HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, February 26, 1968

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION RESPECTING HOUSE VOTE ON BILL C-193

The house resumed, from Friday, February 23, consideration of the motion of the Prime Minister:

That this house does not regard its vote on February 19th in connection with third reading of Bill C-193, which had carried in all previous stages, as a vote of non-confidence in the government.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I dealt with this motion in my introductory remarks on Friday and pointed out, as had previous opposition speakers, that this is not an ordinary matter. The question which came before the house on Friday is a major matter, because the whole economic and financial program of the government was at stake on the vote in question. I also said in my introductory remarks that not only has the opposition for some time been pointing out that the government has been under serious attack as far as its economic and financial program is concerned but—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Could we have order, please?

Mr. Woolliams: —that this certainly has been the position of the governor of the Bank of Canada. I quoted in support of my argument The Economist of September 30. I now come to grips with the problem itself. We say this is a major and vital matter in respect of which the government was defeated. What is our position? I think it would be well to repeat our leader's position in this regard, our party's position and the position of the official opposition.

This is our position. We agree, of course, that the government could choose to consider a defeat on a minor matter as not involving a question of confidence. That is not the question. The question is, can the government choose to ignore a major defeat on a vital matter of policy? We say that according to constitutional practice this government has no right to place business or a motion before the house. We have not altered this stand in any respect. That is the stand we take; that is the stand of our leader; that is the stand of our party, and it is the stand I take this afternoon.

I am going to quote some authorities in this respect, and hope to be able to effectively answer the arguments of the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister consider the vote on Monday evening would have been any different if he had been in the House of Commons and had said "This is a vote of confidence"? Do mere words make the situation different? If the bill itself goes to a major and vital part of the economic and financial program of the Liberal government, does it make any difference whether it is called a vote of confidence, or is it in fact a vote of confidence when it affects the major financial policy of this government? Do mere words make the situation any different?

Would the leader of the Créditistes have voted for the tax increase if the Prime Minister had been here and had stood in his place and told us just before the vote on Monday that it was a vote of confidence? I suggest that the leader of the Créditistes would have voted against the tax increase on Monday night because he was against it; he was against the economic and financial program of this government.

Let us just see what the Prime Minister had to say in this regard. Let us examine the authorities about which we have heard so much not only from the Prime Minister but from other Liberals. The Prime Minister quoted Professor Jennings as follows:

What the government will treat as a matter of sufficient importance to demand resignation or dissolution is, primarily, a question for the government.

If it is always a matter for the government as to whether a question is vital or major, the government—and this they have done—could perpetuate their right to govern this country forever. That is the point involved.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Motion Respecting House Vote

Mr. Woolliams: Surely the Prime Minister does not take that position. I repeat the words quoted by the Prime Minister as authority:

> What the government will treat as a matter of sufficient importance to demand resignation or dissolution is, primarily, a question for the government.

I say that where it is a matter of vital and major importance, surely it is not open to the government to use that kind of discretion which amounts to an illegality. I quote an example in this respect. If a person obtained title to an article as the result of fraud, and that fraud was known by the person from whom he got the article, surely he could never transfer that title to anyone and make it a good title. That is what this government have tried to do. They were defeated on a matter of major and vital importance and now they say "It is up to us. It is within our parliamentary discretion and our legal discretion to interpret this as a matter in respect of which we do not have to dissolve parliament and go to the Governor General". If that is their position, then our parliamentary system has been changed to a republican system of government in Canada without the Canadian constitution having been amended, and that is the position in which the government finds itself this afternoon.

• (2:40 p.m.)

I wish to answer effectively another quotation put forward by the Prime Minister, which reads:

> It rests, therefore, with the government to decide what issues it shall treat as vital, and as demanding that it must resign or dissolve if it is denied support thereon.

Here I shall use the same argument I used with regard to the first quotation from Jennings. Surely if this government take such a position then they have changed our parliamentary system to the republican system or, still worse, the Prime Minister has taken upon himself the divine right of ruling as the king of Canada, and I have already referred to him as King Pearson I of Canada. That is the final conclusion one must reach in refuting the Prime Minister's argument when he quotes from the authorities to which he referred.

It has been said in the house, by the Liberal members and by the press that there are no authorities to prove the contrary. I say the authorities are certainly very clear. Let me quote from page 237 of Dawson's book "The Government of Canada". We have already heard the wishy-washy quotations from that book according to which the government can interpret the rules the way it likes and use its own discretion to perpetuate its right to govern Canada. Let us see what Dawson says. The quotation reads as follows:

> The cabinet must therefore introduce and sponsor all measures to spend or to raise money; and as any proposed amendment which would endeavour to diminish a tax or an expenditure contrary to the cabinet's wishes would now be treated as a vote of lack of confidence,...

In other words Dawson says, just as did the leader of our party, that when it is a matter of vital and major importance, and still more so when it is a matter pertaining to the economic and financial program of the Liberal party, the vote becomes a matter of confidence in the government. If we accept the position taken by Dawson we must come to the conclusion that the government is now operating illegally in this parliament, and that it has ceased to be the legal government of Canada.

I realize it is a weakness to quote from the authorities, but the same weakness was shown by the Prime Minister when he implied in the house and across the country that his government has jurisdiction to decide on constitutional matters. He has set himself up as the supreme court of Canada by interpreting the law in favour of the government, in a way which would give them the right to govern this country forever.

I should now like to quote the following statement from page 228 of Dawson's "The Government of Canada":

> Hence the great corollary of cabinet government: That the defeat of a government measure will normally bring about the defeat of the government itself.

The author goes on to give one exception, then he continues:

> If the house should decide to reject a government bill or to amend it in a way unacceptable to the cabinet then Her Majesty's government will consider that it is relieved of the duty of carrying on any longer the government.

This government has been relieved of its duty; it has been fired. As I said, and I wish to repeat it, according to the principle quoted by the Prime Minister and contrary to what MacGregor Dawson says that the functioning of the government should be based on its constitutional right to govern, a government could perpetuate its right to govern indefinitely, and that is what this government has done. They have established a republican system of government in this country.

I say with the greatest respect that this is the most important principle which parliament in my lifetime will ever be called upon to debate, the principle of the right to govern. The government has changed the parliamentary system under which we operate in this country to a republican system of government regardless of our constitution, and numerous references have been made by government supporters to constitutional matters. I say that this is as effective a destruction of parliament as if the parliament were dissolved by the Prime Minister never to be recalled. If you destroy our system you destroy parliament as effectively as if you burned down this place, or as if you bolted and barred the door. This is the situation when the government will not accept its constitutional responsibility as laid down by our leader in his opening remarks in this debate.

Now, when we are talking about constitutional matters, they are subject to interpretation. What is the economic situation? Why is this a vital and major matter? Why do the government choose to ignore it? Why do they have to impose a 5 per cent surtax on the people of this country? What was the reason? Was this something they would normally do in the course of events, or was it the result of their economic and financial policies? I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that the government's economic and financial policies led this country into a position where the government had to impose this tax. This is the most spending government we have ever had. They have become not only the greatest spenders but the greatest taxers.

In order to add weight to my argument let us look for a few moments at the report of the Auditor General to the House of Commons which we recently received, dated March 31, 1967. Let us see what has gone on under this government. Let the government point to any department in which expenses have been trimmed. I say it was a major and vital matter upon which this government was defeated, and according to the constitution they should now resign as the government of Canada. Let me list some of the departmental expenditures which have increased. The expenditures of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation went up 18 per cent; Defence Production went up 34 per cent; Dominion Bureau of Statistics went up 71 per cent; Energy and Mines was up only 4.6 per cent; External Affairs went up 51 per cent. I could go on and indicate the percentages by which every department's expenditures have risen. The expenditures of the department of the Secretary of State went up by 147 per cent.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Woolliams: We find that the expenditures of the Solicitor General's branch have risen 17 per cent. Surely these facts as set out by the Auditor General confirm that this is the most spending government we have had. They give lip service to the principle of trimming costs. This tax bill which was defeated was a part of the economic and financial policies of this government as set out by the Minister of Finance. I do not believe the government can deny that in any way.

What does this all lead us to? The Prime Minister made a speech with regard to the role of the opposition on January 27, 1959, when he addressed a luncheon meeting of the Canadian Club at Ottawa. At that time he quoted with approval the former leader of the opposition, the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). This is what the hon. member for Prince Albert said, and this is exactly the point I intend to make. I shall try to conclude my argument on this note:

> Autocracy, tyranny, dictatorship, are shadows that ever stand in the wings of even the freest of parliaments.

What he is really saying is that autocracy is always evident; tyranny is always evident, and dictatorship is always evident. It is up to the members of parliament to make certain we keep this the freest of parliaments and carry out our constitutional duty.

> In the absence of a strong opposition, a cabinet with a commanding position in the house could and would rule without regard to individual and minority rights.

This is exactly what the government has done. The Prime Minister quoted this speech with approval. Surely the government is acting very autocratically. There is no question about this. They are not now carrying out their constitutional duty. They have set themselves up as something of a dictatorship. There is nothing to say they will not do the same thing tomorrow. In fact one of the worst aspects of what they have done, if they ever get away with this suggestion from the Martin-Caouette axis, has been the establishment of a precedent in this house which may be followed in the future and which may lead to tyranny, autocracy and dictatorship, even if this government does not follow these practices in the future.

Motion Respecting House Vote

If this is to be the funeral of the Canadian parliamentary system, I am so glad I belong to a party which refuses to be an honorary pallbearer at that funeral, or a rewarded pallbearer like the Créditistes at parliament's funeral. They have formed the Martin-Caouette axis; the Prime Minister admitted this much over the week end. Although the Secretary of State for External Affairs was silent on this, the Prime Minister smoked him out and told us the facts.

I am happy to have taken part in this debate to register my voice against the march of autocracy, tyranny and dictatorship, which are no longer lingering shadows over this parliament but firmly recognizable now in Canada as a part of our institution. What a dangerous precedent this government are trying to establish, Mr. Speaker.

Before I leave this constitutional question I just want to say a few words about what the Minister of Finance, who is absent from his seat, has said in the debate. He spoke with two voices, or used two different phrases that are both characteristic of the government. The minister said that Canada should not carry on without this $400 million, that it was a major matter. At the same time he tried to go along with the suggestion of the government, and even though I know he is opposed to that suggestion he has not resigned. The minister talked about the danger of discussing the dollar and the economy, and the international implications of this.

In the early stages of my remarks I quoted from The Economist and put on record the view of that publication regarding the financial crisis brought on by the government, and its international repercussions. While the Prime Minister is worrying about the financial situation of the country and how his own actions might affect Canada internationally, I would remind him of what was said in an article in the The Albertan on May 22, 1962. This newspaper is a little worn now but I am glad I saved it. This is what this publication had to say in connection with the problems the Conservatives were having with the dollar:

> Pearson fears big price rise result of devaluation. The Conservative government's "panic devaluation" of the Canadian dollar will force up the cost of living to record all-time highs and impose a heavy financial burden—

—and so on. Did the right hon. gentleman worry at that time when he was leader of the opposition? Did the present Minister of Finance or Minister of Transport worry? No,

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Mr. Speaker; they travelled across the country not caring whether they would run Canada into blue ruin either internationally or domestically. Their conduct is illustrated by this article to which I have just referred.

Now, Mr. Speaker, these same hon. gentlemen are coming in with those soft voices they have and telling us that we must discuss the economic situation. We must follow their program, even though we are facing a financial crisis, to stem any run on the dollar. They did not care about a run on the dollar in 1962. They were irresponsible then, Mr. Speaker, and as far as their constitutional duties are concerned they are being irresponsible now.

I believe the Globe and Mail expressed the majority editorial opinion in its editorial in the February 22, 1968 issue. The article declared that the government were breaking rules for power, that they were breaking rules to get a dictatorship, that they were breaking rules so we can now have a republican system instead of a parliamentary system. Another editorial in their February 21, 1968 issue is headed "Defeat is defeat". I suggest the government are not measuring up to their responsibility. They have been defeated but are trying through television and radio broadcasts to drag across the trail red herrings so as to turn us away from the main subject.

Their constitutional duty today, Mr. Speaker, is to resign. The Prime Minister should go to the Governor General and discuss in this situation who should form the government. That is the responsibility of the Prime Minister, one that he and the government refuse to take. The Liberals rule by divine right in every regard.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I hope the Créditiste party, who voted against the tax bill as well as against the Liberals' economic and financial program, having been, as we have, critical of both, will measure up to their responsibility as members of parliament and at the proper time, when the vote is called, vote with the opposition.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, as our leader said last Friday, we hoped the debate might end that day. On behalf of our party I now express the hope that the debate will end today. Accordingly we are prepared to limit our participation.

One point I think was noted by everyone last week. The debate on the issue before parliament was primarily carried on outside this chamber over radio and television. I think the Toronto conference on the Canadian constitution, the recent federal-provincial conference and our experience last week show the value of speaking directly to the people instead of speaking only to each other in this chamber. I express the hope that as a result of last week's experience arrangements will now definitely be made to admit television cameras into the chamber, instead of having members rushing to the television cameras outside. It seems to me it is time we adjusted ourselves to this new information medium and made the necessary arrangements.

One point which struck me most forcefully all through last week is that we have further evidence of the credibility gap which some political leaders create in the public mind about politics and politicians. The Prime Minister had some cogent and simple, human reasons for refusing to accept last Monday night's decision. Though those reasons cannot influence my vote, I had sympathy for the right hon. gentleman. His reasons were understandable and they were obvious. The Prime Minister could not resign and ask one of his colleagues to lead the government because a number of them are candidates for the succession, and it would have been difficult for him to make a choice.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): He could pick a man who is not a candidate.

Mr. Lewis: The right hon. gentleman did not want to dissolve parliament and enter upon an election campaign, and I understand that. Having announced his retirement, it was impossible for him to contemplate leading his party in another election campaign. From his point of view, from his party's point of view and, he might have added, from the country's point of view it would be more desirable for his successor to announce the election and lead the party in the campaign.

These were simple, human reasons that the Prime Minister had, and I think they were the real reasons for his refusal to accept Monday night's decision. Then why not state that? Why not be frank with parliament and the Canadian people? Why resort to distortions and false accusations about plots and trickery?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: I was saddened to see an admirably decent human being like our Prime Minister, who at times can be disarmingly frank, accept the political ethics of some of his colleagues who think a shovelful of sand in the eyes is better and more useful than a barrel of honest facts. I think this kind of approach to political discussion and debate has undermined the credibility of parliament and politicians in this country.

I emphasize, in a speech which will not be too long, that as our leader said last Friday our vote on the previous Monday was not only a vote against the unfair increase in taxes on wage and salary earners but also a vote of non-confidence in the economic and fiscal policies of this government. We believe the government's economic policies are doing harm to Canada now, and that they threaten to be ruinous in the next year or so. We shall vote against this motion because we have no more confidence in the economic policies of this government today than we had a week ago.

We fought the budget and the economic policies behind it from the first moment, as hon. members know. I happened to be the first speaker in that debate on behalf of our party and I indicated, as did others who followed me, that we believed the mini-budget to be unnecessary, to be undesirable, to be based on wrong policies and wrong objectives, and that in particular the 5 per cent surcharge on individual taxes was ill conceived and bound to increase the inequity of a tax system which the Carter commission had already found to be inequitable.

In his lamentably and pathetically weak defence last Friday the Minister of Finance almost admitted that he really did not know quite what he was doing. We heard him say at one moment that this country had never known such prosperity as we had enjoyed in the last few years and were experiencing even now, while in the next he told us that the economy and the financial system of the country were in such jeopardy that we could not even afford to hold an election at this time without upsetting the apple cart.

He said in the course of his pathetically weak defence last Friday that the government did not intend to use the money collected through extra taxes on individuals for the purpose my leader had indicated. Despite what he said the fact remains that the proposed bill would have collected $185 million from the pockets of individual taxpayers, and would have immediately paid back two thirds of it to corporations by returning the refundable tax, $105 million in the first year and $139 million the next. We thought it was unfair, undesirable and anti-social to take money from the pockets of the ordinary wage and salary earners in order to return it to the large corporations by way of repayment of their refundable tax.

I said on December 6 last that the mini-budget was unfair. I said its main objective, like that of the bill which we defeated last Monday, was to increase unemployment and slow down the rate of growth in this country. The minister has said so himself in almost as many words. We do not believe this is the right policy for Canada to follow. Even before the tax bill was defeated a week ago the economy reflected the results of the policies of this government and of this minister in a levelling off of investment and an increase in unemployment. Every indicator today shows that next year investment will probably be below the level of 1967, and that unemployment across Canada will increase even further.

Let me remind hon. members that the economic council has indicated on more than one occasion that the work force in Canada is now increasing substantially every year, and that we need to be concerned not only about jobs for the present work force but about providing jobs for an addition to that force at the rate of 3 per cent or 4 per cent each year. Slowing down the rate of growth will necessarily lead to a failure to provide sufficient jobs and to an increase in unemployment.

The Minister of Finance said my leader was promoting policies which were themselves inflationary in order to deal with an inflationary situation. I say to the Minister of Finance, who is not present today, that he is talking balderdash. The fact is that we are living in an economic environment where there is no guarantee whatever that the old-fashioned ways of dealing with such a situation—lowering the rate of growth and increasing unemployment—would have any effect whatever on prices. As a matter of fact we are living in an era in which an increase in the interest rate occurs simultaneously with an increase in the supply of money. This happened over a long period in 1967 and it is unheard of according to normal, orthodox economic textbooks. I venture to say that exactly the same thing is in store for us in the area of unemployment and high prices. We are no longer in a free market, and we have not been for years. We are no longer in a situation where a reduction in aggregate demand, a reduction in the rate of growth, a loosening of the slack in the economy, will automatically produce an effect upon the price structure.

[Mr. Lewis.]

Prices are no longer as flexible as they used to be. Wage costs are no longer as flexible as they used to be. The wage pattern now is that its trend continues beyond the downturn in the business cycle, and the pattern of the price structure does the same because it no longer reflects prices on a free market. This must be so, since in all the most important areas of the economy prices are effectively controlled by the oligopolies which control industry.

For these reasons what the minister has proposed in his economic and financial policy is the worst of both worlds, increases in the cost of living simultaneously with an increase in unemployment. This is the kind of policy he proposes, the kind of policy against which we voted last Monday.

The minister says we do not make suggestions to him. We have made them, but he will not accept them because his government is ridden with shibboleths with regard to the workings of the economy, introducing in the sixties concepts which are no longer relevant. The hon. gentleman talks as though we were living in pre-Keynesian days before the second world war, as though we were not in the hands of monopolies or oligopolies, and as though there were some freedom in the market place for anything other than services.

I say we should control the inflationary spiral not by the destruction of prosperity in Canada, as this government proposes, but by the establishment of a prices review board to make sure that no producer gets unconscionable profits out of the present situation. If its powers are insufficient I suggest the federal government has the duty of calling a conference with provincial governments to determine where jurisdiction over price control lies, and to discuss with them the possibility of imposing selective price controls in order to restrain inflationary pressures. As we indicated in the debate on the budget, inflationary pressures are not the result of a demand pull; they are the result of what the economists call a cost push situation.

It is only by direct means of regulating and controlling the oligopolies which administer prices that you can do anything about inflationary prices. To deal with unemployment we need the stimulation of the economy and not contraction. We need a decline in unemployment and not an increase. I remind the house that every time we slow down the economy, every time we pursue policies that increase unemployment what we do, as I said on December 6, is increase the disparities in this country. The provinces east of the Ottawa river, to use the phrase uttered by the premier of Newfoundland during the federal-provincial conference on the constitution, will suffer unemployment to a higher degree and to a greater proportionate extent than the provinces west of the Ottawa river. Not only do you do harm to the economy across the country, but you do particular harm to the five provinces east of the Ottawa river which can least tolerate or least accept it.

I say, Mr. Speaker—and this is why we voted against the bill last Monday and why we will vote against the motion today—that the economic and financial policies of the government will inevitably result in a continued increase in the already high cost of living, in a drop in the rate of growth in Canada, in continually increasing unemployment, with the social frustration and the loss of revenues to this government and to other governments that this will bring.

On Friday the Minister of Finance accused the leader of my party of self assurance, and may I say having made that statement in a not very assured way he then proceeded not only with self assurance but with limitless arrogance to say to this house "You may have defeated the bill I presented to you last Monday night, but I give you warning now you will have, not of course the same bill but a similar bill, as soon as I can get it ready." He talks about self assurance. He has the nerve to accuse someone else of knowing exactly where he is going while even a decision of parliament does not chasten him and does not make him change his policies.

I have no doubt that within ten days this house will be presented with another measure which in some form will place an increased tax upon the individual taxpayers of this country; and we shall fight it with all the strength at our command, as we fought the last one no matter—what is the word that was used by a very highly placed and respected gentleman in this house?—no matter what trickery may be used to get around the decision of a week ago. Any attempt to increase taxes on individuals in Canada at this time is in our view contrary to the interests of the country, contrary to the interests of the people, and we shall fight against it with all the strength we have.

We opposed Bill C-193, as I have said, and we oppose this motion of confidence in the government. We have not changed our minds. We believe we were right then and that we will be right now, because it is our conviction that the government's economic and financial policies are ruinous for Canada, for Canada's future, and are a threat to the new adherents to our labour force through unemployment. We believe that the manpower retraining program is bound to be inadequate, as it has already proved to be inadequate. The larger the unemployment problem becomes the less will the Minister of Manpower and Immigration be able to do to retrain people. These economic and financial policies threaten the future of the young people of Canada. Therefore we opposed the bill a week ago and we will vote against this motion, I hope today.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I will try today to use the simplest and most familiar words so that the journalists, first of all, and the population in general will understand clearly how we see the present motion.

I would not like to keep the house too long by indulging in digressions as some other speakers did before me. For hours we have been hearing quotations dating back 40, 50, 100 years and even more to prove that the procedure followed was not in accordance with the thinking of the fathers of confederation or the British tradition, while the members of the government did all they could to prove the contrary.

The traditionalists should be told that many things have changed since those memorable days and that our great-great-grandparents would find it very difficult to recognize the practice today even if the laws they enacted were recognized.

What are they hoping to prove, through all these repetitious speeches which finally get on our nerves, to the people who want action on the part of their representatives? Do they want to prove that the government has no right to act as it just did? That is their opinion? Very well, we respect it even if we do not always understand their personal reasons. I think that to describe their state of mind better, I would need a truth detector in order to know for sure what took place in their mind in the evening of February 19 or what they are now turning over in their mind.

But what can I do, Mr. Speaker. We have simultaneous translation here but no detector. Let us hope that that will come some day.

Mr. Speaker, these people should bear in mind that we also have our reasons to vote for or against the present measure and that, in our opinion, our reasons are much better than theirs, for they go beyond partisanship or tradition.

• (3:20 p.m.)

In fact, while they delight in an old myth from the stone age and persist in defending an obsolete piece of legislation, or still, what is undeniable, while they are deliberately playing politics at the expense of taxpayers, we are pushing on our fight to enforce our principles which will bring to the Canadian people salvation through the liberation of their representatives.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, we have well established principles on the judicial and social level. Ever since we came to this house, we have always urged the various governments to listen to us, and promised our support to the first willing to co-operate with us—regardless of party lines which matter little to us—because we are more than ever convinced today that partisanship has prevented our governments and the entire population from progressing towards more humane legislation.

I do not hesitate to say today, to the public at large, that if the Diefenbaker government had not isolated itself in its ivory tower in 1963 and refused everything to the Ralliement Créditiste in the definite hope of starving us to death, it would still be in power today. We had clearly defined our conditions to the government at the time, repeating that should they not be complied with, it would be defeated. We were asking very little: just the start of legislation. But from the top of his fortress, the great and inflexible dictator, the great leader refused; and so, the end came.

And again today they dare speak of dictatorship. Have the people fully understood the implications of this clash? I doubt it, for too many people still wear a political blindfold. Thank God, this is slowly disappearing!

Many will say: Yes, but your feathers are ruffled. We admit it was a difficult fight, even unequal, although we dared everything, since the two old parties brought to bear the full weight of their memberships, at the service of English and American high finance, using as an incendiary torch all the the most modern means of publicity such as newspapers, radio and television, etc., always at the service of capital holders, and spreading discouragement and discord.

We lost some gallant soldiers and strong fighters for the cause of the people. But they can be proud today, for their many sacrifices will not have been in vain. The old parties have forgotten that the armour of the Créditistes is in their hearts and that it does not come from the Royal Canadian Mint or from the pen of those who control our lives through money and credit.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, the forthcoming vote—on which some members of the opposition have been heaping ridicule, which, incidentally, is a coward's last weapon—will be of capital importance for us and for all the members of the Ralliement Créditiste who are fighting for the right cause. It will set the seal upon our first great victory over traditional rules which all past and present parliamentarians have accepted and which they cannot accept any longer.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member allow me—

Mr. Gauthier: We have been storming parliament hill for six years—

Mr. Grafftey: Will the hon. member allow me to ask him a simple question?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, if I may be allowed to finish my speech, I will then organize a forum, as I am accustomed to do in my parish meetings, throughout my riding.

We have been storming parliament hill for six years, hoping to win the free vote in the house, that is, the right—and this is very important—to defeat a piece of legislation without thereby defeating the government elected by the majority of the people and plunging the whole country into an election every year or every six months.

We are asking for something that is quite logical, and I think that the most concrete example we can find is at the level of our municipal and school institutions. Would a municipality, for example, be allowed to call a new election every time one of the resolutions of the mayor or the deputy mayor is defeated in council? Never, one would say. This is a utopian notion; why should we practise this illogical notion at the federal level?

The main arguments of the two old parties were "British tradition" and the unchangeable and apparently untouchable "rules of the house".

Well, Mr. Speaker, after that vote, we will be entering into a new era, since those two main arguments will no longer be accepted in this house, since finally due to the force of circumstances or a comprehensive democracy within our group, a government will have met our views by accepting one of our dearest principles, that is the possibility of voting against an important government bill without necessarily having to hold an election.

And all this will necessarily lead to a parliamentary reform establishing a fixed period for a government, to remain in power as in the case of municipalities and school boards or, for those who see big, let us say as in the United States.

Mr. Speaker, as can be noted by restricting the time of a parliament to a specific number of years, it would be impossible, as alleged by certain Conservative speakers, for a government to maintain itself in power for years and years.

It is again one of their tricks to try and make the people believe that it is impossible to set a limit. By that method, each member would be absolutely free to vote as he pleases. We Créditistes have the deep conviction that we are here not to vote for or against a man, for or against a minister, for or against a government, but for or against a legislation depending on whether or not it is to the advantage or disadvantage of the people that we represent.

That is our only reason for being here. Then, the various parties simply become cooperators for those who accept, and instruments for those who are reticent. Therefore, it will be seen that we are way above the level of the old partisan politics whose myth still remains among many.

By so doing, those who will take off their blinkers to read the resolution will find that each and every word is important. This is the text of the resolution and I quote:

> That this house does not regard its vote of February 19 in connection with the third reading of Bill C-193, which had carried in all previous stages, as a vote of non-confidence in the government.

In short, the resolution, in its present form asks the house not to regard its vote on February 19 as a non-confidence vote in the government.

• (3:30 p.m.)

The word confidence does not even appear in that motion.

That makes one wonder why Her Majesty's opposition keeps talking about confidence and non-confidence. The resolution introduced in the house is not even a motion of confidence. It states simply that parliament does not consider that the vote of February 19 was a vote of non-confidence.

Personally, Mr. Speaker, I can assure the house quite frankly that when I voted last Monday night, I was thinking of only one thing: defeat the bill increasing personal income tax by 5 per cent, nothing more. That is all I wanted. I voted to defeat the bill and I am happy about that.

That bill was very important and we wanted to reject it, so much so that even if the minister had risen at that precise moment—I do not remember what member of the opposition made that assumption a moment ago—and, in the hope of frightening us, had said: I regard this vote as a vote of confidence, well, Mr. Speaker, because of our principles and our convictions, we would have voted against that legislation all the same. I will even go further. If the government had not introduced the present resolution in its present form, that is if they had asked us to give them our confidence without withdrawing the bill which was rejected last Monday, we would have to vote against the government.

Furthermore, it is precisely in that vein that our leader, replied to the journalists who asked him how he would vote on a motion of confidence. At the time, the question involved was not a matter of confidence. He said: Against the government. That is precisely what I said previously, he was right, because at that time we could not foresee that the government would accept our requirements. But the journalists could not make head or tail of it, as they did not even suspect that there must be some diplomatic play between the parties. Some of them did so through ignorance, which reminds me of an anecdote.

Two lads were sent to the line of fire without having been given even elementary instructions. All they had in mind was to kill the enemy. All they heard was the voice of their general shouting: Fire, kill!

To their astonishment, after the cease-fire, they saw that same general cross the lines to parley with the enemy authorities. They thought, out of ignorance, that he was crazy, that he was contradicting himself, that he was ridiculous, a turncoat and had made an about-face. Is this not an exact description of certain newspapermen?

Others are prompted by personal or partisan interest. They are well aware of the misrepresentations they spread among the general public, and this is much more serious.

I saw in the papers large head-lines reading: "Caouette supports the government; Caouette saves the government." If those people had been sincere, do you not think they would have written instead: Caouette saves taxpayers $450 million in expenditures. The Conservatives may laugh all they want but, fortunately, we are the ones with the balance of power, not them.

Mr. Valade: This is blackmail.

Mr. Gauthier: It is not blackmail, it is the truth. The real blackmail is what you read in the papers. I do not want to attack all newpapermen, for it is heartening to know that there are still a few honest newpapermen left. I would ask them to try and urge their colleagues to put an end to these abominations.

Say what you will, it is still up to the government to decide whether or not an election shall be called. The opposition can shout itself hoarse, those are the facts. The government, having flatly admitted the defeat of Bill No. C-193, and having declared it would not be introduced again, has said it did not consider this vote as a vote of non-confidence. That is its business, Mr. Speaker. In my view, it is the same as if the minister had risen before the vote and said, I give notice to the house that, even if this vote is negative, I shall not deem it to be a vote of confidence.

Mr. Speaker, of course there is a question of British traditions involved. This is precisely what we want to get rid of. Now we have just set a precedent. We have succeeded. All right! We have opened a door which will enable us to take a second step: provide in the standing orders of the house that, in the future, every member will be entitled to cast a free vote, according to his own conscience, since his vote will not be considered any longer as capable of defeating his own government. At last we have done away with the yoke of political parties, forced for so many years upon members of the old parties by finance barons who were paying for elections, with the result that Grits and Tories had to pass legislation which favoured them, whilst the working class was constantly called upon to foot the bill.

I do not want to blame any member of the two old parties, because I understand them sufficiently to feel really sorry for them. So, let them be assured that we shall resort to all possible means to promote legislative measures which will allow all the hon. members to get out of that party dictatorship where they cannot be fully themselves. Once again, we warn the house that the group which will act the fastest in that direction will get the support of the Canadian people, who will be the first to benefit therefrom.

I realize that it is difficult for several hon. members to sever the umbilical cord which hold them yet to their fathers' myths since painless childbirth does not yet exist. Therefore, let them show a little resignation, a little more courage, a lot of responsibility, a boundless social spirit and especially, let them keep on working in order to reach the goal.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to say a word with regard to the rumour to the effect that a general election will be called tomorrow. I answer: No, Mr. Speaker, fully conscious of all the responsibilities involved, because the government is bound to act, and for two major reasons.

The house can be assured that if it is our duty to get some action on the part of the government, we shall work day and night, because time is getting short, and there are two main reasons for this.

In the first place, because we will wind up the business of this session in about a month, according to what we have been told. We will not have too much time and we will have to use our remaining hours to complete our office work.

In the second place, because to begin with I must look after the interests of Roberval constituency in which 6 per cent of the labour force is unemployed. To cope with this crisis, our municipal councillors have used every possible means and have sacrificed everything to carry out various winter works. But after more than two or three weeks of superhuman work, twelve municipalities of my constituency have not yet finally adopted their projects. Needless to say that all this requires the attention and the essential presence of the minister concerned. Can one imagine the extent of the disaster if tomorrow the minister had to close his office to launch an election? This means that, less than ever, is it time to abandon the battlefield, to desert our most sacred duty in order to play at elections.

There are, in my constituency, other urgent problems for which we must find a solution within a few days, and I am very much determined to continue my work in spite of all those senseless jokers.

Once the business of the house is completed, in a month or so, the way will be clear for election amateurs, if we are to force such expenses upon the people and if the people want it. I am but the servant of my constituency here, so I shall readily comply with the will of the majority.

Speaking of jokers, Mr. Speaker, does anyone sincerely believe that the Conservative party wants an election? Would it not be rather that they want to get some headlines in all newspapers and be on television? Those who listened to their spokesmen and leader last night, must have felt the chill of death when the leader of the official opposition (Mr. Stanfield) claimed that he did not want to defeat the government, that he did not want to trigger off an election before the Liberal party had its convention on April 5. I have heard that with my own ears, Mr. Speaker, and I commend the Leader of the Opposition on his outspokenness. But after such a declaration, which newspapermen surely know about, what kind of about-face will they perform, these people who interpret everything according to politics or the amount of money they receive? The leader of the offical opposition does not have to worry: they have not yet started to throw their poisoned darts at him. He will be safe so long as he remains on the side of big business.

After all that, I find it very difficult to understand all this commotion on the part of the Conservatives. Indeed, while their leader appeals for peace, they try to shout their war cries, or so-called war cries. Would this be another smokescreen, its only aim to delay the business of the house?

In our opinion, all serious-thinking people realize once again that the Ralliement des Créditistes must play its role as vigilant mediator in order to prevent futile squabbles which will necessarily be paid for by the people. I will be told that that is a great responsibility. It is the price of holding the balance of power. We realize that each judgment we pronounce influences our future. That is why all our members must feel completely free to act and vote as they wish.

Indeed, it is not enough to preach; one must set an example, and the house can rest assured that, within our party, the vote will be 100 per cent free. Some days we wish we had the wisdom of Solomon, but we are only human and all we have is our desire to work for the good of our constituencies and of the whole country.

[English]

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of regret that on a question as important as this one the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) is not in the house. It is even more a matter of regret that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp), whose responsibility is at stake here, is not in the house, and it is even more a matter of regret that the minister directly responsible, some would say, as the custodian of our constitution and our constitutional procedures, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Trudeau), deems it more advisable to appear on television, as he did about half an hour ago in the lobby, than to confront the house with the defence of the government's position. As a matter of fact, it is rather remarkable, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) pointed out, that in a debate of such seriousness only five cabinet ministers should be in the house. This is an indication of the supreme indifference and arrogance with which members of the cabinet treat this house.

No matter how long and how loud the members of the Créditiste party talk they cannot get away from the fact that they are doing a disservice to their leader who purported to be speaking for their party and are dissociating themselves from the proper position which they took last Monday night. There is no getting away from the positive position which the leader of that party took last Wednesday, and I should like to quote him from page 6905 of Hansard of February 21. After the Prime Minister's intention to put forward the motion now before us was announced the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) said:

> If we believe that, in a democracy, parliament is the real sovereign of the country, we may say, in the present circumstances, that the government has been defeated by a parliamentary majority and that it should resign.

• (3:50 p.m.)

He did not leave it there. On the same page, we find this statement:

> I see no other way out for the government than to go to the people and ask for their opinion on the way in which the business of the country is to be dealt with.

Again, on the same occasion and on the same page we find these words:

> Under the circumstances, there is but one way out, and that is to go to the people.

Now, where is this situation resolved? When the Creator made these people on my left I think He threw away the jellymould. These circumstances recall the situation in 1963. These people have no more virtue now. In fact, it took about the same amount of time in 1963 because over the dinner hour they changed their minds. The deputy leader of the party at that time, then the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency, issued a publication entitled "Dans Le Même Sac". I believe that is the situation today; they are in the same bag. No doubt the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson), who I understand will be speaking very shortly, is in the same bag as well.

Ever since the government's defeat last Monday night the Prime Minister and his followers have been whining and whimpering on national television in this country. They have been whimpering about the undesirability of an election at a time when the economy of Canada is in serious trouble. They have been trying to leave the impression that the opposition was irresponsible in acting as they did in the house on Monday night. Does he remember his own conduct in 1962 and 1963? I shall have some quotations for him in that regard in a few moments, because I intend to quote him as a constitutional expert.

I wonder whether hon. members opposite recall the publication, just a little over four years ago, of the "Diefenbucks"? I wonder whether they recall travelling from one end of the country to the other trying to undermine the economy with one purpose in mind, to clutch at power? Does the Prime Minister remember those occasions? Do the members of his party recall hearing those things? What kind of deceit is this he is endeavouring to impose on the country now? These are not my words, they are the words of the Prime Minister, as I will show in a moment.

The truth is that the financial crisis about which they are complaining now is their own doing. It has nothing to do with the opposition. It was as gradual as it was inevitable under the policies of the present government. It resulted from, to paraphrase words of the Prime Minister in 1962, continued deficits, inadequate economic growth, some bad budgetary proposals and the destructive effect of high interest rates, high cost of living, high taxes, inadequate housing, high unemployment and, by no means lastly, the unprecedented bungling and ineptitude of the government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nielsen: I am glad to hear hon. members opposite applaud, especially the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette). I am happy to see him in his seat, in which place he was not last Monday.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the hon. member for Yukon during the whole year 1966.

Mr. Nielsen: If the hon. member were here more often he would see me.

The Prime Minister speaks of trickery. The opposition used some kind of dirty trick in defeating the government on a major, indeed, vital piece of tax legislation we say. Again I should like to quote words the Prime Minister used in 1962:

> Could anything be more fantastic, but fantastic or not you will be hearing this farcical explanation soon and often in the House of Commons in accents of quivering indignation.

This is the Prime Minister speaking, Mr. Speaker. Was is an opposition trick, I ask you, that kept 48 members on the government side away last Monday? Was it an opposition trick that the vote was called at all on Monday night? Was it an opposition trick that they were defeated on not one but two occasions on Monday night? Was it an opposition trick that brought the country to the point where the government decided to impose additional taxes on those least able to bear them? Was it an opposition trick that this tax measure was introduced in this chamber last November? Was it an opposition trick to lure the Prime Minister to Jamaica while this vote was being taken? Was it an opposition trick to induce the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Turner), the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) away from the house last Monday when this vote was taken? They were out on the hustings. They were galavanting around the country on a leadership campaign instead of attending to the business of the house.

Mr. Greene: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Yukon is very used to distorting facts. I must state—

Mr. Starr: You mean you were here?

Mr. Greene: —that I was not out west on leadership business. I was in Manitoba at the annual meeting of the Manitoba Dairy Association. Contrary to what the hon. member for Bow River said, I was very well used and graciously received. In fact, I was made an honorary citizen of the city of Winnipeg by his worship the mayor.

Mr. Nielsen: As usual, the Minister of Agriculture has not risen on a question of privilege at all.

Mr. Stafford: How would you know?

Mr. Nielsen: Obviously, from the actions of the government, there are no experts on that side of the house.

I was asking whether it was an opposition trick, Mr. Speaker, that the government insisted on proceeding with this measure on Monday night. I was asking whether it was an opposition trick or whether it was by connivance of the opposition that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) insisted on the vote and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) insisted on the vote or that we tricked the government whip into assuring the Minister of Finance he had sufficient members in the house. Really, the Prime Minister must believe the Canadian people are incredibly stupid to swallow that kind of nonsense.

At the same time the government accuses us of connivance and trickery they say the vote was a mistake; it was a miscalculation. It was a snap vote or it was a fluke. These are the same people who are levelling these accusations at us today.

Mr. Choquette: You were not supposed to be there last Monday. You have been absent for a year.

Mr. Nielsen: What arrogance.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nielsen: Have we reached the stage of dictatorship where in the future only the government will determine when a vote will be a want of confidence vote? This is what that great constitutional authority, the Prime Minister, had to say in 1962:

> Responsible government, which was not gained in Canada without bloodshed, is the foundation of our independence and our democracy in this country. What do we mean by responsible government? We mean that the Queen's ministers are responsible to the elected house of parliament. They have the right to remain in office only so long as they have the confidence and support of a majority of the elected representatives of the people.

This government lost that support and that confidence last Monday night. I quote the Prime Minister again:

> In a parliament where no political party has a clear majority, this confidence and support cannot, of course, be taken for granted by the government... No government, however, has the right to remain in office unless it can command the support of a majority in the House of Commons.

Those are the Prime Minister's words, Mr. Speaker. He has now "pulled a Caouette". This arrogant government, this government that believes that the Liberal party rules by divine right, which is no change from the usual situation, now attempts to carry on government as though Monday night never happened at all. Because the Prime Minister is such an impeccable source, Mr. Speaker, I should like to quote him again. He said:

> This is indefensible and unconstitutional behaviour on the part of one who talks so much about the rights of parliament and the sacredness of our parliamentary institutions.

It is all the more shocking, sir, because we are currently involved in vital constitutional considerations. Questions of great importance are being discussed. Yet we are confronted with the spectacle of a Prime Minister who has lost his mandate from the people and from parliament but is blithely insisting on continuing as though nothing has happened. In the same speech the Prime Minister had this to say:

> I insist that nothing should be done in this parliament...until the question of confidence has been settled in the proper constitutional way. Unless that question is settled first, the right of parliament to control the executive will have ceased to mean anything.

All of those quotations, Mr. Speaker, are from a speech made by the Prime Minister at a testimonial dinner honouring Toronto and district Liberal members of parliament at the Royal York hotel in Toronto on September 18, 1962. What greater authority can I quote than that.

As to this sudden shift by the leader of the Créditistes, the action now taken by that party has, as one colleague has suggested to me, totally "discreditisted" that party. All I can say is that I compliment the Secretary of State for External Affairs on his most amazing powers of diplomacy. So great are those powers, sir, that in my view we should send him at once to Viet Nam.

We have been criticized very mildly for not quoting some precedents. I have some and I commend them to the consideration of the house. The first one I want to lay before the house is "Law of the Constitution" by a highly respected writer, A. V. Dicey. In his ninth edition, pages 418 and 419, the writer explains that our constitutional precepts are divided into statutory precepts and precepts of custom, usage or practice of the commons. At page 420 of his work the following statement appears:

> A ministry which is outvoted in the House of Commons is in many cases bound to retire from office. A cabinet, when outvoted on any vital question, may appeal once to the country by means of a dissolution. If an appeal to the electors goes against the ministry they are bound to retire from office, and have no right to dissolve parliament a second time.

And at page 430:

The conventions of the constitution now consist of customs which (whatever their historical origin) are at the present day maintained for the sake of ensuring the supremacy of the House of Commons, and ultimately, through the elective House of Commons, of the nation. Our modern code of constitutional morality secures, though in a roundabout way, what is called abroad the "sovereignty of the people."

That is why these customs have to be honoured, Mr. Speaker. That is why these customs need not be regarded, indeed should not be regarded, as a matter of mere rules which can be trampled at will by a government intent upon maintaining office at any price.

What are the constitutional ethics that are required of a ministry that is defeated on a measure such as that which was before the house last Monday night? Let us look at the legal and constitutional position for a moment. Is the conduct of the cabinet in retaining office in this instance constitutionally immoral? This is a point that has been raised by the leader of this party as well as by the leader of the New Democratic party.

Dicey believes that the true rule of the constitution is not that a ministry cannot keep office but that the ministry ought not to remain in office unless they can, by an appeal to the country, obtain the election of a house which will support the government, a support that was not forthcoming Monday night. At page 451 of Dicey's book there is the following paragraph:

The conventions of the constitution are not laws, but, in so far as they really possess binding force, derive their sanction from the fact that whoever breaks them must finally break the law and incur the penalties of a lawbreaker.

I shall have something to say about the illegality of the tax in a moment. At page 455 Dicey continues:

Why is it, to take definite instances of this uncertainty and changeableness, that no one can define with absolute precision the circumstances under which a Prime Minister ought to retire from office? Why is it that no one can fix the exact point at which resistance of the House of Lords to the will of the House of Commons becomes unconstitutional?

Then Dicey gives some examples of when a ministry should properly and constitutionally retire from office. I quote from page 456:

Thus the rule that a ministry who have lost the confidence of the King...the undignified persistency from office is plain enough, and any permanent neglect of the spirit of this rule would be absolutely inconsistent with parliamentary government, and would finally involve the minister who broke the rule in acts of undoubted illegality... There are, however, a hundred signs of parliamentary disapproval which, according to circumstances, either may or may not be a sufficient notice that a minister ought to give up office. The essential thing is that the ministry should obey the house as representing the nation. But the question whether the House of Commons has or has not indirectly intimated its will that a cabinet should give up office is not a matter as to which any definite principle can be laid down.

The difficulty which now exists, in settling the point at which a premier and his colleagues are bound to hold that they have lost the confidence of the house, is exactly analogous to the difficulty which often perplexed statesmen of the last century, of determining the point at which a minister was bound to hold he had lost the then essential confidence of the King ... the undignified persistency with which later cabinets have occasionally clung to office in the face of intimations that the House desired a change of government.

Nothing could have been clearer last Monday night than that the opposition in this house was united in demanding the resignation of the government.

The Prime Minister is charging the opposition with being irresponsible, and I have dealt with that. The opposition has been "irresponsible" by marshalling and parading all of the blunders of which this government has been guilty over the years. In this regard I should like to quote what Dicey has to say. I read from page 599:

One may add that the whole current of modern constitutional custom involves the admission that the final decision of every grave political question now belongs, not to the House of Commons, but to the electors as the representatives of the nation.

"Cabinet Government" by Jennings, second edition, was one authority cited by the Prime Minister. In discussing the role of the supporter Jennings says at page 441:

• (4:10 p.m.)

Above all, a supporter of the government is very unlikely to take any step—

Or to refrain from taking any step, such as being absent.

—which will defeat the government. For, if it is defeated on a major issue, it will resign or dissolve parliament.

At page 446 we find this statement:

The house possesses the instruments necessary to determine the fate of governments. If it fails to approve the government's policy the government must resign or dissolve parliament.

What could be more positive than statements like these from a respected and noted writer? He goes on to say:

—the house can...make the levying of income tax and surtax unlawful by failing to pass the finance bill.

I continue quoting from page 450:

A government will not give way on a major question of policy.

No one can contest that the measure which was brought forward last Monday night was not a matter of major government policy. On page 457 Jennings says this, and I am about to read the quotation that the Prime Minister read in part but did not finish:

It must not be thought, however, that a single defeat necessarily demands either resignation or dissolution. Such a result follows only where the defeat implies loss of confidence.

Our case is that the defeat of the bill on Monday night implied loss of confidence because that bill was the very core of the government budget. Citing Mr. Ramsay MacDonald of England in 1924, Jennings says on page 459:

The Labour government will go out if it is defeated upon substantial issues, issues of principle, issues which really matter... If the house on matters non-essential, matters of mere opinion, matters that do not strike at the root of the proposals that we make, and do not destroy fundamentally the general intentions of the government in introducing legislation—if the house wish to vary our propositions, the house must take the responsibility for that variation—then a division on such amendments and questions as those will not be regarded as a vote of no confidence.

We have the matter in the negative as well. I have been unable to find an example of a government which, having been defeated on its budget, has failed to resign.

Mr. Woolliams: That is quite right.

Mr. Nielsen: I shall be only a moment or two, sir. At page 461 Jennings says:

Four factors really determine the attitude of a government to a parliamentary defeat.

He lists these factors and goes on to say:

The fourth is the importance of the proposal or matter on which it was defeated. A defeat on an important part of the budget, as in 1852 and 1885, is obviously too important to be passed over.

The last precedent I wish to cite is from "The Government of Canada" by Professor Robert MacGregor Dawson, professor of political economy at the University of Toronto. The position which he reinforces is to be found in an article in The Canadian Journal of Economics and Political Science for August, 1946. He says in part:

The cabinet must therefore introduce and sponsor all measures to spend or to raise money; and as any proposed amendment which would endeavour to diminish a tax or an expenditure contrary to the cabinet's wishes would be treated as a vote of lack of confidence, its control over finance is not likely to be seriously threatened.

So we have it from this acknowledged constitutional expert that a vote like last Monday night's vote can be treated, by implication, as a vote of non-confidence. He fortifies that position by saying on page 265:

Thus if a cabinet is defeated on any of its measures or on a vote of censure by the house, one of two consequences must ensue: either the cabinet must be changed so that the commons can obtain an executive which will give it the leadership it desires, or the commons can obtain an executive which will give it the leadership it desires, or the commons must itself be changed to provide the cabinet with the support to which it is entitled if it is to remain in office. One of two courses of action are thus available following a cabinet's defeat: the resignation of the cabinet, or the dissolution of the house; the one gives the house a new cabinet, the other gives the cabinet a new house.

That is the constitutional position, sir, and this government is flying in the teeth of that position. We have a government whose major policy is to cling to office. The Prime Minister on Friday gave us the spectacle of a man clinging to office like a drunken man clinging to a sinking spar. All the others were clinging with him. Their major financial policy was defeated, rejected and repudiated by parliament last Monday night but they are prepared to swallow that. They will swallow anything as long as they can stay in office.

Mr. Starr: It turns one's stomach.

Mr. Nielsen: Our stomachs and the stomachs of the people of this nation are not that strong. One can understand the government's desperate desire to stay on. They have made such a mess of things. They are terrified of what a new government would uncover. A cursory reading of the Auditor General's report reveals the existence of skeletons in the government's closets, skeletons of such dimensions that their existence must be a waking nightmare to hon. gentlemen on the treasury benches.

This government is living on borrowed time and all that we on this side can do is close its eyes. It has forfeited the right to occupy the treasury benches. It is a bankrupt government, politically and economically. It is a government which will go to any lengths to stay in power because so bad is its situation that it must go to those lengths. For the first time this government's budget has been rejected.

I ask hon. members to reflect coolly and sensibly on what the Prime Minister said on national television and in this house and what the Minister of Finance said. They said that the defeat was a fluke and that "somehow we have got to raise $475 million." That was the statement we heard on television last night. This government's fiscal policy was rejected last Monday night and now the government has the utter gall to inform the Canadian public and this chamber that though the income tax measure was rejected the government will try to go ahead and somehow accomplish the objectives it had in view originally.

When the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Gordon) was minister of finance his budget of 1963 was rejected by business, by parliament and then by his colleagues. His colleagues were the last to know. That reminds me of a television commercial—"even his best friends would not tell him." Nevertheless, though the budget was repudiated the minister, as will be recalled, was retained. Thus, at the outset of its term in office this government demonstrated its ability to make constitutional history. If this sort of thing happened at Westminster the minister concerned would be out immediately. And so it should be here, by all yardsticks. So it should be with the present Minister of Finance. His policy has been rejected and repudiated in no uncertain fashion and there is only one course open for him under proper constitutional practice.

The former minister of finance was cast out by the Privy Council largely because of his unyielding opposition to the Rockefellers and the Mercantile Bank. His successor was more amenable. The government once again is attempting to make constitutional history. The very foundation of its budgetary policy, the 5 per cent surcharge, was rejected but still the government insists on clinging to office.

Mr. Woolliams: And on collecting the tax.

Mr. Nielsen: And on collecting the tax. I now wish to say something about the illegality of that tax. At page 447 of his work Dicey says:

> Then, again, though most of the taxes would still come into the exchequer, large portions of the revenues would cease to be legally due and could not be legally collected—

• (4:20 p.m.)

This is the consequence of the defeat of a tax measure.

> —whilst every official who acted as collector would expose himself to actions or prosecutions. The part, moreover, of the revenue which came in could not be legally applied to the purposes of the government. If the ministery laid hold of the revenue they would find it difficult to avoid breaches of definite laws which would compel them to appear before the courts.

Dicey goes on at length to explain the illegality of a proposed tax after the defeat of such a measure. I maintain that this tax has been illegal since the beginning of the year and if the government attempts to use it for any of its purposes such an act will be an illegal act and every official who aids and abets in the improper application of that revenue is also legally responsible.

When one thinks of a government in the position in which the present government finds itself, one is irresistably reminded of that species of the animal kingdom which clings to one position, upside down. I think it is called a three-toed sloth. It is an animal which, like this government, prefers to be in an upside down position and whose every instinct, again like this government, is to cling to the end of the limb. This is the Pearson government. They cling, they continue to cling, and they produce nothing. Now, however, they will somehow be obliged to produce something like $475 million to carry out their riotous and extravagant spending proclivities.

Leaving aside the constitutional question for the moment, for there is no way, I suppose, of forcing an obnoxious tenant to vacate after the lease has run out, I firmly believe that parliament reached its finest hour the other night when it told this high-spending government it would not agree to force on Canadians a totally unnecessary 5 per cent increase in taxation. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) put the position of this party clearly and succinctly. I might say there are many contrasts between the leader of this party and the Prime Minister. The speech which my hon. friend opposite delivered last Friday was factual, honest and truthful.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nielsen: When the house took the action it did on Monday night it was speaking as an institution representative of the people. It had a right to take the action it did. It spoke on behalf of all Canadians. It said to the government: This is the end of the road.

To attempt now to undo by indirect means what the government dare not do directly is the height of irresponsibility.

They talk about trickery. What about this motion? If it is not trickery, what is trickery? Here is a motion which casts a slur upon parliament, a motion which reflects upon a vote of this house, tries to limit its effects, get the government off the hook and introduces a new definition of the word "confidence" as used constitutionally. Both directly and indirectly the motion reflects on parliament's actions.

Let it not be forgotten that these arguments could have been raised as points of order last Friday morning. We did not wish to impede the progress of the business of the house. We on this side took, almost unanimously, the responsible stand that we wished to get the matter settled, and get it settled we will. Nevertheless, the facts have to be made known. The Prime Minister said last night in the course of a national television broadcast that "the black headline of today is on page 37 next week." That is what he hopes. He hopes the Canadian people will continue to be bamboozled by those who irresponsibly disregard the constitutional position.

We now have a government which is telling parliament what to think, attempting to define what is and what is not a vote of confidence. The house voted that it did not have confidence in the government's policy. Now the government brings in a motion which in effect says: Oh, yes, you did. Those who are prepared to accept this advice are writing a final chapter to the authority of parliament and to parliamentary control of the executive by the people of this country. That is the position in which they find themselves, and it is a totally untenable one constitutionally.

The question is now before the jury, and while the jury may reject it because one or two of them have been influenced, there is always the court of appeal. The people of this country will decide whether this shabby and shoddy tactic by a discredited government which has lost the confidence of this house will be sufficient to get it back in office.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Steven Otto (York East): Mr. Speaker, I think I have heard some of the best legal arguments both for and against this motion, arguments as good as could be put forward by any competent Philadelphia lawyer. And I dare say further arguments could be advanced, one way or the other. But what it all boils down to is this. There is no doubt that so far as that vote was concerned the government was defeated.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Otto: That is so according to the constitutional traditions, customs and usages at present. I wish to point out, however, that from time to time many motions and resolutions have been put forward by private members indicating a desire to institute reforms in this connection and provide for a better definition of "confidence" and "non-confidence" in parliamentary terms.

I believe that the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) grasped the situation quite correctly when he indicated that despite the customs and usages of the past the people of Canada today were not in a mood to accept another election.

An hon. Member: After the event.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Change the rules in the middle of the game.

Mr. Otto: I do not pay much attention to the argument that failure to pass the finance bill or something like it would mean fiscal ruin for the country. It is not a relevant argument. Nor does it matter whether the vote was contrived by trickery. In my opinion the Prime Minister very accurately grasped the mood of the people of Canada and I believe he made the proper decision. However, again I am taking the Prime Minister at his word when he said he was going to place a vote of confidence in his administration before the house. Then he continued by saying he felt the Canadian people wanted the government to continue in office, hold a convention to pick a new leader, have a new government, and then it would be up to the new prime minister to pick an election date.

If that is the motion then I say there are two parts to it. The first question is whether the present administration up to this moment deserves a vote of confidence, and the second question is whether a future government will deserve a vote of confidence. Those are two entirely separate questions.

Dealing with the first question of whether or not this administration deserves a vote of confidence, specifically my vote of confidence, I wish to point out that despite what may have been said I am not immune to party discipline and if I thought for a moment that this government was as close as it should be to the Liberal party and Liberal party policy, my answer would have been yes. I do not deny that this government has introduced many good measures, but I put it to the treasury benches that the Liberal party is synonymous with reform. They mean one and exactly the same thing. Liberalism is reform. The question then is whether this has been a reform government. As I say, some of the measures that the government put forward were very good. But with respect to some measures in the Liberal policy platform that were put forward the kindest thing that could be said about them was that they were improperly put forward, badly administered, and the results were not what they should have been. As one example I mention the 10,000 scholarships which were part of the Liberal platform in the 1962 election campaign. That was a very simple program. That program could have been easily introduced but instead we got into a mixture of banking, scholarships and university subsidies. This has resulted in very bad administration of both the scholarship plan and the banking plan, so that today very few people can really take advantage of the program and some of those who do abuse it. As a result we have allowed university students to graduate with a $5,000 debt which, with another $5,000 debt by way of a dowry for their brides, makes a total of $10,000 they have to pay to the banks at a time when their earnings are not the highest. Thus it is no wonder that United States companies find it possible to entice them to jobs with higher salaries in the United States. This is an example of a good idea lacking that bit of professionalism that would have made it workable.

The Canada Pension Plan is a good plan. It was agreed to by all. Nevertheless among the older people of this nation it is creating two classes, those who come under the plan and those who do not. They are about equal in numbers. Some are going to get an accelerated pension but others will not because they were too old to qualify when the plan started. I say it would not have been too difficult to devise a plan that would have covered everyone.

Then there is the medicare plan, another policy of the Liberal party, but for some reason those Liberals who so strongly supported the medicare plan are now against it. Daily I receive letters from well known Liberals, people who originally supported this plan and who are now wondering whether it is really a good thing.

[Mr. Otto.]

I know where the Liberal party stands on foreign ownership. The Liberal party has never been in doubt. The Liberal party is greatly concerned about the fact that some 67 per cent of our industrial destiny is in the hands of people who are not Canadians. It is also concerned about the more than a billion dollars worth of equity, profits and dividends leaving this country. It is concerned because this money could be devoted to new capital investment. But what are we going to do with the proposed Canada development corporation? What has happened to it? It is not enough, so far as Liberals are concerned, merely to re-establish the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Gordon), who first proposed the Canada development corporation, as a member of the cabinet.

Labour relations have always been one of the main features of Liberalism. Most members of the Liberal party are concerned that now should be the time to introduce great reforms that would put an end to work stoppages merely because of labour disputes. Some time ago the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) spoke in Montreal and said that labour relations were a matter of great concern. He said that surely the government should tackle this problem to see if some solution could be reached by which production would continue so that our gross national product would increase and we could afford all the social measures that we have introduced. Imagine my surprise when I read reports to the effect that when one of the present ministers indicated he fully supported the principle of fiscal responsibility the government looked with great awe upon his statement and told him, "Now, be careful; you have said something that is not quite in keeping with our Liberal policy." Yet fiscal responsibility has always been part of the Liberal party platform.

With respect to financial reforms I do not say that all the recommendations of the Carter commission should be adopted but I do say that a great many Liberals feel it is time for reforms to the whole tax structure. But what have we done?

Housing is a classic example. It has always been one of the main features of Liberalism that the party sincerely believed every Canadian should be entitled to purchase a home of his own. I need not go further and tell you what has happened to our housing policy, if we have a housing policy. But I question whether it was really a Liberal minister who said in public that Canadians have to get accustomed to the idea of living in apartment houses and that they will never be able to own their own homes. I cannot imagine that this is Liberalism. Therefore, I have very grave doubt whether this government truly represents the Liberal party of which I am a member.

I am not saying that all these reforms could have been undertaken immediately, but over a period of five years we have had lots of time to tackle the problems. I know that all Liberals are anxious to bring about reform and in fact have a zeal for it, but it seems we have a government that will accept reform only at gunpoint. I think Liberals want reform in giant strides and not in the mincing steps that this government seems to take.

Let me put the whole matter of reform or lack of reform in miniature. Back in 1962 I pointed out the problem of our page boys. I am not going to delve into it at length now because all of us are aware of it, but it is a fact that we have 17 page boys, each of whom is a drop-out from school. They do not attend school. Our party says that education is the most important thing. Yet nothing or almost nothing has been done about this problem except for the Speaker's constant urging on it. In short, the government has not seen fit to tackle this problem and we are still faced with it.

There is a difference between zeal for reform and a keen plan for reform. Were I faced with the problem of voting confidence at the present time in this government on its record I doubt that I could. In the last few months I have been convinced that we have sincere and keen reformers in this party, some of whom are anxious to take over the leadership. We have seen some very good legislation brought forward. In all fairness hon. gentlemen opposite and on this side must admit that some of the measures introduced and to be introduced contain a spirit of reform which one might describe as embodying giant steps. Consequently I must move to the third proposition put forward by the Prime Minister. He suggested we should allow this government to continue until a new leader is elected and a new government appointed. I hope at that time we will have what I would consider a real Liberal government, and I am satisfied that we have good hopes in this regard.

There is one other matter relating to the administration that bothers me. I have in mind the whole question of two Canadas and national unity. We all realize there is a great problem which must be solved and that involved in the answer is bilingualism. Bilingualism could be introduced very effectively and well, but I cannot forgive the government for passing on this problem to a royal commission not so much on the basis of language as on the basis of race. The initial words of the reference to the commission emphasized the two founding races. Any government should have known that this whole problem also involves Canadians who are of neither French nor English origin. These people have had enough of race problems and want no part of this one. The difficulty today is no longer one of bilingualism or biculturalism but rather one involving race. I hope the next leader of the Liberal government will face this issue and I hope that the Liberal party will have the courage to say it has had enough of racial division. There is no such thing as unity through division. We have a great challenge to meet today in the nation, and I hope the new Liberal government under the new leader will concentrate on this problem by forgetting about division.

None of the leaders or potential leaders of this party has satisfied me that he is attuned to this problem. For this reason I will reserve my decision and vote for the government on this motion. I believe there is an opportunity for true Liberalism and a true Liberal government, but I still have to be convinced that a future Liberal government will be a true Liberal government. My vote today is not a vote for the same type of administration.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, as other members of this party have mentioned, I trust this issue can be resolved today. I wish to rise in explanation of my position before the vote is taken. It is somewhat different from the position taken by my party colleagues. Our party practices democratic principles. Any member has the right to vote according to his conscience provided he explains that his vote is based purely on a personal opinion and does not represent party policy. This has been done by several members of this party on a number of occasions. I well remember that when the former government of Right Hon. John Diefenbaker was defeated there were two of us in this party who voted for the maintenance of that government on the evening it was defeated, in opposition to a caucus decision.

My remarks are not related to party policy or programs but rather to tactics. In my opinion the matter before us has nothing to do with party programming or general policy but involves a question of strategy or generalship in the art of political warfare. That is what we are engaged in at the present time.

No one can condone the mismanagement of the present government. I fully realize we cannot blame this government for all the circles of inflation. All the bankers of the North American continent know that this inflationary period is primarily the result of the war in Viet Nam. The United States economy is carrying on in a war-oriented atmosphere without those controls which were available during the two previous wars in which the United States fought. As I see the present situation it is one in which tactics are being used to persuade the Canadian people that the government should be defeated now.

There is a great deal about this situation which concerns me, and I am treating this matter of a strictly non-partisan basis. Strong views are held in respect of both sides of this question. As a member who has had continuous service in this house since 1945 I have considered this question carefully and have come to the firm conviction that an immediate dissolution of parliament would not be in the best interests of this country or the Canadian people. It was with pleasure that I noted in the last few days a partial restoration of the spirit of fair play and the sense of humour which are usual in this house. I suppose it is correct to say that the steam has gone out of this debate, since everyone now knows the government will be sustained.

I have a great deal of respect for the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and I was interested to hear him say, "In the name of God, go". I believe he was quoting Cromwell but he did not carry this to its logical conclusion. When Cromwell was telling the government to go he was almost threatening assassination if they did not go. I am sure the Leader of the Opposition did not mean that.

My position is simply this. The first necessity is for the government to deal as soon as possible with important and urgent legislation of direct concern to the people, such as revisions to the National Housing Act and amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act to increase benefits to the unemployed. I have received a number of telephone calls in this regard from union members. Another important matter involves amendments to the Patent Act and the Trade Marks Act. A number of consumers are very concerned in this regard and are anxious to see this bill go through because of potential reductions in the price of drugs in this country following the passage of this legislation introduced by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Turner).

Many people are very interested in the supplementary estimates which will provide for the payment of a 15 per cent increase in disability pensions from the first of this year. I have received a good number of telegrams and telephone calls about that matter and I want to tell the house what I told my boys in Kootenay West. I said: "As far as I am concerned, you can depend on me."

Then there are the amendments to the Criminal Code, if it is possible to deal with those before an adjournment. A number of people are concerned about that matter.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): What about Bill C-186?

Mr. Herridge: I think that will disappear this session. A number of people who have talked to me are very concerned about amendments to various sections of the Criminal Code. They are very much in favour of the general spirit and principle of the amendments to the Criminal Code but in a few cases amendments were suggested by rod and gun clubs, wildlife federations and so on. Suggestions have also been made to me in respect of the lotteries section of the Criminal Code. However, in each case these people emphasized their support for the general principle of the amendments to the code.

I believe we must provide time for the Liberal party to select a new leader before an election campaign if we are not to have complete chaos in this country. In my opinion, to run a leadership race and an election campaign at the same time would make a farce of the voters' right to assess the qualities of the new Liberal leader before the people of Canada go to the polls. As a result of telephone calls, telegrams, letters and conversations I have had with a number of people I find that this opinion is held by many Canadians. Not all the people know all the facts but I have had enough information from people I represent, from people in British Columbia and people in other provinces, to indicate that they support this point of view.

For instance, I have had telegrams and telephone calls from organizations such as the Fellowship of Reconciliation which are very concerned about international affairs. I have had telephone calls from ladies interested in the Voice of Women. I have had telephone calls from sections of the New Democratic party who are of the opinion that the Leader of the Opposition should have the opportunity to outline in the house the foreign policy of his party prior to an election. These people are concerned about the war in Viet Nam. They are concerned about the policy his party would pursue in connection with NATO, NORAD and other international affairs. They believe that the Leader of the Opposition should have the opportunity to place on the record of the house the policy of his party in international affairs.

I have had telephone calls from persons who are very concerned that the bill increasing benefits for the unemployed should pass as soon as possible. I think we are pretty well along with that legislation. I have had telegrams from veterans to the effect that the defeat of the government at this time will mean they will not receive the 15 per cent increase in pensions. Some of them mention that this would be disastrous to many veterans, widows and their children. I assume, naturally, that any government that was elected would restore the 15 per cent increase but these men would have to wait until possibly late this fall, if there were an election in the near future, before they would receive the increase. A great number of veterans are looking forward to receiving the increase on April 1 next, retroactive to January 1 of this year.

I have had conversations with consumer groups who are looking forward to the early passage of the bill aimed at reducing the price of drugs. They are very interested in this matter. I received a telegram from the city of Trail signed by 29 people, a number of them well known Conservatives, some members of the Social Credit party and some members of this party.

An hon. Member: No Liberals?

Mr. Herridge: I did not see the names of any Liberals on the telegram—not that I would know them, anyway. The telegram urges members of parliament to get back to conducting the business of the nation as mature and responsible citizens. I have seen a telegram from Regina which reads as follows:

> Disagree with Conservative and N.D.P. position on confidence motion. Is discrediting parliament. Monday night defeat was unfortunate mistake but should not force unwanted undesirable election through procedural technicalities. Be fair. Allow Liberals choose new leader then force election if considered desirable. We are N.D.P.
> Clare V. Powell
> Barrett D. Halderman

In fairness I must say that I received a telegram from one provincial section of my riding urging me not to abstain from voting non-confidence in the Liberals, but when I get home they will understand the reason for my taking this position today. In fact they told me: "We know, anyway, that whatever you do it will be right, Bert."

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Herridge: I must say that I have also received a good number of messages and telegrams from the rest of the riding to the contrary.

Mr. Fane: Did you have a visit from Paul Martin, too?

Mr. Herridge: No, Mr. Martin is not in the habit of visiting my office.

An hon. Member: How about the Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh)?

Mr. Herridge: No, the Secretary of State has not been to my office.

Miss LaMarsh: Lately.

Mr. Herridge: No undue influence at all has been brought to bear on me. I have nothing to gain from taking this position. I am simply taking an objective point of view with respect to a serious situation that faces the Canadian people. I realize and respect the position taken by the Progressive Conservatives. I respect the opinion of my colleagues. They take their position as a result of firm convictions that the best thing to do is turn this government out immediately.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I have brought to the attention of the house some of the facts that have been drawn to my attention by various means of communication. I urge that these facts be given serious consideration. If we were to have an election at this time the Canadian people would be placed in the position where the new leader of the Liberal party would not have had the opportunity to announce his policy and program before the election. In addition, the new leader of the Progressive Conservative party would not have had an opportunity to place the program of his party, particularly with respect to international affairs, on the record of this house. I have received telegrams and messages from Toronto, Vancouver and Montreal on this issue. I urge that when this debate is concluded the leader of the official opposition place his party's policy on the record of this house so that the Canadian people will have an opportunity to discuss it.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, after assessing the situation from all angles and in a strictly non-partisan and statesmanlike manner, as a representative of the people not only of Kootenay West but of Canada and not as a delegate but as a person who has to use his own judgment as a result of assessing the facts, I intend to let my conscience guide me when the vote is taken.

[Translation]

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, taking the floor this afternoon my first impulsion would be to reply to the injurious, unintelligent and unfair remarks made earlier by the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) about the report of the Laurendeau-Dunton commission. I even think that it would be taxing the patience of the house to try to talk to deaf people who do not want to hear and to open the eyes of those who do not want to see the facts. I simply suggest that I am one of those who are shocked to see that the hon. member for York East and I might add, the hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan) insist on remaining in the Liberal party when they should sit with the independents to complete the spectrum of independentists of all the parties and also possibly give me the opportunity to bawl them out to my heart's content from morning till night.

Mr. Speaker, even if I am used to making my remarks in my mother tongue, this afternoon in order to answer the hon. member for York East in a more objective way and to show that, in my province, we are not narrow-minded, I shall make my remarks in English, in the hope that my English-speaking colleagues, who can do the same—and there is a good number of them who can—will have the opportunity to show the same broadmindedness by expressing their faith concerning bilingualism in Canada.

• (5:00 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I am one of those who are inclined to believe that enough has been said in this debate. However, it might also be appropriate at this time to present a cold-blooded and independent appraisal of the situation. If I were a Liberal this afternoon I would be inclined to ask myself whether my face is red after the bungling of last Monday, the loose strategy and the demonstration of overconfidence which the Liberals have shown in thinking that members of this house will always vote with the government because none of them is anxious to vote for an election.

Perhaps I should also ask whether my face is red because I was absent from the house on Monday night, although I must say that I had a good reason, namely, that a minister of the crown was present in my riding on that day and we in that part of the country have a tradition of hospitality. Whenever a V.I.P. comes we try to be there to extend to him our warmest hospitality. Whenever a minister of the crown or a leader of any party in the house honours us by coming to my home town I believe it is my duty to greet him there in the name of my constituents. I do not have to apologize for not being here last Monday because I think my record of attendance can be compared with that of anyone in the house. Had I been in the house on that day I would have voted against the 5 per cent increase in the income tax for reasons which I will explain at some other time.

There is another explanation I should like to give. I notice that several times newspapermen have labelled me as Liberal-Independent or Independent Liberal. I would like to remind them that I ran as a straight Independent. They might be surprised to learn this because I support the Liberal government most of the time. The reason is that this is what my constituents have asked me to do. If the Conservatives were in power I would do the same, assuming of course that they would not blunder as the Liberals have.

I have not been sent here to oppose the government. My constituents realize that we are living in critical days. They feel that now is the time to co-operate. If they had been certain that the Liberals or the Conservatives would win in the last election they would have asked me to stand with the winning party, but since they know this government is a minority government they asked me to try to co-operate with those who have been elected. When unacceptable measures are brought in such as the 5 per cent increase in income tax, my constituents ask me to vote against them. In this case I had good reason to do so.

I am not necessarily a member of the opposition. Let me rather say that I am a member of the co-operation party, and I think I am the only member of this party in this part of the house, even though that may seem like boasting.

I should now like to speak about what happened last Monday night. Some of our colleagues have demonstrated by legal arguments and citations that the vote last Monday was a vote of confidence. Others have tried to prove to us that it was not. Whenever there is a difference of opinion and arguments are presented by men as serious as those whom we have heard in the house, I say that I think the house is master of its own procedure and government supporters are well justified in asking that a vote be taken and a decision made regardless of whether or not the previous vote was one of confidence. I think that precedents are not sufficient to settle the case when there are so many differences of opinion. We should vote on this matter and see whether or not the majority of the house has confidence in the government. I think the Prime Minister is right in asking for the clearcut opinion of the house.

It is my personal belief that the vote last Monday night was a vote against the increase in the income tax. It was a vote in support of what I would call the forgotten man who does not care a hoot about an election now but is desperate about the rise in taxes. A certain diplomat referred to the forgotten man in this way:

> The forgotten man (who) is delving away in patient industry, supporting his family, paying his taxes, casting his votes, supporting the church and school, reading his newspaper and cheering for the politician of his admiration, but he is the only one for whom there is no provision in the great scramble and the big divide. Such is the forgotten man. He works, he votes, generally he prays—but he always pays—yes, above all he pays.

This is the man who needs to be protected under the circumstances. I think that the vote last Monday night was a vote against the increase in taxes. As Franklin D. Roosevelt said in a speech in 1932:

> Taxes are paid in the sweat of every man who labours...Our workers may never see a tax bill, but they pay. They pay in deductions of wages, in increased costs of what they may buy, or in unemployment throughout the land.

We have reached the point where increases in taxes should be stopped. I think the salaried people of our country are overtaxed and they are not happy to see their legislators vote for an increase, especially in the income tax. Tax money should be found somewhere else, and I will mention later one or two solutions.

When situations of the kind we face here arise in the house there are always some people who talk about scandals, crises and dissent among the parties. This must not be overdone. We live in a democracy, and even if occasionally we may appear to behave childishly this may be democracy at its best. For example, it has been said by numerous members of the press that the Liberals have lost the confidence of the Canadian people and that they are a weak government. It may be true that they are a weak government. We knew that the day after the election which resulted in a minority government. If the Conservatives had been in office they would also have been a weak government because, as we know, a minority government would have made them weak. However, let us say that the Liberals are trying to do their best under the circumstances, and let us say they are well supported by an opposition that is constructive most of the time, even if occasionally they think about the next election too much. I think the Conservatives are doing a decent job under the circumstances. Even if the Liberals made an awful blunder and engaged in a childish bungling of strategy last week, we must realize that this could have happened to anyone else, for such is human nature.

It has also been said that the Conservatives resorted to trickery. I do not believe that. I think the Conservatives have been doing their job. I am one of those who think that the leader of the Conservative party made a very fine statement when he said: "I am a patient man and I can wait for the verdict of the people." When he let us understand that his party would not resort to filibustering I believe he increased his prestige in the eyes of the Canadian people.

Some members have been blamed by the press and by some of our colleagues for what is considered by some to be a change of attitude. I believe an intelligent human being is always entitled to think about his attitude and, in view of new information, change his mind. The French have a saying that only fools do not change their minds. I am not one of those, therefore, who wish to blame the Creditiste members for changing their minds. I believe that rushing into an election on an issue like the 5 per cent increase in taxes would have made their position very good, perhaps better than the position of the Liberals. I believe the Creditiste members have thought of the good of the Canadian people. They have assessed all of the circumstances and made up their minds. I do not believe they deserve the condemnation of some of my colleagues and the press.

I am reminded of the fact that the press printed the names of the members who were not present. I believe there were 98 of them. The press has been severe in its criticism of absent members but no mention was made of the reason some of them were absent. A good many of our colleagues were on official business. This should have been stated. Some were in their ridings taking care of the needs of their constituents.

There are a few members, of course, who are often absent from the house, but it is the business of the whips and the leaders of the parties to take care of them. I do not believe there should be a general condemnation of all the members who were not here on Monday night. The other day in this house the leader of the Ralliement de Créditistes said: "I cannot vote against the government because I do not trust the Conservatives any more than I trust the Liberals." Personally, I would put it another way. I trust the two major parties and their leaders equally but I am one of those who feel that rushing into an election now would not be good, even for the Conservatives. What is the use of rushing into an election? We should give the Liberals a chance to get organized and then we can ascertain if there is any chance of having a government with a substantial majority. This is not the time for an election. During the week end I consulted with my constituents, and they belong to all the different parties. They indicated that a party like the Liberal party is entitled to go through a convention and choose its new leader. This is a democratic process and is part of our democratic system.

The international situtation is also very complicated. This is one reason I would not like to be rushed into an election. There are many reasons which justify us in supporting the government. The economy of the country is in a critical situation, and we are not alone in this. Many countries in the world have sick economies. Our economy needs special care at this time. My constituents were also worried about the cost of an election and about the stagnation of business that occurs during an election. They were thinking also of the time this house would lose and of the many things with which we should occupy ourselves. I believe that the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) mentioned this fact a minute ago. I want to congratulate him. He is a good independent, and I am waiting for the day when he will come and sit with us. I am reminded of the remarks made by a mid-nineteenth century politician, Mr. Macaulay:

> Timid and interested politicians think much more about the security of their seats (or their party) than about the security of the country.

My people are convinced also that if we have an election now the result will be a minority government. So what is the use of going through all that expense? Let us wait until the major parties are properly organized and then the independents and other parties will watch the big struggle. We will have a lot of fun. I pray that we are not charged amusement tax for that fun. We have a lot of work to do now so this is not the time for an election. I would remind the house of what Abraham Lincoln said, that you do not swap horses in midstream; you wait until the river is crossed.

I believe the first thing we should do is to amend the procedure of the house so that when there is a confidence vote members will have notice of it. They will know what they are voting for. This should have been done by the Conservatives or the Liberals long ago. We have just lived through a situation through which we should not have had to live. I have a suggestion for the Liberals. Instead of raising taxes on the little people, why not take a second and a third look to see if you cannot cut expenditures, to see if you cannot cut the defence budget by a few hundred million? This is the time to live within our means. This is not the time to spend, spend.

We should realize that taxes are high, as are interest rates. The banks are already charging 7.5 per cent and 9 per cent is being charged on some mortgages. I believe it is high time expenditures were cut before our people go bankrupt. I feel we should postpone an election until later this year. I am one of those who believe we should have an election this year but not at this time. This is a time for action, not for an election. If we called an election we would be acting like irresponsible politicians. Our reputation across this country is not too good. There is no point in closing our eyes to this fact. I believe it is high time we improved our reputation and acted as responsible politicians. If we do not there will be more people writing as Charles Edison did in 1948:

> Some people put themselves above politics saying, "Politics is dirty", or "I have no patience with politics." In the name of all that's American (Democratic) how can any good citizen feel superior to politics? We achieved our independence by politics. We freed the slaves by politics. We are taxed by politics. Our business flourishes or withers by politics.

If we have bad reputations as politicians, perhaps it is because we have indulged too much in the sport of childish quarrels. I want to repeat that the leader of the official opposition has acted in a way that will increase their prestige because he refused to let some of his members engage in a filibuster. I believe this was the right thing to do.

I want to say that I will vote for this motion. I do not do so because I believe this government is perfect. However, I do not think another government would be any closer to perfection, so what is the use of changing? As I said, I have consulted my people. I am convinced this is a time for action and not a time for an election. I repeat that we should, without delay, amend our procedure, and we should try to cut expenditures instead of increasing taxes. Then we can go into an election some time toward the end of this year. I hope that after that election all my present colleagues will return.

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the hon. member for Trois-Rivières?

Mr. Mongrain: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Valade: Is not the hon. member for Trois-Rivières fully aware of the fact that the Conservative party never asked for elections at this time of the year, but for the resignation of the government which proved itself unfit to manage the nation's business? We never spoke of elections. There are certainly other possibilities, and the hon. member for Trois-Rivières will agree on that.

Mr. Mongrain: I would like to tell my good friend and colleague for Sainte-Marie (Mr. Valade) that his question is as insidious as certain interventions of his on television the other day and that he is misrepresenting the problem.

It may be that no one said it clearly in the riding of Sainte-Marie, but in certain quarters people have said: It is time for you to go. For instance, one English politician was quoted as saying, "For goodness sake, go". What did that mean?

Mr. Speaker, we must not play on words. All those who can count to 130, 135, know full well that a 90- or 91-member party could not administer the country very long; I can hardly see a coalition government made up of the New Democrats and Ralliement des Créditistes. As for the Independents, I can see neither of the three in that government. It would not be long before that government would be defeated. I am convinced that my friend from Sainte-Marie is far more intelligent than he lets on.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I should like to tell the hon. member for Trois-Rivières that he is as intelligent as I thought him to be.

[English]

Mr. Terence Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to take part in this debate. I must say I am glad I did not have to speak on Friday afternoon. The leader of our party did such a tremendous job that I would have found it very difficult to follow him at that time. Perhaps I am exaggerating when I say it was one of the finest performances I have seen in the house because there was a very bad performance to contrast it with which perhaps made it look better than it really was. The whipping that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) gave the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) on Friday had to be seen and heard to be believed. I suppose it is only to be expected that one's job is a little easier when one has a good case. Certainly the Prime Minister had a very tough job trying to put forward what can only be described, even by his friends, as a very bad case presented with his usual mixture of arrogance and evasion.

On coming into the house this afternoon I heard a story connected with the old familiar cry of trickery or that the government was beaten by a fluke. It goes something like this, Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition was unfair in his battle tactics; the Prime Minister knew he was going to have a battle but he did not realize that the Leader of the Opposition was going to use that most suitable of parliamentary weapons, the sword of truth. This was considered unfair tactics because the Prime Minister is a complete stranger to that weapon and therefore felt that he was going into battle unarmed.

I understand the Prime Minister thinks it is only fair that the decision should be based on the best two out of three. Rather than trying to settle the matter all by himself he is waiting until one of his champions in the leadership race takes over the battle. As I understand it this is going to be much delayed, because there seems to be a dearth of members on that side who have any familiarity with the weapon of truth. On occasion we in this house are accustomed to observing people who have a little difficulty in getting close to the truth. Some seem to find the idea repugnant and others just cannot find the idea.

There are times, Mr. Speaker, when some of us have to bend the truth a little. For example, the other day the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees), when replying to a question from the Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh), proved that he sometimes has to bend the truth to remain a gentleman. I wish we could find such an honourable excuse for the Prime Minister.

I thought the most remarkable thing about the speech of the Prime Minister was the way he set out the case for the government by first stating what he said we had alleged our position to be. Since the easiest case to beat down is not the real position of your opponent but the position that you wish he would take, the Prime Minister began by misstating the position of the opposition. Reference to what the Prime Minister said, as found in Hansard, and to what the leader of our party said indicates that there is no basis for the Prime Minister's allegations.

Since the Prime Minister has misstated our position, Mr. Speaker, as a lawyer I ask myself why. When juries all over the world hear cases in court and listen to witnesses they soon find that one of the surest guides to which party is to be believed or to which piece of evidence is to be considered reliable is to determine who it is who uses the truth as much as possible. Whenever somebody makes a misstatement or a misquotation or distorts the facts, then automatically it is assumed that the truth is not going to help their case. In this particular situation the Prime Minister did not put forward the truth when talking about the position we had taken. Neither did he give us the whole truth when he quoted and referred to the authorities and to what the true position is. I think his argument that the vote was a snap vote, a trick and so on was very well dealt with by my leader.

I have been a member of this house for about ten years, and I think I can say that the course of business is pretty well set out.

[Mr. Nugent.]

Certainly I see nothing unusual in the manner in which the bill was brought on last week. The bill had been debated in the normal course of events. The government had announced when it would be taken up. The bill was debated on Thursday, February 15, but was not taken up on the Friday by agreement because the minister was going to be away. All members were aware that it would be taken up again on the Monday. Things followed their usual course on the Monday with resistance to the bill always present, stiffening all the time. Finally the formal vote was taken in the evening and the government was defeated.

I believe that the position the Prime Minister set out should be put on the record. I think I should illustrate exactly the sort of tactics used by the Prime Minister so we can examine just how much faith the Prime Minister has in his own arguments. I say this because I hope to show it is sheer presumption on the part of the Prime Minister to ask anybody to support the position of the government. As reported on page 6922 of Hansard for Friday last the Prime Minister said:

> They claimed—

He was speaking of the opposition.

> —and I am not quarrelling with their claim; I am putting their position—that parliament could do nothing until the government resigned or there was a dissolution, except perhaps to discuss opposition criticism of the Prime Minister.

The situation, Mr. Speaker, is simply this. No one made any such allegation. No one with knowledge of parliamentary procedure would argue that those were the only two possibilities. I think this is the nub of the difficulty, and it is where I have trouble understanding the position of those who would support the government in their present course of conduct. The bill in question was taken up in the normal way. It has always been my understanding during my ten years here that a vote on an important money bill is automatically a vote of confidence. Bills which the government lays stress on because they are important to its program are always matters of confidence. From time to time minor bills which are not essential to the government's program are defeated, and such a defeat is not considered a matter of confidence. The importance of bills varies and sometimes it is difficult to know whether a bill is or is not a matter of confidence. Nevertheless, a reliable guide is to look at what has been done with respect to matters of confidence in the past.

We all know that a bill that is important to the government becomes a matter of confidence. That the passing of such a bill implies confidence is understood by the government and opposition alike. That has always been understood in regard to bills such as the one that was defeated last Monday night. That defeat implied lack of confidence. The Prime Minister misstated the position of the government and misrepresented what happened, since he tried to establish an entirely new basis under which our parliament ought to operate.

The hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) said that the country is not ready for an election and that no election ought to be called. The Prime Minister, to give the nub of his argument, said that the outcome of the vote will determine if there shall be an election. I submit that our constitution, as we understand it, says that on the defeat of a government the Governor General may call on someone other than the Prime Minister to form a government if the defeated Prime Minister asks him to do so. If the new government fails to pass the test of its first vote of confidence the Prime Minister may not have the right to call an election, but there is no doubt that he has that right after he has passed his first test. Only the Prime Minister is entitled to advise His Excellency that there shall be an election, or the Prime Minister can advise, and I think His Excellency is bound to follow such advice, that someone else should head that government which has been defeated, or the Prime Minister can recommend that someone else head a government.

There is no doubt that this government has to resign, but for the Prime Minister to suggest that the resignation of his government would mean an automatic election is to distort the truth and to hide the facts. He tried to mislead certain members of the house into a panic vote to support his government. He did not tell them squarely that failure to support his government would not necessarily lead to an election. As I say, the Prime Minister can resign and call an election, or he can resign and recommend to His Excellency that someone else, one of his cabinet ministers or someone he likes, head the government. On that recommendation His Excellency would appoint a Prime Minister who could form a government and ask this house for a vote of confidence. If he got it he could carry on.

Another solution might be for the Prime Minister to prorogue the session. But the Prime Minister has said: "No, we will have a vote of confidence; we will disregard the constitutional rights by which we have been governed and we will disregard what constitutes a vote of confidence. We will do the most violence that has been done to parliament in Canadian constitutional history, and all because I do not wish to resign." We are not being asked to consider this motion so as to avoid an election, as the Prime Minister says; we are doing this because the Prime Minister does not want to resign.

Many members have already demonstrated their concern about having an election. Having considered the grave step and heavy responsibility of fighting an election and having been told that the alternative to supporting the government is an election, some of them feel that they must go along with the government. But the alternative is simpler than that. The Prime Minister has already announced his retirement and his party is arranging for a leadership contest. It is not a case, therefore, of whether the Prime Minister remains in office with his administration but simply whether he goes a little earlier than he had originally anticipated. Looked at in that way the question becomes different.

The hon. member for York East says that he sees some ray of hope in the government's legislative program of the last three or four months and because he sees that ray of hope he thinks we ought not to fight an election. If the hon. member and some of his colleagues fear an election, as I suspect, they ought to remember that other alternatives remain open. The Prime Minister could resign a little earlier and one of his colleagues could take over and form a new administration. He could even start a new session almost at once, introduce his own taxation bill or a similar one and then prorogue. That solution is within the government's reach and it gives us an alternative to an election.

The Prime Minister argues that a vote of confidence is only a vote of confidence when the government says it is. He made the blanket assertion that the government decides when there is to be a vote of confidence. Actually he is saying that the government chooses what issues it deems to be issues of confidence. By asserting that an important money matter is not a matter of confidence he is saying in so many words that questions of confidence shall be chosen at the whim of the government, the consideration being whether the government can win the vote. That is what it amounts to and that is what he reduces it to.

By refusing to acknowledge its defeat on an important money bill the government makes it appear as if confidence has nothing to do with the importance of the matter being voted on. It asserts that a vote of confidence shall be taken only when the government considers it can win that vote. Also, the government can decide after the vote has been taken whether it was a vote of confidence.

This is the ridiculous extent to which the Prime Minister is asking parliament to go. This is what the Prime Minister is asking his supporters to do to parliament in order to keep him at the reins for just a little longer. The question now is not simply whether we intend to vote confidence in the government or face an election. The present course, if followed, will make a mockery of parliament and responsible government. In effect we shall be saying to the government: You can do what you like when you like and the only test of confidence will be whenever you say that a matter is to be a test of confidence.

If hon. members suggest I am going too far, let them read the Prime Minister's words as they are reported on page 6922 of Hansard in the second paragraph of the right hand column:

> We do agree, however, that the defeat on third reading of the income tax bill, while not involving automatic and obligatory resignation or dissolution, does put the issue of confidence into question and that this should be cleared up.

What he is saying is that it is not the nature of the bill which puts the issue of confidence into question. The Prime Minister tells us it is the defeat of the government which brings the matter of confidence into question. His suggestion that defeat on an important measures alone brings up the question of confidence is a simple answer to the question: What does the Prime Minister mean by a test which the government alone would apply? There is a method by which it should reach this decision. In the course of this debate a number of quotations have been put on record, some of them by the Prime Minister. I wish to illustrate the extent of the dishonesty, the deceit, which is being practised on this house by the Prime Minister in his desperate bid to hang on to office for another couple of weeks. As reported on page 6924 the Prime Minister quoted Dr. Eugene Forsey:

> There are certain habits of thought or feeling which we will have to change.

[Mr. Nugent.]

> The first is that any government defeat in the House of Commons necessarily means either the government's resignation or a fresh election. This is not so.

No one on this side has ever suggested it was so. Farther on the right hon. gentleman quoted the following:

> We shall certainly have to get rid of the notion that every defeat in the house means a fresh election.

At the risk of being repetitive but for the sake of emphasis I wish to sum up the situation in the house today as I see it. For years and years every important money measure has been understood to involve a question of confidence. One only had to look at the faces of the ministers opposite on Monday last to realize they knew the government had been defeated on a measure which brought the question of confidence into play. Other major measures are usually regarded as matters of confidence, though there are some which are not. This is the way in which parliament has worked, the way in which we have maintained responsible government.

These are not inconsequential matters. Not only parliament and our system of government depend on our maintaining this practice. The party system as we know it in this country has developed and is sustained because of this tradition. Every party, when campaigning, sets out the major planks in its platform. The ordinary voter has only these promises or intentions to consider when trying to distinguish between one party and another. When making up his mind whether a party should continue to be given a mandate or replaced, the question foremost in his mind is whether or not the objectives which were so stressed during the campaign have been carried out in legislation. I suggest it would be the ruin of the party system as we know it today if an issue upon which the confidence of the people had been won at the hustings were to be regarded later in parliament as one on which the question of confidence did not arise. How could such a system ever work? How could anyone think that the voters would ever tolerate it? Having made an issue the basis of their confidence, what would be their reaction to a government which said: We shall decide what is to be a matter of confidence; we shall sustain ourselves in office no matter what you may have thought when you voted us in and the test in parliament shall be on whatever basis we choose?

We are asked to put parliament in this ridiculous situation by a Prime Minister who is about to leave, whose time is limited, but who declines to do the honourable thing and depart a little earlier than he had intended. Apparently he has persuaded his followers to support him in this course of action. I hope that some of them will reconsider. The alternative is simple. The Prime Minister could appoint any one of a number of his cabinet members to be a caretaker prime minister.

I am enough of a politician to understand the reluctance to appoint a minister who is in the running for the party leadership. The Prime Minister might fear that with the reins of power once in that minister's hands he could not be dislodged, and perhaps it would not be the most advisable way for a new prime minister to start off with several cabinet ministers feeling they had been stabbed in the back. But there is nothing wrong with the Prime Minister asking the Governor General to appoint someone who has no ambitions to become prime minister but who would undertake the task in a neutral way for the time being. In fact, sir, the task would not have to be carried out very long. I submit that if the government would use some common sense, if the Prime Minister would be honest with his party and with the house and if the party would become responsible to parliament, with its members doing their duty as members of the house to maintain the house's traditions and the constitution, they would find this house very co-operative.

A caretaker prime minister would in effect create a new administration, and there is no doubt about a new administration having the right to bring its legislation before us. This ridiculous motion that the house is now considering should be put away, and the new prime minister could bring in such legislation as he wanted. He could prorogue or recess and would be in a wonderful position to ask for supply. I submit that if hon. members opposite, and the Prime Minister especially, are at all honest in their arguments that this is no time for an election, if they really feel that in this troubled financial period there should be a government at the helm able to get the co-operation of parliament, able to put through those measures necessary to bring about stability and confidence in our currency, then the solution is very simple.

I have heard it suggested by some that Dr. Forsey says that once defeated a prime minister does not have the right to go to the Governor General and recommend someone else. Of course that argument is based on the contention that once defeated on a motion of confidence a prime minister does not have that right. That is the argument that is put forward. I say that anyone who is going to use that argument against me is simply saying that this motion must be defeated. If the government is defeated on a motion of confidence the matter is finished and the government must resign if that argument holds true. Actually, however, I do not believe that Dr. Forsey goes that far, and I do not believe there is anything in our constitutional practice to support that argument.

It has always been understood that the one thing a prime minister must have to claim to be prime minister is the backing of the majority of the members of parliament. He is appointed on the basis that he claims to have that backing. He becomes the official adviser on proof that he has won a vote of confidence. From that time on he is the official and only adviser to the Governor General, and if in the case of defeat in the house he is able to advise the Governor General that someone else can form an administration and get the backing of the house, then the Governor General is bound to give that other person a try.

The Prime Minister has suggested that the only alternative to an election is to call upon the Leader of the Opposition. Of course this is something that could be done as well. But I submit that the Governor General would only call upon the Leader of the Opposition at the request or suggestion of the Prime Minister and then the Governor General would ask whether or not his new choice as prime minister thought he could control the majority of votes in the house. All such appointments really are temporary until such time as confidence is voted.

It is nearly six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, and I am going to repeat once more, and once more only, that the situation here is not as portrayed by the Prime Minister. It is not a case of resignation followed by an election, or appointment of the Leader of the Opposition. I say that the Prime Minister can resign and ask the Governor General to appoint someone else in his own party to form a government. If he did that then a caretaker government such as I am suggesting would hold office until the Liberal convention is over. Or the Prime Minister could prorogue the session. In fact, he could do a combination of these two things. He could get a caretaker prime minister who could prorogue this session, start another one immediately or whenever he wished, and exactly the same tax bill could be reintroduced in the new session because that bill is only barred from consideration this session. The new administration would have a free hand and would have a much better chance of co-operation. I want to tell the house frankly there will be no co-operation with this government. If we reach a vote on this motion and the government wins, it will be the most hollow vote of confidence parliament has ever seen.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nugent: There will be no co-operation because any prime minister who would demand such unswerving loyalty of his backbenchers that they would betray their duty to this house to uphold responsible government in favour of making such a mockery of it in order that the Prime Minister shall not be embarrassed by leaving a little earlier than he intended is going so far and is delivering such an insult to this house and to the nation that I do not think anyone in the house would consider his action favourably. Hon. members should consider the aftermath if this motion carries. May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, before supper I had outlined what I thought to be some of the considerations before us on the motion the government asks us to accept. Perhaps in the few minutes left at my disposal I should review those considerations, particularly those in respect of what we will be doing by accepting this motion.

It has been our custom in this house and in the British parliamentary system that all important money bills be considered as confidence motions. This has formed the real basis of control by parliament over the executive. This has been the custom, the usage and the practice of the parliamentary system, and it has never been questioned in this house during the time I have been here, or during the time some of my colleagues have been here, which is much longer.

In the past all major matters, including money matters, have been accepted as matters of confidence, whether so designated or not. Had they not been, under present circumstances our present political party system would be impossible. Parties take their stand on this basis, which makes it possible for voters to decide whether candidates of various parties have performed their campaign promises, and gives them an opportunity to do something about it in the future, if they have not.

On the basis of what the Prime Minister has said, that the defeat last Monday night on this money bill did not bring on a question of confidence, we dare not overlook the significance of his attitude toward what we should do in the future. He did not say the money bill was a matter of confidence—and this has always been recognized—but he did say that the defeat of that bill did not involve any question of confidence. He suggests that the only time there shall be a question of confidence on which the government's life is at stake is when the government says so.

Under these circumstances we would be faced with a situation wherein important matters such as money bills would not be recognized ipso facto as confidence matters. If the importance of a matter is not the criterion as to whether a question of confidence is involved, and if the decision as to whether the government survives or falls relates only to a declaration on the part of the government then according to the Prime Minister, the only way for a government to make sure it will survive a confidence motion is to declare the motion as a confidence motion after it has survived the vote. I suggest the Prime Minister's words, his actions in presenting this motion, and the entire course of the government's conduct up to this time have indicated exactly what I have suggested.

What is at stake here in this house is whether or not we shall have any realistic control over the executive. We do not need to think back far to remember the days of Hitler and the minor amendments he brought in to make sure the government had the power it needed, with the result that the Reichstag became powerless.

By accepting this motion we are setting a precedent. We are accepting the suggestion that the executive has complete control, that we shall not be able even to question that control unless the executive says so, and that the executive will say so only after it has survived a vote of confidence. I have a good many friends on the opposite side of the house who are honourable gentlemen. I hope they will point out the fallacy of my argument, if there is one. While I differ with many of those gentlemen opposite, I cannot believe that, understanding all the implications, they will support this position. The alternative is not an election now, but a decision as to whether the Prime Minister shall be asked to leave a little earlier than intended. I was asked by one of those hon. gentlemen whether we did not intend to allow the Prime Minister to leave with honour and dignity. In reply to the suggestion that by leaving a little sooner he must do so without honour and dignity, I can only ask how anyone, as the leader of a responsible government could leave with honour and dignity after having perpetrated this sort of thing on this house.

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the honour of saying a few words about the present situation and especially on the motion before the house.

All members have had the opportunity to express their views on this motion. During my few remarks on this subject, I should like to explain the reasons for political and parliamentary tumbles which point to an economic tumble. Our economy is completely unbalanced and operating to the advantage of powerful interests, because it seems to be under their control. I should like to emphasize the uneasiness within our economy and quote statistics to show where it is heading.

Our economy is heading somewhere. Powerful people control our economy for their own benefit. They make a system of it, a means which satisfies their ambition but at the expense of the great majority of the people. We have no objection to people manipulating the economy to their satisfaction or pleasure because we want them to have some revenue, but on the other hand we do want the people to have their small share of our economy. If there is no way of implementing other reforms than the ones we have now, I feel that it is the responsibility of the government to take the necessary steps to direct our economy towards the people so that they will have the right to live, to walk, and fulfill themselves. The economy does not exist only for some individuals, but it must be directed for the benefit of the nation as a whole, for the benefit of the 20,610,000 Canadian citizens.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, with regard to the vote of confidence the government is asking for today, some newspapers said that I had decided to abstain from voting while keeping the right to change my mind according to circumstances which change from day to day. I find myself constrained to motivate to the house and for the guidance of my constituents, my abstention from voting. I feel I must adapt myself to the present situation. If the situation is sensible, I will change my mind for the good of the people and if we changed our minds, as we did in the Ralliement Créditiste, it is because the situation has changed, the situation appeared to us under a new aspect and has taken a new turn. In view of that situation, we adapted ourselves according to the facts, the possibilities, and we considered the practical aspect, the logical aspect. We work not only according to the party line but for the people as a whole, for the good of each individual and each Canadian.

It is for those reasons that we changed our position toward that motion.

First of all, I am opposed to any increase in taxes or personal income tax, and that prevented me from voting for the government on the bill asking for a surcharge of 5 per cent on the personal income tax.

Secondly, I am also against a general election being held at this time of year, because of the present situation of our national administration, which absolutely needs to be straightened out before an election is called.

For those two reasons, I shall abstain from voting, unless I am shown by new arguments that it would be in the interest of the people that I act otherwise on this question of confidence in the present government.

If I am against our tax system and any increase in personal income tax, it does not follow that I am against the Liberals in this respect, for I am against the Conservatives for the same reasons, our two old parties having the same positions and the one being as responsible as the other for our forms of taxation, which are truly detrimental to the national economic balance, truly detrimental to the protection of the citizens of this nation of Canada.

That is what I must explain and demonstrate as clearly as possible, not so much in order to blame anybody, but so as to enlighten the hon. members with regard to an economic situation throughout the country which we cannot tolerate any longer and which we must change before it leads us to final disaster.

This situation, therefore, is due to both the Liberals and the Conservatives who have taken turns managing the country for the last hundred years, ever since confederation. A change from one to the other of the two old parties in power does not in itself imply a change in the taxation system. That is why, in the present circumstances, I prefer to see the Liberals continue to administer the country and seek to convince them that they should bring about the necessary changes not in the men in power, but in their attitude towards power. The men should not be changed, but they should be led to recognize their true responsibilities as representatives of the people.

What is a member of parliament? Why are we here?

For our 20,610,000 citizens, or for the big banks and companies in Canada with their chairmen and directors who are millionaires or multimillionaires? Are we the representatives of the people or the representatives of companies?

Why then so many banks and companies of all kinds make so much profits on an annual production of $62 billion in 1967, while so many persons and families are short of the necessities?

Why does Canada always show deficits each year, even in 1967, when eight banks increased their total assets over $3,200 million? When the companies, in addition to their profits of $5½ billion of profits as filed and taxed, are still making more than $15 billion of profits concealed, disguised, accounted for, untaxed and recapitalized in the national economy, while more than 60 per cent of the people are living from day to day, without any comfort or a decent competency and are unable to enjoy the general prosperity of Canada? Why does this go on under our legislative and administrative authority? Can the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) answer my question? Can the right hon. Prime Minister and the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Trudeau) tell me why?

On the other hand when it is considered necessary to increase the guaranteed annual income of our old people, $280 million are taken out of the already far too limited purchasing power of the other taxpayers. Why not take them from the $15 billion in recapitalized profits of the large companies? Why drain by 1 per cent, by 5 per cent, through personal income tax increases, the consumption of living and suffering individuals, when anonymous and irresponsible companies can, under our authority and with our authorization, make recapitalized profits of over $15 billion in 1967, even after having paid taxes on declared profits of $5½ billion?

I put the following question to the honourable representatives of the whole population of Canada: whose ministers and whose members are we here in this the highest parliamentary institution of Canada?

Do you believe I am talking through my hat, that I am inventing estimated figures, that I dreamed this last night? Look for the information. Here is a list of figures that any member can have from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, figures you all know or, at least, should know, as representatives of all Canadian citizens.

To show you that I am not concerned with the Liberals more than the Conservatives, I shall give you statistics for the last five years of the Conservative administration, and the last five years of the Liberal administration. For ten years our government has accumulated deficits when 60 per cent of our people lack the necessities of life. On the other hand, let us consider how companies have administered their businesses, that is our business and that of their shareholders, chairmen and directors, always with our permission, our co-operation, our more or less conscious or knowledgeable complicity.

Mr. Speaker, I now quote the following statistics:

In 1957, companies declared $3,056 million of taxable income as compared to $7,335 million untaxed. In 1958, under the Conservative administration—declared and taxed profits reached $3,075 million while untaxed profits amounted to $6,975 million. In 1959, taxed profits reach the sum of $3,504 million, and untaxed profits were $6,894 million. Still under the Conservative administration, in 1960, declared and taxed profits amounted to $3,338 million and untaxed profits to $6,692 million. Under the Conservative administration, in 1961, there were $3,427 million of declared profits as compared to $6,635 million of undeclared profits. In 1962, there were $3,819 million of declared profits and $6,960 million of undeclared profits. Under the Liberal administration in 1963, declared and taxed profits reached $4,188 million, and undeclared and untaxed capitalization profits reached $7,591 million. In 1964, declared and taxed profits amounted to $4,819 million and undeclared and untaxed profits reached $9,103 million. In 1965, there were $5,199 million of declared and taxed profits as compared to $10,651 million of undeclared and untaxed profits. In 1966, declared and taxed profits reached the sum of $5,187 million and undeclared and untaxed profits $12,214 million. In 1967, declared and taxed profits were about $5,500, million as compared to $15 billion of undeclared and untaxed capitalization.

If we add up the whole thing we arrive at a total, for the past ten years, of $45,112 million of declared and taxed profits and $96,050 million of undeclared and untaxed capitalized profits.

This is, Mr. Speaker, the point I want to make. There have always been twice as many hidden as declared profits, always twice as many untaxed as taxed profits, twice as many capitalized profits as taxed profits, twice as many centralized profits as distributed profits. Since 1957, companies have accumulated $96 billion of untaxed profits capitalized on the production realized by all the people, which represents nearly $5,000 per citizen and $25,000 per family of five, which is considered as the average family in Canada.

Because our governments did not tax proportionally the large incomes, they had to borrow from them and tax those with small incomes to pay interests to those who have large incomes. Those are the results of an unfair tax exemption.

That is what we must see, knew, consider and correct within the shortest possible time, even within the framework of the present constitution. That is the first administrative and legislative priority which we must tackle immediately if we really believe that we are the worthy representatives of the Canadian people who gave us their confidence and who elected us so that we may render them justice in the Canadian parliament.

In 1934, Mr. Speaker, Canada was going through a period of economic crisis which was felt all over the world, following the crash of the stock exchange and the stocks of the companies in New York and in the whole world.

Having made a thorough study of our Canadian economic system, with the help of Canadian, American and European economic experts, our government at the time founded the Bank of Canada. Ten years later, in 1944, the Canadian government, on the basis of experience acquired through the first ten years of existence of the Bank of Canada, revised the act governing the Bank of Canada in its relations with the chartered banks of the country. In 1954, the government made another revision. It made a few administrative reforms and let the system go along as best it could for another decade. In 1964, a royal commission on banking and finance presented the voluminous Porter report after a long and thorough study conducted with the help of renowned Canadian and foreign economic and financial advisers. It was only in 1967, three years later, that our government at long last introduced a new act on the Bank of Canada and our eight chartered banks with some 6,000 branch offices across Canada and in foreign countries.

In addition, in 1967, our government received from the Carter commission another notorious report on our entire taxation system. This was a very thorough study of about 2,600 pages, which cost the taxpayers approximately $3,600,000.

During 1963-64, in order to stress the importance of good management and good advisers at the top level of our economy, the government decided to set up the Economic Council of Canada which is constantly ready to help the Canadian government either by making suggestions, undertaking research on specified aspects of our economic picture, releasing technical information which can be useful to the management of large Canadian financial, industrial and commercial institutions or directing the Canadian economy to meet the needs of the Canadian consumers.

In spite of all that, of all those precautions, of numerous royal, decennial or annual, daily or permanent inquiries, in spite of those numerous and very well paid advisers, ably assisted by an army of researchers, technicians, technocrats, and secretaries, our Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) keeps telling us that Canada is experiencing an incredible financial crisis, that our national economic equilibrium is very poor that we are faced with inflation and that the people must by all means tighten their belts and stop living beyond their means and even stop working, because our earning power is superior to our production capacity, which causes inflation.

In order to force the people to spend less, they must be taxed more and especially at the source, before they even receive the salary they have earned legitimately by their regular work, in the regular production of material, intellectual or spiritual goods and services produced by all the economic activities of the whole population, for the whole population, that is, for our 20,610,000 Canadian citizens.

These facts, Mr. Speaker, have been checked and can be checked by each one of us, for ourselves first of all, for our own families and also for each one of our voters: employers, employees and dependents.

Although you may find this picture black and discouraging, you will undoubtedly recognize that it depicts the present sad reality.

Mr. Speaker, this is certainly not the time nor the place to elaborate a whole course in political economy, but these few remarks show that our Canadian banks and large companies are very prosperous, while more than 60 per cent of our people cannot enjoy our production, and lack the necessary purchasing power to enjoy the decent living Canadian citizens should afford.

Now, let us see the forecasts for 1968. This is what the president of the Montreal stock exchange tells us: "The national production will reach $68 billion, consumption $40 billion and capitalization $28 billion in 1968". This statement was made by Mr. Neapole, president of the stock exchange and former director of the Royal Bank of Canada. Forty per cent for capital, on 100 per cent production.

If the hon. Minister of Finance has yet to learn where to go for taxes, under his present taxation system, we tell him once and for all that we shall continue to use all available means to prevent him from taxing the gaining power or the purchasing power of workers, farmers, wage earners and other individual in Canada.

The Bank of Canada, the eight chartered banks, the 800 most important companies listed on the stock market, these are important institutions in our Canadian economy; but what is still more important in Canada, is the people, and those organizations are there only to give administrative services.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

They are only instruments, means of production and administration. We must not therefore sacrifice to them the best of our production.

So, Mr. Speaker, if one should wonder where I got this information, let him consult the brochure entitled Monthly Review, in which Mr. Neapole quoted the facts I have just mentioned. Capital, like work, is only a means of production, and production itself must be regulated by consumption. Why sacrifice so large a part of production to capital, even before having met the basic needs of consumption?

Capital should be taxed at least on the same basis as work is taxed. Corporations should be taxed on the same basis as individuals. That is the general conclusion of the report of the Carter royal commission on taxation. Why not take it into consideration from here on? Why postpone to a later date the fundamental conclusions of those experts on our modes of taxation?

We empower banks to create $3,200 million in money required for production; we empower companies to set up a capitalization of $15 billion required for production, but for goodness sake, let us not go so far as exempting them from taxes, as allowing them to recapitalize $28 million out of a yearly output of $68 billion, that is, more than 40 per cent, when in 1944, only 10 per cent was set aside for capitalization, or $1,200 million out of a $12 billion production.

In 1968, we shall earmark 40 per cent for capitalization and only 60 per cent for consumption.

Therefore, a statement on our national economy brings out its most obvious deficiencies. Since the end of the last war mostly, the amount of capital sought from banks and companies has increased to such an extent that it was necessary to sacrifice the happiness and welfare of the Canadian people who contribute to the prosperity of our banks and companies, under the direction of our governments elected by the people.

Mr. Speaker, the banks create money, the companies create capital and the governments tax the individuals to allow for even more profits and prosperity for those banks and companies which have no life, which do not exist in reality, which are only tools of production and administration of material, intellectual and spiritual goods and services for the benefit of the 20,610,000 citizens who make up our nation in 1968.

In 1967, that is during the year just ended, the total assets of banks increased by $3,200 million, the capital of companies after taxes increased by over $15 billion and the governments keep on taxing the personal income as well as already insufficient purchasing power.

Banks, companies, governments themselves, in short all institutions or corporations are merely instruments of production or administration at the service of the people. Now, the people are sacrificed to the benefit of banks, companies, governments and big corporations. Is that clear enough?

I will even go further, Mr. Speaker. Those are the facts, the situation. That is the position of our government—the first institution of Canada—the one responsible for our monetary, economic and political system.

A government, with 265 members, elected by the people, by the 20 million Canadian citizens who all have the right to live according to our productivity. So we, in this parliament, are responsible for the adjustment which has to be brought about in our economy.

To state the facts does not mean to accuse, to blame or even to judge the government. But facts are self-explanatory and help us to understand the causes of a parliamentary crisis which still seems to be quite superficial and incidental, but which is an indication of the virulent basic weakness at the core of our administration, our government legislation here in Canadian parliament.

Results for 1967: before the people short of the necessities of life or normal comfort, our banks are increasing their assets by $3,200 million, our companies are collecting capital of over $15 billion and the government wants to reduce the purchasing power of the individuals to increase still more the profits and capital of banks and big business.

With the co-operation, the protection and the more or less conscious connivance of the ministers and members elected by the people, for the people, our banks and companies are prospering, they increase their capital, they get richer by the billions yearly, while governments incur deficits, get into debt, compromise, tax the little man in order to pay a higher and higher interest on borrowed capital, on big capital formed, to start with, through unjust tax exemptions.

Things being as clear to me as they are, it is not a question of finding out where the disease is, it is a matter of curing it at its roots. First, we must increase the purchasing power of the people where it is lacking. There is an abundant production, but it is not being distributed according to the needs of the people, precisely because the people lack purchasing power.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I interrupt the hon. member at this stage to ask him if he is convinced that what he says is related to the motion under study.

Mr. Latulippe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think I am doing my best to demonstrate the bad effects of the present system and where it is leading us. That is what has brought about the present economic crisis and the government defeat. The present system is the cause of this crisis, and I was trying to describe the situation and the prevailing uneasiness. Before I resume my seat, I have an amendment to move to the government motion.

It is obvious that we are not merely stating the facts, pointing out the trouble and blaming the government, but that we suggest the remedy, in other words an immediate, efficient, practical and logical solution. Purchasing power must exist in different well known sectors, but it must be provided by taking the money from those who have it and not from those who have not. We must take some purchasing power away from those who have too much and give it to those who do not have enough. It is that simple. That is the solution.

The purchasing power of consumers is even more important than the capital necessary for production. What is the use of production capital if there are no consumers? The whole production would remain on the shelf; there would be no way to pay interest on capital nor to reimburse that capital, and the whole people would have worked without being able to enjoy the goods they need.

Therefore if here, in the Canadian parliament, we want to see our economy run smoothly and profitably once more, all we need to do is to promote a greater purchasing power where it is needed by taking money where there is too much. That is the only way in which we will correct the unemployment situation, eliminate inflation, and reestablish a balance in the economy between production, consumption and capitalization, between individuals, families and companies, between employers, employees and dependents, between capital, work and the vital rights of those without work or capital.

All that can be done here, by ourselves, within the present constitution, by the present ministers and members of parliament, without an election, without new departments, without new institutions.

Mr. Speaker, I heard Conservative members raise questions and protests of all kinds, but they did not bring any solution. That is why we shall not vote for this motion since we do not agree with the Conservative reasoning in this matter. Should the Conservatives assume again the reins of government, they would come back with the same tools, the same arguments, the same means, and that would lead to the same results: failure, the present national lack of balance and the tumbles we saw recently.

Before concluding I move, seconded by the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise):

That the motion be amended by adding immediately after the word "carried", the words "on division" between commas.

• (8:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I will read the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac. Perhaps hon. members might like to argue the procedural aspects of the proposal. The amendment is as follows:

[Translation]

That the motion be amended by adding immediately after the word "carried", the words "on division" between commas.

[English]

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the hon. member who proposed the amendment whether he has copies in English?

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, I have none in English; some would have to be printed.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps I could read the amendment in French again. If hon. members listen to the interpretation in English this might facilitate their forming an opinion on it.

[Translation]

That the motion be amended by adding immediately after the word "carried", the words "on division" between commas.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, with respect to the legitimacy of the motion, what the amendment is suggesting is that the right of the house to be polled be done away with. We have had sufficient attempts in the last week to do away with the rights of the House of Commons. This amendment, couched as it is, would deprive the members of this house of the right to be polled and in my submissions is completely out of order.

Mr. Starr: If I heard the amendment correctly, Mr. Speaker, the word "approved" was in the motion. However, when I look at the motion itself the word "approved" does not appear at all.

[Translation]

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, if the whole motion were read, it might clear up the situation. In the French motion, we have the word "approuvé", and our amendment derives from the French copy.

Once amended, the motion would read as follows:

That this house does not regard its vote on February 19 in connection with third reading of Bill C-193, which had been carried, on division, in all previous stages, as a vote of non-confidence in the government.

That might clear up the matter for the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr) and other hon. members because in the French version, we have the word "approuvé".

Mr. Grafftey: It means that you are embarrassed.

[English]

Mr. Starr: In view of the confusion about this amendment, Mr. Speaker, I think in order to judge the amendment properly we should have copies in English.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, whether or not we get copies in English, I wonder whether Your Honour would take a look at the amendment as it is before you, in French. As I understand it the purpose of the amendment is to write the words "on division" into that part of the motion that refers to Bill No. C-193 having been carried at all previous stages.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): On division.

Mr. Knowles: It is precisely because the words "on division" have different meanings that it seems to me the amendment introduces confusion, and consequently lack of sense. Therefore it is hardly appropriate—

Mr. Starr: Don't say that about them; they are bedfellows with the Liberals.

Mr. Knowles: —in the motion.

• (8:50 p.m.)

A reference is made to "all previous stages". On second reading the bill carried with a recorded vote. When we use the phrase "on division" we mean, usually, that the vote is not to be recorded. Some clauses in committee were carried with a standing vote; some were carried on division. I think one can challenge the correctness of the words, and since including them would make nonsense of the motion, they should not be accepted.

Mr. Nasserden: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The translation of the French version that we have makes reference to the word "approved" instead of to a phrase such as "carried in all previous stages". There is a difference. Either the French or the English version is wrong. In any event the motion seems to differ as between one language and the other.

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the house can cast reflection on any vote that has previously been taken.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac intended to cast a reflection on the previous vote. His purpose is quite clear to me. He wanted the motion to read: "in all of its stages on division".

The point made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is also clear to me, that the amendment, if carried, would make the motion difficult to understand. I might point out that it would also be contrary to the facts, since the bill was carried on first reading by unanimous agreement of the house, or without division.

In view of this, and since there is not sufficient clarity in the words of the motion proposed by the hon. member, I regret that I cannot accept the amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: May I give a few explanations?

Mr. Grafftey: It was not really serious.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether you have completely rejected the amendment—

Mr. Speaker: I remind the hon. member that I asked hon. members to give their opinion as to whether the amendment was in order or not. I ruled that it was not in order and I do not believe it is possible to proceed with the discussion.

[English]

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I was interested in your ruling on the amendment and I was interested in the speech which was given to the house. If the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac (Mr. Latulippe) thinks the country is in such bad shape, why will he vote confidence in this government?

No doubt Canada today is passing through a severe financial crisis, which has been brought on by this government. What happened last Monday? Perhaps already that is dim in the minds of some. I was not here, being one of the 24 members of the transport committee that was in the maritimes. Some members were in the maritimes to help their constituents present briefs to the committee. All the same, the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) complains that not enough members were in the house; that is why he feels that the vote on Monday night was not a vote of confidence.

By reading Hansard, anyone can ascertain what happened. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) called for the vote. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters) was Acting Prime Minister. He was in the house, directing the affairs of the country to the best of his ability. One can see the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) rising to his feet to urge all members to vote. That was the type of leadership we had on what will commonly be called blue Monday—blue Monday for the people of Canada, for democracy, and for the Liberal party. It is strange that a party which has adopted red as its colour should succumb on a blue Monday.

On a second reading the government won with a slim majority of nine votes. On Monday afternoon one clause of the bill carried with the slim majority of three votes. Surely the government had ample notice of opposition. Surely enough votes were taken to warn the government. It cannot now say that Monday night's vote is not to count as a vote of confidence.

Motion Respecting House Vote

After the crucial vote on Monday night the government was asked to resign, but they said they wanted to continue on and do business. A motion to adjourn moved by the hon. member for Kamloops carried, 79 to 78. Again the government was defeated. The house had agreed on that Monday night that the government should resign. Yet on Tuesday the Prime Minister came back from a Jamaican trip, no doubt with some choice words to say to his cabinet colleagues, and he was willing to carry on. What he said to his cabinet does not matter; the point is this: Can the government carry on illegally? Has not the Prime Minister a moral obligation to govern this country according to the wishes of its elected representatives? The elected representatives said that the government ought to resign.

You cannot have a replay in important votes. Politics is not hockey. If the recent hockey match between Finland and Canada were replayed I expect that Canada would collect the silver medal, instead of the bronze medal that it did collect. The Prime Minister will come out of this series, and retire from public life with a tarnished brass medal. He has shown poor sportsmanship and he has not accepted his moral obligation of governing properly, the moral obligation he assumed when he donned the mantle of Prime Minister of this country.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce went around western Canada saying that the cabinet is divided and the country is split. He added that we are in a financial crisis, and is reported to have said "I am not going to enter this leadership race." He said he was getting out of it. But he was the Acting Prime Minister on Monday and he allowed his colleagues to go down to defeat deliberately, because he had no confidence in them himself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I have expressed myself on that matter a number of times and on another occasion I shall cite more fully exactly what he is reported to have said. His remarks are tantamount to saying that he had no confidence in his fellow cabinet ministers, and had no intention to run for leader.

The very essence of democracy is that there shall be no taxation without representation. Yet what does this government do? It does the opposite. Though defeated, it says to all of us that we shall pay illegal taxes. Though the 5 per cent surtax is illegal, we are to continue paying it, and the Minister of Finance has absolutely no conscience about the matter. He says that the tax is not to be returned to the people. The other day I listened to him making an incredibly poor defence of his position. What did he say? He whined. He took issue with the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) for making a political speech. What a terrible thing that was to do at a time of crisis.

He wanted to take credit for all the good things in Canada but argued that we should not blame the Liberal government for any of the bad things, because the whole world was in bad shape. He told us that Canada today was experiencing a boom. What kind of boom are we in? We find producers getting less for what they grow while prices to the consumer are rising by leaps and bounds. Interest rates are going up. Unemployment is going up. Taxes are going up. Yes, everything is booming now. But the Minister of Finance, in a weak effort to defend the government's position, tells us that it is not his fault; that the whole world is in a bad situation. Mr. Speaker, the economic council pointed out clearly some time ago that even though it was not burdened with the Viet Nam war Canada was in a far worse position financially than the United States. During the last few months we have witnessed a serious run on the dollar, together with soaring interest rates, while on the other hand we have been witnessing tight money and unemployment. It is certainly remarkable to find all these things happening at the same time, and one wonders why.

It is not surprising that the Minister of Trade and Commerce did not stand up that night to defend his colleagues, since he has so little confidence in them. How could he defend them? The hon. gentleman laughed at the extract from the Canada Year Book and the comments made in it. The passage referred to in that year book has appeared in the same way for the last 20 years. But there will be a change, now. That part will be changed, and the Minister of Trade and Commerce cannot deny it; he knows this is the first thing he will have to do before the next Canada Year Book is printed.

What did he say about his colleagues? He said the government was split between men of conscience and those who wished to cling to office at all costs. The minister deplored the absence of a balanced budget. Referring to the prime ministership he said he could not imagine anyone wanting to accept the chairmanship of a board which was so divided. So why blame the opposition for defeating the government? The Acting Prime Minister was the responsible minister in the House of Commons that Monday night. This is his opinion, according to Mr. Charles Lynch on January 13:

> Regarding the prime ministership, he cannot imagine anyone "accepting the chairmanship of a board that was so divided."

Whose fault is it that the government was defeated on blue Monday? It was the fault of no one. But the man in charge must shoulder the responsibility. According to the Windsor Star of January 13, Mr. Winters said he hoped the next Liberal leader will adopt a sound policy of fiscal integrity. What about the present Liberal leader? Can any member of the House of Commons wonder why we fought to defeat this government? We, too, share the feeling that the present government is not following a sound policy of fiscal integrity. We agree with the Acting Prime Minister.

The hon. gentleman went on to say, according to the same article:

> I regret we have never been able to balance the budget. We must get back to the principle of fiscal integrity.

We have not been there for a while, he suggests, but we must get back to it. Can anyone blame the opposition for attempting to defeat the government, when the man in charge aided and abetted hon. members on this side of the house to vote against it on blue Monday? Of course, the hon. gentleman does not speak very highly of the Minister of Finance—and we cannot blame him for that, either. This article goes on:

> Mr. Winters said he is confident the federal budget could have been balanced and had he been minister of finance, that would have been his primary goal.

There can be no doubt about it; the hon. gentleman did not have confidence in the Minister of Finance. He found the cabinet divided and he did not want to be chairman of that board. There was only one way out. He sought to save the nation by putting the government out, too; and one cannot hold that against him.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): What position have we reached, now? I have a clipping here from the Toronto Telegram of February 21, which says, among other things:

> The government is now badly split between men of conscience and those who would cling to office by any possible means or device.

We know that the man in charge on Monday, the Acting Prime Minister on that day, is a man of conscience. He does not intend to cling to office. He tells us he intends to resign at the end of March. He may even do so before then.

An hon. Member: How is he going to vote?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): We shall have to wait and see whether the day ever comes when he is given an opportunity to vote. We go on to wonder why he and the opposition got together on that blue Monday. This is how the Edmonton Journal summed up the situation on February 20:

> The Liberals have been defeated in the Commons in a vote that must, by any uncontrived definition, constitute a vote of confidence: they must, if conscience and precedent are to guide, resign as the government. This being done there is little doubt that, after politics runs its course and the constitution put to yet another test, the issue will be placed before the people to decide.

This of course is exactly what we want. There is no better guide to democracy than the people themselves. That is the whole essence of the principle for which men have fought and died. It is the whole essence of the nature of democracy as distinct from communism; it is what they are fighting for in Viet Nam. We in Canada should certainly not be ashamed to exercise democracy to the fullest extent.

I call attention to what the Auditor General had to say in his report, not too long ago. Here is a clipping from the Calgary Herald of February 20, an article written by Bruce Phillips, which reads in part:

> An unnamed auto firm, says Henderson in his annual report to Parliament, may owe the government as much as $30,000,000 in back customs and taxes.

They let the auto manufacturers off with $30 million, but they have already collected $13 million of illegal taxes from the Canadian people. Are we supposed to vote confidence in a government which allows this to happen when according to the Auditor General, the auditor of the board of directors which the Acting Prime Minister would not wish to join, an unnamed auto firm has been permitted to owe the government as much as $30 million in customs and taxes.

Motion Respecting House Vote

How can we conscientiously do our duty here in this house by allowing them to get away with that, by allowing them to collect $13 million in taxation from the little man in the street before the house passed the tax bill? Now they say they are going to continue to collect the surtax. They say, "We are not going to give it back to you people out in the street. You cannot sue us all at once. We defy the citizens of Canada to sue us all at once. We think we can pressure the opposition to allow us to get the same tax measure through. We let the auto manufacturers get away with $30 million, but we can take $13 million from you because we have the right to take it from you."

What kind of bureaucratic slaves are they making of the Canadian people? If one reads further in the report of the Auditor General he can grasp the full meaning of the kind of budgeting that has been going on. Yet we are supposed to vote confidence in the Minister of Finance. We have watched him bring down budget after budget, and he has been out of step a full six months. He has been most erratic in applying the brakes and feeding the gas in respect to the Canadian economy. The detail of his budgetary work has been tremendously careless.

This is what Mr. Lynch writes about the Auditor General's report in the Calgary Herald of January 20:

> It's hard for a public servant to raise a holler, but you can almost hear Auditor General Max Henderson straining his lungs and screaming in his latest report, tabled in the House of Commons Monday.
> He is shrieking at anybody who will listen—be it the government, the members of parliament, the taxpayers, the nation's youth, anybody.
> What he's saying is that there's a mess in the nation's biggest business, the federal government. And nobody's doing anything about it. He implies that if there were a similar mess in a private corporation, the stockholders would rise up in revolt against a sloppy management.

That is how Mr. Lynch paraphrases Mr. Henderson's report. He goes on to say that one of the biggest complaints is that the whole matter has not been referred to the public accounts committee, and points out that that committee has not met since last April.

Mr. Lewis: They would not call it.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Someone says they won't call it. How can we conscientiously do our duty for the citizens of Canada when we see the mess that is pointed out by the Auditor General, who does the books for the board of directors over there? Are we to sit here and not vote against them, not do everything in our power to throw them out? Surely as conscientious legislators we must be prepared to throw them out at the very earliest opportunity.

In this democracy of ours are governments to be beyond defeat? Are votes to be taken as a way of keeping a roll call on members of parliament, and nothing else? That is what will happen if this motion is allowed to pass. Are we to have the spectacle of a government defeated in parliament on a major policy matter, its own budgetary resolution, being allowed to cling desperately to power? Surely the country will rise up and demand the resignation of members of the government? Surely if the Minister of Trade and Commerce was conscientious in the press conference when he stated those things about his colleagues, he too would rise up and vote against them at the earliest opportunity?

There is an interesting item in tonight's Ottawa Citizen, headed "$400 Million Loan Sought by Canada." It is a report emanating from Paris, saying that Canada has asked for a $400 million loan from the International Monetary Fund. It quotes the report from a Paris newspaper and adds:

> In Washington a spokesman for the fund declined comment on today's report.

Whether this be a loan that Canada is seeking, or a return of funds that it has placed at the disposal of the I.M.F. does not really matter. The fact is that this government has been refused money by the legislature. The representatives of the people have refused it money. Therefore it has no right to raise money in any other way until it goes to the Governor General, the Prime Minister resigns, and someone else is appointed. I would suggest that the conscientious minister over there, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, take charge until the Liberal leadership convention is held, because he is not a candidate for the leadership. He cannot get along with the brand of fiscal integrity that the Minister of Finance has been displaying, and I cannot blame him for that.

If this debate has done nothing else, it should at least have highlighted the frantic desire of the government to hold on to power. It should also have highlighted the terrible financial mess in which Canada finds itself today. As reported, the government today is seeking to borrow $400 million. Of course it will try to place the blame for this on the fact that the government was defeated on its 5 per cent surtax proposal. But let members of the government blame whomever they like: They have spent the money foolishly. It is the duty of the legislators to tighten the purse strings.

It is interesting to note what a recent convert to the Liberal party had to say in this regard. In 1963 the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) had very strong views on the right of parliament to control the purse strings. As recorded in Hansard of July 15, 1963, at page 2189, the hon. member, in those sanctimonious tones which he is quite capable of using, said:

> —in other words if the right to control the purse strings were taken away from members of this house, we would have reached a stage where a most important part of the rights of those elected to parliament would have been removed.

I wonder why he does not speak in this debate—because parliament has taken away the right of taxation from the government. Now the government says that the vote on Monday night last does not count. Members of the government say: We are going to erase that blue Monday, right off the calendar, and we are going to do it all over again. In other words the government has no respect for parliament. The board of directors has no respect for its shareholders. The executive has no respect for the people of Canada, when they speak as members of this house. Of course when speaking of the hon. member for Medicine Hat I must point out that at that time he was a Social Crediter. Since that time he thought he had better get on the bandwagon, and he jumped from the fat into the fire.

Speaking on the same subject, on July 23, 1963, as recorded at page 2538 of Hansard the hon. member for Medicine Hat said:

> —why in the name of common sense cannot the Minister of Finance and the federal treasury go directly to the Bank of Canada, which is a publicly owned institution, and get the money there in the first place?

Well, Mr. Speaker, that is about what they are doing today when they are asking for this $400 million loan from the I.M.F. Maybe the hon. member for Medicine Hat is happy on the one hand with that, while defying the principle and power of parliament on the other.

The Canadian people will now have to be taxed to pay off this loan from the I.M.F. raised by this government. What is the position of the Creditiste group, who have made a great deal with this spending government? They are going to have to approve of the taxation to pay the interest on this I.M.F. loan, because they are going to vote confidence in the government. The Creditistes will have to say to their people in Quebec: You have got to pay the taxes the government is asking; you are going to have to pay the interest on this loan from the I.M.F. Surely their constituents will not be particularly happy about that. If they are the same as my constituents, they cannot help but feel that they are already taxed enough, particularly with a government that has been spending so freely, that has an expenditure never before equalled in the history of Canada, that has been spending on goods and services that are not adding to the growth of the gross national product in any way, shape or form.

We refused to allow the 5 per cent surcharge tax increase in addition to the 10 per cent tax increase of a year ago. The Creditiste party think it should support this. That does not really matter because parliament has restricted the government from taxing the people further. It does not make any difference whether they borrow money from the International Monetary Fund, or from the Canadian people by floating a bond issue: The government has not got the right to spend any more money, because the Canadian people have said the government has gone too far. That is exactly what parliament did on Monday night.

We in the Conservative party have been criticized in the press for not wanting to defeat the government. It has been suggested that members of this party have not attended the house because we were afraid to defeat the government. Now that we have defeated the government let us hear the members of the press state quite frankly that we have done the right thing.

It is all well and good for the Minister of Finance to say that we should not have an election now, but he is saying this because he knows he has got Canada into the worst financial crisis it has ever known. We have on the one hand tight money and on the other hand the highest interest rates we have known. We have banks sending out notices to customers saying they now intend to charge 8 per cent interest. Just over a year ago this government took the ceiling off interest rates, which at that time stood at 6 per cent. The government did this, as it said, to allow more money into circulation to drive the interest rates down. Exactly the reverse has happened. I remember that some time ago a former minister of finance, a former member for Eglinton, when bringing down a budget said that a little bit of inflation is like a drug and, once offered to the economy, the economy craves a great deal more. This government made a mistake about two years ago when it almost doubled the money supply. It injected a great deal of this drug, and since then the economy has craved a great deal more. As a result we have witnessed a galloping inflation.

The Minister of Finance tried to put the brakes on last June and again in November, but on both occasions he was six months late. He has failed miserably as Minister of Finance. The Minister of Trade and Commerce knows full well that if he had been minister of finance he might well have been more in tune with the economy. I am sure he would have been, because he has been with the economy and knows the ups and downs of business economics. Our Minister of Finance has led a sheltered life, most of it as a civil servant. There is a great difference. I believe the Minister of Trade and Commerce would have been in tune with the economic conditions of Canada to a far greater degree. Perhaps then, as has been suggested in a press interview, he could have brought in a balanced budget last year, avoiding the difficulty which has occured this year. Today we are witnessing a run on the dollar, and I suppose the $400 million loan is intended to stem the withdrawal of money from Canada by the United States parents of Canadian companies.

Now that the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) has joined the government side of the house he has swallowed the philosophy of that party, but I note that he has not attempted to take part in this debate. Apparently he does not know whether the government should be responsible to the people and to parliament, or whether it should be all superior in the position of a dictatorship. He does not know whether he believes in those righteous principles he advocated when he sat to our far left, or whether he left those principles when he walked across the floor of the house. He must realize that the Liberal government has failed to control the purse strings. If anyone is in doubt about that, I suggest he read the economic council report and the Auditor General's report. If anyone is still in doubt, he should look at our balance of payments program and our agricultural prices, which are at the lowest point for the last ten years. For the first time in something like ten years Canadian wheat farmers are operating without an international wheat agreement. Surely someone failed in this regard, and I suggest that "someone" is the Minister of Trade and Commerce, because he alone was responsible to see that the agreement was signed so there would not be an interval during which we would be operating without such an agreement.

Today agricultural prices are down and inflation is increasing. Interest rates are increasing and money is becoming tighter. Why should we vote confidence in this government? One of the prominent businessmen of this country, who came back into politics, is aware at the present time of this government's mismanagement. I am sure that he is disgusted and wants to resign so that he may return to the business scene. I am sure he would not be unhappy about the defeat of this government.

With this very dismal picture of the Canadian economy today, I suggest the only solution is to allow the convention to select a new leader, and then call an election. In this way the people of this country can express their views about the financial mess in which the Canadian economy is now bogged down.

Last night on "W5" the Prime Minister said that he was angry with himself, with his party and with the opposition for manufacturing this crisis. The opposition did not manufacture the crisis. The colleagues of the Prime Minister, supported by the wisdom of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, manufactured the crisis. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Turner) has admitted this. When he heard about it in Toronto he said, "I am no longer running for leadership of the country, or the prime ministership of the country; I am running for leadership of the opposition." How true those words were. He realized that he would no longer have the opportunity of running for leadership and prime minister.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Is my time up?

Mr. Turner: I am rising on a question of privilege.

An hon. Member: You have not been recognized.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, I should like to continue with the quotation of the hon. member—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): On your own time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. If the minister wishes to correct a statement made by the hon. member for Acadia, I am sure he recognizes that would not constitute a question of privilege.

Mr. Turner: I am sure the hon. member would not want to give the house the wrong impression, because I said at that time that if I had the opportunity—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

An hon. Member: You just lost another 27½ votes.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): It is interesting to see how soft-skinned these ministers are. The slightest little prick of the pin will drive them from their seats. A former president of the United States, Mr. Truman, said, "If you can't stand the heat, get out of the kitchen." I would not advise the minister to get in the kitchen, if he cannot stand the soft touch of a pin, which drives him to his feet. I advise him not to get into the kitchen, because it will become awfully hot there at times. Believe me, it will become so hot that the present Minister of Finance will burn his fingers. Our only hope is that the whole country does not burn up at the same time.

• (9:30 p.m.)

We have seen this government defeated, yet clinging to power. We have seen this government with its purse strings cut, but going to the International Monetary Fund to borrow money. Yet we think, Mr. Speaker, that this is a nation where parliament is supreme. Parliament has taken away the right of this government to spend money, we have denied the government the right to tax the Canadian people any more; yet the government goes out and borrows more money.

We think we have democracy in this country. Many a brave Canadian has fought in two world wars for democracy. They told me when I went to school that this was what the first world war was fought over. I had an uncle who did not come back from that war. The present minister played football with him in Toronto. My uncle might better have served democracy had he stayed at home and taught his team mate the meaning of democracy. Men have fought for a wee bit of freedom and democracy, and yet we in this chamber see the government run slipshod over every rule and every parliamentary principle in the book.

We have cut the purse strings of the government and told them they should not spend money; yet we see in today's Citizen that the government is borrowing money and spending it, just the same. Then the government will come back to the Canadian taxpayers and tax them, because of its borrowings. If one did not have a religious faith he would believe there is no justice at all in Canada. But the day is coming when the people of this country will remember blue Monday, just as they remember black Friday.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member allow me a question?

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I must advise the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac (Mr. Latulippe) that he has already spoken, and the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Horner) has already used up the time allotted to him. The hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacInnis).

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: I would have liked to direct a question to the hon. member.

[English]

Mr. Mongrain: On a point of order—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please, the hon. member for Trois-Rivières on a point of order.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order; the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac just wants to ask a question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have already advised the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac that even though he may wish to ask a question of the hon. member for Acadia, that hon. member's time has expired. The hon. member for Cape Breton South.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I was under the impression that the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac was rising once again to put an amendment, and my interpretation, judging by the amendment the hon. member put before the house a short while ago, was that it involved collusion and was probably out of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I say this, Mr. Speaker, because collusion between the Liberal party and the Créditistes is the one shame that they will never, ever live down.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): In my opinion this involves just the return of a favour, with this same Liberal gang which saw fit a few short years ago to support the Social Credit party in respect of free money. The developments that have taken place here are, as far as I am concerned, most welcome. The defeat of the government has been brought about, and in bringing about that defeat we have in this house accomplished something that many Canadian people have been looking forward to for the last three years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): In my opinion the defeat of the government, speaking from a local point of view, has made possible the situation whereby Nova Scotians and other Canadians living in Nova Scotia will get the justice they deserve, and which was denied them not too long ago in the house by this government.

Miss LaMarsh: Since the election of the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield).

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I hear an interjection from the hon. member for Niagara Falls. I will get around to saying something else later, but I would call her attention now to the fact that I was informed outside the house that there is no longer a peach crop in the Niagara peninsula, and they have turned to sour grapes. I will have something further to say to the hon. lady later.

In addition to bringing about the defeat of this government which refuses not to recognize the problems faced in Nova Scotia, organized labour throughout this country has brought about the defeat of Bill C-186. Members of the New Democratic party and many Liberals who are opposed to Bill C-186 have now the opportunity of avoiding a vote on that bill by urging the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) to take an early retirement and let parliament get on with the business we are here to discuss.

Members on this side of the house have been criticized for not getting together, but when we did finally get together and vote this government out of office, what did we find? We have a Prime Minister who has been trying to operate from long distance. It is regrettable that he has been called back from the sunny south for the second time this year. The Prime Minister comes back from Jamaica, stands before the Canadian television audience and the House of Commons and speaks of those who bring about the downfall of his government.

The Prime Minister speaks of responsibility; he lectures the Canadian people and this parliament on responsibility. All I ask of him is that he face up to his responsibilities. The Prime Minister was given in 1965 a mandate by the Canadian people that would carry him into 1970. For the last two years he has been running away from that responsibility. He speaks of responsibility; he speaks of a united Liberal party; he speaks of what they would do in opposition even with a minority government.

The Minister of Finance stated in the house the other day that the Canadian dollar was on trial, that the government was on trial and that he as Minister of Finance was on trial. I agree completely with that. I call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that today we have ten ministers present out of 28. At times these people who are on trial this afternoon have found, as the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Horner) said a few moments ago—and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) used this expression—too much heat in the kitchen, especially when the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) and the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) were speaking. We find only these few ministers present, out of a cabinet of 28, and their attendance in the house has reached as low as two.

I guess the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) finds too much heat in the kitchen, too. I would like to draw his attention to some predictions he made in 1963. I am not criticizing all the members of this government. I have to give the Secretary of State for External Affairs a pat on the back. He has proved to be quite a prophet, and I commend this statement that he made in 1963: "If we elect a government that does not command a majority, we will spell the disaster of our government". One has to give him full marks for his predictions. He made this statement on March 6, 1963. He might have added "disaster for the Canadian nation". What surprises me is that the famous crystal ball was passed on to him and not to the Prime Minister. There are many more interesting statements which were made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin), and if time permitted I would quote them. However, I should like to emphasize the fact that in bringing about the downfall of this government we have stopped the passage of innocuous legislation, such as Bill No. 186, which the labour people of this country have demanded should not be passed by this house.

Mr. Grégoire: No, that is wrong.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): We are hearing now from a member who holds the balance of power, but let me say that of late he has been upstaged.

What has been happening here since Friday has been a battle to save Pearson's pride, and nothing else. The government is trying to hang on to the Prime Minister, who does not deserve it. He has not shown the responsibility to the Canadian nation he claimed he would discharge, and I say again he has run away continually from this responsibility. What is most important to the people of Canada? Is it parliament, the Liberal party, the Liberal convention, or the Prime Minister? I say to you, sir, that this parliament, as all parliaments in a democracy, should be supreme, and if it does not continue to be supreme it is because of the gang over there; and I use the word "gang" advisedly. I know that at one time this word used in the house in connection with a commission was ruled out of order, but if anyone wishes to challenge the word "gang" or the word "syndicate", let him get up and challenge it. I say that members on the government side are just what I say they are, a gang, or one might even call them "syndicate operators".

We have been asked to vote confidence in the government. I wonder if the Canadian people have really looked at this government and at the individuals who make it up. Not long ago, I asked a question in the house in connection with the local situation at Sydney. What happened then proves that there is absolutely no unity in the Liberal party. The Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) answered me by saying the government would be foolish to make such plans, while at the same time his colleague, the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development (Mr. Sauvé) who was out in western Canada at the time spoke about government plans to phase out the Sydney steel operations. This was a direct contradiction of what the Minister of Industry said.

Then, moving a little further on, we used to see the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Laing) sitting next to the Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh). Something happened there because they are no longer seatmates.

Mr. Laing: Nothing happened to me.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I am not sure. I would not say that halitosis had anything to do with it. This government is beginning to realize that halitosis is better than no breath at all.

Then we move further on and come to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp). What happened last Monday night was not of his doing. He was prodded into it by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer). I will get to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) in time. The Minister of Transport prodded the Minister of Finance into making the fatal mistake on Monday night. I understand it was the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) who blamed the Minister of Transport for prodding the Minister of Finance; and the Minister of Finance of course blamed everyone else, although it was he who put himself into this vulnerable position. It is very interesting to review the statements made by the Minister of Finance and the press releases on them. When the minister was asked whether anyone was to blame for what happened and whether the Minister of Transport prodded him into it, he did not confirm this. However, the accusation was in the question which was put to the minister, even though he did not confirm that there was any truth in it. So we can accept that the Minister of Finance thinks the Minister of Transport actually prodded him into doing it. The Minister of National Health and Welfare was prodded into voting on the bill. After all, they are all candidates for the same job.

Mr. Nielsen: In the meantime there was the Trois-Rivières incident.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I do not know much about the plane trip back from Trois-Rivières, but we can recall the developments following the plane trip back from Halifax, when the Prime Minister conveniently did some forgetting, which at that time got him into hot water. There is not too much difference between the two incidents. On that occasion he came very close to getting it in the neck. He has got it in the neck now, and let him take the consequences of it.

Now we come to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Let us consider some of the interesting observations he made while in Halifax. He said then that the time has come when we must have strong leadership. If there is unity in the Liberal party, why was he reflecting on the leadership of the present Prime Minister? Some of these points were already made by the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Horner). I repeat again that on occasions when the government was on trial, its members were not here to defend themselves. They are not rising now to refute the charges that are made against them, and there is no doubt that when they speak of this unity, it is only lip service and malarky, which they are passing on to the Canadian people.

In saying that, I do not intend to forget the Minister of Trade and Commerce about whom I have a few interesting observations to make. All this nonsense which the Prime Minister spewed to the television audience over the week end, is nothing but a dishonest approach to the whole matter.

I know that the word "lie" is not permitted in the house and is considered unparliamentary. One is not supposed to say that a member is lying. I do not propose to do so now, but let me say that a precedent has been established when members on the government side have been charged in the house with lying and they did not have the gumption to rise and defend themselves. The Canadian people are faced today with one big lie.

As I was saying, I have some interesting observations to make about the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who I think by this time should consider it proper to rise in the house defend his position. Several quotations have been made from the Canada Year Book, one of which has been repeated several times in relation to the minister's statement concerning fiscal integrity. All I can say is that here again the government is selling something to the Canadian people for $5 a shot, and they cannot back up what they put in writing. Now the integrity of the Minister of Trade and Commerce has been called into question, as has the integrity of the Minister of Finance with regard to the Canadian economy. It is also interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that this man who once stated outside the house that he closed more mines in Canada than any other man, also stated that Sydney was not an economic unit and therefore should not receive any assistance from this government. This is the man who went to India and lent the Indian government $20 million, but refused to lend half of that amount to the people of Nova Scotia to cope with a problem with which he is quite familiar.

It is also interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) went before an audience of 20,000 people or more in Cape Breton this summer and said the government was searching desperately for a way to help. When the government of Nova Scotia pointed out the way to help, this government flatly refused to come through. The Minister of National Health and Welfare, although paying lip service to the people of Cape Breton, has not accepted his responsibilities any more than the Prime Minister has. I see the minister over there in his seat. I might say also that when the earlier vote was taken last week I drew to the Chairman's attention the fact that the Minister of National Health and Welfare had slipped in and voted illegally along with a few other Liberals. I would say therefore they stole one vote that day, and lost the other two.

It is regrettable that so many cabinet ministers are absent. I would have liked to give the Minister of Corporate and Consumer Affairs (Mr. Turner) a chance to rise again. However, it seems these ministers only get to their feet when they think they have a question of privilege. They do not have the intestinal fortitude to get up and defend their position. How many ministers or members on that side have defended the position of this government? As a matter of fact, it is rumoured the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Stewart) has stated outside the house that he agrees with the position taken by the opposition, and that the Prime Minister should have gone to the Governor General.

As I say, it is regrettable that so many of the ministers who should be defending this government are not present. The other evening when the leader of the New Democratic party was speaking he made some reference to the Minister of Finance. Then he spoke about another minister, and the moment he referred to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Trudeau) that minister jumped up and ran from the house. He could not stand the heat either. This is the man who is supposed to be operating on a much higher plane, as a constitutional expert. However we have not heard a word from him in this house, he has been spending too much time before the cameras. A week ago every time we looked at television we saw the Minister of Justice rushing forward. However, in the last few days we have had another view of him, and he was running away from the cameras.

The Minister of Justice was running away because, as a constitutional expert, he knows very well that he cannot defend the position of this government. If time permitted, Mr. Speaker, I should have liked to quote some of the things this minister has had to say about his present leader. However, time does not permit. If the Minister of Corporate and Consumer Affairs feels he has a question of privilege because he was quoted in the house about his wish to run as opposition leader, then I may tell him this indicates how wrong cabinet ministers can be. They do not know when they have a question of privilege or when they do not. The fact remains that the minister has been quoted in the press to this effect, although he may have made the statement with tongue in cheek. The fact is that this idea has gone through his mind, and this is the destiny he sees for the leader of the Liberal party. It is a destiny which has been earned.

The lip, or the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene), is not in his seat. He is usually interjecting.

An hon. Member: Joe, the lip.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): He takes exception to any reference made to the fact he is campaigning around the country. This is the same minister who told a television audience in Halifax that at that particular time the most important thing facing the Canadian nation was unity. You can imagine the kind of leadership he will give the country.

Mr. Turner: You have two more minutes.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): There is always tomorrow, for at least this side of the house. This Minister of Agriculture thinks along the same lines as the Minister of Corporate and Consumer Affairs. It is not too long ago that he put his foot in his mouth, and shouted at a member from this side of the house who was persistent in asking a question, that the member was trying to work his way into the cabinet. This answer indicated the Minister of Agriculture also realizes the Liberals are doomed to be in opposition, and there is going to be a cabinet formed by our party. I want to say, in all fairness to my leader, that he made it quite clear to this house he has no wish to be Prime Minister of this country unless he has the support of the Canadian people. It is just this challenge from which the Grits are running.

Outside the house the Prime Minister has said that there was a plot. You know, Mr. Speaker, that every time there is a recorded vote it is the duty of the whips of the various parties to gather together all their members. After making a statement outside the house about a plot, the Prime Minister came into the house and said there was no collusion, but that there had been collusion developed in the last couple of days. He could not face the opposition and make those charges in the house. In the house he said there was no collusion; the whips had done their duty. The Minister of Finance did not make his move until he was advised by his own whip that there were enough members present. Then we have the spectacle of a minister going outside the house and blaming one of his colleagues, the Minister of Transport. I believe he deserves all the blame he gets.

May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, February 27, 1968

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CAOUETTE—NEWSPAPER CRITICISM OF PARTY POSITION

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

I have been since last Thursday, and still am, a butt for virulent insinuations on the part of unscrupulous journalists, both French and English-speaking, who criticize the stand we took Wednesday with regard to the motion now before the house.

Mr. Speaker, I am accused of having made a bargain with the government. People wonder what happened between Monday and Wednesday to bring about a change in attitude on the part of the leader of the Ralliement des Créditistes and his group. Mr. Speaker, I will answer that what happened between Monday and Wednesday is simply that the motion now under consideration was introduced in the house, and that is all.

When, in the newspaper Le Devoir, Mr. Claude Ryan states that I met with the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Marchand) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin), he is lying baldly and dishonestly. The same is true for the other journalists who wrote the same thing. I exchanged only a few words with the Secretary of State for External Affairs who asked me if we were opposed to the motion being discussed immediately after its introduction on Wednesday, disregarding the 48-hour notice required by the rules of the house. That was the only thing discussed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and myself. At that time, I gave my word to the effect that we did not see any objection to the motion being discussed last Wednesday.

Therefore, newspapermen or members of other parties who attribute us bad intentions are acting dishonestly and I must say emphatically that our position has not been the object of any bargaining. Moreover, to those who asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) whether he had offered to make me a senator I could have said: There are eight vacancies in the other place; we are eight members of the Ralliement Créditiste, and we are quite willing to fill those vacancies. But that was not the case.

To those who asked me whether the Prime Minister had offered me trips at the expense of the state, I must reply that I can travel abroad without my emoluments as member of parliament and without the intervention of any government.

So, I want to protest strongly against such dishonest and malevolent insinuations made by the press. May I add, Mr. Speaker, that my reputation, my integrity and my honesty are comparable to those of all the people who are now writing against me.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have received notice of a second question of privilege from the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre.

MR. CHURCHILL—ANNOUNCEMENT OF CHANGE IN PARTY AFFILIATION

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege to announce that it is my intention to sit in the house as an independent Conservative.

I am taking this step after careful and long consideration, and with deep regret. The issue before the house is so fundamental to our parliamentary system and so dangerous to our freedom that I cannot justify to my conscience to surrender now of part of our freedom in the hope that it may be regained at some uncertain time in the future. That runs counter to my experience of life and to my understanding of mankind's long and painful struggle for freedom. The decision of the Progressive Conservative party to capitulate at this time is so contrary to the principles of the party, as I understand them, that I prefer to have complete freedom to express my views in the debate without embarrassment to my colleagues.

Inquiries of the Ministry

• (2:40 p.m.)

At the earliest convenient opportunity I will meet with the members of the executive of the Progressive Conservative party of Winnipeg South Centre and in consultation with them take whatever action is considered appropriate.

I shall continue to maintain a friendly and sympathetic interest in the Conservative party, in the hope that at some time in the future it will once again command my steadfast and unswerving support.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day. The hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacInnis).

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

QUEBEC—IMPRISONMENT OF TWO ACCUSED PERSONS WITHOUT TRIAL

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to rise on a question of privilege?

Mr. Grégoire: Just on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Our standing orders provide for a question period and since you just called the orders of the day, I was rising to ask a question before we proceed with the orders of the day.

I have precisely a question to put to the hon. Minister of Justice—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will admit that since the other day, apparently by tacit agreement among the hon. members, there has been no question period. I believe that it is still the wish of the house.

Mr. Grégoire: No, Mr. Speaker, there has been no formal or informal agreement on that matter. No motion to that effect has been put before the house and I have never heard of such an agreement, tacit or otherwise.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member has a question to ask, he should put it immediately, in order to settle the matter.

Mr. Grégoire: I have one question to put, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I even have two.

I should like to put my first question to the hon. Minister of Justice.

In view of the fact that two Montrealers, Vallières and Gagnon, have been detained in prison for a year and a half, without even an opportunity for trial, which is further delayed—

[English]

Mr. Starr: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps before the hon. member for Ontario raises a point of order I might tell the hon. member for Lapointe that he is asking a question about a matter which is clearly sub judice. He is referring to a trial which is now in progress in Montreal. I believe the question is out of order.

Mr. Starr: My point of order is this, Mr. Speaker. You had passed orders of the day, the Assistant Clerk had read the motion, and you had recognized the hon. member for Cape Breton South. There was no need to revert to another order of procedure.

Mr. Speaker: I am in agreement with the hon. member, but it was just to facilitate the progress of business this afternoon that I thought I would allow the hon. member to ask a question. I have told him that the question is not in order. I suggest to the hon. member that I can hardly perceive of any question which is so urgent it might not wait a day or so before being put.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, the standing orders are there and I ask that they be adhered to. Under the heading "Order of business", a forty minute question period is provided for on Tuesday. The clerk of the house has not read the orders of the day or the matter to be discussed. As soon as you said "Orders of the day", I rose and said: "Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question."

Under the standing orders, there should be a question period and I have every right to put a question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will agree that I have allowed him, nevertheless, to put his question.

On the other hand, the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr) made a quite legitimate point, suggesting that I had already called the orders of the day.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, you call the orders of the day every day at the beginning of the question period. It was at that point that I rose.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[English]

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the house will again agree to facilitate the work of the house and the task of the Chair. The hon. member said he had two questions. One is out of order but we have not heard the other.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: I do not need the consent of the other members. I am in order and I do not need anyone's consent to put questions.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member could perhaps put his question.

Mr. Grégoire: I wish to put my question. There is no question at all of sub judice.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that he may not allude to that subject. It is clearly out of order.

Mr. Grégoire: I was not alluding to it Mr. Speaker. If you will listen to my question, you will see that the point I want to bring up is—

[English]

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. If the hon. member wishes to go to the orders of the day then I think he needs the unanimous consent of the house. He is not going to get it at this time, because we are now engaging in a debate that is before the house.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members appreciate that it is so difficult to know at exactly what point orders of the day are called or are not called. It seems to me it would be easier for all concerned to allow the hon. member to ask his question.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: It is a matter of common sense, I suggest to hon. members.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I know the difference between what is sub judice and what is not. If you will allow me to put my question, you will see that it is very important, because two Montrealers have been detained in prison for a year and a half without having been allowed a trial—

[English]

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member for Cape Breton South kindly assist me? I will recognize him in a moment. I should like to give the hon. member for Lapointe an opportunity to explain to me his question.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I wish to put my question as follows: Since two Montrealers, Gagnon and Vallières, have been in jail for a year and a half, without being brought to trial and since the case has been adjourned sine die, I would like to ask the Minister of Justice whether he intends to use the Bill of Rights, so that both individuals may be brought to trial immediately or granted bail.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must maintain the ruling which I gave a moment ago.

[English]

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I respectfully submit that the question raised by the hon. member for Lapointe is of the most fundamental importance. Apparently some young men have been held without trial for 18 months. I submit the minister should be asked whether he will deal with this matter.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I read reports of the trial this morning, but I have to go by the information I have. If I am wrong, then after considering the matter further perhaps the question can be permitted tomorrow.

LABOUR RELATIONS

SUGGESTED DELAY IN CONSIDERATION OF APPLICATIONS BEFORE BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct another question—

Some hon. Members: Order. Sit down.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, a 40-minute period is allowed for questions and I wish to direct another question to the Minister of Labour.

In view of the fact that the Canada Labour Relations Board has made a decision on a matter now under consideration by a committee of the house, does the minister intend to ask the Canada Labour Relations Board to postpone the implementation of this decision until the legislation is passed here?

Mr. Speaker: I think this question could be placed on the order paper.

Motion Respecting House Vote

BILINGUALISM AND BICULTURALISM

INQUIRY AS TO FURTHER REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I have a further question to ask.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is overtaxing the patience of the house as well as my own.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, if there are other members who have questions to ask, they are free to do so, but I think that there is a 40-minute period allowed for the questions. I should like to direct a question, which I think is urgent, to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Could the right hon. Prime Minister tell us whether it is true the Laurendeau-Dunton commission has refused to issue the second part of its report on bilingualism and biculturalism?

Mr. Speaker: I would suggest this question is not of an urgent nature and should be put on the order paper.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION RESPECTING HOUSE VOTE ON BILL C-193

The house resumed, from Monday, February 26, consideration of the motion of the Prime Minister:

That this house does not regard its vote on February 19th in connection with third reading of Bill C-193, which had carried in all previous stages, as a vote of non-confidence in the government.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before calling on the hon. member for Cape Breton South may I thank the house for its forbearance and assistance to the Chair.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, the house will understand how difficult it is for me to speak on this occasion. The actions of this government have caused an hon. member of this house who has given long, devoted and loyal service to his party to resign from that party. I am sure my colleagues agree that his association with our party has made him much beloved.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I trust that the defendants in this trial—and it is a trial; it was so referred to by the Minister of Finance—will remain in their seats longer this afternoon than they remained yesterday afternoon. Yesterday, when there was too much heat in the kitchen, some of them scurried away. I refer particularly to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I hope that more than two cabinet ministers will remain to hear what is being said.

It was unfortunate that the hon. member for Lapointe should raise the matter of two men being held in jail. Though this government could help them, they are being held in jail. But then this government should not be entirely condemned for its attitude; after all, its actions on the other side of the ledger tend to even the score. I am referring to a former Liberal member who was made a judge. He was tried, sentenced to two years in prison, and he has not served a day of that time up to the present. Despite his conviction this government continues to pay him his salary.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hope the hon. member will be cautious in his remarks relating to the judiciary.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, if I must remain cautious in my remarks about a man who has been—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I ought to have added that the matter the hon. member has referred to is also before the courts.

An hon. Member: It is under appeal.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I will not say any more except that there is a precedent in this house, with this matter already having been referred to.

I want to speak about the government and about the make-up of the cabinet in which we are asked to vote confidence. Last night I was reviewing the divisions in the Liberal party that have been apparent for a number of years, and I referred to members of cabinet. For the Prime Minister's benefit I shall repeat some of the things I said.

The Minister of Forestry and Rural Development (Mr. Sauvé) spoke in the west about the phasing out of the Sydney steel operation. At the same time in the House of Commons the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) was saying that it would be ridiculous for the government to make plans. Another example of division was when the Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh) refused to sit next to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Laing). The cabinet blamed the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) for prodding the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) into that fatal move last Monday night. Outside the house the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) said the Minister of Transport started the prodding.

Despite the Prime Minister's utterances outside the house about a plot, the Minister of Finance responded to prodding on that Monday night. For the Prime Minister to charge a plot is ridiculous. That is a most dishonest approach, especially when one considers what the Prime Minister had to say when he returned to the house. As I remember, his opening remarks were that there had been no collusion. That statement does not tie in with what he said to the Canadian people about a plot.

They tried their best to prove that the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Coates) had made this statement. A tape was made; that tape was taken to the Prime Minister's office and checked, and they found that the reference to the plot was not what they were looking for, so they did not push that. They went back to the house and said there was no collusion. But there was collusion outside the house, by their own admission. The hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) explained before a television audience that the only conversation he had held with a minister of the government was when he bumped into one in a television studio. Yet in the press the same day the Prime Minister was reported as saying that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) had talked this matter over with the hon. member for Villeneuve. There is collusion, Mr. Prime Minister, and you are up to your neck in it.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member must address his remarks to the Chair.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, there is collusion and the Prime Minister is up to his neck in it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): The right hon. gentleman seems to think this matter is rather amusing. It is not amusing when we think of the state of affairs he has brought about and which we have witnessed in this house the last few days. It is not amusing when we consider what has happened to an hon. member of this house. It is not amusing when we examine what the right hon. gentleman's own supporters and ministers are doing.

It is my understanding that the Liberals, especially those who are running for the leadership, are under instructions to keep their mouths shut. They have been told "Don't get into this debate; keep your noses clean". There was a row about the fact that the Minister of Finance was the only candidate to get into this debate. Hon. members opposite are fighting this issue among themselves, as they are fighting many other issues among themselves.

It must be interesting to the Prime Minister to read the only speech made by a Liberal member in this house yesterday, in the course of which he expressed the hope that the new Liberal leader would bring about true Liberalism in this country. What are the ministers of the crown doing? They are criticizing the leadership all the way. Take the Prime Minister's seatmate, his old friend the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Jack Benny of the Liberal party. What has he had to say about the Prime Minister's leadership? In Halifax he told Nova Scotia Liberals that what the Liberal party needs today is strong leadership. If that is not a reflection on the present Liberal leadership, what is it? It is bound to be a reflection on the Prime Minister. I could go along the line and pick out contradictions by each and every one of those ministers opposite, one against the other.

Not long ago we were witnesses to one of the most unusual spectacles we have seen in this house in a long time, certainly since I have been here, when we saw two Liberal ministers standing up in this chamber and taking opposite sides on a vote. Yet the Prime Minister talks about unity and solidarity within the cabinet. Mr. Speaker, they have been split down the middle a dozen ways for the last five years.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs is not the only party member who has been talking about the leadership. And while I am speaking about the minister for external affairs let me point out that he is now obliged to go to the convention bearing the cross of an alliance with the Créditistes. Despite what his tactics may have been before this particular development, the fact that there has been collusion between the Liberals and the Créditiste party is a cross which he will not be able to carry to the Liberal convention and survive; and this cross has been placed on his shoulders by none other than his old friend the Prime Minister. With friends like that, who needs enemies.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs says the time has come for strong leadership, a reflection on the present leadership. Then there is the Minister of Finance, who said in Halifax weeks ago, long before this particular crisis developed, "Some of my colleagues won't speak to me." All this is recorded for posterity; it was a statement made over national television. If any minister wishes to get up and deny the accusations I am making, which reflect on the Prime Minister and the Liberal leadership, he is free to do so and I will come forward with the proof.

Some of the cabinet ministers have continually contradicted statements made outside this house. Last night, during the few moments that were at my disposal, I thought for a minute that that great expert on the constitution, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Trudeau), was going to rise and have something to say. The other day I noticed that when the leader of the New Democratic party mentioned his name he picked up his papers and rushed from the house, and he was still rushing when he got out where the television cameras were because he was climbing over the balcony to get away from the very thing he was courting the week before.

That constitutional expert has not opened his mouth on this crisis. Not one minister opposite has got up and done anything in the way of supporting the motion brought forward by the Prime Minister. Why? It is because they agree that the leadership they are getting is weak. What is this fight all about? It is only about one thing, to save Pearson's face. It is the Pearson pride. Some time ago it was indicated that the Prime Minister had every intention of retiring. What we are doing now is only holding back that retirement for a month or so. The Prime Minister went before the Canadian people and said there would have to be an election soon. June was mentioned. September was mentioned. In the same breath he said that a decision on an election would have to be made by the new leader of the Liberal party.

What do we hear from that potential leader over there, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer)? He should be ashamed of the situation where he has been accused of something in this house, but he does not have the intestinal fortitude to get up and defend his government's position. Of course lack of intestinal fortitude is something that minister has shown all along. Here is a potential leader of the Liberal party who says he would not call an election before 1969.

We also have the Minister of Finance as a potential leader, and he too says he would not call an election before 1969. We also have an outsider running for the Liberal leadership; and when I say outsider I mean outside that particular group over there, and I think that is a good thing. These potential leaders of the Liberal party say they would postpone an election until 1969, but the present leader says that eventually the people of the country will have to decide this issue.

What is the issue? We are asked to vote confidence in a government the members of which do not have confidence in one another. You name a minister and I will get you a contradiction from another minister. They don't even sit together any more. We had to rearrange the seating in this house for them. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen), taking advantage of the fact that he is a potential leader of the party, cast reflections on two other ministers. When the Minister of Finance was asked the question directly as to whether the Minister of Transport had prodded him into his present situation he would not confirm it. I say again that accusation was in the question, but the minister would not confirm it.

So what do we have? We have potential leaders of the Liberal party who, despite the fact that they were told by the Prime Minister to stay close to Ottawa, did not. The Prime Minister takes himself off to Jamaica, running away from the responsibility which was handed to him by the Canadian people in 1965 and which he could have carried until 1970. He continually runs away from this responsibility. There has been absolutely no direction. No responsibility is shown by the Prime Minister. He comes back to this house and says one thing to it, and something else to the people of Canada over television.

I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, to see that the Prime Minister is leaving the chamber. I would like to quote one of his own remarks to him before he goes. We have been faced with dishonest answers in this house, these coming from the Prime Minister himself. Hon. members opposite can run back and tell him about this. He stood up in this house and gave dishonest information to the house on more than one occasion. I will relate briefly—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member should be cautioned again on his language. I think he is certainly not helping parliament or the House of Commons by using language that is perhaps a bit strong in the circumstances.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I assure you I am being very cautious, and my caution is supported by the written word in the Hansard record. If you want me to cite one case it is backed up by the recorded words in Hansard. It was a case not too long ago when the Prime Minister, in excusing the absence of one of his ministers, said that minister was indisposed and under his doctor's orders. But the next day we had the very minister in question come in and explain his absence by telling the house he was escorting the Shah of Iran. Just try to tell me I cannot back up my accusations that we have dishonest statements, that we have dishonest government, a government that is leading this country down the road to ruin.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I do not propose at any time to make statements in this house that cannot be verified by the records, statements that show that members of this cabinet day after day have been contradicting one another. I would like to wrap up on this note, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Thank you, gentlemen; I am glad you appreciate it. Now that they have enticed me to make one more remark I might say for the benefit of Liberal supporters in this house that their discipline is not what it appears to be at all. Discipline is not discipline if it is brought about by either a promise or a threat. The discipline shown by the Liberal party here today can be brought about with some members by the fact that possibly you are going to have your pensions doubled; or then again the discipline may be brought about by the fact that you are faced with the threat that your franking privileges will be cut off or your transportation privileges will be removed. A bunch of sheep—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, it is with a genuine feeling of regret that I rise to speak on this matter at this time. I regret being compelled to speak upon a question that I do not believe has any proper place in the order of house business at this time. Most of all, Mr. Speaker, I regret what the government have done to the constitution of parliament and the theory and practice of parliamentary democratic government by their brazen determination to cling to power. In their obsession with office, their arrogant assumption that they and they alone have a right to govern, they have debased parliament and degraded every member forced by their stubborn attitude to take part in these proceedings.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McIntosh: We saw something of that this afternoon. Their course is clear following their defeat on a major item of budgetary policy in the House of Commons. They should get out, and not stand upon the order of their going. From a layman's point of view, Mr. Speaker, I contend that you should not have allowed or ordered this motion, worded as it is, to come before this house for consideration. It is a direct contravention of standing order 35 of the House of Commons, which reads in part:

> No member may reflect upon any vote of the house, except for the purpose of moving that such vote be rescinded.

I repeat the last part of that:

> —except for the purpose of moving that such vote be rescinded.

It is difficult for me, Mr. Speaker, to believe that you have prior knowledge from the government that it is their purpose to rescind the vote if this motion is carried, or even if it is defeated. I ask myself, Mr. Speaker, why then did you allow this motion to come before the house?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to bring to the hon. member's attention that it is entirely out of order, and certainly against the most basic principles of parliamentary procedure, to speak or reflect on the Speaker's position in the way the hon. member is doing now.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Speaker, with all deference I will read the order if you—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand the point made by the hon. member. He is referring to the procedural aspect of it. He can do that without bringing the Speaker into the argument.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Speaker, you are the only authority I recognize in the house at the present time. You ordered that this motion come before the house for consideration. At the present time I am considering this motion. You are the only symbol of parliamentary authority left in this country at the present time. I realize that you know the rules better than I do, yet you did not protest or even mention rule 35 when this motion was placed on the order paper; in fact you ordered it be considered.

I am not only casting a reflection on the vote but am wondering, in view of standing order 35, why the Prime Minister was allowed to reflect on the vote of Monday night on a number of occasions during the debate. Even in his opening remarks the Prime Minister reflected on the vote. This was contrary to standing order 35. If the purpose of the motion is not to rescind the vote that was taken in the house on February 19, is there some other rule or procedure which automatically allows the government to rescind the vote which was taken on Bill No. C-193 regardless of how the decision is made on this motion? As reported at page 6923 of Hansard for February 23 the Prime Minister said this:

So far as third reading is concerned they are more emphatic. Erskine May, whom we hear quoted a great deal in the house, has this to say in his seventeenth edition at page 571:

"If the question 'that the bill be now read a third time' "—

This was the question dealt with last Monday night.

"—is negatived, such a vote is not only not necessarily a matter of confidence but is not even necessarily fatal to the further progress of the bill."

We have made it quite clear we are not going to ask for further progress on that bill—

I find the last four lines of that quotation very strange. I shall repeat them:

"—but is not even necessarily fatal to the further progress of the bill".

We have made it quite clear we are not going to ask for further progress on that bill—

Does the fact that we have debated the motion and are willing to take a vote on it now mean that the vote on Bill No. C-193 is automatically rescinded? Much has been said about the strange wording of the motion itself. I ask whether there is any relationship between the unusual wording of this motion and the remarks of the Prime Minister which I have quoted and which I shall repeat:

"—but is not even necessarily fatal to the further progress of the bill".

[Mr. McIntosh.]

It is because of this doubt that I cannot vote either for or against the motion, if you as Speaker of the Canadian parliament insist or rule that the motion be put. I also believe that the procedure and the conduct on the part of the government which has been allowed in this house since Monday night are a threat to the supremacy of parliament; because if we proceed with this motion to its conclusion never again will any negative vote against this government or any Canadian government have any meaning. The issue in question could always be forced on parliament for reconsideration after a 48 hour interval. This is the second reason that I cannot vote either for or against the motion which is before the house.

As recorded at page 6921 of Hansard you ordered, Mr. Speaker, that this motion be considered. I think this is a trap that will destroy parliament. I wish to draw your attention to a speech by the hon. member for Queens (Mr. MacLean). This speech was made some years ago and will be found at page 4557 of Hansard for June 8, 1955. To me it has a strange relationship to our present debate. With your permission I shall read part of it:

Hitler gained his first important position of power by the passage of a bill in the German parliament. It was a simple bill, and it was said that its provisions would not need to be used and it would do no harm. Just as we have been told now, it was said that the rights of parliament, would not be disturbed or lessened. When I listened to the explanations given by several members of the government—I say this in all sincerity—they unwittingly and by absolute chance reminded me of Hitler's statement in the German parliament when he introduced the enabling bill of which I am speaking. I took the trouble to look up his speech, and these were Hitler's words on that occasion:

"The government will only make use of these powers in so far as they are essential for carrying out vitally necessary measures. Neither the existence of the Reichstag nor that of the Reischrat is menaced".

It would not interfere with either houses of parliament.

"The position and rights of the president remain unaffected. It will always be the foremost task of the government to act in harmony with his aims. The separate existence of the federal states will not be done away with".

In other words it would not interfere with the rights of the provinces.

"The rights of the churches will not be diminished, and their relationship to the state will not be modified. The number of cases in which an internal necessity exists for having recourse to such a law is in itself a limited one".

The law is justified because the occasions on which you could possibly use it are few and far between.

"All the more, however, the government insist upon the passing of the law. They prefer a clear decision".

Every sentence in that statement has a familiar ring.

It is because I believe in the democratic way of life which was established by our forefathers that I think it behooves us to protect that way of life by retaining our parliamentary system which has been gained with such great difficulty. I feel sincerely that these things must be protected, not only by means of war or military defence but also by the exercise of unspectacular and tedious methods through the use of free speech and seeing that no undemocratic bits of legislation creep into our code of law.

I say again this has a strange relationship to the topic we are discussing at the present time. I am a Conservative because I believe in the principles of this party. There are six principles, three of which I should like to bring to the attention of the house because I believe they have reference to this debate. The first is, preserving the freedom of the citizen. The second is, promoting the development of Canada; and the third is, upholding the supremacy of parliament. I ask myself whether the motion has anything to do with any of these three principles. The strange wording of the motion is as follows:

That this house does not regard its vote on February 19th in connection with third reading of Bill C-193 which had carried in all previous stages, as a vote of non-confidence in the government.

I am of the opinion that a vote on such a motion would be a violation of the three principles I have enunciated. Certainly the freedom of the individual will be diminished. Nothing is more fundamental than the defeat of a tax bill which would interfere with the development of our country. The 5 per cent surtax that went into effect on January 1, and which is vital to the government's policy, was defeated by a vote of this parliament.

There is no doubt that the supremacy of parliament is at stake. Practically every newspaper editor in the country has voiced this opinion. A vote of confidence should not be allowed. This becomes an issue of the supremacy of parliament, and parliament has already expressed its opinion in this regard. We as Canadians believe that parliament is greater than any government or any party.

In keeping with democratic traditions and principles the Prime Minister is duty bound to have the government resign. In fact he has only one more duty to perform, and that is to consult with the Governor General. That is the reason we are here. That is the reason we are giving consideration to the motion that Your Honour allowed to be placed on the order paper.

Much will be said by the constitutional experts on the validity of the motion before us. Many precedents will be presented and debated by the legal experts. The same precedents will be used by both sides in an effort to prove their points. Precedents, like statistics taken from the same source, can be used in an effort to prove both arguments. I intend in a few moments to put some of these precedents on the record. The interpretation of words will no doubt be questioned in the debate by the experts. In fact I have questioned the interpretation of words in our standing orders of the house.

As I said, I am not a legal expert. I asked you, Mr. Speaker, why you allowed this motion to be put on the order paper. Operative words such as those quoted by Dr. Eugene Forsey a few days ago will be questioned. I admit that Dr. Forsey is considered a constitutional authority, and suggest that he should have been asked whether he considers the defeat of Bill C-193 vital to government policy. I am pretty sure his answer would be very interesting.

This is one of the questions the ordinary man on the street, whom I represent, is asking. This is one of the questions that we as backbenchers are asking. Very few of us, as I said before, are legally trained or qualified to enter into a constitutional debate. We, like the ordinary man on the street, look for simple ground rules to follow. An editorial in the Globe and Mail of February 22, under the heading "Breaking Rules for Power" has this to say in part:

The ground rules on which a Canadian government stands or falls are so well known that the Canada Year Book for 1967, published under the authority of Trade and Commerce Minister Robert Winters, was able to state without qualification: "When the cabinet (the government) suffers defeat on a government bill or a vote of censure or on a motion of want of confidence in the Commons, the existing government or cabinet must either resign or request a dissolution from the Governor General."

This is taught to all our students right across Canada. This is commonly understood. It is language that the man on the street understands. It is language that I understand.

Mr. Crouse: Everybody but a Liberal.

Mr. McIntosh: The ordinary, reasonable man on the street, that is the Canadian public, concludes that the government or cabinet must either resign or request dissolution from the Governor General.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McIntosh: This editorialist further states that in his opinion the motion now before the house is a contravention of the house rules, and completes his editorial with these words:

> The only answer is dissolution, and the sooner the better.

I paraphrase my leader's remarks of the other day in the house, and say that this government has no right to put any business before the house, including a motion of confidence. It was defeated on a bill to raise taxes, a fundamental part of the government's program. This was a defeat clearly involving a loss of confidence of the house. The constitutional practice must be respected. It is fundamental to our constitution that the loss of such a fundamental vote of confidence involves resignation or a recommendation for dissolution.

The ordinary man on the street does not believe that the defeat of the government on a budget tax measure, moved by the Minister of Finance, can be anything but a convincing show of lack of confidence in the government by his representatives in parliament. Related to this issue, and clearly understood by the Canadian public, is the government's extravagance, so clearly shown by the Auditor General's report and the recent estimates. They show a sharp increase in most government spending programs. We now have serious inflation, astronomical interest rates, tight money and growing unemployment. As serious as these matters are, they are now exceeded by the political crisis facing parliament, because the supremacy of parliament is what is at stake; Canadian individual freedom is in jeopardy. An editorial in the Toronto Telegram of February 21 states in part:

> The government is now badly split between men of conscience and those who would cling to office by any possible means or device.

The editorial also states that the Prime Minister is taking advice from those of his colleagues who would cling to the remnants of power no matter what the cost. The Prime Minister's determination to resort to these tactics puts the responsibility on members of parliament to uphold the institution to which they were elected. If the government is upheld, then parliament becomes nothing more than a rubber stamp.

If the house does not have full and final control over money bills, it has full and final control over nothing. The members of this house cannot be asked to play the part of a scapegoat to assume blame for the government's mistakes. I am quite confident that the people I represent in the constituency of Swift Current-Maple Creek would be bitterly disappointed if they thought they had elected as a member, from any party, one whose only obligation to them was to act as a scapegoat or a rubber stamp. If there was any idea that such was the function of a member of parliament, I know the party which I support would have had a different candidate.

Such action to my mind completely destroys our democratic process. The whole process behind our form of government is that parliament has ways and means to safeguard the people against the executive branch, who may think it desirable to rule in a dictatorial manner. This is what they are trying to do, rule in a dictatorial manner. It is our duty as members of parliament, I say again, to protect the people against such a process. Winston Churchill once said:

> Democracy is the worst form of government ever devised by man—except all others.

It is the best we have, and we must protect it. Asking the house to ignore Monday's vote makes a mockery of the House of Commons. Ignoring the vote strikes at the very heart and essence of constitutional democracy and responsible government. I can understand the attitude of the Prime Minister and the government in attempting to get around the decisive vote against them on Monday evening. They are so desperate to remain in power that they are willing to distort fact, defy precedent and constitutional practice to do so. I can understand them, Mr. Speaker, but I cannot agree with them nor can I condone their action.

My understanding of their argument is that they claim their defeat was an unfortunate and ridiculous accident, something abnormal and not quite cricket. They further claim, as I understand it, that whatever happened on Monday night, the question upon which they met defeat does not properly constitute a question of lack of confidence.

My understanding of their case as advanced so far is that they now wish to ask this house to reverse itself, to erase the entire proceedings of black Monday and stop trying to interfere with the Liberal party's God-given right to govern Canada. Given such arrogance, it is a wonder they stopped short where they did. With such a vain and distorted viewpoint we might have expected them to bring in a motion of censure against the opposition for having the temerity to defeat them, or even a motion of contempt of parliament.

As I said at the outset, Mr. Speaker, I find it impossible either to agree with them or to pardon their stubborn arrogance. I recall to the Prime Minister the injunction of Oliver Cromwell, another vain and dictatorial figure:

I beseech you, in the bowels of Christ, think it possible that you may be mistaken.

The government's position, as I conceive it, is that Monday's vote was an accident, third reading is really not an important stage of the bill, and in any event the substance of the bill was not sufficiently important for the vote to be considered a question of confidence in the administration. If you will recall, Mr. Speaker, the measure in question was opposed on second reading and throughout the committee stage. There was consistent and growing opposition throughout the different stages of the bill. It simply reached its climax in the final stage on third reading. The crucial stage in the passage of any measure through the house is the final stage. We should all recall that defeat almost came about a few hours earlier on that day on a vote in the committee stage. It was not a freak occurrence, not an accident, nor, least of all, the result of a sinister plot, as has been implied by some of the more desperate ministers opposite. Third reading is as important a stage in our parliamentary procedure as any other and that is why we have third reading.

Let me say in addition that the vote was taken in the midst of a normal working day. There was no opportunity for surprise or skulduggery. Let us get that perfectly clear. The vote against the government was won by the majority of members present and voting. Surely the only valid criterion for parliamentary business is just that. If we believed what the Prime Minister said we would have to wait for 100 per cent attendance before any measure became legal, which is a ridiculous idea.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): What about the capital punishment bill?

Mr. McIntosh: The attitude of the government throughout has been that the vote on this question need not be taken as indicating a lack of confidence in the administration. Sir Ivor Jennings, one of the recognized constitutional authorities, has this to say on page 146 of his book, "The British Constitution":

With very rare exceptions, all questions in the House of Commons are matters of confidence.

Dr. Michel Ameller, a distinguished European constitutional scholar, in 1966 prepared a study, called simply "Parliaments", of parliamentary usage in 55 nations for the interparliamentary union. At page 281 of the book he wrote:

The practice today in Great Britain, and generally speaking in all countries influenced by Great Britain, is to regard a vote hostile to the government's policy or administration as a matter of confidence.

The late Professor Harold J. Laski, who needs no introduction by me, wrote at page 184 of his "Parliamentary Government in England":

The defeat of the cabinet by the house involves either a dissolution of parliament or the resignation of the cabinet if it takes place upon a major issue.

Another equally well known and well qualified authority, Byrum E. Carter, in his book "The Office of the Prime Minister", wrote the following at page 258:

—parliament may bring down any government by the simple expedient of withdrawing its support, either through the passage of an outright vote of no confidence, or through the defeat of a major proposal made by the government.

Such unanimity among authorities in any field is rare, but there appears to be a high degree of unanimity on this point among specialists in parliamentary practice. All say there are few exceptions and no exceptions when the vehicle of the government's defeat is a major one.

To be even more exact let me return to Dr. Ameller in his book, "Parliaments", where he wrote the following at page 281:

—the passing of the budget is the most important test of parliamentary confidence in the government.

I should like to remind Your Honour that Dr. Ameller was summing up his studies of the parliamentary practices and customs of 55 democratic nations.

From what I have quoted it may be clearly seen that after such a formally recorded defeat in the House of Commons not only must the government leave office but they have no choice whether they do or not. Once that vote has been officially registered in the records of the house, as it was, they have not even the luxury of deciding whether or not it was a vote of confidence. The only reason that parliament is sitting here today is that you, sir, have allowed a motion to be put on the order paper.

As I stated before, the Prime Minister has only one more move to make and that is to go to the Governor General. The government is out, however long it takes them to go through the formal steps of resignation. It is finished. Just to drive home the point that the Prime Minister and his cabinet have no freedom of choice in deciding and are bound to get out, let me quote from one more textbook, "How Are We Governed?", written by Professor John T. Saywell of York University and Professor John C. Ricker of the University of Toronto. We find the following statement on page 53:

> These ministers, or the cabinet as they are collectively called, are in turn responsible to the House of Commons and can hold office as advisers to the crown only as long as they are supported by the elected house.
> If they are defeated in an election or in the House of Commons, they must resign.

Again, we find the following statement on page 68:

> The house can indicate its displeasure by defeating a government measure or simply by passing a motion of lack of confidence in the ministry. In such cases, the Prime Minister has no alternative but to hand in his resignation to the Governor General or ask for dissolution.

In the light of this great breadth of authoritative opinion I cannot accept that this government has the right, after Monday evening, February 19, to bring in any business whatsoever or even to pretend to office. Their course is clear and they have no legal or constitutional choice but to resign or dissolve.

In the past few days one government apologist after another has come forward to plead that what happened on the floor of the house on Monday evening was all a terrible mistake, an unfortunate accident, a minor setback, an unimportant snag that had no real constitutional implications and carried with it no compulsion upon the government to act. What happened on that eventful evening? What are the facts as recorded in Hansard? The bare fact is that the government was defeated on a major money bill by the combined efforts of all opposition parties.

I heard the Prime Minister on television on Tuesday evening trying to explain the comparative unimportance of that vote, and I will not go now into the question of the accommodation accorded by our leader to the Prime Minister on his speedy return from Jamaica. This is another story which should be told at great length. The Prime Minister said on Tuesday that the bill had been passed through all stages up to third reading before being narrowly defeated on the final vote. His main point was that this was a freak accident which never should have happened but now that it had things could be set right again by the simple expedient of revoting.

Again I draw to your attention, sir, the wording of that motion which you allowed to be placed on the order paper contrary to rule 35. The Prime Minister felt that the issue was a minor one, that the question of confidence in the government was not really involved, or if it was involved it was not fairly tested and, after all, why should we go to the bother of an election over a trifle such as a vote against the government? Let us consider the amount of money which such an election would cost the country. I have heard figures from $13 million to $30 million mentioned. Very few people in Canada today know the amount of money that the government is spending needlessly every hour, which could be spent on another election. I say it is our duty as members of the House of Commons to stop this unnecessary expenditure of money.

If the Prime Minister and his fellow apologists for the government really believe what they are saying and are not simply indulging in cynical manipulations of facts in order to enjoy the fruits of office, then they show an ignorance of the underlying and basic theory of parliamentary government, namely, that a government can continue to govern only as long as it retains the confidence of the people who gave it the power to govern in the first place. As I said before, the people are represented by members elected to the House of Commons. When a majority of these members vote against the government it seems obvious that confidence in the government has been lost. I believe that the ordinary man on the street believes in this principle, Mr. Speaker. This simple fact should be obvious even to the many members on the government side whose sympathies are with another system of government. However, I will not go into that at the moment.

Leaving aside for the moment the question of confidence in the government, the bare and inescapable fact remains that one of the principal measures of the government's legislative program is dead unless it can be reintroduced by some means unknown to me, by trickery or other unknown means which contravene rule 35. This is what I am asking you, Mr. Speaker, as the presiding officer of this body at the present time.

The importance of this measure can be judged from the fact that it was designed to heap new taxation on the Canadian people to the tune of $200 million or more in the next year and a half. According to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) when he introduced the new tax bite on November 30 last year, he expected a return of $25 million this year and $185 million in the year 1968-69. The word "peanuts" has been used in this house on various occasions. This amount may be peanuts to the Prime Minister and his free-spending colleagues, but it is a tremendous amount of money to the ordinary Canadians who would have had to pay it. We on this side of the house say it is not necessary for the government to collect this money from the people. They should cut down their spending as they have been advised to do time and time again by the opposition parties.

In the light of the increased spending outlined in the estimates now before us I wonder how the government can dismiss such a large slice of revenue so lightly? Only the great urge to retain office could explain their treatment of the defeat of the Income Tax Act amendments as a matter of minor concern, as they are apparently doing. In so far as the Prime Minister's bland explanation that the bill sailed through all stages up to third reading and only inadvertently came to grief, I suggest he should refer to Hansard to see what really happened. I realize that he was away on urgent national business and so was unlikely to know about these things at first hand.

What happened was that the tax bill was very nearly defeated while in committee only a few hours before it was defeated on third reading. There was some question about another vote on that day, but I should like to remind the house that this measure was the lynchpin of the government's program. We were told that this bill must be disposed of before the house could get an opportunity to consider other vital financial measures such as the estimates for the current fiscal year.

It is interesting to recall also that this very important matter was set down for consideration on various days last week but had to be put aside because the Minister of Finance, its sponsor, was unavoidably absent from the house on tremendously important national business. The newspapers reported that this tremendously important national business involved making speeches to assorted party audiences across the country. However, I will not argue the merits of the importance given to this bill. After all, it may well be it was as important to the nation as the receiving of an honorary degree from the University of the West Indies. In short, Mr. Speaker, no one can doubt the vital importance of this bill or that it was fairly turned down and the government rejected by a vote of this house.

The importance of the impact of this measure upon the taxpayers and the economy of the country is made obvious by the definitions to be found among constitutional and parliamentary authorities as well as the status accorded it by the government itself. As to the fairness of the vote and its standing as an expression of the house, I simply remind Your Honour that it was a formal, recorded vote of members, not in committee but on third reading. Surely the only gauge of the merit of a measure must be the result of votes cast by those present on any given sitting day.

There is no important function of government or of parliament than that concerning the raising and expenditure of money. The whole history of the evolution of our system of parliamentary democracy is one of the concern of parliament for the taxpayers' money. If this government has forgotten that they have forgotten why they are here.

Before I conclude my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say something about the deliberate attempt by the Prime Minister to couple his downgrading of this defunct bill with a gross distortion of the motives and actions of the opposition. If it had not been so vicious it would have been amusing. The Prime Minister implied, and he is an old hand at innuendo and a stranger to frankness, that the whole thing had been cooked up to embarrass the great Liberal party on the eve of its leadership convention. He went a little further than that with a statement that attempted to wring virtue from a case not in the least parallel. He said the Liberals had been gentlemanly and sporting last year when the Conservatives held their leadership convention. The Liberals had not interfered or tried to prevent it. The answer to that sanctimonious smear is simple. The Conservatives did not form the government at the time and parliament was in recess, not engaged on matters crucial to the national life of this country.

The Prime Minister's party forms the government. It and it alone controls the comings and goings of parliament and determines what matters of national business are urgent. As the leader of the country and of his party the Prime Minister knew all this quite well when he chose to announce a leisurely program for his retirement, thus throwing the gates wide open to the parliamentary chaos that has followed. The Prime Minister has often drawn attention to the skill and knowledge required to steer a minority government through several years of stormy parliamentary voyaging. Being in possession of all this skill and knowledge he must surely have been perceptive enough to have seen the reefs ahead in the narrow and dangerous political waters into which he steered his ship when he decided to stage his farewell performance. The decision to go through the process of selecting his successor was made during a period when parliament was sitting and seized with critical national business. Having set the stage and written the script, can he now blame the players?

I do not believe there is a member in this house, Mr. Speaker, who would willingly try to hamper the government party in its selection of a new leader. I know of no one, certainly no one in my party, who wishes to embarrass the government party in this regard. We realize that it is a necessary and important event in the life of a political party. We might even agree that it has some importance to the nation as a whole. But surely no one in his senses, even one as far gone in greed and arrogance as members of the cabinet, would hold that the Liberal party's leadership convention is to be placed above the well-being of Canadians and the business of the nation. The Prime Minister has the ultimate responsibility for ordering the business of the nation and for ordering the affairs of his party. If the two conflict or if one is allowed to overshadow and endanger the other, then the responsibility for that also rests squarely upon his shoulders. I hope we shall hear no more of this shallow and unworthy excuse for legitimate opposition action in this house.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me direct a sincere and honest plea to the government to think first of Canada and of parliament, to place them above their greedy desire for what, under the most favourable estimate, can only be a few weeks or months of barren and anaemic power. Perhaps this will be a vain plea, one that falls upon ears tightly stoppered against reason and decency. If this is so, and I am afraid it is, then let me direct my plea to the ordinary members of the house and urge them to act to preserve parliamentary government and advance the best interests of the country. It was the British House of Commons that many years ago effectively killed the myth of the divine right of kings to rule. Let this House of Commons kill once and for all time the myth of the divine right of the Liberal party to rule Canada.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to speak during the current session, though on a couple of occasions events occurred that impelled me to say a few words. My purpose in maintaining silence was to play my part to the end that in so far as Her Majesty's loyal opposition was concerned there would be no interference on my part that might be misconstrued in view of the change in leadership.

During the last week things have occurred that in my opinion ought not to have taken place. There is a surprising difference in the looks on the faces of those opposite today now that they know they have the support of those who see eye to eye with them—the Créditistes.

The Canadian people should have been here a week ago Monday night, Mr. Speaker. What a picture of disorder and incredible dismay was on the faces of the members of the government. Four or five of its ministers were on holiday that night, ministers who anticipate ultimately becoming prime minister of Canada. Each one has since been endeavouring to find an excuse for things turning out as they did. Not too many ministers are here today because they know the outcome. Regardless of the manner in which they have treated parliament they now know they have a numerical majority and therefore nothing else matters to them.

The record, Mr. Speaker, must be made clear. We have just listened to an address by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh) who gave one of the most able, complete and thorough analyses of the situation as I see it. I cannot remain silent as one who has occupied the position of prime minister and leader of the opposition, one who has been in this place for 28 years and seen parliament in all its vicissitudes.

Mention was made the other day of the fact that in the course of parliamentary debate harsh things are said. As long as they are we will not have a one-party state. As long as they are we will not have the dominance of a party in a minority that without regard to the traditions of parliament, tramples on the rights of parliament. Whatever numerical majority may now obtain and whatever the result may be of the count—and I am going to make a reference to the Créditistes a little later—this last week we have witnessed the ravishment, if not the rape, of parliament.

During my day, Mr. Speaker, regardless of my position in the house I never made motions to criticize anyone for what he said outside the house. I have always believed that in the course of parliamentary debate, and outside the house too, one right that must be maintained is the right of free speech. I could not countenance any action being taken by this House of Commons on account of words spoken outside the house, however much I disagreed with them. This is a principle that is embedded in our parliamentary life. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, any such motion could only have the effect of restoring a degree of certainty on the part of the government that they were still in charge and that parliament was still active.

I do not want to repeat any of the arguments that have been made except in a general way. I have been asked over and over again during the course of the last few days: Where do you stand on this question? I have never asked for sympathy on the part of anyone. I have always been prepared to take my stand through the years. One stand, I hope, will be remembered, and that is that however humble the individual, however great those that do tyranny, during my years in this house I have always spoken out against this kind of action, and I will continue to do so as long as I am here.

Parliament, Mr. Speaker, has been emasculated. No longer will it be necessary to ring the bells of parliament for an hour or an hour and a half. From now on we will be able to vote, no matter what comes up, as soon as debate is over. Because whatever the result and however important the subject matter, next day the government will be able to say: Well, we really were not voting confidence last night; we want a second chance.

A variety of arguments have been put forward. One hon. gentleman advanced the argument that there was not a large enough percentage of the house present when the vote took place. Well, Mr. Speaker, 71 per cent of the members were present. This government was elected in 1965 with about 42 per cent of the vote. As a government they now ask for a rerun. When I lost an election I wished the next day that we could run it over again because the next day is the day when people meet you and say they are sorry you were defeated, that they were with you yesterday. Under a democratic system, however, we are not given the opportunity of a rerun, or we have not been in the past. This is a sad day for parliament, Mr. Speaker.

I intended to come to the house late in the afternoon, having been told that I should have this place on the speaking order. Then I heard that the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) was speaking and I came to hear him. I heard not the hon. member for Villeneuve but the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill).

In the years I have been in the house, in the days of war, I saw Liberal members taking the hon. member's stand. I deeply regret that he found it necessary to take the course of action that he did, but there is one thing that this house must admit. Another Churchill has done the same thing and he did it twice. Our Churchill served in the ranks during the first world war for three years and served with distinction in the last war. He won the D.S.O. for the utmost gallantry in the field.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Sir, when great principles are at stake there is loyalty to one's party, but there is such a thing as loyalty to principles as one sees it. It came to me as a profound shock to see what is happening in this chamber. I will not mention by name those who decided that what was being done was not in their opinion for the good of the nation. What happened demonstrates what parliament is for. We are joined together in unity in our parties, but when a party loses its idealistic concepts it is time for others on the other side of the house to take a stand.

They are great parliamentarians, those hon. members sitting on the government side. I will not name any of them because that might be regarded as a designation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I must admit that the dean of the house comes within that classification. One of the greatest things that happened to him was what prevented his being here for the mess the other night. Fate often puts its hands on those it would anoint, to give a quotation from Horace.

What a night that was. Never have I seen so many humbled so low as the government and its supporters were humbled that day. And now we are told that all is well, that everything has been saved, that a committee has been formed and that they have arrived at a plan to circumvent, degrade and undermine the basic principles of parliament. I do not know who the members are but according to the press one of them is the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson).

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He bought his striped trousers two years ago. He was over here a while ago and he is moving back in this general direction.

It is said that everything has been arranged. I will not deal with what the Prime Minister is alleged to have said, since he is not here, but last night there was an article by the Canadian Press setting out in detail the Prime Minister's tremendous contribution. I refer to that eulogistic statement: "He got back; the government ceased by degrees to be losing; he arranged everything and he lined them all up."

Well, sir, what a perversion has been produced in this resolution:

> That this house does not regard its vote on February 19th in connection with third reading of Bill C-193, which had carried in all previous stages, as a vote of non-confidence in the government.

Well then, why do we have the bells ringing? Why do we call a vote at any time? I will not quote the authorities again. They have been referred to time and again. I emphasize that no amount of evasion, casuistry, circumlocution or downright deception can get away from the following words. I quote from page 461 of "Cabinet Government" by Jennings, that exemplar of the principles of parliamentary government quoted by the Prime Minister:

> Four factors really determine the attitude of a government to a parliamentary defeat. The first is its loss of prestige.

This government had nothing to worry about on that score. The next point is this, and I am not adding any words of my own:

> A weak government is a bad government.

This is a weak government, and it knows it. It is gluttonously hanging on to power because it knows how bad it is. It has invented this spurious attempt at parliamentary genius and in doing so it has followed in the footsteps of the late Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King. In 1940 he called parliament with the promise of another session. Parliament met at 2.30 p.m. and at four o'clock he said, "You are not here any more; I have dissolved parliament." He got away with it. In 1926 there was the notorious Byng-King incident, and the Liberal party got away with it. It did not get away with it in 1956 though when it trampled on parliament and desecrated every sacred principle of this institution. The government thought the people would forget. I continue reading:

> Defeat is a sign of weakness which can be overcome only by resignation or dissolution.

There Jennings knew not whereof he spoke. That little matter can be overcome if you have Créditiste allies who believe in this little aphorism:

> A marciful providence fashioned us holler
> O' purpose that we might our principles swaller.

I continue reading;

• (4:10 p.m.)

> The second is the strength of its own cohesion.

Huh. If what has been said by the candidates be cohesion, then give us separation.

> The third is the nature of the issue on which it has been defeated. It is ill-advised to risk a dissolution on a matter which can be made a point of attack on political platforms unless it feels it has a good defence with a wide popular appeal.

I had not intended to read that. How frightened you are.

> The fourth is the importance of the proposal or matter on which it was defeated. A defeat on an important part of the budget, as in 1852 and 1885, is obviously too important to be passed over.

Well, that is how the party opposite was defeated. Canadians have been asking for action. We are told now that Canada is in a frightful financial position. This is the conclusion the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) has come to. Where are all the glorious descriptions of the past two years when we were assured that all was well, that everything was perfect? Today a terribly serious financial condition faces us. It has to be met. The people ask for action. They ask for relief from the highest taxation this nation has ever experienced. What relief is promised? Well, we are told: If this motion goes through the 5 per cent surtax will have gone by the board, but then we intend to plaster on an additional income tax. Mr. Speaker, those who vote for this motion will be voting for the increase which is coming.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Canadians are facing the highest cost of living in their history and the highest rate of inflation. Prices continue to climb. But the government is not concerned about these things. What they are concerned about is preserving their gluttonous desire for power.

I say to the government: If you get away with this you have virtually made sure that if you choose to stay in for the full five years you can do so, no matter what the people think; all you have to do is get defeated and then say the next day, "This is an awful thing; just when we were ready to attack these big problems we were interrupted."

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They sit over there trying to blame somebody now. I saw the Minister of Finance and the leader of the house sitting opposite. The house leader knew what was going on. At least, if his eyes gave any indication he was fearful. But the Minister of Finance took the attitude: Let's get going; let's get this vote over on a Monday night.

I give the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) an opportunity to deny that he did not try to prevent that vote. But the Minister of Finance had an appointment somewhere—where, I don't know; where, I don't care—and when he has an appointment, what should hold a vote back?

The vote was called and hon. members over there ran in pell-mell. Now they say: "We were caught; we were trapped; we were innocent lambs who walked into a trap. What a preposterous defence. They created the trap themselves. People ask for bread at reasonable prices together with all their other normal requirements and the government gives them a 5 per cent surtax which rests on the average person, since the limitation is $600. Farmers' markets are falling off, farm prices are relatively down, unemployment is mounting. But just as in 1957, when we warned the government for months in advance, no action has been taken. Then at a time like this members opposite mouth decayed platitudes about their belief in the supremacy of parliament. You do not like this institution or you would not permit this crime against it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There you sit in all your greatness, knowing that whatever the feelings of the people of Canada may be you are there. I do not like to use a commonplace expression, but the amount of wailing that has gone on since your defeat indicates that crybabies still exist. Members over there say: Give us another chance; we were taken unaware; we wanted the vote, but don't blame us. Mr. Speaker, in these days of computers even ministers of finance do not need to be able to count.

The government whip is a very hard-working whip. I have told him that personally and I say it publicly. But on his small shoulders condemnation is now being heaped because he dared to carry out the wishes of the Minister of Finance. That is hardly what one might call cricket. The government wants a second chance. To do what? To bring in a new bill to impose higher taxation. They never did cut expenditure as they should have done. I should be fair to the Postmaster General (Mr. Côté). I have a personal admiration for him and always did have. However, I feel that when he and the other ministers went to sleep on that increase in the postage last fall it was the first time in history that the people have been saved from taxation as a result of the dormant condition of a government.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Diefenbaker: What does the government intend to do? While all these problems face the nation they spend their time undermining our monarchy. They have chiselled away, removing one vestige after another. I do not blame the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) for laughing, because he thinks all the Liberals are with him now. They had a vote in the city of Montreal at the Liberal meeting there and they came out in favour of abolition. It is the right of any political party to do as it will, but is that the viewpoint of the government? One of those who voted for its abolition was the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Pelletier), Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister. And what about the Minister of Justice (Mr. Trudeau)? I am sorry he is not here; of course he has other things to do. After all, is not a time like this when conditions are what they are, the proper time to bring in legislation regarding those things that up to the present time have been considered as wrongs against the state? What did the Minister of Justice say? He was asked why he did not vote and he said, "Well, I did not think it was important enough. I am not going to do anything to oppose the trend." Are these to be some of the things that this government has in mind?

For the last several years Young Liberal Associations and university Liberal organizations have been bringing out resolutions to abolish the monarchy, and there has never been one word of condemnation or disagreement from the Prime Minister or any of the ministers of the crown. That is the kind of thing they devote themselves to despite the economic conditions that challenge this country and everything about it.

At a time when we are trying to bring unity to our country they come out with a new postage stamp. During the first world war I remember the great opposition of Henri Bourassa. He did everything he could to oppose, but now he is going to have his head on a postage stamp. Are you going to be fair and put Camilien Houde on the next one? What manner of political nonsense is this government engaged in, with issues facing this country the like of which we have not faced before? But they have nothing to worry about. They have had assistance from outside our country. They did not get it from Washington this time but they did get it from New York. In passing I want to refer to the degree to which the New York Times waltzed into action, if I might use that expression. It carried an editorial headed "Overdone Joke", and I quote:

> It was good political fun for opposition forces to seize an unexpected opportunity to defeat the Canadian government in the House of Commons, but it would be irresponsible to carry the joke any further.

Who wrote that? Then in the last paragraph they said:

> With the help of members from minor parties, Mr. Pearson should get it—

Meaning a vote of confidence.

> Canada will be better off if he does.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am glad you have aid from abroad. You cannot find many editorials in Canada that say that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should also refer to a news item in the New York Times, written from this building. No wonder the New York Times editorial department went astray. The news item included the following:

> The Liberals were defeated suddenly when, in Mr. Pearson's absence, they were outmanoeuvred by opposition forces, who called an immediate vote on the tax bill. The bill, which has been controversial, would put a 5 per cent surcharge on personal income taxes and add 10 per cent to taxes on liquor and tobacco.
> The house had all but completed its debate and the Liberals had weathered two previous tests on the bill. After these the final, or third reading, vote might have been considered a formality.

The only excuse one can give for the writer of that article is that he has not got that regard for the truth which he should have or, if he has, he does not understand the British parliamentary system.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Now I come to the Créditistes.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have no desire whatever even to express the expectation of a hope that any argument will change them because, after all, was it not the leader of that party who made a statement the other day that he was going to stand firm and that this government should resign? The words he used outside the house were:

> If we believe in Canada, that in a democracy, parliament is the real sovereign (power) of the country, in the present circumstances we can only say that the government has been beaten by a parliamentary majority and indeed should turn in its resignation.

That was the view that the hon. gentleman put out across this country. It is not for me to endeavour to enter into hypotheses as to the circumstances that made possible such a tremendous change in his attitude, but again I refer to the couplet:

> A marciful providence fashioned us holler
> O' purpose that we might our principles swaller.

What happened after his clarion declaration? No one knows.

An hon. Member: He got some external aid from the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No one knows. It is not for me to enter into any theoretical analyses, but I wonder. I do not suppose that in this house today one is denied the right to wonder. I remember so well what happened in the month of April, 1963, when a few days after that election suddenly six Créditistes sat down together and penned a message to the Governor General saying they were going to support the Liberals, and with that, of course, I advised His Excellency to call on another government.

Who was in on that? I don't know, but a former member of this house had views on the subject and he belonged to that party. John C. Doyle is a name to conjure with. He was around in 1963. He is still around in 1968 although he cannot cross the line into the United States because he will end up in the coop for three years if he does. But he is still a power politically. I would like to know whether he had any interest in this matter. It is a question that must occur in the thoughts of Canadians.

Where Doyle is, there is political fixing. He does pretty well too with this government. He owes millions and millions of dollars. The rest of us cannot postpone payment but he fiddles about, he monkeys. After all, he only owes millions. The little fellow across Canada who owes a few dollars gets letters of strong condemnation. I wonder whether he might be of assistance, whether he might give us some information about those six who co-operated in 1963, only one of whom is now in the house. I would be very glad to hear from the members of that party what, if anything, other than the natural desire to be in Ottawa to view the beauties of the capital city, would have brought him hither within the last few days, if my information be correct? It may be only a coincidence but when you have a similar coincidence in 1963 then the question naturally arises, has there been any change of viewpoint in a period of four years? Sir, all I have done is ask a simple question: What did Doyle do. Who spoke with the members of the Créditiste party?

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Grégoire: Put up or shut up.

Mr. Diefenbaker: So far as the hon. gentleman is concerned may I say that I am reminded of the couplet:

> As the cuckoo is in June
> Heard but not regarded.

Now, sir, I shall conclude. My time is almost up. You may win the mathematical vote but the old, old jingle still rings true: Humpty-Dumpty sat on a wall, Humpty-Dumpty had a great fall; all Caouette's horses and all Caouette's men couldn't put Humpty-Dumpty together again. You know it; you sit over there and you are already counting to the end of your term because you know you cannot trample on the sacred rights of parliament. You cannot possibly do that for which Charles I lost his head. We do not want that to happen to you, but certainly the punishment was merited in his case.

You have forgotten the people. You have forgotten the meaning of the word "responsibility" and you have forgotten parliament. You are trying to defend a position by unwarranted and undignified means. If this motion is voted on favourably that mace, sir, is a bauble. In the mace is contained all the pure heritage of parliament. I hold with the words of Oliver Cromwell when he came into the British house, which had been sitting forever and illegally, and said:

> I command ye, therefore, upon the peril of your lives, to depart immediately out of this place;... Go, get out, make haste, begone! So take away that shining bauble there, and lock up the doors.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

The former leader of the opposition has been accusing us, he has been making insinuations I call dishonest regarding the Ralliement Créditiste I represent in the house. He has been referring to the 'Six" affair in 1963, in which myself and this party were not involved.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Caouette: The former leader of the opposition is suggesting that I might have been meeting Mr. Doyle.

Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, those who are making such insinuations, and the former leader of the opposition has the habit of doing this, are acting in a dishonest way. There was no meeting—

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member kindly state his question of privilege?

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege is this: I want to protest for myself and the group I represent against the accusations the former leader of the opposition brought against my group. Let me say this, on the question of privilege—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Caouette: —if the former leader of the opposition wants to bring accusations, he should bring them before the committee on privileges and elections; he should act honestly and not in a cowardly way as he did this afternoon in the House of Commons.

Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I should like to state very clearly at the outset that I believe the standing orders which, for eight days now, have not allowed us to solve a very simple matter, are obsolete and should be changed as soon as possible. For eight days now, the country and the house wonder whether or not the government has the confidence of the house.

This, of course, is not the time—

[English]

Mr. Nugent: You have no doubt about whether the government has the confidence of the people.

[Translation]

Mr. Trudeau: The question of whether our standing orders which provide an eight-day debate on a parliamentary question, when we live in a century and in an age where decisions must be taken much more rapidly, not only on behalf of the nation but also on behalf of justice—

Mr. Lambert: You are distorting the question.

Mr. Trudeau: —an answer should be found to that question. In short, the question is quite simple. We have to know, Mr. Speaker, if the government should continue to govern or should call an election.

It is a question to which we have the right to get an answer. It is especially a question to which the Canadian people have a right to get an answer.

Two opinions prevail. It is the opinion of the opposition that, last Monday, we lost the confidence of the house. It is our opinion that we did not lose it.

The Leader of the Opposition has quoted authorities. He referred in particular to the 1963 election where the question of confidence had been clearly put, and where the word confidence appeared in the motion introduced at that time and in the proposed amendments. He also quoted from the Canada Year Book.

We have quoted certain authorities to the contrary, not the l'Almanach Beauchemin, but prominent parliamentary authorities.

Whether or not the government is justified, whether or not the opposition is justified to take that position, such is the matter before us and it is quite simple. Now, who must answer that question? Must we seek an answer in the standing orders, the tradition or the constitution?

An hon. Member: The people of Canada.

Mr. Trudeau: Is it in the constitution of the country? Certainly not.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

It has already been established that the constitution only mentions that an election must be held every five years. We are well within that limit.

Is it you, Mr. Speaker, who must decide that quite simple question? The answer, of course, is no. The Speaker is only asked to be the spokesman of the house. When the house speaks out clearly in compliance with standing orders, the Speaker must act as its interpreter. When the rules are challenged, the Speaker must settle the matter. Therefore, it is surely and obviously not up to the Speaker to decide whether or not the government has the confidence of the house, because it would empower him to call an election or not to do so. It is clear, therefore, that the house should not turn to you, Mr. Speaker.

Is it the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) or the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) who should answer that question? If the Leader of the Opposition were called upon to answer it, we would certainly be the first to call this a dictatorship. It is not up to a particular man, convinced of the soundness of his opinion, to express the will of the house.

Cromwell has been quoted. That is a rather suspect authority, since he is a man who dissolved parliament several times and finally established a dictatorship. Those are not words which should be put in the mouth of a parliamentarian.

In this respect, I am surprised that the leader of the New Democratic party (Mr. Douglas) should have had so little imagination that he had to repeat the same quotation twice. It seems to me that parliamentary history is rich enough to allow one not to repeat these clichés, particularly when their author is a dictator.

Therefore, it is not up to the Leader of the Opposition nor up to the Prime Minister to answer this question, for this would give them the authority of a dictator. In fact, they would then be able to overrule the house. This would be tantamount to holding parliament in contempt. To force a man to answer this very simple question is, in fact, to put him in a dictatorial position.

I heard the hon. member of Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) say that it is the people. That is exactly what we should ask ourselves. Each time the government loses a vote, should we go to the electorate? That is precisely what some hon. members claim. I tell you that if it were the logic of the rules, if it were in the spirit of the constitution, we would have to call elections all the time and, on the other hand, the people would be forbidden to elect minority or coalition governments because, in the final analysis, that is the interpretation we would have to give to the rules. The rules must be logical, must make sense. They must look for efficiency.

We find in the past innumerable examples of governments, in general they were minority or coalition governments, sometimes unstable governments, which lost votes in the house. I merely want to recall three examples among the best known.

During the first four sessions of the Canadian parliament, from 1867 to 1871, the government was beaten nine times on votes in the house, sometimes on supply motions or monetary matters. If they had been forced to resign, as the opposition claims, there would have been nine elections in four years.

There is also another example. From 1834 to 1840, in England, the government was defeated 58 times in the House of Commons and 49 times in the House of Lords, so that in four years, there would have been about a hundred elections.

An hon. Member: Silly.

Mr. Trudeau: No, this is not silly, because one has to enter into the spirit of parliamentarism. If the people elect a minority government, as they decided to do in the last five years in Canada, we must interpret legislation so that it makes sense.

On the other hand, it would be senseless to hold dozens of elections in a few months, because here also, this happened in England from January 1924 to August 1924 when ten votes were lost in the House of Commons. Again, that would have meant ten elections in so many months.

I give these examples only to draw the following conclusion: We are here to respect the will of the people, to interpret the general will. If the people elect to the House of Commons members to govern the country, the people do so through a free vote, according to its knowledge. If, instead of electing a majority government, it elects a minority government, well, the people take this chance, and asks the minority government to govern the best it can, and not call elections as soon as it finds that it is in a minority position.

On the other hand, it is astonishing to see how few votes our minority government has lost in five years and how it has succeeded in passing innumerable bills.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Trudeau: What do you mean, no? It is true that the government has been in power for five years. It lost the vote on Monday night and what I find astonishing is that all of a sudden, on Monday night, the government is said by some to have lost the confidence of the house. This goes against the logic of the rules of the house.

Mr. Speaker, when there is a difference of opinion on a basic matter—

[English]

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, would the minister accept a question? Would he deny that the Prime Minister has the right, when the government is defeated, to advise His Excellency either to call an election or call on someone else, who the Prime Minister advises would likely enjoy the confidence of parliament, to form a government?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not readily see how the question is related to what I was saying, but the answer is no. I do not deny that. Of course, the government was defeated in the house, but has it lost the confidence of the house? Is it thereby forced to resign, to dissolve parliament?

My argument is clear: If the house is denied the right to express its views on a basic difference between the opposition and the government; if, when the question involved is as simple as the one put last Monday evening, do we or do we not have the confidence of the house, the house is deprived of the right to have its say, the whole parliamentary system is being negated. Because this is the law of parliament: When the government and the opposition disagree, as happens day in day out, week in week out, every time a piece of legislation is being considered, after the discussion, the house is called upon to decide on the issue. Such is the parliamentary system, Mr. Speaker.

It is not direct democracy, which is to go to the country to settle every disagreement; it is not to dissolve parliament ten times in six months. Then, indeed, this would be direct democracy.

Every time we disagree—and God knows we often do—we would have to go to the people to find out what they think? Why bother then having a parliamentary democracy, a so-called representative democracy? We are here to represent the people; as we often disagree, Mr. Speaker, we must solve those disagreements without having a general election each time. A general election is an instrument given to the government to demonstrate that it has control over and the confidence of the houses. Prorogation of parliament, as everyone knows, is an instrument through which the government exercises its authority over the houses. Now, we are doing the opposite: We are not threatening the house with dissolution. We say to the house: We are not going, over your head, to the people, to know what they think—

[English]

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, would the minister permit a question?

[Translation]

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed to conclude my peroration, after which I shall answer questions.

We are not going to the people, over the heads of the parliamentarians, to know what the people think. We are asking the parliamentarians what they think. That is the question of confidence we put last Monday, the question now before the house. That is the question on the order paper, Mr. Speaker.

I am now prepared to hear the question of the hon. member.

• (4:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): My question is this, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell us why in the circumstances he has outlined so eloquently the government did not present to this house a simple motion of confidence? What is the explanation for tying it in with the vote last Monday night?

[Translation]

Mr. Trudeau: Of course, I can answer that question very easily, Mr. Speaker.

If we had taken the stand to introduce a simple vote of confidence before the house, if we had put on the order paper: This house has confidence in the government, no doubt several members would have refused to vote yea.

[English]

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Collusion is the answer.

[Translation]

Mr. Trudeau: I do not know why they are so surprised. We admitted it right from the beginning.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Some hon. members have spoken to that effect and I repeat their assertions. They told us that their vote last Monday night was not a non-confidence vote. They said that what they wanted to do that evening was simply to defeat that legislation.

And, on that subject, I refer to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who stated as can be found on page 132 of the Debates of January 31, 1966, that the opposition must have the right to vote against bills to state its opposition to bills or its disagreement with the government, without necessarily expressing a lack of confidence in the government.

Mr. Speaker, I have here the quotation and it might be useful to read it:

[English]

—we have the right to vote on issues of substance separate from the question of an election . . . we can vote on the other matter—

The matter of confidence.

—any time the government wishes.

This is exactly what is happening. We are saying that on that Monday certain members of the opposition voted against the bill because they wanted to defeat the bill. What the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) says is that if we ask the house to vote on the matter of confidence they will do so but that certainly they do not wish to defeat the government every time they defeat a bill. This is exactly the argument which was put forward, and it is a sensible argument.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask the minister a question? Was I not asking for that position to be stated before the vote was taken, not after the vote had been taken and the government had lost?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I submit that this is not the case. These are the rules of parliament. They have been quoted at length by the hon. member and they are quite clear. The difference between the argument put forward by the hon. member and my own position is that the hon. member wishes to be on the side of those who decide if the defeat of a specific bill is the defeat of the government. That is the difference. We say we will decide if the defeat of a specific bill is the defeat of the government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hees: We want to decide.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): The government is on the road to dictatorship.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Howard: You have embarrassed him enough already.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, when people yell like animals, one cannot hear very well the questions asked. If somebody wants to ask me questions, I will answer them, but to bawl like a herd will not do very much for the decision.

The questions are not quite pertinent, if you want—

[English]

Some hon. Members: Just try it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Trudeau: I would like to carry on my little speech, and then if we have time, I shall be very pleased to answer questions.

I shall try to bring my demonstration to an end. When we refuse the house authority to settle basic differences of opinion which have arisen between the two main parties, we are denying parliamentarism, because this is the basic principle of parliamentarism, Mr. Speaker.

I am not saying that we are right, neither am I saying that you are wrong. I am simply saying that a difference of opinion has arisen between us, but that we cannot go to the people of Canada each and every time this happens.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, I believe I am now sufficiently acquainted with the mentality of the house to know that, should we have said last Monday that this party had lost the confidence of the house and therefore asked for a general election, we would have heard strong protests from the opposition benches. They would have said: So, this government is plunging the country into an election which the people do not want at this time, or: So, this government is calling an election because it has been defeated on a mere technical matter. They would have demonstrated that the defeat of Monday night, last week, was purely on a technical matter.

I will not quote again at great length all the authorities. I will quote them nevertheless as a reminder, since the hon. members do not seem to recall them.

Beauchesne says that when—

[English]

The question for the third reading may be negatived, but as previously stated such a vote is not fatal to the bill.

[Translation]

This was citation 418.

Bourinot, in its third edition, page 648, has this to say:

[English]

If a resolution adverse to the bill be resolved in the affirmative; or the motion, "that the bill be now read a second time" be simply negatived on a division—

[Translation]

That is what happened: it is on third reading that the vote was negatived.

[English]

—the measure will disappear from the order book, but it may be revived at any subsequent time, as the house has only decided that it should not then be read a second time, and the order previously made for the second reading remains good.

Mr. Alkenbrack: It was third reading.

Mr. Trudeau: Let me continue reading from Bourinot:

The same practice obtains with respect to the bill, at any previous or succeeding stage.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: Now I should like to quote Erskine May, another great authority, page 571 of the seventeenth edition. The same thing is said whether you look at Bourinot, Beauchesne or Erskine May. It reads as follows:

If the question "That the bill be now read the third time" is negatived, such a vote is not necessarily fatal to the further progress of the bill. The more usual method of objection is therefore to move an amendment, putting off the third reading for three (six) months, or a "reasoned" amendment against the bill being now read the third time. The carrying of the former amendment is tantamount to the rejection of the bill, while, in the event of a "reasoned" amendment being accepted, it is unlikely that any further progress would be made with the bill.

I do not have the Canada Year Book here but, as I say, this is a technical matter. If we had dissolved the house and had called a general election there would have been incredible outcries that the government was beaten on a technicality and was pushing the country into a general election.

• (5:00 p.m.)

An hon. Member: It is not a technicality.

Mr. Trudeau: The point I am making now, Mr. Speaker, is that we are not trying, as we could under the rules, to revive the bill and put it back on the order paper.

Some hon. Members: Try it.

Mr. Trudeau: Hon. members say, "Try it". It is easy to defy us because we say we would not do so.

[Translation]

I will even go further, and I will say that it is not only the government's intention not to reintroduce this legislation, but that it is firmly determined to credit the taxpayers with the money they have paid under the bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: The government recognizes that it is the will of this house not to collect taxes that way. Therefore, it is saying clearly and plainly to the taxpayers: The money you paid legally under this legislation, that money will be credited to you. It cannot be clearer than that.

[English]

Mr. Harkness: If you admit that this is the case, why did you call your defeat a technicality, as you did a few minutes ago?

[Translation]

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, what I am trying to explain just now is that it is not our intention to bring that bill back. That is the power of choice. The government, as long as it is the government, has the power of choice as to the way it governs—

[English]

Mr. Coates: Answer the question.

[Translation]

Mr. Trudeau: I am answering the question. We are masters of the house in the sense that we have to conduct the affairs of government. That is what it means to assume the power. We are—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. members do not agree. Mr. Speaker, for eight days, we have been begging them to show their disagreement by a non-confidence vote.

We find it ridiculous, Mr. Speaker, that for eight days, the opposition which claims that we do not have the confidence of the house, refuses to express its non-confidence. We say: Give us the chance to end the debate; let us try and see whether or not we have this confidence. If you vote against the government, without any hesitation, we will resign.

But that, once again, is a very simple question, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

An hon. Member: Your time has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Trudeau: How much time do I have left, Mr. Speaker?

[English]

Mr. Nugent: May I ask the question now, please? The question is simple.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister still has the floor.

Mr. Trudeau: If I have time left I will take all the questions. However, I have been challenged by many hon. members who have said: Let the Minister of Justice, with his great wisdom, speak on this question. There has been a great deal of irony about what I think. Well, listen to what I think.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the argument I want to put forward is that the people have a right to know whether or not the government has the confidence of the house. The people have a right to know whether or not this government controls the business of the nation, and since the people have a right to know, we on our part have an obligation to have the matter settled by the house. We have a moral obligation to ask this question, in order that the people may know what is what.

I am surprised at what this new theologian is saying: there was one in the past who was More, and now we have saint Thomas Douglas.

According to him, the moral obligation of placing this matter before the house does not exist. He says that we have a political obligation, a constitutional duty to do, but no moral right.

[English]

If there is reason to doubt that the house really wished to defeat the government—we may be wrong and this is what we have to decide—and render it powerless to conduct the nation's business, then I suggest the government has not only the constitutional right but the constitutional duty to have the house express its will in a clear and unequivocal way. The leader of the New Democratic party recognized the constitutional right of the government to ask the house for a vote of confidence last Wednesday. However, he said the government had no moral right to ask the house for a vote of confidence. I must take issue with that because I am unable to disassociate political morality from political duty. I think it is the duty of the government, and it has a duty to the people, to have this question clarified. This is what we are doing and this is what we are asking the house for now, to speak quite clearly on this issue. We hope that will be done very soon.

[Translation]

Many other authorities have given their opinion on this subject, Mr. Speaker. Every time there is a disagreement between the opposition and the government, the house is called upon to settle the matter, and that is what we are asking it to do as quickly as possible, because the arguments being repeated ad nauseam are not all very new.

I think all the members in this house have their opinion as to whether the government should consider the vote which took place on Monday evening as a defeat of the government or a defeat of a piece of legislation. However, I think their mind is made up. This is not the time to repeat endless arguments, but to make a decision.

As for me, Mr. Speaker, I think that those who are refusing the dialogue, those who refuse to take part in the debate and who do not want it to be settled by a vote are suspect. They are people who do not accept a rational and controlled settlement of a question on which we are divided, and that must be a fundamental rule in any parliament.

The basic rule when there is disagreement between the opposition and the government is that the matter must be settled in a rational and controlled way.

This is what we attempted to do when we put the motion now under discussion. I think that I can summarize that in few words.

[English]

It is not for the opposition to dictate to the government, nor is it right that the government should dictate to the opposition. The issue is placed before the House of Commons and the house itself decides the question either for or against the government. If all parties or members of the house deny the right of the house to decide the point in issue they are really attacking or destroying the fundamental framework within which the institution must necessarily operate. The debate, Mr. Speaker, is intended not only for the enlightenment and persuasion of members of the house but for the information of the public at large. The person who refuses to debate and have a matter settled by vote demonstrates in the end that he does not have confidence in the House of Commons. Perhaps his case is so weak he knows it cannot be debated and he cannot accept a rational or controlled solution. But that, Mr. Speaker, is what the people of this country want and what they need. They want this debate to come to an end. They want the House of Commons to make up its mind whether or not it has confidence in the government. The way to decide this is by a vote, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona wishes to ask a question.

Mr. Nugent: The minister said he would take questions. I wonder whether I understood him correctly that the government stand is there is no question of confidence inherent in an important government bill but that a question of confidence only arises when the government is defeated on such a bill?

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker. I said that it is for the government to decide whether it shall consider a vote to be a vote of confidence or not.

Mr. Nugent: Before or after the vote?

Mr. Trudeau: Before or after the vote. If a government decides that such and such an issue, which may be a minor technicality—

Mr. Nugent: I am talking about an important money bill.

Mr. Trudeau: Let me answer the question. If the government states that a very minor technical issue is considered a vote of confidence—

An hon. Member: Stupid.

Mr. Trudeau: It may be stupid but it is the opinion of Dicey, it is the opinion of Jennings and it is the opinion of Todd. However, if hon. members want to continue the debate and I have more time, I can expand on this.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether we should not try to bring some order to the debate. I notice a number of other hon. members want to ask questions. The minister has concluded his speech but hon. members might wish to proceed for a few more minutes to allow some questions.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in the minister's statement and I should like to ask this question which bears upon this particular issue. I believe there are 16 items now on the order paper. For the guidance of members of the house would the minister indicate whether or not a vote on any one of those items, particularly on Bill No. C-195 to amend the Criminal Code, would be construed by the government to be a vote of confidence?

Mr. Trudeau: I think this question can be answered, Mr. Speaker, though not by me; I am not the government. However, I think it conceivable that the government could say that all bills on the order paper except this one or that one, or all bills without exception, will involve questions of confidence, that if the government is beaten on any one it will consider it a defeat. It could also say that if it was beaten on a mere technicality during debate on any bill it would go to the people.

An hon. Member: But before the defeat, not after.

Mr. Trudeau: It could be both before and after.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Trudeau: If the house did not agree with the interpretation that the government put on a bill it could always refuse to grant supply to the government. It could refuse to give the government money to continue.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker—

[Mr. Trudeau.]

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps the house could permit the hon. member for Lapointe to ask one last question.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The minister still has the floor. Is he prepared to answer a further question?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister a question dealing with the income tax and the vote on Bill No. C-193.

Can he tell us, on behalf of the government—whatever the outcome of the vote of confidence—if the government considers that Monday night's vote is final and will not increase the income tax?

Mr. Trudeau: I repeated earlier what the Prime Minister had said previously, namely that the bill had been defeated, that we accepted that decision and would not bring it back before the house.

We even stated earlier that the government saw as a credit the payments made under that bill. The conclusion is therefore very simple.

Mr. Grégoire: May I put a supplementary question?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Can the minister tell us whether—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[English]

Order, please. The ministers' time has expired. When I recognized the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre a moment ago I thought he was rising for the purpose of asking the minister a question. If that was not so I should like at this moment to see the hon. member for Qu'Appelle.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon the house witnessed one of the greatest events in its history, namely, the speech of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). First of all I am going to deal with the remarks of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Trudeau) and I will do so in two simple statements. What we have heard this afternoon is a doctrine that has no place in a parliamentary system embodying belief in the responsibility of the executive to the elected representatives of the people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hamilton: The doctrine we have heard today is nothing less than asking the house to adopt the congressional system followed in Washington.

Second, Mr. Speaker, the minister has enunciated a philosophy that would have done justice to Cromwell the dictator when the minister said, "We are the masters". I hope that all Liberal members who were sitting in the house this afternoon and watching this demonstration will have been given sufficient indication how to pick their new leader. If they pick the new Minister of Justice as their leader they will pick a real patrician. He knows who the peasants are.

The Minister of Justice has challenged us on three issues. He raised the question of the position of a minority government. He raised the question of the system of responsible government. He raised the question of what is and what is not a vital issue.

I intend to commence my remarks by stating flatly that there is not one single authority in the written word that holds that when a government is defeated on a money bill it has the right to take a vote of confidence. I am familiar with the precedents of 1867-73 established in Canada. Only one of those precedents related in any way to money and it was an item dealing with a customs bill. I am also aware of the precedents in the British house from 1846 to 1886, and never once in all the times that a British government was defeated on a money bill did it fail to go to the Queen. The budget debates of 1852 and 1855 make that clear beyond doubt.

This brings me, Mr. Speaker, to my own thoughts on the subject we are now debating. This government stands condemned before the people of Canada of betraying precedents that have been built up over 700 years and relate to the people and those who govern them. There is no stronger foundation in that structure than the principle that declares that the people have the right to control the money that is taken from them. This principle goes back to Magna Carta. It has been laid down in our parliamentry structure and has evolved over the centuries to the present day in the Canadian House of Commons. It is this doctrine that has restrained the pressure applied by those who want to seize power.

This does not mean that efforts have not been made during our constitutional history to take over control of the purse. In Canada we use the word "royalty" when we assess mining, oil or gas taxes, and it emanates from the period when the crown took away from parliament the right to control both incoming and outgoing revenue. Those kings, Mr. Speaker, paid a heavy price for tramping on the rights of the people. Likewise, in the days of Oliver Cromwell there was a period of dictatorship as opposed to parliamentary rule. We must never forget these things.

I well recall how in the early days of the war, in military camps all over the world, young men were asking, "Why are we fighting?" The government of Canada put out a book listing four reasons why we should fight to the death to make sure that Hitler's armies did not control the world. Read that book. It said that young men should fight because we have a system of government whose members are responsible to the people. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) stood in his place today and tried to shock this house and this country into a realization of what has happened here since last Monday. We have seen here a travesty of the rights of free men, a most shocking thing to happen under a government that calls itself Liberal. Never again will the word "Liberal" mean to Canadians what it has meant and never again will it be uttered with honour.

This matter resolves itself into two or three simple questions. As I said in opening, there is not a single written authority to say that where an important money bill has been defeated the Prime Minister has not gone to the country, to the Governor General or to the crown, as the case may be. There are hundreds of precedents to show that when a minor bill has been defeated a minority government has not always gone to the country. It is on those limited exceptions that the government rests its case.

Let us look at the precedents. One finds that, for the sake of stability, a minority government which is defeated on a minor bill does not always consider that defeat a matter of confidence because, as the Minister of Justice said, such governments would be going to the country every time there was a defeat. But, Mr. Speaker, the right to follow such a precedent must be claimed by the Prime Minister in advance. There are many examples of an English prime minister saying at the beginning of a session that certain items are minor and a vote against the government in regard to them will not be a vote of confidence, and other areas are staked out as major, and the vote in regard to them will be considered a vote of confidence.

I am addressing all those seats on the government side of the house.

An hon. Member: They are empty now.

Mr. Hamilton: I put it to individual members on the government side that their honour is at stake. Is this minority government going to claim the rights of a minority government after the fact of a defeat? I maintain that you have no right to sit there now that you have been defeated on a major bill. It was a tax bill and important to the government's budget. I ask, by what right, in pure logic and pure justice, can the government continue to sit with honour?

I shall now cite an authority higher than any that have been cited in this debate so far. I cite the authority of a man who has done more to wreck this country, to wreck national unity and to wreck parliament than any single man in our history. I refer to the man who, basically, is the cause of this mess, a man who has no strength of will and who has destroyed his ministers right and left instead of taking the blame when anything goes wrong. I shall now quote the words of the man who holds the office of Prime Minister.

On April 23, 1963, just after the election, he appeared on national television, the media of medias where truth is evident in the face of a speaker. These are the Prime Minister's words when waiving his right to the protection that a minority government must sometimes seek:

> My government is just short of a clear majority. I do not complain about that. It is my resolve not to allow the lack of such a clear majority to influence the government in any way that will weaken its action for you. We will not be seeking to evade any issues, to avoid any votes in parliament. We will not be seeking any special deals. We will breech no trust, barter no principles.

An hon. Member: Better listen, Trudeau.

Mr. Hamilton: These words are from the official communiqué of the broadcast script for April 23, 1963. If that newly elected Prime Minister had not been so cocky, so arrogant, so stupid, he could have asked the Canadian people to bear with him so that if he were defeated on minor matters—that is one of the hazards of a minority government—he would not have to go to the country.

I have read the Prime Minister's statement on April 23, 1963. In it he outlined his minority government's position. But now he asks us to treat him as a minority government Prime Minister and to absolve him from his waiving of his rights. When he returned from Jamaica he was petulant and angry and he put on an awful display on television in blaming his whip and so on. In the house he blamed the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and he waved his finger at the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) for leading him astray in his thinking. He blamed everybody but himself. When that petulance was over he got the Minister of Justice (Mr. Trudeau) to stand up in the house and say, "But this was a minor, technical matter of a 5 per cent surtax." It was on top of last year's tax increase.

On top of that the Prime Minister says, "We are going to get this money somehow." The Minister of Finance also says, "We are going to get that money." Somebody went to the Créditistes and told them that if they voted confidence the tax would not be reimposed. I say to them: Whom are you going to believe? Are you going to believe what you have been told or what you have heard in this house? Are you going to believe what has been put out on television, radio and in the newspapers, that the Minister of Finance intends in some way to get that tax and a lot more from you? Any Créditiste and any other member who votes confidence in this government will not only lose his honour but will be voting for additional taxes as soon as this government can find a way of bringing them in. Never forget that.

It has been said that societies in the western world can only be ruled by precedents or by military might. This afternoon the Minister of Justice refused to accept precedents that say that defeat on major money bills brings down governments. Instead he gave us a snivelling little argument, which was pure sophistry, that the vote was a minor, technical matter involving third reading. There was nothing to it. If the Liberal party at its convention next April has the attitude of the Minister of Justice, God help Canada.

We live in a day when government is mixed up with business to a tremendous extent. Parliament must consider adopting modern practices. The hon. members for Parry Sound-Muskoka and Winnipeg North

Centre and others in this house have pondered how, with a minority government and even with a majority government, we can modernize the parliamentary institution, how we can maintain traditional freedoms but yet deal more rapidly with important business. In our corporate society surely new approaches can be adopted.

Surely there could be a tremendous improvement in the way in which we handle bills. Surely there could be staked out in our rules, written or unwritten, certain areas which concern the conscience or the religious beliefs of hon. members, and measures affecting them could be dealt with in the same way as the house dealt with the capital punishment bill two years ago, letting each man vote according to his conscience. This would not interfere with cabinet responsibility. Surely the Minister of Justice, who is bringing in amendments to the law dealing with such subjects close to his heart as abortion, the carrying of firearms and homosexuality, would be willing to have the house deal with them on the basis of individual conscience and religious belief. These are matters in connection with which we could make adjustments. But I cannot accept the statement that no matter how many times a bill is defeated the government may decide to call for a vote of confidence to see whether it will continue or not. This is a doctrine foreign to everything for which we stand.

My leader has said we must go to the country and let the people resolve this question. I recall the events of 1955 when the opposition was contesting the Emergency Powers Act under which the government was given unlimited power for an unlimited period of time. Eventually, under strong opposition pressure, the government sent Mr. C. D. Howe away on holiday and when that great tycoon had gone they changed the act so that they would have those powers for only three years instead of for an indefinite period.

The pipe line debate has been mentioned. When hon. members are considering how they will vote let them also keep in mind that in November, 1966 their government struck a blow at the foundations of parliament. On that occasion members of parliament believed that the way in which they could bring the government to heel was to talk on interim supply and force it to take action. It has always been traditional that every month or two months members of parliament have the chance to make the executive realize who is boss when it comes to money.

In November, 1966, members opposite, seeing the Conservative party engaged in a bloodletting operation in a hotel nearby, stood up and contemptuously announced: You can talk all you like on interim supply; we have stashed away so much money in accounts here and there that you really have no control over us. Yet they pretend they would not take advantage of a party at a time when it was obliged to take certain decisions. Nevertheless they struck a severe blow at parliament at a time when Her Majesty's loyal opposition was in turmoil and distress. They destroyed a great deal of the freedom of parliament on that occasion.

Today these same people are trying to tell us that a defeat in the house on a major money bill is only a minor and technical matter. Whoever makes such a statement can only be a man who sees everything in black and white, a man who sees everything as being either true or false, a man who does not want the protection of 700 years of evolution in our parliamentary institutions, a man who tells us: I see it this way; you see it that way; you must decide.

I suggest that those who are old enough to do so let their minds go back to the sounds we heard in the thirties emanating from Italy and Germany. I cannot speak Italian or German but I did not need to understand what those men were saying. They were saying: Decide. There were men in the western world who recommended compromise. But eventually we had to ask our young men to decide the issue, and the government had to put out a pamphlet explaining to them why they were away from home and asking them to fight on. Some people may not recall that in those early days of 1940 and 1941 things looked pretty bad, and when we ask men to fight a long way from home they have to believe in something. The only thing many of us could tell them was that here in Canada we had a system of government whereby the people controlled the executive. Those in our forces who served under United States generals were proud that we had a system superior to that of the Americans. Our system put the head of state above party considerations. Under our system the executive had to sit every day in the House of Commons to be questioned and criticized. Under our system the executive fell if it failed to command a majority on every government bill and money measure.

Many a young man lies buried abroad today because he believed that doctrine. It was not much to hold on to but it was better than having somebody else behind him with superior intelligence and superior force, telling him what to do. He was prepared to go along with the stupid inefficiency of democratic government as long as he had the right to mark an X once in a while on a ballot paper to get rid of a government he did not like. But he expects his representatives in parliament to stand up and fight for the principles upon which democracy is founded. When people count the house and tell us it is all a question of numbers I want them to think of all those poor dupes who were sent to the blood baths of 1916 and 1917 in Europe and of all those lads who were sent to so many parts of the world in 1939 to fight for those principles and who did not come back. As for those of us who did return, let me say we understand completely the significance of the statement made today by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill). I hope there is no one on either side of the house who fails to recognize what he was trying to tell us in his statement today. I, for one, am willing to debate this subject with all the limited intelligence I have.

I say the government has waived its right to be regarded as a minority government. It has rejected ideas advanced in this parliament for the reform of the institution and the widening of the areas in which the issue of confidence is not involved. Now it is hanging on to power, acting like a crybaby. I well remember the events of last Monday. On seeing those faces across the way my thoughts went back to February 5, 1963. At least when we went down we went down fighting and willing to go to the people. And our tiger at least had the courage to go to the Governor General and lay it on the line that he was resigning.

Now this rabbit government, this crybaby government says, "Give us a second chance." I can just imagine young Miss Nancy Greene, when she came tenth in the downhill, kicking herself all over the place and saying, "If I could only do it again I could win." She knew she could have won. Did she go to Mr. Brundage and say, "I want a new trial"? No, she took it on the chin and tried harder in later events.

As I sat and watched those faces opposite the other night I suddenly got an answer to a question asked on television that has been bugging me for months. The question asked on television is, what is whiter than white? Now I know. It is a Liberal cabinet minister's face when he realizes he has lost a vote of confidence.

The other day in the house the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) spoke very quietly, with all the quiet contempt that a man of his background and stature has for the type of things he has had to endure from the opposite side since he came into this house, and he simply posed this question:

> Mr. Speaker, if any member on that front bench, including the Prime Minister, had been asked before that vote was taken whether or not it was a vote of confidence, every one of those hon. gentlemen would have said without any hesitation, "Certainly it is."

The case that the Minister of Justice made today was pure unadulterated sophistry mixed with a concept of mea non culpa. All I could think was that he should be running for the job of Pope, not prime minister, because a prime minister does not have to be infallible; he can make mistakes.

My goodness, Mr. Speaker, just read what the press has been saying in the last week about the significance of this precedent. From yesterday's Gazette I read part of an editorial:

> This precedent could have various effects upon parliament's future. For one thing, it could induce a new carelessness in governments. Hitherto, the possibility of defeat in the house on a bill of great importance has always been an exceedingly serious matter. It has lent a concentration and meaning to the debates and to the votes taken in the house. This, in turn, has given the proceedings of the house that grave and disciplined character that they ought to have on all critical occasions.
> All this, now, could be changed. It would no longer be vital if a government were defeated. It can always do the thing over again, in the same way that a movie director can cut a length of film and consign it to the studio floor and call back the actors for a retake.
> The debates on a bill, the serious arguments advanced, the dramatic meaning of the final division of the house in the vote—all these things will take on far less significance.

In the quiet, restrained voice of the dear, sweet lady known as the Montreal Gazette we have the significance of what this precedent will mean—the house has no more purpose.

I want to raise a matter now which I have touched on before. I have suggested that the remarks of the Minister of Justice support a suspicion I have held for some time, that many people in Canada think that the purest form of freedom is found in the form of government adopted by our friendly neighbour to the south, the United States. I have seen this view expressed so many times over the last 30 or 40 years in history books, articles and so on. They have a written bill of rights. It is all so precise. All I want to say is that when I heard the statement by the Minister of Justice today I thought, here it is coming out in the pure, unadulterated form.

The difference between our system of government and theirs is very well known. They separate the powers. They separate the executive from the legislature and the legislature from the judiciary. They use the judiciary to decide on matters of individual rights and on whether a law is ultra vires or not. They do not trust the people under their constitution. Therefore they divide the powers with checks and balances.

Our system is absolutely different. We trust our people and believe that given the truth they will make a decision that will eventually be carried out by the executive. That type of trust can only work if there are gentlemen in this house who understand the principle that the rules are there for everyone to follow. Our system of responsibility is such that when a prime minister does not know when he has been defeated on a major issue he does not know what every schoolboy knows, what every civil servant knows, what every newspaper editor knows, and I say that that man should not be prime minister.

I am simply saying that it is not only the resolutions of the Young Liberals in Montreal and in Toronto, adopted by sundry people in this house on the other side, saying that we should have a republican form of government that disturb me. When I hear a responsible minister hold forth with a philosophy that the government can be defeated as many times as it likes as long as it comes back with a vote of confidence and wins it, that disturbs me because in effect that is a congressional form of government. It is not even honest republicanism.

Under the American system, if you are a Democrat you can vote any way you like. You can condemn the president, you can impeach the president, and it does not matter; it does not defeat the government. They can have a glorious holiday all the time chewing up their head of state. We have avoided this by putting our head of state above that and at the present time that head is our Queen. But we do give battle for the right to advise the representative of the Queen in the person of the prime minister. Our system of responsibility is taught in the public schools, in the high schools and in the universities. Do not blame that poor Canada Year Book for repeating what everyone has been taught since he was in the cradle.

I have spoken about this principle in relation to the Defence Production Act, the pipe line debate, on interim supply and now on this motion. I therefore say that if the Prime Minister had done what he should have done when he came back last Tuesday he would have called his ministers together and at least asked for the resignation of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) as a very minimum. I believe he should have asked all candidates running for the Liberal leadership to resign and appointed acting ministers in their place. Surely we have no right to interfere with the right of a Liberal leadership candidate to put his best foot forward so that the Liberal delegates from all across the country can pick the best man. He is going to be our prime minister. Yet we force those candidates to sit in this house, to restrain their utterances across the country and try to run both shows at the same time.

The third thing the Prime Minister should have done was consult with the Leader of the Opposition. I think the Leader of the Opposition has made it clear that he has a sense of responsibility. He knows that we have to get interim supply through, he knows we have to get the supplementary estimates through, he knows we have to ratify the GATT agreements before July 1 or they go down the drain. I think he would have made arrangements to carry on the routine business of the government, get these things done, get these Liberal candidates out in the field, and then we could stay until routine business was finished. There were many things that could have been done by the Prime Minister which would have demonstrated that he had the quality of leadership and that as he was about to leave the political scene he was trying to do the right thing. Now he retires, not just pathetic as he was but shabby. This is the reason I ask every person in this house who has any awareness of what we went through to realize that when he stands up and votes he will be voting on something which affects not only his honour but also this institution and the people of Canada.

This motion not only is an attack on the parliament of Canada and the people but also on the very principle of how men deal with each other. I should like to remind the Créditistes and any others who think they will not have to vote on the tax increase again that it will be brought in in some form. If you want to vote for more taxes just vote confidence in this government and you will have them. They are going to tell you what to do once they have control.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, when I came into the house this afternoon it was my intention to seek the floor to take part in this debate. I think you will understand what I mean when I say that in the light of the debate of yesterday I was in a certain frame of mind; that is, I did not intend to be too argumentative nor was I anxious to be provocative. I must confess that the speech made by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Trudeau) this afternoon has slightly altered my frame of mind.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: I shall try to return to the things I had intended to say after I deal with him. The Minister of Justice, like the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) the other day, has quoted from proposals I made in this house supported by my leader, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas), by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), and by other members of this party back in January, 1966. Both the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice have suggested that the course of procedure they are now following was actually proposed in the suggestions we made.

I take full responsibility for the proposals I made on that occasion and I shall have something to say about them in the course of my remarks. I object very strongly, however, to the Minister of Justice twisting what I said as he did this afternoon. When he was twisting my words I gave him the opportunity to get back on the rails by asking him a question. My question was as simple as I could make it. I asked him whether it was not a fact that my proposal for a vote of confidence after there had been a defeat of the government on a matter of substance was that it take place only when the decision had been announced before the vote rather than after the government had been beaten. What reply did the Minister of Justice give? Did he answer my question? Not a bit. He replied to the effect that I was asking that the opposition rather than the government have the right to decide what is a matter of confidence. If that is an answer to a question, then I do not understand any language at all. In other words, when he could not answer the question he attempted to shift the ground.

[Mr. Hamilton.]

The fact is that in the proposal I made in January, 1966 and in the proposal we still make we do not ask that the opposition have the right to say what issue is one of confidence and what issue is not one of confidence. I am prepared to let it be the government which says whether or not the issue is one of confidence. But I do say that the government must make that decision and must make that announcement before the vote and not after.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: That was one of the basic elements in the proposal we in this part of the house made in January, 1966. That is the main element in our proposal which the government is ignoring in the position it is now taking. It is very clear that what happened is that the government has lost a measure, that is, it has lost a vote under all the rules that apply in this house. But having been beaten the government wants to change the rules in order to try to find some way to win back what it lost.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: They desire to change the rule after the event, after the defeat. It is similar to a situation where on the football field the government's team failed to catch a forward pass because their man was not in the right place and they then asked for the rules to be changed and for the play to be executed over again so that their man could get there to catch the ball.

In another part of his speech this afternoon the Minister of Justice said a great deal about the fact that the government will not reintroduce Bill No. C-193. I am glad those words are on the record. They will be there if needed in any future circumstance. It is interesting to compare these words with the statement made by the Minister of Finance on television last Sunday night when he said that a taxation measure something like it would be introduced within three or four days. His time is running out. He had better hurry.

The same Minister of Justice who stood up here and solemnly told us that no attempt will be made to reintroduce Bill No. C-193 went out of his way to try to prove to us that there are citations which support his position that defeat on third reading is not necessarily fatal, that Bill C-193 could be brought back. May I suggest to the Minister of Justice that before he relies on the citations in Beauchesne he should read them carefully, find out where they came from and determine the rulings on which they are based. When he does this I believe he will find that in a good many cases these rulings do not mean quite what they say. I suggest there is nothing to support the contention of the Minister of Justice that there is a right to reintroduce a bill defeated either on second or third reading.

In any event may I call to the attention of the minister the fact that these citations concerning third reading were written in a day when we had two separate motions at that stage. One was a motion that the bill be now read a third time. After that motion had passed, with or without debate, a further question was put in these words: That the bill do now pass and that the title be as on the order paper. After the session of 1956, a session of vivid memory to many of us, that procedure was changed. We no longer have two separate motions, one for third reading and one that the bill do now pass. We now have one motion. The motion we now use is the one in the name of the Minister of Finance which appears at page 702 of Votes and Proceedings for February 19, 1968, in the following words:

Whereupon Mr. Sharp, seconded by Mr. Benson moved,—That the said bill be now read a third time and do pass.

The citations that might have applied when the motion was only for third reading no longer apply when it is a motion that the bill be read a third time and do pass. What was defeated by a vote of 84 to 82 on Monday, February 19, was not just a motion for the then third reading of the bill. It was not just a technical proposition; it was the ultimate final decision of this house that Bill No. C-193 pass and the house voted it down. I suggest, in any man's language and in terms of the ordinary rules of fair play, that the bill was beaten, and that is that. May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes that I had before six o'clock I dealt with some of the observations the Minister of Justice had made in his speech this afternoon. I pointed out in particular that he, like the Prime Minister, had twisted the proposal that we made in January, 1966, to try to find in it some basis for the course of action the government is now pursuing. I also pointed out that the Minister of Justice, like other hon. members on that side of the house, tried to allege that the third reading vote taken on Monday night, February 19, was not really as important as we all know it was.

I should like now to turn to the thoughts that I had in mind before the provocative experience of listening to the Minister of Justice this afternoon. Like my colleagues of the New Democratic party, I am opposed to the motion that is now before the house and I shall be voting against it, both because of the immediate effect that would flow from its being passed and because of my deep concern for the long run effect of the passing of this motion.

I want to devote as much as possible of my time to my concern about the long run effect of the passing of the motion, and therefore I shall be brief in my reference to the immediate situation. In my mind there is no question but that the result of an affirmative vote for this motion now before the house will be an imposition of taxes on the Canadian people similar to the taxes that were defeated on Monday night, February 19.

We were against that surtax then; we are against it now. We had no confidence then in the government that brought in that tax measure; we have no confidence in it now. What concerns us is our conviction that there is more to this motion than just an expression of confidence. It will be treated as a blank cheque which the government will use to try to bring back taxes like those that were defeated. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) made that very clear in his appearance on television on Sunday night, as well as on several other occasions.

Others have said this today, and my leader and deputy leader have said it clearly in the statements they have made in this debate, so I do not need to go into it at any further length. The immediate effect of the passing of this motion will be such that I feel everyone who is concerned about the well-being of our people and about our economy should vote against the motion and against the kind of taxation that will come if it is passed.

I said, however, Mr. Speaker, that I am even more concerned about the long run, the long range effect of this motion; in fact, an effect which I think we are creating whether we pass the motion or not. I am not one of those who think that it was out of order for the government to propose this motion. I think it was legally and constitutionally correct, and I think that Your Honour was quite right in allowing the motion to be put and to be debated in the house. But I ask that we face this fact, that in debating this motion, and certainly if the house passes it, we will be doing something very serious; we will be, in effect, amending the constitution of Canada.

I know that for the most part people think the constitution of Canada is the British North America Act, and that is all there is to it. When there is talk about amending the constitution most people think that means amending, revising or rewriting the British North America Act. But some people know there is more to the constitution of Canada than the British North America Act and I suggest that so far as the constitution of this parliament is concerned, so far as the operation of this institution goes, we are practically without a written constitution. We make our own constitution by the things that we do over the years.

I ask hon. members to read the British North America Act again, to read it carefully and closely and try to count the number of things you can find in it that control this parliament. There is very, very little. Oh, there is a provision which says we cannot last for more than five years without an election; but we amended that in world war I. There is a provision that says we must have a redistribution every ten years, we amended that provision during world war II. There was a provision initially about the number of members for each province, about the basis of distribution, we have amended that several times. And so it goes, Mr. Speaker.

There are two or three things we have not altered. For example, there is a clear provision that we must have a Speaker, and there are some pretty strong implications about his authority. There is a clear statement that decisions made in this house shall be made on the basis of a majority vote. But there is nothing in that constitution, in the British North America Act, about our rules. There is nothing that says we must give bills first, second and third readings. There is nothing that says anything about the length of time to be spent in debate or about the kind of debates we are to have. There is a reference to money matters, that anything involving the expenditure of money must be preceded by a resolution from the Governor General—

Mr. Nielsen: Or taxation.

Mr. Knowles: —but so far as the general operation of the institution of parliament is concerned, we are almost like the parliament at Westminster—we make our own rules; we run our own show. If I may digress for a moment, Mr. Speaker, practically the only difference between this country and Britain, so far as parliament is concerned, is that we have a British North America Act which draws the line between the federal authority and the provincial authority. In Britain parliament is supreme and everyone knows it. Parliament is supreme in this country, too, but we do have a constitution which says that certain things are within federal jurisdiction and others are within provincial jurisdiction. Otherwise we make our rules, our traditions, and lay down the precedents for the kind of institution this is to be.

I submit that in this very debate we are adding to the precedents that are used for determining in the future what parliament can do. Why is it, for example, that when people are trying to answer the question as to whether the vote of February 19 was a motion of confidence, reference has to be made to Erskine May, to Beauchesne, to Bourinot, to Jennings, to Dicey, to Eugene Forsey, to the Canada Year Book, and so on? It is because there is no written constitution that gives the answers.

There is no document anywhere which says officially: This is a vote of confidence; this is not. We rely on precedent, we rely on tradition, and we rely on the Speaker's rulings. Indeed, if there is any element of this institution which is constitutional, it is the function that Your Honour exercises to see to it that the traditions which should be respected are continued, and that innovations are allowed only if they make common sense and meet the general will of the people. But I emphasize the fact that this is a pragmatic institution. We do not have a written constitution which says how we shall operate. Everyone knows that in the United States for a bill to become law it has to be passed by both houses and receive the president's signature. Everyone knows that if he refuses his signature, the bill is dead, unless it then gets a two thirds vote by both houses. Everyone knows that down there if a bill is defeated in one way or the other, it is dead and there is no question about it. But the president remains; he continues for the balance of the four years, because all of these things are laid down in a written constitution.

We operate with a minimum of written guide lines. We operate on the basis of tradition and precedent. I submit that this makes the motion which we are now debating more serious in terms of our constitutional history than it is even in terms of the tax measure which lies behind it. We already have certain traditions about the question of confidence. It has been pretty well established, because it has happened quite often, that a government can be beaten on a minor matter but carry on. If everyone accepts the fact that it is a minor matter, there is no election. For example, in committee of the whole a short while ago a motion by the Postmaster General (Mr. Côté) which would have increased the postage rates, was defeated. The government was defeated then, but no one claimed this to be a major matter. The government did not resign, and there was no call for an election. The government was also beaten in the last parliament on the amendment which we proposed to the Canada Labour (Standards) Code regarding the number of general holidays in a year. The government stood up strongly against our amendment, but it was beaten.

It is a convention and a tradition that there are so-called minor measures which do not bring down the government. Then we have another tradition, only this one has been written into a rule—not into the constitution, but into a rule of parliament—and it has to do with supply motions. We have a rule which says that if the government is beaten by the passing of a supply amendment, in other words if the government's motion is superseded by the passing of a supply amendment, the government may immediately introduce another supply motion, and without further amendment have a vote on it, and if it is sustained the government carries on. I may say incidentally that I remember two or three of these cases in earlier years when this provision was used, notably in August, 1946, when we in this party moved an amendment to a supply motion, our amendment having to do with the subsidy on the price of milk. Our amendment carried, but before it did Mr. Howe had said that this was a free vote, in other words no confidence was involved in it. Our amendment carried, and so this device was used. Mr. St. Laurent used it two or three times on supply motions when more or less non-controversial matters were proposed. In other words it was accepted that we did not bring on an election because the government accepted an opposition amendment.

The things that we have done, such as the continuing of the government in office after the defeat of the post office measure, the defeat of an amendment to a labour bill, or the defeat on a subsidy motion, and so on, are really part of the constitution of Canada. They are there as precedents, and they are much more in the way of guide lines to us and to the Chair than anything one would find in the constitution.

If I may ask you, sir, a rhetorical question: How often in your study of the procedural problems that have come before you do you go back to the British North America Act? There are so few things in there about the operation of the house that you could go through them in no time. What you have to go back to are precedents. The precedents that we have up to this point pretty well define what we can do in terms of confidence or non-confidence, but I do not know of any instance in Canadian parliamentary history where the defeat of a major taxation measure brought in by the government has been treated as a minor matter, when it has not been treated as a measure of confidence.

Let me say again that I concede to the government the legal right to bring in the motion that is now before us; I concede to the government the legal and constitutional right to ask parliament whether or not it says "You can carry on despite that defeat", but I do ask that in deadly seriousness we realize what we are doing. We are amending the constitution of Canada, just as much as if the Minister of Justice reached unanimous agreement with the ten provincial governments in this country on an amendment to the British North America Act.

We are saying that from here on there is a new way in which we can operate in the House of Commons. We can have decisions under which the government is beaten on a major matter, and it really is not a defeat of the government. Although I oppose the passing of this motion, I want to say, not only that it is in my view in order to bring it in, but also that in my view it would be good for us to be doing some thinking and to devise some new ways of dealing with situations such as we have with minority governments. This is what we have tried to do in this party, before I made my speech in January, 1966, which has been quoted by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice. I proposed that on amendments to the address, amendments to the budget, and on various proposals made by the opposition, there be an understanding in advance that the vote on the substance of those amendments should be separated from the question of whether or not the government was to be brought down, whether or not there was to be an election. I believe that is still a good idea. This is a parliament of minorities—and we may continue to have them for some years. What I am suggesting is a good piece of machinery, and I think we should add it to the constitution of Canada; but let us add it knowing what we are doing, and let us add it with the necessary safeguards.

Several members of the government have said they read these speeches of ours made in January, 1966, and that this is just what they are doing. May I point out with respect that there are three major differences between our proposal of January, 1966, and what is happening now. The first one we have repeated several times but we do not seem to have got it into the heads of the government. We said that the announcement that a matter is not a vote of confidence, which would be decided separately, should be made before the vote is taken, not after. In other words, in any game you play the rules should be set before you start, not after the bully has lost a play or two in the game. In my view that is an essential feature in this kind of change in our constitution.

The second difference—and I point out that I will not press it as hard as I might press one or two other things—is that when I made my proposal in January, 1966, I made it with reference to things proposed by the opposition, expressions of opinion contained in amendments to the address or amendments to the budget. Actually, that was as far as I went. But the government has applied the principle of a second vote, not to an idea advanced by the opposition but to one of its own major pieces of legislation. The government cannot control what the opposition proposes; therefore I think it is appropriate for the government, if it has been beaten on an opposition idea, to have the right to another vote.

However, the government controls what it brings in. It decides what its tax measures are to be. I submit that that right should not extend to the government in such a situation. If the government thinks this is not completely fair and wants to have it both ways on this point, I think we could negotiate it. In other words, I do not regard the second point I am making as having the same importance as the first one about the announcement being made in advance.

The third difference is that in the proposal we made in January, 1966, we were proposing merely a device, an arrangement of parliamentary procedure under which a government which was defeated on a motion from the opposition could carry on and could still be the government. We were not proposing a device under which the government could bring back a measure which it had presented and which had been defeated, but that is what this government is tring to do. It is trying to use our proposal as a means of obtaining the right to carry on, and extending that to a situation which will permit the government to bring back a measure that was defeated by the House of Commons on February 19. I know the Minister of Justice said this afternoon that they are not going to bring back Bill No. C-193, but I am uneasy; I am uncertain and I shall be until this story is completed. I have heard the things the Minister of Finance has said and the things the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) has said. That is why I am uneasy on this point.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, if we were pursuing the kind of arrangement we suggested in 1966, it would be amending our constitution, but it would be doing it in a sensible way and in a way that would help to make minority parliaments work. In my view, these three things are essential: First, there has to be an announcement before a vote, not after, that it is not one of confidence; second, this proposal should apply only to changes brought forward by the opposition over which the government has no control; third, the government should have the right to carry on, but not the right to bring back, in the same session, a measure which has been defeated. Now, that was our idea, and it is one which ought to be worked into the fabric of this house. I think the distortion of it which has been made by this government is dangerous. If this motion passes, or even if it is defeated, it will be quoted. We will have added to our constitution a precedent that is just as meaningful, just as useful to the government and to the Chair as anything else that is there. From this time forward, the next time a government has been beaten on a vote, no matter how major it is, the government will be able to say, "We did it in February, 1968, and we can do it again." We will bring in another motion and we will go through this monkey business all over again. The right to do this will in effect be part of our constitution if we pass this motion. That is the main reason I am against it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I could enlarge on these ideas but if I did I would be repeating myself. These are the kinds of thoughts I had in mind earlier today to give to the house, before the Minister of Justice provoked us as he did before the supper recess. I repeat, however, that this is a terribly serious thing we are doing. We are not just passing one simple motion in the month of February, 1968: We are amending the constitution of Canada; we are changing the way in which this parliament works. Yes, we should make changes, and I think we should take into account the minority situation. We should take into account ways and means of staying here and doing the business of the country. But we should not support a device that enables the government to twist our words and enables it to use a new rule after it has lost out on the first one, to bring back something that has been defeated by the House of Commons.

I see that my time is just about up, Mr. Speaker, and that means the other thing I wanted to say I shall have to compress into a couple of minutes. Perhaps it is not related to what I have been saying, and I have no doubt that I may be accused of acting like a school teacher lecturing his pupils. I am going to take that chance, and there is another chance I am going to take, too. I hope that the experience of last Monday night, February 19, and the experience of the days that have gone by since, have made us realize the importance of attendance in the House of Commons. This whole sorry mess which we have had these last eight or nine days would not have happened at all if two or three more Liberal members had been present on February 19. When people like the Minister of Justice stand up and complain about the eight days—by the way, this motion has been under debate only three days—that have been taken, let the government members recall that the whole reason for this mess lies in the fact they did not have their people here. I will go further than that now, and say that I hope we all realize that, after all, attendance in this House of Commons is important.

Mr. Nielsen: Why? A vote does not mean anything.

Mr. Knowles: My hon. friend says the rule does not mean anything.

Mr. Nielsen: No, a vote does not mean anything, so why be here?

Mr. Knowles: I am sorry I misunderstand, for I know the hon. member was paying attention to my previous remarks in which I contended that we should have the kind of rules which will make votes mean something. I think it is quite clear that we would not have had this mess if attendance in the House of Commons were taken more seriously. If I may indulge in a bit of a commercial, on Sunday night the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson), the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and I had the privilege of being on one of the C.B.C.'s open line programs called "Cross Country Check-up". We were asked to discuss parliamentary procedure, in the hope that we would get questions that would pry into our academic knowledge of these things. We did not get very many questions of that general kind. They all dealt with last week's crisis. However, although I did not keep exact count, I know I am safe in saying that at least three out of five of the questions—they came by long distance from all over Canada—were identical: Why weren't the members here?

An hon. Member: They were not all in Jamaica.

Mr. Knowles: I realize I am getting support from my Conservative friends, and that they are ricocheting these remarks across to the Liberals. However, I am directing my remarks to the whole house. The fact is that we had only 166 members in the House of Commons last Monday night, out of 265. This is not to our credit. I hope, as a result of this experience, we will realize that it is our job to be here. I agree with the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) that we must make a change in our practice which will make it meaningful to be here. We can increase the importance of our being here if we make the kind of changes that will make it possible for all parties and all members to participate in debate, and will make all votes really significant.

Mr. Speaker, I deplore the way in which things have been twisted by the other side. With the rest of my colleagues, I say we should defeat this motion that is now before us, because in effect it is a motion that would open the door to bringing back taxes against which we are strongly opposed. I am opposed to it also because I think the passing of this motion opens the door to constitutional changes, in fact makes constitutional changes, that would not be for the benefit of parliament. On the other hand, if we study our problems and look at the things we can do, I think we can make changes that will make our parliamentary procedures even better. This I hope we will do very soon.

Motion Respecting House Vote

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, I feel impelled to rise and participate in this debate because of remarks that have been made, some involving myself personally to which I shall refer later. But before launching into the facts and figures related to this situation, I wondered if the members of the house were aware that if this vote carries in favour of the cabinet the Liberal party is adopting Nancy Greene as its patron saint, since she typifies how to win while going downhill.

I had prepared most of my remarks for this evening prior to the manufacture of the majority to put down the so-called manufactured crisis. I want the comments I am going to make to be on the record because I believe that the upset a week ago Monday and the debate of the last few days has shown the absolute necessity of altering the rules of procedure in the Canadian House of Commons.

I have been arguing for 40 years that the British and Canadian system of parliamentary responsibility, under which a government may be defeated on any vote, is ridiculous; that we in this country should adopt the United States system whereby Congress is free to vote as it likes during the four years of its life; and the United States parliamentary or governmental system is not upset. In my close study of the United States system during my lifetime I have seen beaten down many measures that the executive branch—the cabinet —had wanted to see carried. But the executive branch did not have to leave Washington. During the four year term members are free to speak their minds; no threat is held over them to the effect: "Unless you support the administration's proposals we will have a general election right away". This situation—I will quote the Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh): "this rotten situation"—that developed a week ago Monday because of poor handling on the Liberal side of the house puts the klieg lights on a circumstance that should be corrected.

I believe that good will come out of this poor situation because we will have to alter the rules of the house, and alter them quickly. We cannot have a situation continue whereby men who hold a definite opinion on a certain vote will still vote for the motion if they are sitting to the right of the Speaker because they are told that it is the desire of the cabinet that the motion pass, while good men and women sitting on the left of the Speaker will vote against it because that is the opposition's fancied role.

This situation is ridiculous, as I say. There are brains on both sides of the aisle in the Canadian House of Commons, and the Canadian nation is entitled to the benefit of those brains. It is childish to say that all proper thinking occurs only to the right of the Speaker, and faulty thinking to the left. That is a fallacy that cannot be allowed to stand. A majority vote in the chamber should set the law of the land.

I am getting fed up to the teeth listening to people talk of Harry Truman's celebrated remark: "If you can't stand the heat, stay out of the kitchen". I agree with that remark of the ex-president. Criticism that is directed to individual members of the House of Commons and Senate can often only be endured on the basis that if you cannot stand the heat, get out of the kitchen. However, I should like to give a Canadian simile that I think is better, and say: "If you can't last the three periods of a hockey game, don't put on your skates".

I have in my hand, Mr. Speaker, the House of Commons provisional reprint of the standing orders, and standing order 75, to be found at page 70, distinctly states:

> Every bill shall receive three several readings, on different days, previously to being passed.

A bill is not passed until it has received three several readings. Has the Liberal party forgotten standing order 75, Mr. Speaker? In standing order 76 we read:

> When a bill is read in the house, the Clerk shall certify upon it the readings—

Note the plural.

> —and the time thereof. After it has passed, he shall certify the same, with the date, at the foot of the bill.

You will note, Mr. Speaker, that three readings are mandatory before the passing of a bill. It is absolutely ridiculous to stand up and argue that this was a technical defeat on a minor stage, third reading; that argument is not worthy of anyone with experience in parliament. Third reading is as important as second reading, and is as important as first reading, and it should be treated as such.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty. If the party in power cannot exert eternal vigilance with regard to the measures that it brings forward, then it had better get out of office and let somebody who can exert eternal vigilance take over the treasury benches. To make the statement that this income tax measure passed first reading, passed second reading and passed clause by clause study only to fail on third reading is absolutely childish—and I can think of no other word.

Is the government going to tell us that if a team does not score in the first and second periods of a hockey game it has not the right to score in the third period, and win the game? Are we being told that because a ball team does not score in the first eight innings it has no right to knock a home run with the bases loaded in the ninth and win the game? You cannot change the rules if you find the ball game going against you and you cannot change the rules in the third period of a hockey game.

It has also been stated that a small house defeated the motion. I believe the vote was 84 to 82. I find this funny. If this was a small house, then why did not the government bring up again that post office resolution that was voted down 14 to 11? I was in the house that afternoon and when the 14 to 11 vote was taken I was up in the far corner reading my Hansard proofs. If an 82 to 84 vote is a small house, Mr. Speaker, what in the name of heaven is a vote of 14 to 11? If a vote of 82 to 84 was only a technical defeat, then why has the government not brought forward the post office resolution? That resolution was to have raised, I understand, $30 million a year, money that was vitally necessary.

The Ottawa terminal railway bill in 1964-65 passed first reading, passed second reading and was referred to the transport committee. In the transport committee proceedings the late hon. member for Hull, Alexis Caron, moved an amendment to some of the clauses in the bill that provided for the composition of the board of directors of the Ottawa terminal railway station. That amendment of the late Mr. Caron was carried by a majority of one.

The interesting thing about that, Mr. Speaker, is this. Immediately the word came down: Bottle up the bill in the transport committee until the house prorogues. The bill was bottled up in the committee all right, until the house prorogued, and it never came on the floor of the House of Commons again. That bill had had first reading, second reading and was in process of clause by clause study in the transport committee. If a defeat in the House of Commons of 84 to 82 is only a technical defeat, then why was not the Ottawa terminal railway bill brought forward again? Why was the post office resolution not brought forward again?

In this particular matter, Mr. Speaker, I am able to speak with a clear conscience and with clean hands. I mean that, because I was not in the house on Monday night, February 19. I was paired with an opposition member. I should also say this, that in five and a half years in this house I have never known a pair of mine to break down, and the Liberal whip will bear me out in this regard.

As I say, Mr. Speaker, I was absent from this house on that occasion, being in the city of Toronto. On December 14 the leader of the Liberal party stated that he was resigning his office as leader of the party some time in the following spring. A week ago Monday night I was engaged in the happy task of selecting delegates to the Liberal leadership convention who are going to pick a new leader for the Liberal party.

We had over 600 people at the hall, that being the largest delegate selection meeting to be held in any of the Toronto ridings to date. There are five yet to be held; but of the 19 held so far our attendance of 600 was the biggest. Maybe some of the up and coming five special meetings to select delegates will have a bigger attendance; I don't know. But I was paired. That pair stood until Tuesday. That was the agreement, because we were conducting the election of delegates to the leadership convention in the city of Ottawa in April.

Do not blame me for the vote. I find that members of the cabinet want to know where the members of the party were when the vote was on. But they do not ask the members of the party; no, no. That would take too much time. The members are supposed to come crawling to them like dogs and whimper, "You can't blame me; I had a pair," or "I was off sick."

An hon. Member: Arrogance.

Mr. Cowan: Responsibility for what happened in this house on February 19 does not rest on the shoulders of every one of those men who were away. In Prince Edward Island there were 21 members of a House of Commons committee, ten of them being Liberals, and 11 were opposition members. They were down there on transport committee business which was authorized by the House of Commons. Everything they were doing was legitimate, yet people are screaming, "Where were the 21 members?" Somebody should find out that they were about 15 miles from Charlottetown, stuck in a snowstorm behind a jackknifed truck. That is no disgrace to those 21 members; there is no discredit in that. But that is more than I can say for people who go off for a Jamaican rum swizzle and do not even leave a pair behind.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Cowan: When I came back to this house on the Tuesday after February 19 I spoke to some of the officials of the party, and I spoke about my pair. Unlike the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) who says that nobody called on him before the manufactured majority was secured, I had three cabinet ministers call on me. I must say that, speaking to them individually, I said that the government had been defeated on Monday night, 84 to 82. I said—based on the information I can get—I am only a private Liberal member and not supposed to know anything, and certainly I am not told anything—the best information I can get is that a resolution is coming forward which will, if passed, revive Bill C-193 and vote confidence in the cabinet. I said to each individual member of the cabinet, "I will not vote for any resolution that has two parts. That bill was killed on Monday night 84 to 82; the only way you can revive that bill is to prorogue this house and bring the bill in in another session, if you wish. If you want to do that I will vote for the bill in a new house, but I certainly will not vote in any way, shape or form for a revival of Bill C-193, in the present session, no matter who tries to bring it in."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cowan: I based my statement on a ruling—I understand it is perfectly all right to refer to a ruling of the present Speaker —made by the present Speaker of the House of Commons in January, 1967. I have XEROX copies of it in my hand. I showed it to two of the three cabinet ministers and said, "We stand or fall on this, because I have every confidence in the Speaker." This ruling has to do with an amendment that the Liberals wanted to bring in to counteract a defeat they had suffered in committee of the whole on the transport bill.

I was in the house that night when the vote was carried 59 to 57 by the opposition. From what I have been told, the people in western Canada are very happy that the opposition carried that amendment to the main bill. But you may remember that a couple of days after the bill was altered by opposition action, this side of the house endeavoured to bring in an amendment which would have reintroduced into the original draft of the bill that which had been eliminated by opposition action.

Reading from the Journals of the House of Commons of Canada for January 26, 1967 you can see the Speaker's ruling on the matter. He said the amendment could not be brought in, stating as follows:

> Honourable Members of course are all agreed on the most important rule of procedure, that a question which has once been negatived cannot be proposed again in the same session.

He says in the last sentence of his decision:

> I am prepared to interpret the doubt in favour of the most important principle in the citation, and to reject the amendment.

Not only was the Speaker correct in his decision of January 26, 1967 but I like his use of the adjective "the". He did not say "Hon. members...are all agreed on a rule." He said, "Honourable Members ... are all agreed on the most important rule of procedure, that a question which has once been negatived cannot be proposed again in the same session." In the last sentence he says, "...in favour of the most important principle in the citation". It is not "an important principle".

I told a member of the cabinet that if there were two parts to the resolution, it would be opposed to the bitter end and it could not be brought in in any way because the Speaker had already made a ruling; and who are we to go against his learned decision.

One of the members of the cabinet said to me, "But if the proposed resolution passes the Speaker's eye, will it be satisfactory to you?" I said, "If the resolution should pass the Speaker's eye as containing only one part and not two, it would be satisfactory to me. If there is no statement made that Bill C-193 will be revived in this session of parliament and if no effort is made to circumvent the Speaker's decision, as the cabinet tried to do in the case of the transport bill, I can support the continuation of the cabinet in office." That is what I said.

I want to read to you how the Prime Minister on Friday last, February 23, rose to defend his position. He made this statement inside the first 200 words. On page 6921 of Hansard he is reported to have said:

> We,...accept the fact of that rejection.

Then, speaking of the motion, he went on to say:

It does not ask the house to rescind or reconsider any vote.

I now wish to refer to standing order 25 of this house which says that no member may reflect upon any vote of the house, except for the purpose of moving that such vote be rescinded.

You will notice that on page 6923 the Prime Minister says:

It does not ask the house to rescind or reconsider any vote.

Later he goes on to say:

We have made it quite clear we are not going to ask for further progress on that bill—

In this manner the cabinet had put only one tooth in the motion; they had cleaned it up in the sense that I was told, previously, that it was going to have two teeth. One of them having been removed, according to the very learned decision of the Speaker, the motion now covers only one point.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want you to consider the remark that there was only a small house which voted 84 to 82; and therefore it was a small technical mistake—it was a fluke, we are told. Well, look at the capital punishment bill. We retained capital punishment in this house by 143 to 112, with 255 members voting. And what happened? Fourteen months later the cabinet brought the same measure back on the floor of the House of Commons. If a vote of 255 members will not hold them, what will?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cowan: The bill was revived and put through by a vote of 114 to 87. Previously it was defeated, 143 to 112 but now it was put through 114 to 87. As I said at the time, what 112 members could not do in one month 114 did 14 months later, when the question was revived as a government bill, and being told that there was to be a free vote. I had never heard such a bastard phrase before.

• (8:50 p.m.)

I say it is time some of the rules of this house were changed so that free votes could be called much more frequently without the expectation of an election every time a cabinet measure may be defeated. I want to point out that we have been advised that this was decided by a very small vote, 82 to 84, and it was a Monday, too; normally they would not have a vote on a Monday, so this was trickery, underhand work or something. Mr. Speaker, on February 7 I introduced an amendment on third reading. We are told, now, that a vote on third reading is only a technical matter and that defeat does not count. Yet against the amendment I brought in simply to ask the house to revert to committee of the whole to reconsider clause 28 of the broadcasting bill, the Liberal party lined up 107 votes to ensure that my proposal should not carry.

If third reading does not matter, why go to the trouble of lining up 107 votes? Third reading is only technical, after all, and if the amendment carried what harm would be done? It seems to be a case of heads you win and tails I lose, and the people who follow the rules of the house do not seem able to get the verdict which their foresight should make available to them.

On this question of the income tax bill: One of the speakers in this debate made reference to a gentleman by the name of Jennings, I think, who wrote a book entitled "Cabinet Government". Well, I do not like to hear citations from books entitled "Cabinet Government". We are having too much cabinet government as it is. I would like to see more parliamentary government and less cabinet government, and I do not like quotations from that book.

I mentioned a moment ago that I wished to refer to a personal matter. I have kept very quiet since that vote a week ago Monday. I have always been here, never absent. But I picked up the Toronto Globe and Mail of Thursday last and read a story there under the headline: "Crisis deepens as parties reveal strategies". On page 8, I came across these interesting words. Mr. Pearson had called what was described as a formal press conference—I don't know whether anyone attended in tails and bow ties, or what.

Mr. Pearson noted that Mr. Stanfield had suggested that the Prime Minister might turn the government over to another Liberal.

I thank the hon. gentleman for that suggestion.

He said he would have to ask Mr. Stanfield whom he had in mind, adding that any member of the government would make a good prime minister.

The report continues:

"Even Liberal M.P. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber)?" a reporter asked.

"He's not a member of the government," Mr. Pearson shot back.

I want to ask what is the position of the 100 odd Liberals on this side of the house who are not in the cabinet. If they are not members of the government, why bring them back here to vote on questions of confidence and similar matters? Why cannot the government handle these things by themselves—they seem to be able to do everything?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Cowan: I wrote a letter to the Prime Minister on Thursday, February 22, and I delivered it to his office myself. Perhaps I might put it on record at this point.

For some years now I have been arguing that Canada does not enjoy government by its representatives but is the victim of cabinet government. This, of course, denotes the distinct difference between the members of the cabinet and the men and women who have been elected to the House of Commons by their electors with the idea that they would be part of the government of Canada.

When I was asked to run on the Liberal ticket in 1962, I was asked if I would help overthrow the Diefenbaker government. I wasn't asked if I would help to overthrow the Diefenbaker cabinet. When I was renominated by the Liberal party in 1963, it was with the firm intention on the part of the Liberals of York-Humber to overthrow the Diefenbaker government—not the Diefenbaker cabinet. I ran in 1962 and 1963, along with you, without anyone knowing who would be in the Pearson cabinet if the Liberals achieved government status. It did not take me long to learn after 1963 that a private Liberal member of parliament amounts to nothing in the eyes of a cabinet with overweening conceit.

Mr. Cowan: My letter continued:

In the Globe and Mail of this morning, February 22, 1968, there is reference in the fourth column on page 8 to your comment that Mr. Stanfield had suggested that the Prime Minister might turn the government over to another Liberal. You are reported as having added that any member of the government would make a good Prime Minister. I note the distinction between what Mr. Stanfield is reported to have said, he used the word "Liberal", and what you are reported to have remarked, you used the word "government". Then some reporter asked you if even Liberal M.P. Ralph Cowan would make a good Prime Minister. You are then quoted by the Globe and Mail as having said "He is not a member of the government".

On behalf of those hundred odd Liberal members of parliament who are not members of the cabinet, would you be kind enough to advise us what our status is? There are Liberal voters throughout Canada who think that Liberal members of parliament are members of a Liberal government. If I am not a member of the Liberal government of the day, who or what am I? I personally could not care less what you have to say about me, but I would like to be able to tell the other hundred odd Liberal members of parliament who are not in the cabinet, just what their status is in your eyes.

[Mr. Cowan.]

I am holding in my hand one of the weekly calls to caucus. No doubt you like the wording, "A meeting of the supporters of the government will be held etc., etc." Every time I get one of these I wonder what we private Liberal members are, since it is evident from the call we are not considered members of the government.

Now that the Canadian public has your assurance that I am not a member of the government, you have no idea how free I feel at this time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Cowan: I then told the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) that I would second his amendment; he had asked me once or twice whether I would do that. I felt quite free to do so and I did so in order that he might talk on his amendment.

In this connection I should like to quote some references and comments with regard to private Liberal members of this house who were absent. I am sorry to say some of them are hesitant to speak up; that is not a shortcoming on my part, I am told. I have here a copy of the Toronto Evening Telegram of last night, Monday, February 26, and on the front page I read:

Prime Minister Pearson admitted on national television last night that the Liberals blundered in the tax bill defeat last Monday. "Of course they blundered—"

Now I was asked to be one of the members of the Pearson team in 1962 and 1963 and 1965. It is some team, when the captain says "they blundered". Where was the captain? As far as we can find out, he was not even paired.

"Of course they blundered and when a Government has 129 members who could vote for it and could muster only 82 there is a blunder. I'm not trying to excuse that," he said. "I knew this was a possibility. I didn't expect to end my days in peace.

"I was very angry—"

Well, my second daughter lived in Jamaica for two years after her marriage and I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that it is a very pleasant place in which to be angry with anybody. The beauty of it is that there is such a great distance between here and there that one is not aware of the anger until some time after it has worn off.

Here is another quotation from page 4 of the same newspaper:

"I was shocked and enraged," Mr. Pearson said. "I was directing my anger toward myself for being away . . . to our caucus . . . the members who were not there."

Well, I was not there, and if anyone has been directing any anger to me I am not aware of it so far, and I am speaking for a large number of Liberals who were absent that Monday evening because they had legitimate reasons for being absent; and there is no reason for belabouring them for not being here.

On the front page of the Toronto Star last night there appeared a five-column picture taken outside the door of the House of Commons and there was a quotation underneath it: "Our Government Blundered".

What blunder was there on the part of the people who were paired and who were not here? What blunder was there on the part of those Liberals who were snowbound in that bus outside Charlottetown? Private Liberal members are not considered members of the government. Was there any blunder on the part of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) who had been sent to New Delhi, and who went there with the cabinet's full consent? I would like to see less of this open handed blaming of private Liberal members who were going where they should be going and standing where they should be standing, and not criticism from people a thousand miles from here at a time when their presence was vital, very vital to this vote.

We were even told by the Prime Minister that here we were all chastising ourselves. I do not know a Liberal member who had a legitimate excuse for not voting that night who was chastising himself. If this motion will carry, it will establish precedents for the future, as brought out by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) when he was speaking the other day. He said that if this motion should carry it will not be necessary for the cabinet to win votes in future. They can simply wave their hands and say, "Today won't count. We will have another vote on Monday that will really count." We won't even need to ring the division bells. This proposed vote if carried will set a precedent that will have to be eliminated by adopting the United States congressional system where people are free to vote during a four year period.

I am faced with this problem of the two pronged vote. I said I could never support a two pronged resolution. I will follow the Speaker and I will follow him to the end. As I say, they have removed one of the two teeth, and now we are to have a single vote. It was interesting to me, before the majority was manufactured, to note that this motion does not express confidence. It is worded so as to read:

> This house does not regard its vote on February 19th in connection with third reading of Bill C-193, which had carried in all previous stages, as a vote of non-confidence in the government.

It is quite interesting that the cabinet does not ask for a confidence vote. They say that this is not regarded as a vote of non-confidence in the government. The fact that they have brought this motion forward proves that that vote on Monday night of last week was a vote of confidence. Otherwise why was this motion brought forward?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cowan: If this was not a non-confidence vote the cabinet could have proceeded to bring in supplementary estimates which must be passed very shortly, or could have proceeded on interim supply which we are also going to need very shortly. But rather than bring in two such subjects as that, since the cabinet had not been defeated on a confidence motion—according to the talk we have been hearing—it would not have been necessary to bring in this motion. The fact that it has been brought in shows that the vote on third reading was a confidence vote, and the opposition is to be congratulated for having been on its toes at the time of third reading.

I am faced with the problem of going back on my statement that if one half of the proposed resolution was eliminated I would support the other half. I do not want to place myself in that position, but I come to this open situation. I entered this house in 1962. In November and December of 1962 and in January 1963—I have looked up all the Hansard records on it—the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) led the assault on the government of the day with regard to those pieces of legislation that had been introduced under order in council by that government.

I have in my hands a copy of Hansard for December 20, 1962. At page 2884 it is recorded:

> The house resumed from Thursday, December 6—

And I may say this went back to November 22 and November 8

> —consideration of the motion of Mr. Martin (Essex East)— who was seeking to have correspondence tabled:

> —on the subject of surcharge and imports order, P.C. 1962-902, dated June 24, 1962, and the amendment to the surcharge and imports order, P.C.

1962-987, dated July 11, 1962, and the import control list as amended by P.C. 1962-903, dated June 24, 1962, with particular reference to the legality of such orders.

The argument with regard to the production of those papers, which we never did see, was based on the fact that the government of the day in 1962 was imposing taxes without proper authority. This involved some sleight of hand with respect to the Customs Tariff Act and the Financial Administration Act. I have mentioned this once before in the house, and I will mention it a second time. We were all indebted to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) for having exposed the fact that the Financial Administration Act was not being observed, since it provided that a list be made and tabled showing the remission of items over $1,000, according to the legerdemain adopted by the previous government.

If this present motion does not pass and if the Governor General should be advised to call on another person to take over control of the government, we will move from a party which has suffered defeat on the floor of the House of Commons on a money tax bill. They tell me that it was only a little bill, that it would bring in only $475 million next year. I am telling you inflation has really hit this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cowan: Some people sneered at the late Right Hon. C. D. Howe—I was not one of them—because in a fit of anger in this house he ejaculated, "What's a million"? If they snickered and sneered at the late C. D. Howe for asking what's a million dollars, what are they going to say when they are told that this was only a technical defeat, that it was only going to cost the cabinet $475 million?

Now, Mr. Speaker, $475 million is not a technical defeat, but I am faced with the choice of supporting a motion here which would allow this cabinet to prorogue the house, bring in a new session and revive the bill which was defeated a week ago Monday—and I would vote for that bill—or run the risk of turning the government over to a crew who by order in council, without reference to parliament, started to tax the people of Canada in 1962 for $200 million a year as then estimated, and we still do not know what the total was going to be ultimately. I must state that since the cabinet took the second tooth out, and since I have a choice between six of one and half a dozen of the other I will have to vote in favour of the motion that will be coming to a vote very shortly.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have often maintained and supported the thesis that it is here in the House of Commons that debates should be conducted, and not over the airways. I suggest to you, sir, that today we have had an example of extremely useful debate which has contributed very much to the serious subject that we have before us.

We have had the good fortune to hear from experienced and able people today. We have had new ideas put before us that had not been canvassed previously. We have had some other ideas and suggestions underlined and brought more forcibly to our attention. That is why I have always maintained that here in the House of Commons is where debate should be conducted, even if it takes a little time and is not completed in one or two days. On a matter like this, which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) in his very reasoned and able speech pointed out affects the constitution of our country, why should we not debate the thing at some length?

This will become an historic debate. It will be referred to for years by political scientists, historians, and all those who are studying the history of parliament. The ideas that have been put forward today should be considered. If modifications should be introduced into our parliament this is the place in which that should be done, for parliament itself is an evolving institution.

It has changed over the years, and yet it has remained the same; it has remained the centre, the heart and the soul of democracy and of freedom. So, sir, that is one reason I approve of having debates in the House of Commons which are not terminated in one or two days. I do not object to the statements that have been made on radio and television. What I do object to is the implication to the public that two or three days of television and radio conversations and newspaper editorials ends the issue. That is what I object to—the implication that then there should be a counting of heads, and let us get on with something else. I believe today's debate has shown that there is some value to my criticism of a public debate over the air waves.

It is my intention now to deal with the central issue in the controversy that is engaging the attention of the house, namely the purpose and implications of the motion which is before us and the result that will flow from its adoption. I want to do this because I believe the public has not been completely informed with regard to the central issue. I consider that this motion, if approved, will convey to the executive, the cabinet, complete and absolute power over parliament. I will show how over the years the power of the Commons has been gradually diminished and how the rights and privileges of members have been steadily eroded in the course of the period in which I have had the pleasure and honour of being a member of this house.

The process of restricting the authority of the house began seriously with the election of the present government in 1963. Steps were soon taken to effect alterations in the rules, with the object of restricting debate and increasing the power of the executive. Prior to 1963 in this evolving institution the practice and custom of the house was to set up a rules and procedure committee under the chairmanship of the Speaker to consider modifications of the rules. In the period from 1952 to 1963, or in the period between 1952 and 1962 which is the period with which I am familiar, that was the method followed under the Speakers of that day. The committee on which the various parties were represented reported to the house only those changes in the rules for which there was unanimous agreement. Quite a number of changes were made, but I shall not take the time of the house tonight to recount these. In 1964 the Liberal government rejected that method and substituted the government's proposals for changes in the rules. Instead of having an all-party agreement the government insisted on having a majority vote on the changes which it considered to be best for the house and, despite strenuous objections, imposed the present rules.

Those recent changes imposed by this government have had serious consequences. The consideration of the main estimates has been limited to 30 days. Experience over the last three years has shown how advantageous that has been to the government. The estimates of many departments have not been considered at all by the house but have been put through automatically by the guillotine method on the thirtieth day. This has curtailed in a very marked manner the freedom of members to discuss proposed expenditures and has enlarged unduly the power of the executive. The second recent change in the rules is the method of closure of debate under the title of allocation of time. This practice ruthlessly limits freedom of members and gives enormous power to the executive.

These limitations of members' rights and these additions to the control and influence of the executive have altered the nature of parliament and have reduced its effectiveness under the specious argument of modernizing the rules and getting on with the business. Many members have been misled into shackling parliament and transferring power from the house to the executive. The motion which is now before the house and which appears on the order paper will complete the process of making the executive supreme, because now the executive will control the votes of the House of Commons. This constitutes absolute power. Up to this time votes in the Commons have been considered to be of great importance. They have imposed a restraint on the government and frequently have been a threat to the continuance of the government. Faced with the possibility of an adverse vote successive governments frequently have modified measures which have been placed before the house. In some instances they have withdrawn them. That fear will now be removed. An adverse vote may be circumvented by the introduction of a motion of confidence with the implication of all the dire effects of a general election, unless the members bow to the government.

How effective that threat is may soon be shown in this house. Already some critics of the government have indicated their intention to either vote for this motion or abstain. This ensures the government of a majority. If it works on this basis it will work in the future and will be utilized in the future. The method which now is about to be established by the government will effectively and inevitably weaken seriously the authority of parliament. The Prime Minister and members of the cabinet will have a power equal to those of any dictator. The main strength of the House of Commons has been its control over taxation. The rejection by the house of Bill No. C-193 on Monday, February 19 was an excellent example of the exercise of that control. The Commons refused to impose on the people the extra taxation proposed by the government.

Parliament had it origin in the summoning of representatives of the people to approve of taxation in order to provide revenue for the crown. Over the centuries parliament gradually gained full control of the finances of the state, reduced the power of absolute monarchs, destroyed the belief in the divine right of kings, established responsible government and vested in the executive or cabinet certain limited authority. In Canada today we have been witnessing the gradual but steady increase in the power of the executive, now culminating in the attempt of the executive to grasp absolute power. In the future no government, no matter how incompetent, how extravagant or how autocratic will be replaced during its five year term of office unless by its voluntary action or by a revolt of government members. So long as the executive can assemble sufficient bodies to provide a majority for a vote of confidence a government will be able to continue in office and impose whatever taxation it desires, indulge in whatever extravagances it fancies and pass whatever legislation it considers suitable for its purposes.

No vote in the House of Commons will have any meaning except as a recorded opinion. No member in the future will feel especially required to cast a vote. What urgency will be attached to voting; what importance will it have. Absenteeism will flourish as never before. Debates will deteriorate. Why bother attacking a government bill or moving amendments or gathering in members to vote on second reading or in the committee stage or on third reading when the whole process can be nullified by executive action? Not even the time honoured votes on the speech from the throne will have any validity. If an adverse vote occurred on that occasion the executive would argue that it was just a mistake, that the program should be seen in detail and that the house would surely want to reconsider the matter rather than have an immediate election. Consequently a new motion of confidence would be introduced.

What about the well known non-confidence motions on supply? They will be meaningless from now on. If they are adverse, the government will not resign but will argue that the house was merely expressing criticism of some parts of the government's program or its administration, and that the proper course would be to have another vote rather than a general election. The votes on the budget, always heretofore considered as crucial and vital to the government's policy, will no longer have any meaning whatsoever.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Mr. Churchill.]

Mr. Churchill: We had a startling example of that just last week. If there is an adverse vote on the budget the government will bring in another motion, members will rethink the problem and have a second chance to decide whether they really did want an immediate election or were merely intending to express some dissatisfaction with part of the government's proposals.

The motion now before us, as has been pointed out by other speakers, is an attempt to introduce into the parliamentary system an element of the republican system in practice in the United States. There the executive, separate and apart from Congress, puts forward legislative matters but does not resign if those items are not passed; nor can the executive be voted out of office. The Canadian executive, as part of parliament, is responsible to parliament and heretofore has been subject to dismissal by parliament. Now, under the proposed new arrangement, the executive will no longer be in any danger of dismissal.

This motion strikes at the heart of the parliamentary system. It is subversive of our constitutional practice. It is destructive of our system of government. It is a dictatorial measure aimed at reducing parliament to the status of a debating society. Its object is to place absolute power in the hands of the executive. This motion also endangers the freedom of the citizen in that it destroys the power of the member of parliament. If I am wrong with regard to the seriousness of this situation, I am not the only one in the country who is wrong and I intend to produce a few pieces of evidence along that line.

In the Toronto Telegram of Tuesday, February 20, I read these words in reference to the suggestion that a want of confidence vote might be asked for:

> This is wrong. A vote of confidence should not be allowed. This becomes an issue of the supremacy of parliament, and parliament has already expressed its opinion.
> Parliament is greater than any government or party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: The Montreal Gazette of February 22 contains these words:

> It has come close—

Referring to the government.

> —to placing itself in contempt of parliament. In the brief sitting yesterday the government found rushing upon it, like a tide, the fundamental issues of parliamentary democracy. If the house does not have full and final control over money bills, it has full and final control over nothing.

The Globe and Mail of February 21 says:

The truth is that if there was to be a second-chance confidence vote every time a government, minority or otherwise, was defeated on a major money bill, there would no longer be responsible government in this country—

If they were allowed to get away with it, how many of them would we see in parliament again—

Referring to members of parliament.

—except on those state occasions when an official want of confidence of vote had been called? The government could be defeated on major program after major program, and so long as enough politicians felt disinclined for an immediate election, the boys could trot back to Ottawa and vote continuing confidence in the government.

In the interval between defeat and confidence motion, governments would be free to make whatever deals or hand out whatever patronage they thought would be necessary to sustain confidence.

That is a rather strong statement coming from the Globe and Mail and indicating some of the perhaps not recognized implications of this action. This article concludes with these words:

Even Prime Minister Pearson, in his hour of difficulty, should not want this for Canada.

Then I quote from the Gazette of Monday, February 26, an article under the heading, "What Precedent for the Future?" This, sir, is the matter that has bothered me from the beginning of this crisis—what precedent for the future? What are we going to hand down to our successors? We do not last forever here. What is the parliament in the future going to be? Let us see what the Gazette has to say:

The importance of the vote in the House of Commons . . . is no longer whether the government will this time be defeated . . . The more serious question is what sort of precedent will be set for the future, if the Prime Minister's motion is passed.

This is always the chief difficulty with unusual methods and procedures. Even if they succeed in accomplishing some immediate and temporary aim, they linger on, to influence the future.

Parliamentary life revolves largely on precedents. What sort of precedent is this motion setting up, for years to come?

This precedent could have various effects upon parliament's future. For one thing, it could induce a new carelessness in governments. Hitherto, the possibility of defeat in the house on a bill of great importance has always been an exceedingly serious matter—

All this, now, could be changed. It would be no longer vital if a government were defeated. It can always do the thing over again, in the same way that a movie director can cut a length of film and consign it to the studio floor and call back the actors for a retake.

I submit that this is fairly weighty evidence to support the point of view that I have been bringing forward. In the Winnipeg Tribune of Saturday, February 24, under the heading, "Parliament, our finest institution", an article by R. W. Queen-Hughes contains this paragraph:

In an age when unchecked power is becoming ever more concentrated the parliamentary system, as evolved by trial and error, is an incomparable medium for preserving the freedoms of the individual. No court anywhere is better equipped to do that than the people's sovereign representatives . . . that is, their members of parliament.

Those are quotations from newspapers. I now quote the words of the leader of the Progressive Conservative party when speaking in Ottawa on Saturday, February 24. The leader of that party used these words, with every one of which I agree and I think they should be printed and dispatched to every Conservative in this country and to all those who are interested in the preservation of our freedom.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: These are the words:

Under the system as amended, or invented, by Messrs. Pearson and Caouette, the executive branch becomes stronger, parliament weaker; the executive becomes less responsible, parliament less supreme; it becomes easier for cabinet to have its will and its way, harder for parliament or the people to stop it.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Cabinet becomes more free, parliament—and Canadians—become less free.

. . . Thus is history written. Thus, an institution is altered. Thus, freedom is diminished. Thus, responsibility is eroded. Thus, we strengthen the hand of the apparatus that governs and weaken the protection of those who are governed.

I wish I had written these words myself.

I hope people are beginning to see the issue as I see it. When I showed this quotation to some people in the news media today I asked them "Why didn't you people on radio and television repeat that from your stations every hour on the hour, as you did the propaganda which the Prime Minister put out last week?"

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: Do not tell me that the real issue has been presented to the people so that they were able to make a decision on Friday night or on Thursday night. How many of them heard the statement, or statements similar to it, that our freedom is diminished?

Mr. Nesbitt: Just like in "1984".

Mr. Churchill: In the time that I have been in the house, from 1951 to the present time, there have been three major assaults on the rights of parliament. This is the third one and the worst. The first assault on the rights of parliament was made in 1955 in the defence production debate, to which reference has been made on several occasions, when Right Hon. C. D. Howe wanted the house to give him complete, unlimited and perpetual powers under that very important act.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The present minister was his deputy.

Mr. Churchill: The Conservative opposition resisted that attempt. We said, "This is not right". We trusted Right Hon. C. D. Howe, who was an honourable gentleman and a very capable minister. But we said, "What about those who may succeed you in the future?" Having seen those who have succeeded him, I say, thank God we took that stand.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: People say to me "That debate was in the past; it did not count". It counted. We fought that issue for 11 days. We debated the rights of parliament. Some of my good friends in the press gallery said "You will never get that principle over to the people of Canada". The people of Canada are much smarter than some members of the press gallery at that time gave them credit for. The issue became clear to the people of Canada. No one said to us at that time "The vote is a foregone conclusion". It never occurred to us that it might be. There were 51 Conservative members on this side of the house and 170 Liberals. They overflowed that area. We had the members of the C.C.F. party on this side—a very uncomfortable position for the Conservative party. We debated the issue for 11 days. What happened? Fortunately I made a summary of the events at that time and I refreshed my memory. The debate started lamely; not all of our members wanted to participate. We were scoffed at by various people. Some who heard about this wrote in or 'phoned in and said "You are on the wrong track. Stop it".

Gradually the issue became clear to members in the House of Commons and to the people in the country. When the government found that it was in difficulty, its supporters presented an amendment to us at which we looked very closely and which we found too devious for our taste. The debate continued, and the government showed obstinacy. Finally, prime minister St. Laurent, a respected statesman of this country, did the honourable thing. He said "This is not right. We will put in a limitation on the defence production act", and the limitation was imposed. On that day he protected the rights of parliament. Suppose we had dismissed that bill and said "It does not matter, we are out-voted before we start". Who would have the authority to do that today in a government which sustains the successive changes in the cabinet which we have seen here in the last five years? Would it be someone like Right Hon. C. D. Howe? On that occasion we protected the rights of parliament.

The second major assault on the rights of parliament was made in 1956 in the great pipe line debate. It did not start off as a debate on a matter in which the freedom of speech would be affected. Other issues were considered. But by the time the debate came to its conclusion, freedom of speech in this house became the main issue for which we fought. Closure was imposed before certain sections of the act were considered, and a bitter battle was fought. During the course of the strife, there were people who said "You must not do this, you must stop. You are destroying parliament. This is not right. End the debate now. You have been at it too long, and the vote is a foregone conclusion", because there were 51 Conservatives, and 23 members of the C.C.F., who were supporting our position and whose position we were supporting, against 170 Liberals. I give full credit to the C.C.F. party for the tremendous battle they put up for freedom of speech, led by my colleague in the House of Commons who is also sometimes my friend in Winnipeg North Centre.

Freedom of speech is important. It is vital to the operation of this institution. Men of experience saw that at the time, and we fought the battle. The Liberal party almost destroyed parliament. They ruthlessly sacrificed the Speaker, and almost destroyed his position in the house. But we retained freedom of speech in this chamber, and without that what have you got?

The third major attack on the rights of parliament is occurring in the house now. The reason I take this so seriously is not only due to my conviction with regard to these matters but also to the experiences that I have had here, and everyone is conditioned by his upbringing and his experience. I saw from the beginning that it would be extremely difficult, that a crisis would arise here and a contest of wills between this side and the other side of the house. I remembered the other debates here and I knew the sacrifices which they involved, because more than one member suffered seriously in health, and I think some premature deaths occurred as a result of that struggle in 1956.

We kept up the struggle. It was not settled in one, two or three days, and we were not alarmed at the thought that the vote was a foregone conclusion. What bothered me so much last week—and I will not go into all the details—is that it was said the people of Canada were informed, that they know everything about it. They made their decision. We are told "Stop the debate. Don't filibuster. Cease speaking".

One of the things that has depressed me more in recent years has been the continual attack made on this institution. It is coming now. Friends of ours are saying, "What are you doing in parliament? Why are you talking so much? Why don't you get on with the business? The vote is a foregone conclusion, get it over with". I said over the air tonight on one of these television broadcasts on this subject of attacking parliament, "The only thing I can say to the people who are doing that is, God forgive you, for you know not what you do." I said, too, that in my opinion subversive forces are operating in this country to destroy this parliament. When this parliament is destroyed, your freedom is lost and my freedom is gone. Where else can you have freedom, unless it is in this institution which is the heart, the soul, the centre of the freedom of our country?

Now, people say, you are going to plunge the country into an election. You would think plunging into an election was like jumping into ice cold water. They speak as if this were something terrible. In the United States, they have an election every two years, and perhaps there is some complaint about that. We do not have elections that often. Municipal elections are held every year. Is that wrong, having an election every year? Provincial elections are held every three or four years. About 99 per cent of the voters in this country do not spend more than 15 minutes to one hour during an election campaign to cast their votes. I voted in a provincial election, not the latest one but the one before that. I happened to know the candidate and I respected him. During that election campaign that lasted five weeks, I turned off the radio whenever speeches were made; I did not look at television; I threw the literature into the waste basket as it came to the house; I did not look at the ads in the newspapers; I did not attend a single meeting, and then it took me 15 minutes to walk from my home to the voting place and cast my ballot. I knew the issues and I knew the man and I had confidence in him. I tell you that experience is repeated by millions of people during any general election.

There is no plunging into an election and running scared. I am not advocating an election now. I do not think it is necessary. I believe this issue can be decided in an entirely different way. We are deadlocked here in the house. This motion will do damage to parliament, to our free institutions, unless I am wrong and unless this evidence I have given to you is wrong. Unless most members on this side of the house are wrong, that will be the result.

Now then, what can we do to have the motion withdrawn? You say, we cannot have a filibuster. People will say it is awful and you must not do this talking; get on with the business. We are protecting the freedom of this institution, the rights of parliament and the freedom of our citizens. Our only method is debate in this House of Commons. What are we to do—get placards and go down to 24 Sussex street and say, "Dear Mr. Pearson, please remove this motion"? We are not going to indulge in fisticuffs. We do not want civil strife. The parliament exists for the very purpose of conducting debate in a reasonable fashion under fair rules. In my experience, if debate seizes upon the main issue you get clearly defined thoughts and at some stage something has to happen. During the defence production debate something happened. The statesman, Mr. St. Laurent, solved that problem.

The great conciliator, the world statesman, the man who can negotiate at the United Nations, in the commonwealth with any known nation and reach a settlement, will not negotiate with Canadian citizens. The hero abroad has become the tyrant at home. Outside the country he uses the methods of conciliation; but here the bulldozer, to ride roughshod over his fellow citizens and destroy this institution. Does this Prime Minister of ours want to go down in history as the only Prime Minister in Canada to strike at the roots of this institution? There are millions of people who would like to honour him in his role as world statesman, but what are they to think now?

I say to you, sir, we do not have to plunge into an election. The Prime Minister of this country could adopt his role of diplomat. He could talk to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). These two men are officers of this House of Commons. In their custody, along with that of Mr. Speaker, rests the traditions and customs of this institution. Why cannot some compromise be worked out? I would not care if we were establishing another precedent. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre would be able to get that straightened out for us, and I speak these words kindly.

I would not mind if Prime Minister Pearson continued in office for the next five weeks. After all, he has had 50 years of service to his country. I would say to him, drop the motion and save parliament, save our freedom. In return, we will stop the debate. We will let you carry on for the next five weeks. We will finish up the essential business, supplementary estimates and interim supply certainly by the middle of March. Then, we could prorogue or adjourn, have the Liberal convention, select a new leader and the Prime Minister could retire with honour. Then, let the new leader come back here, open the house, perhaps bring in a budget to correct the financial and economic conditions of this country. I appeal to the Prime Minister. I appeal to the Liberal party. The Liberal party has a long and honourable history. What party fought for responsible government, for free speech, for representation by population—the Liberal party. This is the party that represented freedom in the nineteenth century. It was not a party of expediency and a party of power, as it is now. I appeal to the Liberal party to do for this parliament and for this country what their forefathers did for Canada in the nineteenth century. That is the issue as I see it. I say this can be done, and it can be done by negotiation without the country being forced into a vote, or saddling us with a precedent which will sap the vitality of this institution. That, sir, is the case as I see it.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Mr. Charles-Eugène Dionne (Kamouraska): Mr. Speaker, circumstances have made it necessary to postpone the business of the house for a few days due to application of rules and procedures which should be amended. The Canadian people want more than sterile debates between politicians who seem to seek the best opportunity to consolidate the future of their party instead of the country's. It is to be hoped, at least, that the precedent which will undoubtedly be created will have satisfactory results in the orientation of the procedural changes which are necessary.

We are now witnessing a debate brought about by a lack of observation on the part of the Liberal team, which does not seem to realize that the Canadian citizens are already burdened by various taxes which lead the wiliest of them to use various means to get around the existing regulations.

The present circumstances allow me to add that the corrupt financial system tolerated by our politicians and to which they adapt themselves has greatly contributed to incite citizens to find means of avoiding, as much as they can, the heavy taxes overburdening them.

Our tax-happy politicians are largely responsible for this state of affairs as far as a sense of responsibility, honesty and integrity in relationship among individuals is concerned. The taxing system contributed—I repeat—to bring citizens to use their imagination in order to find means of keeping their earnings, either by falsifying their income tax return, or by devising various statements which, in their opinion, could somewhat lessen the pressure brought to bear by tax-happy people of all kinds.

Everywhere one feels the pressure exerted by those who seem to take particular care to protect the system which established this way of thinking according to which taxation exists since the world was created, and the partisans of this group are already inclined to believe they are immortal. That probably explains in part the absence of a great many members in the house on February 19, 1968, and the provocative attitude of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp), docile follower of the system, who seemed anxious to register his vote in favour of the clique of financiers who force him to empty the pockets of the Canadian people by all sorts of tricks, in order to maintain his reputation as a great treasurer. Unfortunately for him and for the big-wigs of finance, on the evening of February 19, it happened that the majority of the representatives of the people present in the house thought of the workers and the taxpayers, who are generally not too well off and who can no longer stand these constant drains on their pockets. This is what brought about a vote against the passing of Bill No. C-193.

This is a triumph over the dictatorship of high finance, which too often has had the upper hand, and all Canadians should be proud of such a feat. Unfortunately, this is not what is happening. Now a good many members of the team which brought off this feat of strength, no doubt in the heat of victory, seem to be struck down with electoral hysteria and are demanding that an election be called. Having succeeded in saving Canadian taxpayers a few million dollars, they would impose on them over a billion dollars in expenses. The partisan spirit, which had been lying low for some time, after two or three consecutive general elections which have worsened things instead of improving them, is suddenly revived and there is a danger of losing the benefits of our victory in a decision that owes more to love of party than love of country. They would have a general election which would force Canadians to take part against their will in the politicians' game: discussions, lies, attacks, contradictions, promises, denigration, demagoguery and all that an election campaign entails. We have seen, in the past, what some politicians are capable of when they want to accede to power.

If the majority of those politicians who are eager for elections had at least some sense of sportsmanship, they would admit that the opponent must be allowed to get up after having been momentarily disabled. I do not have too much sympathy either for the team that is too readily upset.

The members of the Ralliement Créditiste never forget the many blows below the belt struck by certain members of their team, who do not always respect the rules of honesty which should exist during elections as well as at any other times. Still, vengeance is never a good adviser, and I feel that any human being who is conscious of his duties—

Mr. Lambert: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Dionne: Mr. Speaker, may I point out that it is ten o'clock?

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I was going to suggest that if there was agreement we might carry on for a further period.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Obviously there is not agreement. It being ten o'clock this house stands adjourned until two thirty o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, February 28, 1968

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

FINANCE

REPLACEMENT OF AMOUNT INVOLVED IN DEFEATED MONEY BILL

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member might perhaps wait till I call orders of the day.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I apologize; I was not taking any chances.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Grégoire: I should like to put a question to the hon. Minister of Finance.

Can he tell us if his department has reached a decision concerning the new legislation to replace Bill No. C-193, and does he intend to make a statement in this regard today?

Mr. Speaker: The question of the hon. member is obviously very interesting but I suggest to him that it is somewhat too closely related to the debate now in progress and should therefore not be asked at this time.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I know that, even before I put a question, you find it difficult to accept that a few questions be put today as they were yesterday.

I would like to point out, on my point of order, that precisely my question is not relevant to the debate but can influence it. Moreover, the minister cannot speak in this debate, and that is why we want some information.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Grégoire: May I ask the Minister of Finance whether he intends to make a statement before the vote of confidence concerning the measures—

Mr. Speaker: I do not think that this question can be put now, because it relates too closely to the current debate.

Mr. Grégoire: Then, if you will allow me, Mr. Speaker, I will put my question differently, in such a way that it will have no relation to the debate.

Can the minister tell the house whether, in the new measures he intends to take, there will definitely be no increase in the income tax.

Mr. Speaker: That question could be put later. I do not think it is acceptable at this time.

INCOME TAX

INQUIRY AS TO COMPLAINTS RESPECTING FORMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Then, Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Revenue.

Can he tell us whether he has received complaints about personal income tax forms which are becoming more and more complicated and whether he intends to take corrective action?

Mr. Speaker: I do not wish to interfere, but the hon. member will agree once again that this question is not urgent and that, moreover, in the present circumstances, the house is most anxious to resume consideration of the motion now before it. For that reason, I cannot allow this question to be put at this time.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Your rulings seem to be made in view of the present debate. In my opinion, this should not enter into consideration, because the debate—

Mr. Speaker: I do not think the question is urgent and, furthermore, the ruling of the Chair in such a case is not subject to discussion.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE CHANGE IN CANADIAN COMMITMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put another question to the hon. minister of defence along the lines of those allowed earlier.

Inquiries of the Ministry

I wish to ask the hon. minister of defence whether the new agreements concerning our Canadian troops stationed in Germany which are about to be concluded with that country will require Germany to pay for part of the maintenance cost of our troops, as is the case in England at present?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member may put questions, but he cannot insist to obtain a reply.

BILINGUALISM AND BICULTURALISM

INQUIRY AS TO FURTHER REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, during the regular question period, I do not often put questions, but today I should like to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Can he tell us when he intends—

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: I rise on a question of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder if the hon. member would allow the hon. member for Lapointe to finish his question.

Mr. Nielsen: I have a point of order now. When Your Honour called "Orders of the day" the Clerk called order No. 68 from the table. It seems to me this precludes any further business, having reached this motion.

Mr. Speaker: Although I have much sympathy for the point of order raised by the hon. member, I must recognize that we are following the usual practice and the hon. member for Lapointe had been up even before we reached the point when the Chair called "Orders of the day". I think perhaps I will allow him to ask this question.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, why would it be my last question? We are allowed thirty minutes and we still have 25 left.

I want to put my question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Could he tell us when he will receive the second volume of the Laurendeau-Dunton report on bilingualism and biculturalism?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has already asked this question. I do not think it is urgent. If the hon. member wanted to ask a really urgent question, he could do so, but he will agree with me that he can put it tomorrow, which will greatly facilitate the business of the house.

Mr. Grégoire: In that case, Mr. Speaker, I see only one solution: I must desist.

• (2:40 p.m.)

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION RESPECTING HOUSE VOTE ON BILL C-193

The house resumed, from Tuesday, February 27, consideration of the motion of the Prime Minister:

That this house does not regard its vote on February 19th in connection with third reading of Bill C-193, which had been carried in all previous stages, as a vote of non-confidence in the government.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles-Eugène Dionne (Kamouraska): Mr. Speaker, when we adjourned last night I was giving an explanation of the position of the Ralliement Créditiste regarding what happened in certain election campaigns and I was in good spirits at that time, for I said that it was never a good thing to be guided by revenge. Indeed, I think that any human being who is conscious of his duties and responsibilities must try and show that he can forgive, on occasion, the errors of political judgment of some men who sometimes forget that interest of country must supersede interest of party.

At any rate, we of the Ralliement Créditiste are happy with the results of the vote taken on Monday, February 19, and are appealing to the spirit of solidarity of the members of this house to continue to display this co-operative spirit, which would allow us to force those who impose taxes, no matter of what political party, to retreat in the face of a nation already taxed, retaxed and overtaxed, and together we shall find the means of administering the country without overimposing on the taxpayers, who require their incomes for their needs and those of their dependents.

We should be able to find ways of managing the country and keeping, in the first place, a close watch on extravagant and often needless expenditures for national defence or travelling expenses. But at the same time, we should act as responsible representatives of a sovereign parliament whose duty it is to exert a control on the people who manipulate money and credit, instead of victimizing the people of Canada with a taxation system under which most of the money collected is used to pay interest on a public debt which has been growing faster than the country has been developing. One would be justified in calling this sheer madness.

A well-balanced taxation system should take into account the needs of the people of this country, since it has been recognized that an income of $5,000 a year at least is necessary to support a family with 4 or 5 children. Why then do we set the taxation base at $2,000? This is poor judgment indeed. The thing is to establish a base which would at least allow people to breathe, and some useful work could be assigned to a strong team of officials and investigators of various categories instead of trouble being caused to everybody. Through this system, we have created a climate of suspicion under which half the Canadian people watch the other half.

Under a normal situation in which legislators would see to it that legislation is geared to the common good instead of taxing everybody, debates on questions of confidence and non-confidence would be avoided. Our newspapermen could probably write more interesting items and everyone would be all the better for it.

Those who call for an election when the opponent is floored, show much greater fear than self-confidence. They are afraid perhaps that the effect of a deliberately boosted publicity, with the help of a press which seems to have been handsomely rewarded, is about to vanish in the face of reality.

As for me, my vote in the house has never been determined by fear that the government might be defeated, but rather by the interest of Canadians and all the taxpayers of this country.

I had the privilege to be present in the house when the vote on a motion for third reading of Bill No. C-193 was taken. Besides, I have always thought that the electors in the Kamouraska constituency would appreciate the fact that their representative tries to be present at the right time. I add that it was on that occasion the most agreeable kind of vote that a member could record.

I know a great number of workers faced with the complexities of income tax returns and I mention namely the Canadian people employed in American territory who have to file three income tax returns in order to meet the requirements of the present tax collection system.

Are we aware of all those problems, and I emphasize here, in passing, the difference between the mechanism of collection and reimbursement under various legislation and regulations. All the Canadian workers employed in the states of Maine and New Hampshire cannot receive unemployment insurance benefits. A compensation legislation would have to be implemented. The system operates late and the worker benefits from nothing.

But when it comes to the implementation of the Income Tax Act, the same worker will have to fill out three returns if he resides in the province of Quebec: one in the United States, one for the federal taxes and another for the Quebec taxes, even if he has not received any salary in Canada. It is really a shame to see a system which always keeps the lumberjack under pressure while he has to earn his living with difficulty.

In view of the inflexibility and the limitations imposed by the enforcement of the Income Tax Act and regulations, and taking into consideration the statements made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and his colleagues, the Minister of Justice and the Minister of National Revenue (Messrs. Trudeau and Chrétien) with regard to the reimbursement of amounts collected under Bill No. C-193—without questioning the value of the already mentioned statements—we believe that it is in order, to avoid any inconvenience, that an amendment be moved to the motion under discussion.

Considering that the sum to be reimbursed or credited amounts to more than $20,000,000 and considering the complications involved in the application of the standing rules, we believe it proper to introduce an amendment to the motion, to make it abundantly clear.

I have the honour to move, seconded by my colleague the hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Simard):

That the motion be amended by adding immediately after the word "government" the following words: And that the government will not present again the said bill in this current session, and that it will credit the Canadian taxpayers with all the sums that have been collected since January 1, 1968, in anticipation of the provisions of Bill No. C-193.

Mr. Speaker, I have copies in English and in French of this amendment. Could I proceed with my remarks, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member concluded his remarks?

Mr. Dionne: No, Mr. Speaker.

I noticed during this debate that several members took part in it in order to discuss various matters and I believe that it was quite in order—the debate was always in order anyway—to deal with constitutional questions, with rules, but you may recall that last night, I did mention that the main cause of the present debate was the fact that Bill No. C-193 dealt with a taxation matter.

I believe that it is not altogether practical in the present circumstances to labour questions dealing with rules, except to try to improve them. However, in regard to this question of constitutionality and of rules that arise therefrom, it always was and still is a matter of determining, as between those involved, who is going to have the greatest taxing powers. One does not have to be a wizard to realize that this problem is above all a financial one.

There is no question of being discouraged about it. As intelligent people, I believe it is possible for us to find some solution, to face the situation clearly and realistically.

I admit that all those writers and politicians, who are complicating the problem by talking about the repatriation of the constitution or the drafting of a new one, succeed sometimes in showing us their ability to deal with the subject, even to launch elections upon this matter. It is merely a play on words.

However, it would be far more important to try to reform the system which led to most of the difficulties we are facing. Nobody, even one with a string of academic degrees, would dare argue that the constitution is responsible for thousands of Canadian families living in misery in slums; it is not the fault of the constitution that schools are sometimes forced to turn away willing students for lack of space and money to build.

Who would argue logically that the poor conditions in which too many families are living, due to an inadequate income and which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp), because of the propensities of the system, continues to tax to the limit, who would argue logically, I repeat, that this is a constitutional problem? It is a problem involving goods and needs, a problem involving the means of distribution of goods and existing wealth.

Let us quit beating around the bush; Canadians of all origins will get along better together when they have equal opportunities.

[Mr. Speaker.]

I feel that we should aim for a type of levelling system, restore equal purchasing power, and strive to build a world with real aspirations for happiness by giving everyone the opportunity to meet his basic requirements.

Let us first of all give back to the government the control over money and credit and, then, we can talk of the sovereignty of parliament; the solution to constitutional problems will be easier to achieve.

Canadian citizens and visitors to our country will then be able to speak of liberty at home without unnerving the puppets controlled by the system which uses every means at its disposal to prevent real liberation.

Our early history abounds with accounts of our struggles and our resistance to the pressures exerted by friendly countries that did not always understand our aspirations but which realize today that our survival played an outstanding part in the evolution of Canada. Each one of us must assume fully his responsibilities to prevent such divisions as might keep us from becoming what we should really be: a united people in a free country.

Mr. Speaker, before bringing my remarks to a close, one word about the notorious taxation problem. Could it be that most of the representatives in this house have come to the conclusion that this notorious system cannot be changed?

Do we really believe that it is natural to think that the armies of brave men who brought the cross, the plough and the civilization to the forests of Canada, as well as their successors, who for three centuries, improved agriculture, built modern towns with the road system which we know, will have toiled and sweated on the Canadian soil to leave to their descendants an heritage of debts, of taxes and privations? Let us make an effort to get out of these ridiculous social conditions which allow misery to exist in the midst of plenty.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if hon. members may have comments to make on the amendment which has been proposed by the hon. member, from a procedural standpoint. Perhaps I should read the amendment first.

[Translation]

Mr. Dionne, seconded by Mr. Simard, moved:

That the motion be amended by adding immediately after the word "government" the following words: And that the government will not present again the said bill in this current session, and that it will credit the Canadian taxpayers with all the sums that have been collected since January 1, 1968, in anticipation of the provisions of Bill No. C-193.

Does the hon. member for Mégantic wish to enlighten me with regard to this amendment?

[English]

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I have a few citations to offer from Beauchesne's fourth edition with respect to this amendment proposed by the hon. member for Kamouraska. I acknowledge that the indications given in this respect by the government yesterday, particularly by the Minister of Justice, were quite explicit.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member must speak to the point of order.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, is this a point of order or is it an explanation of the amendment?

Mr. Speaker: It is a point of order. I have serious doubt whether this amendment is in order, and I wondered whether the hon. member wanted to speak to the point of order as to whether the amendment is acceptable from a procedural standpoint. This is the only matter now before the house.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): I quite agree, Mr. Speaker, and I will now come to the point. My first citation is from page 168 of Beauchesne's fourth edition. It is citation No. 201:

The object of an amendment may be to effect such an alteration in a question as will obtain the support of those who, without such alteration, must either vote against it or abstain from voting thereon—

And there has been an indication that there will be abstentions from the vote on the motion.

—or to present to the house an alternative proposition either wholly or partially opposed to the original question.

The purpose of this is to gain the support of those who, without such an alteration being made, must either vote against a question or abstain from voting.

Mr. Fulton: Would the hon. member permit a question? In view of the citation he has just read, do we take it that if the amendment is not carried, or is ruled out of order, my hon. friend and his associates will vote against the motion?

• (3:00 p.m.)

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): I never stated such a thing, Mr. Speaker. I do not know on what hypothesis the hon. member for Kamloops bases his far fetched idea in this regard. I am trying to solve some of the problems of his party.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that the hon. member return to the point of order.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): If I may be permitted to do so, I should like to continue. I hope if anyone else has a contribution to make he will do so by addressing himself to the Chair after I have finished. Citation 203 (1) of Beauchesne's fourth edition states:

It is an imperative rule that every amendment must be relevant to the question on which the amendment is proposed. Every amendment proposed to be made either to a question or to a proposed amendment should be so framed that if agreed to by the house the question or amendment as amended would be intelligible and consistent with itself.

I think this is quite the case.

The law on the relevancy of amendments is that if they are on the same subject matter with the original motion, they are admissible, but not when foreign thereto. The exceptions to this rule are amendments on the question of going into supply or ways and means.

May I continue by quoting citation 426 of Beauchesne's fourth edition at page 290:

In order to give legal force to a bill, or, in other words, make it a statutory enactment, the following legal and constitutional conditions are imperative:

(a) That the bill has passed through all its stages in both houses and is consequently ready for the royal assent. If it should receive the assent of the Governor General and be afterwards discovered not to have passed its proper stages in both houses or be otherwise not in conformity with the constitutional procedure governing such cases, it is so much waste paper.

In view of the bill having been defeated, all that is being attempted by this amendment is to avoid a waste of paper and provide some help to those members who are undecided as to the way in which they might vote.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of an amendment may be to add, clarify or delete something from a main motion. In the present case, I think that its purpose is to clear it up, and any amendment designed to clarify a main motion is surely in order.

The main motion reads as follows:

That this house does not regard its vote on February 19 in connection with the third reading of Bill C-193, which had carried in all its previous stages, as a vote of non-confidence in the government.

What does this mean? That Bill No. C-193 can be reintroduced as early as tomorrow, since the vote is not to be regarded as a vote of non-confidence? This raises questions in the minds of many people, namely the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who made the same objections. The question is whether or not it is a vote of non-confidence. Does it mean that the government has the right to reintroduce the bill? The amendment, as worded, stipulates that it should not be reintroduced during the present session by the government. This does not mean that the government is committed indefinitely, but only for the current session. That point is cleared up.

The mention that Canadian taxpayers will be credited with all the sums already collected also clarifies the main motion, because before last Monday's vote, the government had seen fit to collect taxes since January 1, even though the bill had not been passed by the house.

If that amendment is defeated, it could mean that what the government has done since January 1 up to last Monday was quite correct.

So I think that an amendment to clarify a main motion cannot be rejected. Does that depart from the principles of the main motion? No, since the main motion clearly indicates that there has been a vote on third reading of Bill C-193. The amendment adds that the government will not present again the said bill in this current session, under the other rule which says that a matter once it has been disposed of cannot be revived for a second vote, either directly or indirectly.

The amendment also clarifies the main motion concerning the costs of refunds since it implies not only a tacit but a formal acknowledgment of the fact that the vote did not constitute a vote of non-confidence, but purely and simply a vote of disapproval of an increase of the income tax. That is what we want to clarify.

That is why I doubt that the amendment on the main motion can be rejected in any way whatsoever.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that is the crux of the problem. That is why I ask that the amendment be accepted as it stands.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, just one word on the amendment moved by the hon. member of Kamouraska (Mr. Dionne) which reads in part as follows:

> —that the government will not present again the said bill in this current session, and that he will credit the Canadian taxpayers of all the sums that have been collected, in anticipation of the dispositions, that were to be provided for, in Bill (C-193) since January 1st 1968.

Now, you will notice, Mr. Speaker, that this amendment is directly related to what the Minister of Justice (Mr. Trudeau) said yesterday when he stated that the government would not present again—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Whether the amendment relates or not to what the Minister of Justice (Mr. Trudeau) may have said has has nothing to do with the point of order now before the house.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, you suggest that the amendment is related to the motion and, yesterday, when the Minister of Justice spoke of the motion we wanted to amend, he spoke of it in those terms. He was not called to order, because he was in order and if the Minister of Justice was then in order, I do not see how today a similar motion or similar comments could be called out of order with respect to a motion which we will soon be asked to pass. Now I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that you consider what the minister said yesterday about the motion before deciding whether the amendment now under consideration is acceptable.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. members for their comments on the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Kamouraska (Mr. Dionne).

[English]

I have looked at the amendment, and the only difficulty I have is in ascertaining whether this amendment is relevant to the motion which it seeks to amend. Hon. members have suggested that the proposed amendment is intended to give an interpretation, or clarification of an interpretation, of the motion which is before the house. Hon. members wish me to interpret this motion in one way or another, the hon. members will appreciate that I am not all that anxious to do this.

In my view the motion which is before the house is very clear from a procedural standpoint. If we remove the frills it means only one thing; that is, that this house does not regard its vote as a vote of non-confidence in the government. This is the essence of the matter which is before us. It seems to me that the conditions or explanations which are sought by the hon. member through his amendment do not relate to the essence of the motion which is before the house.

I should like to refer hon. members to the leading citation on this point. I have reference to citation 203 (1) of Beauchesne's fourth edition, which reads in part as follows:

> It is an imperative rule that every amendment must be relevant to the question on which the amendment is proposed.

[Translation]

I take the liberty of asking the hon. members to refer to the same citation of Beauchesne's fourth edition, that is paragraph 5 and I quote:

> An amendment was ruled out because it raised a new question which could only be considered on a distinct motion after notice.

That amendment is very similar to that moved by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) a few days ago. After consideration, I had ruled that it raised a new proposition and that such an amendment could only be placed before the house by way of a substantive motion with a notice required by our standing orders.

For all those reasons, I do not think that I can accept the amendment of the hon. member.

• (3:10 p.m.)

[English]

Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Pearson) which was agreed to on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Speaker, I announced in the house yesterday those reasons which prevented my voting either for or against this motion.

Mr. Herridge: I was paired with all those Canadians who are very worried about the effects of an immediate dissolution of parliament.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

MEASURE TO BROADEN COVERAGE

The house resumed from Friday, February 16, consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen [for Mr. Nicholson] for the second reading of Bill No. C-197, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. When this item was last being considered the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac (Mr. Latulippe) had the floor.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, I had completed my remarks.

[English]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, after what has happened in the last few days our discussion on Bill C-197 will bring about a change of pace. Nevertheless, the subject matter of this bill is of tremendous interest to those seeking to collect unemployment insurance benefits.

This bill seeks to increase insurance benefits. At the same time many in this country think that some problem areas in connection with employment and unemployment insurance need correcting. For instance, in my area—and I understand that this is so in many other areas—many unemployment insurance offices have closed. They have moved to larger centres and in those centres, with the help of computers and so on, many individual unemployment insurance commission services have been amalgamated. The result is that in my area there is no qualified staff to help applicants file claims for unemployment insurance benefits. Also, there is no one to help with appeals, which have to be conducted at arms length with offices that are many hundreds of miles away. The department says that this is temporary, and that the situation will be corrected. We are to have provincial centres where facts will be stored on an I.B.M. tape and where the entire operation will be taken over by computers.

The Liberal government did a great disservice to Canada when on the one hand, in choosing men for the cabinet it made choices on the basis of their interest and, in some cases, their ability, and then, on the other, established separate departments for manpower and for labour, thus giving one minister authority over employment and another authority over unemployment insurance matters. In my opinion I have never seen a more stupid action taken. It means that a guy can apply for benefits but that he need not necessarily apply for a job.

Mr. Nicholson: On a point of order. I hope the hon. member realizes that that change was made nearly one year before the Department of Manpower and Immigration came into existence.

Mr. Peters: I agree about the time when the decision may have been taken, but I think the minister will agree that the initial intention was to have two separate departments. Why, they are not even speaking cousins any longer. Originally the functions of both departments were included in the Department of Labour. As a matter of fact, in my area both these departments were in the same building. It was possible for the unemployment insurance people to make sure that applicants had registered for jobs before being entitled to benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act. Now the departments have been separated and they are in totally different areas. There may have been reasons for the separation, but I cannot think of them and I am not impressed by the way they operate separately.

I agree that if the Canadian labour force is to be increased by immigration, the Department of Manpower and Immigration will be involved in making it possible for people to work in Canada. Nevertheless, those who are in Canada and become unemployed will seek benefits, but this is unrelated to immigration. I am surprised that other members of parliament have not objected to the total separation of the functions carried on by the Departments of Labour, and Manpower and Immigration. So total is the separation in my area that the people in the manpower centres are not allowed to assist in the filing of benefit applications or appeal applications. They have been told by the minister to stay out of that field totally. I have found that a person can walk into a Farm Credit Corporation office, ask for assistance, and get assistance from a civil servant in filling out a simple form. Similarly, he can go to his member of parliament or his minister for assistance with any problem.

Officials of the manpower centre have made it known, however, that they will not even help these people fill out the necessary form. They will not provide that common courtesy. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) appears to be very touchy about this, indicating that he is well aware of the difficulties which have developed in connection with unemployment insurance. The point has been reached at which consideration is being given in my area, as in others, to appointing a person who will assist applicants for benefits in all those areas where there are no offices at the present time. Everyone knows that among the 500,000 who are unemployed today there are a great many who are looking simply for labouring jobs, and who do not have the education necessary even to be eligible for a retraining program.

I admit that the training programs have done a great deal of good. But in my opinion a profound disservice was done when this scheme was taken out of federal jurisdiction and placed entirely under provincial jurisdiction, with the result that the federal government has nothing to say with regard to it and nothing to do except contribute the necessary funds.

The closing of unemployment insurance offices in so many areas has made it impossible for men of little education to appeal against decisions taken by the Unemployment Insurance Commission, particularly since it involves the completion of a form in writing. What shocks me is that we are proposing to amend the act without giving any consideration to this problem which, in my view, is a really important one. Consider the difficulty facing a man who wishes to make an appeal in my own area. No longer is there an office in the tritown district or at Kirkland Lake. It is necessary to go to Timmins in order to make an application, and Timmins is 130 miles from the tritown area. Most of the people there are unable to travel to the Timmins office in order to lodge their appeals and for this reason they either write to their members of parliament or give up their possible right to benefit.

The time has come to examine what we have done. I agree with the minister that it is more than a year ago that we decided to separate the two departments. I believe the National Employment Service has been working well and that it has done great things. I know that in my own area we were able to use persuasion in some cases and the big stick in others so as to increase the volume of hiring through the National Employment Service. People seeking work were able to go to the office to fill out their application forms and in many cases they found there was employment available to them; they did not file for benefits but took advantage of the opportunities offered to them.

The Minister of Labour has travelled across the country making a number of speeches about unemployment insurance. Mr. Speaker, I have received about 1,000 letters from teachers who believed it was the intention to revive the old chestnut which the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) used to talk about as a private member, that is, combining unemployment insurance with the tax structure in such a way that civil servants and others in similar jobs would pay into the fund.

Nobody was saying—and the minister did not say—that unemployment insurance benefits would be paid to civil servants. No, all they would do would be to pay money into the fund so that somebody else could get the benefit. This is not an insurance program. It could not be actuarially sound, because people paying into it would have no chance of receiving benefit. The only intention behind this proposal was that more money should flow in by way of revenue. Why was more revenue needed at the time this proposal was made by the hon. member for Essex East? It was needed because, in a period of recession, the fund was being depleted much faster than revenue was coming in. I believe the fund had fallen from about a billion dollars to within $100,000 of a deficit position.

The depletion of the fund was accelerated by the inclusion of two categories of workers on an actuarial basis which was not sound —categories which should not have been covered for the reason, though this time in reverse, that the civil servants are excluded. Coverage was extended to fishermen, who obviously cannot fish for half the year because of weather conditions, and to bush workers who in my opinion should have been covered in a totally different manner. Then again, coverage is available to construction workers.

[Mr. Peters.]

Many people objected to the coverage of construction workers on the ground that they might be able to earn as much as $15,000 in six months of the year. Nevertheless they are eligible for benefit during the other six months when work is not available because of adverse climatic conditions; unemployment insurance benefit was granted as a sort of beer money. As for the fishermen, the amount they earned had no relationship to the benefits they were eligible to receive. They were in the same class as others who were covered as insurance risks, not as a sure thing.

I mention all this in the light of the discussions which have taken place on the question of unemployment insurance in recent days and the concern felt by the teachers in the light of the minister's statements. It is my belief that the minister was flying a kite to ascertain the reaction of the country to this proposal. Some suspect that changes are contemplated of a kind which would change the nature of the fund entirely. No longer would it be an insurance fund, but it would be a fund of a totally different class, probably working toward the establishment of a guaranteed minimum wage.

I am totally in agreement with the proposal to establish a guaranteed annual income program. I think the country is prepared to support the principle of such a program. In the next election the people should be asked how extensive they think such an income should be, and at what level we should correlate our welfare programs with a guaranteed annual wage. However, so far as I am concerned if a guaranteed annual wage is introduced, applying to farmers and other workers alike, I believe there will still be a role for the unemployment insurance fund to play. There will be a gap between the amount of the guaranteed annual wage and the full amount of a worker's earnings when he is employed.

A man earning $10,000 a year in a construction job should be permitted under an actuarially oriented program to provide himself with unemployment insurance income during his periods of unemployment. Construction is an industry which is subject to periodic change and there will always be times of unemployment in it.

Some people say that in the foreseeable future, due to the influence of automation and technocracy, a worker may change his occupation five times during his lifetime. If this be so, and if his retraining is provided by the nation, then it seems to me there should still be an unemployment insurance fund upon which he could draw to maintain his income at the same standard throughout his retraining as when he is employed.

I started contributing to the unemployment insurance fund when it was originally established. At that time I was employed in an industry that worked 365 days a year. It was an industry in which there was very little unemployment. In fact we were anxious to get our employment hours reduced to a reasonable level of 48 hours a week, and it took many years to get them down to 56 hours a week. Although in the gold mining industry we were not subject to the normal risks of unemployment, yet we were quite happy to be covered by unemployment insurance. There was the risk that a gold mine would close down on some occasion. There was a risk with respect to the age factor of miners.

But, Mr. Speaker, I am violently opposed to the proposal to bring people under the unemployment insurance fund who are in absolutely no danger of becoming unemployed. I do not see a teacher becoming unemployed for many years to come. I do not see a doctor becoming unemployed for many years to come. I do not see nurses becoming unemployed for many years to come. I do not see civil servants ever becoming unemployed. As members of parliament, when we will no longer be serving any useful purpose I am certain that when we find ourselves unemployed there will still be civil servants to hand out the dole, and to keep track of other civil servants engaged in that work. The history of the last depression indicated that if ever there were people who were not going to become unemployed, it was the civil servants of that day.

Changes are going to be made in the Unemployment Insurance Act. I think some of the changes should be major ones, but I disagree with the change made by the Minister of Labour when he gave up half his department, that controlling the Unemployment Insurance Commission being retained, and the National Employment Service being transferred to his colleague, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Marchand), who transferred it to the national manpower centres.

I maintain that those who are providing unemployment benefits also have a responsibility to try to provide jobs. I do not like to see a manpower centre in one city and an unemployment insurance office in another. Being separated, they cannot provide satisfactory service to the people who need work. The people now offering jobs never see the unemployed. So far as the employers are concerned, the unemployed do not exist. People staffing the manpower centres do not know the number of unemployed unless they read the D.B.S. statistics, because the unemployed no longer stand outside their offices or pass through them once a week.

The amendment which we are now being asked to pass is a minor one, and I think it will receive the support of all hon. members. Since we are increasing our standard of living by increasing our wages it is only proper that the benefits paid should be in keeping with the contributions made by the workers. However, I urge hon. members to consider seriously the weakness we have created by dividing the functions of the National Employment Service and the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

The National Employment Service and the Unemployment Insurance Commission are now administered by two separate departments, and I have been shocked to hear reports from some officials in both these departments stating that they have been given instructions that there is to be no co-operation between the two departments. The reason given is that if there is co-operation, then the divorce of functions between the two departments will not have been completed.

We have watched the government's machinations with respect to the Wheat Board. From time to time members of the cabinet have asked themselves, "Who among us has a little knowledge of the Wheat Board"? To them it does not matter if the Wheat Board comes under the administration of the Department of Finance, the Department of Trade and Commerce or the Department of Agriculture. Responsibility for that board has been shifted from department to department, and this is not a good thing.

I maintain that the responsibility for the manpower centres and the Unemployment Insurance Commission should not have been divided. In practice it is not working out, and I think that hon. members who have had experience with unemployment insurance matters should give the minister the benefit of their advice. This division of responsibility was a ridiculous change which should not have occurred.

So far as I am concerned there has always been an oversight in respect of the Unemployment Insurance Act. I am referring to the proposition that the contributions at all times should cover the benefits paid out. We have seen that the unemployment insurance fund rises and falls. I believe it has been evident that when it has gone up we have been enjoying good times, when a very large proportion of the population was employed. When it has gone down there has been an unreasonably large amount of unemployment in the country. I am not prepared to say whether the 4 per cent figure which has been mentioned is a reasonable amount in this regard. I believe that probably 1 per cent is a reasonable figure in respect of normal unemployment. This is the unemployment which will always take place, no matter whether or not there is a shortage of labour.

This will come about mainly for two reasons. First of all, there are the young people who try to find employment in a category in which they are interested. They are temporarily unemployed until they are able to gain entry into the employment field. The second group will always be with us no matter how affluent our society is. This is the group which transfers from one field to another. Unemployment in these groups will probably run in the proportion of approximately 1 per cent. This figure might increase as the number of years a person is engaged in an occupation decreases. It has been said that a young person who trains to be a computer operator today will find within a period of three years that his training is totally inadequate for the job that the computer would be asked to do at the end of that period. This means that retraining will have to be provided in a matter of three years. During the retraining period such a person would be unemployed. This would raise what normally would be the unemployment figure in respect of retraining and reclassification.

The unemployment figure now is 500,000. This does not fit into the figure of 4 per cent, 1 per cent, or whatever it might be. This is an indication that we are on the verge of an economic recession which is national in scope and which affects the national economy. Perhaps this is the situation we had when the workers of the country were asked to make a contribution to the national economy of $1 billion, plus the contributions they were being asked to make daily to the unemployment insurance fund. In my opinion this contribution of $1 billion was the factor which stopped the recession in the period around 1962 and 1963 from being greater than it was. This contribution was made, not because people were normally unemployed or were being retrained while seeking other jobs, but so that the country could enjoy the doubtful advantages of a recession over which the workers of this country had no control. At that time there was a 5 per cent increase in unemployment which was totally the responsibility of the government.

It was in this context that the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) asked that all civil servants be asked not to help out, but to provide a new tax structure that would allow the government to put more money into the unemployment insurance fund without in any way changing the risk at the other end. As one who has worked for many years in the mines with a pick and shovel I believe we should provide unemployment insurance to cover the risks, but I am not in favour of asking the people in other occupations to contribute in order to cover an economic recession which is the responsibility of the government and has relation to the tax structure of the nation.

I have no sympathy with the minister in this regard. I know he has made the statement that the real issue is whether or not the position has changed sufficiently to allow him to bring in teachers and other people in similar categories who will not be eligible to draw the benefits. If the minister would stand up and say that his colleague the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Marchand) would provide for payment which would enable teachers to take summer courses or other courses which would upgrade them, he would find that even if they were in a category where there was some danger of their being unemployed there would be no advantage to them in being covered under the unemployment insurance fund. He would find that the contributions the teachers would make in order to be allowed to draw benefits while upgrading themselves would probably be greatly out of proportion to the amount of money they would contribute in the form of a tax against periods of recession when the unemployment insurance fund was being depleted at a rate greater than the normal actuarial rate.

It would seem to me that this is an important matter. It seems to me also that every teacher who wrote to me had a very selfish interest. They were all personally involved and, because I studied the resolutions they passed at their conventions, I believe they were well aware of the fact that they were being asked to make a contribution to an insurance plan from which they could receive no benefits. Many people take out a form of insurance in respect of which there is a benefit when they die. This may seem to be a pretty hollow victory for the payer, but he does know at least that his family, his estate or, in the case I read about the other day, the universities or somebody else will receive some benefit. In respect of unemployment insurance, we are insuring against being unemployed. It has even been suggested that when a person becomes too old to work he should get back all the benefits he has paid in. It seems to me that this is a misconception of the purpose of the fund; that is, that it is an insurance policy in the form of an annuity.

I was very interested in a fine speech made on this subject by the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Habel) many years ago. He mentioned that he had driven an automobile for 40 years and was very happy that he had never collected on the insurance he had been paying during that period. He was very glad because this meant that he had never had an accident. He had paid out a great amount of money in premiums, not to ensure that he would not have an accident but to provide for the day when he might have an accident. He was proud that he had never had an accident and therefore had never collected on his insurance. He felt that unemployment insurance was the same thing, and I agree with him. One is happy to pay the premium as long as he is employable and employed, because along with many others he is contributing to the benefits payable to those not so fortunate. Some benefit from the fund to a much greater extent than others because their contributions are less.

There are, however, abuses in the unemployment insurance program. I think it is the minister's obligation to bring these abuses to the attention of parliament in order that solutions can be found. The greatest abuses to the unemployment insurance fund have been political. On two occasions governments of the day have added categories included for contributions. These categories are for the most part uninsurable because there is little or no risk that unemployment will occur. In this way we are abusing the fund.

There are other political abuses which have taken place, and if I had more time I would be prepared to enumerate some of them. They are difficult of solution without eliminating that protection which I believe everyone agrees should be provided. We all know of specific individual cases which are not related to specific categories. Some of them have been solved by regulation, but even the regulations have on occasion been abusive to the idea of unemployment insurance benefits. The one that occurs to me is the regulation which states that a claim will be reviewed after 15 weeks, at which time a decision will be made as to whether that person should leave the area before obtaining further unemployment insurance benefits. This is particularly abusive when the fund is decreasing and unemployment is increasing.

I think we are again abusing the principle by adding the category referred to today. Surely we realize that this group should not be classified as an insurable category, because there is for them little risk of unemployment. This is only a means of facilitating the collection of moneys for the provision of unemployment insurance benefits. I know the workers of this country very well and can honestly say I find them to be very reasonable and benevolent toward their fellow workers. Most of the workers in the categories with which I am familiar have been willing to make contributions without the possibility of receiving benefits, but they do not like being taken advantage of in this way.

[Translation]

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I will not be too long; I merely want to draw the minister's attention to three points.

We are against the principle of the bill because we know that the government must find ways to help the 464,000 unemployed in Canada who are facing very serious problems.

We wonder though whether in 1968 the concept of unemployment insurance still meets the objectives contemplated when the act was passed.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the Unemployment Insurance Act is a temporary solution, a poultice. Let us say that this social legislation is needed but does not benefit the community as a whole very much.

Indeed, it can help an individual for a few weeks, but if he is unemployed for two, three or four months, the amount of benefits he receives cannot, in my opinion, cover his needs and enable him to make ends meet.

That act has been useful since its coming into force and it still is—I repeat that I am not against the principle of this social legislation—but I think that in 1968, more positive formulas should be devised to help not only individuals but also the community as a whole.

Since I have been here, I have often heard, and especially when the Unemployment Insurance Act was under consideration, that the government could, perhaps, find other formulas which, as I said earlier, could be more beneficial to the whole community.

At that time, Mr. Speaker, they called it "work-insurance". Of course, hon. members objected to it then. They said that a work-insurance law would be a first step towards socialism and as such should be rejected. However, whatever name we give it, I think that, in 1968, we should pass a law which, while helping the unemployed, would at the same time allow the community to benefit from the money which is designed to help people when they do not find a job in a particular season.

I will give you an example. Assuming that in a particular area, the unemployment insurance fund amounts to $500,000, $600,000 or $1 million, the government could administer the money in such a way as to pay benefits to those who are entitled to them and at the same time undertake projects in the municipalities which encounter major financial problems.

Those projects would give work to the unemployed who would collect in salaries what they would otherwise have received in unemployment insurance. While being of personal advantage to the unemployed, those expenditures would also serve to build something for our municipalities which, as I said a while ago, have serious problems with regard to the industrial projects and developments that fall within their jurisdiction.

If our municipalities are to be helped, I feel the minister should consider this formula, even though my talking about it makes him laugh.

I think that in 1968, we should have enough imagination to make welfare legislation beneficial to the whole community and not only to individuals. I would like to point that fact out to the minister who is very busy with 464,000 needy unemployed.

Mr. Speaker, during the past year, the minister has also decided to centralize unemployment offices. There has been one in my constituency for over 25 years; it has rendered great services to our people and I think that the principle, adopted by the minister or his department and under which unemployment insurance offices are to be centralized as much as possible, should not apply to every where in the country. In my opinion, consideration must be given to the geographic location of the areas in which unemployment offices are situated and I must add that the centralization of unemployment offices in our district will not serve people who draw unemployment benefits.

We have been told that next June, the unemployment insurance office of the Murray Bay region will be centralized in Quebec city. That will be most inconvenient in view of our somewhat special geographical position and the fact that, during winter, travel is most difficult, to the point that, very often, because of delays in mail delivery, people receive their unemployment cheque a week or ten days late. The minister should consider that for the head of a family waiting for his cheque to receive it a week or ten days late may be a major inconvenience.

The centralisation of unemployment insurance offices in the Quebec city area will of course eliminate the one now existing in the Murray Bay area and people will have to write to Quebec city. I must say to the minister that some people will have to cover a distance of 110, 120 or 125 miles to get to that office and the uncertainties of travel, the delays in mail delivery will surely be highly prejudicial to those who draw unemployment insurance benefits.

I, therefore, beseech the minister to ask his officials to reconsider their decision concerning the closing of the unemployment insurance office in the Charlevoix area, at La Malbaie. Perhaps the minister could ask his officials to make a more detailed study of the situation. Even if the centralization principle is a good one in general terms, I say that in given areas it is detrimental to those who receive benefits under the unemployment insurance act.

I entreat the minister to take my remarks into consideration and to ask his officials to reconsider the decision to close the unemployment office in La Malbaie area.

However, my main object today, Mr. Speaker, is to endorse the speech made last week by my hon. friend the member for Gaspé (Mr. Keays); but I want to insist on a specific point.

The minister knows that the provincial government has set up an inquiry regarding trucking in certain parts of the province. The investigator has submitted a report to the provincial government and made several recommendations. In my opinion, truckers because of their trade, are "penalized" with regard to unemployment insurance.

I have received recommendations, from an organization of truckers in my part of the country, the Société des artisans camionneurs. They complain that they are being discriminated against under the Unemployment Insurance Act, and I think they are quite right. In isolated cases, lumber companies sometimes give unemployment insurance stamps to their truckers. But when these same truckers work for another company which does not feel the need and the obligation to give them unemployment insurance stamps, those truckers, whose trucks can be considered their tools just as the saw is the tool of the carpenter—

[English]

Mr. Nicholson: I hope the hon. member will permit me to rise on a point of order in the interests of saving time. The point raised by his colleague, the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Keays), was a very good one, but I understand that the regulations were amended in the summer of 1966 to correct the situation that troubled him. I believe the hon. member for Gaspé is satisfied at this time. If I understood him correctly, the hon. member for Charlevoix is directing his attention to the same point.

[Translation]

Mr. Asselin (Charlevoix): I thank the minister but I must say that if the rules have been changed, they are still the same in my constituency because only last week, representatives from the Société des Artisans-camionneurs complained that certain companies were not abiding by the rules under the Unemployment Insurance Act. Such companies refuse, in many cases, to affix unemployment insurance stamps in the stamp books of people who belong to the trucking trade.

At this stage, Mr. Speaker, I am obviously forgetting the owners of scores of trucks, the heads of trucking businesses. But I am taking part in this debate to say to the minister —what I said a while ago and will repeat now—that whenever a trucker, who earns his living with his truck, is unemployed, he is unemployed just like a carpenter or a worker. He is earning his living in a different way but I feel that even if the law has been changed, as the minister claims it was, investigations should be made about these companies to see whether the employers abide by that law.

Mr. Speaker, those were the remarks I wanted to make. I am convinced that the hon. minister will take them into consideration as he usually does. I must say he has always taken my interventions into account.

He will have to think of finding a new unemployment insurance formula. Otherwise, as several premiers requested at the federal-provincial conference on the constitution, it will be necessary to sort out our social legislation to prevent a mad scramble between the federal and provincial governments to see which of the two levels will give the most.

I think we shall have to sort out these questions of social legislation and knowing the minister's good will, I am convinced that he will take our representations into account.

[English]

Mr. Steven Otto (York East): Mr. Speaker, I am not opposed to, in fact I am in favour of this bill, but I believe that the extra contributions required under the bill will not constitute an unemployment insurance scheme. Indeed the inclusion of a great number of contributors will have little effect, apart from solving the financial problem. For the same reason I cannot see much value in the argument put forward that school teachers and doctors should not be covered by the provisions under the bill, because they will not be unemployed. Of course a great number of people will never be unemployed, so this argument should include them as well; but it does not. In any event, these extra contributions will not make the unemployment insurance scheme more effective, nor indeed will they solve our great problem, which only a true unemployment insurance scheme could do.

The very word "insurance" suggests that you are protected against something, and unemployment insurance suggests that if you lose your job you will be able to live on the benefits that are paid to you. In effect this is impossible because no family can exist, much less live, on $36 a week. Of course, we recognize that these faults have been built into the scheme for many years. I do not lay blame at the feet of the minister or the present government, except to say that I doubt that they have looked into this vast problem in the way in which they should have. It is a supplementary scheme. If you are a construction worker and your salary schedule is already in line, then when you are seasonally unemployed it is nice to get an additional $36 per week. If you are covered by a union contract and you are on strike, then it is nice to receive a supplementary income in addition to your strike pay. If you are a logger, a fisherman, and so on, you are in this category.

Mr. Winch: But if you are on strike you do not get it.

Mr. Otto: It is very nice to have a supplementary income. What has happened to the unemployment insurance idea? Orginally the plan was introduced as an unemployment insurance plan, but over the years, politics being what they are, there has been pressure to include other things in it, and that has been done. As the hon. gentleman pointed out, this has not helped the plan. Indeed the result has been to make it a hodgepodge of little use to anybody.

This plan was introduced shortly after the compulsory savings plan that we had during the war. Of course people knew what their contributions were, how much they had saved, and immediately after the war they wanted a return of their contributions. They considered this to be their money. Of course when a contributor looks into his unemployment insurance book he sees that he has so many stamps. It may be that this reminds people of the contributions they have made, and makes them think of it as a sort of savings plan. Since human beings are what they are they tend to say: So and so has received so much from the plan, why shouldn't I have it? It is obvious therefore it is no longer an unemployment insurance plan.

I should like to bring the attention of members today other plans which serve a similar purpose, especially the workmen's compensation plan in Ontario. This plan has been in effect almost the same length of time, but it has been a successful plan. The benefits paid are realistic. The workmen's compensation plan pays 75 per cent of our previous earnings, up to a certain maximum. An employee who happens to be making $100 a week can live on $75 a week. Surely no one can suggest that a family man who is unemployed can buy fuel, pay his rent or mortgage payments and clothe his family on $36 per week. If we want to raise the benefits higher, then how much higher can we raise them? I believe that the whole concept of unemployment insurance deserves study. Many of the assumptions that have been made have proven to be wrong. I have discussed this subject with other groups. I have said that possibly unemployment insurance benefits should be paid in realistic amounts to anyone who is unemployed for any reason whatever. Immediately there has been a hue and cry to the effect that you are going to pay all these lazy people who do not want to work, people who would rather get 75 per cent of their salary than work. However, it is always the other person who would do this, never the person to whom you are talking.

The fact is that when people are happy at their jobs, they will work. No one is going to take advantage of that situation merely to stay at home. If a person does, then he is usually psychologically maladjusted. I once had occasion to test this theory. There was an employee of mine who obviously was not happy with his work, and was causing me a great deal of concern. I told him, "I am going to give you four months wages. You are to report here every Friday to pick up your cheque, but I am going to give you four months in which to find yourself a job in which you will be happy, where you can get along with your fellow employees and where you do not hate the boss." My partners said, "What are you going to do; this man is going to take four months wages and he will not be any better off." This proved not to be so. In less than three weeks that man found a job. When he was working for me he was about 10 per cent productive, but working in a place he liked with people he liked he was about 90 per cent productive. This fact alone is worthy of consideration.

If we accept the fact that we should have an unemployment insurance plan, I doubt whether it should be a contributory plan. These weekly deductions are a reminder to people that they have paid money into the plan, so the inclination is to get their money out. I am sure we could adopt a plan similar to the compensation board plan, which is not contributory. Contributions are made from the general profits of the company. Of course whether the contributions are made by government or in any other way, the plan should be all inclusive. Benefits should be payable to any person who is out of work.

If a person is out of work he receives unemployment insurance benefits and he may be on welfare or may be getting payments from the compensation board. One way or the other, the benefits still come from our economy. If we had a plan that was truly an unemployment insurance plan, then there would be a saving in connection with all the other plans whether they were federal, provincial or local. A comprehensive scheme would not cost the country any more and would be of benefit to our productive capacity. I fail to understand how we are gaining anything from constant amendments to a plan which, it has been recognized, does not work. Surely, it is high time the government undertook a study of the problem in order to formulate a workable plan. One recognizes that today shifts in labour will cause unemployment. A plan should recognize that every now and then these workmen have to be re-educated or retrained. The plan should be one in which labour has confidence that in times of unemployment the workers will be able to maintain themselves at the standard of living they have created. They will be more secure and more productive, and that is the essential aspect of any insurance scheme. We should take away any element or risk which interferes with a man's ability to contribute.

I do not say that we are going to do this immediately. I only mention these things because I believe it is high time the government faced this issue, instead of introducing more amendments to the present plan. A white paper could be produced or a study undertaken by a committee of the house to investigate a completely new concept of unemployment insurance. The plan should be one which would assure the labour force of this country that when they lose their jobs their families will not suffer, and their standard of living will not deteriorate.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): In rising to take part in this debate, one has to review the whole question of unemployment insurance. I believe the country has accepted this plan as a means of maintaining a certain amount of buoyancy in the economy, even when there are large numbers of people unemployed. In a way, if my friends from Alberta do not object, one could say we are applying a bit of practical social credit to Canada. But is it working to the best advantage of the economy of Canada, and could we not improve it more than this bill attempts to do?

The hon. member who preceded me said it was high time a complete study was made of this question. Five and a half years ago the then government referred the whole question of unemployment insurance to a body commonly known as the Gill committee, which in due course brought down a report. I should like to say at the outset that I am very disappointed to find that this Bill C-197 is a mere continuation or enlargement of many of the abusive practices carried on under the Unemployment Insurance Act over the past number of years. None of the major recommendations outlined in the report of the Gill committee have been incorporated in this particular bill.

At page 103 of the Gill committee report there is the following recommendation:

> —we believe that a plan of unemployment insurance should be designed to take the first impact of unemployment and should be based on insurance principles appropriate to a social insurance scheme—

Surely, Mr. Speaker, this is the essence of the question. We must first determine what we want. Are we to have an insurance scheme? If so, then let us prepare a scheme that is truly an insurance and is economically sound. If we are not to have an insurance scheme but merely an additional welfare system—a guaranteed income, some Liberal members in the present cabinet have suggested—then let us call it that. Surely, Mr. Speaker, the government could have produced a better amendment to the act than the present bill during the five and a half years since the Gill committee reported.

Then at page 105 of the report appears this paragraph:

> Under the existing plan, benefit may be paid to seasonal workers during their off season, even though they have never worked in the off season and have no expectation of doing so.

So it appears, Mr. Speaker, that there are people in Canada who are seasonally employed and have no intention of working for the remaining four, five or six months of the year, yet under the unemployment insurance scheme they are paid in any event. Surely this does not constitute sound economic practice. Certainly it does not create any incentive for these people to work and improve their living conditions in this young, virile, growing country of Canada.

Generally, Mr. Speaker, I think everyone would admit that Canada needs more people. People are perhaps the one thing that Canada lacks. Yet it is commonly accepted that many Canadians are not prepared to spend any time improving themselves and contributing to the economy of the country in any real way. To me, Mr. Speaker, this is one of the greatest errors into which Canada has fallen in the sixties.

I suggest that, rather than tending to promote an indifference to the Canadian economy on the part of some Canadians, we should in some way be attempting to create incentives for a large segment of the population to contribute even more to the betterment of the economy. However, this government seems intent upon allowing people to contribute less and less to the economy, at the same time seeing to it that their income is maintained at a certain level. This, Mr. Speaker, is exactly what this piece of legislation does.

Then at page 106 of the Gill report appears this paragraph:

> In the light of the comprehensive program that we are recommending, we believe that the existing insurance plan should be modified to bring it back to a plan based upon insurance principles appropriate to such a scheme. The amendments that we consider necessary to accomplish this will now be discussed.

These amendments are discussed at pages 106, and following.

This legislation should do more than it does to make the scheme an insurance scheme, to provide those unemployed who really need assistance with greater benefits. It is not good enough to perpetrate indifference among many segments of our working population today through the means of the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Then at page 120 of their report the Gill committee have this to say:

> A plan of unemployment insurance should be designed in such a way that it will constitute a protection from a hazard that threatens those who normally occupy the position of employees in an employer-employee relationship; i.e., those who would suffer by reason of unemployment. It should not be designed in such a way that qualification for benefit is so easy as to attract people into insured employment merely for that purpose.

What the Gill committee is saying in that statement, Mr. Speaker, is that unemployment insurance should not be so easy to collect. The committee is stating that people are attracted to jobs that qualify them for unemployment insurance, whereupon they work the necessary amount of time to enable them to collect that insurance. It seems to me that the bill before the house merely condones what has been going on and in fact makes it easier for these workers to use the situation to their own advantage.

Continuing at page 120 of the report, Mr. Speaker:

> Under the existing plan, the test of attachment to insured employment is the requirement of at least 30 weeks of contribution in two years preceding the claim. The requirements as to recency and requalification are found in two further tests, the first calling for at least eight weeks of contribution in the period of one year preceding the claim or in the period elapsed since the establishment of the last preceding benefit period—

The report then suggests that the period of employment should be longer. Paragraph 63 at page 121 reads as follows:

> In our opinion, these tests are unsatisfactory in two principal respects. The first is that they are based on weeks of contribution, and in this context a week of contribution may represent anything from one to six days of work. Thus it is possible for persons to qualify for benefit on the basis of an inconsiderable attachment to insured employment, provided it is spread over a large enough number of weeks. The second is that the tests are unduly complex. They are hard to understand and hard to apply.

They are becoming more difficult to apply, Mr. Speaker, as a result of the shift that has taken place in the Department of Labour. As the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) pointed out, two or three years ago the Department of Labour was split and the manpower department was created. At the moment we have the Department of Labour and the Department of Manpower and Immigration, neither one of which knows what the other is doing. Both compile similar statistics, neither department knowing what the other is doing.

Across the country unemployment insurance offices are being closed and their operations centralized in large areas. That makes it more difficult for the bona fide unemployed to claim their benefits from the unemployment insurance fund. Instead of simplifying application forms, the government has made them more complex. It is small wonder that there were 24,486 fraudulent cases involving unemployment insurance last year. The application forms ought to be made simpler and more to the point. The regulations have not been changed enough, the word "suitable" being retained. Page 133 of the Gill report has this to say about abuses:

> The principal classes of alleged abuse that were drawn to our attention in representations made to us, apart from the question of payment of benefit to seasonal workers during their off season as just discussed, related to (a) the drawing of benefit by married women who are not in fact seeking employment; (b) the drawing of benefit by persons who have retired on pension and who are not in fact seeking employment; (c) the taking of too narrow a view by claimants and possibly the administration as to the types of employment that constitute "suitable employment" in any individual case; (d) the failure by some claimants to disclose earnings during weeks of partial unemployment; (e) the failure by some claimants to disclose the true facts concerning their availability for employment; and (f) collusion between employers and employees in failing to give adequate information respecting the reasons for termination.

These abuses have gone on for years. Anyone in this country engaged in business in a minor way soon runs up against the Unemployment Insurance Act, and all the abuses that have gone on for years and years. They are well known and when members of parliament discuss them with constituents they can only say, "Well, it is not right, but that is what is going on." The act is of no help to our economy.

The Gill committee says, if I may paraphrase the contents of pages 128 and 129 of the report, that many who receive benefits equal to 90 per cent of their insured wage may prefer to remain unemployed instead of taking a job.

In recent years unemployment insurance has been extended to cover the fishing industry, and other seasonal industries. It has moved into the field of agriculture. But has that extension of coverage helped farmers to get farm workers? It has not. In my province the livestock industry is a major agricultural industry, and to make a ranch pay one has to work at it for 12 months of the year. The Unemployment Insurance Act, as it is now administered, does not fit the needs of that industry. It was a mistake to make unemployment insurance compulsory in agriculture. It would have been better to make unemployment insurance payable on a voluntary basis. But, oh no; the government said that the act would apply to farmers and ranchers, and no consideration to the agricultural industry was given. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) said, at a meeting that I attended, that payments to the fund could not be made on a voluntary basis because that would be a departure from the insurance aspect of the scheme. I can only say that we departed from that a long time ago.

I would be the first to endorse a return to an insurance scheme. The Gill committee suggests that there should be an insurance scheme—and I emphasize the word "insurance"—for those who are in insurable industries and that there should be some other scheme for those who are affected by winter or seasonal unemployment. The livestock industry would go along with that.

In Canada today, to have a paying ranch, two men must work at it. Usually a rancher would hire one man. To have a paying dairy farm the farmer must hire two men. At least two extra people must work on the dairy farm in order to make it pay and in order to let the farmer and his employees enjoy a standard of life comparable to the standard of other Canadians.

Ranching and dairy farms are competitive businesses. The potato industry is seasonal. One of the great problems in agriculture is getting hired help. I asked the Minister of Agriculture some time ago in a committee if he was making any specific request of the Department of Manpower and Immigration with regard to the immigration of hired agricultural help, and he said that he had not thought of it. That was two years ago, and though I have reminded the government periodically of the basic problems facing the agricultural industry, the Department of Manpower and Immigration has apparently failed to act.

How will this affect the agricultural industry? Regardless of whether a farmer or a rancher thinks that insurance coverage is necessary for his employee, he will have to pay into the fund. There will be nothing voluntary about it. A man can get benefits, not only if he has been fired, but if he quits his job and cannot get another so-called suitable job. And here, this bill raises the maximum benefit to $53 a week. I do not know what the going agricultural wage is across Canada but I bet that few farmers can afford to pay much more than $53 a week, which comes to a little over $200 a month. Few can afford to pay that for winter employment, though in fall and spring the wheat industry of Saskatchewan and Alberta can pay more than that, especially when crops are good, markets are available and prices are close to todays prices.

We are reaching a very dangerous situation by increasing benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act. If the increase were accompanied by changes in the regulations I do not think the agricultural industry would object, nor do I think I would object. But under the present proposals there is to be no change in the regulations at all, to speak of, and no account is taken of the recommendations outlined by the Gill committee. No definite tour is set for winter collection of unemployment insurance.

I listened to the hon. member who has just completed his remarks; I found them interesting but I do not see how his proposals would apply in all circumstances. I am sure they would do nothing but add to the problem of unemployment and make it far more difficult for the agriculture industry to get workers.

What has this government done for the industry, when it comes to hiring help? It has recently brought in the Canada Pension Plan, a plan which in many cases has been rejected both by the farmers and by their hired help. We believe they intend to bring in medicare and workmen's compensation measures. We are told that in the years ahead there may be a guaranteed income, or even provision for a minimum wage in the industry.

I would have no objection if there were a compensatory increase in the income realized by farmers today. However, this has not been the case. On the contrary we have seen incomes and prices in the industry reduced. This measure would do nothing more than increase still further costs to the agriculture industry. It is all well and good to say that since the cost of living is going up unemployment insurance should go up, too. Again I repeat that the act should be changed so as to make it more of an insurance plan. Two classes of insurance should have been set up, one for jobs which tend to be regular and another for employment which is more seasonal. Even though a million dollars has been recovered in respect of benefits paid out to people making false claims, I believe there are still too many abuses taking place and these have a particularly detrimental effect on the agriculture industry to which this legislation was applied only in April last. This has not made it any easier to hire men to work on farms and ranches.

The availability of unemployment benefit to their workers may have helped farmers cultivating such crops as tobacco, potatoes, fruit and vegetables, including sugar beets and so on, but I say the plan should have been introduced to the agriculture industry on a voluntary basis. I cannot for the life of me see why it cannot even now be reinstated on such a basis. If this bill passes, its provisions will do nothing but increase the cost of production to farmers who are today finding themselves in a tighter cost squeeze than ever. It will not help farmers to acquire hired help. Had the minister in presenting this bill paid greater attention to the insurance factor, or given us some assurance that the regulations would be enforced to greater effect—for example, if the word "suitable" had been struck out of the regulations completely—I might have found myself supporting it. In the circumstances, however, I have no hesitation in saying I have no liking for it whatever. I believe it would be detrimental to an industry which most of my constituents are vitally concerned about, and for this reason I shall vote against it.

[Mr. Horner (Acadia).]

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): I should like to say a few words with regard to the measure before us—words of encouragement to the minister for what I believe he is trying to achieve by bringing this bill forward.

My constituency is primarily an agricultural one, but many of the people who live there in close vicinity to Saskatoon depend on seasonal labour for their livelihood. A large number of my constituents are available for work during the winter months, many of them experienced in the trades in which they are involved, and I would not like to see anything done which might endanger the possibility of their securing unemployment insurance during the period of benefit for which they are eligible.

As I look at the problem which has been posed by my hon. friend from Acadia (Mr. Horner) I cannot help but think that it illustrates more directly than anything else could the lack of attention which has been paid during the last few years to the whole question of agricultural prices. This, however, is a subject separate from the one under discussion this afternoon.

In spite of the additional benefits which may accrue to labour, a measure such as this should provide an additional market, or a more stable market, for farm products than otherwise might be the case. In some parts of the agriculture industry, and certainly in the construction trades it is necessary to provide something to assist the development of a seasonal labour force which will be available to undertake the tremendous tasks which face us in Canada. I think of a lag in housing and in construction generally over the past few years. We shall certainly need a large pool of seasonal labour, having regard to our climate, if these projects are to go forward rapidly.

If I have any criticism to make of the government it is that they have made it so difficult for the municipalities to undertake winter works; they have cut the feet from under the winter works program instituted when the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) was prime minister of this country. The effort they made to increase housing construction by means of the $500 bonus—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I would expect the hon. member to associate the remarks he is now making with the bill now before the house.

Mr. Nasserden: I thought I was doing that. All these things have something to do with the question of unemployment insurance benefits. The subject of seasonal labour has been discussed at length during this debate by some hon. members, anyway. I happen to be interested in seasonal labour because there are a number of people in my area who are involved in it and I should like to lay the basis of my views before the house in that regard.

What I was developing a minute ago is that I do not believe as many abuses have taken place as some people think. I believe fewer people would be on unemployment insurance on a seasonal basis if the government of the day had taken actions that could have been taken to provide a little longer employment for them. A month or so longer employment would make a great difference to many of these people. Very few people, if they can work, go on unemployment insurance.

The other matter which I bring to the attention of the minister is the application of the rule regarding the eligibility of people for unemployment insurance when they are going to school. I understand that if the department sends people to vocational training those people can get benefits. I have in mind the particular case of a young man who was unemployed, who was seeking to get his grade 9, who was going to school, who was always ready to take employment if he could get it, but who was refused unemployment insurance benefit. I hope the minister will give consideration to this case.

I realize there has to be a border line some place. However, the information I have about this particular young man shows that he has not been trying to abuse anything. All he wants to do is improve his education during a time when he is unemployed. Without saying anything more, Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend the minister for the worth-while objective of this bill.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I was most interested in the concluding remarks of the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto), when, in his most useful presentation, he said he thought the Liberals should get their heads together and come up with some policy of co-ordinated security. With this I most certainly agree; but instead of saying "get their heads together" I say "knock their heads together", so that they may come up with a co-ordinated policy.

Actually, Mr. Speaker, we now have a peculiar and complicated welfare set-up in Canada. It is almost impossible for a member of parliament to keep up with all the regulations for eligibility procedures, as they change federally, provincially and municipally. I am certain, sir, that you must get many inquiries, the same as the rest of us.

Under this mix up we have unemployment insurance, we have old age pensions and old age allowances, we have federal pensions and war veterans allowances, we have disability pensions and blind pensions, we have workmen's compensation, widows pensions and children's aid pensions. We have employed and unemployed on welfare. It is an extraordinary situation.

That is the reason I hope I live long enough to see what the hon. member mentioned, a co-ordinated security plan for Canada that will cover all those in need, whether it be because they are unemployed, ill, disabled, aged, or for any other reason. It must come eventually, and I hope the time is not in the too far distant future. However, we are not at that stage yet, so we have before us certain amendments relative to unemployment insurance, and I wish to speak briefly on a couple of aspects.

The constituency of Vancouver East is basically a working class, residential riding. Therefore unemployment hits that riding heavily. It therefore follows that there is a keen interest in the matter of unemployment insurance. I regret very much that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) has not seen fit, or found himself in a position, to introduce recommendations at this time of such a nature that we would have unemployment insurance. By that I mean insurance for everyone who is able to work and willing to work, but who because of conditions is unable to find or be supplied with work. We will not have the full meaning of unemployment insurance until by law there is a guarantee of a decent living standard and security to everyone able and willing to work, but who is denied that opportunity. This is something we should have had long ago, and I am sorry our hesitant steps year by year, parliament by parliament, still leave us a long way from the achievement of that objective.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, the regulations, and I am afraid at times the attitudes of those who enforce them, to a considerable extent make a farce under our present law of the meaning of unemployment insurance. It is very hard when a member of the House of Commons has his constituents, or the constituents of some other member come to him to discuss unemployment insurance. If my memory is correct it was in 1940 that we first established the principle of unemployment insurance.

Mr. Nicholson: 1941.

Mr. Winch: It is very hard for a member of this house when a constituent, who has been paying into the unemployment insurance fund since 1941, or for most of the years since 1941, who has reached the age of 65 or 67, but who is still able and willing to carry on, comes to him saying he has been told by the officials, not that he is not physically fit, not that he is not able, but that because of his years and his position, and there being nothing available in his occupation, he is not available for work. In effect they say, "We declare that you are not available." Although such a person may have paid into the fund since 1941, what does unemployment insurance mean to him and people like him? They are out.

While sitting here waiting for the opportunity to speak I could not help but think of what we read in the newspapers about the ovation given in the other place to Senator Roebuck on the occasion of his ninetieth birthday. I have no hesitation in saying, and I have said it before publicly, that he is one of the most able, one of the most brilliant, one of the most hard working members of the Senate. There is no question about that; but you know if he was to go by unemployment insurance regulations he would have been wiped out 30 years ago.

In principle this is what is going on today all across Canada. It makes me sick when I think of the number of cases which have come to my attention of men who are in the age bracket of 65 or 67, who are seeking employment after having been employed for many years and who are declared by the government office or agency to be not available. The matter of availability should be a decision for the worker, and not that of a bureaucrat in a government office. If a man is physically available and has paid his premiums he should be recognized as being available and as being entitled to unemployment insurance.

The Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) comes from Vancouver in the province of British Columbia. He knows that over the past few months we have had and are having now a serious unemployment situation.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member has heard the most recent figures. British Columbia is the one province in Canada in which unemployment is going down instead of up.

Mr. Winch: That is wonderful, but it does not change one iota what I am saying. We have had and have now a very serious unemployment situation in Vancouver and in the province of British Columbia. Yes, the figure may go down a part of one per cent, but I do not care whether it is 400,000, 300,000, 200,000 or 100,000—when a man is unemployed and his family is going hungry we have a problem; and this has been a big problem in British Columbia. The Minister of Labour knows that we have faced a critical situation in the last 12 months, particularly in the construction industry, the power industry and the shipbuilding industry. Sixty five per cent of the workers in the shipbuilding industry are now out of work in Victoria and Vancouver. Twenty two per cent of all the carpenters in Vancouver, Nanaimo, New Westminster and Victoria are unemployed right now. Those are the figures. Progress is being made in respect of the power dams on the Peace river and at Mica creek, but the federal government is so interested in Ottawa and Quebec that major construction work is going ahead there, while the only major construction in the city of Vancouver is not going ahead, under the instructions of this government.

I had to answer the interjection of the minister, because it is quite all right for the minister and me to be drawing our salaries, but those who are not eligible under certain regulations for unemployment insurance in British Columbia have quite a problem when they are faced with the matter of putting ham and eggs on the table and paying the rent. I know of many persons who have not been able to work more than five and a half months in the last 12 month period. Can they draw unemployment insurance? The answer is no. They are not eligible because they do not have six months stamps. I know that is the regulation. I was hoping it might be changed, because the man who has worked for only five and a half months and cannot find employment must provide for his family the same as anybody else. He receives no help in this regard from the unemployment insurance fund, even though he has been paying into the fund. I am not suggesting that such a person should be in the same position as those who have worked for 12 months or a period of years, but I am saying that if he has been paying into the fund he should be entitled to some return when, because of conditions beyond his control, he is unable to find employment.

It had been my hope that the Minister of Labour would go beyond what he is now proposing to the house. We appreciate the increase. We appreciate any steps forward, but surely there are others who should have been included at the same time. When because of regulations people who have only five and half months stamps, and not six months stamps, are denied assistance because of age or because the agency cannot supply work, even though they are available, I say without hesitation that the government is an accessory to theft. I say that the government is taking money under false pretences, because when one pays a premium he is entitled to a return.

It is my hope that as soon as possible further and greater advances will be made in respect of the policies and regulations pertaining to unemployment insurance, and that even beyond that greater measures will be instituted by this government in an effort to increase rather than curtail employment. I shall conclude as I opened by reminding hon. members of the house of the words of the hon. member for York East, when he said in effect: Knock your heads together, and come up with an economic social security plan for all the people of this country.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, ever since the publication of the report of the royal commission under the chairmanship of Mr. Gill some five and a half years ago there has been an expectation on the part of parliament and on the part of many people in the country that the Unemployment Insurance Act would undergo the tortuous process of being overhauled, and eventually reach parliament. Reference has been made previously to the Gill committee report, but at this time I should like to refer to recommendation No. 11 which relates to the extent to which coverage under the act should be applied. Certain classes of employment are exempt under the provisions of the act; they are excluded from coverage. In fact I believe the term is "exempted employment". This has been the situation since the period just after the second world war, when the act came into existence.

The Gill committee in some of its recommendations referred to the classes or types of employment which were excluded. It summarizes section 27 in the act, which establishes the excluded categories and points out in very general terms that the people involved are government employees, teachers, members of the police forces, employees in charitable or non-profit organizations, employees in hospitals, domestic servants, and so on. They also mentioned what they call the other broad exempted class of employees, namely those whose income is in the bracket of more than $5,460 a year. As I understand it, the committee recommended that these groups, which are now exempted, should be included.

If there was a principle involved in the act in 1940 or 1941, when it came into existence, it was that certain classes of employees should be excluded from coverage, because of the unlikelihood that they would fall within or become involved in a situation of temporary unemployment. The other reason for exclusion of classes of employees related to those who were almost guaranteed unemployment, such as loggers, fishermen, hunters, trappers and other seasonal employees. The Gill committee seeks to alter that situation by recommending that these classes should be included, not because they may become temporarily unemployed, but to share in losses in respect of the unemployment insurance fund. The commission felt that these losses should be spread as broadly as possible. If that is the case and it is accepted, then we need to change the whole concept of the act. It is no longer one of insurance but one of a general classification of welfare.

Neither the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) when introducing this bill for second reading, nor the government, has given any indication as to what is intended in respect of the recommendation of the Gill committee that teachers, municipal employees, government employees, employees of police forces and the like should be included for coverage under the act. We know it is permissible under the act to include classes of employees previously excluded by order in council. This was done, I believe in 1957, some 11 years ago in the case of fishermen. The Liberal government of that day included fishermen through an extensive set of regulations established by way of order in council.

It has not been made clear what government policy is in respect of the recommendation of the Gill committee to include certain classes of employees now exempted. There is a great deal of apprehension, on the part of those people who fall within those categories enumerated in the act as being exempt from coverage, that they will be included without any government announcement as to acceptance of the Gill committee recommendation in this direction. I know of no government declaration to the contrary.

In view of the fact the government has introduced some amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act, it owes these people, who feel they are simply going to have their pockets picked for the purpose of offsetting losses, a declaration as to the Gill committee recommendations. The government should declare itself in respect of the inclusion of these people for coverage under the act, particularly when there is little possibility of their obtaining benefit. As long as such apprehension exists, since the Gill committee was established for the purpose of inquiring into the operations of the Unemployment Insurance Act, I suppose we are entitled to assume that the government has considered the recommendations and has not come to any conclusion.

To give the government the benefit of the doubt, I am sure it has considered these recommendations. There is no more opportune moment than now, when parliament is dealing with this act, for it to make its position known by saying it accepts the recommendations of the committee and, at the appropriate time, by order in council will include these people for coverage. If that is not the case, then conversely the government should say it does not agree with the recommendations, or that it has not made up its mind.

Because of the fact that with this change some people will be required to make contributions, with little likelihood of receiving benefits, the government owes it to them to declare itself in respect of at least this recommendation of the Gill committee, perhaps between now and the time the bill comes up for resumed consideration, when the minister will close the debate. Perhaps during that interval the government will consider the thoughts I have expressed and make its intention known.

May I call it six o'clock?

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that a message has been received from the Senate informing this house that the Senate have passed Bill S-33, an act respecting the Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone Company, Limited, to which the concurrence of this house is desired; and also a message informing this house that the Senate have passed the following bills, without any amendment: Bill C-163, an act to implement a broadcasting policy for Canada, to amend the Radio Act in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential and related provisions; Bill C-192, an act to amend the Excise Act, and Bill C-191, an act to amend the Excise Tax Act.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker I should like to ask the government house leader whether he can give some indication as to what will be considered tomorrow, Friday and Monday?

Mr. Pennell: Tomorrow we will continue with item 57 the second reading of Bill No. C-197, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act. Then we will call item 64, second reading of Bill No. C-202, to amend the National Housing Act, 1954. I hope that some time tomorrow I will be able to inform the several house leaders of the business for the rest of the week.

Mr. Starr: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the house leader whether the votes taken on any of these items will be considered as votes of confidence.

Mr. Pennell: It is for the house to decide.

Mr. Starr: You mean there will be two votes on each bill?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being six o'clock this house stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at 2.30 p.m.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, February 29, 1968

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. TUCKER—PRESENCE IN HOUSE FOR VOTE ON BILL C-193

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): Mr. Speaker, I feel I should rise on a question of privilege. Several articles in newspapers have indicated that I was absent on Friday, February 19, when the vote was taken on third reading of Bill No. C-193, to amend the Income Tax Act. This was not the case; I was in the chamber.

Mr. Nielsen: It was Monday, not Friday.

Mr. Tucker: I thank the hon. member: Monday, February 19. When the two votes were taken that day I was in my place. As a matter of fact, as reported at page 6893 of Hansard I said:

> Mr. Chairman, had I voted I would have voted for the bill.

That was the vote on clause 5, which was taken just before 6 p.m.

When the standing vote was taken on third reading of the bill at about 8.20 p.m. I was in my seat but failed to get the Speaker's attention after the vote. I did not vote on the motion for third reading, even though I was in the chamber and sitting in my seat, because I was paired. Had I voted, Mr. Speaker, I would have voted for the bill.

LABOUR RELATIONS

TABLING OF REPORT OF TASK FORCE ON LABOUR-MANAGEMENT LAW

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table the progress report prepared by the task force on labour relations that some days ago the Prime Minister assured the house would be tabled at an early date. This report indicates that the task force is well advanced in a thorough examination of industrial relations policies, problems and practices.

An extensive and important program of basic studies is outlined in an appendix to the report. These studies and the discussions being held with union, employer and government groups in all parts of the country will undoubtedly assist the task force in dealing with the major issues set forth in this initial report, including special problems which may arise in the case of disputes in essential industries. The task force has undertaken to complete its work by the end of this year.

I might add, Mr. Speaker, that the tabling of this report by the government is not to be regarded as establishing a precedent. There will no doubt be occasions in the future when the government may decide not to table reports of task forces. A major purpose of the work of such special consultants frequently is to provide advice on the formulation of government policy, and it is the policy itself, decided upon after full consideration of the advice available to it, which a government must, of course, make clear to the house and the country as a whole. In some circumstances, however, it will also be desirable, in the interests of greater public awareness and understanding of complex issues, to make public the texts of reports by the task forces or other consultants. Hence the tabling of this report, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, the tabling of the report at this time is, I suggest, a somewhat curious step. Perhaps it is meant to bring about some retroactive or advanced blessing for the promise of the Prime Minister a year ago that this report would be before us prior to the introduction of major legislation in the field of labour.

Until we have seen the report we will not know how much it impinges on Bill No. C-186, the very controversial measure that is now being studied by a house committee. However, in his brief statement the minister did refer to the fact that the report dealt with disputes in essential industries, and this is one of the problems that has bothered members of that particular committee in the issue it is facing. We will withhold further judgment on the report until it is studied, but I think it is regrettable that the final study, not just an interim study, was not before us prior to the introduction of the measure of the house.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, since one does not know the contents of the report it is rather difficult to comment on it, and I intend to take no more than a minute to make one suggestion. The minister indicated that the tabling of this report is not to be taken as a precedent for the tabling of task force reports. I had assumed that it was a precedent, because another report in the field of foreign ownership was tabled the other day. I thought the minister was merely assuring us that the report he is tabling today likewise did not have government support, and this was why he emphasized that point.

I have been in touch, so far as it has been possible through reading the newspapers, with the work of the task force, and I look forward to seeing the appendix because I understand the task force is working on a large range of subjects.

I join the hon. member for Halifax in expressing my regret that the controversial Bill C-186 had to be introduced at all before the report of this task force was in our hands, because I imagine there will be recommendations relating to the entire field of labour-management relationships, which is what is important.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, it is rather difficult to pass judgment on a report that has just been tabled in the house by the minister. We reserve the right to examine the report, and then to discuss its value.

[English]

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the house is happy to hear that the actions of the government during the last few days will not necessarily be considered a precedent. I trust that what happened yesterday will fall into the same category, though I doubt if the government will be prepared to argue in the future that it was not a precedent.

We look forward to reading this report because it has to do with those relationships that affect essential services. If there is a strike in those services the economy of our nation is tied up.

The report is somewhat late. We know that some provinces, including the province of British Columbia, are already well launched into important legislation in this field. Despite the report's recommendations, the federal government's efforts will probably come too late.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO FURTHER FISCAL PROPOSALS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of indications from government officials that they intend to continue collecting the 5 per cent surcharge on income tax, which was defeated in the house, does the government intend to bring before this house shortly a fiscal proposal similar to the one that was defeated?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the first part of that question ought to be directed more properly to the Minister of National Revenue. I can say, answering both parts of the question, that the government is now taking measures to change the deductions at the source—I refer to the tables that are prepared—and it is not the intention of the government to reintroduce Bill C-193.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Is it the intention of the government to bring forward a new tax measure prior to the recess?

Mr. Sharp: The government is now considering the revenue measures necessary to replace those contained in Bill C-193.

Mr. Starr: I repeat my supplementary question. Does the government intend to bring in a tax measure to replace the one which was defeated, prior to any recess which the government may contemplate?

Mr. Sharp: I do not think I can add to the answer I gave. The government's intentions in this respect will be made known in due course.

Mr. Starr: I address this supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister. Has he consulted with and received advice from the government's financial adviser in these matters, the hon. member for Villeneuve?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The hon. gentleman should not be so jealous.

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): A supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. Will any such legislation on the tax bite be made retroactive to January 1?

Mr. Sharp: I do not think it would be proper for me to answer a question of that kind. The government's proposals will be brought before the house in due course.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. Is the minister considering the possibility of introducing a bill to impose taxes on the Conservatives only?

[English]

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Revenue. Is it the intention of the government to refund the tax which has been collected illegally since January 1?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, it is the intention of the government to credit each taxpayer for the taxes that have been collected since January 1, 1968, under the provision concerning this 5 per cent surtax.

[English]

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Can the Minister of National Revenue advise the house when the new schedule of deductions will go forth to employers?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the personnel of the Department of National Revenue are now preparing a new table which will be sent to the employers, we hope, before March 15.

[English]

Mr. Hales: Will the minister and his department be issuing new income tax forms?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, these tables will be sent to employers before March 15, at the same time as the assessment tables, as it is done every year.

[English]

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): I should like to ask the Minister of National Revenue whether it is the intention of the government to bring in another tax measure to take care of the credit, which is merely a bookkeeping entry.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: The hon. Minister of Finance made a statement on this subject a few moments ago.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether it is safe for us to assume that the government does not know what it is doing in this regard.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Perhaps that question ought to be answered by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre.

Mr. Starr: You sure ran out of ideas for answers.

TRADE

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO EFFORTS TO PROMOTE EXPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Because of the possible imminent retirement of the Minister of Trade and Commerce it becomes all the more important to ask this question now. In view of the fact that the wheat board's crop year has passed the halfway point, and in view of the fact that wheat exports are approximately 40 per cent of last year's level, can the minister say whether the government has in mind any special course of action to deal with this rather grave situation?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker; an intensive program of hard selling.

Mr. Schreyer: As a supplementary question I would like to ask the minister whether in this intensive program of hard selling his department will examine the United States wheat selling program, under which they have been able to keep wheat exports running at approximately the same level as last year.

Mr. Winters: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I do not think we will be following the same practices, but we are in constant touch with the United States authorities in an effort to work cooperatively to maintain order in the wheat markets of the world, and we are making some progress.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Does he think the final payments for wheat, oats and barley will get out in time to tell western delegates to the Liberal convention what a great guy he is?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Schreyer: As a further supplementary question, in view of the fact that off-farm movements of grain, movements from country elevators of wheat and other western grains have slowed down, and will slow down even more, is the government contemplating an increase in the moneys available for cash advances?

Mr. Winters: Not at the moment, Mr. Speaker, but as I have said on previous occasions these matters are under constant review and decisions will be taken to meet the circumstances.

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the very tight quota situation in western Canada, and also because of the high interest rates, I wonder if the minister would impress upon his colleagues the necessity of increasing the amount of cash available under the cash advances legislation.

Mr. Winters: It is not a question of impressing anything upon my colleagues, Mr. Speaker. It is a question of consulting with the wheat board and arriving at the decision which is in the best interests of the farmers.

EXPOSITIONS

MONTREAL—INQUIRY AS TO FEDERAL PARTICIPATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alcide Simard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Prime Minister but in his absence, I will put it to his parliamentary secretary.

Can he tell the house whether he received a request for official participation in "Man and His World" exhibition?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, I might say that this matter will receive serious consideration and that I will be in a position to give an answer to the hon. member to-morrow or next Monday.

[Mr. Nasserden.]

IMMIGRATION

FACILITIES FOR PROCESSING APPLICATIONS FROM KENYA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the action of the government of the United Kingdom in limiting Asian immigration from Kenya, and the expected increase in applications from those wishing to emigrate to Canada, is it the intention of the government to set up additional facilities to process these applications?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we shall set up flying squads so as to meet the needs as soon as they arise.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, according to the news, those immigrants will have an extremely difficult time crossing the British boundary.

Can the hon. minister tell us whether those thousands of Asiatics coming from Africa will have easier access to Canada?

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to change the rules of immigration. Our rules must apply to Kenya just as they do, without discrimination, to all the countries in the world; should there be an unusually large number of applications, we will organize special teams of officials to process those requests as they are submitted just as we do in the case of other countries.

[English]

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, might I further ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration if in view of the circumstances now prevailing in Kenya these special teams will be sent out very soon, and not in some fairly distant future?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, up to now, there has been no material increase in the number of applications for immigration to Canada. We have had an office for some time in Beirut and as soon as we find that a sufficient number of applications have been submitted—after all, we are not going to send special invitations to immigrants—we shall set up the teams I mentioned earlier.

[English]

Mr. Brewin: I have a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister, without waiting for applications, consider whether there is not a clear indication now of the need for a special team to interview would-be applicants in Kenya, to deal with the present emergency?

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. In view of the minister's statement in this regard today, have the minister or the government given any consideration to date to the admittance of Asians from Kenya to Canada within the terms of reference of his last policy statement, in which the emphasis allegedly is based on skill; or, in the alternative, to admit some of these people in co-operation with other commonwealth nations on more compassionate grounds?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, the new immigration regulations and our restrictive criteria are extremely flexible and take into account the particular circumstances now prevailing in Kenya.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: I have a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since almost 7 per cent of the labour force in Canada is unemployed at this time, has consideration been given to this fact in working out any plan with other commonwealth nations or with the nation in question?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, our selection criteria also take into account the employment situation in Canada.

[English]

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): My question is supplementary, Mr. Speaker. In view of the statement of the minister that he may set up special teams if the need is required, may I ask him whether he will also consider doing something to deal with the large backlog of applications which exist in so far as Hong Kong is concerned.

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, the Hong Kong situation is improving. There are also problems in India and Portugal, but we are applying the selection criteria that have been approved by the government and that the members of this house know very well. As of now, we can accept into Canada a number of immigrants which I think can easily be absorbed, and obviously we must take into consideration the absorption limits of the country's population.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Before undertaking such an immigration program, will his department get in touch with the provinces in order to know to what extent they can absorb that immigration, in view of the employment situation prevailing at the present time in various areas of the country?

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, I think that I have indicated that we have not changed our immigration policy and that we have no intention of doing so.

EXPO '67

PAYMENT OF FEDERAL SHARE OF DEFICIT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Minister of Finance. Is it the intention of the government to pay off the Expo deficit, which is now estimated to be somewhere between $200 million and $250 million, by the means of selling government bonds or out of general taxation?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that the question is not one of apparent urgency. I wonder whether it is not too general in nature to ask now.

Mr. Starr: Just $250 million.

Mr. Hees: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this is a very important matter, especially in view of the fact that at the present time the government wishes to raise additional money through taxation. It would seem to me that a matter of a quarter of a billion dollars is important at this time.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted to reply I should like to say that I think the hon. gentleman understands that the paying of the Expo deficit will not require the raising of any additional money. That has already been financed.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PUBLIC SERVICE

SALARIES OF NURSES IN HALIFAX-DARTMOUTH AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the President of the Treasury Board. Could the minister now reply to the question I asked on February 9 with regard to the salaries paid nurses in federal employ in the Halifax-Dartmouth area?

Hon. E. J. Benson (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the officials of my department have been in consultation with the officials of the Department of Veterans Affairs with regard to this particular matter. I hope to be able to say something about it shortly.

FINANCE

INTEREST RATES ON SMALL BUSINESS AND FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Will the government take immediate steps to revise the present statutory interest rates under the Small Businesses Loans Act and the Farm Improvement Loans Act? I ask this question at the present time as it has become almost impossible to obtain loans under either of these acts because of present high interest rates and the short supply of money available for loans by chartered banks.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have already answered questions of this kind, and I refer the hon. gentleman to Hansard.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, I realize that questions of a similar nature have been asked; that is why I prefaced my question with the words "immediate steps".

Mr. C. S. Smallwood (Battle River-Camrose): Mr. Speaker, some time ago I asked the minister a similar question, at which time he informed the house he was planning to bring in amendments to the Farm Improvement Loans Act. Will the minister indicate when we can expect those amendments to come before the house?

Mr. Sharp: I am not in a position to say; this depends, of course, on how long the present part of this session lasts. The matter is under consideration.

AIR TRANSPORT

USE OF COMMERCIAL AIR LANES BY RUSSIAN MILITARY PLANES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister of Transport in a position to answer the questions I asked on February 19 in respect of the intrusion into commercial air lanes, if any occurred, by Russian military planes which flew parallel to the coast of Newfoundland? At that time he undertook, in co-operation with the Minister of National Defence, to obtain an answer.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it has been determined that at the time of the interception these planes were in international air space. They were followed constantly by radar throughout this period and were at all times under close observation, so there was no threat to civil aviation.

Mr. Harkness: Since they were intruding into commercial air lanes, contrary to international agreement, has any protest been made in connection with this action on the part of these Russian planes?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I understand that Russia is not a signatory to the international air transport association agreement, although when Russian aircraft operate on transatlantic commercial flights they do so within the regulations of the agreement. Otherwise there is no requirement on the part of Russia to observe the rules, and I guess their military planes consequently do not.

THE MINISTRY

PROPOSED RESIGNATION OF CANDIDATES FOR PARTY LEADERSHIP

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, in view of the very proper action by the Minister of Trade and Commerce in resigning his portfolio before becoming a leadership candidate, I should like to request the Acting Prime Minister to ask the Prime Minister whether he is going to take the proper action of calling on other candidates to do the same.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that question does not fall within the administrative responsibility of the Acting Prime Minister.

EXPROPRIATION ACT

INQUIRY AS TO PREPARATION OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Acting Prime Minister which I believe is timely and appropriate. I must apologize for not sending him notice, but I had some unexpected broadcast appointments and was detained at the last minute by several ladies who phoned me to say how pleased they were to know that I was paired with the Canadian people yesterday.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Herridge: Is the government giving consideration to the drafting of a new expropriation bill at the request of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and other property owners affected?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I will have to take the question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

HIGHWAY SAFETY

INQUIRY AS TO DISCUSSIONS WITH DIRECTOR OF U.S. PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether, within the last few days, he has met with Dr. William Haddon, the director of the United States federal automobile and highway safety program. If so, can he report to the house on the result of such meetings?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I did have such a meeting which was very useful. We had a good exchange of ideas and opinions, and we agreed that the already close working relationship between our two countries would be reinforced and that at the official level particularly there should be meetings more often for a full exchange of information in order co-operatively to work out future standards which would reduce the carnage on our highways.

Mr. Grafftey: Did the minister inform Dr. Haddon that in addition to co-operating with the United States it was the intention of the Canadian government to enact specific Canadian standards in this field?

Mr. Hellyer: I suggested that it would be in our mutual interest to have standards as nearly as possible the same in the two countries, but in case we felt strongly that something was particularly required in this country, or that it was in the interests of Canadian citizens to have standards that were different, we would recommend them.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—EFFORTS BY CANADIAN GOVERNMENT TO EFFECT CESSATION OF BOMBING

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs having to do with the recent declaration by U Thant that after visits he has made to various capitals he is convinced that if there was a cessation of the bombing in Viet Nam it would only be a matter of a few days before the various parties would be available at the conference table.

Is the minister of the same opinion? If so, has he given support to that view in the last few days through representations made to the United States? And in the face of the frightfully mounting United States casualty list is there any indication that the department of state is giving serious consideration to this matter, and has the Canadian representative now in North Viet Nam been in touch with the North Vietnamese government in the last few days?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the United States position has not changed. The President reiterated the other day that he continues to support the position known as the San Antonio declaration; that is, that the United States will not stop the bombing unless there is an indication that talks will take place promptly under circumstances that will not be of disadvantage to United States military operations.

We have been in touch with the Secretary General who has reaffirmed that in his view, if the bombing did stop, there would be a willingness on the part of the north to have talks within a few days. I should hope that would be the situation, but I can only say that on the basis of the reports from our ambassador who has just returned from Hanoi, we were not able to obtain any precision. We do believe the north has reaffirmed its willingness to enter into talks, but other than what the Secretary General himself has said I have no reason to believe that these talks would take place within days or weeks, as he suggested. I would hope that to be the case.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, when the hon. gentleman mentioned that the Canadian representative did not have the same view as to precision held by U Thant as to the cessation of bombing by the United States being followed immediately by meetings at the conference table, does he have any idea how far North Viet Nam indicated it was prepared to go?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, quite recently we have been told that they would enter into talks, but we have no precision as to when these talks would take place.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether, in light of the statement by the right hon. member for Prince Albert and the minister's reply, and in view of the tremendous urgency of this matter and the possibility of further escalation of the war, the time has not come for the Canadian government to take the initiative in asking that the whole matter be discussed before the Security Council again, before the situation gets worse?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, for many months the Canadian government has taken the position that the question of the war in Viet Nam was one properly before the United Nations General Assembly.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister imply that the United States attitude is that it will not give consideration to a cessation of bombing except on the basis of the so-called San Antonio declaration? Also, what has been Canada's view as expressed to the government of the United States on the basis of the Canadian ambassador's visit to North Viet Nam? Has Canada advised the United States that while it has not precise information it believes, on the basis of those discussions which have taken place, that a cessation of bombing would permit immediate consultation and consideration at the conference table?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, Canada's position has not been changed since the declaration I made in the general assembly in September, when I said there should be a cessation of the bombing. We could not guarantee what the results would be, but we believed this would be a new situation and we saw no other way of bringing about meaningful discussions. That continues to be the position of the Canadian government.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Roger-E. Régimbal (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that the Minister of Justice, as recorded on page 7038 of Hansard, has likened the authority of the Canada Year Book to that of the People's Almanac, or Almanach Beauchemin, does the minister intend to cancel publication of the Canada Year Book?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

INDUSTRY

SYDNEY, N.S.—ADDITIONAL FEDERAL ASSISTANCE RESPECTING STEEL PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister may I direct my question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who I understand is a member of the cabinet committee dealing with what we think is the most important situation to arise for some years, namely the steel crisis in Nova Scotia. May I ask the hon. gentleman whether he is in a position today to give hon. members a progress report as to what financial assistance is going to be available from the federal government to the province of Nova Scotia in this most serious situation.

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, a letter is in the course of preparation in reply to one Premier Smith wrote to the Prime Minister a few days ago. It will be dispatched, I should think, within the next day or two. It contains the government's present position.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce with reference to questions posed by the hon. member for Grey North and myself some days ago with regard to the dumping of steel. At that time the minister said:

I understand that a report has been prepared. I am not familiar with the exact details of the report, but perhaps I could familiarize myself with it and answer a little later.

Is the minister in a position today to answer this question, which has a tremendous effect on the steel industry in Canada?

Mr. Winters: Mr. Speaker, I have looked into this matter quite carefully. I believe the Minister of National Revenue is prepared to answer, and if it is agreeable to the hon. member I would ask him to do so.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, we are now having an inquiry in respect of this alleged dumping by some exporting countries and I think I shall be in a position in a few days to make a more detailed report to the house.

SHIPPING

REPORTED REFUSAL OF SHIPPERS TO USE ST. LAWRENCE PORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. In view of the firm refusal of large maritime shippers to accept cargoes to or from Montreal, Quebec city and Trois-Rivières during the coming season, does the minister anticipate taking any action, other than asking for studies, to reassure the people of those cities that goods can be received or sent out from these ports?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as I think the hon. member knows, negotiations between the shipping federation and the six or seven unions concerning the shipment of goods from the three St. Lawrence ports are still pending, with the assistance of the conciliation officer, since last January. A conciliation board has been requested. The names of the two nominees were received by me from the parties on February 23 and over the next week end the documents were prepared and signed appointing these two men and asking them to agree on a chairman.

In addition to this action, I might add that, pursuant to the assurance given to this house many months ago that on completion of the one inquiry into the activities of the ports in question there would be a second inquiry into the cause of work stoppages, I announced some days ago the appointment of Mr. Justice Arthur Smith of the Superior Court of Quebec to chair this second inquiry. That appointment has been confirmed officially. Hearings of this inquiry commission will begin, I hope early in March. I do not know what more the government can do at this stage.

Mr. Grafftey: How about another task force to complete the delaying procedure?

Mr. J. N. Ormiston (Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. He answered it partially a moment ago. Would it be possible for the minister to tell us what progress has been made in the conciliation talks between the St. Lawrence seaway authority and its employees?

Mr. Nicholson: I have given a partial answer to that question, as the hon. member has said. The only thing that I can add is that the parties, in the course of their negotiations, are confronted with difficulties arising out of the interpretation of the Picard report, which I think one, if not both sides feel should after clarification be incorporated in the new agreements. I am not sure whether both parties wish arbitration on that point.

Mr. Lewis: They sure do. They have asked for it.

Mr. Nicholson: It is up to them. One side has asked for it, the other side asked for it and there was a slight delay and that request was withdrawn. I am making inquiries into this particular matter.

AGRICULTURE

POTATOES—REQUEST FROM NEW BRUNSWICK FOR ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Hugh John Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Has the minister received a request from the government of New Brunswick concerning specific action the federal government might take to alleviate the distressed condition of the potato industry in that province?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): I do not recall any specific request from that government which has been drawn to my attention, although the low price of potatoes in New Brunswick has been drawn to my attention. I do not believe there has been any specific government request in this regard.

Mr. Flemming: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister undertake to inquire into the matter to see whether he has received such a request?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Greene: I will be pleased to do so, Mr. Speaker, and inform the hon. member tomorrow.

DRUGS

CHLORAMPHENICOLS—INQUIRY AS TO CLINICAL TESTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, on February 14 I addressed a question to the right hon. Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The Prime Minister said he would look into this matter. I should like to know whether the Minister of National Health and Welfare is ready to answer the question as to what clinical tests are now being made to protect the Canadian public against the use of the chloramphenicols which are now on the Canadian market but which were taken off the United States market about eight weeks ago.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it is not possible for the Department of National Health and Welfare to conduct the kind of clinical work that my hon. friend has in mind, but I believe the food and drug directorate has taken action to remove from the Canadian market the products of two United States companies referred to by my hon. friend.

Mr. Rynard: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs what he has done about this situation. Does the minister know whether these products have been taken off the Canadian market? Can he assure the Canadian people in this regard?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of health. We have been in consultation with the Department of National Health and Welfare and the food and drug directorate. I want to make it clear that the importation and marketing of drugs from the safety angle falls within the direct responsibility of the food and drug directorate.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON CANADIAN POSITION INTERNATIONALLY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for Finance. It arises from the recent arrangements made with the International Monetary Fund and some rather ill informed, speculative stories that have been appearing in the press with regard to the temporary deposits of Canadian funds which were the result of central bank operations. I wonder if the minister is prepared to make a definitive statement in the house with regard to our position so as to put an end to these irresponsible speculations, both on the air and in the newspapers.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, since I was unable to make a statement in the house I did make a statement on February 26, both on television and at a press conference, to explain the purpose of the transfer of these assets. However, I will consider the request made by the hon. gentleman if it would help to remove any unnecessary concern.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

REQUEST OF AUDITOR GENERAL FOR ADDITIONAL PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the hon. Acting Prime Minister and ask him whether it is the government's intention to implement the requests of the Auditor General of Canada (Mr. Henderson) for the recruiting of qualified personnel for the auditing of government accounts.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I shall answer this question tomorrow or perhaps Monday.

[English]

INCOME TAX

INCLUSION OF GRATUITIES PAID TO RETIRED MINERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Last week I asked a question of the Minister of National Revenue concerning the justification the government had for inclusion for income tax purposes of gratuities received by retired Cape Breton miners. The minister said he would probably have an answer soon.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of National Revenue): I do not have a reply to give to the hon. member, but I will give a reply tomorrow. I had one ready, but I forgot to bring it.

AIR TRANSPORT

INQUIRY AS TO IMPLEMENTATION OF REGIONAL POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): My question is for the Minister of Transport. Now that the Canadian Transport Commission has recommended the discontinuance of subsidies for air transport on the prairies, will the minister advise the house when the regional air policy announced by the government in September, 1966, will be implemented so the prairies can be assured of continued air service?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): This matter is under most active consideration, Mr. Speaker. It is important, and we are searching for better methods of providing excellent service to my friend and our many other friends on the prairie provinces. We think this can be achieved.

Mr. Dinsdale: May I ask a supplementary question. Can the minister indicate the reason for the delay in implementing this policy which, as he has just indicated, is very important?

Mr. Hellyer: Because it is so important; we want to make the right decision to assure provision of the kind of service my friend would like to see.

Mr. L. R. Sherman (Winnipeg South): Does the minister not agree that time for consideration of this service on the prairies has already gone beyond the point where—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's question is argumentative.

RURAL DEVELOPMENT

MANITOBA—ARDA AGREEMENT RESPECTING INTERLAKE REGION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric Stefanson (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. Can the minister now answer the question I asked him on February 15 relating to the vocational training school program for the interlake area of Manitoba outlined in the ARDA-FRED agreement? Can he give assurance now that there will be no cut-back in this program?

[Translation]

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, negotiations are being carried on between the two departments.

[English]

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR FIXED DATES FOR FINAL PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Enns (Portage-Neepawa): My question is for the Minister of Trade and Commerce and relates to the wheat board. In view of the increasing expectation that farmers will operate on a businesslike basis, and in view of the fact that payment dates vary from year to year, will the minister consider recommending to the wheat board that fixed dates be set upon which the final payments may be made year after year?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I will be glad to communicate with the wheat board. This suggestion would be very difficult to implement though because the final date depends on the size of the crop and the ability of the board to sell it. We are trying to expedite the payments; we are doing everything possible to get cheques out as quickly as the wheat board can.

Mr. R. D. McLelland (Rosetown-Biggar): May I ask a supplementary question. Is the Canadian Wheat Board closing its books today in so far as the 1966-67 wheat pool is concerned, as previously announced, or is the board asking for additional time as a result of the government's action on Monday?

Mr. Winters: No, there has been no request for additional time.

Mr. McLelland: Is the board closing its books today?

Mr. Winters: As far as I recall. I have forgotten the specific dates I gave to the house about a week ago, but they are the same dates.

AGRICULTURE

PROPOSED REDUCTION OF SUBSIDIES FOR HOGS, LAMBS AND CHEESE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): My question is for the Minister of Agriculture. I wonder if, following the representations made by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the minister has decided to reverse the decision to reduce the quality subsidies on hogs, lambs and cheese?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the very carefully prepared and well presented brief by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture is being considered by the government, but no changes are contemplated at the present time.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

ELIGIBILITY OF COMMON LAW WIVES AND ILLEGITIMATE CHILDREN

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare, of which I have given him notice. In a recent announcement the president of the Quebec pension board lists as eligible beneficiaries, under certain conditions, common law wives and illegitimate children. Are common law wives and illegitimate children eligible for widow's and orphans' pensions under the Canada Pension Plan?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hesitate to suggest that this question might be placed on the order paper. Perhaps we might allow this question and then go on to orders of the day.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the benefits under the Quebec pension plan and the Canada Pension Plan are identical, so that what applies in one case applies in the other. Under certain conditions, which are rather complicated, common law widows are eligible for benefits under the Canada Pension Plan. I shall give the hon. lady details of the circumstances later. In the case of illegitimate children, neither the Canada Pension Plan nor the Quebec pension plan makes such a distinction. The only requirement is that the child be the child of the contributor. The question of whether the child was born in or out of wedlock is not relevant.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I rise to ask a supplementary question which relates to the answer given by the Minister of National Health and Welfare with respect to the Canada Pension Plan, in which he spoke of equity. I now ask the minister, where is the equity when gratuities given to retired Cape Breton miners are not treated in the same manner as gratuities given to retired executives of large companies?

Mr. MacEachen: The question is not one relating to the Canada Pension Plan.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I have related the question to the Canada Pension Plan. The minister's original statement was that since these were gratuities they could not be established as pensions and should be included for income tax purposes. The Minister of National Revenue fails to give me an answer and the Minister of National Health and Welfare says it is impossible, but the government insists on collecting this tax.

EXPROPRIATION ACT

DISCUSSIONS WITH FEDERATION OF AGRICULTURE RESPECTING AMENDMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Roxburgh: I should like to ask a question. Your Honour has not looked this way.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is not the only one who has not had an opportunity to ask a question. I know the hon. member wanted to ask a question, but other members who were also looking for that opportunity did not have it. We have already gone beyond the time allotted to the question period by quite a few minutes and I suggest to hon. members that we ought to get on with the business of the house.

Mr. Roxburgh: I rise on a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I happen to be the only member on this side of the house seeking to ask a question today. Surely it is fair that we have at least one question from this side of the house.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Norfolk.

Mr. Jack Roxburgh (Norfolk): I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Justice, and ask whether he has had time to give consideration to the question I asked on February 19 about the Expropriation Act. The question was taken as notice by the Solicitor General.

Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the question of the revision of the Expropriation Act is under study in my department, but as yet I cannot report a date upon which it will be submitted to the cabinet.

TRANSPORTATION

REQUEST THAT PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE COMPLETE MARITIME PROVINCE HEARINGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): May I just ask a question of the Minister of Transport. Has the minister received an interim report of the short but heroic trip of the transport committee to the maritimes? In view of the tremendous impression we made in those few hours, will he make sure the committee makes an early return to the maritimes?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I understand, Mr. Speaker, that an impression was made both ways. The visit was short but hospitable, and it is to be hoped it will be resumed at a later date so the committee can determine the information we had hoped it would determine in advance of new legislation to assist in solving the transportation problems of the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Forrestall: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to hon. members that we have gone quite beyond the question period. I have tried to be as lenient as possible, but the questions must come to an end at some time. I also suggest that this should not be treated as a precedent.

The house resumed, from Wednesday, February 28, consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen (for Mr. Nicholson) for the second reading of Bill No. C-197, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, when the regulations under the act were amended by order in council in 1957 to bring fishermen within the purview of the Unemployment Insurance Act and provide them with coverage, the then minister of labour, Milton Gregg, admitted that this action was taken in order to establish a sort of welfare scheme for fishermen to meet economic difficulties at that time prevailing in the Atlantic provinces. In fact, this coverage is still looked upon by many as a sort of welfare scheme.

The minister of fisheries of that day, Jimmy Sinclair, when this matter was dealt with in 1957, also stated on a number of occasions that this step brought about a regulatory monstrosity, that anybody who looked at the regulations would realize that the act and its concept had been distorted to provide coverage for fishermen. The difficulty that arose was in trying to assist people who found it difficult to obtain regular employment for a reasonable period of time, and grafting that concept on to another concept. As a consequence the regulations relating to fishermen are most inequitable in their application.

Primarily the regulations provide that a fisherman becomes entitled to seasonal benefits and is required to contribute to the fund for 15 weeks to become eligible. However, I am sure that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson), coming as he does from British Columbia, knows quite well that some of the "high line" fishermen, as we call them, do make a fairly good income from fishing, at least by fishermen's standards. In some cases, to pick a figure out of the air, they make $9,000 or $10,000. Yet even with such incomes they are eligible to receive unemployment insurance benefits after they have made their 15 weekly contributions.

These "high line" fishermen look upon these unemployment benefits as nothing more than beer money, and they are commonly referred to as such among fishermen. On the other hand, the man who is a gill net fisherman sometimes finds his opportunities to fish restricted by Department of Fisheries closures, and thus he may be denied the opportunity of earning a living for some weeks during the fishing season. Consequently his income during the season may amount to a paltry couple of thousand dollars, and at the end of the fishing season he finds himself in debt to the fishing company. Thus the fisherman who most needs assistance is discriminated against because he is unable to put in his 15 weeks to qualify for unemployment insurance benefits. In many cases this is because the colleague of the Minister of Labour, the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud), has denied this fisherman the opportunity to fish as a result of the imposition of closures for conservation purposes.

I am not questioning the value of closures. I believe we must concern ourselves about conservation. However, it is an anomaly when regulations permit someone with a fairly substantial income to draw unemployment insurance benefits which are looked upon as pin money but at the same time deny similar payments to fishermen who really need them. I say this principle is wrong and has been so ever since 1957. Everyone in the fishing industry knows it is wrong and I am sure the minister knows it is wrong. Yet the regulation in question is still in existence. It should have been changed years ago and it should be changed now.

It seems passing strange, Mr. Speaker, in view of the extensive study that was obviously made of unemployment insurance on behalf of the government by the Gill committee more than five years ago, that such an anomaly has not been removed from the legislation. The regulations have to take into account the peculiarities of the fishing industry. For example, the employer-employee relationship is different from that in most other industries; it is not so direct or well connected. That they do so is reflected by the fact that they are extremely involved and intricate. Therefore, because of these peculiarities and the different concept involved it seems to me that the regulations should be altered once more so as to gear them to the need of fishermen for unemployment insurance benefits, which is directly related to the amount of income at their disposal. If their income is obviously low, they need assistance; if it is high they do not. I think that this misuse of the concept that people in difficult circumstances require assistance should be removed.

I should now like to pass on to another section of the act. Many times in this house questions have been asked about section 54 and the deprivation of benefits as a result of a strict interpretation of whether or not employment is available for certain people. I shall read briefly from the act in order that the section to which I refer will appear in the context of my comments. Section 54(2) reads as follows:

An insured person is disqualified from receiving benefit in respect of every day for which he fails to prove that he was

(a) capable of and available for work, and

(b) unable to obtain suitable employment.

The words "available for work" need to be dealt with. The minister knows this. The matter has been raised by many members of the house on a number of occasions. I think I am right in saying that the minister's predecessor, now the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen), agreed in essence with the complaints and strictures concerning the part I read. He intended to do something about it but the language is still there. Difficulties have continued for years, and I submit this is all wrong.

I know of instances where insurance officers by means of leading questions to applicants for unemployment insurance benefits have disqualified those applicants. In Terrace, British Columbia, a woman who had worked in a hospital went before an insurance officer who asked her questions along these lines. "Would you be available to work, in your occupation, in a hospital?" The woman said, "Yes". The officer asked her, again by way of a leading question: "I assume you would prefer to work in Terrace or in this area?" Again the woman said, "Yes". Naturally her answers to both questions would be yes. She works in hospitals and she would prefer to work where she lives because that is where her family lives. On the basis of those answers to leading questions the officer disqualified her from benefits. He said that she had confined herself, that she would want to work in a hospital in or near Terrace.

Mr. Nicholson: Would the hon. member permit a question? Does the hon. member know whether these facts to which he has just referred were drawn to the attention of the chief commissioner or the minister at the time? If not, I will be glad to have them looked into.

Mr. Howard: With regard to this specific case, yes. I had correspondence with Mr. Fortier, who at that time I believe was the chief commissioner, and with the minister's predecessor. The only answer I got was that they could do nothing about it since the woman had confined herself in her availability for work. In other words, she had restricted herself. I must add that she had done so almost at the insistence of the insurance officer. I was told that there were numerous umpire's decisions to support that position.

Mr. Knowles: That sort of thing has happened to me dozens of times.

Mr. Howard: I had much correspondence but no satisfaction. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), in an aside which the minister may not have heard, said that this has happened to him dozens of times. I am talking of circumstances where a person is denied his right to receive unemployment insurance benefits because of the manner of questioning by officials and the answers he gives. I could cite other cases. I know of one where a family moved to another area. The mother of the family had worked in an office in a secretarial capacity. In the new area she applied for unemployment insurance benefits and for a job, because these two matters are connected, and was denied benefits because there were no jobs available in her occupation of secretary. All that that woman had to do—and the minister knows this and I advise people to do this—was to say: Yes, within the meaning of section 54(2)(a) of the act I am available for work anywhere at any income.

It is unfair and regrettable that insurance officers and those who administer the act place applicants, by design or otherwise, in a position where they are denied the benefits to which they are entitled. We have raised this matter a number of times and we are raising it again. It has been spoken of by members of all parties in the house, and hon. members received assurances from the minister's predecessor that something would be done about it.

When the minister was introducing a bill to alter the act I think he could also have covered this aspect along with other aspects that have been complained of. There has been a failure by government to take action, not by the present minister alone but by the ministers of labour generally who have known about this situation and other anomalies in the act and have allowed them to go on uncorrected. No reasonable solution has been suggested to parliament as to what ought to be done. The closest we came to a solution was when the Minister of National Health and Welfare said the other day when moving second reading: "Well, we are going to change the act generally but at some time in the future; we are studying it carefully." This is not good enough. It may be acceptable to those members of cabinet who like to dally and procrastinate on serious problems but the answer is not good enough for the people of this nation who are denied their fair rights under this act.

We live in a computer age and we all have a social insurance number. My friend from Winnipeg North Centre calls it the "sin" number. Somewhere in the government's files we are all listed numerically. Anybody who has such a number can quickly be pinpointed by government officials. I am sure it would be cheaper and more efficient to use computers in such a way that a person's unemployment insurance contributions could be determined instantly. A computer could determine just how much has been paid in and whether a person has made sufficient contributions to be eligible for benefits.

The people of northern British Columbia, particularly in the logging industry, must use the mail service. They do not live near an unemployment insurance office and they must do business by mail. I know of cases in which there has been extended correspondence between claimants and unemployment insurance offices. The gist of the correspondence from the unemployment insurance office is: We are sorry but we did not know you worked for this employer, we have not got your book back, where are your stamps? The individual has not got his book; his employer has it. Or it is in somebody's office or it has been sent from Prince Rupert to Vancouver to allow somebody else to look at it. And in this whole mess of administrative bureaucracy the individual claimant is unable to receive what he justifiably considers his rightful benefit under the act. He is denied that benefit week after week after week because somebody, somewhere, has goofed.

The minister knows this to be the case. Anyone who has had any relationship with the unemployment insurance structure, particularly through the mail, knows that something is wrong. The operation has been in existence for some 25 years now but it is still in an accounting mess. Surely some mechanism could be developed by means of which officials could make use of a computer somewhere and get information as to the amount of the contribution an individual has made without the necessity of resorting to lengthy correspondence and telephone calls to employers scattered across the country, as well as to various sections of the insurance set-up, in an attempt to find out why an individual is being denied what is rightfully his, namely, the opportunity to collect unemployment insurance benefits at the time he needs them, that is, when he is out of work. Surely it is not right that a month or two months should go by before somebody gets the record straightened out and authority is obtained for payments to be made.

Let me say in closing that the bill before the house is certainly acceptable. I am sure no one will object to its substance. But it leaves a great deal to be desired because it is just piddling around the edges of a system which is not applicable to present day requirements. It is most regrettable that after all the studies which have been made throughout the years, after all the application of the abilities of the minister and his predecessor with respect to unemployment insurance, the amendments should do nothing to touch the basic problems which face us.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind the minister that I have had a great deal of correspondence with him on the question of the closing of unemployment insurance offices across Canada and about the wisdom of the government in following this course. I have also talked to the minister about it. He was cautious. He was stubborn—maybe I should say he was firm. In my own area he closed an office in Orillia which served 40,000 people and one at Midland which served about the same number.

Mr. Nicholson: Would the hon. member permit a question? Did I not point out to him at the time that it was not the minister who closed these offices? Was it not a commission responsible to parliament that closed the offices? Is not the minister only the agent or instrument through whom they respond in this house? The offices were closed by the commission.

Mr. Rynard: I accept that explanation but I tell the minister that he is the one who is responsible. If he is not head of that commission the people have no representative.

Mr. Nicholson: Then you had better press for a change in the act.

Mr. Rynard: We had better change it right here, because if parliament does not control these things the people have no effective representation.

Orillia is a town with a population close to 20,000 and the population of Midland is around 15,000. The minister says that centralization is necessary. I talked to him about this. He and I are on friendly terms and we discussed the matter. When I was through I still thought he was stubborn. Perhaps he would like me to use a more polite word and say he was firm. He said that centralization was necessary in the interests of economy and efficiency, that the computer age was here. When we look at the record of this government in the field of expenditure, most of us would doubt the wisdom and economy of what has been done. It is strange to note that out of 41 offices closed, two were in the Simcoe area.

Mr. Nicholson: Again I do not like to interrupt but, as a matter of privilege, I am sure the hon. member would not want to go on record as saying that only 41 offices were closed. Over a hundred, perhaps several hundred, have been closed.

Mr. Rynard: Yes, I will correct that statement. I was reading the last figure I had here. I have a list. Eighteen offices were closed across Canada in 1965, 47 were closed in 1966 and 41 more in 1967, making a total of more than 100 offices. I was referring to the 1967 figure. Will more bureaucratic control produce the advantages which are claimed? All that has happened so far is an increase in the cost to the taxpayers. As I say, it is strange that out of the 41 offices closed last year two were in the Simcoe area. I do not think there was anything political about the decision. One of the offices was in Orillia where the rate of unemployment is higher than average. I pointed this out to the minister and so did the town council of Orillia in a brief which they presented. The council said a great many people would be inconvenienced. Is it really the function of governments to inconvenience the people? People are being put to the trouble of driving up to 42 miles one way in that riding at considerable expense to themselves. If anyone says this is not the case, I have example after example showing that it has happened. I shall not take up the time of the house by citing them but I will give them privately to the hon. gentleman if he wishes.

The submission says that many of the residents require personal assistance in making their applications because of language difficulty. This is true and I can substantiate it from letters I have received. It says that many of the residents require personal assistance because of their age or lack of education. Some are without transportation. Every one of these statements is correct. If the minister wants proof I will be glad to furnish it. People in the areas affected have come to the conclusion that the authorities do not believe in bringing the service to them but rather in taking it away. After the events of the past week when we witnessed the defiance of parliament on blue Monday, we can understand that the government has lost touch with the people. It is a regrettable attitude. The hon. member who represents the Liberal party in York-Humber (Mr. Cowan) indicated that the cabinet and the Prime Minister did not pay much attention even to their own supporters. Well, the time will come when the electors will settle these matters.

Now I should like to ask the minister whether any senior members of the commission's staff, say those with five years service or more, have quit because of the reorganization in the area I have mentioned. How many people engaged in the unemployment insurance service were forced to move? How many could not find suitable accommodation and were obliged to drive 50 miles to work? How much money was saved by the new arrangements? I point out that on the other side of the coin there is the inconvenience caused to applicants and the money and time spent in travel. All the people in my riding are in favour of reducing expenses but when we have services taken away from us, when we have taxes going up and the cost of living going up, we can only wonder about the wisdom of the minister in doing this.

Before this debate closes I would like the minister to tell us how long it will be before the central office he set up to replace the other two offices in the area will be closed? When it does close, will the people have to go to Toronto? If this is the march of time then let the minister set up a staff in Toronto and centralize the service but at least leave one person in each of the offices at Orillia and Midland and computerize the operation through the central office.

How logical and how practical is the minister's thinking? If we were to carry this approach through to a definite conclusion we could apply it to cars, boots, machinery equipment and all the other things that we use and buy. Supplies of these articles for my area could be centralized in the city of Toronto and distributed from there. No doubt the price would be cheaper but the over-all cost would be great. You would no longer have small cities and towns with their professional and business people. The effect would be to destroy them.

I now wish to deal with a question that strikes home to a good many people. I speak of the problems of men 65 years of age and over when they seek unemployment insurance benefits. I have in mind one man who is about 66 years old. He had always contributed to the unemployment insurance fund and never drew benefit from it. Now he has been laid off work because he is over 65 years of age and even though he is physically and mentally fit he cannot get another job. He has been told that there is no job available for him. He is not wanted in the work force any more.

Then there is the other side of the picture. I am thinking of a man aged 65 years old who suffers a coronary attack and after a time tries to go back to work but cannot work. When his unemployment insurance runs out he has to go on welfare if he has no other source of funds. This is one of the saddest facts of life. Many of our citizens are capable of working at 65 or 75. What kind of society have we got when we say that a man's age is the determining factor in employment? Do we not need the brain he has developed over the years? I can cite no better example than that wonderful man in the other chamber who has celebrated his ninetieth birthday, a man who could come into this house and take his place in it any day.

I say, let us get off our high horse. Nobody should be finished and written off at the age of 65 if he is mentally and physically fit. Let us look after properly the fellows under 65 years of age who are not able to work. When unemployment insurance was introduced in 1941, in principle it was for the benefit of those who ran the risk of seasonal unemployment. Today the minister is changing the rules. It looks to me as if this legislation is now going to cover everybody. We are changing the principle. In other words, the minister is bringing in modified welfare.

I now wish to speak about the farming situation. I am not going to take up the time of the house by speaking at length on it. Possibly on clause by clause examination of the bill I will have more to say about it. A great many farmers are disturbed about unemployment insurance. On dairy farms and beef farms work goes on the year round. The people who work on those farms object to paying unemployment insurance contributions and the farmers or operators of the farms object to paying them. They are altogether different from the cash crop farmer. Yet no distinction is made.

When did you ever hear of a man being unemployed on a dairy farm? If a dairy farm employee quits it is almost impossible to find somebody to take his place. Why should this legislation be compulsorily applied to these people? This is a complete departure from the insurance principle of 1941. I shall have more to say about this matter when the bill is being discussed in committee. If the minister would like to talk to me in the meantime about the possibility of putting somebody back in the office at Orillia and in the office at Midland I would be glad to talk to him and show him some of the letters I have received.

Mr. Norman Fawcett (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to take up too much of the time of the house or to hold up this amending bill because we in this party realize the value of it. As my colleague the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) has said, we accept this legislation because at this time with the increase in the cost of living we certainly feel there should be an increase in unemployment insurance benefits. However, also like my colleague I believe the time is long overdue for major amendments to the act and to the administration of certain parts of it.

I commend the minister for extending eligibility for unemployment insurance benefits to those whose total yearly earnings do not exceed $7,800. When I was first elected to office the majority of the complaints I received about unemployment insurance came from people who had been elevated to what could be called semi-supervisory positions and as a result unemployment insurance premiums were not deducted from their wages because then they were salaried people whose incomes were about the $5,460 mark. These men still wished to be covered by unemployment insurance because in a sense their new positions were only temporary. Any lay-off would mean that they would be sent back to their former positions, and if they lost their employment altogether they would lose a considerable portion of their benefits. I certainly commend the minister for increasing eligibility to the $7,800 mark because I think this is a very good move.

My colleague the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) raised a point with which I agree concerning the separation of the national employment service from the administration of the Unemployment Insurance Act. Recently in respect of an appeal I asked whether there was any indication that the applicant had refused to take any kind of job which had been offered to him in the field with which he was familiar. I was informed that the officials were not concerned about this but were only involved with the administration of the Unemployment Insurance Act. I believe there should be a closer tie-in between the employment service and the administration of the Unemployment Insurance Act.

I would be the first to agree that there are abuses of the unemployment insurance fund. We all know this. In any program of this nature there are bound to be abuses. However, because of these abuses I feel that many people who are legitimately entitled to receive benefits from the unemployment insurance fund find it difficult to qualify for benefits. My colleague the hon. member for Skeena referred to section 54 with regard to the matter of disqualification. He cited some of the experiences he has had in this connection.

I should like to direct the minister's attention to one case in which I was involved recently. I should not like to suggest that this person was deliberately led into the position of being disqualified but I believe that certain questions directed to her may have been responsible for her disqualification. Perhaps I might give an outline of the case. It had to do with a lady who had been employed in a fairly heavily populated area where it was not too difficult to obtain employment. She had been working for a considerable period of time and had been contributing to the unemployment insurance fund. When her employment ceased she was unable to obtain any other employment in that area. I presume the main reason was that it was the fall of the year when there was not too much work available in the line she was following.

When this lady went to register for unemployment insurance she was notified that she was disqualified because she had restricted herself so far as employment was concerned. The only way in which she had restricted herself was that she had stated it was impossible for her to get to Sudbury some 20 miles distant for seven o'clock in the morning because there was no bus service which would get her there for that hour. I believe this is a ridiculous situation. She lived in an area where work had previously been provided for her. Why should she be disqualified simply because there did not happen to be a suitable transportation service which would get her to Sudbury for seven o'clock in the morning?

I believe there is a need for better public relations between those who administer the Unemployment Insurance Act and the people who contribute to the unemployment insurance fund. There seems to be a belief on the part of some of the administrators that they are doling out some kind of charitable fund rather than administering an insurance fund into which these people have been paying. I do not suggest that all the administrators are guilty of this but I am quite sure some of them do take that attitude. As a result some people actually do not apply for unemployment insurance when they are legitimately entitled to it because they feel they may be degrading themselves by asking for charity rather than for something which under the law is rightfully theirs.

I believe that more information in respect of unemployment insurance should be available to the people. I fully realize that some information is available. It is true that many people do not try to acquaint themselves with their rights under the act. By the same token, however, too many administrators do not seem to be concerned about this and do not do anything in an effort to enlighten these people. As a result they are completely lost. I believe that many of these administrators should realize that this is an insurance fund into which people pay and therefore it should not be treated as if it were some sort of a charitable fund.

I believe it was my colleague the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) who referred to people with partial physical disabilities and those who are receiving pensions and cannot receive unemployment insurance benefits. I have not had too much difficulty in respect of pensioners provided they stated they were available for employment any place and were in good physical condition. I do not have any argument in that regard but I do have an argument in respect of people who are partially physically disabled.

There are many people who are perhaps unable to dig ditches or do other types of heavy work but are able to engage in other types of employment. There are people over age 65 who, because of the type of employment they had previously, receive very little, if any, pension. I believe a second look should be taken at the situation in which they find themselves. If they are available for employment as watchmen, security guards, gatemen or something of that nature, even if such employment is not available they should be entitled to unemployment insurance benefits because many of them have paid into the fund ever since it came into existence.

When I rose to speak I indicated that I did not intend to say very much. I thought that perhaps some of the problems in which I have been involved were unique but after listening to what has been said I find that they are fairly general in nature. I certainly commend the minister for bringing in this amendment to the act which provides for increased benefits. I should also like to say to him, however, that like my colleague the hon. member for Skeena I believe it is high time the whole act was revamped because so far as I am concerned there are altogether too many holes in it.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles-Eugène Dionne (Kamouraska): Mr. Speaker, I would be remiss in failing to take part in this debate, because having been unemployed myself more than once, I am quite familiar with the administration of the Unemployment Insurance Act and with the problems which arise at times. I would also be remiss in not calling the attention of the house to certain facts which, in my opinion, should be corrected.

First of all, I must say I am in favour of this bill designed to readjust benefit rates. But it must nevertheless be admitted that this piece of legislation contains certain restrictions, as evidenced by three things. It involves something "contradictory" "compulsory" and "contributory."

What I find strange and wish to stress at once is the contradiction apparent in the bill. An increasing number of people are in favour of full employment and believe this possible. They try therefore to improve the Unemployment Insurance Act. I must point out right away this obvious contradiction. They should be honest enough to admit that full employment is practically impossible in a period of rapid development, when working methods are changed by automation, with the result that a certain percentage of workers are always out of work. Railway workers know something about it, and it is unfortunate that the expected and vaguely promised adjustment of benefits has been delayed so long.

You will agree that I could also mention many other classes of workers.

However, let us rather try to be logical in the face of the existing situation, and let us consider how the workers suffering from unemployment could be helped.

Since the passing of the Unemployment Insurance Act, more than twenty-five years ago, a number of changes have been made. In the majority of cases, it was mostly a matter of trying to secure the protection of the fund and providing employment for a growing number of government employees.

In 1942, the government's contributions and the dues paid by employers and employees were about $44 million and administration costs a little over $2 million, while unemployed workers received $27,752,000 in benefits.

And in 1962, twenty years later, the amount of contributions by government, employers and employees was a little over $325 million, the benefits paid were over $400 million with $45 million in administration costs. This is now big business, and a lot of money changes hands.

The proposed amendments to Bill No. C-197 are socialistic in spirit: to extend coverage of the Unemployment Insurance Act to all Canadians with a yearly income of up to $7,800. The government wants to include as many people as possible in the compulsory contribution system.

There is nothing in Bill No. C-197 providing for changes to be made in the established methods of making more flexible the eligibility requirements of an unemployed worker. The protection of the fund is first provided for.

The rate of benefits shall increase in proportion to the gains made by the worker. Salaries, in many regions called economically underprivileged areas, are generally low. The increase in benefits will not therefore be proportional to the increase in the cost of living.

I am not against an adjustment in the rates of dues, benefits and non deducted gains. However, one must not forget that the principal aim of an unemployment insurance act is to help the unemployed. Noting that those who prepared Bill No. C-197 seem to have taken great pains to protect the fund rather than the unemployed, I conclude that this protective spirit will reveal itself especially through the inspectors of the commission who are often inclined to take a chance on spending $100 in an attempt to find that a poverty stricken unemployed has received $5 or $10 too much in benefits.

To my mind, the most important thing the government should do, first of all, instead of paralysing construction through higher interest rates and taxes on building materials, is to undertake vast construction programs and build hospitals, old peoples' homes, rehabilitation centres for the handicapped of all ages and research centres.

The implementation of such programs would contribute to reducing unemployment and would be more in order than the introduction of medicare which will not give the people of this country one single additional doctor or hospital bed. How many other useful projects could be undertaken to reduce considerably the effects of that social evil which is called unemployment. Whether it be occasional, fractional, seasonal or chronic—those are the new words we have found since the act was passed in 1946—an unemployment period is always demoralizing for its victims.

That is why we should have an act, clearly drafted, with rules to enable understanding civil servants—I know there are some, I know many of them—to really help the unemployed through a humane application of a so-called social law.

[Mr. Dionne.]

High officials, civil servants, at middle or lower echelons, would do well to remember that they are the servants of the people and not their tyrants, that the people are individuals and not robots; in short, that the people pay them and that they expect from them services and not trouble.

A better act might keep them from evading the law of gravity, and let them keep both feet on the ground as well as keep them from getting swelled heads, which at times leads some of them to think too highly of themselves, with the result that the unemployed experience serious difficulties.

Not too long ago, we intervened through various means, including representations from local organizations, with a view to avoiding the concentration of unemployment offices in large centres. One of my colleagues pointed this out a while ago and I know it leads to inconvenience.

Mr. Speaker, this plan goes completely against the economic decentralization talked about when the designated area scheme was set up. While the government asks the industry to settle there, these same people would take the employees away from these areas.

The bill proposes to extend the act to cover agricultural workers. I fully approve of this decision, but it will be necessary to inform the unemployed of the procedure to be followed. I think the employees in the local offices can best answer the many requests for information.

Certain senior officials often proclaim that a high percentage of unemployed workers are without work because they do not have a grade 5, 6 or 7 education. However, the procedure to be followed in implementing the plan is unrealistic because it requires unemployed workers to fill out complicated forms which some officials take pleasure in drawing up in ever increasing numbers. To give an example of the kind of form which an unemployed person has to fill out, in various circumstances, I will mention a few from an average list I have here. These forms are sent to the unemployed and are sometimes difficult to fill out. Here are a few:

Statement by the claimant;
Application for unemployment insurance benefits by mail;
Request for additional information;
Notice of incomplete request for benefits;
Report of claimant by mail;
Notice of incomplete report;
Application for employment by mail;

Request for extension of periods of eligibility;
Request for antedating a claim;
Amendment of social insurance registers;
Amendment to social insurance registers;
Questionnaire for farmers;
Request for insurance booklet;
Application for family support rates;
Family dependent certificate;
Notice to farmers.

Moreover, something else has been devised. It is a new card, about 3½ by 5½ inches. The other day, I found out for myself that there were 56 punched holes in those cards. Forms are made smaller; there are fewer written items perhaps but holes are punched in the forms. There are a series of holes and in many places, people find it difficult to write what they want.

If positions in the public service relating to unemployment insurance are added, as well as certain titles of officials, I submit that this is not likely to clarify things in this complex act. For instance, I have here the titles of officials in the board of referees. The "Supervisor of the decisions section of the claims operations division, Unemployment Insurance Commission," Assistant's assistant to the chief registrar, national registration branch, Department of Labour. It is easy to imagine that when a poor unemployed writes to this official, he needs a large enough envelope to write all that.

I remember something else—and this is a very important point that I had the opportunity of raising in this house and which I emphasize once again today—because I have before me an article written by myself in 1962 and which was published in the newspaper La Souche. It concerns a problem which is still with us, the possibility for Canadian citizens working in American territory to take advantage of a given social legislation. This question has been with us for a long time. I know that some officials of the Canadian government endeavoured to have contacts, or at least, we were assured more than once that contacts had been established. However, I am surprised that no solution can be found, and the conclusion I had come to in 1962, when I was at the head of local 2817, as chairman of that labour organization, and I wrote the following which is still true today and appropriate to the present circumstances. I quote:

Much satisfaction seems to be felt when neighbourliness is cited as an example; this is quite well, as long as the comprehensive outlook of the authorities does not make them forget the thousands of residents near the Canadian and American borders who cannot take advantage of a welfare legislation due to lack of understanding.

It must be noted that an agreement is in force since March 6 and 12, 1952, between Canada and all the southern neighbouring states, except Iowa, Maine, New Hampshire and Alabama. The failure of those states to be party to those agreements is especially disturbing, since a great number of Canadian workers, especially in Maine and New Hampshire are thus deprived of the substantial benefits of a welfare legislation, which should normally apply to all workers.

If the Canadian lumbermen have no further interest in seasonal jobs which they can obtain in the United States, they will remain in Canada and increase the number of those out of jobs.

Of course, a serious effort is necessary in this respect.

Now, I shall return for a while to the question of implementation methods. I have in hand a copy of a letter dating back to 1962 which will give you further information in this regard. At that time, I was greatly concerned about this—just as I am now—because we have thousands of working people who live in the parishes along the border of Maine and New Hampshire, and so I had written to a member of this house in this regard. I shall quote from his reply:

I believe the only development is the report which has been prepared following a survey conducted among Canadian employees and Canadian lumbermen employers by the Maine authorities. The main feature of the report is the disclosure that the insurance fund of Maine, which is now $26,698,000 will be totally used up within a few years, as benefits paid to Canadian lumbermen are estimated at $1,567,932.

Thus within 12 to 15 years, the unemployment insurance fund of Maine is expected to run dry. That is the problem. They are afraid to touch to the fund for fear it will run dry.

The fund presents a problem; it is always so when money and dollars are involved. The hon. member concluded:

I do not know to what conclusion we must come, and whether it will eventually be possible to reach an agreement, as happened with the other American states.

If the fund were not involved, I think this would work; even if this problem exists, it would probably be possible for the Unemployment Insurance Commission and the Department of Labour to try and find a formula which would enable the employee, at any time after he has completed his period of employment, to indicate how many weeks he has worked. He is ready to pay his contributions and it should be possible, I think, to come to an agreement which would spare him a series of inconveniences since, not being eligible for the benefits, he must count only on unemployment assistance or social assistance. Therefore, we should try to find a satisfactory formula and solve this problem.

Right this day, at noon, I had the opportunity to write a letter for one of my constituents who was complaining that he could not draw unemployment insurance benefits. He had been declared unavailable, because last fall, towards the end of November, he had suffered an accident. His doctor gave him a certificate stating that he is able to go back to work. Now, the unemployment insurance officer, who has not examined the worker—it is exactly what I am saying in this notice of appeal to the board of referees—decided that the worker is unavailable for work, unable to do the work that should be done at this time of the year. The strange thing about it all is that, at this period of the year, the officers know very well that this seasonal worker, a lumberman, has no work available because all operations in the bush are finished everywhere for the season. Here is proof that the officers are overzealous in trying to deprive a lumberman of unemployment insurance benefits by offering him a possible or probable job in the bush.

I remember that four or five years ago, payment of benefits had been suspended for close to 300 workers in the Kamouraska riding and a good many in Témiscouata, in fact up to Rimouski. It almost created a scandal. Why? Because a high official of the commission had come at one time to the Rivière-du-Loup office and had felt that there were too many unemployed in the district.

It is not the people's fault that they live in an economically underprivileged area. It is not necessary for an official to leave the Montreal office and try to penalize all those who are having unemployment trouble. Of course, that situation has been settled; but I have seen government employees working nights to find the names and addresses of unemployed workers and sending them employment offers. Then they had to work nights too in order to pay those people their benefits, for the official's decision had obviously fallen through. We met a high official of the Department of Labour, who was the chief commissioner of the Unemployment Insurance Commission. He understood the problem and the matter was settled advantageously. But why let these workers suffer a month because they have problems due to lack of income, because they were unemployed?

Mr. Speaker, I now conclude my remarks because I did not want to speak too long on the subject since I am anxious, like most hon. members, to see this bill passed. However, I cannot resume my seat without stressing a particular point which quite impressed me.

In passing, I wish to mention at once that even if I come from the Kamouraska area, this does not mean necessarily that the examples which I give bear the signature of the officials in the offices of my area. Not at all. There are officials in the Montreal offices and in many areas. Having been in contact with workers right across the province for ten years, from 1952 to 1962, I happen to receive correspondence from almost everywhere.

I shall not mention the place where this letter came from, but the fact remains that it was written by an official on a letterhead of the commission following a decision of the board of referees. The official in question had rendered a decision by which the unemployed who was awaiting benefits was disqualified. However, the unemployed, faced with his problems, appealed to the board of referees where his situation was discussed. In its conclusion, the board says this.

It is absolutely disgusting. One would never think that people could say such things, but to write them, on top of that!

During their discussions, the members of the board of referees recognize that the reason why this man stopped working may be a valid one from the human point of view, but not in the eyes of the law, since it is considered to be a personal reason. That is why they have no alternative but to uphold the decision of the unemployment insurance office and reject the appeal.

I would suggest to the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) that he should be careful in choosing officials who have to make decisions. As I said at the beginning of my remarks, there are very good, highly competent and understanding officials—I know some. On the other hand, I know others who are not qualified to do the work they do and who come to conclusions that are very unfavourable to an unemployed man who has to contend with poverty. Those are the ones that should be watched.

[English]

Mr. Melvin McQuaid (Kings): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by saying that I believe this amending legislation will undoubtedly please the majority of Canadian workers. So far as I know this is the first time in nine years that an amendment has been introduced to the Unemployment Insurance Act resulting in increased benefits to employees. This, of course, is only as it should be because of the increase in the cost of living during the last number of years.

However, having said that I feel that at this time I must voice some severe criticism with respect to the operations of some of our unemployment insurance offices. I am highly critical of any program designed to close regional offices throughout this country which up to this time have performed very valuable services for those people who have been obliged to apply for unemployment insurance benefits. I have had examples brought to my attention of people who were unemployed, in need of benefits, entitled to receive benefits and who applied on the sixteenth of December but had not received one cheque by the seventh of February. I suggest this is nothing short of criminal because these people needed the money.

Up until the time the change was introduced by the commission, people were getting their money on time. However, by reason of the fact that the commission decided to close regional offices these delays have been taking place. The minister has attempted, in reply to the hon. member for Simcoe East (Mr. Rynard), to avoid responsibility for the closing of these offices. To what point is our parliamentary system drifting, Mr. Speaker? Surely the minister cannot come in here and disclaim responsibility to parliament for the closing of these offices. He is the man who is in charge of the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, rising on a question of privilege, may I say that I am sure the hon. member would not want a statement of that kind to go unchallenged on the record. Has he read the act? The minister has no responsibility for the operations of the commission. I make that statement unequivocally. Parliament has allocated the responsibility to the commission. I am sure the hon. member would not want a statement such as he has made to go without correction, if such is not the case.

Mr. McQuaid: I believe it goes without saying that it is the minister who answers to parliament for the operation of the Unemployment Insurance Commission. I ask the minister through you, Mr. Speaker, why, when a complaint was filed with him with regard to the closing of one of these regional offices, did he answer that complaint not as Minister of Labour but simply as "John R. Nicholson"? The letter was written on the letterhead of the Unemployment Insurance Commission. He did not reply to this complaint as Minister of Labour; he replied to it on the letterhead of the Unemployment Insurance Commission and signed not as Minister of Labour but as John R. Nicholson.

I have here a letter written on May 31, 1967, by the minister to the president of the Summerside board of trade. The board complained, and I suggest rightly so, about the closing of the regional unemployment insurance office in Summerside. We now only have one regional office for the whole province of Prince Edward Island. Does the minister suggest that those who are required to draw unemployment insurance benefits can be effectively served by one office in a province? Does he realize that people who have to file unemployment insurance claims or have business to conduct with the Unemployment Insurance Commission, and who live in the western end of Prince Edward Island, have to travel 150 miles to get to the nearest regional office? Does this make for efficiency? How can the minister possibly justify the closing of that office?

This matter was raised with him by the board of trade and he answered, as I say, on the letterhead of the Unemployment Insurance Commission on May 31, 1967. The following is the explanation the minister gave, and I am quoting directly from the letter:

> The commission is in the process of consolidating and centralizing its operations and has already discontinued its activities in many areas and transferred its operations to other localities.

This is true, Mr. Speaker, but that is not an explanation for the closing of an office when the nearest office is then 150 miles away. The letter continues:

> The commission is no longer responsible for the administration of the National Employment Service and the need for local offices is considerably reduced as mail service can be used extensively to carry out its operations.

I suggest that mail service cannot be used effectively by all those people who want to communicate with the Unemployment Insurance Commission and I believe the commission recognized that fact when, in its 1966 reports, it had this to say:

> The commission continued arrangements whereby agents are appointed to complete all the necessary documents in connection with applications for unemployment insurance benefits.

The commission believes that agents should be appointed to assist the people in making application for unemployment insurance benefits. Are these people expected to travel 150 miles to get this help in making application? The report continues:

> In this way, applicants who cannot conveniently visit a commission office because of their location are able to make their application with a minimum of delay. This system substantially reduces the amount of correspondence with postal applicants.

According to this report the commission apparently wanted to reduce the amount of correspondence with postal applicants. However, the minister said on May 31, in reply to a complaint from the Summerside board of trade, that mail service could now be used extensively to carry out these operations. The letter continues:

> In implementing its program the commission has improved its method of operation and has developed simplified procedures. The necessity for personal contact and inquiries is thereby reduced and insured persons and employers are not adversely affected as a result of the commission's policy.

This is not in accordance with the facts, Mr. Speaker. People do require assistance in filling out these forms, and I suggest that it is the responsibility of the commission and of the government to provide it. Although this policy may save a little money, nevertheless the Unemployment Insurance Commission is an agency of government. Its function is not only to save money. One of its most important functions—and this applies to every agency of government—is to provide the people of this country with a service for which they are paying in the form of taxation. I suggest that requiring applicants to travel 150 miles in order to visit their nearest regional Unemployment Insurance Commission office is not providing service. The letter continues:

> The commission's objective has always been to provide a prompt and efficient service to those applying for benefit and it was with this aim, as well as with a view to economy, that certain changes were introduced—

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this is no excuse for not providing service. This is not improving efficiency; it is cutting down efficiency. It certainly does not give the people of Canada, the taxpayers of Canada, those services to which they are properly entitled under a properly administered unemployment insurance scheme.

The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) cited examples of interpretations of the section of the act that requires a person to prove his or her availability for work. He brought to the notice of the house instances of investigators employed by the Unemployment Insurance Commission actually putting words into the mouths of those who apply for unemployment insurance benefits, words that he felt and which I also feel they did not intend to use. I have also had examples of this practice that I should like to bring to the attention of the minister.

I have in my files a complaint from a woman who was interviewed by an investigator from the commission. Several months ago she had applied for unemployment insurance benefits and in her application had stated she was not available for work. That was correct; at that time she was not available for work. However, later she went to work and eventually was laid off as a result of a shortage of work. Once more she applied for unemployment benefits. The investigator came to her house but instead of sitting down and asking her to fill out the form he simply said to her: "I suppose there are no changes in the statement you made when you last applied for unemployment benefits?" Not fully realizing the significance of the question she replied that there were not. The investigator entered that answer on her form, packed his bag, left the house, and as a result she was advised a short time later that she was disqualified from receiving benefits because she was not available for work.

It is all very well to say that this woman had the right of appeal, but I suggest there are a lot of people in Canada today applying for unemployment insurance benefits who do not fully understand their rights in this connection. Not having anybody to advise them and being unable conveniently to travel 150 or 160 miles to the nearest regional office, they suffer the loss of their unemployment insurance benefits. I suggest that this is not as it should be.

Apparently the Unemployment Insurance Commission take great pride, and I think with some justification, in the fact that they are saving the taxpayer money as a result of the work of their investigators who travel all over the country. According to the 1966 report, in February, 1966 15 new enforcement officer positions were added to the enforcement establishment, making a total of 149. It may also be advisable at this time, instead of appointing new enforcement officers, for the commission to appoint people who can help honest citizens fill out their forms properly so that they do not disqualify themselves from receiving benefits.

These are some of the matters of which I am highly critical, Mr. Speaker. I think it is now time for the minister or for somebody else, if the minister is not responsible, to bring to the attention of the commission the complaints we have been making while these amendments to the act are being discussed. Certainly it is time that somebody took the matter in hand and did something to protect the interests of many people who unfortunately are not in a position to protect themselves.

Although I am in full sympathy with the amendments to the act, there are aspects involving the present administration of unemployment insurance that very definitely require improving. I point out to the minister, and I hope he brings this to the attention of the commission, that some of the employees of the regional offices of the Unemployment Insurance Commission are not courteous to the public. I have known cases where people went to these offices and were simply given the runaround. They were unable to get a satisfactory answer to their complaints and they left the offices no wiser than when they went. This should not be allowed to happen. These employees are servants of the public. Many of them do their very best but there are some who do not, and I am highly critical of them. These are some of the matters to which I suggest the minister should give some attention and do his utmost to try to correct.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few brief comments on these amendments. I am sure there are a good many working people throughout Canada who are very pleased that we are now discussing this important legislation.

We endorse the principle of this bill and are very pleased to see these amendments. However, I do want to bring to the attention of the minister that the divorcement of manpower and Unemployment Insurance Commission offices has not been very well received in my constituency, and I promised to bring this fact to the attention of the minister at the first opportunity. As I think he is aware, various organizations representing several sections of the community have protested the separation of these two departments. I never quite understood the reason for it because the work of these departments is so interrelated and deals with problems that are common to both departments.

The present situation causes a great deal of inconvenience. In my constituency some communities are 150 miles or more from the nearest unemployment insurance office. I am not going to give examples. I thought the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) and the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) dealt very well with that aspect so there is no need for me to repeat what they said in this connection. However, there are people in my constituency living up to 175 miles away from the nearest unemployment insurance office or manpower office and very often they require advice. For example, in some cases they are not quite certain how to fill out application forms, what the expression "availability for employment" means, and things of that nature. I think it is particularly necessary that these people have an opportunity to complete their applications correctly or to file their appeals properly. Under present conditions it is physically impossible for them to do so.

In the meantime, would it not be possible for the Unemployment Insurance Commission to provide officers who could visit some of these communities once a week and assist these people. For example, an officer could visit Nakusp which is approximately 130 miles away from the unemployment insurance office in Castlegar. An officer might also go to Kaslo which is about the same distance away, and periodically one might go to the North Lardeau country where many are employed but where the population is less dense. These officers could advise people how to complete application forms and enter appeals. I should like the minister to reply to this suggestion when he speaks at the conclusion of the debate on second reading.

I think there is a great opportunity for an improvement in public relations on the part of the commission. I suggest it would be a good idea for some of its officials to address trade unions periodically on the subject of applying for unemployment insurance and the necessary procedures and forms. They could inform the unions about the law generally and about applications in detail. They could do the same with chambers of commerce, which largely represent employers' organizations, so that chambers of commerce would be well informed. They could also speak to various women's organizations, because women are just as involved as their husbands when it comes to the proper operation of this act.

That is all I wish to say at this time. I believe that following my suggestions would remedy many complaints in the meantime.

Mr. R. J. Orange (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I want to bring a couple of matters to the minister's attention. I acknowledge how farsighted the minister has been in bringing these amendments forward. I agree with the principle of increasing payments and coverage.

Until now it has been possible for Indian and Eskimo employees in our labour force not to be eligible for unemployment insurance benefits. Two matters relating to the administration of the Unemployment Insurance Act as it affects northern Canada should be brought before the minister. One of them has to do with the regulations. In so many words they say that any person employed north of the sixtieth parallel of latitude whose livelihood is not ordinarily derived from insurable employment shall not necessarily be eligible for unemployment insurance benefits. This provision was first brought in around 1959, the intention being to encourage private concerns to employ Indians and Eskimos. But the provision has fulfilled its purpose and its effect now is to bring about, if I may term it this way, discrimination in reverse.

Construction companies which move to northern Canada for summer operations bring part of their labour force with them from the cities in the south but they will also hire some semi-skilled people locally. Most of these are hunters or trappers who because of their construction skills are hired by the construction companies. Sometimes they have jobs for six, eight, ten or 12 months at any one time. The point is that though they may be eligible for benefits their employers are taking advantage of that part of the regulations to which I referred. I ask the minister to take a hard look at those regulations to see if their purpose has not been fulfilled. I think we should give our Indian and Eskimo residents full benefits under this act just as if they lived south of the sixtieth parallel.

Another point deserves the minister's attention. Some hon. members speak of unemployment insurance offices being 150 miles from certain towns. The unemployment insurance office closest to the sixtieth parallel is at Edmonton, about 450 miles away. If you go as far north as Inuvik you are talking about 1,300 or 1,400 miles. There may be an argument that not enough people live there to justify an office but I believe other factors ought to be considered. If we are to encourage private development in northern Canada the services of government must be available to private entrepreneurs as they would be in southern Canada. Inuvik is a long way from Edmonton. Granted, the mail service is reasonable but there is the question of dialogue to consider. It would be better for our people if an officer of the commission could be stationed in the capital of the Northwest Territories, Yellowknife. He would be in a good position to deal with the particular and peculiar problems which arise when private entrepreneurs operate in the north.

Another reason for having an officer there is that situations similar to the one in 1964 might arise again. One of our major mines in Yellowknife had a fire in the head frame which resulted in the mine and the mill having to be closed down for three or four months. I tried to get the Unemployment Insurance Commission to send an officer to Yellowknife to service applications as soon as possible since the situation affected not only individual workers but the entire community. The post office had application forms but naturally they disappeared quickly. With the help of the mine management and others in the community applications were forwarded to Edmonton in a hurry. Had it not been for the initiative of the local people, benefits might have been delayed more than they were.

The commission provides reasonable service in the northern part of Canada but it would help us to have an unemployment insurance office established there. People in isolated communities understand that there are problems but at least they would get to know what their benefits are and for how long they are entitled to them. I am thinking particularly of a man who worked for the federal government for a number of years as a school janitor. For some reason he left his job; he may have quit or had to leave. I do not know. But no one got around to telling him that because he had paid into the unemployment insurance fund for three or four years, he was entitled to benefits. That is the point I am trying to drive home.

In conclusion, I hope the minister will examine the problem of the exemption in respect of Indians and Eskimos living north of the sixtieth parallel. It brings about a form of discrimination which I am sure the government never intended. An examination should be made of the act to determine how it can be made of maximum benefit to those living north of the sixtieth parallel, both by changing this regulation and by opening an office in the Northwest Territories.

Mr. Eric Stefanson (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I intend to be brief. I believe there is need for the amendment before us having regard to the inflationary situation and the high cost of living at the present time.

The hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Horner) said yesterday that this legislation was originally based on the insurance principle but that principle has gradually disappeared. He suggested everyone would be happy if we could return to the insurance principle, and I think he was right. The hon. member for Simcoe East (Mr. Rynard) and the hon. member for Kings (Mr. McQuaid) referred specifically to the closure of offices. I do not know whether the closure of offices has led to greater efficiency but it has certainly caused inconvenience and expense to the public. In my own riding the only office in the constituency, that at Selkirk, has been closed, greatly to the inconvenience of people in that area.

I wish to refer now to the way in which workers in country areas are disqualified from benefit and, in doing so, to support what has been said in this connection by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) the hon. member for Kings and others. Disqualification is brought about in this way: an official calls on applicants and records them as answering one of the questions by saying they prefer to work in their own immediate area. If the area is designated as a restricted employment area, as is usually the case, benefits are withheld.

I am disturbed by this type of administration. If people can be disqualified on this basis I can only conclude that the act discriminates against workers in rural areas. Indeed, it seems to me that the only way in which people can be sure of their eligibility for benefit is by living in the large urban centres. Does the government want all our people to live in the cities? If not, I suggest to the minister that he and his senior officials should look carefully at the way in which workers are being disqualified in the rural parts of Canada. A number of individual cases have come to my notice. I do not intend to call attention to them on this occasion but I shall refer them to the minister personally later. I believe it is a serious mistake to disqualify people in rural areas on the grounds that they live in a restricted employment area. I submit the act ought to be administered in a different manner if people in all parts of Canada are to be treated fairly and justly.

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the minister has been very patient and I shall be brief. Some of the points I wished to raise with regard to the need for local unemployment insurance offices have already been touched on by other speakers.

I am sure the minister has received letters which indicate there is a misunderstanding of the regulations as they apply to farm labour. At any rate, I have received such letters. The inclusion of farm workers under the act took effect on April 1, 1967. It was stated by the Department of Labour that all known farmers would be contacted by mail shortly after that date. Most farmers have by now been contacted by mail, I imagine. I emphasize the phrase "by mail" because I want to point out that farmers operate individually and in a great variety of ways and that the forwarding of information by mail is not always satisfactory. There is a desire for local offices where direct information could be obtained immediately rather than through correspondence.

The minister has told us that the decision to close some 100 local offices was made by the Unemployment Insurance Commission. I am asking him to bring the arguments he has heard today to the attention of the commission.

I am not sure how much experience or contact the minister has had with farming operations. He understands, of course, that in this modern age there is a demand for a variety of skills and training, for tractor and combine operators, livestock handlers and feeders, poultry and turkey raisers. Each of these lines of farm endeavour calls for separate training. I mention this in relation to a case which will emphasize two points I wish to bring out.

The situation I wish to describe concerns an experienced tractor and combine operator who worked for a farmer from April 1 to November 1, 1967. Naturally, there was very little tractor work late in the fall and the tractor operator found himself out of a job. The farmer and his employer had kept the insurance book up to date. According to the tractor operator, when he applied for unemployment insurance later an official told him that livestock feeders were needed and he should take one of these jobs. But this man was an experienced tractor operator and he had no experience in raising livestock.

It also appeared there had been a mix-up involving the location of the insurance book. The book had been sent to a central office probably to enable some sort of computer operation to be carried out. The tractor man had applied for his benefits in December. After some correspondence with the Unemployment Insurance Commission I received a letter which stated in the last paragraph:

> It is regrettable that Mr. Kessler's claim was delayed pending receipt of his insurance book. This difficulty has now been resolved and payment of benefit will be made to him without delay.

This strengthens the argument for direct contact through local offices. It also makes clear that an experienced tractor operator who contributes the necessary stamps during the summer months should be liable for benefit in the winter months if some comparable form of mechanical work is not available.

In conclusion I should like to draw the minister's attention to the brief which was presented to the government two or three days ago, I believe, by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. The minister may have been present on that occasion to hear it; I understand he was. I shall not repeat all the recommendations which were made. I merely point out that in regard to unemployment insurance we find this statement:

> Resolved that this program as it applies to agriculture be the subject of future study and recommendation by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture.

• (5:20 p.m.)

I conclude by saying that farmers have problems with unemployment insurance that require further study, and I hope the minister will see to it that the officials of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture will be heard when the time arrives.

[Translation]

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I will speak briefly also, but I do not want to miss this opportunity to say a few words. First of all, I want to say that I am in favour of the principle of the bill.

[Mr. Pascoe.]

As things are at present, with the high cost of living and the threat of inflation the unemployed surely need more benefits than they did some time ago.

I should like to add, on behalf of the labour force of Saint-Hyacinthe, how much we regret the decision to close the unemployment insurance office in our city.

At the time the decision was taken, the authorities of the municipality of Saint-Hyacinthe, the leaders of the CNTU local in Saint-Hyacinthe and myself made representations to the minister (Mr. Nicholson). We butted our heads against a stone wall, since no attention was paid to our representations which had one purpose only, the welfare of the labour class of Saint-Hyacinthe.

The minister and his colleague, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Marchand), also know that Saint-Hyacinthe is an industrial centre and that an unemployment insurance office had been established there during the first years following the coming into force of that legislation. The unemployed are thus subjected to endless inconvenience and vexation. They are compelled to travel some distance to draw their benefits or experience useless delays.

I should also like to support the representations which have been made here about the fact that some officials often give the impression that they are taking every possible means to deprive the unemployed of the benefits due them. I do not believe that it is on account of a lack of necessary information or because they are over-zealous. It must surely be because in many cases the officials have not the necessary information and as a result, the unemployed are deprived of unemployment insurance benefits.

I believe the hon. minister should endeavour to make sure that such conditions will not recur because they are positively detrimental to the unemployed workers. Being unemployed is distressing enough for a person that he should not be deprived of benefits that could help him provide for himself and his family.

By bringing such facts to the attention of the hon. minister he may be encouraged to give special consideration to the problem and to issue proper directives to his officers, so that they may give satisfaction to the workers.

I believe, like many others, that the purpose of the Unemployment Insurance Act must be to serve the public. We must not give the impression that this law tends to disqualify those who want to avail themselves of its provisions, but that it must really be of service to the workers who are temporarily unemployed.

Such are, Mr. Speaker, the few observations I wanted to make, for the guidance of the hon. minister.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tardif): Order. If the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to thank all hon. members, who have contributed to this debate. Some very helpful and constructive suggestions have been made for improvement in the administration of the unemployment insurance program generally and I am happy to inform all hon. members through you, Mr. Speaker, if they do not already know it, that the chief commissioner of the unemployment commission and other officials have been in the gallery throughout the whole of the debate and they have had the benefit of hearing all the suggestions made by hon. members.

I might say that I am gratified, although not surprised, that all parties and groups in the house have signified approval in principle of the amendments contained in the bill. However, a great many members have expressed regret that the bill does not go farther and include more of the recommendations that were contained in the report of the Gill committee which completed its work some five years ago. In reply, I would point out that the recommendations of the Gill committee were very comprehensive, but hon. members will recall that they were made at a time of serious unemployment in Canada when the funds of the Unemployment Insurance Commission were exhausted. Those funds had to be replenished through special votes by the house on two different occasions. I am glad to say that conditions have changed since then, and while some of the recommendations of the Gill committee merit implementation, others require at least modification.

As has been stated on previous occasions in this house, the Gill committee report was referred some time ago to an interdepartmental committee. The government has had an interim report from that committee and the committee has been asked to study it further. I would like to inform hon. members that a comprehensive revision of this act, to include 50 per cent or maybe more of the recommendations made by the Gill committee, and the modified recommendations that may come out of the study being made by the interdepartmental committee, would involve months of study in this house. It would not be a simple piece of legislation. I am convinced it would require a minimum of three months study by this house, and probably much longer.

When the government was faced with this situation, realizing that there had been no change made to the act for a period of some nine years and that the scale of benefits is not realistic in view of the changes that have taken place in the economy over the last four or five years, it was our opinion that there could be no further delay and that at the least we would have to introduce without delay the amendments covered in this bill. I particularly felt a responsibility because on more than one occasion during the past 12 months I had assured hon. members that in this session of parliament I would introduce amendments along the lines covered in this bill now before us. That accounts for the fact that we have a relatively short, simple bill to take care of immediate requirements, with the assurance on the part of the government that a more detailed, a more comprehensive bill, an overhaul bill, if you want to so describe it, will be introduced at the earliest possible date.

Hon. members, who have expressed support in principle for the bill, have also raised some very interesting questions which I think call for brief comment on my part at this stage. For instance, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. McCleave) referred to some calculations based on a table contained in clause 4 of the bill. In this connection I wish to assure the hon. member and others who are interested that the minor variances in the ratio, which the hon. member for Halifax noted, between benefits for people with dependants and benefits for people without dependants are due entirely to the fact that the figures were rounded out mathematically. In effect the amount is the same but there has been a mathematical rounding out. Column 2, for instance, progresses by increments of $3 and $4, while column 4 progresses by increments of $4 and $5.

I should like to assure hon. members that a study of the bill will show that there was no discrimination and no intention to discriminate against persons with dependants. A study of the bill will show that the people in the lowest income tax bracket benefit materially. The proportion of the benefit for persons with dependants has been maintained at 50 per cent or more of the new table which will apply when amendments to the act come into effect. This is in keeping with accepted unemployment insurance practice in many countries of the world including our neighbour to the south. Because it is included by them is no reason that we should accept it, but at least it is an indication that we are moving in ways which other countries consider to be fair and reasonable.

This table plus the new table of allowable earnings which can be earned while on claim means that the person with a dependant can earn up to 75 per cent of his gross wages up to the maximum laid down in the act. I consider this to be a reasonable protection unless there is a desire to encourage a man to stay away from work and draw unemployment insurance benefits.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) requested certain information which I am pleased to furnish. He asked for statistics concerning the status of the fund at the present time. I am happy to report that as of the end of the last fiscal year, March 31, 1967, the unemployment insurance fund had a credit of about $258 million. This is quite different from the situation we had a few years ago when it was necessary to replenish the fund in the period 1962 and 1963, the first two years that I was in this house. We can only estimate the condition of the fund at the end of this present fiscal year, since unemployment usually runs higher during the months of November through March. Five of these months are behind us, however, and present indications are that the fund will be just in excess of $300 million at the end of this fiscal year.

The hon. member for Comox-Alberni, the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), the hon. member for Simcoe East (Mr. Rynard), the hon. member for Kings (Mr. McQuaid), the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) and also one of the last speakers, the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre (Mr. Pascoe), all referred to the closing of some unemployment insurance offices. I believe that there has been some misunderstanding about this. Perhaps a little information on this subject might be helpful, not so much for members but for the information of the general public.

When the Unemployment Insurance Commission was first established the responsibility for the administration of the national employment service was delegated to the commission. The commission continued to perform that function until after the report of the Glassco royal commission was published. The Glassco commission studied the workings of the Unemployment Insurance Commission and felt that there was a conflict of interest between the national employment service and the Unemployment Insurance Commission. In its report the Glassco commission recommended that these two services be separated.

I was a member of an ad hoc cabinet committee which studied the recommendations of the Glassco commission and, if my memory serves me right, we recommended that this and several other recommendations contained in the Glassco commission report be implemented. As a result, at the beginning of the fiscal year, April 1, 1965, the two functions were separated. This was not done at the time the Department of Manpower and Immigration came into existence in December, 1965. It had been done some nine months earlier. As a result much of the work and the necessity for much of the staff in the unemployment insurance offices disappeared when this function was turned over to another branch of the government.

At the same time the commission, which is charged with the responsibility of administering this act efficiently and economically in the national interest, realized that a great advantage would accrue from the use of computers and other modern systems. The two were synchronized. There has been a closing of certain offices but there are manpower offices in most of these areas and there are officials of government who can furnish information to people who make application under the Unemployment Insurance Act and its regulations and they are happy to do so.

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Speaker, the minister has said that there are officials who can furnish information. Of course they can. They have been trained to do this. I should like to ask whether it is part of their duty to supply this information.

Mr. Nicholson: In some cases, yes. I might say, however, that I asked for a memorandum from the commission on this point. The chief commissioner has assured me that where offices of the Unemployment Insurance Commission have been closed they have made arrangements, when such action is required, with representatives of other agencies of the government, in some cases employees of the manpower centres, to supply such information. Arrangements also are being made for a free telephone service for people who wish to call the nearest U.I.C. office.

This afternoon the hon. member for Kings spoke of the hardships which exist in the province of Prince Edward Island. He mentioned that there is only one office on the island. I am sorry the hon. member is no longer present in the house because I would like to point out to him that in Prince Edward Island, for the type of service to which the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Pugh) referred, eight agencies have been established. These agencies are willing and anxious to continue this service and if individual members of the house will either write to me or to the commission itself information can be obtained as to just where these or similar agencies are located.

Mr. Pugh: This is for the dissemination of information. I can understand that. I know that the personnel in these offices have been more than helpful to those who request information, but I am wondering whether this applies also to the processing of claims.

Mr. Nicholson: It is any type of information which might be required by an ordinary Canadian citizen who needs help or advice in filling in unemployment insurance forms. I might say that it is impossible and unnecessary to have offices in every community in Canada. The hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Orange) showed how difficult or impossible it is in areas as large as those found in the two territories and in some of the provinces of Canada. From reports that I receive weekly, and some times more often than that, from the commission and my department, there is an indication that, while many unemployment insurance offices have been closed as a result of the use of computers and other new services, this new system is working more efficiently than before.

Mr. Nesbitt: Would the minister permit a question? Will he consider taking a second look at the reports he receives from his officials regarding what is taking place in southwestern Ontario which is a very heavily industrialized area? From personal knowledge I can assure the minister that in the last three months I have received at least 15 times the number of complaints I received during the previous 15 years I have been a member, mainly because applicants do not know how to fill out forms. They cannot obtain information because they cannot direct their questions to individuals in the offices.

Mr. Nicholson: I lived for some time, for several years in fact, in southwestern Ontario, and I can assure the hon. member that his request will receive serious consideration. There are officials of the commission here and they will follow up the hon. member's request. The commission has given a lot of thought to consolidation of offices and they assure me that where they have found it advisable to close an office they have given individual attention to all the special circumstances.

The hon. member for Simcoe East, in his persistent and persuasive way, has tried to convince me that I should bring my persuasive powers to bear on the commission. I have associated myself with his representation and also have opened the door for him. Let me remind all members, however, that parliament has in its wisdom seen fit by sections 4 and 22 to delegate the administration of this act to a commission comprised of one member representing the business and commercial community, one member representing labour and unions, and one member nominated by the government, namely the chief commissioner. The other two members can outvote the chief commissioner if they so decide. As a result of the more than two years of close association that I have had with this commission I know that I can say it has done an honest and conscientious job for the people of Canada and they should be commended for their efforts. What the commission is suggesting at this time is something that they consider to be advisable or desirable, in the interests not only of efficiency but of economy.

Yesterday I intimated that the question asked by the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Keays) had been answered to his satisfaction. Although he is not in the house I should like to assure him that if the situation has not been rectified in the way I understand it has the door is open for him to make further representations. I think, however, that he has been satisfied.

The hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Crouse) wanted reassurance that it is not the intention of the government to convert the unemployment insurance scheme into a general welfare scheme. I have no hesitation in giving him that assurance.

Mr. Crouse: Thank you.

Mr. Nicholson: Some reference has been made to the fact that there is an intention to widen the scope of unemployment insurance coverage so as to bring in other categories. This arose from a speech that I made in Kingston last summer to the officials of the Unemployment Insurance Commission and to others who are interested in the administration of social security programs in this country. I was referring to the trend toward universality which we have seen in several programs, including the Canada Pension Plan, medicare and others. I assure the house that there was no mention made of school teachers or doctors. Where the news media picked up the suggestion that there was to be such an extension I do not know, but it certainly was not from anything I said on that occasion.

The hon. member for Skeena referred to a case about which, frankly, I am disturbed. This took place some time before I assumed the responsibility as Minister of Labour, but I shall be glad to investigate the circumstances mentioned. It is certainly our hope that situations of that kind may be avoided in the future.

The hon. member for Kings suggested that the minister is responsible for the administration of this act as evidenced by the fact that he signed a letter "John R. Nicholson". The stationery used by the minister is stationery of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, which carries the words "Office of the minister" or some similar words. Under the act the minister is designated as the Minister of Labour, but he has limited responsibility under the act. As I am sure all members know, the responsibilities of a minister can be transferred from time to time under the authority of the Transfer of Duties Act. The responsible minister does not necessarily have to be the Minister of Labour. In this particular case I signed the letter as the minister responsible, and I still occupy that responsible position and I will do so presumably as long as I remain the labour minister. However, administration still rests with the commission, and I would not want it to be otherwise. If members feel that changes to the act and regulations are necessary I can assure them that I would be glad to discuss them with interested members and then with the commission and in turn with my colleagues in the cabinet.

The hon. member for the Northwest Territories pointed out the need for change in the regulations governing employees north of the sixtieth parallel. That has been brought to the attention of the commission as a result of their attendance here today. I assure the hon. member that this suggestion will be followed up.

The hon. member for Kootenay West made a very good point in connection with the 100 or more offices that have been closed. This public relations question is something that has troubled me. I agree that there is need for improvement in public relations operations. This has been discussed by me with the chief commissioner who relinquished his office a few months ago. It has also been followed up with the new chief commissioner. Even though they have reduced their over-all staff they are building their public relations staff to handle this very important work. There is a lot of merit in having officials of the Unemployment Insurance Commission meet with representatives of municipalities, with service clubs in some of the smaller communities in order to give them this kind of information. I have the assurance of the commission that its members would be very pleased to do so.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Tardif in the chair.

On clause 1—

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, before we proceed may I say I am sure we are all interested in what the minister said in closing the debate on second reading. I am particularly interested in his statement to the effect that representations of hon. members have been helpful regarding the administration of the act. I was also interested in the minister's desire to discuss any proposed changes in the act suggested by hon. members with his cabinet colleagues. This is like listening to an old record that is pretty nearly worn out.

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the hon. member will admit that we have made at least a little progress here, and this is merely one of the areas in which some progress has been made.

Mr. Howard: There is no doubt that the government has made little progress here and in other fields as well. I agree immediately with the minister about that. But in some fields the government has, in fact, made no progress whatever except in a backward direction. As gracious and kind as the minister is in saying that he appreciates the helpful suggestions that have been made and that the members of the commission are in the gallery listening intently and so on, the fact is that hon. members who have participated in debates dealing with the Unemployment Insurance Act and such matters have been making these suggestions year after year after interminable year and there is still no change. It is very easy for the minister to say he would be glad to do this, that and the other thing and that he appreciates the helpful suggestions which have been made, but I am sure hon. members do not enjoy the opportunity of making these suggestions in a perennial way. We would like to have some of our suggestions, if they are helpful—and we are pleased the minister has said some of them are—transformed into legislative or regulatory form or into policy declarations within the department or the commission structure.

I cited the case of the woman who had been induced by the insurance officer to answer questions in a particular way, thus disqualifying herself from receiving benefits. This is a standard complaint that nearly every member in the house has run into at one time or another. Proposals about altering section 54 to take cognizance of this situation have been made ad nauseam but we have seen no change as yet. These complaints will continue to arise if something is not done to correct the situation.

Incidentally, it would be interesting to know whether there is any policy directive from the commission to its officers and staff in the field which ensures that questions are asked of applicants in such a way as to get this type of answer or whether this is just coincidence. It would appear that in many cases the manner in which questions have been asked has been too consistent to be coincidence. I would expect there is some directive that says the staff should try to ascertain information in this way.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. I hope, in fact I am sure, that the hon. member accepted my assurance that I would look into this particular case and, if action is needed, I will take the responsibility of seeing that the matter is followed up. I cannot do more than that. If the circumstances are as the hon. member has described it should not need legislative action; it seems to be more an administrative matter. I will look into it.

Mr. Howard: If it is an administrative matter, Mr. Chairman, action should have been taken a long time ago because the situation has prevailed for many years. I do not care how it is done, whether by legislation, regulation or just a straight declaration, but this matter should be straightened out. I do not refer to this case exclusively but to similar cases.

The hon. member for Nickel Belt cited a case where a woman found herself disqualified because of a peculiar set of circumstances over which she had no control whatever. This situation arises as the result of an overly rigid and strict interpretation of section 54(2)(a) of the act relating to availability for work. All the good will on the part of the minister—and I have letters stating this—cannot upset the decisions of the umpires which have been upheld in case after case in like situations.

What is required is a little more generosity on the part of the commission in applying itself to this question. As I understand it, if over a period of years the court of referees, if that is the correct title, and the umpires have made successive interpretations and declarations about what that section of the act means, it is just like a court of law. You look to the precedents and say, it happened before, and you drag out the umpires' decisions to substantiate it happening again.

By the overly rigid interpretation of this rule people are being induced in effect to break the law, in effect to betray their own consciences by answering questions in a dishonest way. They are being forced to do this. When a person hears that his neighbour was disqualified from receiving unemployment insurance benefits because he answered a question put by the insurance officer in a certain way, if that neighbour's case is inquired into he will answer the question in another way. He will say: You bet I am available for work anywhere in the world, for any wage, at any time and in any occupation. That person may in his own mind know he is not able to perform certain jobs but he will say he is simply in order to receive what he thinks he is entitled to namely, benefits under the act.

It would be worth while too, as I asked the minister on second reading, if he would state categorically the position of the government with respect to recommendation No. 11, I think it is, of the Gill committee relating tc expanding the coverage of the act to take in teachers, hospital workers, policemen and the like. As I understood the minister—if I am incorrect in my understanding I know he will correct me—the doubt in this regard arose because of a speech he made in Kingston which was not interpreted correctly by the news media. Does this mean that the minister is making a categorical statement about the position of the government with respect to teachers and police officers? Are they to be included or not?

Mr. Nicholson: I will be glad to answer that question, Mr. Chairman. I thought that I had answered it. I have stated in the house more than once that it is not the present government's intention—I cannot speak for any future government—to extend the provisions of this act to cover teachers or people in the categories to which the hon. member has referred. The Gill committee has made certain recommendations. Extensions have been made in this area. Agricultural workers have been brought under the act, and others. It is quite possible that further or additional categories will be brought under it. But the intention should be to provide unemployment insurance to those who need it, not to those with no such needs.

I say unequivocally that there are great differences of opinion in and out of government as to how far the recommendations of the Gill committee should be implemented. The one referred to by the hon. member is one of the recommendations with regard to which there is a serious difference of opinion.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. It being six o'clock it is my duty to leave the chair in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at ten o'clock this day are as follows: The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis), The Canadian Economy—steps to meet increase in cost of living; the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), Criminal Code—suggested amendment respecting representation by counsel; the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), Industry—possible change in criteria respecting designated areas.

[Mr. Howard.]

It being six o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

THE BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY OF CANADA

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Durham) moved the third reading of Bill No. C-104, respecting The Bell Telephone Company of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Peters: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

• (6:00 p.m.)

LONDON AND MIDLAND GENERAL INSURANCE COMPANY

Mr. J. G. Lind (Middlesex East) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-25, respecting London and Midland General Insurance Company.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, may I raise a point of order about what has just transpired? With respect, I think Your Honour moved too quickly. The hon. member who is sponsoring this bill was on his feet and we were expecting him to make some introductory remarks. He did not have the opportunity to do so when the question was put. I think there was a misunderstanding.

Mr. Speaker: I looked in the direction of the hon. member and he did not rise. Nobody rose. The bill has already received second reading and can be considered in due course when it comes back from the committee to which it has been referred.

COMMERCIAL SOLIDS PIPE LINE COMPANY

The house resumed, from Tuesday, November 28, 1967, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-113, to incorporate Commercial Solids Pipe Line Company—Mr. Basford—Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 1—Incorporation.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I will defer to the sponsor of the bill if he wishes to make some comments. However, he has not risen and we do not want to get into the same predicament as we did on the last bill. I have a few words to say on this bill. Before the consideration of the bill goes beyond the committee stage I should like assurance from the sponsor of the bill that Bill C-231, the National Transportation Act, passed by this house has been proclaimed. I am under the impression that the section dealing with commodity pipe lines was exempted from the proclamation. This, of course, leaves us in a very poor position. It leaves us in the position of creating a commodity pipe line—this, of course, will be the first one of its kind to handle solids in Canada—without any legislation under which its operations can be supervised.

A great deal of discussion of this commodity pipe line has taken place. I have had the opportunity of discussing this bill with company officials on a number of occasions. I am convinced that the company is sincerely interested in developing not only a research proposition but a commodity pipe line that will handle a product as soon as the pipe line can be made operative.

One of the reasons for discussing the problems connected with solids pipe lines designed to handle basic raw materials was that in fact we were creating a new form of transportation. I do not know what the former minister of transport, now the chairman of the transportation commission, had in mind when he excluded part II of the act from the proclamation. I am sure the government did not exclude that part but that it was the chairman who decided that section would not be put into effect. Certainly he was aware of the purpose of including the solids pipe line section. I am sure he was aware of the need for protection of the consumers of this nation who are using transportation facilities.

We have been told how many thousands of box cars will be taken off the railroads as a result of the construction of a pipe line that will handle basic commodities which are now shipped by rail. I understand this new form of transportation will reduce the price of the product considerably and will put the Shell Oil Company into a position to compete effectively in world markets. This is very worth while. If potash, sulphur and some of the other basic commodities can be carried to the west coast by this new form of transportation we will find that because of the decreased use of rail and highway transportation there will be a change in the cost of the freight that will continue to be handled by the railways and over the highways. It is essential so far as I am concerned, therefore, that part III of the National Transportation Act be proclaimed before this pipe line is constructed.

My recent discussions with company officials indicate they are convinced they have overcome the problems that were involved in putting sulphur in an oil-based slurry to ship to the coast. They are of the opinion that they have been able to solve the problem of refining and removing the commodity from the oil base. Company officials have suggested they will make a number of amendments and I am told the amendments they will put into effect are worth while. In talking to their lawyers I was surprised that they were willing to take out of the bill some of the things I believe are absolutely necessary. We have agreed with the company that these things should be retained because this company will have immediate use for some of them. It seems to me it is no longer our responsibility to insist that certain protection be provided to the nation. The government should proclaim part II of the National Transportation Act which to my knowledge has not been proclaimed. No legitimate reason has been given for not proclaiming that part of the act.

In the transportation of a commodity such as sulphur the difficulties that accrue are many and the research requirements for the economic handling of this commodity are very great. It has been necessary for the company, through research, to arrive at a specific gravity for the sulphur that will allow the company to put the product through the pipe line in a volume equal to about 80 per cent of the total volume of the line. The specific gravity of the product going through the line has to be close enough to the specific gravity of the carrier to enable the company to get the slurry moving again following an emergency shutdown. Otherwise, of course, the solids would remain in the pipe line and a great deal of difficulty would be created.

I have had conversations with other pipe line officials and I find there are a number of ways of handling solids. We were told that commodities such as sulphur might have to be transported in capsule form. Some research has been done into the transportation of sulphur in round or oblong blocks. If for some reason the carriage of these balls of sulphur breaks down, say as a result of pumping difficulties, the specific gravity of the sulphur, being the same as the air in the line, would permit a bottleneck to be avoided.

Anyone who has had anything to do with sulphur knows that it comes in different forms. For example, it comes in acid form, in powder form and in slab form, in which case it is broken up with a jackhammer and then transported in box cars. It is just like the manufacture of Smarties. They are put into formers and coated with chocolate. The sulphur operation is the same but without the chocolate coating.

One suggestion made by the Shell Oil officials was that the refining process could be dispensed with. However, it seems to me that one major factor in the refining process is the removal of sulphur from the oil. If 80 or 90 per cent of sulphur by volume is added in slurry form to the oil there must be a refining process at the end of the pipe line, and that is a difficulty the Shell company is facing.

Whether or not this bill is passed, Mr. Chairman, I am sure this company has sufficient technical know-how to make a success of its operations. I am also sure it has the financial ability to bring this pipe line to reality. However, I have great reservations about the ability of the Canadian public to protect themselves from the possible consequences of this bill. This is only a beginning. It is a little unfortunate that the Shell Oil Company is being criticized here, because it has pioneered in this field. But the interest of the public is much more important than that of any inidividual company or collection of companies, and the public have not really been given that protection. Certainly the chairman of the transportation commission is not protecting them, and we will have to help him protect them against his wishes by insisting that part II of the National Transportation Act be proclaimed before this company is licensed for this operation.

I am sure, Mr. Chairman, you are familiar with the National Energy Board Act and the previous transportation acts that made provision for the movement of commodities by various means. You will also be aware that for a considerable length of time many pipe line companies have come to parliament asking for a licence to construct solid pipe lines. If I can paraphrase what was said previously by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona, we have given in to some companies that have the corporate facility to take advantage of legislation in this field. We have provided a number of companies with the corporate structure that enables them to take advantage of developments in the field of solids pipe line construction.

I am sure that the National Energy Board, under whose jurisdiction such operations fall, has no intention of licensing a pipe line to carry solids until that section of Bill No. C-231 to which I have referred has been proclaimed by order in council. Anyone who followed the debate on the transportation bill will be aware that that piece of legislation was very involved and complicated. They will also be aware that certain conditions were attached to the construction of solids pipe lines. In fact, one section dealt with commodity pipe lines, which included such things as combined pipe lines and solids pipe lines. There was also a section that regulated tolls and tariffs and provisions relating to common carriers. We also inserted in the bill a provision stating that the transportation act was not to conflict with the National Energy Board Act in so far as sections 26 to 39, sections 57, 58, 59 and Part V were concerned.

We also made the following provision in section 28 of the act:

> (1) Where it appears to be in the public interest to do so, the commission may, with the approval of the Governor in Council, make an order or orders exempting a commodity pipe line or any part or parts thereof, from all or any of the provisions of this act.
> (2) In any order made under this section, the commission may impose such terms and conditions as it considers advisable.

One of the things that bothers me about that is that the draftsman of the bill must have had the Commercial Solids Pipe Line in mind because it was the only solids pipe line that was being developed at that time. Yet the application of this section and the protection that it would provide has been withheld, and for this reason I am reluctant to agree to the passage of this bill at the present time.

One of our members telephoned the Privy Council office and asked whether part III of the transportation act had been proclaimed. The secretary there informed him that everyone had gone home and she was not in a position to make any statement. We did pass a very complicated bill including a section that protected the public. I do not think anything in that section in the transportation act conflicts with the interests of Commercial Solids Pipe Line. Therefore I think its provisions should apply to this bill before it is passed. On finding that part not proclaimed I can only conclude that there is something I do not know or that some interest is not being served. I would therefore like to know from the sponsor of the bill why proclamation has not taken place, because I think that part II is most relevant and ought to apply to the company's operation.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Chairman, I was rising to speak when you recognized the hon. member for Timiskaming and I wanted to say that at a later stage I wish to move amendments to the bill, which I understand, have been discussed with hon. members and the company.

With regard to the point raised by the hon. member for Timiskaming, surprisingly it came to light at hearings of the transport committee that part II had not been proclaimed. At that time I did not know that and I checked into the matter. Part II has not been proclaimed owing to administrative reasons. The Canadian Transport Commission has not yet drawn up the regulations which must prevail under part II. Part II cannot be proclaimed until the regulations are drawn up. That is the reason for not proclaiming part II, and there is no other reason.

I was as concerned as the hon. member is about this matter, and I have checked it with the Minister of Transport. I have his authority to say to the house and to put on the record that should anyone commence to build a solids pipe line or even to think of building one, part II will be proclaimed in time to ensure that construction of the pipe line is carried on under the provisions of part II. I hope, earnestly, that the hon. member is satisfied with that undertaking. He is a practical man and he knows that any Canadian government would be silly to allow anyone to commence construction without proclaiming part II. I hope the undertaking which the Minister of Transport has authorized me to give satisfies the hon. member.

The hon. member has discussed this matter with the Shell Oil Company and discussed the type of proposal they have. As the hon. member for Timiskaming knows, the proposal is to carry sulphur in a hydrocarbon base, which means oil or a hydrocarbon. The transportation of hydrocarbons is covered by the National Energy Board Act. The pipe line therefore could not function without an application being made to the National Energy Board. That application is something apart from the provisions of part II. We have on the record an undertaking that part II will be proclaimed before construction is allowed. If the hon. member does not accept that undertaking, he may remember that the provisions of the National Energy Board Act govern the transmission of hydrocarbons.

Mr. Peters: May I ask the hon. member a question? Is it not true that a large quantity of sulphur will be carried? Oil is the carrier and the commodity to be carried is sulphur. For an oil carrier the National Energy Board will be involved, and with respect to the commodity, which is sulphur, part II will apply. The pipe line, therefore, will be governed by the commodity pipe line section of the transport bill. Is that right?

Mr. Basford: Yes. It certainly will be, under part II, but I have already put on the record what the Minister of Transport has authorized me to say, that part II will be proclaimed before anyone starts building a solids pipe line. Part II has not been proclaimed because the regulations have not been drawn up. The point I was making is that even though part II has not been proclaimed, as the hon. member knows, a proposal to carry hydrocarbons is at the present time governed by the National Energy Board Act. Since an oil base will be used to carry the sulphur the pipe line cannot operate without an application to the National Energy Board first being made.

As the hon. member knows, when dealing with a commodity pipe line which uses a hydrocarbon carrier, a combined application must be made to the National Energy Board and to the Canadian Transport Commission. My point is that though part II has not yet been proclaimed it will be, and it will cover this pipe line.

Because of the undertaking I have put on record and because the National Energy Board is involved in the matter, I hope the hon. member is satisfied. His objections were legitimate. I am authorized to say on behalf of the company that they do not want to build a pipe line except under the provisions of part II.

Mr. Nasserden: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I do not think we have a quorum.

The Chairman: Order, please. I will ask the Clerk Assistant to count the committee.

And there being only 17 members present, including the chairman, the chairman reported accordingly to the Speaker.

Mr .Speaker: I will ask the Clerk Assistant to take a count of the house.

Mr. Howard: That is the practice we follow now—do everything twice.

Mr. Speaker: Thirty one members are present. There being a quorum, the committee will resume its work.

• (6:30 p.m.)

The house resumed consideration in committee on Bill No. C-113, to incorporate Commercial Solids Pipe Line Company—Mr. Basford—Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 1—Incorporation.

Mr. Peters: I wish to thank the hon. member for Rosthern for the audience we have. This is an important bill and I am glad to see so many people taking part in the proceedings.

I appreciate what the sponsor has said with relation to the proclaiming of part II. I may say I do not agree with him; I think this part could in fact be proclaimed before the regulations are attached. But I am certainly willing to accept his indication that these regulations are being worked out. I am sure the hon. member is correct in saying that the principals wish to operate under the combines section of part II of the transportation legislation rather than solely under the National Energy Board. I accept the assurance that this will be done.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 2 to 5 inclusive, agreed to.

On clause 6—Power to construct and operate pipe line.

Mr. Basford: I shall ask my hon. friend from Essex South to move an amendment at this point on my behalf.

Mr. Whelan moved:

That clause 6 be amended as follows:

1. in line 32, by deleting the word "and" and by substituting therefor the following "(b) for the purpose of, and related only to, its operations," so that the last part of paragraph (a) becomes a new paragraph of clause 6;

2. in line 37, by deleting the words "for the purpose of its undertaking";

3. by deleting at the end of the present paragraph (a) as amended in the standing committee the words "for the purpose of its undertaking"; and

4. by relettering paragraphs (b) and (c) as (c) and (d).

Mr. Basford: I am instructed that this covers the points which were agreed upon at the meeting between the sponsors of the bill and hon. members opposite.

Amendment agreed to.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Clause as amended agreed to.

Clauses 7 to 10 inclusive agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported and read the third time and passed.

Mr. Basford: On a question of privilege, may I thank the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) and the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) for agreeing to meet with the promoters of this bill and for agreeing to the amendments. I thank them for their co-operation.

Mr. Nasserden: May I say, also on a question of privilege, that the reason I wanted a quorum was this: I believe that when a bill passes third reading there should be a quorum, and that private members hour is a good time at which to have a quorum.

An hon. Member: Quite right.

EMPIRE LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

On the order:

January 23, 1968—Second reading of Bill S-9, An Act respecting The Empire Life Insurance Company—Mr. Ryan.

Mr. Ryan: I was about to ask, Mr. Speaker, that by leave this be dropped to the bottom of the list.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Dropped.

BRITISH NORTHWESTERN INSURANCE COMPANY

The house resumed from Tuesday, January 23, consideration of the motion of Mr. Allmand for the second reading of Bill No. S-14, respecting British Northwestern Insurance Company.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): This measure has been before us on a number of occasions. There has been a considerable difference of opinion as to whether or not it is a Canadian company. We have from time to time been concerned about the number of insurance companies which have made petitions to parliament. When this particular bill was introduced, the impression was given that it was a Canadian-owned company. The sponsor confused the issue in his opening remarks on November 2, 1967, when he said, as reported in Hansard at page 3814:

For the information of the hon. member this company is a Canadian company originally incorporated in Manitoba in 1906 and subsequently incorporated under Chapter 70 of the statutes of 1910. The original company, Eagle Star, was a British company.

● (6:40 p.m.)

Although to the sponsor this is a Canadian company, the ownership of the company is totally foreign. As Mr. Humphrys said on January 23:

> The British Northwestern Insurance Company is a federal company, having been federally incorporated in 1917, but it started earlier as a provincial company. It is owned by the Eagle Star Insurance Company, a prominent British company with world wide interests and a very large volume of business.

How does it become a Canadian company? If this is a Canadian company merely because it is incorporated in Canada, then we have no problem with any companies which are federally incorporated. Being incorporated here they would automatically be naturalized Canadian companies. But in my opinion, and I am sure I will be supported by every person who is interested in seeing Canadian control of Canadian industry, because this company is financed by British money it is not a Canadian owned company.

For some time we in this party have been concerned about the question of foreign owned companies. We have been urging that finance and insurance companies which apply for a federal charter should have a large percentage of Canadian ownership. It is not enough for us to say that we will not grant this company a charter because it will continue to do business under the name of Eagle Insurance. We are interested in seeing that it is made a good Canadian corporate citizen, the term used by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. If companies are to become good corporate citizens it seems to me that a large part of the control over them should belong to Canadian citizens.

The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Gordon) has written a number of books on the subject of Canadians regaining control of the Canadian economy. The Watkins report, recently tabled under his auspices, points out a number of ways by which control of companies could pass into Canadian hands. Many persons have been interested in this subject, and numerous suggestions have been made. However, many insurance companies do not care about the matter. They do not care what relationship they have with their parent corporations. The return on their investment is more important to them than the actual method by which their companies are controlled.

I think it can safely be said that the Bell Telephone Company, with 2 per cent American ownership by American Bell, is just as dominated by American Bell as are other companies dominated by foreign parent corporations which control 50 per cent of their stock. I believe we should be working to develop Canadian ownership of all these companies, and in particular of insurance companies which collect moneys in Canada and can reinvest those moneys either in Canada or outside Canada.

If the theme of good corporate citizenship is developed fully, the majority of stock in a company must be owned by Canadian citizens. The Canadian public must have an opportunity to buy the stock of foreign subsidiaries. Other countries have taken steps in this direction. Not long ago the majority of companies in the Scandinavian countries were foreign owned, but then the governments of those countries took steps to buy into the foreign owned companies and stipulated that one seat on their boards of directors must be held by the government. As a result Sweden now owns a great percentage of its own industrial companies.

The Japanese passed a law stipulating that no foreigner could do business in Japan unless 51 per cent of the stock of his company was held by the government of Japan. Yet the Japanese are allowed to come to Canada where they are treated so generously and are given so many concessions that they may own 100 per cent of the corporations they establish here. Solutions for this problem can be found in the Watkins committee report, in the Gordon commission report of a few years ago, and in the reports of other commissions which have inquired into the subject.

Frankly I believe the problem is greatest in the insurance industry. That industry provides a lot of the money for capital investment in municipalities, for housing mortgages and in other fields which are important to the development of our nation. I have been shocked to read some reports of concessions that have been made to insurance companies to allow them to take out of the country the money they collect in Canada and invest it elsewhere.

Recently I was surprised to read an editorial in the Toronto Daily Star which referred to a cheap tax ride for Canada's insurance industry. It pointed out that the insurance industry draws 30 per cent of the personal savings of Canadians, and dealt with the reluctance of insurance companies to invest their money in the industrial growth of the nation. It gave facts and figures which I hope some day to put on the record so that hon. members can consider them.

During consideration of a previous bill this session to incorporate the United Investment Life Assurance Company we made the suggestion that within two years of its commencing business it would sell 25 per cent of its stock to its officers, directors, or if necessary to other people who are Canadian residents. That company agreed to write into its charter that if within ten years it had not succeeded in selling 50 per cent of its shares to Canadian citizens, resident in Canada, it would give up its charter and dissolve. I think that company should be congratulated because it has said voluntarily that if it operates a Canadian company in a Canadian field it will be prepared to raise the money in Canada, sell the stock in Canada, and do business in Canada, and if it is not able to do that to the extent of 50 per cent in a period of ten years, it will give up its charter.

I do not wish to put the sponsor of this bill on the spot by asking him to say that this company will accept the proposal that the United Investment Life Assurance Company was willing to accept. I shall not ask him to make a snap decision of this type today. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Germa):

That this bill be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Since the vote has been demanded pursuant to standing order 6(7) this item of business will stand over until eight o'clock.

[Mr. Peters.]

SEABOARD FINANCE COMPANY OF CANADA

The house resumed from Thursday, January 25, consideration of the motion of Mr. Cameron (High Park) for the second reading of Bill S-15, to incorporate Seaboard Finance Company of Canada.

Mr. Bud Germa (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments in respect of Bill S-15, to incorporate Seaboard Finance Company of Canada. The Seaboard Finance Company of Canada is an Ontario incorporated company which seeks federal incorporation under the Small Loans Act. I believe it already is a known fact that this company engages in business throughout Canada under its provincial charter. So, should this company be granted federal incorporation, the only benefit that would accrue to it would be that it would have a little greater status in the community because the federal parliament had placed its hand upon it stating that it is free to go out in the business world to conduct the business of small loans.

The Seaboard Finance Company of Canada is a totally owned subsidiary of a large foreign investment company. The Prime Minister has stated that it is his belief and wish that Canadian industry and financial institutions should come progressively more and more under the jurisdiction of Canadian citizens. We believe this to be a good precedent. I should like to support the Prime Minister by saying that these companies which control large blocks of shares in our country should be under Canadian ownership and therefore responsive more to the needs of Canada and less to the needs and influences of a foreign country.

We are reluctant therefore to grant our blessing to this company, that it should go out into the world to conduct this business. Moneylenders have been with us since the beginning of time I presume. They are mentioned in the Bible. In the old days the moneylenders went into the temples and the high priests drove them with whips out of the temple. I do not propose that the moneylenders in this day and age should be whipped, but they certainly do not contribute to the well-being of our country when they charge usurious rates of interest to the people who are placed in the predicament of having to come into their clutches.

Under the Small Loans Act the Canadian people have borrowed approximately $900 million in order to acquire for themselves the things they need to carry on the business of living in Canada today. When we consider that the rate charged under the Small Loans Act sometimes is as high as 24 per cent we realize that a great deal of money which could otherwise be directed toward the production of more consumer goods is being siphoned off in the form of interest. If a greater percentage of this money which is paid out in the form of interest was retained as spending power in the hands of the consumers, I am sure more employment would be created. We would have a better standard of living and the whole economy of the nation would be improved if this money which is now being paid out in the form of usurious interest were left in the hands of the spender.

May I call it seven o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Before we call it seven o'clock, I should like to inform the house that the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Cameron) has indicated to me he intended to ask the house for unanimous consent to withdraw the bill from the order paper.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped I would have an opportunity to ask the house for unanimous consent that this bill be allowed to retain its order of priority on the order paper, because we have not had an opportunity to examine it today. I think that would be a better course of action.

Mr. A. J. P. Cameron (High Park): Mr. Speaker, if that is the way my hon. friend feels about it I think it should go to the bottom of the list.

Mr. Speaker: It being seven o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At seven o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

PRIVATE BILLS

BRITISH NORTHWESTERN INSURANCE COMPANY

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Allmand for the second reading of Bill No. S-14, respecting British Northwestern Insurance Company, and the superseding motion of Mr. Peters.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 7 of standing order No. 6, the house will now revert to private members business for the purpose of taking a vote which was postponed when private members business was being considered between the hours of six and seven o'clock this evening. The question is on the motion by the hon. member for Timiskaming, that Bill No. S-14 be not now read a second time but that it be read this day six months hence.

Call in the members.

MEASURE TO BROADEN COVERAGE

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-197, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act—Mr. MacEachen (for Mr. Nicholson)—Mr. Batten in the chair.

[Mr. Speaker.]

On clause 1—

• (8:40 p.m.)

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Alkenbrack: Before the house proceeded to the consideration of private bills, I heard the minister admit that there is need to improve the public relations of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, and I am glad he said that. I assume the minister can assure the committee that no part of this bill, which is to amend the act, applies to school teachers in our schools and colleges. I note that the minister says it is impossible to have offices in every community in Canada. I submit that this government's centralization program is not providing a proper service to our people. We still ought to have unemployment insurance offices in every county of Ontario, as we had formerly. If we did that we could give our people far better service than they are now getting.

I wish to avail myself of this opportunity to comment briefly on Bill C-197, which is a bill to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act. This indeed is a timely discussion because of the great amount of unemployment we now have in Canada. That rate has reached a high point of almost 7 per cent of the work force—and that rate contradicts the boasts of the various cabinet ministers about this country's great rate of economic progress.

Conditions are not as good in Canada as they might be. They are not as good as the government tries to make out they are. Under this government, all along the line production rates are falling, and often failing. This government does not look after our export trade as the previous government did. The annual increase in our gross national product this year stands at a new low. The export markets which were built up by the former Conservative government are being either lost or crippled as the result of the Kennedy round of trade agreements. That leads to unemployment. A leading example of the former statement, to do with export markets, is to be found in our diminishing wheat export sales.

I have in my hand a page from the Globe and Mail of February 28, and the heading over one article is, "Wheat exports sliding farther from '67 level". This proves that this government is not pursuing the promotion of wheat exports as vigorously as did the previous government. Lowering the level of exports certainly brings unemployment.

This country's canning and food processing industry, which is very important to my constituency of Prince Edward-Lennox, is not prospering as it should because this government's national and world outlook precludes it from giving that industry the assistance and service that is necessary for the industry to prosper. Accordingly we have more unemployment in our counties, in areas where fruit and food processing was a sustaining industry. These remarks tie in with unemployment and with the subject of this bill; that is because the policy of this government is creating more unemployment in the canning industry and other industries.

Evidently, from reading clause 1 of Bill C-197, the government foresees no change in our present high rate of unemployment. Those who earn up to $7,800 a year are to be brought under the act as insured persons. The government knows that those who earn between $5,460 and $7,800 per annum, and who are to be brought under this act, will no doubt have a better record of continuous employment than those who earn less. Therefore it is bolstering the unemployment insurance fund pretty much at the expense of this category of salaried persons. I also recognize that hourly wage rates have increased. These increases have put hourly wage earners into a position that is different from the one they occupied in the 1950's and early 1960's, so far as the application of the act is concerned. I cannot say that I support totally this new coverage nor that I support totally the new benefit rates. I caution the government to be careful about measures that make it more profitable for one to be unemployed.

In some quarters there is at present some uncertainty about the advisability of having compulsory unemployment insurance throughout the agricultural industry. I wish to place on record two resolutions from the Canadian Federation of Agriculture which are contained in a brief they presented this week to the cabinet and to various parties in this house. The first resolution is headed "Declaration of Inconsiderable Employment". This, I take it, pertains to transient and seasonal labour, and it reads as follows:

Whereas certain segments of agricultural producers must rely on part time help; and

Whereas many of these part time employees are not interested in any other employment; and

Whereas it is unlikely that these employees would or could benefit from unemployment insurance;

Resolved that the Unemployment Insurance Commission reinstate the validity of the "Declaration of Inconsiderable Employment" so that part-time employees in agriculture have the prerogative as to whether they desire to be covered by Unemployment Insurance.

In other words, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture is asking the government not to make the coverage of agricultural workers compulsory.

The next resolution in the brief reads as follows:

Whereas unemployment insurance was introduced for agricultural workers earlier in the year; and

Whereas the regulations were modified later in such a manner as to curtail its application to seasonal workers; and

Whereas the value or effect of Unemployment Insurance for farm labour is negligible;

Resolved that this program, as it applies to agriculture, be the subject of future study and recommendation by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture.

I recommend that the government's agricultural task force, which I assume is touring the country and looking into agricultural problems, consider these resolutions and conditions across the country and make recommendations regarding them.

I wish to bring up another point. Why is it so common for a man or woman who has paid unemployment insurance for many years, who has been a steady worker and never laid off, to have trouble collecting unemployment insurance when it is necessary to do so? Why are such people who have been steady workers and who have never been laid off so often refused cheques for extended periods? Why are they subject to humiliation and loss of money due to them, because of the run-around they so frequently get from the workers in the unemployment insurance offices? Why should these worthy insured persons be subject to the procrastination of clerks in these offices? Many instances of this have been brought to my attention, and in this connection I should like to quote from a letter I have received from a constituent calling attention, among other things, to the fact that people whose contributions have built up the very strength of the unemployment insurance fund cannot readily collect insurance when it is due to them, while on the other hand those who have been employed for only a short length of time, those whose employment record is never continuous, can usually walk into an unemployment insurance office and walk out with a cheque. I am sure I am not the only member of this house who has received complaints of this kind. This is one letter I received, under date of January 26, 1968:

• (8:50 p.m.)

Dear Mr. Alkenbrack,

I am writing concerning unemployment insurance. I have worked almost continuously from the time I left high school and paid into unemployment all that time. I have never drawn unemployment before, until now. I was laid off on September 18, 1967 and had to correspond, back and forth for six weeks, before I finally got unemployment insurance.

So I have actually drawn a very short time and today I got a letter saying "We are waiting a decision on your claim. When received we will send any benefit that may be payable to you." I hardly think that's fair. After all you see people who only work long enough so they can draw, they go in and have no trouble at all getting insurance, while people who are willing to work keep them going. Then, when we get laid off, we have to put up an awful fight to get insurance.

My husband had the same trouble, he has worked for 15 years and this is only the second time he has ever drawn. He also had to wait for six weeks before he got anything. If it hadn't been for the small amount I drew, we would have starved to death. He never had a cent for six weeks. He had to phone over there—

This letter is written by a lady in Picton, Ontario. When she refers to "over there" she is referring to the Belleville office. The letter continues:

He had to phone over there, write back and forth, and what all he didn't have to do. They also went through his book and took the lowest stamp and gave him $33 instead of $36. He worked for a trucking company and the majority of his stamps were the highest you pay. When I was getting something, we could at least eat and buy oil. Now we are beside ourselves with worry for you know as well as I that $33 does not even feed a family of six properly, let alone buy fuel, pay hydro and phone, make our house payment and pay any other bills that the average family has. Also, with that amount of money, we cannot afford doctor's coverage and hospitalization which is an added worry.

We will have to lose our house and all the hard work we put into it. Then what will we do? Our payment is smaller than most places to rent so if we can't pay it, how can we rent a place?

There are quite a few families in this area in the same predicament and I think its time somebody tried to help us or give us some idea how to help ourselves. There are parents and children in this town who are actually cold and hungry and most of them are good willing workers, but we just can't find any work. And the unemployment insurance think because we are from a small town they can pull the wool over our eyes and we'll sit back and take it.

That is all I shall read from that letter. I have visited this family. The lady is certainly not exaggerating. They are having a tough time; the money should have been available to them long ago. I am now investigating the above complaint and I know the minister will give me every consideration because I am sure he will not tolerate this sort of treatment of applicants.

Here is another complaint from a constituent of mine in Napanee, a man who has been working for one firm all his life since 1913. How long ago is that, Mr. Chairman? Fifty five years, working for one firm, during which time he never drew an unemployment insurance benefit. I quote this letter to show the kind of ill treatment to which many people in this country are being subjected. The letter is dated February 15, 1968, and is as follows:

Dear Sir,

In regard to unemployment I am sending this letter to you. As you know I have worked with the Napanee Iron Works, now the Napanee Industries, since 1913 at the age of 12 years, worked through two world wars.

I was ill in September 1966 and was home for some time. I was unable to return to the kind of work I had been doing. I had to have lighter work which they did not have at that time. The Napanee Industries gave me a lay-off slip until such time I applied for unemployment in September 1967 and was told by the manpower office in Kingston—

Here again I pause to inform the committee that the unemployment insurance office has been moved out of Napanee and centralized, in this case, in Kingston.

—that I did not have enough stamps in one year, also they wanted a doctor's certificate saying I was able to work, which I sent to them with a letter from Napanee Industries and the unemployment book with the stamps for my holiday pay for 1967. They still say I do not have enough stamps. I have paid unemployment since it started. It hardly seems fair. If there is anything that can be done about this I will really appreciate it.

Thanking you,

Milton Vanalstine.

I have no hesitation about reading this man's name into the record, because I have known him for years and I know he deserves whatever benefits the law will give him with regard to unemployment insurance. Canada owes this man and thousands more like him across our country a debt of gratitude, as well as the unemployment insurance which is coming to him after 55 years in the industrial service of this nation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Chairman, both the minister and I are investigating this case. A good many of these evils and ills can be laid against the heartless practices and narrow confined thinking of bureaucracy. I am not entirely blaming this government. One must know and recognize the workings of bureaucracy. When these evils are pointed out to whatever government happens to be in power I think that government should see to it that these wrongs are righted.

We need a complete overhaul of the Unemployment Insurance Act to make it work in a more equitable way in serving unemployed people under present changing conditions, conditions unknown in the 1940's and 1950's. People who have contributed for many years should not be discriminated against. I find that the man who has never applied for unemployment insurance and has never drawn unemployment insurance benefits often disqualifies himself when filling out the tricky and intricate application forms. On the other hand, the man who goes often to an unemployment insurance office knows how to fill out these forms, so that thereby he does not disqualify himself.

As I have already inferred I want to impress upon the minister that I am very much against the moving of unemployment insurance offices to the larger centres. I am sure I speak for a large part of the country when I say this, because this is the general opinion across the country. This centralization is not good; it results in the power of decision being placed in the hands of officials who do not know local conditions. What does an official in Ottawa, Toronto, Kingston or Belleville know about the cases of local applicants in smaller centres like Napanee and Picton? I say to the government, quit recognizing the Unemployment Insurance Act and its benefits as a charity to be doled out in a niggardly manner to the people, and recognize the program for what it is: an insurance fund which belongs to the people who paid into it. They should have full and ready access to it in time of need.

Mr. Fane: Mr. Chairman, I have a few remarks to make that I hope will receive the minister's attention, and I also want to ask him a couple of questions. First, however, I wish to state that I am very glad that he has seen fit to exempt the teaching profession from compulsory contributions to the unemployment insurance fund. In the province from which I come there is absolutely no unemployment in the teaching profession, and there is not any chance that there will be unemployment in it.

There is one other profession that is in the same boat. I am sure the minister has received a resolution from the Alberta Association of Registered Nurses, which reads:

—Resolved that the Alberta Association of Registered Nurses representing approximately 10,000 graduate professional nurses in the province of Alberta do strenuously object to any changes in the Unemployment Insurance Act or regulations made thereunder that would have the effect of compelling graduate professional nurses to make compulsory contributions to the unemployment insurance fund.

I did not hear the minister say whether nurses are exempted, but their profession also is one in which there is no unemployment, and it would be very unfair if they had to pay into the unemployment insurance fund all the time and not get any benefit from it. I hope the minister will tell me exactly where the nurses stand, and I hope it is in the same place as the members of the teaching profession.

It seems that for some people the Unemployment Insurance Act works out very nicely, while for others it does not work so well. About ten days ago I received a letter from a lady in my constiuency, who was laid off work last fall. She lives in a small town. Incidentally in Alberta we are not faced with the difficulty of having any local unemployment insurance offices closed because we just do not have any. These offices are in Edmonton, Calgary, and perhaps in the other bigger cities. There are none in the smaller towns, even though many of the smaller towns serve large communities.

This lady informed me that on January 21 she received a letter inquiring if she would travel more than 15 miles to work, if work were found for her. She said that during the winter she felt she should not be asked to travel more than 15 miles to find work. Later on she telephoned the office in Edmonton and told the officials she would travel a matter of 25 or 30 miles, provided it was on a good road. She immediately got word back that she had been disqualified and would not receive any more benefits.

I wrote back immediately and told her she had better make an appeal to the board of referees. She did just that, but in the meantime she is not getting any unemployment insurance benefit, and she cannot get her job back until springtime. Even though it appears to be springtime in Alberta at the moment, it is just too soon for it, and so she will have her job back probably in May. However, in the meantime she has nothing to live on.

She also told me that other people who had been working in the same place, who worked exactly the same amount of time, and who are living in the same town as she is, have not been cut off. No inquiries have been made about them and she simply cannot understand why in the world she was discriminated against. I did not bother the minister by writing to him about the case. However, I did write direct to the manager of the unemployment insurance office in Edmonton, a day or two after I had replied to the lady, and he wrote back that she had already followed my advice, that she had appealed to the board of referees, and that her file had gone to Winnipeg and was now out of his hands.

I have not yet received a reply from the Winnipeg office, but it seems very strange that people living in the same town, who had been working at the same job, who had put in exactly the same amount of time, even to the hour, were not questioned, while this one account was looked up and payment stopped. Why in the world does this procedure not apply to everybody? I think that is the way it should be.

Similar cases have come to my attention concerning persons whose payments were stopped. In most instances I was able to have those payments started again. I do not know, however, what the situation will be in this particular case. As I have said, other people have been in the same position as this lady. This situation would seem to parallel that described in the 91st psalm, where it is written that——a thousand shall fall at thy left hand and ten thousand at thy right hand; yet shall it not come nigh unto thee.

It does seem to me that this should not be the situation when we are dealing with something as important as unemployment insurance payments. I am sure the minister will say a few words about these things, when he has the opportunity. I hope he will pay particular attention to the resolution from the Alberta Association of Registered Nurses and to situations like those I mentioned which concern the people whom I have mentioned.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I was interested in the minister's remarks in closing the debate on second reading, when he referred to the problem concerning the closing of the unemployment insurance offices. This problem has been raised by nearly every member who has spoken.

[Mr. Fane.]

In his explanation the minister mentioned two or three points, one of which was that he did not have control over this matter because it is a matter which comes under the jurisdiction of the commission, only one member of which is a government appointee, the other two being labour and management appointees. I do not think it is necessarily a bad situation to have the appointments made in this manner. It has worked in this way for a long time.

Second, he mentioned that it had relation to the computerization and the I.B.M. cards. He pointed out that it is cheaper to handle the situation in this manner. But if a service is not provided to the people, then there is no value in its being cheaper. We are trying to serve the people. We are operating an insurance plan for the workers of Canada; it is their money we are administering.

The operation of this plan should be carried out so that the needs of the people are met. I can assure the minister that there is no benefit in terms of service to the people in many of the semi-rural areas. The minister may not be aware of this but, for instance in my area, there are many people who have a limited education in the language they use. The native tongue of many people in my area is French, yet most of them attended English speaking schools. They have great difficulty understanding the forms which are provided. One question with which they have difficulty is that pertaining to transportation. They are asked whether they have transportation. In many cases the person writes "no". When I discuss the situation with such a person and have the letter from the Unemployment Insurance Commission in front of me I ask him whether he drives a car, and he answers that he does. Then I ask him whether he has a car and he states that he has. Then I say to him, "You have transportation". He replies, "No; don't have transportation". Then I ask him what he considers to be transportation and he replies, "train and bus".

This is not the fault of the person involved. If he were able to go to the unemployment insurance office they would be able to ascertain in a moment whether or not he had transportation. This, however, cannot be done by means of a computer. The computer is not able to ascertain the interpretation the applicant places on the word "transportation". There is no advantage in the computer system if it does not provide a service. That system is satisfactory when used by a large insurance company, because such a company also has people who visit the policyholders and have a personal contact with them. It is all right for the head office to be computerized. If the post offices or the manpower centres were permitted to provide the services which formerly were provided by the unemployment insurance offices, we might be able to solve some of these problems. Originally these two important offices had a dual function, but they have now been separated.

I believe the minister must give further consideration to this matter of the division of these services. He mentioned that this came about before the last cabinet shuffle. I agree, but I feel sure he will agree with me that if these changes do not help the persons who are entitled to draw benefits, then the matter should be reconsidered. Almost every member who has spoken has expressed his concern about the problem of non-service to the individual and the fact that the individual does not receive any satisfaction from a computer. The computer does not do anything for him; it does not give him any money either. It may satisfy the officials in the department, but it certainly does not satisfy the people. I am surprised that the Liberal members in this house have no problems. I am surprised that they appear to come from urban areas in which there are unemployment insurance offices and manpower centres in the same town.

I am not suggesting that there should be an unemployment insurance office in every town, but I am suggesting that there should be one in every area. The people in my area can travel 140 miles to Timmins, but the office there is in a period of transition. Timmins will not be the sole depository for information concerning unemployment insurance. In the future it may be necessary for a person to go to Toronto. If one must drive to Toronto in order to find out about his unemployment insurance he may decide that it would be easier to go on the dole and obtain assistance from the municipality.

I wish the minister godspeed in any change he may be contemplating, because many people are totally dissatisfied with this situation. I believe that if the minister wished to do so he could bring in provisions which would reverse the situation so that a service would be provided to the people. I think the minister forgets the purpose of the fund. I am sure, Mr. Chairman, you must have been surprised at the statements which were made tonight which implied that after a person had been employed for a long period of time he should be able to get his money back. The minister applauds. I think this is a ridiculous situation. This is not an endowment policy; it is an insurance program. A person should only get his money back if he is available for work and no work is available for him. There is no other reason.

It seems to me there is a grave misunderstanding concerning what the unemployment insurance program is expected to do. Certainly the statements that have been made by a number of people who have excited the teachers would indicate that there is a need for better public relations in respect of unemployment insurance. Under the former director the matter of public relations was in good hands, but ever since there has been no continuation of a satisfactory public relations policy. Personally I had great respect for Mr. McGregor, the former director.

The minister may not feel it is within his prerogative to make these changes, but we have made changes before and are willing to make more. It seems that we should be willing to make changes in the regulations as well as in the legislation. The regulations are creating a situation which as a former labour representative I feel, was not anticipated. We have heard about the many letters hon. members have received, and I could read perhaps 15 or 20 of a similar nature which I have received in the last week or two. These problems now being brought to the attention of members of parliament might well have been handled by agents in the areas, to the satisfaction of the people involved.

This fund does not belong to the government; it belongs to the people who have contributed to it. Surely they should have some way of telling the government how they feel it should be administered. This is the place where this should be done. I am surprised the minister is not more flexible in the position he takes. I am sure he could have greater influence on the commission than he has indicated.

Mr. Hymmen: Mr. Chairman, my remarks are not prompted by the remarks of the hon. member for Timiskaming, because I intended to say something about amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act. No one questions that this legislation introduced by the Liberal government has provided benefits to the Canadian working force. Over the years there have been problems. When in the absence of the Minister of Labour the Minister of National Health and Welfare introduced this bill, I was encouraged by his explanation of the unemployment insurance program the government intended to carry out, and I was particularly impressed by the action suggested in respect of abuses.

In some respects the Unemployment Insurance Act is misnamed. Most hon. members of this house have life insurance, automobile insurance, accident insurance and fire insurance. They carry this insurance, not with the certainty but with the probability of receiving benefits. When the Unemployment Insurance Act was introduced there was a great deal of unemployment in this country. It was introduced in an attempt to provide funds to support the unemployed. Since that time our standards of education and living have increased considerably.

A close look should be taken not only at this act but at other legislation of this type on our statute books. The benefits provided under various statutes should be co-ordinated. I had occasion to speak about unemployment insurance in this house not long ago, when we were considering a private member's bill. I noted that members of the official opposition asked why the government did not adopt the recommendations of the Gill committee report. Let me say that I disagree entirely with one of the recommendations of that commttee regarding the universality of unemployment insurance. The recommendation was that regardless of the probability or possibility of an individual benefiting from unemployment insurance, he should make payments in order to provide funds for others who may benefit.

The Minister of Labour denied that there was some concern among professionals and self-employed indivduals regarding payments to the unemployment insurance fund, without the likelihood of their receiving any benefits. I have received many letters in this regard from these people expressing some concern. I disagree entirely with the principle involved in this recommendation regarding universality.

I am in full support of the higher ceiling in respect of unemployment insurance payments. Wages and standards of living have increased since this bill was last amended, and I believe that the maximum allowance for a working man with dependants is hopelessly inadequate. I am happy that the maximum has not reached that proposed last summer, because I felt at the time the suggested maximum was too high.

[Mr. Hymmen.]

Some members, including the hon. member for Timiskaming, have referred to problems connected with consolidation of the activities of unemployment insurance offices. I represent a riding in which the unemployment insurance office has been consolidated with the office of a neighbouring riding, so I am aware of some problems resulting from this consolidation. While I support efficiency in any government operation, the use of I.B.M. methods has created problems. Many of those seeking benefits in this country have come from foreign lands and find difficulty in filling out forms. For this reason there is some merit in the suggestion that the operations of the Unemployment Insurance Commission should be co-ordinated with those of the manpower department. In this way some direct help could be given to those individuals who are legitimately eligible for unemployment insurance benefits, but who for various reasons have difficulty filling out these forms. Many of them fill out forms inaccurately, with the result that the forms are then returned to be filled out again. This causes delays.

There is another problem I should like to bring to the minister's attention. It has been suggested to me that in some of the larger municipalities there is a problem with regard to welfare benefits paid by the municipality. In these areas people are sometimes out of work because of specific conditions in the municipality. We all know that the municipality has the responsibility to look after people who for reasons beyond their control are not able to find an immediate means of livelihood. There is here a problem caused by the remote nature of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, and it is very difficult to determine whether unemployment insurance benets are legitimately claimed and whether they should be provided. This has caused a great deal of trouble to the welfare departments in these municipalities. They do not know whether to provide sustenance immediately, whether to wait until the unemployment insurance benefits are received, or what to do about the problem.

Under the old operation—and again I say I would defend any change which reduced cost and produced more efficiency in any government operation—there was more direct liaison between the unemployment insurance office or the manpower office and the municipal welfare department. It was much easier to determine whether the unemployment insurance benefits should be paid, or whether the responsibility should be borne immediately by the municipal welfare department, so as to make sure that people who through no fault of their own were in need of assistance were not deprived of the necessities of housing and food.

I ask the minister whether this problem has been brought to his attention by municipalities and provincial welfare departments. If there are situations where a curtailment of industrial operation due to certain circumstances has brought an increase in welfare benefits, the knowledge that individuals who apply for such assistance will receive unemployment insurance benefits, and when they will receive them, would be very important to those responsible for seeing that these people are able to provide their immediate necessities.

We know that if an individual who is eligible for unemployment insurance benefit also receives municipal welfare, it is extremely doubtful that he will return that benefit to which he is not entitled. I trust that the minister will give this matter serious consideration and will take it up with the municipalities. I know there is great concern in my own municipality, and on the part of the Ontario welfare departments that are responsible for the administration of welfare payments.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words at this stage of the debate and tell the minister, in my turn, that I support the bill as far as the increase in the rates of unemployment insurance benefits is concerned.

On the other hand, while I agree with that part of the bill, I would have hoped that this piece of legislation sponsored by the minister had contained several other amendments to the present Unemployment Insurance Act and had provided for a reorganization of the U.I.C. system.

Like previous speakers, I feel that unemployment insurance offices are a little too widely scattered in rural areas. For instance, in the area I represent, namely Chapleau, one of the largest ridings of the country, there is no unemployment insurance office. In the entire northwestern area, there are only two, one in Rouyn and another in Val d'Or. But there is none in the riding of Chapleau. On the other hand, the Chibougamau-Chapais area is served by the Chicoutimi office.

From the Amos and La Sarre areas, or from the parishes to the north, especially the new centre of Lebel-Quévillon, there is a fairly long distance to cover before reaching the unemployment insurance office.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I feel it may be advisable to review that situation. I realize that applications for benefits can be sent through the mail, but as other members have pointed out, some delays at times are probably due to the fact that several applicants are somewhat less educated than the average people. Since they find it hard to understand the application forms for unemployment insurance benefits, they sometimes complete them incorrectly, which causes delays. That is why I feel that situation should be reviewed. If it is not possible to open new offices, in order to make them more available to the public, the mail application system might be reviewed and perhaps improved.

Another thing I should like to point out to the minister tonight has to do with the board of referees. There again, there is only one office in my area, the one at Rouyn, where people can lodge their appeals. Of course, those who are not satisfied with the official's decision are told that there are no costs to appeal to the board of referees. But a person must still incur travel and hotel expenses in Rouyn, and this may be quite an amount. We have to consider that a person out of work, who is claiming unemployment insurance benefits which are not given to him when he thinks he is entitled to them, is already short of money to travel, and he runs the risk of losing his appeal. Expenses are always high in such cases, and he thereby deprives his whole family of several dollars that could be used for their needs. There again, in my opinion, the members of the board of referees could be allowed at least to go to each of the unemployment insurance offices to hear the appeals, thereby sparing needless expenses to the claimants.

Mr. Chairman, when he introduced this bill, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) said, I think, that a large number of claimants were making false claims. I doubt that the number is very large. The fact that there are some such cases leads me to think that a difference should be made between those who make a false claim and those who make a faulty claim. I have often observed that when a claimant presented a faulty claim, he was acting in good faith. However, in every case, the officials of the Unemployment Insurance Commission think that the claimant has made a false statement.

In my opinion, that is unfair. These people should at least be given the benefit of the doubt until proved guilty.

It must not be thought that claiments are the only ones who make mistakes or erroneous statements. I have noticed cases where the officials of the Unemployment Insurance Commission themselves had made a mistake; they are not above making mistakes. These cases should also be taken into consideration.

There is another point I should like to make to the minister—I think he was told about it in the last two days—and that is, that employers, when they dismiss some of their employees, quite often neglect to give them their unemployment insurance booklet. This puts the employee or the claimant in a difficult situation. Some do not know what to do and do not put in their claim immediately; they wait until they receive their unemployment insurance booklet from their employer. Others, on the other hand, put in their claim immediately but, since they do not send their unemployment insurance booklet along with it, they encounter various difficulties and sometimes lose unemployment insurance benefits to which they would otherwise be entitled. I think that is what happens usually.

In my opinion, the number of mistaken claims is small in comparison with the ever increasing number of unemployment insurance claims. I think this should not receive more attention than necessary, and that steps should instead be taken to help the claimants to fill out their claim forms.

In that connection, Mr. Chairman, I will point out that nearly every month, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, through the Unemployment Insurance Commission, discloses the number of unemployed in Canada and in each province. Sometimes we are told that there are 280,000 unemployed. Other times, there are 300,000, 400,000; I think that there are now 465,000, if not more.

I wonder whether these figures give us a true picture of the employment situation in Canada. The public is brought to believe that there are now 465,000 unemployed in Canada, but there is one thing I want to emphasize: among these 465,000 unemployed, some were working a month ago or will be working in one, two, four weeks or more. What I want to say is that during the twelve months of a year, there are a lot more than 465,000 people who, at a given time, are unemployed and apply for unemployment insurance benefits.

On June 8, 1964, the government gave me an answer to a question I had put in the order paper. It pointed out that there had been in 1957, 1,256,051 people who had applied for unemployment insurance benefits; that means that in 1957, 1,256,051 workers had been unemployed at one time or another. In 1958, this figure was up to 1,682,948 applicants or unemployed. In 1959, it has risen to 1,792,-864. In 1960, it had fallen slightly, to 1,742,508 claimants. in 1961, the number of claimants had never been so high, 1,814,326. In 1962, there were 1,613,308 and in 1963, 1,507,802. In 1964, the last year for which I got figures, the number of applicants reached 1,385,142. All this to point out, Mr. Chairman, that those individuals at a certain time of the year were unemployed, only drawing some unemployment insurance benefits to provide for their needs and those of their family.

We know that any labourer who works two months a year, either in the building industry, as a lumberman or in any other field where the legislation allows him to draw unemployment insurance benefits, needs his entire income to make both ends meet. Now, how can the individuals who are out of work several weeks each year do so? Those persons always have an inadequate income and consequently can hardly succeed in living properly. Such is the situation at the present time, when the country has about 465,000 unemployed. However, in the year 1967, I do not think that the number of workers who had to live for some time on their unemployment insurance cheques exceeded one million.

In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, the increase in the benefit rates comes at the right time and improves somewhat the condition of those people who, at some time or other, have but that source of income to live on. That is why I agree with that part of the bill and I shall support it.

However, I notice that under this bill, the minister thought of including in the scope of the legislation people who have almost no chance to become unemployed. For instance, I take the case of the professors. I have in hand a letter signed by the president of the Quebec Teachers Corporation, Mr. Laliberté, who precisely points out the fact that, as far as the teachers are concerned, at least in the province of Quebec, the probability of benefiting from that insurance is practically nil.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I think that—

[English]

Mr. Nicholson: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman. I am sure the hon. member would want me to correct the impression he seems to have. The proposed amendment to this act by reason of the raising of the ceiling to $7,800 does not include teachers, nurses or any of the other people in such categories. It only extends to people, who are already covered by the act. I feel that this fact should be made clear, because many people seem to be under some misunderstanding.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, I thank the hon. minister for putting the record straight. I really thought that even the school teachers or any employee earning less than $6,500 had to contribute to the unemployment insurance fund.

I shall also point out to the hon. minister that, at the present time at least, most people who earn a salary of $6,000 or more, as a rule, have very little chance to become unemployed because precisely they hold steady jobs.

Take the case, for instance, of railway employees who are going to contribute for a whole year and will have very little chance to become unemployed. I think the hon. minister has taken precautions so that the fund does not run dry.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a remark and, at the same time, put a question to the hon. minister. I hope that he will be able to give me detailed information, or to tell me what the situation is at the present time.

We know, at least with regard to the province of Quebec, that the employees of the departments of highways or of colonization, do not contribute to the unemployment insurance fund. I do not think the hon. minister, the federal government, or the Unemployment Insurance Commission are concerned in this connection; but the Quebec government is.

In any event, I should like to know whether there have been recent negotiations, or whether negotiations are in progress, as a result of which the province of Quebec agrees that the employees of the departments of highways or colonization, or any other civil servants, should contribute to the unemployment insurance fund, because the employees of the departments already mentioned work only six months per year for the government and must find other employment, in the bush or elsewhere for the rest of the time. As a result, there is always a slack period, either in the fall or in the spring where for a few weeks they are not entitled to unemployment insurance, because they are without work, and are therefore not covered.

I should, therefore, like to know from the hon. minister whether negotiations are under way between the two governments to help those people. I should like to know whether the Unemployment Insurance Commission or the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson), who is responsible for that commission, could initiate an agreement with the Quebec government to allow those people to benefit from unemployment insurance coverage. I hope the hon. minister can give me that information.

[English]

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, we in the official opposition hope that it will still be possible tonight to complete the committee study of the bill, and then give the measure a third reading. We do so for two reasons, the first of which is the uncertainty that descends upon our proceedings from time to time, and the second is our honest desire to clear the way for the political steeplechase that is going to take place in April. It is our hope that perhaps we can finish before the ides of March and let the would-be Caesars go forth to their respective fates.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I am going to throw away the speech I was going to make and ask the minister one simple question. Are serious studies now going on in his department, before a government committee, or in the unemployment insurance commission itself in relation to the recommendations of the Gill report? If so, when might we expect legislation to be placed before this parliament arising therefrom?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, if I might reply to the question just asked by the hon. member for Halifax, I can assure him and other hon. members of the committee that the studies are being continued. Some studies have been completed. There is general support, I think, for many of the recommendations made by the Gill committee. Not for all of them, however; some will need modification in light of the events that have transpired since that committee made its very important and comprehensive study. However, I can assure the hon. member that this work is still under way under a committee chaired by the new chairman of the commission. It is the confident expectation of the government that legislation in the form of an important, comprehensive overhaul of the act will be introduced, certainly not at this session but we hope at the next session of parliament.

While I am on my feet I should like to answer a question asked by the hon. member for Chapleau regarding provincial civil servants. I understand that civil servants generally, whether employed by the province of Quebec or any other province in Canada, can be brought under the provisions of the act at the request of the provincial government concerned. The government of the province of Quebec understands this and it is up to that government to make a move if they wish such civil servants to be covered by unemployment insurance. There may be minor modifications in my statement to provincial employees, but I think I have given the accurate statement of the facts.

I think I have dealt with most of the other questions asked. When speaking on a question of privilege while the hon. member for Chapleau had the floor, I dealt with the question raised by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox in connection with teachers and certain other professions. There is no intention of including under the act teachers, nurses, doctors or other professional classes that do not need the benefits of the unemployment insurance program at the present time. I cannot speak for future governments, but I know that the government of which I am a member has no such course in mind. I gave that assurance to the house several months ago, but it may be that some hon. members of the committee were not in the house on that particular day.

The hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox also made reference to the brief of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. The coverage extended to employees of the agricultural industry—and agriculture has now become an industry in this country—was extended at the request of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. They were ably supported I might say by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale, who kept pressing for action over a period of months.

The federation has now asked for changes in the act or regulations and I can assure hon. members—and I have this from the commission itself—that at the request of the agricultural industry changes have already been made in the regulations governing agriculture. These new regulations have not been in force long enough, however, to make a final determination of the extent and nature of the coverage, but the problems that have arisen are under constant study. The commission assures me that it will listen sympathetically to reasonable suggestions for improvement which might come from the Canadian Federation of Agriculture or from any other interested body.

The hon. member for Timiskaming made certain suggestions and alleged that there were defects in the operation of the Unemployment Insurance Act. He also stressed that the guiding feature should not be that of economy. Perhaps he did not hear me when I said this afternoon that the commission stated, at least in their report to me, that while economies are important the efficient operation of the act is of paramount importance. They are trying to keep all these factors in mind as they apply the provisions of the act.

However, Mr. Chairman, although many of these suggestions are helpful and will be kept in mind when the over-all revision of the act takes place, I should remind hon. members that the scope of the bill under consideration is limited, and particularly that the time factor is very important. I can assure hon. members that it will be a minimum of three months, and perhaps a little more than that, after the act has been passed and has received royal assent before the forms can be printed and made available and before the act can be put into operation. Therefore early passage of the measure is necessary if we want to accomplish the results that all parties in the house seem anxious to bring about as quickly as possible.

Bill reported.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read a third time?

Some hon. Members: By leave, now.

Mr. Nicholson moved third reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the house leader to confirm what business the government proposes to lay before the house tomorrow and on Monday.

Mr. MacEachen: Tomorrow we intend to call supplementary estimates, beginning with agriculture. When that is completed, we shall call the finance estimates.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): When does the house leader propose to take up the housing act bill?

Mr. MacEachen: I am not certain, Mr. Speaker. Our understanding was that we would deal with agriculture and then with finance; but I shall be happy to discuss with the house leaders when to call the housing act bill.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): I presume that when we reach the finance item we shall have a wide ranging debate on the subject, as agreed previously.

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, I think that is the understanding.

Mr. Knowles: To complete the record, was it not made clear that external affairs would follow finance?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, that was the understanding.

Mr. Nasserden: May I ask the house leader whether the Minister of Trade and Commerce will announce the final payments for wheat, oats and barley in the discussion on the agriculture estimates?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY—STEPS TO MEET INCREASE IN COST OF LIVING

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, almost two weeks ago I asked the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs what his department intends to do in the face of the 4½ per cent rise in the cost of living which has taken place between January, 1967 and January, 1968. Recent events have prevented this question being dealt with. There is no doubt that the cost of living has kept rising as stealthily in the recent past as in the past two years. If it was necessary to do something about the cost of living a year and a half ago, it is even more necessary to do something now.

We hear about all the difficulties that people have in all the ridings of this country; yet I firmly believe that our people face no problem which worries them more than the problem of stealthily rising costs. The cost of living is going up all the time, and those who do the family budgeting notice most how it rises. I get many letters that are filled with despair, letters from people about food costs, about rent costs and clothing costs, and all those other matters which come within the purview of the household.

Household items have been getting more expensive. We have heard questions raised in this house about increased prices of gasoline and oil, and of basic steel. To none of these questions has the government given an answer; it has never told us what it intends to do. We cannot continue to shuffle these matters off. I asked the minister of consumer affairs some time ago when it was his intention, if indeed it was his intention, to call the committee on consumer prices into session again. It was our understanding when this committee made its report that it would most likely be sitting again, because there were many aspects of the economy into which we had made no inquiry and which were badly in need of examination, as they still are. The minister said it was not his intention in the foreseeable future to re-establish the committee, though he thought there might conceivably be some references to it.

This is not good enough. Late in the fall a Gallup poll was taken among the people of this country, and of all the things they felt should be dealt with in the field of consumer and corporate affairs, the cost of living was mentioned before all other matters by 45 per cent of those asked. And 45 per cent of the people, or more, would give the same answer today.

People are feeling the pinch, and I want to know what the minister and his department are prepared to do. We asked that this committee should be allowed to meet again and the reply was, in effect, no. We asked for a prices review board to be set up to look into cases where the prices of basic commodities and household essentials have been unjustifiably increased. Again the answer has been, no. The minister has indicated that he will deal with all consumer problems except the most important one of price. When it comes to price, he says, no.

There is one point at which the minister's "no" has broken down, and as far as I am concerned this is the thin end of the wedge. He has been prepared to introduce legislation having to do with the Trade Marks Act and the Patent Act which, he says, will have the effect of lowering prices to the consumer. To quote his own words:

> The government now has a program which it calculates will bring about a reduction in the price of drugs to the consumer.

I am not saying the entire program resides in amendments to the patents and trade marks legislation. But if the government is prepared to go ahead with a program which it believes will bring down the price of drugs, then I maintain there is nothing to prevent this administration from taking action which it believes will bring down the price of basic household essentials and commodities such as gas, oil, steel and the rest. I have no means of knowing whether the government's policy with respect to drugs will work. But they cut the ground from beneath their own feet when they introduced this legislation to bring down drug prices. I want to ask the government when it is intended to bring in such a program to deal with prices in the other fields I have mentioned. The people are waiting anxiously for this to be done. In the meantime a great many of them are no longer able even to keep up the pretence of enjoying a modern standard of living.

Mr. Ovide Laflamme (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes at my disposal, I should like to reply to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) and tell her, first of all, that the government obviously does not have absolute jurisdiction in the field of price control.

[English]

With respect to prices it is well known that the federal jurisdiction is limited in this area. Since the federal government does not have authority to impose pervasive price controls, except in a national emergency such as war, legislation which establishes price levels is provincial legislation, and I think that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) knows this pretty well. The only exception to this in the federal field is the rates set for certain public utilities, such as railway rates.

[Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway).]

The movement of prices depends on a number of complicated factors. Some of the factors depend on world economic conditions; others relate to domestic fiscal, monetary and tariff policy. The conditions and economic expectations of the marketplace also come into play. As hon. members are aware, the department does not have responsibility for the major instruments of fiscal policy which influence the general level of prices. These matters have been dealt with on a number of occasions by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp), and he has clearly shown that there is no simple solution.

Our department does have responsibility for legislation that indirectly influences the level of prices, and it is our intention as effectively as possible to use the means at our disposal. Among these means there is the Combines Investigation Act, which seeks to eliminate certain practices in restraint of trade in goods and some specific services. Under this legislation a formal inquiry into price increases is made if the price increases appear to be the result of some action which is itself an offence under that act, such as a conspiracy, an abuse of monopoly power, or an attempt to enforce resale price maintenance.

It is our intention moreover to seek to have the legislation amended to include services not presently covered by it. These amendments will have to wait until the Economic Council of Canada makes its report advising on the modernization of the Combines Investigation Act, which will make this act even more effective.

The Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs can also examine and analyse selected areas of federal activities which can influence prices, and take remedial action. There is now before the house legislation to amend the Patent Act and the Trade Marks Act, which is intended to stimulate price competition among sellers of patented and trade marked drugs, through reducing protection against imports which is provided by the present legislation. When taking part in the debate the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway praised the government for bringing this important legislation before the house. This legislation is only one step in a program intended to lower the prices of drugs, while ensuring safe drugs and a viable domestic drug industry.

The new department is also undertaking investigation and research designed to assist consumers—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. gentleman's time has expired.

CRIMINAL CODE—SUGGESTED AMENDMENT RESPECTING REPRESENTATION BY COUNSEL

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, on several occasions I have asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Trudeau) whether he is considering including a section in the omnibus bill amending the Criminal Code which would spell out the right to counsel of any person involved in difficulties with the law. I am sorry that the minister is not present tonight because, knowing his long and active interest in the question of civil liberties before he became a member of this house, I would like to get an explanation from him for his rejection of the suggestion that such a provision be added to the proposed amendments to the Criminal Code.

There is no question, Mr. Speaker, but that there have been, and frequently are cases of people who have been and are treated much more roughly by the courts than they ought to be, simply because they have not been able to afford to be represented by counsel. Several weeks ago newspapers across Canada carried reports such as this one which appeared in the Toronto Star of February 10:

> The Supreme Court of Canada struck a blow for common sense and humanity this week when it ordered the release of John Hadden.
> John Hadden is the British Columbia man who was sentenced to what amounts to life imprisonment for the theft of a $1.25 can opener.

He was convicted as a habitual criminal. I am certain that he, like 95 per cent of others who are convicted of being habitual criminals, was not represented by a lawyer when so charged. Similarly there was a recent case in the Quebec courts of a man accused of murder, I believe, who testified that when he was picked up by the police, was being questioned and asked to be represented by counsel, he was refused this request. While he was being held by the police he was beaten into unconsciousness—so many times in fact that he confessed to the crime which he claims he did not commit. He may or may not have been telling the truth. The fact is, however, that he did not have counsel. I believe he should have had the right to have counsel.

I should like to remind hon. members of the Steven Truscott case. I wish to refer only to the fact that Steven Truscott, a 14 year old boy, was picked up by the police and questioned for five or six hours—this fact has not been disproved by anyone—without having a lawyer represent him. When his father came to the police station to be with him the police kept his father in an anteroom. I believe this is the type of action we should not tolerate in this country. Many Canadians believe that the United States is much less a democratic country than ours, but the United States supreme court has spelled out clearly and definitely the rights of people who are being questioned by the police to be represented by counsel. To summarize a few things the supreme court said, I shall quote from an editorial which appeared in the Toronto Daily Star of November 26, 1966:

> The rules laid down by the U.S. Supreme Court in a series of cases this year go much farther.

This has reference to the case to which I referred.

> The police must not only warn the prisoner that he is not obliged to make any statement; they must also tell him that he is entitled to counsel, and inform him of any legal aid arrangements by which he can obtain the services of a lawyer if he is unable to pay for one.
> The prisoner is entitled to have his lawyer present during any questioning.
> If the prisoner "indicates in any manner" that he does not wish to be interrogated, the police must stop questioning him.
> If a prisoner who does not have legal assistance makes a statement to the police, this cannot be used against him at his trial unless prosecution proves that he "knowingly and intelligently" waived his legal rights.

I cannot argue with the Minister of Justice when he says that the best way to guarantee to a person the right to counsel would be to entrench that right in the charter of human rights the minister has proposed. It is obvious that in the near future some provincial governments will not give the people of Canada this kind of protection.

It seems to me there is a very simple way in which many of the things which have happened in the few illustrations I have given could be avoided, if the minister would agree to a very simple addition to his omnibus bill to amend the Criminal Code. This bill has had wonderful support, partly deserved and I believe partly undeserved, from the public. He could simply add a clause, which would state that every person who has difficulty with the police or with the law has a right to be represented by counsel.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, there really seems to be little to add to the remarks the minister made in reply to the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—when the hon. member first posed this question on February 13. That answer by the minister can be found at page 6670 of Hansard.

• (10:20 p.m.)

Both the minister and I recognize the soundness of the argument which was accepted by the supreme court of the United States in the Escobedo case. The minister has illustrated his acceptance by the proposed Canadian charter for human rights which, not very many weeks ago, he proposed to be accepted by the provincial attorneys general and the heads of government of various provinces.

In regard to the answer given at that time I can add nothing more except perhaps to repeat what he said at that time, that the problem of individual liberty as it may be challenged by action in the courts is not confined to the Criminal Code, but extends throughout a much broader field. Some of the celebrated cases in the courts in recent years have not been under the Criminal Code, but under provincial jurisdiction, as in cases of mental incompetency applications. I am aware that the hon. member is aware of those cases. I find no lis or disagreement between myself and the hon. member on the desirability of this kind of change in the laws of our country.

The main question is how best to effect a change. I share the minister's viewpoint that ultimately and fundamentally this can best be affected by the kind of change in our basic law on human rights which he has proposed by the basic entrenched right to counsel before the courts.

INDUSTRY—POSSIBLE CHANGE IN CRITERIA RESPECTING DESIGNATED AREAS

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the criteria established by the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) in relation to areas which may become designated for assistance for the development and economic growth of primary industry are such that they may be helpful. Obviously they have been helpful in some areas because there are some 80 areas designated. However, this militates against certain other areas, because the program does not take into account in alternative criteria the factors of seasonality in certain industries.

In British Columbia the logging and sawmill industries are primarily seasonal, as is the construction, fishing and other industries. They are affected by the seasons. Because of seasonality, people find themselves out of work on a regular basis. There is no seasonability factor taken into account in the criteria established for the designation of areas needing development.

It may very well be that the income derived by individuals employed in these seasonal occupations at times will be higher than the $4,250 set out as the floor under the area development criteria for designated areas. The fact is that the seasonality of this situation and the regular occurrence of unemployment tend to depress the economy of a whole area. For argument's sake let us consider the logging industry in British Columbia. In that industry there is a regular period of unemployment, and there are regular depressed periods during specific times throughout the years which should be taken into account.

I ask that this situation be looked at very carefully. I have no suggestion to make at this time about the words which might be used to spell out the matter of seasonability or seasonality of employment, but it is a fact that should be included in the criteria. If it is included, it will mean that those areas which now find themselves in an awkward position, unable to fit into the criteria, unable to receive the assistance provided by the area development program, will be able to receive such assistance and the level of economic activity and the well-being of the people, which is the prime concern of the program, will be improved.

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, the question of seasonality is one that I think can justly be said to be of concern in the administration of the area development program, and has been so from the inception of the program. As the house may well be aware, there was originally in the criteria employed for the designation of areas to benefit under the area development program this factor of seasonality which, in the instance given by the hon. member, is a matter of such concern.

Curiously, or perhaps not curiously but naturally, because of the wide variety of economic activity in this country and the wide variety of occupations, early criteria founded on the basis of seasonality were the subject of very considerable debate and very considerable criticism. The critics maintained that the criteria unduly favoured certain areas which did not really fall within the basic purpose of the program, which is to assist areas of chronic unemployment or underemployment of the labour force.

Hon. members may recall that the employment seasonality which was the subject of so much comment was in areas with industries of relatively high levels of employment and relatively high pay levels, such as the automobile industry and the farm machinery industry where areas were designated and which in fact, when applying broader judgment to the question, did not really seem to be areas of chronic underemployment or unemployment.

It was as a result of comments of this nature and a broader judgment of the program within this context that the seasonal factor was removed, and in the criteria to be used by the area development program it was decided to try to arrive at some kind of averaging throughout the entire year's employment to find out if, in fact, taking the year as a whole, there really was a chronic area of unemployment or underemployment of the labour force such as to require the special incentives that the program provides.

I regret that I cannot assure the hon. member that the change he proposes will automatically become a change of law. I can assure him that, as has been the case in each of the years the program has been in effect, the statistics employed for the purpose of establishing the designation of particular areas will be reviewed annually. I would remind the house that as a result of this annual review the criteria have been changed from time to time. I am confident that in the course of the review of the statistics which will take place in the coming year, once again the question of the problem of seasonality as related to chronic unemployment will be considered, and not any the less because of the representations made by the hon. member.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.31 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, March 1, 1968

The house met at 11 a.m.

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

NINTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. H. E. Gray (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the ninth report of the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs prepared, as usual, in English and French.

[Translation]

In this report we return to the house the text of the resolution on customs tariff.

[Editor's note: For report referred to above, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

[English]

LABOUR RELATIONS

INQUIRY INTO LABOUR UNREST IN ST. LAWRENCE PORTS

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table copies in English and French of the order which I, as Minister of Labour, have made appointing Hon. Arthur I. Smith of the Superior Court of Quebec as an industrial inquiry commission to inquire into conditions of labour unrest in the three St. Lawrence ports.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to table this document?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

PROVISION FOR INDICATION OF LIFE EXPECTANCY OF PRODUCT

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-203, to amend the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs Act.

Mr. Knowles: Explain.

Mr. Mather: The purpose of this bill is to amend the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs Act to provide, so far as parliament may do so, that manufacturers and marketers be required to indicate the life expectancy of their products. Many manufacturers now have a good idea how long a toaster or a light bulb will last, for example. If this bill is approved the consumer will also have that knowledge.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AGRICULTURE

PROTECTION OF DAIRY INDUSTRY AGAINST ARTIFICIAL PRODUCTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lee Grills (Hastings South): Mr. Speaker, I intended directing my question to the Minister of Agriculture or his parliamentary assistant. In their absence I shall direct it to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. I am sure the minister is aware of the implications of the sale of artificial dairy products in Canada. Can he advise the house whether his department has any plan at this time to safeguard the interests of the Canadian dairy industry?

[Translation]

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, I think the Canadian Dairy Commission has already been notified of the problem and the Minister of Agriculture will be in a position to report on that matter later on next week.

[English]

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO CONSIDERATION OF CAPITAL GAINS TAX

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In its search for revenues to make up for the loss under the late Bill C-193, is the government giving consideration to proposing a capital gains tax?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): The government is looking at all sources of revenue. Of course a capital gains tax would not produce very much revenue immediately even if it were to be introduced.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[Translation]

INCOME TAX

EXEMPTION FOR WORKING MOTHERS TO COVER CHILD CARE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alcide Simard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Revenue.

Following a recommendation of the Carter report, will the minister agree to grant tax exemptions to working mothers for the care of their children?

Mr. Speaker: I think this question could easily be put on the order paper.

[English]

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO MEETING OF PRIME MINISTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): My question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Considering the leading role Canada has played in Rhodesian affairs, particularly with regard to sanctions, is the hon. gentleman's department arranging a face to face consultation with Sir Alec Douglas-Home subsequent to his talks today with Prime Minister Harold Wilson?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I shall have to wait until a report of those talks is given to the Canadian government.

Mr. Johnston: A supplementary question. Could the Secretary of State for External Affairs indicate whether there will be an October commonwealth conference, and whether it will be held in Ottawa?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I cannot add to what has already been said on this subject. No decision has been taken. The Canadian government is in consultation with other commonwealth governments, and when a decision on this matter has been reached the house will be advised.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

ACTION TO MEET SHORTAGE OF MEDICAL MANPOWER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): My question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Now that the government has apparently reached a definite decision on the future of medicare, will the hon. gentleman soon announce on motions or on another suitable occasion the government's plans to increase the number of trained medical personnel?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The plans for that purpose have already been indicated to parliament.

AGRICULTURE

INCLUSION OF FUR FARMERS UNDER FARM CREDIT LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): I should like to direct this question to the Minister of Finance. Has the government reached a decision with regard to including fur farmers under the Farm Credit Corporation? If not, when may a decision be expected in this regard?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): I think the Farm Credit Corporation comes under the jurisdiction of my colleague the Minister of Agriculture.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Any amendments to the Farm Credit Corporation Act will be announced in the house in the normal fashion. At the present time no changes in the ambit of the act are contemplated.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO FURTHER FISCAL PROPOSALS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Minister of Trade and Commerce stated an hour ago that he favours dealing with fiscal measures before there is any adjournment of the house. May I ask whether this represents government policy?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I have not seen a text of what my colleague has said, but I am sure that whatever he did say would be fully consistent with government policy. When the hon. gentleman said the Minister of Trade and Commerce had made a statement he used the word "favours", and I thought he was going on to say he favoured a particular candidate. I still hope he does.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SUMMERSIDE—REQUEST FOR DEFINITION OF STRATEGIC FUNCTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of National Defence. Has he received a resolution passed by the legislature of Prince Edward Island urging the federal government to define and establish a strategic military function for the Canadian forces base at Summerside, assuring its continuation at present or increased levels of usefulness and activity?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows it is not sufficient simply to ask whether a telegram or resolution has been received.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Then may I rephrase my question and ask the minister if he would take this resolution under advisement in the hope that he might be able to give a reassuring statement to the house and to the people of Prince Edward Island in the near future.

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think I can give that reassuring statement right now. On Monday I had the privilege of meeting with the premier and a delegation from the province who came to present a brief on the use of the Summerside base. I have declared, and I repeat, that the base is not going to be closed, that we are trying to maintain the highest possible level of military activity there, that we have received suggestions from the province which we are studying, and that we are going to meet in a couple of weeks' time to decide whether we can implement them.

INQUIRY AS TO REDUCTION IN STRENGTH OF ARMED FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of National Defence. I would like to ask the minister if it was an information leak that Canadian armed forces personnel will be reduced to 90,000, or is this a policy decision being considered by his department and the government?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): The way I understand it, Mr. Speaker, that is a speculative story. We have fixed the floor at 100,000 and I hope we can stay there. This is what I consider a minimum to meet the commitments that we have.

SHIPPING

MONTREAL—INQUIRY AS TO ACTION TO CONTROL PILFERAGE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Transport. In view of the serious dangers to the port of Montreal this coming shipping season—I believe the minister knows what those risks are—would he take into consideration the recommendations of the last eight inquiries into this situation and bring about some action before the shipping season opens in earnest next month?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, some action has already been taken. As my hon. friend might expect, the National Harbours Board has already acted in one of the most critical areas relating to pilferage. They have hired some of the most competent people available in the business to establish a police system to bring this abuse under control. They have confidence that the plans they have embarked on can cope, hopefully quite adequately, with what has been a very serious problem. Although an additional inquiry is being made I am sure that wherever action is possible, based on previous inquiries, it will not be held up just because another inquiry is under way.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. Has the minister heard of any indications of an intention to hold lock-outs at the grain terminal plants in the port of Montreal this year?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): I have heard some rumours but I have no definite information.

Mr. Grafftey: You will wait for the crisis to develop. This is government by crisis.

HARBOURS

INQUIRY AS TO REORGANIZATION OF ADMINISTRATION POLICIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. In view of mounting criticism from many ports in Canada, including Montreal, is the government considering a major reorganization of finance and administration policies with respect to these ports, and if so when will it be implemented?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): This is a very major policy question, Mr. Speaker, but a study is being done to review the present operations of all ports, the different administrations which apply to them, and the relative success of the different forms of administration. Once this study has been done we will be in a better position to know what changes, if any, should be recommended so far as port administration is concerned.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): As a supplementary question, can the minister say whether the government has in mind a method by which there would be a greater degree of local autonomy given to the ports?

Mr. Hellyer: Inevitably, Mr. Speaker, this is one of the questions which will be raised and hopefully answered, or at least dealt with in the inquiry. It is one of the things we would have to know before considering any alternative form of administration, whether it should be the same across the country or whether we need to have different forms to meet local conditions in different parts of the country.

LABOUR RELATIONS

MANITOBA—THREATENED STRIKE AT FLIN FLON MINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. E. Nixon (Algoma West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. Is the minister in a position to report on the threatened strike of the employees of Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Company of Flin Flon, Manitoba, which was set for today?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for having given me notice of his question. I might say that the strike deadline constituted a serious threat to the economy of Flin Flon. When I learned of it I dispatched a special mediator to the area about a week ago. I am happy to say I have just received a report that a tentative settlement was agreed upon yesterday and approved by a vote of the union members taken last night. It would seem that the threatened strike has been averted.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

JOHN STEPHEN MARSHALL—REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF SENTENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister of Indian affairs. Has he received any representations on behalf of John Stephen Marshall of the Eskasoni Indian reservation? I understand these representations were made by St. Francis Xavier University and the John Howard Society with regard to the charge of arson and subsequent severe sentence.

In view of the sad and regrettable circumstances surrounding the case would the minister please check with the Solicitor General and the Minister of Justice to see whether a reassessment could be made of this case?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am quite certain the hon. member would not wish me to comment on the quality of justice dispensed by Canadian courts. Recourse is available, and I understand an appeal is being organized on behalf of the man. Some of my officials think there are some extenuating circumstances, in that a new house was being constructed for the man and there was some evidence that he was in a hurry to get into it.

[Later:]

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I should like to pose a supplementary question with regard to John Stephen Marshall. In view of the fact that the minister did not indicate in his reply that he will institute an inquiry, may I direct my question to the Solicitor General. Is he aware that this man has suffered long term unemployment, which is rampant in his region; that he suffered from alcoholism, which is rampant across Canada; that he could not speak English, only Mic-Mac; and was not represented by defence counsel? Could he, in view of these extenuating circumstances, cause an inquiry to be held?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I cannot add anything to the answer given by my colleague the Minister for Indian Affairs and Northern Development, but I will discuss the matter with him.

COAL

ROUTE TO BE FOLLOWED BY EXPORTS TO JAPAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. I apologize for not having given him notice, but there is a good deal of interest in the west with regard to the shipping of Fernie coal to the coast. Has the minister anything further to report to the house with regard to the shipment of this coal to Canadian Pacific ports?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there is not very much I can add to what has been said already. Negotiations with the company are continuing, and I am still hopeful that the coal will be carried by Canadian carriers to the lower mainland port. I still believe this is essential so far as Canadian interests are concerned, and we are assuming that this will be the case.

[Translation]

INDUSTRY

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR INCLUSION OF ABITIBI AS DESIGNATED AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the hon. Minister of Industry.

In view of the fact that some industries would readily settle in Abitibi, an area which has been neglected for many years, does the hon. minister intend to include that area in the list of designated areas?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, the selection of designated areas is made after studying the unemployment statistics. There is no question of discretion or selection other than that based on the study of unemployment statistics.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question. Is the minister aware of the fact that several hundred people in Abitibi, particularly in La Sarre area, are forced to go and find work in the neighbouring province of Ontario? Is he also aware of the fact that this latter region is considered to be a designated area and that the industries which are now thinking of locating at La Sarre would consider going to Ontario, if Abitibi is not recognized as a designated area?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, has the minister received representations by the organized bodies of the northwestern Quebec area asking him to include the area in the list of designated areas?

Mr. Drury: Not personally, Mr. Speaker, but I shall inquire into it, in order to find out if representations have been made to the department.

[English]

AGRICULTURE

PROPOSED AMENDMENT OF DAIRY COMMISSION LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Loney (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he is aware of the serious implications of Bill S-34, to amend the dairy commission act, which was introduced in the Senate by his party's agricultural critic.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking for an expression of opinion, and I suggest the question is not in order.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

INQUIRY AS TO OPPORTUNITY FOR HOUSE DISCUSSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Nicholas Mandziuk (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether, in planning the work of this house for the remainder of this session, any consideration is being given to setting aside a day or two to discuss the constitutional questions the Prime Minister had in mind before the defeat of the government.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the first thing I should like to say to the hon. gentleman is that I am sure all of us in this house are very glad to see him in his seat today after a long interval of serious illness.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Prime Minister indicated, I think on Wednesday, that the government would have been happy to consider in this house last week the constitutional conference and its implications. However, there was not a general disposition on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite to accommodate the government in that regard. We regard this as a very important matter, and we will have to consider this further manifestation of interest in this vital problem that faces the Canadian people at this time.

Mr. Mandziuk: Mr. Speaker, would you request the Acting Prime Minister to give us several days advance notice of any plan to hold such a debate?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the house will be acquainted with the program which faces parliament in its ensuing days.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FISHERIES

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF FRESH WATER FISH MARKETING BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric Stefanson (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Minister of Trade and Commerce is reported to be leaving his present portfolio, can he give the house an up to date progress report in respect of the recommendations of the McIvor commission on fresh water fish marketing?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we still have this under consideration, and we are in active consultation with the western provinces, particularly Manitoba. We are developing a program which will allow us to work together, federally and provincially, to evolve a plan which we hope will help the fresh water fishermen in the marketing of their fish.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce a supplementary question. We realize it takes two tries to stay in. How many tries is it going to take to get out?

TRADE

REPORTED HEAVY IMPORTS OF VEGETABLE OILS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, several days ago I asked the Minister of Agriculture whether he would look into the problem in relation to the heavy importation of vegetable oils in direct competition with domestic oils which are now in oversupply. Is the minister prepared to answer that question now?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not have the answer at the present time. I understand the supplementary estimates are to be considered today, including those of the Department of Agriculture. During our consideration of those estimates I will undertake to answer the question, if that is satisfactory.

AGRICULTURE

MILK—REQUEST FOR INCREASED MINIMUM SUPPORT PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, I also have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. What is the government's reaction to the request by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture for a minimum support price of $5 per hundredweight for manufacturing milk, and will some action be taken immediately in this area in order to assist Canada's dairy industry?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest the point made a moment ago by the Minister of Agriculture is valid. In a few minutes we are going to be considering the estimates of the Department of Agriculture, and this question might be asked at that time.

AIRPORTS

INQUIRY AS TO IMPROVED SECURITY MEASURES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether he is taking urgent steps to improve security at large Canadian airports, in view of the robbery that is reported to have taken place at the Montreal airport last night.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it will be necessary to get more information than I now have in order to know just what happened and what measures may be required. There is always a cut-off point in respect of security as between the cost of providing it and the benefits resulting. This is something under constant consideration by the Department of National Defence, the Department of Transport and other departments.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister any reason to suspect that this robbery was carried out by a paramilitary organization?

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, I think it was.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): In green uniforms?

FISHERIES

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF GEOGRAPHICAL CO-ORDINATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. For some reason unknown to me he appears to be in a fairly amiable mood today. I would like to ask the minister whether in view of the possible pending change in his status he can tell the house that he is prepared to tidy up and complete a very important piece of unfinished business while he still occupies his present portfolio, namely the establishment of the base line co-ordinates from which our fishing zones will be measured.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wish the rules of the game permitted me to comment on what my hon. friend has said.

Mr. Nielsen: That has never stopped you before.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Perhaps I can do that outside the chamber later. I would like to say that whatever be my status, the government will continue to make progress on that matter.

POWER

AVAILABILITY OF REPORT ON BAY OF FUNDY POTENTIAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the submission of the report and the findings of the special committee which studied the Bay of Fundy tidal power potential, can the minister advise the house when this report will be available to members generally and the public?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I had the report yesterday but I have not yet had time to read it. I plan to do so over the week end, and I will answer the question on Monday.

FLOODS

ONTARIO—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. Has the federal government received a request from the government of Ontario for assistance in providing relief to the people of southwestern Ontario who suffered severe flood damage in the early part of February? If so, what decision has been reached?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that any request has come from the government of the province of Ontario.

MANPOWER

RECOMMENDATIONS FOR AMENDMENTS PROPOSED BY EDUCATION ASSOCIATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who was floating around the chamber a few moments ago.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): He is another loose fish. In view of the fact that the minister is not present at the moment I will put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. On February 19 I raised this matter with the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who was Acting Prime Minister on that occasion. In view of other events on that particular day he may not have passed on the question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Has the minister received the report from the Canadian Association for Adult Education on manpower policy? Also, has the government had an opportunity to consider changes in the present manpower policy to make it more effective in terms of dealing with manpower needs in the various provinces?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we received, read and analysed the report, which contains suggestions, some well-founded, others less.

When this department was created two years ago, there were about 150,000 workers in training. Last year there were 242,000, which is a great improvement. There are much fewer drop-outs than before.

Anyhow, some criticisms are valid and we will take the association's recommendations which we consider right.

[English]

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of these criticisms, and other criticisms that have since been expressed by various provincial departments, will there be an opportunity in the near future for provincial representatives to meet with the federal government to discuss possible changes in the program?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, we meet quite regularly with the provincial authorities, and we talk these problems over. We will continue to do so, but no radical change in our policy is contemplated.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REQUEST FOR USE OF FRENCH IN REPORTS AND INSTRUCTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the hon. Minister of Transport.

In view of the fact that a number of C.N.R. employees, and in particular French-speaking station agents working in the province of Quebec, are required to make their reports and receive their instructions in a language other than their mother tongue, will steps be taken without delay to correct this situation along the lines of the Laurendeau-Dunton report?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will take this question as notice and I shall answer it soon.

[English]

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO HOLDINGS IN EXCHANGE RESERVE FUND

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance whether he is in a position this morning to disclose to the house the status of the exchange fund reserves as of the end of February.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I made a statement this morning disclosing the position of the exchange fund. With the permission of the house I would be happy to read it now. It is very short. I do not know whether this would be in order.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Sharp: I announced today that Canada's holdings of gold and United States dollars, which are made up of holdings of the exchange fund account, the Minister of Finance and the Bank of Canada, were $2,490 million in terms of U.S. dollars on February 29, 1968. The corresponding figure for January 31, 1968, was $2,175.3 million. I recalled my press release of February 26 in which I announced that Canada had taken steps to draw the equivalent of United States $426 million from the International Monetary Fund.

This drawing has now taken place and the full amount is included in Canada's official reserves. The drawing included a sum of U.S. $241 million which represented Canada's creditor position in the International Monetary Fund at the time of the drawing. On January 31 Canada's creditor position was U.S. $243.1 million. Perhaps I can interpret this for the benefit of the house by saying—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): What is the net loss?

Mr. Sharp: —that the change, after taking into account the transfer, was a reduction in our reserves of $113,400,000.

Mr. Nielsen: How much has the cost of living gone down?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister says "after taking the transfer into consideration". Does he mean it is $113 million in addition to $426 million?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker; the other way around. What I meant was that after eliminating that transfer, if I had not made the transfer at all the change would have been a reduction of $113,400,000.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I ask the Minister of Finance whether the $426 million which has been transferred or withdrawn from the International Monetary Fund represents the total amount in dollars that Canada has on deposit with the International Monetary Fund.

Mr. Sharp: As I explained at the time, we were transferring assets of our own representing our creditor position with the International Monetary Fund and the equivalent of our gold deposits into our accounts, so they would be visible and would indicate to those who might otherwise be speculating in the Canadian dollar that we had these assets available now and they would be used. We still have intact all our borrowing rights under the International Monetary Fund.

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether these adjustments in our reserve account involved the actual transfer of gold from the United States to Canada or vice versa.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I speak without checking the facts precisely, but I do not think any of our reduction in reserves has been represented by a reduction in our gold stocks. I believe it has all been represented by a reduction in our holdings of United States dollars.

EXPO '67

METHOD OF DEALING WITH PROSPECTIVE DEFICIT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): I have a related question, Mr. Speaker. I ask the Minister of Finance whether he has yet made any decision as to when action will be taken to deal with the entries and adjustments that will have to be made to take into account the Expo deficit.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would expect that would be dealt with in the new session. As I explained to the hon. member for Northumberland, we do not have to raise money for that purpose; that money has already been raised. It is a matter of accounting. That will be taken into account in the next fiscal year.

SPORTS

CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN FORTHCOMING OLYMPIC GAMES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare, whose department makes the fitness and amateur sports grants. Has the government been consulted by the Canadian Olympic committee concerning Canada's participation in the Olympic games, and has the government a view to express on this subject?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Department of National Health and Welfare has not been consulted with respect to the position taken by the Canadian representative on the international Olympic committee.

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the minister could give us an assurance that Canada will follow the traditional Olympic pattern of keeping politics and the games separate.

TRADE

INQUIRY AS TO SIGNING OF INTERNATIONAL GRAINS AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the widespread concern in the prairie provinces with respect to the coming into effect of the new world wheat agreement on July 1, can the minister give us now a progress report on the signing of this agreement by the various signatory governments so it will become effective on that date?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): There has been widespread signing of the protocol with the intention of signing the agreement on July 1. We are in the process of working to ensure confirmation from a number of countries.

UNITED NATIONS

RHODESIA—EFFECTIVENESS OF SANCTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question on the Rhodesian question to the Acting Prime Minister. It is prompted by the observation of the former British prime minister regarding the failure of sanctions. Can the minister advise us whether the government has the intention, or retains the intention, to take an initiative in the Security Council with regard to this matter?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have been taking an initiative in the Security Council, where we hope the report of the Secretary General will be discussed fairly soon. It will all depend on the conclusions reached with regard to the effectiveness of the sanctions. It would be wrong for anyone to say the sanctions have not been a success, and it would also be wrong to say they have succeeded to the extent that was anticipated. But undoubtedly they are being felt in Rhodesia.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PROPOSED SATURDAY SITTINGS FOR REMAINDER OF SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare in his capacity as government house leader. In view of the fact that the house lost a number of days in its business schedule due to the bungling of the government, would he accept the proposition that from now until the end of this session the house might sit on Saturdays?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): This would be agreeable to me, Mr. Speaker.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

INQUIRY AS TO ORGANIZATION MEETING OF COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare in his capacity as house leader. Is it the intention of the government to call together the public accounts committee for an organization meeting and if so when does he intend to do this?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The motion to refer the public accounts to the committee was approved some time ago, and I assumed that the former chairman of the committee would bring the members of that committee together. However, if there is anything the house leader should do in this matter I would be glad to do it.

Mr. Hales: I must suggest to the minister that at present the committee has no chairman, and it is the responsibility of the government to call an organization meeting of the committee.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): May I ask the minister whether he is not aware of the fact that the resolution referring the public accounts has not been carried but is still on the order paper? May I ask when it is intended to call the committee together for an organization meeting?

Mr. MacEachen: We can immediately call the organization meeting for the beginning of next week.

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): I wonder if the minister as house leader could tell us when the important work of the committee on privileges and elections may begin in order that it can complete its work in time for the next election.

Mr. MacEachen: Before we depart from the matter of public accounts, may I say that I would be happy early next week to move the motion to refer the public accounts to the standing committee.

[Later:]

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, if it is in order at this time I should like to rise on a matter of privilege. My point of privilege is a personal one, in that I think the government house leader implied that I should be responsible for calling the public accounts committee together for an organization meeting. I should like to make it perfectly clear that it is the responsibility of the government to call committees together for organization meetings, at which time the committees choose their chairmen.

The minister will recall that some three months ago he was asked by the house leader of the official opposition to call a meeting of this committee. Later the Leader of the Opposition asked the Prime Minister whether the government would call a meeting of the public accounts committee and he said he would look into the matter. A month ago I addressed a question to the minister on this matter and he too said he would look into it.

I wish it to be abundantly clear, Mr. Speaker, that it is not the responsibility of the former chairman of the committee to call an organization meeting.

INCOME TAX

INCLUSION OF GRATUITIES PAID TO RETIRED MINERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker yesterday the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacInnis) asked me a question which I would like to answer today.

Under the Income Tax Act, an individual must include, for income tax purposes, any amount received as superannuation or pension benefits.

In the case of an employer who has established a plan providing regular payments to retired employees, those payments represent superannuation or pension benefits, even if the employer is not compelled according to contractual clauses to make such payments.

[English]

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Approaching the matter from another point of view I should like to ask the Minister of National Revenue the following question. In the event that retired miners in Cape Breton choose not to report the gratuities they receive, under what regulation can the government or anyone else consider them as pension payments?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Under the Income Tax Act, a taxpayer is required to declare the payments he receives during the year, and if he does not do it, we must act according to the law.

[English]

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I have a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would ask the minister to review the circumstances under which these payments are made in respect to old age security. He will then find that there is an opportunity for anyone receiving the gratuity not to report it in his income declaration.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Acting Prime Minister can inform the house when the flag on the peace tower will be flown at half mast, in memory of one democratic process which died in this chamber last week.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): My hon. friend should recall that the government received a very large vote of confidence.

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Solicitor General. I have three Irish sweepstake tickets on the Lincolnshire, and I have personally received a letter from the Queen who has been kind enough to send me a government warrant for £25.0.0. advising me that she has drawn my number in the British lottery bonds. If I am arrested for carrying these Irish sweepstake tickets, will the police take the warrant from the Queen for £25.0.0. which I now have in my left hand pocket?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

TRANSPORT

BRITISH COLUMBIA—INQUIRY AS TO HARBOUR DEVELOPMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, as a member from Vancouver may I direct a most urgent question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the recent statement by Premier Bennett in the British Columbia legislature that only discussions, not negotiations, are going on relative to a new port development in the lower mainland area of British Columbia, will the minister kindly inform us as to the present situation, in view of the importance of this matter? May I remind him that on a recent visit to Vancouver he made a commitment on behalf of the government with regard to port development in that area.

Is the minister not answering my question?

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Research—

5c. Administration, operation and maintenance—to extend the purposes of vote 5 of the main estimates for 1967-68 to include a contribution of $10,000 to the town of Kapuskasing toward the construction of a road, $1.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply, supplementary estimates (C), 1967-68, of the Department of Agriculture. Shall vote 5c carry?

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, may I inquire whether the minister wishes to make a statement at this time?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, since we are discussing supplementary estimates rather than main estimates, at the end of our deliberations I will attempt to answer any questions hon. members may have, if this meets with the approval of the committee.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, for weeks the members of this party, many of whom either are now or in previous years have been actively engaged in the industry of agriculture in order to make a living, have been waiting impatiently for these supplementary estimates of the Department of Agriculture to be brought into this parliament. It is my personal opinion that no pestilence, plant disease, drought, flood or any other act of God has done more collective damage to agriculture on a national basis than this Liberal government. This statement would normally be considered one of partisan politics, but by documentation I shall show that unfortunately for this industry it is simply a statement of fact.

This government and its spokesmen both inside and outside parliament have constantly assured Canadian farmers that all was well; that the gross national product of farms was rising; that efficiency of production was still increasing; that prices of farm products under their administration were constantly rising; in short, Mr. Chairman, that farmers had never had it so good. I know from experience that they can no doubt produce the necessary figures to support this fairy tale, but I should like in the next few moments to indicate to this committee the almost hopeless economic quagmire that the action or lack of action of these hon. members opposite has created for the farmers of Canada who are trying to earn a living.

It is my intention, Mr. Chairman, to deal with the subject in broad and general terms only, for I shall be followed by colleagues in my party who shall be most specific and detailed; and, commodity by commodity, we hope to place before the members of this house the grim realities of the economic chaos facing nearly every agricultural endeavour in Canada today. The government says the farmers have never had it so good. I wonder whether the government is absolutely blind to conditions as they exist in this country today. Never had it so good, Mr. Chairman? Within the last 12 months we have had the largest protest march in the history of Canada right here on parliament hill by thousands of angry farmers protesting the policy or lack of policy of this government.

Never had it so good, Mr. Chairman? We have witnessed tractor demonstrations, protest meetings, farmers on picket lines, threats of food boycotts, violence, petitions to governments, closing of cheese factories, food canneries, food processing plants, a sugar refinery and creameries on a scale never dreamed possible in this country. We have seen segments of the industry, such as early fruits and vegetables, wool production and the greenhouse industry driven to such low economic levels that in large areas of Canada they are being abandoned entirely.

Never had it so good, Mr. Chairman? Let me give you a few examples of headlines that have appeared in farm papers, market reports and newspapers across the country. These are a few gathered at random. The first one appeared in the Blenheim News Tribune for February 15: "Winter wheat export worst in ten years". That does not refer to western wheat, Mr. Chairman, but to the soft winter wheat produced in eastern Canada.

[Mr. Danforth.]

Another headline in the same publication reads "Artificial products threat to dairy industry". This headline is from the Kent Farmer for November 20: "Farm subsidies not the answer". Another one reads "Soya bean growers ask investigation". From the Western Producer, February 22, 1967, under the heading "Promoting and protecting wheat sales" there is the comment "Canadian wheat export sales drastically reduced". Another headline in the same publication reads "Export drop hits soya bean industry". Then from the Windsor Star for February 10: "Quota fight threatens dairy farmers". Another headline reads "Times are real rough down on the farm". Then this headline appeared in the Farm and Country, published in Toronto, January 23: "Death threatens Ontario greenhouse industry". Another headline from the same publication for February 27 reads "Ontario Federation of Agriculture suggests plant seizure". This was a reference to the unfortunate closure of the sugar refinery at Chatham, bringing with it hardship to all the local sugar beet growers. Then from The Grower for October, 1967: "Brief asks for action on Australian imports". Again The Grower for February, 1968: "Does the strawberry industry have a future in Ontario?". That publication also carried this headline: "Kingsville plant closed". This had reference to the food processing plant of Canadian Canners Limited, which for years had canned peaches, potatoes and tomatoes.

You can hardly pick up a trade paper today, Mr. Chairman, without being faced with similar headlines, such as "Grade A price of eggs to producer sags to 20¢". The same type of headline is found with regard to nearly every section of agriculture. One headline reads, "Grade A Price Of Eggs To Producer Sags To 20¢ Per Day". Another reads, "Hog Prices Continue To Decline". Still another reads, "Beef Prices Down ½¢ Pound". And so it goes on.

• (12 noon)

Never had it so good? Economic forecasts for agriculture predict that gross income for farmers in 1968 will equal that of 1967 but rising costs will cut millions from net returns in 1968.

Never had it so good? The farmers of this nation are $800 million deeper in debt today than they were just ten years ago.

Never had it so good? Ernie Bezaire, a veteran farm reporter for the Windsor Star, on Saturday, February 10 put it this way:

> Farmers in southwestern Ontario would have to go back to the bitter 30's to find more troublesome times than they are now experiencing in agriculture.

In all fairness it must be said that world conditions and trade patterns directly affect our own industry. Other governments, however, immediately put into effect countermeasures to protect their own agricultural industries. But our government procrastinates, waffles, blunders and finally dashes into ill conceived action which has brought us almost to the point of economic annihilation.

The government may have meant well in its agricultural policy but may I, by citing some prime examples, show clearly that the government was either ill informed, ill advised, or just did not care. I shall deal first with administration. The government contended that in this modern day and age efficiency and decision were only possible by centralized departments and a chain of command. Hence it staked its political life on this policy and amalgamated the armed forces into a unified service. What about agriculture? In personnel the department is almost as big as the armed services. In this time of crisis in the agricultural industry the government went counter to its policy. It split responsibility for agriculture among the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

What has been the result of this action? The result is that we have the greatest possible confusion in this sector.

Second, the Minister of Agriculture races pell-mell on a course of action deliberately designed, as he has announced time and again, to move the small farmers of Canada—I believe he estimates them to be about 30 per cent of all farmers—off the land in order to make farms into sound, viable economic units and to create stability in agriculture. This is a popular argument but this policy collapses immediately when government action or inaction removes the profitable market for these so-called economic units. That is what happened when it allowed the deluge of imported canned fruits, meats, turkeys and, yes, eggs. Now we have the bankruptcy of the largest of these so-called stabilized farm units and have witnessed the recent bankruptcies of three large greenhouse firms in a single week. The government should learn. In the United States over 50,000 of these large economic units have collapsed in the last few years.

Third, the governmen says, "Move the farmers off the farms and retrain them." But what does the government do? It starts this program and then cuts off grants to build and finance technical schools where such training should take place. Consequently farm families are left to migrate to the nearest urban centre and to compete as unskilled labour for second class jobs.

Fourth, the government has constantly encouraged commodity groups in agriculture to police their own industries. They are told, "Cut down production; tailor your production to meet the domestic market." That sounds good and reads well. Farmers have complied faithfully only to find that the limited domestic market has been swamped with cheap imports when they have been ready to supply it.

Fifth, by advocating efficiency of production and larger economic units and by making credit easy the government has encouraged Canadian farmers to borrow millions of dollars to enlarge their businesses and improve their efficiency. Now the government has the effrontery to say that under the Kennedy tariff round some farmers will have to go, that there may be a temporary period when they will have to be phased out and go into some other agricultural endeavour. Any government that thinks like this knows absolutely nothing about modern agriculture.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Danforth: The capital investment required and the vast technical knowledge and special equipment needed in farming make it virtually impossible these days for farmers to change their fields of endeavour. If they did, in most instances the result would be economic ruin. Some farmers who financed their farms knew that it would take at least a generation to pay off the debt. That was done deliberately. Therefore, to speak of phasing out now is absolute nonsense.

Sixth, I wish to speak of long-range plans. To create economic units, as the government has suggested should be done, requires a tremendous amount of capital, absolute business management and indispensable long-range planning. By its bungling the government has caused tremendous damage. Its long-range policies do well to last the test of one year.

As prime examples of my contention I cite the three different dairy policies we have had in three years and the government's on again, off again, turkey import quotas.

Seventh, the confusion in the dairy industry would be comic if it were not so tragic. Dairy farmers in Ontario today are placed in an untenable position. Federal policy is explicitly directed toward shutting down small producers and forcing large units to produce greater volumes more efficiently. At the same time a provincial policy places limited quotas on producers, thus making expansion into larger production units almost impossible. Who says farmers never had it so good? Through the Department of Agriculture the government spends the taxpayers' money to expand tobacco production; through the Department of National Health and Welfare it spends the taxpayers' money to curtail the domestic consumption of tobacco.

Never had it so good? Our young people and our old people are leaving the land by the thousands. Our best cattle are being dispersed all over the world. Our best farm land is being covered with concrete and buildings. Our domestic markets are fast shrinking under the constant pressure of cheap imports. Canadian agriculture, once great and world admired, has been reduced to a state of clawing frantically for survival.

The government constantly whines when it is confronted with these facts. It asks, "What did you do when you were in power? Where were your policies?" When we were in office our policy was designed to keep farmers on the farms if they wanted to stay.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Danforth: We deliberately encouraged young people to choose farming as a way of life. Certainly we made mistakes, but much of our policy remains as a background to this government's policies. And our policy was tailored to meet the challenges of 1956, not of 1968.

As to our policy now, our leader will take part in this debate and he will put our ideas before the house. I must emphasize, however, that we believe there are three categories of farmers today and that all are absolutely essential to Canada. We have the part-time farmer, the family farmer and the corporate farmer, and no blanket policy can possibly meet all their needs.

Never had it so good? God help the Canadian farmer in this hour of his agony.

• (12:10 p.m.)

Mr. Peters: I am pleased to see the hon. member for Kootenay East assisting the Minister of Agriculture today. This may be evidence of new thought within the government, particularly since Cominco has been interested in agriculture for some time—I am thinking of the fertilizer industry—and I am sure that in the days ahead the minister may have some use for the advice which Cominco can provide.

This is not the occasion for a major debate on agriculture and we do not intend to treat it as such. But these supplementary estimates, the tag ends of the main estimates, do ask for a further $33 million for the Department of Agriculture. As I see it, the major problems facing the industry are those which have been mentioned by the hon. member for Kent (Ont.), and some of them arise out of government legislation whose implications have still to be faced.

For a long time there has been a general desire that agriculture should become more efficient. Farmers have agreed with this concept and have improved their operations with the result that there is far greater efficiency today in the dairy industry, for example, than there was in the past. This is true with regard to many other crops and farming activities. Yet we are still troubled by the difficulties facing farmers who live on marginal land, cultivating it as agricultural holdings when it should probably be used for some other purpose under the ARDA program. This program was supported by most members of parliament; yet great anomalies are arising from its operation. Dairy farmers have encountered many difficulties. A market for milk at $5 f.o.b. factory has resulted in an improvement in the incomes of farmers engaged in milk production, but the government's action a year ago in discontinuing payments on secondary milk has had an adverse effect on many producers whose net incomes have been sharply reduced. The government will have to do something about this situation.

It is true that production of milk should, if it is to be economic, bear a close relation to consumption. But if in the past the price support system we used resulted in a surplus, the type of program now being followed is likely to result in a limited number of farmers receiving a much larger share of revenue from production. Using large blocks of land and capital they will be operating on a scale much bigger than any which normal farmers could expect to reach. Eventually this may give rise to a situation in which Canadian consumers find themselves paying a great deal more for milk products because of their relative scarcity. This prospect has to be taken into consideration by the government when it is considering other aspects of policy with regard to the dairy industry.

Farmers will disagree, but it is my opinion that when a shortage of butter developed during the war the farm organizations should have asked the federal government to go into the production of margarine. Had this been done the farmers would have been able to control the relationship between margarine and butter. But they did not. In the event, the public outcry was so great that production and sale of margarine were allowed by law and since that time the product has been in direct competition with butter.

The market for margarine is a lucrative one. Those responsible for its production and marketing have been able to regulate the selling price with an eye to butter prices and have been able to parley the relatively small cost of production to a point where the return to the industry is a highly profitable one. In some cases, shrewd advertising has enabled the prices of oil substitutes to be raised until they are at a premium.

New products are being developed in agriculture, and their appearance should cause concern both to the department and to the farm organizations. It is surprising the number of things that can be done with our natural products. I am sure those who normally eat butter would find it difficult to be altogether certain today whether they were eating fresh butter or a substitute. Similarly, where there is a choice between fluid milk or reconstituted milk, or what is called multimilk, a condensed product, users would find it difficult to be sure which had been reconstituted and which had come from the farm in fluid form.

I understand that milk can now be produced from an artificial cow, a machine into which no milk product goes. We have all heard of the ship called Hope which went to a number of countries to provide medical services and we probably recall the millions of quarts of milk which were produced on that ship for the children of those countries. We know that this milk was reconstituted by using skim milk and other additives and that it was a very palatable product. Since that time we have become much more sophisticated in developing substitutes for milk. Now we have filled milk which is a milk product with the addition of vegetable or animal oils. There is another substitute product made entirely by machinery and experiments have shown it to be no different in taste from milk. The Department of Agriculture should be concerned about these developments. It should take steps in conjunction with farm organizations not to stop these developments but to discover how they can be integrated with the present agricultural program. These developments will continue whether we like them or not. What we are interested in is that they cause the least dislocation possible.

When the minister is preparing his estimates for next year he should provide funds for legislation to make it easier for young people to establish themselves on economic agricultural units. A few years ago a young person had to find $25,000 to start farming. Now the amount required is probably double.

At the opening of the Saskatchewan dam, as I am interested in irrigation I was concerned to see the type of farmers who attended the ceremony. I think most of them present would have holes in their heads if they were to become interested in irrigation. They were the original pioneer farmers, ranging in age from 50 to 70, and at that age it is unthinkable that they would buy the necessary equipment to instal irrigation facilities. The generation following them will have to do that, but a great deal of capital will be required.

If young people are to be encouraged to enter farming the government will have to make some changes in succession duties on land. The one thing which has risen even faster than the cost of living is the price of land. It is safe to say that if a man bought a mountain top ten years ago he could get twice as much today as he paid for it, no matter whether it has a useful purpose or not.

The rise in the price of land has been caused to some extent by farms on the outskirts of cities being bought for subdivisions. They are bought for prices ranging from $400,000 to $500,000 and the result is that other farmers believe their farms have an equivalent value. This may be all very well if they can sell their land but if they die before doing so the valuation made of their property is so great that estate duties demand that their families liquidate their holdings. Often the money left over after paying succession duties is insufficient to establish a surviving son in farming.

We shall have to give consideration to the point that was made by the hon. member for Kent (Ont.). We shall have to encourage youth to go into agriculture, but we cannot do this simply by providing money. If a young farmer came to me and asked what I thought of his chances of getting a loan of $20,000 or $25,000 to start farming from scratch, without a quota, I would think he was crazy. On the other hand, in many cases people who inherit farms may not be as efficient or as dedicated farmers as young people who choose farming voluntarily as their occupation.

I think that even E. P. Taylor might find difficulty in getting a return on his investment if he were to back a number of people going into farming, particularly dairy farming. If a return on such investment cannot be made then obviously it is not a good industry. Often the argument is made that the responsibility for encouraging people to enter farming is a split jurisdiction between the federal government and the provincial governments. I am always concerned when I hear the Minister of Agriculture say that something is the responsibility of his colleagues in the provincial legislatures and then hear the provincial ministers of agriculture say it is the responsibility of the federal minister.

Some arrangement should be made to provide co-operation between the provincial governments and the federal government in the matter of rural education. The tax on land for rural education in many cases is much heavier than the income of the rural population can afford.

My last point concerns the bookkeeping duties of farmers. I do not think the older farmers bother too much about these duties but the young farmer must keep books concerning compensation, income tax records, R.O.P. records, breeding records, artificial insemination records, unemployment insurance records, records for this and records for that. My brother tells me that 25 per cent of his day is spent on bookkeeping, and he is operating a reasonably small farm.

If a farmer makes a mistake in his income tax he must spend two or three days with the income tax people. If he makes a mistake in his workmen's compensation payments somebody from the compensation branch visits him. Now unemployment insurance payments will necessitate keeping a full wage and payroll list.

• (12:30 p.m.)

I have often been shocked to hear old-time farmers say that their bookkeeping system

was good enough for them 20 years ago and it will have to be good enough for them now. Then they are surprised when they find themselves in difficulty with one of these agencies. It seems to me that additional assistance should be provided by the various branches of government involved in this matter so that the necessary records in respect of compensation could be fitted in with the necessary records in respect of performance, breeding, artificial insemination and so on. If the other records could be fitted into what the department is already doing in the field of the extension of records, it seems to me that some assistance would be provided to the young people who go into farming. I realize that this is probably not a problem which can be worked out to meet satisfactorily all the changing conditions.

I am sure it would be an advantage to the young person entering the agricultural field to know what the difficulties are which are involved in the keeping of books in relation to his production, the deductions he may make and the records that are provided for him. It seems to me that this type of extension work would be of value to him in judging his success in the farming operation. The minister may be able to tell us whether or not there has been success in this field. I have not had an opportunity to speak to anyone who has had any experience with loans through the Farm Credit Corporation and therefore I do not know what supervision has been applied or what the advantages are.

If we are to have fewer and fewer farmers it seems to me it will be more and more important that the farmers who do remain on the farm form more viable units which will be readily adaptable to change from one type of farming to another as the necessity arises. I am sure that those who are interested in agriculture have been watching with interest the situation involving those farmers who have shifted to the production of beef on the speculation that the price of beef would rise. I have read reports indicating that the price of beef has not gone up as had been expected. Apparently this is related to outside controls in this field. I am sure everyone engaged in agriculture is interested in why turkey prices have not gone up, and so on. It seems to me that this type of information would be of great help to the young people who are on their way to being successful farmers.

I believe that in ten years there will be a need for greater farm production. The most important aspect in this regard will be the need for marketing legislalion which will allow us to enter world markets not only in respect of wheat, butter and cheese but in respect of a number of other agricultural products. With the technology available to farmers today and the assistance we hope can be provided to them I am sure we will have a viable agricultural economy which will be able to hold its own and meet competition in world markets. This can be done only if the agricultural department moves forward quickly to meet the challenge facing the new generation which is entering the farming field today under totally new conditions.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I have a few words to say about those supplementary estimates since they are related to a matter which is quite important in my area, namely agriculture.

I would have liked the minister to give us an outline of his future agricultural policy, because it is always interesting for a member of this house and for the farmers of an area to know a few months in advance what can be expected from the authorities.

I know that the duty of the federal Minister of Agriculture is, in the first place, to inquire about every possible production throughout Canada and to provide markets. In order to reach that objective effectively, the department must discover new markets, and then protect and encourage them.

As concerns finding international markets which are of interest to Canada in general, I think that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) should get assistance from the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters) whose duty it is precisely to contact and visit other countries in order to assess trade possibilities.

I understand that the minister's duties are not very easy at this time. I have been a member of the committee on agriculture, forestry and rural development for six years and I had the opportunity to go and see for myself agricultural developments in other provinces. In fact, it is only since then that I really understand the minister's duties and all the difficluties he could come up against to guarantee markets to farmers because, in the final analysis, that is where success lies for the farmer. If we want production to be stable and profitable enough so that farmers can make a living, it is imperative to have a market that can absorb not only a part of production but the whole production. That is why I said earlier that the minister should insist on greater assistance from the Minister of Trade and Commerce in his exacting work of finding markets.

I also said that the government had to protect those international markets. Well and good to enter into agreements; but they must be beneficial to Canada and to Canadian producers. As a matter of fact, I had the opportunity yesterday, when our party met with the representatives of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, to refer to the dairy industry and the egg market. But should only those two questions be dealt with?

We are told that United States sales of dairy products have reached about the same level as ours. In my opinion, in looking into the dairy problem, the minister should be able, with the help of all his technicians, to further promote the development of that industry, since it is a major one, especially in the eastern provinces and in Ontario. We claim that an agreement which allows the United States to sell 50 per cent of the products in a given industry is not really advantageous for the Canadian farmers.

For instance, with regard to the production of eggs, we are allowed a proportion of 65 per cent. I feel that if the federal government could guarantee the markets, the province of Quebec and the eastern provinces could produce far more than they do now under the present agreements.

Mr. Chairman, I am mentioning those examples only to give you an idea of the advantages certain agreements could bring. We are told that they are meant to protect international markets, the market between the United States and Canada. I understand that, but on studying those agreements, one realizes that they are always a bit more favourable to the United States and less so for the small countries or Canada. Therefore, I am calling the hon. minister's attention to this matter.

Now, I shall speak more specifically of the province of Quebec, because I am, of course, more interested in that province than the others, although all of them interest me. We have, in the province of Quebec, a highly diversified agricultural production. We are not placed in the same situation as the western provinces which are mainly concerned with grain production and beef.

The agricultural production of Quebec and the eastern provinces is much more diversified. Although the main industry is the dairy industry and its products, potatoes, vegetables, maple syrup and various other commodities are also produced in those provinces. In my opinion, it is mainly at the level of those commodities that the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters) does not give enough attention to the market opportunities.

In view of the diversity of that production, I think that the hon. Minister of Agriculture is mainly concerned with the dairy industry. I am not blaming him for that, because I think that he noticed that the dairy industry prevailed in eastern Canada and he has concentrated his efforts to make it more economic. In my opinion, the problem faced by the dairy industry is that the production in the eastern areas and Quebec is so diversified and dissimilar that it is extremely difficult to come to an agreement when we talk about assistance to the dairy producers.

We had some experiences during the last few years—and we shall have some more—during discussions intended to promote the dairy industry when a price of $4.50 or $4.75 a hundredweight was suggested for manufacturing milk, while producers asked for $5 or more.

I think that the hon. Minister of Agriculture would be well advised to ask his experts to undertake a regional study, because as long as we talk about assistance to the eastern part of the country or even, on some occasions, at the provincial level, we shall notice that the established price which is appropriate to an area—namely the eastern townships or Montreal, for instance—will not be satisfactory in the Lake St. John area, in Chicoutimi or in the Abitibi area. In my opinion, these should be studied specifically.

I realize that this is another difficulty which confronts the hon. Minister of Agriculture but we are unable, in the field of dairy production, to consider an agreement which would suit Canada as a whole. In fact, we are not even able to consider an agreement which would be suitable only for the province of Quebec.

I think that, in coming days, we will have to try and find some formula that will satisfy the farmers in each area.

I think there will be much more justice in that, for having made a personal investigation, I find that production costs in our area, for instance, are 60 or 65 cents higher than in the Montreal area.

That is the difference to which I wish to draw the minister's attention, in order that justice may be done not only throughout

[Mr. Gauthier.]

Canada, but first and foremost in each of the specific areas of the country.

Mr. Chairman, as I said a moment ago, we had the good fortune of meeting with the representatives of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, who presented us with a most interesting report.

We would invite the Minister of Agriculture—besides, he must have met the very able federation advisers—to receive the advice of these experts, for I think that these men, who are chosen by the people each in his own area, that is to say by the C.F.U. members and those of other agricultural organizations, are much closer to the farmers and can act more decisively, precisely because they live in their midst. I would not say that they are more competent than the federal experts, but I think it would be advantageous for the latter to meet regularly with these people who have been delegated by various groups in each area to come to Ottawa and offer suggestions.

I will not believe either that those groups go out of their way merely to come and visit Ottawa. I am convinced that the hon. Minister of Agriculture takes their brief seriously, but I feel he could encourage his personnel to follow their advice more closely, especially where they say, speaking of the dairy industry, and I quote:

> Canada should support the proposals the international dairy committee of the International Federation of Agricultural Producers submitted to GATT, which won solid support, for the creation of an international council of dairy products of which producers as well as governments would be members.

Mr. Chairman, I shall not dwell on that brief, but I should like to point out the quotas. I think that, in our region today, the greatest concern is centred on this question of quotas. As you know, work has been done in this connection in the past few years, but we in the Lake St. John region are going through a period of transition: from spare-time farmers, so to speak, we are becoming real farmers, for agriculture in our region was formerly a rather marginal occupation, because of the proximity of lumber enterprises. We were a large family of farmers, 50 per cent of whom worked the land while 50 per cent worked in the forest.

One day, we woke up to find that only 18 per cent of our manpower was needed in the forest. Therefore, 90 per cent of the sons of farmers must come back to their farms.

I think that transition is very difficult to make in our areas. I should like the hon. Minister of Agriculture to be aware of that state of affairs, when he deals with our people, because when the herd is not big enough, the quantity of milk is not sufficient, and so on.

Mr. Chairman, I ask the hon. Minister of Agriculture to take the necessary steps to increase all those small herds which tend to grow.

If the herds are to become economic, they must grow and multiply. These farmers must also be given the opportunity not to sell their herds but to increase them. I say this because, unfortunately, that was the advice given to farmers by some investigators. I have never met these investigators, or you may be sure I would have had a few words to say to them. Their advice to the farmer is: Your herd is too small; sell it and move to town.

I know that this is not the minister's idea, since he wants the small farmers to become more productive and even to produce at full capacity, which would allow them to live on their farm. I think we will have to proceed by stages, and not make a complete change in one year and then say: Those who produce less than 12,000 to 20,000 pounds of milk will no longer receive help. On the contrary, I feel that it is with farmers who produce 12,000, 20,000 and 40,000 pounds that we will eventually succeed in having farmers who produce 150,000, 200,000 and 300,000 pounds. I know a great many who are willing to go ahead, but they need a little help from the government.

I should like to deal briefly with the mechanization aspect, one of the greatest problems in my area. Too much mechanization is required to make the land more productive and the herd more profitable. There again, I feel the government should make an effort and take the advice of organizations so as to try and reduce the price of farm machinery. I have sold farm machinery myself for ten years, and I am astonished at the fantastically increased prices. This is ridiculous.

In my opinion, the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Trade and Commerce would be in the best position to inquire into that, so that farmers can get the machinery, not free of charge, but at a reasonable price, because that is now strictly necessary.

It is often said that farmers are extravagant in some ways, that they are completely mechanized and that they invest all their money in machinery. What else can they do? We are no longer living in the horse and buggy age. We are in the age of mechanization. Formerly, a horse and carriage were a necessity for the farmers. Today, they need a motor car to go to town and do their shopping.

It is imperative that we help the farmer to adapt himself to modern times. The government must understand the farmer's predicament. I hope the Minister of Agriculture will carry on the good work he is doing.

Comparisons can be made when a man is doing his best. I would not want to be too critical. I believe the Minister of Agriculture is doing his best, but he is not able to do everything he wants. Therefore, I ask him to carry on his work and, above all, increase the amount of help given to these farmers, who ask nothing more than to lead a decent life on their farms.

[English]

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, as I rise to speak in this debate on the supplementary estimates of the Department of Agriculture I have every sympathy for the minister who in this chamber must represent an industry that is beseiged with problems. The minister has just heard the Canadian Federation of Agriculture present a most comprehensive brief to the government and to all parties represented in this chamber, and he is aware of the problems that beset the industry on every side.

Mr. Knowles: One o'clock.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, may I call it one o'clock.

The Chairman: Order. It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, when I began my remarks earlier I referred to the agricultural industry as an industry under siege, encircled, beleaguered, bombarded by rising costs, by low prices and by foreign imports. The list of its difficulties is long. I am sure many branches of the industry see the Department of Agriculture and the policies of the government as being one more force with which to contend. I would not want to describe the minister and his department as a fifth column because I do not think they are that close to the industry, to its needs and its desires. However, the policies of the government in a variety of fields have worked to produce a situation which, over and over again, has been detrimental to agriculture.

I should like to give an example of what I mean. One of the reasons I have so much sympathy for the Minister of Agriculture is that I know many policies are being developed and carried out by other departments of the government over which he personally has no control. But this does not absolve the government from co-ordinating the policies of all its departments to produce a national agricultural policy which would allow that industry to survive and to develop.

I should like to refer to the list of imports by commodities as of November last year, giving the yearly total up to that time, and I wish to refer specifically to the interesting section dealing with imports of raw sugar into Canada. At the top of the list we find Mauritius, thousands of miles away in the Indian Ocean, a country so remote from Canada that most Canadians do not know where it is. We learn that sugar imports from Mauritius up to November, not for the whole year, totalled almost $3 million. Our imports from the Republic of South Africa up to November, 1967, totalled $13½ million. Our imports from India totalled $2½ million, and I am sure no one would begrudge any trade with that struggling land. Imports of sugar from Australia totalled almost $7½ million and imports from Fiji were over $2½ million. Imports from countries associated with the West Indies were: Guiana, $4½ million, Honduras, $1 million, Barbados, almost $2 million, Jamaica, almost $3 million, and Trinidad-Tobago, not quite $1 million. At the end of the list we find Cuba from which we imported over $3 million worth of sugar up to November of last year. Finally we come to Mexico from which we imported $205,000 worth of raw sugar.

Any Canadian looking at this strange pattern of sugar imports might wonder about the factors which conspired to produce it, because it might be assumed that we import from povertystricken and overcrowded areas which are taking the cruellest advantage of one section of their population by paying the lowest possible wages to them and obtaining the greatest possible amount of work from them. It might also be assumed that we are importing sugar from a sugar producing country that has turned Communist while at the same time not importing from the British West Indies anything like the amounts of sugar we could if we were seriously interested in aiding and developing those islands which could well be an additional province of Canada had we sufficient vision to see their possibilities. The common factor in our policy is not political but rather the insistence of the government on maintaining policies which keep the cost of food at the lowest level.

Raw sugar is imported into Canada from all over the world because we consistently buy the surplus which cannot be sold, the "distressed sugar of the world" as the industry calls it. It is not much wonder that sugar processing plants in Canada, rather than buying from local producers, buy distressed sugar from these countries when they can. We are involved here in a deliberate attempt to prevent the development of a world wide commodity pricing arrangement. The very thing that we want for our Canadian wheat producers we deny to producers of sugar throughout the world. We can be cavalier enough with our wheat exports, and the prairie producers of that commodity know that the government let them down badly in the negotiations respecting the international wheat agreement which it allowed to lapse for a year with extremely detrimental consequences to the Canadian industry. But we do not care at all about sugar because, at the expense of the agricultural industry of Canada, the government has insisted on keeping the basic prices of commodities at the lowest possible level.

I speak about sugar in particular because it has an important effect on one part of the Canadian agricultural industry. If we turn over a few pages of the record of imports by commodities and look at the imports of canned fruits we see the figures for peaches. We do not go shopping for them as widely as we should but import them from three countries only. The volume of imports from the Republic of South Africa is such that the figures do not matter much. However, up to November last year we imported $2.5 million worth of canned peaches from Australia, $670,000 worth of canned pears and over $1 million worth of canned mixed fruits.

You might wonder, Mr. Chairman, when examining cans of Australian fruit why the fruit is always canned with a heavy syrup content which is 30 per cent sugar. The reason is that this is one more way to export sugar to Canada in almost as direct fashion as the $5 million worth of raw sugar that Canada imported. The sugar industry is aware of this and has made repeated submissions to the government to do something to develop a national sugar policy which would allow the Canadian industry to survive. This policy will be needed sooner than we realize, Mr. Chairman.

In a recent speech the general manager of B.C. Tree Fruits Limited of the Okanagan valley dwelt on this topic. In the course of his remarks he said:

> The government is continually asking industry to expand its export markets. Yet, at the same time, it does not seem to be interested in the fact that the Canadian industry is losing out to foreign government subsidized imports. If Canadian industry is going to compete for world markets, it must first be in a position to compete on the domestic market.
> The present tariffs allow both the United States and Australia to undersell Canadian products. On June 12th, 1967, Australian peaches were being offered in Toronto for $7.62 per case compared to $8.63 for the Canadian and $8.31 for the American product. In addition, Australia was offering a 30 cent per case promotional allowance to the retailer. The Australian industry has established a policy whereby the price quoted in Canada is below any product on the market.

I am sure no one would challenge the proposition if this price differential came about solely as a result of the initiative, energy and vigour of the fruit industry in Australia. The speech continues:

> The Australian industry's ability to sell at such low prices is due to Australian government policies. Export incentives are made up of payroll tax rebate, double income tax deduction (200 per cent) on all expenditures made on export promotion. Funds are also made available from an excise duty applied to the sale of domestic fruit in Australia. It is expected that $1,800,000 ($2,160,000 Can.) will be available from this excise duty for export promotion in 1967.
> The cumulation of these tax benefits, rebates on tin plate and sugar gives Australian processors an advantage of $2 or more per case of fruit. This advantage is used to obtain shelf space in our Canadian supermarkets at the expense of Canada's domestic production.
> It is very evident tht the Australian government works in very close co-operation with their fruit processing industry to develop programs of assistance. In comparison, the Canadian tender fruit industry feels that tariff protection has too often been sacrificed to obtain concessions for other Canadian products.

Then he points to some reasons why the processing industry is so important to the Canadian fruit industry. He says:

> The fruit growing industry is dependent on the processing industry in two ways. During the last ten years the processing industry has purchased 43 per cent of the apricots, 45 per cent of the peaches and 47 per cent of the pears produced in Canada. If the fruit growers lost this market for their product the impact on the fresh fruit market would be disastrous.

Then the following recommendations are made to the government:

> 1. Immediately opening negotiations with the Australian government to renegotiate the 1960 Australian trade agreement act to rescind the concessions accorded tender fruit imports.
> 2. Reviewing the Australian tax incentives applicable to their tender fruit industry. If considered a direct subsidy, appropriate action should be taken to reinstate our Canadian anti-dumping legislation with Australia. If not a direct subsidy, Canadian legislation should be implemented to remove inequities.
> 3. Establishing import tariffs equal to those enjoyed by Canadian competitors.
> 4. Establishing a quota system as a temporary measure.
> 5. If it is not possible to remove the present inequities, the Canadian government was asked to establish a subsidy program similar to that offered sugar beet, poultry, dairy and other industries.
> 6. In co-operation with the industry, establishing a promotional program for the domestic and international markets.
> 7. In co-operation with the growers and processors, conducting an economic survey of the tender fruit growing and processing industry, with the objective of determining ways of making the industry more competitive.

These are some of the measures that can be taken and some of the problems that can be investigated so far as one aspect of Canadian agriculture is concerned which is important not just to my constituency but to several sections of the country. This is not the first time that these matters have been raised. The industry has raised them repeatedly for several years and is beginning to despair of any effective action being initiated by this government.

The dairy industry is also under attack. It too is moving to meet the opposition that confronts it. It is moving very rapidly to modernize the industry, as is the fruit industry. It will not do to say that Canadian production is inefficient or that it is low in quality because this is not the case. Quality in the fruit industry, particularly in the apple industry of British Columbia, is unmatched anywhere. The modernization of the entire industry also has no equal.

For example, this past year the highest price per box of apples ever obtained in history was achieved on the New York market, so this is an indication of the quality of the products of the industry and the vigour with which it has moved to meet its problems.

However, more needs to be done. A co-ordinated national approach to agriculture by the federal government is required and it has not yet been made.

The dairy industry is moving toward such an approach. The brief of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture dwelt on its problems as well as on the problems of the poultry farmers, the grain producers and a vast number of other sections of the Canadian agricultural industry. When the brief came to my desk I read it with great interest. First of all I looked to see what were the recommendations of the industry in regard to the substitute products that are moving into the milk products market. When I talked to representatives of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture the other day I expressed disappointment that they had treated this subject so tentatively. I say this because they have not much time, and neither has the federal government, to decide what will be their approach toward this new threat to the dairy industry.

I am sure hon. members saw a short program on television the other evening about an enterprising manufacturer who is busy turning out a substitute for milk to be sold in plastic cartons. He did not call it milk but it is to be sold as suitable for many purposes for which milk has traditionally been used. He admitted that his product did not have the food value or quality of milk, and I imagine that many people listening to the program and learning of the constituents of the product said to themselves, "What stuff!" However, the manufacturer went on to say that there would be a 5 per cent price differential per quart compared with real milk. I suspect that it suddenly became tasty to many who viewed the program. But do people realize the basic importance of Canadian agriculture to this country?

If the word gets around that there is a substitute for milk which will sell for about 5 cents a quart less, the minister will have a battle on his hands and it will not only be with the Minister of Trade and Commerce but also with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. He knows that he cannot expect sympathy from housewives who are fighting soaring prices and he will not get much assistance from the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, since it was designed to look after the welfare of consumers.

I thought it was a mistake to alter the name of the department to consumer and corporate affairs. It should have been left alone.

The Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs ought to investigate the relationships among the big international soap companies which operate in this country. The department should investigate how synthetics are being used to manufacture foods. These companies have the resources and raw materials to manufacture soap and they could easily diversify into the manufacture of synthetic and substitute foods. That is why the dairy industry hesitates; it is not sure what is happening and it wants to find means to counter this threat. Those means, I suspect, lie in the powers of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the Department of Agriculture and in the trade policies of the government. We should stop using cheap labour, inadequate living conditions, starvation and the host of other problems that beset the undeveloped nations of the world to bring Canadian agriculture to its knees. It is time we came up with policies which will ensure that our commodities fetch a decent price in the markets of the world and that our industries compete on a fair basis with their competitors around the world.

In the time that remains to him as head of this department I trust the minister will take steps to set in motion studies aimed at developing this type of policy for Canadian agriculture. I trust that he and his officials will pay the closest attention to the brief that has been presented by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. I commend to the minister paragraph 39. It suggests how the desperate problems facing Canadian agriculture can be overcome. The brief recommends a minimum income policy, something that is widely discussed today and has ramifications far beyond the agricultural field.

Yesterday a columnist in a Toronto newspaper described the Minister of Justice as the next Prime Minister of Canada, suggesting he was the William Aberhart of the present day. That is a startling statement, indeed, but we know that the government has finally had to consider policies that were put forward by social credit in 1935, having to do with distribution of income throughout the population. Though I do not particularly wish the Minister of Justice well, I hope, should he succeed in rising to the high office of prime minister, that he will live up to the billing he got yesterday in the Toronto papers.

The brief spoke of an early retirement policy for farmers and of retraining and re-establishment policies. These are absolutely vital to the dairy industry in view of the announcement of January 15 about the 1968-69 dairy subsidy quota policy. We know that the subsidy policy has been tightened considerably. This policy, which is approved by large sections of industry, is aimed at eliminating some of the small operators. The quotas are designed to assist the development of larger production units. I think this policy is wise, and the government must persist with it. At the same time it should realize that when it no longer gives a subsidy to one who has been subsidized but gives the money to another, something of value has been lost by a member of the community and he should receive some sort of compensation. I say this because the government has caused the Canadian dairy industry grave problems by the sudden shifts in dairy policy over the last couple of years.

It would be well for the government to consider, in conjunction with the Department of Forestry and Rural Development, whether an early retirement policy could be developed for farmers. Such a policy would not leave the farmer who is 60 out in the cold, with a devalued farm which he must sell in a hurry because he has no income. The government must establish retraining and re-establishment policies and policies of farm consolidation. It might well look into the question of capital grants for farm improvement. The government knows how successful direct grants have been to industries in designated areas.

It is time the government saw the agricultural industry as an industry that requires the same consideration and care as the general manufacturing or drug industries of Canada. The other day we moved delicately to take steps that may lower drug prices in Canada. The government would never stand for profits of several hundred per cent in the agricultural industry, though the drug industry has enjoyed such profits for generations.

The government can do much to ensure that our agricultural industry is competitive. Our agricultural industry is more valuable than the mere products it produces. It is valuable to this nation in ways different from any other industry. The tourist industry depends on the agricultural industry indirectly. If farms go to waste and lie fallow, if buildings collapse and become shabby, the beauty of the countryside is spoiled and the beauty of our countryside, the beauty of rural Canada, is a great attraction to tourists.

Although he may not be able to clean up all of agriculture's problems immediately, I hope the minister can iron out some of the problems connected with the computer used in the distribution of dairy subsidy cheques. The department should ask whoever sold the computer to refund the money or provide a new model. On the other hand, if it is a question of personnel more should be hired to make the computer work properly, or perhaps we should train the people we have so they can operate the computer properly. I am tired of telling dairy producers in my constituency, as I am sure every member with dairy farmers in his constituency is, that the computer has broken down. I say, "It will be ready in another week. I know your creditors are at your door but the cheque will arrive next week." Next week, when nothing has happened, I have to send out a letter saying, "Sorry, but the computer konked out again. The cheque will come some time next month; it will arrive. All you have to do is hold on. Hold on and the cheque will get to you." I hope that in the near future we can be assured that the computer problems have been taken care of and that cheques will go out sufficiently regularly to raise the morale of those in one part of our dairy industry who badly need a boost.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to range as far and wide as did the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke. I think it is significant that I should follow the hon. member because with the coming into effect of redistribution the ridings of Okanagan-Revelstoke and Kootenay East will become one. I have been telling the residents of both these constituencies that they are very fortunate to have two representatives in this chamber at least so long as this parliament lasts.

I find that the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke makes brief sorties into the east Kootenays. I, of course, have reciprocated, and during my brief visits I have been able to acquaint myself with some of the problems of the Okanagan. I might point out that the riding of Kootenay East, the riding of Okanagan-Revelstoke and, of course, the riding of Okanagan Boundary, from whose member I am sure hon. members will be hearing before this debate concludes, constitute the fruit basket of western Canada. Fruit is grown in western Canada as well as wheat. We hear a great deal about wheat in this house and relatively little about fruit, though I am sure we shall be hearing more about it in the future. I might remind hon. members that the extremely tasty red Delicious apples which were presented to members of parliament late last fall came from Okanagan-Revelstoke, and a finer fruit has never been produced, as I am sure everyone will agree.

Mr. Roxburgh: What about Ontario Northern Spies?

Mr. Byrne: I was under the impression that only tobacco grew in Norfolk county. Now I stand corrected. It is interesting to note that Delicious apples have been fetching startling prices in the speciality markets of some of the main world centres such as New York—up to $10 and more per basket.

The hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke went to some length in criticizing the policies of the Department of Agriculture and of the government generally in respect of agriculture. I think that in all fairness the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke should give some credit to the government, as I am sure the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary will, for what it is doing to assist the development of industry in the Okanagan and perhaps to a lesser extent the development of agriculture.

I sent to my office for a list which I believe I have on file there setting out the ARDA programs that have been undertaken since the Liberal administration came to power back in 1963. Unfortunately there were no undertakings, according to my information, in the Okanagan prior to 1963; if there were any they were relatively small.

Mr. Pugh: On a question of privilege, if the hon. member would refer to the Minister of Agriculture he would find that what he said so royally and regally about the assumption of power—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. This sounds to me like a point of debate rather than a question of privilege.

Mr. Pugh: I will come to the point. In the Okanagan 90 per cent of the ARDA projects carried out in my constituency were there prior to what the hon. member called the assumption of power.

Mr. Byrne: That is scarcely a question of privilege. However, I expect the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary will be taking part in this debate and if I make any errors I am sure he will find time to correct me.

Mr. Johnston: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Byrne: I prefer to defer questions until the end of my time.

Mr. Johnston: I shall not be here by the end of the hon. member's speech.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Kootenay East has the floor.

Mr. Byrne: I am hopeful, as I said, that the list which I am sure is in my files will reach my desk before I conclude so I can check to determine whether or not what the hon. member says is correct. The list of projects is a long one. The program has provided for a large number of irrigation works, either refurbishing old and deteriorated schemes or constructing entirely new ones. Domestic water supplies have been improved and water has been provided for numerous orchards throughout the Okanagan. In addition, of course, there have been developments under the area development agency and, no matter what the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary may say, these did not take place under the former administration.

Many new industries directly related to agriculture have been introduced, not the least of which are the wineries. I believe that at least three wineries have been established in the Okanagan in a province where the government believes in temperance. In addition, a meat packing plant has been established, directly connected with agriculture. A sausage plant has been established in the area, again directly linked with the farming industry.

I am mentioning these projects only as projects that should be referred to in defence of government policy as opposed to the statement made by the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke. We must be fair and give credit where credit is due. I am wondering, whether the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary has received his list or whether it is his Air Canada ticket he is looking at at the moment.

My original purpose in rising was to discuss the question brought to my attention within the last few days by the farm members from British Columbia who were delegated to attend the federation of agriculture meeting here in Ottawa. The problem was referred to earlier by the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke. I believe some elaboration may assist the minister and give emphasis to the problem.

In the fruit industry we must look forward to two methods of marketing. First, with the assistance of jet aircraft large consignments, up to two or three boxcars in one lift, will be carried from the Okanagan to London, Paris or New York. The second method is to sell fresh fruit to canning factories for processing when there is overproduction. When I mention canning it brings to my mind the fact that in Penticton a factory is being constructed to make tins. I believe it is being erected by American Can, again under the aegis of the area development agency, and it should result in reducing the cost of cans used by factories in the area.

Last fall, I believe in late November, the National Association of Fruit Producers and the Canadian Horticultural Council presented a brief to the cabinet concerning the importation of Australian peaches into Canada. These importations absorb quite a large share of the Canadian market and to some extent are displacing canned peaches imported from the United States. Processors in Canada, and in particular in British Columbia, complain that there is an element of subsidy in the export of canned peaches from the continent of Australia. I am not prepared to say whether the Australians are simply seeking to export sugar by increasing the density of the syrup, as was stated by the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke. I was not under the impression that Australia is a net exporter of sugar. Be that as it may, there are a number of hidden subsidies inherent in the process.

I understand that the Australian treasury makes a rebate covering a portion of the cost of the sugar contained in the exported product. An excise tax is imposed on all canned fruits in Australia and the revenue is used for the purpose of promotion, advertising and market development in other continents. Further, the Australian treasury gives an income tax deduction to the industry for expenditures related to export development and these can reach 200 per cent. There is also a subsidy provided by way of payroll rebate related to the production of exported canned fruits.

This may or may not be a serious problem but it seems to me that Canada, and in particular the province of British Columbia, should not take a direct stand against the importation of goods. However, products produced in other countries and sold here with the assistance of subsidies or rebates should be frowned upon. The economy of British Columbia is so dependent upon export markets that it ill behooves us to criticize the importation of goods into Canada.

I believe it can be safely said that 75 per cent of our lumber industry depends on the export market. Indeed, the east Kootenay region of my riding depends very much on export trade. Significantly, at present a pulp mill is being built there by Japanese interests at an ultimate expenditure of $65 million to produce pulp for Japan. This will have an extremely beneficial economic affect on the east Kootenay area. I might also refer to the startling announcement made recently of the sale of 45 million tons of coal to Japan at a return to Canada of something like three quarters of a billion dollars over the next 15 years. In light of potential sales and our dependence on export trade I believe we should tread carefully but wisely in recommending that the government take action in respect of import quotas, tariffs and so on. It must be acknowledged that quotas should be established, however, as a protection to our in-season fruits and vegetables.

Mr. Johnston: Would the hon. member for Kootenay East permit a question? He made a rather remarkable statement about one area of the country being so fortunate as to have two representatives here. When he makes his forays into Okanagan-Revelstoke, as I make mine into the Kootenay area, I wonder whether it might not be better if he would tell the people there that he represents Kootenay East just as I tell the people of Kootenay East that I represent Okanagan-Revelstoke. Then the ultimate choice as to who will represent the combined area would be left to the wisdom of the voters.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Chairman, it is difficult to comprehend just what the question was but I should like to assure the hon. member that when I visit the Okanagan I never fail to tell the people of the attributes and high character of their representative and his most charming wife.

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Chairman, I am glad to return to the subject of agriculture. At the outset I should like to say that I hope the hon. member will continue to be a tourist in Okanagan Boundary. When he finished speaking on the subject I wish to discuss I was not clear about his position on the matter. I think he has perhaps been brainwashed by other government members.

I attended a banquet sponsored by the Oliver Chamber of Commerce not long ago when the general manager of the British Columbia Tree Fruits Limited gave a most interesting address on the problems created by the unfair importation of Australian canned goods into Canada. It is interesting to note that although I had been involved in this problem for quite some time I did not take an official stand until the government had had an opportunity to examine the brief which was presented last October. Finally, however, I could not stand aside any longer and I asked for a copy of the brief which had been delivered. Copies were sent to the hon. member for Kootenay West, the hon. member for Kamloops, I believe the hon. member for Kootenay East or someone in his party in that constituency and also to the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke. They all had an opportunity to examine it before I did.

I should like to tell the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Finance who is not here, and the Minister of Trade and Commerce that Canadian processors of fruits and vegetables in western Canada do not mind fair competition. No Canadian objects to this no matter in what industry he is engaged. But we cannot continue to compete on the export market unless those countries which export to Canada practise fair trade and fair play. I wish to state immediately that the Australians are not doing this. The Minister of Agriculture and the other ministers must be aware of this because obviously the matter must have been discussed in cabinet. We are being treated unfairly. When I say this I am speaking not only on behalf of the processors in western Canada but also the processors across Canada.

Last October the Canadian fruit processors in conjunction with the Canadian Horticultural Council presented a brief to the federal government. When they came away they said they had been received very well but now they say they would like to hear further about the matter. No word has been received since that time. I venture to say that no government member would have dared to get up on his feet and say anything about this matter had he not been a member from a Kootenay riding.

Much has been made of the fact that the Australians are laying down canned peaches in Toronto at prices far below our price or the United States price. The Australian price is $7.62 a case. The best price we can offer is $8.63 and the best price the United States processors can offer is $8.31. The Australians have a subsidy which enables their exporters to compete unfairly in this part of the world and elsewhere. There is an excise tax on sales in Australia which is reflected in the price paid by Australian consumers. This excise tax is applied in order to subsidize the canned goods which are exported into our market. A special income tax allowance of 200 per cent is allowed for export promotional schemes but not for promotion of sales within Australia. I am pretty sure of my figures because I obtained them from the fruit industry and they can be checked. After everything is considered, such as the rebate on tin plate and the rebate on sugar, the Australian processors have an advantage of $2 a case and in some instances more than that.

I should like to know whether the government has looked at the brief which was presented or whether it has been tossed in the ash can. Why has an interim report not been made to the industry? I might also ask whether the Australian government has been approached and whether this unfair practice has been pointed out to it.

In a few moments I intend to refer to the recommendations contained in the brief presented by the fruit industry. Before doing so, however, I should like to correct the hon. member for Kootenay East because I wish to be helpful to him. The processing business in Canada and the Okanagan area did not come about in order to take care of overproduction. It is an essential part of the soft fruit industry. To appreciate this fact one must understand how this industry was developed. We produce soft fruits in the Okanagan and we have access to processors. They are not in the business to sell these products to the Canadian people at an excessive profit. Over the years these processors have had to import soft fruits from other countries of the world in order to fill the cans they must put on the grocers' shelves. We produce a pretty good brand.

I am sure the minister knows how necessary this processing industry is. It was not developed by an outside company. Every dollar put into the industry was put in as a result of contributions made in one way or another by the growers. Many millions of dollars have been invested in plants and equipment in the Okanagan valley. These processing plants are necessary to the whole fruit industry in Canada. If one part of the industry is lost, the whole industry will be jeopardized. The processing industry must operate on a 12 month basis. If it operates for any less than 12 months it will operate at a loss.

In view of present attitudes I cannot help but wonder whether the government and the minister have taken account of the recommendations of the industry. Seven recommendations were proposed in the brief presented by the industry and I should like to refer to them. The first recommendation is:

> Immediately opening negotiations with the Australian government to renegotiate the 1960 Australian Trade Agreement Act to rescind the concessions accorded tender fruit imports.

Has the government taken any action in this regard? The second recommendation is:

> Reviewing the Australian tax incentives applicable to their tender fruit industry. If considered a direct subsidy, appropriate action should be taken to reinstate our Canadian anti-dumping legislation with Australia. If not a direct subsidy, Canadian legislation should be implemented to remove inequities.

The minister knows full well that there is a saving clause in that agreement to the effect that if damage is being done steps can be taken. Why has the government not done something in this regard? Why has the government not kept in touch with the fruit growers and fruit processors in Canada? Will the minister tell me what steps have been taken, and if any steps have been taken why has the department not informed the industry? Recommendation No. 3 is:

> Establishing tariffs equal to those enjoyed by Canadian competitors.

I am not in favour of an increase in tariffs. As I said earlier, no Canadian industry minds fair competition but unfair competition is something else. Whether the industry involved is small or otherwise the Canadian government should look into the matter. If we do not want the fruit industry to continue we should say so, but we should waffle no longer in this regard. Recommendation No. 4 is:

> Establishing a quota system as a temporary measure.

One might as well ask for the moon because the government manifested its attitude when it removed the quota system on turkeys and practically ruined the market for Canadian producers. As the hon. member for Kent (Ont.) suggested, the government is not in step with agricultural requirements in Canada. One does not fix a policy and then let it remain forever and ever. One has to keep up to date, and if you do not keep up to date in this competitive world you might as well cease to exist. Let us not lose our home markets. Recommendation No. 5 is:

> If it is not possible to remove the present inequities, the Canadian government was asked to establish a subsidy program similar to that offered sugar beet, poultry, dairy and other industries.

I am not in favour of this recommendation. We have a strong fruit industry in British Columbia and Ontario, and these are the areas vitally affected. I am not in favour of paying a subsidy because this is not necessary if the unfair competition is removed. Recommendation No. 6 is:

> In co-operation with the industry, establishing a promotional program for the domestic and international markets.

This is much along the Australian idea. I am sure the minister has looked into this aspect and I would be interested to hear his comments. Recommendation No. 7 is:

> In co-operation with the growers and processors, conducting an economic survey of the tender fruit growing and processing industy, with the objective of determining ways of making the industry more competitive.

This industry is competitive. I should like to know the circumstances surrounding the bellying up recently of a cannery which had been in existence for many years. I should like to know whether this is company policy and what effect it has had on that part of Ontario. We cannot do anything about killing competition but has the minister looked into the circumstances? What are the freight rates on fruit for Canadian producers compared with the freight rates for Australian producers who ship fruit in all-inclusive shipments from Australia to Toronto?

The member for Kootenay East suggests there may be difficulties facing this industry but that we should not take a stand. Perhaps this is the government's view but I was surprised when he said that in the house. It is a very irrational statement to make in respect of any Canadian industry.

The brief to which I have referred came to the attention of the minister and the department some time ago. I should like to know whether any representations were made before that time. I am sure officials of the Department of Agriculture have known for well over two years about the Australian fruit industry's influence in this country. One has only to look at what has happened since 1957 when Canada produced 103 million pounds of canned fruit goods and imported 72 million pounds. Only ten years later, in 1966, this picture had been reversed. Canadian production dropped from 103 million pounds to 88 million pounds while imports increased from 72 million pounds to 132 million pounds. While ours is a growing economy and Canadians need more food, there should be some protection provided Canadian industry.

I think I have made my case, and I am glad to see that the hon. member for Kootenay West is in his seat as he has always been a champion on behalf of the fruit industry. I am glad that this agricultural debate has started off with everybody who has spoken demanding action. If I alone had made these requests of the minister I think he would have said to me that nobody else was bellyaching, but when the demand for action is so widespread I know the minister will stir himself a little and will get something done. He will probably start talking again to the Minister of Finance, if he has not done so already, and to the Minister of Trade and Commerce about these problems.

I say to the minister in all seriousness that if he knocks out the processors in my area he will knock out the fruit industry, probably including the apple industry, and I would point out that we produce apple juice as well. If the minister knocks out the processors in Canada the whole of the soft fruit industry and possibly the whole of the fruit industry will suffer irreparable loss in dollars and cents and perhaps the extermination of the whole fruit industry. The situation is as bad as that.

Even though the government knows about this situation, small beginnings and lack of control could lead to the extermination of this industry. People in the industry may find that in the end they will get nothing out of it. I ask the minister not to let the people engaged in the fruit industry feel that because it is a smaller industry than those concerned with huge coal sales to Japan, exports to the United States or wheat sales to places around the world, they are forgotten by the government. The minister should remember that the fruit industry is a very vital and important part of the economy of Canada and must be maintained.

I now wish to speak briefly about the people who presented a brief to the government. The minister knows what the Canadian Fruit Processors Association is; he knows what the Canadian Horticultural Council is. Every growers' association, every shipper, every wholesaler and everybody connected with the fruit and vegetable industry in Canada is behind the brief of the Canadian Horticultural Council. I should now like to refer to an illustrious former holder of the portfolio of minister of agriculture, one of the same political ilk as this minister. I refer to Hon. James Gardiner, or Jimmy Gardiner. Hon. members should refer to Hansard of his day to see what he thought about the Canadian Horticultural Council.

That organization does not cry wolf with regard to matters that are not important. Its members examine every request put forward to the government and if it does not have merit and is not completely worth-while it does not bear the hallmark of the Canadian Horticultural Council. The minister knows that the council met here last week. He knows that its deliberations are for the benefit of all growers throughout Canada. The council aims at helping the whole of the industry from the producer down to the consumer. I shall not deal with the position taken by the fruit processors because it might be felt there was bias, but obviously they had to present a brief.

There are many other things with which I could have dealt today. I think this subject has been very fully covered but a short recapitulation of the situation would not hurt. Australian canned peaches, pears, fruit cocktail, etc., are being sold in Canada at prices with which we cannot compete. We cannot produce these fruits at the price for which the Australian product sells here. The reason the Australians can do this is that they are receiving a direct form of subsidy from their government. The minister has heard what I have said about rebates and all the other factors involved in this question. In other words, the Australian government helps the canned goods industry of that country. Australian canned fruits are sold at a lower price on the shelves of stores in Toronto than are Canadian products. They are sold at a lower price despite the freight rates and everything else involved in their shipment to this country. The price of the Australian product beats ours by $1.01 a case.

I say this is unfair competition. I hope that the Minister of Agriculture who is here, the Minister of Finance who is away, and the Minister of Trade and Commerce who is in a state of transition, will get together, forget the leadership race for a short while and take strong and immediate action to solve this problem. I hope they will get in touch with the Canadian Horticultural Council and the Canadian Food Processors Association and say: Gentlemen, these are the steps we have taken; these are the steps we propose to take; this is an interim report only but we will keep in touch with you. The fruit industry cannot afford to wait any longer for government action to solve its problems.

Mr. Honey: Mr. Chairman, it is with some temerity that I enter this debate which seems to have polarized into a Kootenay-Okanagan discussion. Nevertheless, I think the debate has been very helpful. The three speakers who preceded me pointed out—I see that my hon. friend from Kootenay West is in the chamber and will no doubt be entering the debate—their concern with respect to the agricultural industry in another area of Canada but I am concerned particularly with Ontario.

The remarks of hon. members have general application in this debate and I wish to associate myself with the concern expressed by hon. members from British Columbia. At the same time, I think all hon. members are aware of the very difficult problem the government faces in this respect, bearing in mind that Canada is one of the world's great trading nations and that when we make decisions in these matters we must do so responsibly, keeping in mind all the many ramifications that flow from decisions made with respect to international trade. I say no more on that subject, other than to point out what my colleagues on this side of the chamber and hon. members opposite have already said, namely, that we are aware of the very intricate and difficult problem of international trade.

I wish to deal with a few matters this afternoon. I believe this is a particularly appropriate time to deal with them because we are concerned with a debate on agriculture and this week a brief was received from the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. I only regret that it was not possible to have before us the brief of the National Farmers' Union. I expect it will be presenting its brief next week. I hope that before this debate concludes we will have the benefit of the views of the National Farmers' Union.

Having mentioned those two national agricultural organizations I wish to say to them through the medium of Hansard that I think it is an unfortunate situation that in Canada we do not have one voice speaking for the agricultural industry.

I think hon. members on all sides of the house will join me in that sentiment. I know the difficulties which the minister and his officials face sometimes when, for example, it is not certain who has the authority to speak for the dairy industry. That of course applies to other segments of the agricultural industry. Perhaps I could leave the thought with our farm groups in Canada—and I know attempts have been made to do so, negotiations are in progress and studies are being initiated—that it would be helpful for the industry, and certainly for the government and parliament if a grouping in the federation, or a union, could be formed after preliminary discussions have taken place on this matter. We would then know that we had one organization speaking with authority for agriculture in Canada.

I am sure the minister would want to know which of the many groups of people who see him and his officials, and who see members of parliament from time to time, speak with authority in the various areas of agriculture. It seems to me that this situation must cause the minister some difficulty. I should like to say with reference to the minister—and I shall try to do so with tact, because of the situation we have with respect to the choosing of a new leader for our party—that I think the minister is doing a good job in his portfolio. It has been my experience from meeting agricultural groups in Ontario that the departmental officials and the minister, by and large and with some exceptions, which is always the case, are considered to have been acting responsibly and constructively in the interests of the agricultural industry.

The task force, the establishment of which was announced last year by the minister, which is now busily engaged in the performance of its duties and which I hope will report some time this year, is a constructive and useful body. I was pleased to see the support which the Canadian Federation of Agriculture gave to the idea of the establishment of the task force, in the brief which it presented this week. I wish to support the suggestion made by the federation in paragraph 7 of its brief, that the task force approach its job and structure its report in such a way that it could most effectively serve as basic documentation for a national conference on agricultural policy, such a conference to be jointly sponsored by the federal and provincial governments, and planned with the participation of farm organizations. I hope this will be one of the many results which would flow from the report of the task committee on agriculture.

I wish to spend a few minutes dealing with the dairy policy, which was referred to extensively in the federation's brief. I think it might be helpful if I quoted from paragraph 19 on page 6 of the brief, where the federation puts forward the following constructive opinion:

> It is a source of considerable satisfaction to dairy farmers of Canada and the Canadian Federation of Agriculture that we now appear to be moving, grdually but constructively, toward a well conceived and carefully developed and integrated framework of dairy policy. In co-operation with the federal government, and with supporting provincial policy, we believe that we are beginning to achieve in the industry a prospect of some security of reasonable returns for the farmer's productive effort, in a known and understood framework of policy respecting prices, quotas, marketing organization, quality requirements. There is increasing recognition too, we believe, of the need for adjustment policies for the improvement of the income and earning opportunities of the less favourably situated producers.

I concur in that statement of the federation. I think that Canada's dairy policy under the present minister has been a good one. May I say also that in my opinion both the chairman and the members of the Canadian Dairy Commission have approached their job with a great deal of knowledge and understanding of all the problems of the dairy industry, in so far as it comes within the jurisdiction of the federal government.

I should like to comment on two aspects of the policy which might reasonably be considered both by the minister and by the commission. One is an old chestnut which the federation has brought up in previous years. To my knowledge no action has been taken on it, but I hope the minister and the commission are giving some consideration to the recommendation of the federation that adjustment payments be made to cream producers. At present no differentiation is made between the payments to cream shippers and those to shippers of manufacturing milk, such as milk sent to cheese factories. This seems to be rather unfair to cream shippers, and we might reasonably consider the suggestion or the recommendation of the federation that, in addition to the present subsidy, a special assistance payment be made to cream shippers. I think the federation suggests 7 cents per pound of butterfat, which they say would give the producers of farm separated cream a more adequate return, one more comparable to that of the producers of industrial milk, after taking into consideration the value of the skim milk retained on the farm of the cream shipper. This is one suggestion which I asked the minister and his officials to consider seriously.

The second suggestion is with reference to quotas for the shippers of industrial milk in the 1968-69 dairy year, and in the following dairy years as the policy of the commission evolves. I am pleased—and I know this was of considerable concern to the hon. members on both sides of the house—that the originally suggested policy of the dairy commission with respect to the 1968-69 quotas has been considerably modified. It was suggested that it might be the policy of the commission not to grant quotas to producers who in the dairy year 1967-68 produced less than 50,000 pounds of industrial milk or 1,750 pounds of butterfat. I think it is good that the policy was changed. I understand that the stated policy of the commission now is that the production of 12,000 pounds of industrial milk or 420 pounds of butterfat in the 1967-68 dairy year will enable those producers to qualify for a quota in the 1968-69 dairy year.

Having said that, I want to say that the principle enunciated by the commission, of gradually increasing production so that the moneys available to the commission from parliament may be used increasingly for the bona fide dairy producer who is making an effort to operate a viable and economic dairy production unit, is a good one.

However, Mr. Chairman, in encouraging increased production in the dairy industry I think the commission should keep in mind that there are going to be some dislocations. The principle is good, as I have said, but I think it should be applied in a reasonable and rather leisurely fashion so that all producers are given ample opportunity to increase their production. With regard to those unable to do so, the federation recommended that serious consideration be given to making adjustment grants to assist producers who find it advisable to turn to some other form of production.

I am sorry that the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke is not in his seat, but he referred in rather descriptive terms and a little dramatically to computer breakdowns which sometimes delayed cheques sent to producers by the dairy commission. My experience with the commission has been that they are extremely co-operative and helpful. In view of the number of dairy producers who receive cheques from the dairy commission, one can only marvel that the system has functioned as efficiently as it has. I think my hon. friend from Okanagan-Revelstoke was a little too critical because I have found that wherever there was delay in sending out cheques the officials of the commission were more than anxious to make a special effort to find the source of delay. In the great majority of cases it was at the local level, usually because the purchaser had not sent in his return to the commission; the fault was not with the commission itself. I think I should say that in fairness to the commission because they are doing an extremely competent and efficient job.

Reference was also made to the concern of the dairy industry regarding filled and synthetic dairy products. Driving to Ottawa a week or two ago I stopped at a roadside restaurant situated in a dairy area. I was served synthetic cream with my coffee, and to me this was warning of the sort of concern the dairy industry should be showing. Some aspects of the problem are the responsibility of this government, though some fall to the provincial governments.

If I may give some gratuitous advice to the dairy industry, it seems to me that the industry should be mounting a campaign, whether by means of public relations or some other means, to impress on the Canadian consumer the importance of avoiding filled and synthetic dairy products. I appreciate that the packaging and labelling of such products may very well be the responsibility of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and I hope the minister of that department is concerned about protecting purchasers of dairy products who may be unaware that they are actually purchasing a synthetic product.

I am not trying to interfere with the right and freedom of Canadian consumers to purchase whatever they wish to purchase. I also think that if restrictions are to be placed upon these products this is a matter for the provinces. However, I think it is the responsibility of this parliament to ensure that the description of these articles printed on the labels is properly regulated and supervised, in the interest of the Canadian consumer as well as in the interest of the dairy producers.

There are just two further matters I want to mention, Mr. Chairman, before I close. I want to leave the dairy industry and to talk for a moment about farm credit. I appreciate, as I am sure all hon. members appreciate, the problems and considerations that may have led to what has been suggested will be a cutback or decrease in the amount of funds available to the Farm Credit Corporation. If this is the case, then I hope that the government will look once more at this question. If the operations of our Canadian farmers are to be viable, so they can make a reasonable margin of profit, then it is important that an adequate amount of long term credit at a reasonable interest rate should be available to them through the Farm Credit Corporation.

Another aspect of farm credit is the improvement loan arranged through the chartered banks. The maximum limit of $15,000 seems to be pretty badly out of line with the realities of our present day agricultural society. I should like to endorse the recommendation of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture that the government increase the maximum limit to $30,000. I appreciate that this matter falls within the jurisdiction of the Minister of Finance, but I know that his colleague the Minister of Agriculture is also concerned with this question.

I also think we should take a look at the policy of the chartered banks in connection with these loans. The information I have from farmers in Ontario today is that the Farm Improvement Loans Act is gradually becoming a pretty academic measure. I am advised that this is because the chartered banks take the position that they do not have funds available for this kind of loan. If this legislation is to mean anything at all and is to be helpful to Canadian farmers, I think the Minister of Finance and the government should review with the chartered banks their policy relating to loans made pursuant to the legislation. The legislation will be of no particular benefit to the agricultural community if the bankers ignore it. I suggest that the government ought to indicate clearly to the bankers that it is in the national interest, in the agricultural community's interest and in the interest of the chartered banks of Canada that full and adequate operative force be given to this legislation.

I wish to mention another item, and this will bring me full cycle, because in my introductory remarks I spoke of international trade. For a moment I want to talk about the tobacco industry in Ontario and in Canada. Mainly, I want to talk about flue cured tobacco, about 96 or 97 per cent of which is produced in Ontario. I wish to emphasize the concern which has been expressed by the Ontario Flue Cured Tobacco Growers Marketing Board to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Minister of National Revenue and the Minister of Agriculture about the importation to Canada of South African tobacco.

Though not much tobacco has been imported to date, an important principle is at stake. It has nothing to do with another principle to which some speakers referred, having to do with the importation of fruit. With respect to tobacco the suggestion has been made, and I do not assess its accuracy, that tobacco imports to Canada from South Africa are being made possible because Rhodesian produced flue cured tobacco is available to South Africa. Under present government policies there is an embargo against importing to Canada, direct, tobacco and other goods that are being produced in Rhodesia. I only make this observation, that because of trade between Rhodesia and South Africa it may be possible that Rhodesian tobacco has become available in Canada. If so, I hope our officials will look into the matter—and I think they are doing that. I hope that the Minister of National Revenue is considering the application of the dumping legislation with respect to this importation.

No one will quarrel with this government's decision that it is in the national and international interest for us not to trade with Rhodesia. If that decision is being circumvented by tobacco companies in Canada which purchase tobacco from South Africa, the matter should be looked into and the practice stopped. It is a matter of concern to Canadian producers and to all Canadians. I will leave it at that. I know the minister has noted my remarks and I know that the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of National Revenue, with whom this matter has been discussed, are concerned about the situation.

That is about all I want to say. May I mention the concern that is being felt by those in Canadian agriculture about the government's moving away from—if I may use that term—the system of subsidizing agricultural products. It is not possible to stop all subsidies at this time because in some areas the government must help. I spoke of the task force, and I hope its report will be carefully considered. I also hope that the various farm groupes will amalgamate into one authoritative farm group with which we can consult. Armed with the report and in consultation with this group we shall be better able to move away from subsidizing some areas of agriculture. Until then we must shoulder our responsibilities. We must maintain those producers who could not produce economically without government assistance. We must be realistic and we must make the best possible use of the funds allocated by parliament, so that the agricultural industry in Canada may maintain and increase its contribution to the Canadian economy.

[Mr. Honey.]

Mr. Jorgenson: Mr. Chairman, the speakers who preceded me in this debate, including those from the government side, have shown that there are serious defects in our agricultural industry. The hon. member for Durham who directly preceded me chided the government gently for failing to bring some measure of relief to the industry. That industry today is suffering—for lack of a better term—from the weaknesses of a government that vacillates and never has time to settle down and do what is necessary to make sure that the industry is treated fairly.

I recall that in the three past election campaigns members of the government went from one end of the country to the other loudly proclaiming they had all the answers. It turns out that not only do they not have the answers; they do not know the questions.

Mr. Fane: Hear, hear.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Jorgenson: They had to set up a task force to look into the matter. I do not oppose the appointment of the task force; I know some of those who are on it. I can say to the minister that on that task force are some of Canada's best agriculturists. I only hope, if they bring down recommendations during the life of this government, that those recommendations will be acted upon.

I was interested to hear the hon. member for Kootenay East, who hoped that we on this side would be fair, and give the government credit for what it has done for or to agriculture. I am not sure which term he used. I am inclined to think that "to" is what he meant, though he used the other term.

Mr. Fane: Hear, hear.

Mr. Jorgenson: We have not sufficiently debated the present state of our agricultural industry. Outside of mentioning it in budget debates and in throne speech debates, this is the first time during this session that we have had an opportunity to discuss agriculture. The main estimates of the department went through somewhat hurriedly, though they had been considered earlier in the committee. I always thought that the practice was to allow hon. members an opportunity to say a few words in the House of Commons and I hope, because of this, and because of the number of people who are planning to take part in this debate, government spokesmen will not go about the country saying the opposition is holding up the business of the house. I cannot think of anything more important to the house than paying attention to solving the problems of agriculture.

As previously mentioned, there is ample evidence throughout the country that serious difficulties have arisen. The number of demonstrations, protest marches and briefs since the minister assumed office should have convinced the hon. gentleman that he has a formidable task before him. I do not suggest for a moment that the minister is not interested or that he does not care: I think he is concerned. But I believe some of his cabinet colleagues are much less concerned, and that he has not been able to exercise the degree of authority within the cabinet necessary to enable him to do the things we feel need to be done.

I recall one of the promises made in the speech from the throne a year ago—that legislation would be introduced to provide assistance to agricultural societies across this country by way of grants or loans. This subject has been raised on several occasions and questions have been asked in this house, but we have never been told that the minister is likely to be able to get his legislation on the order paper, let alone on the statute books, in this current session.

When he sums up the debate the minister may, with some justification, point to figures which indicate an increase in farm income and say: Well, we are not doing too badly. If those figures told the entire story, if they gave a real indication how agriculture is faring, perhaps we would believe that agriculture was not doing too badly. But they do not tell the whole story, and all of us know it. Those in this house who are actively engaged in farming are deeply concerned about the position in which farmers find themselves as a result of the tremendous increase which has taken place in production costs. If there has been any increase in farm income it has been exceeded out of all proportion by the increase in the cost of the things farmers have to buy.

This increase in cost is to a large extent a result of actions taken by this government —higher taxation, higher costs due to taxes placed upon taxes, higher interest rates and so on. The kind of prosperity which farmers are enjoying today makes them wonder whether they should not have saved their money during the depression, so they could enjoy it. Talking about increased cost, these seems to be a creed, a solemn promise among those who supply farmers, that they will exact every last nickel out of his pockets so that there may be nothing left for him at all. As a result, the farmer finds himself having to run faster than ever in order to stay in the same place.

The commission which was set up to study the increase in farm machinery prices is one which should be supported by every member of this house. My experience is that if farmers do enjoy a good year—and there have been some good years in the past—there never seems anything left over after increased costs of production have been met. Farmers continually find themselves in this position and I am beginning to wonder whether it does not have something to do with the fact that a Liberal government is in power.

We recall the attitude of the party opposite toward the Canadian Wheat Board in the early years; when they took office in 1935 it was one of opposition to that agency. They only began to embrace this concept of marketing after the war had ended and the dangers of inflation were apparent. The signing of the wheat agreement with Britain at that time seemed to be nothing more than an effort to keep prices down and to use the farmer as a scapegoat in order to combat inflation. This pattern has returned and again we see a reduction of wheat prices, despite the contribution the farmers of this country have made toward solving the balance of payments difficulties experienced by this government a few years ago.

An hon. Member: By your government.

Mr. Jorgenson: One would have thought the government would finally have recognized the importance to this country of agriculture and of the wheat farmer. Nevertheless we once more find ourselves in the position where despite rising costs of production prices of practically every agricultural commodity are falling. Is this because the government intends once again to use the farmer as a scapegoat to combat the inflation which their own actions have so largely brought about?

Even more dangerous are the statements being made by some of the leadership candidates at the present time. I refer particularly to statements made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Addressing the Agricultural Institute of Canada, Ontario branch, he said—and he was referring to the tomato industry in southwestern Ontario:

> I suspect that any protection given will be of a temporary nature so that growers can phase out their capital commitments and seek other means of earning a livelihood.

In the light of this statement it seems to me the minister is prepared to sell out this industry. A little later he said:

> In international trade we have to produce the things we produce well.

If that is the case, why are we in such difficulty about wheat? Here is one commodity that we produce better and more competitively than any other country in the world. But in this area not only do we have to compete with the American farmer, but we also have to compete with the American taxpayer. Yet the government's actions seems to indicate it is prepared to accept this kind of competition, without raising its voice.

• (4:30 p.m.)

The article goes on to say:

> He told the institute Canada is the world's fourth largest exporter of farm products. Free trade in these products was an objective of last year's GATT negotiations, he said.

In other words the objective was to eliminate many of the agricultural industries in Canada.

> On the question of low-cost production in other countries, Mr. Winters commented: "We cannot afford to deter efficient production elsewhere."

This simply means that the government is prepared to accept competition from countries that can produce things more competitively than we can. This problem has recently been brought to the attention of hon. members with respect to the fruit industry in British Columbia, and over the past few weeks it has been a great problem to the potato industry in western Canada.

The minister knows about this problem. On several occasions I have asked him when action would be taken to apply value for duty in order to give some measure of protection against the unfair trading practices of the United States. We are told in this country that we must tailor our production to meet the effective market demand, but when we do that we find that other countries are permitted to ship their surplus production into Canada, as has happened in the case of potatoes entering this country. For two years in succession the Americans overproduced potatoes. It is easy for them to skim off the cream of the crop, as it were, and sell their top grade potatoes at a premium price. That is where the profit is; and what is left over comes into our markets at distress prices, destroying those markets for our own producers.

For weeks producers of potatoes in western Canada have been urging the government to apply the value for duty legislation in order to give them some measure of relief against this unfair trading practice. But what has happened? The answer was given this afternoon by one hon. member, who said we must not disturb the Americans, we must be careful not to offend them; our industries can all go to pot as long as we maintain friendly relations with the United States.

If this is the criterion that is going to be applied, why not apply it across the board? Why pick out agriculture, solely? Why must it be the only one to meet this unfair competition? What about other industry? They can make turbines in England a lot cheaper than we can. They can make refrigerators in the United States cheaper than we can. They can make transistor radios in Japan much cheaper than we can. We can get clothing from China much cheaper than we can produce it here. For that matter, why do we not bring in Italian barbers? Apparently this is the policy of the government.

The government is unwilling or unable to come to the assistance of those industries that are suffering from the worst kind of unfair trading practices that anyone could expect. No matter how many representations are made, and no matter how often and how forcibly delegations press the government, there appears to be no relief in sight.

The country is going to be watching the Liberal leadership candidates. I can assure those candidates that many farmers across the country read with interest the statements the candidates make, in order to get some idea where they stand on these issues and what the farmers can hope for if any of the candidates happens to be elected. I conclude by saying that after watching the performance of some of the hon. gentlemen who are candidates for the leadership, Lloyd Henderson looks better to me every day.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I listened very carefully to the remarks made by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jorgenson). He is right in saying that the farmer is quite neglected and forgotten by the government. However, the hon. member should realize that the present situation in the field of agriculture does not date from today nor yesterday but that it did exist in all its seriousness when his party was in office, that is from 1957 to 1962.

Agricultural associations have been making representations to the government for a great many years. I was here from 1946 to 1949 and, at that time, farmers were asking to be recognized, better treated and better understood by government authorities.

I notice in the supplementary estimates (C), that the Department of Agriculture is asking for an additional sum of $33,383,166. Therefore, it means that at the time the officials prepared the estimates for the year ending on March 31, 1968, they underestimated their expenditures by $33,383,166.

Let us compare the estimates of the Department of Agriculture to those of the Department of Finance, which amounts to $2,122,694,590, and to those of the Department of National Defence which will cost us, this year, the sum of $1,747,269,001. Let us also compare them to those of Department of National Health and Welfare, a department that would deserve to get more so as to increase pensions and allowances, and we will see that the Department of Agriculture takes about one tenth of the amount required by the Department of Finance. Yet, all the members, all the political parties, all the citizens, easily recognize that agriculture is the very basis of the whole economic and social structure of our country. We know full well that if Canadians could not be fed, they would cease to exist within the space of a few days. We are all subordinated to the prime need for life, we must eat to live, and agriculture enables us to survive.

Yet, the farmers are treated in this fashion, by being granted a budget of $282 million for the year, that is one tenth of the expenses incurred to serve the dollars in Canada, to feed the population and to help the farmer. One really does not know what to make of it.

Mr. Chairman, we, of the Ralliement Créditiste, have asked repeatedly in the last six years for greater help to be extended dairy producers. The government waited; it took its time, there was no hurry. Promises made before an election are soon forgotten. Everybody knows that a dairy farmer must now spend five or six times more than a few years ago, merely to keep his farm going, to feed his herd, to buy machinery and to operate his farm.

For instance, a tractor which cost $1,500 not so long ago, now costs $4,000 and it is the farmer who must pay for it. In western Canada, a combine could be bought for $6,000 not so very long ago. Today, it is selling at $15,000 or $16,000. The same holds true in respect of spreaders, milking machines, in short all farm machinery. Prices have doubled, tripled, they have increased fourfold and even fivefold, and it is always the farmer who must foot the bill.

There are no longer any limits. The farmer works just to buy farm machinery. Yet there is no lack of work on the land. Farmers work hard, from four or half past four in the morning to nine thirty or ten at night, seven days a week, 365 days a year. The farmer cannot go on strike; he must stay on his land. He cannot dream of having a 36, 40 or 45-hour working week; he must work 98 and even 100 hours a week. In fact, he never stops.

Yet we are asked to vote the fantastic sum of one-tenth of the budget of the finance minister for agriculture.

Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to take up any more of the time of the house, but one thing is sure, and that is, that the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) is now asking us to pass supplementary estimates (C) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968, that is, thirty days from now.

I would only like the Minister of Agriculture, in his next budget, to suggest to his cabinet colleagues that subsidies to the dairy industry should be substantially increased, in order to aid the farmers—and not oppress them—allow them to live on a par with all Canadians and be recognized in Canadian life as other classes of workers.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, I would like to draw this minister's attention to vote 5-C, which reads:

—to extend the purposes of vote 5 of the main estimates for 1967-68 to include a contribution of $10,000 to the town of Kapuskasing towards the construction of a road.

Kapuskasing is a little bit in our area. I wonder where the road will be built and for what purpose. Would it be to give access to new land in this area?

If so, Mr. Chairman, I shall ask the Minister of Agriculture to grant us an equal subsidy for the construction of a road from La Sarre to James Bay, where there are vast economic and agricultural possibilities.

It is a good thing to contribute $10,000 to Kapuskasing, which is a little bit in our area, towards the construction of a road? In my opinion, the minister should consider granting a similar subsidy to the town of La Sarre or the economic organization of La Sarre area, towards the construction of a road to James Bay. Otherwise, I would be inclined to think that the contribution of $10,000, paid to the city of Kapuskasing, was some sort of a political gift. Political considerations must not enter into the granting of subsidies, even if in the past there was political patronage in granting contributions or subsidies to cities, counties or regions.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I ask the hon. Minister of Agriculture to consider the possibility of granting a subsidy to the region of La Sarre for the construction of a road to James Bay.

[English]

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I always enjoy discussion of these estimates because I come from a long line of pirates, poachers, preachers, politicians and plowmen. In fact I never get away from the land. Even now I wake up at six o'clock in the morning ready to milk the cows that are not there.

First of all I should like to bring to the attention of the minister that the ridings of the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke, the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary and the hon. member for Kootenay East are all within the county of Kootenay. I should like to support the recommendations made by these hon. members. I know the fruit industry very well, having attended the first convention of the British Columbia Fruit Growers Association in 1919. I am aware of their problems.

Before being elected to the House of Commons I was a rancher and lived on an income slightly above the social welfare level. Since then my standard of living has continued to improve. In respect of the importance of agriculture as an industry, and with regard to the development of agricultural policy, I think we must move into new fields. We should consider the need for an incentive income policy and the retraining of our younger people. I represent a riding which includes a large number of small farmers who are quite happy to live the type of life they are leading. Some of the younger people, however, because of the lower income which can be derived from agriculture are lured away from the farm into employment in industry or into jobs in the city. I do not believe they would leave the field of agriculture if they were assured of a fairly reasonable income on the farms, and if they had a bent in that direction.

I should like to quote briefly from the Agricultural Institute Review for March and April of 1967 at page 24. The article written by David Suderman, is headed "We must review our agricultural policies", and it says:

> The agriculture industry is reaching the point where the policies governing it and guiding it can no longer be left to the few in governments and farm organizations. The challenge of the next two decades will demand that the industry make maximum use of its resources; the combined brainpower of agrologists, no matter what field they are in, will be needed to enable farmers to put the best technological know-how to use.
> It's all very well to say that known technology is already well ahead of practice. It's equally as valid to claim that productivity in agriculture is already increasing much more rapidly than in other fields of endeavour.

That has been proven by experience in the last 20 years. The article then states:

> Technological developments have helped the farmer do his job better, but they haven't helped much to improve the farmer's net income relative to the rest of society.

The article then continues under the subheading "Gordian knot":

> The three, use of technology, productivity and income, are entwined in a Gordian knot. As long as returns in agriculture are insufficient to attract significant amounts of new investment, technological improvements will not be adopted as rapidly as they should. And as long as farm incomes remain uncompetitive with wages and salaries elsewhere, migration off farms will continue. In cold economic terms, this isn't necessarily bad since the economies of scale point to the need of fewer farms. But one sad feature in this movement is that it reflects the traditional misconception that "book learnin'" is for those leaving the farm. Few of the young leaving home to pursue their educations ever return to the farm. How much longer can the farm industry afford such a "brain drain"?

I agree with those sentiments. Later in the article Mr. Suderman states:

> Some sort of a forum must be established to allow the agriculture industry to draw from the combined brain power of everyone in agriculture, whether he be the plant scientist, the economist, the educator or practical farmer, to develop policies which will make agriculture in this country more intensive, more productive and more profitable to those engaged in it. There is little time left. In fact, if F.A.O. predictions on population growths are to be believed, agriculture is the only industry in this country worth worrying about.

This is one industry we should worry about, because if those in many other occupations were to die tomorrow we could carry on with very little difficulty, doing the things we wish to do. This article continues at some length, and I heartily agree with Mr. Suderman's contention in respect of the need for a review of our agricultural policies.

Another article appeared in the same issue written by B. H. Kristjanson entitled "Incentive-Incomes Policy for Canada", and states in part:

In the absence of facts and figures, I will make some heroic assumptions:

(1) The typical efficient family farm operator has as his primary goal the good life. He is not farming because he wants to become rich, but rather because this is what he wants to do and because he can do it better than anything else.

The article then continues:

(2) There is no clear evidence that an efficient family farm operation is a stable community well-served by aggressive co-operative organizations of all types cannot produce food at a price acceptable to consumers.

(3) There would be real value in a national policy designed to keep food production at maximum levels, allowing prices to reflect domestic and international market forces. In other words, a low-cost food policy to contain inflationary forces in the economy and to maximize our competitive advantages in international markets.

(4) Cost of public services could be stabilized and the services could be rendered with increased efficiency since the many functions provided in a rural region could be rationalized within a stabilized system.

(5) Most heroic of all, the general public could be brought to the view that income transfers of this type of agriculture are in the individual consumer's interest.

The mechanics are easy to state, but unfortunately resist easy application.

I think there is an opportunity for farmers and consumers to co-operate, so everyone in Canadian society could have the benefits of the agricultural industry. This could work to the benefit of the food needing populations of the world in general.

I have a few references I wish to make regarding the need for training in agriculture. I am very keen on this and I should like to quote again from the Agricultural Institute Review for January and February, 1968. It contains an article by E. H. Lange entitled "Technical and Vocational Training for Agriculture", which says in part:

The overall goal of agricultural training must be the optimum, broad development of the manpower in the agricultural industry, the development of all those people who require agricultural knowledge and those who have positions of influence and leadership in the industry. Some of this training must be at the professional level. At the technical and vocational levels, the specific purpose of the total program should be: (1) to train farmers, farm managers and farm leaders; (2) to train competent manpower for farm-related business in occupations where a knowledge of agriculture is essential; (3) to train technicians to assist agrologists (and veterinarians) in their programs and (4) to train skilled workers for farming and farm-related business.

Broadly speaking, there are two areas of employment, and therefore of training, on the technical and vocational levels: (1) employment and self-employment in agricultural business, on and off the farm and (2) employment as technicians or technologists to assist agrologists.

There is excellent work being done in this respect by the university at Guelph. This is considered as a provincial problem, but I hope our federal Department of Agriculture will do more in co-operation with provincial governments to provide the training required.

In concluding my few brief remarks let me say that governments, the people and farm organizations should co-operate in the development of policy and income incentives, as well as in the development of training facilities for future farmers.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. McCutcheon: Mr. Chairman, my remarks are brief but I cannot finish them in the time remaining. May I call it five o'clock.

Progress reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills and private bills.

AIR POLLUTION

MEASURE TO ASSIST GOVERNMENT AND PRIVATE CONTROL AGENCIES

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-25, to control air pollution.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I have been waiting for this occasion since May 11, 1967, when the House of Commons gave the proposals in Bill C-25, an act to control air pollution, the privilege of first reading. At this period of our national development air pollution is one of the most vital and urgent problems confronting Canada. Pollutants in the air are steadily causing injury to people, animals, vegetation and physical property.

The progressive results of air pollution brought upon us by greater urbanization, growing industrialization and the increasing number of fuel-driven vehicles call for vigorous national leadership and intensified efforts to ensure clean air for our citizens. Clean air is a most precious and vital national resource. Within the limits of federal jurisdiction I think this bill provides for action to assist recognized provincial, regional, municipal and private agencies, as well as citizens, to abate air pollution.

Both as a physician in a dense urban and highly industrialized centre, and as the member of parliament for Parkdale, an area with many manufacturing plants, I am very concerned about the ill effects of air pollution. In my medical practice I have been alarmed at the increasing number of cases of emphysema, bronchitis and lung cancer. I welcome the assistance of many experts in this field who have helped me to make some proposals which I have included in this bill. I welcome also with great joy the assurance of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) who in this house has told us that the occupational and environmental branch of his department is preparing a clean air act for Canada.

In this bill I am proposing that parliament grant the Minister of National Health and Welfare immediately, or as soon as possible, duties and powers to deal specifically with certain aspects of air pollution. In my study of this problem of air pollution I had meetings with Mr. W. B. Drowley of the Ontario pollution control branch, Mr. H. A. Belyea, director of the air pollution control division of metropolitan Toronto, Alderman O'Donohue of Toronto, Dr. Norman Delarue and other experts in air pollution matters.

This bill states that air pollution means the detectable presence in the outdoor atmosphere of any air contaminant or contaminants in amounts that may cause damage or discomfort to the health of persons, may cause damage to animal life, may produce injury to vegetation, may damage physical property, or may interfere with visibility or the normal conduct of transportation, occupation or business.

Many factors have contributed and are increasingly contributing to the pollution of our air. Most of the air contaminants are in man's atmosphere because of his own activity. An extensive bibliography, readily available, reviews epidemiological, clinical and laboratory data which pertain to the health hazards of community air pollution. Also, the present trend to longevity may mean that a segment of our citizens are very susceptible to the aggravating effects of air pollution that now exist in polluted Canadian urban areas.

In clause 3 of this bill I have suggested that the minister consider the expediency of encouraging co-operative activities of municipal, provincial, interprovincial, federal and international governments for the investigation, prevention and abatement of air pollution. Also in this clause I have suggested that the minister consider the expediency of initiating and conducting appropriate research across Canada in the field of air pollution and, in particular, undertaking studies in air quality, weather conditions and monitoring programs in order to determine ambient air quality national guides and criteria of the known air pollutants.

I have also suggested that in the federal field the minister consider the expediency of controlling air pollution from vessels in Canadian waters by effective investigation and enforcement of the provisions of the Canada Shipping Act, from interprovincial railway operations by means of the railway board of commissioners, through the Atomic Energy Commission the air pollution caused by ionizing radiation, air pollution which may be caused by contaminating our soil when it is treated with pesticides and, above all, I suggest that the federal government take initiative in controlling air pollution being emitted from federal buildings, equipment and vehicles used by federal authorities.

I also suggest in this bill that the minister encourage regular federal-provincial meetings and seminars to set air quality standards, and establish a special federal air pollution control division with adequate central and regional personnel and laboratory facilities in the Department of National Health and Welfare to collect data and information on air pollution, to determine criteria and guides helpful in setting ambient air quality standards in accordance with the principles of the report of the World Health Organization on air pollution.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, I have proposed the establishment of a federal anti-air pollution agency to co-ordinate this program and also the establishment of a national anti-air pollution agency and advisory council to assist in fighting air pollution.

In clause 4 of the bill I propose that the governor in council make regulations requiring motor vehicles or engines to have installed thereon or incorporated therein one or more devices to prevent or lessen the emission into the outdoor atmosphere of any air contaminant or contaminants, prescribing the specifications and standards of any such device; classifying motor vehicles and engines for the purpose of any regulations and exempting any class or type of motor vehicle or engine from any regulation; classifying the quality of equipment and fuels for use in industrial processes, steam and electric generation, and domestic heating.

Many factors contribute to air pollution, but during our study of this problem we were told that they emanate from two major forms, namely a reducing form which consists largely of soot and sulphur dioxide, and an oxidizing form which consists of carbon monoxide, hydrocarbons and photochemical decomposition products such as oxides of nitrogen, ozone, and many others. Air pollution is also influenced by the topography of the area and weather conditions such as humidity, brilliant sunshine, air stagnation and atmospheric inversion. The health hazards of air pollutants are also influenced by age, cigarette smoking and pre-existent diseases.

At a public meeting and panel discussion in which I participated at the University of Toronto last December, Dr. Alfred Bernhart, a civil engineer, described how much air pollution there is in the city of Toronto and how much damage it produces. He estimated that in one year Torontonians, by burning 8.8 million tons of coal, oil, heating gas, garbage, and also 3 million tons of gasoline and diesel oil, emit 5.2 trillion cubic feet of polluted exhaust gases into our air. In addition, 65,300 tons of dust is blown into Toronto every year. He stated also that 47 per cent of this pollution is caused by cars, buses and trucks; 20 per cent by power plants; 20 per cent by heating, 10 per cent by manufacturing plants; and 3 per cent by garbage incinerators. This pollution, he also stated, causes material and health damage amounting to approximately $120 million annually in Toronto alone.

Health authorities have stated that the intensity of urbanization and industrialization producing air pollution may have a residual influence on lung cancer mortality. Some medical specialists are of the opinion that lung cancer deaths among cigarette smokers are more frequent in large industrialized cities than in rural areas.

Studies have also shown that there is a reduction in visibility when air pollution is at its peak. In several studies of deaths during severe urban pollution, air and train crashes accounted for some of the peak mortality. Highway safety crusaders should note, therefore, that the effect of air pollution may be augmented by smoking cigarettes and inhaling carbon monoxide—a combination which increases the risk of automobile accidents.

What is alarming is that on the one hand there is an increasing air pollution hazard to humans, animals, vegetation, and physical property, and on the other hand there is an inadequate nationally co-ordinated research, a lack of ambient air quality standards, ineffective regulations, and inefficient enforcement agencies, all of which is steadily contributing to the air pollution problem in Canada.

To date I know of no authority in Canada which deals with interprovincial air pollution problems. That is why there is a wide variation in air pollution legislation and enforcement across the country. To date, Ontario has the most comprehensive air pollution program, as contained in the air pollution control act of 1967. The other provinces are said by experts to have inadequate air pollution control measures. Countries like the United States, the U.S.S.R., West Germany and Poland are far advanced in the task of setting ambient air quality standards, control regulations and other means of enforcement.

As, to date, we in Canada do not have the financial and scientific personnel to set national ambient air quality standards, we should try to learn from these countries and try to determine whether it is practical to adopt some of their measures. For general guidance in this matter, the World Health Organization's expert report on atmospheric pollutants has been available since 1964. Mr. W. B. Drowley, chairman of the Canadian Standards Association committee on air pollution, stated in an address at a conference in Montreal in 1966 that the government of Canada should place a co-ordinated policy in the hands of one agency or department to avoid duplication and fragmentation of effort.

I believe that the proposals I outlined in Bill No. C-25 meet the immediate needs which are urgently required. The Minister of National Health and Welfare will be able to fight air pollution in Canada more effectively by accepting the proposals outlined in clauses 3 and 4 of the bill. I also hope that he will prevail upon his colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp), to grant tax incentives to private citizens who would instal anti-air pollution devices and use clean fuels.

It is most urgent to attack vigorously the problem of air pollution in Canada. I believe this bill will assist in abating air pollution in our country and help to ensure better health and a higher quality of life for our citizens. Therefore I express the hope that the members of this house will either pass this bill, or at least refer its subject matter to the appropriate committee of the house for further study.

Mr. Howard: I wonder if the hon. member would permit me to ask him a question before he concludes his remarks. In view of the fact that he is the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Laing), or a kind of junior cabinet minister, I wonder whether, in the light of the importance of this subject which he so ably outlined and the urgency of dealing with it, he has had any intimations from the government as to whether or not it accepts the concept contained in the bill.

Mr. Haidasz: May I say in answer to the hon. member's question that I have received no assurance either from the Minister of National Health and Welfare or from any other minister that they will accept anything in the bill, but I have asked them whether they think that some of the ideas I have put forward in it would be acceptable. I did not receive any answers, but I have canvassed my colleagues on both sides of the house and have been told that they think these proposed measures are worthy of consideration. I would not be surprised if some of the clauses in the bill were used in a clean air act for Canada.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I was favourably impressed by the fact that my colleagues on this side of the house who took part in the agricultural debate made brief and direct speeches. I hope to follow their example in commenting on this bill, which I understand an hon. member may move to have referred to the standing committee, if it passes on second reading today.

In my view the control of pollution in Canada is one of the most urgent and serious matters we now face. It consists not only of having clean air and clean water, because there is a more fundamental problem involved in it. Until pollution is under control, our industrial production cannot continue at an accelerating rate because as production increases, so does pollution. Not only must we reduce the pollution which exists at present, but we must control any pollution in the future. Production by large industries inevitably brings about pollution of air and water, sometimes at the same time and by the same factory. This must be controlled before new industry starts. So we cannot accelerate production until this problem is controlled, and regulations for new industry are introduced all across Canada.

Second, we cannot hope to attract an increasing number of visitors to Canada if our reputation for clean air and clean water is not maintained; and it is well known that we intend to maintain our reputation, so as to encourage the flow of visitors. Finally, our quality of life will suffer if pollution is not controlled; and, after all, quality of life is our ultimate objective.

However, even if the bill were adopted, Mr. Speaker, I think it is far from being an outright assault on the problem of air pollution, which in itself is only one segment of the whole area of pollution. Some people feel you really cannot separate air pollution from soil or water pollution, from the administrative point of view. Many industries pollute air, soil and water simultaneously. However I would not want to niggle about division of responsibility, because the main problem in Canada now in connection with pollution control is division of responsibility. There are so many commissions, organizations and levels of government involved that from the action point of view we have almost reached an impasse.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I intend to deal solely with the bill before us, which concerns itself with air pollution control. As I said before, I think the bill is quite inadequate as a piece of legislation. It is nothing more than a vehicle for discussion, and on that basis I give it my approval. It makes no provision whatever for the enforcement of pollution control; in fact, there is nothing new in the bill, because such control as it does provide is already in effect. Nor does it make provision for federal financial involvement, except in a very indirect way. I think there must be financial involvement on the part of the federal government, and for several reasons, one of which is that other jurisdictions have been unable to take action to control pollution, owing to lack of funds.

The bill makes provision for the establishment of a national anti-war pollution agency and a national anti-air pollution advisory council. I do not think we need two bodies where one would do, Mr. Speaker. Second, I do not think that this bill gives the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) any powers additional to those he already has. I am not sure that I like the setting up of another agency for air pollution control only. Neither do I like the setting up of an agency that has no powers of enforcement and no financial resources. The central pivot of the bill is clause 3, which merely sets out the duties of the minister, permitting him to consider certain expediencies but giving him no additional powers.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, I would not support the bill as a legislative measure. It has no real strength in the areas I have mentioned, and as a legislative measure is no answer to the serious pollution problems we are now facing. However, as I say, as a vehicle for discussion in this house, and in committee if the bill should be sent there, the bill does have some validity in that it talks about air pollution control. But that is about all it does do. The need for pollution control in this country is so great that, even in its present state, I would not want to oppose the bill. If it does anything at all to meet the situation, then to that extent I support it, just to get some discussion under way.

Mr. Bud Germa (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on Bill C-25, which deals with the control of air pollution. My thoughts are similar to those of the speaker who just preceded me. While the bill is perhaps a good avenue for discussion, it certainly will not go very far in solving pollution problems in this country as we know them today.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that when we talk about air pollution we must also consider other areas of pollution, such as those affecting soil and water. Pollution in the air eventually finds its way to our foliage, then into the soil and into our streams, lakes and rivers, where it tends to become concentrated. Therefore I do not think we can separate these three areas; they must all be considered together. If they are separated, the legislation will suffer by oversimplifying the problem.

It is my belief that this bill will generate some discussion and to that extent it has some validity. I support it on the ground that it will engender debate across the country by various committees, agencies and groups of people, who would at least be talking about pollution.

I also believe that the problem of pollution has to be tackled on a national scale. Jurisdiction over pollution control is now vested mainly in the provinces, which in turn pass on the responsibility to the various municipalities. The municipalities are reluctant to enforce any legislation that may be detrimental to their economic health. That is to say, they are not anxious to legislate against industry. It is well known that, if they do so, industries move to other areas that allow them to continue to pollute the air their production processes. Therefore it is very rarely that a municipality passes legislation to rigidly control pollution, or even if it does pass legislation, that it enforces that legislation, because the municipality does not want to drive industry out of one community and into a more receptive neighbouring municipality.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, by attacking the problem on a national scale you avoid this sort of competition between municipalities. This concept could also be projected into the provincial field, so that one province does not have more rigid pollution control than its neighbour province, thus inviting industries to jump the provincial border to escape the cost of controlling pollution. I think it is only proper to discuss pollution on a national scale, and I suggest the federal government should assert its authority so that the matter can be attacked nationally. There should be a national law to cover pollution. It ought not to be left to the provinces, since standards of enforcement and legislation are different as between provinces.

Pollution will not be tackled adequately until the general public becomes aware of the menace. There is a growing trend for those working with the press, radio and television to give wide exposure to the dangers of pollution. I recall a program the C.B.C. carried, I believe on February 12, in which the camera and camera crew had been smuggled into the International Nickel plant at Sudbury. Pictures of pollution in the making were taken, pictures which had never been taken before. The president of the company had said that the camera crew would not be allowed in the plant, because it was against company policy, but the photographs had been taken by the time the permission to take them was sought.

Full marks must be given to the C.B.C. This matter might have been discussed during the broadcasting bill discussions. A private station, I think, would never have taken the risk of offending such a large advertiser. It would not have taken such pictures, showing pollution in the making. The C.B.C. crew deserve a medal for bringing this problem to the attention of the public in such a dramatic way.

I also understand that one of the camera crew, after coming out of the smelter, had to receive medical attention on account of the large quantity of sulphur dioxide he had inhaled. In this connection I should put on the record that pollution within the smelter reaches 200 parts of sulphur dioxide per million. That is almost a lethal limit. The medical profession believes that we cannot survive for more than four hours if we breathe a mixture of 200 sulphur dioxide parts per million parts of air. This pollution level exists almost daily in the plant. I must also point out that thousands of men are exposed daily to even higher concentrations of sulphur dioxide, and to ammonia and carbon dioxide.

You can breathe in up to four parts per million of sulphur dioxide without knowing you are breathing pulluted air. Only when the level rises from five to six parts per million does one begin to suffer any discomfort; but it is too late then, because already you have been exposed too much. So, polluted air may be damaging you, and you may not know it. That is the insidious part of pollution, because often you do not know you are exposed to it.

Mr. Peters: You can't say that for E.B. Eddy, across the river.

Mr. Germa: The smell is obnoxious, but whether it is dangerous I do not know. It may be damaging to our sense of smell only.

I have been concerned about the problem of pollution for a number of years. I come from Sudbury, which often takes a drubbing from correspondents who pass through but seldom stay. Invariably you hear statements such as, "It looks like the far side of the moon." One man actually said, "Where did the bomb fall?" There are no forests in our area; they were stripped away many years ago. Without their protection our soil has eroded and black, barren rocks are exposed. Many wonder why anybody lives there. But we do produce wealth. When that wealth is produced, sulphur dioxide is discharged into the air, and the fumes have ruined one of the most beautiful parts of Canada. One of the best stands of white pine in this country stood in our part of northern Ontario. Now it has been devastated. The topsoil is washed away. Nothing is left except eroded, clay gullys and black, barren rocks.

We have a high incidence of lung disease. Though there has been no investigation, I suspect that long term exposure to sulphur dioxide fumes is the cause of it.

Father Hod Marshall of St. Charles College in Sudbury, which is run by the Basilian Fathers, asks in a letter:

> Please keep me informed on what progress is being made in that direction. Who was responsible for clearing up a like problem in Trail, B.C.?

The reverend father was referring to our pollution problem. It will be recalled that Trail, in British Columbia, had a problem similar to that of Sudbury. A smelter was refining lead and zinc, and SO_2 was being exhausted in the process. The provincial government took no action; no government in this country took action. All the same, the fumes were finding their way down into the United States and were damaging the fruit orchards in the state of Washington. The United States government saw fit to bring action against Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company, with the result that the company was forced to clean up its operation. The exhaust which polluted the air was turned into fertilizer. So the company turned a waste product into a product that brought it profits.

If a foreign government could bring a punitive action which forced an industry to clean up its manufacturing process, why cannot this government take punitive measures just as effectively to force other industries to clean up their operations.

Some time ago I saw fit to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) the following question about pollution in Sudbury:

> Will the Minister of National Health and Welfare undertake a survey to determine the effects on workers of long-term exposure to high concentrations of sulphur dioxide fumes at the International Nickel Company plant in the Sudbury district?

To this, the minister replied:

> The Department of National Health and Welfare would assist the provincial government, if requested, in conducting a survey of this type.

So you see, Mr. Speaker, there is a problem about determining who has jurisdiction over air pollution control measures. In this instance I was referred to the provincial government. I followed the matter up and referred my question, together with the minister's reply, to Dr. Dymond, minister of health for Ontario, who replied to me as follows:

> This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 11th. It will also advise you that a study of possible long term effects of exposure to sulphur dioxide in smelter workers and others has already commenced at the Sudbury plant.

I was pleased to hear that this survey had begun. I had been in contact with the local union which was watching this situation closely and I advised the international representative of the United Steel Workers of America, Mr. Valentine, of the information I had been given. He went to the International Nickel Company at whose plant in Sudbury this survey was supposedly taking place, and he afterwards wrote to me in this vein:

> I made it a point to contact Mr. Seli, manager of industrial relations for Inco in Sudbury, and asked him if he knew of any studies regarding the possible long term effects of exposure to sulphur dioxide of smelter workers or others in the Sudbury area. To say the least, I was very surprised when he told me he knew nothing about this.

So you see, Mr. Speaker, there is confusion here. The manager of industrial relations in the plant supposedly under study does not even know that the province of Ontario is conducting a survey, if indeed a survey is going forward. The union representative does not know about it, and neither do I, though I am convinced such a survey should be carried out because insufficient information is available as to the effect of sulphur dioxide upon people who are exposed to it; and if ever there was a group of guinea pigs it is this group of five or six thousand workers, some of whom have been exposed for as long as thirty years. A comparison could be made between the condition of their lungs and those of the newer workers, so as to document forever the type of damage which sulphur dioxide does. I think that sulphur dioxide is the main cause of pollution at the present time.

With regard to this survey in the Sudbury district, on February 2 the Ontario department of mines issued a press release which stated:

> The Ontario Department of Health in co-operation with the Ontario Department of Mines has been engaged in a study of the possible health effects of long-term exposure to sulphur dioxide among workers in the Sudbury area. This study is being carried out to determine whether there has been any relationship between work exposure to sulphur dioxide and the occurrence of certain chronic diseases such as respiratory or heart disease.

This is the statement made by the Ontario department of mines and the Ontario department of health. Yet the company does not know about it, the union does not know about it and I do not know about it. It seems strange that a survey could be going on without anyone concerned knowing about it.

There are other people who are concerned about pollution. I have been in contact with Dr. W. Y. Watson, chairman of the biology department at Laurentian University in the city of Sudbury, whose ideas on the subject of pollution are in some respects at variance with my own, and apparently at variance with those of the hon. member who is sponsoring the bill before us. Dr. Watson did attend the conference on pollution held in November, and he writes as follows:

> One impression I got from being there was that there was sufficient legislation to begin pollution control.

This professor feels there is sufficient legislation on the books. I shall not quibble with him. I do not believe we have sufficient legislation to enable us to enforce the measures we believe should be taken. If it is the case that there is already sufficient legislation, we do not need Bill C-25, which is a new bill dealing with pollution, though I believe it is a good bill as far as it goes. Dr. Watson goes on to say that the laws and regulations may have to be modified as further research indicates weaknesses.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must advise the hon. member that the time allotted to him has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to make a few comments on Bill No. C-25 introduced by my colleague for Toronto-Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz).

It is now recognized that air pollution is a problem with which our modern world will have to cope and which is liable to upset the economy of all countries.

This pollution is so obvious in urban centres that there is no doubt about it, since buildings are altered, metals are corroded by air acidity or vegetables are dying or are unable to reach maturity. How can men, in turn, avoid the effects of such pollution?

One can say that very few countries do not feel the ill effects of this progressive intoxication caused by air pollution which, contrary to the classic social calamities, affect the countries with the highest standard of living. Therefore, it is in the most developed or industrialized countries, where there is the greatest number of motor vehicles, that the air is increasingly polluted and becomes less and less respirable. When pollution reaches a certain critical stage, unfavorable atmospheric conditions may cause serious diseases and even, in some cases, death.

The Montreal Dimanche Matin, in its last Sunday issue, has denounced the danger of poisonous carbon monoxide emanations in downtown Montreal. Mr. Jean Marier, director of the Air Pollution Division of the Montreal Health Department said in that article that tests have been made in this regard. One of their inspectors spent several days cruising around the downtown section of Montreal as a passenger in a car. The ventilation system of the car was working perfectly and the windows were down. Here are the results of these tests:

> The tests have shown a proportion of 12 per cent of carbon monoxide, originating from the exhaust system of various vehicles, in the blood stream of the inspector. This means that 12 per cent of the red corpuscles could not function and absorb the oxygen.
> "When there is more than 10 per cent carbon monoxide, there are slight poisoning symptoms, nausea, general discomfort. Between 15 and 20 per cent, there is dizziness and the judgment and faculties become unbalanced. Between 50 and 60 per cent, death strikes rapidly."

The world has already witnessed similar tragedies and no one can deny that a large city, where such conditions prevail, suffers similar consequences.

In the last few years, we have noticed a considerable decrease in the sunlight and a progressive increase in the fog in industrial areas. The reputation of the notorious "smog" (smoke and fog together), which affects London is universally recognized.

Among the cities which have suffered the most from air pollution, one can single out the city of London, England, where it caused a great number of deaths and disabilities.

[Mr. Isabelle.]

During the winter of 1952, everybody remembers that due to a persistent smog which spread all kinds of air impurities, 4,000 persons died and hospitals were filled with the victims of that scourge.

It will also be recalled that as the smog—a combination of smoke and fog—increased, hospitals and other medical centres had to admit only the more severely affected patients. Most of the sick had acute respiratory ailments.

However, humans were not the only ones to be affected, as I said earlier. Some animals, taking part in a show at that time, died or had to be destroyed, due to acute respiratory trouble. All animals were affected, and those who survived required intensive care.

This is the worst disaster of its kind, although London has registered losses from this scourge before and since 1952. The death registers show that already in 1874 there was a number of deaths due to air pollution. The same happened in other parts of the world.

In 1930, in the industrial regions of the Meuse valley, in Belgium, 60 people died and several others were gravely ill during a rather long period of fog which polluted the area. A number of domestic animals died on that occasion.

Closer to home, in Donora, in Pennsylvania, 20 persons died and half the people became ill in similar circumstances in 1948. More recently, New York has started to feel the fatal effects of air pollution.

This proves beyond a doubt that air pollution can cause death or illness which can leave people disabled. The most striking fact in the above examples, is that before people began to suffer from the harmful effects mentioned, pollution seemed to be a normal and harmless phenomenon.

• (5:50 p.m.)

In London, for instance, the day fog appeared, visibility was good in the morning but at a certain time, when the velocity of the wind came to nearly nothing, pollution started to cover the city. The next day, smog became so dense that some transportation companies had to stop all activities. Traffic practically stopped and many drivers left their cars in the streets. So the city of London became virtually crippled during four days because of fog.

What will happen if similar conditions occur again? One can wonder to what extent people living in a city where air is polluted are affected in a normal day. There is always in the air this mixture of smoke, sulphur dioxide and possibly other noxious substances, but those substances do not present as much danger as when the atmosphere is calm.

Medical authorities are not unanimous on this point, but it is getting more obvious that some illnesses, like bronchitis, emphysema and other respiratory ailments are aggravated, if not caused, by daily exposure to an atmosphere considered as normal, but containing a certain degree of pollution. It is also suspected that lung cancer is caused by air pollution, but to a lower degree than by cigaret smoke.

It has been proved that people living in cities where the pollution danger is more pronounced are more subject to lung cancer than those who live in rural areas. It is not necessary to have been subjected to air pollution all our life to pay the consequences, because it has been clearly demonstrated that people who have emigrated from the United Kingdom to Australia or South Africa are more subject to lung cancer than those who were born and had always lived in those countries.

In addition to the human deaths which result from air pollution, there is also a considerable loss of human resources. Vegetation is hampered, livestock suffer from almost incurable diseases, houses and buildings are blackened and man is even deprived of the pleasure of admiring the beauties of nature. Estimates have been made of the losses incurred, and it is generally accepted that air pollution costs urban dwellers between $30 and $40 a year per capita.

In Canada, it means that air pollution can cost billions of dollars annually. We could subsidize several programs, in order to control that problem with a small percentage of those funds. All citizens should contribute to those expenditures incurred for the control of pollution which is permeating our towns and cities.

Sources of pollution are various and I will simply summarize them. We have just completed some investigations and the knowledge gained on the subject throughout the country should be efficiently conveyed. We know that Bill No. C-25 includes provisions to that effect. The bill asks the minister to recognize the urgent necessity of encouraging research at the municipal, provincial and federal levels, in order to determine the nature of air pollution and the means to control it.

The bill is also concerned with research on atmospheric conditions and air quality in order to establish criteria and national standards. Special appropriations are also contained in this bill in order to promote research at the university level and to facilitate the exchange of knowledge between various intermediary bodies which the department intends to establish.

Mr. Speaker, those points are among the most important and they are conformable to my earlier remarks. We must be informed on that matter. We cannot be satisfied to pass legislation in the hope that the problem will be solved in that way. We must also be sure that the course of action which we shall follow will meet adequately and in all respects, the interest of the country.

Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Roxburgh):

That the bill be referred to the standing committee on health and welfare.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is moved by Mr. Isabelle, seconded by Mr. Roxburgh, that the subject matter of this bill be sent to the standing committee on health and welfare. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt this amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Isabelle) agreed to.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE OF VOLUMES I, II AND III, AND REPORT OF AUDITOR GENERAL

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could get consent to revert to motions for the purpose of passing the resolution to send the public accounts to the standing committee?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house agree to revert to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) have leave to proceed with order No. 67?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I move:

That the Public Accounts volumes I, II and III for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1967, laid before the house on January 22, 1968, be referred to the standing committee on public accounts.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, we in this group are quite content under the circumstances to pass this without debate, if it is agreeable to the house generally.

Mr. Knowles: So are we, Mr. Speaker, but we would like the report of the Auditor General to be referred as well. I believe that that report has been tabled since this motion was drafted, and I wonder if by consent it could be included.

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker; perhaps that could be added to my motion.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether we may assume that the committee will be called immediately to appoint a new chairman and vice chairman.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: By leave, the motion would now read:

That the Public Accounts, volumes I, II and III for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1967, laid before the house on January 22, 1968, and the report of the Auditor General, be referred to the standing committee on public accounts.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, would the government house leader place on the record the order of business for the first couple of days of next week, so far as he is in a position to do so.

Mr. Knowles: Let us have it for the whole week.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, on Monday we intend to continue with the supplementary estimates of the Department of Agriculture. Then we intend to proceed with the estimates of the Departments of Finance, External Affairs and National Defence.

Mr. Howard: Before we adjourn, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister relative to next week's activities whether the government plans to bring any particular crisis before the house and, if so, would he tell us what it might be.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being six o'clock the house stands adjourned until 2.30 p.m. Monday next.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, March 4, 1968

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TABLING OF DOCUMENTS RESPECTING RELATIONS WITH GABON

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I should like to table a copy of the statement issued by me during the lunch hour on relations between the Republic of Gabon and Canada, together with a note from the Secretary of State for External Affairs to the foreign minister of Gabon which was attached to that statement.

Mr. Speaker: Has the Prime Minister permission to table these documents?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I do not know whether I am in order at this point, but may I ask the Prime Minister whether he would also table the note which the Canadian government received from Gabon?

Mr. Pearson: I would be glad to look into that at once. I do not know whether a written note was received; I think there was a discussion with the ambassador of Gabon representing his government, but I will look into the matter and see whether we can table a report of that conversation.

FINANCE

REQUEST THAT INVESTORS REFRAIN FROM SWAPPED DEPOSIT TRANSACTIONS

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Members of the house will be aware of accounts which have appeared in the public media regarding the disturbed state of international financial markets which developed at the end of last week. I believe these reports are greatly exaggerated, and that the situation is not as disturbed as it has been made out to be.

However, the developments of the last few days have resulted in a marked increase in the short term rates of interest in the so-called Euro-dollar market. These rates have risen to very high levels. In view of the already high level of short term rates of interest in Canada it has been thought desirable to protect the Canadian interest rate structure from the effect of these short term rates in the Euro-dollar market as far as we can.

The governor of the Bank of Canada has this morning, by agreement with me requested the banks and other financial intermediaries for the time being not to facilitate swapped deposit transactions, which constitute the main link between the Canadian short term interest rate structure and the rate prevailing in the Euro-dollar market.

I wish therefore to request Canadian investors for the time being to refrain from entering into or renewing swapped deposit transactions through any intermediary, Canadian or non-Canadian. By way of explanation I should add that swapped deposits are made with Canadian funds which are converted into a foreign currency, usually U.S. dollars, and placed on term deposit with a bank or other intermediary, with the intermediary undertaking through a forward contract to convert them back into Canadian dollars at maturity.

HISTORIC SITES

TABLING OF POLICY STATEMENT

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): I ask permission to table copies in both languages of a policy statement on national historic sites of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to table these documents?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

WOMEN

PROVISION FOR MATERNITY LEAVE BEFORE AND AFTER CHILDBIRTH

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-204, respecting the employment of women in federal jurisdiction before and after childbirth.

Mr. Knowles: Explain.

Questions

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): As the explanatory note indicates, the purpose of this bill is to provide maternity leave for women employed in any work, undertaking or business within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada.

Its provisions are in line with standards laid down by the International Labour Organization and adopted in varying degrees by countries throughout the world. It is hoped that by adopting such legislation as is proposed the parliament of Canada may encourage the provincial legislatures to do likewise.

Motion agreed and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

RESEARCH SCIENTISTS IN GOVERNMENT

Question No. 887—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many employees in the Research Scientist classification were on strength in (a) Department of Energy, Mines and Resources (b) Department of Forestry and Rural Development (c) Department of Agriculture, on April 1, 1967?

2. Are these Research Scientists subject to an annual salary review on the basis of merit and scientific productivity?

3. What percentage of the Research Scientists in each of these three departments received salary increments with effect from April 1, 1967?

4. Were such increments awarded solely on the basis of merit and scientific productivity?

5. What percentage of the Research Scientists in each of the three Departments did not receive an annual increment with effect from April 1, 1967?

6. Why did the Research Scientists referred to in Part 4 not receive an annual increment with effect from April 1, 1967?

7. What percentage of Research Scientists in each of the three Departments receive salary increments with effect from April 1, 1967, of $500 per annum or over?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Insofar as the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources is concerned: 1. (a) 388; (b) not applicable; (c) not applicable.

2. Yes.

3. Department of Energy, Mines and Resources—64.8 per cent.

4. Yes.

5. Department of Energy, Mines and Resources—35.2 per cent.

6. Their relative salary positions in relation to research scientists in other departments in the government service, based on an assessment of productivity, did not indicate that an increase was supportable at that time.

7. Department of Energy, Mines and Resources—17 per cent.

Insofar as the Department of Forestry and Rural Development is concerned: 1. 237.

2. Yes.

3. 84.4 per cent.*

4. Yes.

5. 15.6 per cent.

6. Research scientists not receiving an increment in 1967 were judged to have insufficient productivity to warrant a merit increment.

7. 19 per cent.

* Includes 14 persons promoted into the research scientist class from other professional classes, retroactive to April 1, 1967; all such persons received a salary increase on promotion.

Insofar as the Department of Agriculture is concerned: 1. (a) not applicable; (b) not applicable; (c) 682.

2. Yes.

3. Approximately 99 per cent.

4. Yes.

5. Approximately 1 per cent.

6. 8 research scientists failed to receive an annual increment on April 1, 1967. The reasons were: lack of merit; at top of grade; leave of absence without pay; retirement leave.

7. Approximately 33⅓ per cent.

C.B.C. EMPLOYEES ABROAD

Question No. 897—Mr. Orlikow:

1. What is the number of Canadian Broadcasting Corporation staff employed in the following cities: New York, London, Paris, Washington?

2. Of these, how many are news or broadcasting personnel, how many are technical staff such as cameramen, and how many are administrative and secretarial staff?

3. In each of these cities, are the heads of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation Bureaus, members of the administrative or broadcasting or news sections of the staff?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the C.B.C. as follows: 1. New York, 10 including 5 hired locally; London, 24 including 16 hired locally; Paris, 23 including 18 hired locally; Washington, 6 including 2 hired locally.

2. New York, Broadcasting personnel—6; Technical staff—Nil; Administrative staff—4. London, Broadcasting personnel—13; Technical staff—4; Administrative staff—7. Paris, Broadcasting personnel—9; Technical staff—5; Administrative staff—9. Washington, Broadcasting personnel—4; Technical staff—Nil; Administrative staff—2.

3. In New York, London and Paris the heads of bureaus, or C.B.C. representatives, as they are called, are administrative staff, as is the case in other broadcasting organizations. The Washington bureau is a branch of the New York office, and is administered by New York.

INTER-AMERICAN INDIAN INSTITUTE

Question No. 901—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. Have Canadians attended plenary meetings of the Inter-American Indian Institute?

2. If so, at what times and who were the personnel in attendance?

3. Is it the intention of Canada to join the Inter-American Indian Institute?

4. What Canadian organizations or individuals have urged such a course of action?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): 1. Yes.

2. The 1949 congress in Cuzco, Peru, was attended by the secretary of the Canadian embassy in Peru, and the 1964 congress in Quito, Ecuador, was attended by the director of Indian Affairs and the director of citizenship, of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

3. This question is still under consideration.

4. In addition to a few individual requests the following organizations have urged Canadian membership: Indian Eskimo Association of Canada; National Indian Council; Canadian Indian Youth Council; Miss Indian Canada Pageant.

TUNNEL UNDER STRAIT OF BELLE ISLE

Question No. 902—Mr. Caouette:

1. Has the Government of Canada held discussions with the Government of Newfoundland regarding construction of a tunnel under the Strait of Belle Isle?

2. Does the Government of Canada intend to participate in this project and, if so, to what extent?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by several departments as follows: 1. No.

2. Not applicable.

NATIONALIZATION OF DOSCO STEEL WORKS

Question No. 903—Mr. Caouette:

1. Has the Government of Canada held discussions with the Government of Nova Scotia regarding nationalization of the Dosco steel works?

2. If so, what have these discussions involved?

3. Have any undertakings been made by the Government of Canada in this connection and, if so, what are they?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by several departments as follows: 1. No.

2. Not applicable.

3. Not applicable.

PUBLIC SERVICE BILINGUAL BONUS

Question No. 923—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. What are the appropriate standards of competence in the two official languages required by the Public Service Commission prior to qualification of a public servant to receive a seven per cent bonus?

2. What examinations or other tests are held to assure (i) attainment (ii) continued retention, of such appropriate standards?

3. What audit or other supervision is conducted by the Public Service Commission of certificates which may be given by Deputy Heads of compliance with required conditions?

4. In how many instances, if any, by departments, has the Public Service Commission disagreed with the certificate of a Deputy Head and with what result?

5. What amount of use of a second official language is required for qualification for bonus?

6. What audit or other supervision is conducted by the Public Service Commission to ensure the actual continuance of such minimum use of a second official language?

7. Has the payment of the bonus been cancelled in any instances for lack of continuance of minimum use of a second official language and, if so, in how many instances?

8. Of the 1,780 persons shown in the answer to question No. 784 as receiving the seven per cent bonus, how many, by departments, are persons whose (a) mother tongue is English and are paid the bonus for competence in the French language (b) mother tongue is French and are paid the bonus for competence in the English language?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I have been given the following information by the Public Service Commission: 1. (a) An employee is deemed to meet the appropriate standard of competence in the two official languages if, at the time of appointment, the essential qualifications included a knowledge of both official languages and he or she had been tested by the Public Service Commission and found to meet this requirement. (b) In all other cases employees are required to submit to a test of competence by the Public Service Commission in the other official language in order to qualify for the differential.

2. (i) (a) Candidates at all levels are required to take or have taken a standard typing test in both official languages at a minimum speed of 35 words per minute with a high degree of accuracy. (b) Stenographers and junior secretaries (St 3, 4 and 5) are required to pass or have passed a shorthand test in both official languages, three minutes in length, at 80 words a minute. (c) Senior secretaries (St 6, 7 and 8) establish competency through a typing test and the certification by the department that they actually compose, type and sign a variety of correspondence and memoranda in both official languages, and have frequent contacts with senior persons outside and inside the Service which require verbal skills in these languages. (ii) No employee, who has qualified by examination for appointment to a position, is given a later test by the commission to determine that he has retained the skills he possessed upon appointment to that position. Therefore, once it has been established that an employee is eligible to receive the bilingual bonus, no further examination or test is given by the commission.

3. The employing department is in the best position to know the extent to which one of its employees is required to use and is actually using a second official language. Once the commission is satisfied that the employee meets the appropriate standards of competence, no audit or other supervision is carried out.

4. See answer to No. 3.

5. The minimum amount of use of a second official language required for qualification for the bonus is 10 per cent of the employee's time in the performance of his or her duties.

6. As this responsibility rests with the deputy head, the Public Service Commission conducts no audit or supervision to ensure the actual continuance of the minimum use of the second official language. However, departments have been requested to review the situation at periodic intervals.

7. The Public Service Commission records do not provide this information. There have been, however, 97 cases in which the allowance was terminated. Termination of the bonus may result because (a) an employee moves from a position requiring the use of the second official language to another which does not; (b) an employee moves to another category in which the bonus is not paid; (c) an employee leaves the service; and (d) an employee fails to continue the minimum use of the second official language.

8. This information is not available.

[Miss LaMarsh.]

CONTRACTS WITH ENAMEL AND HEATING PRODUCTS

Question No. 926—Mr. Coates:

What was the total value of work available to Enamel and Heating Products Ltd. in the fiscal year 1960-61 from contracts with the Department of Defence Production and contracts obtained through the production-sharing agreement with firms in the United States, and what is the total value of work from these two sources for the fiscal year 1967-68?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): In so far as the Department of Defence Production is concerned: The total net value of contracts placed by the head office branches of the Department of Defence Production and through the production sharing agreement with firms in the United States totalled $159,962 in 1960-61 and $678,823 in the April 1-December 31 period of the 1967-68 fiscal year.

Dr. Donald H. Thain, School of Business Administration, University of Western Ontario, London, Ontario.

2. Dr. Donald Ralph Campbell is professor of political economy and associate dean of arts and science, University of Toronto. He took his B.A. degree at University of Toronto in 1949 and his M.A. at Oxford in 1958. His field is world economic developments. He was an adviser to the government of Jordan from 1962-64; head of the department of agricultural economics at the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, 1952-62.

Pierre Comtois, is a partner of Bélanger, St-Jacques, Sirois, Comtois & Co., Chartered Accountants, Sherbrooke. He also is a member of a director of Bélanger, Chabot, Nobert, Angers, management consultants, Montreal. He received his B.A. from Laval University in 1945; his B.A.S. from the University of Montreal (Institut Agricole d'Oka) in 1949; his M.S. from Laval University in 1951. He was made a chartered accountant at Laval University in 1954. Until 1966, he lectured on accounting at Sherbrooke University.

Dr. J. Clayton Gilson is professor and head of the department of agricultural economics at the University of Manitoba, Winnipeg. He took his B.S.A. and M.Sc. degrees at that university and his Ph.D. at Iowa State University. He has specialized in production economics, farm management, credit and land economics.

Dr. David L. MacFarlane is professor and head of the department of agricultural economics, Macdonald College. He took his B.S. degree in 1933 and his M.S. degree the following year at the University of Saskatchewan. He received his Ph.D. in 1940 from the University of Minnesota. He also attended Harvard University and the University of Chicago. He was professor at University of Kentucky 1938-42; an economist with the federal government in 1942-44; director of procurement for the United Nations in 1944-47. A professor at McGill University from 1947 to 1965, he served on the faculty of University of Nigeria, Enugu from 1963 to 1965.

Dr. Donald H. Thain teaches business policy at the school of business administration, University of Western Ontario. He holds master's and doctorate degrees from Harvard University. One of the foremost business consultants in Canada, Dr. Thain was a visiting professor in 1965-66 at IMEDE, Lauzanne, Switzerland, one of the top management schools in the world.

3. The chairman of the task force is Dr. David L. MacFarlane.

4. Terms of reference of the task force (1) The task force will make a comprehensive assessment of Canadian agriculture in terms of its contribution toward the achievement of national goals. Particular recognition will be given to the income and welfare of farmers. In the above work, concern will be with the productivity of the agricultural industry in the context of the adjustments to new technology and maintaining the industry in a strong competitive position in domestic and international markets.

(2) It will study and make recommendations concerning agricultural policies required to achieve long range national and agricultural goals, taking account of the interests of farmers and consumers.

(3) To accomplish the above objectives, the task force will use existing research results and conduct a series of research projects.

5. As of this date no research consultant or other advisor is under contract to the task force for purpose of research. However negotiations are at an advanced stage with several prominent university groups and research consultant firms.

6. The following is a list of research projects in an advanced stage of negotiation with the name of the consultant and his occupation: (a) Dairy Industry Study—Professor Brian B. Perkins, University of Guelph, Guelph, Ontario. (b) Livestock, Poultry and the Feed Grain Economy—Acres Research and Planning Ltd., Toronto. Research Consultants. (c) Wheat and Oil Seeds Economy Study—Hedlin, Menzies & Associates Ltd., Winnipeg, Manitoba. Professor in Agricultural Economics. (h) Long Range Projections of Demand—Dr. James P. Cavin. Private Consultant in economic statistical analysis. (Dr. Cavin is working very closely with Mr. Frank Shefrin of the Economics Branch of C.D.A. in this project).

7. The five members of the task force are being paid on the following basis: $150 per diem, accommodation and subsistence allowance of $25 per diem while working at a location other than their normal place of residence and actual transportation expenses while in travel status. See also answer to question No. 5.

8. Due to time limitation public hearings will not be held. However advertisements were placed in a wide coverage of major and weekly newspapers, as well as in all the major daily and weekly agricultural publications. This advertisement solicited submissions on agricultural problems and policies from individuals and organizations and the response to date has been considerable and encouraging.

9. Not applicable.

10. December 1968.

11. Not as yet decided.

12. The total estimated cost is $688,000.

LEVEL CROSSING SIGNALS, HAY RIVER, N.W.T.

Question No. 932—Mr. Orange:

1. In view of the recent crossing accident, involving a fatality, between an automobile and a diesel locomotive operated by the Great Slave Railway in the Town of Hay River, N.W.T., is it the intention of the railroad and/or the government to install warning signals at level crossings in the town and vicinity?

2. If so, when and at what estimated cost?

3. If not, for what reason?

[Mr. Greene.]

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows:

1. There are no crossings in the town of Hay River and vicinity presently being considered for automatic protection by the Railway Transport Committee of the Canadian Transport Commission. However, in accordance with the usual practice, an investigation of the crossing accident referred to will be made by one of the committee's district inspectors at which time consideration will be given to the necessity of installing warning signals at that location.

2. See 1.

3. See 1.

GRANTS FOR RESEARCH IN SOCIAL SCIENCES

Question No. 937—Mr. Schreyer:

1. In each of the past two years, what grants have been made by the National Research Council for research in the social sciences?

2. How many individuals and how many institutions received such grants?

3. What are the names of these institutions and what was the amount in each case?

4. For what specific areas of research were these grants made?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): The National Research Council of Canada has awarded a number of grants during the past two years in three fields which may be considered to be in the broad area of the social sciences, viz., certain aspects of archaeology and physical anthropology, physical geography and experimental psychology.

In 1966-67 the council awarded 150 grants to 147 individuals at 22 Canadian universities for research in archaeology and anthropology, geography, and experimental psychology. In 1967-68, 208 grants were awarded to 202 individuals at 25 universities for research in these three fields.

Table I shows the distribution of these grants by universities for 1966-67, and table II shows the distribution of grants awarded in 1967-68.

Details of all grants awarded in 1966-67 are given in the council's publication entitled, "Annual Report on Support of University Research 1966-67". The issue covering grants awarded in 1967-68 will be published in due course.

AIR NAVIGATION FACILITIES, N.W.T.

Question No. 944—Mr. Orange:

1. At what locations of Baffin Island, N.W.T., are air navigation facilities located?

2. What is the nature of the specific facilities at Frobisher Bay, N.W.T. at the present time?

3. Are steps being taken to improve air navigation facilities on Baffin Island generally and at Frobisher Bay specifically and, if so, what are they?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Air navigation facilities are located on Baffin Island, N.W.T., at the following locations: Arctic Bay, Brevoort, Broughton, Cape Christian, Cape Dorset, Cape Dyer, Cape Hooper, Dewar Lakes, Frobisher Bay, Longstaff Bluff, Mary River, Pangnirtung and Pond Inlet.

2. The specific facilities located at Frobisher Bay, N.W.T., at the present time are; one radio range station, three non-directional radio beacons, one instrument landing system and one international aeradio station.

[Mr. Drury.]

3. No steps are being taken to improve air navigation facilities on Baffin Island generally and at Frobisher Bay specifically at this time.

N.F.B. PRODUCTION "WAITING FOR CAROLINE"

Question No. 945—Mr. Fairweather:

1. How much money was budgeted for the CBC/NFB production Waiting for Caroline?

2. What was the actual cost of the production?

3. What length of time was the film scheduled to take to produce?

4. How long did it actually take?

5. Whom did the National Film Board recommend to direct the production?

6. Who actually did direct the production?

7. Was this person a CBC staff director?

8. Who was the NFB supervising producer of this production?

9. Who was the NFB director of production of this production?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by C.B.C. and N.F.B. as follows: 1. $319,768.58.

2. Final payments have not yet been made. The indicated total cost is $511,252.36.

3. The original shooting schedule was 9 weeks and 2 days and the original completion schedule was 31 weeks.

4. Actual shooting schedule: 15 weeks. Actual completion schedule: 29 weeks, 3 days.

5. George Kaczender and Bernard Devlin.

6. Ron Kelly.

"HOW OUR PARLIAMENTARY RIGHTS WERE WON"

Question No. 959—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. Upon what authority was a circular entitled How our Parliamentary rights were won inserted in the issue of the C.B.C. Times dated December 7 to 13?

2. Was the cost of printing of this circular borne in whole or in part by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation?

3. What percentage of moneys received through the order form in this circular will be retained by the C.B.C.?

4. Under what arrangement will moneys collected in this manner be distributed elsewhere and to whom?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the C.B.C. as follows: 1. A brochure in support of the sale of a C.B.C. publication entitled "A Man at Westminster", published by the C.B.C. under the authority of section 29.1 of the Broadcasting Act of 1958, appeared in C.B.C. Times for the week of December 2 to 8.

2. Costs of printing the book and supporting publicity material were borne entirely by the corporation.

3. All moneys received, through the use of the order form in the circular, are retained by the C.B.C. to be applied against the costs of production.

4. No other distribution is involved. C.B.C. owns world publication rights in perpetuity.

PRINCE ALBERT RADAR LABORATORY—CANADA-U.S. CIVIL DEFENCE AGREEMENT

Question No. 960—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. What, if any, agreements have been reached between the government or any agency thereof and any private company or individual for the continued operation of the Prince Albert Radar Laboratory?

2. (a) What are the implications for Canadian sovereignty of the civil defence agreement signed August 8th, 1967, by the United States and Canada (b) what specific provisions have been made for joint operations of services or functions by the two countries in the event that the agreement is activated?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Departments of National Defence, External Affairs and Defence Production as follows: 1. An agreement has been reached between the Defence Research Board and the Bell Telephone Laboratories Incorporated for the carrying out of a scientific measurement program for a period of six months, or longer. Order in Council P.C. 1968-8/1 dated 4 January 1968 refers.

2. (a) There are no implications for Canadian sovereignty. The agreement provides for consultation and co-operation in civil emergency planning between the two countries. The purpose of this consultation is to ensure that national plans formulated independently by each country are as compatible as is considered desirable and possible by both countries. The agreement does not provide for integrated planning, and the two countries retain national control over their own civil emergency plans. (b) No specific provisions have been made for joint operations of services or functions by the two countries. The purpose of the agreement is to identify areas of possible civil co-operation in the event of direct attack involving both countries, and to ensure that in such areas, civil emergency plans are compatible.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC SERVICE

Question No. 967—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. Has an advisory committee been established to consider salaries and other terms and conditions of employment of public service employees excluded from collective bargaining units?

2. If so, what are the names, addresses and ordinary occupations of the members of such committee?

3. What, in detail, are the terms of reference of such committee?

Hon. E. J. Benson (President of the Treasury Board): 1. Yes. The advisory group on executive compensation in the public service.

2. The Honourable J. V. Clyne (chairman), president of MacMillan, Bloedel and Powell River Limited, Vancouver, B.C.; Dr. John Deutsch, principal-designate, Queen's University, Kingston, Ontario; Dr. Roger Gaudry, rector of the University of Montreal, Montreal, P.Q.; Mr. Alan Lambert, president of the Toronto-Dominion Bank, Toronto, Ontario; Mr. Marcel Vincent, president of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada, Montreal, P.Q.

3. To advise the government on—(a) the rates of pay and conditions of employment that should apply to executive personnel in the public service; and (b) the principles that should govern determination of the rates of pay and conditions of employment of other personnel employed in a managerial or confidential capacity in the public service.

HOME IMPROVEMENT LOANS

Question No. 974—Mr. Douglas:

1. What was the total value of requests for home improvement loans in each of the years 1963, 1964, 1965, 1966 and 1967?

2. What amount was granted in each year in each province?

Hon. E. J. Benson (President of the Treasury Board): 1. Requests for home improvement loans are submitted by applicants to branches of the chartered banks. The corporation therefore does not have data on the value of such requests.

2. The table following provides the information on the number and amount of home improvement loans approved, by province, in each of the years 1963, 1964, 1965 and 1966. Data for 1967 are not yet available.

SINGLE FAMILY DWELLINGS UNDER N.H.A.

Question No. 975—Mr. Douglas:

1. How many of the new single-family dwellings built under NHA and sold by builders in 1967 were priced (a) under $14,000 (b) $14,000 to $19,999 (c) $20,000 and over?

2. What is the breakdown for these single-family dwellings by province?

3. What is the breakdown for these single-family dwellings in Canada's 18 largest cities?

Hon. E. J. Benson (President of the Treasury Board): 1, 2 and 3. The data for 1967 are not yet available.

HOUSING STARTS AND COMPLETIONS, 1967

Question No. 976—Mr. Douglas:

1. What was the number of housing starts and the number of housing completions in 1967?

2. How many of the starts were (a) single-detached houses (b) semi-detached houses (c) duplexes, row houses and apartments?

3. How many of the completions were (a) single-detached houses (b) semi-detached houses (c) duplexes, row houses and apartments?

Hon. E. J. Benson (President of the Treasury Board): 1, 2 and 3. The table following provides data on housing starts and completions, by type of structure, for 1967.

Dwelling Starts and Completions, by Type of Structure, Canada, 1967 (Dwelling Units)

Type of Structure	Starts	Completions

APARTMENT STRUCTURES UNDER N.H.A.

Question No. 977—Mr. Douglas:

1. (a) Of apartment structures (six or more dwelling units) completed in 1967, how many were financed under NHA (b) what was the cost per unit (c) what was the income classification of the tenants occupying such units?

2. (a) What is the vacancy rate in apartment structures (six or more dwelling units) in Canada's 18 largest cities for each month in 1967 (b) what is the vacancy rate for single-family dwellings, duplexes and apartments with less than six dwelling units in the 18 largest cities in Canada in each month in 1967?

Hon. E. J. Benson (President of the Treasury Board): 1. (a) The data for 1967 are not yet available. (b) The data for 1967 are not yet available. (c) The data on the income classification of tenants occupying apartment structures financed under the N.H.A. are not available.

2. (a) The corporation conducts a vacancy survey of apartment structures of six or more dwelling units in 11 metropolitan areas in June of each year. The table following gives the results of this survey for June, 1967 for both publicly initiated and privately initiated structures. Data for other large cities, and on a monthly basis, are not available.

N.H.A. APPLICATIONS FOR APARTMENT AND PUBLIC HOUSING DEVELOPMENTS

Question No. 978—Mr. Douglas:

1. (a) How many requests were made for NHA financed apartment units in 1967 (b) how many were approved (c) how many of those approved were low-rental units (d) of those not approved what were the main reasons for not granting such approval?

2. (a) How many requests for NHA public housing programs in (i) each province (ii) each of the 18 largest cities, were received (b) how many, if any, were refused (c) what were the chief reasons for any such refusals?

Hon. E. J. Benson (President of the Treasury Board): 1 (a) Formal requests in the form of applications for undertakings to insure, or applications for direct C.M.H.C. loans, or applications for federal assistance under section 35A of the National Housing Act were received for 36,974 rental dwelling units in 1967. (b) Loans and investments were approved for 35,460 rental dwelling units. (c)

Questions

Of the rental dwellings for which federal assistance was approved, 9,848 dwelling units were low rental, financed under sections 16A, 35A and 35D of the National Housing Act. (d) The corporation has not refused assistance for any rental application for which a formal request has been received, though in some cases the applicant has decided not to proceed further. Prior to the submission of formal requests, discussions may take place between a potential applicant and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. If in the course of these discussions the corporation found that a tentative proposal was ineligible, or unacceptable for other reasons, the prospective applicant would be so advised and would not therefore be likely to submit a formal request for assistance. Records of these discussions, which vary widely in their nature, are not maintained.

2. (a) (b) and (c) Data on formal requests received for assistance under N.H.A. public housing programs are maintained only on the basis of C.M.H.C. field office areas. For the reasons noted in 1(d) above, however, data on these formal requests would differ from data on assistance actually approved only in timing or where the applicant decided not to proceed. So far as assistance under public housing programs is concerned, any eligible application has not been refused. Data on assistance approved under sections 16A, 35A, 35D and 36B are shown in the following table.

Questions

STATIONERY SALES BY POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

Question No. 985—Mr. MacEwan:

1. Has the Post Office Department increased the price of envelopes and stationery which they sell to the Canadian public?

2. Is the Post Office Department required to pay the 12 per cent Sales Tax on envelopes which they sell to the Canadian people, and is this amount added to the price?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): 1. Yes.

2. The Post Office Department is required to pay a 12 per cent sales tax on the cost of producing stamped envelopes and this is considered when establishing the selling price to the public. The sales tax does not apply to the value of postage represented by the stamp impression.

C.B.C. RELIGIOUS PROGRAMS

Question No. 991—Mr. Tucker:

1. Is there a committee or advisory board that advises the CBC with respect to religious programs?

2. If so, what are the names and addresses of those who serve on this committee?

3. What religious denominations are represented on the committee and by whom?

4. Does this committee select the persons who broadcast on the programs entitled (a) "The Word and the Music" (b) "Morning Devotions" (c) "Plain Talk"?

5. During 1967 how many different people broadcast their their messages over CBO, Ottawa, in the "Plain Talk" program

6. What are the names of those who spoke in "Plain Talk" over CBO, Ottawa, more than 5 times during 1967, and how many times did each speak?

7. Why has "The Word and the Music" been shifted from midnight to 1:00 a.m.?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the C.B.C. as follows: 1. Yes. The C.B.C. National Religious Advisory Council advises the corporation on all matters of religious broadcasting. Members are nominated by the major denominations and appointed by the C.B.C. board of directors. The chairman of the council is charged with the responsibility of representing the interests of smaller denominations.

2 and 3. Roman Catholic, Anglican, United, Presbyterian, Lutheran and Baptist churches have direct representation on the council as follows: The Right Rev. H. R. Hunt, Chairman (Anglican), Suffragan Bishop of Toronto, Toronto Diocesan Synod Office, 135 Adelaide Street East, Toronto 1, Ontario; The Rev. Frank Stone, Vice-Chairman (Roman Catholic), National Catholic Communications Centre, 21 Grenville Street, Toronto 5, Ontario; The Rev. Douglas Herron, Secretary (Presbyterian), Calvin Presbyterian Church, 26 Delisle Avenue, Toronto 7, Ontario; The Rev. J. R. Hord (United), United Church of Canada, 85 St. Clair Avenue East, Room 711, Toronto 7, Ontario; The Rev. Keith Woollard (United), Berkeley Studio, United Church of Canada, 315 Queen Street East, Toronto 2, Ontario; The Rev. H. F. 4. No. However, policy governing the choice of speakers for such programs is approved at the local level by advisory committees comprising local representatives of the major denominations and the CBC. A basic consideration is broadcast ability.

5. There is no "Plain Talk" program on station CBO, Ottawa. During 1967 there were 12 different speakers on the CBO program, "A Thought for Today", on which speakers comment from a non-denominational religious point of view.

6. Each speaker in the series, "A Thought for Today", broadcasts for five minutes daily, Monday through Saturday. During 1967 the speakers were: Rev. Dale Crampton (Roman Catholic), 7 weeks; Rev. Donald Stirling (United), 4 weeks; Rev. E. K. Lackey (Anglican), 7 weeks; Rev. Kevin Milaney (Roman Catholic), 6 weeks; Rev. W. R. Bell (Presbyterian), 5 weeks; Rev. Raymond O'Connor (Roman Catholic), 4 weeks; Rev. Pat Playfair (Anglican), 7 weeks; Rev. Wilbur Howard (United), 3 weeks; Rev. Hallam Johnston (Anglican), 6 weeks; Rev. Dr. Arthur W. Currie (Presbyterian), 2 weeks; Rev. Michael Peers (Anglican), and Rev. Peter Meggs (Anglican), (one week shared).

7. "The Word and the Music" was designed for scheduling at the conclusion of the broadcast day. The schedule was recently extended by one hour with the addition of a new program, hence the rescheduling an hour later of the concluding program, "The Word and the Music".

REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING CORRIDOR ROAD THROUGH MAINE

Question No. 993—Mr. Crouse:

1. Has the federal government made any representations to United States authorities at Washington for permission to build a "corridor road" from New Brunswick through Maine to Quebec?

2. If so, what was the response to the proposal by American authorities?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. No, but I understand this matter has been the subject of informal discussions from time to time between the provincial and state authorities concerned.

2. Not applicable.

PREVAILING RATE EMPLOYEES DEFENCE DEPARTMENT

Question No. 994—Mr. McCleave:

1. Approximately how many prevailing rate employees and civil or public servants worked for the Department of National Defence on January 1st in each of the last five years?

2. Has the Department a target for reducing the numbers of such and, if so, what is the target, and how is it to be achieved?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): 1. Jan. 1, 1964, 48,218; 1965, 44,521; 1966, 44,251; 1967, 42,929; 1968, 42,190.

2. Yes, the target strength of employees occupying continuing positions at March 31, 1969 is 34,950. Casual employees are hired on a temporary basis against man year authorities which for 1968-69 is approximately 6,800. Establishments are under continuous review and adjusted in response to organizational changes, work method improvements and economic influences. Civilian positions no longer required are dropped from establishments and the occupants are assisted in finding other employment, or, as a last resort, released. In addition, as a temporary measure to ensure a more rapid reduction in strength than could otherwise be achieved, personnel who leave the department voluntarily or on retirement are, with some exceptions, not being replaced.

CHOICE OF INDUSTRIAL RESEARCH INSTITUTES

Question No. 1,010—Mr. Hales:

On what basis did the Department of Industry choose the Universities of McMaster, Waterloo, Windsor and Halifax as the four Industrial Research Institutes at a cost of $746,000?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): The Department of Industry instituted a program to support the establishment of industrial research institutes at Canadian universities in December, 1966. The program enables the university to establish an institutional framework within which it may undertake contract research on behalf of industry, and is designed to bring about a closer rapport between industry and the engineering faculties of the universities.

To date four universities have applied for and received support under this program, viz. University of Windsor, the Nova Scotia Technical College, McMaster University and the University of Waterloo. Support under this program is available to all Canadian universities having the requisite resources and capabilities.

3. The opening of Canadian missions abroad is decided upon by assessing Canadian needs and priorities, taking account of the financial and personnel resources available. At present, resources are not available for the establishment of any new Canadian mission.

ST. ANDREWS AIRPORT, MANITOBA

Question No. 1,030—Mr. Churchill:

1. What steps will be taken in 1968 to make the airport at St. Andrews in Manitoba, adequate for the Winnipeg Flying Club's activities and for private owners of light aircraft?

2. Is it the intention of the Department of Transport to transfer all basic flight training to civilian planes to St. Andrews airport?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. It is planned to undertake the paving of two runways, taxiways and apron in the fiscal year 1968/69 and these will be capable of accommodating all types of light aircraft (up to 12,500 lbs.) except light jets.

2. Yes. This may, however, take a little time and could not be undertaken until the construction work planned for this year has been completed.

LEASING OF PREMISES, WINNIPEG AIRPORT

Question No. 1,031—Mr. Churchill:

1. Will the government arrange for long-term leasing of premises at the Winnipeg International Airport so that business firms engaged in flying activities, and in servicing aircraft, may provide suitable accommodation for such purposes?

2. Will the government declare its policy in regard to long-term leasing at the above-mentioned airport at an early date so that any construction planned by government or civilian firms may be commenced by June, 1968?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Yes. Within the limits considered feasible in plans for the future use and growth of the airport and to the extent that facilities can be made available, taking into account particularly the fact that the major purpose of the airport is support of commercial scheduled services and that use by general aviation and light aircraft must be supplementary to this.

2. A special consultant study on future development at Winnipeg is presently in preparation which will be completed this spring and will assist in the determination of policy so that a public announcement can be made.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1 and 2. On October 23, 1967, Lot 797, property of Eugene H. Bourassa, was expropriated for $8,000.

3. No, the building was demolished in 1967.

4. Not applicable.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

INFORMATION SERVICE, DEFENCE DEPARTMENT

Question No. 500—Mr. Harkness:

1. (a) For each of the years 1964 to 1967 inclusive, what individuals were employed from time-to-time in the Information Services and/or Public Relations Division of the Department of National Defence (b) what position has been and is now held by each such employee, for what period and at what salary or remuneration?

2. (a) For each of the years 1964 to 1967 inclusive, what persons, firms or corporations, if any, other than the departmental Information Services or Public Relations Division, have been employed and/or retained for the purpose of preparing, disseminating or in any manner dealing with the Information Services and/or Public Relations of the department (b) what are the names of such persons, firms and corporations, if any; for what purpose and period was the employment and what was the cost in each instance (c) were public tenders called for the services described in (a) and (b) and, if not, upon what basis and by whom was the selection made?

3. (a) For each of the years 1964 to 1967 inclusive, how many press releases have been prepared for or on behalf of the Department and/or the Minister; by whom were the same prepared and at what cost (b) for each of the years 1964 to 1967 inclusive, what radio and television time has been purchased by the Department; for what purpose and for what cost (c) for each of the years 1964 to 1967 inclusive, what advertising or other space was purchased in domestic and foreign newspapers, magazines and other publications; for what purpose and for what cost?

4. (a) For each of the years 1964 to 1967 inclusive, what was the cost of travel of the Minister and his staff and of any of the personnel described in (1) and (2) above (b) what trips were undertaken and for what purpose?

Orders for Returns

5. For each of the years 1964 to 1967 inclusive, what advertising or any other related contracts have been awarded by the Department; to whom were the same awarded, for what purpose and for what cost? Were public tenders called in each instance and, if not, upon what basis and by whom was the contract awarded?

6. Does the Department maintain and/or operate any office located elsewhere than in Ottawa for the purpose, in whole or in part, of promoting the public relations of the Department and/or the Minister and, if so, where are such offices located; what is the cost of the maintenance and operation of such offices; how many are employed in each such office and at what salary or remuneration in each case?

Return tabled.

SHIPMENT OF POISONOUS MATERIALS BY COMMON CARRIERS

Question No. 830—Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway):

1. Are there regulations to prevent the shipment of insecticides and other poisonous substances along with foodstuffs in common carriers?

2. If so, what are these regulations?

3. What are the penalties for infringing such regulations?

4. What regulations, if any, govern warnings on containers used for shipping poisonous materials in common carriers?

5. What are the penalties for infringing such regulations

Return tabled.

EXPLORATION PERMITS, ARCTIC ISLANDS

Question No. 900—Mr. Fulton:

In connection with the proposed oil and gas exploratory work in the area of Canada's Arctic Islands to be carried out by Panarctic Oils Ltd., as announced recently by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development:

1. Have any permits been issued to date for exploration rights in the area in question?

2. If so, are such permits held by or in the names both of individual persons or corporations, and of consortiums of persons or corporations?

3. If the answers to Parts 1 and 2 are in the affirmative, what are (a) the names of such individual persons or corporations holding such permits (with addresses in the case of persons); (b) the names of the members of each such consortium holding a permit, with the percentage interest held by each member of each consortium respectively; and (c) the total acreage covered by the permit or permits held by each such individual person or corporation and by each such consortium respectively?

4. In respect of each corporation named in Part 3, what are the names and addresses of the members of its Board of Directors?

Return tabled.

[Mr. Harkness.]

PUBLIC SERVICE

IMPLEMENTATIONS OF RECOMMENDATIONS OF GLASSCO COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether he will order a personal review of the status of recommendations of the Glassco commission and previous reports of the Auditor General and of the standing committee on public accounts, to ascertain the reasons for the delay in implementing such a substantial number of these recommendations.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will be glad to make that personal review, Mr. Speaker.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CAPE BRETON, N.S.—LOSS OF RAILWAY JOBS THROUGH SHIPMENT OF COAL BY TRUCK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and ask whether he has received any complaints from Glace Bay in Cape Breton, alleging that up to 50 per cent of the operating trades on the Cumberland railway are idle due to the fact that the coal from No. 20 colliery is being shipped by truck. I would also like to ask the minister if the decision to ship this coal by truck was made by the Cape Breton Development Corporation and, if so, what action is he or the corporation taking with respect to employment for those who are adversely affected?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have no personal knowledge of this matter, but I shall inquire and answer the question tomorrow.

CRIMINAL CODE

REPRESENTATIONS BY CLERGY AGAINST AMENDMENT RESPECTING ABORTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alcide Simard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I gave notice of the question I want to put to the Minister of Justice. In his absence I will direct it to his parliamentary secretary.

Can he tell us if the Canadian bishops have asked to appear as witnesses before the parliamentary committee which is now studying the bill on abortion? If so, has the chairman of the said committee asked them officially to submit their brief on that controversial matter?

Mr. Speaker: I feel I have to point out to the hon. member that his question deals with the proceedings of a committee now in session and is therefore out of order.

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ESTABLISHMENT OF OFFICE OF PARLIAMENTARY OMBUDSMAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of his repeated statements that the government would be reporting on its intention to establish the office of a parliamentary ombudsman; in view of the announced intention that such an office will be established in a number of other provinces, and now in view of the intention of Senator Croll to recommend the establishment of an ombudsman committee, would the Prime Minister tell us what are his intentions, before he leaves his office as Prime Minister?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I should like to take that question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

FINANCE

STEPS TO BRING REVENUE IN LINE WITH EXPENDITURES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Minister of Finance. In view of his announcement of Friday last that after ten months of the present fiscal year the government has a deficit of $141.2 million compared to the position of exactly one year ago when the government reported a surplus of $134.6 million, does the government intend in the very near future to take steps to bring revenue more in line with expenditures?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker; that is the intention.

Mr. Hees: In view of the fact that as recently as January revenues were plus $55 million and expenditures had increased by $107 million, does the government not think this is a matter which is worthy of more than a smile by the Minister of Finance, and a little more action?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, after all we did propose some revenue measures to the house, which were not adopted.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING REDUCTION IN CANADIAN FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Is the Canadian military team now in Europe, or to be there this week, for the purpose of discussing with NATO officials a reduction in Canadian forces in Europe?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, a team is going to Europe to discuss with the NATO military committee the commitment that was suggested on the political level at the December meeting. That is the purpose of the visit.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, might I ask the minister to be a little more explicit. Does he mean they will be there for the purpose of discussing a reduction in the Canadian contribution to NATO?

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): As I said at the time, Mr. Speaker, we had proposed to NATO the use of an air transportable brigade instead of two heavy brigades as reserve. This plan if accepted must be worked into the general plan. That is the reason the team is going to Europe to discuss the matter with the military committee.

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

ASSISTANCE FOR PERSONS OF ASIATIC ORIGIN IN KENYA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the Commonwealth secretariat taken any steps to convene conversations or negotiations among the Commonwealth countries with a view to alleviating the plight of approximately 100,000 persons of Asian origin presently living in Kenya?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I will take that question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nesbitt: In view of the fact that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has taken the question as notice, if negotiations have not been initiated by the secretariat would the Canadian government undertake to make appropriate recommendations so these conversations or negotiations may commence?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I will take that under consideration, Mr. Speaker.

TELEVISION

REPORTED STATEMENT BY CONSUMER AFFAIRS MINISTER RESPECTING EDUCATIONAL BROADCASTING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs whether he was enunciating government policy in the province of Quebec when he gave his views in respect of Quebec's jurisdiction over educational television.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question can only be asked of the Prime Minister.

Mr. Grafftey: Then, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs was enunciating government policy in the province of Quebec when he gave his views a few days ago on Quebec's jurisdiction over educational television.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The views were not those reported in the press.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, in order to encourage national stability in the weeks ahead can the Prime Minister assure the house that he has cautioned the ministers who are running for the leadership of the Liberal party, when referring to areas of policy to be articulate in enunciating cabinet solidarity positions?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend was discussing what may or may not be done in respect of a new Canadian constitution.

[Mr. Nesbitt.]

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON ECONOMIC AND FINANCIAL POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance arising out of reports in this morning's paper that he is contemplating setting up some kind of advisory council to deal with present economic inflationary and related situations. I should like to ask him whether it is his intention to outline that policy to this house and, if so, when he intends to do so.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the government's whole approach to the present situation will be revealed I hope very soon.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether his answer means that the revelation about general government economic and financial policy will come at the same time as a new revenue measure, or whether it will precede it. Will the minister inform the house when we may expect to learn about these important matters?

Mr. Sharp: The only answer I can give, Mr. Speaker, is that the whole matter is under active consideration in cabinet and that an announcement can be expected soon.

PERPETUAL BONDS—SUGGESTED REDEMPTION OR INCREASE IN INTEREST RATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question also to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that new government bonds issued to replace those expiring on September 15, 1967 are today worth only $48 per $100 bond, is the government giving any thought to redeeming these bonds in the near future or to paying an interest bonus to Canadians who are now required to lend their savings to the government at less than half the current rates?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think that is the sort of question which ought to be put on the order paper. I cannot identify the bonds. They would have to be identified much more clearly.

Mr. Crouse: For the benefit of the minister, I have two of the bonds here.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member would like to take this up in private conversation with the minister.

Mr. Crouse: In order to restore some confidence in government of Canada securities, would the minister consider replacing these bonds on a two for one basis at the current rate of interest? The bonds are 3 per cent perpetual bonds.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

HARBOURS

MONTREAL—REQUEST FOR GREATER LOCAL AUTONOMY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Roger-E. Régimbal (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the hon. Minister of Transport.

In view of the fact that the authorities of the city of Montreal have already expressed the wish and the need for closer co-operation with the National Harbours Board, does the hon. minister intend to comply with the request for a certain degree of autonomy in the management and administration of Montreal harbour, at least with regard to the activities affecting the Montreal area?

[English]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is very similar to questions asked last week. I indicated that we were looking at the longer term question and studying the administration of ports in Canada and the different kinds of administrations now in existence. Once that inquiry has been completed I will be in a better position to know what changes, if any, might be recommended for the consideration of the government in the future.

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, now that the Minister without Portfolio has shown some interest in labour problems in Montreal, as evidenced by his walk along the waterfront on the week end, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour to indicate whether meetings have been held or will be held with the harbour council. If so, has everything possible been done to see that all these problems are settled before the opening of navigation?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the port council asked for a meeting with the Minister of Transport and myself and one or two colleagues from the city of Montreal. That meeting is to take place today.

[Translation]

Mr. Régimbal: Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question to the hon. Member of the Administration?

Did the hon. minister, when he visited Montreal harbour, have the opportunity of suggesting the establishment of a permanent industrial relations commission comprising the authorities of the port of Montreal and representatives of the employers federation and unions with a view to anticipating difficulties instead of expending such energies in solving them?

[English]

Hon. B. S. Mackasey (Member of the Administration): Mr. Speaker, what I suggested on the week end will be revealed in due course.

[Later:]

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister without Portfolio from Verdun. Has the hon. gentleman any report to make to the house as a result of his investigations and tours of the Montreal waterfront over the week end?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I expect the hon. member will remember that not long ago a similar question was asked in the house.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT ON PENSION COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs whether he has now received the Woods commission report.

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not yet received it. I will make an announcement as soon as I do.

Mr. Chatterton: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the translation has been delayed for almost five months could the minister, pending the tabling of the report in both languages, give consideration to tabling the report in the language in which it is now available?

Mr. Teillet: I have considered that, Mr. Speaker, but my latest information is that the report should be in my hands in two or three weeks.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS

CENTRE BLOCK—DAMAGE TO PLAQUES IN MEMORIAL CHAMBER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to ask a question based on sentimentality. I would like to direct the question to the Minister of Public Works, based upon my affection for the centre block of the House of Commons and my reverence for the veterans' memorial chamber. Having spent one hour yesterday in the memorial chamber I noted that certain plaques have suffered damage; namely, one soldier has lost his head and another his right arm, both being cases of recent damage.

My question to the Minister of Public Works is this. First, is any action being taken to repair the damage? Second, will he take under consideration the erection of an appropriate fence guard some 18 inches or two feet in front of the plaques so that all visitors to the memorial chamber can see and read but may not desecrate the memorial chamber plaques?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for drawing this matter to my attention. I will look into it immediately and give him a fuller answer later.

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GABON—WITHHOLDING OF ACCREDITATION BY CANADIAN AMBASSADOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Could he tell us whether it is true that his department directed the ambassador of Canada to Gabon not to present his credentials until Gabon has apologized for inviting Quebec to take part in the conference on education last February?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question?

As the minister answered in the affirmative, and, moreover, as the federal government leaves a vacancy in that field, could the minister tell us whether his department would take offence if the place left vacant by them is filled by the Quebec authorities?

[Mr. Teillet.]

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I wonder whether the minister would reassure a jittery parliament and public that today's stark evidence of deterioration of relations between Gabon and Canada should not be construed as a fatal blow to our international prestige. In asking this question I give myself the opportunity of reassuring the minister of my highest consideration.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is mutual.

FINANCE

DISCUSSIONS OF MINISTER WITH U.S. SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. Is the minister in a position to tell the house what was the nature of the discussions he had in Washington over the week end with United States treasury officials?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I made the statement this morning, because of press inquiries, that I had visited Washington on March 1 for discussions with the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Fowler, in order to give him the views of the government of Canada on certain trade measures under consideration by the United States government.

Mr. Lambert: Were those discussions related to the declarations made by the President on January 1 last?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker, they were related to the matter of the border tax proposals that had been mentioned previously. I took advantage of the occasion to give him the views of the Canadian government in this field because of the discussions that I knew were going on in Washington at the present time.

Mr. Lambert: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister in a position to tell us what was the result of his conversations with his United States counterpart?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Fowler listened very carefully to my representations, and I hope he pays some attention to them.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Did the minister have any discussion with Mr. Fowler, the Secretary of the Treasury, regarding the United States subsidiaries in Canada which have been requested to return a portion of their retained earnings to the United States? Has any clarification of that point been made; and if the Canadian dollar is in any danger, is the United States government prepared to make some exception with respect to Canada?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, needless to say, when the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States and the Minister of Finance of Canada get together they talk about many things. They talked about that subject, and they also talked about our mutual concern in this very disturbed international atmosphere.

Mr. Douglas: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the minister whether he received from the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States any assurance that no measures would be pursued which would further endanger the Canadian dollar in the world money market.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Fowler gave me an assurance that none of the steps the United States has taken in defence of their own balance of payments situation are likely to have any adverse effect upon Canada.

CRIMINAL CODE

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT RESPECTING BREATHALIZER TESTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to direct my question to the Minister of Justice. Perhaps in his absence the Solicitor General might take it as notice. I have in mind the announcement made in Great Britain today that this month again the death rate from car crashes has shown a one third decrease since they introduced their mandatory tests for drunken driving. My question is whether the government would consider proceeding soon with similar legislation which was introduced in the house some weeks ago.

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): The house leaders have already agreed upon the order of business for the next few days.

BILINGUALISM AND BICULTURALISM

STEPS TO IMPLEMENT RECOMMENDATIONS BY ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister.

Since the release of the Laurendeau-Dunton report, two provincial governments, those of Ontario and Newfoundland, have taken concrete steps to implement its recommendations.

Could the right hon. Prime Minister tell us if the secretariat on bilingualism, which he is chairing, has developed a program for the early implementation of the main recommendations made by the commission on bilingualism and biculturalism?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could make a statement on this important matter in a day or two.

THE SENATE

RECOMMENDATION RESPECTING NOVA SCOTIA VACANCY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. O. Bower (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the fact that Nova Scotia has had a vacancy in the other place for over two years and that this now seems to be the season for appointments there, does the Prime Minister plan to give predominance to the French Acadian fact when he gets around to considering Nova Scotia in this respect?

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO DRAWING RIGHTS UNDER INTERNATIONAL FUND

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance, and it deals with the statement he made last October concerning the International Monetary Fund and the drawing rights. At that time the minister stated that a plan was being prepared to lay down the conditions respecting drawing rights, and that it had to be completed by March 31. My question is, can we now assume, in view of the activities which have taken place over the last two weeks with regard to Canada and the International Monetary Fund, that this plan is now completed?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker. I think what my hon. friend is speaking about are the plans that are under way for the creation of a new reserve currency. These discussions are still under way, and they are not related to the action we took the other day in drawing our gold tranche and transferring our credit balances with the fund.

I am hopeful that progress will be made in the creation of a new international reserve currency, but I regret to say that not as much progress has been made as I had hoped for.

Mr. Hamilton: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Do I understand from the minister's last statement that there is a possibility the plan will not be completed by the end of this month?

Mr. Sharp: There is a plan in existence which has been discussed on a number of occasions by the ministers in the group of ten and in the International Monetary Fund, and certain decisions were taken in September at the time of the International Monetary Fund meeting, but no decision has been made to activate that plan in any way.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

HEATING OIL AND GASOLINE—REPORTED PRICE INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bud Germa (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance which has to do with the increase in gasoline and fuel oil prices. It was raised first by my colleague from York South on January 26 and several times subsequently. At that time the minister stated that his department was investigating the matter. I should like to ask whether this investigation is completed, and what are the results.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the department has been working on this and this morning I received a report, but since I was at a cabinet meeting this morning I have not been able to review it.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO SAVINGS FROM UNIFICATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the announcement on Friday that in the first ten months of the present fiscal year his department's expenditures amounted to $166 million more than in a similar period last year, when can we expect the minister to announce new policies which will make it possible for Canada to realize the savings from unification which were promised to the country by his predecessor?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, we indicated in the unification debate—perhaps the hon. member was not there at the time—that the implied savings in the administration of the forces through unification were of the order of $270 million.

Mr. Hees: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister take the first opportunity on motions to explain why in the first ten months of the present year expenditures of the department amounted to $166 million more than a year ago? Where are these savings disappearing?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD

POSSIBLE CHANGES IN COST SHARING ARRANGEMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who reports to the house for the Atlantic Development Board. In view of the fact that the projected decreases in spending by the Atlantic Development Board this year, as explained by the minister, were related to the inability of many Atlantic provinces to use the money that is made available, I should like to ask the minister whether some changes will be made in the cost sharing arrangements.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, we can consider that subject at the appropriate time.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the minister, in giving thought to this subject, is giving consideration to the suggestions by the premier of Prince Edward Island that the provinces be allowed to exercise greater responsibility in the spending of Atlantic Development Board money?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, at the federal-provincial conference the premier of New Brunswick made certain representations which are under consideration. I am sure we will be happy to consider those of the premier of Prince Edward Island as well.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

PROTECTION AGAINST DANGERS FROM INSECTICIDES AND ASSOCIATED DRUGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether the government is investigating the startling results of scientific work being done on insecticides and some drugs with the object of bringing down legislation to protect the Canadian people from these newly found dangers?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): All these matters are kept under continuous review by the food and drug directorate.

SHIPPING

BAY OF FUNDY—POSSIBLE CONSTRUCTION OF SUPER PORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): My question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Several days ago, prior to a certain event, I asked the hon. gentleman whether the government of Canada had been informed or had been consulted by the government of New Brunswick of the province's discussions with the state of Maine regarding the possible establishment of a super port in the Bay of Fundy. The minister said at that time that he would look into the matter but perhaps, owing to his preoccupation with other matters, he let it slip his mind. Can he answer the question now?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend asked on February 16 whether the government of Canada had participated in these reported discussions. We were aware, of course, of the reports of such discussions, but no agency of the federal government has participated in them. The chairman of the Atlantic Development Board announced on January 23 that a study of the economic potential of the Atlantic region's deep water ports is being carried out by that board.

Mr. Lambert: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister aware that these discussions are taking place, and is the government of Canada actively participating or maintaining a direct connection with any of these discussions?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, we will be, Mr. Speaker.

PUBLIC WORKS

FRASER RIVER—INQUIRY AS TO AGREEMENT ON CONTROL PROJECTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and ask him when he expects to be able to make an announcement to the house regarding the agreement between the federal government and the government of British Columbia in connection with the Fraser river flood control.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the draft agreement is now completed and in the coming days I hope to meet the provincial minister responsible for this matter.

AGRICULTURE

POTATOES—IMPORTS FROM U.S. INTO WESTERN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): My question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture; he has been given notice of it. Has the minister made a decision on the request of western provinces potato growers and agencies for the imposition of value for duty on potatoes imported into the western provinces from the United States?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): No decision has been made in this regard, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Schreyer: May I ask a supplementary question. Could the minister indicate if he will be making any statement in this connection this week, or soon?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member may or may not be aware, the situation is that the western growers are requesting that value for duty be imposed while maritime growers, particularly those in New Brunswick, oppose this quite vehemently. The situation is continually under surveillance, and what is in the best national interest will be done by the government. If there is any value for duty to be imposed it will be announced at the proper time.

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): May I ask a supplementary question. I wonder if the Minister of Agriculture, in view of the very grave difficulties in connection with potato marketing all across Canada as he has just indicated, has given consideration to the calling of a special conference on the potato industry with representatives from all parts of Canada.

Mr. Greene: No consideration has been given to that particular manoeuvre, Mr. Speaker. We are in consultation with the growers and with producer organizations in all parts of Canada, and if they deem it would be in the interests of the industry, we certainly would be prepared for such a meeting.

HARBOURS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—DEVELOPMENT OF PORT AT ROBERTS BANK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. I asked him a question the other day and he never even heard it. Perhaps this time he will. In view of the statement by Premier Bennett of British Columbia that he will not accept the latest federal proposal for financing of the Roberts Bank harbour development, may I ask what consideration will be given now to an arrangement which will guarantee that port facilities will be available for the export of coking coal from British Columbia to Japan in accordance with what I understand is a tripartite contractual agreement among the United States, Canada and Japan?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The federal government, through its National Harbours Board, is quite prepared to build the required port facilities. We have made that clear in our communications with Premier Bennett. We believe also that if we start at once, and if we receive reasonable co-operation from all the other interested parties, it should be possible to have the port facilities ready on time by the end of March, 1970. My hon. friend will be interested to know that we have a drilling rig on the job this morning in order to do test borings in preparation for the calling of tenders at an early date.

[Mr. Greene.]

Mr. Winch: I appreciate the information. Has the minister received a report that Premier Bennett denies the federal governments' right to proceed, and will not accept federal operation alone?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I heard there was such a report in the newspapers out there, but I have not received a direct communication from the premier as yet.

Mr. Winch: This is very important to us, Mr. Speaker, so may I ask the minister if he is prepared to go ahead on his own authority this year?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

LABOUR RELATIONS

MARITIME UNION TRUSTEES—INQUIRY AS TO FINAL REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I posed two questions to the Minister without Portfolio who was then acting as Minister of Labour. One question had to do with the report of the maritime trustees; the other had to do with the report from Mr. Murchison on the labour code, particularly the hours of work. I wonder if he is in a position to reply to those questions now.

Hon. B. S. Mackasey (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the report of the trustees is being prepared and translated so it can be tabled. In so far as the Murchison report is concerned, I believe the Minister of Labour is on record on several occasions as stating that the report would be studied by his officials.

Mr. Starr: May I ask a supplementary question. If and when the final report of the maritime trustees is in the hands of the department, will it be the wish of the minister, as I am sure it is the wish of the members of this house, that the report be submitted to a standing committee?

Mr. Mackasey: I suggest the hon. member ask the minister, who is in his place.

Mr. Starr: Will the Minister of Labour give us the assurance that this report will be submitted to a standing committee?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I answered this question some days ago. I said then that, after the report was received and had been studied, consideration would be given to having it referred to the committee for review. The former trustees are no longer trustees, but we might even try to arrange for their attendance before the committee if the committee so wished.

Mr. Starr: May I ask a further supplementary question. Is it the intention of the minister and the Department of Labour to implement the Murchison report and recommendations?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, it has been said in this house on more than one occasion that the Murchison report is an excellent report. However, there is no report so good that it cannot be improved. Suggestions for some modifications have been made and they are being studied by the department. They are also being discussed with representatives of both sides, and when a recommendation has been made by my department, which I hope will be soon, that recommendation will then go to the government for decision and action.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—INQUIRY AS TO ASSISTANCE FOR SICK AND WOUNDED

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): In the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the continued severe suffering and heavy civilian casualties, can the Prime Minister report on the government's intentions with regard to immediate large scale medical and relief assistance to the disaster area of Viet Nam?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I know the matter is being actively considered, but at the moment I do not know the result of that consideration. I will find out.

AIR TRANSPORT

INQUIRY AS TO IMPLEMENTATION OF REGIONAL POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Inasmuch as recent recommendations of the air transport committee of the Canadian Transport Commission for the removal of subsidies to western regional air lines are a denial of the regional air policy announced by the government in 1966, will the minister reassure the house that this 1966 policy for improving air service on the prairies still stands?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, until TransAir complies with the judgment of the Air Transport Board, clearly it would be inappropriate for the government or the Canadian Transport Commission to comment in any way on representations which have been made in this respect. As my hon. friend will appreciate also, because of the right of appeal from a decision to the minister it would also be inappropriate for me to comment at this moment.

Mr. Dinsdale: I assume that the air transport committee has been informed of government policy in this respect?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

INCOME TAX

PROPOSED EXEMPTION OF GUARANTEED OLD AGE INCOME SUPPLEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that old age pensioners between the ages of 67 and 70 who are drawing the guaranteed income supplement, even though they have no other income, are being required to pay income tax on a portion of their supplement, will the minister take up with his colleague the Minister of Finance the possibility of exempting the supplement from income tax?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I will be glad to discuss the matter with the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Knowles: May I expect an answer at ten o'clock one of these nights?

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): I have a question for the Prime Minister. Can he advise the house when he expects to accept the resignation of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, thereby enabling the minister to make in the house the same criticism of financial policy that he makes outside of this house?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Inquiries of the Ministry

TRANSPORT

BRITISH COLUMBIA—THIRD CROSSING BETWEEN VANCOUVER AND NORTH SHORE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. In view of the urgent need for a decision on a provincial-federal agreement concerning the third crossing between Vancouver city and the north shore, can the minister advise us on the situation in view of Premier Bennett's statement that the provincial contribution of $27 million is based on all or part of the new crossing being toll free?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that the hon. member's question is not in order.

Mr. Winch: Why, Mr. Speaker?

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

REQUEST FOR PRODUCTION OF COMMUNICATIONS ON COST SHARING PLANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In order that we may prepare ourselves for the forthcoming financial debate this week, will the minister undertake to make available, on behalf of the government and in advance of that debate, any communications the government has had with the provinces about cost sharing plans and, in particular, about the vocational training agreement?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I shall see if I can comply with the hon. gentleman's request.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REPORTED STATEMENT BY HEAD OF FRENCH NETWORK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Pelletier), as chairman of the standing committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts.

In view of the serious accusations made by the director general of the C.B.C. French network, against certain employees in authority, to the effect that there would be some brainwashing and planned propaganda in the public affairs division, does the hon. member intend to put this question before the committee under his chairmanship?

Mr. Speaker: The question asked by the hon. member relates to a matter of internal policy of the committee and it cannot be asked at this time.

Mr. Gérard Pelletier (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is a mistake—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Later:]

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, in view of the numerous changes occurring on the other side of the house, I directed my question a while ago to someone who was not responsible to parliament. I should like to correct this and direct my question to the hon. Secretary of State, in her capacity as minister responsible to the house for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

In view of the serious charges made by the director general of the French network of the C.B.C. as regards certain employees, to the effect that the C.B.C. resorts to brainwashing and to planned propaganda, is it the intention of the hon. minister to refer the question to the standing committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts?

[English]

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I do not know the specifics, but I think I know about the incident to which my hon. friend is referring. I have been in touch with the new management of the corporation in order to ascertain what is going on there. I am informed that the matter appears to come within a breach of internal security in the corporation, and this may give rise to a study by the new management. The study obviously will cover the merits of any such charges if, indeed, there are charges.

[Translation]

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

Since such charges can affect the confidence the public should have in this crown corporation and in order to clear especially the persons responsible for the administration, would the hon. minister allow the committee to examine this question?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's supplementary question cannot be accepted.

INDUSTRY

DRUGS—POSSIBLE COLLAPSE OF WESTERN CANADIAN FIRM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Is the minister aware of the possible collapse of the new and expanding P.M.U. estrogen drug industry in western Canada because of the terms of Bill C-190? If so, has the minister consulted with his cabinet colleague the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, with a view to saving this new agricultural industry?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have not specifically considered it with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, but I shall be glad to take the hon. member's suggestion and consult my colleague.

PUBLIC WORKS

YARMOUTH, N.S.—LACK OF BREAKWATER PROTECTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. O. Bower (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Public Works. Has the minister received word from his department's regional office in Halifax about the grave danger threatening the very existence of Yarmouth harbour, a danger brought about by the possibility of the ocean breaking through Yarmouth bar because of lack of adequate breakwater facilities on the seaward side of that topographical feature? If he has received word, what decision has been made to obviate that danger? If he has not received word, will he get in touch with his people in Halifax and find out if something can be done?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has made his submission to the minister, and I think he should go no further on that point.

BROADCASTING

SUDBURY, ONT.—DISCONTINUANCE OF ITALIAN LANGUAGE PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bud Germa (Sudbury): I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Is she planning to make representations before the Board of Broadcast Governors on behalf of the large group of Italian citizens in Sudbury who have lodged a complaint with her about the arbitrary discontinuance of the Italian language hour program on radio station CHNO, in Sudbury.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question should be on the order paper.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SARNIA, ONT.—LAY-OFFS AND OVERTIME AT POLYMER PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I direct a question to the Minister of Industry. Has he received complaints from employees of Polymer Corporation at Sarnia to the effect that many employees are being laid off while at the same time excessive overtime is apparently being worked by others in order to maintain production? Has the minister received such complaints and is action being taken now with respect to them?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I personally have received no such complaints. I know the labour contract currently is under negotiation, and representations of this kind may be expected to arise during the course of negotiations.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister to give the house an assurance that the government has no intention of disposing of the Polymer operation to private interests.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman is well aware of the considerations which have prompted the government's approach to the ownership of Polymer Corporation.

LABOUR RELATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO PROCEDURE RESPECTING AMENDING LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister.

Could he tell us if he intends to have Bill No. C-186, on the Canada Labour Relations Board passed during this session and before recess?

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MEETING OF NORTHERN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER NATIONAL PARKS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): I have a question for the government house leader. May I ask the government leader of the house to indicate when the committee on northern affairs will be called together to hear representations of residents of the western national parks. I first put this question to the acting government house leader on February 7.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I shall be happy to investigate the matter with my colleague the minister who is particularly concerned with it.

RESEARCH

PROPOSED INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT CENTRE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, some weeks ago the Prime Minister promised to indicate if there were tangible developments about the possibility of establishing in Canada an international development centre. He said he would make a statement. Is the Prime Minister yet in a position to make that statement?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have had two meetings with those concerned since my hon. friend asked the question, and I brought up one or two points which I wanted to have further clarified before being in a position to make a statement. My hon. friend knows that I am interested in this matter, as he and other members of the house are; I am following it with interest, and hope to make a statement as soon as possible.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Research—

5c. Administration, operation and maintenance—to extend the purposes of vote 5 of the main estimates for 1967-68 to include a contribution of $10,000 to the town of Kapuskasing toward the construction of a road, $1.

[Mr. Grégoire.]

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply, supplementary estimates (C), 1967-68, Department of Agriculture, vote 5c. Shall the item carry?

Mr. McCutcheon: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention in participating in this debate today merely to complain about the cost-price squeeze in which Canadian farmers find themselves. I should like, in addition to discussing this difficulty of agriculture, to consider for a few minutes the effect of farm prices upon the consumer.

The joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate on consumer prices, of which I was a member, held many hearings at which irate housewives, housewives allied against high prices, complained bitterly about the high cost of vegetables, meat, fruit and almost every item of food produced on our farms. I would be the first to admit that they had reason for complaint. Our committee did not hear representations from many farm groups because I am sure the steering committee and the chairman were pretty well convinced in their own minds that the cause of the housewives' dilemma was not to be found on the farms, though I must in all honesty say that some of the witnesses did try a little to point the finger at the poor old farmer.

We found out something else that was very interesting. We found out that most of the benefits of increased productivity, improved technology and greater efficiency on the farms were passed on to the consumer in the form of the cheapest food in abundance available almost anywhere in the western world. We found out also that the Canadian agricultural community had since the second world war improved its output per man or its efficiency, however hon. members may wish to describe it, faster and to a greater extent than any other industry had done.

I wonder why the farmers did it. There are several reasons. First, I suggest, was their pride in the industry. Second, they were encouraged to make these efforts by the work of the extension services of the Department of Agriculture. Third, and most important, they were all on a treadmill and had to improve their efficiency or go broke. I might add that many did go broke and that many thousands more had to take jobs off the farm to make ends meet.

In view of this tremendous effort one would think that agriculture today would be in good shape. Believe me, such is not the case. What happened to this great improvement, this great technological advance? Who reaped the benefit? Well, the consumer did derive a great deal of benefit from the farmers' improved production. But somebody else, somebody other than the farmers, got a heck of a lot too.

In 1949 the consumer was spending 24.3 per cent of his income on food. In 1965 he was spending 21.1 per cent on food, and today the figure is even lower. As a point of interest, though, it is reported that in communist countries expenditure on food accounts for 50 per cent of wages. Since 1949, it should be remembered, many consumers have received increases in salary or wages amounting to between 50 and 60 per cent. May I remind hon. members that in 1949 the average industrial wage was $42.96. In 1965 it was $91.01 and in 1966, $96.30. For 1967 it is estimated to be $102.80.

Who got the biggest benefit from the farmers' sweat? Here are some figures which I find interesting. In 1949 domestically produced food having a retail value of $2,111 million had a farm value of $1,234 million. The processing and selling cost was $877 million. In other words, it cost about three-quarters of the farm value to get the produce of the farm to the retail level. What is the story now? In 1965, the last year for which I have figures, the retail value of domestically produced food was $5,029 million and the farm value was $2,043 million. The processing and selling cost, therefore, amounted to $2,986 million. It now costs one and a half times the farm value to get the products to the retail level though in 1949 the selling cost or mark-up was three-quarters of the farm value. Today it costs twice as much or one and a half times the farm value, which is just double the cost of the service as it existed in 1949.

I am not complaining particularly about this because the increase I have mentioned is pretty well in line with increases which have taken place in other segments of the economy. What I am complaining about is the absence of any real effort on the part of the government to correct an inequitable situation in such a way that the farmer can at least get some benefit from doing his job well.

What have we done? Precious little. The government did make some minor tariff quota concessions, if one can call them that, when the turkey industry pleaded for help last fall. What has been done for greenhouse operators? The Minister of Trade and Commerce certainly made things much easier for them, as reported in the magazine Farm and Country of January 23, when he gave this advice to greenhouse operators who had apparently asked for some form of protection against imports:

> I suspect any protection given would be of a temporary nature so growers can phase out their capital commitments and seek other means of earning a livelihood.

What has the government done about a sugar policy, promised for at least five years? I am told the Department of Industry had consultation with the C. and D. Sugar Company on the question of an alternative use for the Chatham refinery. But nobody thought it worth while to let the growers know until the last minute.

One evening last week the Minister of Agriculture told some growers it would cost the consumers $50 million more each year were Canada to enter upon a sugar policy or agreement such as the United Kingdom and the United States governments have endorsed. Where this figure came from I do not know, and how accurate it is I cannot say. But even giving the hon. gentleman the benefit of the doubt, it seems to me the sum he mentioned is small in relation to the five or six billion dollars which Canadian consumers spend annually on food. And what about the advantages? An industry which employs several hundred workers, full and part-time, would be kept in operation and 900 farmers could keep 20,000 acres of crop land under profitable cultivation instead of being obliged to produce alternative crops which will be difficult to sell. In addition, Canada would be assured of a basic supply of domestically produced sugar in the event of a world crisis. This is a matter of great concern in my area, but as of March 1 this industry in Chatham to all intents and purposes ceased to exist. Why? Why did we not develop a national sugar policy? I will tell you why. It was because Canada was waiting in hope that somebody, somewhere, somehow, some time, would develop a world sugar policy.

The problem at hand is a serious one. If I may say so, it will take the wisdom of Solomon and the patience of Job to come up with a satisfactory solution, but, however difficult, the problem must be attacked. It must be attacked immediately and with vigour. If it is not attacked immediately and with vigour the result may well be chaos.

Surely the government can remember the 10,000 farmers who were on parliament hill last year. Can anyone tell me that since then a serious attempt has been made to bring forth any practical solution to the agricultural problem? The Minister of Trade and Commerce has waved goodbye to the greenhouse industry, and the government has cut the quality subsidy on pork and lamb by one-third. Even so I would not be so worried if we had some assurance from the government that it has an over-all plan.

I suggest that if any person or group has a problem to settle the first thing to do is to decide what should be done first. It is just as simple as that. So the first thing the government has to do now is to decide whether we want and need an agricultural industry in Canada. I hope we can get an answer in the affirmative, although there has not been too much evidence forthcoming to make one optimistic. If by chance the answer is that we do want an agricultural industry, then we have to develop a price policy for Canada that is compensatory. It should help the efficient producer and it should help the potential efficient producer. It should not guarantee the individual farmer's income but it should give him an opportunity for a reasonable income if, and it is a big if, he does the job. I am sure we are all agreed that productivity gains in the past tended to be passed along to the consumer. Surely we can agree that as a nation we want to encourage even greater efficiency in agriculture. Above all, surely the farmers should not be forced to carry full responsibility for a cheap food policy.

Where do we start? I suggest that a good place to start would be to find out what effect our present legislation is having. I suggest we will find some strange situations. May I give an example of the lack of a clearcut philosophy as to what our policies were expected to accomplish. For example, price supports under the Agricultural Stabilization Act apply only up to a maximum production of approximately 100 hogs or 500 laying hens. A farmer, to be a potentially efficient operator, must have roughly five times this volume of livestock. Why do I say this? Just go to the federal Farm Credit Corporation and apply for a loan. The first thing they will say is that in order to be eligible the unit must be large enough to be efficient.

Here we have two points of view, two different opinions. It is difficult for me to understand why the maximum limits set under the stabilization act are not even close to the size of poultry or hog operations required by the federal Farm Credit Corporation when farmers apply for credit from that agency. How can we justify providing incentive payments enabling uneconomic units to keep going and at the same time try to encourage the amalgamation of these same uneconomic units?

It is not clear to me whether the levels of price supports were intended to stabilize or intended to raise farm prices, were intended to provide a floor, were intended to give farm prices some degree of parity of purchasing power, or whether they were set up as a result of pressure or by way of reaction to crises in the farm industry. I suspect the last explanation to be the case because it is abundantly clear they have not created any favourable degree of parity of purchasing power.

Many learned and knowledgeable people have discussed this problem at great length. Mr. Gilson of the department of agricultural economics at the University of Manitoba has presented some very interesting comments on a truly compensatory farm food and price policy. Here is what he said:

> We believe that the primary focus of a national food and farm price policy in Canada should be a cheap food program. Agricultural production policies have long been aimed in that direction. The only price policy which appears to be consistent with this general objective would be a compensatory price program where the food consumer pays the free market price and the farmer is paid the difference between this price and some designated support price in the form of a direct compensatory payment.

Mr. Gilson advances four reason why such a compensatory price policy is practical and he also lists a couple of objections. His reasons are:

> 1. Such a compensatory price policy is consistent with the objective of efficient production in the agricultural industry.
> 2. It provides a means for supporting farm prices without interfering unduly with the functions of the market price system.
> 3. In view of the fact that all commodities clear the market, it would prevent the creation of burdensome surpluses—farm products would move into the hands of the food consumer where they belong, not in government storage bins.
> 4. A compensatory price policy would permit food consumers to purchase food at the lowest possible price, an objective which appears to be reasonable from the standpoint of our prevailing economic and social philosophies in Canada.

Mr. Gilson points out that many farmers object to any price policy that involves direct payments from the government. Other farmers are very apprehensive that upper limits placed on compensatory price payments as a result of political pressures will discriminate against efficient production in the agricultural industry.

Two further objections can be raised. The first is that such a policy could be interpreted as a form of dumping, that is, selling abroad for a price lower than that received by the domestic producer, a practice that was strongly condemned by Canadian farmers when others followed this method. The second is that the Canadian taxpayer has no moral obligation to pay for a product, the gains from which accrue to food consumers in other nations. The problems involved should not detract from our attempt to develop a truly adequate national price policy for the Canadian agricultural industry. Mr. Gilson's plan is not a two-price system but it does parallel many agricultural programs in other countries.

Again I return to the paradox of different directives by different departments of government. If the economic size of poultry operations involves 5,000 laying hens, then for goodness sake set the limit at that level. If it takes a production of 500 hogs per year to be efficient, for heaven's sake let us set the limit there. But let us at least be consistent. Why use one department to penalize or frustrate the efficient farmer—the extension department and the farm credit adviser who all work on his behalf?

It is time we had a definite policy in respect of farm and food prices. We have had in the past and have even today a great amount of ambiguity concerning farm price policies and who should bear the cost of price supports. When the storage and purchase method is used, presumably the food consumer is expected to pay the higher food costs. When the deficiency price system is used, the consumer buys at the free market price and the difference between that price and the support price is paid directly to farmers. This means that the general Canadian taxpayer must bear the cost. Let us not become involved here in the social and non-price problems of the agricultural industry. They are entirely different and separate problems and should not be included here because it would have the effect of drawing attention away from the main problem and dissipating our strength of purpose. We would come up with our usual spontaneous reaction to political pressure. Of course our record of just wandering from crisis to crisis would be intact.

Is it too much to ask that now at least the government define for the Canadian people whether or not they are to have a Canadian agricultural industry? Mr. Gilson went on to say this:

> What would the proposed compensatory price policy cost the Canadian nation? If, for example, the prices received by farmers under the proposed policy were related to the prices of the goods and services which they buy, we estimate that the total annual cost of such a policy would amount to approximately $300 million at the present time. This is a fairly substantial sum but when it is remembered that this policy would eliminate the need for many of the payments now being made under various forms of hit and miss policies, and when we recognize the very substantial gains to the food consumer in the form of sheap food, we suggest tthat $300 million may be relatively small sum for the nation to invest in such a program.

Mr. Gilson uses the figure of $300 million to cover the whole program of a food price policy but the Minister of Agriculture uses $50 million for a national sugar policy. Who is right? Perhaps both; I do not know. I submit that in a country which can develop a nuclear reactor that meets competition anywhere in the world, as we have been able to develop in Canada—I believe it is called CANDU—there is no reason why we should not be able to develop a national food and farm policy which would provide for inexpensive and abundant supplies of food and at the same time ensure to those who produce it a reasonable compensation for their efforts.

Mr. Roxburgh: Mr. Chairman, I have a few rather contentious problems with which I should like to deal. Before I do so, however, I should like to say to hon. members opposite that although, as we all know, there have been many problems in agriculture throughout the years the present Minister of Agriculture certainly has done a great deal to alleviate them.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Roxburgh: I am surprised that the farmer from Ontario—

Mr. Starr: The greatest farming area in Canada.

Mr. Hees: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, may I say that I heard an opposition member say that the Minister of Agriculture has done absolutely nothing for the farmers of Ontario.

Mr. Roxburgh: All right, have your fun. First of all, I wish to support the stand taken on Friday by a number of speakers who dealt with the importation of fruit, especially peaches, from Australia. The hon. member for Okanagan Boundary and others referred to this matter. I should like to mention the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary particularly because he went into great detail with regard to the problem. He gave factual information. I do not intend to continue along that line other than to say that I sincerely hope the minister will give this matter his full attention.

Without going into detail perhaps I might refer to the tax concessions that provide a considerable natural incentive to Australian exporters. First of all there are the income tax concessions and, second, the payroll tax. A rebate on the payroll tax has been authorized by the government in order to encourage greater exportation. A special income tax deduction is allowed by the government for expenditures in the field of market development.

I have yet to hear of any Canadian farmer who has complained about fair competition. However, when an imported product is subsidized by the exporting country it certainly is time that our government took a real look at the situation. As an hon. member pointed out on Friday, the Australian pays more for his homegrown peaches than we pay for our homegrown peaches. I certainly think the officials of the Department of Agriculture should look into this problem.

I should like to deal now with a subject which in many ways is very dear to my heart. It involves a problem which has bothered me for a long time. I have reference to the wine industry. One of our important industries in Ontario is the wine industry. The wine industry, of course, is directly connected with the grape growing industry. Any action that influences the wine industry is passed on to the grape growers.

I do not know whether this fact is generally known but in Ontario alone approximately 15,000 acres are under cultivation for the growing of grapes. If an acre produces a full crop the Ontario and federal governments collect $1,300 per acre before the farmer receives what little benefit there is to him from that production. In the years 1964 and 1965 the federal government collected over $4 million, in the form of an excise tax on wine. In that same period the growers received about $1 million less, a little over $3 million. The provincial government received approximately $13 million.

I should like the gentlemen in the press gallery to take special notice of what I am about to say. When we attend their functions and order wine, what are we served? We are served imported wines—oh, yes. I have been there and they serve only imported wines.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Roxburgh: What is the government's policy in this regard? On practically every state occasion the wine served is imported. What do the great wine producing provinces of Ontario and Quebec serve at state functions? They serve imported wines. What about our embassies abroad? What do they serve? They also serve other than Canadian wines. There was a Canadian special function at an embassy—I will not mention which one—and they did serve Canadian wine. After the function was over there were a number of cases of wine left. Did the embassy keep this wine to serve to other guests? No. The embassy sold it at giveaway prices to the embassy staff.

Mr. Alkenbrack: That is an old Liberal custom.

Mr. Roxburgh: Let us not have any interruptions from my friends over there. President Johnson has decreed that only United States wines are to be served at their embassies. I think hon. members will agree, and not just because we are Canadians, that Canadian wines have a much better reputation than United States wines.

I have been privileged to attend functions in a number of embassies of European countries here in Canada. What do they serve in the way of wine? They are proud to serve the wines of the country they represent. Portugal is known to be one of the worlds' best producers of sherry and port; yet that country imports some Canadian sherry. Canada is a trading nation and let us not forget that. One sure way of expanding our wine exports is by acquainting the people of other countries with our wine products by serving them in our embassies in those countries.

I know what will immediately be said, by some people who should know differently, about Canadian wines compared with imported wines. They will say our wines cannot be compared with the imported products. I have some facts here that indicate this is a lot of hooey. They show that Canada is producing some of the finest wines in the world, some of which have won gold medals.

I will not mention the name of the company but one company held a wine tasting test using Canadian wines and similar types of imported wines. These wines were decanted in the identical bottles prior to the test and were marked "x" and "y" in each classification. The test was carried out in many areas of Canada including Toronto, Kitchener, Ottawa, London, St. Catharines, Fort William Windsor and Hamilton. More than 500 people made this test and the over-all result as 267 in favour of local wines and 247 in favour of imported wines. I am sure if I asked the general public for an opinion regarding imported wines compared with local wines they would probably favour imported wines on the basis of 75 per cent to 25 per cent. Note how wrong they would be.

Let me give you the results of the test held at St. Catharines. Among the people who tasted the wines were some of our friends from the press. I am sure they should know something about wine if anyone does. They should be good tasters from what I know about them. In the classification of dry red table wines our Canadian claret outpointed imported claret on the basis of 19 preference votes to 5. In the classification of burgundies the reverse was true. I am trying to give a true picture. The imported burgundies received 15 preference votes against 9 for Canadian burgundies. There were still 9 votes in favour of the Canadian wines. In the Rhine wine classification the imported product was favoured by 16 votes to 8. In the sauterne classification, and we all know that sauterne has the highest wine consumption record, the Canadian wine scored 17 preference votes to 7 for imported sauternes. Canadian sherry was preferred by a vote of 16 to 7 over the imported wine. Portugal is recognized as one of the great producers of port wine but the Canadian product was preferred over the imported by a vote of 15 to 7.

These results confirm the claim by Mr. W. D. Hatch, president of the Canadian Wine Institute, that fine Canadian wines are equal to or even better than the great majority of imported wines. In spite of this a great many people serve imported wines. I suppose it is because it has been bred into us over the years that imported wines are better. I sincerely hope that these facts I have presented will encourage not only the members of this house but other people in Canada to use Canadian wines.

Since France brought about the run on the dollar a great deal of the imported wines in wine cellars in the United States, in New York particularly, has been dumped down the drain. That is an indication of what these people think of imported wine. Perhaps in the long run they figure their own is better or at least as good. People acquire a taste for a product, be it wine, good whisky, certain types of food, cigarettes, cigars or many other products, only by the use of that product. It is like a child trying his first olive. Boy, what a face. Yet in later years he will eat olives with many meals and enjoy them.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I say to the government of Canada and the governments of our wine producing provinces that they can do a great deal to promote the future of the wine industry and keep the grape growing industry in good shape without laying out one cent. In so doing they will be helping to solve our foreign exchange problems, and God only knows we need some help along this line.

Mr. Clancy: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Roxburgh: Certainly.

Mr. Clancy: Port and sherry are fortified wines. They are not real wines; they are fortified. In other words, 20 per cent alcohol is added to them.

Mr. Roxburgh: It depends on what wine you are buying.

Mr. Clancy: I said port and sherry.

Mr. Roxburgh: That is possible, but nevertheless our wines are considered to be among the best in the world. We produce good wine.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, it has been pleasant in the last few minutes to listen to hon. members discussing the merits of Canadian wine. I do not think it is as pleasant, however, to discuss the merits of the policy of the Minister of Agriculture. A long time has elapsed since we last had an opportunity in this house to debate and consider the agricultural policy of the government. Since the last time the subject was under discussion in the house there have been developments and changes in regard to agricultural policy which have been very serious in their effect, and we have not really had a chance to focus on them here on the floor of parliament.

In the other place last week or the week before a senator introduced a bill having to do with dairy policy. I refer to Bill No. S-34. I presume the reason it was introduced was that it is being realized by more and more people in western Canada, in the prarie provinces in particular, that the changes in Canadian dairy policy are militating against large numbers of western dairy producers. Therefore a bill was introduced in the Senate which would have the effect, if passed, of taking away from the control of the Canadian Dairy Commission the power to exclude milk and cream producers from the subsidy benefits under the present dairy program if the amount of production is less than 50,000 pounds of milk or 1,750 pounds of butterfat per year.

I am sure the minister is aware that when the new policy was first introduced it took a little time for its full implications to sink in, but when they did a storm of protest began to arise. Even the Winnipeg Free Press was moved to editorialize last spring that the proposed dairy subsidy program would discriminate against western dairy producers, particularly shippers of farm separated cream and even of manufactured milk. I should like to read a paragraph or two from the editorial in the Winnipeg Free Press last May:

> The implications of the new policy for the western farmer thus become clear. The quota system will mean a decrease in Manitoba's dairy production; it will mean that many small producers will be forced out of business; it will make it virtually impossible for a new producer (since he has no quota) to enter the business; and it will mean that farmers who were planning on increasing their herds will have second thoughts on the matter. It will work directly against the attempts of the provincial government to make Manitoba self-sufficient in dairy production; it will be—

This should be marked, Mr. Chairman.

> —a blow to small rural creameries; and it will stand in the way of a number of new milk processing plants that are either coming into being or are being planned, in some cases with the provincial government as sponsor.

The editorial goes on to specify the regions or areas of the province—and this applies equally to Saskatchewan and Alberta—where creameries have existed for a long time and plans were being made to construct processing plants for manufacturing milk, and it became clear that the dairy policy of this government would militate very directly and gravely against the continuation of these creameries and processing plants. The minister will argue, of course, that subsequent to these complaints being made the government and the commission adjusted the policy somewhat so that instead of eliminating all those producing under 50,000 pounds of milk they eliminate only those whose production is under 12,000 pounds. Between the levels of 12,000 pounds and 50,000 pounds it is left to the discretion of the commission whether these producers will be eligible to receive the dairy subsidy.

I admit that this is an improvement, but it is not good enough. The fact that it is a matter of discretion for the commission implies that some applicants producing between 12,000 pounds and 50,000 pounds will be deemed eligible to receive the subsidy but many will not. That is the point. The minister must realize that what I am saying applies to Saskatchewan as much as Manitoba, and perhaps even more so. Eighty-three per cent of the Manitoba producers of milk for cream and manufacturing milk have a production of under 50,000 pounds. So the policy is, in effect, playing with the future prospects of 83 per cent of the cream and manufacturing milk producers of that province, and a higher proportion in Saskatchewan. The number of producers affected in Alberta is almost as high.

In the past 20 years there has been a rapid process of adjustment in the agricultural industry. It has been so rapid that it has resulted in social dislocation. It really does not behoove this government, nor is it necessary for it to come forward with a policy or acquiesce in a policy or trend that will have the effect of aggravating this problem. Yet this is precisely what will happen.

• (4:20 p.m.)

At the same time the government is smart enough to realize the deteriorating economic conditions in most rural regions of the country, and so it has spoken of the need for coming forward with ARDA programs, retraining allowances, and so on. There is a basic inconsistency in the fact that on the one hand the government is denying price support to large numbers of small agricultural operations while on the other hand it becomes necessary to provide financial assistance in other ways. The cost to the public is just as great, if not higher. Since ARDA was first established, and as those engaged in those programs realize by now, it has become evident how excruciatingly difficult it is to come forward with plans which can be applied practically and have immediate results in many agricultural districts in the country.

Before any of these long-range readjustment programs under ARDA can take effect, some reconsideration must be given by the government to its dairy program so that the small dairy operators, shippers of farm separated cream, or those who ship under 50,000 pounds of manufacturing milk who constitute 83 per cent of the producers, can receive a guarantee that they will be eligible to receive price support in proportion to their production as well as those who produce in excess of 50,000 pounds. I agree with the former member for Assiniboia, who is now a senator in the other place, that the government should not hide behind the skirts of the dairy commission. As I said, the intent of the bill before the Senate is to remove from the discretionary powers of the dairy commission the power to determine whether or not those producing less than 50,000 pounds will eligible for continued price support. If the government does not give consideration to this problem it will mean that the number of farmers on the prairies engaged, at least in part, in a dairy operation will decline.

I have some figures here which indicate that whereas only four years ago 25 million pounds of creamery butter were produced on the prairies, last year only 17½ million pounds were produced, a decline of almost 8 million pounds. If we translate that into financial terms as it affects farmers engaged in part at least in dairy production and look at the loss in financial returns and the loss in hours of work for the creameries, one can see what an immediate adverse effect all this is having. So the government will respond by pumping in more money through ARDA. Of course the situation would be worse if the government just ignored these developments and did not attempt to provide any compensation in dealing with these problems. In any case, it will have to spend as much money. If the government intends to cut down on dairy price support it will have to do something more through ARDA and, as I said, this is difficult.

I also wish to say to the minister that as his policy succeeds in forcing more farmers in western Canada out of dairy production there will be a proportionately greater onus on the government to do something about its western grain pricing policy. There are some very disturbing developments in this area. We know now that at the half way point in the present crop year exports of Canadian wheat amount to only 40 per cent of last year's level. I know that the minister opposite will say that the reason for this is the developments in international markets, and we all know they are very good at offering justifications for what is failure on their part. The fact is that United States wheat exports are virtually the same as last year. If one country can do it, so can another if it has the will to make the extra effort.

The Department of Trade and Commerce has been relatively successful in promoting export trade in Canadian goods. The budget of the department has been increased to provide for greater effort in sales promotion, the promotion of trade fairs, trade missions, and the like. An equal increase in effort should be made with respect to the promotion of sales of Canadian wheat and feed grain.

In addition to the rather disturbing developments on the export sales front in regard to western grain there is the problem of price. Over the years hon. members on this side have given the Liberal party an education with respect to the cost-price squeeze, particularly in western Canadian agriculture. So the Minister of Agriculture and his colleagues are well aware of the fact that there has been no improvement. Not even one small step has been made toward finding a partial remedy for the problem.

From time to time the president of the Saskatchewan wheat pool makes public statements which are very informative indeed. He is not one who is given to overstatement, and precisely for that reason I wish to read the following few sentences which tend to go to the heart of the problem of prices and costs in western agriculture. Mr. Gibbings of the Saskatchewan wheat pool said:

> —the recent large wheat sales—

He was referring to last year.

> —had given rise in eastern Canada to the erroneous idea that the prairie farmer's problems had been solved.
> But the sales had only obscured the adverse cost-price relationship, which would rise further if farmers got a short crop or if Canada couldn't sell and had to store a large amount of surplus grain.

The central point of the argument which I am trying to develop is contained in the following statement made by Mr. Gibbings:

> Farmers had received the same prices for grains as they did 17 years ago, yet their costs of production had increased 54 per cent in that period. Farmers had absorbed that increase in costs by improved efficiency. None of the increased cost had been passed on to the consumer.

Owing to the government's performance in combating the crisis of inflation in our economy, the cost of production in agriculture has increased tremendously in the last three years. It has increased steadily through the 1950's and 1960's, but in the past two and three years it has greatly surged upward. In the light of these developments, how can one sit back with equanimity and view a static level of prices for farm products? Prices of farm products have remained static and there has been an upward surge in the cost of agricultural production because of the haphazard and inadequate performance by this government in dealing with inflation as it burns its way into all sectors of our economy. In the light of all this, Mr. Chairman, it is not difficult to understand why the Liberals of western Canada have become increasingly disgruntled in the past couple of years and from time to time have been calling for regional conferences. They have been trying desperately to come to some meeting of minds amongst themselves as to what should be done, but even when they have a regional conference they seem unable to agree on policies for western agriculture.

To be fair, I think it must be said that at their last meeting a few weeks ago they did manage to agree. They reversed a decision of a committee session at a plenary session the following day and agreed to endorse a resolution which would be forwarded to the government, presumably, asking for an improved pricing policy for western grain. I am sure the resolution was submitted to the Minister of Agriculture and to the cabinet. No doubt the minister was present. He knows what western Liberals have asked for in the way of pricing policies for western grain.

In so far as wheat is concerned they have asked for the two price system so that there would be a floor of $2.12 per bushel and an additional $1 per bushel for the amount consumed domestically. As I say, probably the Minister of Agriculture was there. No doubt he made a very good speech, because he can make a good speech on occasion. I am certain he assured his Liberal friends in the west that this resolution would be given serious and sympathetic consideration and that the government would try to do something. The problem with the minister, and I am not being offensive when I say this, is that he makes very good statements when he is speaking to groups outside of the house. He spoke at Vancouver and he has spoken to farm union gatherings on the prairies. However, his performance in that respect is not equalled by his performance in cabinet. Obviously he has been unable to persuade his cabinet colleagues to do something about the problem now. Nobody has come up with a pricing policy.

I know the Liberals will say that last fall they indicated the price of wheat would be supported at the floor level of the international wheat agreement, which in effect was $1.95. How can one reconcile this statement with the fact that a few years ago western Liberals were talking, not just during election campaigns but at regional conferences, of the imperative need for a $2 floor under wheat? Those statements were made in 1963. Since 1963 inflation has decreased the value of the dollar by approximately 12 or 13 per cent. Instead of offering a $2 guarantee, however, the government comes forward with $1.95. I suppose $2 in 1963 is worth about $1.90 now. I guess this is how the government is going to justify itself when it goes to the western provinces in the next election. The Liberals are going to say, yes, we promised $2 in 1963 but because we have not been able to do anything about inflation $2 in 1963 is only worth $1.90 now, and since we are giving you $1.95 we are actually giving you more than we promised. I am sure this will confuse everybody, including the minister and his colleagues. Perhaps this is the only way the government can get out of this shameful position with regard to its treatment of western agriculture. The fact is that $2 promised in 1963 to be equalled now would require $2.12 per bushel at least.

I have already indicated how this government's dairy policy is adversely affecting dairy production and dairy producers in western Canada. The very least the government could do to make up for this adverse effect would be to improve their policy with respect to grain producers on the praries. However, they are not doing that either, Mr. Chairman.

I should say to hon. members that the performance of the government and the minister is so difficult to follow that from time to time I have to pause and ponder just what to make of it. Hon. members on this side have asked repeatedly if the government would do anything about increasing the amount of money available for cash advances. I feel this is a point worthy of some deliberation. There has been the failure to keep up with export levels set in past years and the movement of grain off the farm and from the country elevators has slowed down greatly. It appears it is going to slow down even more in the next few weeks and months. This is all the more reason for increasing the amount of money available to farmers through cash advances.

We have no indication of intent from the government. Its ministers act as though they were not really concerned. I have said before but I want to say again that the image the government projects so far as the agricultural industry is concerned is one of the complete indifference, indolence and nonchalance. This applies to their attitude to the trend away from the farm which has been going on since 1952 and has been accelerating. Rather than trying to come forward with policies to slow down this trend and avoid social and economic dislocation, this government is indifferent with respect to dairy policies, indifferent about setting agricultural price supports for western agriculture and actually seems to accelerate the trend. Those who have tried to peer into the future of the agricultural industry have said that the trend will continue. Where 40,000 farmers in a given region are involved in hog production today, by 1980 the actual number of farmers so engaged will be between 4,500 and 5,000. That is how drastic the transition is, and the loser in the end will be the Canadian consumer. For these reasons no government ought to hesitate in supporting the prices of agricultural commodities.

Some hon. members from Ontario on this side of the house have referred specifically to sugar beets, vegetables, and so on. I wish to speak briefly about potato production in Manitoba. Potato prices in the past year have fallen drastically in the United States and as a result potatoes have been moving into western Canada at prices which, if they do not constitute dumping, come very close to it. There has not been much overproduction of potatoes in western Canada. As a matter of fact, there was no overproduction last year. Despite that, potato prices to producers slumped disastrously. As a result a delegation called on the Minister of Agriculture and asked him to consider imposing on United States potatoes a value for duty. Today the minister indicated that he has made no decision. He clouded the issue by giving an indirect answer and so I take that he is not inclined to make a decision on the request. He has not even given the delegation the satisfaction of any answer.

A few months ago the Prime Minister indicated that since some industries in this country will be adversely affected by the implementation of certain features of the Kennedy round agreement the government would consider extending grants to such concerns as are adversely affected. I submit that the government should extend this kind of thinking to the agricultural industry. Helping industry overcome the disruption of rapid changes in trade patterns is unfair unless agriculture is given similar treatment.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Schreyer: May I have a couple of minutes to conclude?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Does the committee agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Schreyer: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is all very well to talk about the problems of various sectors of our economy. It is all very well to talk about agricultural problems and to give smooth assurances of sympathetic consideration and probable action, as the minister likes to give from time to time, but clearly, after the passage of more than two years, the time has come for the minister to produce.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Schreyer: The government should do nothing less than allocate substantial amounts of money, in a selective manner, for the purpose of stabilizing the production of various agricultural commodities and improving the income positions of the producers. This must be done because in many ways Canadian agriculture is in dire straits. The agricultural industry is so vital to this country and the portents of what is happening are of such consequence to the Canadian people that the minister will be excused if the government for a change takes drastic and meaningful action. It must do so now.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Chairman, I should like to say at the outset that while one may have much sympathy for the minister, when the industry which he represents in the cabinet is in serious trouble one cannot extend sympathy to the government. Through indifference or lack of understanding the government's policy or, to put it more properly, the government's lack of agricultural policy, has been tantamount to an exercise in futility in solving the immediate problems of farmers or in attempting to bring about long-term solutions of their problems.

The minor changes the government made to legislation that was eight years old when it took office seem to have added to farmers' difficulties instead of alleviating them. For example, one might mention the plight of western cream shippers and the local dairies that service them. One could go right down the list through every sector of the industry and find the same situation. The industry struggles to meet competition from commodities that have been produced abroad under subsidy. Usually they are surplus commodities. This struggle takes place under circumstances for which the government must take much responsibility. I refer to tight credit, higher interest rates, lower prices, higher production costs and lack of adequate cash for working capital. The old adage that none are so blind as those who refuse to see is still true. As a previous speaker said, this government does not have the answers to our agricultural problems because it does not understand them.

The low grain delivery quotas now in effect at prairie elevators are causing a great deal of concern to western farmers. When we compare today's situation with the situation one year ago the cause for this concern becomes apparent. Three hundred and ninety-four elevators in western Canada are now on a three bushel quota, 1,071 are on a four bushel quota and 387 are on a five bushel quota. At this time last year only 726 elevators were on a quota of five bushels or less. The remaining 1,156 elevators were on quotas of six to eight bushels.

The disparity between the farmers' cash position this year and last year is evident. Cash advances, while helping to pay some fall expenses, do not alter that position since cash advances were available last year also. The gravity of the situation is compounded this year because of higher interest rates and because farmers cannot obtain farm improvement loans at statutory rates of interest.

Much though one wants to see some improvement in the grain delivery situation, the cold, hard fact is that deliveries will more than likely slow to a trickle. In their recent market letter James Richardson and Sons, Winnipeg grain merchants, said:

> Stocks of all grains and oil seeds in country elevators are now over 295 million bushels, within about 15 million bushels of full working capacity, and the off-farm movement will soon be slowing down considerably as elevators become congested.
> Shipments east have practically come to a standstill as there is enough grain in the pipe line to fill the terminals at the lakehead, and outward shipments to the Pacific coast have slowed down recently.

With our wheat-flour exports down by approximately 160 million bushels compared with the same period last year, the outward movement of wheat is the lowest since 1956. The figures I have quoted were published in the Manitoba Co-operator of February 22 and seem to indicate that we cannot look for any decided improvement in the foreseeable future.

• (4:50 p.m.)

All of this means, of course, that the farmers cannot expect any immediate alleviation of their cash position. No doubt the government is hoping that the final payments on last year's grain pool will help the situation, and to some extent they will. However, the bulk of these payments are on wheat and are not expected until near the end of the current month. They will be needed to finance spring operations and very little will be used to pay accumulating bills. The farmer who grew a good crop in the past season but who suffered crop losses in the year covered by the pool will certainly not be in a very good position to start spring operations if he cannot realize more cash from the grain he has had to store in his bins.

It has always seemed to me that one responsibility of good government is to create an economic climate in which the various segments of our economy can operate efficiently. Such a government would take whatever steps might be necessary to achieve that objective. This does not always entail large government expenditures, but it would entail understanding by the government of basic principles of good economic husbandry.

In the case of modern agriculture, efficiency can only reach its highest level with a reasonable amount of available working capital. If working capital is cut off because of the inability of the producer to market his produce at a given time, other means must be found to overcome the difficulty.

Fortunately, so far as wheat is concerned we have machinery already in operation to supply funds in advance of delivery. Unfortunately, advancing costs have made the amount available inadequate. I am pleased to see the Minister of Trade and Commerce here. He suggested to me the other day that this was a matter for discussion between the department and the wheat board. But I think it would mean an amendment to the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act before larger cash advances could be made. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture in its submission to the government has recommended that the Prairie Grain Advances Payment Act be amended to allow advances to be made on wheat, oats and barley to a maximum of $4,-500 a figure which is quite realistic under the circumstances considering the low delivery quotas.

It is not my intention to point out how similar situations in other fields of agriculture can be resolved. Other speakers more qualified in their respective areas will be presenting their views during this debate. I would, however, again bring to the attention of the minister, as I have on other occasions, the serious effect which the heavy importation of vegetable oils is having on the sunflower industry in Manitoba.

Past experience has shown that the industry is able to overcome a surplus situation with the assistance of a floor price at very little cost to the treasury. As a matter of fact the one and only time a floor price was set it cost the government something like $40,000—I think the exact figure was $44,000—which is a very small price to pay for saving an industry. I hope the government will see fit to give serious consideration to this question and to the extent to which the importation of foreign oils is affecting our domestic vegetable oil market.

Recently the Lower Red River Valley Water Commission sent a brief to all federal cabinet ministers urging the government to accept the recommendations of the International Joint Commission in regard to the construction of the Pembina river project. I hope the minister took time to read his copy of the submission because of the importance of this project to the economy of the area in assuring adequate supplies of water for irrigation, industry and conservation. The protection it would afford the large area of rich farm land contained in that part of the Red River valley from disastrous and expensive flooding would bring benefits which would outweigh the initial cost. I would hope the minister would give his unqualified support to this important project.

Finally, I should like to express my disappointment to the minister that the excellent work under the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act, which has provided water storage dams throughout the prairies since its enactment, has apparently been brought to a standstill. If it is because the government has not decided under which department the legislation will continue to operate, as I have been led to believe, then I think it is time a decision was made. If it is because the government is contemplating bringing in a water resources act before proceeding further with this type of work, I hope the necessary legislation will be brought down as soon as possible. The main thing is that works so important to the economy of the prairies should not be further delayed because of government uncertainty and inaction.

[Translation]

Mr. Godin: Mr. Chairman, previous speakers have clearly explained the problems both serious and urgent, now facing the farmers.

I do not intend to go over the details again, but nevertheless, those problems must be considered in the light of the whole economic situation in Canada. We are therefore justified in expressing our deep concern about the slowing down in numerous sectors of our economy, which threatens to expand and develop into a real crisis.

Higher interest rates and budgetary restrictions are so many factors which contribute to the shortage of capital now affecting the Canadian economy.

Since policies of austerity generally have adverse effects on less privileged classes, I feel that the period we are now going through could jeopardize the situation of agriculture which is already deep into debt, at the very time when farmers are faced with increasing production costs and must increase their production through further investments.

In my opinion, the situation in which farmers find themselves is definitely inferior to that of other groups, in spite of the numerous efforts made to improve their lot. Such a situation cannot and must not go on any longer, since it is causing a steady decrease in the number of farmers, without for all that improving the lot of those who remain on the farm.

In spite of the ever fine words and high-sounding statements about the importance and the value of agriculture, parishes which, in the past, owed their prosperity to agriculture now only survive with the help of welfare allowances.

Due to the lack of an adequate policy which would anticipate problems rather than create them, whole sections of parishes are being abandoned because of inadequate income. Some of those farmers looked to the department of health, and they were given help providing they abstained from any activity.

Also, agricultural experts, from both federal and provincial governments, are constantly engaged in research to improve agriculture. They have discovered new breeding and feeding methods. They publish all the new developments in agriculture, such as insect and weed control. All these experts are busy making the farmers understand that they would really increase their profits by increasing their herds.

The present situation, which has existed for a long time, shows that increased efficiency alone is not the solution to the urgent problem of a better income for the farmer.

For some producers, such as hog and poultry farmers, that is the egg producers, large herds or flocks have proved disastrous.

Mr. Chairman, we had with us last week Mr. Lionel Sorel, general chairman of the U.C.C., an organization built up by the Quebec farmers. As you know, Mr. Sorel is also vice-chairman of the Canadian Dairy Farmers' Association and of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, and this was the reason for Mr. Sorel's visit to Ottawa.

This association submitted a brief to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and the members of the cabinet. This brief was brought to our attention at a meeting of our group.

Mr. Sorel was not present at this meeting, for a good reason, I am sure, but we had an opportunity of ascertaining his views on the present farming situation.

Even though we were unable to meet Mr. Sorel, still it has been proved that Mr. Sorel is well acquainted with the problems of agriculture.

In the interview he gave a reporter for Le Droit, which was published in that paper on Friday, March 1 last, Mr. Sorel made the following statement with which I agree:

● (5:00 p.m.)

The farmers' problems are always the same. The challenge they must meet is always that of increasingly higher production costs, on the one hand, and selling prices which, for them, seldom or never change, on the other.

In fact, the farmer has two sets of costs to meet, his rising personal costs and his costs of production, Mr. Lionel Sorel, president of the Catholic Farmers Union of Quebec, said on Wednesday. Other workers, who are not directly concerned with production, do not have to cope with one of those two sets of rising costs, explained Mr. Sorel.

Mr. Sorel was in Ottawa at the time, in connection with the presentation of the annual brief of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture to the federal cabinet.

Here are a few points, taken from the brief of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, which the president of the C.F.U. brought out: the need for consultation; the problems of the dairy industry in eastern Canada, the production of wheat in the west; farm loans and improvement, taxation, medicare and, finally, marketing.

Mr. Sorel indicated, on the same occasion, that to his mind:

—the farmers' appeal to the government was ill-timed this year because of the political crisis in Ottawa.

Mr. Sorel felt that the price of manufactured milk should be $5 per hundredweight. He said:

—the goal remains a minimum price of $5 per cwt. for manufactured milk. Even after three years of efforts and partial success, that objective has not been attained.

Indeed, Mr. Sorel is convinced that the average price of milk in 1967 was somewhere in the vicinity of $4.65.

Further on, Mr. Sorel pointed out another problem, namely that of marketing.

With regard to marketing, which in a way is to the farmer what collective agreements are to the worker, the president of the Quebec union said that the government of his province should soon come to an agreement with the federal government to eliminate the harmful effects of foreign competition.

He said that today competition comes both from foreign countries and the other provinces.

Mr. Sorel stated that the appropriate solution could probably arise from a delegation of powers between the two levels of government in Canada.

About the attitude of the Union nationale government in Quebec with regard to agriculture, Mr. Sorel had this to say: "I do not find it very constructive. We are not really told the truth.

People say: We want our rights. But concrete solutions are never put forward."

According to him, communications between the federal and the Quebec departments of Agriculture have decreased since the defeat of the Liberal party in June 1965.

Since I had been told the night before at a dinner with Mr. Sorel and an influential member of the cabinet, I feel that his reference to the defeat of the Quebec Liberal party and the attitude of the Quebec Union Nationale was a declaration of love.

I feel also that it is rather easy to say at a given moment that co-operation is lacking. But when did that happen in Quebec? Did it become obvious in 1964, 1965 or 1966?

For instance, under ARDA, a joint program of the federal government and the provinces, Ottawa allocated $11 million for Quebec whereas the provincial contribution did not exceed $3 million. Everyone knows that funds are lacking.

As far as co-operation is concerned, I am always reminded of that young man who decides to get married. If he makes $125 a week he has a much better chance to find someone willing to co-operate than if he gets only $25 in unemployment insurance benefits.

One remembers the years between 1929 and 1939, when good farm hands earned a dollar a week and a great number of young people in the cities had to make do with the dole. At that time, it was very difficult for the farmer who wanted to set up his own home to find someone willing to co-operate. But when the war came along, wages rose, and Canadians all found someone willing to co-operate and set up a home. As you know, there was no pill at the time, and co-operation was one hundred per cent.

Personally, before I came here, I drove, as a worker, a $200-$300 car, and even if you had offered me a 50 per cent subsidy on a $6,000 Cadillac, I would not have accepted, for I could not even have paid my share. On the other hand, if the hon. minister gave me the same deal today, I would be willing to co-operate, because I have earned a steady salary these last few years.

Mr. Chairman, the problem of the farmers, whether in the eastern, central or western provinces, is a financial problem. Efforts are made to obscure the issue by various means; it is said that the difficulties are due to the political crisis which occurred in Ottawa, or to a lack of co-operation, whereas in fact they are due to a lack of money. Instead of dealing with the real problem, everything is being done to evade the issue. All those who want to speak on the subject are given ample opportunity to do so.

In Quebec, people say: Things are going badly because you are being robbed by the English. Supposing that such is the case, we must still admit that there are honest people as well as thieves among all races. There are honest people among the Jewish, Italian, Canadian or English people. Whenever the province of Quebec complains about the Englishmen, I should like to know, for instance, who has been swindling the English people in Nova Scotia.

I should like, at this stage, to make a short comment on a brief submitted to the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on consumer credit. As can be seen on page 2964, No. 39 of the committee proceedings, the brief was dealing at that time with the housing problem and with personal income in Nova Scotia. This is something I wish to point out, since these people in Nova Scotia are Englishmen.

The brief states the following:

> The first factor that must be considered when discussing the housing situation here is that incomes are generally lower in the Atlantic region. Average incomes in this province run 25 per cent lower than the national average. Nova Scotia, then, has more than its share of poverty.

In a previous paragraph, one can read that:

> One fifth of all homes in Nova Scotia are overcrowded, without running water, bath or shower. Over one fifth of all homes do not have flush toilets. The number of homes requiring major repairs here is twice that of the national average.

Further on, we can read the following:

> This is an old province and the last one hundred years have not produced the expansion and growth experienced in most areas of this country. As a result of the stagnant population and industrial growth situation, our housing stock has remained much as it was 50 or even 100 years ago. Many of these old homes have been maintained so that they will not appear in bad housing statistics, and therefore distort these figures. Most of these very old; wood structures, residential and commercial, while sound, are not attractive.
> A portion of our housing stock must be demolished and a much greater portion restored if our communities are to become more attractive.

That report was submitted in 1967, when the hon. leader of the official opposition (Mr. Stanfield) was the premier of his province. When all is said and done, we realize that really pitiful conditions existed there. Nevertheless, since the arrival of the hon. Leader of the Opposition on the federal scene, newspapers try to make us believe that conditions are different, and they never speak about the problems of Nova Scotia.

We are told that the Leader of the Opposition has been successful in everything he undertook. Another day, we read in a newspaper that the hon. member initiated a campaign against the government. But with regard to poverty in his province and its slums, I think that he should have started by bulldozing those slums before coming here to bulldoze parliament.

At all events, I repeat that the farmers' problem is not one of honesty but a financial one. The problem of starvation is not a problem of honesty either, but a financial one. The agriculture problem is not a problem of production but of consumption. Mr. Chairman, I wonder how farmers will manage to make both ends meet in the coming years. We realize that all classes of society lack the necessities of life.

We know that crop insurance, accepted by other provinces three years ago, has been accepted by the province of Quebec only this year.

We know also that the cost of this insurance is shared equally by the federal government and the provinces; that is, Ottawa pays 50 per cent and the provinces, 50 per cent. As for the premium, 25 per cent is paid by the federal government and 25 per cent by the provinces. Finally, there remains only 50 per cent to be paid by the farmer, by the person concerned. In spite of all that, Quebec has not been able to implement its plan earlier because of a shortage of money. Today, it is obvious that the minister should not wait for the provinces, should not flounder in joint programs, because under the present system, the provinces have become poor relations.

I do not know the intentions of the minister with regard to the continuing rise in the price of farm machinery. I do not know what will be his policy in the face of the farmers' requests for a price of $5 per hundredweight for milk. I do not know what will be his policy with regard to quotas which will be favourable or unfavourable to farmers who want to increase their revenue.

We know that the minister has decided to reduce cheese subsidies as well as subsidies on sheep and hog production on account of an inadequate budget.

I would like to remind you, Mr. Chairman, that during wartime there was never any mention of an inadequate budget. We did not wait until the government had collected taxes from people who were unemployed to declare war. We went right to the source, namely the Bank of Canada.

We also remember that price support was extended throughout Canada and in spite of the shorage of manpower, Canadian production increased to such an extent that it was used to feed part of the world.

[Mr. Godin.]

We also remember that millions and millions were granted as assistance to Great Britain. I feel that this gesture could be repeated and would be an appropriate opportunity for the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) to launch war against poverty. In view of the fact that England does not need any more of our gifts and that present subsidies are inadequate, I think that the hon. minister could consider granting a special discount, paid with new money, on all Canadian consumer goods. That discount could be paid on every food item produced and consumed across Canada. What was good for England would be good, I assume, for the whole Canadian people and it would be accepted by them.

When the government used the Bank of Canada, it was for the war effort. Of course, to use the Bank of Canada today would run counter to old habits. This always requires an effort, but, in my opinion, it would be an effort in the right direction. The minister could depend on the support of all the people, and in view of the fact that the farmers would be involved indirectly, he could depend also on the support of Mr. Paul-Henri Lavoie, general secretary of the C.F.U. who, it is a known fact, is one of the directors of the Bank of Canada. Since the agricultural class would be assisted indirectly with that new formula, I am convinced that Mr. Lavoie would be very happy to give his support to such an initiative. I imagine that Mr. Lavoie who is secretary of the C.F.U. and a director of the Bank of Canada, does not wish, any more than the hon. minister and myself, to see the appearance of a period similar to that of the years 1929 to 1939.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to delay any longer the business of the house, but I am glad to have the opportunity of saying a few words on the subject of agriculture in Canada.

It must be recognized that the minister's task, as he presides over the destiny of the Department of Agriculture, is a very arduous and important task indeed.

I shall not spend the time at my disposal in taking him to task, but I will rather use the few minutes available to me to make a few suggestions, together with a few suggestions to improve the well-being of our rural population in general.

We know, Mr. Chairman, that for the last few years, farming has been going through a period of considerable development and transformation. Production methods have changed drastically. Machinery itself is changing from one year to another, which is not without creating very serious problems both to the farmers and to those who want to promote agriculture in the country.

• (5:20 p.m.)

The number of farmers has gradually been reduced in the last few years. Several marginal farms no longer exist and several more will disappear. That is why there is a need for close co-operation, not only between the federal and provincial departments of agriculture, but also between other departments. A close spirit of co-operation should exist between the two levels of government, and I hope that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) will be willing to co-operate as fully as possible to prevent farmers from suffering losses through lack of co-operation at some stage of the discussions.

As things are at present, there should be continuous consultation between the various departments. It is to be hoped that we will see a continued improvement for the greater general good.

One of the main success factors for a farmer is doubtless the facility to get the necessary credit so as to equip and manage his farm. For several years, the Canadian Farm Credit Corporation has rendered great services to farmers, but, I think, we have reached a point where the act should be amended in order to enable farmers to take better advantage thereof.

I do not think it is slander to suggest that many times, the officials responsible for implementation of the Farm Credit Act do not protect the farmer's interests sufficiently. One would think that the sole purpose of some officials is to protect the government, which is much too rigid.

I know several farmers who have complained of their treatment. There was not enough confidence placed in them and they could not obtain the amounts which would have enabled them to develop their farm so as to make it profitable.

It is a fact that the farmer is generally a good risk. And I think that if banks could obtain interest rates in accordance with modern requirements, they would readily grant more loans to farmers. Therefore, I would urge the minister to use his power of persuasion to convince the officials dealing with agricultural loans, to have more confidence in farmers applying for an agricultural loan, because they are creditworthy.

It seems to me, we should have a special concern for the young farmers, who want to settle on the land. The minister knows also how few of our young people look to agriculture for their future. Those who would like to become farmers have great qualities, but often they are prevented from carrying out their plans, because their father cannot give them the money required to settle on their own land. In many families, more than one son wants to settle on a farm, but the father whose land is limited, cannot logically and equitably help all his sons to become farmers.

To my mind, that is where the farm credit bureau could be of great assistance, not only to the farmers who wish to borrow, but also to the nation as a whole.

It must be recognized that it is the farmers who feed the nation. If we place ourselves in a situation where sooner or later we have to get our supplies from foreign sources, it will surely be to the disadvantage of our people.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Chairman, I should like to speak, for a few moments, on the dairy industry. We know that this is a very important industry in Canada because it represents 40 per cent of the farmer's income. Therefore, we have the right to pay it a very special attention.

We know that in recent years, because of a policy that did not meet their demands, many farmers sold their cattle to devote themselves to other agricultural fields. The result was that interested farmers were handicapped and that many plants had to close down because of the lack of raw materials.

I would like hon. gentleman to pay a very special attention to the recommendation made to him by the C.F.A. We know that the C.F.A. presented last week to the cabinet its annual brief in which it repeated the request made last year and the year before, that it is absolutely necessary for the farmers to get a price of $5 per hundredweight of milk.

Indeed, the C.F.A. says in its brief that this price of $5 per hundredweight is even more necessary today than in previous years, because the cost of production is always increasing. We know, for example, that the average price which the Canadian farmer received last year amounted to $4.65 per hundredweight. It is easily realized that the request of the agricultural organization is reasonable and that the government should take measures at once to enable the farmers to get this price. It is essential that the hon. Minister of Agriculture make available to the Canadian Dairy Commission the funds which will enable it to meet the demands of the farmers.

In its brief, the C.F.A. mentions also that the present dairy policy contains two things that are unfair to the people concerned. The first one concerns cream shippers who get rather less than the producers of manufacturing milk. According to the brief, the second concerns discrimination against the producers of fluid milk who must sell a substantial part of their production for processing at a price established by the industry. This deprives the fluid milk producer of a badly needed revenue supplement. To this end, the federation submits the following recommendation:

> We believe that more funds are needed to bring back the old federal policy whereby subsidies paid to the other dairy producers were also paid to the fluid milk producers—

In its brief, the federation urged the government to revert to the old way of paying subsidies, which was more suited to the farmer's needs.

The cheese industry is also of the utmost importance. As you know, the Lac St-Jean area alone exported last year about six million pounds of cheese to Great Britain. The managers of the cheese factories in the Lake St. John region believe that they will encounter difficulties because of the devaluation of the pound sterling. According to rumour, and in view of the devaluation of the dollar, it would not be surprising if cheese sold at about 15 cents per pound less than last year, and this will surely affect the amount paid by the cheese factories to the farmers. Therefore, the hon. Minister of Agriculture should not reduce the bonus on cheese, as he proposed or intended to do. This bonus should remain, for it is in the interest of the farmers who produce cheese.

Mr. Chairman, this leads me to talk for a few minutes about the need to increase compensation for animals slaughtered on account of contagious diseases.

A few weeks ago, I had the pleasure of introducing in the house a notice of motion urging the house to study the possibility of increasing compensation paid for cattle slaughtered under the Animal Contagious Diseases Act. I set such compensation at $200 for pure-bred cattle and at $125 for cross-bred cattle.

When one knows, Mr. Chairman, that a good milch-cow, for instance, costs $500, one must face the facts and conclude that the compensation paid a few years ago is inadequate. The C.F.U. representative would like an increase in the compensation paid, and I feel that the minister should do his utmost to meet his wishes.

It is true that the motion I introduced was referred to the standing committee on agriculture for consideration, but that is not enough. I think that the minister would give the farmers a most welcome gift if he announced shortly that he has taken the necessary action so that the compensation I suggested in my notice of motion will be paid.

There is another source of concern for our farmers, mainly for the fruit and vegetable growers. Every year, Mr. Chairman, greenhouse products from other countries compete with our Canadian products.

I think that the hon. Minister for Agriculture should pay a great deal more attention to the matter, than he has in the past, because when our farmers' products reach the market, it is already overloaded. It follows that our farmers are forced to lower their prices in order to sell their products. It is quite interesting for the housewives to have, earlier in the season, strawberries on their table, but to me it is only a matter of logic, and the hon. minister should protect our producers.

I know that in some quarters prevails a certain ideology under which we buy products abroad at a better price than those produced domestically. If we follow up that ideology, sooner or later we will necessarily have to assist our farmers or to direct them toward other forms of production in which they are interested.

I think that even if the consumer lacks greenhouse products for a week or a few days more, it will bring a distinct advantage to our farmers.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Shortly after taking over the portfolio of agriculture, the minister promised the farmers, if my memory serves me right, that a thorough study would be made of the various conditions concerning the purchase of farm machinery, and he also promised them relief.

Farmers are still waiting for the minister to carry out his promise in that respect and it is high time that he should assure them of his support and take positive steps to put an end to the yearly increase in the prices of farm machinery.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I should like to tell the Minister of Agriculture that hog producers were sorry to hear that the bonus on hogs would be reduced. I trust the minister, after having given due consideration to the matter, will make strong representations to the Treasury Board, in order that the decision to reduce the bonus on hogs will be dropped. If not, Mr. Chairman, I hope the minister will realize that farmers are going to lose a great deal of money as a result of this decision and they will find themselves in a very unfavourable position to meet their obligations and production costs.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I will ask the Minister of Agriculture to tell us what measures he plans to take, in order to ensure that our Canadian products will not be adversely affected by the Kennedy round of tariff negotiations.

Farmers are greatly concerned at the present time. Seeding time is fast approaching and our farmers would like to be assured that their efforts will not be in vain, in short that they have not worked for nothing.

Already the farmer has to face many unknown factors that can ruin the fruit of his labour for a whole season. He should not, in addition, face the risk that imports of foreign products will force him to reduce his operations or force him to sell his products at a price that would not enable him to meet his production costs.

This being said, Mr. Chairman, I should like to repeat my best wishes to the Minister of Agriculture and assure him that the farmers expect to receive from him the protection they are entitled to.

Mr. Côté (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Chairman, I should like during the few minutes at my disposal to discuss that famous problem of agriculture, but in a context somewhat different from that of my colleagues, that is in relation to its future, endeavouring as much as possible not to play politics. I do not wish to congratulate the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene), in order to increase his political capital, but on the other hand, I do not want to criticize him and have the press report that I have done a good turn to agriculture, because I wish to speak about its future.

I heard a member opposite early this afternoon stating that the minister had a poor record up to now. I found that he was rather harsh until he said that when the Conservative party came into power in 1957, it had issued a challenge.

Mr. Chairman, I remember that challenge in the dairy industry. I do not want to quote figures, since, as I said earlier, this would be dabbling in politics and the hon. member would be embarrassed. I would prefer to refer to the problem of agriculture, or to make an attempt at showing it from another viewpoint different from the monetary angle.

Nowadays, I think the problem of agriculture is rather a social problem. It has reached the point where you see the young leaving our rural areas to go and live in the cities. When I was a boy, I sometimes had to walk to school barefoot, as my parents had very little resources. However I did not feel I was being persecuted, since my schoolfellows came from the same background as mine. But today, our children have to go to school in urban centres, where they mix with children from other classes of society.

As a matter of fact, when a child suddenly realizes that a school friend is better off, that he has some spending money, that a little girl can change her dress a little more often, that child suffers from an inferiority complex and finds it somewhat more difficult to concentrate on his studies. He returns home and asks his mother to buy him the same things that the others have. If he does, it is because he is intelligent; if he realizes it, it is because he is intelligent.

Quite often, the conflicts that arise in rural families are merely due to a lack of money.

It was explained earlier that the lack of money was due to a faulty administration. There is no doubt about it. It is a known fact that the state must subsidize 50 per cent of the farming community, but it is also true that the latter is responsible for that situation to the same degree. This is not surprising, because the farming community has given priests and bishops to the church, lawyers and notaries to the legal profession, politicians to public life.

So, who is left in agriculture? People who experience perhaps a little more difficulty than others in understanding problems and managing operations. In the light of all these facts, we have before us someone who has trouble managing his property; in my opinion, a successful farmer is a very intelligent man, with a variety of skills hard to find in other levels of society, because he must be businessman, accountant, veterinarian—without a diploma, but able to detect diseases affecting animals—and also a mechanic. With all this, he succeeds as a farmer because he is a superman of sorts. However, a farmer's problems result sometimes from bad management. That is the important point.

I wish to congratulate the minister who took the initiative of putting computers at the disposal of the farmers to enable them to administer their farms better.

Macdonald College has already begun using them. In my opinion, that will give agriculture a new impetus. It is almost impossible to be sure of selling our products because of foreign competition. Therefore, we must find a way to get a maximum production out of our farms. That is where computers will be really useful.

I was a dairy farmer at one time and only after having been able to assess the production of each head of cattle I had—it varies a great deal from one to another—I realize that this cannot be determined at a glance. We need technicians. Technique plus practice may lead to a reasonable income.

Besides the technical aspect of the problem, I would like to draw the minister's attention to a few particular points which, in fact, have been raised by other hon. members including the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin), who, I am bound to say, seemed to have some idea of what he was talking about. Listening to him, one knew that he had first hand knowledge of agricultural problems.

Then there was talk of quotas. That should be changed. Mr. Chairman, I should like to draw the attention of the minister to the question of quotas. Five dollars was the price mentioned at first. The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) spoke of $5 a moment ago. But in the Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot region, as in the 26 ridings in the province of Quebec which are part of a large co-operative of that province, the average price of milk will range from $4.94 to $4.96 per hundredweight. This last figure has not been announced officially, but it is very close to $5.

Now, since the Minister of Agriculture had set his objective at $4.75, one must admit that he went over it and the farmers of my constituency are quite grateful to him for that.

[Mr. Côté (Nicolet-Yamaska).]

In addition, and if we had not lost the 25 cents premium paid by the province of Quebec, we would have $5.25. At this point, I ask those who are close to the provincial authorities not to be shy if they can help to get that premium for the areas where the price of milk does not reach $4.75 per hundredweight, because it is impossible for the federal government to establish a price throughout a province and throughout the country, considering the diversity of conditions in agriculture because of geographic location or changes in the weather. In fact, even in the province of Quebec, it is not necessary to go below Quebec city, or lower Quebec as they call it, to realize that the dairy industry is operated at an inferior level.

This is, I think, a unique problem which comes within the jurisdiction of the province. The federal government gives subsidies in order to establish an average price across Canada, but since particular factors have to be taken into account in the provinces, the decision should remain theirs, provided there is an agreement between the provinces, that they will not resort to dumping practices and then ask the federal government to settle the problem.

In our district for example and in the rural areas of the eastern townships, in the Montreal area and in the Beauce area, which covers 23 counties, we get nearly $5. However, there is a deficiency in the field of quotas.

Mr. Chairman, I should like the hon. Minister of Agriculture, to think of the farmers who gave up the market of fluid milk in favour of industrial milk, assuming they would be eligible to subsidies, because their production is a little too close to the 45 per cent standard established by the commission, to forbid farmers to change from one production to another. Therefore, those who have changed because they were not aware of the regulations are penalized. These people are not recognized as producers of processed milk entitled to subsidies. Everyone knows that if you go through a stop sign even if you claim later on it was unwittingly, you still have to pay. Consequently, I believe that those who were penalized should be granted the quota for this year. In the year 1967-1968 the farmer was obliged to sell his milk at $3.54, and if it were possible for that farmer who cannot go back to the production of fluid milk, to be recognized, then he could be subsidized.

Quotas under 50,000 pounds of milk were also mentioned by an hon. member. For the benefit of those who do not know it, the commission has already recognized those quotas and I even think that it has been lowered to 12,000 pounds. Personally, I was not in favour of such a low quota, because a 12,000-pound production represents only the yield of two cows which produce 6,000 pounds of milk each. A farmer cannot live on such production and I am under the impression that it is even prejudicial to anyone who would like to make a living out of farming or dairying.

However, let us say that due to pressures by farm associations, the Canadian dairy commission following an agreement with the hon. minister, has recognized the merits of that request.

But I also think that we should consider raising them so that the farmer who wants to live on dairy farming gets a large enough production, because no one can live reasonably with less than 200,000 to 300,000 pounds of milk.

Mr. Chairman, may I call it six o'clock.

[English]

The Chairman: Order. It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. When the committee rose at six o'clock it had been considering vote 5c of supplementary estimates (c) of the Department of Agriculture.

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Chairman, before the committee adjourned, I was trying to explain to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) that some deficiencies exist in the administration of the Canadian Dairy Commission, especially with regard to quotas.

I have not dealt specifically with the price of milk. I said that it reached almost $5 per hundredweight in some areas, but not in the country as a whole. I could have asked, like some opposition members, an increase of 25 cents per hundredweight. I would then have expressed the same wish as the minister. He would have liked to comply with that request, but even had I asked him for such an increase, it would have been to little avail. When the price of milk is raised by one cent per hundredweight, it costs $1 million to the country. If a further increase of 25 cents is requested, then the Minister of Agriculture would have to ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) for $25 million more.

Every time that members of the opposition or of third parties ask for higher milk prices, the Minister of Finance must set up a new fiscal policy to get the money. He would then be defeated by the opposition, and that is why it is useless to ask for it. I would rather stick to the present quotas.

I would like to see all those who have abandoned fluid milk production for industrial milk production be recognized by the Canadian Dairy Commission as industrial milk producers in order to benefit from a quota for 1968-69.

Another problem which I want to bring to the attention of the minister and which involves many people is that of the milk producers who sell a few quarts of fluid milk in villages or rural areas. Because they sell 2, 3, 4 or 5 per cent of their production, or 5 to 10 quarts of fluid milk, these farmers are recognized as fluid milk producers and are ineligible for subsidies paid by the dairy commission.

These same farmers are forced to stop delivering milk to the villagers and to go exclusively into the production of industrial milk; even then they are not recognized. As for the villagers, they are forced to buy their milk from city distributors at twice the price they would pay at home. I should like to bring one of these cases to the attention of the minister. In my riding, several farmers have stopped selling a few pints of milk in order to be recognized by the Canadian Dairy Commission, and they have not even been recognized. If possible, I should ask that subsidies be granted to these people in 1968-69. We should also think of young farmers with financial obligations and whose quotas do not amount to 300,000 lbs. of milk. These younger people should be afforded the opportunity to have their quotas readjusted according to their production for the year 1967-68.

An 18-year old youth who is almost a salaried worker or who does not receive a salary from his father tries to invest, to get a piece of land which he will be able to work one, two or three years later.

But the father is not recognized as having two employees officially and he cannot get a quota exceeding 300,000 pounds of milk. I would like those farmers to receive subsidies and to be recognized by the Canadian Dairy Commission.

I am calling on the opposition members who asked the government to help the farmers. Since I have been here, I think it is a very nice gesture on the part of the opposition to call on the minister to help the farmers. Thus, on the one hand, we are ready to give to the farmers but, on the other, the minister is not given the necessary funds. If we are serious, we will stop indulging in politicking and perhaps let the Minister of Agriculture go to the source to get the funds needed for agriculture.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to congratulate the Minister of Agriculture—I certainly hope that the members of the press gallery do not hear me because they will think that I want to praise him—for the help he gave the farm associations.

When two or three organizations merge, they have the advantage of being classified by the federal government as being of class "B" which enables them to get a 50 per cent subsidy for awards to cattle, as well as 50 per cent compensation for certain expenses, and the judges are paid by the federal government.

In my own riding, I had the opportunity, as chairman of the district organization, to merge three farm organizations which were granted a $4,900 federal subsidy last year. That was given to the farm organizations because their fairs reflect the agricultural character of our areas and show what is being done in agriculture. In fact, these are the only contacts we have left with the other classes of society. We do not see each other as before. We no longer sell as our fathers did, to a brother or a sister, in cities. Fairs organized by farm organizations constitute the only contact with city residents and by that initiative, the Minister of Agriculture contributed more than $10 million.

Now, that amount of $10 million coming from the treasury and evidently from taxpayers was allocated to assist agriculture. Sincere persons must consider, when a request is made, that the money must come from somewhere.

In connection with agricultural organizations, I wish to point out a fact to the minister. When two or three organizations merge, they should be in a position to obtain loans either through Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation or otherwise—I do not know the answer; I am somewhat like an hon. member opposite; I make proposals without knowing where they will lead me—at interest rates of 3 or 4 per cent, and repayable over a 25 or 30-year period in order to develop a proper location to exhibit under proper conditions the products of our 1968 agriculture. Again, it will be necessary to obtain money so as to be in a position to grant those loans to a small agricultural company.

• (8:10 p.m.)

In the field of animal disease, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) some time ago presented a motion asking for larger indemnities. I did not take part actively in the debate at the time because the hon. Minister of Agriculture had told us last year that he wanted to prepare something in that regard and even line up an increase in the yearly budget. I shall be very pleased when the Minister of Agriculture makes that statement. I feel he will soon make it.

Some members of the opposition—of whom the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot—made a request which, to my mind, is very reasonable, with regard to cheese premiums, namely 2 cent subsidies for 94-score cheeses and 1 cent for 93-score cheeses. I think that the hon. member was not acquainted with the true problem regarding this subsidy.

In 1944, the government decided to give a subsidy in order to promote the production of better quality cheese. In 1944, 48 per cent of the cheese scored 94 points. It reached 71 per cent and for the last few years it showed a tendency to level off. Maybe the amount of money is not as profitable as that. The dairy farmer took steps to put on the market a good quality product. He recognized the need to have a good product, to be able to sell it on the international market. Today, it would seem he has come to the point where he cannot improve further his production because certain factors are not being respected. For the industrial producer, it is perhaps not profitable to do more.

Some large dairy industries seem to be almost always able to produce cheese scoring 94 points, while others cannot. Money is thus invested in better organized industries, which do not need this money to produce a certain quality of cheese, but nothing is done to help those for whom there is room for improvement.

On the other hand, there is also the price of pork. The subsidy to pork producers has been reduced. There is another problem that we must try to examine properly. I know that in my riding and in that of Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot—if I often talk about the latter, it is because it is next to my own, where we find the same type of farming and the same problems—but perhaps the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot is not aware of the conditions of the pork industry—you find pork breeders. Some people go in for integration. Farmers are told: you must produce, you will be provided with piglets and financing and then, you will get $3 per hog. All you have to do is sign the invoice, the cheque, and give them to us. In that case, I feel that the money is taken from the Department of Agriculture but is not handed over to the farmers.

I do not want that subsidy to be discontinued. I would not want anybody to say that the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska is against subsidies for farmers. But I want those subsidies to be paid so as to benefit the farmers. Such is the change that I am asking for. Let us say that the subsidy is being discontinued temporarily because of restrictions. The Minister of Agriculture will certainly have to make further restrictions if the opposition refuses to vote the necessary estimates. But if we are to eliminate the farmer's problems all members of the house will have to agree to increased taxes, even if that is bad politically. If we are aware of the problems of that class of society, we must assume our responsibilities, face the electorate and explain that the money we put in the pockets of some members of society must come from society as a whole. It is as plain as that.

Mr. Chairman, I see my time is running out and I would ask a few minutes more.

It must be understood that when we ask for assistance for our farmers—I am speaking to all those who are not familiar with agriculture and who do not live in a farming area —farmers are not pocketing the money or hoarding it in their cellars. However, every dollar invested benefits the whole industrial and commercial sector. Agriculture represents 35 to 40 per cent of the national economy. This includes not only the sale of agricultural products, but everything that has to do with agriculture. Money invested in agriculture is not only invested in farming but in the whole community which is dependent upon agriculture.

I toured the Gaspé and Timiskaming regions and I saw places where there is nothing but rocks for 20 or 25 miles, small villages whose inhabitants depend wholly upon the tourist trade or on fishing for their living. However, if you cross a plain of about 10 or 15 square miles, you see farmlands, a pretty village and all sorts of enterprises which settled there because they depend on agriculture.

Every time the farmer is subsidized, he buys something to improve his operations. We should not get the idea that those subsidies are simply going into the pockets of the farmers.

In order to prove my point, I am going to quote some figures which will show that any investment in agriculture is beneficial to many.

For instance, in 1965, dairy producers shipped products valued at $909,172,000, that is $145,186,000 more than in 1961. Now, that increase of more than $145,000,000 went to organizations related to agriculture. The dairy industry employed 31,866 persons whose salaries amounted to $137,681,000. The cost of supplies and raw material amounted to $721,-735,000. The cost of containers and packing material amounted to $47,798,000. The cost of fuel and electricity should also be added. That impetus given to the dairy industry permitted the purchase of supplies in other fields.

I see that my time has expired, and to give an opportunity to others of my colleagues to state their views, I shall resume my seat and ask all who are present here to realize that when the Minister of Agriculture makes special requests to the Minister of Finance, those concern other sectors of the economy.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: I think we can all agree, Mr. Chairman, that there are many serious problems facing Canadian agriculture and I say at the outset that in the time I intend to take tonight I do not propose to solve all of them. After all, the minister himself has not succeeded in doing so during all the time he has been Minister of Agriculture, so I shall not attempt to do so in half an hour tonight. Nevertheless, there are some views that I wish to express.

I think the problems involved in agriculture are revealed by statistics with which we are all familiar in connection with rural poverty and farm income in relation to other sections of the economy. The extent of the difficulties is revealed also by the obvious dissatisfaction of Canadian farmers to which my hon. friend from Kent (Ont.), referred on Friday. After all, Mr. Chairman, a couple of years ago 60 per cent of the farmers of Canada were sufficiently unhappy about the approach of this government to agricultural problems that they cast their votes against the government, and I think the proportion would be much higher today. However, I suggest there are several misconceptions widely held about Canadian agriculture and I think they are reflected, to some extent at least, in the approach of the government.

• (8:20 p.m.)

I think it is worth emphasizing that agriculture is not an isolated industry unrelated to anything else. We say this all the time, but I think it is worth emphasizing the significance of it. Agriculture is of course directly affected by general government policies, and not only by the policies of the Department of Agriculture. I think this is an important point to keep in mind. Equally important of course is that agriculture itself directly affects the economic health and progress of the country. We cannot think of agriculture in isolation. We cannot deal with agriculture intelligently isolated from the rest of the economy. There will not be a healthy Canadian economy unless there is a healthy agriculture—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: —and there will not be a healthy agriculture unless there is a healthy Canadian economy.

Today the farmer is caught in a cost-price squeeze. His international markets are threatened by the apparent reluctance of the government to pursue these markets vigorously. His domestic markets are threatened by import policies which certainly many farmers and farm groups find incomprehensible, and there is a particular difficulty in securing credit except to the extent that it is supplied directly by government agencies. Farmers are caught up in the general uncertainty as to the Canadian economy and government economic policies.

Agriculture of course is an industry in which the federal government is very heavily involved, as well as provincial governments. On many commodities government policy controls quotas. Government policy controls transportation and transportation charges. Government policy to a very considerable extent controls marketing, the rate of stabilization payments, the decision as to whether stabilization payments are to be made, and to a very large degree the availability of credit. Consequently to a very large extent the fate of the farmer is in the hands of the government.

The government is certainly deeply involved, certainly it cannot withdraw. I seem to discern—and I hope this is not justified—but I have an impression that the minister and the department tend to some extent to wash their hands of the problem involved as being too difficult, and something that will have to be worked out by the process of attrition. But I suggest the government has an obligation to develop effective long range policies.

No one can deny the difficulty of the problem. Certainly I do not. Our agriculture problem on the one hand is related to persistent world poverty and on the other hand to rapid technological change, which confronts our farmers with constantly changing conditions of production and competition. Agriculture is certainly resistant to any blanket policy because of the different types of farming in our country, because of the regional differences, because of the great variety of crops that can be and are grown in Canada. But surely the difficulty of the problem is not an excuse for ineffective policy, nor is it satisfactory simply to phase out the industry or allow it to work out its destiny through a process of attrition.

Our agriculture must be viable. The world, as well as our country, needs and will continue to need food. The former Conservative government, which had confidence in Canadian agriculture—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: —introduced some very important initiatives in the fields of credit marketing, the ARDA program, and indeed other programs. The policies of that period created a momentum and an optimism in agriculture, a feeling which has definitely been allowed to lapse. Many of the present policies relating to this industry of agriculture are either ineffective or else cause more problems than they solve. I think perhaps it is an even more serious criticism that the basic approach of the government to agricultural policy has very serious faults in itself.

I have already emphasized in a general way the importance of the government's general economic policy, or lack of it, to agriculture. We have made our point before about mismanagement of the economy and the general lack of confidence in the economic policy of this government. There is no need for me to review this now, except to say that the economic mismanagement of the government affects the business of agriculture at least as effectively as it affects any other business.

There are particularly serious consequences for agriculture in inflation. I would simply remind the minister of the increase in farm costs that has taken place during the last two or three years. In 1960 through to the end of 1963 there was an annual increase in farm costs, but it was relatively moderate. The increase for 1964 in farm costs in Canada was 10 percentage points; in 1965 it was reported to be 13 percentage points, and in 1966 it was 22 percentage points.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Stanfield: That is, I should say, 22 percentage points over 1963. This shows a steadily increasing rate in farm costs.

I think inflation is the largest single factor contributing to the cost-price squeeze in which the farmer finds himself. Inflation increases the prices which the farmer must pay for his means of production and for the other commodities he buys, and of course it eats away at the effective returns he receives, because it reduces the buying power of his dollar. Inflation holds a special threat to the agricultural community because unfortunately many farmers already live near the subsistence level, and few farmers are able to pass the burden on to others.

Many of our farmers are competing in international markets in which prices do not reflect inflationary pressures in Canada, but certainly our farmers' costs of production reflect inflationary pressures. Many of our farmers who do not sell in international markets, who sell only in our domestic markets, are competing also with outside producers who are not subject to the same inflationary pressures. The abject failure of this government to control inflation is, I suggest, costing the farmers of this country dearly indeed.

Closely related to inflation is the high, increasing rate of interest which farmers have to pay for credit in Canada today. The investment required to operate an efficient and competitive farm increases each year. Inflation aggravates very substantially the farmer's investment problem by adding to the cost of buildings and of equipment that he must buy. But the cost of farm credit today, except where it is available through provincial and federal agencies, makes it increasingly difficult for a farmer to maintain efficiency and make a profit; and certainly he cannot make a profit if he is not efficient, Mr. Chairman.

I think credit is particularly difficult to obtain at today's rates. Raising the bank rate almost dried up the source of credit for farm improvement loans which involved a statutory ceiling of 5 per cent, because naturally banks are reluctant to lend at those rates when there are more attractive rates available.

I think the cash squeeze on some of our farmers is particularly acute, especially in western Canada where the sales of grain have been disappointing. Consequently the farmers are facing an acute shortage of cash. Then in addition we must remember that the general rate of return on farm investment is substantially lower than in most other sectors of the economy. Consequently the attractiveness of farm investment is particularly affected in an adverse way by any substantial increase in the cost of credit to the farmer. This is one more example of how the actions of this government today frustrate the operations of programs which have been passed by parliament, and which are known to be necessary for healthy agricultural growth.

I recognize that part of the pressure on interest rates is international in origin, but we know all too well in this country that the recent increase in the bank rate is due to protective measures which were felt to be necessary in order to take care of conditions within Canada. I suggest that the scarcity of credit and the high cost of credit to the farmer is a clear indication of the disastrous consequence to the farmer of the general absence of economic policies on the part of this government. In addition, the question of confidence affects the farmers as it affects other people in business. Agriculture is now big business which requires, as I indicated, a very large capital investment. Anyone making a large capital investment requires the type of certainty which makes long term planning possible. Even if a farmer should be able somehow to arrange his financing today, naturally he is reluctant to make large commitments perhaps at high rates of interest and certainly under conditions of anything but a secure return.

Naturally under these conditions farmers are jittery in terms of investment, and unwilling to make long term commitments while economic prospects remain uncertain.

This economic uncertainty in agriculture is complicated by the further uncertainty resulting from inconsistent and unco-ordinated government federal policies. I have referred to the effect of the raising of the bank rate, and the effect this naturaly has on farm credit. The hon. member for Kent (Ont.), referred on Friday to the inconsistency involved in emphasizing retraining on the one hand and on the other hand cutting back on the federal involvement in vocational schools where training must take place. Several speakers have pointed out the inconsistency between a federal policy which subsidizes Canadian production on the one hand and allows import competition on the other. Clearly the present government seems to lack an over-all policy with regard to agriculture because I think if one existed the inconsistencies could be avoided.

As a whole I believe this clearly indicates that the government gives rather low priority to the farmer and to agricultural problems because, as well as the inconsistencies within the federal government, serious conflicts can arise between governments and perhaps it is time to consider more effective measures for co-ordination between governments at different levels. I suppose it is clear that problems of provincial jurisdiction are involved to some extent, but I think these can be overcome by a federal government which is prepared to perform its obligation of leadership and adopt a co-operative and reasonable attitude.

I should point out that in addition the government has made several bad decisions for which Canadian farmers have had to pay the price. These are not necessarily decisions of either the Department of Agriculture or the Minister of Agriculture, but they are decisions which definitely affect the farmer in a very real way. As has been stated many times in this house, a government blunder left Canadian farmers without a world wheat agreement, and therefore unprotected, for a period of some 11 months.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: Now I understand that as a result of this there has been some price undercutting. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle has pointed out previously that the United States would never have become involved in this type of thing—price competition with Canada —had this Liberal government not dropped its gentleman's agreement relating to price stabilization, an agreement which had been developed by the former prime minister, Mr. Diefenbaker, and President Eisenhower, and confirmed I believe as recently as April, 1963 by the late President Kennedy.

That agreement, which had been sustained through informal quarterly meetings between the Canadian and United States officials, apparently was abandoned by the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Trade and Commerce. The Canadian farmers bear the burden of this decision on the part of the government, because it is the farmers who directly bear the burden of the lack of stability in prices.

Government policy clearly has complicated the problems of the dairy industry. The blame for this I believe lies at the door of the Department of Agriculture, because I think in three years we have had three different national dairy policies. That type of action defeats planning and destroys confidence.

Now there would seem to be the danger, because of its indecision and lack of leadership, that the government may allow the difficult situation at the Montreal docks to continue. This is a condition which obstructs the movement of grain and one which is particularly unfortunate now, when the farmers have already suffered through an autumn when deliveries were difficult. The government recently has been questioned about this matter and is held responsible by this house. It is important that action be taken to ensure that shipments of grain are not further disrupted by troubles at the docks in Montreal.

It is not just the policies of the Department of Agriculture which affect the farmers; it is the policies and activities of the government in totality. Perhaps the most serious aspect of the policy of the government, such as it is, is that it seems to be based on a rather sweeping premise that the number of farms should be reduced and an emphasis placed on larger units. Certainly some farmers must be helped to move and many others must be encouraged to diversify. I suggest, however, that it is wrong to base an agricultural policy on the sweeping view that we must everywhere cut back on the number of farms and increase the size of the unit, because I believe there is some evidence that the future of Canadian agriculture in some respects lies in more intensive farming, increased productivity per unit and not necessarily in larger units. That seems to be the conclusion of the Kemptville study, which drew evidence from all over

Ontario, and of the study conducted in one of the larger grain producing areas of Alberta.

There is evidence that in the next decade the best use of land will require more farms than at present, not fewer, and that land which is not now in use will be brought into production. This of course was one of the basic purposes of the ARDA project, which we believe should not be forgotten when considering the agricultural policies of this country. Those policies, I suggest, ought not to be based on sweeping premises which are not valid everywhere. I believe there is good reason to anticipate in the future an expanding market for an expanded Canadian agriculture based on the continuing growing demand in the world for food. This does not solve our immediate problem, of course, but it does give us grounds for confidence in the future.

It is known that the world is entering a period in which the spectre of famine again threatens the progress of less developed countries. The coming decades will apparently be years of crisis so far as famine is concerned. I think there is a real challenge for Canada to co-operate with other developed countries in international programs which provide immediate food relief, by building up a long range agricultural capacity for selected recipient countries. That may mean changing from the attitude whereby we should produce for the nearby city or domestic markets only. Certainly this will require research for the development of new techniques of processing and marketing to allow an increased flow of all Canadian farm commodities to foreign markets.

I should like to say a few words about ARDA, because I believe this program is of central importance to Canadian agriculture, perhaps particularly in the Atlantic provinces and Quebec. It is important not only to those provinces but to all areas of Canada where farm income and productivity has been inordinately low. Under the present government I think ARDA has not realized its full potential. It has placed emphasis on studies which, of course, are necessary, but this has not been sufficiently matched by an emphasis on action. We continue to believe that ARDA could be one of the most effective instruments of social and economic policy ever devised in Canada, but it must be used if it is going to achieve this purpose.

Let me emphasize again that agricultural policy must be based on a sound and growing economy. The government must attach a high priority to agriculture, taking the long range view and recognizing that as an industry with several problems, it is also an industry with expanding opportunities. The government has not shown much confidence in the future of agriculture, and agriculture itself must have confidence in the government.

This industry like all others must of course adapt to change, and the government must assist the process of change, not resist it. Farmers must be efficient to survive profitably; but how can a farmer become efficient and maintain efficiency under the general economic policies of this government as applied in this country today, where credit is as scarce as the proverbial hen's teeth, and when the cost of production is so high in relation to anticipated earnings? Most farmers today have little incentive to mortgage not only their farms, but their lives, because of the little hope and expectation and little return.

The particular point I want to make is that it is not enough to improve efficiency because improvement in efficiency can be taken for granted. I suggest that the government and the minister, so far as agriculture is concerned, have been caught in a vicious circle. Certainly to be profitable a farm must be efficient, but because of rising costs fewer efficient farms are profitable. I suggest this government is eliminating incentives to be efficient by permitting inflation to continue and allowing the farmer to be confronted by high cost credit, making it virtually impossible for a farmer to feel any confidence in planning his investment.

So, as I say, it is all very well to talk about efficiency, but the total effect of government policy is to eliminate the incentive for farmers to be efficient today. I suggest this is a very serious state of affairs. There are very many problems in agriculture today. Before much progress is to be made with these problems this government, or some other, must once again provide some incentive for the farmer to be efficient, and make it possible for the farmer to plan wisely and to look ahead with some confidence of gaining a reasonable return on the increasing investment he has to make.

Thank you very much.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, I was most pleased to see the Leader of the Opposition enter this debate on farm policy. I must apologize to other members who have spoken, because I certainly intend to the best of my knowledge, to attempt to answer the queries they have raised, but in light of the position held by the hon. gentleman who has just spoken as leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition I think I owe him the courtesy of speaking immediately. I trust other hon. members will bear with me in this regard.

First of all, the hon. gentleman began in a tone of humility by indicating to the house that he would not have all the answers or solutions to agricultural problems in half an hour. Whatever else may be said of the speech he has just made, I think we can all agree that his humility was well justified. What we have heard is a series of platitudes in respect of the problems facing agriculture, most of which have been voiced over the years by other speakers when discussing agricultural problems.

The hon. gentleman has not taken care to check the facts he has presented to us in respect of the well-being of the agricultural industry today as compared to its well-being at the time when the country was beset by the government of the party opposite. I think possibly it might be well, as we all wish the hon. gentleman good fortune during his years in opposition, if we set the facts straight, so that in the future he may base his agricultural criticism on the facts as they exist.

First of all, the hon. gentleman indicated that this government had been remiss in some ways in respect of its export policies, and indicated that if there had been vigorous export policies larger markets could have been found. He suggested this was one of the inherent problems. Let me help the hon. gentleman by citing the record in this regard, particularly in respect of the comparison he attempted to make between this government and the Conservative party when it was in office, as to the respective measures taken to achieve export sales. These are the facts for the perusal and consideration of the hon. gentleman.

Wheat is probably the major item of our agricultural exports, which has contributed greatly to our balance of payments, and represents the considerable and worthy contribution made by the farmers of Canada. In 1960-61 some 353.5 million bushels of wheat were sold at a value of $602 million. In 1961-62 some 358 million bushels of wheat were sold at a value of $686 million while in 1962-63 some 331.4 million bushels of wheat were sold at a value of $668 million.

[Mr. Greene.]

• (8:50 p.m.)

Then, strangely, things began to improve. In 1963-64, there were 594.5 million bushels which brought to the farmers of Canada a total of $1,185,000,000. In 1964-65, the figure is 399.6 million bushels, bringing to the farmers of Canada a total of $880 million. In 1965-66 the figure was 584.9 million bushels, for a total return of $1,126,000,000 to the farmers of Canada. In 1966-67, the estimated figure is 516.6 million bushels for a total of $1,072,000,000 return to the farmers of Canada.

An. hon. Member: Finish the story.

Mr. Greene: I know that hon. gentlemen opposite do not like to discuss facts, but whether they like it or no, I propose to tell something of the factual story of what has happened in agriculture.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Greene: The record in this regard speaks for itself.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, I think—

An hon. Member: He is afraid.

Mr. Roxburgh: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, it is all right for the hon. member, the farmer from Oshawa, to laugh, but we listened in quietness to the remarks of hon. members opposite and I would ask them to do the same for us, please.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The minister has the floor, and I think it makes his task more difficult if hon. members make gratuitous remarks from their seats.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, I hope to be able to answer the allegations of the Leader of the Opposition and to set the record straight as to the facts, upon which he can in future base his agricultural endeavours, thinking and suggestions. We need suggestions badly in the area of agriculture. We know there are very difficult problems to be solved. We do not minimize them and we cannot gloss them over. Neither do we base our decisions upon imperfect conclusions of facts; it is in this regard that I hope to straighten out the record.

The Leader of the Opposition, as well as saying that we have not been vigorous in our exports, was also concerned about the real net income received by farmers for the great contribution they make to the total economy of this country. I share the concern of the hon. gentleman in regard to the position of farmers and agree that there is still a long way to go if, incomewise, we are to bring farmers to the standard of the rest of the Canadian economy. But the hon. gentleman indicated that in some measure, if I understood his words, the farmer had suffered, incomewise, since we had been in office from the standpoint of real net income.

While I agree that the farmer is not as well off today as many sectors of the economic community in real, net income, I will cite statistics to indicate that since we have been in office the real net income position of the farmer has progressed at the same pace as has the rest of the incomes in the Canadian economy. If the farmer is still behind, it is because he was too far behind when we took office, and we have not yet been able to catch up.

Here are the facts in this regard, Mr. Chairman. If hon. gentlemen opposite are interested—and they have not shown a propensity to be interested in anything but the political facts of the situation to date—I would point out that based on the 1945 index at 100, in the year 1962 the Dominion Bureau of Statistics represented the total productivity then as being 148. By 1966 this figure had risen to 183. Cash receipts from the sale of farm products totalled $3.1 billion in 1962. In other words, for 1962, the last year hon. gentlemen opposite, or at least some of them, were in office, the total income of farmers in Canada was $3.1 billion. This rose to $4.2 billion in 1966. In other words this was an increase of over $1 billion during the four years we were in office. Hon. gentlemen opposite may well say: "Yes, but that is gross income. Sure, they got an extra $1 billion; but their costs went up."

The Leader of the Opposition made what I think was a valid point as to the increase in costs of the farmer and the cost-price squeeze with which he is faced. But what has happened to his real income during this period? During this same period the farmers' net income rose by 33⅓ per cent from $1,492,000,000 in 1962 to $1,978,000,000 in 1966, an increase of 33⅓ per cent in the four years we have been in office.

I say it is singular that this increase of 33⅓ per cent compares with the rate increase enjoyed by wage earners of the rest of the Canadian economic community. In other words, during our term of office we have been able to increase the farmer's real income, not only through his own productivity but through our aggressive sales in world markets, which has meant that his income has increased by 33⅓ per cent which is about the same rate as the rest of the Canadian community.

Surely, Mr. Chairman, if he is still behind it is as simple as two plus two, because this situation prevailed before we took office. Hon. members opposite tell us about the great accomplishments when they were in office. It is very strange that in spite of the situation which prevailed when hon. members opposite were in office, the farmer has gone ahead 33⅓ per cent since we assumed office but is still behind the rest of the Canadian community.

The hon. member for Kent (Ont.), who I think speaks at times for the party opposite in regard to agricultural matters, indicated a concern about the number of farms that were no longer in operation. He was concerned about the rate of disappearance of farms during our tenure of office, and the fact that a smaller percentage of people in this country were producing the food for the rest of the Canadian community.

First of all I would point out that, generally speaking, it is apparently an axiom in the world of economics that as the total well-being of a nation progresses, as a nation progresses in industrial development and technology, it is inevitable that a smaller percentage of the people produce the food for the rest of the community. I think we can look at examples of the underdeveloped countries where almost 100 per cent of the population is on the land, but who do not produce a sufficient amount of food to feed these unfortunate people. In lands, such as for instance in Poland, if I recall rightly—and I had occasion to study the statistics last summer when the Polish delegation was here—they have reduced the agricultural population from something like 40 per cent at the end of world war II to some 32 per cent of the total population today. We in Canada, at the beginning of world war II, had some 30 per cent of our people on the land. Today, 8 per cent of the people produce the food, very efficiently, and probably according to the most productive techniques in the world. I think this is inevitable with industrial progress which gives new opportunities and new technology.

Experts, be they right or wrong, tell us that with a completely advanced economic community in today's terms it is likely that within the next decade or so some 4 to 5 per cent of Canadians will produce the food for the rest of us. This appears to be an immutable law of economics that, with technology and industrial progress, a smaller percentage of the people produce the food. So I do not quarrel with the basic premise of the hon. member for Kent (Ont.), to which I believe the Leader of the Opposition subscribed. However, I would point out that because of new efficiencies, a smaller percentage of people can produce the food for the rest of us, and if the hon. gentleman opposite has a complaint in this regard, I would say that in the period from 1956 to 1961, when hon. gentlemen opposite were in office, some 94,000 farms went out of production in this country, while from 1961 to 1966, when for a large part of the time we were in office, only 50,000 farms went out of economic production. So again, if there is complaint I think it should be on the basis of facts as they exist.

I should like to point out further that during the period from 1961 to 1966, while 50,000 farms did go out of production, most of them were rated, under the Dominion Bureau of Statistics method of assessing farm income, as non-commercial farms, and during the same period the so-called commercial farms increased by 15,000. In other words, during our term of office many farms have moved from uneconomic farming to economic farming.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): You are stealing some three years there, but don't let it bother you.

Mr. Greene: The Leader of the Opposition also complained of the lack of confidence of the agricultural community in the government, and of the fact that this lack of confidence has impeded progress, restrained growth, and persuaded the farmer not to expand his holdings and not to create bigger economic units, because with this government in office, in which they had no confidence, they would not be going ahead in a progressive way, expanding their holdings, and moving ahead with confidence in the future. Let me say this, that the farmer of this country is a pretty hard-headed, tough-fisted, capable, and sound businessman. He certainly would not mortgage his future, borrow now and pay later, in order to create a more prosperous and bigger farm unit. He would not be borrowing if he did not have confidence in the future, and if he did not feel that the government in office was going to build a bigger and better Canada in which he could thrive and wherein he could pay back the debts that he has accrued.

Let us see what the Canadian farmer has done since we have been in office, and how much confidence he has displayed in the future. In 1961 the Canadian farmer borrowed $69 million from the Farm Credit Corporation. That was the extent of his confidence in the future when the Tories were in office.

An hon. Member: He did not need to borrow.

Mr. Greene: In 1962 he borrowed $78 million; in 1963 he borrowed $96 million; in 1964 he borrowed $140 million; in 1965, $202 million; and in 1966, $234 million.

Mr. Ricard: He had to borrow money then.

Mr. Greene: That is how little confidence the Canadian farmer had in the future of this country.

I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that the Leader of the Opposition cannot have it both ways. In 1966, because of his faith in the future, the Canadian farmer borrowed over twice as much as he did when hon. gentlemen opposite were in office.

An hon. Member: He had to, to survive.

Mr. Greene: I think the Leader of the Opposition must decide: Either the Canadian farmer borrowed this large amount in the year 1966 because he had confidence in the future of this country and in this government, or the Canadian farmer borrowed this kind of money without knowing what he was doing; and he was a very stupid fellow to borrow the money if this country did not have a future. I do not know which way the Leader of the Opposition wants to have it, but either he is saying that the judgment of the Canadian farmer must have been very poor indeed, if he borrowed the largest amount in history to expand his holding when this government was in office, and when he should have had no confidence in the future of this country with this government in office, or that he did in fact have confidence in the future of this country and in this government.

I know the Leader of the Opposition will be taking part in future debates on agriculture because I am sure he learned something about agriculture in his native province, which he left only too recently. I do not wish to delve into this area because it is not our immediate concern—although it is indirectly, because of course there are federal and provincial departments of agriculture. Certainly I think there is great co-operation between provincial departments and the federal department in attempting to reach new levels of well-being for the Canadian farmers. I know the Leader of the Opposition has some concern in agriculture, because if there is one area in Canada that is in trouble in agriculture, it is the province of Nova Scotia. So I think he knows whereof he speaks when it comes to problems of agriculture. I think he knows that the solutions there are not easy. The rationalization of farm units and the creation of bigger and more productive farms in the province of Nova Scotia has gone at a pace slower than it has in other parts of this country. I would throw no rocks at anyone for this, because I am very certain the government of that province is doing everything possible. Certainly we are prepared to co-operate with the province in every way possible in order to help them move ahead in creating more viable and more productive economic units which will provide better income for those who choose to remain in agriculture.

I certainly appreciate the fact that the Leader of the Opposition must have grave concern for agriculture by reason of the very difficult situation in his province because despite his many years in office there, they were not able to solve completely their agricultural problems, and what they have solved has been achieved at a slower pace than in other parts of Canada.

I was somewhat lost by the argument the hon. gentleman advanced when he stated that most of these fine policies to which he referred had been the creations, the brainchildren of the party opposite when they were in office. This is what he said at one point; and shortly thereafter he said the policies were ineffective, inadequate and virtually useless. I am not quite sure whether these policies have become tired and jaded since we came to office. If they were their policies in the first place and they were good then, evidently they have become no good now. I hope the hon. gentleman will enlighten us in this regard.

The Leader of the Opposition referred specifically to ARDA. I believe I have always tried to give credit where it was due. ARDA was originally conceived by hon. gentlemen opposite when they were in office. I have never been quite sure in my own mind as to whether it was the offspring of the hon. member for Calgary North when he was minister of agriculture or that of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle. Certainly one of the two of them deserve credit for the original ARDA concept, and I would not deny this for a moment. I do suggest that the scope of ARDA has been broadened considerably since we have been in office. Originally ARDA was purely an agricultural scheme whereby the small farm might be made more productive, and so that larger units such as those to which we have referred might be created. This program is now used in conjunction with the FRED program. With this as the foundation stone, if you like, we may, if we move ahead with courage, with imagination and with vision, take great steps toward the abolition of rural poverty from the Canadian scene. I do give full marks to hon. gentlemen opposite for the original concept, but I should like to say to the Leader of the Opposition that the original concept has been broadened very widely, has been enhanced, has been used far more in the past few years than it has been since its original conception.

The hon. gentleman alleges it has not been used sufficiently. I would remind him although I think he is familiar with the fact, that the initiative under ARDA lies with the provinces. If the program has not been used sufficiently, and I know of no important ARDA project that has been turned down at the federal level, then I can only say it is certainly only because the provinces in their wisdom have not seen fit to bring as many ARDA suggestions or programs to us as the hon. gentleman would like. However it is surely most inconsistent to say there have not been sufficient ARDA projects when, to the best of my knowledge, we at the federal level have turned down few, if any. If the hon. gentleman has any quarrel in this regard, I trust he will take it up with the provinces where the initiation of ARDA projects emanates.

Again, Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman complains that the Canadian farmer is unable to obtain sufficient credit. We have established the fact that the Canadian farmer is able to obtain more credit and does obtain more credit through the Farm Credit Corporation today than ever before. The hon. gentleman complains that the Canadian farmer is having a difficult time, and I agree, in connection with farm improvement loans. He complains that farm improvement loans are inadequate because the interest is set at 5 per cent per annum. It is stated that the banks will not lend money at 5 per cent per annum and therefore the farmers are not getting as much money as the hon. gentleman deems they require. I respectfully ask him this: Do I take it from his remarks that he advocates raising the ceiling on interest on farm improvement loans? The hon. gentleman shakes his head negatively. If that is the case, then I do not quite understand his complaints that farmers cannot get money because the interest rate is too low, but he does not want to raise the interest rate. I hope that at some future time he will tell us how he would solve the dilemma. Apparently he wants to have it both ways.

Mr. Stanfield: I would be very pleased to do this.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman opposite complains also about the possibility of future strikes.

The Chairman: Order; I must advise the minister that the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Stanfield: Oh, no, carry on.

The Chairman: Does the committee give unanimous consent to the minister to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Greene: I wish to thank hon. gentlemen opposite. I do not know that I can cover in a short time all the aberrations of the Leader of the Opposition during his speech, but I shall try to do so to the best of my ability. He complained that there may be future strikes on the seaway which would slow down the transportation of our very important wheat and other commodities to export markets. In this regard I can only say that I fervently hope this will not happen. We on this side of the house subscribe to the policy of free collective bargaining. Certainly we would take no action to prevent strikes months in advance, or to remove the rights of workers to protect their own interests collectively. We will face the situation as it arises. Certainly if the hon. gentleman infers that we should in any way remove the collective rights of workers in order to protect economic interests, then certainly he will never see that kind of action emanate from this side of the house.

The hon. gentleman complains also about our abandonment, as he put it, of some program with the United States, which I did not quite comprehend. He alleges the hon. member for Qu'Appelle indicated this made our marketings of wheat difficult. No such program was ever abandoned in any way by this government. I am given to understand, and this was before my time in office, that there used to be meetings about four times a year with our United States counterparts, at which world wheat prices and the world situation was discussed. At the instigation of the United States, as I understand it, these meetings were abandoned. This is the only procedure of which I am aware that is any different today from what it was at any previous time.

Again, I can only conclude that the hon. Leader of the Opposition who is known for his fairness and for his just presentation of facts, has been led astray by some of his supporters, who may not be such sticklers for facts as he may be. In this regard the hon. gentleman remarked that Canadians had in some way failed to take advantage of the opportunity to complete a world wheat agreement. My colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce I am sure could cover this subject more adequately and more expertly than I could, since this is in his field of endeavour; but since I have the opportunity of speaking at this time I can say that such comment is most unfair and most inaccurate.

I think Canada played a key part in the Kennedy round in fixing minimums and maximums for wheat prices. I point out that under that agreement the minimum wheat prices was set at $1.95½, and this has now been implemented as a guaranteed floor, under our present policies, until there is a world wheat agreement. This surely is a giant step forward in the interests of the wheat farmer. Despite all protestations of hon. gentlemen of the opposition, and despite all their acreage payments, and so on, which were peanuts for the western farmer as compared with the floor price of $1.95½, which hon. gentleman of the opposition, did not see fit to bring in.

Mr. Jorgenson: Where is the $2 promise for wheat?

Mr. Greene: Well, now—

Mr. Jorgenson: Give us some more peanuts.

Mr. Greene: Well, now, hon. gentlemen of the opposition ask about wheat prices. I think that is a good question, and I am glad they have asked it. Apparently they take exception to the fact that, for the first time in history, this government has seen fit to guarantee the price of wheat to the western farmer at $1.95½.

An hon. Member: What about $2 wheat?

Mr. Greene: With respect to the implementation of the Kennedy round agreement and the world wide wheat agreement, I fail to understand how the Leader of the Opposition who, to the best of my knowledge in public life is known for the care of his statements—I believe he is known as a square dealer—can say that Canadians in any way are responsible for the fact that the maximum and minimum prices agreed on in the Kennedy round have not yet been brought into the world wide wheat agreement.

Canadians attended at meetings of the world wheat council. I think my colleagues will indicate to you that we have been in constant communication and constant negotiation with others to assure the implementation of the Kennedy agreement into the world wheat agreement. I feel sure that those negotiations will be successful. How the Leader of the Opposition can allege—and this, really, is not only a criticism of the government but also of its officials, who are responsible for carrying out negotiations to bring the agreements under the Kennedy round into the world wheat agreement—that there has been negligence, that we or our officials have been remiss in our duties and that we could or should have done something in order to implement the Kennedy round agreements into the world wheat agreements, I fail to understand. I think that that was a very unfair and untrue criticism, with all respect, Mr. Chairman.

As hon. members know, after the successful conclusion of the Kennedy round negotiations on May 16 of last year, world wheat prices dropped sharply. That made it difficult for the buyer nations to implement the Kennedy round agreement and world wheat agreement in July, as we had anticipated would be possible. It made that negotiation more difficult. We do not control world wheat prices. Certainly I think the Canadian minister and Canadian officials took every proper step and pursued the end most actively of implementing this price range of the Kennedy round agreement into the world wheat agreement.

If we want to talk about world wheat prices, here are some facts about world wheat prices. In 1957-8 the price of No. 1 Northern was $1.62. In 1958-9 it was $1.60; in 1959-60 it was $1.59; in 1960-61 it was $1.80 ; in 1961-62 it reached $1.91. Let us recall that these prices were on volumes of sales that equal about half the volumes that have been sold since we have been in office. The price in 1962-63 was $1.87; in 1963-64 it was $1.97. I did not hear much about $1.97 wheat from 1957 to 1962. The price in 1964-65 was $1.89; in 1965-66 it was $2; the estimated price in 1966-67 is $2. That is that $2 wheat hon. members over there are talking about.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Greene: So, if we are going to talk about wheat prices, let's talk about them.

An hon. Member: We will, just wait.

Mr. Greene: Let us put them on the record and let us see who sold wheat and in what quantities and at what prices, and we will stand on that record every time.

I will not take much longer, Mr. Chairman, since many hon. members of the opposition have asked me to reply to the questions they have posed. I would not have intervened at this time had it not been for the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition. I thought it would be proper for me to make a few comments. Speaking to the hon. Leader of the Opposition I feel that, having now been straightened out as to the facts in agriculture, the hon. gentleman in future when addressing this house, and now having those facts, will be able to make some very worthy contributions to the difficult subject of agriculture.

Mr. Ormiston: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to spend the time at my disposal in arguing with the Minister of Agriculture. I commend the leader of the official opposition for the grasp that he appears to have of the problems facing us in agriculture at the present time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Ormiston: Certainly, he sank the Minister of Agriculture and his protestations, and methinks that the minister protested too much.

There is no doubt that since Friday the minister has had to absorb many suggestions to do with agriculture. Many more will be forthcoming in the debate, before it is over. The minister has had suggestions not only from members of this house, but from two organizations which have presented briefs; I refer to the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and the National Farmers Union. Certainly, the briefs cover many aspects of agricultural needs. I shall not deal with those aspects in the few minutes at my disposal.

Having perused those briefs, I can appreciate what is contained therein respecting the vagaries of increased production costs and diminishing financial returns, with which those who presented the briefs are so concerned. For the life of me, I cannot find anything which would indicate that the present voluntary crop insurance plan, plus the provisions of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, are sufficient to protect western farmers from the effects of natural hazards or to compensate them for losses.

It is all very well to talk about prices when farmers have a crop to sell. But when there is a crop failure more should be done than is being done at the present time to help farmers out of a serious situation. The prevalence of a short crop in the 1967 year and the experience of payments under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act bring into focus the state of our agriculture legislation. We are today employing the provisions of an act which was brought into effect in 1939, when conditions were much different from those which exist today. In 1939 there were many quarter section farms where farmers used horses and horse-drawn machinery. The number of farms was far larger, and a different type of farm operation was being carried out in many cases. The provisions of the act might have been more effective then than they are today. Under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act the maximum number of acres in respect of which an award may be paid to an individual farmer is 200. The maximum award is $800, and over the last 29 years the average payment has amounted to only $300.

It can be seen from these figures that in the event of a crop failure the Prairie Farm Assistance Act is only of limited value. Because of the very nature of the legislation, a growing number of abuses has come into being and these are known not only to the local inspectors but to the supervisory staff as well.

[Mr. Ormiston.]

This is a situation which causes grave concern to those administering the act. Should further erosion take place the usefulness of this legislation will be even further impaired.

Several years ago, in 1964 to be exact, a report was produced by Judge Harold Pope in consequence of alleged irregularities, and he made several recommendations for the improvement of the act. Regardless of the good intentions of the commissioner none of these recommendations was put into effect, possibly because it was felt something more than piecemeal improvements were needed to bring this legislation up to date. I suppose it was with this idea in mind that the Crop Insurance Act was passed in 1959 in the hope that eventually it would provide suitable assistance to prairie farmers and supersede the older legislation.

I realize that the provinces administer the crop insurance scheme, but further help is needed from the federal government before the plan is equipped to give full and comprehensive coverage. Many farmers in low yield areas feel present premiums are too high if an adequate financial return is to be ensured. Surely a review of the act is now in order. It has been in effect for seven years and further thought should be given to the application of premiums actuarially set, with the possibility of assistance to marginal areas for a limited period, certainly for long enough to ascertain whether or not such a scheme is practicable.

In the meantime, since we have to live with P.F.A.A., there is certainly one improvement which might be considered and this is the application of a deterrent fee when municipalities apply for inspections. Too much money is being wasted in the business of inspection, and if the approximate cost of inspection were to accompany an application a more responsible attitude would almost certainly result.

That is the only point I wish to make before closing. Before I resume my seat, though, I should like to commend the Minister of Agriculture for the impartial way in which the local P.F.A.A. inspectors have been chosen. Certainly this added strength to the administration of the act last year, and if there are any complaints they are certainly not to be directed against the dedicated public servants who are doing their best to administer this legislation.

Mr. McKinley: I am sure the farmers of Canada will be interested to hear the Minister of Agriculture telling them tonight they have never had things so good as they are now. Of course this is what they were trying to tell the minister when they were up here last summer, out on the lawn. Maybe he would like to give us a report as to how good the security measures were on that day.

There is a theory going around that there are just too many farmers altogether, and that the only way to cure the problems of agriculture is to starve them off the farms. This is a theory which I cannot accept. We have seen the elimination of the quality subsidies on hogs, lambs and cheese. This is another indication of the belief in this theory that is going around.

There is another theory which is held by some people in the government, and it is that all farmers are well off. I have talked with some of the officials working in the public service and they come up with this idea. They figure that all farmers drive around in Cadillacs except when they are in Florida—they fly down there. This is not very true, and it is the wrong way in which to consider the problems of agriculture. The fact of the matter is that farmers who make a go of it are obliged to work very hard indeed. They have to be well up in the latest methods, they have to be extremely fortunate with regard to marketing conditions and they have to enjoy a lot of luck. I think luck comes into it as much as anything, and maybe it is the most important factor.

Farming is no bowl of cherries even for fruit farmers, and if anyone in the government thinks it is his ideas ought certainly to have been changed when the farmers came down here last summer to see the Minister of Agriculture and the other ministers, out here on the lawn. The Prime Minister was afraid to face them.

Mr. Greene: So was I.

Mr. McKinley: They even got shut out when they wanted to come inside. That is something I never thought we would see in the House of Commons. I guess that is when the farmers learned pretty well where they stand with these fellows across the aisle. Later on they did get some adjustment in the dairy farm situation. Returns for milk improved to a certain extent, but just enough to cover extra costs of production. With every single thing he produces, the cost situation as it affects the farmer grows worse. I think the minister knows this. He lives in a part of the country where costs have risen just as quickly as anywhere else, and where prices received by farmers have failed to keep pace.

The market is not organized as it might be. One province tries to organize a little, then it runs into imports from other provinces and says: What the heck, we might as well forget about it. More assistance might be provided for a national marketing scheme if the government were interested in doing anything like that. I cannot see how this minister, knowing what he knows, can stand up in his place and say in effect that the farmer has never had it so good. It is simply not true. Maybe members of the cabinet have never had it so good, but that does not apply to the farmers of this country.

Farmers are caught in a tremendous cost-price squeeze, more so than they were even back in the 1950's. The little changes in the price of wheat that the minister has mentioned have not kept pace with farmers' costs. It does not matter what farmers produce, be it livestock or wheat, their costs have increased, while the prices of their products have either remained stationary or in some cases have gone down. However, everything they have to buy has soared in price. Hog prices, cattle, farm prices in general have gone down, including the prices of eggs and poultry. But the price of prepared feed, of farm implements, gasoline and all the other necessities has almost doubled within the last few years. On top of this the retail price of farm products to the consumer has gone up something fabulously. The consumer price index has increased by about 50 per cent since 1951, but the farmer is still selling his produce at the same price. It should be remembered that the farmer is also one of the consumers.

The farmer, along with the miner, fisherman, lumberman and labourer is one of the basic producers of the country, and as a food producer he is probably the most important economic unit in the nation. Yet when a situation arises in which he should be in a position to show a profit after the lean years, what happens? The implement manufacturers raise their prices. The food retailers raise their prices. But they don't give the farmer anything more for what he produces. They do, however, charge him more for what he consumes. The feed manufacturers raise their prices, but what the farmer gets stays the same. How can anybody honestly say that the farmer never had it so good? It seems that everybody in this country goes all out to gouge the man whose production is the very basis of economic prosperity.

This is the classic pattern. The government pays no attention to what is happening to the farmer, because it feels that with the drop in farm population it can get along without the farmers' votes. Mr. Chairman, I suggest this government is going to find out how wrong it is in that theory at the next election.

The farmer has not been able to organize. Until recently he did not have a union. When automobile workers feel that they are being stepped on they all get together and pull a strike. The farmer does not do this; he is not organized to that extent. But in recent years he has become much more organized, and those who are growing rich by buying the farmer's product cheap and selling it back to him and others at a high price, may find that when the farmer finally decides it is necessary to be organized he, the farmer, may be a lot tougher than many labour unions.

The government has taken very little action to help the farmers. It even locked them out when they came to parliament hill. These farmers are not going to put up with that kind of treatment too long from a bunch of people who are elected. Occasionally these people seem to forget that they are elected. The farmers are not going to sit around and put up with the importation of $6 million worth of eggs, as happened last year. We had 9 million dozen eggs imported from the United States of America and 50,000 dozen from Australia. That is how the government treats the Canadian egg producer. We had the importation of over $700,000 worth of dried eggs and $1 million worth of egg products, including egg yolks, from other countries. We imported 112,000 pounds of dried eggs from Poland. What does this do to help our Canadian producers?

In the first ten months of 1967 we had over 4,000 pounds of butter imported from East Germany, 58,000 pounds from Belgium, and 22,000 pounds from New Zealand. Last year more than $7 million worth of cheese was imported. What does this do for the Canadian dairy farmer? In the first ten months of 1967 we had a lot of turkeys imported from the United States, yet we can raise all the turkeys in this country that Canadians can eat. They don't have to come from any other place.

It is all right for the minister to give a rosy picture of the Canadian farm situation. The government seems to look at the problem in light of the fact that there will be fewer farmers on the land to vote against it, and it feels that this is a good trend. Some 12,000 farms have disappeared in Ontario since 1961. That is how serious the situation is. I think we will have to make up our minds as a nation whether farming is to become strictly a business or whether it can continue as a way of life for a great many Canadians who know no other way to live, and who do not want to join the unemployed in the big cities. That is what we will have to decide in working out farm policies, and that is the decision the government has refused to face.

[Mr. McKinley.]

We will have to help the successful farmer to stay successful, because we must have what he produces. At the same time we will have to take steps to make it possible for farming to continue as a way of life for those who wish to carry it on, because we need a continuing supply of food producers in this nation.

An article in the December issue of the Canadian Geographical Journal, by D. F. Symington, deals with the question of rural problems and describes the kind of government policies, aimed at regional improvement, which should be applied but which are not being applied at the present time. I quote as follows:

> The 1961 passage of the ARDA legislation encouraged governments not only to admit, but to proclaim the reality of serious rural economic dislocation. Since then statistics on rural hardship have been widely quoted. Based mainly on analyses of the 1961 census, the figures indicate that of the Canadian total of 481,000 farms, 209,000 have gross annual sales of less than $3,750.

That is astounding. These people, along with their families, comprise a formidable corps scattered throughout Ontario; yet of its total of 120,000 farms some 50,000 sell less than $2,500 worth of products per year. The article continues.

> Hundreds of thousands of farmers throughout Canada have been forced out of business by the price-controlling effect of vastly more efficient agricultural production. Huge productive capability in western Canada resulted from wartime mechanization applied to vast level and generally fertile lands. Application of large-scale capital investment to chicken, egg, milk, beef and other areas of production throughout Canada resulted in penalties for those who could not or did not employ enough capital.

In my opinion it was mostly "could not."

> National policy, and the provincial policies with which it must be coherent, is not simple to work out. The key, in Canada at least, is probably in setting up a viable framework for regional development, to provide full rein to the real potentials of each region.

• (9:50 p.m.)

This involves flexible tax arrangements between the federal and provincial governments; it involves decentralization of federal administration, with considerable changes in the federal departmental framework; it involves introduction of new technologies and new approaches to research and data collection; it involves education, manpower mobility and industrial development programs much more dynamic and coherent than are at present in effect. In sum, regional development demands sensitive and intelligent consideration of the natural resources, the market potentials, and the attitudes, skills and potentials of the people.

A recent United States report establishes that rural failures often become a factor in respect of city unemployment figures. There is absolutely no advantage in removing people from the farms and bringing them into the city as unemployment or welfare charges. A presidential advisory commission in the United States has urged full employment and prosperity for the rural people even if, as reported in the New York Times for December 10, the government has to provide the jobs to end what the panel calls a national disgrace. A similar situation exists in Canada where ARDA programs, idealistic in concept, have been reduced to ineffectiveness by administrative bumbling, as revealed in recent reports. The President's national advisory commission on rural hardship in the United States calls for equality of opportunity in rural areas in regard to housing, jobs, education and welfare. The report of the commission states that the need is even greater in rural than in urban areas. It urges that this need be given priority in legislation and appropriations.

What about the situation in Canada? There has been criticism with regard to soil and water conservation programs carried on under ARDA. The ARDA concept was and is a good one. It is an encouragement to the farmer to stay on the land and arrest the drift to the city that has become a flood. Recent reports by the economic council reveal that the administration of ARDA is not carrying out the original principles upon which ARDA was based. It says that 500,000 rural families are suffering hardships. ARDA funds are being dissipated in unrealistic projects—the "blueberry patch" approach. This is administrative weakness and does not carry out the original ideals. In effect the report of the economic council emphasizes concentration on human resources rather than physical resources, although the latter is not outlawed as a supplementary aid. The report talks about "out migration" from rural to urban communities, which it regards as a partial solution to the problem. If the problem could be solved in that way, it is well on its way to solution.

It is very difficult to see any solution in the putting forward of government policy to assist what is going on, and will continue to go on even if no policies at all are put forward. What is required at this point, in the light of all the information, the numerous studies, and the enormous amount of money that has been spent, is a decision by the government, or rather by the nation. What is our policy as a nation in the face of rural hardship? We must as a nation decide whether we consider it important to retain a rural population on the land, halt the exodus, put an end to economic and social attrition, and stop the hopeless drift away from the farms and villages. Some people feel that such a decision cannot be economical. The cost of sustaining those who have problems is not greatly altered by their transfer from a country to a city environment. There is also the social question of whether or not we can afford to make the effort, in view of the growing chaos of underprivileged metropolitanism. Such waste is self-perpetuating and multiplies from generation to generation. Rather than add to the problems of urbanism, there is a decided social and economic advantage in dealing with the rural people in the rural area where they are at home, and which they know best.

If successful, programs designed to this end will produce decided benefits such as stability, social balance, dividends in terms of health, lower delinquency and reduced welfare in the cities. Those who are subject to this form of economic attrition have not been able to resist the lure of urban benefits and higher incomes. They have drifted in from the rural areas, seeking higher incomes in the cities. In some cases they have found them; in other cases the improvement has been temporary, since they have found themselves unable to adjust and have been forced to go on to the welfare and unemployment lists. This of course is no solution, and simply adds to the misery and congestion of already overcrowded city areas. If we are to maintain a progressive society we cannot afford to have within our midst growing pockets of hardship. The attempts over the years by various governments in Canada and the United States are an illustration of the general acceptance of the concept of equality of opportunity for all. We have within our midst "have not" Canadians; we have underdeveloped regions which need help as much as do the underdeveloped nations.

As an indication of how bad the situation is, I might mention it has been brought to my attention that a Liberal from the other place has written an editorial on his subject, after bringing in a bill. It seems to me that if this is something which can awaken a Liberal senator, then it is indeed an indication that things are very, very bad. Twelve thousand pounds of milk is the production from only two cows. In Huron county I do not suppose anyone is milking only two cows, but I am given to understand that this is the situation in some areas through the country. I believe another look should be taken at this policy. May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Speaker, is the house leader going to announce the business for tomorrow?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, we propose to continue tomorrow with the estimates of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being ten o'clock this house stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at 2.30 p.m.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, March 5, 1968

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. SMALLWOOD—ALLEGED IMPROPER USE OF PARLIAMENTARY FACILITIES

Mr. C. S. Smallwood (Battle River-Camrose): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege affecting every member of this house and the use of the facilities provided by parliament for the members; and more particularly, as you are the guardian of our privileges, to bring to your attention a serious abuse of parliamentary privileges.

My question of privilege concerns the use of these facilities by a minister of the crown who is engaged in the campaign for leadership of the Liberal party. Mr. Speaker, last week there came to my attention a document which had been reproduced on the copying facilities provided for members of this house in the carrying out of their parliamentary duties. I feel that I must bring this matter to your attention in this way, Mr. Speaker, in order that these facilities shall not be used for business unconnected with the business of parliament, especially at this time.

I hold that document in my hand. It was produced on the machines in the photocopy room, utilizing House of Commons stationery, staff and facilities. The heading is "Agenda Ontario for Trudeau Committee." I feel, Mr. Speaker, that this is not a proper use of our facilities. The document has reference to the leadership campaign being waged by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Trudeau).

I am bringing this matter to your attention, Mr. Speaker, in order that you may take the necessary steps to prevent the use of parliamentary facilities in this unauthorized fashion and in order that the minister concerned and any others whose supporters may be acting in this way, may take notice and govern themselves accordingly.

I wish to make it clear at this time that it is not my intention to implicate the House of Commons duplicating staff in this matter in any way.

[Translation]

Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I will inquire about that without delay.

I must add, however, that many things are done on my behalf without my knowing; I will find out whether that is true and if it is, I shall take immediate steps to correct the situation.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO FURTHER FISCAL PROPOSALS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the minister was unable to implement the main budgetary proposal of November 30 last, is it now his intention to present a budget to the house and, if so, when?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the results of the adverse vote on Bill No. C-193 are still under consideration by the government, and I expect to be in a position to make an announcement very soon.

Mr. Monteith: I wonder if at that time the minister would also announce whether he will bring forward a white paper along with his budgetary measure.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, when the government does make its decision it is the intention to lay before the house a whole series of proposals designed to deal with the present situation facing the country.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. In view of the difficulties the government is experiencing in the economic and financial areas, is it the intention of the government to recess parliament for the leadership convention?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is parliamentary business that must be completed before we can even consider that.

STEPS TO PROTECT LEVEL OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, in light of the rather disturbing reports yesterday and this morning concerning our currency, is the Minister of Finance in a position to advise the house what steps Canada may be taking to protect the level of the Canadian dollar?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that as far as the government are concerned, we have every intention to maintain the present parity position of the Canadian dollar. We believe this is appropriate in respect of the essential value of the Canadian dollar. We have plenty of resources, and I hope parliament will support this government in its endeavour to raise the necessary revenues which are part of the pattern to give confidence to foreigners and Canadians that the Canadian dollar is worth its present parity position.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REPORT ON GROCERY RETAILING IN PRAIRIE PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs with regard to the report of the commission which was appointed by the governments of the three prairie provinces to look into the matter of grocery retailing on the prairies. In view of the fact that the report of this commission indicates the dominant position of Canada Safeway Ltd. and the George Weston Ltd. groups of companies, and states that there has been excessive profiteering in the grocery industry in the area studied, does the government intend to accede to the recommendation of this commission that there be an immediate investigation by the federal government? If so, what form will this investigation take?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the press reports indicate that the report mentioned by the hon. member is a very comprehensive document. Neither the government nor our department has received a copy. This morning we were in touch with the Queen's Printer at Regina to request a number of copies. When the report is received it will of course receive study by the department and by the director of investigation and research. Among the subjects to be studied of course will be the allegations just recited by the hon. member.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister how soon he anticipates he will be able to acquaint the house with what steps he proposes to take in the light of the recommendations of this commission.

Mr. Turner: It may be, Mr. Speaker, that we will judge it opportune to make a statement to the house after receiving and reviewing the report.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether, after receiving and taking a close look at the report, it might be advisable to submit it to the special committee on consumer affairs in order that members of this house may take it under study.

Mr. Turner: That suggestion will, of course, be considered.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, when the minister is investigating these allegations will he also look into the policies of these and related companies in respect of the purchase of British Columbia fruit and the terms laid down in this instance?

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

RHODESIA—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON RECENT TALKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, last Friday I directed a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, asking him whether he had anything to report on the talks which had proceeded between Sir Alec Douglas-Home and Prime Minister Wilson regarding Rhodesia. At that time he said his reply would have to await a report on these talks. Has he received such a report, and is he able to give any indication of any improvement in the situation there?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, these talks did take place, but they were private and there is therefore nothing to report.

ASSISTANCE FOR PERSONS OF ASIATIC ORIGIN IN KENYA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he can now give the reply he indicated he would make to the two questions I put to him yesterday relating to the plight of Asian refugees in Kenya.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Commonwealth secretariat has not initiated the negotiations which were implied in my hon. friend's question yesterday. I know of no suggestion that there should be such negotiations.

Mr. Nesbitt: Is it the intention of the government to try to promote such negotiations through the Commonwealth secretariat?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the government considers this is essentially a matter between the governments of Britain and Kenya and the persons concerned.

Mr. Nesbitt: Does the minister then consider that Canada, as a member of the Commonwealth, has no responsibility whatsoever in this regard?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question is argumentative.

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could ask what might be called a double supplementary question in that it relates to two earlier questions. Is the government seriously considering or exploring with other governments the possibility of calling immediately for a top level consultation of Commonwealth leaders to consider the problems in respect of Rhodesia and the more immediate ones which have developed in Kenya?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In regard to Rhodesia, I think the most effective action that can be taken is action by the Security Council. I have already replied in respect of the question of Kenya.

HARBOURS

MONTREAL—IMPROVEMENT OF FACILITIES FOR LONGSHOREMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Prosper Boulanger (Mercier): Mr. Speaker, in view of certain recommendations in the Picard report, and in view of the recent visit by the Minister without Portfolio, is it the intention of the Minister of Transport to commence building rest rooms or waiting rooms to improve the facilities for longshoremen on the Montreal waterfront?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I fail to see the urgency of the question.

[Later:]

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): My question is supplementary to the one asked by the hon. member for Mercier regarding the waiting rooms and rest rooms at the Montreal docks. I think this question is urgent, and the Minister of Transport was ready to answer it. The answer could do a lot to avoid another dispute at the Montreal docks. I believe the minister was ready to answer the hon. member for Mercier.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members must realize it is not always easy for me to determine whether a question is urgent. If in this case the matter is important and urgent, I have no objection to an answer.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I have already taken up this question with the chairman of the National Harbours Board. He has assured me of immediate consideration, and I am optimistic that it will be possible to start construction of the first of these rest rooms almost at once.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): May I ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Speaker: I must say I am still doubtful whether the question was in order. The hon. member for Ontario.

Mr. Starr: I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Labour. I should like to ask the minister, outside of attending to this trivia of supplying rest rooms and waiting rooms, what is the government doing toward alleviating the situation and bring about a settlement?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the government has done everything that is permissible under the act. We are still waiting, and have been for days, the answer of the two parties to the dispute as to whom they want as chairman of the board that they asked be set up. I have intimated that if they cannot agree I will be glad to appoint one. They hope to be able to agree on a chairman. I await word from them.

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): I wonder if the Minister of Labour can give us information concerning the meeting that was held yesterday with the port council?

Mr. Nicholson: I would refer that question to the Minister of Transport. Arrangements for the meeting were made with him, and the meeting took place in his office.

Mr. Keays: I repeat the question to the Minister of Transport. Can he give us the information?

Mr. Hellyer: We did have a meeting with the port council. They came to meet with the minister, as is customary when a new minister of transport is appointed. They raised a number of questions which are current in respect of the port of Montreal and the longer range question of possible participation of some kind in management. I assured them that this was one of the questions being studied by the department at the present time, as well as various other alternatives now evident and any others which might emerge for the best possible management of our port facilities in the years to come. We discussed the current labour situation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder if the minister wants to return to motions?

Mr. Starr: He does not have anything to say; that is why he is taking so long.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport.

Is he contemplating handing over to the Montreal authorities the jurisdiction over the port of Montreal?

[Mr. Starr.]

[English]

Mr. Hellyer: Not at this moment, Mr. Speaker; it would be premature to consider this. We had a good discussion and agreed to keep communication active as we work out some of the problems of mutual interest.

Mr. Keays: May I ask the minister whether any action has been taken toward encouraging those companies that had decided not to visit Montreal to come back to Montreal?

Mr. Hellyer: I think every effort is being made to improve the situation at the port so it will attract the kind of commercial support it has been used to in the past, and really deserves because of its central location.

PRIVY COUNCIL

INQUIRY AS TO DISPOSITION OF SPECIAL PLANNING SECRETARIAT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Enns (Portage-Neepawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the President of the Privy Council. In view of the rather salutary work being done by the special planning secretariat of the Privy Council, I wonder whether it is true, as stated in a recent press report, that this special planning secretariat is to be discontinued or disbanded.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would refer this question to the Prime Minister.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think that question was answered some time ago in the house. The special planning secretariat is being disbanded to cut down expenses, and its force is being distributed among the departments immediately concerned.

Mr. Enns: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker; I did not quite hear the last part of the Prime Minister's answer. Is the coordinating function respecting the overlapping of departments being continued? This is so important.

Mr. Pearson: Yes, the functions will be carried on. When we get to the estimates I hope to make a statement on that point.

TRADE

WHEAT—MAINTENANCE OF PRICE RANGE UNDER INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lawrence Watson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Does the statement by the Minister of Trade and Commerce about the United States and Canada stabilizing wheat prices, to be found in Hansard for March 1, mean that the government is restoring the quarterly meetings between the two nations set up by the Conservative party when they were in power; and what steps are the government taking to make sure that the I.G.A. will be implemented and that wheat will sell within the agreed price range?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would think the question as asked is not in order.

[Later:]

Mr. Watson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to rephrase my question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce and ask him what steps the government is taking to make sure that the I.G.A. will be implemented, and that wheat will sell within the agreed price range.

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): We have had a considerable number of meetings with our colleagues in the exporting countries, and recently we had one in Washington which was quite productive. There have been discussions, and understandings were reached. These understandings will be communicated later this month to other wheat importing and exporting countries which are signatories of the international grains agreement and discussed with them. Until this discussion takes place it would not be appropriate in the present context to reveal the nature of these understandings.

However, I may say in general that good progress has been made at this meeting in working out the steps necessary for implementing the price range of the new international grains agreement which is scheduled to come into effect on July 1.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

HEATING OIL AND GASOLINE—REPORTED PRICE INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Finance which has been asked on a number of occasions, regarding the inquiry into the increase in the price of fuel oil and gasoline. Yesterday, in reply to a question by my colleague the hon. member for Sudbury, the Minister of Finance stated that he had received a report that morning but since he was at a cabinet meeting he had not had time to review it. Perhaps he has been at a continuous cabinet meeting since, but I wonder whether the minister has had a chance to see it since then.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member ask the question.

Mr. Lewis: My question is, has the minister had a chance to review the report, and would he tell the house what it says?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the house will understand that the Minister of Finance has been very much occupied either in cabinet or preparing for it in the last number of hours.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Since Canada has just broken off her diplomatic relations with Gabon, can he tell us if we intend also to break off our diplomatic relations with Quebec by recalling our representative in Quebec, that is the lieutenant governor?

[English]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

DIRECTIVE OF VICE PRESIDENT RESPECTING SEPARATIST EXPOSURE ON NETWORK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State, but in her absence I will direct it to her parliamentary secretary. Would the parliamentary secretary ascertain whether his minister will table the directive dealing with alleged separatist exposure on Radio-Canada sent by M. Marcel Ouimet to M. Grand-Landau?

WINTER WORKS

INQUIRY AS TO CONTINUATION OF PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. On February 1 the minister said he was discussing with the provinces the winter works program. Has the discussion been completed, and has the minister made a decision?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker, the discussion is not completed and no decision has yet been made.

Mr. Chatterton: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that most municipalities are now preparing their budgets, can the minister indicate when he proposes to bring forward some amendment to the program?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, I hope to be in a position to advise the house of the decisions of the government in the very near future.

[English]

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON ECONOMIC AND FINANCIAL POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Last week I asked the minister whether he would be prepared to make a fairly comprehensive statement in the house with regard to the monetary situation internationally, particularly with regard to the Canadian dollar. I realize, of course, that he answered a rather simple question from the hon. member for Edmonton West today, but I wonder whether in view of the continual—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I did not mean it in an insulting way. It was not a complex question.

I was wondering whether the minister would not think it advisable to give the house a more comprehensive statement of the various measures the government is preparing to take to protect the Canadian dollar or to protect the Canadian economy in the face of the speculation, in both senses of the word, which seems to be mounting daily. Perhaps, beyond a mere statement, he could—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Mr. Chatterton.]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the house will recall that it had been my intention when the estimates of the Department of Finance were called to give a comprehensive statement on the economic situation, in which I would have dealt with the international as well as the national aspects. That is still my intention, and I believe at that time I can give a description of the situation as I see it. I hope there will be a debate in the house on this very important matter.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the minister whether in making that statement he could, for the information of dullards like me and others, specify the advantages or disadvantages of a fixed or floating exchange rate.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

TELEVISION

REQUEST FOR IMPROVEMENT IN SERVICE IN LAC ST. JEAN CONSTITUENCY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alcide Simard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I gave notice of the question I wish to put to the hon. Minister of Transport.

Further to the representations made by the chamber of commerce of Alma, main centre of my riding, can the hon. minister tell us what steps he intends to take to improve the relay of C.B.C. programs by the station CKRS-TV of Jonquières-Kénogami?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will admit that the question could easily be put on the order paper. If there is any urgency, which I fail to see, the hon. member may give notice that the question will be discussed on adjournment.

Mr. Simard: At ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON FERRY SERVICE, SAINT JOHN, N.B.-DIGBY, N.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. A month ago, on February 5, he advised the house that negotiations concerning the Digby-Saint John ferry were accelerating, and there was rising expectation that an announcement would be made. I should like the minister to say whether he could define what he means by "expectation", and when we might have an announcement on the Digby-Saint John ferry.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Reasonably soon, Mr. Speaker. I am even more optimistic than I was the last time my hon. friend asked the question.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the approaching tourist season, and in view of the delay in the transport committee report, will the minister make a definite statement on this matter before we recess?

Mr. Hellyer: I cannot assure my hon. friend that this will be possible, but every effort will be made to make an announcement at the earliest possible date.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Does the minister not realize he would improve his chances of getting votes from the maritimes?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

REPORTED BANKRUPTCIES IN CONSTRUCTION OF RAILWAY TO GREAT SLAVE LAKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. It has to do with the construction of the Great Slave Lake railway and the bankruptcy of a number of construction firms engaged in the building of the railway. I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether he has received any communication, either from members of the house or members of the other place, asking for an investigation into the matter of bankruptcies involved in the construction of that railway. I should like also to ask the minister why he has refused to answer his mail.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Schreyer: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: That question is not in order; therefore it cannot be debated at ten o'clock.

[Later:]

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister say whether he has come to any decision in relation to the requests of some hon. members and some senators for an investigation into the construction of the Great Slave Lake railway and the bankruptcy of some construction firms engaged thereupon?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Not yet, Mr. Speaker. I am reading the file, but it is very lengthy and complicated and I have not yet had a chance to come to any conclusion.

FLOODS

ONTARIO—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): I have a question for the Prime Minister. I am repeating a question I asked several days ago, in reply to which the Prime Minister promised to make inquiries. Has the Prime Minister received a request on behalf of the province of Ontario for assistance in providing relief to the flood victims in southwestern Ontario who suffered severe damage early in February? If so, what decision has been reached?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I did receive a communication from a minister in the government of Ontario, presumably on behalf of the government although usually these requests for assistance come from the head of the government, asking for that kind of assistance. I replied to it this morning.

[Later:]

Mr. Thomas (Middlesex West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Could the Prime Minister say whether his answer to the government of the province of Ontario was in the affirmative or in the negative?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the minister has not yet received the letter, so I am not sure whether I should disclose its contents before he receives it. However, perhaps he will forgive me if I tell my hon. friend that the answer was that the circumstances did not warrant the kind of assistance from the federal government that is given to provinces when a disaster occurs which is beyond their ability to meet.

Inquiries of the Ministry

SPORTS

NANCY GREENE—SUGGESTED RECOGNITION OF OLYMPIC VICTORY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. R. Sherman (Winnipeg South): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister, and I apologize for invading the preserve of the hon. member for Kootenay West. In the interests of national achievement is the government considering some suitable national honour for Olympic skier Nancy Greene?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): She is already the recipient of the Order of Canada, which is a very distinguished national honour.

INDUSTRY

SYDNEY, N.S.—REQUEST FOR GRANT FOR PURCHASE OF STEEL PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who is also a member of the cabinet committee on the steel problem at Sydney. Is the minister in agreement with the leader of the Liberal party in Nova Scotia, who says the premier of that province should have approached the federal government for an outright grant rather than a loan to purchase the Sydney steel plant?

Mr. Speaker: I believe the hon. member will recognize that the question as asked is not in order. He is asking if the minister is in agreement with a statement made, and this is not permitted.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if the government will consider an outright grant for the purchase of the Sydney steel plant rather than a loan?

Mr. Speaker: It is not clear to me how the Minister of Trade and Commerce has administrative responsibility for the matter raised by the hon. member.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. May I direct my question to the Prime Minister and ask him if the government, in its deliberations, will consider an outright grant to the province of Nova Scotia to purchase the Sydney steel plant, rather than a loan?

[Mr. Pearson.]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, a reply to the letter received from the premier of Nova Scotia a short time ago has now been agreed upon and will be going to him, I would hope, tomorrow. Perhaps this reply could be tabled in the house after it has been received by the premier.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO DIPLOMATIC RECOGNITION OF MAINLAND CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): My question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs and arises from a statement by the Minister of Justice regarding diplomatic recognition of China. I wonder if the Secretary of State for External Affairs, in his anxiety not to be outdistanced in future events, is giving serious consideration to his own stand on this particular matter?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I am not afraid of being outdistanced by anyone, including my hon. friend. What the Minister of Justice said the other day was said by me in announcing government policy several months ago.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CAPE BRETON, N.S.—LOSS OF RAILWAY JOBS THROUGH SHIPMENT OF COAL BY TRUCK

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the leader of the New Democratic party asked me whether I had received any complaints from the Cumberland railway employees with regard to the stockpiling of coal by truck from No. 20 colliery.

I got in touch with the Cape Breton Development Corporation in that respect. That corporation does not yet have jurisdiction in this matter, because it has not taken possession of the mines and it has not been consulted about the means of transportation involved here.

However, I am told that the coal is moved from the shaft head to the stockpiling area, that is a distance of a few hundred yards only.

There is no doubt that, in such a case, transportation by truck is much easier than by railway. At any rate, the corporation has undertaken to call a meeting of all the parties concerned in the coming week.

[English]

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I ask the minister, when the Cape Breton Development Corporation takes over full responsibility is it expected that coal shipments will be restored to the railways?

[Translation]

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I am told that April 1 is the date set. However, as I explained in my previous answer, it seems to me that it will always be easier to transport coal from the shaft head to the stockpile by truck rather than by rail, since the distance involved is only a few hundred yards.

[English]

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the Cape Breton Development Corporation undertaking, as provided in the legislation passed by this house, going to do anything on behalf of the men who are being displaced as a result of this transfer from rail to truck for the shipment of coal?

[Translation]

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, that is certainly the sort of responsibility which has been assigned to the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

[English]

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I am not too sure whether I should rise on a supplementary question or a question of privilege, but I should like to ask the minister this question. Will he please do some homework so he will not confuse the issue and make the job of the Cape Breton Development Corporation any more difficult than it is? The information he has just given the house is certainly far from the facts.

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is more a question of privilege than a question.

THE MINISTRY

PROPOSED RESIGNATION OF CANDIDATES FOR LIBERAL LEADERSHIP

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, on February 29 last I asked the Acting Prime Minister the following question, as reported at page 7100 of Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, in view of the very proper action by the Minister of Trade and Commerce in resigning his portfolio before becoming a leadership candidate, I should like to request the Acting Prime Minister to ask the Prime Minister whether he is going to take the proper action of calling on other candidates to do the same.

I wonder whether the minister has spoken to him, and what the reply was.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, I did not.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

TRADE

STEEL—SUGGESTED IMPOSITION OF DUMPING DUTY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, on February 29 last the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria asked what steps had been taken to protect the steel industry.

The Department of National Revenue is carrying out a study on steel imports in the light of the antidumping clauses of the legislation. The department is investigating abroad the actual market value of steel in certain countries exporting to Canada. So far, our investigations have in several cases resulted in price increases. In others, we have been unable up to date to obtain any evidence of dumping. However, those investigations are going on and all imports are carefully examined. When corrective measures are warranted, they will continue to be applied.

[English]

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the minister for his reply. May I ask him when he will be in a position to provide us with further information along the lines he has suggested?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, we are not in the habit of giving out the details of each one of our investigations. I have made a general report. We are continuing to analyse each shipment of steel imported and the regulations are enforced when there is proof of dumping. So far, we are satisfied with the positive results of our investigations. In some cases, exporters have been forced to raise their prices.

RURAL DEVELOPMENT

QUEBEC—AGREEMENT RESPECTING ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development who seems bored at the far end of the house.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Could he tell us whether discussions are still going on with the Quebec government about a federal-provincial agreement relating to the rural and economic development program, and when that agreement will be ratified?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, negotiations are in full swing.

[English]

Mr. Keays: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister now in a position to inform us whether any cutbacks of a financial nature are being considered?

[Translation]

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, I have already stated in the house that the budgetary cutbacks would not affect ARDA or the economic and rural development fund approved by the house last year.

AGRICULTURE

POTATOES—IMPORTS FROM U.S. INTO WESTERN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Agriculture. I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture, in relation to the requests of western Canadian potato growers for a value for duty imposition, if he has determined whether importation of United States potatoes into the western zone constitutes dumping.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would remind the hon. member that in a few minutes the house will be in committee to consider the estimates of the Department of Agriculture, which would be an appropriate time to ask the question just raised.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SARNIA, ONT.—LAY-OFFS AND OVERTIME AT POLYMER PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of Industry whether he can reply to the question I asked yesterday respecting employment at the Polymer Corporation at Sault Ste. Marie.

[Mr. Keays.]

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I assume the hon. gentleman is referring to the Polymer Corporation plant at Sarnia.

Mr. Douglas: I am sorry; Sarnia.

Mr. Drury: There were two questions asked yesterday. One was whether I had received representations regarding employment practices of the Polymer Corporation. I stated yesterday that I personally had received none, though indirectly some representations have been made. I have asked that it be ascertained whether these properly form part of current labour negotiations or are the result of direct representations.

Second, I do not have much to add to my reply in connection with government intentions in relation to the ownership of Polymer.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the latter part of the minister's reply, all the minister said yesterday was—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member ask a question rather than repeat what was said yesterday?

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, the minister said yesterday that I was aware of the government's approach to the ownership of Polymer. Since I am not aware, and I doubt whether many members are, may I ask him whether the government has any intention of disposing of the Polymer Corporation to private interests?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I assumed an awareness that apparently was lacking. The government from time to time has given consideration to the desirability of continuing as sole owner of the Polymer Corporation and a number of alternatives have been considered. To date no decision has been taken on any new form of ownership.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INVITATION TO QUEBEC PREMIER TO VISIT FRANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

In view of the fact that the French government recently invited the premier of Quebec to visit France, over the head of the federal government, does the secretariat for external affairs now intend to sever diplomatic relations with France?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

OLD AGE SECURITY

ADJUSTMENT OF INCOME SUPPLEMENT TO PROVIDE MINIMUM AMOUNT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Oh—I thought that was the minister.

Mr. Macaluso: I will take off my glasses.

Mr. Knowles: Ou est le ministre?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member direct his question to the Prime Minister?

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I did not mean to embarrass the minister. I see that he is back in his seat, but apparently he has a double whom I mistook for him.

On several occasions the hon. member for Ontario and I, and perhaps others, have asked a question relating to old age pensioners on the guaranteed income supplement whose other income drops or disappears yet are denied their claim to have their income brought up to the guaranteed level either in the current or the subsequent calendar year. The minister said that he would look into this matter. Has he yet found a way to correct this unfairness?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, certain amendments to this particular program are under consideration but it will not be possible to bring them forward in the foreseeable future.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I am sure the minister will agree that this situation is most unfair to the elderly citizens concerned. Will he say now that if and when these amendments are brought forward by way of legislation, payments will be retroactive to the date at which these supplementary benefits were started?

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker. It would not be possible to anticipate the terms of the legislation.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PROTECTION OF HUNTING RIGHTS UNDER MIGRATORY BIRDS CONVENTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): I wonder whether the Prime Minister is now in a position to answer the question I put to him on February 9 in relation to the conflict between the Migratory Birds Convention Act and the Indian treaties.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I apologize to the hon. gentleman for the delay in dealing with this. I will look into it right away.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Research—

5c. Administration, operation and maintenance—to extend the purposes of vote 5 of the main estimates for 1967-68 to include a contribution of $10,000 to the town of Kapuskasing toward the construction of a road, $1.

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, I welcome this opportunity to make a few comments on the supplementary estimates of the Department of Agriculture which are now before the committee. My first words must be words of congratulation to my hon. friend the leader of Her Majesty's loyal opposition who last evening in his speech on these estimates gave a most comprehensive and factual review of the problems facing agriculture today. His intervention in our discussion very ably demonstrated his wide knowledge of one of Canada's most basic industries.

On the other hand, I am sorry to say, the Minister of Agriculture, in a reply which was both bombastic and political, left the very opposite impression on the committee. It would appear to me that through lack of knowledge, indifference and in some cases sheer stupidity, the government opposite has been responsible for placing agriculture in its worst financial position in years. This is the government which talked about 60 days of decision, the government which set out to challenge the weak and excite the daring. What has happened instead? They have stumbled from indecision to indiscretion and from crisis to crisis.

The minister's speech last evening was a replica of the one he made on October 31 last as reported in Hansard on pages 3725 to 3728, in which in effect he spent all his time telling the farmers of this country that they never had it so good. He reminded me of the shades of the late Right Hon. C. D. Howe at that fateful meeting in Morris, Manitoba, in 1957. I suggest to the minister that after last night's speech he will now be running well behind Mayor Lloyd Henderson of Portage la Prairie in the leadership race.

The hon. gentleman spent a great deal of time last night quoting statistics of wheat sales from 1961 to 1967. But he forgot to tell the committee that these sales were based on policies developed by the former government. I well recall that from 1957 to 1962 members of that government paid special attention to the development of stronger wheat marketing policies. The prime minister at that time, together with officials of the Departments of Trade and Commerce and Agriculture, made a tour round the world inviting trade groups to visit Canada and arrange trade deals. This resulted in a visit by a Japanese trade mission the following year, and after negotiations involving the transfer and exchange of textiles Canada was able to double wheat sales to Japan.

Later a great deal of time was spent in the house debating amendments to the export credit insurance policy. A brand new policy emerged in consequence of which we were able to treble our sales of wheat abroad. In particular, sales of wheat to China on credit were approved despite strong opposition from hon. members now sitting on the other side of the chamber. I well remember one of them telling us that in his opinion it was close to treason to sell to our friends for cash and to our enemies for credit.

The hon. member who represented Assiniboia at that time waved his arms and said it was all a hoax, it was preposterous, we would never get our money. Events proved these people to be wrong. As a result of our perseverance and the hard work of our committee at that time we developed the sales policy which this government inherited. This is why the minister was able to spend most of his time last night praising the record of his party though, in fact, he cannot not take credit for it at all. If anything the shoe is on the other foot, bearing in mind what has happened in 1967 and 1968.

I do not propose to cover the whole spectrum of agricultural problems. In passing, however, I should like to say that looking at the headlines today one finds nothing but trouble. Wheat prices are down, hog prices are down, egg prices are down, poultry prices are lower, turkey prices are down, rapeseed prices are down, soybean prices have declined, potato prices are down, farm improvement loans have dried up, wheat exports are falling farther below the 1967 level, and so on.

[Mr. Southam.]

Here is a headline reading: "Wheat Exports Sharply Under Year Ago Total". The article begins:

> Export clearances of Canadian wheat for the first three months of the current crop year at 64,487,000 bushels were down almost 60 per cent from last year's comparative total of 163,249,000 bushels.

Another headline in the Globe and Mail reads: "Higher Costs Expected To Offset Increase In Foreign Production". On the same page we read a headline, "Wheat Trade Expected To Toughen". Another headline, this one in the Western Producer of December 7, asks: "What About PFRA?" The writer states that one of the great pieces of legislation introduced in parliament years ago is being neglected. A headline in the Manitoba Co-Operator states: "ARDA and PFRA Are Not Effective Says Report". The reason given is Liberal inefficiency. The report of a special study commissioned by the Economic Council of Canada is dealt with in Farm and Country under the headline: "Blast ARDA Waste". In the Western Producer of December 14, Mr. Roy Atkinson, president of the Saskatchewan Farmers' Union, is reported as calling for greater farmer unity. Mr. Atkinson is quoted as saying:

> It is clear in the light of sharp reduction in quota opportunity, that the defence of the minimum will prove inadequate in maintaining farm income in light of continuing lower quotas due to loss of export sales and increases in the cost of production.

In other words, he is saying it does not matter whether or not the price per bushel is fixed at $1.95 if the wheat cannot be sold. In the Western Producer of December 14, 1967, there was an article headed. "Wheat—A Time for Reassessment," being the report of an address by Charles W. Gibbings, president of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. In the Manitoba Co-operator of February 29, 1966, there was a report headed "National Meeting Asked On Agricultural Policy" in which the following appeared:

> J. M. Bentley of Edmonton, president of the C.F.A., in presenting the brief was critical of the eventual success of the agricultural task force appointed by Ottawa last year.

So the story goes, Mr. Chairman. Getting back to wheat marketing I point out that last night the minister referred at great length to sales statistics, but I think his argument was hollow inasmuch as I gave facts a few moments ago to show that these sales were based on policies that we developed and were not due to anything this government has been able to do.

The problem in wheat marketing today is a direct result of the lapsing of the international wheat agreement. What has happened is a replica of what happened under previous Liberal governments. In 1935 the government of the late R. B. Bennett brought in legislation setting up the Canadian Wheat Board. The first thing the succeeding Liberal government did was to throw it out, but because of the protests from farm organizations in western Canada that important piece of legislation was replaced on the statute books and ever since the Canadian Wheat Board has been a most effective agency in assisting farmers to market their crops.

To emphasize the lack of policy and the indifference of the Liberal party to agriculture I bring the story up to the war years. With their policy of trying to show love for their mother country the Liberals, encouraged by co-operation from farm organizations, introduced the British preferential wheat agreement under which farmers in western Canada were forced to sell wheat at $1 per bushel under the world market price. It is estimated that this cost western agriculture some $600 million. In other words, our agricultural industry and farm community were asked to sacrifice that amount of money in the interests of Liberal policy.

In February, 1965, the Minister of Finance, who then had the Canadian Wheat Board under his wing, involved the board in a price war with the United States which lasted several months and cost Canadian farmers well over $100 million. This came about owing to the fact that our friends across the line were trying to dispose of some of their large wheat surplus and were testing this government to see what its stability was and how concerned it was about agricultural policies.

One morning we woke up to the fact that the Americans had dumped quite a large amount of grain into our markets at six cents per bushel below the wheat agreement price. Instead of the Minister of Finance going to the United States and pointing out to our friends that they were breaking the rules he went to the Canadian Wheat Board and said, "We will compete with them; we will cut the price too." This is exactly what our friends in the United States wanted. Next day they cut six cents a bushel off the price of No. 3 and No. 4 wheat and within a week the price dropped a further four cents. Over all, within ten days the price of Canadian wheat was allowed to drop 18 cents per bushel, which cost the Canadian farmers between $90 million and $100 million. This amply demonstrates the indifference of the government to wheat policy and to the western farmers. Then we come to the fiasco of 1967 in allowing the international wheat agreement to lapse for 11 months, and the indications are that we will have to wait years for a renewal of that agreement.

This afternoon the hon. member for Assiniboia questioned the Minister of Trade and Commerce about the international wheat agreement. He has been questioned about it many times previously. I have questioned him on many occasions about why it was allowed to lapse and we have never received a logical answer. Despite the protestations of the minister we are still very concerned that the new agreement will not come into effect this year because the latest reports indicate that even those countries which signed the protocol to show they were in accord with the principle of the agreement have not yet ratified it. The new wheat agreement was supposed to come into effect on July 1. It is high time the government took strong and definite action to undo the damage it did in allowing the old agreement to lapse. As I say, the Minister of Trade and Commerce has been questioned many times about this and he has tried to assure us that everything is well. In fact he tried to defend himself by stating that farm organizations in western Canada were in agreement with the action taken. This statement is absolutely contrary to the facts.

Only last Wednesday morning, with 40 members of the house present at the meeting at which the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, Canada's largest farm organization, presented its brief, Mr. James Bentley, president of that organization, flatly stated that they never had any warning or knowledge of Canada's intention to agree to the lapsing of the international wheat agreement, and that this was basically the cause of Canada's wheat marketing problem today. This is similar to the surprise expressed by the leaders of western wheat pools, farm unions, and other farm spokesmen.

Why should the minister try to kid our Canadian farmers in this way? The meat packers have a word for that—boloney. We find American sales going up day by day while our sales are going down. We have sold only a small amount of wheat to Japan this year while the United States has entered that market on a big scale. We have turned back the clock 20 years and are now back to the law of the jungle so far as wheat sales are concerned. With the price cutting that is going on it is simply dog eat dog.

I would like to refer to some notes, Mr. Chairman. I do not want to bore the chamber with a long address on this matter because I know that most members of this party are well aware of the problem, and if the minister is not already aware of it I hope that as a result of what I say he will become aware. The United States price-cutting tactic became effective following the announcement by secretary of agriculture, Orville Freeman, that he had set the national wheat export target for this year at 750 million bushels, with a smaller proportion of exports to be devoted to food give-away programs. The Minister of Trade and Commerce went to Washington. There he pleaded with Mr. Freeman that the United States and other wheat exporting countries were bound by a gentleman's agreement to hold the agreed price floor. Mr. Freeman was courteous but pointed out that no legal requirements bound the United States to observe any price but that dictated by supply and demand and, further, he had far less control over or impact upon the wheat exporting business in the United States than did the Canadian government through the Canadian Wheat Board. This again points out the indifference and, as I said a while ago, the stupidity of the government in allowing this situation to develop.

To give a brief review of the energy and time which went into bringing about the first international wheat agreement I point out that for 12 years prior to 1947 western farm organizations were very interested in accomplishing such a development and worked very hard with their counterparts in other countries to establish the agreement. That agreement has now been in effect for about 18 years. When you have a formula that works so effectively I just cannot understand why the government participated in the Kennedy round of talks at Geneva and agreed to the lapsing of the agreement, turning back the clock as it were and allowing the agreement to lapse for 11 months. It should not have been allowed to lapse for even one month. Had there been continuity of the agreement we would not be in the trouble we are in today.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce returned to Ottawa from Washington without any assurance that the price-cutting method of moving the large United States wheat surplus would stop. The seller's market that existed at the time the international wheat agreement lapsed changed during the summer of 1967 to a buyer's market under the impact of bumper wheat crops in many areas of the world. This fact emphasizes more than ever the need for an international wheat agreement. And so the story goes.

[Mr. Southam.]

• (3:40 p.m.)

Before concluding my remarks I should like to touch briefly on one other matter of serious consequence to my riding and several neighbouring areas. I refer to the question put to the Minister of Agriculture in the house yesterday, which appears on page 7233 of Hansard. I put the following question to the minister:

> Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Is the minister aware of the possible collapse of the new and expanding P.M.U. estrogen drug industry in western Canada because of the terms of Bill C-190? If so, has the minister consulted with his cabinet colleague the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs with a view to saving this new agricultural industry?

The answer from the Minister of Agriculture was:

> Mr. Speaker, I have not specifically considered it with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, but I shall be glad to take the hon. member's suggestion and consult my colleague.

This would indicate to me that the minister was not even aware of this new industry and had not been on top of this new problem which has developed over the past month or two. If so, he would have already conferred with his colleague on the matter. Here is a new industry in western Canada and in other parts of Canada which is just two years old but in which millions of dollars have already been invested by Canadian farmers. This industry is about to collapse unless something is done about it at once. This is another indication of the serious predicament of agriculture today and particularly the western wheat farmer. This is again a result of the lack of policy on the part of the government. There would seem to be a lack of knowledge in this regard and in some cases sheer stupidity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I too welcome the opportunity to speak on these supplementary estimates of the Department of Agriculture for several reasons, not the least of which is the fact that the horticultural council along with the Canadian Federation of Agriculture last week presented recommendations to the government and tomorrow I understand the National Farmers Union intends to place recommendations before the government concerning what it and other farm organizations consider should be the policies of the government. I welcome the opportunity to speak in view of the fact that these agencies are presenting their views, but if this had not been sufficient incentive certainly the minister's speech last night was enough to persuade any member on this side, and I would hope even on the other side, to make some comments in respect of this problem and the minister's remarks.

I know it will come as a tremendous surprise to the farmers in eastern Canada, certainly in Nova Scotia, to learn that farmers' net income increased by over 30 per cent. This is one figure the minister threw around last night. In fact the tenor of his remarks seemed to be that the farmers in Canada never had it so good. This was the attitude of the minister last fall when he spoke on the estimates and quoted many gross figures. When I say "gross" I do not mean in the sense that they were repugnant to us on this side of the house but in the sense that they were total figures without taking costs into consideration.

He repeated this performance last night when he jumped into the debate after the Leader of the Opposition had spoken in fairly calm, cool and even tones. This minister, perhaps seeking some political hay because there is a question of his ability to make hay, decided to risk his reputation and that of the government merely to get some desk-thumping. If rose-coloured glasses are worn by the candidates on April 4 the Minister of Agriculture will be well up in the pack because he was certainly wearing rose-coloured glasses last night. In a situation of reality a minister should sometimes take off his rose-coloured glasses. When this minister takes his off, if he ever does, I am afraid he will be as glum and disappointed as the agricultural industry in Canada is with the lack of initiative, concern and leadership on his part. I do not wish to be too dogmatic in that statement because it would not have surprised me, although it might have surprised some members on this side of the house, if the minister had admitted that there are some fundamental problems affecting different areas of Canada which cannot be solved by any one minister. It takes time and the efforts of a number of ministers to solve certain problems.

We all appreciate that quiet revolutions are taking place and we see the problems that the quiet revolutions cause. We have had much discussion in this house about the quiet revolution in Quebec. We hear about the quiet revolution in society with people moving from the country to the city and we know the problems this causes. We have seen something resembling a fundamental change in parliament right in this chamber not too long ago. When there are fundamental changes there are fundamental problems. Much is left to be desired when a minister stands in his place, with agriculture engaged in a quiet revolution, and attempts to make short-term political capital out of long-term economic problems.

There is a quiet revolution taking place in the field of agriculture. The members on this side of the house who represent the majority of the farm areas of this country from coast to coast are the first to admit this fact. The livelihood of many of these members is influenced by this quiet revolution which involves a change from manpower to machine power and from family farms to commercial farms. There are problems involved in these changes on the farm but there are some problems which differ between east and west.

Sometimes when I sit here with my fellow colleagues from the west I shake my head because I would love to be in their position of having to deal with only one basic crop which brings some cash to the producer in a matter of several months while the farmers in my area have a variety of crops, a 12-month work program and still have difficulty in obtaining any cash. The minister could not have endeared himself to members on this side of the house but his remarks would have been received more warmly had he taken off his rose-coloured glasses and admitted that there are problems which all ministers inherit and said that he at least was attempting to do something about them rather than pretend that the farmers across Canada never had it so good.

While there is a quiet revolution in agriculture, some aspects of it are not so quiet. Any member of this house who was on the front lawn of parliament hill when the farmers gathered there will understand what I mean. When there are parades of tractors on highways this must be a symptom that something is wrong somewhere even though the minister says that the farmers never had it so good. The hon. member for Moose Mountain in his comments said that part of the fundamental problem with regard to agriculture in this country is that the industry is sick. It is affected by a cost-price sickness. The unfortunate thing is that the doctor, the Minister of Agriculture, does not even know that the patient is sick.

I cannot give figures in respect of agriculture in the west but I certainly can give them for the Annapolis valley, the basic agricultural area of Nova Scotia. Perhaps later in the debate the minister will give statistics regarding agriculture in New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and the eastern part of Quebec to show that the statistics I intend to quote in respect of Nova Scotia do not apply to eastern agriculture generally. I hope the minister or some member opposite will be able to stand in this house and quote statistics in relation to eastern agriculture showing that the situation is generally better than I suggest it is in Nova Scotia.

I suggest agriculture is suffering from a cost-price sickness. Last night and on previous occasions the minister has presented a symptom of that sickness. He made a lot of noise about higher prices, but what does not cost more today than a year ago? These higher prices can be likened to a high temperature. I suggest that our agricultural industry is suffering from high blood pressure, which should give the doctor, the Minister of Agriculture, some concern. I suggest this high blood pressure symptom is even more serious than the high temperature symptom or the high prices.

It is very important when examining a patient to find out whether he has a pulse or a heartbeat. I am not suggesting the minister does not have a heart. Many amazing things have been done in the world, including heart transplants. So far as agriculture is concerned I suggest that the pulse, which indicates the strength of the heart, is as low as it has been for many years. It is low because there is a low net return. Regardless of whether prices are high, the fundamental factor to a farmer is his net return. Agriculture in Nova Scotia has hit bottom, and we are looking to the Minister of Agriculture to make some diagnosis and prescribe some treatment in order to rehabilitate this industry.

I should like to quote some statistics in relation to agriculture in Nova Scotia. There are fewer farms, but that is not surprising in view of the consolidation of farms on the basis of efficiency. This may also be the result of increased technology and more efficient farm machinery. It may also account for the decrease in the number of farmers. However, the most important statistics are those which show a decrease in the amount of land under cultivation. This fact should give any minister a great deal of concern.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

Last night the minister suggested that we should recite the facts and that the Leader of the Opposition had spoken in platitudes and generalities. He said that figures do not lie. While that may be true, I suggest they often smoke out the prevaricators. The statistics for the period from 1951 to 1961 show a decrease in the number of farms from 23,815 to 12,518 or a drop of 47.4 per cent. During that period there was a change in the D.B.S. classification of farms. Even taking that change into consideration there was a decrease during that period in the number of farms from 23,815 to 18,264 or 19.1 per cent.

During the same period there was a tremendous decrease in the number of farmers. We have heard a great deal about school dropouts and what the government is attempting to do to rehabilitate workers in view of technological change. What is the government attempting to do about farm dropouts? According to D.B.S. figures the decrease in the number of farmers in that ten-year period was from 115,414 to 58,000. In terms of total farm population this represents a decrease from 18 per cent in 1951 to 7.9 per cent in 1961.

Last night the minister referred to the ratio of Canadians engaged in farming compared with the total population. He suggested it was around 8 per cent. Perhaps that figure is not significant, but we must also consider the decrease in land under cultivation during the same period. The statistics I have indicate there was a decrease from 661,975 acres to 497,521 acres. This is important even though with improved technology fewer men can work larger farms. The average size of a farm in Nova Scotia is 40 acres. These statistics should give the minister some concern about the general state of agriculture in this country.

The agricultural situation in Nova Scotia can be fairly summarized by quoting from an independent survey produced in July of 1966 by the Nova Scotia voluntary planning board. At page 5 the following is stated:

> Generally, then, the statistical evidence gathered in the 1961 census indicates the transition taking place in the structure of primary farming in Nova Scotia since 1951; the number of farms decreasing along with a declining number of acres farmed, some improvement in improved land acreages, a dramatic increase in the use of machinery and other equipment, and corresponding increases in total value of products sold. Even though on the basis of this last statistic it is apparent that Nova Scotia farmers are improving their relative position, it is also evident that the low value of products sold per farm in the other farms category is one of the main problem areas in provincial agriculture in the sixties. In fact, if the value of products sold was given in "real" terms, that is discounting price movements, and if this group in 1961 was on the same 1951 definitional base, average cash income per farm would be at a lower level than that recorded in 1950.

I do not know where the minister got his figures regarding the general picture across the country, but certainly the statistics I have indicate a grave picture for agriculture in Nova Scotia and in the eastern part of Canada generally. To illustrate this grave situation further let me refer to table A-3 at the back of this report. It indicates an increase in gross income from 1960 to 1964 from $43 million to $44 million but a drop in net income in the same period. In 1960 net income was $15 million, in 1961 it was $14 million, in 1962 it was $12 million, in 1963 it was $11 million, and in 1964 it was $8 million. This indicates there was a drop in net income between 1960 and 1964 of 54 per cent, with more than a 30 per cent drop between 1963 and 1964. Yet the minister says that the farmer is 30 per cent better off with respect to his net income. I do not know where the minister got his figures because in the area of Nova Scotia I represent, which is a farming region, the drop in net income according to D.B.S. figures is over 30 per cent.

I suggest that this situation should be a matter of concern and consideration rather than one of short term, political advantage because of the personal or political problems which face the Minister of Agriculture. The per capita income of Nova Scotia farmers was $871 in 1951. There was a slight increase by 1961, but the per capita income of the Nova Scotia farmer in that year was only $1,184. I do not know where the Nova Scotia farmer is going to obtain relief and improve his abnormally low net income figure.

In spite of these figures the minister rose in the house last night and outlined a new ground rule for economic success on the farm. Just a few days ago we had the Pearson precedent so far as parliamentary problems are concerned—I will not debate that matter right now—and last night we had Greene's ground rule for farm success. If we accept the argument put forward by the minister last night, farmers are better off because they are borrowing more money. One can see the corollary of that theory by looking at the D.B.S. figures I have quoted. Farmers are borrowing more and receiving less. I seriously question the suggestion that farmers in this country are better off because they are borrowing more money. I suggest that one of the reasons they are borrowing more is that the income they derive from their operations does not provide them with enough funds with which to purchase the equipment necessary for soil development. Soil development is very necessary if our farmers are to compete in international markets.

I should now like to deal with the question of farm capital. In this area there should be a new look and an emancipation of thought as to what type of policy should be developed. We appreciate, as I think the minister does, that the farm improvement loans program is not working out in these days of high interest rates because there is a fixed interest rate of 5 per cent. It is perhaps not surprising that banks will not lend money at an interest rate of 5 per cent. I think it is time the government reconsidered the fixed rate of interest and decided upon a floating or flexible rate something like the interest rate in respect of housing. I think this would be more appropriate. Then our farmers could obtain capital. It would not be frozen and the banks would not be reluctant to lend money.

In this brief period I have shown my concern about the minister's attitude that the farmers have never had it so good. I do not understand how the minister can apply that statement to my area. It does not work that way down east. Farmers in my area have had better times and their net income has never been lower.

There is another area in which the government might reconsider its agricultural policy. I refer to feed grains. This is a provocative and sensitive question that all of us in the house appreciate. I will not debate the matter today, but the government pays a subsidy in order to move feed grains into the eastern part of Canada. I wonder whether it is not time to reconsider this policy. I believe it would help the Canadian taxpayer and the farmer if there were some flexibility in the program whereby if a farmer wanted to produce feed grains locally he could receive the benefit of the grant which the government is now paying in order to bring feed grains from western Canada to the east.

Western Canada is not too happy about the feed grains problem. Ontario is rightly concerned about the premiums paid on western feed grains. That province has produced more corn and would like to develop its feed grains market. There are areas in eastern Canada where feed grains could be developed if the soil were cultivated and farmers had the money to invest for this purpose. If they had the money I think they would be prepared to take a chance on developing feed grains.

There should be a change in the policy of the department to allow a farmer to develop feed grains if he so desires. The situation is that farmers are in effect being subsidized to the extent of $12 a ton to bring in western feed grains. This $12 a ton subsidy could be used to build a grain drying and storing plant over a three-year period. I know one farmer who has developed a grain drying and storing plant with a capacity of 600 tons, at a cost of $16,000. With the subsidy of $12 a ton, which is a federal expenditure, on 500 tons the amount involved is $6,000. In three years that $6,000 multiplied by three would produce $18,000 which could be used for building a grain drying and storing plant. There would be an incentive for the farmer to develop his own feed grains and he would not have to rely upon the Canadian taxpayer to subsidize a program which has caused a good deal of comment and division in agricultural and political circles across Canada.

We could use the subsidy in another way, namely, to improve productivity in local areas. The subsidy could be applied as an incentive to the farmer to develop feed grains and it could also be used to improve the productivity of the land. Very few farmers have the money to apply to the development and improvement of land. If they were able to obtain a subsidy and use it in a fixed direction for two or three years, this would be all that would be required to improve the productivity of the land in order to produce their own feed grains. Again, Mr. Chairman, money would not have to come out of the Canadian taxpayers' pockets to bring feed grains from the west. This is an area in which the government is spending money and I suggest that there should be some flexibility in the policy in order to allow eastern farmers to develop, if they so desire, their own feed grains. This could be done if they were able to benefit from the subsidy now being paid by the Canadian government to bring feed grains to the east from the west.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

At long last a task force is studying the different problems of agriculture. I hope that the task force leads in time to a national conference on agriculture. All farm organizations have been calling for such a conference. But a task force or even a conference is no substitute for policy. I believe that the concern of people in the east and all across Canada is that unless the government is prepared to develop a national policy for regional development there will continue to be regional disparity in agriculture.

So far as agriculture is concerned the east needs massive capital assistance. It is a strange anomaly that in so many fields capital aid can be obtained. Such assistance is provided to industry in my province and all across Canada. If someone wants to build a boat he can obtain capital assistance but if he wants to build a barn he cannot obtain a capital grant. The directors of the Nova Scotia Federation of Agriculture have calculated that grants and subsidies to industry and fishing in that province alone totalled over $200 million from 1961 to 1966 but in the same period agriculture in the province received only $20 million.

I think the outgoing president of the Nova Scotia Federation of Agriculture, Mr. Harvey, in his presidential address to the annual meeting of the federation, as reported in the Chronicle-Herald of December 28, 1967 summarized fairly succinctly the problem of massive aid to the east in the following words:

> Commenting on governments' place in the picture, Mr. Harvey said in the past it has often entered too little or too late. All farmers can ask of government is an equal opportunity, and this they have not had in the past. In too many cases farmers have to sell on an open market and buy on a protected one. During the past seven years, he said, agriculture in Nova Scotia has received $14 million in freight assistance, while coal has been assisted by $120 million.

According to the figures given by the directors of the federation of agriculture, the sum is close to $200 million compared with $20 million. The report continues:

> For years farmers have been paying more than their share of municipal taxes. When a fish company desires to build a boat, a large federal grant is available, but when a farmer builds a barn he pays the federal government 11 per cent on the materials.

All the farmers are asking for is equal opportunity, a chance to participate and a chance to produce. Unless this government develops a policy for regional areas, some areas will not be able to contribute to the mainstream of society. Such a policy is long overdue. Perhaps it would have a better chance if the Minister of Agriculture would recognize the problem as did the president of the United States in the 1930's with respect to southern agriculture. From reading reports of those times I understand he considered that while it was a regional problem it had national implications and a national significance. Thus the Tennessee valley authority was created, and other policies were evolved to help resolve agricultural and other problems in the south. So far as eastern Canada is concerned it will take not just a broad, general, universal policy across the land but a regional policy to help this area.

Not only because of the area I come from but because I have travelled through and worked in different parts of Canada I believe that if we have a healthy farm situation we are bound to have a fairly healthy Canada. This may be a cliché but it is true. I believe that all the problems we have in the country today and the symptoms of unrest, disillusionment and disenchantment start right back at the beginning, that is, on the land. I think it is a legitimate concern of the people on the land to wonder what type of deal they will get and what type of policy this government has. I suggest that the minister should not be satisfied with the short-term political plaudits of his fellow supporters but rather should develop policies for a healthy farm situation which will produce a healthy Canada.

Mr. Loney: Mr. Chairman, for the past two days this house has heard criticism levelled at the politically inept and ineffective agricultural policies of the present administration. The Minister of Agriculture, one of the aspirants to the Liberal leadership, rose in his place last evening and again, contrary to opinion in rural Canada, told the farmers of this country that in fact they never had it so good. I challenge the minister to deliver that speech word for word to the National Farmers Union when they submit their brief on March 7. If the Minister of Agriculture were truly to emulate his political hero he would be better served to quote to the farmers of Canada those words of Lincoln which he has used on other occasions, namely:

> If we could first know where we are, and whither we are tending, we could better judge what to do, and how to do it.

In reply to the leader of the official opposition the minister opposite, in mocking tones, decried humility. May I point out that humility has long been considered one of the outstanding qualities of truly great men. We on this side of the house do not subscribe to the minister's conclusion with regard to the advice of Christopher Hollis on political ambition. I refer to the minister's words when speaking of the Liberal leadership, namely:

> I can only thus conclude that those who would be prime minister, must be those who claim they are the most vain and most vulgar among their confrères.

The minister of Agriculture, when addressing the Canadian Federation of Agriculture in Victoria on January 25, concluded his remarks by quoting in part the famous devotions of John Donne: "No man is an island, entire of itself". The minister expressed these words at the conclusion of a text which proved, contrary to Donne's words, the exact opposite. In matters pertaining to agriculture the minister has proven in his recent speeches that in fact he has isolated himself from the problems which are the prime responsibility of his portfolio. Perhaps the hon. member for Renfrew South is preoccupied with thoughts of other prime responsibilities. This is also evident in his remarks at the C.F.A. meeting.

In the first two paragraphs of his text he repeats the words "prime minister" five times. If repetition has the power of suggestion, then the delegates representing Canada's farming community were left in a state of mind that they would think the Minister of Agriculture wished to vacate his position in search of other goals. I submit that on hearing the conclusion of the minister's address they might have been right. With this I tend to agree.

There is ample evidence that the minister could better serve his party in another capacity, and before the minister smiles I hasten to say that judging from the text of his speeches, which are excellent in content, well-documented with facts according to Liberal thought, and flowing with quotations, he might be a candidate for the post of poet laureate of the Liberal party. That the minister is not conscious of the problems which are his responsibility is evidenced by his flagrant misunderstanding of what is expected of him as Minister of Agriculture.

On February 12 the minister spoke to the Agricultural Institute of Canada. In his address—and I must emphasize that it was an excellent presentation—the minister, an experienced practising counsellor who evidently considered himself on trial, presented an expansive catalogue of his considerations of the problems of national unity and constitutional reform. This was a speech which should have been delivered in the House of Commons. It was a speech which I suggest should be tested by delivery in Trois Rivières in the English language and in Victoria in the French language. In fact, it is a speech on which I compliment the author. But let us examine the forum. These words, covering 28 pages, were directed to the Agricultural Institute of Canada, an assembly of the professional élite of agricultural business, a select group dedicated, among other purposes, to providing advice respecting legislative matters common to professional agricultural bodies throughout Canada.

A moment ago I used the word "flagrant". In his address to those most concerned with the administration of his department the Minister of Agriculture did not once use the word "agriculture". He did not once use the word "farmer". It appears that the learned counsellor, while presenting an excellent case, failed to realize he was in the wrong courtroom.

• (4:20 p.m.)

The minister has displayed numerous examples of misunderstanding and a lack of comprehension of agriculture. I do not wish to fault him personally but he has either been ill informed, ill advised or is such a tyrant in his office that those who are conversant with the situation as described by my colleagues have been reluctant to give constructive criticism and proper direction.

What is the minister conveying to the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. He is again speaking in the same style, employing quotations and clichés to impress his audience. But what of that audience, what of the intent and purpose of that audience of practising farmers from across Canada? These delegates are determined to bring about, through consultation, some relief, some alleviation of the problems of Canadian agriculture. These problems were created mainly by government bumbling, by lack of policy, by lack of foresight, lack of direction and lack of a minister who understands the workings of his department.

Speaking to the Canadian Federation of Agriculture the minister referred to the pressing issues of the Liberal future. It is the minister's Liberal future which is of concern to him. The farmers of Canada have had enough Liberal present and they cannot afford a Liberal future. The minister spoke about housing, pollution, education, research, all of which are most deserving of our consideration, I agree. However, how seriously can we take the minister when, according to page 5 of his text, in referring to our gross national product he stated:

> To the best of my knowledge we, as a nation, do not have even a goal, only the solemn hopes of the economic council.

This is the statement of a minister who would be the leader of the government. For about 17 pages, or the first half of the text of this speech, no mention is made of farmers, farming or farm problems. Suggestions are made, however, as to how the administration of the departments of his fellow candidates could be improved. Nothing, absolutely nothing, is said about his own department. The minister has certain suggestions to achieve more beneficial planning of productive capacity. His suggestions cover business and government and, second, government and business.

When we go over this speech we ask ourselves, where does the farmer come in? After all, this is the Minister of Agriculture speaking. It is stated that the Liberal philosophy is predicated on social services which place an economic floor under each citizen. Well, the minister should hear what has been said about some of these social services. Ask the farmers about the Canada Pension Plan, the unemployment insurance scheme and so on. Ask the farmers about the dairy commission. Now there is an example of Liberalism. This dairy policy was shoved down the throats of dairymen and regurgitated by the senator for socialism, who introduced an amendment in the Senate to correct deficiencies in the government policy.

Speaking of deficiencies, I draw attention to the fact that no mention is made of farm improvement loans or of the inability of farmers to arrange such loans. The minister, however, did find time to comment upon the inadequacies of small business loans and the Industrial Development Bank. Surely the Minister of Agriculture could be expected to devote some time to farm problems. It is not enough to slough off the difficult problems, as he did on January 25 when he spoke in Victoria. At that time he asked:

> And what of the farmers of Canada? They represent a very substantial proportion of our population. They make a great contribution to Canada's economy.

This is the statement the minister made when speaking to a farm organization. He does not say, you represent a very substantial proportion of our population. He does not say, you make an important contribution. However, the minister did say:

The main reason we enjoy so high a standard of living—have money for skidoos, outboard motors, a car in every garage, and all the other goodies, is because the efficiency and productivity of our farmers is the highest in the world.

Then the minister continues:

Hence, we have cheap food,—

When he says "we", does he mean the government of today?

—as compared with other lands and the vast proportion of our incomes is left for the so-called good things of life.

Does the minister compliment the farmer? Does the minister congratulate the farmer? Does the minister even acknowledge the farmer's contribution? He does not. He does say that the right to food, and food at cheap prices, we take for granted. He stops right there. The minister did say, however, that we are very proud of our accomplishments in the industrial sector. Again I ask, when he refers to "we" does he mean the government of today? Far from being constructive in his remarks the minister stated three times what the farmer already knows, that it is the farmer who is at the mercy of the marketplace over which he has virtually no control. In addition, he stated that the prices the farmer receives have gone up at a slower pace than the prices of the things he must buy.

Now, what about farm organizations? The minister has said absolutely nothing about his department's reaction to the agricultural dilemma of 1968. What methods should be adopted in order that the farmer may gain a greater degree of control over the marketplace? I quote what the minister had to say about methods of farm organization:

The first method would be for the farmer to gain a greater degree of control over the marketplace. This might be accomplished through farmer organization, and the realization of one strong and unified voice to speak for farmers.

I wonder whether the minister will say the same thing to the farmers union when their delegation is here on March 7?

Such an organ could readily achieve the right to negotiate an adequate price structure. The plenitude of marketing boards in various jurisdictions is evidence of the effort by farmers to obtain a degree of control over the marketplace.

The alternative road to a more equitable income pattern is direct government intervention, whereby the farmer would be recompensed for his production through some form of governmental income policy. I think most would agree that measures to achieve equity through a more effective control of the marketplace should be explored to the full before resorting to the second expedient.

• (4:30 p.m.)

In an incomes policy lie the inherent dangers of government control—the waste of an expanding bureaucracy to administer the programs, and the inevitable loss of freedom and individual flexibility.

I honestly do not believe that the minister would seriously consider the second method. He stated when he announced his bid for the leadership in Regina that he did not believe in a national farm policy that would tell farmers what to plant, when to sell their crops and how much they would receive for them. That socialist concept has fallen flat on its face in socialist countries.

These methods might be adopted by the member who considers himself the successor to the present minister, but I suspect they would never be implemented by the minister who considers himself a reform Liberal and on one occasion he said that things are better done if the people do them for themselves.

But what happens when people do things for themselves, Mr. Chairman? An example was provided last May 24. The minister speaks of one unified voice for agriculture. On May 24 last there were 20,000 unified voices on parliament hill and to date their demands have not been met. Last night the minister spoke of sums of money running into millions and billions. Therefore I ask, why the shifting and evasive reaction to the dairymen's request for $5 milk? The minister talks of millions while in effect failing to act over 25 cents.

What did the farmers ask for last May? These 20,000 farmers asked for $5 a hundredweight milk. No action has been taken on this request. They asked for a coherent, comprehensive, long-range program for all segments of agriculture. They asked for a publicly stated policy for agriculture, including a set of goals, for the institution of government programs to achieve those goals, for forward planning by the government that would let farmers plan their own business. Yet no action has been taken.

No action has been taken on a realistic minimum level of income for those engaged in agriculture. Neither has action been taken on commencing specific food export programs, or on a standard of living for farmers equal to comparable operations in industry, or on making adequate provision for those moving from farms as well as those remaining.

No action has been taken to bring about a stronger policy to prevent corporate encroachment into agriculture or on the government plan to pay the cost of cheap food. We need a clear government policy on land use and tighter regulations to stop food dumping in Canada by other countries. In this respect the situation today is worse than it was last May.

These 20,000 farmers also asked for more public discussion on farm policy, and this they have achieved. However, from the sound of the discussion the minister can expect another march in May. The C.F.A. once more has requested that action be taken on these matters. I ask the minister what action he is going to take.

On March 7, the National Farmers Union will be submitting their brief on the future of farming. I have challenged the Minister of Agriculture to deliver his speech of last evening to the National Farmers Union. Let the minister ask them about farming. Let him ask the farmers of Canada. If the minister has the courage of his convictions, as he appeared to have last night, then he might ask them about the prices of wheat, barley, sugar beets, hogs, cattle and sheep. Let the minister ask them what they think of his dairy policy. It is the farmers who must live on the returns of their enterprises, and they have the answers, Mr. Chairman.

Let the minister tell the farmers of Canada how good things are, how rosy their future looks. The minister has made two speeches in the House of Commons on the estimates of his department. What he said on October 31, 1967, in effect, was that the farmers have never had it so good, that they were actually looking a gift horse in the mouth. The minister repeated that performance last night. The farmers of Canada today know that it is no gift horse they are looking in the mouth; it is the other end of the horse.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, yesterday and today the committee of supply has been spending some time discussing the estimates of the Department of Agriculture, and I think it is extremely appropriate that they should be so discussed. For many decades, not just during the period the government has been in office but for decades, agriculture has been the Cinderella of our economy. While other parts of the economy enjoyed a certain measure of affluence, agriculture has always been the industry that has been the last to enjoy the benefits of a period of advance and the first to feel the effects of a period of economic contraction.

I am not interested in debating whether conditions in agriculture were worse when the Progressive Conservatives were in office or worse now that the Liberal party is in office. What concerns me is that agriculture has not been getting its fair share of the national income but is rapidly becoming a depressed industry in Canada. I am convinced that parliament needs to thrash out agricultural programs that will make it possible for farmers to stay on their farms and to make a living somewhat commensurate with that enjoyed by people engaged upon other endeavours.

Last night I listened with great interest to the minister who I noticed spent a good deal of his time pointing to the improvement in farm income and in the sale and export of farm commodities from 1962 to 1966. The minister, of course, was replying to the Leader of the Opposition and seeking to point out that under the present administration farmers were better off than they were under the previous administration.

The minister was very careful, I should point out, to deal with farm income and farm sales up to the end of 1966. However, we are now in 1968 and must deal with the crisis facing agriculture today. If the minister wants to take credit, as he did last night, for the improvement in farm income and farm sales from 1962 to 1966, then he must now accept the blame and the responsibility for the fact that farm income and farm sales have been falling off since 1966.

Let me point out to the committee what is happening with respect to farm income as far as we have statistics available. The D.B.S. figures show that net income received from farm production, seasonally adjusted at annual rates for the first three quarters of 1967 compared with the first three quarters of 1966, works out as follows: The net cash income in 1966 was $2,060 million; for the first three quarters of 1967 it was $1,864 million, a decline of $196 million. This, of course, is what is causing concern in farm circles because the decline in the first nine months of 1967 was continued in the last quarter of that year and is being continued at the present time. Furthermore, if we take the trouble to look at the index of prices received by farmers we find that in 1962 the index stood at 272.2 while in 1966 it was 297.2. So there has been an increase of 25.2 points or 9.26 per cent. But if we look at what happened in the first ten months of 1967 we find that the index of prices received by farmers for the commodities they sell declined to 290.1, a reduction of 7.1 points or 2.4 per cent. Whatever the minister may say about the situation from 1962 to 1966, the fact remains that in 1967—and I am sure the same will be found true for 1968—farm income has declined. The index of farm prices is declining.

It should be noted that while the index of the prices which farmers receive for their products is declining the index of the prices farmers have to pay for the things they require in order to produce has been rising steadily. The reports show that the composite figure for prices paid by farmers for everything they buy, except their actual living costs, was 290.7 in 1962. In 1966 it was 343.2, an increase of 52.5 points or 18 per cent. But in 1967, when, as I have just shown, the farm index for the prices the farmers received was going down the index for the prices they have to pay for the things they buy went up to 362, an increase from 1966 of 18.8 points or 5.4 per cent.

May I pause to ask the committee to look at that figure? The statistics we have from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics show that the cost of living for all Canadians went up by 4½ per cent. But the prices which the farmer has had to pay for the goods he requires went up by 5.48 per cent, almost a whole percentage point more. So the picture for the past 12 or 14 months is crystal clear. At a time when the index of the prices of the things the farmer has to sell has gone down by 2.4 per cent the prices he has to pay for the things he requires have gone up by almost 5½ per cent.

This cost-price squeeze is not something which has just come about recently. The whole story of agriculture is told in the D.B.S. figures. The publication I have in my hands is, I think, the most recent. It gives index figures for both the prices which the farmer receives and for the things he must buy. A base period from 1935 to 1939 is taken as being 100. By August, 1967, the index price for the commodities and services used by farmers had risen from 100 to 367.1. On the other hand, the price index for the materials used by farmers had gone up to 302.1. Here we have a spread of some 65 points. The price index of the commodities and services used in farm living had increased by August, 1967, to 264.6.

The whole story of agriculture is summed up in these indices. Over a period of years, taking 1935-39 as the base period, a gap of some 20 per cent has arisen between the prices the farmer has been receiving and the prices he is compelled to pay, even assuming that in the base period they were comparable, which they were not.

One of the major factors in the increase in the farmers' cost of living has, of course, been farm implement prices. I remember that when the minister was appointed to his present portfolio following the last election in 1965 he made a trip through western Canada. The farmers welcomed him. It was the first time they had had an eastern Minister of Agriculture for a long time, and I must say the minister made a very good impression. And he made some excellent speeches. No one could deny the minister's ability to make very eloquent and impressive speeches.

The minister told the farmers what they already knew, namely, that their farm prices were much too high, and he said he was going to do something about them. Well, the interesting thing is that the index for farm machinery prices issued by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics shows that in 1965 it was 284.9 and in 1967 302.5, an increase of some 17.6 percentage points or almost 6 per cent.

It is true that the minister has appointed a royal commission. I am never sure whether these royal commissions are appointed to do something or to give the government an excuse for not doing anything. Over the years we have had investigations into the price of farm machinery. I was a member of the agricultural committee back in the 1930's when we had a two-year investigation into the high price of farm machinery. We have had investigation after investigation.

There is no doubt about the fact that the high price of farm machinery has been a major factor in raising the farmers' costs of production. There is no doubt about the fact that the labour cost per unit of machinery has actually gone down, so that wages cannot be used as an excuse for increased farm machinery prices. Yet the fact remains that farm implement prices have continued to increase steadily. Even in the past 12 months they have increased by 3.2 per cent.

Like most members, I will be glad to hear what the minister proposes to do about the high price of farm machinery. It is now over two years since he promised to do something about the fact that the farmer was being exploited by the farm implement monopoly. Everyone is prepared to give the minister ample time to investigate, to gather the facts, to work out a policy, but surely something over two years is more than adequate for the minister to bring some concrete proposals before parliament. So far he has failed to do so and the cost of farm machinery continues to rise.

Last evening the minister talked about sales of wheat and the price of wheat. The plight of the wheat producer in the prairies was summed up by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture in their brief, and just one paragraph is all one needs to quote:

> The Canadian wheat producer has faced a combination of rising costs, falling prices, and shrinking world marketings—a combination calculated to sharply and seriously undermine his income position.

The decline in the sales of wheat is something which is causing great concern not only to the prairie farmers but to the entire prairie economy. The minister quoted with great glee the large sales of wheat made under the present administration in 1963, 1964, 1965 and 1966. One could point out that these sales of wheat were largely due to the fact that there were very serious crop failures in certain parts of the world. These increased sales were due to a windfall of large exports of wheat to the communist countries, but last night the minister took all the credit for these increased sales of wheat. I submit that if he is going to accept praise for the increased sales he must now accept the blame for the very serious decline in the sales of wheat, and not only himself but also the Minister of Trade and Commerce who is primarily the minister responsible.

From July 1 to February 14, which is the latest figure we have, wheat sold by Canada for export purposes amounted to 126.5 million bushels compared with 283.1 million bushels for the same period in the previous year. That is a decline of 156.6 million bushels. That means that in the present crop year we have sold only about 40 per cent of what we sold in the same period of the previous crop year. When we get down to selling only two-fifths of the wheat we sold in the previous crop year then I suggest that the wheat economy is in trouble.

[Mr. Douglas.]

The minister, of course, will argue that this is due to the international situation but I would point out that the United States, which is a much larger exporter of wheat, for the same period of time has had a decline in its wheat sales of only 28.7 million bushels, and the United States department of agriculture is confidently predicting that in this crop year they will sell 750 million bushels of wheat compared with 742 million bushels in the previous crop year. They are confident that they will sell more wheat in this crop year than they sold in the last crop year.

It may be that the prediction of the Minister of Trade and Commerce that we shall sell 350 million to 400 million bushels of wheat in this crop year will be realized. I certainly hope it will, but even if it is, this will be considerably below previous years. But if we are going to sell 350 million to 400 million bushels in this crop year we will have to do much better than we have done so far this year.

It is not only a matter of sales of wheat—I will come back to those in a moment—it is also a matter of price. There is good reason to be concerned about price. On May 25 last, as recorded at page 577 of Hansard, when discussing the new 1967 international wheat arrangement the Minister of Trade and Commerce said:

> On the matter of price, it is understood in trade terms that this means the new price range which I have reported to the house will be observed in the months ahead until the new agreement becomes fully effective.

Of course we know that those were empty words. The minister may have intended that the new price range would be observed in the months ahead but, as every member from western Canada knows, when the international wheat agreement expired on July 31, 1967, the United States began to dump wheat well below the price range which had been proposed for the new international wheat arrangement. It was because of this that the government was compelled to introduce a floor price of $1.95½ for Canadian wheat What the farmers are concerned about is what happens after the end of June because the $1.95½ floor is effective only until June 30 this year.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Does the government intend to guarantee that floor? Will sufficient importing countries sign the agreement that we will be assured that all the wheat we sell will bring the farmers a minimum of $1.95½? For an 11-month period we have been without the protection of the old international wheat agreement. The only protection the wheat farmer has now is the temporary guarantee the government has given of $1.95½ a bushel basis Fort William effective until June 30.

What about the future? What are the prospects? I think the Minister of Trade and Commerce owes the wheat farmers of western Canada a clearcut statement concerning what the prospects are for the future and whether the government will continue that floor price or whether it will be the present floor price or another one. I do not need to tell the committee that on March 7, 1963, in the city of Saskatoon the Prime Minister made a firm commitment to the farmers of western Canada that there would be a guaranteed floor price of $2 a bushel and, moreover, that there would be a two-price system for wheat. We have never heard any more about that promise. That was a firm commitment made by the leader of the Liberal party and the man who is now Prime Minister of Canada.

I believe the government owes it to the farmers to state what the government's policy is with regard to wheat prices because since 1963, when the Prime Minister talked about a guaranteed price of $2 a bushel, the cost of living has gone up by some 14 per cent and the cost of producing a bushel of wheat has gone up by more than that amount. This is why the Federation of Agriculture is talking now about a guarantee of $2.12 a bushel for wheat sold in the export market and $3.12 a bushel for wheat sold on the domestic market. Fortunately or unfortunately for the government—I do not know which—western Liberals at a conference a few weeks ago attended by the Minister of Agriculture adopted a similar policy.

It is not enough for the Prime Minister on the hustings and for the Liberals in conference in Winnipeg to talk about a guaranteed price of $2.12 a bushel for export wheat and $3.12 a bushel for domestic wheat unless this is put into effect. Are we to believe that the government when it makes these proposals to the farmers during a political campaign or at a political conference is simply talking for public effect and has no intention whatever of doing anything about establishing a reasonable floor for wheat prices and establishing a two-price system?

May I conclude, Mr. Chairman, by saying that no one thinks the Minister of Agriculture has a simple problem. As I said when I began, agriculture undoubtedly has been the depressed industry of Canada for a long time. Part of the plight of agriculture is inherent in the type of economy we are developing in Canada and in North America. We are developing increasingly an economy of which a very large part is controlled by what Galbraith has called the oligopoly, a collection of gigantic monopolies which are able to establish prices of things like steel, automobiles, farm machinery and a whole score of items. These corporations are so powerful that they can generate their own capital requirements, control their own supplies and virtually set their own prices. Among them there is little in the way of competition price-wise. Their competition may be in service, advertising or in gimmicks. But the prices of the commodities in the administered section of our economy are largely set by the industries themselves.

Against this is the fact that part of our economy still operates on a competitive basis. This includes the service industries, some of the smaller industries in the retail trade, and particularly the agricultural industry. Consequently we have in our economy, on the one hand, a great oligopoly with fixed prices uninfluenced by the law of supply and demand and, on the other hand, the competitive part of our economy in which the farmers who must buy in the protected administered market must then turn around and sell in a competitive market whether they are selling domestically or overseas. They sell on the basis of competition while they buy the things they require in a protected market.

The Chairman: Order. I must advise the hon. member that the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

The Chairman: Does the hon. member wish to continue?

Mr. Douglas: I should like to finish if I may, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Does the hon. member have the unanimous consent of the committee to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Douglas: The point I wish to make, Mr. Chairman, is that of course we cannot turn back the hands of the clock. We cannot go back to a completely competitive system or reproduce the laissez-faire system of the nineteenth century, even if it ever existed. The fact is that a large part of our economy is now controlled; it has administered prices and we will not be able to abolish that. We must now look at the competitive part of our society which has no protection and which, as I said, must buy in a protected administered market and sell in an open competitive market with very disastrous results. Therefore, what Canada needs is a national agricultural policy that will take cognizance of the fact that if agriculture is left to sink or swim in this kind of economy it does not stand a chance of survival.

This means there are a number of things that this or any government in office must do. It must take some steps to protect the agricultural producers against unfair competition. The greenhouse industry, the potato growers and the dairy farmers are already experiencing this kind of unfair competition.

I am not suggesting that we build great tariff walls behind which the prices are exorbitant; I am pointing out that there are periods of time when unfair competition can so completely wreck the market for domestic producers that they may be put out of business and we may find ourselves at the mercy of importers who, having eliminated the domestic producers, are able charge us any price they like. It seems to me that one task this government must undertake is the provision of adequate measures of protection against unfair competition.

I think the government is going to have to adopt a system of guaranteed prices for a great many farm products. If the prices which the farmer has to pay for machinery, for a car, for steel, lumber and other construction materials are going to be set by monopolies over which he has no control, then surely the economy must be prepared to see that there are some guaranteed prices for the farmer.

I want to suggest also that the government is going to have to bestir it itself in order to do something about overseas markets for our farm products. We listened to the minister speak yesterday about the large exports of grain, about which we are all delighted, but we must remember that a very large part of these exports resulted from sales to Communist countries which had experienced drought and crop failure. In the crop year 1965-66 we sold 765 million bushels of grain, but there is no evidence that this is going to recur. So far this year I believe we have sold some 75 million bushels of grain to the Soviet union and 78 million bushels to China. What is being done about these markets and what is the government doing to encourage these countries to continue to buy from us?

I am not just talking about exports credits. In the main these countries can only afford to trade with us only if we work out two-way trade relations; otherwise they will be merely occasional buyers. They will buy from us only when they are in desperate straits. There is no doubt about the fact that so far as the Soviet union is concerned, for instance, it would be much cheaper for them to buy Canadian wheat for their Siberian requirements and have it shipped from Vancouver through Vladivostok than to bring it up from the Ukraine. There is no doubt there will be a growing market for Canadian wheat for many years in China provided China can pay for it. The problem involved in paying for it is related to the earning of Canadian dollars. What are we doing about building up two-way trade so we can have a permanent market there?

We have a market in Europe and we want to hold on to it, but that market is not likely to expand in keeping with the increased productivity which our farmers are capable of demonstrating. If we are going to sell the increasingly large amount of wheat our farmers are likely to produce on the prairies we will have to develop markets in the Orient, in China and in southeast Asia, if the Viet Nam war ever ceases, and in Siberia. This is only going to be done on the basis of two-way trading agreements. I hope the Minister of Trade and Commerce is going to tell us what he is doing about this.

Finally, the government must look at what part the Canadian farmer can play in foreign aid programs in many parts of the world. It is a reflection of the lack of ingenuity on the part of human beings that in a world where 1,500 million people go to bed hungry every night we should be worrying about the huge surpluses of food we have in this country. There are markets abroad, and to sell to them in some cases may involve loans. In some cases it may mean accepting soft currency and in some cases it may mean outright gifts. I suspect that the outright gifts we might have to make would still amount to much less than what we are spending on armaments, and I have the strong feeling that outright gifts of food would do more in the long run to preserve the peace of the world than the money we are spending on obsolete military hardware. This is a field that has to be considered.

The consumption in our own country must be considered. What has happened to the school lunch program that was talked about and the free milk for children in schools? The United States has experimented very successfully with a food stamp program which allows elderly people, old age pensioners and people below a certain income level to obtain food stamps so they can purchase food more cheaply. Surely there is no end to the possibilities for disposing of food. There is no doubt about the farmers' ability to produce food. No industry in Canada has increased its productivity more per individual employed than agriculture. The agricultural industry has produced so successfully and efficiently it has almost put itself out of business. No other industry has shown such a remarkable capacity to increase its commodity per person employed. The farmer has done his part.

The responsibility now lies with the government and with parliament to work out, first, the kind of programs which will give to the farmer a reasonable return for his commodity, which will enable him to maintain himself and his family and meet his obligations and, second, to work out programs by which the large quantities of food produced by farmers in this country are made available to people who need them both in this country and in many lands around the world.

I have no desire to make picayune criticisms of the minister, because this problem is much larger than any small, single issue. The real need in Canada is for the government as a whole, including not only the Minister of Agriculture but the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Finance, to work out a national agricultural policy which recognizes that farmers in a competitive economy, and part of a large administered economy, must have government assistance and government direction. If the government is prepared to work out such a national agricultural policy I can assure him that he will have our wholehearted support. I say to the government that if it continues to ignore this problem and merely puts patches on what is a badly torn garment, the situation will go from bad to worse. Every time the agricultural industry gets worse this in turn has an adverse effect on the economy as a whole. The people of the cities are to a very large extent dependent upon the purchasing power of the people on the farms. A healthy agricultural industry is a basic prerequisite to a strong and expanding Canadian economy.

Mr. Watson (Assiniboia): Mr. Chairman, after listening to the minister speak last night I could not help but think of that beautiful picture he painted of western agriculture. I was reminded of jet streams at 37,000 feet above Saskatchewan. The view the minister had of the prairies must have been from that distance.

It is now obvious to all farmers that the Canadian negotiators at Geneva, including the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Agriculture, were simply taken into camp by the wheat importing countries. Wheat is now selling at 22 cents below the price in April and 4 cents below the minimum of $1.95½.

The situation in which the western farmer finds himself is particularly serious in view of developments that tend to put the farmer in a cost-price squeeze from which there is no escape. The prices that farmers must pay have risen all along the line to the point where they have to pay nearly double what they were paying seven or eight years ago for the things they need. The government is directly responsible for a great deal of this inflation. This is the unanimous opinion of economists, the provincial premiers, newspaper writers and even the president of the Economic Council of Canada, Mr. Smith. Recent reports of the Economic Council of Canada and an article which appeared in the New York Times written by Arthur J. R. Smith, the president of the council, in January reveal that government spending has been growing at an unsustainable rate.

Many of the things farmers buy are subject to the 11 per cent sales tax. Building materials are still subject to this tax. The farmer has been heavily taxed through rising prices of consumer goods, since he is one of the nation's major consumers. In the past five years he has paid a heavy indirect tax amounting to 18 per cent and 20 per cent on almost everything he buys. Yet the rise in the price of farm products has been small in comparison and in many cases there has been a decrease in the price of the things the farmer sells, such as wheat, cattle and hogs.

In 1951 for the entire year prime steers averaged 31 cents a pound at the Alberta markets. Though costs have soared cattle prices are well below what they were 15 years ago. At the same time, the consumer is paying for beef twice what he paid at that time. Somebody is making a tremendous profit, and I can assure the minister that it is not the farmer. Now the ministers of this government tell us that the farmers have never had it so good. If this is a joke, I say it is certainly in bad taste with the farmers. The government has made no move to protect the interests of the farmer. Western farmers realize that this is a normal situation under a Liberal government.

Everybody in western Canada recalls the mountains of wheat we had out there in 1956 and 1957. That was also a time when a Liberal government was in office. The attitude at that time was: If people want this wheat, let them come and get it. The attitude now is: Let us give it away. I say to the minister and the government that they cannot even do that this year.

I have here a clipping from last Saturday's Leader-Post which says that wheat exports are down 58 per cent. The article reads in part:

> Canada's wheat and flour exports were down 58 per cent in the first five months of the current crop year, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics reported today. Sales from August to the end of December totalled 110 million bushels in terms of wheat equivalent, compared with 260,800,000 bushels for the same period of the previous crop year.

Another article headed, "Lower Beef Prices Seen," reads:

> While prices of other meats may strengthen in March, beef prices are easing downward.

Despite these facts the minister in his speech last night left the impression that the farmers of western Canada never had it so good. This government has perpetrated a betrayal of the interests of the western farmers. At the same time it has neglected and ignored the farmers of eastern Canada. Last summer we saw on parliament hill 10,000 eastern Canadian farmers who put their views before the government. Ministers who have no conception of the problems the farmers have to face told them to be good boys and that they never had it so good. Then they locked the doors of the parliament buildings.

We now have a situation which all the eloquence of the Minister of Agriculture cannot conceal. Wheat prices have slumped drastically because two ministers who know absolutely nothing about wheat went to Geneva and gave away everything to the serious detriment of the western farmer. I can understand the predicament of these ministers. They go on the international circuit and do not want to hurt the feelings of anybody but the western farmer. Apparently they were ready to agree to anything. Why is it that every time a Liberal government is in office the western farmer has the rug pulled out completely from under him? When the Conservative party was in office these things did not happen.

Mr. Roxburgh: Nothing happened.

Mr. Watson (Assiniboia): We did not see the hon. member for Qu'Appelle going to these conferences and handing over the interests of western Canada on a silver platter. Under this government we face sagging prices, diminishing markets, uncertain prospects and a refusal to face facts. Why do they not admit they have made a mess? Why try to kid the western farmer?

The Minister of Agriculture found out, when he met the western stock growers in Calgary a couple of weeks ago, that you do not kid the western rancher either. The trouble with this government is that there are on the other side of the house so many leadership hopefuls that to them running the country is just a part time occupation. What do they care if the western farmer faces higher costs and has to pay $16,000 for a combine that in 1962 could be purchased for $12,000? What do they care about the small farmer who could buy a 30-inch combine from 1950 to 1955 for $5,000 and who today have to pay $10,000 for the same type of machine?

A few years ago the Minister of Finance, who was minister of trade and commerce at the time, was playing around with the wheat board. At that time he went to western Canada, I believe to the city of Moose Jaw, and asked the farmers to cut back on their production. Then a little later he came out west and asked them to grow all they could.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Agriculture went to Geneva representing our farmers, and again the western farmer was taken for a ride. Those ministers must have been consulting the Minister of Finance because they decided the Canadian farmer did not need protection during the period when there would be no wheat agreement.

What has happened? While the Canadian farmer has been completely unprotected the Americans have forced down prices in order to unload as much surplus wheat as they can. They have done this with the consent or through the ignorance of this government. Talk about the blind leadings the blind. United States markets have stayed up while Canadian markets are down 58 per cent. During this time the costs of the western farmer have increased.

On October 31 the Minister of Agriculture told us how wonderful it all was, and again last night in his speech he told the farmers of western Canada and those concerned with agriculture in general that they never had it so good. While prices were falling all around he spoke of the high prices we have enjoyed on the average in the past five years. I point out that we have also enjoyed very high costs, and these costs are getting higher. At the same time the price of farm products is falling. The government and its members have only one thing in mind, the leadership convention that will take place in the first part of April.

Is this parliament going to sit by while the western wheat producer is taken for a ride? On October 31 the minister in his speech mentioned that an average farm in the province of Saskatchewan contains 763 acres at the present time. I would like the minister to look at a 700-acre farm in Saskatchewan. The Canadian Wheat Board has said that we will be lucky if we get a six bushel quota. That means that 4,200 bushels is all that a western farmer can sell. This will bring in approximately $6,500. In what situation does this put the western farmer with a family to keep, taxes to pay, the increased cost of machinery to face, and debts to pay off? What other group of people in Canada would be expected to pay for all these things on a $6,500 income, and on top of that to buy the land and the machinery to go with it?

• (5:30 p.m.)

A drop in the economy of western Canada, which we appear to be facing in the next few months, will produce repercussions right across the country, in the automobile showrooms, the farm implement business, retail merchandising, and also in investment. A drop in western prosperity will be immediately reflected in eastern Canada. If there is a continuing rise in unemployment we will be able to thank this government and its policies. Just recently the Saskatchewan government released a white paper showing a 37 per cent drop in farmers income in 1967. I should like to quote the following article from the Financial Times of February 12, 1968, headed, "Saskatchewan Tightening Its Belt After 'Only Average' Crop":

As wheat goes in Saskatchewan, so goes the provincial economy and in 1967 several areas of the provincial economy deteriorated.

A government white paper last week showed drops in total income, net value of commodity production and housing completions. . . .

Total personal income dropped 6 per cent to $2 billion in 1967—a drop of 37 per cent in farm income. . .

Farm machinery investments dropped, though, because of the smaller crop.

The wheat crop for 1967 totalled 339 million bushels, about 37 per cent lower than in the previous year—but higher operating and depreciation costs are expected to reduce net farm income to about $329 million—about 37 per cent lower than in 1966.

Having been a farmer in western Canada and knowing what the real pinch is, I think this is a very true picture. We in Saskatchewan have a wheat crop of 339 million bushels, which is 37 per cent lower than in 1966. The average yield is 17.7 bushels, 10 per cent under the 1957-1966 average. Net farm income in Saskatchewan was $329 million in 1967, down 37 per cent from $751 million the previous year.

We have heard the Minister of Trade and Commerce congratulating himself on having extended the range of the agreement. This does not help the farmer at a time when we have a low minimum price and prices which go below that minimum as well as a falling off in general sales. The western wheat farmer, in view of his massive commitments, cannot be expected to view the situation with calmness. I am sorry I cannot take the same optimistic view of the situation as do the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Since neither of them is caught in a cost-price squeeze in the face of falling prices and falling markets they can afford to be unmoved, but the western farmer cannot.

What about the final wheat payment in 1969? This is when the western farmers will realize that as a result of the lack of sales in the current crop year there will be practically no final wheat payment in 1969. It was an unpardonable example of gullibility for these ministers to leave Canada and the Canadian wheat producer without the protection of the international wheat agreement for a whole year. It is all right to be an international good fellow, but already this action has cost the western farmer and the Canadian economy more than Expo—well over $100 million. At the same time, wheat sales are sagging because of United States undercutting made possible by the failure to insist on maintaining or extending the wheat agreement. Many countries have held off their wheat purchases in anticipation of falling prices.

It is all very well for the Minister of Trade and Commerce to rush down to Washington and extract a few cents out of them when what we should be getting is at least 25 cents more for a bushel of our western wheat. That is what the western farmer wants and what he needs. What is the use of producing the world's finest wheat if the government is going to dump it on the market like so much garbage? The farmer does not want throw-away wheat, nor does he want give-away wheat. The western farmer is feeling the pinch and the whole Canadian economy will feel it when the returns are in. The government can look to itself for having bungled the wheat situation by its amateur tactics.

On September 27 the minister said in the house that he was disappointed with our sales to Japan. The western farmers are also disappointed. We are disappointed with the whole sorry story of government bumbling and inability to drive a bargain on behalf of the producers. We have done our share and we do not relish being undercut by the government's incompetence. We realize that the wheat boom is over at present. It is not over because people all round the world do not need our wheat. It is over because the government has not done its job properly. I suggest that if they cannot sell wheat and carry on successful negotiations they should take the advice of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle who has an outstanding record in this respect.

In recent years wheat has become the mainstay of our nation's economy. Under this government it is once again being relegated to a secondary position. Here is a government which spends its time and the taxpayers' money on phony publicity stunts like the war on poverty, reports on American investment, without which we could not live in this country, and a host of other meaningless and time-wasting schemes and programs. At the same time it is unable to look after the basic housekeeping of this nation, such as the sale of wheat, keeping prices and taxes down and giving to Canadians the opportunity to expand in the prosperity which should be ours. The government has frittered away prosperity. Now they come to us expecting congratulations because, as they say, they have kept us out of the poorhouse. Canada's wheat is needed. The market is there. The production is there. It is up to the government to come back to reality and forget about the leadership ambitions of some of its members. They should rather look after the essential business of the country.

[Mr. Watson (Assiniboia).]

Another factor leading to insecurity is the question of how much wheat China will take next year. The government is saying nothing about that. If there is a serious falling off in the amount of wheat that China buys from us the economy, not only of western Canada but of the nation in general, will be in deep trouble. We want the government and the minister to give us the facts on these matters. We want from the minister an assurance that he and his department will get the wheat moving. We want an assurance as to prices and the volume of sales so that farmers can have some idea of what the future holds under this government.

• (5:40 p.m.)

The whole picture is one of uncertainty and it is growing worse day by day. The decline of 100 million bushels in exports this year at a time when United States sales are picking up cannot be explained to the Canadian farmer. I suggest that neither the Minister of Agriculture nor the Minister of Trade and Commerce go to western Canada and attempt to justify that situation. If either of them really has leadership ambitions he should think very seriously of a way to solve the wheat problem. There has to be a stepped-up selling campaign. We do not intend to return to the days when the western producer was a sitting duck for the lack of activity on the part of the government. The wheat situation is extremely grave, so not only the western farmer but the whole Canadian economy and the government had better get moving on it at once.

Western agriculture is in a serious situation. The constituency I represent includes approximately 45 rural municipalities. Of those rural municipalities, approximately 38 will receive P.F.A.A. payments during the year 1968. Whenever this number of farmers receives P.F.A.A. payments it is a good indication that western agriculture is in a serious situation. Last evening the minister mentioned the Farm Credit Corporation and the amount of money that had been borrowed from that organization. I believe he said that in 1962 about $78 million had been lent by the Farm Credit Corporation and in 1966 the amount was $234 million. I can assure the minister and the members of this committee that no farmer in western Canada is proud of borrowing money. If he had the money in his pocket which he should have he would not have to go to the Farm Credit Corporation to borrow these amounts.

Before concluding I should like to say a few words about P.F.R.A. Again I ask the minister, does he realize what he is doing to the western farmer? The best program for helping the farmer with water problems was the dugout and dam assistance program under P.F.R.A. This program paid 7½ cents per cubic yard for dugouts and dams up to a maximum of $300. The situation now is that the rate remains at 7½ cents per cubic yard but the maximum has been lowered to $150. In reality this means only one thing to the western farmer. The rate has been cut to 3¾ cents per cubic yard but the department has put it in different language. I do not know whether the department believes the western farmer is really that stupid.

In western Canada we realize that P.F.R.A. engineers, with their many years of experience in building the South Saskatchewan dam, for example, are the best trained men to deal with these problems. These men are now being transferred to the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and an attempt is being made to scuttle P.F.R.A. at a time when western agriculture has experienced one of the dryest years it has had. No group in Canada understands the water problems of western Canada better than the P.F.R.A. officials. I should like to quote a letter I received from the Rural Municipality of the Gap No. 39 pertaining to this situation. It reads:

> At an agricultural conservation and improvement committee meeting held on February 26, considerable discussion took place with regard to the reduction of grants for farm dugouts and the following resolution was passed by the local committee which consists of the whole council and two other farmers at large;
> "Considerable discussion took place with regard to the reduction of grants to be paid by the federal government and it was moved by Andrew Barbarin that the secretary send a letter of protest to the Hon. J. J. Greene and request that the federal grant be reinstated to what is was formerly..."

These are the problems faced by western Canada today. Recently, however, another problem has developed and I am not sure the minister has had it brought to his attention. The hon. member for Moose Mountain referred to it briefly yesterday. I refer to the effect Bill No. C-190 will have on the producers of p.m.u. which is shipped to the Ayerst laboratories in Brandon. Approximately 150 farmers in Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta will be affected if this problem is not solved. I believe that this major producing area in western Canada will be affected.

Mr. Moore: Mr. Chairman, I welcome the first chance for some time to discuss the present state of agriculture in Canada. I intend to confine my remarks specifically to the dairy industry. Before I commence may I say that I listened to the minister last evening comparing two government's policies. I think it is enough to say that the farmers can judge between the two policies. What they really want to know is, what comes next? They were not told this. After the minister's speech last night, however, I am sure the farmers will know that they have nothing to fear. They have been making more money than they thought they were.

In so far as the amount of money farmers are now borrowing is concerned, I point out that in most cases farmers borrow because they have to, not because they want to. They know how difficult it is to repay this money. I base my opinion on personal experience of over 30 years as a dairy farmer. The government's policy seems to be that rural poverty can be eliminated by getting rid of the farmers. If you get rid of the farmers, you get rid of the poverty. I would not like to try to tell the small dairy farmer who gets no subsidy that he never had it so good. I would not even like to tell the fluid milk shipper on a small quota that he never had it so good.

This government is not noted for having an agricultural policy but it does introduce a dairy policy each year, and a different one each year. The government hopes that this will keep the producers reasonably quiet until next year. The result is that the dairy farmer, who is running practically a lifetime operation, cannot make any long term plans. Policy is changed every year, sometimes even in mid-year, so a planned program is impossible. Guess who is left holding the bag as usual.

The Department of Agriculture, aided now by the Canadian Dairy Commission, has two separate pieces of advice for the dairy farmer designed to help him with his problems. These are two very interesting, separate pieces of advice. The first piece of advice is that he must increase his efficiency, enlarge his unit and work longer hours. This means working longer than the average of 13 hours a day for a dairyman. He must also cut his costs of production, and tell us how he does that these days. Finally, he must improve his herd.

• (5:50 p.m.)

With regard to herd improvement, what is the record achieved by Canadian stockmen who are breeders of dairy cattle? A couple of years ago Canadian breeders sold a dairy cow for the record sum of $42,000. Shortly afterwards another sold for $43,000. The highest price ever obtained at auction for a dairy bull by Canadian breeders was $115,000. Shortly after that a bull was sold to the American breeders association for $140,000, and since then $150,000 was paid for a sire used in Ontario in an A.I. unit. These sires are used by Canadian dairymen through the A.I. program.

Let us see if milk production has improved at all. A few years ago it was not very common to get a cow producing 20,000 pounds of milk a year. However, today it is common among the high producers, some of which have produced over 30,000 pounds. I believe that three such cows in Canada achieved this figure last year, though I could be wrong there. That means that over 1,000 pounds of butterfat, sometimes 1,200 pounds, is produced by a single cow in one year. If that is not an improvement I should like to know what is. I should also like to know what more the dairymen of Canada can do to improve their livestock.

The second piece of advice is that the dairyman should produce less milk. How you can produce less and at the same time increase production I have not yet figured out, though I may in time. If this does not solve the dairymen's problem, it will at least solve the problem of the minister and the dairy commission. How ridiculous can you get, Mr. Chairman?

A new dairy policy is due soon, though what it will consist of no one knows. If the dairy farmer is a good guesser he will be prepared to take advantage of the goodies it offers. Let us look at the last dairy policy for a moment since it is the one now in operation. More money was spent on subsidies than the year before but there was greater dissatisfaction, and I should like to know why. I can tell you why, Mr. Chairman. Producers who shipped under 50,000 pounds of milk or the equivalent in cream received no subsidy at all. This was one of the rank discriminations of the policy.

Who were the farmers affected by this discrimination? They were the smaller mixed farmers to whom the sale of milk from a few cows was an important part of their operation. I should like to know what principle the minister is adopting here. This discrimination could be removed to a certain extent when the figure drops to 12,000 pounds from 50,000 pounds. The yearly production of one good cow is 12,000 pounds. Any farmer who produces more will come within the policy. Nevertheless, the principle is still the same, and we must not forget that a large number of dairymen are affected by it. If the principle is correct, then any farmer who ships one pound of butterfat or one pound of manufacturing milk should receive the subsidy. The present policy discriminates against the fluid milk shipper, who must produce milk of highest quality and at even greater cost, with a huge outlay for equipment. I am having a little competition from across the aisle, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Moore: For example, Mr. Chairman, fluid milk shippers are required to instal a $4,000 or $5,000 cooling tank. The barn cleaning equipment costs $2,000. Most large dairymen have this equipment but fluid milk shippers must have it and also many other items of equipment. Yet they receive no subsidy for a large part of their milk which may be used for manufacturing purposes. In many instances the quota for the higher priced distribution milk is very small, and it is to these dairymen that I refer, not to those with a full quota. The provincial board may increase the price for this portion, thereby increasing the cost to the consumers and causing them to buy less milk. In turn, this cuts the farmer's quota even further.

I should like to give you an example of this, Mr. Chairman. Some months ago I met a group of fluid milk shippers in Alberta and they had their milk cheques in hand. We carefully figured out the average price that each received. One young man—I pick him because the government seems to feel that the older men should pack it up—received an average price of $3.31 per hundredweight before haulage charges were deducted, and believe me, Mr. Chairman, they cost enough. This is hardly in line with the minister's widely published $4.75 per hundred pounds for manufactured milk. This man operates in an area where the cows are stabled eight months a year and fed on hay costing from 50 cents to $1 a bale.

The dairy policy of the government has been one of discrimination and expediency. The method of payment and the administration are just too awkward to describe, as many members of the house who have dairy producers in their constituencies can testify.

Incidentally, Mr. Chairman, the government recommends that our farmers be more businesslike. The stabilization board and the dairy commission did not set a very good example during the past dairy year to the farmers who were supposed to be businesslike. I should like to quote from page 2 of the Canadian Dairy Commission statement of January 15, 1968:

> —the commission gives notice that this is the last year newcomers may receive subsidy quotas except by reallocation.

Is this common business practice or is it the action of a dictatorship? In a democratic country such as Canada it certainly amounts to arrogance. Has any man who purchases a herd of milk cows and is given a quota any guarantee that the quota will be honoured? This is a question that the Minister of Agriculture should answer. We are waiting for the answer and I hope we will have it today. I think the whole quota system requires very close scrutiny. May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: Order. It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, pensions of retired civil servants; the hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean, C.B.C. Radio—re broadcasts over CKRS-TV; the hon. member for Kootenay West, Finance—request for statement on economic and financial policy. It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Chairman: When the committee rose at six o'clock it had been considering vote 5c of the supplementary estimates of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Moore: Before we rose I was making reference to some of the dictatorial statements given out on January 15, 1968, by the Canadian Dairy Commission. No wonder farmers have been forced out of business by the hundreds; no wonder young men cannot be found to replace them, even if they could afford to do so—which they could not, anyway, in these times.

The minister has told us on many occasions that prices are higher than ever before. He compares them with prices under the former government. What a misleading comparison. Net returns are dependent on production costs, and this is all I need to say.

An hon. Member: He doesn't know any better.

Mr. Moore: Thank you.

This attitude on the part of the minister is not good enough. Under a Liberal government I sold milk for 48 cents a hundredweight. But that will not help the farmers of today. It is history. They are not interested in it.

It is noteworthy that a government supporter in the other place has introduced a bill to amend the Canadian Dairy Commission Act. I have read it and I have a copy here. I wonder why he is doing this. Surely it could not be for the sake of justifying an institution which once he wanted to abolish. He was at one time a member of this house and the chief agricultural critic for his party, or parties. He knows that the present act is not fair. My only criticism of his bill is that it does not go far enough; it only refers to discrimination against the small milk shippers or cream shippers. Nevertheless he deserves to be commended and his point is well taken.

Here is an industry which is already declining rapidly. Yet, through its policy the government is attempting to increase the rate at which dairymen all over Canada are going out of business. And it is succeeding. I would call your attention to this, Mr. Chairman: I have not asked the government to expend any more money. I have condemned it for failing to allocate the available funds more fairly. The minister should I suggest rectify this state of affairs when next he announces dairy policy. There is a limit to the amount which the government can pay in subsidies; we are all aware of that. But there is another aspect of this question. How much has the government spent on research to find new methods of processing and packaging so as to obtain new markets? Does the government intend to let other countries which have made great strides in this field get ahead of us, as usual? We have to remember that new markets will likely be found in countries where refrigeration is scarce or non-existent. Let us have a dairy policy next year designed to give all producers a bit of encouragement and a fair return for their labour in one of the hardest and most demanding professions in existence today.

Mr. Madill: In rising to make a few comments on the supplementary estimates of the Department of Agriculture I should like to deal specifically with the subject of farm improvement loans, farm credit loans and small business loans as they are related to agriculture. It is also my intention to make a few remarks about the marketing and grading of hogs.

First, as to the farm improvement loan legislation: This, with a fixed rate of interest provided, is no longer geared to present interest demands. It is no longer realistic. We are told that these loans are being made—or, sometimes, that the available funds have been exhausted. But today, at the rate of 5 per cent such loans as are made are available only to a few well established businessmen or farmers. Local bank managers are placed in an invidious position. They may recommend a small loan at the rate of 7 or 8 per cent, but the farmers themselves, particularly if they are young farmers, or less well established, often feel they are the object of discrimination. Loans at 5 per cent are limited to a few people who have been preferred borrowers over the years.

Bank managers maintain that farmers have proven themselves to be competent, realistic borrowers and that a lot of the red tape and paperwork demanded by the terms of the Farm Improvement Loans Act is unnecessary. Loans need no longer be underwritten by the government because farmers have proven that they will repay them. It is obvious that since banks are now paying 5 per cent on moneys on deposit it is unrealistic for them to lend money out to farmers at 5 per cent. I would recommend that the act be amended immediately in such a way as to accommodate all the farmers, fruit growers, fur farmers and others who wish to improve their buildings, operations livestock, drainage and so on. They should be able to use the provisions of the Farm Improvement Loans Act instead of resorting to finance houses which are set up to handle short term loans.

Incidentally, having mentioned farm improvements, I should like to point out that battery operated hoists which are now widely used in agriculture for the storage and removal of potatoes, apples and so on are subjected both to import tax and to sales tax—and in almost every case they are imported. In addition to many farm applications, they are used to load logs and lumber, still in the field of agriculture. In the interests of the industry in Canada I strongly urge the government to consider removing the tax in this case.

The second item I should like to mention concerns the Farm Credit Corporation. In my opinion much greater latitude could be exercised when extending credit, depending of course on the type of farm operation under consideration. It is true that dairy farmers are in a special position, but farmers who grow cash crops can certainly engage in other types of work and still operate successful farms. Should they do so, however, they are not eligible for loans under the present legislation. At a time when farmers are facing a growing cost-price squeeze the amount of credit available to them through the Farm Credit Corporation is to be reduced following federal government cut-backs.

The third subject I would mention briefly has to do with loans from the Industrial Development Bank to small businessmen, particularly implement dealers, feed mill operators, greenhouse operators, hatchery owners and others who conduct businesses related directly to farming. On many occasions I have tried to help some of these people get loans from the Industrial Development Bank. The applications have been refused politely but positively. What has happened to the government's stated intention of helping small business?

So far I have mentioned a few of the areas in which legislation could be updated and improvements introduced to help those engaged in agriculture to make a livelihood. At the beginning of my remarks I mentioned hog marketing and grading. I have a number of statistics I should like to put on record. The average weighted price of hogs in 1966 was $35.64. In 1967 the average was $30.40. That is quite a drop, especially when one realizes that the cost of the producer's operation has increased considerably. From January to June 1967 there were 18,568,200 pounds of fresh, frozen or cured pork imported at a cost of $7,063,000. Also in the period from January to June 1967 there were 25,603,163 pounds of pork and pork substitutes imported at a cost of $10,302,000. This does not make sense when our farmers who are raising hogs receive less money for what they produce.

In this connection it is interesting to note a reply written by the Minister of Agriculture to a letter in December, 1967, in which he stated:

It is true that some products, such as hogs, are suffering from a cycle of overproduction and lower prices. This has resulted from the higher prices for hogs over the past few years which encouraged some producers to increase their production with the result that for the past four or five months we have been marketing more hogs than there is a demand for pork products. Production, however, has been levelling off and it is expected that hog prices should firm up.

I just cannot see the relationship between that reply and the trend to import pork products, with reduced prices to our own farmers.

The other point I wish to take is with respect to the reduction in the premium on grade A hog carcasses from $3 to $2. I have received a resolution passed by the South Simcoe Hog Producers Association expressing very strong opposition to the reduction of the quality premium from $3 to $2. In their letter to me they say:

> We realize that there have to be reductions made in the costs of government operations, but the producers of high quality food feel that they are being unduly discriminated against in this proposed action of reducing the quality premium.

Over the years farmers have been trying to improve the grade of their hogs both from a breeding standpoint and from the standpoint of competing with Denmark. Britain was one of our markets which was very fond of lean pork. It must be remembered that it is much easier to produce a grade B hog than a grade A hog.

I have a letter here from a man in Hastings-Frontenac, which spells out the thoughts of quite a few farmers on this matter. It reads:

> I am just writing a letter to explain my feelings on the government's plan to cut back the premium on grade A hogs from $3 to $2. The reason given for this action is the government's economy measure.
> This amount being paid is peanuts to the government, but means a lot to farmers working on a slim margin of profit. I read a column in the Belleville paper last night about the amount of money being spent on an investigation to find out the status of the Canadian woman. This amount was half as much again as the money being spent in all of Canada on the premium of hogs.
> In Hastings county last year our production of hogs dropped to 21,000. We were the third highest county in Ontario in the highest percentage of grade A's with 51 per cent. The Ontario average is 44 per cent. A lean pork product is what the consumer is demanding and they want it cheap.
> I feel that the Ontario farmer is already paying more than his share to maintain a stable economy, and one thing for sure it is we who are underwriting much of the cost of the government's cheap food policy.
> I attended an agriculture college for three years trying to learn how to farm efficiently. I came back home to the farm, expanded by constructing new buildings, and purchasing more land to "stay in business," so the experts told me. Let me say that last year I didn't even make my interest on investment let alone a labour income. I market between 800 to 1,000 hogs annually and obtain about 70 per cent grade A's. If it were not for the premium of $3 at present I could not afford to produce as many A hogs, and last year I bought some of the best breeding stock in Canada.
> In other words, I could not stay in business by producing A hogs without it, because I can produce B hogs cheaper and easier. Is this what the consumer wants?
> The reduction of premium means between $600 or $700 a year to me, and how many people in Canada are going to get a wage cut by this amount this year?
> This premium was introduced to try to give the farmer an incentive to produce A hogs. By looking at grade improvement figures it has done just that. If they lower it again now they will lose all they gained.
> Another thing few people realize is that there are about half the number of farmers shipping hogs today as there were 12 years ago. The trend is going to stay this way. Because they are operating bigger, with more investment and better records, they know what it costs to produce A or B pork better than they did a few years ago. Unless they are paid to produce what the consumer demands at the present price structure someone has to pay it, or they won't be getting it.
> Just one other point I want to make is—only .8 per cent of the Canadian farmer's income is derived from the public treasury. In the U.S. this figure is close to seven times higher at 5.4 per cent. These figures are from the Hedlin-Menzies report on farm income. Don't you think that the Canadian farmer is already doing enough to fight inflation?

These were the few remarks I wished to make, Mr. Chairman, and I hope the Minister of Agriculture will give some consideration to them in an endeavour to improve agriculture in Canada.

Mr. Fane: Mr. Chairman, it is a long time since we have had an opportunity to speak on the subject of agriculture as much as we have done in the last couple of days. The big reason is that last year when the main estimates were before us there was only time for the minister to make a speech, and then the agricultural estimates were withdrawn. In fact I believe time ran out entirely for discussing estimates. This makes one wonder why it is that the government does not provide opportunities for us to discuss agriculture. Are the members of the government scared of what the farmer members of parliament will say, or are they scared to face the farming element of this country? I think that must be the case, Mr. Chairman, for the simple reason that they know that their agricultural program, if they have one, is not worth a darn in assisting agriculture, notwithstanding the wonderful speech that the Minister of Agriculture made last night, or I should say the wonderful speech he thought he made. It won't be so wonderful when the farmers read it, because this Liberal government will probably lose the only two or three members it has from agricultural areas when the next election occurs.

I would like to commend the Leader of the Opposition on the most reasonable and factual speech that he made last night. He showed the farming element throughout Canada that he has a full grasp of agricultural problems and that he will be able to represent the farming industry as well as every other industry there is when the time comes. He certainly showed up well on agriculture.

I was a little surprised at the minister making the speech he made because it was just a rerun of the speech he gave us on the main estimates last fall,—exactly the same speech. But of course this government is prone to having reruns of things, so that should not surprise anybody. When he told us in so many words that the farmers had never had it so good, I was reminded of the time 11 years ago—the second time I was a candidate for election to parliament—when the then minister of agriculture, the right hon. gentleman who chose to be known as "Mr. Agriculture" in Canada, visited my constituency. As a matter of fact he arrived there the day after I was nominated as a candidate. I believe I would be generous if I said that he spoke to 300 people for three and a half hours, using three million words, and never said anything except that the farmers never had it so good. I believe that was one reason I was elected as a member of parliament. Therefore, I might suggest to the minister that when he tells the farmers they never had it so good he is probably alienating what little affection they have left for the party which he hopes to lead next month. May I say that if he realizes his ambition, which may be a vain one, I hope he will do something more to help the farmers when he holds the top position than he has done as Minister of Agriculture.

My hon. friend from Provencher the other day said that the farmers do not wonder what the minister has done for them. They just wonder what this government has done to them. They know very well of course. The minister's speech also reminded me of the small boy who runs through a cemetery at midnight and hollers as loud as he can in order to have the courage to do it. I wonder whether the minister really realizes what the situation in the farm industry in Canada is. His speech certainly did not give the true picture, because the farmers of this country are not as well off as he would have everybody believe. As I said, when the news of his speech goes out through the country the farmers will have a big laugh about how well off they are.

It seems strange that the minister appears to be the only person interested in farming who does not know what the situation is. Perhaps he just will not believe the truth. There's none so blind as him who will not see. I find it difficult to believe that the information the minister receives from his high priced and well educated advisers could be so incorrect. Surely the members of his staff are aware of what is going on. Surely the minister himself must be aware of what is going on, especially when he sees 23,000 farmers from the provinces of Ontario and Quebec come down here, as they did last summer, to complain about the situation. Delegations representing the dairy farmers, the farm unions, the National Farm Union and the Federation of Agriculture have also come to Ottawa. In any event the minister has many people facing him in this house who can tell him what it is all about. We do not speak merely for the sake of speaking, and surely he might listen to some of us.

I realize the minister does not have very much farm support behind him, but surely the members of his party who do represent farming areas could tell him in caucus or in his office what the facts really are. There is no doubt that he hears straight talk on the matter of agriculture from members of all the opposition parties. The trouble is that the members of the government do not realize that they do not have an agricultural policy, and that what little dribs and drabs they are attempting to get by with simply are not adequate in providing the necessary help to the farming element of this country.

Very often in the house we hear about wheat. Ever since I came to Ottawa 10 years ago, wheat has appeared to be the main subject discussed by the western members. At the present time the price of wheat is down 22 cents a bushel. I believe this is a direct result of the action of the Minister of Trade and Commerce in allowing the international wheat agreement to lapse for about a year. This has had a drastic effect on the primary industry of this country.

Even though there are other industries which at times provide more wealth to the country I can assure you that they are not as important to the welfare of Canada as the agricultural industry, for the simple reason that if we did not have an agricultural industry we would not have food for our table. That is the situation. The price of wheat is down this year because the government relaxed its efforts in the selling of our grain. Everywhere out west there are low quotas. Some farmers may be able to deliver four or five bushels of grain per cultivated acre, but that is all. The final payments have been delayed and this year they probably will be lower than usual.

Ever since this government came into power the farmers have not been receiving their interim payments, and his has had a severe effect on the economic welfare of the farming industry. Not once in the last five years when this government has been running things have the farmers had an interim payment of ten cents per bushel.

The price of cattle is down. The price of hogs is down. The premium on first grade hogs has been removed, except for $1 per hundredweight, and the premium on first grade lambs has been removed. The premium on cheese has been removed. By the removal of these premiums on top quality produce the government has penalized those farmers who produced top quality. As a result it does not matter now whether or not the farmer raises first or second class products. They receive no premium for producing first grade.

Hon. members just heard my colleague, the hon. member for Wetaskiwin, speak about the appalling situation in dairy production. The government makes a new dairy policy every year, and none of them has been worth a hoot. Dairy farmers are becoming so unhappy about the situation they are leaving the industry. Approximately half of our large dairies are either out of existence, or on the way out. These farmers are selling their cows. Perhaps it will not be too many years before we will all be drinking synthetic milk and eating synthetic beefsteak. I do not know where we will find a substitute for the products made from wheat.

The egg situation in this country is particularly bad. The other day I received a letter, one of many about this situation. This constituent sent 75 dozen eggs to the city of Edmonton for which she received $10.75. Of those dozen, 43 dozen were grade A large for which she received 20 cents per dozen. She wondered why the price of eggs to the producer is so frightfully low. I made a few inquiries and found that during the first 11 months of last year we imported 11,059,558 dozen eggs from the United States at a cost of $6,526,000. We imported 264,184 pounds of dried whole yolk and albumen at a cost of $294,000. We also imported dry whole yolk and albumen n.e.s. to the extent of 1,821,560 pounds at a cost of $187,000. These figures are taken from Dominion Bureau of Statistics reports. I have here a poultry marketing report issued on March 1, 1968 by the Canadian Department of Agriculture which indicates that to date this year Canada has imported from the United States 3,260 cases of eggs, each containing 30 dozen. No wonder the price of eggs to the primary producer is so low. We also imported 23,000 pounds of frozen eggs from the United States.

People also wonder why turkeys and chickens bring so little to the producer. This year Canada has already imported 1,359,386 pounds of poultry. Already this year the department has carried out inspections on a total of 489,464 poultry carcasses of various kinds. No wonder the primary producer of poultry receives so little for his produce. The farmers in central Canada, that is Ontario, Quebec and the maritimes are not faced with the difficulty of selling wheat, but they do have difficulties in the marketing of cattle, hogs, lambs, eggs, cheese and dairy products. They are suffering just as much as the western farmers.

Farmers are finding it very difficult to obtain loans under the Farm Improvement Loans Act because banks do not wish to lend money at the approved interest rate of 5 per cent. In light of the situation today farmers cannot afford to pay that interest rate, let alone a higher one. Farmers are also finding difficulty because of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials. This is having a serious effect on the construction of granaries and other buildings. Machinery prices are increasing each year, and we are beginning to wonder what the government is going to do with the recommendations following the inquiry into farm machine prices. Probably this inquiry will end up just like other inquiries and royal commissions.

The high cost of farm machinery is very serious. A self-propelled combine capable of handling a large crop costs in the neighbourhood of $15,000, or even more if it has a cab.

It appears that the price of machinery will continue to increase to the extent that the traffic will bear. Farmers in some areas have boycotted the buying of machinery and the implement companies have really found out the problem they face if they are not able to sell their machinery.

• (8:40 p.m.)

The minister told us how very wonderful it is that in 1966 the farmers of Canada borrowed $234 million from the Farm Credit Corporation. This may sound to the minister like very good business, but I would point out that when farmers are in debt to this extent it is very, very difficult for them to repay loans. Every time a farmer borrows money in this way he has to repay the loan and the interest thereon. Thanks to the western members in the house in particular, and to the Conservative members in general, the interest was kept as low as possible on these loans.

I ask the minister whether he or anybody else in the house thinks that anybody is able to borrow himself rich. I cannot see it, myself. I was in debt for a great many years on the farm and know how difficult it is to meet even small payments, especially when a Liberal government is in power in Ottawa. That really makes a difference.

The reduction in the assistance provided under the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act is no help to western farmers in providing dugouts and water supplies for the summer. In the part of the country from which I come people know that prairie farm assistance act is nearly over because in the last five years the trouble with it has been appalling. I am not laying all this trouble at the minister's feet, but he and I know where some of the trouble occurs. I can assure hon. members that it is not all the fault of the farmers or the act.

ARDA is a very wonderful idea that was brought into being by the minister of agriculture of the Conservative government, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle. The extension of ARDA has proved to be a very wonderful thing in some cases. I know that the program is now handled through the provincial departments of agriculture. There is one ARDA project in my constituency which anybody can be very proud of. I refer to the project on the Saddle Lake Indian reserve where 15,000 acres of wonderful land is about to be broken up and put into cultivation for the benefit of the people who live on the reserve. This project will prove to be of great assistance to these people in finding their feet. Therefore I commend the idea of ARDA. I know this project will prove of very great help to the Indian population of some 2,000 on this reserve.

My time appears to be up, Mr. Chairman. I do not know if I have been able to tie in my remarks with vote 5c, which reads as follows:

Administration, operation and maintenance—to extend the purposes of vote 5 of the main estimates for 1967-68 to include a contribution of $10,000 to the town of Kapuskasing towards the construction of a road.

One dollar is provided for this vote. As I say, Mr. Chairman, I do not know how well I have related what I have had to say to that vote. Anyway I have said what I think should be said in this regard and hope I have been talking to the subject under consideration by the committee.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Chairman, there is one line in one of the verses of our national anthem "O Canada" which refers to our country as a "fair land of hope for all who toil". I ask the question: Who among us toils harder than the farmer? But under this government he toils without hope.

I shall be brief this evening in order to give the Minister of Agriculture the opportunity to attack the remarks made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, for to be consistent he must attack the leader of the New Democratic party as he attacked my leader, the leader of the official opposition, last night. The content of the comic opera attack by the Minister of Agriculture last night on the splendid speech and sound economics put forward by my leader could have been put to better use by the minister next spring on the flowerbeds of Arnprior.

Because of the importance of agriculture in the economy of my constituency, and indeed because of its importance to our whole country, I join the debate on these estimates at this time. As milk production is of great importance in our area, I now wish to touch upon that subject. I wish to protest the marked reduction of federal agricultural grants as they affect our dairy industry, and particularly the intended removal of the premiums on high scoring cheese by this government next April 1.

I wish to point out to the government that the cheese premiums were instituted as early as 1939 to encourage farmers to produce high quality milk, which in turn would improve over-all cheese quality. Payments have been made on the basis of 2 cents per pound for cheese scoring 94 or better, and 1 cent for cheese scoring 93. I also wish to point out to the minister the splendid value and results that have been realized throughout the years from this assistance.

I note that when the program was begun 48 per cent of all cheese was eligible for premium. In 1966, there was 71 per cent eligible. One can see what an improvement this program has made in the quality of our cheese. Because of its importance to our local economy and our export balance of payments with Britain and other countries, where there is a great appetite and demand for our Cheddar, I say to the minister: Do not abandon this assistance to the Canadian cheese producers.

Some time ago this government was threatening to abandon the small milk producer as well. I am proud to have been one of those who spoke up on behalf of all those milk producers who produce 50,000 pounds or less of milk per year. Last November 30 I brought this matter to the attention of the house and the minister, and I now note that the subsidy will be applied to those producing 12,000 pounds of milk per year instead of only to those producing 50,000 pounds. I have no quarrel with the figure that has been arrived at, because the man who produces less than 12,000 pounds might better be in some other business.

It is conceded that the future trend must be to larger production per unit, and in the next five years vast changes will take place. I am informed that in 1966, out of a total of about 190,500 farmers, 48,704 were producing more than 100,000 pounds of milk annually, and that it is estimated that in five years the number of producers in this category will rise to between 80,000 and 90,000.

One can readily see that this will vastly increase our dairy production, and I hope it will put this country into a position where we can help feed more of the millions of hungry mouths in this world. In the meantime, as we have contended, you cannot and you must not annihilate the small milk producers at one fell swoop of government legislation, for most of them have reached the age at which they do not wish, nor is it advisable for them, to expand their operations. They own their small holdings. They have six or eight, and sometimes ten, cows which produce several calves each year, and they have the summer grass for such an operation. I submit that these people are certainly an asset to any community and to any country. I am proud to have been one of those who helped convince the government not to do such a callous thing as to cut these people off from their livelihood.

I have mentioned the importance of the dairy industry to our country, and in particular to the countries of Prince Edward and Lennox. From a national standpoint, one of the most valuable organizations connected with the dairy industry for many years has been the Canadian Holstein-Friesian Association. For many years this organization has contributed to the propagation of that great breed of dairy cattle and to the upgrading and improvement of Holstein cattle and also of our whole dairy industry, because I believe this breed of cattle composes the majority of the milk producing cattle in our country.

The county of Lennox is signally honoured in this year of 1968 by the election of Mr. Harold McCaul of R.R.5, Napanee, Ontario, as president of the Canadian Holstein-Friesian Association. Mr. McCaul has given years of valuable service to the association which he now heads, and to the dairy industry, as well as to Canada as a whole. I congratulate him on behalf on my constituency and I thank him for the honour that he has brought to Lennox and Addington counties and to his native township of Richmond.

I am sure the minister will agree with me as to the importance of the maintenance of high standards in our various breeds of dairy cattle. Others taking part in this debate will no doubt touch on the importance of grants to fairs and exhibitions of livestock. May I at this time quote from an article which appeared in the Western Producer of February 22, 1968 and which is headed "Decline Noted in Holstein Show Herds." The first paragraph reads as follows:

> The decline in numbers of both exhibitors and animals at shows is causing the extension service committee of the Canadian Holstein-Friesian Association real concern, said Curtis Clark of Carstairs, Alberta, in a report to the annual meeting of the Holstein association at Toronto, February 14.
> "Nothing can quite replace the show ring in providing an opportunity for the individual breeder to compare his cattle with the best others have to offer, nor in acting as a show window for the breed.

I am sure the minister will agree with me that the activities of this particular association and of all purebred cattle associations are certainly of great value to us nationally. I point out that it is a great balance of trade factor because the high grade purebred Holsteins produced in our country are in great demand throughout the western hemisphere, including Europe. Holstein cattle exported from Canada in 1966 brought us $15 million, and the figure may be even higher in 1967. The figures have not yet been completed for 1967, but in that year, 10,000 head of cattle was exported to countries other than the United States; 7,630 head to the United States; and 4,400 to Spain. One bull exported to Cuba brought $100,000 in that year. Another bull exported to Japan brought $75,000, and a third one exported to the United States brought $140,000. I should like to point out to the minister that to a large degree the new regulations regarding federal show classifications are hampering the incentive of the Holstein-Friesian Association members to show their herds. Only about 25 per cent of the Holstein herds are on the record of performance testing. The federal government is not providing the money which would be necessary for a full program. As long as the present system is maintained, conditions will not improve. The government should consult our purebred cattle associations more than they do now. I am sure the minister will respond by a change in policy which will assist our purebred cattle associations and which will also be in our national interests. May I remind him again of the balance of trade to which this one organization has contributed so greatly.

In summing up the last point, may I say that the government should make every effort, through better incentive grants to fairs and exhibitions, to halt the decline in our exhibitions of dairy cattle.

I listened with interest to this debate, and I congratulate the members of the opposition who pointed out the lack of interest in and frequently the utter disregard of this government for Canadian agriculture. Why should the government be so stupid as to fail to recognize an asset when they have one? Whoever heard of a farmer asking for relief or handouts, no matter how tough conditions become for him at home? Although the percentage of people on the land is steadily diminishing and farmers now are in a minority among our blocks of occupational population, they are still key men in this country and agriculture continues to be our most important primary industry.

On Thursday of last week I took part in the debate on Bill No. C-197 to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act. As recorded at page 7137 of Hansard, I pointed out that the abandonment of agriculture in general by this government is one of the prime causes of the sudden creation of more unemployment in this country. This is a most pernicious situation. Unemployment in this country is now at its highest level in recent years, and it will get worse as this government continues to lose interest in agriculture and withhold assistance to it.

There are a good many secondary industries which depend on agricultural production in our country. I speak now of the canning industry which is of great importance in my riding. Prince Edward county in particular is the home of the Canadian canning industry and the home of the first vegetable canning factory in Canada operated years ago at Demorestville in Prince Edward county.

What is happening this year in the canning industry? The cause of our trouble in the tomato and canning industry lies in the unfair competition of the largely subsidized industries of foreign nations. Italy, for example, provides a subsidy amounting to 18 per cent to its tomato industry. How much do we subsidize our tomato growers? We do not subsidize them at all. I think it is time that this government smartened up, and that we as Canadians smartened up and did something to combat this unfair competition. We have a far better product than any grown in Italy or any other country. Our field grown tomatoes are second to none in the world.

I now wish to put on the record an article which substantiates my statements. This article under the heading "Cheap foreign food products hit farmers", appeared in the Picton Gazette for Wednesday, January 31, 1968, and I should like to quote it:

> Competition from cheap food products from foreign countries will hit farmers, including local ones, this year, as well as canners.
> At the annual meeting of local 213, Prince Edward Farmers Union at Cherry Valley hall Monday night, J. F. Hepburn, manager of Waupoos Canning and president of the Ontario Food Processors Association, outlined the problem caused by foreign competition in the food processing products area. Such products, he said, are imported into Canada tariff free and with substantial export subsidies, direct or hidden, from the country of origin.
> "It is almost essential that we (the canning industry) make a reduction in tomato acreage of 30 to 35 per cent for the 1968 pack."
> Mr. Hepburn cited fixed domestic market consumption figures to show that the reason is directly because of the increasing quantity of whole pack tomatoes being imported from such countries as Italy, Spain, South Africa, Portugal and other foreign countries. Bulgaria alone has tripled its exports on whole pack tomatoes over the past three years, through export subsidies and lack of tariffs in Canada.

Questioned from the floor after his speech by Harry Evans, on what happens to the average 20 per cent reduced price on imported tomatoes, Mr. Hepburn did not say other than that a can of tomatoes from any of the foreign countries mentioned costs as much on a store shelf as a can of domestic tomatoes.

"Tomatoes" said Mr. Hepburn, "is the most valuable single cash crop in Ontario."

Similarly, fruit processing in the Niagara peninsula is in trouble. Australia alone has taken 30 to 40 per cent of the domestic market in tender fruits and forced a comparable cut-back of one-third of the domestic industry's original capacity of seven years ago.

While Australia has a vast export assistance program, it also has a 22 per cent tariff for incoming food goods, yet their products are allowed into Canada duty free, he charged.

Similarly with United States food products... there are tariffs for Canadian products entering the U.S., but no tariffs for U.S. products entering Canada—

Italy already has tariffs of 18 per cent on all whole pack tomatoes exported, 15 per cent on tomato paste and 16 per cent on tomato juice. "Within the past 48 hours France has announced it will match any tariff set by Italy," he told the meeting.

Ontario tomato canners, he said, are forced by law to pay the highest prices for their raw product of any country. Wage costs are also the highest.

"We can now compete with the United States tomato products from California and our western Canada markets have opened up again, but we cannot compete with unfair competition from low wages and costs of foreign countries."

I continue quoting from the article:

These two joined with the farmers union executive to jointly pass and sign a resolution to support any future brief to the federal government by the O.F.P.A.

The wording of the resolution was as follows:

"Whereas the president of the Ontario Food Processers Association, the president of the Prince Edward County Canning Crop Growers Association, the president of the Prince Edward Federation of Agriculture and the president, executive and members of the Prince Edward Farmers Union, having met together and discussed the problems of the O.F.P.A. and primary producers with regard to unfair competition from offshore countries exporting under direct and indirect subsidization, we urgently request immediate action to contravene the above mentioned subsidization."

This is a resolution from Prince Edward county, one of Canada's important canning-crop counties, and I ask the government to take heed.

In so far as the Kennedy round of trade tariffs are concerned, I must say that our representatives who attended in Geneva, Switzerland, must have been looking at the mountains and the scenery when this aspect of tariff problems was being discussed. The situation as it now exists will put our canners and growers out of business, so it must be fought tooth and nail. I respectfully ask the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Trade and Commerce as well, to help us in this regard. The tomato growers of Canada do not ask, do not demand, a business environment amounting to hothouse protection from the cold blasts of competition. I appeal to the government and its tariff officials only for fair treatment. These people are appalled at the neglect and ineptitude displayed in this latest international tariff deal which abandons them to certain annihilation unless the government faces up to its immediate responsibilities. Those responsibilities are to see that our agriculture, indeed our whole national economy, is such that Canadians can truly refer to this country as a fair land of hope for all who toil.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, I think I should try to answer a few of the many queries that have come up during the course of this debate. It is going to be rather difficult to answer them all, as there have been many speeches. Many of the speeches have been constructive and many, of course, have been of a purely political nature. To those who made constructive speeches, I may say that I am sure they had the best interests of the agricultural community at heart and for their contributions I am certainly grateful. With respect to the speeches having a political connotation, I am rather taken aback by the many speakers from the official opposition who have complained about my address last evening wherein I tried to straighten out the statistical background on which current agriculture policy should be based. I pointed out that there have been improvements in both gross and net agricultural income. Hon. members opposite took this as a political speech, I understand. I point out that the Leader of the Opposition, whom I am pleased to see back with us again, started his speech on the premise that the Conservatives got 60 per cent of the farm vote in the last election and were going to get even more in the next one.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Greene: Those were the non-political words with which the Leader of the Opposition started his address. However, when I replied by citing some statistics to indicate the picture of agriculture today, apparently

hon. members in the official opposition thought I was making a political speech. I do not quite understand why the allegations of the Leader of the Opposition were not political in the opinion of members of the opposition, but apparently they were not. If the statistics on which he based his conclusion as to the percentage of the agricultural vote he is going to get in the next election are no better than the statistics on which he based the context of his speech, then he had better revise them because they are not very sound. There was a time when there was an hon. member in this house who, I understand, used to commune with the spirits before he made an important decision. I understand that the Leader of the Opposition communes, not with any spirits in any outer world but with the spirits down on Bay street, before he makes any decision.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Greene: If he received those statistics on which he based his agricultural conclusions from that source, I suggest he had better get a new medium or it may be that his entire prognostication, political as well as agricultural, will be in error.

I point out, too, that the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings made some allusion to political speeches. He referred also on several occasions, not so much to the situation as it existed in Canada, but the situation which existed in the province of Nova Scotia. I am not sure whether the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings took exception to the fact that gross and net incomes of farmers had gone up all across Canada. I noticed that most of the political speeches came from members of the official opposition, and I take it that this was a rather concerted and planned political effort on their part. They referred to the Minister of Agriculture having stated that the farmers had never had it so good. This, I presume, is supposed to be a very crafty and Machiavellian political technique on their part, to describe this government and this minister.

Let me point out, Mr. Chairman, that I think I have made as many addresses as anybody dealing with the plight of the farmers and the contribution that they have made to the economy of this country. However, not too many of the speeches of hon. members opposite told both sides of the story. They have not been telling the consumers of Canada that they never had such a good deal, and that they should be prepared to pay more for their food in order that the farmers of Canada could get a better living.

I have often said, Mr. Chairman, and I shall continue to say, that no sector of the economy of this country makes a greater contribution than the agricultural sector does to the total well-being of Canadian citizens. No sector of the Canadian economy has had more difficult problems in an era of transition. However, I do try to make my decisions and to reach my conclusions on a factual basis, not on political premises to the effect that "Things were grand when we were in", or "Oh my, weren't they fine when we were in office?" despite the fact that all the statistics and data show that the most difficult days that agriculture ever faced in this country were during the period that the Conservative party was in office.

Hon. gentlemen opposite may have been quite successful in the past in selling the story to the western farmer that they were his friend—though they did very little for the western farmer when they were in office, as the statistics indicate—but they have not fooled the eastern farmer. The eastern farmer knows that at no time did they ever do anything on his behalf, and again the statistics very clearly indicate this to be the case.

To return to the comments of the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings, who apparently made a "non-political" political speech, the hon. member alleged that conditions in Nova Scotia were very, very bad and that the income of all farmers in that province had gone down by 30 per cent. I had particularly avoided speaking about any particular province, especially the province of Nova Scotia—and this despite the political speech of the Leader of the Opposition —because in view of the circumstance that the hon. gentleman who is now in this house as Leader of the Opposition, had previously been premier of the great province of Nova Scotia, I thought it would be unfair to point to the unfortunate conditions prevailing in that province, particularly in the realm of agriculture, and I refrained from so doing.

However, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings was very careful to point out in great detail how very sad was the state of the agricultural industry in the province in which his present leader had been premier for many years.

Mr. Nowlan: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Greene: I have the floor.

Mr. Nowlan: It is not a question as much as it is a point of privilege.

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I am interrupting the minister, since he did not accept a question, to stand on a point of privilege. When the minister continues his remarks I hope he will refer to the full content of my speech, because I made reference to New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and eastern Quebec as well.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings might be a little worried, now that his leader is in the chamber, about what kind of spot he has put him in. However, in this house we make policies and programs for the whole of the country, not just one particular province.

Mr. Crouse: It is not as bad a spot as you put your leader in on February 19.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, whenever hon. members opposite do not have a good argument, they have louder voices than anybody else. If volume were good policy they would still have been in office. There is no question of that, because volume they have.

Mr. Flemming: We will be.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, if we can get back to the debate for a moment, the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings complained that the income of farmers in the province of Nova Scotia had decreased 30 per cent during the past years. The gross income of farmers in Canada from 1962 to 1966 actually increased from $3.1 billion to $4.2 billion. This represents an increase of $1.1 billion.

Many hon. members opposite have asked to have income defined in terms of net income rather than gross income, so I should now like to put on record the net income of farmers across Canada as a whole. In 1962 the net income of Canadian farmers was $1,492 million. In 1963 it was $1,495 million, in 1964 $1,281 million, in 1965 $1,565 million, and in 1966 $1,978 million. These figures represent net income after expenses. As I said last night, Mr. Chairman, these figures, which were compiled by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, clearly indicate that in the last three years the net income of farmers in Canada as a whole has increased by some 33⅓ per cent.

In view of this increase, Mr. Chairman, if the income of farmers in the province of Nova Scotia has decreased by 30 per cent, as the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings alleges, I suggest he had better complain to the provincial government, as apparently things are much worse in Nova Scotia than in other parts of the country. Since his present leader was premier of that province during this period, he may be able to make his complaint to the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Starr: I wonder whether the minister would permit a question based on what he has just said?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, I think I would prefer to finish my remarks. Many questions have yet to be answered.

Mr. Starr: The question is a very simple one and pertains to the statistics the minister has just put on the record. I wonder whether he would give way and answer a question?

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Greene: The hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings also complained that farms in Nova Scotia are far smaller than in other parts of Canada. I think he said they averaged in size only 40 acres. The average size of a farm in Canada as a whole in 1961 was 359 acres. By 1966 it had risen to 404 acres.

So again, Mr. Chairman, apparently the situation in Nova Scotia is far worse than it is elsewhere. I am sure all of us sympathize very much with the farmers of Nova Scotia in this connection. If the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings is as concerned as he pretends to be in this chamber, then I am sure he will take up the specific and special problems that exist in that province with the provincial government of Nova Scotia. My only regret is that during his leader's term of office agricultural solutions were apparently not so easy to find as Nova Scotians who come to the federal house appear to think.

Again, the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings suggested there should be greater contribution of capital grants to agriculture in the provinces. I know this is one of the requests which the provincial Federation of Agriculture has made, I believe to the provincial governments, although I have also met some of them in this regard when they attended here to meet me, or when I met some of them in their own province. Capital grants are of course, available under ARDA or FRED programs, and I would take it, although I am no expert, under the Atlantic Development Board. I suggest to the hon. member that the initiative for such programs must come from the provinces and to the best of my knowledge no provincial initiative has been taken and brought here under the aegis of ARDA, FRED or any other joint cost sharing program which is subject to provincial initiative.

The hon. member suggested that programs similar to those put into operation in the deep south of the United States might be applicable here. I doubt very much whether the situation in the maritimes could be compared to that in the deep south many years ago. I certainly would not be one to compare the able and competent farmers of the maritime provinces with the rural poor of the deep south. I think there are grave problems to be faced, but with all respect to those good people in the United States I do not think the farmers of Nova Scotia are to be compared with the poor whites of the deep south.

I do believe, however, there could be programs of improvement, and certainly if the provincial authorities in their wisdom see fit to bring forward programs under ARDA, FRED or the Atlantic Development Board I am sure the proper authorities here would consider them very seriously indeed.

The hon. member for Moose Mountain, who also made a "non-political" political speech, was concerned about an extremely important subject—the question of the world wheat agreement. He belaboured the government and the ministers concerned for permitting the world wheat agreement to lapse, as he described it, and leave the western farmer defenceless in the absence of such an agreement. Let me point this out, Mr. Chairman. Since many hon. members on the other side have voiced the same opinion I take it from their words that they would not have permitted the world wheat agreement to lapse, had they been in office. Therefore I am bound to take it that their policy would have been the continuation of the world wheat agreement. Under that agreement, as I understand it, the price ranged between a minimum of $1.75½ and a maximum of $2.18 for No. 1 northern. Our government permitted the agreement to lapse in order to achieve a price range of between $1.95 and $2.38½. We believed the western farmer was not getting enough for his wheat. I take it that hon. members opposite believed a $1.75½ minimum was plenty for western farmers and that a $2.18 maximum was enough, also.

They have stated time and again that this is their view. They would have continued the world wheat agreement as it existed. Speaker after speaker has told us so. If this is not their view, if they would have abrogated the agreement as we did, let them get up and say so. Speaker after speaker has told us they disagreed with the abrogation of the world wheat agreement in order to achieve these new and higher price levels—an improvement of 20½ cents which was achieved as a result of the Kennedy round. I take it that hon. members opposite, including the hon. member for Moose Mountain disapproved of this price increase which has been achieved.

An hon. Member: The price has dropped 22 cents.

Mr. Greene: These minima and maxima which we achieved in the Kennedy round and which we are striving to implement in a new world agreement at a higher price range, instead of the lower price range with which hon. gentlemen opposite were apparently satisfied—

An hon. Member: We shall be here for days, now.

Mr. Greene: This is the reason the agreement was abrogated and if the debate is to hinge on whether or not the western farmers should be receiving prices between $1.75½ and $2.18 rather than new prices under a new agreement, we shall be pleased to hear what hon. members opposite have to say.

Several other points were made by various hon. members. The hon. member for Wetaskiwin dealt with dairy policy, which perhaps I might touch on for a minute. I noted he was not too anxious to talk about prices because he knows as well as I do that when we assumed office the average price for industrial milk under the very successful policies to which he referred was $2.62 a hundredweight for 3.5 milk, whereas today, a little less than five years later, it is $4.64.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Greene: I do not claim for a minute that in this area, as in so many others, the end has been achieved, despite the campaign by hon. members opposite who are apparently spreading the word that the Liberals are saying the farmers never had it so good.

The difference between what we are saying and what they are attempting to say is this: We recognize that the farmers have very grave problems and that we have to move ahead as rapidly as possible, as rapidly as the economy can afford, toward making the lot of the farmers in economic terms a better one. But we base our decisions on facts, instead of playing politics with the unfortunate economic lot of the farmer.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Greene: The facts speak for themselves very clearly from the standpoint of net income, from the standpoint of gross income, from the standpoint of the size of farms, the number of economically viable units capable of providing a good income, from the standpoint of the income made possible by the dairy policy. In all these areas very considerable improvements have been achieved, improvements moving ahead at a far faster pace than any which took place between 1957 and 1963. Certainly there is a long way to go and a great deal to be done, and if hon. members opposite are concerned with this problem of getting ahead with improvements at a faster pace, they will be more concerned with the ways of tomorrow as they affect the farmer than with playing politics on the basis of their so-called great accomplishments, as compared with our accomplishments.

The real problems facing agriculture are difficult enough. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam premised his remarks along these lines and some of the comments he made were perfectly valid.

There is a great deal to be done, and while improvements have been made, many more should be made if the farmer is to achieve the economic well-being that has been achieved in large measure in other sectors of our economy.

Again, with respect to the dairy policy, the hon. member for Wetaskiwin complained about quotas. This comes under the aegis of the Canadian Dairy Commission, and quite properly so. We are very pleased with the progress being made by that commission, and I am very happy to have the opportunity of answering for the commission in the house. First of all I would say that we, and I think all hon. members generally, would like the commission to have the greatest possible independence in formulating their policies, with the funds made available to them, for the purpose of rationalizing the dairy industry. This is no easy chore.

If hon. members are interested in what the purpose of the quotas is, it is to the end of ultimately rationalizing the industry, to see to it that persons in the dairy industry have units of a size which will produce an adequate income. This year the original plan was to have a minimum quota starting with some 50,000 pounds, which is the production as I understood it of approximately eight to 12 average cows. When the commission came closer to the time of setting the quotas for the current year it was found that this would be too rapid a pace of progress. It is as simple as that. This would create an economic hardship in human terms to too many people. So the commission in its wisdom decided to reduce the minimum eligibility to some 12,000 pounds, being the production of about two cows. It would not seem that this would be too rapid a rate of progress.

Ultimately if the industry is to be in good shape, if the people who are attempting to make a livelihood in the dairy industry are to have the kind of living we would like them to have, they are going to need far bigger units than two cows if they are to be full time dairy farmers. The question of course is the rate of change, the pace at which we can make these improvements without in human terms creating too great a difficulty or problem for the people involved in the process of change.

I quite agree with the hon. member that the quota system will not achieve perfection in five minutes, one year or two years. I believe the commission is doing an outstanding job and I would point out that the question of quotas, the question of policy has been discussed at great length over many meetings with the Dairy Farmers of Canada, with l'Union Catholique de Cultivateurs de Quebec, and with the various farm organizations that are concerned in improving the lot of the dairy farmer; and to the greatest possible degree, consonant with the funds available and consonant with the over-all governmental policy of putting the dairy industry in economic shape within a reasonable length of time, the suggestions and the directions of those farm organizations have been heeded in formulating the quota policy and will be heeded in formulating this year's dairy policy.

The hon. member for Bruce made a considerable address which was a very comprehensive review of speeches I have made, for which I thank him very much because at this time it is certainly much appreciated to have a review of that nature in this chamber. I do not believe he was in attendance at the meetings where those speeches were delivered and it may be a good deal was said that was not in the printed text, and also a good deal was left out which was in the printed text. But I make no apologies. I gather he indicts me as the minister for speaking to the agricultural community of Canada about matters other than agriculture. Well, I think I talk to them about agriculture problems quite often, and I make no apology for discussing with the agricultural leaders of Canada problems such as national unity, problems affecting the entire prospect of the Canadian economy, apart from agriculture, because it has been my experience that the farm leaders of this country are also among the foremost citizens of the country generally. They are interested in what is going on in this country.

I think it would be rather an insult to their intelligence, to their capabilities, to their desire to make this a worth-while country in all its parts, aside from the agricultural sector, if I said to them, "I will never talk to you about anything but agricultural matters because apparently that is all you are concerned with." This is not the case. But again the hon. member for Bruce apparently felt this was in some way belittling or insulting to the farm leaders of Canada. I do not believe it to be so.

The hon. member for Assiniboia, who also made a wide ranging address on farm problems, also said that the minister said that the farmers "never had it so good," which again I reiterate I have never at any time said, nor have any of my colleagues. We have said improvements have been made. The net income position is improving. There is still a long way to go and a great deal to do. That is all any of us has ever said.

The hon. member also alleged that there were mountains of wheat in storage in 1956 and 1957 prior to the time when the Conservatives came into office. Again I think we should at all times try to keep the record straight. Hon. members opposite feel it is politics if we keep the record straight, but if that is politics I think it is the best kind of politics, possibly a little better politics than statements which are not according to fact. The hon. member complained that apparently during Liberal times there is great carryover of wheat, and I gather it is his conclusion that during Tory times there is not much wheat in storage because it is sold. The facts are as follows:

In 1957 there were 734 million bushels of wheat in storage, in 1958 there were 648 million bushels, in 1959 there were 588 million bushels, in 1960 there were 600 million bushels and in 1961 there were 608 million bushels. In 1962 there were 391 million bushels in storage, in 1963 there were 487 million bushels, in 1964 there were 459 million bushels, in 1965 there were 513 million bushels, in 1966 there were 420 million bushels and in 1967, estimated to this time, 577 million bushels, which I admit is our worst year but it is still better than 1957, 1958, 1959, 1960 and 1961.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Greene: If those facts are politics, as hon. gentlemen opposite would allege, then I can only apologize for putting the facts on the record because I quite agree we should not be playing politics with the very grievous position in which the farmer finds himself.

• (9:40 p.m.)

The hon. member for Assiniboia referred to the Kennedy round, as did other speakers, and stated that in the Kennedy round the Canadian negotiators locked the door of the building—I think this is the way he put it—and gave everything away at Geneva. Again may I say that I think this is very unfair criticism of the Canadian officials who carried on the negotiations. The ministers attended at the conclusion of the Kennedy round and claimed very little credit for the great success the Canadian negotiators had. They did a magnificent job in the interests of Canada, and therefore I believe it is very unfair to allege that in some way they let the country down. As has been indicated previously, the main question at the Kennedy round which affected agriculture was the range of wheat prices, which under the world wheat agreement were in the range of $1.75½ to $2.18. By reason of the great success of the Kennedy round the far higher price range of $1.95½ to $2.38½ was achieved by our negotiators. Needless to say it was not easy to achieve this because the buyer countries were far more numerous than the seller countries, and they were not in favour of a 20 cent price-range increase.

I trust hon. members opposite are in favour of a price increase, although their objections would not seem to indicate this. Apparently they believe the Kennedy round was a mistake and that we should have kept the old agreement. I believe that the price range our negotiators achieved was a very great success. I believe they are to be commended rather than denigrated for their performance. It is hoped and believed that their great success will be embodied in the world wheat agreement, which again will very much improve the position of the wheat farmer.

Mr. Southam: On a point of privilege, Mr. Chairman, may I say that we have listened to the minister suggest that the western farmers were not in agreement with the signing of a new wheat agreement. This is what we advocated and developed in the first place.

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Greene: Well, perhaps the hon. member wishes to change his position. What I believe he said was that we should never have abandoned the world wheat agreement.

Mr. Southam: We said that it should not have been allowed to lapse.

Mr. Greene: If the hon. member was familiar with the nature of the Kennedy round discussion he would have known that if we had not let the world wheat agreement lapse we could not have entered into the Kennedy round to renegotiate these far better minimums and maximums in the interests of the Canadian farmer. I believe it is totally wrong to blame anyone for the fact that the wheat prices went down after the Kennedy round, or to blame our negotiators or the Canadian government for the fact that there was a decline in world wheat prices which naturally made the buyer nations reluctant to implement the findings at the conclusion of the Kennedy round into the world wheat agreement.

I believe the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam was quite right in this regard. He did not attempt to play politics with this. He said that world wheat prices went down by reason of the fact that there had been very large crops in the Communist countries and—I do not know whether or not he alleged this—the fact that the Americans brought I believe 30 million acres out of the soil bank into production. These were the reasons the world wheat prices went down. If one attempts to formulate a policy having in mind the facts, rather than playing politics, I think he must accept as fact that the world wheat prices went down because of natural reasons, and not because of any failure on the part of the Canadian negotiators or the Canadian government. Negotiations have been going on since, as I believe the Minister of Trade and Commerce has often stated here. I believe these negotiations will be fruitful and will result in a new world wheat agreement which will implement the higher price range that was achieved at the Kennedy round. If this comes to pass, as I believe it will, it will certainly place the western farmer in a much better position than he was in prior to the Kennedy round, and I feel certain he will appreciate the efforts which were made at Geneva by the Canadian negotiators.

I should like to deal with the points raised by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, because I think he and the hon. member for Lambton-Kent brought in some very constructive points which I believe are valid and could add something extremely useful to the discussions in respect of the direction that agricultural policy should take and the direction in which we should be moving. I think the hon. member for Lambton-Kent originally suggested that we should move in the direction of an incomes policy in agriculture. He suggested the implementation of Dr. Gilson's paper in this regard. I believe that the same general line of approach was taken by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam with regard to the question of the marketplace in which the farmer finds himself today, a marketplace which is not free.

If I understood the position of these hon. gentlemen correctly I believe they both indicated that we should be moving toward some type of incomes policy, if we want to keep agriculture in a healthy state and if we want to obtain a satisfactory level of income for the agricultural producer in the non-free marketplace which exists today. I think it is a fact that the marketplace is no longer the free marketplace it was when the agricultural policy of the past was conceived. If the farmer is to get a fair shake in this non-free marketplace, there will have to be new approaches which do not presume as at present that the farmer is dealing in a free marketplace where the consumer has a free choice. I think this is an area of suggestion and direction which merits the very careful consideration of those who are serious about attempting to improve the lot of the farmer today. I believe that when hundreds of thousands of farmers are dealing with very few buyers in the non-free marketplace it is inevitable that the farmers will get the worst of the deal until the time comes when they have equal control one way or another over the marketplace, whether it be by means of an incomes policy or otherwise.

I very much appreciate the suggestions of the two hon. members in this regard and I assure them this is an avenue of consideration that is being studied by the government and one which certainly will, I am sure, receive a very comprehensive survey by our task force. I quite appreciate that some very pervasive and fundamental changes will have to be made in the agricultural industry if we are to achieve the kind of income we desire for our Canadian farmers.

Not too much mention of the task force was made by hon. members opposite, but I believe one or two members did ask questions about it. I can only say to those interested in the work of this body that I hold great hopes for the contribution that the task force can make in pointing out the directions in which Canadian agriculture should move and the direction in which parliament should move if we are to achieve the kind of income and economic sufficiency for the farmers that they should have.

To those hon. gentlemen who asked about the task force I can say that it is meeting almost continuously. In fact they were here today and I had a meeting with them. They will be reporting by the end of this year. I have every anticipation that the work of the task force when completed will be compiled in a paper for the perusal of hon. members, and for members of the public generally who are interested in the problem of agriculture. The present intent of the government is that ultimately the findings of the task force will be submitted to a national conclave of one kind or another at the federal and provincial levels, which would include representatives of farm organizations as may be recommended by the task force.

It is quite clear that the problems of agriculture cannot, under the complexities of our constitution, be solved by either the federal or provincial governments alone. This is an area of our economy that very clearly comes within the responsibility of the two.

The Chairman: Order. I must interrupt the hon. minister to advise him that his allotted time has now expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

An hon. Member: No.

[Mr. Greene.]

The Chairman: Does the minister wish to continue?

Mr. Greene: Apparently hon. members do not consent.

The Chairman: Does the committee give its unanimous consent for the minister to continue?

An hon. Member: No.

The Chairman: There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Moore: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of personal privilege. The minister implied that I did not know what I was talking about when I quoted certain figures in my speech. Let me put it on the record that there are many shippers of fluid milk who receive for their surplus $3.25 per hundred pounds, and many cream shippers who receive something over $2. With the added payment this means they receive very little more than $3.30 per hundredweight.

Mr. McLelland: Mr. Chairman, I rise to take part in this debate to make sure the Minister of Agriculture understands fully what we are talking about when we refer to western wheat and the importance of this product to western Canada and the whole of this country. Other hon. members from western Canada have done a magnificent job in informing the minister about the problems faced by wheat producers. In order that the minister will fully understand what this is all about I should like to send him two samples of wheat. One sample is western spring wheat, a hard wheat variety, and the other is western Durum wheat, a soft wheat used in the preparation of macaroni, which I am sure the minister has had for supper quite often.

At my delivery point at Loreham, Saskatchewan, No. 2 northern spring wheat netted the farmer this year $1.47½ per bushel at the elevator, minus the 1 per cent on the cash settlement for P.F.A.A. deductions. No. 3 C.W. Durum wheat, the soft variety, nets the farmer $1.43½ per bushel. I mention these grades because in our area these are the most prevalent. These are the true prices the farmer receives for wheat at the delivery point for the crop year 1967-68.

These prices will not likely improve because of the low ceiling price obtained for wheat sold on the export market this year. In other words, we do not expect a large final payment next year. The western farmers have been pressing the government to request the Canadian Wheat Board to make the final wheat payment for the 1966-67 crop, because they need the rest of their money. I hope the minister realizes that farmers delivering the same variety and the same grade of wheat I referred to earlier receive only $1.28¼ per bushel for No. 2 hard wheat, and $1.24¼ per bushel for No. 3 C.W. Durum wheat. The farmers in the constituency of Rosetown-Biggar need their final payments, and I hope they will receive them in the not too distant future. I hope I have helped the minister to understand what the western members have been talking about in respect of wheat.

Let me draw another problem to the attention of the minister which is of great concern to the people in certain parts of my constituency. We now have a dam, built or at least started during the time when the Conservative government was in power. I am sure the minister is aware of this because he was at the location last July 21. A large irrigation project will be developed downstream from this dam. Farmers there are now levelling and preparing their land. Some will be sowing irrigation crops this year. I ask the minister to use his influence with his cabinet colleagues to see whether the Minister of Finance will discontinue the 12 per cent sales tax applicable to irrigation equipment and other supplies used for the irrigation of land. I hope the government can be encouraged to give some tax incentive to the farmers in this new development area, which will be called upon to produce a great deal to answer the world demand for food supply. The minister should take a serious look at this whole question and use his influence to convince the Minister of Finance to provide tax incentives or to rescind the tax now applicable on these supplies. This will provide an opportunity for these people to go ahead with the development of this area, in order that they may increase production.

Mr. Chairman, may I call ten o'clock.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I should like to advise the house that tomorrow we will continue with supplementary estimates, beginning with the estimates of the Department of Finance. The Minister of Finance will make a statement at the opening of his estimates.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I should like to maye it clear that I am not sure this is agreeable, in view of the length of time the Minister of Agriculture has taken tonight and the quality of the remarks made. We will sleep on it.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

PUBLIC SERVICE—PENSIONS OF RETIRED CIVIL SERVANTS—REQUEST FOR INCREASE AT THIS SESSION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the subject of the pensions of retired civil servants is on the late show again tonight because of a question which I put to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) on Wednesday, January 31, as recorded in Hansard at page 6207. Initially my question on that day to the Prime Minister had to do with the business of the house. In particular I asked if he could indicate what items of legislation the government wished parliament to deal with before anything happened to the present session. The Prime Minister in reply expressed the hope that he would be able to give a list of such items shortly, and then Hansard reads as follows:

> Mr. Knowles: Will the list include provision for increasing the pensions of retired civil servants, so this matter can be dealt with before the present Prime Minister retires?
> Mr. Pearson: I would only be in a position to submit the pieces of legislation which are very urgent and of immediate importance; and while the item to which the hon. member refers is of great importance, it is not on the immediate and urgent list.
> Mr. Knowles: Why not?

As a matter of fact, the point of my asking for this matter to be posted for this adjournment debate is to seek an answer to that question: Why not? Why is it that the matter of increasing the pensions of retired civil servants, as recommended unanimously by a joint committee of both houses in a report tabled on May 8, 1967, is not on the list of business to be dealt with before the present Prime Minister retires?

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, I have not time to go over the whole history of this matter, and it is not necessary because it has been done a good many times; but there are one or two other references I should like to make at this time. On December 15, 1967, eight days after the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Benson) had indicated the programs that were being cut, I asked the Prime Minister whether he would include this question of increasing the pensions of retired civil servants on the list of things that he would attend to before leaving office. His reply on that date, as recorded at page 5474 of Hansard, was that he hoped the situation would improve during the remainder of his period as Prime Minister so that this might be possible. Later, on another occasion, I asked the Prime Minister whether conditions had improved to that point. This was on Friday, February 9, 1968, as recorded at page 6558 of Hansard, and he said he was still hoping that the situation would improve so this matter could be dealt with.

The story in its entirety is a long one; it covers many years. But the facts are now pretty well known to the members of this house and to the public generally. Our retired civil servants have a case for an increase in their pensions. Other people have, too; but surely the place for the government to begin is with its own employees. That case has been confirmed by the report of the special joint committee to which I have already referred. We were assured time and time again that the matter would be dealt with, but we have been put off and off and off.

I say quite frankly that if this matter is not dealt with under the present Prime Minister, I am not very hopeful that any of the candidates who aspire to be the prime minister in the next session of this house will be as interested in the matter as he is.

Mr. Douglas: There is an exception.

Mr. Knowles: My leader says there is an exception. Perhaps the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen), if he is the exception, could indicate where he stands on the matter. It might help him at the April convention.

In any case, I am deadly serious about this. It does seem to me that neither we in the house nor the people who are affected should be insulted and put off any longer by the excuses which are given to us from time to time. The excuse that it was a matter of saving money, as suggested by the President of the Treasury Board last December 7, just does not go down. The excuse that the matter is complicated, just does not wash. The excuse that there is no parliamentary time to deal with it, is not acceptable at all. The need is there; the case has been made. This matter was dealt with by a previous government, so it can be handled. It is not brand new ground that is being broken. I suggest therefore that the appeal I make is one to which a response should be made. This matter should be dealt with during the present session of parliament before the present Prime Minister leaves office.

My time is nearly up, so without indulging in any histrionics or further argument, may I just ask whatever person opposite is answering my question for the Prime Minister tonight to tell me why this urgent and important question is not on the list of matters to be dealt with before the present Prime Minister leaves office. If it is not yet on that list, I urge that it be put there without delay.

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, in reply to this question I will have to repeat some of the remarks which the hon. member made. Five weeks ago tomorrow, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre asked the Prime Minister on orders of the day a general question regarding legislation which the government hoped to bring forward in the present session. The Prime Minister answered in general terms, and two days later replied more specifically. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre asked a supplementary question to his first one, as recorded at page 6207 of Hansard, which reads as follows:

> Will the list include provision for increasing the pensions of retired civil servants, so this matter can be dealt with before the present Prime Minister retires?

The reply read as follows:

> Mr. Pearson: I would only be in a position to submit the pieces of legislation which are very urgent and of immediate importance; and while the item to which the hon. member refers is of great importance, it is not on the immediate and urgent list.

I say to the hon. member that I think it is less than realistic for him to brush aside the answers which have been given to him and others time and time again by the Prime Minister, the President of the Treasury Board, and myself. Why bother asking the question if he will not listen and understand the answer? I submit that this is the real question.

Another basic question is: When will this house deal with the extremely urgent and critical matters which now lie before us, including a simple amendment to the National Housing Act which will reduce the down payment on homes for thousands of Canadians.

The question of superannuation pensions is of great importance and a matter of continuing consideration on the part of the government.

Mr. Knowles: Why refer anything to committees if you do not pay any attention to their reports?

TELEVISION—REQUEST FOR IMPROVEMENT IN SERVICE IN LAC ST. JEAN CONSTITUENCY

Mr. Alcide Simard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I shall read the question I put this afternoon to the hon. Minister of Transport:

Further to the representations made by the chamber of commerce of Alma, main centre of my riding, can the hon. minister tell us what steps he intends to take to improve the relay of C.B.C. programs by the station CKRS-TV of Jonquière-Kénogami?

Mr. Speaker, the reasons which prompted me to put that question to the hon. minister are, to my mind, very urgent because for a while now, the people back home deplore the inefficient relay of C.B.C. programs.

The facts which motivated that question can be found in the brief addressed to the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer), of which he certainly has a copy.

I quote this excerpt from the brief presented by the Alma chamber of commerce:

The Jonquière station (CKRS) serves the people of Alma through channels 12 and 8, that is from the main station or from the Chambord satellite. In both cases, and we shall see why, black and white or colour reception leaves much to be desired, especially in the lower parts of the city and in certain areas such as Isle-Maligne and Maltais. The most highly perfected antennas—several citizens made the experiment—did not remedy the situation. On the other hand, the Chicoutimi station (CJPM)—

Incidentally, this is a private station.

—serves all the area through its facilities at Mont Sainte-Claire alone. Generally speaking, the black and white and colour reception is superior to that of CKRS-TV.

In a city like Alma, where thousands of people watch television, which constitutes a well of publicity from which the two regional T.V. stations draw abundantly, this is intolerable.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what are the causes of this poor reception? I shall quote further from the brief:

In the course of our survey, we questioned a good number of T.V. owners, technicians in electronics, people who work in the area.

On the strength of what they told us, and considering the fact that the problems related to the quality of relaying are far more acute through the channels of the Jonquière station, we decided to limit our remarks to this station only for the time being.

Now, Mr. Speaker, who is responsible for this sad state of affairs? Here is what the brief has to say in this regard:

It is difficult to determine who is truly responsible for all this, because the frequencies are allocated by the federal Department of Transport. The owners of television stations have no jurisdiction over them. But, on the other hand, it is unfortunate that such inconveniences become noticeable only after the transmitters and antennas are installed. Their removal would no doubt, cost hundreds of thousands of dolars to the Jonquière station.

I hope that it is fully realized the kind of expenses incurred by the owners of television sets who, having noticed a rather poor reception, called the dealer of the technician in order to find out why. Other people installed rather expensive antennas simply to come to the conclusion that the station itself, CKRS-TV, was in fact responsible.

And the brief concludes with these words:

After due consideration to all the arguments and facts mentioned above, the Alma Chamber of Commerce calls upon the federal Department of Transport to ask CKRS-TV station, which broadcasts the C.B.C. programs, to set up a microwave relay system as found everywhere else in the province of Quebec and in Canada.

I should like to know the attitude of the hon. Minister of Transport in this regard and ask him whether he can assure us that steps will be taken to correct it.

[English]

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this seems to be a matter that would more properly be directed to the Secretary of State, inasmuch as it deals with the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. I am in great sympathy with the hon. member for Lake St. John regarding his difficulty in sorting out the various television stations in his community. I wish some of the members from Quebec, Ontario and the more central regions would visit British Columbia and note the difficulties we are facing in the matter of providing television service. The C.B.C. and other private stations have been unable to provide service to communities of up to two and three thousand people. So that while I am in great sympathy with the hon. member I do want to assure him that his problem is certainly not unique.

On making inquiries this afternoon during the little time at my disposal I was informed that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has this matter under consideration and has requested that the application for satellite transmission, as I understand the problem, be deferred till certain other technical problems have been resolved. But the matter is under active consideration, and since the hon. member has brought it to the attention of the Department of Transport I want to assure him that I personally will be pleased to look into it on his behalf.

FINANCE—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON ECONOMIC AND FINANCIAL POLICY

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of Finance was being questioned today about the statement that he is going to present to the house when his estimates come before the house tomorrow, I asked him the following question:

> I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the minister whether in making that statement he could, for the information of dullards like me and others, specify the advantages of a fixed exchange rate or the disadvantages of a floating exchange rate.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that exchange rates are a bit beyond the intellectual capacity of the hon. member for Kootenay West to absorb; however, I am anxious to learn. On reading the history of exchange rates I find that there has been no pattern with any nation throughout the years. Most nations, I find, have acted in what they thought was the national interest in periods of emergency. I find Conservative governments taking both sides of the question, Liberal governments taking both sides of the question, and socialist governments have taken one or the other side of the question at certain times. That is the reason I asked this question.

I understand that at the present time the minister is strongly in favour of a fixed exchange rate. Before the minister replies I want briefly to refer to an article that appeared in the Star for February 16 written by Peter Newman in connection with the report of the Watkins task force. I must say that I think the Star is to be complimented for publishing this article, which is a report on foreign investment in Canada.

• (10:20 p.m.)

It reads as follows:

> A floating rate for the international value of the Canadian dollar would help protect jobs and guard against inflation in this country, suggests the Watkins task force report on foreign investment.
> The present fixed rate—92½ cents U.S.—restricts independent Canadian policy in these areas, the report says.
> It comes down on the side of the "flexibles" in the continuing argument over exchange rate policy. They include many bankers and financial men, as well as politicians.
>
> The government has been committed to the fixed rate since 1962. At that time, a floating rate had to be abandoned as part of the price of massive international help in supporting Canada's efforts to relieve speculative and other pressures against the dollar.
> Other major world trading nations also have fixed rates, by agreement under the International Monetary Fund. Their purpose is to assure currency values to international traders and investors.
> The report says "it is likely that the most effective means for lessening these constraints (on Canadian economic policies) would be a return to a flexible exchange rate system."
> Backers of the flexible exchange rate see it this way:
> When there is a heavy flow of money from Canada, the natural tendency is for the value of the dollar to drop.
> If it drops far enough, it helps correct the outflow by discouraging imports and encouraging exports.
>
> That is, it brings more money in to Canada and lessens the amounts going out.
> But Canada can't now let the dollar drop more than 1 per cent below its pegged rate.
> This means it may be compelled to attract money to Canada by raising interest rates, slashing government spending and raising taxes.
> And that may interfere with policies of growth and full employment.

After hearing arguments on both sides of this question I can well understand that many of the Canadian people are confused. This is why I asked the minister the question I did. I hope he will respond favourably to my invitation because I think his comments would be most interesting to members of the house, and informative to the Canadian public.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): As the hon. member has suggested, it is my intention when my estimates are called tomorrow to discuss both international and domestic matters, and I shall of course at that time be talking about some recent developments in the exchange market.

I cannot promise, now, that I shall engage in a dissertation on the respective merits of fixed and floating exchange rates. The only thing that causes me a little wonder is that the hon. member should raise any question about this at all. I understood that the party to which he belongs is fully committed to the floating exchange rate. However, I shall listen with great interest to the views of his party, and perhaps the hon. gentleman himself will enter the debate when he has an opportunity to do so.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

B.C. INDIAN RESERVES MINERAL RESOURCES ACT

Motion No. 51—Mr. Howard:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all directives prepared by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and all reports prepared for that Department since January 1, 1965, relating to the British Columbia Indian Reserves Mineral Resources Act.

Motion agreed to.

B.C. INDIAN RESERVES MINERAL RESOURCES ACT

Motion No. 52—Mr. Howard:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of all telegrams, letters and other documents exchanged between the government or any agency or department thereof, and any other person, government or organization since January 1, 1965, relating to the British Columbia Indian Reserves Mineral Resources Act.

Motion agreed to.

FEDERAL CONTRIBUTIONS TO SHARED COST PROGRAMS

Motion No. 53—Mr. Fulton:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of all correspondence, etc., exchanged between the Government of Canada and the Governments of the Provinces or any of them, since September 1, 1967, concerning a slowdown, holdback, or elimination of federal contributions towards any program or project to which it had been agreed that joint federal and provincial financial contributions would be made.

Motion agreed to.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PAYMENT BY FRANCE FOR FORMER CANADIAN NATO BASES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question regarding Canadian NATO bases in France. Has the government of Canada made any recent requests or had any recent communications from the government of France regarding payment by that country for Canadian owned NATO bases in France given up last year? I understand these bases cost some $18,000,000, for which France agreed to make some recompense.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, consultations are now under way among 14 countries, particularly the United States and Canada, in respect of claims against France. Until those consultations have resulted in a conclusion I am afraid I cannot give any more definite reply. I can say that this matter is under very active consideration.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, will the minister inform the house as to the size of the claim Canada has made against France in respect of compensation for these facilities?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, this is one of the matters forming part of the consultative arrangement. An assessment is now being made of what each country considers to be its claim against France.

IMMIGRATION

CONSIDERATION OF APPLICATIONS FROM ASIANS IN KENYA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. It relates to the Asians in Kenya who in a short time are to lose their work permits and may become stateless citizens. Is any special consideration to be given to these people to allow them to enter Canada, in the interests of humanity and Commonwealth relations? Will special consideration be given on compassionate grounds, and is it contemplated by the government to waive the present regulations?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think that our regulations, as they stand now, can cover that situation. I have already told the house, if I remember rightly, that we will send special teams to Kenya as soon as the number of applications warrants it.

We are ready to examine those applications quickly when they are made.

[English]

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask whether special teams have gone to Nairobi, and will some additional points be granted in order that these people may qualify? Will a special set of regulations apply in the case of these particular applicants?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, I will inquire and tell the hon. member tomorrow if teams are already in Kenya.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

As far as changing our standards of selection is concerned, we have not considered that matter yet.

[English]

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether, if the Commonwealth is to serve any useful purpose at all, the government does not think this is a matter which should be discussed by Commonwealth members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is now asking an argumentative question. This is not in order.

Mr. Jack Roxburgh (Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, I should like the Minister of Manpower and Immigration to assure us that although privileges may be extended to bring in these people, this will not upset in any way the immigration policies now in force.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a supplementary question to the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Could he tell us whether his department has made decisions concerning the case of the young Cuban athlete who has asked for asylum in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: The question is not supplementary.

[English]

Mr. Raymond Rock (Jacques-Cartier-Lasalle): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Will the minister also take seriously into consideration—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Wellington South.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Labour who is responsible for housing. Can he assure this house and the country that housing will be made available to these proposed immigrants?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Rock: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In considering this immigration problem, will the minister also take seriously into consideration the high unemployment problem in Canada?

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Another split.

APPLICATION FOR POLITICAL ASYLUM BY CUBAN ATHLETE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, I have a question that I should like to address to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Has a ruling yet been made with regard to the application of the young Cuban athlete in Vancouver to remain in Canada and be granted political asylum?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not remember. I am going to check and I shall give an answer to the hon. member tomorrow.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

STATEMENT BY QUEBEC PREMIER RESPECTING EDUCATIONAL DELEGATION TO GABON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Is he aware that the Quebec premier has said that he did not receive any note from the government in Ottawa concerning the Quebec delegation to Gabon?

Moreover, can the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs tell us at what time that note was sent to the Quebec government, and whether he is willing to table it in the house?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Perhaps I ought to deal with that matter, Mr. Speaker, because the note was tabled by me. In that note which I tabled the other day I said it was suggested that the Quebec minister of education could head a Canadian delegation. That is the exact truth, and that suggestion was made. The question of a formal invitation, of course, could not arise because Canada itself had not at that time been invited to the conference. Indeed, in spite of our efforts to secure an invitation, we were not successful. But the words I used in my statement were quite accurate. The record will bear that out.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the current difficulties between Canada, Gabon and the province of Quebec, would the Prime Minister assure the house that before continuing to push the federal cause the government will see fit to carry on the necessary constitutional discussions to clear up this matter?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, there were discussions with the province of Quebec from the very beginning of this matter.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, this is somewhat in the nature of a supplementary question, but it was supposed to be a main question. I ask the Prime Minister whether an official invitation has been extended to the Canadian government for the proposed educational conference in Paris which follows the one held in Gabon. Has the government been invited to participate in that particular conference?

Mr. Pearson: I do not believe any invitations have been sent in respect of that conference. If such an invitation to attend were sent to Canada by the sponsoring government, which in this case would be the government of France, of course we would be very glad to accept.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a supplementary question.

Since Quebec has been invited to a conference on education to be held in France, can the right hon. Prime Minister tell us whether, on that occasion, the Canadian government intends to break off its diplomatic relations with France, as it has done with Gabon?

[English]

FINANCE

POSSIBLE IMPOSITION BY UNITED STATES OF IMPORT SURCHARGES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Finance. In view of the strong indication that the government of the United States intends to impose a surcharge on import tariffs as a means of correcting its balance of payments problem, has the government of Canada been in touch with the government of the United States about this matter? If so, has it received an assurance that any such surcharge if applied will not be imposed on Canadian products?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I cannot confirm that the government of the United States has any intention of imposing such a surcharge. I can say, however, that during my discussions with the Secretary of the Treasury this possibility was discussed between us.

Mr. Hees: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Did the minister receive an assurance from the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States that Canada would not be included in any plan to impose a surcharge if one is applied?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, needless to say the Secretary of the Treasury would not deal with hypothetical questions like that. I can only say that Mr. Fowler did not confirm that the United States intended to impose a tax on imports.

Mr. Hees: I have a further supplementary question. The minister has referred to the matter as being hypothetical. Does he honestly not believe that it has considerable substance?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PROPOSED CONSIDERATION OF HOUSING BILL AND NATIONAL CAPITAL RESOLUTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the government house leader. Would he consider the following proposal, namely that in view of the fact that item No. 64 on the order paper, the second reading of Bill No. C-202, may contribute to improving the housing situation, we would be prepared to pass the bill in all its remaining stages in one day if the government would bring it forward. We would also propose to pass without debate item No. 66 on the order paper, the resolution to set up a joint committee of both houses of parliament to examine the progress and programs of the National Capital Commission, so the joint committee can get to work on this matter.

I wonder whether the house leader could indicate to us whether he is prepared to accept this proposal.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to accept the proposal with one amendment, namely that my hon. friend would agree to pass item No. 64 without debate.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Mr. Hees.]

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Loney (Bruce): My question is to the Minister of Agriculture. Would the minister inform the house if it is his intention when he meets the national farmers union tomorrow to quote statistics implying that they have never had it so good?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): I will quote statistics to show the position in which the farmers find themselves today.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question and the answer are both argumentative.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED PROHIBITION OF EXPORTS OF NICKEL TO U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I am reliably informed that the quickest and most effective way to stop the war in Viet Nam would be to prevent the export to the United States of Canadian nickel, which is so essential to the prosecution of that war.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should ask a question.

Mr. Herridge: That was just a preface, Mr. Speaker; I am coming to the question now. Would the government consider negotiating an agreement with the United States on terms similar to those offered to France for the export of uranium, and in so doing earn the gratitude of all peace loving people?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, of course Canada exports a great many important mmaterials to the United States. I understand that paper is essential within the context of the question asked by my hon. friend. I do not think the Canadian government would earn the gratitude of Canadians employed in producing these commodities if it sought to restrict these exports to the United States. I am sure this would be the view of the hon. member for Sudbury, who is in the same party as my hon. friend.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the government has placed restrictions on the amount of these commodities that can be exported to other countries, particularly nickel and copper, is the minister of the opinion that adequate markets for these commodities could be found elsewhere in the world?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I doubt it.

Mr. Lewis: You don't know.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO DISBANDMENT OF GUARDS REGIMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Has his department under consideration a plan to disband the Canadian Regiment of Guards, and if so for what reasons?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): There is no such plan, Mr. Speaker.

HARBOURS

INQUIRY AS TO REPRESENTATION ON NATIONAL BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. I should like to ask the minister whether the government or his department are considering a change in the structure or the makeup of the National Harbours Board to include a representative from the port of Montreal?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): This suggestion was made by the Montreal port commission, Mr. Speaker. It will, of course, be given the usual careful consideration. I have no idea yet what attitude the government might adopt.

Mr. Forrestall: May I ask a supplementary question. If there is any tendency on the part of the government to follow that course, will they give equal consideration to representation from Halifax and Saint John?

Mr. Hellyer: Halifax already has a representative on the board, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Forrestall: Is that an admission?

TRADE

STEEL—ANSWER BY MINISTER RESPECTING DUMPING DUTY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Joseph Macaluso (Hamilton West): I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue arising out of the concern of one of the major steel producing areas of Canada with respect to an answer the minister gave as reported on page 7279 of Hansard for yesterday, dealing with steel coming from foreign countries. The question arises—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member should ask his question.

Mr. Macaluso: The question arises out of a report in this morning's Globe and Mail. I ask the minister if this report is the result of a press release or statement, or is it an erroneous interpretation of the answer the minister gave yesterday?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Saint John-Albert.

Mr. Macaluso: I rise on a question of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's question is not in order. He is asking about a statement.

AIR TRANSPORT

SUBMISSION RESPECTING REPORT ON C.P.A. CRASH IN JAPAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Has the minister received a submission from the Canadian Air Line Pilots Association which disagrees completely with the report on the C.P.A. crash in Japan? If so, will he reconcile these two statements and report to the house?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I will take the question as notice.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—CRIMINAL CHARGES AGAINST SUPERINTENDENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Solicitor General, and ask him whether in the light of the fact one of the Indian superintendents in British Columbia has been charged with violation of trust as a public officer and with theft of over $50, will the minister undertake to inquire into the ramifications which may flow from the laying of those charges?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): I am not familiar with the case and of course it would not be appropriate for me to make any comment at this time. I will discuss it with my colleague the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development after the trial in order to ascertain if there are any related matters that require attention.

CRIMINAL CODE

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): My question is for the Minister of Justice, Mr. Speaker, and was raised originally in the house on February 8. Has the minister decided whether all or part of the omnibus bill amending the Criminal Code will be referred to a committee so the public will know whether or not to prepare representations?

[Translation]

Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the decisions which we are making in that respect are continuously adjusted, on account of the chronology of events, of course. We do not know as yet when this bill might come before the house. If it is not introduced during this session or this parliament, it will be introduced during another one. For that reason, the time when this bill will be studied remains to be determined.

[English]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON EFFORTS TO CONTROL DRUG TRAFFIC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): I direct my question to the Solicitor General. In view of the increasing number of reports regarding the serious effects on young people of the use of illicit drugs; the growing evidence of increasing traffic in drugs; also in view of the recent recommendations of the Canadian Medical Association relating to the dangers of such illicit drugs which require legal and social restrictions against their distribution—

[Mr. Howard.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member kindly ask his question?

Mr. Thompson: I am coming to that, sir. Would the Solicitor General inform the house whether his department is considering any specific action for more effective control of this dangerous situation, including control over the dissemination of material and television programs which encourage the use of drugs?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): The R.C.M.P. is making a forceful effort to deal with the problem. The scope of the problem is revealed by the increase in the number of prosecutions for drug offences from 943 in 1966-67 to 1,915 in the first 11 months of 1967-68. As recently as last week the deputy commissioner of R.C.M.P. operations met with officials of the bureau of narcotics in Washington as part of a continuing consultation. A few weeks ago the commissioner convened a special meeting of all assistant commissioners heading the eight divisions across Canada for the purpose of discussing, among other things, matters relating to drug trafficking. Of course the R.C.M.P. is in touch with every agency on the continent—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the minister that perhaps this statement is a bit long.

FINANCE

POSSIBLE PENALTY ON WITHDRAWAL OF MONETARY FUND CREDIT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a question with relation to the recent drawing by Canada of our credit in the International Monetary Fund, amounting to $241 million. Would the minister tell the house whether any transfer tax or penalty was payable by Canada in connection with that drawing?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder whether the hon. member would not consider that this is the type of question that might be asked in a few minutes when the house considers the estimates of the Department of Finance.

Mr. Fulton: With respect, Mr. Speaker, I was asking the question now so we might have the matter as background to the minister's statement.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would have to take this question as notice, but I shall have my officials before me later and will ask them. I am unaware of any such tax or payment, but I would not want to deny it without consultation.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

INQUIRY AS TO REFUNDS OF EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of National Revenue. Is the minister in a position to report to the house on the progress his department has made with respect to the refunding of overpayments by employers to the Canada Pension Plan?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, in order to solve this problem, a new legislation would have to be introduced and I do not think that we could announce the government policy immediately.

We have already been in consultation with some provinces and we shall inform the house of any decision in due time.

[English]

HIGHWAY SAFETY

ESTABLISHMENT OF SAFETY STANDARDS FOR USED CARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask the Minister of Transport whether as part of the federal program for highway safety consideration has been given to encouraging the provinces to establish safety standards for used cars on an interprovincial basis.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is one of the questions that we expect to discuss with the provinces when we meet with provincial representatives. Personally I think an effective standard for used cars is essential, and I should like to see one adopted which could be applied by all provinces of Canada.

THE MINISTRY

INQUIRY AS TO RESIGNATION OF TRADE MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Could the Prime Minister advise the house when he expects to accept the resignation of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, which I understand has—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows that his question is not in order.

INCOME TAX

ASSESSMENTS RESPECTING TIPS RECEIVED BY BARTENDERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bud Germa (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Have his inspectors in the income tax department been instructed to make arbitrary assessments when making a determination as to tips received by bartenders in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question should be put on the order paper.

AGRICULTURE

POTATOES—IMPORTS FROM U.S. INTO WESTERN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. I should like to ask the minister whether he and his officials have yet made a determination in the claim of the western Canada potato growers that importations of United States potatoes into western Canada are at prices that constitute dumping.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me that this is a repetition of the question asked yesterday.

Mr. Schreyer: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I should tell Your Honour that yesterday you advised me that the question should be asked during consideration of the estimates, but this was impossible because the minister was filibustering his own estimates.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Speaker, either the minister has not heard my question or he refuses to answer. I should like to restate my question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the minister heard the question.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is asking for a legal opinion. He should know that the rules of the house do not permit me to give a legal opinion.

Mr. Schreyer: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In the light of the minister's answer I should like to ask whether he intends to make a decision on the request of the western Canadian potato growers' association for the imposition of a value for duty on United States exports of potatoes to Canada.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, if such decision is to be made it will be announced in the proper manner.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON BRITISH COLUMBIA-ALASKA BOUNDARY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to my dear friend the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I preface my question by saying how pleased we are that he is coming to my home community later this month. I look forward to his visit with anticipation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, the question I wish to pose to the minister is whether he would enlighten us on the government's position with respect to the international boundary between Alaska and British Columbia.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am always very glad to enlighten my hon. friend.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO NEW ISSUE OF SAVINGS BONDS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Finance. Is the minister proposing to make an offering of Canada savings bonds to the public this spring, a possibility reported in this morning's Globe and Mail?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the government has under consideration making an offer to exchange the 1959 series for a new series. I made an announcement about this some time ago.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

[Mr. Greene.]

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

Administration

4c. Grant to the endowment fund of the Vanier Institute of the Family—L'institut Vanier de la famille, $236,869.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply, supplementary estimates (C), 1967-68, of the Department of Finance, vote 4c.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Chairman, it had been my expectation two weeks ago that we would proceed with a debate on the state of the economy in accordance with the desire expressed by the opposition. Recent developments on the international scene and the adverse vote on Bill C-193 have altered the setting for this debate. It now takes on a new character and a new urgency.

The immediate and urgent task facing the government and parliament is to take action which will buttress confidence in the Canadian economy and the Canadian dollar in the midst of mounting international financial uncertainties.

There is little we can do in this parliament to affect the underlying forces at work in international markets. We do have responsibility to ensure that we do not contribute, either by our action or by inaction, to the weakening of our own position and the worsening of the world financial situation. I shall therefore take advantage of this occasion to indicate why it is that the government considers it essential to introduce fiscal measures to replace the revenues that would have been provided by Bill C-193. A resolution preceding the introduction of another and different tax bill for this purpose will appear on the order paper tomorrow.

In addition to the tax measure, which the government hopes can be dealt with as soon as possible, and the further cuts in expenditure which I shall announce, it is the government's intention to announce within a day or two proposals concerning restraint on the increases of prices and wages and other costs and incomes. These proposals will revolve around the establishment of a board of review.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Before discussing our domestic affairs and the policies that we feel should be followed in regard to them, I would like to describe some of the recent events in international financial markets since I gave my budget statement on November 30.

The devaluation of sterling and the nervous mood that has existed in international circles since that happened have brought uncertainty and speculation into many of the capital and exchange markets throughout the world. Waves of rumours, speculation and market fluctuations have occurred at various times during the past three months. Seldom have international markets been so disturbed.

Both the international exchange and capital markets have been influenced considerably by the United States balance of payments program, announced on January 1 this year, which was designed to check the outflow of gold. The main item in the United States program which has created uncertainty over its effects on Canada has been the new mandatory control over direct investments by United States controlled businesses in other countries. When this program was announced and explained to us it was evident that the United States government had tried to achieve its objectives in ways that would minimize any impact on Canada, which, as the balance of payments figures between our two countries show, would be counter-productive as far as the United States is concerned.

I was able to say when these controls on direct investments were announced that the assessments given to me indicated that these were not intended or likely to lead to any material reduction in the flow of United States direct investment to Canada this year. Since January 1 we have examined the probable effects of these controls in more detail, and discussed them with the United States on several occasions. These controls leave room for about as much flow of direct investment into Canada as would occur without them this year, with a few exceptions. In the particular case of the petroleum industry, where programs change considerably from year to year, some problems have been under review both here and in Washington, and I expect these can be overcome.

However, in the nervous mood that has existed in international markets in recent months, it was natural that there would be uncertainty and concern over the possible effect of these United States measures on the Canadian situation. Around the middle of January pressure developed against the Canadian dollar in exchange markets, apparently triggered by misunderstanding of the effects of these United States controls on direct investment. On January 21 the United States Secretary of the Treasury, after discussing the matter with me, issued a clarifying statement which provided reassurance that the new United States balance of payments program does not call for, nor is it intended to have the effect of causing, abnormal transfers of earnings or withdrawals of capital by United States companies having investments in Canada, and that the program provides scope for continued large flows of capital to Canada.

As the house knows, of course, there continues to be an important inflow of long term capital from the United States. Indeed, hardly a month passes without long term loan issues being made in the United States on behalf of Canadian provinces, municipalities, or other bodies here.

On January 21 the Bank of Canada increased its bank rate from 6 per cent to 7 per cent and announced that the chartered banks had agreed to discourage the use of bank credit to facilitate abnormal transfers of funds abroad by Canadian subsidiaries of foreign companies, or to replace financing which has in the past normally been provided by parent companies.

Following this clarification by the United States and the action of the Bank of Canada, the pressure on the Canadian dollar abated. The regular announcement of our reserve position at the end of January indicated that Canadian reserves during the month had declined approximately $100 million in United States terms after taking into account the drawing into our reserves of $250 million in United States dollars by the Bank of Canada through activation of part of its reciprocal credit facility with the federal reserve system.

In the early part of February there was a period of further pressure on the Canadian dollar in the exchange market as the market reacted to the news of the changes in the reserves during January. Later there was substantial pressure on the dollar again after the adverse vote on the government's tax bill. The state of our reserves at the end of February, published last Friday, makes clear that there would have been a further reduction in our holdings of exchange that month had there not been an addition to the reserves secured by the drawing upon the International Monetary Fund. If we had not made this drawing there would have been a reduction of $113 million, in United States terms, in our gold and foreign exchange holdings.

As I said at the outset, there is little we can do about international financial developments like devaluation of sterling and the United States efforts to check the outflow of gold. We do have a responsibility to take action to strengthen and buttress our own position in the face of these international developments. There has been concern in recent years over the rise in Canadian prices and costs of production and its possible effects on the competitive position of Canadian industry. There have been more recently uncertainties as to the future action to be expected of the government and of parliament here.

First let me deal with our competitive position. I should like to recall that our trade position last year was stronger than it has been for some years past, and that by the end of the year our trade surplus was running at its highest level in over a decade. Indeed, our over-all current account position on the balance of payments in 1967, which I am told will be published later this week, has been considerably stronger than for several years previously.

While some of this strength derived from the extraordinary receipts that we obtained from tourist trade because of Expo '67, the net improvement on all our other current international transactions was nearly as large. We can reasonably expect that our current account balance this year, though it is bound to widen, will still be better than it was in either of the two years before Expo. It will thus represent an improvement in relation to the average deficit of the last 12 years, both in absolute terms and more especially in relation to our now greatly enlarged national output and volume of international transactions.

The present exchange rate of the Canadian dollar is appropriate to the situation of our economy. We are still experiencing the upward thrust in our economy which began seven years ago and which has continued without serious interruption to the present. Our export performance has been good, especially in the past few months. Imports have not been increasing disproportionately. Our economy is not significantly underutilized; indeed it is still displaying some of the effects of excess demand pressure which had built up over the long expansion.

Mr. Churchill: Where is the crisis, then?

Mr. Sharp: In these circumstances a lower exchange rate would add to our inflationary problems by increasing the demand on Canadian production by foreigners, and by reducing the use by Canadians of goods and services produced abroad. Domestic demand would have to be further restrained in order to offset the inflationary consequences of these reactions.

We must also bear in mind the effects of our action upon others and thus upon the world with which we trade and from which we derive so much of both real and financial capital. The international finance system has been under pressure for several years and has recently suffered some serious shocks. We must accept and discharge our share of responsibility for the effective working of the world system of trade and payments. That system, and the mutual assistance it involves in times of stress, provides large resources to meet speculative movements such as we have encountered recently.

Such resources are available to us as they have been to others, as is evident from the use we made of the reciprocal currency arrangements with the federal reserve system in January and the drawing on the fund in February. Further large amounts are available to us from these sources to meet further speculative movements should they occur, quite apart from the new credits which it would be possible for us to arrange if they are required.

I mentioned the influence on markets of uncertainty as to the action to be expected by government and parliament here, and I mentioned that when the tax bill was voted upon adversely there was a reaction in the exchange markets. I think we must recognize the danger of exaggerating political uncertainty in a situation such as we have now. It makes news to keep saying we face a financial crisis, that the government in Canada will be or may be paralyzed by political developments. It is possible to create a financial crisis if people come to believe these allegations about parliament. Yet parliament did not extend unreasonably the debate on the confidence motion. Parliament does want to debate seriously the state of the Canadian economy. I do not believe there is a will on either side of the house to paralyse parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Sharp: The excitement generated in a political crisis such as we had recently, if prolonged, may create that impression, but I believe it is false.

I should now like to refer briefly to some of the other facts relating to the Canadian economy, and then draw some of the implications for policy from them. Hon. members will recall that we enjoyed a long period of economic expansion from 1961 through the boom of 1966, when the economy reached capacity. In the latter part of that year and in 1967 the rate of growth slackened, particularly in business capital spending, while employment and production levelled off. We were confronted with the problem of keeping the economy on a stable growth path while pursuing our major economic objectives of full employment, stability of prices, a high rate of growth, a viable balance of payments and an equitable distribution of rising incomes.

During last year it emerged that our main problem was to achieve stability of prices and costs despite a lessening in the excessive aggregate demands upon our economic resources. We seemed, however, to be plagued by a cost-push type of inflation even after the demand-pull type had subsided. As we look ahead now I think we will find there is so much to be done in Canada that is worth doing that there doesn't seem likely to be a deficiency of aggregate demands over the next few years, but rather a need for managing that aggregate and assigning priorities to its various components so we can have enough stability to permit sustainable growth.

In the three months since the budget statement of November 30 one of the most important economic factors has been the increasing evidence of rapid economic expansion in the United States. The pause which the American economy experienced in the first half of 1967 has been left behind. Business capital investment is now expanding in that country, and expenditures by consumers and governments are rising rapidly. There is indeed a real possibility of inflationary price and cost increases in the United States such as Canada experienced in the past two years unless there is a tax increase or other forms of fiscal restraint, and I need hardly say that this is the view being pressed by the United States administration.

In continental Europe expansion is to be expected as well. The O.E.C.D. is now forecasting a renewal of expansion in that area during 1968 at a rate of 3½ per cent in real terms. The expansion for the whole O.E.C.D. area including the United States and Japan is forecast at 4 per cent to 4½ per cent.

These external developments are providing a good market for most Canadian exports. One of the most encouraging features of recent months has been the strong expansion of exports in November and again in December. They have shown strength in all major market areas. Despite the problems encountered in marketing wheat during the past year our merchandise trade surplus for 1967 was substantially higher than that for the two preceding prosperous years.

Industrial production in Canada showed substantial increases in November and December, led by the automotive industry and primary iron and steel. Unemployment has fluctuated narrowly around the 4½ per cent level after allowing for the usual seasonal pattern. Its increase during the past year up to this level has reflected, of course, a variety of factors including particularly the failure of capital expenditures by businesses to expand during 1967.

Business capital expenditures are still influenced by the reduced level of profits in many industries and by concern over costs and the marketing prospects for various Canadian industries. In some cases the level of investment may be affected by the reduced level of retained earnings available for financing it, and by high interest rates, though I have seen little evidence that there is any shortage of bank credit for Canadian business. Any rapid upturn in the level of business capital expenditures is unlikely under present circumstances. Fortunately the current level is high, and permits the expansion of our industrial base and the modernization of Canadian equipment and techniques.

Some improvement is evident in housing. In 1967 housing starts reached a total of 164,000 fewer than we would have liked, fewer than anyone in this house would have liked, but an increase of 22 per cent over 1966 and a better total than many had expected during the year. I have been glad to note that the wider latitude provided for the market to determine the rates of interest of National Housing Act insured mortgages has led to an increasing flow of private funds from various types of institutions. The rates being paid for such funds are high by previous standards and they are, as they must be, competitive with other interest rates in the financial markets both here and in the United States and Europe. I think we can look forward to a higher rate of private housing starts this year than last year, particularly for apartments, while at the same time we are able to concentrate the funds provided by the government to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation into various types of public housing.

My colleague, the minister responsible for housing, expects that starts will rise to 175,000 this year.

Since I reported to the house in November, as in many months before that, the increases in prices and costs in Canada have been excessive. The consumers' price index has continued to advance at a troublesome rate. In January it shows an increase over the level of a year before of 4½ per cent. The increase in the cost of services was particularly great during 1967—6.4 per cent. The increase in the costs of shelter, that is rents and other costs of housing, has also been high, partly for reasons that are familiar—increased real property taxes, high land costs and high interest rates—but perhaps as well because landlords in many places are in a strong bargaining position.

While some food prices increased sharply last month, on the whole food prices have risen more moderately than others in the past year. The same is true of the prices of durable goods. Naturally, and fortunately, the increases in price have been least in most of those types of commodities in which Canadian producers face international competition.

On the side of costs, the increases in wages have been putting pressure on prices. Wage settlements in Canada have continued in recent months at high rates which exceed substantially the settlements in the United States, even though the latter have been increasing as well.

There have been some encouraging signs in the last year of improving productivity in the non-agricultural sector of the economy, but the rate of improvement falls far short of what we impatient Canadians want and demand in the annual improvement of our standards of living and government services. As a consequence, increases in prices and in the incomes of those with stronger market power are putting serious and inequitable pressures on the real incomes and living standards of those with less market power. The expectation of continuing price increases is having serious disturbing effects upon both the capital market and the labour market. When account is taken of all the consequences of persistently rising prices, it is evident that they cannot go on rising year after year at the rates they increased last year without undermining the stability of our prosperity, our production and our employment.

It seems quite evident to me that our first priority in economic policy now must be to achieve greater stability in prices and costs.

[Mr. Sharp.]

The consequence of the expectation of continued increasing prices has been reflected in our capital markets, specifically the market for government and municipal bonds, and for mortgages. The high interest rates being asked by investors are partly a reflection of the high level of interest rates in the United States and in Europe where similar conditions prevail, and also of the heavy demands placed on the capital markets in the past year. They also reflect, however, a widespread expectation of price increases continuing over a long period not only in Canada but elsewhere, which makes investors concerned about tying up their funds for a long time unless they get high yields in compensation for them. One important reason we must stop these persistent inflationary trends is to make it possible for governments, municipalities and home owners to be able to borrow money for long terms at reasonable interest rates.

It is against the foregoing background that we must now consider our course of action. We consider it necessary to maintain the kind of strong fiscal position which Bill C-193 was intended to help create. The purpose of such a fiscal policy is to check the inflation that I have described by bringing our revenues into line with our expenditures. Nothing I propose goes any further than that. It is the most essential element in a program directed to that end. Until we have an adequate fiscal framework we cannot properly endeavour to supplement it with other measures.

The new tax proposals will provide nearly as much revenue as Bill C-193 would have produced—$390 million of budgetary revenues compared with $425 million of budgetary revenues. We would receive an additional amount of $50 million non-budgetary receipts in each case. We propose to make up the difference, and more, by a further reduction of $75 million in government expenditure for the next fiscal year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Sharp: This can only be done by tough and somewhat arbitrary measures of a temporary character that are appropriate in an emergency like the present one. We propose to table a revised schedule of estimates reflecting these reductions for the approval of parliament, in place of the present main estimates.

I also want to announce that the government has decided to impose a freeze forthwith on the total numbers employed in the public service as a whole.

In an ideal economy where everything worked out according to the basic theory of the price system and the movement of resources, where everything was competitive, where we did not suffer from external influences or internal imperfections, we would be able to pursue the objective of full employment and of maximum economic growth without serious hindrance. But the world is not an ideal place; Canada does not have a perfect economy. We face limits upon our freedom of action. These limits must be taken into account just as much as the ideals toward which we all would strive in the pursuit of full employment, prosperity and social equity.

The chief limit which confronts us now and about which we have learned much in the last several years is that of the inflationary tendencies that develop as we approach toward full employment. We have found that at a level of unemployment of 3½ per cent in 1965 and 1966 our prices began to increase sharply. Our costs increased much more rapidly than did those of competing economies. Even when the level of employment dropped off a little and the pressure of demand upon our markets was less intense, we have found that the momentum of wage increases, of other cost increases, of price increases, has kept up. That is now the chief constraint upon our policy.

Nor is our problem simply the actual price increases taking place now. What is most disturbing is the growing tendency to expect that prices will continue rising year after year in the future. It is this amongst other factors which is causing workers to seek such high wage settlements. It is this which is causing investors in this country and elsewhere to seek such high interest rates. It is this which is causing despair among the old and others with fixed incomes, especially those who are living on the savings they have made over many years. It is this which is creating uncertainty in the minds of those whose productive investment must give us more and better jobs in the future. It is this expectation of steadily and continuously rising prices, most fundamentally, which is the concern of those who must choose between investments in Canada and investments elsewhere. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, the government feels it must ask parliament now to adopt further financial measures of an anti-inflationary character.

The country needs a clear demonstration that parliament is willing to take a determined stand against inflation even when such a stand requires that temporarily other objectives must be given second place. If we here are not willing to take the action that our great responsibilities require us to take, what can we expect of others?

We must give priority in our fiscal policy to resisting inflation. We must also plan, in consultation with business, with labour, and with all those whose decisions are important in determining prices, a means of greater understanding of the mutual danger of excessive increases in prices and in wages and other costs by which those in positions of strength can exploit their market power under present circumstances.

We cannot accomplish this direct influence upon prices and wages by imposing a system of controls upon our economy. We do not have the legal jurisdiction here in parliament to do it nor could we expect under peacetime conditions to solve the multitude of detailed problems that would require solution in exercising a rigid program of this kind. We are essentially a market economy exposed to the markets of the world. By and large, over the decades we have prospered by reason of this open economy. We have developed and expanded faster than almost any other country in the past 30 years. It would be retrograde and unnecessary to abandon all the advantages we derive from operating as a market economy, including not only the markets for goods and services but the markets for labour and for capital. On the other hand, we have to reconcile our over-all economic policies and to achieve our basic economic goals, within the framework of free markets.

Instead of legal controls we must use whatever powers of persuasion and influence we can muster in order to bring about pricing decisions and wage settlements that take into account the overwhelming public interest in price stability. Our purpose and program, which will, as I have said, revolve about the establishment of a board of review, will be to get price stability with a higher current level of employment than we could have if we relied only on fiscal and monetary measures to achieve our ends.

I have been glad to hear and see what the Leader of the Opposition has said on this subject within the last few days and I had the opportunity today of seeing something that was said by the New Democratic party on the subject. It seems to me that there is a good deal of agreement on all sides of the house with the general approach to this subject as I have outlined it.

Mr. Churchill: What about the Créditistes?

Mr. Sharp: I hope that we shall find in this debate and in the measures to be taken the groundwork for an agreed set of policies that will enable us to continue our prosperity without inflation.

May I conclude by emphasizing that the present international circumstances make it urgent, and I cannot emphasize this too much, that we deal as promptly as possible with the measures that are now necessary.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Finance finished his peroration with this sentence:

> I hope that we shall find in this debate and in the measures to be taken the groundwork for an agreed set of policies that will enable us to continue our prosperity without inflation.

• (3:40 p.m.)

The fact is that we have had prosperity with inflation. This government, in spite of many warnings, has continued its action heedless of inflation. We now find these latter day converts concerned about problems of inflation. The statement made by the minister is fraught with paradoxes. We find reference to the United States, the expanding economy, the pressure on prices and other factors. Canada is not fighting the Viet Nam war. We do not have shortages of commodities, goods and other things because of a war effort. I can understand how in the United States tax measures may be orthodox. They are attempting to siphon off demand, but who has suggested that the demand in Canada has ever been excessive? I have never heard of a shortage of goods or a shortage of labour, at least in most places; yet we are trying to deal with the problem of inflation, which this government has become aware of belatedly, by seeking to emulate our neighbour to the south.

I was interested in the nature of the reply the Minister of Finance made yesterday to a question I asked, as recorded on page 7272 of Hansard:

> —in light of the rather disturbing reports yesterday and this morning concerning our currency, is the Minister of Finance in a position to advise the house what steps Canada may be taking to protect the level of the Canadian dollar?

[Mr. Sharp.]

In part the minister said:

> —I hope parliament will support this government in its endeavour to raise the necessary revenues which are part of the pattern to give confidence to foreigners and Canadians that the Canadian dollar is worth its present parity position.

Let us look at those words. I detect, not only in that reply but elsewhere, an implication that the present crisis is the result of parliament taking irresponsible action in rejecting Bill C-193. Let me immediately reject that suggestion. It is with a strong feeling of arrogance that the government would attempt to put forward such an argument. The opposition was acting within its responsibility. It never liked the proposal announced in the mini-budget toward the end of last November when there was no apparent pressure on the Canadian dollar. The pressure on the Canadian dollar, to the extent it has now developed, developed since January as a consequence of the devaluation of the pound sterling and subsequent pressure on the United States dollar. Since the Canadian dollar is the second dollar currency in the world we were bound to be on the front line of any assault on the United States dollar. It is quite wrong to suggest that parliament contributed to the present pressure crisis.

It was the view of the opposition that the proposed tax measure was wrong, that it was inflationary and unnecessary at the time. The opposition had the right to reject it just as it has the right to reject the proposals to be announced later this day if it considers them to be improper. The opposition will consider the proposals with great care. The government does not have a monopoly on concern for the value of the Canadian dollar. This concern is shared equally by the opposition. We will consider the government's proposals with care and there certainly will not be any conscious effort to impede the implementation of any measure we consider to be reasonable and justifiable.

Having said that, let me hasten to add that the statement made by the Minister of Finance yesterday implied that by increasing government revenues we will restore confidence. Surely this totally ignores any cutback in governmental expenditures. It is clear from the economic sermon delivered by the minister this afternoon that he feels he must tax to raise revenue and thus restore confidence in the Canadian dollar. Surely that is wrong.

The minister has clearly admitted and demonstrated the degree of inflation which has taken place in the past year. This inflation is not classic in the sense that there is too much money chasing too few goods. The minister proposes by taxation to curb inflation. Are we to buy fewer goods made in Canada? Shall we employ fewer Canadians and therefore create new unemployment? This is what will happen to the extent that this measure is effective in curbing the consumption of Canadian goods and services. Have prices gone up because goods are scarce? That is not the case.

I still wonder what measure is to be placed before us today. In this connection let us consider the level of government expenditure. The minister has said there will be a reduction of some $75 million, although he has not indicated in what sector, and I think it would be idle to speculate in this regard. Perhaps he intends to accelerate the reduction of our defence expenditures. Perhaps he feels that a freeze in the number of public servants will result in some saving. Perhaps he plans to cut back on other government programs. In any event, these government reductions must be realistic.

I have always maintained that provincial and municipal governments share a responsibility with the federal government in respect of our economy. At this time the provincial legislatures have either received or are about to receive provincial budgets. The government of Canada should set an example regarding realistic anti-inflationary measures. We all suffer because of inflation.

We had the comic opera exercise at the time of the budget debate when the President of the Treasury Board said that the government was limiting its expenditures and had cut all the fat from them. Yet we are told we are going to limit the increase to something like 4.5 per cent. When we compared the figures of the first estimates for 1968-69 with those for 1967-68 we found there was an increase more like 8 per cent. Even if we take into account the supplementary estimates we are now considering, next year's estimates are close to 6 per cent higher than the total estimates of 1967-68.

Suggestions have been made with regard to realistic anti-inflationary measures that could be adopted. I ask hon. members to read the report of the Auditor General and his references to the unimplemented recommendations of the royal commission on government organization. This report is to parliament; it is not a report to the government. The report assesses the performance of the government. We see what little regard has been paid to the recommendations of the public accounts committee and of the Auditor General. It is as though the government says: We have to have these reports; they are a hair-shirt we must wear but we will ignore them as much as possible.

In Montreal this week the Leader of the Opposition indicated his willingness to support government measures to counter inflation and support the Canadian dollar, but he is not certain that new taxes are the only way to achieve these ends. We want to know precisely what the government has done in the past year with regard to implementing the recommendations of the Glassco report and what it intends to do this year. I have referred to the Auditor General's strictures with regard to non-performance in this connection, and that section of the report on page five should certainly make the government hide its face in embarrassment.

There was a reference by the Minister of Finance to, shall we say, the manufacturing of a crisis. He did not use the phrase "manufacturing a crisis" but he certainly referred to the situation. He delivered a lecture to the communications media about exaggerating political uncertainty, and he said on page 4 of his speech:

> It makes news to keep saying we face a financial crisis; that the government in Canada will be or may be paralysed by political developments.

I wish he had told the Prime Minister about that. When the Prime Minister went on television that Wednesday evening we were given one of the best performances in how to stoke the fires of crisis. That lesson should be administered right within the government.

With regard to the announcement by the minister that he will later today table two resolutions with reference to tax measures, I say it must be the government's responsibility to choose the methods which it deems best suited to deal with the problem not only of inflation but of the pressure on the Canadian dollar. It is the responsibility of the government to choose its methods. It is not the responsibility nor the obligation of the opposition to be blackjacked or pressured into accepting them as being the answers.

After all, we heard the Minister of Justice say the other afternoon: We are the elected; we are the ones to choose. I say, all right, if that is what he says then the responsibility lies directly with those on the other side of the chamber and the government must be held accountable for any measures it introduces. If the government fails to provide methods satisfactory to the opposition the opposition will decide, in the light of the circumstances, whether they are proper measures and the government cannot say: You must not turn down our proposals or you will further aggravate the international crisis.

The problem of the parity of currencies is an international one. The United States faces a more serious problem in this regard than we do. They propose to take certain steps according to the conditions that exist in that country. Britain, too, has taken steps and may have to take further steps. But Britain will have a budget in two weeks' time. Why should we not be having a full-scale budget rather than one of these piecemeal propositions? After all, a budget during the month of March is not an unheard of thing. The only complication is the leadership race. This anchors the action or inaction of the government. Frankly, Mr. Chairman, it is my view that ultimately only a full-scale budget can help to restore full public confidence.

We must have the information upon which the government relies to advance its programs. We must know the full amount of the deficit for 1968-69 and the exact amount of taxes required to meet the deficit. We must know, for instance, just what the Expo deficit will be and how the government intends to cope with it. If the government persists in its intention to proceed with medicare on July 1 we must know what it intends to do with regard to the taxes that the minister and his associates have said will have to be imposed in order to pay for medicare. We need information in regard to these matters.

We heard this afternoon another interim statement, another in a series of ad hoc measures. I say, Mr. Chairman, that the sooner we have a full-scale budget the better off we will be. As a matter of fact, I would say that the lack of a budget at this time gives the impression that the government may not be telling the whole story about the economy and may be holding back until after its April convention. This adds to the confusion, to the inability to look ahead and to the general uncertainty which now prevails in the markets.

• (4:00 p.m.)

The government's failure to implement sound policies in the past and control its fiscal commitments has led it into an impassé where high taxes, inflation, high interest rates and high costs have rendered the economy vulnerable to outside pressures. Had the government maintained a sound economy and the prosperity about which the minister spoke and to which we are entitled, Canada would be in a much better position today to meet the pressures from outside this country without the anxieties that we now have. I suggest that only by the formulation and adoption of sound and realistic policies backed up by a full-scale budget at the earliest possible opportunity can we get to this point.

[Mr. Lambert.]

There will be much comment on the minister's statement. I have said that I refuse to speculate about the nature of the taxes. We will wait to see what happens. There are to be cuts in expenditures. We will also have to wait to see before we comment on them. Within a day or two there is also to be a proposal concerning restraint on increases in prices and wages and other costs and incomes, based upon a board of review. It will be very interesting to see just what is intended. Will this board be given powers of compulsion and powers of roll-back? Will these apply to prices and to wages? In the case of wages, what does the government intend to do with respect to labour negotiations? I find all this very interesting, and I wonder just how much the government will rely upon such a board of review.

I am particularly concerned—and I think we will hear more—about the effect of the restraint on direct investment in Canada, especially with regard to the oil and gas industries. Last Friday night I attended the presentation of the budget in the Alberta legislature. What had been an estimated deficit of some $68 million had increased to $100 million because there was a $40 million shortfall in revenues, from capital sales revenues in the oil and gas industries. Certainly some of it was occasioned by an apprehension with regard to the intentions of this government arising out of the Carter report. There are no two ways about it. This factor has seriously affected the development of the oil and gas industries in the past year. Second, what will be the effect on the direct flow of investment into Canada in connection with the petroleum industry in the forthcoming year? This affects not only the province of Alberta but also Saskatchewan and British Columbia, although Alberta is the one to suffer most. This has implications with regard to the equalization formulas. Ultimately the government will have to make certain adjustments.

I insist upon the necessity for the government to continue to bring to the attention of our friends to the south the gravely negative effects of the action of the United States concerning problems of its own, which it envisages vis-à-vis foreign nations and which has such a decided effect on Canada. As a matter of fact the effects of such action are completely contrary to their expectations. We will certainly be very interested to note what proposals the United States may implement with regard to tariff surcharges or border taxes, and anything dealing with the trade problems of the United States and Europe in particular. When their effect on Canada is considered we can only call them an unmitigated disaster.

On the basis of what has been said so far we will want to examine the minister's statement at greater length, and in the debate which will follow my colleagues will be dealing with other aspects of what was said this afternoon. When the proposals are tabled or appear on the order paper we will certainly be in a far better position to comment in greater detail on what has been said.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, I was pleased to note that in his introductory statement today the minister said he was initiating a debate on the state of the economy. He has been most conciliatory. He has pointed out that the state of the economy will not be altered by the debate which will take place in the house. I hope that in discussing the points raised by the minister we will have an opportunity to come to grips with some of the basic economic difficulties facing our country.

Over the last year the Canadian economy has to a large extent been tailspinning out of control. The minister has indicated that some of the problems involved are international in scope and beyond our immediate ability to control. We have urged upon the minister in many speeches that he take firmer control of the economy and give it leadership and direction, and again in the course of many speeches we have asked that certain steps be taken in this direction. We have indicated our willingness to support measures designed to strengthen the position of the Canadian economy.

In his remarks today the minister indicated he was going to establish a board of review. We are not quite sure what he means by that. Presumably, and hopefully, he will establish a board of review based on the suggestions we have been making for a number of years concerning a prices review board. In the past he has tended to say that there is no need for a review of that type, and therefore we are pleased to see that he is at least giving some consideration to the necessity of reviewing the price situation in this country.

One of the regrettable features of the minister's statement was the continuous emphasis on rising labour costs in Canada and the blame he attached to that. Yet he did not find fault with the low productivity in Canada which is a result of the incredible mismanagement of our industry. Surely the blame for low productivity must be put on management rather than on labour. Labour does not organize an industry, labour merely responds to conditions in an industry.

There is information available which indicates that, despite a much higher capital input, a much higher ratio of capital per worker in Canada, we have a much lower level of productivity. Many reports indicate why this is so. Capital is not being applied in the most productive manner. I believe the Minister of Industry commented on this fact and I believe the Minister of Finance as well as other members of the cabinet are aware of this difficulty and of the need to make changes in the structure of Canadian industry. The Watkins committee lays heavy emphasis on this aspect. It is not that we feel there is an unawareness of this problem but we do say that the actions taken by various ministers in the government have not been adequate to the challenges facing the Canadian economy. It is just not good enough to blame labour for the slow growth in productivity in Canada at a time when it is fairly obvious that much of the blame should be laid on the shoulders of the branch plant economy that has developed in this country.

We have asked for the setting of an investment policy for Canada, for the setting of priorities because it is obvious to all that we cannot spend money on everything. A country has to determine those things which are important to its progress and see that the money and the resources are allocated to those purposes. A few weeks ago I made a speech on the subject of capital investment in Canada in which I pointed out the gross misallocation of resources in the industries of this country and the excessive productive capacity that has developed largely because of our tax structure. This was one of the major points made by the Carter commission which pointed out that our tax structure stimulated the flow of capital to some of our industries. The previous speaker mentioned the oil industry and commented on their shortfall in revenues. He blamed the lack of capital investment, but the point of the matter is that the whole oil industry was led into this position because the investment which has taken place was inspired by the inequitable tax system. Sooner or later the day of reckoning had to arrive, and it has arrived.

We have also called for a floating exchange rate. We are not saying we should have a floating exchange rate in this country because we want to isolate ourselves from what is going on in the world. We are not saying, let us look after ourselves and let the rest of the world look after themselves. I think a floating exchange rate would benefit Canada and would certainly benefit the United States as well in many ways. They would then not have to worry about whether or not the earnings on their dollars could remain in Canada. I think it makes sense for a country like Canada to have a floating exchange rate. I believe this position is endorsed by many of the leading economists in this country, particularly since we are, as the minister himself has said, one of the most vulnerable economies in the world.

I want to take a moment to deal with the question of a vulnerable and open economy. There is no basic reason why Canada has to have this kind of vulnerable and open economy. It is true we have benefited to a considerable extent from our willingness to admit capital, to admit investors into Canada. However, surely we could have obtained all these benefits and perhaps more with some kind of regulation, some kind of discretion as to the use of capital which entered Canada.

We have only to look at a country like Japan, whose growth has been much greater than Canada's, to see how policies designed to control the use of foreign capital coming into a country have worked. Japan says to the outside investor: We are delighted to have you here but we expect you to behave as a citizen of this country and to use your capital under terms which we consider to be in the best interests of our nation rather than the best interests of your nation. I think we have a right to ask this of foreign investors in this country; I think we have a right to ask this of our own investors in Canada.

We have pointed out also the difficulties created in terms of fiscal management in this country as a result of our commitment to the United States to hold reserves at a certain amount. I believe that we should get out of that commitment as rapidly as we possibly can.

We have repeatedly asked that the recommendations of the Carter commission be implemented. Members on the government side, in an effort to embarrass our party, have asked us if we want to implement all the recommendations. There are some recommendations in that report that would have effects with which we are not entirely in agreement. However, we think the Carter commission proposals, as a package, are of such overriding benefit to this country that we are prepared to take some of the disadvantages inherent in the report in order to gain the much greater advantages which the report would provide for Canadians. It would create a more equitable tax system than we have now. It would make for a better allocation of resources. It would make everyone in this country bear his full share of the operating costs of running a country like Canada rather than have the burden of taxation fall too heavily on the shoulders of the low and middle income groups. There is no reason why insurance companies should not carry their share, or mining companies or oil companies.

Recently the Watkins report was tabled in the house, and I think it is a great report. It is not a very radical report but it goes a considerable distance in pointing out the difficulties that have been created by foreign investment in Canada. I would have thought the government would implement that report immediately and would indicate its support for many of its recommendations. I should like to say on behalf of myself and many of my colleagues that we support the Watkins report. We think it is a good report. We urge the government to accept some of the major recommendations in that report.

Certainly the government should move rapidly to implement the Canada Development Corporation. They should move to ensure that disclosure by corporations is made mandatory. Then we could have a look at what is going on and the effects these corporations have on the Canadian economy. I believe the government should move rapidly to establish a trading corporation to ensure that those nations in the world that wish to trade with Canada are given an opportunity of trading on the basis of commercial transactions alone rather than being frustrated by having another country's foreign policy imposed on Canadian manufacturers.

We have asked the Minister of Finance—I hope he will excuse this expression—to get off his knees and stop grovelling to the financial interests of this and other countries. We have asked him to exercise the political sovereignty that the government possesses on behalf of the Canadian people. The choice he must make is to decide who his friends will be, whether they will be the vast majority of Canadians who through the electoral process have sent a political party here to be their government and to represent them or whether they will be the small group of people who have traditionally been shortsighted and stupid in terms of their outlook toward the management of the country's finances.

I rather suspect that we are not talking about a villain when we talk about some of these traditionalists. They are not really villains. I believe it is just that in their efforts to resist change, in their efforts to effect political sovereignty, in their efforts to prevent the government from acting on behalf of the people, they are being shortsighted and stupid. It is for the government to correct this attitude.

The Minister of Finance stated today that the traditional instruments of fiscal and monetary policy are no longer entirely adequate to handle the sort of problems facing the country. I have pointed out to the minister on a number of occasions that he was always hinting at this but never came out boldly and stated as much. Today he did do so, Mr. Chairman, and we in this party are delighted that he has finally taken this position. I recognize the limitations of trying to manage the economy of Canada by adopting straightforward fiscal and monetary policies only. Obviously there is a need for other methods of correcting the defects of the market system.

It is the feeling of this party that the government could have done even better with the traditional instruments of fiscal and monetary policy than they have. The effectiveness of these traditional instruments has been limited by various commitments of the government in different areas. Some that I have mentioned are the commitment to the United States to maintain a ceiling on reserves, the commitment to a fixed exchange rate, the refusal to examine investment policies and capital flow policies and, incidentally, the refusal to consider some form of exchange control.

I would not be surprised if shortly, despite the minister's intention to raise objection to it, we do have some form of exchange control. We are fooled no longer by the violent protests of the minister regarding things like a prices review board, because a few weeks after protesting he brings in such a board or something like it. I think there is a necessity for exchange control. This has been clearly recognized by one of his competitors in the leadership race, who has pointed out that we cannot rely on the good will alone of the United States, good though their intentions may be. After all, subsidiaries in Canada of United States corporations cannot always be effectively controlled, and we cannot rely on their good will to restrain the flow of money out of this country. Therefore we may have to take positive measures to prevent an indirect attack on the Canadian dollar as a result of excessive repatriation of interest and dividends from Canada.

It is difficult to know exactly what the government will propose in its new tax measures, but one thing seems fairly clear. The government still intends to raise approximately the same amount of revenue that it intended to raise with the previous 5 per cent surtax. One would have thought that the government, having been saved from its own shortsightedness and bungling which brought about its defeat, would have taken the reprieve given to it to re-examine its policy and to recognize that trying to balance a budget at this time is no answer to the problems facing the country.

We have in Canada a high level of unemployment. I am sure the Minister of Finance is not happy about the level of unemployment and would like to do something about it, but he seems to have given the subject lesser priority than price stability. In fact, he has given it no priority at all. However, I want to give the minister the benefit of the doubt in this regard. The minister has had a breathing spell and he should have recognized that this is no time to talk about balanced budgets. There is today, in addition to a high level of unemployment, slow growth in the economy, unused capacity and a need in many sectors to increase demand. If such need were met, then some of the revenue required would accrue to the government automatically.

This is not to say that there are not times when taxation is necessary. Sometimes taxation is necessary to pay for certain programs. We are not going to stand here and be placed in the position of arguing that certain government expenditure is required and then refuse to acknowledge the necessity for taxation to pay for such expenditure. However, taxation must be fair and equitable if it is to exist at all, and we do not consider that the previous proposal introduced by the government was fair and equitable in the least.

I suspect that the new proposal of the government is along similar lines, that the minister is not bringing in the recommendation of a capital gains tax or the recommendation that parliament accept the proposals of the Carter commission but will still tax the same group he intended to tax previously. If this is the case, then it is not the answer to the problem of raising revenue, nor is it a fair approach to that problem.

We are not unaware of the minister's difficulty. We recognize that he has had a whole set of problems converge on him at the same time. Many of the problems that the government of Canada is facing are extremely hard to solve. We know that the government needs money desperately. A look at the financing requirements of the government for this year indicates that they have to raise approximately $2 billion just to refinance bond issues. Last year catastrophe was averted by pressing the bonds that the government had issued upon the chartered banks. If it were not for the fact that the chartered banks picked up many of those bonds the government would have found itself in a very severe crisis last year.

The figures indicate that the public is selling government bonds and that it is very difficult to market new issues. The minister has probably reached the limit in terms of pressing further bonds upon the banks; apparently the minister does not want to increase the money supply, and these two would go together. The minister might increase the secondary reserve requirements of the banks, which might have the effect of forcing the banks to pick up government issues. He might also be able to sell his bonds by raising interest rates even higher than they are. However, I am sure he would not dare do this, nor would it be advisable to do so because interest rates today are the highest in Canadian history.

If such a program were proceeded with the cost to the treasury would be high and the tendency of the public to get out of the government bond market would strengthen. Therefore, much of the minister's energy seems to be directed toward protecting the position and adjusting domestic policies to meet this challenge.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

We should like the minister to answer some questions in the course of this debate. We should like him to tell us why he does not move into a planned or more managed economy rather than have our economy dragged around by the continual changes in the international and domestic money markets. It will not do the minister any good to avoid giving this kind of answer by making a smart alec reply to the effect that we are not at war. For many people in desperate straits in this country the situation is as urgent as if we were at war. Neither will it do the minister any good to say: Look what happened to Great Britain. You cannot make a comparison between the economy of Canada and the economy of Great Britain.

• (4:30 p.m.)

The minister must give us a straightforward answer and say why he will not manage our economy to a greater extent than in the past. The government, which has been given the responsibility of managing the nation's affairs, has failed in its responsibility and it seems clear to us that its actions are designed to satisfy something known as market confidence or investors' confidence. Investors must be placated with the present tax measures. Clearly, tax measures alone are not enough to restore the confidence of investors in this country. Also, if the Carter commission recommendations were implemented the confidence of investors in this country would not be restored. But investors are not the only ones to be considered. I suggest that the minister ought to seek the wider confidence of all the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Saltsman: On one occasion, when arguing with hon. members of this party, the minister said that even if he adopted the recommendations of the Carter commission his immediate cash requirements would not be satisfied since it would take years before the problems were ironed out. We recognize that. We say that if he is prepared to implement the Carter commission's recommendation that mining companies, oil companies and insurance companies ought to bear their fair share of taxes, interim steps to improve his cash position could be taken. Our willingness to go along with those interim steps depends on the minister's willingness to implement the recommendations of the Carter commission. If the people of Canada feel that their tax system is to be more equitable no doubt they will be willing to accept the imposition of a refundable tax, their money to be refunded when revenues from the various sources spoken of by Carter become available to the government.

The minister ought to take steps to make the money which federal, provincial and municipal governments need, cheaper. Tax relief ought to be provided for those who hold federal, provincial or municipal bonds. After all, those who receive dividends from Canadian corporations are eligible for a 20 per cent tax credit. Why should a similar credit not be available to those who hold various forms of government bonds? Instead of providing relief for those who acquire dividends I think we would be more justified in providing tax relief for those who derive money from government bonds.

It is important for the government to pursue expansionist policies since they would bring it added revenues without changing the tax rates. Considerable evidence shows that an increase in the gross national product brings with it an increase in the government's revenues without any change in tax rates being necessary.

Today we have suggested some alternative courses of action open to the government and we hope that the government will accept some of our suggestions. Above all, I hope the government is detemined to direct our economy. I hope it will not permit our economy to be dragged down by those in this country who have a traditional, financial stake in the mismanagement of the nation.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, I am not in the habit of making compliments—it may be a weakness of mine—but I should not like the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) to be pleased with himself for the way he approached the study of his estimates last Friday. Still, I feel he was kinder in a way than the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) was this afternoon. The Minister of Agriculture had nothing new to tell us and so he kept quiet. The Minister of Finance should have done the same this afternoon, seeing he did not announce anything new with regard to a situation which the Canadian public and the members already know.

The hon. minister tried to argue the case of the government. He was replying to those who say or claim, just about everywhere, that Canada and the Canadian government are going through a major crisis, saying that this is false and that all is well as far as the administration of the country is concerned.

While listening to the Minister of Finance, however, we realized that Canada is in a most precarious financial situation, which is causing him concern. The minister delivered a speech of an anti-inflationary character. He is worried about the ever increasing price index which is causing the purchasing power to decrease constantly, but he does not seem to know why. Bill No. C-193, introduced by the minister after his mini-budget of November 30, 1967, was designed to check inflation, but at the same time, it reduced the purchasing power and prevented personal spending. On the other hand, the minister announced at the same time last fall, through his colleague, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Benson), restrictions on government investments. That was the usual way for the government to control the continued increase in prices.

Looking back a few years, we find that this method is not entirely new. In fact, since the second world war, the government has been increasing taxes once or twice a year, in an effort to keep the cost of living under control. However, the cost of living index has been climbing ever since. As a matter of fact, in 1947, when the 1939 index was still being used, it had increased so much that the government became reluctant to use it as a basis. It was then abandoned and the 1949 index was used, starting from zero, which was less embarrassing for the government.

Since 1949, the price index has gone up to about 155 points, an increase of 55 points. If higher taxes and a curtailing of purchasing power could really check inflation, why has this not happened in the last 20 or 25 years?

Mr. Chairman, the higher taxes advocated by the Minister of Finance as a means of controlling inflation will have the opposite effect: they will increase inflation and make the price index go up, while at the same time creating other problems for the Canadian consumer. The hon. minister is greatly preoccupied with trade, but does he give as much thought to the Canadian people themselves? In my opinion, that is the least of his problems.

The government wants to balance its budget but it upsets the taxpayer's budget. Thus, the opposite effect occurs.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Chairman, in my opinion, the hon. Minister of Finance has no solution to offer, as he admits in his statement. His main concern is to preserve the value of the dollar, and he does so at the expense of the Canadian individual. Again, I think that the minister, or the government, is going the wrong way about it and what happened two weeks ago should have served as a lesson. The hon. minister, as we saw, was ill-advised since he did not bring in anything new. He keeps on taxing the small taxpayer, the worker, who contributes effectively to the development of the country.

In order to balance its budget and thereby appear in a better light in the eyes of the public, the government has only two alternatives: to keep on taxing or to limit public investment.

Mr. Chairman, for years now we have been offered solutions which have never solved anything, but they keep going in the same direction.

During his speech, the minister told us very clearly that he had stated a few days ago that the bonds which will come to maturity in 1968 will be reconverted, that is to say they will be exchanged for new ones. That reminds me a little of those days, many years ago, during the Spanish flu epidemic when it was impossible to keep up with the burials. Old corpses were replaced by younger ones and it seemed that the problem had been solved. That is somewhat the solution the Minister of Finance is offering us: Exchange old bonds for new ones. What happens then? The bonds sold in 1959, possibly bearing interest at 4 per cent, will be reconverted this year and the government will have to pay an interest rate of 5, 5¼ and 5½ per cent. That solution is not really a solution, because it might create new problems in the fiscal system and the administration of the country.

The minister seems to seek ways to get out from under, but to no avail. Suggestions are made to him from everywhere. The previous speaker offered a few. I must say immediately that I am opposed to the suggestions of the N.D.P. member. He urged the minister to implement the recommendations of the Carter report, that is taxing corporations instead of taxpayers or workers.

At first glance, that seems a very good solution, from the direct standpoint of the worker; however, very few realize that every cent paid in taxes by corporations comes from the consumers' pockets. It is well known that taxes paid by businessmen and corporations come from the taxpayers' pockets; again it is the consumer who has to foot the bill.

The New Democratic party member has also suggested that government bonds, either federal, provincial or municipal should be exempt from taxation. There again, Mr. Chairman, that would be an incentive for the public to invest money, while savings should be directed mostly to private enterprise.

We rightly complain that Americans are in control of 75 to 80 per cent of our industries, our trade, our business. This situation would only worsen if the suggestion made by the spokesman for the New Democratic party were to be followed. I think we should do the opposite and allow the savings to be directed toward private enterprise in order to recover control of our industries, our trade and our business.

That is why the Ralliement Créditiste, which is quite the opposite of state socialism, proposes that the Bank of Canada finance without interest all public bodies, namely, the federal and provincial governments, municipalities and school boards—

Mr. Schreyer: This is financial socialism.

Mr. Laprise: No, it is not.

In this way, Mr. Chairman, savings would be directed towards industry and private enterprise, and Canadians would become the owners of their businesses, their industries and their undertakings. It might take a few years, but it is the only way to regain control of our country, of our destiny, without having to submit to foreign influences.

The minister is always wondering where money is to be found. If he feels advisable to confine himself to Bill No. C-193 so long as other proposals are not submitted to him, I suggest that Social Credit has offered a solution a long time ago. He finds it unsuitable, but he forgets to propose anything better.

He proved once again this afternoon that the existing capitalist system is obsolete. We are not suggesting that he replace it entirely; we are merely saying that it should be reformed and put in order, because the present system is disorderly.

If the minister had implemented the suggestions that Social Credit has been making for many years, he would not be at a loss to balance his budget and to administer the nation's business, since he would have sufficient revenue. He would have enough economic and financial power to administer government affairs appropriately and to encourage investments as needed for the country's development.

We would not be facing, as we are now, an employment or rather an unemployment crisis. There are now some 500,000 unemployed in Canada, 70,600 of which are in Montreal. Those are the most recent figures.

If the minister or the government had asked the Bank of Canada, as I said previously, to provide the funds needed for government purposes, we would not be paying $1,406,849,000 as interest for this year alone on our national debt. If we could eliminate this interest, there would be no deficit, and the hon. minister and the government would be able to promote public investment. He could avoid many problems and, furthermore, better considerably the standard of living of Canadian families, that is, of the consumers and taxpayers. In my opinion, that is the first duty of a government, and it is something that the present government seems to forget too often.

The minister did not tell us this afternoon what he intends to propose to remedy the situation. The representative of the Progressive Conservative party did not offer any solution, and that of the New Democratic party suggested socialist remedies which are already obsolete in other countries where they were applied 10, 20 and even 50 years ago.

It seems, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. minister refuses to recognize the Social Credit solution, which consists in using the Bank of Canada—our bank, the bank of the Canadian people—to issue the capital necessary to run the country. We do not suggest that it should issue all the capital, but the Bank of Canada should invest in the public sector, and the savings of the people should be used for private investment. If that were done, I feel that many problems, including the housing problem, could be solved.

The minister told us that last year fewer houses were built than had been expected. Even more are promised this year but, in view of what happened in previous years, we know beforehand that such a level will not be reached, because the interest rate on housing loans, if they attract investors, fail to attract those who want to become homeowners. That is why I feel that financiers may build houses but nobody will buy them.

Mr. Chairman, the government has no solution to offer. The minister has not added anything new to what we already know. If he wants to be serious, he will have to seek elsewhere than in the old system which we have known for so many years. Otherwise, inflation will keep increasing, because the minister continues to administer in the same way.

Consequently, Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Finance should not dismiss Social Credit suggestions. I am convinced that he has considered them and if, as he already said, he does not have a free hand, he should at least tell us what is stopping him. Maybe the world and our country are being run by great financiers, but he should know that the Canadian people are ready to support the party that will endeavour to rid Canada of those financiers hidden behind the curtains. I think that the minister will then be assured of the support of all Canadians. As long as the government does not take any step to improve the situation, we will remain in the present chaos.

We do not have to blame the United States, Great Britain or other European countries. We are told that they are also experiencing difficulties with their monetary system. Now, if they have troubles, we should not follow their methods but adopt new ones; we should study them carefully and thoroughly in the interest of Canadian taxpayers.

Mr. Chairman, I think that during this debate, we will again have the opportunity to hear our spokesmen who will try to state more specifically the arguments set forth this afternoon. I have had very little time to study the statement made by the hon. minister, but I am still of the opinion that he did not tell us anything new this afternoon.

He tried to tell us that there is no financial crisis in Canada or in the world. But, studying current events, I wonder, Mr. Chairman, if we are not facing a world crisis similar to that of 1929, whether we may not soon be confronted with a world war comparable to that which broke out in 1939. Well, both should be avoided!

The government must take the lead and take the necessary steps to prevent internal chaos in Canada, after which we will be in a position to set an example for other countries.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that, in the course of this debate as well as in the statement he will probably make tomorrow, the hon. minister will bring something really new with a view to improving the present critical situation in Canada. Otherwise, we will be forced to fight against the government on all fronts, that is, we will have to oppose any increase in taxes which continuously threatens the individual, the Canadian worker.

[English]

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, in rising to speak in this debate in response to the remarks of the Minister of Finance today may I say at the outset that I respect the counsel of the Minister of Finance in his warning that we are indeed in very serious financial difficulty and that unless the problem is handled wisely and carefully we will continue in a situation which could become catastrophic for the country. I agree with the minister's statement in this regard because I think the situation is serious at the present time. One has only to note the handwriting on the wall and the signs of the seasons, so to speak, to understand that this is true. So while it is necessary for me in responding to the minister's remarks to be critical of the government's policies which I believe have created much of the difficulty we face today, I speak in the hope that even yet the minister will act as I believe he should have acted long ago in an effort to bring some order at least out of the threatening financial chaos.

The most impressive aspect of the minister's speech was not so much what he said but rather what he did not say. The minister gravely warned Canadians that Canada faces economic pressures. He has gamely given up, at least temporarily, participation in his party's leadership race because he must devote his energies to the critical problems which are his responsibility as Minister of Finance. Yes, this is a great sacrifice he is making. But if this is the truth of the situation he is now reaping what he has been sowing for the last several years. We can but offer him our sympathy and hope that he will at least be able to hold the old ship steady until other measures take the place of the present policies.

Although the Minister of Finance did not say so, much of the problem he now faces is of his own making. He pleads for understanding by and co-operation from the opposition. I only wish he had listened to some of the advice given him three or four years ago from this corner of the house. Over and over again ever since the Liberal government assumed the responsibilities of office the Social Credit party through its spokesmen has warned both the present Minister of Finance and his predecessor that unless the inevitable and relentless increase in government expenditure was kept at a level compatible with the increase in the level of productivity of the nation we were headed for trouble. We warned, to no avail, that the constant increase in government debt through deficit financing would lead to catastrophe. We warned about as well the fantastic increases in government growth and welfare spending. Bland smiles and sympathetic cynicism were about the best that we received. That was the only response.

We were not the only ones who warned the minister of the inevitable results of his policies. So did the Economic Council of Canada. In each of the council's four annual reports there have been repeated warnings about the unwarranted acceleration of government expenditures which continued to outpace the growth of government revenues. In fact, the economic council urged at least three years ago, and each year since, a decrease in government spending, an increase in productivity, a reduction in the large scale borrowings from the United States and the establishment of priorities in government spending. These warnings fell on deaf ears until the threat became obvious.

No better example of the paradoxical philosophy of the Minister of Finance and the government's financial policies can be found than in his attitude toward the implementation of medicare. In fact, he said only last January that medicare was not sound financially but that it was necessary politically. What kind of logic is this? The government is now forcing medicare on Canada and a minority of provinces—two, as a matter of fact, which for reasons best known to themselves are accepting the federal medicare proposition—moving the nation insidiously toward its implementation even though the consensus of the people of Canada is against it. This is something to think about. Yes, the government says, it will only require an increase of $50 million or $60 million this year, we will only have to raise taxes that much and the provinces will only have to increase their taxes correspondingly because only two provinces are going to implement it. How long are the rest of the people of Canada, who are going to pay through taxes the federal government's share of the cost of medicare for two provinces, going to pay money from which they will receive no benefit at all? I suggest it will not be very long. We are faced right now, because of the implementation of medicare on the first of July of this year, within the next several years with the prospect of an increase of $1 billion in taxes, half federal and half provincial, on the basis of medicare as now proposed. What kind of policy is this?

The strange thing about the attitude of the conservative opposition is that basically they have supported the same type of program. Most of their members voted for medicare in the first place. When the financial critic of the official opposition began to speak today I thought that probably his many years in the province of Alberta had really brought results because he began by talking about the decrease in purchasing power and the inevitable tightening of the belt and said that the downward spiral was going to throw us into a depression that no one wanted. He said that this is the effect of raising taxes and interest rates. The tragedy of it all is that when he proceeded to enlarge his argument he went along with the position of the government and the policies the Minister of Finance advocated. According to his reasoning, apparently there is no sound or logical answer to the whole problem of sound financing. It is time we faced up to the reality of the fact that we cannot continue to go on as we are at the present time.

Another outstanding example we face now, which has resulted directly from the policies of the government, is the situation regarding interest rates. Under Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation the present interest rate is 8⅝ per cent and we are told it is going up at the end of the month to 8¾ per cent or 9 per cent. Prime bank interest rates on loans to the very highest classification of bank customers, as we have been told in the last week or two, are from 7 per cent up to 8 and 8¼ per cent. Normal mortgage interest rates through orthodox channels, apart from banks and government, are up to 10 per cent. I know of mortgage interest rates charged during the last few months as high as 12 per cent. How long can this continue?

The other day I carried out a brief research project into the history of depressions in this country going back to 1902. In every single case the depressions in Canada since that year have inevitably been preceded by abnormally high interest rates, and they have never been any higher than they are at the present time. Yet when we were debating the Bank Act revisions and we alone opposed an increase in bank rates, we were told by the Minister of Finance in the first place, by the governor of the Bank of Canada in the second place and by the president of the bankers' association in the third place, that if the ceiling on interest rates was removed, interest rates in the over-all picture would go down and there would be more money available. They took great pains to give assurances that this would be the case.

What has happened? Read the record. It is all there. Not for 40 or more years, if ever, during this century, have interest rates gone as high as they are now, at least so far as the little man who critically needs money is concerned. The other night the Minister of Agriculture boasted about the fact that more money had been made available to farmers under this administration during the last several years. Yet farm improvement loans, farm credit and even home improvement loans are impossible to obtain because the banks are not going to lend money at 6 per cent or 6½ per cent when they can get 8, 9, 10, 11 or 12 per cent. We are faced with the situation, critical and serious as it is, because of these inadequate government policies.

It is disturbing to know that repeatedly economists, the Economic Council of Canada and the opposition in this house have warned the government that their policies were leading Canada to financial confusion and difficulty but in spite of this the government encouraged the change in the Bank Act so the chartered banks would be able to raise their interest rates above 6 per cent. This government is responsible for raising the bank rate. It has never been higher and with the prospects ahead of us now it will be even higher.

In addition, the government has encouraged the financing of riskless savings bonds at the highest rate in the history of Canada so people can double their money in 13 years. At least that is what the advertising says. We have sold gold, which is in short supply at home at the present time, to the United States. It has cost the taxpayer millions of dollars to subsidize the gold mining industry. We have done so at the price set for gold 30 or 40 years ago, $35 per ounce. We go along with the United States and say the price of gold cannot be raised, yet gold is the only commodity in the world today that has not at least doubled, if not trebled or quadrupled, its value since 1935. Do we have to protect the policies of the United States by inevitably adopting the same policies here in Canada even though our position is much different? I do not mean to be anti-American in any way because we cannot afford such a luxury. We ought to be able to stand upon some logic and reason so far as our own policies are concerned, particularly in regard to the financial problems with which we are now dealing. Apparently we have to hang on to a ragged coat-tail policy involving the perpetuation of the international monetary situation which has dried up the sources of international money and exchange to the point that today internationally, we are in even greater danger than we are at home.

I maintain that the policy of high interest rates is not a cure for Canada's economic problems. All it does is raise the cost of living for the Canadian people. It seems to me that the government could be doing much more to solve the problem about which the Minister of Finance was talking today by seeking to lower interest rates. Certainly in such a vital area of our economy as housing we should have a different policy so far as interest costs are concerned.

We are told that taxes have to be increased. We are today paying $1.4 billion of tax money just on the national debt which has never been greater, even in wartime. The minister pleads for understanding, but what kind of understanding can one apply to this kind of policy?

The minister has recommended the establishment of a board of review. What does this mean? I do not know. The minister did not attempt to enlarge upon it. If it means some kind of action and an authority that will do something toward solving the wage-cost problem which faces our farmers, the working man and Canadians generally, it may be good. But we do not know what it really means. At least, we do not know from what the minister said.

The minister talks about freezing the growth of the public service. That is a good way of economizing. It seems to me it would have been a good way to stop the increases in prices if the policy had been started last year or the year before or the year before that. The growth of governments has been double and sometimes triple the growth in productivity within the economy. Therefore we find ourselves being forced to consider more and more the alternatives that have been advanced by the President of the Privy Council who has sought to advocate to the Canadian people that the only way we can cure the problem is to adopt the policies of the socialist governments of other countries or those advocated by the New Democratic party in this house.

The spokesman for the New Democratic party said today that if we would adopt the recommendations of the Carter commission and the Watkins report perhaps this would solve our problems. All that is being asked in recommendations of this kind is that we kill the goose that lays the golden eggs and then throw the eggs away as well. Policies of the that kind have been proven inadequate over and over again by socialist governments of other lands.

[Mr. Thompson.]

It is a strange thing that many who look to socialism of one brand or another for economic salvation believe that if Harold Wilson could not retain mastery and initiative in administering the nation's business in Great Britain, nobody could. I will read a few words that were written by a wise old man who lives in Saskatoon. His name is A. P. Waldron and he writes in The Western Producer. I can think of no wiser sage in this country whose words the Minister of Finance should read. Mr. Waldron's comments are recorded each week in this western farm paper. This is what he said last week:

> The reason for Wilson's failure is that however radical and even revolutionary the socialist ideology may be in other sectors it seems to have a blind spot when it comes to the money system. Socialist governments and their treasury heads from Snowden on have always strictly adhered to policies of financial orthodoxy as do practically all professional economists. They submit almost without question to the edicts of the money power however humiliating because they believe as firmly as any banker in the soundness of what is called sound finance.
> Why socialists, so ready to challenge almost everything for which capitalism stands, should make an exception of financial policy we don't pretend to know. One fact that may have influenced them at least until recently is their conviction that public ownership could and would cure almost everything. But ownership or control of the key domestic bastions of the financial system, the central banks, has solved nothing. Whether these institutions are owned by government or by private enterprise is irrelevant so long as existing national and internatonal financial policy continues to function according to the established rules of the game. If you belong to the club you must obey the rules and the socialists no less than the other political parties obstinately refuse to listen to any suggestion that the money system should be seriously challenged much less amended to fill the needs of the age of automation.

We must face the reality of the position today with regard to the so-called sound money system, whether as advanced by the Minister of Finance of this country, as advanced by socialist governments such as that in office in Great Britain, or by the so-called wise economists who think they can stretch the rubber a little farther in extending the present system. The fact is that there is no real change in the situation, except that it continues to get worse.

The recent Watkins study under the tutelage of the President of the Privy Council proposes a policy of economic nationalism which would, if implemented, destroy the very basis of private enterprise in Canada. Joining with the popular cry of those theorists who speak similarly, it would throttle foreign investment capital and instead promote Canadian enterprise, resource development and trade control through the vast state investment enterprises it would set up. It was called a very good report. I did not hear the Minister of Finance say very much about it but he too must have been quite willing to blame the United States for our own error and for what we ourselves refuse to do. We talk about money coming into this country from the United States. I point out that in 1967 more than $1.75 billion of Canadian investment money went into the United States. Can we not convince Canadians that investment in this country is as worth while as investment in the United States? It is a strange thing that for every per capita dollar the Americans have invested in Canada we invest per capita nearly $3 in the United States. In this connection I would refer to an editorial which appeared in the Toronto Star of last week. It said in part:

> Can't we encourage some of that southbound cash to stay in Canada and help pull ourselves up to a standard of living by our own bootstraps?

Because the financial policies of this government have dried up our sources of capital, our municipal, provincial and federal governments have to go across the border to borrow money that we refuse to provide for ourselves. In addition, this money has to be borrowed at high interest rates, causing further pressure on the Canadian dollar and bringing with it an ever-increasing national debt.

It is about time some of our politicians stopped harping about buying back foreign ownership and began encouraging Canadians to invest in Canada. It is likewise time that some of our Canadian investment dealers encouraged people who have some savings in the bank to invest their money in Canadian stocks and resource development. It is not only imperative but it is a national responsibility for every Canadian to invest his savings in Canadian enterprise and development. If this happened Canada would not require foreign investment, Canadians would be better off and we would not be facing the crisis that we face at the present time. It is about time that the Minister of Finance applied some common sense reasoning in so far as our domestic financial policies are concerned.

I do not mean to detract at all from the problem on the international scene. One of our great problems in Canada is that our sources of capital have dried up and we have to go outside to get it. One of the great problems of the world is that international liquidity is so short that there is not sufficient money to carry out normal exchanges. This is what is bringing pressure on the United States dollar as well as the Canadian dollar. We could well follow the advice of those who say that it is time the price of gold was increased. I do not favour the continuation of gold as the international standard. We got rid of it in Canada in 1935 and we have to get rid of it on the international scene also. Increasing the price of gold might be the first step toward bringing about a better situation so far as the settlement of international exchange is concerned. If the price of gold were increased to double its present value, certainly for the time being at least the international liquidity situation would be solved. This is what General de Gaulle has been talking about through his own economists, and it is his policies which are responsible for many of the pressures on the Canadian dollar and the United States dollar.

Just the other day, when the Minister of Finance found it necessary to withdraw $460 million held in reserve in the International Monetary Fund, we in this house would not even have known that this had happened had it not been leaked to the press by officials of the French government. So again we in Canada are paying for the pressures which are being exerted by France and the financial policies which have come out of the money centres of Europe against the United States and which are reflected in Canada because of the inadequacy of our own financial policies. It is about time that we began advocating international monetary reform and implementing more effective policies on the domestic scene.

I listened with intense interest to the Minister of Finance during some of the committee hearings on the Kennedy round. He spoke about the conference he had in Rio de Janeiro with the other nine members of the elite Group of Ten nations which form the special committee within the International Monetary Fund. He told us in the committee that not one of the authorities from the other nine countries had any idea of how to control the present increase in interest rates and the continuing drying up of international sources of capital so far as settlements and exchange are concerned. He said that they declared that interest rates would inevitably go still higher, and that some time in the future they would find some other alternative but it was not in sight at the present time. I do not understand that such experts could be so foolish as to think in this way because it has become inevitable that if some action is not taken soon Canada will plunge into a depression which will make the 1930's look, as someone said not too long ago, like a Sunday school picnic.

These are the things that concern us. This floating game of the so-called international monetary experts will have to come to an end before too long, and I can only hope that Canada will take a lead in suggesting alternative policies. The stakes are high. What we need on the international scene is a new kind of money, an international reserve currency which, as someone has said, would be as good as gold and as sound as the dollar. We cannot go on with the kind of thing that the Minister of Finance talked about in the question period on Monday.

This brings us back to the situation here at home—a remorseless increase in the size of the government, a continuing and spiralling increase in rates of interest, an increase which goes on inevitably so far as the size of the national debt is concerned, and not only the national debt but consumer debt as well. What further proof do we need that something is wrong with the source of money and capital in this country than the increased size of consumer debt? Our high standard of living today exists simply because we are putting off until tomorrow payment for the things we consume today. We are not only putting it off until tomorrow but until the next generation or the generation after that, because that is how far the projection goes in some cases.

At the same time, taxes go higher and higher. Higher taxes are not the cause of the situation but rather are symptomatic of it. This is why I had hoped that the Minister of Finance, instead of coming up with a nice, high-sounding speech and the platitudes he expressed today in his statement about the seriousness of the situation, would have proposed something a little more realistic and hopeful than just a new review board and a freezing of the size of the public service.

We will co-operate with the minister in any way we can in trying to provide some kind of temporary stopgap measure to ease us over the present situation, if it is possible. But while I say that this will be our policy as we deal with the legislation which the minister will bring forward, I plead with him to do something different from what he has done until now. If he really believes that medicare is financially not good for the economy at this time, let him put it off for another year. The provinces do not want it. Let us give them a chance to have some say on how they shall control their taxes instead of forcing them to abandon their own medicare programs which in their own way are working very effectively in meeting the needs of the needy. Why impose welfare state policies on people that most of them do not want?

What must also be done by the minister is to get really tough with government expenditure. Even with the cut-back of over $1 billion in projected expenditures for this year expenditures are still increasing by 3½ per cent over last year. This does not include the supplementary estimates which will inevitably come before the end of the fiscal year ahead of us. If this were done it would be more effective than what the minister has proposed today to meet the pressures on the Canadian dollar and on the stability of the whole financial situation.

This is the situation as we see it in our party. I should like to assure the Minister of Finance and the people of Canada, as well as all of us in the house who share his concern, that while we do want to co-operate in doing what is now necessary, it is high time we stopped riding along with the status quo. We should follow the advice of a lot of sound-thinking people and discard some of the policies that have been proven, countless times over, not adequate for our needs.

Mr. Irvine: Mr. Chairman, I will not endeavour to cover the ground that has already been covered. There are a few things I would like to mention which have not been mentioned so far. I was very pleased, as I am sure most members of the house were, with the conciliatory tone of the Minister of Finance. I would almost say his tone was benevolent. It was a rather far cry from some of the words we have heard from him here at times. In fact, I almost thought at times he would come out with this quotation from the famous prayer of St. Francis:

> Where there is hatred, let me sow love;
> Where there is injury, pardon;
> Where there is doubt, faith,
> And where there is despair, hope.

The minister did mention the fact that Bill No. C-193 was voted upon adversely. I am not sure that this is the exact description I should use. I should say that the bill was defeated, and this is one thing we must remember. In our opinion the defeat constituted a lack of confidence in the government.

The minister mentioned also that there had been an upswing in business which had lasted, he said, for seven years. This would take it back to 1961. We do not want to take all the credit for it but we feel we should at least take credit for sowing the seed.

The minister said that we enjoyed a period of great expansion from 1961 to 1966. Things seem to be changed somewhat in the mind of the Minister of Finance because he also said he was going to take action and we would have a resolution on the order paper tomorrow, the purpose of which would be to bring revenues somewhat into line with expenditures. I was hoping that perhaps he might have reversed the order and said he was going to bring expenditures somewhat into line with revenues. At this time I cannot see why more taxes should be imposed. I feel that at the moment the minister should be considering very serious cut-backs in general expenditures. The minister also mentioned that the government was going to take some action to resist inflation by way of restraints on prices and wages. I am wondering what this will mean. Will it mean he is going to introduce something that will constitute price and wage controls? If he should, what effect is this going to have on labour bargaining units?

I ask these questions as a former card-carrying member of a union. I believe these are some of the things we should consider and consider very seriously. Many economists are exhibiting grave concern about our economic future. I feel that everybody in this house should be seriously concerned about things at the present time. I had the privilege of attending the meetings of the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs during the time we were supposed to have a recess. I should like to pay tribute to the executive of that committee. I am sure they were very dedicated people. The committee has just completed series of meetings on the Kennedy round of tariff agreements. I am wondering whether it was not a complete exercise in futility. These agreements had already been made. They were what you might call multilateral agreements and were being presented to the house for ratification. The only purpose I could see for these meetings was to acquaint the members of the committee and the public with some of the details of the agreements. It is my sincere hope that these agreements will have some beneficial effect for Canada. However, there are some areas about which I am doubtful and which will have a great bearing on our economic well-being.

The first one is what I would call the front-end loading feature of these agreements, the second is the anti-dumping feature and the third is the lack of tariff barriers. In so far as front-end loading is concerned, I make reference to the fact that many of these tariff reductions are to be phased in over a period of five years in five different steps. It is my feeling that a 7.5 per cent drop in the first phase may have a very detrimental effect on the economic well-being of Canada. The result could be a fantastic shock to many of our Canadian industries. I believe that for our own protection the reduction should have been more gradual.

I suppose we will have legislation in connection with the dumping feature. As I understand it, a foreign firm is allowed one free dumping. The end of a run for a United States firm or a Japanese firm, amounting to perhaps 3 per cent of their production, could equal about 30 per cent of the complete production of a Canadian manufacturing firm. Therefore this is a very serious matter. By the time the investigation is completed the merchandise which has been brought in may very well all be sold and some of our own manufacturers forced out of business.

First of all, the manufacturer who has been injured must lodge a protest. He must prove injury to himself and to the entire industry. What is the definition of the word "injury"? It can be summed up in many different ways. Some manufacturers may believe that keen competition results in injury to them. I think these things must be spelled out. Months could be spent going through the red tape and by then, of course, the damage would be done. The manufacturer could be forced out of business. Another facet which we must remember is that merchandise which has been in Canada for 90 days is exempt from any action. I hope that we will have new anti-dumping legislation before the house before too long and that we will all get together in a spirit of co-operation to work out something that will be for the general good of this country.

Let us look for a moment at the sad economic picture which faces us. I have an item here which I took from the New York Times. The article was published the day after the Minister of Finance told us he was in New York, January 21, talking to the secretary of the treasury. The New York Times of that day carried this headline in large print, "Canada Concerned As Economic Surge Loses Momentum." I should like to quote one small part of the article:

> In 1967, as Canada celebrated her centennial and Expo's turnstiles whizzed faster than anyone had dared hope, the upward economic sweep of the decade lost most of its momentum. The country's output of goods and services grew, but only by a sluggish 2.5 per cent.

The average rate of growth in the last 20 years, taking the period 1946 to 1966, was 5 per cent. It has dropped to 2.5 per cent. The seasonally adjusted unemployment rate in 1963 was 3.6 per cent and in 1967 it was 4 per cent. In January, 1968, the flat rate unemployment figure was 6.1 per cent; yet the rise in productivity in 1967 was just about 2 per cent. In spite of this, the average wage settlement was up by 8 per cent.

These are the things that I contend are causing inflation and the difficulties which many are suffering today. The Economic Council of Canada says that a healthy growth rate for Canadians to maintain an adequate level of expansion and employment would be about 5 per cent. We have not been attaining that level for the last 18 months. The minister's plan, as of November 30, was to begin this year with a 5 per cent increase in taxes which he called a surcharge. Of course, this tax bill was defeated. Unemployment, according to all the statistics, is a bit higher this year and could go to 7 per cent or even higher.

While unemployment in Canada is going up, it is going down in the United States. In January, 1968, 3.5 per cent of the labour force was unemployed in the United States, which is the lowest since 1953. There was a drop in unemployment for three consecutive months, November and December of 1967 and January of 1968, while at the same time unemployment in Canada increased. Therefore we cannot contend that unemployment is an international problem. Some economic problems are international, yes, but unemployment is one problem that is more acute in Canada than it is in our neighbour to the south and is a problem to which we must give very serious attention at the present time.

[Mr. Irvine.]

On the other hand, the cost of borrowing money in Canada has gone sky high. The hon. member for Red Deer mentioned that the interest rate for N.H.A. loans at the present time is something like 8.58 per cent. There is a good possibility that on April 1 when these rates are adjusted the interest rate will be 8¾ or perhaps 9 per cent. This would place a great burden on those in the lower income groups particularly. Other mortgages, of course, now carry interest rates of 9, 10 or 11 per cent. Higher carrying charges and soaring house prices prevent thousands of people from owning their own homes.

In 1950 the average price of a small three bedroom home was $14,500. The rate of interest at that time was 5½ per cent. The average payment on those homes was $90 a month. In 1968 the price of a similar home averages $21,500 with an interest rate, so far, of 8.58 per cent and a monthly payment of $180 a month.

I contend that a man in the $4,500 to $8,000 a year income group has no hope of a home of his own. Such a thing is an utter impossibility, and something should be done to assist those in this wage bracket. There was a time when we used to feel that allowing a man to purchase his own home was giving him an opportunity to become a better Canadian and to have a stake in his community. It was a place where his children might play in the backyard. However, this avenue has now been closed. I suggest we must give this problem serious consideration in the immediate future.

There are many articles in the newspapers suggesting that the Canadian dollar is turning soft, that it is subject to considerable pressure as a result of sagging wheat exports, the end of Expo '67, the tariff cuts I mentioned a few moments ago, the devaluation of sterling, lagging productivity and rising labour costs. On February 14, I believe, the hon. member for Regina City asked when the Minister of Finance was going to bring in a new budget. The minister replied at that time, in effect, that he would not be introducing a new budget before the impending leadership convention. I am wondering whether he has had a change of heart, because this might mean that a new budget could not be presented until the end of April. There is also the prospect, as the minister said today, that tomorrow a further increase in taxes will be put forward.

It may be that the government and the Minister of Finance in co-operation with the government are not anxious to saddle a new prime minister with an inheritance of mistake after mistake. The Minister of Finance tried to add a 5 per cent surtax in his mini-budget which he introduced on November 30 along with what the minister described as a financial statement. That so-called financial statement called for delays in capital spending but no particularly great cuts. It called at the same time for restrictions on housing expenditure.

I contend that although it was not intentional these restrictions did hurt the little man. The man making between $5,000 and $8,000 a year would have felt the pinch of an additional $50 on his tax bill at the end of the year. Certainly he would have felt it much more than the man in the $35,000 bracket who had to pay just the ceiling amount of $600. The $50 extra tax might make all the difference in his being able to put bread on the table for his family. It is no wonder that the Canadian Labour Congress stated at the time that the policies of the present government are favouring the rich and the powerful.

Mr. Arthur J. Smith, chairman of the Economic Council of Canada, writing in the New York Times on January 22 last, said this of the government's spending policies:

> In 1965 and 1966, the substantial increase in government expenditures was superimposed on the very large expansion of demand in other sectors of the economy. Although more moderate advances in total private demand in 1967 tended to ease the public-private competition and conflict for the use of resources, it became increasingly clear during the year that government spending had been growing at an unsustainable rate—

At the same time the bank rate went up to 7 per cent, the highest in history. The index of industrial spending, which is considered a reliable barometer of growth rate, fell below 3 per cent last year. The average growth rate for the years 1946-66 was 4.8 per cent. This indicates a reduction last year of close to 40 per cent. The lag in growth rate was accompanied by rising unemployment, higher taxes, softening of the dollar and prices that rose 4 per cent over the previous year. The labour force has risen 2.7 per cent over a year ago but 6.1 per cent of that force is unemployed. If I may compare these figures with the two previous years, the unemployment rate in January, 1967 was 5.2 per cent whereas it was 6.1 per cent in January of this year and 5.1 per cent in January, 1966.

I should like to refer to an article that appeared in the Toronto Star which is not exactly known to be a Conservative paper, on December 8, 1967. I want to put on record only one paragraph.

> The federal economy program unveiled last night by revenue minister E. J. Benson consists almost entirely of restraint on proposed spending increases, rather than reductions of current spending levels.

• (5:50 p.m.)

This is an article that should be of interest to everyone who is privileged to live in this country. Farther on the article indicates that there have been no—I repeat, no—actual outs. There was only a paring of departmental requests. Let us examine the proof of this. Let us look at the record of the government's spending for the past five years. In 1963 it spent $6,750 million, in 1964 it spent $6,872 million, in 1965 the figure was $7,218 million, in 1966 it was $7,734 million, in 1967—now we start accelerating rapidly—the figure was $8,795 million, and in 1968 we see another gigantic step to $10,300 million. The increase since 1963 has amounted to $3,730 million or an increase of nearly 60 per cent in five years in government expenditures. Clearly there were no cuts; instead we had a true increase in expenditures.

If we leave supplementary estimates out of both the years I previously referred to—if they are included they must be included for both years—the increase amounts to about 8 per cent. You cannot fool the public too long about this sort of thing because today they are too sophisticated to swallow that kind of fertilizer. My idea is that the government's accent should not be on the inflow into the treasury but on the outflow. That is where the accent would be in any business that was floundering around as this country seems to be. For 1967 federal expenditures amounted to $595 for every man, woman and child in Canada. How much farther can we go? Of every dollar that the average middle class or lower income person in this country receives, 34 cents is taken in federal, provincial, municipal or hidden taxes. This is a very serious state of affairs.

But savings can be made. It has been said that the minister ought to cut down departmental spending. I submit that the first department that should be cut is the C.B.C. The Secretary of State said in the house that something rotten was going on in the corporation. Is it not about time that we stopped subsidizing the C.B.C. to the tune of about $150 million a year? Why not sell it to private enterprise? Let them take it over with the understanding that they shall provide service to all areas that are now served. I do not think that the sale would be difficult to make.

By selling the corporation we could save $154 million in the 1968 estimates on one item alone.

We can save in many other areas. Time will not permit me to enumerate them. Why should we have so many royal commissions? The Carter commission was mentioned. I do not hold with many of that commission's findings. There are some good things in the report but in my opinion some of its findings should be disregarded. What about the commission on the status of women? You know, Mr. Chairman, I was married for 30 years and I know my wife's status. She was the boss. I expect the same could be said for most hon. members. The status of women is clearly established.

An hon. Member: You bet it is.

Mr. Irvine: Let us consider for a moment the use of members of the other place on committees. We know that they are overworked but at the same time I do not think they would mind putting in a little extra time on these investigations. I know one senator who chaired the committee on divorce, and he did an outstanding job. Surely many other senators are willing to take on added responsibilities. We must think objectively. The time has come to chart a course. We must cut back on expenditures; we must not keep dipping into the pocket of the little man.

Consider the mess that faces us in this country. We are in a state of crisis with higher prices—prices are still rising—and lower productivity. Everybody here is concerned about our productivity. We have inflation that almost staggers our comprehension. Unemployment has risen to 6.1 per cent of the work force in some areas. In other areas it is even higher. We have rising wage rates, the weariness of the dollar and the high cost of borrowing money with all that that entails for small businessmen and for the medium or low income man who cannot get a start in life because of present conditions. In addition to all this, we have the senseless spending of this extravagant government.

What a legacy to leave a new prime minister. How could 12 people be interested in taking over such a mess? The time has come for action. The Minister of Finance is in the mood to take it. I think he should sell the members of the cabinet on the idea of going in his direction. It is time for us to consider hard, cold business facts and to think first of this country and second of the party we serve. May I call it six o'clock?

Progress reported.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that a message has been received from the Senate informing this house that the Senate have passed the following bills without any amendment: Bill C-104, an act respecting the Bell Telephone Company of Canada and Bill C-113, an act to incorporate Commercial Solids Pipe Line Company.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, would the acting house leader please tell us what business the government intends to place before the house tomorrow and Friday?

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Speaker, we propose to continue the debate on the supplementary estimates of the Minister of Finance. Perhaps consultations among the house leaders may vary the form of the debate. I anticipate that we shall continue with the finance estimates.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, March 7, 1968

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have the honour to inform the house that a communication has been received as follows:

7th March, 1968

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Gérald Fauteux, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 7th March, 1968, at 5.45 p.m. for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Louis-Frémont Trudeau,
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS—TENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. H. E. Gray (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the tenth report of the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs returning Bill No. S-25 to the house.

[Note: Text of foregoing report appears in today's Votes and Proceedings.]

[English]

NATIONAL DEFENCE—CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Beauharnois-Salaberry) moved that the first report of the standing committee on national defence, presented to the house on Tuesday, March 5, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

INTERNATIONAL LABOUR ORGANIZATION

TABLING OF INSTRUMENTS ADOPTED AT FIFTY FIRST CONFERENCE

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with article 19 of the constitution of the International Labour Organization I wish to table the texts in English and French of the instruments adopted at the fifty first international labour conference held in Geneva, Switzerland in June of last year.

Six instruments were adopted at the conference, two conventions and four recommendations. The opinion of the Minister of Justice is that the subject matter of each of the conventions and recommendations is partially within federal legislative jurisdiction and partially within provincial legislative jurisdiction.

Convention No. 127 and its accompanying recommendation No. 128 are designed to protect workers against the risk to health of being required to carry very heavy loads. Consultations will proceed with the provinces toward the objective of meeting these I.L.O. safety standards, which may permit eventual ratification of the convention with the agreement of all provinces.

Convention No. 128 and its accompanying recommendation No. 131 revise and consolidate six conventions adopted in 1933 on invalidity, old age and survivors' benefits in industry and agriculture. My department and the Department of National Health and Welfare are studying this convention, and conventions Nos. 102 and 118 which also deal with social security, with a view to their possible ratification by Canada.

Two other recommendations were adopted by the 1967 I.L.O. conference dealing with relations between management and workers at the level of the undertaking. Recommendation No. 129 sets forth the essentials of a communications policy at various levels within an undertaking, in respect of information channels and media, working conditions, job descriptions, safety and health, welfare services, social security and other matters. Recommendation No. 130 sets forth the general principles for the examination of grievances and procedures for their adjustment within the undertaking.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to table the documents to which he has referred?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RHODESIA—REFUSAL TO COMPLY WITH COMMUTATION OF DEATH PENALTY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, has the government of Canada had any discussions or been in consultation with Britain in respect of the position taken by Rhodesia in ignoring the commutation of the death penalty by Her Majesty?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could supplement that answer. Just before coming into the house, before I had a chance to talk to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, I received a telephone call from the United Kingdom high commissioner to the effect that he had a message from his Prime Minister bearing on this matter which he wished to deliver to me this afternoon.

Mr. Nesbitt: Perhaps I should direct this supplementary question to the Prime Minister. What is Canada's position in this regard, and has the Canadian government expressed support for the British government? Are discussions under way at the present time in relation to what the Prime Minister indicated in respect of a review of the sanctions now in effect?

Mr. Pearson: I think the Secretary of State for External Affairs dealt with this matter either yesterday or the day before. I prefer not to add anything until I have had a chance to study the latest communications.

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Considering the danger inherent in the action taken in Rhodesia, and noting its lack of success, did the Prime Minister of Great Britain consult with his fellow Commonwealth prime ministers before advising the use of the royal prerogative in Rhodesia?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker.

REPORTED AGREEMENT FOR PROTECTION OF NATIONS NOT HAVING NUCLEAR WEAPONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question regarding the report that the United States, the U.S.S.R. and Great Britain have accepted a nuclear non-proliferation agreement designed to protect countries which do not possess nuclear weapons. Does the Secretary of State for External Affairs have any further information regarding this agreement, and can he tell us what steps the Canadian government will be taking to promote and support this agreement?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in the discussions on the non-proliferation agreement, as is well known Canada has been strongly in favour of this proposal. We recognized, however, the position of certain countries whose security interests might be jeopardized, and the agreement among the Soviet union, Britain and the United States with regard to action that might be taken in the Security Council by a non-nuclear state for protection against a nuclear power is one that we think advances very considerably the possibilities with reference to a treaty which we regard to be so fundamentally necessary at this time.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Am I to take it that the Canadian government will be in accord with this agreement, and will be seeking through the Security Council to promote its accession by other countries?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The particular agreement in question has not yet been considered by the government. The non-proliferation treaty up to now has been considered by the government and given strong approval. I have not yet had an opportunity of bringing forward the interim arrangement that has been reached among some of the great powers. I will be making a recommendation to my colleagues shortly and I am very hopeful that Canada will be able to join other countries in supporting this particular agreement that now is so essential for the acceptance of the treaty as a whole.

Mr. Douglas: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Do I take it that when a decision has been reached the minister will be making a statement to the house?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, can the minister tell us whether the government is giving consideration to proposing certain amendments to the non-proliferation treaty along the lines suggested by some of the countries which find they are unable to accept the agreement as it now stands?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is the purpose of the agreement reached by some of the great powers.

GABON—REPORTED STATEMENT ON REASON FOR CANADIAN ACTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he has been informed of a statement reported to have been made by the government of Gabon, that the real reason the Canadian government has declined to establish diplomatic relations is that Canada is in default in our foreign aid commitments to that country. Has such a statement been made, and is Canada in fact in default with respect to foreign aid commitments?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, Canada is not in default in respect of any aid. Aid certainly is not an arrangement between countries. Aid extended by a donor country is something that is undertaken by the donor country on its own initiative, at the suggestion of other governments or the government particularly concerned. There is no contractual relationship involved in this situation. That is not the reason. By the way, we have not broken off relations; we have suspended relations with Gabon.

Mr. Fulton: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Was there any understanding with respect to the extension of aid on the basis of which Gabon might have concluded that it would receive aid which in fact has not been forthcoming?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, sir.

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Was the Minister of Justice expressing the view of the government last night in Quebec when he said that the Republic of France was behind the move by Gabon, and if France adopted a similar policy toward this country we should cut off our relationship with France?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to add to what I said yesterday except this, that we do not make distinctions between large countries and small countries in these matters.

[Translation]

[Later:]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, further to the question put earlier by the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton), I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin), in order to clear up a point.

Since, in its press release, the government of Gabon does not refer to any contract or contractual commitment, but rather to promises of economic, financial and technical assistance made to Gabon by the Canadian government, can the minister tell us whether such promises have been made and actually kept?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the government has kept all its promises to Gabon and is ready to carry out its obligations to any country whatsoever.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

Could the hon. minister inquire of the government of Gabon about the meaning of the sentence which accuses Canada of not having fulfilled its promises, and could he inform the house later on?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I think I have already answered that question.

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. minister to indicate to the house the objectives of the trip taken by Hon. Lionel Chevrier to African countries?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will recognize that the question has already been asked and answered.

Mr. Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct another question to the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs.

In view of the fact that the Gabon incident has started a dispute between the Quebec government and the Ottawa government, can the minister tell us if he will meet the Quebec authorities in order to set forth a clear and precise policy on the foreign representation of the provinces and the central government?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I think that the answer is very clear, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister.

Does he intend to put before the committee on constitutional affairs instituted at the last federal-provincial conference, the dispute now existing between Ottawa and Quebec, and the Quebec representations on education and international affairs?

Inquiries of the Ministry

[English]

CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES RESPECTING INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. Since a number of independent French speaking countries will be meeting in France in a few weeks, is it the intention of the government to initiate without delay appropriate constitutional discussions with the provinces in order that in future any possibility of misunderstanding will be minimized?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if an international conference is to be held in Paris in a few weeks and Canada is invited to it, which would be the normal course to take if Canadian representation is required, naturally we would discuss this matter with the provinces, as indeed we have done on similar occasions in the past, particularly if that conference dealt with matters within provincial jurisdiction.

PROPOSED PROHIBITION OF EXPORTS OF NICKEL TO U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the answer given to me by the minister yesterday with respect to the export of Canadian nickel to the United States, I would like to ask the minister if, in view of the humanitarian principles involved in doing all we can to end the war in Viet Nam, the minister has not sufficient confidence in the integrity of the Canadian people to know that they would not permit any Canadian worker to suffer any temporary material inconvenience caused by the ending of that war.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question as asked is argumentative.

[Translation]

WINTER WORKS

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF PERIOD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Can he tell us if the municipalities have requested that the winter works period be extended by one month to enable them to complete the projects undertaken? Can he tell us also if he will give those requests a favourable answer?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, requests have been received and it is unlikely that the period will be extended.

CRIMINAL CODE

REQUEST FOR POSTPONEMENT OF CONSIDERATION OF AMENDMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Roger-E. Régimbal (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Minister of Justice but, in his absence, I shall put it to the Prime Minister.

Would he know whether the Minister of Justice has received representations from the caucus members of Quebec Liberals requesting him to postpone consideration of Bill No. C-195, especially as far as abortion and homosexuality are concerned?

Mr. Speaker: I do not think that this question, as worded, is in order.

Mr. Régimbal: Mr. Speaker, may I rephrase my question to the Prime Minister?

Is it the intention of the government to bury Bill No. C-195, Bill No. C-186 and the Ralliement Créditiste all at the same time?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DISCUSSION OF RESOLUTIONS PROPOSED BY FINANCE MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question either to the Prime Minister, or to the Minister of Finance, or to the house leader. When will we be given the resolution or resolutions respecting matters other than taxation to which the Minister of Finance referred yesterday? Will we have these other resolutions before we proceed with the debate on the income tax resolution, notice of which was filed last night?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it has not yet been decided whether it will be legally necessary to have a resolution and legislation to set up the kind of board to which my hon. friend no doubt is referring, but there will certainly be ample opportunity to discuss the nature of that board and its functions whether or not legislation is required.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I direct a question to the Minister of Finance and ask him whether, if it should be decided that no legislation is necessary and therefore no resolution is necessary, it is his intention and the intention of the government to table a white "pyper"—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lewis: This was an example of Commonwealth solidarity—a white paper or some other document outlining the powers, objectives and functions of such a board.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, a definite decision was not made whether that outline will consist of another statement in the house or will be embodied in a white paper, or both, but I can confirm that it is the intention to lay before the house more details on the nature of this board.

Mr. Lewis: I have a further supplementary question. In view of the fact that the setting up of the board, as the minister indicated in his speech the other day, is part of the policy he presented to parliament, could he indicate whether we are likely to have that additional information before the resolution now on the order paper is debated by the house, and certainly before the bill based on the resolution is produced in the house?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I hope to be in a position to make a statement on this matter tomorrow, or at the latest on Monday.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REPORT ON GROCERY RETAILING IN PRAIRIE PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Corporate and Consumer Affairs. In view of the Batten report showing excessive profits and indicating a monopoly in the distribution of food products by the western grocery chains, will the minister inform the house what action the combines branch has taken?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have received copies of the report and, as I suggested earlier in reply to a similar question, we are reviewing all the recommendations that affect our department. As a matter of fact, this morning I called Judge Batten and invited her to Ottawa next week in order that we might discuss some of the recommendations in her report.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

As part of the training courses now being given throughout Canada, does the minister intend to set up personality courses which would permit, for instance, to smarten up the hon. member for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes?

[English]

Mr. L. R. Sherman (Winnipeg South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister, if the government has any old centennial medals lying around would it consider sending one to Mr. George Bain?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): If I can find a very old one I will do that, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Does the minister soon expect to be free to express his opinion on financial matters, or does the Prime Minister intend to keep him chained to a sinking ship?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FINANCE

POSSIBLE ACTION BY U.S. RESPECTING GOLD PURCHASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): In view of the present clamour for gold, has the Minister of Finance any information from his counterpart in the United States to the effect the United States may cut the price of gold or stop buying it altogether, as reported in an editorial in the Financial Post for Saturday, March 9, 1968?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, I have had no such information.

POSSIBLE PENALTY ON WITHDRAWAL OF MONETARY FUND CREDIT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): May I take advantage of this occasion to reply to a question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Kamloops. He asked me about the recent drawing by Canada of our credit in the International Monetary Fund, and whether any transfer tax or penalty was payable by Canada in connection with that drawing. The answer is no.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

MONTREAL—ACTION TO DEAL WITH UNEMPLOYMENT SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): I should like to direct a question to the minister of manpower. In view of the fact that unemployment in the city of Montreal has now reached an eight year high, is the government looking into this situation to ascertain what can be done to alleviate this serious situation?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, all our services are available to the unemployed, and we do all we can to find them employment.

[English]

Mr. Hees: May I ask a supplementary question. Is the government not looking for some constructive method of finding employment for these people who are unemployed in the city of Montreal?

DIVORCE

INQUIRY AS TO SITUATION RESPECTING LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): My question is for the Minister of Justice, and I have just given him notice of it. Will he bring us up to date on the status of the divorce bill?

Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Minister of Justice): I thank the hon. member for having sent over a note saying he would ask this question. The developments on the divorce bill are, of course, that we have done as we have said we would. We are preparing new rules of practice for the courts which will apply under the act and next week we are meeting, amongst others, with the chief justices of the provinces to discuss this problem. They will be meeting with my officials and with me. I shall be glad to report any further developments in due course.

AIR TRANSPORT

INQUIRY AS TO CHECK ON LICENCES OF CANADIAN PILOTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport in connection with this matter of air line pilots not having the correct licence, which is now in the news. Has the minister checked, and is he personally satisfied that every Canadian pilot has the proper licence at the present time?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I saw that report in the newspaper, Mr. Speaker. It is the kind of thing which happens from time to time and which makes cabinet ministers turn gray. There are no existing anomalies that have been brought to my attention, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Can the house be assured the minister will show some leadership on this matter?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO NEW BOOK OF ESTIMATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the fact that yesterday the Minister of Finance advised the house that a new schedule of estimates would be prepared, can the President of the Treasury Board inform the house whether this means that the old book of estimates will be scrapped and a new book published?

Hon. E. J. Benson (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we are presently looking into this matter. What we would prefer to do is simply table revised estimates for those that are being changed. If the house would agree to this it would save some $50,000 in having the book reprinted.

[Later:]

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I have a supplementary question for the President of the Treasury Board who, in answer to a previous question, indicated that the government would save about $50,000 by not reprinting the estimates. Could the President of the Treasury Board now indicate what the revisions will cost, so we might be aware of how wasteful this government has been?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INQUIRY AS TO IMPLEMENTATION OF I.L.O. CONVENTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of his statement today listing the various conventions adopted at the last I.L.O. conference, and in view of the large number of I.L.O. conventions which have never been ratified by Canada, will the government be discussing actively with the provinces the possible early implementation of these latest conventions to which the minister has referred?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker, such discussions have already begun.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

REDUCTION IN BUDGET FOR NORTHERN HEALTH SERVICES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Were the special health needs of the Indian and Eskimo population in northern Canada, where the infant mortality rate is four times the normal rate and the life expectation span of the Eskimo is 20.9 years, taken into consideration when the recent substantial reductions were made in the northern health service budget?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, all factors were considered.

Mr. Dinsdale: As a supplementary question, is the money saved going to be diverted into the medicare program?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PUBLIC SERVICE

LEGISLATION TO INCREASE PENSIONS OF RETIRED CIVIL SERVANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is the federal government aware of the fact that the government of British Columbia has brought in legislation to increase the pensions of retired British Columbian civil servants? Will the federal government now do likewise?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of that fact but I will look into it. I am sure my hon. friend would not wish us to follow the example of the government of British Columbia in every respect.

HARBOURS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—DEVELOPMENT OF PORT AT ROBERTS BANK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Since I note that the premier of British Columbia has proclaimed the British Columbia harbours board act because he is not convinced that Ottawa supports the Roberts Bank project, could the minister assure the house that the federal government will co-operate with the newly appointed provincial harbours board in the development of this port?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think that question could be placed on the order paper.

HUMAN RIGHTS

STUDY OF REPORT BY FORMER ONTARIO CHIEF JUSTICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Has he instructed officers of his department to study the comprehensive report on civil liberties which has just been prepared by the former chief justice of Ontario, Mr. McRuer, in order to see which recommendations might be implemented through the federal parliament?

[Translation]

Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Minister of Justice): This is a very good suggestion, Mr. Speaker. I had thought about it. We intend to look into these recommendations as well as those which will be submitted to us by the committee chaired by Judge Ouimet. This will surely help us considerably.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since I think certain of the recommendations can be implemented without having to wait for any future action in any other direction, would the minister reconsider his present position and seek amendments to the Criminal Code to cover matters such as the right to counsel, questions of bail and the like?

[Translation]

Mr. Trudeau: As I have already explained, Mr. Speaker, we would prefer these rights, that is, the right to counsel, the right to bail, and so on, to be applicable to all Canadian legislation and not only to the Criminal Code. For this reason we would prefer to obtain a charter of civil liberties. However, if that takes too long, we will naturally think of another way.

Mr. Lewis: It will take a long time.

TRANSPORT

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CAUSEWAY—REPORT ON REDESIGN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): My question is for the Minister of Public Works. Can the minister tell the house whether he has received a report from Colonel Churchill on the redesign of the Northumberland strait crossing project? If he has not yet received the report, when might he expect to get it?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, we have not yet received the report. I expect it in about another six weeks.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Tardif in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

Administration

4c. Grant to the endowment fund of the Vanier Institute of the Family—L'institut Vanier de la famille, $236,869.

[Mr. Lewis.]

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. House again in committee of supply, supplementary estimates (C), 1967-68, of the Department of Finance. Vote 4c. Shall vote 4c. carry?

Mr. Irvine: Mr. Chairman—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: I regret to inform the hon. member that his time, as I understand, had expired last evening.

Mr. Starr: Let him continue.

Mr. Irvine: I thought I had a minute or two. If the Chair thinks otherwise I shall abide by Your Honour's decision.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Does the committee agree to allow the hon. member another couple of minutes?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Irvine: I promise I shall not take more than a minute or two.

When I called it six o'clock last night I wanted to summarize and speak about the crisis that now faces us. I wanted to speak about high prices and our low productivity increase factor; I wanted to talk about inflation. I will not do so at great length now because I cannot. I must repeat, nevertheless, that 6.1 per cent of our working population is unemployed. We must consider rising wage rates, the softening of the dollar, which we are all concerned about, and the high cost of borrowing money. Above all we must pay particular attention to the absolutely senseless spending of this extravagant government. As I said yesterday, what a legacy all this mess is for a new prime minister.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, yesterday we listened to the Minister of Finance reviewing the state of the Canadian economy. I wish to say to him and to the government that we fully appreciate the difficulties they face and we do not propose to do anything that will aggravate the situation; nor do we desire to take political advantage of the government's difficult financial straits. At the same time I say to the government that we do not intend to acquiesce in mere palliatives which will do nothing to cure our present troubles and which will only give the Canadian people a sense of false security.

Undoubtedly we face a serious economic state of affairs in Canada. The sooner parliament and the Canadian people recognize this and the sooner the government applies remedial measures, the sooner we shall see an improvement.

The Minister of Finance reviewed the state of the economy, and I thought it was appropriate for him to do so. But we must examine that review in the light of the objectives this government had formerly set for itself. We must remember that five years ago this government committed itself to continued economic growth and full employment; this government three years ago announced publicly, in the speech from the throne, that it was declaring war on poverty. Members of this government have talked inside and outside the house about our regaining control of the Canadian economy. The President of the Privy Council just before the last election blanketed this country with an article on buying Canada back. The Prime Minister summed up by saying of the government's program "This is a time to excite the daring and to test the strong."

• (3:10 p.m.)

In the light of these objectives I think we ought to examine the state of the Canadian economy. I want to look at some of the indicators by which it is customary to measure the health of the economy. The first and most important of these is, of course, the rate of economic growth. The Economic Council of Canada states in its first report that we need an annual increase in our productivity of some 5½ per cent in constant dollars if we are to keep unemployment at 3 per cent and provide jobs for those entering the labour force. We are not doing this at the present time.

I notice that the minister said yesterday, as reported at page 7334 of Hansard:

> We are still experiencing the upward thrust in our economy which began seven years ago and which has continued without serious interruption to the present.

I would certainly question this upward thrust in the economy. If we look at the year 1967 what do we find? We find that in constant dollars the increase in our gross national product for the first nine months was 2 per cent. Figures for the last three months are not yet available, but, bearing in mind the increasing unemployment it is very unlikely that there was any improvement in the last quarter of 1967. If we consider our productivity for the first nine months of 1967 on a per capita basis we find that in terms of real dollars it amounted to some $2,370 as compared with $2,368 in the previous year. In other words, on a per capita basis there was virtually no increase in productivity in the first nine months of 1967 compared with the same period in 1966. Moreover, we find that in the third quarter of last year there was actually a decline in the rate of economic growth.

As I pointed out the other day, one of the segments of the economy in which an upward thrust is not apparent is agriculture, where the income of farm operators fell 19 per cent below the level of 1966. On the basis of economic growth, therefore, it cannot be said there is an upward thrust in the economy. We have been virtually stagnant for the last 12 months in terms of increasing the productivity of this nation.

The second indicator which it is customary to examine is, of course, employment. Employment is an important indicator because it tells us the extent to which we are utilizing our most important resource, namely our manpower. The Economic Council of Canada said we ought to be able to keep unemployment at 3 per cent or less. That should be the goal. I would point out incidentally that by the standards of western Europe 3 per cent is a very high figure. The government of Sweden was extremely perturbed last year and brought in some emergency measures when unemployment there reached 1.8 per cent.

What has happened in Canada? We have not been able to keep unemployment down to 3 per cent. We find that in the middle of January this year there were 464,000 unemployed, or 6.1 per cent of the labour force. This compares with 5.2 per cent in 1967 and 5.1 per cent in 1966. Most disturbing of all is the fact that this unemployment is affecting some regions of Canada even more adversely than others. In the Atlantic region unemployment at the middle of January amounted to 10.9 per cent. In Quebec and British Columbia it was 7.8 per cent. The number of persons unemployed for between one and three months rose from 135,000 in December to 195,000 in January. This is really alarming. In January, 1967 only 26,000 people had been unemployed for more than seven months. In January of this year 37,000 had been unemployed for more than seven months.

The Economic Council of Canada, as has been said many times in this house, pointed out that if we are to increase productivity the most effective way of doing so is by putting the unemployed to work. The council suggested that every time we reduced unemployment by one percentage point we increase the gross national product by some $2 billion a year. An unemployment figure of more than 6 per cent means we are losing in the neighbourhood of $6 billion of increased wealth production, roughly one third of which would find its way back into the treasuries of federal, provincial and municipal governments of this country.

One thing which disturbs me about this question of unemployment is this. I have the uneasy feeling that the government considers unemployment one of the ways by which it can solve the problem of inflation. I refer to the statement made yesterday by the minister, as reported at page 7337 of Hansard:

> We have found that at a level of unemployment of 3½ per cent in 1965 and 1966 our prices began to reduce sharply. Our costs increased much more rapidly than did those in competing economies. Even when the level of employment dropped off a little and the pressure of demand upon our markets was less intense, we have found that the momentum of wage increases, of other cost increases, of price increases, has kept up. That is now the chief constraint upon our policy.

If the government is taking the position that allowing unemployment to rise is one of the methods by which it hopes to stop price inflation, then it is committed to a policy which will bring this country to disaster.

Another indicator to which I want to refer is the cost of living. The cost of living is something which affects every person in Canada. The Minister has already referred to the fact that increasing unemployment has not resulted in a drop in prices. On the contrary, the reverse is true; unemployment and rising prices have gone on side by side. In January, 1967 the consumer index was 146 compared with 152.6 in 1968, representing an increase of 4½ per cent in twelve months in the cost of living. In the past four years during which this government has been in office the cost of living has gone up by almost 14 per cent. This is not due to increased demand. As a matter of fact, manufacturing orders last year failed to show any increase over the figure of $3,150 million of the previous year.

• (3:20 p.m.)

As my colleague from Waterloo South pointed out yesterday we are not suffering from the old style inflation of too much money chasing too few goods; we are facing a situation in which a large part of the economy dominated by large corporations has been able to establish administered prices which are not sensitive to the laws of supply and demand. I do not know of any better illustration I could give of this than to quote from the Monthly Business Analysis put out by W. A. Beckett Associates Limited of Toronto. On page 1 it says:

> Corporate profits actually turned in a surprisingly good performance in the third quarter of 1967 in the light of the slow progress in real output. This was achieved by price increases which show in wholesale and consumer prices rather than by any improvement in the productivity and cost picture.

I ask the house to note these words:

> —rather than by any improvement in the productivity and cost picture.

We have price increases in this country not necessarily because of an increase in costs or an increase in demand but because there are companies which are able to increase prices to suit themselves.

A very good example of this is the Canada-U.S. auto agreement under which the government has turned back to the auto companies some $50 million a year in return for which we were told the prices of cars in Canada would decline in relation to the prices of cars in the United States. What do the figures show? They show that the gap between the prices of cars in Canada and in the United States in 1964 was 17.6 per cent and in 1967 17.5 per cent. There has been virtually no change at all. In spite of the fact that the auto companies were able to put $50 million annually in their pockets they were still able to maintain the same disparity in price for Canadian cars compared with the price which the United States consumer is required to pay. What we are facing in this country today, along with a slowdown in economic growth and an increase in unemployment, is a steadily accelerating increase in the cost of living.

Another indicator at which we might look is housing construction. This is an important indicator not only in terms of the need for shelter but because it is a labour oriented industry which is very important in determining the rate of employment in this country. It is, of course, an economic multiplier, as will be pointed out later, because every dollar we spend on housing brings $2 in increased wealth and production in the country. The Economic Council of Canada suggested a target of 193,000 homes per year. We have not been able to meet this target. We now have a carry-over for the past two years of 72,284 houses which, plus what we should be building this year, means that we should construct 265,000 homes in 1968. The minister yesterday told us that the government is hoping that 175,000 homes will be constructed. If that is the situation we will still be 90,000 homes short of what we require even to keep up with the target set by the Economic Council of Canada to say nothing of the half a million families in Canada who are living in substandard houses. The higher rates of interest make it virtually impossible for persons with incomes of $8,000 or less to own their own homes.

The other day in one of his election speeches the Minister of Transport said that today a working man cannot afford to build a house. I commend the Minister of Transport for having discovered this very apparent fact. I cannot commend him or his colleagues for what they have done about it. Serviced lots have risen in price by 40 per cent since 1964. The average family in Canada is now being compelled to pay over 30 per cent of their income for shelter when the Canadian Welfare Council has said that the very maximum a family can afford to pay for shelter is from 20 per cent to 25 per cent.

In this very brief review of the economy I suggest to the minister that his optimistic statement yesterday about the upthrust in our economy continuing is sheer balderdash. I suggest that the economy is going down, unemployment is going up, the cost of living is rising at an accelerated pace, we are not keeping abreast of the need for homes in Canada, and the state of the economy today is an indictment of this government and its policies. It does not make anybody who is acquainted with the facts any happier when the minister comes into the house and tries to tell us as he did last night that all is well within the world and that the minister is in his place.

What does the government propose to do? First of all, the government introduced some fiscal measures. Bill C-193 was introduced and defeated. It is not necessary for me to go over the circumstances of that. It was a measure to impose among other things a 5 per cent surtax on the wage and salary earners. I think the house should be congratulated for having rejected that bill. I believe the government in the long run will find that their bungling and ineptitude in allowing it to be defeated did them a good turn because had that bill been passed it would have been a mistake of catastrophic magnitude. Now the minister proposes another measure. Instead of the 5 per cent surcharge on personal income tax he proposes a 3 per cent tax on personal income with the floor raised from $100 to $200 and no ceiling and a 3 per cent surtax on the corporations of this country.

There is no doubt that this is some improvement. At least the minister has taken off the ceiling so that everybody will pay the surtax. He has reduced it from 5 per cent to 3 per cent. He has decided to place some of the burden upon the corporations. Surely, however, this is an attempt to deal with a malignant growth by putting on a band-aid. Surely this is a complete failure to grapple with the real problems which confront this country. First of all the minister is planning to impose a 3 per cent tax on incomes, whether personal or corporate, based on a structure which is already inequitable and unjust. The New Democratic party maintains that the government has no right to put on any tax until it restructures our tax system and places it on a fair and equitable basis.

The minister was out to get $185 million. He chipped that down by saying he will cut expenditures by $75 million, so he will only need $110 million. If the minister had been prepared to accept one of the basic recommendations of the Carter report, if he had been prepared to require oil companies, insurance companies and mining companies to pay not a special tax but just the same taxes and other corporatoins and had been prepared to remove the special concessions which these companies enjoy, he could have obtained another $200 million in revenues. We say that until the government is prepared to make the freeloaders pay their share of the taxes it has no right to ask anybody else to pay increased taxes.

Of course, the more fundamental point is that the answer does not lie in imposing more taxes or in curtailing essential government services. This is an outworn concept that we thought had died in the 1930's or had been destroyed by Franklin Delano Roosevelt and Lord Keynes. Surely the answer to our present situation is stimulation of productivity. If we can do what the Economic Council of Canada said we should be doing, reduce unemployment to 3 per cent and increase our gross national product in real terms by 5½ or 6 per cent, we would have no problem of inflation.

The government does not start at the right end. The government's idea of solving this problem is to put more taxes on the wage and salary earners and on the corporations. Let me point out that the increased tax on corporations will be inflationary because it will be passed on to the consumers in the form of an increase in consumer prices. The government should start at the business end of this problem by allocating manpower, physical and capital resources the task of increasing productivity.

The other method by which the government has sought to cope with this problem is the undertaking of certain monetary measures. Last year the government removed the ceiling on the bank rate. We had all sorts of assurances from the Minister of Finance that the increased competition from banks and lending institutions would result in a decline in interest rates. Instead we have the highest interest rates in living memory, with a prime bank rate of more than 7 per cent. We have to go back before the 1900's to find a time when the bank rate was that high.

What is the result of these exorbitant interest rates? The result is that we are putting available capital up for auction to the highest bidder and therefore capital is not going where it is needed according to social requirements. Capital is going to whoever can pay these excessive interest rates. There has been no attempt to allocate our capital resources. Some industries are overcapitalized, some are undercapitalized and some essential services such as housing are being starved. This is not leadership, Mr. Chairman. This is a betrayal of the trust which the people of Canada have reposed in this government.

The government has raised the central bank rate to 7 per cent in response to the appeal by the President of the United States to United States subsidiaries in this and other countries to send part of their profits back to the United States. I am not going to condemn the President of the United States for doing something which I presume is essential to the economic well-being of that country, but as a Canadian I have to recognize the fact that what the United States is doing is transferring some of the cost of the Viet Nam war to its trading partners. That is exactly what is happening. The United States is seeking to export some of its problems, first by cutting down overseas investment and, second, by asking these subsidiaries to send back part of their retained earnings to the United States.

As every member knows, these subsidiaries responded with almost indecent alacrity. The New York weekly bond market report states that in three weeks in January the auto and rubber industries in Canada sent back $150 million to the United States. The rush by many United States subsidiaries to send money back to the United States was so great that the Minister of Finance telephoned Mr. Fowler, the secretary of the treasury, and asked him to clarify the position. The minister telephoned from Winnipeg in great alarm. Mr. Fowler issued a statement telling the subsidiaries not to make abnormal, and I emphasize that word "abnormal", transfers of money back to the United States. There have been large transactions. From the best figures we can get, the Bank of Canada had to find $350 million in January and another $113 million in February to stop this trend, and the end has not yet been seen.

The government has done nothing about applying any exchange controls. In most of the countries of western Europe, if you want to transfer a large sum of money you have to get a permit from the central banking authority. The government has done nothing about this situation except to make a rather pathetic appeal to the government of the United States. Those are the two things the government has done in respect of fiscal and monetary policies.

I was pleased yesterday when the Minister of Finance said he had come to the conclusion that fiscal and monetary policies were not enough. Bless his heart. We have been telling him that ever since he became Minister of Finance. Fiscal and monetary policies are useful instruments but they are blunt instruments. If we are going to grapple with this situation there are other steps which must be taken. Let me outline one or two of the steps we have suggested from time to time.

The first step we have suggested is the establishment of a prices review board which would have the power to review prices and deal with cases where increases in consumer prices were unwarranted or unjustified. We would seek concurrent legislation in the provinces to give the board the necessary power to make companies which were profiteering at the expense of the Canadian people roll back their prices.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has now expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Does the committee gives its unanimous consent to the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Douglas: I should like to thank the committee, Mr. Chairman, and I will try not to impose too much on its kindness.

We have advocated a prices review board. Yesterday the minister indicated that he is now going to set up such a board. People often ask me whether I get worried about the Liberals stealing our ideas. I do not mind them stealing our ideas, but what worries me is that they just steal the words. All we are going to get is words. This is not going to be a prices review board. The minister is not even sure it will require a bill. It is not going to have any statutory authority or power. It will be a glorified better business bureau located in somebody's office collecting statistics in order to state two years after a price increase has taken place that it was not really necessary. That will do the consumer in this country a lot of good. It will certainly make the housewife happy to know, two years after she has been paying the increased price, that the increased price of sugar or some other commodity was really unjustified.

Let me suggest to the minister that if he is really going to grapple with rising prices he is not going to fool the Canadian people by providing a toothless watchdog with no power except to bark, and then softly because it is old and weak and has been given no authority by the government. Therefore we shall continue to press the government for a genuine prices review board with power granted by both the federal parliament and, where necessary, the provincial legislatures of this country to impose selective price controls on any commodities where it has been demonstrated that prices have risen without any proper justification.

Our second proposal is that in order to stimulate the economy one of the most immediate things the government could do would be to undertake a housing program that would build a quarter of a million to 300,000 houses this year. The multiplier effect applies to house construction. All the materials can be produced in Canada; we do not need to import one commodity to build houses in this country. The employment such a program would bring to the construction industry, the industries which manufacture construction materials, the logging camps, the lumber industry and the transportation facilities of this country would be tremendous. We could reduce unemployment substantially by a massive housing program, a housing program that would build homes for ordinary people, not just massive, high-rise apartments for the wealthy, not the kind of program we have today under which you must have an income of $8,000, $10,000 or $12,000 a year before you can qualify under the National Housing Act.

We have advocated and do so again that the government ought to establish some priority for the use of our investment capital. We ought to be able to allocate capital in this country according to our social needs. I said a few moments ago that what we do now is allocate capital by puting it up for auction and those who can afford to pay an interest rate of 10 per cent, 11 per cent or 12 per cent have no difficulty obtaining capital. If municipalities, provincial governments, small industries and small businessmen are to get capital there will have to be an allocation of capital on some basis of priority predicated on, first, whatever will stimulate economic growth and, second, whatever will improve the quality of life for the great mass of the Canadian people.

We have capital in Canada. On a per capita basis the Canadian people are among the highest savers in the world. But a lot of our capital is frittered away. A report which appeared in the Globe and Mail shows that for the first 11 months of 1967 we had a deficit in our international transactions in outstanding securities of $323.2 million, 40 per cent below the previous year. We have money in pension funds, insurance funds and trust funds that could be mobilized and put to work to promote economic growth and full employment.

We could do what the government has been promising to do ever since it took office, namely, set up a Canada development corporation that would mobilize the savings of the Canadian people and send those savings marching into battle in the war against poverty, economic stagnation and unemployment. But the Canada development corporation still remains a will-o'-the-wisp; nothing has come of it.

The fourth thing we have suggested is that the government must restructure our tax system. I will not take the time of the committee to go into some of the recommendations of the Carter commission, but I say to the government that with this report in their hands it will haunt them unless they have the courage to put those recommendations into effect. The Canadian people have long suspected that the people in the middle and lower income groups have been carrying too heavy a share of the cost of financing Canada federally, provincially and municipally. They have long suspected that there are those with their hands in the cookie jar, that a lot of people have received special concessions and special privileges about which the public did not know. But all of this has been laid on the table by the Carter report which has shown the inequities in our tax structure, which has demonstrated beyond any shadow of doubt that we have freeloaders who have been riding on the backs of the rest of the taxpayers. This government will have to do something about restructuring our tax system. They cannot very much longer evade this question.

The fifth thing we have suggested is that the government should be taking steps now to begin regaining control of the Canadian economy. Again I want to tell the government that one of the things they are not going to be able to bury is the Watkins report. This report says what we in this party have been saying and what the President of the Privy Council has been saying over the years, namely, that the increasing ownership and control of the Canadian economy by foreign investors is eroding our sovereignty and diminishing our independence. If ever we needed a demonstration of this, we have had it in the past few months.

Why is the minister facing a financial crisis at the moment? It is not because of the inability of the Canadian people to produce. It is not because of the failure of the Canadian farmer to grow plenty of food. The reason the minister is facing a financial crisis at the moment is that the United States, facing difficulties arising out of the Viet Nam war, is calling back the money of its subsidiaries in this and other countries. This is part of the price we pay for having two-thirds of some of the major segments of our economy owned and controlled outside this country. We have ceased to be masters in our own house. We have ceased to have the power to direct and control the Canadian economy. The direction of the economy has moved from the treasury benches to the board rooms of New York. It is not one moment too soon, and I suspect that if we wait much longer it will be too late, to begin to regain control of the Canadian economy.

We believe that the basic decisions affecting the welfare and the lives of the Canadian people should be made in Canada and ought not to be made elsewhere. We are not suggesting a program of economic isolation. There is no reason why we should not have capital come from other countries in the form of loan capital or even equity capital where it is in a minority position. But the basic control, the decision-making power as to whether our economy shall expand, whether we shall have full employment and economic growth or contraction and unemployment, as we have at the present time, ought to reside in Canada in the hands of the Canadian people, and particularly in the hands of the elected representatives of the Canadian people.

I want to say in closing that all is not well in the economy, in spite of the minister's bland assurances yesterday. We face a very serious situation. We face a drastic slowing down in our economic growth. We face an alarming increase both in unemployment and in the cost of living. We are failing to keep pace with the requirements for housing, schools, hospitals, and other essential public services. Therefore the program which the government has announced of merely adding a few taxes and cutting down a few expenditures may please some people as being the solution for a few months, but I suggest to the minister that, unless he does something much more fundamental, 12 months from now he will be in exactly the same situation or worse. We believe that what we need in this country is a government which has the courage and the vision to intervene in the economy when the public interest requires it. If the government fails to intervene actively in the economy and to direct it, then the present state of the economy will grow worse rather than better.

Mr. Flemming: Mr. Chairman, when the minister reviewed the present state of the economy in Canada he was listened to by everyone with the proper amount of attention. However, last night when we heard over the radio the proposal with respect to additional taxation and a very minor reduction in expenditures, we were somewhat disappointed. I wish at this point to thank the minister for having made an extra copy of his speech available to me yesterday at my request. With his usual courtesy he gave it his special attention.

The minister referred to many factors which had brought about the present situation. He referred to the seriousness of the situation and he also referred with optimism to some of the bright spots which exist. I find no fault with this. It seems to me that it is proper for a minister to mix the good news with some which is perhaps not so good.

However, among other things he spoke about inflation with which is combined a factor of great importance to all Canadians, namely, the cost of living. The cost of living and inflation are of course combined and naturally they are of tremendous importance. Yesterday the minister warned us about inflation. I do not think we need any warning. We know something about inflation. Every one of us who goes with his wife to a supermarket these days will remember the time 12 months ago when he went to the same supermarket and got about twice as many groceries as he does today. We are very conscious, particularly when the wife steps back and lets us pay the bill, of the difference in the cost of living. It seems to me that we do not need any warning from the minister. He warned us on June 1 in his budget, he warned us on October 4, and he warned us again yesterday.

Let me remind the minister that in 1965 he and the government were warned about inflation in the report of the Economic Council of Canada. An editorial in today's Gazette quotes these words, pronounced in 1965, which are important enough to be repeated:

> In our judgment, it is these factors of increased efficiency and better matching of supply and demand in the use of our productive resources that should be the areas of most immediate concern at this time for both private and public policies, if our employment and growth goals are not to be endangered by spreading inflationary patches in the economy.

These are rather grandiose words but what they mean in effect is, "you'd better watch out for inflation". I submit that in 1965 the minister and the government were warned, if they needed any warning, of what was coming. So far as inflation is concerned, I think they should have examined the part which the private sector in Canada was willing to play in general capital spending. They should have examined the amount which the private sector was willing to pay and so far as public spending was concerned they should have backed away from it. But they did not, although I am inclined to think that the Minister was anxious enough to do so but that probably he was overruled by 26 or 27 other people. I say to the Minister of Labour that I am inclined to believe that, although I have no way of knowing it. I have an idea that the minister did spread that doctrine but all to no avail. It did not make any difference.

The government faced the economy not only with undiminished expenditures but with everything that they could borrow up to the extent of three-quarters of a billion dollars of deficit financing. That should never have been done in those years. One does not indulge in deficit financing in years of affluence. Surely everyone who has any knowledge of business, whether large or small, will agree with that. But the government went merrily on their way and paid no attention.

So now we come to the year 1968. The government competed for goods, for labour and for all the things which created expansion, and now it finds itself in trouble. That is the reason we had to listen to the type of speech which the Minister of Finance gave us yesterday. We do not need any warning from the minister. We really have nothing much to say about government spending. We just receive the proposals of the government which asks us to agree or not, as the case may be. I submit that the problem of inflation is right on the doorstep of the government and that it is more responsible for it than any other body of people.

What does the minister propose as a remedy? He is going to set up a board of review in connection with wages and prices. As has been said by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, as far as we know this body will have no authority whatsoever. I submit that at the present time, rather than going into the question of where we can get extra tax revenue, every department should have its estimates handed back and should be told that the government wants such and such a percentage cut off these estimates. Then the department could establish its own priorities. What would a board know about the top priorities in the Department of Labour, for instance? How would they find out? They would have to find out from the minister or his officials. I do not believe the government has even scratched the surface so far as the possibilities for reduction of expenditures are concerned. There are the statutory amounts which must be paid such as welfare payments and that sort of thing. But it seems to me the government is grappling with the problem of inflation in the wrong way. Not enough attention is being paid to the reduction of expenditures and the elimination of waste and extravagance. These are the things I believe the people of Canada are watching. These are the things I believe the people of Canada are anxious to see remedied. The government has the ability to do it but does not seem to have the inclination. I cannot tell you why, Mr. Chairman.

The government is now setting up this toothless and useless board of review. As the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam has said, nobody even knows what the status of that board will be. I do not have much faith in boards anyway. I do not have much faith in commissions. This government is famous for setting up commissions and task forces. Why do they not accept their responsibility? I am one of those who believe in the general responsibility that has been entrusted to the elected representatives, whether they sit on this side or on the other side. I should like to have a majority over here, of course, but I do not care too much so far as the responsibilities or duties of members are concerned. Having been chosen by the people, I believe the members are the ones upon whom should rest the ultimate responsibility. They are the ones who are going to go back some day and give an account of their stewardship to the people who sent them here. I submit, therefore, that this board of review and all these cockeyed ideas are useless. I do not know from where they emanate but I do know that they do not seem to make too much ordinary common sense.

The $75 million which has been mentioned amounts to less than 1 per cent of the estimates. The government is now going to add 3 per cent to the corporation tax. This is the proposal. Of course, corporations have no body to be kicked or soul to be damned, but I wonder whether anyone realizes to what extent corporations contribute to the general revenues of this country. You will find, that it is many hundreds of millions of dollars. I can tell hon. members, from the little bit of experience I have had with a small business, that it takes a lot of hard work and planning to keep a business going. My friend the Minister of Labour knows this because he has been through it. You go to bed with your problems and you never get rid of them. Actually you have a great sense of satisfaction when you do accomplish something. This tendency to consider corporations who make profits as public enemies is just darned nuisance and should not be tolerated in this country.

[Mr. Flemming.]

The government has decided to set up this board of review and delegate its responsibility. I do not believe in the delegation of responsibility. In addition, the government has decided to remove the ceiling in connection with individual income tax payments. I am not so sure that is not right. When you get above the $600 mark I am not so sure that an extra 3 per cent is going to make much difference. I am not too critical of that. The accelerated payment of corporation tax is being reintroduced, and I find no great fault with that.

If I may summarize, we have to acknowledge that corporations are being asked to stand another blow. When the tax amounts to 54 per cent or 55 per cent of the total profits of any corporation, the time comes when people become discouraged. If they have a few thousand dollars to invest they are tempted to put their money in trust company certificates at 7 per cent, go down to Florida during the winter and come back and enjoy the sunshine of Canada during the summer. This is what they are liable to do if they are taxed too much. It seems to me a great deal of ordinary judgment is required in connection with the raising of this badly needed money. I repeat that I do not believe the area of expenditure, and particularly the area of waste, has been thoroughly explored with a view to eliminating it.

I wonder where the minister got his figures for the profits for next year? I assume he based them on the current year's profits. I submit there is no guarantee that profits in 1968 will be as large as they were in 1967. I have spoken to a few people who are in business and they are greatly concerned about their prospects for the current year. I consider there is one thing in this country that should be changed. There should be less government in business and more business in government. I am going to quote the words the Minister of Finance used in his speech yesterday because they relate to these same corporations it is proposed to tax. As found on page 7337 of Hansard he said:

> We must give priority in our fiscal policy to resisting inflation. We must also plan, in consultation with business—

I draw attention to those words, "in consultation with business".

> —with labour, and with all those whose decisions are important in determining prices, a means of greater understanding of the mutual danger of excessive increases in prices and wages, and other costs by which those in positions of strength can exploit their market power under present circumstances.

My reason for quoting these words is simply that it seems to me it is altogether fitting and proper that the groups of people under the general headings of business and labour should be consulted because they all have a part in this problem of inflation. They are contributing factors to it. The minister is now going to consult business as a means of resisting inflation. However, in the same breath he singles out business for discrimination in connection with the payment of taxes. In my opninon, that does not add up properly.

Since 1963 there has been a large increase in the number of government employees. I admit that generally speaking government employees are very efficient, but there has been a large increase in the expense, with more and more boards, commissions, crown corporations and all that sort of thing, until one is almost black and blue in the face talking about them, all adding to the expense being paid by that apparently forgotten man, the taxpayer. We hardly ever hear his name mentioned in this chamber. He is the fellow who is paying the taxes but he is the forgotten man.

Governments apparently are tampering to a greater extent than ever before with pay envelopes. I believe that this trend should be reduced. I do not believe in governments taking to themselves the responsibility of providing for a segment of the population and then taxing the whole population to supply the funds for that purpose. No lesser man than the late Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King said that the collection of taxes by one government body for the benefit of and payment to another was a vicious principle. Now I am getting into another subject which I do not want to pursue, but the point is that it would be better for governments to address themselves to making it possible for people to do things for themselves rather than provide them with something at public expense.

One of the great philosophers of the United States, Professor Channing, about 100 years ago was asked if it was the function of government to provide happiness for people. He replied no, that it is the function of government, to the extent that it is in its power to do so, to provide the means by which people may make themselves happy. This is a statement which deserves more attention than it has received.

I now come to the question of Canadian productivity and a comparison with our friends to the south. It seems to me that this is right along the line I have been talking. If a producer is told that his pay cheque is going to be constantly eroded and interfered with, after a while he will become discouraged. He will ask himself, "What is the use? The government is going to take it all away from me anyway and there is going to be nothing left. What do I care how little I produce"?

A few moments ago I quoted from an editorial in this morning's Gazette headed "Still Not What Is Needed". I think it is a tremendous editorial. It is not entirely uncomplimentary to the minister, but that does not hurt my feelings. It deals with the subject of the protection of the country against inflation and the establishment of guide lines by the government. I am quite prepared to acknowledge that on account of the selfishness of some people individuals do require some regulating because they are not all perfect. We have to have some guide lines for business and to prevent inflation. I quote from the editorial:

> In his statement yesterday Mr. Sharp admitted the need for the government to give some sort of guidance in the fight against inflation by establishing some kind of guide lines, even if the name "guide lines" was itself avoided. This is in itself a good step. The tendency of the government in the years that are past was to condemn inflation in generalities but never to come down to cases.

I do not see anything wrong with the word "guide lines". If I were a member of the government I would not mind it. It seems to me that guide lines are a good thing for a group of people such as a government in charge of the destinies of a large number of people. I continue quoting from the editorial:

> One of the reasons, it might be suspected, why the government has hitherto avoided setting any sort of guide lines is that it was reluctant to set the necessary example. To lay down guide lines for others, while its own spending was bulging, would have been to invite acute embarrassment, with nowhere to hide.

I know that the minister and his colleagues have read this editorial. To me that last paragraph is a very potent one and proper note should be taken of it.

In his speech yesterday the minister announced the freezing of the number of employees in the public service. This is something which was done in 1962. The public service commission at that time, when vacancies arose, advertised them within the department concerned, then within the public service generally, and finally within the public service all over Canada. As a result nobody was hurt by the freeze. People in the service received the preference which they should receive. In 1962 that eliminated a good deal of expense in a gradual way. The editorial deals with the matter as follows:

> As for freezing for the time being the number of employees, this was made necessary by the Auditor General's report—a report tabled in the house on the same day that Mr. Sharp's tax bill was defeated. The Auditor General pointed out that the costs of the government's administrative overhead had increased by almost 60 per cent since 1962-63, and that the number of those employed in government departments, the crown corporations and other instrumentalities had increased for the year ending March 31, 1967 by 18,788 over the previous year.
> No government could set an example for curbing inflation when it was spending so much and employing so many.
> It may well be that Mr. Sharp did the best he could amidst the cross-currents of a seriously divided cabinet—a cabinet so divided on economic policy as to have made adequate measures against inflation impossible for years. The government needs full support for whatever it may do to come to grips with the financial crisis.

The minister knows better than the writer of this editorial whether the reference to cross-currents in a seriously divided cabinet is justified. However, we can point to the fact that living next door to a very large, healthy and friendly neighbour, the minister often goes down to New York and Washington. This is a most natural thing for him to do, and there he discusses financial matters. But surely when he goes there they must ask him, "What about that fellow up there who doesn't want us in Canada? What about the President of the Privy Council who says you should buy Canada back and who doesn't want us there"? What does he reply when he is asked that question and has to answer it? I think it is a very difficult question to answer. This gives us some idea of the division within the cabinet, a division which has much to do with our people's lack of confidence in the cabinet.

• (4:20 p.m.)

In the Gazette yesterday Mr. Blakely, a distinguished member of the press gallery, said this about inflationary tendencies:

> —back last October, the inflationary tendencies (which have certainly become no weaker since) were sufficiently disturbing that Mr. Sharp felt that he had little to lose and everything to gain by giving the guide line...er, that is voluntary restraint...concept a whirl. In his own mind, at least, he even had the timing fairly well worked out.

It adds up to everyone in this country being conscious of inflation. I do not think the government has paid enough attention to ways to reduce expenditures. Expenditures for the current year ending March 31, 1968, cannot be reduced sufficiently in order to restore confidence in this country. Next year's expenditures must be considered. It is no good having someone say that next year's expenditure increase of, say, $6.5 billion has been reduced to $6 billion and that a saving has been made. In those figures there is no saving, and to suggest there is is nonsense.

I am critical of the government for not giving leadership to our people in ways to fight inflation. Ministers of finance have bragged about how good things are. I must say that the present Minister of Finance, who has a broader outlook than his predecessor had, has admitted that our good times began in 1961. His predecessor said they began in 1963 on the day the Liberals came to power. That was his submission. Nevertheless, the present Minister of Finance, who is a man of some stature, has said that our good times started under the previous government in 1961. We have had good times and that is why I suggested a few moments ago that we should have tapered off our public spending when the private sector of the economy could carry the ball. The government ought to have balanced its budget and kept out of the money markets. It ought not to have competed for materials and labour with the private sector.

Had the government balanced its budget when times were good and had it not gone to the money markets its credit would now be good. If it needed money in difficult times it could borrow it. Difficult times are not here yet but they may come. The Bible says that we may expect seven years of plenty to be followed by seven years that are not so good. I do not say that we will have seven bad years but since we have had seven years of plenty we may expect times not to be quite so good in future.

At his convenience I hope the Minister of Finance will explain why, when times were good, the government did not save for the rainy day which was bound to come. Failure to do so demonstrates lack of leadership. I charge the government with not giving leadership, and it deserves that charge. The government competed with private industry for labour, material and money. No one questions the government's right to govern, though many question its ability to govern.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Flemming: The government deserves censure for doing what it ought not to have done and for not doing what it ought to have done. Now the minister asks us to co-operate in getting the country out of the mess. Speaking for myself, I am sure that every member in this chamber wishes to do what is good for the country.

The Chairman: Order, please. I must interrupt the hon. member to advise him that his allotted time has expired.

An hon. Member: Carry on.

The Chairman: Does the committee give unanimous consent for the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Flemming: I thank the committee and I thank you, Mr. Chairman, for your consideration. The minister used some phrases in his speech which deserve attention. He spoke of a new character of urgency. That urgency, I submit, has been caused by this government's mismanagement. He also spoke about buttressing confidence. I took the trouble to look up the meaning of "buttress" and I found that it means "to prop it up". The minister asks us to prop up confidence.

Mr. Dinsdale: One cannot prop up this government.

Mr. Flemming: That is quite right, and I do not think we should. Confidence in this government has reached such a low level that it is almost impossible to restore it. Surely those who have weakened the country's confidence in the government are the members of the government themselves.

The minister asked for restraints in wage and price increases. That request is fair enough as long as the prices are restrained as well as wages. It would not be fair to interfere with wages unless attention were also paid to the cost of living and to the things that wages will buy.

The minister talked about the devaluation of sterling. May I suggest what brought about that devaluation? I wonder whether any member of the chamber would like to answer that question?

An hon. Member: Such as the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam?

Mr. Flemming: No, no. I will not ask him to answer. I shall try to answer it myself. Briefly, I think devaluation was brought on by too many handouts in Great Britain. The British people could not produce goods in competition with the world and as a result Great Britain lost its foreign markets. For a long time the British have not been able to compete and this lack of competitiveness, for want of a better phrase, lasted without apparent ill effects just as long as Britain could borrow money. After a while Britain could borrow no more and there was nothing to be done except devalue sterling. The British lived beyond their means. We in Canada have lived beyond our means for the last five or six years. We have had a deficit of $750 million per year. That is the extent to which we have lived beyond our means, and for that the government must take responsibility.

Have we in Canada lost our ability to compete? Are we living beyond our means? Those are good questions and I shall attempt to answer them. No. I do not think we have lost our ability to compete but I do think we are living beyond our means. We have forgotten to encourage people to be productive. We must produce goods competitively with the rest of the world or we will find ourselves in the same predicament as Britain.

Mr. Flemming: As I say, we live alongside a very rich neighbour, a very good neighbour. They are fine people. They have many luxuries, and we think we are entitled to the same luxuries. I am not so sure we can afford them, but we do try to keep up with the Joneses. I suppose it is natural to do this. We enjoy virtually the same standard of living as the people of the United States, and we can compete with the United States in productivity and in the benefits it derives from world markets if we make up our minds to do so. That is all it takes. But the government must of necessity give some assistance and encouragement to industry to enable it to do that very thing. Up to now this encouragement and assistance have not been forthcoming.

I have mentioned foreign ownership of Canadian business, but since I am now trespassing on time which does not belong to me I shall not go into the subject further. We have the Watkins report. We have statements by the President of Privy Council about buying Canada back. If I had the time I could tell the committee some stories about businesses in the maritime provinces which would never have been started had it not been for United States capital. The proposals were turned down by Canadian banks. I know of many such cases. What I think foreign owners of any business in Canada should do is this: they should abide by the laws of Canada. There can be no doubt about that. The things that are good for Canada are things that they should be doing; they should not ask for anything more than that.

I appreciate that the committee has been very kind to me in allowing me additional time. I have just about concluded what I wish to say except for one thing. We find that the whole question of the medicare program due to begin on July 1 is apparently still under consideration. People say to me: the one thing we do not need is more taxes. And this scheme would involve more taxes, an estimated 12 per cent.

I say to the government that this issue ought to be cleared up because nothing is worse in the life of a nation or an individual than uncertainty. Nothing is worse in the financial world than uncertainty. The government has to decide and restore the confidence which I believe has been partially destroyed, not completely destroyed but partially destroyed. The way to do this is for hon. gentlemen opposite to put their own house in order. If I were to give any advice to the Minister of Finance this would be the advice I would give him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McKinley: Mr. Chairman, many of the problems facing the country at the present time result from the fact that this government's policy has been one of ad hoc measures, chopping and changing, looking for short-term expediency rather than following a consistent, carefully thought out program designed to ensure even economic expansion.

I should like to review a few facts in this connection. Part of what I have to say may have been said before but I still think it bears repeating. We are now experiencing high costs, increased taxes, high prices and general uneasiness because of the extravagant spending policies of the government. The high prices arise from an increase in demand in which the federal government has been a major component. Increases in the money supply of a sporadic nature and sudden fluctuations in federal spending, particularly in 1966, have unsettled the money market and added to our difficulties. Unwise taxation policies such as the sales tax on building materials have increased built-in business and industrial costs and harmed our productivity and capacity to produce. The minister is now forced to levy new taxes upon an already burdened economy. Unemployment is rising and a number of indicators show a general softening of the economy. Lay-offs are spreading, the boom has tapered off, yet inflation is still sweeping the country.

What is required is a return to competent, effective long-range policies which will not depend on day to day fluctuations and which will result in restoring a climate of confidence. For many millions today, prosperity is being siphoned off by the erosive forces of runaway inflation and rising costs. Inflation has taken a heavy toll of the welfare and economic well-being of every Canadian. There is none so poor as not to be made poorer by it, none so rich as to escape its effects. It has borne most heavily upon those least able to sustain it.

Inflation has become an uncontrolled monster seeking whom it may devour. Prosperity is being siphoned away. Those who never rose to the level of prosperity have had their situation worsened by the indirect yet nonetheless real tax which inflation imposes.

In his budget speech of June 1, 1967, the Minister of Finance outlined the very real dangers of inflation when he said, as reported at page 865 of Hansard:

> Our record in the past two years, in this respect, has deteriorated. Between April, 1965 and this April the consumer price index has gone up by 7.3 per cent.

In the same speech he said:

> If unchecked, such increases in costs and prices must lead to increasing inequity and dissension in the country and to a worsening of our competitive position vis-à-vis the United States. This would impose a serious restraint on the growth of Canadian industry and frustrate our efforts to maintain a steady rate of expansion in the jobs available for our growing labour force.

This, Mr. Chairman, is exactly what has been happening.

The former minister of finance, now President of Privy Council, reduced taxes by 10 per cent in April, 1965. Some said it was an election budget. He said it was not. However, an election did take place in November, 1965, two years after the previous one. When hon. members opposite should have been straightening out financial affairs, all they could think about was getting a majority. Their hopes were disappointed.

The present minister brought in a budget in March, 1966, a springtime budget, whose major objective was to restore the pre-election tax cuts. His next budget was a mini-budget. In that budget, he raised the amount payable by the taxpayer for old age security, and increased the general sales tax by one percentage point. He felt this would not be inflationary. But it has been. In his budget speech, as reported in Hansard at page 11331, he stated:

> We must moderate the rate of increase in new public expenditures. Neither the capacity nor the willingness of Canadians to pay higher taxes should be taken for granted.

• (4:40 p.m.)

I suggest also that neither should the willingness of the House of Commons be taken for granted. Let me quote from an editorial which appeared in the London Free Press of November 1, 1967. I believe the London Free Press is one of the most factual newspapers in Canada. This is what it had to say:

> Employment in the federal civil service grew last year at an average rate of better than 1,000 a month, a pace unmatched since the crash build-up during the second world war.
> Although precise statistics on this year's growth are not yet available, most officials believe the rate is continuing.
>
> At Jan. 1 there were 222,385 persons on the payroll of government departments and their direct agencies, a 12-month increase of 13,711 or 6.6 per cent.
> These figures does not include independent federal corporations such as the C.B.C., Air Canada, Central Mortgage and Housing Corp., Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd., or any of the special agencies set up for centennial year and Expo 67.
> Civil service employment has been creeping up steadily from its wartime peak to 116,000 in 1945. But it didn't really start to surge until the start of 1965. Since then it has been increased by an astounding 9 per cent.

This was going on while the minister was making these statements in his budget speech. The main feature of the budget of last June was to remove the sales tax on drugs, no doubt in order that Canadians, in view of what was coming, would be able to have recourse to cheaper sedatives. Canadians are being asked, through higher taxes and unemployment to pay for the inability of the government to adopt effective, long-range policies.

In his budget of March, 1966 the Minister of Finance also did not seem to have been aware of the situation. When he became aware of the fact that he was dealing with a runaway situation he seemed to have been unable to impress upon his colleagues the need to sacrifice some personal programs. As reported at page 3390 of Hansard for March 29, 1966, the minister said:

> Our situation calls for some restraint in expansion; it does not call for deflation. As a nation we should ease up our foot on the gas pedal, not slam on the brakes.

I am sure we all remember those words. The government is now in a difficult position which was brought about by the unevenness of its fiscal policies and lack of restraint. The government must now increase taxes in order to meet its obligations and reassure the financial markets. Obviously the government failed to foresee the sharp change in the economic climate brought about in part by its policies.

In the budget of last June the minister urged restraint and increased federal expenditures by $1.4 billion. Today the economy is levelling off but inflation continues to pose a threat. I say that the government waited altogether too long before dealing with inflation. Now the danger is that in attempting to do what the minister says they should have begun to do after 1965 they may bring great hardship and difficulty to large sections of the economy. Never was there greater need for clear, consistent fiscal policies. The following words appear in Hansard for April 10, 1962, page 2718. This was before I was a member of the house.

> The taxpayer of this country is going to need a headache tablet when he is confronted this year with another deficit of $745 million.

That was said by the right hon. Prime Minister. I have here the press release of the minister's budget speech of November 30, 1967, in which he stated:

> These high financial requirements were due not only to the deficit in our budget accounts which was forecast at $740 million—

The figure is almost the same. I believe this perhaps explains why the tax was taken off drugs, including headache tablets. We now find ourselves in a situation where all the indicators show a sagging economy. The unemployment figure for January included more than 6 per cent of the labour force. If one looks at Hansard one can see how those on the government side wailed about unemployment a few years ago. Now it does not seem to be nearly so big a problem. They say there is unemployment all over the world. However, while unemployment in Canada is rising the unemployment figure in the United States for the month of January was the lowest since 1953. It was a mere 3.5 per cent of the labour force.

Now the minister comes along with a surcharge on income tax. Canadians are paying more income tax now than ever before and are receiving less for it. The government does not intend to bring in a budget. When one is brought in I expect that taxes will be increased again. This is what the minister said to the hon. member for Regina the other day. I believe we understand why they do not want to bring in a budget now. There would be a conflict of interest if the minister during his leadership campaign had to bring in a budget which called for another tax increase. He will leave that for the new leader. A few years ago it was said in the house that the government was rudderless. Now it is both rudderless and leaderless. I say to you that I believe this was proven on February 19. Obviously not very much will be done about the financial mess until the leadership convention is over.

In the meantime the bank interest rate is soaring at 7 per cent and higher. The N.H.A. mortgage rate at 8§ per cent is out of reach of the majority of young Canadians and the average cost of a new home has risen 28 per cent in the past four years. What kind of policy is this? In addition, the provinces are financially unable to take on the responsibility of the federally designed medicare scheme, although most of them have schemes of their own which are equally good and a lot sounder financially. Instead of getting together with the provinces to work out a scheme that would be both feasible and practical the government insists on imposing its own particular scheme on the provinces even though it will be neither national nor portable.

I think the people of Canada should know that the government must face the bills both for medicare and Expo. The Expo deficit is estimated to be between $100 million and $200 million. The minister stated that these figures were not included in the last budget. The government tried to sweep this under the rug but it was still there. The other day in the house the minister said that it has been looked after. I suspect that the only way it could be looked after would be by having a larger deficit for the people to pay.

A while ago the former minister of finance, the President of the Privy Council, added to the confusion a little by bringing down a report which would have the effect of strangling our economic expansion by cutting off capital investment. There is no surprise in the fact that investors at home and abroad have lost confidence in the government's ability to manage the economy. It is an indication of the strength of the economy that we have maintained prosperity in spite of high taxes, high prices and the general mismanagement of the government.

[Mr. McKinley.]

• (4:50 p.m.)

Canada has been receiving $1 billion per year in the form of United States investment. That money is needed for expansion and the provision of jobs in Canada. In 1965-66 United States citizens invested $1,500 million in Canada. I should like to know how the President of the Privy Council intends to replace this investment if it is cut back. There has been a definite decline in economic expansion in this country as a result of the government's action in increasing taxes and bringing about measures which have increased the high level of government expenditure.

Since the first part of 1966 production has risen at a rate of only 2 per cent compared with the 6 per cent increase in the preceding five years. A growth rate of 2 per cent is not sufficient when one considers the additional 200,000 people entering our labour force each year. Income is slowing down at the same time that unemployment and inflation are increasing. In this regard I agree completely with the hon. member for Carleton.

Canadian productivity is only 70 per cent of the level attained by the United States. Unless we can keep pace and keep costs down we will be unable to compete in export markets. The report of the D.B.S. last September indicated that prices had increased by 4 per cent since 1966. The cost of housing has increased to a greater extent than ever before, and the sales tax on construction materials has not alleviated the situation. Federal expenditures under this government have increased by 60 per cent since the fiscal year 1962-63 after it took office. The government forecast of governmental expenditure is $10 billion for 1968-69. This estimate does not include the cost of medicare or the Expo deficit. As government expenditures have risen the cost of living has risen. This is partly the result of an increase in indirect taxes which Canadians pay for housing, food, clothing, medicine and all those things needed to maintain life.

The government says it intends to cut down on expenditures. Government spending increased last year by 4.6 per cent. I suppose the minister is trying to save money to offset the money he lost as a result of the defeat of his measure to increase taxes. It appears that government finances are pathetic. Public confidence in this government has evaporated. The Bank of Canada is desperately afraid of the dollar value sagging and the government has taken measures to prevent such an occurrence. In the meantime the farmer has been caught in a cost-price squeeze and it seems that the government can do nothing about it. During the last three years the government has been talking about assisting the agricultural industry but it has done little or nothing to help. Let me congratulate the Minister of Agriculture for assisting the dairy farmer, but I must say that the assistance has been too small.

The government has frittered away huge sums in empty gestures which have been of very little assistance to the farmer, the businessman or the taxpayer. The government has allowed our productivity to diminish. It is no wonder that the financial world has very little confidence in this government which is so moribund and so lost to responsibility it cannot keep its feet on the ground or its eyes on the national economy.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the committee to rise and report progress in order that the house may revert to motions. At that time I should like to make an important announcement.

Progress reported.

FINANCE

EXEMPTION OF CANADA FROM U.S. BALANCE OF PAYMENTS MEASURES—PROVISION OF STAND-BY CREDITS

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the house to revert to motions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent to the minister's request to revert to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I should like to table two documents and make an important announcement. The first document consists of an exchange of letters made today between the hon. Henry Fowler, secretary of the treasury in Washington, and myself concerning the application to Canada of the United States balance of payments measures.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent to the minister to table these documents?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Sharp: The effect of this exchange is that Canada is now completely exempted from the operation of the balance of payments program of the United States affecting capital flow. I refer specifically to the measures affecting direct investment that are administered by the department of commerce and the programs administered by the federal reserve system. Our exemption from the interest equalization tax on new issues remains intact.

Freedom from these major United States programs achieves a goal toward which we have been working for a long time. Moreover, it does so without in any way impairing our independence of action.

• (5:00 p.m.)

The Canadian government on its side has felt that these steps by the United States should be matched by further reciprocal helpful steps on the Canadian side. To ensure that the United States balance of payments position is in no way impaired as a result of the United States action, the Canadian government has said that it is its intention to take any steps necessary to ensure that the exemption from the United States program does not result in Canada being used as a "pass-through" by which the purpose of the United States balance of payments program is frustrated.

In my letter I go on to say that it is also our intention to invest our entire holdings of United States dollars, apart from necessary working balances, in United States government securities which do not constitute a liquid claim on the United States, with, of course, effective safeguards to our position should our reserve level require. At the present time these exchange reserves are invested in marketable United States government securities. I have no doubt these undertakings are in the interests of both countries and in the general interest internationally.

The second announcement I am making today is that arrangements have now been made for an additional $900 million United States in stand-by credits to be available to supplement Canada's foreign exchange reserves. Of this amount $500 million United States will be made available by the United States Export-Import Bank to the government of Canada. The other $400 million United States will be made available to the Bank of Canada by the central banks of Germany and Italy and the Bank for International Settlements.

I wish to express the appreciation of the government for the action of the United States authorities and the three banks in Europe in arranging these credit facilities. I am sure that the house will recognize the great significance of this announcement. There is no doubt about the basic underlying strength of the Canadian economy. All doubts regarding our access to capital from the United States have now been removed.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the minister a question before he sits down?

Mr. Monteith: Wait for a minute.

Mr. Douglas: I want to ask the minister a question to clarify one point, if I may. Does the removal of the United States balance of payments program so far as Canada is concerned include the matter of repatriation?

Mr. Sharp: Yes.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise simply to say that we are pleased to hear of these arrangements made with the United States authorities and certainly hope they will provide further strength to our currency and our position.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I presume we should greet the minister's comments with satisfaction although for my part some doubts are raised in my mind and I wonder whether there have been any special attacks on the Canadian dollar recently which have necessitated this arrangement with the United States for such a vast sum of money. It leaves me rather puzzled as to what can have happened in the last few days to cause this arrangement to be necessary.

With regard to the relief from the United States guide lines respecting foreign investment and repatriation of dividends I shall have something to say on that matter later today, I hope. I still think it is based upon a miscalculation of Canada's real needs or a miscalculation of the way in which we should deal with the problem of available capital in this country.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Chairman, we are particularly pleased with the statement of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) to the effect that Canadian investments in the United States will be better recognized and respected than they were previously, and that even the dividends on those investments will come back to Canada.

We feel that this will benefit Canada. Any country, not only the United States, acting in this fashion, would be helping to consolidate the economic position of Canada on the national as well as the international plane.

We are therefore quite pleased.

[English]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that a message has been received from the Senate informing this house that the Senate have passed Bill C-197, an act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, without any amendment.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Tardif in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

Administration—

4c. Grant to the endowment fund of the Vanier Institute of the Family—L'institut Vanier de la famille, $236,869.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply, supplementary estimates (C), 1967-68, Department of Finance, vote 4c. Shall this item carry?

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, before the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) made his statement, we were discussing the supplementary estimates, specifically those of the Department of Finance.

On scanning the speech made yesterday by the hon. minister, one realizes that it is rather likely to spread fear and anxiety with regard to the Canadian economy.

Indeed, one can read sentences like this one, that we must:

—take action which will buttress confidence in the Canadian economy and the Canadian dollar in the midst of mounting international financial uncertainties.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mention is also made of new fiscal measures to replace the income lost through the defeat of Bill No. C-193.

There is also talk of further reductions in expenditures; of the need to slow down the increase in prices and wages; of the fact that the Bank of Canada has raised its bank rate from 6 to 7 per cent.

Mention is made also of the decrease in Canadian reserves, that is $100 million at the end of January, and another of $113 million at the end of February.

Further on, the hon. Minister of Finance also says, as found on page 7335 of Hansard:

—the rhythm of growth slackened, particularly in business capital spending while employment and production levelled off.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. minister uses all sorts of expressions, in speaking to us of cut-backs in spending, tax increases, the rising level of unemployment, and so on.

Oddly enough, this makes me think of a speech made by another candidate for the Liberal leadership, Mr. Eric Kierans who said, according to the October 2, 1967 issue of Le Devoir:

What would be the economic fate of a separated Quebec?

In his speech on a "separated Quebec", Mr. Eric Kierans said that separation would entail increased unemployment.

In his speech yesterday, the hon. Minister of Finance also tells us that employment has slowed down and that unemployment has increased.

In his speech, Mr. Kierans also mentioned that the separation of Quebec would lead to poverty, because expenditures would have to be reduced. Now, in his statement of yesterday afternoon, the Minister of Finance announced that the federal government had to reduce expenditures and restrict the number of civil servants.

On the other hand, in his speech of October last, Mr. Kierans said, and I quote:

Foreign capital will stay away from Quebec.

In his remarks yesterday, the Minister of Finance also announced the withdrawal of foreign capital, which is being redirected to the United States. They were the very same arguments put forward by Mr. Eric Kierans, candidate in the Liberal party leadership race, last October, in a hypothetic and psychedelic dream: the seven plagues of Egypt.

The Minister of Finance tells us today that the seven plagues of Egypt are raging throughout Canada, that unemployment is increasing, that production is slowing down noticeably, that expenditures must be cut, etc.

Mr. Kierans was trying to scare us at that time. The present Minister of Finance tells us: The seven plagues of Egypt are here.

Mr. Chairman, following the speech in which the Minister of Finance announced that we were faced with the situation against which Mr. Kierans was trying to warn us, I tell myself that if Quebec wants to avoid those seven plagues of Egypt, it should withdraw from this administration economically and financially directed by the present Minister of Finance.

Mr. Chairman, the reason for that is very simple. Canada has never been able to develop an entity of its own and become independent.

We are told about Canada's dismal economic situation at the present time. Mr. Chairman, with regard to that situation, I would like to refer to two questions I recently put to the Minister of Finance.

The first one was as follows:

Has Canada granted any loans to England since 1938?

What was the amount of each of these loans?

What was the interest rate on each of these loans?

What amounts were not paid back at the date of maturity?

On January 31, 1968, I obtained the following answer:

In 1943, a loan of $700 million, interest free, was granted to Great Britain under the 1942 legislation. That loan was granted without interest.

Other loans were granted at 2 per cent interest. They were not then granted under a war legislation, but in accordance with a 1946 legislation, even if war had ended. In fact, they were granted on account of the affection of the Minister of Finance of the time for his mother-in-law, Great Britain.

Those loans at 2 per cent interest were refundable in 50 instalments.

What were the amounts granted?

In 1947, $640 million. It was a large amount, but it was not enough!

In 1948, another loan of $368 million was made. That amounted to a big figure in two years, but it was still not enough.

In 1949, $37 million. In 1950, $120 million. In 1951, $20 million.

All these loans, Mr. Chairman, made up a total of $1,185 million loaned at 2 per cent interest for a 50-year period and repayable in 50 annual instalments.

When I asked whether the amount was repaid, I was told that the United Kingdom still owed us the whole amount in 1951, namely four years after. At that time, nothing had been repaid yet.

In 1958, the repayment of principal is deferred: there is no repayment. In 1965, the repayment of principal is deferred. Until when? We do not know, nothing is said about that. In 1966, the repayment of principal is deferred again.

In 1957, the interest due on December 31 amounted to $22,300,000 and the payment was deferred, but we do not know until when.

In 1958, the interest due December 31 amounted to $21,900,000 and the payment was deferred once more.

In 1965, the interest due December 31 amounted to $19,600,000 and the payment was again deferred.

In 1966, the interest due December 31 amounted to $19,200,000, and it was deferred again.

The total of the interest due amounted to $83 million and the rate of interest is 2 per cent only. This means that, between 1947 and 1967, we should have had 20 repayments out of 50 yet the United Kingdom still owes us $1,185 million.

In fact, they still owe us a principal of $976,200,000, plus the $83 million accrued interest that has not been paid yet or that was deferred. This makes up a total of about $1,165 million at the end of 20 years. While we loaned them $1,185 million in 20 years, they repaid only $120 million at an interest rate of 2 per cent.

In the meantime, the hon. Minister of Finance is tearing his hair out because the interest rates are going up. He is paying this year, on Canada's debt, and in interest only, the amount of $1,406 million, while we are lending to England at 2 per cent.

When Great Britain does not pay back any principal or interest, nothing is said. We are told: it is deferred. Till when? Nobody knows, it is just deferred. Seven or rather 12 payments deferred in 20 years!

Mr. Chairman, where are Canada's interests? In England or in Canada? It is no wonder that we find ourselves in the position so aptly described yesterday by the Minister of Finance when he spoke about lower employment, a decreased growth rate, more unemployment and more taxes. That is what Eric Kierans was saying to us in October 1967.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Chairman, when I see all those debts, I tell myself that Canadians, as we say, are always stung, in a country which does not even try to take its rightful place economically, but only to act according to the whims of mother-in-law, England. We have proof of that. While other countries owe us money, we find ourselves in the situation as described by the Minister of Finance yesterday.

Mr. Chairman, what we do not realize is precisely that Canada does not attempt to serve the interests of Canadians, it does not attempt to develop the Canadian economy, but rather endeavours to be the vassal of foreign interests. Our country does not try to develop a Canadian policy, but it is always oriented by a policy planned in Washington or in London. It does not attempt to develop its own identity, because it is always accepting what develops in England or in the United States.

Those are the reasons why I said that Quebec would gain by getting out as soon as possible, in order to avoid the seven plagues of Egypt of the Minister of Finance and establish its own economic, social and cultural policies and build its own identity.

[English]

Mr. Ballard: Mr. Chairman, I think the basis of the point I want to put across this afternoon can be clearly understood if we look at the present situation in this chamber. We are now discussing the finance estimates, yet the Minister of Finance is not in the house. I doubt very much that there is anybody in the house directly representing him. This bears out the contempt in which the minister holds opinions expressed by members of this house and by people who are authorities in the field of finance. I draw a distinction between members of the house and those who are authorities in finance. It seems evident to me that the minister is thoroughly convinced that no one but himself really understands the problems of this country.

We were pleased, as Canadians and as members of parliament, to hear the announcement just made by the Minister of Finance. The fact that the United States government has come to our assistance with a promise of financial support if we need it, and more particularly the fact that the restrictions that have been applied by the United States government in the field of foreign investment will not apply to Canada, make us happier. I am pleased to hear this because the area which I represent is very much involved with investment from the United States.

I am speaking, of course, of the oil industry of Alberta which has depended a great deal upon its ability to attract United States funds to this country. I do not know the current figure for investment in the oil industry but I would venture to say it is many millions of dollars. Many areas in Alberta, the Northwest Territories and the Arctic region are now being looked at by the oil industry, and the development of these areas will, of course, require influx of United States capital. One of these developments is the Pan-Arctic development in which the government is participating with several United States and Canadian oil companies. I take the personal view that we will never have too much in the way of oil reserves. We must encourage the oil industry to develop and find new reserves by every means at our disposal. The announcement that the United States government is not going to place general restrictions on the export of capital to Canada gives encouragement to the oil developers in my part of the country.

I must say that when the Carter report was tabled last year the oil industry was very much opposed to the concepts put forward in it. Many companies at that time were reluctant to go ahead with development plans for fear the recommendations in the Carter report would be put into effect. The statement made by the Minister of Finance in his December budget that the Carter recommendations would be put in limbo for an indefinite period of time was encouraging news to them.

When the minister opened his remarks on the supplementary estimates he stated, as recorded on page 7332 of Hansard:

> The immediate and urgent task facing the government and parliament is to take action which will buttress confidence in the Canadian economy and the Canadian dollar in the midst of mounting international financial uncertanties.

I feel that this is one of the difficulties the Minister of Finance has to face. He has not been prepared to take a position on any matter in connection with finance until the situation is urgent and has to be solved immediately. He has been applying his remedies to situations after they occur instead of acting in such a way that government planning would influence the future developments of the country. In the next paragraph of the minister's speech on page 7332 of Hansard I find these words:

> There is little we can do in this parliament to affect the underlying forces at work in international markets. We do have responsibility to ensure that we do not contribute, either by our action or by inaction, to the weakening of our own position and the worsening of the world financial situation.

These remarks reinforce the argument I have just made that the Minister of Finance and the government have been closing the door after the bull has escaped. I say "bull" advisedly because I think we are going to hear more of the bull later today. It is true that it is not possible for the minister to influence the present international financial situation by anything we may do in this house today. Remedies do not have an immediate effect in the international monetary field. The international monetary system responds to conditions that build up day after day until a point is reached where they are intolerable. At that time adjustments are automatically made in the international financial market.

It is also true, and I think it is unfortunate for the country, that the Minister of Finance is an arrogant person. He is a person who, as I indicated before, is not prepared to take advice from this side of the house. In fact, he is not prepared to take advice from any quarter, regardless of the responsibility, experience or capability of the person who may give the advice. We know that in many instances the minister has been advised by the governor of the Bank of Canada, by the Economic Council of Canada and by various recognized authorities on finance and monetary affairs. The minister has received advice from these people but has chosen to ignore it.

To substantiate the statement I have just made I wish to place on the record a few of the warnings expressed in the recent past, forecasting the position we are getting into in this country. I think it is obvious to all that for at least the past two years this country has been spending more than it has been earning. Our rate of productivity has gone up very slowly but the rate of government spending has gone up precipitously. As a matter of fact, the rate of government spending in Canada has increased more than in the United States even though that country is involved in an unfortunate war in Viet Nam.

An editorial headed, "You Can't Get A Quart Out Of A Pint Jug", in the Ottawa Journal of March 15, 1967, quoted Mr. Rasminsky, governor of the Bank of Canada, as saying:

> Diverging movements in costs and productivity such as we have been seeing recently cannot go on for long without seriously affecting the Canadian economy.

It is clear to me that for much of the last two years we have overloaded the economy.

As a matter of simple economic arithmetic, the real income of the community is inevitably limited by the amounts we can in fact produce. You cannot get a quart of wine out of a pint jug.

This is exactly what we have been trying to do in Canada. We have been trying to take more out of the economy than we have put into it. This is an impossibility and it is one of the main reasons for the financial dilemma in which we find ourselves. But the Minister of Finance chose to ignore the advice of one of Canada's senior civil servants. The editorial in the Journal called for some restraint on the part of the government, and I quote further:

On the same day revenue minister E. J. Benson disclosed to parliament the government's spending plans for 1967-68. They represent: an estimated $1.3 billion increase to more than $11 billion in the new fiscal year; by far the largest increase in peacetime history; more than twice the rate of increase in spending in the current year.

One can summarize the editorial writer's feeling by pointing out that in the fiscal year 1967-68 we had a budget of $11.2 billion whereas five years previously our budget was about $7½ billion. We cannot move that far that rapidly without some serious consequences to the country. The editorial further quoted Mr. Rasminsky as follows:

Unfortunately, if the warning signals are ignored and policy does not respond until a large number of unsustainable positions have been created, until costs and prices have risen very sharply, and international competitiveness has been impaired, then the problem becomes much more difficult to deal with in a way that will not halt the expansion of the economy.

This is the position we have come to today, Mr. Chairman. We have allowed prices to rise to the point where international competition is going to keep us out of international markets. We have reached the crisis. It is only now that the crisis is apparent that the Minister of Finance has recognized it. At least we hope he has recognized it.

An editorial in the Ottawa Journal of May 30, 1967 quoted Dr. John Deutsch, former chairman of the Economic Council of Canaday, as saying:

From the beginning of our work, we have been concerned with the inherent difficulty of achieving the goal of reasonable price stability in a Canadian economy which was successfully achieving high employment and rapid growth of output and living standards.

In other words, Dr. Deutsch was concerned about achieving the goal of reasonable price stability. This warning was ignored by the Minister of Finance.

[Mr. Ballard.]

I now quote another authority. Probably he will thank me for saying he is an authority in view of the fact that he is one of the candidates for the Liberal leadership. He is the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and as reported in the Globe and Mail of September 13, 1967, when speaking to the Canadian Construction Association he said:

...governments have tended to spend too much—not in relation to our social needs, for much remains to be done—but in relation to the economy's ability to generate government revenues.

The Minister of Finance has chosen to ignore the advice of his friend, the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I could go on giving examples to substantiate my contention that the Minister of Finance has ignored advice from every quarter.

The situation we are in today has not been sprung on us at the last moment. It is something that has developed over the last two and probably three years. The government has been spending much more than it should have. It has actually been a profligate government, not giving much consideration to where the necessary money comes from.

On December 7 last in a speech in this chamber I suggested that the government should set up a system of priorities or set up a committee to study priorities. A few days after that, but not as a result of my speech, the Prime Minister indicated that a cabinet committee would be set up to study spending priorities. Now it appears as though he was paying lip service to the idea because nothing has been done about it in the interval.

There has been steadily growing uneasiness throughout the country at the ever-increasing government expenditures. This uneasiness is reflected in the Auditor General's report where we find that the expenditures of practically all departments have been growing by leaps and bounds. In fact one department increased its expenditures by 114 per cent. It is disheartening to find the government completely ignoring the Auditor General's report. In the past it has ignored reports which have been submitted by the public accounts committee and we find that year after year the same recommendations by the Auditor General appear in his reports.

It is almost axiomatic that there is an increasing waste of money on the part of government agencies and departments, that there is a continuing increase in the numbers of government employees and that there is no effective procedure for administrative control.

That being so, I submit that the government should implement some of the Auditor General's recommendations and some of the public accounts committee's recommendations. Certainly the government ought to take advice from those who are not politically implicated in its problems. We shall move from crisis to crisis as long as the government ignores the advice it receives and the storm warnings that must be evident.

We stumble from one crisis to another and each time the government says that if we do not support its program the consequences for the country will be dire. To get its own way the government has almost threatened parliament with blackmail. Much needs to be done and this party will co-operate to bring forward necessary measures. Yet somewhere along the line surely the government must show that it has a sense of responsibility.

The government must stop trying to put right something that has already happened and is in the past. In the financial world adjustments cannot be expected to take effect quickly; it takes a long time for some remedies to work. It is important for the government to use modern techniques in statistics. Here I am thinking of computers, data banks and that sort of thing. The government ought to use modern facilities to forecast the future. Certain future trends can now be predicted fairly accurately and by knowing what those trends will be the government may prevent difficulties such as we are now experiencing from reoccurring.

I wish to read from page 261 of the fourth annual review of the Economic Council of Canada, published in September, 1967. The report speaks of the waste in government and of the Parkinsonian build-up of bureaucracies as well as the lack of adequate procedures in administrative control. The report speaks of the care that must be taken to prevent overspending in government services, and it says:

> However, this has not been matched by comparable advances in the development of procedures and machinery for dealing with much larger questions: for consistent and comprehensive determination of objectives and priorities; for continuing evaluation of the impact and effectiveness of the growing range and diversity of government programs in relation to their cost; and for increased co-ordination between governments in relation to these matters.

The members of the council say in their report that it is essential for the government to plan. They suggest that four questions about government programs ought to be asked, and for the sake of completeness I shall put the four questions, found on page 263 of the report, on the record:

> 1. What are the purposes to be served by a given program of expenditures and is the given program the most effective way of serving these purposes?
> 2. Are the purposes or the anticipated results of any program inconsistent in some ways with the purposes and results from other programs, and how can such inconsistencies be eliminated?
> 3. What are the benefits in relation to the costs involved?
> 4. What are the effects on the whole economic system of different tax or expenditure changes, as these work themselves out over time under changing conditions?

It will be remembered that along these lines I asked the government to set up a committee. In December I suggested that a committee of the house might be set up but the Prime Minister suggested that it might be a committee of cabinet. I will not quarrel with that. If we are to achieve a more rational structure of government financing we must establish priorities for government spending and rationalize existing expenditures. We must plan future expenditures within the framework of these priorities and we must find an acceptable way of transferring revenue sources from one level of government to another. Also, we must reform the revenue sources.

The government's present dilemma has resulted from lack of planning. Planning should be made to serve priorities in fields such as housing, urban transportation, water supply and the disposal of domestic and industrial waste, air pollution and water and soil pollution, education and research and, to complete the list, social welfare.

What has been done in these fields? I shall describe shortly what the government has done. In the field of housing the government's attention has been totally inadequate. In urban transportation government action has been negligible. In the field of water supply and waste disposal government action has been non-existent. With regard to air pollution, so far the government has just talked. In education and research the government has made a halfhearted attempt. With regard to social welfare the best one can say is that under this government it is unplanned, ramshackle and jerry-built. We need priorities. We must have a criterion for judging priorities.

What are these priorities? To deal first with social necessities, we could ask ourselves: Is there a genuine need for this program and ought it to be done now or at a later date? Will it increase the standard of living? What social dividend might be expected? The second criterion should be: What is the cost of the program and what will be its effect on the current budget? Are the people prepared to pay increased taxes? Which level of government will finance the program? The last question is: What effect will this social program have on future budgets? Will it leave the government of a future day with its hands tied so that it can no longer be flexible when presenting a budget? This is one of the problems we face today in the present parliament. Our hands are tied. The amount of the budget which can be changed is very small indeed. All programs in connection with social welfare, education, transfer payments of any kind—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has now expired.

Progress reported.

Mr. McNulty: Mr. Speaker, before we proceed to royal assent may I say that I believe there is an understanding in the house that we will rise between 6 and 8 p.m. and postpone the private members' hour tonight.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An act to amend the Territorial Lands Act, the Land Titles Act and the Public Lands Grants Act.

An act to provide for the dissolution of Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation.

An act to amend the Defence Production Act.

An act to amend the Fish Inspection Act.

An act to amend the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act and the Criminal Code.

[Mr. Ballard.]

An act to implement a broadcasting policy for Canada, to amend the Radio Act in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential and related provisions.

An act to amend the Excise Act.

An act to amend the Excise Tax Act.

An act to incorporate Commercial Solids Pipe Line Company.

An act respecting The Bell Telephone Company of Canada.

An act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the question to be raised at ten o'clock this day is as follows: The hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale), Northern Affairs—reduction in budget for northern health services.

Pursuant to special order of the house made earlier this day the private members' hour is suspended. The house will resume its sitting at eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: Government order No. 2, house again in committee of ways and means.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Batten in the chair.

INCOME TAX ACT

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Income Tax Act to provide among other things:

1. That for the 1968 and subsequent taxation years the amount deductible by a taxpayer in respect of gifts made to a province shall not be subject to the limitation imposed by paragraph (a) of subsection (1) of section 27, and the amount deductible in a year by a taxpayer in respect of gifts made either to a province or to Canada shall include an amount in respect of such gifts made by him in the preceding year to the extent that such amount was not deductible in computing his taxable income for the preceding year.

2. That with respect to taxable income earned in 1968 and 1969, in addition to the income tax otherwise payable by a corporation under the Income Tax Act, a surtax be payable equal to 3 per cent of the amount of tax as determined under section 39 or 69 of that act, as the case may be.

3. That for the 1968 and 1969 taxation years, in addition to the income tax otherwise payable by an individual under the Income Tax Act, a surtax be payable equal to 3 per cent of the amount of the basic tax as determined under section 33 of that act in excess of $200.

4. That for the taxation years commencing after November 1968 a corporation shall during the 12 months period ending 2 months after the close of each taxation year, pay to the Receiver General of Canada

(a) on or before the last day of each of the 12 months in that period, an amount equal to one-twelfth of the tax as estimated by it at the rate for the taxation year

(i) on its estimated taxable income for the year, or

(ii) on its taxable income for the immediately preceding year,

(b) on or before the last day of the month ending 3 months after the close of each taxation year the remainder of the tax payable on its taxable income for the year at the rate for the year and that for the taxation year commencing in the period after November 1967 and before December 1968 a corporation shall during the 10 months period ending 2 months after the close of its taxation year pay to the Receiver General of Canada

(c) on or before the last day of

(i) the 2nd month,

(ii) the 4th month,

(iii) the 6th month,

(iv) the 8th month and

(v) the 10th month

in that period an amount equal to one-fifth of the tax as estimated by it at the rate for the taxation year

(vi) on its estimated taxable income for the year, or

(vii) on its taxable income for the immediately preceding year,

(d) on or before the last day of the month ending 3 months after the close of its taxation year the remainder of the tax payable for the year at the rate for the year.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. Does a resolution such as this one not call for 48 hours notice. In fact, does standing order 41 not stipulate that:

Forty-eight hours' notice shall be given of a motion for leave to present a bill, resolution or address, for the appointment of a committee or for placing a question on the order paper;

It is quite clear here.

A motion for leave to present... a resolution.

That is exactly what we are doing at the present time. However, no 48 hours notice has been given since the resolution appeared only yesterday in Votes and Proceedings and that there is still no mention of it on the orders of the day.

Besides, standing order 41A says this:

Unless notice of motion has been given under standing order 41, any member proposing to raise a question of privilege—

I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, it is standing order 42 which applies here and I quote:

A motion may, in case of urgency and pressing necessity... be made by unanimous consent of the house—

In this case, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) introduced the motion for the adoption of the resolution under standing order 41 without 48 hours notice, or without asking for the unanimous consent of the house.

Mr. Chairman, I notice that there is no mention of it yet on the order paper, or in the orders of the day. I will admit that a resolution appeared in today's Votes and Proceedings, but there was no mention of it in the orders of the day.

Item No. 2 of the orders of the day reads as follows:

House again in committee of ways and means.

And then, there is a note concerning the resolutions, and I quote:

Text of ways and means (customs tariff) resolutions appended to the notice paper of Votes and Proceedings of November 6, 1967.

But there is no mention at all of the text of the resolution, which appears in today's Votes and Proceedings. Tomorrow it will be mentioned in item No. 2 of the orders of the day under the heading: "House again in committee of ways and means". But it is not yet mentioned because 48 hours have not expired yet since notice was given that such resolution had been laid. That only makes 24 hours and it is only tomorrow that the committee could normally consider it.

Now, this 48 hour notice also applies to the committee of ways and means. I admit that for the house to resolve itself into the committee of ways and means, a motion can be introduced and be agreed to without debate, but once the committee of ways and means is set up and we are asked to discuss such a resolution, a 48 hour notice is required, under standing order 41, which specifically stipulates:

A motion for leave to present... a resolution.

That is the case here.

Then, Mr. Chairman, as less than 48 hours have elapsed since notice has been given, as no mention is made of the resolution in item 2 of orders of the day, and as the minister has not requested unanimous consent of the house, I rise on a point of order and ask that we move on to another item or that you call the Minister of Finance to order by pointing out to him that it is against the rules for him to put his motion to pass a resolution this evening, because notice of such a move was given less than 48 hours ago.

[English]

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I rise really to express the hope that someone might comment on the point raised by the hon. member for Lapointe; perhaps someone who takes the other side of the argument.

It is generally known that the acting house leader did consult with spokesmen for the other parties today as to whether there would be consent to go on with this matter tonight. I hope I am not speaking out of turn in saying that. Speaking for our party, even though we may be opposed to the legislation, we are not opposed to the house proceeding with it today in spite of the fact that notice was given only yesterday. It does seem to me we are dealing with a procedural matter concerning things which are not completely clear. There are precedents for proceeding in committee of ways and means in a manner different from that by which we proceed in respect of other matters. But still it is pretty hard to get around both the letter and the spirit of standing order 41 which does require 48 hours notice before we proceed with any proposition.

I am speaking rather tentatively, Mr. Chairman, because we do have a committee on procedure that is taking a long, hard look at all our rules and we may solve this problem in due course. I wonder whether there is any way tonight whereby the general agreement that has been reached could be proceeded with, without seeming to set a precedent that overrules the right of one hon. member to raise the point that has been raised by the hon. member for Lapointe. I confess to having some sympathy with the hon. member with regard to the strict reading of standing order 41, but I think I also know the mood of the house, which is that we would be willing to proceed tonight. I hope we can work this out.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, it is true, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has stated, that there was an understanding that we would proceed with this resolution at eight o'clock this evening. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has suggested that there is some doubt with respect to the point of order raised by the hon. member for Lapointe.

Mr. Knowles: I think I expressed the doubt the other way. I think there is some doubt about our proceeding.

Mr. MacEachen: This is what I am referring to. We take the view that under the practice at the present time it is possible for the committee of ways and means to deal now with this resolution. However, it is a matter, for the Chair to decide, and we will accept the decision of the Chair. It is obvious that unanimous consent is not forthcoming. In the absence of unanimous consent we would ask for a ruling from the Chair. If it is favourable, we will continue tonight. If it is not, we will put off the resolution until tomorrow.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the waiving of standing order 41 tonight. That is not why I have risen. Also, I have no objection to the fact that I was not notified about this agreement.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: But I think the rights of hon. members have to be observed in this house. I object to the statement of the government house leader hinting that a ruling of the Chair will decide whether or not we shall proceed tonight. The only inference I can draw from this is that the government house leader wants the Chair to rule that standing order 41 in our rule book should be ignored.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Churchill: I doubt very much whether under the circumstances that should be the case. On occasions where unanimous consent is required and that unanimous consent is not given, I see no recourse for the Chair but to abide by standing order 41.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak very briefly to the point of order. I think every member of this house would agree with the hon. member for Lapointe that this is a perfectly clear and well known rule. However, Mr. Chairman, I think there comes a time in the business of the parliament of Canada when something is more important than just the rules of the house. There is no question about it; the hon. member has a perfect right to draw attention to the rule. We all know that it exists. But I think we also know that the matter being proposed for discussion tonight is very vital to this country. The longer it is delayed, I think the worse it will be for our country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hees: As one member of the house, I ask the hon. member for Lapointe to agree to waiving this rule tonight, as a Canadian thinking more of his country than the rules of the house. I think that if he does, and we can get ahead with this debate tonight, the country will benefit and all members of the house will thank him very much indeed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a word about this point of order, seeing the member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees) associated me personally with it.

I should like to remind him that, two or three weeks ago, the government asked for the unanimous consent of the house to waive the 48-hour notice in order to discuss immediately the motion of confidence in the government. Personally, I was willing to give my consent, while the Conservative party were opposed to unanimity. I was willing to give my consent because I knew that, without it, nothing would be done on that day or the following day. Indeed, the house lost two days because of the Conservative party. It was not my fault.

Today, we are asked to waive that 24-hour notice and I refuse to give my consent, not for whims but on principle. I am opposed to any resolution or any bill to increase taxes. It is on the strength of that principle that I am opposed to them.

At times the Conservatives refuse their consent, at other times I do.

Mr. Chairman, I have as much right in the house as any individual member of the Conservative party, and I am ready to prove it.

[English]

Mr. Monteith: Don't be silly.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words about this point of order.

We have agreed to discuss this resolution immediately. It was also clearly agreed that no time limit would be tagged to the debate on this motion.

The hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) has just said that he is against waiving the 48-hour notice on principle, because he is against any tax increase.

Mr. Chairman, let us put the record straight. We are against taxes, just as much as the hon. member for Lapointe. But that debate will take place, whether it starts tomorrow or next week, and nothing will prevent the hon. member for Lapointe from making any speech he wants and the same is true for all of us about that resolution.

Therefore since that resolution is related to the estimates of the Department of Finance and is introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp), I think the hon. member for Lapointe should show a little more common sense, be a little more reasonable and allow us to proceed with the debate.

In my opinion, it is time to start this debate, since we are already discussing matters which concern the Department of Finance. For my part, I would be ready to let the hon. member for Lapointe take my place when it is my turn to speak later on.

In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, to prevent a debate on the budget speech made by the Minister of Finance and at this time would constitute a filibuster.

[English]

The Chairman: Order. I am sure the committee will realize that the point of order raised by the hon. member for Lapointe is indeed a very technical one, and in the mind of the Chairman there is some doubt as to whether he has the authority to decide on the operation of standing order 41. I would suggest to hon. members that they look at Votes and Proceedings of yesterday, and they will notice that the resolution which is now before the committee of ways and means is not on the notice paper. It is a resolution which is appended to the notice paper and is referred to here as "ways and means resolution appended".

• (8:20 p.m.)

May I refer hon. members to the precedent on September 27, 1962 when a similar situation arose. I could also refer hon. members to page 734 of May's seventeenth edition where the following is stated:

> There is a certain difficulty, peculiar to ways and means resolutions, in deciding precisely the stage at which the royal initiative in proposing a tax is signified in the house. Ways and means resolutions do not require notice and are usually moved without it. As a consequence, if notice is given, there is nothing to prevent such a resolution being moved in a form which differs from the notice.

It is the opinion of the Chair that there is nothing before the chairman but the resolution which has been appended to ways and means. It is also the opinion of the Chair that if the 48 hours notice was to be questioned, it should have been questioned at another time.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, under standing order 59 (4), I appeal from your ruling.

[English]

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and the chairman of the committee made the following report:

Mr. Speaker, the question is as follows.

In committee of ways and means, when the Minister of Finance proposed a certain resolution to amend the Income Tax Act, the hon. member for Lapointe raised a point of order to the effect that 48 hours notice should have been given in the proposed resolution. The chairman, using page 734, May's seventeenth edition, ruled that in his opinion 48 hours notice was not required in the present case, and that in his opinion the question of order should have been raised on another occasion. Whereupon, in accordance with standing order 59(4), the hon. member for Lapointe appealed the ruling to Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I should perhaps mention to hon. members that I have listened to the argument which has been submitted to the chairman of the committee. I have taken judicial notice of the arguments, and I am prepared to give a decision at the present time on the appeal from the chairman's ruling in committee.

• (8:30 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, if I may be allowed to say a word or two, there are two contradictory authorities in this case. The first one, which I think prevails, is the standing orders of the house.

Standing order No. 41 specifies very clearly:

Forty-eight hours' notice shall be given of a motion for leave to present a bill, resolution—

And so on.

Mr. Speaker, the wording of the standing order is very clear. Against that, the standing order is not denied, another rule is not quoted, but reference is made to May's Parliamentary Practice. When was it written? Maybe the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) could tell me, but it is only a citation.

[The Chairman.]

Has Sir Erskine May's treatise as much authority in this house as the standing order which was agreed to by all members of the house and agreed to unanimously many times, after being amended.

May's treatise has never been agreed to in this house; it is merely a collection of precedents.

It is true, Mr. Speaker, that in Great Britain common law is used, that precedents are created but there are also civil law proper.

On the other hand, we have here a digest of provisions accepted by the entire house. Which must prevail? The standing order which is clear and specific or May's treatise on procedure which has never been accepted as a rule in this house and which goes back to some twenty or thirty years. Which, Mr. Speaker, must prevail?

The standing orders are quite clear, definite and specific. What do we have before us? A motion of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) for the passage of a resolution. This is the measure which is submitted to us and the standing orders clearly state that a 48-hour notice is required.

Mr. Speaker, at this time, we have to consider not only the motion before us, but also the fact that we are trying to find out what authority should govern our proceedings. Is it the standing orders of the house to which we agreed to, or any other authority, such as May, Bourinot, Beauchesne or any other?

Besides, in consulting all these experts, we find they often contradict one another. When Sir Erskine May wrote his citation, at page 707, to which the Chairman referred a moment ago, was he aware of our standing order 41? Had he read our rules to write a citation such as this? Was his Guide to Parliamentary Practice still official when our rules were amended? Can May contribute anything to our own standing orders?

Naturally, Mr. Speaker, if you want other arguments, I can find any number of authorities who say that we have the right to appeal against a decision of the Speaker although the standing orders no longer allow it. Who will prevail? Who will give a ruling on a citation according to which we have the right to appeal against a decision of the Speaker, and when this can be done, whereas the standing orders have been changed to say that we no longer have the right to appeal against a decision of the Speaker?

To sum it up in two words, Mr. Speaker, the standing order is clear:

> Forty-eight hours' notice shall be given of a motion for leave to present a ... resolution.

Otherwise, the unanimous consent of the house is necessary.

All that has been opposed to this is a citation from a very old book, May's. Who will prevail? It is up to you to decide, Mr. Speaker. The standing orders, or an author from the last century?

[English]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have read enough regarding this situation to know that there is at least some grayness in this area. Therefore I do not intend to come down in any hard and fast position in what I have to say. However, I do feel that a few comments should be made before Your Honour makes your ruling as to whether or not the ruling of the chairman of the committee of ways and means should be sustained. May I say also, in order to have it as part of the record, that so far as our party is concerned we indicated our willingness to give consent for this matter to be proceeded with tonight. Our only concern therefore is whether or not the ruling we are discussing does violence to the rules of the house.

When I said that I recognize there is a gray area, I had in mind the fact that what is before us is a situation in a committee of the house, which happens to be known as the committee of ways and means. We have a general rule which says that the rules of the house apply in the committees of the house. Here I am admitting that there is some argument on the other side. We know that in standing committees that meet elsewhere we do not require 48 hours notice for motions. In other words this 48 hour rule is not always practised in committees.

But surely there is a difference, at least in spirit, between standing committees that meet elsewhere and have lots of time to deal with matters, and committees of the whole that meet right here in this same chamber and are made up of the same personnel as the house itself. Surely, Mr. Speaker, if one looks at the spirit of standing order 41 it is very clear that no resolution can be proceeded with unless there has been 48 hours notice. There is no problem about six o'clock Wednesday being sufficient for 48 hours notice up to Friday morning. There is a citation that takes care of that. This same citation which takes care of that, which is on page 159 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, reads in part:

> The publication of a proposed motion, once in the Votes and Proceedings and the next day on the order paper, is sufficient to cover two days notice under standing order 41.

In the present instance, Mr. Speaker, there is a difference from what normally happens, where notice is given one day when something appears in Votes and Proceedings, and on the order paper the next day. As I say, we have some grayness in this area because this is committee of ways and means. Surely, however, if the requirement for two full days notice were to apply anywhere it ought to apply to the imposition of a tax.

In other circumstances, we have to wait two days before we proceed with something, no matter how inconsequential. If we can proceed with the imposition of a tax without that two days notice, it does seem a bit strange. I believe, Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons this issue arises now, whereas it does not normally arise is that in normal circumstances the committee of ways and means deals with taxing resolutions that have been public knowledge for six days. Usually when a minister of finance introduces a budget, he makes a budget speech. At the end of that budget speech he tables his resolutions. There then follows a six day debate with Mr. Speaker in the chair, and at the end of that six day period we go into committee of ways and means. At that point we deal with the resolutions immediately because we have had them for six days, and we never stop to inquire whether or not the necessary notice has been achieved. I noticed that the chairman of the committee made a point of the fact that the resolution is listed, not on Votes and Proceedings, not in the notice paper, but as an appendix to the notice paper. I think this is an interesting splitting of hairs. Surely the spirit of standing order 41 is that we should have two full days notice.

Now, Mr. Speaker, precisely because I have admitted that there is some doubt on the point, precisely because of the citation that has been read from May, precisely because it is difficult for Mr. Speaker in the chair to over-rule Mr. Deputy Speaker's ruling as chairman of committee of the whole, I realize the way Your Honour may be thinking about this matter. However, I do not believe a ruling against the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) should be made without at least some strong concern being expressed about it on the floor of the house. That is what I am doing now, expressing concern that somehow or another a way is being found to get around, in the case of a tax measure, a rule that is so widely understood that my colleagues have been coming to me within the last few minutes expressing amazement that this situation has arisen at all.

• (8:40 p.m.)

With regard to the quotation from May, I would point out that a dozen or so of us had the privilege of spending a few days at Westminster two or three weeks ago. Maybe we do not agree on all of the ideas we brought back from the mother of parliaments, but I think we all do agree that the differences between their operations and ours are so great that one cannot really apply May to all of our situations here.

You look as though I am not being very helpful to you, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Grafftey: You are being very long-winded.

Mr. Knowles: The issue is a serious one, and perhaps I am not being helpful to you, sir. I know that I am throwing the problem to you. The house generally is willing to proceed with this matter tonight, but that does not get around the importance of making sure that all rulings are correct. It seems to me that concern should be expressed about finding a way to set aside the rule, standing order 41, that no measure shall be proceeded with unless the house has had 48 hours notice. I express that concern as strongly as I can.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, in June, 1956, on a Thursday afternoon at 5.15, which has become a notable period in Canada's history, I raised a point of order on the subject of whether or not the Chairman of Committees should make a ruling which was not based on precedents established by the Speaker or not founded on decisions that have been arrived at by the Speaker. I argued the point, supported strongly by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), that there was a danger in having a body of rules established in committee of the whole, because we noted that from time to time the person who presides in committee of the whole is shifted. He is not always the Deputy Speaker. My point then, and I had quite a number of references to give, was that when the Chairman of Committees has no precedent to guide him, established by the Speaker himself, the matter should be held in abeyance and the decision should be made by the Speaker rather than by the Chairman. It would avoid these embarrassing and awkward situations where a chairman is overruled by the Speaker.

I think, sir, the situation tonight is the same as it was in 1956. An issue which has not heretofore been decided by the House of Commons and established as a precedent by the Speaker, has come before the committee of the whole house, and the basis for giving the decision on it has not been established. I argue, sir, that viewpoints of this nature should not be decided by a committee chairman in committee of the whole house, if the issue can be avoided and transferrred to the Speaker, who is the authority in these matters.

In this particular instance I conclude, sir, by saying that I think it would be very inadvisable for rule 41 to be overruled on this occasion. We are stumbling into rather rapid changes in the rules of the house now. The fact that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) did not properly introduce a budget, and the fact that he had to make his tax announcement by radio and television, by a press conference last night, have led us into the quandary in which we are at the present time, but I do suggest that the rules of the house should be maintained, unless they are altered by consent of parliament as a whole.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, very briefly I would like to direct your attention to page 222 of Beauchesne, citation 268. I am sure you are already aware of what is on page 734 of May where it says that ways and means resolutions do not require notice and are usually moved without it. Perhaps citation 268 is not entirely applicable here, but it does deal with changes introduced in committee of ways and means without notice, and I think this is the crux of the point of order we are dealing with.

Part of the citation reads:

> Proposals for the variation or modification of taxation can therefore be made in the committee—

I suggest that these can be made without notice, but there are some qualifications.

> —but these proposals must be grafted upon the financial scheme submitted by the government, and must not affect the balance of ways and means voted for the service of the year. Amendments, therefore, can be proposed to substitute another tax, of equivalent amount, for that proposed by the government, as an alternative duty, the necessity of new taxation, to that extent, being already declared on behalf of the crown.

I submit that the proposal made is in keeping with the balance of ways and means that has been declared on behalf of the crown and voted on partially by the house. I suggest in this context that notice to move a resolution of this kind, or indeed an amendment in committee, is not required in committee of ways and means.

Mr. Speaker: I thank hon. members for the views they have expressed regarding the very serious point of order raised by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire). As has been stated by the Chairman, perhaps the point might have been raised before we went into committee, which would have obviated the difficulty to which the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) referred. But the situation is in fact that a decision has been rendered by the Chairman of the committee, from which an appeal has been made.

In the past I have expressed my views about this type of situation. I must say I have heard nothing which leads me to come to a conclusion other than that which has been reached by the Chairman of Committees. The suggestion made by the Chairman when he made his ruling is that no notice at all is required. I agree with this. It is not a question of whether 48 hour notice is required or 24 hour notice is required. The suggestion he made is that in the case of ways and means resolutions no notice is required. In point of fact it is not 24 hours notice that we have had until now. Procedurally there has been no notice because nothing appears on the order paper except an appendix for the convenience and information of hon. members.

It has been stated that there are no precedents. There is at least the one in 1962 where precisely this form of procedure was followed, where there was no notice put on the order paper for a ways and means resolution. The house has followed in this particular instance exactly the same procedure. There is more to the situation than the citation in May which, in spite of what the hon. member for Lapointe says, is not all that old, since the last edition, the seventeenth edition, appeared in 1965 or 1966.

I suggest to hon. members that there is obsolutely no application here of the 48 hour notice rule. An analogy can be found in committee of supply to indicate that procedurally standing order 41 does not always apply. The estimates are tabled one day and they are forthwith referred to the committee of supply. In a subsequent sitting they can be taken up in committee of supply without notice. The procedure we are following now is analogous; it is the same type of situation. This procedure has been followed before.

Since the ways and means resolutions are initiated in the committee itself and do not exist before that, no notice can be given of the resolutions. They do not exist until the Minister of Finance in committee of ways and means moves a motion and intimates to the house what the resolution will be. That being so, I fail to see how the standing order can apply, and I must therefore sustain the ruling.

And the house having resumed in committee.

The Chairman: Order, please. House again in committee of ways and means on a measure to amend the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, yesterday in committee of supply I made a fairly lengthy statement outlining our economic condition. I said at that time that we intended to introduce fiscal measures to replace the revenues that would have been provided by Bill C-193. I explained at that time why the government considers it necessary to take this course of action. I do not intend to repeat those arguments and shall be brief in explaining this resolution.

The measures proposed in this resolution are intended to produce $390 million in budgetary revenues in the 1968-69 fiscal year. This compares with $425 million expected from the tax changes in Bill C-193. However, I have also announced that there will be reductions in expenditure which will more than offset the amount of $35 million by which the revenues from these measures will fall short of those formerly proposed.

The resolution now before the committee has four paragraphs, two of which concern corporations, one of which affects individuals only and one of which will affect donations to provincial governments or provincially owned institutions, by either corporations or individuals.

Paragraph 1 proposes an amendment to remove the 10 per cent of income limitation in respect of charitable donations to a province. The Income Tax Act at present provides that individuals and corporations may deduct for income tax purposes the amounts they donate to Her Majesty in right of a province. However, donations such as donations to churches and other charitable organizations are deductible only up to a maximum of 10 per cent of income. In contrast, donations to Her Majesty in right of Canada are deductible up to the full amount of a taxpayer's income for the year. Representations have been made on behalf of certain provinces and several art galleries that the present 10 per cent limitation on donations to Her Majesty in right of a province places provincial art galleries and museums at a disadvantage in comparison with federal galleries. Since the provinces now share substantially in the income tax field and since all Canadians benefit from donations to galleries it seemed reasonable to propose this change. It is also proposed that this amendment will permit a taxpayer to carry over for deduction in the immediately following year any amount by which his donations to the federal government or a provincial government in a year exceed his income for that year.

Paragraph 2 proposes that a surtax of 3 per cent be imposed on corporations for the years 1968 and 1969. The effect of this surtax will be to raise the rate of tax on the first $35,000 of corporate taxable income from 18 per cent to 18.54 per cent and to raise the rate of tax on taxable income in excess of $35,000 from 47 per cent to 48.41 per cent. The surtax will not affect the old age security tax on corporations and it will not affect the provincial abatement or the provincial revenues from corporations.

Paragraph 3 proposes that a surtax of 3 per cent be imposed on individuals. This surtax will apply to basic tax in excess of $200. It will not affect approximately 2,400,000 taxpayers, which is about 36 per cent of the total number expected to pay individual income tax in 1968. The proposed surtax will apply without any top limit. Finally, this surtax will apply only for the taxation years 1968 and 1969.

Paragraph 4 of the resolution proposes that corporations be required to move forward by two months the period during which they pay their income tax for a year. Corporations will be required to make five payments, each of which is equal to one fifth of their estimated tax. For example, a corporation with a taxation year which coincides with the calendar year will make its first payment for 1968 in June and will make a payment equal to one fifth of its estimated tax for 1968.

I should like to break down the revenues from these proposals. The 3 per cent surtax on individuals is expected to yield in the fiscal year 1968-69, the sum of $105 million. The 3 per cent surtax on corporations will yield $45 million and the move forward of the corporation income tax payment period will yield $240 million, for a total of $390 million.

As an illustration of the effect of the surtax I might point out that for a single taxpayer with no dependants—and most single taxpayers would have no dependants—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Sharp: —the surtax will not apply to single taxpayers with incomes of less than $2,743. Taking a figure at random, a taxpayer with an income of $7,000 will pay a surtax of $25 a year. Taking a married taxpayer with no dependants, the surtax will not apply if his income is less than $3,743. A married taxpayer with no dependants but with an income of $7,000 will pay $18 a year. A married taxpayer with two children eligible for family allowances will not pay surtax if his income is less than $4,343. Such a man with an income of $7,000 a year would pay a surtax of $14 a year.

If there are questions about these resolutions, or any part of them, Mr. Chairman, I shall be happy to answer them.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Chairman, my understanding is that this is a matter of confidence.

Mr. Monteith: Don't blush, you people on the government benches.

Mr. Stanfield: It may not be important tonight, but I hope that at some time someone on the government side of the house will explain what is the difference in principle between this measure and the one we defeated on February 19.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Mr. Stanfield: I want to be brief tonight and not inflammatory. I will simply state our position so that it may be clear it is not being abandoned, not for the sake of pursuing the argument on this occasion. We continue to take the position that inflation, which is reflected in rising prices, rising interest rates and rising costs, has been contributed to very substantially by the policy of this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: I do not intend to take the committee through the history of budgets over the past few years. I do not think there is any need to do that. I simply wish to state the position and point out that the government will be held answerable on these matters at another time and perhaps in another place. My view as to the radical solution which is necessary to provide stability and confidence is well known, and I simply state this for the record tonight, not, as I say, in order to be argumentative on this point.

Since the summer of 1965, at least, the government has been talking about the danger of inflation. It was referred to in the budget of March, 1966, in the so-called mini-budget of September, 1966, the budget of June, 1967, the so-called mini-budget of November, 1967 and the budget speech of March, 1968. The problem is—and I say this simply by way of background to the discussion on the resolution now before the committee—that on each of the four occasions to which I have referred, when we were warned against inflation the minister introduced seemingly one consistently proposed remedy, namely an increase in taxation. These successive tax increases in the past couple of years have been presented as anti-inflationary but they have been more than matched by increases in government spending. Only last June the minister presented a budget involving a forecast deficit of about $740 million, with increased government spending in the order of 20 per cent. The increases in taxation which have taken place have not been anti-inflationary in effect; they have not controlled inflation. The consumer price index rose by 4.6 per cent in 1966 and by about 4.5 per cent in 1967. It is little wonder that when the government came to parliament a few weeks ago with proposals for yet another increase while, it seemed to us, failing to produce effective policies of restraint and leadership, the opposition voted against the measure and defeated it.

I think that is particularly true in view of the fact that the levelling off in the economy had already reached serious proportions. Private investment was lagging; the growth rate was sluggish—about half the rate regarded as essential by the economic council—and unemployment amounted to at least 464,000 jobless for a seasonally adjusted rate of 4.4 percent of the labour force. In addition, of course, this unemployment and the conditions I have described weigh with particular heaviness on certain sections of the country, including areas of relatively slow growth, though they are not confined to those areas. We were convinced that the 5 per cent surcharge proposed in the so-called mini-budget was unsuitable to the needs of the economy. It seemed to us that it might well have added to inflation. It would certainly have had a depressing effect on the economy resulting in an increase in unemployment and a continued lag in the growth rate.

The Minister of Finance is now proposing two new measures of particular concern to the committee. One involves proposed increases in taxation. The second proposes cuts in expenditures amounting to $75 million—I understand it is proposed to "freeze" employment in the public service. The third proposal involves the establishment of a board to review increases in prices and costs.

With regard to the third proposal, I have certainly urged for some time that the government take the initiative in encouraging restraint throughout the economy. I believe, and I have said so repeatedly, that such a program is necessary to supplement monetary and budgetary policy if we are to have reasonably full employment and reasonably stable prices.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: I hope I shall be able to support and approve the measures being taken by the Minister of Finance in this regard, but of course I shall need to know a great deal more about them than I do at the present time. I look forward with great interest to learning more details about what the Minister of Finance and the government have in mind in this connection.

As to the second matter to which I referred, involving cuts in the estimates to the extent of $75 million in a budget of around $10 billion, I simply make the comment that I do not think the people of Canada or the financial community will find this particularly impressive.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: As the Minister of Finance told us this evening, it is proposed to adopt a 3 per cent surcharge on personal incomes which is estimated to produce in the next fiscal year some $105 million in additional revenue, in addition to a 3 per cent surcharge on corporation tax which the minister has told us is estimated to produce about $45 million in the next fiscal year.

I have been studying these measures very carefully during the day in the context in which they have been put forward. In so far as they are regarded as measures related to the condition of the economy, I think we have to agree that they are objectionable on the ground that they may well be inflationary in themselves, adding to the cost of goods and adding to the pressure to increase incomes. In the second place I believe they must be regarded as objectionable in relation to the existing state of our affairs because they are bound to slow down an economy which, as I have already indicated, is growing at too slow a rate, and already involves a degree of unemployment which bears very heavily on particular areas.

I point out that the Economic Council of Canada has stated that it is necessary for our economy to expand at the rate of something better than 5 per cent per annum if we are to achieve and maintain a reasonable rate of employment and that actually the rate of growth is perhaps a little less than half that. So, clearly, these measures have undesirable effects in this regard. We must ask ourselves therefore whether these two measures, which clearly have undesirable effects that can be anticipated so far as our economy is concerned, are really necessary to restore confidence. I must say to the committee, Mr. Chairman, that I am not yet convinced they are. It is proposed to raise some $150 million by means of these measures. As I understand the situation, the government is by law bound to commence repaying the refundable corporation tax which was collected a couple of years ago not later than 36 months from the time the payment was made. As I understand it, this means that the government would have to commence these repayments not later than or earlier than May of 1969.

I have the impression that the minister had in mind beginning the making of these payments considerably earlier at a rate which would involve payments of some $105 million in the next fiscal year. I realize he has explained to the house that this does not come into his current budget, but it could affect the cash position of the government which is one of the matters of principle concerned during the coming year. It would appear to me, therefore, that within the law it would be quite proper for the government to defer any repayment of the refundable portion of this tax to which I referred until May of 1969, and that therefore it would not affect the figures at all for the next fiscal year. If this were done the difference between deferring these repayments until beyond the next fiscal year on the one hand and collecting these new taxes on the other hand would amount to about $50 million or perhaps a little less.

I think I must suggest that in a budget in the amount of $10 billion it should be possible to find that $50 million. I really think that would be the view of the people of Canada generally and I must say that that is my view. After all, the government apparently was able to find an amount at least equal to this in order to proceed with the medicare program, despite the views of a number of provinces. In the circumstances it is a little difficult to be convinced that it is really necessary that these new taxes be imposed at this time for this purpose.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: With regard to the proposition that these taxes would be applicable for two years, I really do not believe the minister has shown any justification for this. I have suggested that he really has not shown any effective justification for even one year, but certainly so far as I have been able to ascertain there is no justification for these additional taxes for a two year period. I hope I am not doing the minister an injustice when I say this, but this is the impression I have. In view of what I believe to be the obvious unfortunate effects of these particular tax increases so far as the condition of the economy is concerned, I do not think we have been shown any benefits that would offset the unfortunate effects. I think the same reasons that militated against the 5 per cent surcharge apply equally to these 3 per cent surcharges.

I have attempted to demonstrate that the government has an alternative to imposing these two surcharges which it states will raise $150 million. I suggest in all sincerity that the government has an alternative to its course of action which involves additional taxation to the Canadian people, which alternative I believe would be helpful to the Canadian people in its present situation. The Minister of Finance proposes to raise a considerably larger sum of money in the next fiscal year by insisting that the corporations speed up their rate of tax payments. As I understand it this would not increase the liabilities of a corporation, and therefore I do not consider this to be a measure that would contribute to inflation. In the government's position of apparently needing to increase confidence I do not oppose the Minister of Finance with regard to this measure. I cannot go along with him however on the increase in the form of surcharges, but in the circumstances I do not oppose the stepped up rate of corporation taxes which does not increase the liabilities of the corporations, is not inflationary, and produces a return of a quarter of a million dollars more for the Minister of Finance. I believe this substantially helps his financial position without having an adverse effect on the economy.

As I have indicated, to date I am not convinced that the benefits of the proposed surcharges offset their detrimental effects and I believe there are alternatives open to the government in this regard. I pointed out also that the policies which would induce a more rapid rate of growth in the economy would of themselves produce more revenue for the government and would therefore help the government very substantially in a financial way.

I am most anxious to see the government attack inflation vigorously. As I mentioned, I hope the measure the minister has in mind with regard to encouraging restraints throughout the economy will be pushed vigorously and will be worthy of the support of members of this house. But I do not believe a slowdown in the economy is necessary. I do not think the economy of Canada is overheated in any sense of the word.

I believe it may be possible for us to achieve a greater rate of growth accompanied by effective policies of restraint which would increase the rate of growth and produce increased revenues for the government. I have not been convinced that the proposed surtaxes are desirable, in view of the position in which the government says the country is situated. I would go along with the proposal of the policies to step up the rate of corporation tax payments.

Let me say this in closing. Because of the uncertainties that exist, as I understand them, I believe the processes of parliament in reaching a decision should not be prolonged. This is a free parliament—and of course I am speaking for myself in this regard—but I have personally no desire to increase any uncertainties in this regard. I realize that uncertainties in this regard certainly prolonged uncertainties—might very well be evil in themselves. Therefore I believe that in all quarters of the house we should state our position as forcefully and as persuasively as we are able, and then let parliament make a decision.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, at the outset I must say that we must give the Minister of Finance "A" for effort. He has proceeded to do what he has been trying to do all along. He has tried to sell a package of goods. He has taken a tip from the grocery chain. When they want to stimulate the sale of a package they change the package, wrapping the goods up in more fancy paper. I think perhaps we should take the fancy paper off to see what is inside, because I suspect the goods are essentially the same.

I am not referring specifically to this tax measure, because what the minister is trying to sell us is precisely the same as he tried to sell parliament and the country when he introduced the mini-budget last November. This whole thing goes far beyond that particular tax measure. The minister's package of goods is really his concept of how the government of Canada should control the economy, about which he has been so lugubriously eloquent since he introduced his budget.

The minister introduced to the committee certain goals of his own and of his government in this order: full employment, stability of prices, and equity. These are noble goals, They almost rival the liberté, égalité and fraternité of the French régime—if not "the life liberty and pursuit of happiness" of our American friends. The minister then talks about achieving these goals in a remarkable way. To achieve full employment, which is the first of his goals, he produces a policy deliberately planned to increase unemployment. Mind you, he has couched this in more euphemistic terms by saying he is allowing a certain amount of slack to develop in the economy. To achieve the goal of equity he again planned deliberately to perpetuate inequity in the taxation system, about which the government was warned so eloquently by the Carter commission. He is proposing to perpetuate this by rejecting out of hand the various recommendations of the commission which were designed to eliminate the gross inequities in our taxation system to abolish the special privileges for certain types of organizations, oil companies, insurance companies and mining companies, to name a few.

The commission suggested also that we should impose a fair share of the tax on those who make a killing on the stock market and those who evade taxation via the expense account route. The minister has dismissed all this, in spite of the fact that today he announced as one of his goals the establishment of equity. I am not in the habit of rushing to the defence of corporations, but in all fairness I must point out the inequity of the minister's proposals in respect of corporations. He intends to impose a 3 per cent surtax on corporation income tax on companies which do not have these special privileges about which the Carter commission complained. These companies are going to pay proportionately less in taxes than some corporations engaged in general industrial production.

Once again our government is proceeding to sacrifice secondary industry in Canada to primary industries engaged in the export of raw materials. The minister tells us he plans to control prices to achieve stability. He proposes as one of his three goals the establishment of a review board. We still have to find out what that review board is going to do. For a long time we have suggested the establishment of a prices review board, but I am not at all sure the sort of board the minister has in mind will be effective. I am disturbed by the emphasis the minister has placed on control of wages, because he then casually suggested control of other costs and income. I suggest that if you are going to control wages, you must be prepared to control profits. I, for one, doubt whether this is feasible. I am not a businessman but my businessmen friends tell me there are hundreds of ways by which the real profits of a corporation can be concealed. I imagine that if the minister is going to place any reliance on that sort of proposition he will have wage controls and nothing else.

The only cost factor susceptible to control is prices. We have urged the establishment of a prices review board to concentrate solely on prices. We have also urged direct control on prices of those commodities, the costs of which enter into all other costs. This involves in the main corporations which are engaged in massive operations in resource industries. They are extremely powerful corporations and they face extremely powerful trade unions. Quite some time ago I suggested that there are certain areas in the economy where management and labour almost enter into collusion to exact a contribution from the general population. I have suggested before that it is in these areas the government should have the courage to establish price controls, and then permit labour and capital to fight the battle as to the division of the proceeds. After all, that is why we have trade unions.

I am sure we will be told that the federal government lacks the constitutional power to control prices. It may be that this is correct, but I have difficulty in believing that any provincial government would dare to refuse to co-operate with the federal government in measures to control prices. As a matter of fact, I noticed the other day that the Prime Minister of Ontario suggested that he was prepared to co-operate with the federal government in any attempt it might make to control prices. It seems to me that the constitutional angle is not a very valid point to be used against the proposition of controlling these areas where prices are administered prices, free from competition.

This brings me to the other part of the minister's package of goods, his concept of suitable policy to direct the Canadian economy. He has been full of dark warnings about the position of the Canadian dollar, and if it were not such a ludicrously inappropriate role for him, I would suggest that he has been playing the part of Dickens' Fat Boy of Peckham, and deliberately making our flesh creep with his cryptic comments about the dark international forces, with designs on the Canadian dollar. And of course we have had his mysterious cloak and dagger trips to Washington.

Indeed, I cannot help but wonder whether some of the minister's antics have not added to a very measurable degree to the uncertainty with regard to the Canadian dollar, because I have noted that his reassurances about the state of the Canadian economy and the Canadian dollar always come after the grim forebodings he presents about the dangers to our dollar.

I imagine that there have been, and are now, pressures on the Canadian dollar, if only as side effects of pressures on the United States dollar. One may suspect—in fact, I more than suspect—that there are speculators both within and without Canada who are prepared to be involved in exchange operations in the hope of a devaluation of the Canadian dollar which will hand them a handsome profit, such as those people who speculated on the British pound before devaluation and made a very handsome packet when the pound was finally devalued.

This may be so and there may be others who quite logically and normally have decided that these pressures, the statements of the Minister of Finance and his assertions on the air, together with the defeat of his government the other day on that taxation bill, have added greatly to the uncertainty of the fate of the Canadian dollar. There may have been people who have been listening to him and have decided that it is safer to take their money out of Canada. I do not know whether any of these things have happened or to what degree they have happened. Certainly the Bank of Canada professes not to know either, and not to know the precise causes of the pressures on our dollar.

I have wondered about this dollar crisis, if it exists—and it probably does—and whether it is anything more than part and parcel of the results of the misguided monetary policies of this government which in turn have led to misguided and disastrous fiscal policies. The minister tells us that these steps have been taken to restore confidence in the Canadian dollar. He proposes to restore it by means of a rather ineffectual tax measure, I suggest, because when he first introduced his mini-budget last fall my chief criticism was that it was hardly worth discussing because it would have a minimal effect on the economy. However, the minister is going to rely on these measures to establish confidence in the Canadian dollar.

I hesitate to think that the Minister of Finance is so unsophisticated that he really thinks the stability of the Canadian dollar or the currency of any country can rest on anything whatever except the level of productivity in that country. This is the main yardstick of the stability of any currency.

The minister seems to have an old fashioned idea of what produces confidence in a nation's currency, and places his faith in a monetary bulwark in the form of exchange reserves. The minister should be aware that in the final analysis, the currency of any country is based upon the productive capacity of that country, which is the reason that even though the United States dollar is under heavy pressure today and they have a very severe drain on gold, no one really doubts the stability of the currency of the most productive country in the world. We know that when the chips are down the United States dollar will still be the premium currency in the world, because it is backed by the most productive economy in the world.

I think the minister has been putting the cart before the horse, or perhaps one may say he has been clutching at the shadow and letting the substance go. If we have rising levels of production, our currency will be sound. But if on the other hand we have declining production and rising unemployment, no matter how many technical steps the minister may take with regard to the manipulation of exchange reserves there will be lack of confidence in the Canadian dollar. The longer that condition remains, the weaker the Canadian dollar will become and our exchange reserves, if our economy is allowed to continue contracting and is indeed encouraged to contract under the policies of this government, will eventually melt away in a vain endeavour to support the dollar at what will become an unrealistic pegged rate of exchange.

It seems to me that the minister is confusing cause and effect. A strong dollar cannot be artificially maintained, and if it could be artificially maintained it would not give us a strong and buoyant economy. On the other hand, a buoyant and expanding economy will provide us with a strong dollar in international exchange, if that is what we want.

Let me return to the minister's three stated objectives—stable prices, full employment and equity. These three express in capsule form the idea of a rich and developing economy supporting an enlightened and progressive society dedicated to the proposition of at least a reasonable measure of equity. I am sure no one will quarrel with those objectives, but I doubt whether even the Minister of Finance has the temerity to suggest that he has achieved these goals or is on the way to achieving them.

I am quite sure the minister seriously wishes he were achieving these goals. We have to examine the obstacles which continually frustrate him. How does one go about expanding the economy? I think even the minister will agree that you do not expand it by contracting it. You do not expand it by curtailing public expenditures and creating more unemployment. You do not expand it by allowing prices to climb and interest rates to soar. So what do you do? I suggest that you put yourself in a position whereby you can inject more fuel into the economic boiler.

I was interested to hear the Leader of the Opposition say a few minutes ago that he did not believe our economy was overheated. I could not quite correlate this with his demands for more reductions in public expenditure. If he believes the economy is not overheated, I am sure he would agree with the proposition I am putting to the minister and to the house: you put yourself in a position to inject more fuel into the economic boiler, to encourage and stimulate investment, to expand the money supply to finance increasing investment in the production of goods and services.

I doubt whether even the Minister of Finance, with his odd ideas, would contest that statement. This afternoon in the house he gave us a very strange and mysterious report which indicates that he still does not realize he is dealing with shadow and not with substance. He presented to us the results of agreements made with the governments of the United States, West Germany and Italy. It was a rather mysterious statement. The minister tells us that in Washington the Secretary of the Treasury and himself have been having consultations concerning the application to Canada of the United States balance of payments measures. The effect of this exchange, the minister assures us, is that Canada is now completely exempted from the operation of the United States balance of payments program affecting the outflows of capital from the United States. The minister said in his statement:

> I refer specifically to the measures affecting direct investment that are administered by the department of commerce and to the programs administered by the federal reserve system. Our exemption from the interest equalization tax on new issues remains intact.

I emphasize these words:

> Freedom from these major United States programs achieves a goal towards which we have been working for a long time.

This is really the pay-off.

> Moreover, it does so without in any way impairing our independence of action.

Perhaps that is technically correct, because under the aegis of this government we have lost all our independence of action, so we can hardly be further impaired in this respect.

• (9:40 p.m.)

This seems to me another case of the obsession this government has with the necessity for a continual inflow of capital from outside to finance the expansion of the Canadian economy. I submit to you, Mr. Chairman, and suggest to the Minister of Finance, that the great victory he has achieved in Washington is in essence no victory at all, because the report of the Bank of Canada on the Canadian balance of international payments, which shows the capital movements in the first three quarters of 1967, indicates that there is literally no measurable or important inflow of funds from the United States that is not balanced by an outflow. To this area of our problem the minister turns a blind eye. Apparently he considers, as I told him once before, that he has done his duty if he pleads with the United States authorities to keep the tap turned on, while at the same time he leaves the plug out of the bath at the other end. This is another sample of that type of action.

The minister has come back from Washington and told us he has scored a great victory, he has cleared a way for massive inflows of capital to Canada. The truth is that there are massive outflows of capital from Canada at the present time, and they have been going on long before the guide lines were established by the United States President. I am sure the Minister of Finance is aware of the fact that indeed many corporations were transferring more of their retained earnings than the guide lines called for. Why are they doing it? I suggest they are not doing it out of their patriotic duty as American citizens, because I have not noticed that American capitalists, any more than Canadian capitalists, are particularly prone to have their actions dictated by patriotism. I suggest they have decided that Canada is no longer a very important or desirable field for investment. Indeed we can understand why, because the bulk of this inflow of capital has gone into the resource industries, which are so plugged with overinvestment that there is little field for further expansion.

I have only to mention the oil industry in Alberta and the pulp and paper industry in my own province, both of which suffer, not from underinvestment but from overinvestment, with the result that their costs are unnecessarily high. However, it is part of the conventional wisdom of this government that Canada can only survive and expand if we have a continuing inflow of capital from abroad, and largely from the United States. So long as we have that obsession, and the further obsession that all the policies of the Canadian government must be directed to maintaining the pegged rate of the Canadian dollar, we are doomed to a continual contraction of our economy and to a further squeeze on the Canadian dollar.

I do not know who the minister's advisers are, and I shudder to think who some of them may be, but I would suggest to the minister that he consult some of the best and most sophisticated economic minds in this country with regard to the question of the pegged exchange rate and the outflow of capital from Canada, because Canada is no longer an appealing investment area. As I have urged him again and again, I urge him now that instead of relying on these ineffectual taxation measures to control prices, he institute a real prices review board to bring publicity over most of the range of prices, and in the specific area of administered prices have the courage to co-operate with the provinces and establish price control in these areas; that he negotiate with the International Monetary Fund to allow us to escape from the straitjacket of the fixed exchange rate and return to the floating exchange rate; and that he impose exchange controls to control the outflow of capital from this country, which at the present time is proceeding at the rate of a haemorrhage.

If the minister does this, he will place himself in a position where it will be possible for him to expand the Canadian economy, to cause unemployment to decline and production to rise, and to ensure the stability of the Canadian dollar on a firm foundation of the productive capacities of the country, a country which probably has the largest per capita store of natural wealth of any country in the world. Canada will be able to expand, but we will not be able to expand if we follow the policies which the minister suggested this afternoon.

I was very interested by the statement he made today, that—

> —the Canadian government on its side has felt that these steps by the United States should be matched by further reciprocal helpful steps on the Canadian side.

I am in favour of Canada helping her friends, but I hope no one has any illusion as to how we are helping them, and under what difficulty we are doing so, by the measures that the minister proposed today. Obviously through the measures the minister proposed we are helping them to overcome their internal difficulties, which have been created by the disastrous war in southeast Asia. There can be no question about that.

I should also like to find out from the minister how he proposes to carry out his undertaking, as stated this afternoon, that it is the Canadian government's intention—> —to take any steps necessary to ensure that the exemption from the United States program does not result in Canada being used as a "pass-through" by which the purpose of the United States balance of payments program is frustrated.

The minister told me that he has many ways of doing this short of foreign exchange controls, and that some of them would be very successful. This is not what I hear from the banking fraternity. What I hear from them is that they thumb their noses at the Minister of Finance and propose to go on doing so. Exhortation will not make shrewd businessmen divest themselves of a valuable business opportunity.

In addition to that, we are going to help the United States in another curious way. We are going to invest our entire holding of United States dollars, apart from the necessary working balances, in United States government securities which do not constitute a liquid claim on the United States. What does this mean? It means that we are going to help the Americans with their balance of payment program by funnelling back to the United States American dollars which we earn either through exports or through various operations, and placing them in United States government securities which do not constitute a liquid claim on the United States, which will be neutralized, and which will be non-negotiable securities for an undisclosed fixed term.

In return for that, the United States, plus the central banks of Germany and Italy, will provide us with $900 million United States as a stand-by credit. Presumably when our transfer of funds to government securities in the United States reaches a sufficiently high level, we shall draw on this $900 million, and the process will continue indefinitely because this government will not take the fiscal steps that could be taken to get us out of this tangle.

I want to say right now that I think it is high time, in the interest of our own safety as a national entity, that we start to disengage ourselves from the United States in as many areas as we can. We should be establishing relationships with other parts of the world, not doing as the minister did the other day when he dashed off to Washington and tied us ever more firmly to the United States economy, which today is of course under the very heavy burden of waging war in southeast Asia.

So the minister has again tried to sell us a bill of goods which consists of contracting the Canadian economy in order to expand it; creating unemployment in order to achieve full employment; and permitting prices to rise in order to achieve price stability. During the whole process, our economy will continue to contract. Oddly enough, the minister is defeating his own purpose, which he states constantly, of achieving sufficient revenues for the Canadian government's operations, because I think it does not take a very profound economic insight to realize that a contracting economy provides less revenue for the government, and an expanding economy provides more revenue for the government. I do not imagine for a moment that the minister can possibly move from his position because, as I have told him many times, he is a doctrinaire. But I do suggest to him that if he had more concern for the welfare of the Canadian economy and less concern for aiding our United States friends in their self-inflicted difficulties, then we would have more confidence in him in Canada.

• (9:50 p.m.)

He speaks of having to get the confidence, not of the Canadian people but of the financial community. Now, the financial community are the very people who are producing the problems for the Canadian dollar. He knows that as well as anybody else, but for some reason or another he is trying to placate those interests. They are not awfully bright in the final analysis because the pressures they are bringing to bear on the government—and I am sure it is their pressures which force this government to their self-defeating policies —will eventually defeat business. In the long run, I would hope either this minister or some other minister will have the courage to free the Canadian economy from the chains that have been wrapped around it, and enable it to expand in proportion to our capacity which, to date, has not nearly been reached.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, may I say, first of all, that not only am I surprised but that I am stupefied at hearing the statement just made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp).

I think that we are taking part tonight in the beginning of the debate on the late Bill No. C-193. Frankly, we thought that rejection of this bill would have given a lesson to the government, and especially to the Minister of Finance. But we are sure now that the lesson did not serve at all. Perhaps it served the minister, because I regard him as a very intelligent man. But what is an intelligent man worth if his hands are tied? That is how I see the minister tonight. He is a prisoner of great financial interests, and we can see that he is still under their control. He comes back before us to tax people and yet we pointed out to him recently other means to get these $150 million.

One hundred and fifty million dollars is not very much. If he had wanted to make a small effort—something he does quite often for foreign countries and England— it would have been easy for him to find that amount without bothering the workers who—and we keep repeating it—cannot pay more now. The minister can rest assured that we will find that measure.

Since we have come here, we have fought against tax increases because we are convinced that taxation will not solve our problems.

I was more than surprised to hear the leader of the New Democratic party (Mr. Douglas) say that levying taxes was the main duty of the government. Mr. Chairman, I assure you that we will not follow the economists of the New Democratic party, nor those of the Liberals, as long as their fiscal policy is based on the principle of taxation.

We are here to protect Canadian citizens. We are here to administer, to make the Canadian economy serve the human beings, provide for the welfare of the Canadian citizen, and we will fight to the bitter end to have it reach its goal. We know, and we have figures to prove it, that Canada can reach that objective, that it has the necessary means to establish an economy where all its citizens will have a modicum of security and freedom.

At the present time, our governments are not free. We are increasingly aware of it, especially when we force it to show its hand, as we did by our vote on February 19 last. This vote gave us the opportunity to show the people how public affairs were administered. It has enabled us to show Canadians that the federal government could commit illegal acts, the main one being to arrogate for itself the right to collect taxes even before legislation was passed by parliament.

If we went back over our parliamentary history, we would find many other cases of illegality. That is why by our vote of February 19 last, we have sought to force the government to show its hand.

Mr. Chairman, since I will not have enough time to conclude my remarks may I call it ten o'clock?

[English]

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. It being ten o'clock, shall I rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Starr: Does the government house leader want to tell us what we will take up tomorrow?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will continue with the tax resolution.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS—REDUCTION IN BUDGET FOR NORTHERN HEALTH SERVICES

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, earlier this evening we were amazed by the meanderings and confusion of the government's fiscal and economic policies, and I wish to seize this opportunity to bring to the attention of the house something that will add to the general feeling of confusion already expressed. This is a report taken from a recent issue of News of the North, stating that there has been a drastic cutback in the finances provided for the care of the residents of northern Canada, particularly in the Northwest Territories, which reduction will principally effect the Indians and Eskimos in that part of Canada.

The report was based on information supplied by Dr. Gordon Butler, chief of the northern health services division, outlining how deep the slashes were that were made. Dr. Butler indicated that he was a quarter of a million dollars short in the funds required even to pay salaries, and the austerity measures of the federal government would make it impossible for his department to maintain present health services, and still less could it increase the services.

This report was picked up by the Winnipeg Free Press which dealt with it in this fashion in an editorial on March 2:

> There have been, so far, no demonstrations against the recent cuts in the money available to the field officers of the northern health service of the Department of National Health and Welfare. Who's to miss that $104,000 C.B.C. employees and bad management spent on unused rooms for Expo? The northern health service officers. But of course they would merely handle the money to provide health services for Indians and Eskimos of the north country. And their budget has just been cut.

I think this is the place and the time to bring attention to this problem. We are all aware that there is a real health problem in the territories. As I said earlier today during the question period, the infant mortality rate is astronomically high, being four times the rate in other parts of Canada. It is even greater than the rate in some of the so-called underdeveloped countries of the world. The anticipated life span of our Eskimo population is 20.9 years compared with the average life span of 35 years in countries like India.

At a time when the government is boasting of a breakthrough in medicare and universal health care for all the people of Canada, I think we should take pause because obviously our priorities are all askew. It is little wonder that the people of Canada have decreasing confidence in a government which, in such an inexplicable way, places emphasis on false priorities.

My time is limited, but I should like to ask whoever will be speaking for the government tonight if the tragic gap in health care that is represented by this misplaced economy on the part of the government will be made good by the provision of medicare to the Yukon and Northwest Territories. If not, I think the government deserves censure from this house and from the people of Canada.

Mrs. Margaret Rideout (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, while replying to the remarks of the hon. gentleman I should like to put a few facts on the record. There are 28 treatment institutions strategically located throughout the Northwest Territories. All will continue to be operated throughout the coming year and a number of health centres, health stations and dispensers will also continue to provide services. After the recent accelerated expansion of medical and public health services, including the introduction of total hospital insurance coverage and the development of an exclusively northern region of medical services, some levelling off in the rate of expansion now seems reasonable, especially since the major causes of the high rates of disease and death are not related either to lack of public health effort or to lack of treatment facilities.

Sixty per cent of the population of the Northwest Territories is comprised of Indians and Eskimos whose mode of living belongs to a more primitive age than that of the populations of the southern provinces. The high birth rates and the high proportion of young people in the population increases problems of child care in the homes. Poverty, the low level of socio-economic development, lack of education in the older age groups, the severe climate, inadequate housing and overcrowding of the limited space a family can afford to heat, all play a significant role as causes of pneumonia, accidents and diseases of infancy.

During the year 1966 the chief causes of death in the Northwest Territories were pneumonia, 22.3 per cent, injuries and violence, 18.9 per cent and malformations and diseases associated with infancy, 17.9 per cent. During the past few years great strides have been made toward the improvement of living conditions. Whole settlements have been rebuilt. Special attention has been paid to public health engineering problems affecting the provision of potable water at all seasons, and safe, sanitary disposal of sewage.

In 1956 the infant mortality rate for Eskimos was 240 per 1,000 live births. By 1966 this had fallen to 100, for Eskimos. For all groups the infant mortality rate was 140 in 1956 and by 1966 it had fallen to below 80. Measures such as a full program of immunization and health education by public health nurses and trained community health workers are carried on in greater intensity in northern communities than in any other part of Canada. Improved diagnostic programs are turning up more cases of tuberculosis; but this is considered to be the result of increased effectiveness rather than lack of good health practices. Improved housing and nutrition will complement the role of the health department.

In the current year a total of $7,880,000 is being directed to northern health services. This is an increase of 14 per cent over the corresponding sum of $6,920,000 for the year 1966-67. Such a rate of growth repeated year after year would be abnormal and the intention for the year 1968-69 is to hold the line at essentially the current year's level and allocate $7,900,000 to northern health services.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.10 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, March 8, 1968

The house met at 11 a.m.

CRIMINAL CODE

AVAILABILITY TO ACCUSED OF RESULTS OF INVESTIGATION

Mr. M. L. Klein (Cartier) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-205, to amend the Criminal Code (right to inspect).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is twofold; first, that all the facts and evidence of a criminal investigation of an accused prior and subsequent to his arrest be made available to him before trial and that such investigation be carried out for the crown and for the defence; second, that any crown attorney or any officer of the crown be deemed guilty of a criminal offence who knowingly withholds evidence which could contribute to the proof of innocence of an accused.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AMENDMENT TO ELIMINATE ATTEMPTED SUICIDE AS OFFENCE

Mr. M. L. Klein (Cartier) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-206, to amend the Criminal Code (attempted suicide).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is to eliminate a criminal offence the commission of which can only be committed by a sick person. The purpose of this bill is to eliminate the prosecution of a person who attempts suicide.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

PROCEDURE RESPECTING ESTABLISHMENT OF PRICES REVIEW BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the statement of the Prime Minister in the house yesterday that the government had not yet decided whether legislation would be required to establish the review board the government has in mind in relation to restraining inflation, can the Minister of Finance tell the house when we might expect to learn the decision of the government in this regard, and when we might expect to receive fuller information about the manner in which the proposed board will function and its precise terms of reference?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I ought to answer that question because I will be making a statement on Monday about the proposed board, its nature and how it is to be set up. It is not yet possible to say whether legislation will be required, but the information I have received up to the present indicates that it could be done without legislation. However, I will be making a full statement on Monday.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Will his statement be made on television or in the house?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—INQUIRY AS TO CANADIAN EFFORTS TO END WAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the statement by the Minister of Finance last night emphasizing what many of us have believed for a long time, that the present international monetary disturbances are due mainly to the war in Viet Nam, what new initiative is the government planning to take or to promote in order that this disastrous war may be brought to an end?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think any government, apart from those directly concerned with this war, has taken more initiatives and attempted to do more to bring this tragic war to an end than the Canadian government. We will continue to do what we can.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Lewis: I have a supplementary question. In view of the fact that the offers of Hanoi have been refused by Washington, and in view of the fact that the chances of ending the bombing of North Viet Nam appear to be smaller than ever, does the government not consider it necessary now to take some initiative at the Security Council to ensure that the first step is taken?

Mr. Pearson: The hon. gentleman speaks about the offers of Hanoi being refused. Perhaps it would be fair to add that the offers to Hanoi to negotiate this matter have been refused more often than the offers from them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a question arising out of the reply given by the Prime Minister a few moments ago—with which, I may say, I am in agreement—as to Hanoi's rejection of the United States initiatives which would have led to the negotiation table. Would the Prime Minister consider, as the Canadian government has taken its stand in favour of the cessation of bombing by the United States, introducing a resolution in this house supporting the government's stand so it would be crystal clear, so far as Canada is concerned, that Canadians as a whole believe with U Thant that a cessation of bombing would lead to the negotiation table and bring about an end to the tragic danger of a third world war?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, of course I would be very glad to consider the suggestion of the right hon. gentleman. I would only point out, as my first reaction, that any resolution of that kind to be effective and fair might have to deal with more matters than the actual cessation of bombing. But I would be glad to consider the matter.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If the Prime Minister would draft such a resolution—and it should be a joint resolution of the kind he suggests —I think the house generally would give support to it, and would thereby strengthen the position in this regard of the Canadian government.

ALLEGED DISTRIBUTION FROM CANADA OF PAMPHLETS ADVOCATING ACTS OF VIOLENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I believe this question should be directed to the Solicitor General. I should like to ask whether his department has had an opportunity to investigate the allegations that pamphlets advocating the fire bombing of United States draft offices, as well as other acts of violence, originated in Canada and were postmarked Toronto.

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, a copy of this pamphlet has been forwarded to the Department of Justice for a legal opinion. In the meantime the investigation is continuing.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Some time ago I asked the Solicitor General whether an investigation was under way to establish whether persons in Canada were advocating the breaking of either Canadian or United States laws in connection with advice to draft dodgers. Is the minister in a position now to say whether that investigation is complete and whether any evidence of urging the breaking of Canadian or United States laws has been established?

Mr. Pennell: A summary examination of the material referred to by the hon. member did not disclose commission of a criminal offence. However, officials of the Department of Justice are studying it further for a more considered opinion.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO NEW BOOK OF ESTIMATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): I should like to address my question to the President of the Treasury Board. It arises out of an answer given yesterday when I inquired about the book of estimates. The minister said the printing of new estimates would cost $50,000, whereas the existing estimates might be simply revised. I am wondering if this amount was correct, or whether there was an error.

Hon. E. J. Benson (President of the Treasury Board): I thank the hon. member for asking this question. As I informed him yesterday right after the question period, the correct amount should be $15,000 rather than $50,000. I apologize to the house for giving the wrong figure.

Mr. Hales: May I ask a supplementary question. May I ask the minister now when he proposes to table the revised estimates, and will there be a completely new book or will it simply be a revision?

Mr. Benson: We have not decided as yet whether there will be a completely new book or simply adjustments to the estimate figures. As to tabling, I would say it will take several weeks for a reprinting of any kind.

POSSIBLE CONDITIONS ATTACHED TO ADDITIONAL CREDITS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): My question is for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday in making his announcement with regard to the extension of additional dollar credits by Italy, Germany and the Bank of International Settlements, the minister did not indicate whether there were any conditions attached to this particular facility being extended to Canada as there were conditions attached to the assistance from the United States. Were there any particular conditions with regard to this extension of credits yesterday?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker. There were two kinds of stand-by credits made available, those between the central banks of the European countries, the Bank of International Settlements and the Bank of Canada, and no conditions were attached. The loan which is being negotiated with the Export-Import Bank of the United States of course has the ordinary conditions that attach to any loan from that institution, but no conditions requiring any change in Canadian policy.

REFUSAL BY BANKS TO MAKE FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): My question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Some chartered banks have now changed their lending policy to farmers and are not prepared to grant farm improvement loans, giving as a reason that the interest rate is too low. Has the minister any comment to make on this subject?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the farm improvement loan program is under review with a view to making more money available to farmers because of the present difficulties as a result of the 5 per cent interest rate under the farm improvement loan program. As soon as any changes that we deem appropriate are conceived, they will be presented to the house or otherwise in the normal and proper manner.

Mr. Grafftey: Set up a task force. Call in the experts.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): A supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. Is it the intention of the government to subsidize any increase in interest rates on farm improvement loans that may be provided under government legislation?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, there is no such intention.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPORTED ESTABLISHMENT OF FRENCH SPEAKING UNITS AND OTTAWA MESS FOR SENIOR OFFICERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the promulgation of the armed forces unification act and the coming into effect on February 1 of this year of the Q.R.O. changes, as well as certain orders in council, will the minister bring to a halt suggested policies to establish new armed forces organizations, French speaking only, and the establishment of a mess and guest house in Ottawa available only to those of the rank of brigadier and higher?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think it is unfair to say we ever had any plan to establish units that were exclusively French speaking. We never had that in mind. So far as the senior officers' mess is concerned—

Mr. Winch: And guest house.

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): I don't know what the hon. member is talking about when he refers to a guest house. There is a mess for which senior officers pay the expenses.

GRAIN

INQUIRY AS TO FINAL PAYMENTS FOR 1966-67 CROPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): My question is directed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I wonder if the minister will consider making the announcement of the final payments for wheat, oats and barley soon?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I will endeavour to do that early next week.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RHODESIA—REFUSAL TO COMPLY WITH COMMUTATION OF DEATH PENALTY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, in view of the question I put to the Prime Minister yesterday concerning Rhodesia and the reply I received, I was wondering if the Prime Minister is now in a position to give us a little more information on the nature of the discussions with the British government.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. Those discussions are continuing, and I cannot report on them at the moment. However, I will do so as soon as possible.

SPORTS

CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN FORTHCOMING OLYMPIC GAMES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, although the Minister of National Health and Welfare alluded to this subject a few days ago, for sake of clarity I should like to ask him whether the government's policy of assistance to those organizations sponsoring our athletes at the summer games in Mexico has been affected by South Africa's apartheid policy.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, policy in connection with international competitions is determined basically by the sports associations in Canada. The Department of National Health and Welfare has not taken the attitude that we ought to direct the policy of sporting organizations and associations in Canada.

Mr. Grafftey: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can I assume then that the usual government assistance to our athletes will be given this year.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, advice on grants to the associations in Canada comes from the national advisory council on fitness and amateur sport. The council has been meeting this week in Ottawa and has undoubtedly considered this particular point, and will be expressing its views. In the meantime I think the situation has to some extent been assisted by the decision of the I.O.C. to reconsider the matter.

[Mr. Winters.]

INCOME TAX

REPORTED STATEMENT RESPECTING CONCESSIONS TO PETROLEUM AND MINING INDUSTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Prime Minister. In view of the statement of the Minister of Finance in connection with the United States guide lines and their effect on Canada, and in view of the importance of the productivity in this country to stabilize the economy, was the Minister of Justice speaking for the government when he said that he believed the special income tax concessions to the petroleum and mining industries should be abolished?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge that the Minister of Justice made any such statement. I do not think he has, either.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice. Was that statement made by him, and is that his position in this regard?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FINANCE

EFFECT OF AGREEMENT WITH U.S. ON CANADIAN GOLD RESERVE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Has the gold portion of Canada's reserves been made subject to the new agreement with the United States, in that they will be transferred to non-negotiable United States securities?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker.

TRADE

STEEL—STATEMENT RESPECTING APPLICATION OF DUMPING DUTY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Joseph Macaluso (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the fact that the minister's department is conducting investigations into dumping in Canada by foreign steel producers, what has been the result of such investigations?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, after investigation, some cases of dumping have been brought to light. In such cases we have taken anti-dumping measures and collected the charges provided for in the act and, as a result, prices have gone up for those people who were trying to dump steel in Canada.

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT BY CHINA OF CANADIAN OFFICE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Ou'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of recent indications by the government of an awareness of China, has a decision been reached to allow China to set up a trade office in Canada?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, that matter has not arisen recently.

EXPO '67

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF REVENUES AND DEFICIT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the announcement that Expo contributed some $450 million to Canada's balance of payments, when will the minister be in a position to give parliament a complete financial report on the revenues accruing from Expo as well as the cost, including the final deficit?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has a question on the order paper at the moment regarding this matter. An answer is in course of preparation. It has been circulated to other departments concerned. I hope to be able to table the answer next week.

SHIPPING

INQUIRY AS TO SECURITY MEASURES IN INTERNAL WATERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to put a question, but before, I should like to call your attention to the fact that the hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean has been trying to be recognized since the beginning of the question period, but has been unable to catch your eye.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean.

Mr. Alcide Simard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I gave notice of the question I want to put to the hon. Minister of Transport.

Since there seems to be a conflict of jurisdictions over water security with regard to Lake St. John in the province of Quebec, can the hon. minister tell us which of the federal or provincial governments is responsible for water security on that inland sea?

Mr. Speaker: I believe that question is out of order because it entails interpreting the rules.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question?

Can the hon. minister look into the matter with the view to establishing who is responsible for security on Lake St. John and then report to the house?

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

REQUEST OF AUDITOR GENERAL FOR ADDITIONAL PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, on February 29 I directed a question to the Acting Prime Minister, in order to know whether measures would be taken so as to authorize the Auditor General of Canada himself to hire the personnel he needs for the auditing of government accounts.

Would the right hon. Prime Minister be prepared to give an answer today, and could he also tell us to what extent the measures announced by the Minister of Finance will affect that request of the Auditor General of Canada?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I am afraid I am not able to answer that question today, Mr. Speaker. I shall do my best to get an answer for Monday.

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD

DISPOSITION OF RECOMMENDATION RESPECTING HIGHWAY CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister who reports to the house for the Atlantic Development Board. Will the minister advise when he will be in a position to approve the recommendation of the Atlantic Development Board for the spending of some $20 million in the Atlantic provinces for highway construction, which matter has been awaiting signature for quite a period of time?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Mr. Speaker; no submissions are awaiting my signature in connection with this matter.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): May I ask the minister if his signature is being withheld as a result of the dispute between Premier Robichaud of New Brunswick and himself?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PUBLIC SERVICE

SALARIES OF NURSES IN HALIFAX-DARTMOUTH AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): My question is addressed to the President of the Treasury Board, Mr. Speaker. Can he now answer the question I put to him twice previously about nurses' salaries in the public service?

Hon. E. J. Benson (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Treasury Board at its meeting yesterday approved an increase in nurses' salaries in the Public Service of Canada.

Mr. Forrestall: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the President of the Treasury Board indicate whether this salary raise for our nurses in the public service will mean that they are no longer the lowest paid nurses in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister say whether nurses in the northern health services are to be included in the salary increase?

Mr. Benson: Yes, they will, Mr. Speaker. The raise is for nurses employed in the public service all across Canada. I dispute their having been the lowest paid nurses in Canada. The increase is of the order of $500 per annum.

[Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria).]

[Later:]

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): I have a supplementary question to direct to the President of the Treasury Board. Are the increases awarded to nurses straight across the board increases, or do they also take into account the complaints of nurses in the Halifax area with regard to differentials?

Mr. Benson: All matters which were brought to our attention were taken into consideration. The announcement involves a long schedule of classifications. I would not like to have given the impression earlier that everybody got a $500 increase. It varies according to classification.

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO RETENTION OF P.F.R.A. ENGINEERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. D. McLelland (Rosetown-Biggar): I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister inform the house whether his department is planning to keep on staff engineers who have been working on P.F.R.A. projects throughout western Canada, or are these engineers to be phased out in the way the government is phasing out P.F.R.A. projects?

Mr. Speaker: Order. That question should be placed on the order paper.

HARBOURS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—DEVELOPMENT OF PORT AT ROBERTS BANK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport, or really I wish to rephrase the question I asked yesterday. Having read front page reports in Vancouver newspapers I am convinced that the question is urgent. Can the minister assure the house that his department and the government of British Columbia are not on a collision course over the construction of the super port at Roberts Bank?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The matter may be urgent, but the question as asked is not in order.

[Later:]

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport, and I would like to make it clear that I am not asking for a legal opinion. Has he sought or received an opinion from the legal officers of the crown as to the competence of the government of British Columbia in establishing a harbours board for Roberts Bank?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the National Harbours Board has received legal opinions in respect to the various factors involved in the construction and operation of this proposed port.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): As a supplementary question may I ask the minister whether he has had the opportunity to study the opinion of Premier Bennett on this development and, if so, is he prepared to proceed with full construction under federal control?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, we are determined that working out the details with the province will not delay this project. This is a project of significance not only to British Columbia but to the whole western part of Canada. It is a great national work. It is the orientation toward the Pacific, which is one of the great development areas for the future, and we have a responsibility to see that the construction of the port is not delayed.

We still hope to have the full co-operation of the premier and his government as we proceed, and once our study of the ownership and management of ports is completed we will be glad to discuss this too with them, but in the meantime we do not want to hold up construction; we want to get on with the job.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary question I would like to ask whether an application has been filed under the provisions of the Navigable Waters Protection Act by the government of British Columbia for the approval of plans for the construction of a harbour in the area under discussion.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, there is a question in respect to the Navigable Waters Protection Act related to certain works proposed, particularly the proposed hydro conduit across the harbour to Victoria Island—

Mr. Barnett: To Vancouver Island.

Mr. Hellyer: It is going to be Victoria Island in the years ahead—but I hope none of these small difficulties will hinder the installation of essential services.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, when the minister refers to working out the details, will these be worked out in conjunction with the newly constituted provincial harbour board of British Columbia?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, we are in touch with the province in respect to the details, and these can be handled by the regular departments of the province or through their board or in whatever other way the province wishes to have them dealt with.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question, and it arises out of the fact that maybe the minister did not understand my original question. I did not ask about the approval of hydro plans. I asked whether the government of British Columbia had filed plans for approval under the Navigable Waters Protection Act for the construction of a harbour in this area. Before I sit down may I just say to the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

TRADE

INQUIRY AS TO SIGNING OF INTERNATIONAL GRAINS AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Provencher): My question is for the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and I ask it because of a question which the hon. member for Moose Mountain (Mr. Southam) asked on March 1. Can the minister tell the house how many nations have already signed the two conventions making up the international grains arrangement that embodies the Kennedy round cereals agreements which were open for signature between October 15 and November 30 last year? Has Canada actually signed these instruments?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes, Canada has actually signed. As to the precise number of the other countries, I should like to refresh my memory and reply early next week.

Mr. Jorgenson: Does Canada intend to deposit the signed instruments by the agreed deadline next summer and, if so, how many other nations are expected to follow suit?

Mr. Winters: Canada does. I should like to reply to the other part of the question in the same way as I did a moment ago.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED RECONSIDERATION OF STATEMENT RESPECTING FRANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Considering the announcement made yesterday to the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs of the House of Commons that the finance committee of the French National Assembly has asked to meet with our committee on March 25, does not the Prime Minister think his rather stark support of the truculent statement of the Minister of Justice with regard to our relations with France should be reconsidered for fear of breaking off what may be a very useful conversation with the French assembly?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that the question as asked is argumentative.

NIGERIA—CANADIAN EFFORTS TO END CIVIL WAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): My question is directed to the Prime Minister and has to do with the so-called forgotten war, the bloody and continuing conflict between Nigeria and Biafra. Can the Prime Minister indicate what steps Canada is taking toward initiating a united Commonwealth effort to bring this terrible conflict to an end and make it possible for negotiations to begin?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): We have been keeping in close touch with the Secretary General of the Commonwealth organization. As the hon. gentleman knows, he has been in Nigeria to see what he might do to bring this civil conflict to an end. There have been no requests made of the Canadian government at this time.

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): The Prime Minister says he has been keeping in touch. Does this include consultation with the Biafran representatives who are now in Canada?

Mr. Pearson: In these matters we have naturally to deal officially with the government of the country concerned, and in this case it is the government at Lagos.

[Mr. Winters.]

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack Roxburgh (Norfolk): I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of what appeared in Mr. Bain's column in the Globe and Mail this morning I sincerely hope my right hon. friend will see to it that Mr. Bain receives a centennial medal without delay.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. It is relative and supplemental to questions that were asked earlier today. Is it government policy to instal wall to wall carpeting in all deserted R.C.M.P. houses across Canada, as is now being done on Walpole Island?

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. As an aid to curtailing unnecessary spending and saving the Canadian taxpayers millions of dollars, will the government consider withdrawing Canada's participation in NORAD?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

RURAL DEVELOPMENT

MANITOBA—ARDA AGREEMENT RESPECTING INTERLAKE REGION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric Stefanson (Selkirk): I have a question for the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. Is the minister in a position to reply to the question I asked him on Friday, February 15 relating to vocational training school program agreements covered by the ARDA-FRED arrangements?

[Translation]

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Yes, Mr. Speaker, arrangements are now being made between the department of manpower, the department of forestry and the Manitoba government so that the planned program may be carried out as of this year and in subsequent years.

INDUSTRY

DRUGS—POSSIBLE COLLAPSE OF WESTERN CANADIAN FIRM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): I have a question I should like to direct to the Minister of Agriculture. It follows the question I directed to him on Monday last as reported at page 7233 of Hansard, which refers to the possible collapse of the new and expanding P.M.U. estrogen drug industry in western Canada because of the terms of Bill C-190. The hon. gentleman undertook to consult his colleague the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member please ask his question?

Mr. Southam: I am referring to it in order to refresh the minister's memory. He said he would consult with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs on this matter. Has he done this, and, if so, what was the result?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Perhaps I can answer on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture. We did have a consultation, and I have received representations from farm producers of P.M.U. in western Canada directed to me apparently on the basis of statements by representatives of the company concerned that they fear the company's P.M.U. processing operations in the west will be closed down as a result of import competition if Bill C-190 is enacted. The company has not made any such representations to me.

We accordingly communicated with the head office of the company in Montreal. I am informed that the company has no present plans to curtail its P.M.U. processing operations in western Canada in view of Bill C-190, and that no authority was given by the company's head office to its western representatives to inform the farm producers concerned that the plant would close as a result of Bill C-190. The company has informed us that it has long term contracts with producers of P.M.U., and it is the intention to honour these contracts.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FINANCE

EXEMPTION OF CANADA FROM U.S. BALANCE OF PAYMENTS MEASURES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): I have a question for the Minister of Finance arising out of a report in the Globe and Mail this morning to the effect that the minister has received a letter from Mr. Fowler freeing Canada from all restrictions—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member ask his question directly?

Mr. Martin (Timmins): My question is based on this report. Can the minister inform the house whether this freedom from restriction includes the 18½ per cent tax on the purchase of Canadian securities?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): I made a statement yesterday in general terms. I tabled the exchange of letters between Mr. Fowler and myself, and at that time I set out precisely the nature of the exemption. I dealt with the interest equalization tax at the same time. Perhaps the best way of handling the matter would be for the hon. member to direct his question to me when we are in committee of supply.

NATIONAL CAPITAL

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF JOINT PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): My question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. Bearing in mind current issues concerning construction regulations and standards in the national capital, can the minister indicate when we may expect the establishment of the parliamentary committee on the national capital?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): It is my understanding from comments made by the house leaders—and I refer particularly to the house leader for the official opposition—that if such a motion were brought forward there would be no debate. On that understanding I would hope we could bring it forward today. In any event, we are ready to bring it forward immediately.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN SUPPORT PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Having regard to the increasing costs of production, including rising interest rates, in the agriculture industry, is the government planning to provide a proportionate increase in support prices for commodities under the Agricultural Stabilization Act?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is a question of far too wide a scope to be asked and answered at this time. The hon. member is asking for information of a type which should be given on motions.

Mr. Nasserden: Would the minister or the Prime Minister be willing to refer the operations of the stabilization act to the agriculture committee?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): I believe the committee is master of its own procedure and the subject matters which it studies.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Greene: Certainly I would have no objection to a study of the workings of the stabilization act if the committee felt this to be in the interest of its work.

POTATOES—REQUEST FOR STUDY BY TASK FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): This question is addressed to the Minister of Agriculture and has to do with the serious conditions which exist at the present time within the potato industry in both eastern and western Canada. Recognizing the usefulness of the federal task force on agriculture, I wonder whether the minister has instructed the task force to undertake a special research project involving the whole potato industry in this country.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): I do not instruct the task force as to the ambit of its studies but I feel certain, in view of the difficulties which exist in this industry—eastern Canada does not want value for duty placed on potatoes this year while western Canada does—that the task force will give serious consideration to making a special study of the potato industry in this country.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

QUEBEC—INQUIRY AS TO ADEQUACY OF ROAD BED INSPECTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

It seems that the C.N.R. is implementing in the province of Quebec a program to eliminate several platforms and to reduce the number of people responsible for checking the tracks.

Could the minister tell us if safety measures will be taken to ensure, in spite of the implementation of that program, continuous inspection of the tracks when turbotrains are put in operation?

[English]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to refer this question to the railway and then reply to my hon. friend.

EXPO '67

REPORTED SALES OF ASSETS WITHOUT TENDERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Inasmuch as the Montreal city council executive committee has signed a draft agreement to buy certain Expo assets for a dollar, I wish to ask if this was done by open tender, as the Canadian National Exhibition wished to tender on certain of those assets.

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, certain of the assets remain to be disposed of, notably the Expo Express, and tenders have been called for that. Most of the other assets were disposed of to the three parties to the agreement, the city of Montreal, the province of Quebec and the federal government by mutual agreement.

Mr. Cowan: As a supplementary question, these were not sold by open tender then?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): As a supplementary question, earlier this morning the Minister of Trade and Commerce indicated that he is preparing an answer to question No. 930 on the order paper. I am wondering just how much detail we are going to be able to secure on the over-all basis of Expo in regard to—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that he should wait until he obtains an answer to the question on the order paper before asking a supplementary question.

Mr. Coates: As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General's report for 1967 estimated the deficit as of June 1, 1967, at $200 million. This is information available to the—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is argument. The hon. member is not asking for information now.

IMMIGRATION

CONSIDERATION OF APPLICATIONS FROM ASIANS IN KENYA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam asked the Minister of Manpower and Immigration whether a special team was being sent to Nairobi and whether special regulations were being drawn up to assist people in view of the unusual circumstances in Kenya. Can the minister make a report to the house on this matter now?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, a special immigration officer will be on the spot in Nairobi early next week, and within two or three weeks a mobile team will also be in Nairobi to take care of applications for immigration to Canada.

[English]

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): As a supplementary question, can the minister indicate at the present time how many applications have been received from Kenya for immigration to Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking for detailed information which cannot be given at this time.

INDUSTRY

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE IN DEVELOPMENT OF ALBERTA TAR SANDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I would have directed this question to the Minister of Transport but he is obviously more concerned with harbour development in the Vancouver area than he is with the area from which I come. So I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and ask him if the government is able to provide the house with any information as to the extent to which it may be assisting in promoting the development of the Alberta tar sands and the subsequent pipe line transmission—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question is of a very general nature. The hon. member is asking for information which ought to be given to the house by way of a statement on motions.

Mr. Howard: Then may I ask, will the minister make a statement on motions on Monday about this matter?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I will consider that, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL CAPITAL

ESTABLISHMENT OF JOINT COMMITTEE TO EXAMINE COMMISSION PROGRESS AND PROGRAMS

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works) moved:

That a joint committee of both houses of parliament be appointed to examine the progress and programs of the National Capital Commission in the development, conservation and improvement of the national capital region;

That twelve members to act on behalf of the House of Commons as members of the said committee be designated at a later date;

That the said committee have power to call for persons, papers and records, to sit while the house is sitting, and to report from time to time;

That the said committee have power to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee and that standing order 66 be suspended in relation thereto;

And that a message be sent to the Senate requesting that house to unite with this house for the above purpose and to select, if the Senate deems advisable, some of its members to act on the proposed joint committee.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, just before the question is put I wish to say I have no great disposition to argue about the passing of the motion, but it seems rather ludicrous to me that we are going to give birth to a committee that is going to die immediately. It is indicative of the attitude of the government to matters of this nature and—

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Batten in the chair.

INCOME TAX ACT

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Income Tax Act to provide among other things:

1. That for the 1968 and subsequent taxation years the amount deductible by a taxpayer in respect of gifts made to a province shall not be subject to the limitation imposed by paragraph (a) of subsection (1) of section 27, and the amount deductible in a year by a taxpayer in respect of gifts made either to a province or to Canada shall include an amount in respect of such gifts made by him in the preceding year to the extent that such amount was not deductible in computing his taxable income for the preceding year.

2. That with respect to taxable income earned in 1968 and 1969, in addition to the income tax otherwise payable by a corporation under the Income Tax Act, a surtax be payable equal to 3% of the amount of tax as determined under section 39 or 69 of that act, as the case may be.

3. That for the 1968 and 1969 taxation years, in addition to the income tax otherwise payable by an individual under the Income Tax Act, a surtax be payable equal to 3% of the amount of the basic tax as determined under section 33 of that Act in excess of $200.

4. That for the taxation years commencing after November 1968 a corporation shall during the 12 months period ending 2 months after the close of each taxation year, pay to the Receiver General of Canada

(a) on or before the last day of each of the 12 months in that period, an amount equal to one-twelfth of the tax as estimated by it at the rate for the taxation year

(i) on its estimated taxable income for the year, or

(ii) on its taxable income for the immediately preceding year,

(b) on or before the last day of the month ending 3 months after the close of each taxation year the remainder of the tax payable on its taxable income for the year at the rate for the year and that for the taxation year commencing in the period after November 1967 and before December 1968 a corporation shall during the 10 months period ending 2 months after the close of its taxation year pay to the Receiver General of Canada

(c) on or before the last day of

(i) the 2nd month,

(ii) the 4th month,

(iii) the 6th month,

[Mr. Howard.]

(iv) the 8th month and

(v) the 10th month

in that period an amount equal to one-fifth of the tax as estimated by it at the rate for the taxation year

(vi) on its estimated taxable income for the year, or

(vii) on its taxable income for the immediately preceding year,

(d) on or before the last day of the month ending 3 months after the close of its taxation year the remainder of the tax payable for the year at the rate for the year.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, in order to continue the remarks which I was not able to finish last night, I wish to call the special attention of the house to the four items of the measure which is placed before us. A study of those items reveals that two of them, Nos. 1 and 4, deal mainly with the people who have money while the other two deal with those who precisely need money.

The first item reads as follows:

That for the 1968 and subsequent taxation years the amount deductible by a taxpayer in respect of gifts made to a province shall not be subject to the limitation imposed by paragraph (a) of subsection (1) of section 27, and the amount deductible in a year by a taxpayer in respect of gifts made either to a province or to Canada shall include an amount in respect of such gifts made by him in the preceding year to the extent that such amount was not deductible in computing his taxable income for the preceding year.

Mr. Chairman, in the light of that item, I feel that we are in the process of instituting a Saint-Vincent-de-Paul society at the federal level. In fact, it seems we want to transpose at the federal level the procedure used by Saint-Vincent-de-Paul societies working in our municipalities, and I can see in this a danger with regard to the gifts made, for instance, to a museum or other provincial or federal agencies.

For instance, if someone omits to declare to the taxation department, sums of money or museum pieces worth $50,000, $60,000, or $100,000 with a little politics, it will only be necessary to say that such value represents a gift to some museum, a province or to the federal government. He will get some benefit out of the deal and it will thus be protected under the aegis of a Saint-Vincent-de-Paul society. I think that it was a well conceived item, not by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) but by his experts. It is a sort of subtle way of telling us that there are probably big amounts and large collections to be protected.

I now quote item No. 4:

That for the taxation years commencing after November 1968 a corporation shall during the 12 month period ending 2 months after the close of each taxation year, pay to the Receiver General of Canada.

In short, it is a matter of accelerating the remittance of payments by the companies. We know what the government is going to collect momentarily and we know that the funds will come in faster, but it will not affect in any way large pulp and paper companies or others, because they are not subject to any new tax.

We are in favour of that method of collecting the money more quickly but the people should not be led to believe that a tax has been levied against the big corporations because they are simply asked to file their returns two months earlier than in previous years. That provision is set forth in paragraph 1, which I quoted, and in paragraph 2 which reads as follows:

That with respect to taxable income earned in 1968 and 1969, in addition to the income tax otherwise payable by a corporation under the Income Tax Act, a surtax be payable equal to 3 per cent of the amount of tax as determined under section 39 or 69 of that act, as the case may be.

A 3 per cent tax is levied on the income of corporations and small private companies. The New Democratic party must be very happy about that small tax because it has such a grudge against private enterprise.

In my opinion, this will inevitably fall on the shoulders of workers, family heads, because companies will certainly include the tax in their expenses and in the price of their goods. Finally, this will be another tax laid on the shoulders of the small wage-earner.

Paragraph 3 reads as follows:

That for the 1968 and 1969 taxation years, in addition to the income tax otherwise payable by an individual under the Income Tax Act, a surtax be payable equal to 3 per cent of the amount of the basic tax as determined under section 33 of that act in excess of $200.

Mr. Chairman, it is exactly the same baby as in the bill rejected on February 19, but instead of one dress it now has two.

I warned the minister last night that the purpose of this bill, just like that of February 19, is to burden the small taxpayer with another tax. We told him over and over again that we would not support a measure intended to raise the taxes paid by workers and diminish their pay cheques.

The worker's cheque is already reduced by 30 to 33 per cent, and we are asked today to support legislation intended to cut the cheque down still further. I am convinced that, at this rate, in four or five years at the latest, 50 per cent of the employee's pay will be deducted for taxes. In view of this escalation of taxes, which must absolutely be stopped, we say to the government: That is enough. Money can be raised in other ways. Let the government avail itself of these other ways of raising money and try to ease a little the burden of those who need their weekly pay to support their families.

Not only does the government attack the surplus revenue of the individual, but he also attacks the vital minimum. We do not have the right to levy taxes on what is essential to life, the vital minimum, and that is actually what this law will do.

In short, up to a point, that will be the influence of this measure on the corporations. This bill does not seem to be as severe as that of February 19, but it is nothing other than a compromise. In fact, the Journal de Montréal of March 7 outlined very ably the effects of this law on the worker, and I quote:

The compromise will change very little for people in the middle income or higher income brackets, but will strike more severely those who earn more than $25,000 a year. In fact, the new measure has no ceiling, whereas in the bill that was defeated in February, the ceiling was $600. The basic exemption which was $100 in the defeated bill is now increased to $200. In other words, a single person earning less than $2,743 a year will not have to pay the surtax nor will a married man earning less than $3,743 a year.
