Ere the pauperish task was begun." She sat and thought of the days Of her childhood, all sunny and fair, Ere the dimness came over her eyes, And the silver was streaked in her hair She thought of her children-the dear. Of husband and parents—the dead; Why struggle with beggary here;

Why live we thus orphaned?" she said Exhausted, and sickened, and sore, She sat at her slavish toil; Oh life! ie there nought in thy store, But anguish, and hunger, and moil thing but stitch at an endless seam. With palsied hand and dimming eye,-Is this the measure of life's young dream? 'Twere better to starve and die.

She sat, and her aching head drooped low With its burden of grief and pain; A burthen none but the toiling know, Whose rest is dreaming of toil again. Her fingers relaxed and her eyes grew dim And her task faded out of her sight .-No fire on the hearth, no candle to trim, Nothing left but a Vision of night.

A Vision-for lo! she dreamed, Aye, dreamed she was happy and free; No longer her fingers wearily seamed Till her swollen eyes scarcely could see. A needle she held, and she thought it grew To a fair and flowering tree : Each flower a garment finished and new. And fair as a garment could be.

O wandrous Vision !-the needle seemed. As if thousands of fairy hands rom out its flowering branches gleamed, Stitching hems, and gussets and bands; So noiselessly stitched that never a sound And the garments dropped like ripened fruit. Which never a wind had stirred.

O wondrous Vision !-her heart was glad. And throbbed with rapture, to see The myriad human multitude clad, By the flowering needle-tree : All bravely clad, in robes unsustained With woman's sweat and tears; For woman, henceforth, no longer sat A slave to needle and shears.

O wondrous Vision !-woman restored To a share of her own birth-right. To be the co-mate of her husband-lord And in labor to find delight : In a labor that slaves not heart and has Nor robs the eye of its light; But loving toil for the dear home-band,

MISS HAYWARD, OF KENNETCOOK. Died, at Kennetcook, on the 19th ult., Miss Eliza Hayward, in the thirty-second year of her age. Some time since it became evident that Shut out from the world, and mercifully saved from extreme bodily suffering, she was enabled to give attention to those things which made for her peace; and seldom have we beheld a better practical development of the principles of faith the mystery of godliness; God was manifest in excellence. and piety than was visible in her character as she | the flesh." shed her end. Her's seemed to be emphatically, an intelligent faith. She often spoke of her death with great composure, -death seemed to have no terror. New Subscribers. We intimated last week that as the resu the generous and zealous efforts of our Agents and friends throughout the Lower Provinces, we are confidently anticipating a large accession of good Subscribers to our List, with which to commence the New Year. We hope to receive early information of additional numbers required, that we may strike off a sufficient supply from the 1st of January. Don't disap-point us, brethren and friends, in our reasonable expectation.

Christmas. MAS, the greatest holiday of the year of merely human authority will be numbered with the past. By many the observance of the day will be associated but to a very partial extent, with engagements and exercises worthy of the grand event of which it is commemorative while by multitudes, that event will scarcely be thought of, even for a moment. There have however, always been those of devout mind prepared to appreciate the object of the sacred festival, and who with grateful hearts delight to celebrate the coming of the Saviour to our world.

The season is very properly one of gladness when it should be the aim of every body, as far as possible; to make every one else a partaker of the general joy. It is well, amid the many sources of disquietude abounding among mankind, that some periods should present them selves when those who are ordinarily the slaves of care and toil, or those whose application to duty is unremitting, should have appropriate relaxation; and when those whose lot is usually one of gloom, should have some drops of happiness mingled in their cup. Among the times, the poor and the sorrowful will not be who will not fail to make themselves to be remembered: indeed it would be a sorry thing to allow our care for them to slumber. We refer to the juveniles, by whom no season is anticirecurrence of the festival to these is associated with presents, and keepsakes, and social comforts, and family gatherings, and numerous other expressions of innocent enjoyment, but little in themselves, yet together serving to make the season the most joyful one of all the year. We would not have it otherwise, if we could.

Surely no event that has ever transpired or our earth could be better fitted to awaken jos in the heart, than the incarnation of the Son of God as the Redeemer of our lost race. If angelic beings, who are in no way directly interested in the advent of the Messiah, were exultant in heralding the appearance of their Lord to our world, how deeply should the heart of sinful man, whose only hope of bliss eternal is in Christ, be stirred to its depths with gladness and praise, in the contemplation of the glorious oc-ing, and the emotions it awakens are as fresh and as delightful as they ever were. How touching, how beautiful, how simple, yet how sublime, the gospel narrative of the announcement of the incarnation, by the angels to the shepherds: "And there were in the same country, shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flocks by night. And, lo! the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them, and they were Fear not, for behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people; for unto you is born this day in the city of David. a Saviour which is Christ the Lord! And this shall be a sign unto you: Ye shall find the babe ger. And suddenly there was with the angel a adomestic chaplain of the Queen, and editor of multitude of the heavenly host, praising God and saying, Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men. And it came to pass as the angels were gone away from them into heaven, the shepherds said one to another, Let us now go even unto Bethlehem, and Lord hath made known unto us. And they came with haste, and found Mary, and Joseph, day. In his Sunday Magazine, a new monthly, and the babe lying in a manger."

Do you not, when the bell rings for the Sabbath-school to assemble, feel thankful that it does not call you to a heathen temple, where you or your friends might be made an offering to heathen gods? Do you not feel thankful that, instead of destroying you, your parents provide for you, and lead you in the way of happiness on earth, and to bliss in heaven? Do you not owe something more than thanks? Only think of what all the children of all our Sabbath-schools could do if Dr. W. has reckoned right. He said that each penny was a drop; that drops made rills; that rills make rivers ; that rivers swelled the ocean ; and that when each of the children in all our Sabbathschools gave a penny a week we should have an ocean of missionary money. I propose that we start a rivulet in our school. He said, too, that the Sabbath-school children might support all our missions as they are. But it seems to me a self-denial to leave their parlors, or fire-sides that if they should our teachers and parents or work, to put their little children to bed. Would You like to see Jim?

In London there is a large building called Exeter Hall. It is used chiefly to held religious meetings and anniversaties in. Once they were holding a Sabbath-school anniversary there. A elergyman was addressing the shildren. He told them about two bad little boys, whom he had once known, and a good little girl, whom he afterwards learned to know. One day this little girl was going home from Sabbath-school where she had learned to try to be like Jesus, " who went about doing good." On her way home, she saw two little boys, about her own age, quarreling. She went up to them and told given. Do you not think that it pertains to us them how wickedly they were acting.
