the artist Giotto. Workmen started to build this tower about five hundred years ago, though it was many years later when it was completed.

The children playing about the streets hear many stories about the famous Giotto and his tower, and this is one their mothers used to tell them.

Giotto was a little shepherd boy who tended the sheep in the mountains. He was kind and good to his flock, often carrying the little lambs when they were tired. There was one lamb that seemed to be weak, so Giotto gave it special care.

One day when the sun was shining and the flock had wandered a great way, little Giotto, wrapping his cloak about him, lay down on the ground to sleep. Beside him he placed the weak lamb, that he might protect it.

As the boy slept it seemed to him that the little lamb spoke, saying: "Draw thou a picture of me on a rock, and shortly a noted artist will admire thy work will pass by. He will take thee away, and in time thou shalt become a great artist and sculptor. Be not afraid; I will always aid thee."

When Giotto awoke he was grieved to find the lamb dead. But the dream made such a deep impression that he straightway set about drawing his favorite's picture on a rock near by. Scarcely had he finished when a stranger passed by, and everything happened just as the dream-lamb had foretold.

Thereafter Giotto made many pictures and statues of the lamb, but the one supposed to be the best is at the Tower of Giotto where a corner near the street is a bas relief of a shepherd with a lamb.

Some claim that at certain times of the night the lamb and its master come to life and wander about the high tower just as fairies do.

Frederick J. Arnot and Ethel May Baker, the Ogdensburg couple who were arrested in Ottawa last month on a charge of bigamy, were sentenced last week by Judge Reynolds at Brockville. Arnot was given two months in the county jail and the woman was allowed to go on suspended sentence.

The regular meeting of the Women's Institute will be held in the town hall on Saturday next at 2.30 sharp. All ladies invited. The programme will include "Care of the sick room," Miss M. Clow; "Apples, their value as food and ways of preparing," Miss Hayes; Musical numbers, Miss Loverin, Miss Zelma Frye of Delta and others will contribute vocal numbers.

At Frankville, on Saturday evening, Mrs Herbert Lehigh died after a brief illness with pneumonia. Her son, Ernie, after a week's visit at home, had left that morning on his return to New York, with no thought that his mother was so soon to be called away. Mrs Lehigh had returned only a week before from a visit with her son, Rev Malcolm Lehigh, at Bishop's Mills. Her sudden death was a great shock to her friends.

Rally Day Exercises

A large attendance and an interesting programme were characteristics of Rally Day in the Methodist Sunday School on Sunday last. There was an abundance of flowers, asters predominating. As the classes, headed by their teachers, marched from the school room into the church, each deposited a flower within the altar rail, and these were taken and deftly placed in such position by Miss Jessie Percival and Miss Frances Clow that a beautiful crown was formed.

Following devotional exercises, several choruses were rendered by the pupils, a solo by Miss Culbert, and a quartette by boys.

This rally day particularly commemorated the centenary anniversary of the death of Robert Raikes, the founder of Sunday schools, and interesting addresses on his life and work were given by Miss Alexena Earl and Mr B. S. Cornell.

The distribution of pins, under the Cross and Crown system, showed many faithful pupils and teachers.

The lesson for the day, Daniel in the lions' den, was clearly presented by the pastor, Rev F. A. Read, and even the youngest children were made to clearly understand the teaching of the lesson.

The Superintendent of the school, Mr T. S. Kendrick, presided over the exercises of the day, and was congratulated by the pastor on the marked progress the school has made under his management and on the able staff of teachers he had to assist in the work.

The village council meets on Monday evening next.

The programme for the A. H. S. field day will be issued this week.

Mrs Clara Derbyshire, late of Huron, S.D., now resides in Victoria, B.C.

Mr Albert Foley was taken suddenly ill this week and now lies in a critical condition.

Isn't it about time another attempt was made to place in circulation the books of the Athens Public Library?

Miss Florence Gainford left on Tuesday for Wolford Centre where she has been engaged to teach this term.

The choir of the Methodist church will meet for practice on Thursday evening, instead of Friday this week.

—Go to H. H. Arnold's for new Dress Goods, specially imported, at values not before shown in Athens.

The Conservatiyes celebrated Webster's victory in great style on Tuesday evening and many from here attended.

Liberals looking for consolation should think of this: one province was a tie and of the remaining eight the Liberals carried five.

Mrs B. Loverin returned to Athens on Tuesday from her summer home at Charleston Lake. This is her first trip since her serious accident last summer.

The plans, specifications and form of tender for Athens' new post office may now be seen at the post office. It is proposed to erect the building on the vacant lot opposite the town hall.

Remember the Auction Sale of A. Taylor & Son, Saturday, Sept. 30. See bills.

On Sunday morning next the Rev. S. G. B. Wright of Maitland will conduct service in Christ Church at 10.30, at Oak Leaf at 2.30 and Delta at 7. All will be special Thanksgiving services.

Mr Francis Blanoher received last week a new portable saw-mill with 20 h.p. engine. He will add to his timber purchases this fall and expects to keep his mill fully employed.

On Saturday, Sept. 30, Messrs A. Taylor & Son will hold a sale of live stock and implements including 22 head of cattle, 9 horses and colts, vehicles, etc. See bills for particulars.

Epworth League, Consecration Service, on Monday evening next at 7.30. Topic, "Studies in Bible Biography—Life of Elisha." Reception service, roll call and collection.

"Sell your cheese before polling day" was apparently good advice. At the meeting of Brockville board on Saturday the highest bid was 13 1/2c, a drop of 1/2c from the previous week, and a further decline is said to be in prospect.

Charles Kerr, aged 40 years, formerly of Burrill's Rapids and late a tailor in the Eastern Hospital, fell from a window in the third storey of in the Albion Hotel, Brockville, on Sunday night, and when found by a passing policeman life was extinct. He had been drinking heavily of late and it is supposed that he arose in the night in a dazed condition and fell through the window.

William Morris of Delta attended the Conservative demonstration in Brockville on Monday evening, but missed the returning train. On Tuesday morning he was at the station and was talking to some friends when he stepped backwards off the platform and fell heavily on the track. He was rendered unconscious and a medical examination disclosed a fracture at the base of the skull. He was taken to St Vincent's Paul Hospital, but the physicians held out no hope for his recovery. The injured man resided with his widowed mother.

Times: Drs. Cornell and Purvis figured in an automobile accident on Sunday afternoon. Turning from Pearl on to Garden Street something went wrong with the steering gear and the machine plunged into a telegraph pole. Both medical men were thrown out. Dr Purvis, alighting on his feet, escaped injury. Dr Cornell, however, was not so fortunate. He sustained an injury to his back which, happily, is not of a serious nature. The machine, the property of Dr Purvis, was so completely wrecked that it had to be shipped to Ottawa for repairs.

The W. A. of Christ Church will meet on Tuesday, October 3, at 2.30 p.m., at Mrs Ed Purcell's.

Mrs Ogle Webster of Smith's Falls is visiting at the home of Mr and Mrs Ogle Webster.

—For Boots and Shoes at right prices, go to H. H. Arnold's. A big new stock to select from.

"Not dead but temporarily buried" in the way Sir Wilfrid describes the present condition of the Liberal party.

Miss Gladys Johnston, Miss Muriel Fair and Miss Edna Scott left on Monday for Ottawa to attend the Normal school.

The two young American who had pleaded guilty to burglarizing the bones of Henry Hollingsworth and J. Lee three weeks ago were on Monday sentenced by Judge McDonald to 360 days each in the Central Prison.

The Hulme Family gave a delightful entertainment in Athens opera house on Monday evening. Their performance on the various instruments used, whether in solos or in concert, was truly artistic. The time and harmony were at all times perfect and the audience was highly pleased with the programme.

Recorder (Monday): Mr Phil Halladay of Elgin arrived in town this morning from an extended visit to his children at Edmonton, Alta. Mrs Halladay, who accompanied him, was taken ill with appendicitis while they were guests of their daughter, Mrs Mills, in Toronto, and a week ago Thursday underwent an operation in the Western Hospital. Her many friends will be pleased to learn that it was successful and that she is recovering nicely.

FOOD - FOR THOUGHT

Who pays the enormous expense of these show-rooms in our towns and cities? Is it not the people who buy pianos there?

Why buy from them when you can get just as good, and in many cases better, from me, delivered Free from the factory to your door? This is one of the reasons I can sell you a piano for less money than you pay at any show-room.

All kinds of instruments taken in exchange. We defy competition for the money in all grades. Get my prices before purchasing, for they are certainly very low for strictly high grade pianos.

Also agent for Raymond, New Well iams, and New Home Sewing Machines.

P. S.—Pianos sold on instalment plan when wished.
